THE BULLETIN BOARD 30

The Pigeonhole

One Thing to Do

As we view the year 1933, we are far more seriously impressed with its possibilities than we are with its difficulties. If we keep our eyes fixed on our troubles, we are likely to be overcome by them, simply because we will be paralyzed in a state of inaction. But if we have something constructive to do we are likely to come into the clear and satisfy all obligations, and more.

"Riches Untold"

This week the Herald presents the first installment of a church serial story, "Riches Untold," by Florence Tracey. Chapter one gives us the setting. The excitement begins in chapter two, and keeps up to the end. The author apparently knows quite a bit about the church and the questions that have to be faced by young people, both single and married. It would be telling to say that the author is married—and we won't say it. Anyhow she is able to put her finger on the pulse of youth. So have your young people read it.

I Like January

I like January. There are no holidays in it to bother me. I get a complete rest from everything except work. I can't go anywhere because it is too cold, and everything is frozen up when I get there. I get tired of staying home but I can't leave because the fire might go out. I would like to go south but it costs too much. I would go north to get away but it is even colder there. So I stay at home and nurse a grumbly feeling against the whole universe. I like January.

Bald

The Pigeon turned a beady eye at me from his perch on the window sill. He looked speculatively at a thin spot in my hair. "It's too bad," he said, "It's too bad when a head gets bald on both sides—inside and outside!"

A Few Crumbs

This morning there was a suggestion of anger and impatience about the Pigeon as he alighted on the window sill.

"Don't forget to feed the birds when there is snow on the ground. A few crumbs will help. And you don't need to throw them all in the garbage pail, either."

The sparrows are noisy pests in the summer. But in winter we feel sorry for them—poor things—as they hover about and shiver stiffly in the cold.

Our Project for 1933

During the past year the communications that have come from the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric have made us conscious of a number of very important needs. As we go into the next year it would be well for us to summarize those communications into a statement of a project for 1933. Our situation calls for faith, courage and work. All things are possible with them.

The depression and its attendant conditions have cleared the public mind of the rubbish of many false illusions, bad economic theories, and mistaken social notions. As never before we have seen the weaknesses of the structures of government, society, and our economic machinery. Conditions have brought us face to face with certain bald truths. These we hope to discuss as time goes on.

For the immediate present we need to crystallize our tasks into a clearly defined project for the year. Stated briefly, they are:

1. To keep up the operating expenses of the general church.
2. To effect a material reduction of the church debt.
3. To make a specific program of missionary activity a part of the work of every branch.
4. To carry on a program of education for tithing, and stewardship for the members of the church.
5. To take more definite steps to enlarge the spiritual and cultural life of each branch to a measure where it can hold the loyalty and support of all its members, young and old.

To realize this project, one great gap must be bridged: that is the lack of correlation between the business interests of the individual member and the interests of the church. In some cases these are as far apart as two worlds. Every member should realize that his own business and affairs can tie up with and contribute to the good of the church in a number of definite ways. No matter what business a person is engaged in, he should see in it some chance to correlate and make the two interests of his life mutually beneficial.

In the year 1933 we should be able to make some real progress in the direction of realizing this aim. Let us all work to that end. L. L.

Youth Must Find Work

What Is the Way Out for Our Young People?

Some months ago, President Elbert A. Smith, in a sermon delivered at the Stone Church, pointed out the moral peril in present conditions for young people who "have never known what it means to have a job."

Other commentators have more recently voiced the same thought. The Christian Century quotes from the speech with which King George opened the British parliament: "In particular, I am distressed that many young men and women have never in their lives had an opportunity of regular employment." The editor of the magazine adds the comment:

> "The condition to which the king called attention has become a gigantic and baffling one in many parts of Great Britain. The depression has been eating away at the vitals of British industry for more than a decade. . . . This is tragic enough for all the unemployed, but the tragedy takes on aspects of moral disintegration among the young which clouds the whole future with darkness. In the case of seasoned workers now unable to find employment, there is at least the knowledge that there has been a place for them in the industrial order, which lends strength to the hope that there may be such a place again. But in the case of youth, inability to get so much as an opportunity to earn a living is producing moral consequences of disastrous import."

We are thus faced with a great problem of dual significance. At first only economic factors were involved. But it has been shown by recent history that any economic distress also has its results in moral consequences.

What is the answer? What is the way out? Obviously the great masses of men can no longer depend on the factory as the meal-ticket in a capitalist's heaven fitted up with modern machinery. People will have to look beyond the factory for their economic as well as their moral salvation. What is to be seen there, only the future can reveal.

We believe that the principle of stewardship will provide an answer, if our people will live according to the law. Stewardship, at the present time, can not undertake the burden of a great many who wish to call on any central organization for help. To begin with, it is man's primary duty to be self-sustaining. No system can endure in which the great majority of members do not reach at least that sufficiency. Stewardship contemplates a giving relationship rather than a receiving relationship of the individual to society. It must also be cooperative.

Families are finding it possible these days to escape our factory-dominated civilization, and to sustain life in a manner more agreeable, all things considered, than before. The ideal home is not an apartment within three minute's walk of a machine shop. It is rather a home set in the midst of land, where the necessities of life can be raised by the man, and the products of toil and soil preserved for winter use by the woman, with the children of the home helping. Such a mode of existence can afford more of security, and as much of peace, satisfaction, and culture as any other. We must win our way to a new freedom—a new independence of a gold-organized and greed-dominated world. L. L.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God."

IV.—Holding Our Natural Increase

In this series we are considering some of the major methods to be employed in building the church numerically and spiritually. First came missionary endeavor; and now we are discussing methods to hold our children born to Latter Day Saint parents. In this latter project the home comes first, and after that the church school. A major function of the church school is to teach; but its program contemplates other functions. The program as approved by the late General Conference says:

"The specific work of the church school consists in providing occasions under guidance for study, instruction, worship, work, and play through which may come the growth and service contemplated in the gospel of Jesus Christ."

The Question of Recreation

The word "play" here used raises a rather vexed and much debated question. It must be evident to all that today, as always in the past, young people (and older ones) in pursuit of pleasure and recreation in ways classed as "worldly" fall into paths that lead to great sorrow and loss if not destruction. Is the church concerned with the situation? If so, how? Is its remedy limited to negative commandments delivered to our young people by General Conference ultimatum or parental dictum?

A Fundamental Tendency

In approaching this subject it is well to remember that we are dealing with a fundamental human tendency. The young of every race and time turn naturally to play. Even animals and birds have the same instinct. The kitten pursues the ball. Otters have community play grounds with well-planned "slippery slides" down which they glide and into the water with a splash. Doctor Richard Cabot has a book entitled, What Men Live By. He catalogs: "Love, worship, work, and play." These four are fundamental. Even our forefathers, not too flexible in their attitude toward youth, coined the proverb: "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

Three Possible Attitudes

What attitude has the church toward this important question of recreation? Three courses are open: We may ignore it; we may adopt a purely negative attitude, denouncing and forbidding; or in addition to necessary negation we may go on and endeavor to formulate an affirmative, constructive program of recreation under church guidance.

To ignore the question is difficult. Years ago an elder of the old school said to me: "If boys want recreation, let them saw wood." Wood sawing is good exercise in its time; but it does not even remotely suggest recreation. So I replied: "After the wood is sawed, then what?" He answered, "Let them carry it in and pile it behind the kitchen stove." That attitude merely suggests, "After work, more work." It ignores the question that can hardly be ignored.

A negative attitude that goes no further generally defeats its own end. The young people will seek recreation. If they feel that the church has raised a barrier and is unsympathetic and dictatorial and not minded at all to help them in that particular problem, they are quite likely to turn their backs upon the church and go elsewhere with all their problems. A very devoted young man asked me concerning a certain "faction," "What do they do for their young people in the way of recreation?" I replied, "Nothing, except to forbid." He remarked with some feeling, "I have no interest in a church that has no interest in its young people and all their problems, including recreation."

A Call to Young People

To help solve this problem is one of the tasks undertaken by the "church school." It is an inheritance from the old Religio Society, later known as the "Department of Recreation and Expression." It must be admitted that so far success has not been too flattering. It may be alleged, too, that mistakes have been made. Well, Theodore Roosevelt used to say, "The only man who does not make mistakes is the man who does nothing—and he makes the biggest mistake of all."

Here is a work that calls for leadership among the young people themselves. We need upstanding young men and women of character and devotion to help work out this problem; to raise up as leaders among their fellows and to say to them, let us rally together and under church guidance, avoiding the pitfalls of the world of commercial pleasure seeking, find for ourselves and among ourselves clean, constructive social intercourse and recreation. To an extent this has been done in some branches and districts; but in many places the need is great for the right kind of recreational leadership.

It is not the purpose of this editorial to solve this problem: the solution is not yet in sight. This is a plea for the right approach by the right kind of people and in the right spirit.

Our Program Must Be Congruous

Any program of recreation sponsored by the church in any branch of the church should be congruent in its character and setting and time with the religious and devotional program of the church. Recreation should be what its name implies: it should re-create, refresh, rebuild body and mind. Sports or pastimes carried to excess leaving body and mind weary and a bad taste in the soul are not recreational. Those who make the pursuit of pleasure the end and aim of life defeat their own purposes, for they never taste the joys of recreation following hard work. Recreation is a diversion from the real work of life. The condemnation upon those who "sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play" was not that they ate and played, but that they had forsaken the Lord and forgotten the real purposes and high endeavors of life for which their food and play and social intercourse should have given them new zest and vigor.

Cooperative Teamwork

Probably those games that require team work, that develop skills through quick thinking and physical reaction, and that take our young people into the open air for their play are among the most beneficial, and may be more than a "pass time." The element of teamwork has a valuable influence. More than one young man has said to me, "You older men of the ministry should have learned at some time to play together—then you might have succeeded better in working together; you would have learned how to cooperate, to hold your tempers, and to take defeat with good grace." Was there merit in the suggestion? You judge.

In any event the church calls young men and women who have had the advantage of observing our mistakes as well as our successes to come forward as leaders among their fellows to help work out this problem. By their wise and temperate influence and steadying leadership they may help save to the church many of our young people who otherwise will be lost in the pitfalls that beset worldly pleasure seeking.

What Cancellation Would Cost—

While we are calculating what the effect of the payment of debts on European nations would be, we should also be mindful of what it would cost American taxpayers if all our foreign debtors should repudiate their obligations.

Foreign nations owe to the United States, to put the figures in round numbers, $11,500,000,000. Some of our national leaders, trying to estimate what total repudiation on the part of creditors would mean, say that it would cost the American public about $500,000,000 a year in increased taxation.

A great many people are beginning to wish that we hadn't helped Europe with its war after all. To people who live in rented homes and apartments this tax increase may not be frightening. But to those who are already paying taxes that amount to confiscation, the prospect is not a happy one.

Insull Goes Free—

A Greek court has decided that Samuel Insull is not wanted in the United States for reasons that make him subject to extradition under the new treaty. But he can not be sure that he will be safe in other countries having such treaties.

Meanwhile Mr. Insull is a man without a country. He is free to travel in such places as Afghanistan, Soviet Russia (a dangerous place for capitalists!), Abyssinia, and the unexplored regions around the South Pole. Or he can stay in Greece. He can devote his time to the study of languages, archæology, and classic art. Or maybe he will join the ranks of the great army of "has-beens" who are writing their memoirs.

Mr. Insull's career is just one more reminder of the immorality of our economic machinery. Although reports indicate that he was guilty of mishandling the funds that investors intrusted to his care, he was only one of many, and simply operated on a larger scale. He was not alone responsible for the depression which caused his collapse. If all the principal offenders were arraigned together, the greatest stadium in the country could not contain them. There is no reason why he alone should be torn to shreds to further the political ambitions of a wolfish prosecuting attorney in Illinois.

Missionary Zeal Continues Into the New Year

"Never in my experience have I had greater encouragement in missionary work," says Elder Harold I. Velt of his present meetings at Willapa, Washington, where the church has a new and thriving mission. The response of members and nonmembers is excellent.

Fifteen candidates were added to the church at Saginaw, Michigan, during the year. Though at present burdened with a church building badly damaged by fire, the Saints there are hopeful in the gospel.

Elder Arthur Oakman recently finished a successful ten-day series of meetings at Fresno, California.

During the past two months Missionary A. M. Baker has been giving his attention to the Saints of Louisiana and Arkansas. In Louisiana he has met with Saints and friends at Eros, Dunn, West Monroe, and Lafayette; in Arkansas, he has represented the church at Dierks and Grannis.

"Loyalty to God" a Conference Theme

"Loyalty to God" was the theme of the recent conference of Southwestern Kansas District. Apostle R. S. Budd, the principal speaker, talked on these subtopics of the conference theme: "Loyalty to Your Country," "Loyalty to Christ," "Loyalty to Our Covenant," and "Loyalty to Our Church."

Ten Recently Baptized in Kansas City Stake

Ten baptisms have resulted from the December gospel meetings held by Elder J. Charles May, Kansas City Stake missionary, at Northeast Church. These candidates most of whom are adults, were baptized by Elders May, Henry F. Davis, and E. W. Lloyd. Eight are in Northeast group, and two in Bennington Heights group. Several others of these two groups and of Gladstone community are deeply interested, and a splendid missionary spirit has been manifested in the eastern and northeastern part of Kansas City.

Toronto Women Make Interest Payment

The women of Toronto, Canada, at their quarterly meeting in December, collected the balance necessary to make the six-month interest payment on the church debt due January 1. The sum to be paid amounted to $958.

Full Year Planned for Independence Young People

If all the plans of the Independence Young People's Council materialize, the young church members in the centerplace will have plenty to do. They face a year filled with special activities.

Some of the council's plans include a one-act play contest between the various congregations in February; a series of young people's meetings in March opening with a big worship and prayer meeting and closing with a banquet; a young people's rally for Independence and surrounding territory in April, and the summer missionary trips.

First Sacrament of the Year on New Year's Day

On the first day of the New Year thousands of Latter Day Saints all over the world observed the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, partaking of the emblems of the Savior's love and sacrifice.

It was most appropriate that they gather to share in this sacred ordinance of the church, renewing their covenant to serve Christ. It was fitting that they sing the songs of Zion and that they bear testimonies of truth and courage and hope to each other. Thus with new hearts they went to their homes on New Year's Day to think seriously of the tasks ahead of the church, and to resolve to make this a year of work and sacrifice that the cause of Christ shall triumph over all the earth.

Bruce Peninsula Members Hold Meetings

During last summer and fall Saints living on Bruce Peninsula, in Ontario, enjoyed a series of seven all-day services. These were representative gatherings of the district, two at Colpoys Bay, three at Stokes Bay, one at Spry, and one at Chesley.

The success of these services was due in large part to the tireless work of the local ministry and the help of district priesthood, and the Saints were blessed with a degree of the Holy Spirit. It was with reluctance that they parted at the last of these meetings at Colpoys Bay not to meet again until next summer. But they look forward to the day when the gospel message will be heard by all living on the peninsula.

Bruce Peninsula lies between Lake Huron and the Georgian Bay and is southeast of Grand Manitoulin Island.

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Chapter 1.—The Happy Half Dozen Settle the Zionic Question

THE telephone rang for the third time within five minutes. Polly Nelson jerked the worn brown dress over her slender shoulders and shook it into place with a deft turn of her hand.

"I'll get it, Polly," a pleasant, girlish voice drifted up the stairway. Edith's voice. She must have slipped in only a moment before.

Again the telephone jangled.

Brad, Polly's husband, was settling himself in the dining room for the evening with a loud rustling of the paper.

Indistinctly from below came the murmur of the telephone conversation: "Who? Polly? Why, yes, but could I take the message, or have her call you later. . . . She's— This is Edith Sterling. Oh, yes. . . . Why—I'll ask her. . . . Just a minute, please."

"Mummie put Carrol to bed?" piped her two-year-old son from the next room. "Carrol wants Mummie to put—"

"Yes, just a minute, darling." Polly was swiftly powdering her nose. The little Dutch doll on her dressing table seemed to smile complacently at her, but Polly knew little of complacency. She was one of those people who find it very hard to say "No" when asked to do a thing, and as a result, everyone knew that Polly Nelson was a very busy young woman. "We don't see how you do everything, Polly," the neighbor women often marveled.

"I really couldn't, you know," Polly would smilingly reply, "if it weren't for a wonderfully good-natured husband, a good baby, and lots of friends."

"Polly," from the stairway, "Sister Brown wants to know if you can help the women of the group make over some clothes for the Commodity Shop tomorrow."

Another thing to do! And already her day was crammed with the family washing, baking bread, and taking Carrol to the baby clinic.

"What time?" she was carefully shaping the waves of her brown hair with her fingers, and noting how very blue those new beads made her eyes.

"It's an all-day affair for all the women who can come. But if you can't come till afternoon, she says that's all right. She wants especially for you to help them on some of those coats they are remodeling; says nobody else can make as good-looking a garment out of nothing as you can. And since the weather is cooler, people are demanding more coats than they have on hand at the shop."

Must it be tomorrow? Polly frowned at her reflection in the mirror. It would have to be!

"Tell her I'll do my best to be over by one o'clock. Can't make it any sooner. Sorry," she called. Carrol didn't really have to go to the clinic tomorrow. He was well, but she hadn't had him looked over for a month. She would take him next month.

"Desus, tender s'epperd, hear thy lit'tle lamb tonight," murmured Carrol's soft, baby voice. He was so wonderful, this little son of hers and Brad's. And as she held him in her arms this evening, his chubby face hidden in her neck, rosy lips forming the words so near her ear, Polly felt the mother heart of her grow bigger with joy and gratitude. Surely Carrol was God's gift to their home, little, sleepy, white-clad, golden-haired gift.

BEFORE she had tucked him in his crib, given him a final good-night kiss, and turned on the tiny Red-Riding-Hood night lamp, the door bell sounded roundly. How thankful she was that Edith had come early! Brad, once he was settled with his paper or work from the office, didn't like to be disturbed—dear, patient, old Brad!

Yes, there they were, the whole Happy Half Dozen of them, all the girls that remained in Independence of a Sunday school class Polly had taught seven years ago. Others were away at school. Two had married and moved far off, one to Pennsylvania, the other to California. When the class had been promoted out of the department in which Polly was teaching, the girls had begged to be allowed to form a study club and meet with her once each week. They wanted to be together, with her, to visit and study and have a good time. For a time they had studied Book of Mormon, then comparative Christianity, and now Polly was putting them through an adult quarterly course, "A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants." But tonight was a social meeting only.

"Hail, most learned teacher and leader," greeted Echo Duncan, tall, blue-eyed tease. "We await you. How's the baby?"

"Sh-h-h-," and Polly feigned to close the stair door with great surreptitiousness. "Asleep—I hope."

"I wanted to come up and see him in his little sleepers, Polly." Edith's brown eyes spoke worlds of devotion. "But the telephone kept me busy."

"Well, we brought our stuff," from Laurel Bris, who produced a jumble of broken toys from a large tapestry bag.

"Yes, we got them here," laughed Marial, her twin, "but we looked like a couple of carpetbaggers coming up the street with these."

"Now isn't it just like Polly to think of something nice for us to do for somebody else?" queried Arthea Kent, the tall blonde girl who always thought of something polite to say.

"And perfectly gorgeous of us to do it, too?" mimicked Echo.

"But I didn't think of it," deprecated Polly. "Sister Rutherford asked me if I didn't think you girls would like to make over and refinish toys for Christmas baskets and the Commodity Shop, and, knowing you as I do, I told her of course you would. Oh, what cute ducks, Cora! Where did you get them?"

"They were Bobby Britton's. He grew tired of them, and his mother gave them to me. Bobby has lots of toys, Polly, that he has outused. I think I can get quite a few there. I fixed these up last night. All they needed was a tack or two and a new coat of enamel."

"And a little bit of patience," supplemented Echo. "When it comes to hammers and tacks, Cora dear, I know my weakness. I give up. I plan to frame some of the cutest pictures for kiddies in Dime Store frames. Will you put in the little, dinky nails for me?"

SOON every available piece of furniture in the living room was pressed into service, and Brad's desk in the study (he seldom used the study when the Happy Half Dozen were about, for there was no door between it and the living room, only a drape of Chinese red and bronze) was littered with toys in process of being remodeled—doll houses, dolls in various stages of undress, stuffed animals that leaked sawdust over everything, battered wooden shapes, dozens of marbles that needed sacking, and broken mechanical toys.

"My goodness!" ejaculated Marial Bris, "Why didn't we bring the whole Stone Church young people's department to help us tonight? I didn't know there were so many dilapidated toys in the world! Do you suppose you could call your group people to the rescue, Polly?"

"Call on the Happy Half Dozen, and they're there in full force, toys and all," chanted Echo.

"May I slip up and look at Carrol, Polly, before I begin to sack these marbles?" There was eagerness in Edith's tone. "I can work faster, if I do. He's the nearest thing like an angel in this town."

"Be careful, my child," chided Echo with mock severity; "you're talking of Zion, remember."

"That reminds me of a letter I got today," giggled Arthea as she gathered up a lapful of bright-colored scraps and began to select an outfit for a doll she had chosen to dress. "My cousin, Ruth Lawson, who lives in Idaho, has this old, conventional idea of Zion where the Saints sit around in love and complete joy and everybody thinks of each other, and no one steps on anybody else's toes, you know. Oh, I guess it's about five years that Ruth has dreamed of what a wonderful place this is that the Lord has picked out for us to live in. If they can arrange their affairs, they want to move here by next conference. Why, Polly, she writes like an old lady! She actually said: 'It must be wonderful to live in Zion where you are associated with so many of the faith and can enjoy the bountiful blessings of the Lord.' She said that!"

"To people who have never had the privileges we enjoy here in Independence, it is wonderful beyond all comparison," gently reminded Polly. "You've never lived in a little branch where just a few struggled to pay for the coal you burned in the smoky little coal stove; where when there was a bad storm, the congregation was cut in half because of impassable roads. You've never known what it means to a person who has lived long in a little branch and struggled and struggled, to finally come here. That's the way it was for us out in Kansas. There were only a few, and how much we meant to each other! Sometimes I think of them out there yet."

"But, Polly, people coming to Independence like that are bound to be disappointed in what they find here. We're only human after all."

"By human do you mean worldly?" asked Laurel.

"Well—". Arthea halted. Laurel's questions nearly always puzzled her. Laurel was a logician.

"You see there's a difference in being human and being worldly. One doesn't necessarily—"

"Oh, come, don't lets quibble over terms," pleaded Marial. "That is a problem, Polly—what people think of us before they come and then what they decide about us after they get here."

"I've often thought Latter Day Saints, and especially those who live in Zion, are like so many prize pumpkins," put in Cora. "Because they are prizes, they are subjected to close inspection, and much is expected of them." Cora worked as secretary in the general church offices at the Auditorium, and her opinions were always respectfully considered by her mates.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"And what prize pumpkins some of us are!" chuckled Echo. "Regular pumpkin heads!"

"Don't you ever really have a serious thought, Echo?" demanded Laurel, and then to Polly. "We have relatives, too, who don't live here, and mother is always reminding us girls of the standards they expect us to come up to."

"I suppose Ruth would be shocked to know that I play bridge," Arthea ventured.

"And shook a wicked heel," supplied Echo.

"I wonder if she thinks I sit around with a Bible in one hand, a Book of Mormon in the other, and the Doctrine and Covenants on my footstool."

"Well," Cora's tone carried no sting, "if you had all the nice ideas and things to do that Polly has, you wouldn't have time to give your bridge parties, or to carry around a load of books either. There are plenty of wild stories over the country about our carelessness in Zion where we are supposed to have the greatest church advantages and be the most congenial and helpful group of people on earth."

"But, Cora, be reasonable. People simply haven't the right to expect so much more of us than they do of themselves. They must consider that where the privileges are doubled, there is also a doubling of temptations. I heard some one say that where the Lord puts one angel to work, the Devil puts two." This from Marial. "I wish I could make mother see that."

"I think that, too," her twin observed. "Too many Latter Day Saints are too willing to chuck the responsibility of being a good, loyal, working representative member of the church off on their neighbor. It's a sort of procrastination of goodness."

"Gracious sakes, Laurel Bris, how long did it take you to learn all that?" mocked Echo.

"What do you think of it, Polly?" demanded Edith who had returned from the nursery and was rapidly putting marbles into small red and green net stockings. "You've been letting us do the talking. Now tell us what you think about it."

"Yes, do. If there really is anything wrong in the things I am doing, Polly, I don't want to do them. I do want to be as good a member of the church as the rest of you, but the crowd I go with mostly—well, bridge parties is all they know, and sometimes I am bored to tears."

"What you need, my dear," Marial's eyes twinkled, "is a Sunday school class. You should see my chubby cherubs. Do they make you problems? They make you forget all your other interests quicker than a wink. They're cute, chummy, and inquisitive. Why, just the other day I was giving them a nature lesson. I took our canary down to show them a real, live bird. Had him in a matchbox, and before I could tell them not to let him out, one little duffer slipped off the lid, and away the bird flew. And you should have seen me fly after it! Sister Evelyn Smith is the dearest superintendent!"

"Polly—"

"Yes, do, Polly, tell us what you think." And six pairs of eyes were turned on their leader.

THEN, as she had often done before, Polly uttered a brief prayer for wisdom and help. The responsibility of teaching and advising these hopeful young creatures, she regarded as a serious thing. What if she were to say something wrong, something discouraging?

"I was just thinking," she began slowly, laying her work in her lap, "of the revelation given to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in April, 1829, or rather a small part of it, one of my favorite quotations. I believe it is the first time the word Zion is mentioned in the Doctrine and Covenants: 'Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion: seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.' I have heard some wonderful sermons preached on that, girls, and they have thrilled me with the business of bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion."

"Well, you certainly—" began Echo.

"Sh-sh," from Marial.

"I look upon Zion of the heart first—Zion, the pure in heart. We must have it there before we can have our city of Zion, and just as soon as all of us here, and everyone else who comes here, has Zion in his heart, the material Zion will be. Why, if we really had Zion in our hearts, we could clear the church of debt, and have the actual Zion in a very short time. If we who live in Zion were doing everything as we should, if we were keeping all the commandments of the Lord, we would have no reason to fear or worry. And I'm sure if the people away from here were properly informed what constitutes Zion, they would be so busy preparing for it themselves that they would have little time to listen to all the gossip and tales that go the way of the grapevine."

"Don't modern revelations teach us that the people here in Zion have been rebuked a number of times for their thoughtlessness and sins?"

"Oh, yes, several times. We are told that the Lord is not going to allow us to pollute his holy place. He tells us also that if we are the salt of the earth and lose our savor, we are no longer of any good. He says that those who exalt themselves shall be brought low."

"Good enough for some of these social-climbing Latter Day Saints," grumbled Cora. "I hope they do fall off their ladders and break a leg or two!"

"Don't be vicious, my dear woman," scolded Echo, then mournfully, "You, too, may find yourself picking yourself up one of these days."

"There are many revelations concerning Zion in our Doctrine and Covenants," continued their teacher. "It is interesting to go through the book, picking them out. But when I do that, I generally finish by feeling exceedingly small. These revelations tell us that we must keep the commandments of the Lord; we must work; we must live as we ought and not gossip and backbite. All that is a pretty big job. I decided several years ago that if I did that completely, I didn't have time for bridge and dancing and petting—"

"Spare us, spare us, Polly," interrupted Echo, "or you'll be naming our own little favorite sins. . . . Meantime, in spite of all the talking we've been doing and other distracting influences, will you look at this doll house I've been remodeling?"

"And I have my doll dressed and an outfit selected for another. But, truly, Polly, I'm going home tonight, and pray extra hard over some of my foolish habits." Arthea's blue eyes were serious.

"All of us need to do that." Cora was putting the final touches on a refurbished mechanical toy. "There's no use to worry, I know, but sometimes when I see how indifferent we are to the advantages we have and the things expected of us, I—well, I just don't know what to do."

"Start right at home, my dear, right at home," chimed in Echo.

"Father was reading the other night from the Doctrine and Covenants," suggested Edith, "about how the Saints in Zion must be humble, and how blessed they will be when they are. If we could only be honestly humble; if the Saints all over the church could forget all make-believe humility, and be as humble as—well, Brother Evans for example." Brother Evans, elder of the group where Polly and Edith lived, was loved by everyone. Being a man of integrity and humility, he was a welcome friend, neighbor, and spiritual leader. "Sometimes when I see him rushed and tried by demands that would make me lose my temper, and he goes on as unruffled as anything, I—he just seems too good to be true!"

"Well," from Laurel who was industriously stuffing working materials into her bag, "all of which means that we must look to our own actions before we criticize others. I mean to begin right at home with myself. There's been a lot of talk about Zion ever since I could remember, but what I'm interested in now is a lot of living Zion right here in Independence and out in every branch, too."

The evening had been highly successful. The cocoa Marial and Cora had made in the kitchen was delicious, and the cookies, Edith's treat, "just hit the spot," said Brad, who, of course, always took part when it came to refreshments. A quantity of toys had been prepared for the women's department, and the evening's talk had left them all thinking. The girls were leaving, a laughing group.

"Polly, if you have any more of those lists you want typed, I'll stay tomorrow evening after work and do it," offered Cora.

"Thank you, dear, you're a great help. But I don't have that next list complete yet. Will I be bothering if I ask you to do it next week?"

"You know you won't," and with a hard squeeze of the hand, the girl was gone.

"Polly," Arthea had loitered behind the rest.

"Yes, Arthea."

"Will you do something for me?"

"Anything, dear."

"Well, I meant it when I said I was going to pray over myself tonight. I want to be—well, I want to be like you, Polly. Will you—will you pray with me?" A tear glistened under a drooping lash.

"Of course I will, darling. I'll be happy to."

"Oh, thank you!" and with a convulsive hug, she, too, was gone.

The soft lights made the living room look very cozy and peaceful as Polly turned from the door. One by one, she flicked them out as she made her way to the dining room and to Brad who sat nodding over an empty cocoa cup.

"And then they say our young people in the centerplace aren't thinking," she meditated. "It's not a matter of what they are doing, but how they are doing it. I think I shall play hooky from group prayer meeting next Wednesday night and visit the young people's prayer service down at the church."

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing.—Psalm 41: 1-3.

The Authority of God's Ministry

By J. F. Curtis

We shall endeavor to show that God's ministry have a divine call and are given divine authority to teach or preach, and to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel of Christ.

The first announcement of John the Baptist, in the Bible, reads:

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe."—Saint John 1: 6, 7.

To be sent of God as a minister for Christ gave John the Baptist a distinction that was of great value not only to himself but to others.

To possess the knowledge that God had chosen and appointed him to preach the gospel whereby all could come to Christ would give him the courage to face the world and tell them the way of salvation and light. It would place him in a position where no opposition would cause him to hesitate to affirm this heaven-sent message.

In the gospel according to Saint Mark, he says of John the Baptist:

"The voice of one crying in the wilderness. Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

He then adds:

"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan confessing their sins."

Speaking of Christ, John said:

"There cometh one mightier than I, after me, the lachet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost."

To reject the teaching of John the Baptist was to reject the counsel of God, for Luke records these words:

"And all the people that heard him, and the publicans justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."

Obedience to the message of this man, sent of God, would bring salvation. To reject it would bring condemnation.

Speaking of authority, Jesus once said to his apostles:

"He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me."

Jesus had taught them the gospel and men thus selected of Christ were to declare this message to the people. It was and is God's way of warning the people, and inviting them to come to Christ and be saved.

Jesus was sent of the Father. Here is his own statement. He says:

"For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."

Upon one occasion in the temple the authority of Jesus was questioned by the chief priests and the elders of the people. They asked him:

"By what authority doest thou these things and who gave thee this authority? Jesus questioning them said: The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? But if we shall say, of men; we fear the people, for all hold John as a prophet. And they answered Jesus, and said, We can not tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things."

The question Jesus asked these men is very important. He wanted them to answer whether the baptism of John was of heaven, or of men, but they refused to answer his question. John was sent of God and had the right or authority to preach and baptize. The Father in heaven approved of John's work as was shown when he baptized the Christ. The Father said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Jesus knew that John had the authority to baptize him, therefore he came to John for the ordinance of baptism. In the nineteenth chapter of Acts, mention is made of some baptisms which were only of men and not of God so rebaptism was necessary to make them legal. Evidently some one had heard of the baptism of John the Baptist and not understanding the question of authority, or priesthood, proceeded without authority to baptize some of the people at Ephesus. Later the Apostle Paul came to Ephesus and asked those thus baptized: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost, since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism."

Paul, knowing that these people were mistaken, explained to them the preaching or teaching of John. When the people properly understood John's teaching, Paul or Saul, who had also been sent of God with authority to baptize baptized these people in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul

"Follow the Gleam"

An Oration

By David H. Johnson

Annals of the past are rich in treasures of quaint old legends. In this scientific age, facts prevail and fancy is relegated to the background, but in more primitive days men's fancies conjured up beautiful, fascinating stories which through the years have still retained their charm. Perhaps of all legends of bygone days, that found in Holy Writ, of the visit of Wise Men to Bethlehem surpasses any other for beauty of conception and the lesson which it teaches.

In beautiful simplicity, Matthew tells the story of Wise Men from the East, Persian Magi or astrologers. Versed in the art of foretelling earthly events by means of heavenly phenomena, they knew that that bright star which had so lately come within their range of vision was the Sign that in the land of Judah, far to the West, had been born that mighty Prince of whom it was said that he would rule the world.

I like to think of the three Magi as men of three different types; the youngest one, almost a boy, impetuous, headstrong, but with a heart of gold, bringing to his tasks the ardor of vigorous youth and all the powers of that keen intellect that God had given him; the second one in his early forties, still in the prime of manhood, a leader of other priests, bringing to his work the quiet confidence that comes of experience, strong and athletic, as fitted to be the leader of an army as of a company of priests; and the last one, old and venerable, wise with the experience of many years, benevolent with the understanding and sympathy of a lifetime.

These three men, young, middle-aged and old, though of royal lineage themselves, hesitated not to pay their devotion to the new born King! For this was no ordinary royal Babe! They had heard of the Jews' expectancy of a Messiah, and had not the stars in years past revealed to them the nearness of the coming of the Desire of Nations, he who should rule the world in equity and peace And now, the stars had proclaimed his birth, and must not they who had foretold his coming go and worship him?

The little caravan set out from the gates of their Temple home and picked its way down vine-covered slopes and thence through irrigated fields and grassy plains. Pleasant in its early stages, their journey soon became tedious and difficult. Encamped beside the mounds of ruined cities of their own once splendid Empire, their hearts grew sad, and in the breast of the youngest burned the fierce resolve to make Persia once more a mighty power. But the aged sire shook his head and pointed to the western sky. There gleamed brightly the Star of Him they sought, reminding them that He it was whom they must serve. With the mighty desert stretching leagues ahead, each day seemingly bringing them no closer to its farther side, the evening meal was apt to be depressing. On every side stretched interminable wastes of barrenness. Behind them they had left their friends, their Temple and the comforts of life. Ahead, well, who could say what lay ahead? Perhaps, after all, it was but a vain dream, some idle fancy they had thought was actual truth. But as the wild things of the desert crept forth to seek their food beneath night's darkening mantle, the Star again shone lustrous in the heavens, and hope once more revived within them.

Then, too, the desert was full of dangers. Wild beasts and serpents from which they and their camels must be protected, were not so dangerous as wild men, fierce marauding Bedouins, the scourge and terror of small caravans. Fatigued by a day's journey, they and their servants must take turns in keeping watch, and in the soft, mysterious hush of desert night, the Star became to them a Star of Hope. From it they drew inspiration and strength to journey on. The desert left behind, and amid the luxury of the palaces of great cities, the thought of the Star tore them from pleasure and urged them on again towards their goal.

At length their goal was reached, and Matthew tells it simply, they fell down and worshiped the Child, bringing their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. Princes of the earth laid their gifts at the feet of the Prince of Heaven, acclaiming Him the Prince of all the earth as well.

There have been many followers of the Star. Great men and women of history have struggled onward with their eyes fixed upon an ideal for which they have suffered and bled, and perchance died! Hebrews, under a foreign yoke, lost their lives rather than lose their ideals. Christian martyrs and Protestant reformers faced death in dreadful forms for the sake of an ideal. Joseph Smith gave his lifeblood for his ideal. Leaders in every field of human endeavor have suffered persecution and

Foundation Studies in Christian Living

By James Evans

STUDENTS in my classes think it difficult to learn the theory of good teaching, but the graduates who are attempting to apply the theory they have learned know that their task is still more difficult. So it is with all the efforts of human beings to guide their conduct by patterns of thought and ideal.

I have frequently listened to sermons having as their central theme the Golden Rule. "Do unto others as you would that others do unto you," says the minister, in effect, "and the problems of your life will be adequately solved. Not only these, but the problems of the world as well may be solved in the same manner, as men and women in groups follow the Golden Rule."

Such sermons are good for me, but I frequently wonder whether the minister realizes how difficult of application is the thing he is suggesting, how complex are the situations in which the individual must make his reactions. Even if one were inclined to follow the Golden Rule to the letter, how can he be sure that he is putting his ideal into action? The answer is that he can not, except by studying the situations themselves, as well as becoming converted to the doctrine of the Golden Rule.

Nor can one be a Christian without knowing a great deal about the situations in which he is to make Christian adjustments. Being a Christian is a matter of method, in addition to being a matter of thought and feeling. It might truly be argued that Christ's message is not understood until the manner in which it is to be applied is understood. And it is to this phase of the problem of being a Christian that I think more attention may well be directed in our curriculum of religious education.

I believe that the curricula of our church schools have not been giving adequate emphasis to the problem of how to apply the principles for which the church stands. It is one thing to know what those principles are, but quite another thing to know how to make them function. We have concentrated on the former aspect, which is, in my opinion, the easier of the two. We have limited our vision to narrowly personal matters when we have sought points of application—matters of importance to the individual, to be sure, but not so important as to warrant the exclusion of other matters of greater consequence. We have directed attention constantly to a little world, and have left our pupils to react as best they might to a larger world, a world not less important to every person, but a world in which people unite to achieve what they desire, be it good or bad. Into that world every one of our pupils goes, and must go, every day of his life. By the time he has reached maturity, his contacts with that greater world are very great, and his privileges and responsibilities in that larger world are legion.

HERE are some of the questions that an adult must answer in reacting to the situations of this larger world:

How shall he provide for the health of himself and his family? What shall be done to safeguard and improve the health of the community? To what health organizations and charities shall he give his support, and to what extent?

What shall be his attitude toward the situations in his home? What privileges and responsibilities shall devolve upon the various members of the family?

In what manner shall he use his leisure time? What recreations shall he approve for his children? What shall be his attitude toward commercial amusements? Are they adequate, and within the range of his pocketbook? What alternatives present themselves? Shall he do his own playing, or pay somebody to do it for him?

How much schooling, and what kind, shall he get for himself? What type of education, and how much, shall the members of his family be given at his expense, or encouraged to get at their own expense? What shall be his attitude toward the tax problem as it affects the schools?

What shall be his vocational choice or business venture? What sort of return shall he expect on his investment of time, money, and labor? What shall be his attitude toward his employer and toward his employees? What standard of living shall he seek to maintain? To what extent is that standard of living a justification of the methods by which he obtains it? What shall he do if forced to lower his standard of living? What shall he consider the necessities of life?

To what political affiliations shall he hold? Shall he vote for parties or for candidates? What shall be his tests of the worth of a candidate? What shall be his reaction to questions of the day: Matters relating to War, to Pacifism, to Prohibition, to Socialism, to International Debts, to a Beer Amendment, to Racketeering, to Communism, to the Income Tax, to Armaments, to Race Problems, etc., etc.?

THESE questions, and a host of others, are vital in the lives of adults. The manner of their answering determines not only the manner in which one shall live, but whether he shall live at all. They challenge and demand careful consideration and proper solution. They are a part of this "larger world," about which I have been speaking, and within which is included the individual's smaller world. And yet, has it not been true that we have excluded these matters from the attention of our pupils in the church school? And have we not directed their attention mainly to matters which, from a sociological point of view, are least important because they touch the smallest number of people?

If I am, in the main, correct in thinking that such has been the case, I am also free to suggest that our neglect has been unwise from the religious and psychological standpoints, as well.

CHRIST'S message was a dynamic message, not merely something for reflection. He intended that men should do something about it. Had that not been so, there would have been no Christian martyrs in a Rome accustomed to hearing and discussing strange beliefs. The early Christians had definite ideas regarding the manner in which social life of their day would be affected by their doctrine. One of the greatest points of difference between Christ's church and the Church of the Middle Ages lay in the fact that the latter organization existed in a world of misery and social unrighteousness and did practically nothing to remedy such conditions. The Churchmen lived apart from society, they directed their attention to wholly other-worldly matters, and the wretchedness of the masses of Europe continued without abatement for a thousand years.

Today, we stand as a church professing to have not only the spiritual authority and sources of inspiration necessary to social righteousness, but also a plan for a society in which all the problems suggested above and hundreds unmentioned must be solved in the light of Christian ideals and standards. And yet, in our church schools, affording the briefest opportunities for giving the pupil a chance to discuss the problems of the "larger world" from the religious point of view, we direct his attention away from them and toward matters of a narrow personal, and often very abstract and intangible, nature. I ask you, candidly, whether it is psychologically sound to expect our pupils to solve such problems, or even to be inclined to attack them, in the light of Christian ideals, if they are never to get any directed experience in doing so.

It is my belief that the curriculum of religious education should offer, in increasing measure, abundant opportunities for young people and adults to apply the principles of Christianity to the consideration of community, state, national, and world problems. There is no dearth of material for use in such lessons. The newspapers, the magazines, the textbooks, and life itself are constantly thrusting these problems before us and insisting that we make reactions to them. We can not fail to decide what we shall do about them. Our very refusal to decide is a decision, the type of decision all too frequently made with disastrous consequences.

By way of conclusion, and to make clear and concrete the possibilities I have suggested for the extension of curriculum materials, I present below a chart list of topics from the single field of international relations, about which worth-while lessons may be built. Any one of the other phases of life activities mentioned earlier in this discussion will suggest a similar list of pertinent subjects.

1. What should be done about the war debts? What solution to that problem does Christianity suggest?

2. What is the Christian's viewpoint toward war? toward armaments? toward international peace treaties and so-called entangling alliances? toward armed intervention in the affairs of another country? What opportunities are open for the expression of this viewpoint? How responsible is each Christian for such expression?

3. How should a Christian regard problems of immigration? Is it Christian to exclude foreigners from America? What is a Christian attitude toward the recent decision of the Department of Labor, whereby thousands of foreign students will henceforth be prevented from coming to America to study? What can each Christian do about matters?

4. Should America be a member of the League of Nations? Of the World Court? What should one do about these problems?

5. Should tariffs be raised or lowered? In the light of Christian principles, how valid are the arguments presented for and against competitive tariffs? How can one help to express Christian idealism in this matter?

Two kinds of people rebel against man-made rules: some rebel because they are unworthy of the rules, and others because the rules are unworthy of them. And these latter rebel, not because they think the rules unworthy of them, but because they are aware of a law which the man-made rules have betrayed.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

American archæology is a subject of perennial interest to our people, on account of its relation to the Book of Mormon. In the mass of material, and the numerous recent findings, it is impossible to bring any account of this field of investigation to completion. However, we look forward to the time when some scholar can give his time to the heavy task of making a comprehensive report.

Until that time we are glad to present occasional articles like the contribution on this page which represent the findings of writers who are interested in various aspects of the whole question.

Central American Architecture

By M. H. Morgan

"They went to the narrow Central land,
Where ghosts of ruin hover;
Where ancient cities, vast and grand,
With trees are now grown over."

And Christ declared, on page 629 (Book of Mormon): "The places of your dwellings shall become desolate until the time of the fulfilling of the covenant to your fathers." (Which covenant was the coming forth of the records in the last days.)

America has no need to journey to Egypt for evidences of old civilizations. We have not scratched the surface of archæological discoveries in our own land.

One of the ideas brought from the eastern to western shores, was the step-back principle in architecture. Even the Jaredites, or first colony, had it, since the Tower of Babel was evidently constructed after this pattern. In fact, it is claimed to have been in use from *ante*diluvian times; but it is only within recent years that our modern architects have adopted it in the skyscrapers of our day as representing the highest and best type of structure. All the great public buildings gradually emerging from the mysterious and enshrouding jungles of Central America are of the graduated platform type.

The Tower of Babel is sometimes referred to as an abortive attempt to reach heaven, presumably a false supposition. Primitive peoples must be judged from their viewpoint, and not ours. Their statements were frequently couched in allegorical or fanciful terms, and limited by their understanding at that time. On the site of the original Tower was built, in later years, the "Temple of Merodach" sometimes called the "Temple of Nebo," composed of seven platforms, graduated; on the apex of which was constructed a shrine wherein the Oracles of God were to be received. It has been said the seven platforms represented the seven heavens, (referred to by a Biblical writer many centuries later); the construction of the pyramid being merely a gesture toward meeting God half way; and the Oracles received on its summit represented their effort at "reaching heaven."

The Hanging Gardens of Babylon are another form of the step-back principle, and on its various bases flourished wonderful flower gardens, groves, avenues of trees, fountains. The entire area was raised in terraces by means of tiers of masonry from seventy-five to one hundred feet in height.

Temple of Kukulcan, Chichen-Itza.

The triangular or three-point (Masonic) Pyramids of Egypt are a type of step-back. Some one has said:

"The mighty pyramids of stone
That, wedgelike, cleave
the desert airs,
When nearer seen, and better known,
Are but gigantic flights of stairs."

The great Egyptian Pyramid of Gizeh (small

Prayer and Testimony

Prayer

(A selected reprint.)

If we ask religious people how divine resources are to be made available, they will tell us that it is through prayer. It was on prayer that Jesus relied to carry him through each recurrent crisis. It was through prayer that he was able to meet the crowning agonies of Gethsemane and of the Cross.

And when we realize what prayer is we can understand why this should be. Prayer is the name that we give to the practice of the presence of God. It is the way we make explicit to consciousness the relation in which we stand to God all the time and so release for practical purposes those resources of wisdom, of inspiration, and of renewal which are always available for us, but which, for lack of intelligent direction, we allow to go largely unused.

Prayer that is sincere and effective can do many things for us; but the greatest thing that it does is to lift us to a new level of experience. It enlarges the sphere of our appreciations. We see things in a new perspective. We feel things with a new intensity. Through contact with God, the supreme excellence, we gain courage to resist temptation, strength to endure suffering, motive to oppose wickedness, love to forgive those who misunderstand and persecute us. It is through prayer and what prayer means that we come to grips with the most formidable of all the obstacles to certainty, the face of evil in our own lives and in the life of the world.

Prayer helps us to deal successfully with the challenge of evil, partly by enlarging the resources we can bring to bear upon the struggle against evil, whether in ourselves or in others; partly by reminding us that we are not alone in our struggle. God, who is himself love, is a sharer in our experience and by the transformation wrought in ourselves through the fellowship of his love we are encouraged to believe that in the end love will be everywhere victorious.

This hope of final victory robs present defeat of its sting. To his enemies, the earthly life of Jesus might seem to end at Calvary. In the experience of his disciples, Calvary became a stage in a continuing and triumphant life.

So prayer stimulates present resistance to evil by reinforcing hope in its ultimate defeat. In every age we find men and women who through its practice have been able to deal successfully with evils which they themselves believe, apart from that aid, would have proved too strong for them. It has helped them to bear pain, the wearying pain of the body and the even more agonizing pain of the mind, not by immediate removal of its causes but by introducing into consciousness new factors which have increased man's power to endure, and often to master pain altogether. It has helped them to deal with moral failure, restoring their self-respect, even while it sharpened their moral insight. Above all, it has given them a new purpose in life, helping them to see that no failure is final but that in a very literal sense defeat and agony—not the agony of the body only but the agony of the spirit—may prove a door leading into a larger life.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty, 1930.

Let Us Follow Jesus

By Grace Johnson

Always I feel encouraged after I read the testimonies of the Saints. They give me strength to press forward. Also they make me realize more strongly the trials and temptations others pass through.

Though I am young in years, I know this church is right. My parents are constantly teaching us children the way young people of this faith should live to shun all evil things, and how we should try to overcome the many temptations Satan puts before us.

We have a lively group of members in Paris Branch, Saints who are trying to live for Christ. Of course Satan comes among us at times, making us down-hearted, but the Lord is always near, and gives his Spirit to those who try to follow him.

It is my earnest desire to so order my life that my associates wherever I go, will know I am trying to obey the commandments of Jesus.

A Missionary Chronicle

By L. O. Wildermuth

After leaving South Dakota, where my son passed away in August, on my way north, I visited the Saints at Oshoto near Moorcroft, Wyoming. I very much enjoyed the association of such whole-souled Saints as Brother and Sister Fred Cousins and family, the Hartshorn and Dillon families, and other Saints, many of whom are former Lamoni people. It was a comfort to meet and be with these good people after the experience of a few previous weeks.

Stopping off at Hardin, Montana, I had a fine visit, meeting Brothers E. L. Kelley, jr., and S. P. Carpender. The latter has had years of experience in the lumber business in Wisconsin, the Pacific Coast, China, and the Philippine Islands. He has had many wonderful testimonies to the truth of the latter-day work, and has helped in a substantial way to forward it. Brother E. L. Kelley, after years in Hardin as a business man, is honored and respected as one of the town's leading citizens.

At Miles City I enjoyed the hospitality of Brother and Sister Frank Ingalls, where the latchstring is always out to the missionary, holding services during the week and meeting the Saints and friends there.

I was in Bozeman and vicinity over two weeks, holding meetings at the little white church at Reese Creek, ten miles north in the famous Gallatin Valley where the branch for many years has been presided over by Brother Reese. There in the early days of the Reorganized Church, Brothers Joseph Smith, Alexander Smith, E. L. Kelley, and other early standard bearers, preached the word. Over two Sundays I enjoyed good liberty preaching to interested audiences. Elder A. J. Moore and family made the missionary welcome as usual, Brother Moore being one of the few of the old guard, a companion missionary of the time of T. W. Chatburn, Heman C. Smith, J. W. Wight, and others. Brother Moore is loved by all and his wise counsel listened to as the presiding officer of Bozeman Branch.

Robert M. Esgar and Brother Jacobs, successful business men of the city, and their families made the writer welcome in their homes and in other ways assisted in the needs of the work. Both of these families furnish earnest and efficient workers in the branch.

Also I held cottage meetings one week at Reed Point, Montana, where two families of Saints, Commodore and Milton Schuyler live. On Saturday we drove twenty miles to the home of Brother and Sister A. E. Greenshields. There I was privileged to baptize and confirm Sister Alice Moore, and to administer to Sister Ethel Greenshields whom we hope will soon be restored to full health and strength because of her faith and desire to do the Lord's will.

At eight-thirty that evening I joined in wedlock Brother Fern Greenshields and Sister Alice Moore, the bridegroom, son of Brother and Sister Greenshields, spoken of above, and the bride, the candidate baptized that day.

On Sunday, the next day, we returned to Reed Point, baptized two children of Brother Commodore and Sister Schuyler, held confirmation, sacrament, and preaching services with a fine spirit present.

The close of that week and the following Sunday were spent at Great Falls, where I was glad to meet again and be made welcome in the homes of Brother N. P. Coleman, Ernest Eliason, Brother Redfield, E. V. Graybill and families. There I met also other Saints and friends, and enjoyed the meetings.

Brother N. P. Coleman is not only a busy and efficient business man as manager of the Underwood Typewriter Company in Eastern Montana, but is also district president, branch president, bishop's agent for Western Montana District, and is doing missionary work as opportunity affords. He and I, by request, visited at the home of Harry Watson and wife who were interested in the gospel.. The husband asked for baptism. Arrangements were made to administer this ordinance at daylight next morning in a beautiful creek running through the well-kept golf grounds of the men's club.

A fine spirit was enjoyed at the baptism and confirmation, Brother Coleman being the mouthpiece, and at eight o'clock that morning Brother Watson went rejoicing to his place of business.

On the way East I spent one day and one night at Hinsdale, being made welcome at the homes of James Kent and Sister Addie Richter.

The last two weeks I held meetings in Fairview and vicinity, visiting families of Saints and friends. The branch there is ably presided over by W. R. Hillman who is bishop's agent for Eastern Montana District. Brother Arthur Ritter, who is always willing to do his part, and the writer have visited isolated families south of Fairview.

May God bless the faithful workers there and everywhere.

Let Us Go Forward

By Mrs. A. R. Batcheller

We feel that as God permitted the Egyptians to oppress Israel in ancient times in order to make them willing to move forward to fulfill his purposes in them, he is now permitting us to suffer with the world, in order to make us come out of an Egypt of selfishness and sin, and do the work committed to latter-day Israel.

Knowing that "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord," let us profit now by our past mistakes, and seek to do His will: Otherwise greater suffering will be ours, and we may not be permitted to enter the Promised Land, just as so many of the Israelites failed to reach the goal and perished in the wilderness because they did not live up to their privileges.

May God help us to respond to our duties, and give us greater wisdom and further revelation necessary to accomplish the great task before us!

Young Woman Makes Covenant With the Lord

By E. B. Johnston

On September 11, I baptized a young woman by the name of Julia Golden. She first heard the gospel message as a girl in Sunday school. In later years she drifted away from the Sunday school, and early in September when I first met her, she was suffering from a serious complaint. She made a covenant with the Lord that if he would heal her, she would join his church. After we had talked over the gospel message, she asked that I should pray for her, that she might be healed. Our prayer was answered. She was healed.

A young man, not a member of the church, witnessed the baptism and said it was the most impressive outdoor baptism he had ever seen. I hope this may become as a seed of the gospel planted in his heart, and that it will cause him to investigate our work and find the truth therein.

May the redemption of Zion soon become a reality is my prayer.

Did God's Servant Go Hungry?

By a Sister

Yes, it was the day the missionary was to come, and there was only one dollar in our purse for food. The other dollar had to be kept for gasoline, and offerings were necessary for such occasions as the Saints expected to enjoy over that week-end.

We had previously written this man of God, asking that he abide with us. How were we to spend the dollar?

The sugar crock was empty and so was the potato bin, and I did want new potatoes for those June days. But forty-three cents were spent for ten pounds of sugar and twenty-five cents for two pounds of green beans. This decision was made when I weighed the matter of warm weather and the Word of Wisdom, thinking, too, how much I would prefer to have some sister make this choice rather than feed my husband meat at this season, if he were the one being entertained. Bread and material for a salad were purchased and there was left only seventeen cents to buy ten pounds of old potatoes.

When I returned to the kitchen I found Grandpa (or the good Samaritan as we called him) had left some eggs. So I hastened to bake oatmeal cookies, and from our basement came home-canned tomatoes and cherries; fresh lettuce and onions for the salad from our garden.

And thus how bounteously we dined after all. There was enough and to spare. This everyday little incident showed again how true are God's promises, and that he is caring for his children.

QUESTION TIME

Must one be charged with unchristian conduct, if he asks to withdraw from the church?

Inasmuch as the church is the body of Christ, one could hardly withdraw from it without implying that he was either willfully or ignorantly out of harmony with the teachings of Christ, who commanded unity with the body, not withdrawal. However, it is entirely possible that one might be innocent of any breach of the code of good morals, such as lying, theft, deceit, lewdness, or crime. If this should be the case, a formal charge of unchristian conduct is not required in order to effect a withdrawal from the church. The church has adopted the following opinion on this point:

"Your committee are of the opinion, however, that it is not necessary to formulate charges against a person who may wish to withdraw, either of apostasy or violation of the law in terms, in order to convene a court to hear such a case, but that the hearing should take place upon the act in question; viz: The persistent contention of the member to withdraw from the body, and should the court find that this claim is persisted in, and that due and diligent labor has been performed by the church officers to reclaim the member without effect, that the finding should be that the request be granted, and the member be severed from the body."—Conference Resolutions 529: 3.

By action of the church at the April conference of 1932, court action is required in the event that a member requests to withdraw. The provision states:

"No member shall be expelled or dismissed from the church except by court action. A member who requests orally or in writing to withdraw from the church or who unites with one of another faith, and who so persists after due labor has been performed, shall on advice of the court be dismissed and his name removed from the church records; except that if unchristian conduct is charged in the action, the court may render judgment accordingly."—Church Court Procedure V: 19.

Does the church require individual cups at communion? What was the ancient rule?

By resolution of the church (No. 672) each branch could decide as to using common or individual cups, except that it should observe the law in states or governments which prohibit the common cup. At a later conference the church adopted the individual cup as the authorized form of service, but did not prohibit any branch from using any other form (No. 747).

The ancient rule did not concern the vessels used in the communion, but the materials contained in them. It is true that the word cup is used, but clearly the term referred to the wine itself, and not to any receptacle which might be employed to contain the wine. Anciently there was a vessel in which the liquid was placed, and from this vessel it was sometimes poured into smaller drinking cups or vessels for the individuals who desired it. Whether or not this custom was employed at the Lord's Supper is not stated, but it may be inferred so from the language of the text in Matthew, which states:

"And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."—26: 27, 28.

If we observe this language closely we shall note that it was the "cup" which Jesus commanded his disciples to drink. Evidently this was not the intent of his words, and the term cup therefore was simply used to mean the liquid (wine) it contained. It would be practically impossible to construe the words otherwise in a reasonable way. It is entirely probable that the Twelve at the Passover had at least several drinking vessels, besides one larger vessel in which wine was placed for the convenience of all. A strict observance of the ancient law (Exodus 12: 8) would require that unleavened bread also be used, as was the case at the Passover of the Lord's Supper; but Jesus did not command this, hence yeast bread is generally used instead.

When, and through whom, was the Aaronic priesthood restored to this age?

We are informed by Joseph Smith that this great event took place on the fifteenth day of May, 1829. On this occasion, he states, a messenger from heaven appeared to himself and Oliver Cowdery and conferred the authority of the Aaronic priesthood, acting under the direction of Peter, James, and John. By this angelic direction Joseph first ordained Oliver, and then received ordination at the hands of Oliver. The baptisms were also performed in the same order. A. B. PHILLIPS.

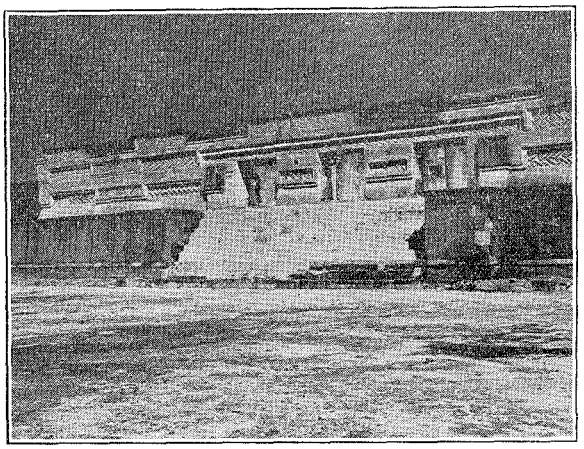
compared to one discovered in Central America) sacrificing as it did the lives of 30,000 men a year for twenty years, covers thirteen acres, and rises to an apex of 451 feet, perpendicularly above the ground. Ages ago it had an outer casing of polished stones, all carefully fitted together. On top is a level platform 36 feet square, and it is believed that it, too, held a shrine. The original height of the Great Pyramid was 481 feet—something like forty or more stories. There are corridors and chambers within, some of which are lined with polished granite. The average weight of the massive stones in the Great Pyramid is two and one half tons each.

This Egyptian pyramid is similar in every way to two great pyramids, and many lesser ones, being unearthed now in Central America today. Burton Holmes calls them the largest, costliest, cruelest tombs the world has ever known. But the pyramid had other uses than that of tombs alone. Hendrik Van Loon in his Story of Mankind also refers to them as "venerable memorials." Now on page 729 (Book of Mormon), Orihah, the first king of the Jaredites, and the son of Jared himself, "remembered how great things the Lord had done for his father"; and later in their history, on page 732 we find Shule, a descendant of Jared, also "remembered the great things that the Lord had done for his fathers in bringing them across the great deep into the promised land." Whether this means these men crystallized their "remembrance" in pyramids or not we can not say, but it could easily be true. Cramped for space on these plates, as they were, it is doubtful if they would utter idle words; and since, in Native Races, we learn that the great Pyramid of Cholula, and the Pyramids of the Sun and Moon (which are in Central America), were erected as "memorials" or "remembrances" of the "two great leaders who brought them across the great deep to these shores" we believe it a safe conclusion. At least it does not do violence to the text.

It was customary to place all public buildings on high bases, and various reasons have been assigned for this: a protection against enemies, reptiles, and the invasion of poisonous insects that infested the lowlands; to enable the guards in the watch towers to scan the country on all sides; to lend dignity, etc. Hosmer, in his History of the Jews, declares: "Whatever the reason, it certainly added dignity. Imagine, if you can," he says, "an artificial hill or platform 60 feet high, as some of them were, on the summit of which a building of several stories was set, each story indented. The foot of the visitor trod upon slabs carved or inlaid with handsome designs. The platform was ascended by a stately stair. Sculptured portals, by which stood silent guardians, colossal figures in white alabaster, the forms of man or beasts, winged, admitted him to the magnificence within. The facade . . . at its base, was covered with carven images. Upward, tier above tier, into the blue heavens, ran lines of colonnades, pillars of costly cedar, cornices glittering with gold, capitals blazing with vermillion; and between them, voluminous curtains of silk—purple and scarlet—interwoven with threads of gold. . . . The inscriptions were deeply cut in the cuneiform character, and parallel with them, in scarlet and green, gold and silver, ran the representations of the scenes themselves. Around these mounds, or artificial hills, were often fortifications, with watchtowers more than 100 feet high."



Ruined palace at Mitla, Mexico.

The Temple of Solomon was built upon a hill, and the inference would be that the temple "like unto Solomon's" built in Book of Mormon times (page 96) was also on a hill, either real or manufactured. Shiloh, where the ark was kept, and where the people assembled, was on top of a high hill. Samaria was a "high place." Gideon and Manoah built altars on high places, as did Samuel at Mizpeh, Saul at Ajalon, and Elijah at Mount Carmel. "The Israelites" (says one historian) "of the truth faith, and even those who apostatized, kept up this one idea—of worshiping on high places.'"

When the Babylonish king, Nebuchadnezzar, brought his Median wife from her mountain home, he built the Hanging Gardens for her to give the effect of mountainous country. The Ark is said to have landed on Mount Ararat in mountain country. Just how long Noah and his family remained there before the plains were fit for settlement can not be known, but the multiple building bases might be the outgrowth of a desire for safer high places. And as the low plains of Shinar between the Euphrates and Tigris Rivers, according to Mr. Van Loon, formed a "melting pot" out of which poured the Sumerians, the Medes, Persians, Chaldeans, Assyrians, Babylonians, etc., it is easy to see how the graduated platform type or "step-back" could be spread among all the nations of the world.

The Book of Mormon has much to say about fortifications, walls, towers, forts, etc. On page 495 we read of the Nephites fortifying the Land Bountiful, and securing the Narrow Pass. On page 485 it says fortifications were built "in a straight course from the sea east to the sea west." On page 553 it again tells of fortifications from east to west, across a portion of land easily fortified "it being a day's journey for a Nephite," and according to page 494 the Nephites possessed higher powers than the Lamanites at that time. On page 692 it refers to a final dividing of the land of which "the narrow neck" formed the line. This line had always existed as a division between Desolation and Bountiful, but now, in the final set-up, became the object of a treaty, to be recognized by both parties; and in confirmation of this Bancroft, in Native Races, volume 2, page 92, says: "It has been seen in what has been said on the subject that there was a dividing line between the Nahuas (Nephites?) and the Mayas (Lamanites?) drawn across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec," (not Panama); and along the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is where our historians discover these fortifications; not across Panama.

On page 495 we also read of the erection of small forts, or places of resort; walls of stone to encircle them, and their cities, and the borders of their lands; the throwing up of earthworks. Page 485 says that Moroni, that great general, "caused that his armies should commence . . . digging up heaps of earth round about all the cities . . . and upon these, works of timbers should be built to the height of a man . . . and upon these . . . should be a frame of pickets built upon the timbers . . . and they were strong and high . . . and he caused towers to be erected that overlooked these . . . pickets . . . and they could cast stones from the top." Bancroft, in Native Races, volume 4, pages 130, 131, 132, refers to a line of ruins nearly 100 miles long, most of them being remains of fortresses, or fortifications and built on strong natural positions at river mouths. "The ruins of Caminal are situated," he says, "in a fine, mountain-girt valley, the approach to which was guarded by a long line of fortifications, pyramidal mounds, and watchtowers whose remains may yet be seen." (Also see Book of Mormon, pages 485, 486, 500, 478, 235, 553, etc., as to fortifications.)

Walls, to these primitive peoples, played an important part in their building program, signifying, as they did, the inhibitions placed upon the trespasser, the "Thou shalt nots" of architecture; for ever at their gates, as in the imagery of the New Jerusalem, stood the invisible angel with the flaming sword, proclaiming to the invader, "Thus far and no farther shalt thou go."

The great wall of China, 1,500 miles long, 22 feet high, and 20 feet thick, is typical, in structure, of most walls surrounding ancient cities or public buildings. It was built of granite shell, filled with earth and covered with a very hard casing of bricks, laid in lime. Some of the walls, in times of peace, permitted of foot or chariot travel on their summits; but others, particularly in times of war, were covered with broken glass or other harmful materials.

The great bases or platforms were often sufficiently large to accommodate several immense buildings. The mounds were faced, sometimes with burnt brick; sometimes with stone, and again with stucco or cement. Naturally, the material most conveniently at hand was used. Both the Book of Mormon and secular history declare this. Page 549 says that the people became great workers in cement; and that timber also was cultivated that they "might build their houses, their cities and their temples, their synagogues, sanctuaries and all manner of their buildings," and some of this timber was also shipped to the north (north of the Isthmus).

The sticky red clay along the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers went into bricks. When the peoples pushed on into stony country, stone was used principally. However history also shows that marble, cedar and choice metals or textiles were transported in vast quantities hundreds of miles, if necessary. Sun-burned brick, exquisite marbles, fine stones of granite, woods of mahogany and walnut went into these buildings. Ragozin, in his History of Chaldea, said the most ancient bricks (those of Babel) were crude, and the inscriptions scarcely legible, but about 600 B. C. (when the Nephites left the eastern continent) the bricks were handsomely and neatly made. Each brick bore a stamp; each brick in the millions, yes, billions, that formed a mound. Historic legends of the people were carved on doorposts, colonnades, outer and inner walls, doorframes, etc. Fancy our being so particular that our history should survive! The few articles inclosed in our cornerstones pale into insignificance. Bitumen or pitch, poured hot, was used with the bricks, which adhered so firmly it was impossible later to break it.

John Hubert Cornyn, renowned archæologist, says that "This region (between the City of Mexico and the mountains to the west and south) is covered with brickmakers, whose ancestors have plied the same trade for centuries. From the brick pits, ten to twenty feet in depth, the remains of primitive civilizations have been coming to light for years. . . . A connected series of towns and cities with walls as wide as those of Babylon in the days of her pride, truncated pyramids, paved streets, gods and paintings belonging to the oldest civilized races of America, lie at the door of the Mexican capital."

M. W. Stirling, chief of the Bureau of American Ethnology, in an article in the National Republic, says: "In the formative arts, the Indian's productions will bear comparison with the best works of any race"; and he declares that "religious symbolism enters into all the decorative work of the Indian." For this reason, a study of the colorful beliefs of this people, their superstitions, ritualism, pantheon of gods, etc., throws light on otherwise obscure delineations.

We know from the Book of Mormon, pages 624 to 630, that at the crucifixion of Christ, there was a terrific cataclysm in America, when some cities were sunk below ocean level, or consumed with volcanic fires; other cities were covered with mountains of earth. Mr. Cornyn says as to this: "Along the submerged shores of Lake Texcuco, for a distance of thirty-five miles . . . is one vast graveyard of buried cities. Here and there over this extensive territory, the heads of primitive earthen pyramids, projecting through the debris of uncounted centuries, mark the graves of these once populous centers of early American civilization."

On page 609 the "Narrow Neck" is located as "the center of the land." The International Encyclopedia, Notes on Pleistocene Fossils, page 73, says: "South America through ages, was isolated from other continents, until there was a geological upheaval, that brought into existence the Isthmus of Panama, and so connected North and South America," which cataclysm was fixed at about the time of Christ's crucifixion. Book of Mormon, page 624, speaking of this same period, says "the whole face of the land was changed." But according to Book of Mormon history, long before Christ's crucifixion a narrow neck had been a dividing line, and since Panama did not rise out of the ocean until the crucifixion, according to the above citation, this narrow neck could not have been Panama but Tehuantepec. Book of Mormon, page 388, declares they were "nearly surrounded by water," and on page 115 the statement is made that "we are upon an isle of the sea." De Bourbourg claims the words isle or island were applied to "regions almost surrounded by water," and declares the Mayas knew very well that their country was a peninsula.

The Book of Mormon declares the narrow neck was fortified and Bancroft says the ruins of fortifications, forts, etc., are still to be found along the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

The interiors of their buildings being so elaborately decorated, demanded that other arts besides architecture should be brought to a high state of perfection, which the Book of Mormon declares to be the case. On page 96, we find Nephi teaching his people to build buildings and to work in all manner of wood, iron, copper, brass, steel, gold, silver and precious ores, which were in great abundance, and they "built a temple after the manner of the temple of Solomon." Pages 119,120 speak of the manufacture even in Isaiah's time, of chains and bracelets, mufflers, bonnets, ornaments of the legs, headbands, tablets, earrings, rings and nose jewels, together with "changeable suits of apparel," mantels, wimples, crisping pins, glasses, and fine linen hoods and veils. Page 198 refers to gold, silver, precious things; fine workmanship of wood in buildings; machinery, iron, copper, brass, steel, all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground, and weapons of war. On page 113 we find mention of the sharp-pointed arrow, the quiver and dart, also the javelin. Page 742: 71 says: "And they did work in all manner of ore, and did make gold and silver, iron, brass and all manner of metals, and they did dig it out of the earth, wherefore they did cast up mighty heaps of earth to get ore of gold, silver, iron, and copper, and they did work all manner of fine work; and they did have silks and fine-twined linen; . . . and all manner of cloth, and all manner of tools both to plow and to sow, to reap and to hoe, and also to thrash; and they did make all manner of tools with which they did work their beasts, and all manner of weapons of war, and all manner of work of exceeding curious workmanship. We also refer to pages 237, 302, 562, 240, 473 (medicines), 740, 207 (engraving), and many other places evidencing the advanced stage of their civilization. In the "Song of Quetzalcoatl," translated by Professor Cornyn, and carrying the rhythm of Longfellow's Hiawatha, we hear:

"And his people, they the Toltecs,
Wondrous skilled in all the trades were,
All the arts and artifices;
So that naught there was they knew not;
And as master workmen worked they;
Fashioned they the sacred emerald;
Fashioned they the precious turquoise;
Smelted they both gold and silver.

Other arts and trades they mastered;
In all crafts and artifices
Skilled were they as wondrous workmen."

In the Kansas City Star of April, 1931, speaking of Copan and Palenque, the writer declares them to be two of the oldest cities in Central America, filled with ruined temples, pyramids, and monoliths covered by a wealth of intricate carving, "everywhere, about the ruins; on the lintels of the stone doors, on the numerous stelai, the carved stone monuments that bear in their hieroglyphics the story of these lost peoples. . . . Strewn all about are the carved stones of the fallen porches of the temples; mounds nearby bury other temples."

The building program of these early peoples in Mexico and Central America was so extensive, according to Book of Mormon and secular history, we can only mention a few instances. On page 240 King Noah is credited with building many elegant and spacious buildings, which he ornamented with fine woods and all manner of precious things of gold, silver, iron, brass, ziff and copper; and he also built a spacious palace and a throne in the midst of it of fine work; and this, too, he ornamented lavishly. He built a tower so high he could overlook the entire land of Shilom and of Shemlon and all the land round about; and he caused many buildings to be built in Shilom, and there, too, he built another tower on the hill north of it.

In the land Bountiful another temple is spoken of, the one to which Christ appeared in 34 A. D.

On page 617 we have record of many cities being built anew by the Nephites after their return to their lands; many cities repaired, and many highways and roads cast up, which led from city t city; and secular history bears record of the wonderful roads, some evidences of which still remain.

On page 740 a certain Jaredite ruler levied such heavy taxes the people found them hard to bear, and with these taxes he built many spacious buildings and also many prisons, "and whoso was not able to pay taxes, he did cast into prison." (Sort of a vicious circle: tax the people to build prisons to hold the people who could not pay taxes.) Farther on we find all his fine workmanship came from prison labor, and those who wouldn't work (perhaps couldn't work) he put to death. This is paralleled in brutality by the treatment accorded the stonecutters of Egypt and Babylon. When they got too old, sick or worn out to stand (while they chipped away at the endless stones) and dared to remain sitting—their legs were tied behind their backs, says Hays in Modern History. Evidently prisons formed an important feature in their building program since we find so many references to them in the Book of Mormon, as on pages 377, 382, 244, and other places.

Page 381 speaks of a city Jerusalem being built. We have historic accounts today of these "sacred cities." On page 286 and 486 many cities are mentioned as having been built. Page 698, cities and strongholds are referred to. "Fortresses, covered with a coating of hard plaster," are mentioned in Native Races, volume 4, page 369, and "Ditches accompanying the walls add to the strength of the words." (See also Book of Mormon, pages 483, 500, etc.) One writer, describing them, says the walls were of "rough stones, four feet thick, and thirty feet high."

The Pyramid of Cholula, Mexico, covers 45 acres (32 acres more than the great Pyramid of Gizeh in Egypt). The Pyramid of the Sun covers 11 acres. "The Pyramids of the Son and Moon," says the Mexican Guide, published by Chas. Scribner & Sons, "rise in the midst of an arid region, largely composed of volcanic basalt, deeply indented by numerous quarries, whence building material was obtained in prehistoric times. . . . The conclusion arrived at is that they are the work of a race older than the Toltecs [Jaredites] of which only these monuments remain."

Now, as you all know, there were three separate colonies which established themselves in Central America and Mexico; first the Jaredites (or Quinames as they are known to secular history); second the Nephites, and third the Mulekites or People of Zarahemla, but as the Mulekites later became identified with the Nephites, we may consider them part of the second nation to inhabit this country. The first people were destroyed as the second came on the scene. This naturally means there was the very ancient type of building and hieroglyphics, and the later type partaking of the Hebrew, Egyptian and Babylonish. The second colony, discovering, in time, the foundations and buildings of the former, reconstructed and used them. The different periods are noticeable. DeBourbourg says: "Among the edifices forgotten by time in the forests of Mexico and Central America, we find archæological characteristics so different from each other that it is as impossible to attribute them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch"; and he further says, that "the substructions at Mayapan, some of those at Tulha, and a great part of those at Palenque, are relics of the earliest (Jaredite) period.

You will remember that though the Nephites were to be destroyed nationally, they were never (even in our day) to be exterminated individually or in groups. Then, too, the Book of Mormon speaks copiously of a "mixture." Large groups of Nephites seceded at various times (page 457, etc.), and thousands went away from the parent colony. Pages 548 and 549 refer to thousands leaving in ships for the north (north of the Isthmus); these Nephites came down, after the national destruction at Cumorah and helped the better element among the Lamanites establish the wonderful Mayan civilization. These advanced whites are known in history as Toltecs, but were of Nephite stock. "It is certain," says the Bureau of American Ethnology, Bulletin 57, "that some time in its history, Chichen Itza (in Yucatan, established about 500 A. D.) came under a strong Nahua influence, and by Nahua is here meant the peoples who inhabited the Valley of Mexico and adjacent territory about 122 A. D." This, to Book of Mormon students, should confirm the belief that the Nahuas were, in fact, the Nephites.

Gregory Mason, leader of the Mason-Spinden-Blodgett expeditions to Central America, says in the Kansas City Post, September 14, 1930: "Far from being a land of bloodthirsty barbarians, this was the domain of nations whose high achievements in the arts and sciences were founded on and supported by a solid basis of trade and manufacturing. Vast parts . . . which are now a wilderness—Honduras, Guatemala, Yucatan, and much of southeastern Mexico, and the forested uplands of Colombia and Ecuador—were (when Columbus made his fourth voyage) wide gardens of corn, beans, potatoes, manioc (tapioca), or were actually as thickly studded with industrial cities as Massachusetts is today. . . . The extensive grain and cotton fields . . . were criss-crossed by fine roads . . . broad, raised highways of stone which surpass the famous thoroughfares of the Romans—great causeways . . . remains of which may still be found . . . roads which ran over well-made suspension bridges . . . whose central artery of commerce traversed . . . a distance of 2,200 miles. . . . A land of industry peopled by between 50,000,000 and 75,000,000 business men. . . . Mexico was a center of the copper trade, and for the production of gold and silver . . . also the stone produced from their quarries. . . . This rock and other minerals was often shipped long distances by the exporting houses of those times. . . . The huge monoliths . . . several tons each . . . are believed to have been conveyed . . . by water, because of the canal excavations found. . . . The Mayas of Yucatan were expert goldsmiths and silversmiths. . . . Turquoises . . . were conveyed 1,500 and 1,800 miles, by land and water. . . . The wholesale gem venders of those days covered a distance of more than 2,800 miles. . . . The oldest rubber ever found . . . came from Vera Cruz and Tabasco. . . . Rubber was also used for incense, to tip drumsticks and for waterproofing. Cocoa was raised in large quantities in Central America and shipped up and down the coast. Featherwork was done with a skill which would be the despair of a modern costumer or decorator. . . . As for the paper manufacturers of those days, their "mills" acquired raw material from . . . the agave . . . which gave the first families of America not only paper, but cloth, rope, mats, dental floss, and the contents of the cup that cheers. One variety . . . gives sisal fiber. . . . Maya fabrics (textiles) were as good or even better than those of Peru. Ceramics (pottery) was the second greatest manufacturing interest. . . . Those 'foster ancestors' of ours were leaders and manufacturers as well as farmers. They knew the use of credit . . . and the loans were made without interest. . . . They even had their rotary clubs, their chambers of commerce and trade guilds."

Jack Williams, an archæologist, writing in the Kansas City Post, June 22, 1930, declares: "Near Mexico City a huge pyramid has been unearthed in what apparently was a walled temple of worship. . . . The pyramid was about 250 feet high and 1,600 feet around at the base . . . surrounded by a stone wall. . . . The temple of the pyramid was discovered beneath a hill which was covered with shrubs and small trees"; and you will remember page 625: 25, 30, Book of Mormon, says: "That great city Moronihah have I covered with earth," not that we are saying this is Moronihah, but at the time of the crucifixion this sort of thing occurred to many cities.

Doctor Sylvanus Morley, of the Carnegie expedition, writes of strange V-shaped ceilings in an uncovered Mayan ruin, the outside of which was decorated with X-shaped stones in alternate latticed panels, and rows of short columns (similar to the Hall of Columns at Karnak). Maya laborers, he said, "combined old methods with new in restoring the temple of their ancestors. They dug the white 'sakhab' out of 'pockets' in the ground to mix with American cement They burned limestone in the woods as of old, and drew water from an ancient well . . . the rock sides of which still bear the grooves of Maya ropes. . . . Indians ran . . . carrying water on their heads, whistling shrill Maya tunes through leaves in their mouths. . . . One Maya master mason called for a stone of ten and a half inches to fit a space . . . and it was found . . . among the scattered heap of dressed stones excavated from the tree-covered mound. . . . One strong-limbed Indian carried the capstones for the roof on his head, walking up the ladder like a statue, and not touching the stone which it had taken three men to lift up and lay tenderly on his hat. Once at the top three other Indians lifted it off and placed it on the ancient plaster marks."

Every year new discoveries among the forested ruins of Mexico and Central America confirm statements to be found in the Book of Mormon, giving further evidence of the divinity of its origin. There is an unlimited wealth of testimony at this time.

disappointment, but though they may have died with their dreams unfulfilled, yet who would dare say that they had failed? While man keeps his vision on the Star, while his hopes and ideals still guide him, he can not suffer defeat, but if he drops his gaze downwards, if he flees from the hidden dangers ahead, then, and only then has he failed.

Each one of us has his own Star to follow, his own dreams, hopes and ideals to realize. Like the Persian Princes we must ever follow the Gleam! Shadows of the ruined past may haunt us, the hopelessness and danger of our task may leave us desolate, or the pleasures and flatteries of the world may entice us, but in spite of all, the Star must prevail! Though we may pass through the Slough of Despond, though in the darkest night of sorrow our trembling hand may grope in vain for one to guide, though down in the deepest depths of the Valley of the Shadow of Death, yet if we lift our eyes we see through murk and mist and shadow, that radiant Star of Hope, that leads man to the very portals of Eternity to lay his homage at the feet of God. Said Ingersoll at the graveside of his brother: "We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word. But in the night of Death, Hope sees a Star and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

The undying urge within tells us that we must follow the gleam, no matter what it cost. Let our motto be framed in those immortal words, "To seek, to strive, to find, but not to yield."

had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."

In the name of the Lord Jesus, is by his authority. We might ask, Was the first baptism of these people of heaven or of men. It must have been only of men, otherwise it would not have had to be performed over again or "In the name of the Lord Jesus." But Paul's baptisms were of heaven and God by his Spirit approved of what Paul did, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit followed.

On another occasion, in Matthew, 9th chapter, when Jesus "saw the multitude, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd. Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Here are the facts. Ministers were needed among the people. The disciples were commanded to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send more laborers into his harvest. (Matthew 9: 38.)

In Acts, 13th chapter, the Holy Ghost from heaven said: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." This was when they were called to be apostles as stated in Acts 14: 14.

Later, in Acts 20: 28, Paul, speaking to the elders of Ephesus, said:

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."

God knoweth the hearts of men. He has the right to select whom he will for his ministry. Speaking of a God-appointed ministry (1 Corinthians 7: 17), Paul says:

"But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches."

Paul waited for God to call or appoint men to the ministry, then Paul knew whom to ordain. Jesus gave his twelve disciples power and authority:

"And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick."—Luke 9: 1, 2.

In the sixth verse we read:

"And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel and healing everywhere."

In Hebrews 9: 11 Paul says:

"But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come."

Christ was a high priest of the Melchisedec order.

In Hebrews 3: 1 Paul says of Christ that he is an apostle and high priest.

In Hebrews 5: 1 mention is made of other high priests who were ordained for men in things pertaining to God.

In the year 60 A. D. the Apostle Peter made a statement concerning priesthood. He said:

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 2: 5.

Again in the ninth verse he says: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood."

Some individuals have claimed that there was no priesthood after Christ, but the statement of the Apostle Peter gives us to understand that the authority of the priesthood was still in the church at the time he wrote his epistle, which is dated A. D. 60.

In Matthew 16: 19 Christ gave to Peter the authority to bind on earth, and it would be bound in heaven, and what he loosed on earth would be loosed in heaven Christ had taught his disciples the gospel law whereby this authority should or was to be exercised.

The question of Jesus concerning the baptism of John, whether it was of heaven, or of men, is made more clear, knowing that the ministers for Christ were given power, in harmony with the law to bind on earth, and it would be bound in heaven. In Luke, 10th chapter, Jesus selected seventy missionaries and gave them power and authority and sent them forth two by two. Even the devils were subject to them through the name of Christ. In this they rejoiced, but Jesus said unto them: "In this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven."

The priesthood of God was in the New Testament Church, and by this authority, these seventy missionaries had been legally baptized and their names were recorded in heaven. The words of Jesus to his disciples are in place here. He says:

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."—Saint John 15: 16.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Jesus spent all night in prayer before he selected the twelve apostles. Divine line in the selecting of men for the ministry is needed today as well as in New Testament times.

Paul, the apostle, speaking in prophecy, foretells a great change that was to take place in the church. In 2 Timothy 4: 3, 4, he says:

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

We should bear in mind that the church of Jesus Christ, or kingdom of God, is a divine institution, having divine authority, or priesthood, to carry on the Master's work, and when men heap to themselves teachers, to teach contrary to Christ's teachings, these men are not the authorized ministers of Christ, and they do not have power or authority to bind on earth and have it bound in heaven.

A great apostasy of the church was foretold by Paul to take place before the second coming of Christ. In 2 Thessalonians 2: 3, 4, he says:

"Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Under this condition of the church the blessing and direction of God through the Holy Spirit would be withheld and the great apostasy, which had been foretold, would take place.

Today we have many Protestant churches protesting against false doctrines, which were introduced during the Dark Ages.

Notwithstanding all this corruption of false teachers and false doctrine, Jesus has left on record the statement that the same gospel that he taught to men would be preached again before his second coming.

John the Revelator, while wrapped in vision on the Isle of Patmos, not only saw the great apostasy that was to take place but in Revelations 14: 6 he saw another angel flying through the midst of heaven restoring the gospel to earth again, that it might be preached to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples.

John was shown that an angel was to come, and our belief is that this prophecy has been fulfilled by John the Baptist coming again as Jesus said he would do in Matthew 17: 11 and by this authority and priesthood from heaven Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were appointed of God and ordained to be ministers for Christ to preach his gospel and to officiate in his ordinances that the way of Christ might be made plain to the children of men and that their names might be recorded in heaven.

Independence

Stone Church

Though rain marred some of the plans of carol singers the day before Christmas, and though the deep snow of two weeks ago was completely gone by Christmas Eve, the spirit of joy and gladness characteristic of Christmas festivities, was apparent from the opening bell of the church school Sunday morning, Christmas Day, until noon.

The Christmas program given by the primary, junior, and intermediate departments of the school, began at ten thirty. Commencing with the processional, "O Worship the King," youthful voices sang the Holy Story for more than an hour. Six choruses from the departments presented carol after carol to the enjoyment of the congregation. The music was grouped attractively about such other program numbers as readings and stories. To the following choruses and leaders the congregation is indebted for a large part of the entertainment: Primary boys' chorus and primary girls' chorus directed by Mrs. J. T. Westwood, sr.; junior chorus and Clematis Chorus, directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell; Boys' Choir, directed by J. Glenn Fairbanks and Miss Marcine Smith, and Cantinina Chorus led by Mrs. Bertha Burgess.

Handel's oratoria, "The Messiah," was enjoyed in the late afternoon by a crowd of music lovers. The performance beginning at four thirty was broadcast over KMBC by one hundred and twenty-five voices of the Independence Messiah Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. This was the fifteenth annual presentation of "The Messiah," and again the crowd thrilled to some of the magnificent choruses of the composition. The able work of the following soloists was much appreciated: Mrs. Nell Atkinson Kelley, soprano; Mrs. May Burgess, contralto; Edward Brackenbury, tenor, and Albert Brackenbury, bass. Accompanists were Robert and George Miller, organist and pianist, respectively.

Another joyous occasion of the holiday season was the wedding of Miss Pauline Crawford and John J. Watkins, at the Stone Church, Wednesday evening, December 28. The ceremony was performed by President F. M. Smith. The bride was attended by Miss Bormann as maid of honor, and Miss Eloise Watkins and Miss Mary Nigh was bridesmaids. Betty Ann Watkins was the ringbearer, and Jane Darlene Watkins, the flower girl. Ivan Dillee acted as best man for Mr. Watkins and groomsmen were Paul Holler and Thomas Williams. Paul Carpenter, Charles Williams, Albert Baird and Paul Tandy were ushers. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist, Frank White, violinist, Delta Maurine Nace, soprano, and Miss La-Rena Bullard, soprano, gave a program, and after the ceremony a reception was held in the church dining hall. The bride is a niece of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Loar, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Watkins.

Second Church

Saturday evening, December 24, "An Old-fashioned Christmas," was presented by the children and a ladies' choir composed of teachers from the primary department. The program was primarily for amusement. The climax of the entertainment was reached with the entrance of Santa Claus who distributed treats to the children.

The church school on Christmas Day was opened by an organ and piano prelude, played by Palace McPherson and Billie McPherson. A vocal solo, "I Heard the Bells On Christmas Ring," was sung by Mildred Fulk.

The eleven o'clock service was opened by the choir singing "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," followed by a short organ interlude played by Mrs. Gladys Inman. Nadine Inman and Ruth Bolt sang, "Away in a Manger." A violin-cello solo entitled, "Elegie," by Joseph Schravesande was played by Milford Nace accompanied on the piano by Miss Delta Nace.

Elder E. J. Gleazer, the speaker, was introduced by Pastor William Inman. Brother Gleazer took as his text Luke 2: 11. Brother R. L. Conyers gave both the opening and closing prayers.

Sunday night at eight o'clock a pageant, "Where the Young Child Lay," was presented by the young people of the branch. The cast was large and the production was well received by the audience.

Walnut Park Church

Services Sunday, December 25, were affected in a number of ways by the fact that it was Christmas Day. Evidently many remained home from Sunday school to engage in other activities typical of the Christmas season. The report showed approximately a fifty per cent attendance, 225 present, and 224 absent.

The children, however, were out in full force at the eleven o'clock service, which consisted of a program especially for them. Numbers given were: "Silent Night," by a boys' and girls' chorus; a Christmas story told by Ruth Bryant, "I Heard the Bells on Christmas Morn," by the chorus; sermonet based on Van Dyke's, "The Other Wise Man," by Pastor Frank McDonald, and "O Little Town of Bethlehem," by the chorus. The concluding number of this program, probably the most appealing to some of the youngsters, was the distribution of the Christmas treat of candy and popcorn confection to all members of the church school from intermediates down.

In order that members might spend a greater portion of Christmas Day at home with their families, the Religio, which meets at six o'clock each Sunday evening, was dismissed.

An illustrated lecture, "The Life of Christ," with lantern slide views of Palestine, was given by Patriarch U. W. Greene at seven thirty o'clock Sunday evening.

Spring Branch Church

Prayer services of late have been deeply spiritual and very helpful. Local priesthood members are regularly in charge, and much good is derived from both Wednesday night and Sunday morning prayer hours. Many were present at the Christmas morning prayer hour.

Sunday, December 18, Brother Sam Andes observed his eighty-fifth birthday. He has served the church many years and continues faithful in his service. That morning with Brother Jake Andes, he presided over the prayer service.

Brother Weeks was the morning speaker, December 18, reading the last remarks of King Benjamin (Mosiah 1), and some of the words of Alma. The choir gave the musical program Sunday night and the speaker was Priest Raymond Wrigley, who gave a splendid sermon.

Brother J. S. Andes took his Sunday school class of ten to the six o'clock mass at Saint Mary's Catholic Church Christmas morning. This is another of several visits this class is making to other churches.

Esther Frisbey gave a Christmas reading during the church school session.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker the morning of December 25, giving a wonderful sermon on the birth of Christ and the relationship of his life to mankind.

The evening service was a Christmas program in charge of Alma Tankard and J. S. Andes. All the children took part.

The Saints are happy to have Pastor G. W. Eastwood back again after an illness. The sick have been remembered in the prayers of all.

Englewood Church

Englewood congregation was favored with two excellent sermons Sunday, December 18. In the morning Apostle J. A. Gillen returned to Englewood after an absence of eight months, and gave a soul-stirring sermon on the "expectancy" of the church, the thing that God expects of his children, also what we should expect of ourselves, and the great need of the world in this time of crisis.

Elder Leonard Lea brought what he termed a "gospel pill" in the evening, which although not especially sugar-coated was not hard to take, and was most appropriate.

Sister Lea gave an interesting talk, "The A B C's of Dramatics," to the Religians in the evening, and a splendid program was given by guest artists.

The women of Englewood gave a dramatic skit at the regular sacrifice meeting of the women of Independence, Monday afternoon, December 19. The women's work in this congregation is going forward. The chicken dinner and bazaar Friday, December 9, was a gratifying success despite near blizzard weather conditions. Forty-three feminine workers accepted an invitation to a demonstration of a business house in Kansas City, December 20, each person attending being paid twenty-five cents. This afforded opportunity for entertainment and at the same time the earning of a little money.

The church school Christmas program was given Sunday morning, December 25, at eleven o'clock.

Not long ago the following church school workers were chosen for the coming year: Superintendent of juniors, Sister George A. Gould; superintendent of primaries, Sister Vera Crees Hood; kindergarten, Sister Stella Bliel Howery, and nursery mother, Sister Charles Petentler. Sister Edna Long is secretary and Sister Gladys Closson Welch, chorister.

Enoch Hill Church

At the church school worship period, December 18, Myron Warren played a violin solo and Helen Larson gave a Christmas reading. At the eleven o'clock hour that morning the choir sang, "A Song of Joy," and Miss Marjory Thomas sang, "Holy Night." Pastor H. L. Barto was the speaker, using as his theme, "Building the Highway of Life."

Elder H. G. Barto was the evening speaker. "Seek and Ye Shall Find," was his theme. The choir sang, "Silent Night."

On Christmas Day the class hour of the church school was shortened to give more time for the Christmas program immediately following.

The prevalence of flu in the community hindered rehearsals and took several numbers out too late to be supplied, but the program was well rendered and enjoyed by a good-sized congregation. The first part consisted of readings, songs, and short plays by the primary, junior, and intermediate departments followed by the play, "Seekers After Christmas," by the young people and the choir.

As a Christmas project the church school undertook to supply unemployed, needy, or lonely families with Christmas baskets. Organized classes chose the number of baskets they would prepare and deliver, and so everyone rejoiced over the spirit of giving and sharing.

Since Sunday was Christmas Day no services were held in the evening.

Dahinda, Illinois

Members Blessed in Many Ways

Elder E. R. Davis was here for an all-day meeting December 5, and on this day also occurred the annual business meeting. The Saints revere District President Davis, and appreciate the fact that he remembers them with an occasional visit to cheer and encourage. Their prayers and faith go with him in his tireless efforts for the Master.

Sister Ruth Dawson Duvall, recently married to Raymond Duvall, is in Dahinda for a time. She is very welcome for she is faithful in her service when here. She and her husband will be leaving again in the spring when work opens up for Mr. Duvall.

There is much sickness and sorrow in Dahinda as the flu is prevalent. None of the Saints have been taken seriously ill, and they feel that God is protecting his people.

Brother Ormand West, a young man of the branch, had the misfortune of having one finger almost severed from his hand and another severely hurt in a buzz saw not long ago. It was thought that one finger would be lost, but by the grace of God it is miraculously healing, and both injured members look almost as good as new. The young man is thankful for the Father's healing power manifested in his behalf.

Little Jean Dawson is again afflicted with an abcess on her arm and is confined at home for a time. She has been ailing for a year or so, but God has blessed her heretofore. Two years ago her life was despaired of while she lay in a hospital. She is a patient little sufferer, and the Saints hope she will once more receive a blessing.

Elder Edward Jones, of Kewanee, was welcome one Sunday morning in this branch. He preached on that day.

Elder R. V. Hopkins also visited here a few months ago, this being his old home branch.

All these are bright spots to cheer the Saints until other helpers come. Members are hoping to see Elder L. G. Holloway soon. They appreciated his one visit here, and at that time he drew a goodly crowd into the church.

Saints were happy to greet Brother James Dawson, of Kingston, Missouri, a few months ago, and to hear him preach once again in his home branch. James Dawson is a brother of Charles Dawson. He was born and reared here, and was active in church work for years. Many came to hear him, and longed for him to stay on and help build up the work at Dahinda.

Mary Virginia Dawson, daughter of Charles and Adeane Dawson, is attending Graceland College this year, and enjoying the work and associations there.

Sister Burt Hopkins and daughter, Joyce, of Princeville, Illinois, were here December 5, at an all-day meeting.

Pittsburgh District in Earnest About Debt Reduction

Campaign Calls for Help of All

Pittsburgh District has cleared for action on the debt reduction campaign, and under the present plans should be able to help materially. This district has been proud of the fact that in past years it has paid its way in the church, and this year was moving serenely along, feeling, of course, that its contribution would not be as high as in former years, but also confident that the end of the year would find its financial report favorable. Imagine the surprise of the Saints when it was called to their attention by the bishop's agent that they had paid in much less than their quota. They decided that something had to be done quickly.

Bishop's Agent LeRoy S. Eschrich brought a plan to the district presidency, a plan of visiting each member enrolled in each branch. This visiting was to be done by picked crews of workers, and the gift of a little penny slip given to each church member, Sunday school member, friend, or visitor. Each slip has twelve inches marked on it and pockets for sixteen pennies. Sixteen pennies equal one foot; 5,280 feet equal not only a mile, but $844.80. The idea of the mile of pennies is to gather in those "brownies" that slip away so easily. The regular tithes and offerings are not to be discarded because of this penny campaign.

Two things are expected from this effort: (1) Each member of the organized branches will be made acquainted with the financial laws and needs of the church; (2) Each member will be visited once a week as the collectors of pennies call, and each one may be recalled to his first love of the gospel.

A second plea has been made for an offering of gold. Saints have been requested to look through bureau drawers, trunks in the attic, or secret treasure places, and bring out those old gold watches that will not run, broken rings, discarded ear-rings or brooches. Though it is costing some pangs to do so, the bureaus and trunks are being searched, and articles of gold are being brought to the hands of branch solicitors. The Saints of 1932, like the Saints of Kirtland, or of Far West, or Haun's Mill, are awakening to the knowledge that comes to all true followers of Christ, that the gospel is the most worth while thing in their possession. To assist the church they are giving all within their power.

A third effort is being made among the members of the nonresident group. The district president is writing individual letters to each member, explaining the needs of the church and asking for aid in its time of need. This group has no local branch to support, and being isolated, they at times fail to contribute to the general church expenses. These letters are hoped to recall to them their love of the gospel and their responsibility in the temporal laws of the church of Christ.

Brother Eschrich and Elder T. M. Carr visited Pittsburgh Sunday, November 27, and presented the mile of penny slips, and that branch has since been hard at work. Supplies for the other branches were waited for, then Sunday, December 18, Brother Eschrich came to the southern branches and visited in order Fayette City, Lock Number Four and Donora Branches, organizing crews and urging the Saints to assist each other in helping the church.

December 4, Brother Eschrich visited New Castle Branch and returned quite enthusiastic over their response to his program. The branches of Fayette City, Donora, and Lock Four were visited by the District president on the same day.

A number of the members on the nonresident list have not been looked up for several years, and thus far three letters have been returned unclaimed. Of the rest of the personal letters sent out, but two were answered, both by colored members at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. One brother wrote that his financial troubles were so unfavorable he was unable to assist at this time. The other brother wrote inclosing a money order for six dollars as tithes for him and seven dollars as tithes for his sister, the wife of Brother William Fuller, who died during the past year. Workers are convinced of the regard of these Saints for the gospel. They have sacrificed not this once but at other times.

The groups of women in the branches of the district are working in various ways to augment the monthly report of the branch solicitors. In one branch they made and sold aprons, sold Jello, and are planning to sell some household novelties. In one organized group a collection was taken at their Christmas gathering which netted several dollars. The report of one branch in this district for November was as much as the entire district contribution for October.

The aim of this district is to make up the shortage in its quota this year, and begin on the 1933 quota at the beginning of the year rather than at the end.

Toledo, Ohio

Apostle C. F. Ellis Is Speaker

Following the district conference at Sylvania, where this branch was well represented, Toledo was favored by a visit from Apostle C. F. Ellis who spoke on three occasions. The Saints were also happy at the ordination of Brother Cramer to the office of priest. He is a spiritual man and will no doubt receive a hearty welcome in the homes of the Saints as he endeavors to perform the duties of his office.

The Saints were saddened by the death of two sisters within a week's time. Sister Rose Burger, a young mother of twenty-nine years, passed away November 30, leaving three small children to the care of a father already burdened by unemployment. Sister Amy Holmes answered the summons of the grim reaper, December 5, at the home of her daughter, Sister Marie Mattison. She was truly a "mother in Israel," and could she have heard the expressions of love and appreciation tendered by her brothers and sisters in Christ, she would have been most happy. She was always valiant in testimony, patient in tribulation. She fed the hungry, clothed the naked, housed the homeless. Hers was the home of missionaries of the district, or of anyone who needed succor. She will be sadly missed by the women's department in which she held the office of treasurer.

Outstanding Encouragement in Missionary Work

Good Response of Saints and Friends at Willapa, Washington

It was in November, 1931, that a mission of the church was organized in Willapa, Washington. Though Apostle F. H. Edwards and President F. M. Smith expressed their feelings to the effect that prospects were favorable for a further increase of new members, I confess I was a little doubtful with the exception of some families already interested. During my eighteen years of missionary work I had seen the work established like that, and then for many years, in some cases, there seemed to be no further success in getting new members. Prejudice had become very strong here, so upon our last visit in July our principal work was the building up of the Saints. Our time for missionary work was curtailed, too, by district responsibilities and the intensive preparation required for classwork at Silver Lake Reunion.

Recently we found it necessary to return to Willapa, as the Saints had been closed out of the hall where their meetings had been held. We knew not what to do to help, but prayed for direction. Upon arriving we felt that God's will would be carried out through the adjustments to be made, for we felt distinctly impressed to move our meeting place to a neighborhood about a mile distant. A large room of a home was offered for preaching services, and an intensive program was arranged.

We have just closed two weeks of meetings. Every evening I showed lantern pictures of Australia for twenty or thirty minutes previous to preaching. With this a contest was arranged under the leadership of Sister Wolfenbarger, in which all members of church and church school were urged to take part (only the missionary and his wife being excepted). This added greatly to the attendance, for points were given each evening that nonmember friends were secured by the contestants. It will interest readers to know that the most successful contestants secured sixty-six and forty-eight attendances of nonmembers, respectively, during the two weeks. These will be rewarded with suitable church books as prizes. Others also did remarkably well. Average attendance of nonmembers the first week was 14.8; the second week's average was 34.6. We appreciate this, seeing that the weather has been extreme with frost and ice, and latterly with rain; also that there are no back-rests on the improvised forms provided for seating. One evening we had to crowd seventy-five into the room which is only twenty-four by fourteen feet.

Never in my experience have I had greater encouragement in missionary work. Every day we have come home rejoicing after several hours of house to house visiting among new people. Comparatively few have turned us away; many openings having been made for home gospel talks and prayer; and it is good to know that this has become true in homes where prejudice was once strongly against us, and in homes where religion had never been encouraged. A glance at my prospect list shows thirty-seven new homes listed for visiting in and around the new neighborhood of our meeting place. Nonmembers have brought their babies to be blessed. Quite a number have volunteered their labors free if we should undertake to build a church. A number of homes remain yet to be visited, for having visited several times around where friendship has been secured, time has not permitted a canvass of all the territory within reach. This being Christmas week, and there being so many visits to be made where special invitations have been extended, our evening preaching has been closed for a time.

The splendid progress of the Saints (most of them baptized between July and November, 1931), has been very helpful to missionary efforts, too. During our visit here, attendance of women at their club meeting has been fourteen and seventeen, representing that many homes. At Oriole meeting ten girls were present. At young people's club meeting twenty-two were present. Many of these are nonmembers, but it has been fine leadership and saintly dispositions that have made this possible.

Before coming here, we were pleased, after diligent visiting of every home in the town of Sherwood, Oregon, and through special meetings, to leave a number of good people very near the kingdom. Some excellent work has been done by those in charge of the mission there, which together with the exemplary lives of the Saints, made ideal conditions for successful missionary work. We look forward to going back there when the way is clear, but for the present can not tell how long wisdom may direct our staying by the interest here. We can not see how it may be done (for there are no finances in sight), but we hope that through some means it may become possible for a house of worship to be erected here in the near future.

Meetings for Saints on Bruce Peninsula

Ontario Members Enjoy Summer and Fall Series

Some years ago Stokes Bay was a flourishing Branch, but owing to families and individual Saints moving away to other parts, it began to fall into a negligible state. Nevertheless, those who remain there believe in the gospel, and are looking forward to renewed interest in it. Elder Henry Ribbel and his son have endeavored in the past three years to build up the work, and God has blessed their untiring efforts.

During last summer and fall there were held, in various places on Bruce Peninsula, a series of all-day meetings, and three of these were held at Stokes Bay. During these services some wonderful manifestations of the Spirit of God were enjoyed to the extent that many of the Saints have been made to rejoice in the glorious latter-day work.

The first all-day service was held early in August at Colpoys Bay, where there were representations from Owen Sound, Wiarton, Chesley, Port Elgin, Stokes Bay, Lion's Head, Spry, and surrounding district. Some fine sermons were delivered.

August 21, the next of the series was held at Elder Henry Ribbel's home in Stokes Bay, at which time the Saints received the word of God in prophecy. A good spirit prevailed throughout the day, and a fine body of Saints was present. All felt it good to be there and were blessed with another testimony of God's goodness as they departed for their homes.

The third of the series was held at Spry, September 25, at the home of Brother and Sister Harry Johnston. Here, too, the Saints felt it a grand thing to meet with those of like faith and the spirit of good will and peace prevailed. Again the members received the word of the Father through prophecy. They were enthusiastic over these services, and a tribute is due those who made sacrifices in order that the services might be a success.

The next of the series occurred at Stokes Bay at the home of Elder Ribbel, October 1. Elder J. A. Morrison, of Owen Sound, and Elder D. B. Perkins, of Wiarton, conducted the meetings. The sacrament was administered, and two excellent sermons were delivered. All rejoiced in the spirit that was there.

At the service at Chesley, October 16, a remarkable manifestation of tongues and interpretation with prophecy was given to the Saints and a number of nonmembers who were present. The meetings on that day were in charge of Elders Ribbel and Simmons, who delivered inspiring sermons to the edification of all. Elder Ribbel and Elder Simmons worked in beautiful harmony, with marked success for both.

Again the home of Brother H. Ribbel at Stokes Bay was the scene of all-day services. Here another spiritual feast was enjoyed. Sermons were preached by Elder E. Boos, Elder D. B. Perkins, and Elder F. Simmons. The Saints are grateful for such men as these who through their untiring efforts make the services of the Lord a continual source of spiritual life to those who have not been privileged to hear the gospel for some considerable time.

The last services were held at Colpoys, and the Saints unanimously regretted that they would have to part until next year. But after splendid discourses by Elders Perkins, Simmons, and Ribbel, all went away rejoicing, and singing, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." It is the desire of the members to keep the gospel banner flying and that the gospel sound shall carry through until Bruce Peninsula shall ring with the praises of God.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Street

Elder Arthur Oakman just finished a ten-day series of meetings in Fresno. Both Sundays the church was filled. There was fair attendance throughout the week with a few nonmembers present nearly every evening. Cold weather prevented some from attending.

Brother Oakman discussed what we believe about God, man, sin, redemption, and atonement. He said that the best reflection of God was a life consecrated to do that which is righteous. Sin is that which stands between God and man. Humanity needs to know its possibilities. We have the power to choose between right and wrong. The only way to know God is to do the things he does. We believe in a God who speaks to man today. Divine revelation can become effective only as man recognizes the will of God, and sacrifices everything that will hinder his coming into the life of man.

We enjoyed Brother Oakman's singing. He conducted a class in music and had charge of meetings of the priesthood besides visiting a number of the Saints of this branch.

Elder G. P. Levitt, district president, met with Fresno members Sunday, December 11, and spoke at the eleven o'clock hour.

Brother Allen Roberts and Sister Marie Stanton were united in marriage December 16, at the home of the bridegroom. Elder L. W. Roberts, the bridegroom's father, read the ceremony.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer visited Fresno Branch, November 13. He gave an inspiring sermon.

Death claimed Brother Calvin Nephew, sr., November 23.

A Christmas program consisting of vocal solos, choir numbers, readings and two short plays was given Christmas evening. Brother John Lightowler gave the money to buy the children of the church school Christmas candy.

Nelsonville, Ohio

President F. M. Smith Speaks Two Evenings

It inspires the members of Nelsonville Branch to read of the progress of Saints throughout the world. Indeed it seems that the world-wide depression instead of retarding the work of the church is forwarding it, and that it draws the Saints closer together and nearer their goal—Zion, the beautiful.

President Frederick M. Smith spent the evening of December 7 and 8 in this place. His sermons were timely and well received. He administered to little Lillian Robison, a Sunday school pupil, who was lately very ill with double pneumonia.

Preparations for the Christmas program are under way.

The classes have been studying the Book of Mormon in the sessions of the department of recreation and expression.

The prayer of this branch is for a closer walk with God in the way he has given.

Conference for Southwestern Kansas

"Loyalty" Was Theme; Apostle R. S. Budd Was There

The heavens seemed to smile on the coming together of the Saints for the Southwestern Kansas district conference. Not only were the members blessed with beautiful sunshine, but they were able to bask in the warmth of God's Holy Spirit.

The Saints gathered Saturday morning for the opening prayer service, District President A. E. Stoft in charge. "Loyalty to God" was the theme which carried through the entire conference. At eleven o'clock a roundtable discussion was conducted and an effort made to help each one understand more clearly that which loyalty really means. Apostle Roy S. Budd conducted the service.

At the afternoon business session A. E. Stoft was sustained district president; J. W. Wooten and W. E. Williams, counselors; Sister Myrtle Fields was elected district secretary; Ira G. Whipple was reelected district treasurer.

Brother Budd addressed the afternoon and evening gatherings on "Loyalty to Your Country," and "Loyalty to Christ," and at the 9.30 a. m. service Sunday his topic was "Loyalty to Our Covenant."

All the Sunday meetings were well attended. At eight o'clock there was prayer meeting for the young people, and Brother Budd was in charge of a priesthood meeting; preaching, at nine thirty; communion service, ten forty-five; Sunday school, 2.30 p. m. Brother Budd addressed the women at 4 p. m. "Loyalty to Our Church" was the theme of the evening sermon.

In all these meetings the members were blessed with the spirit of peace, love, and humility.

Visiting Saints were entertained at the homes of local members. Everyone seemed to enjoy the sociability of this conference, and many remained for the closing sessions.

Saginaw, Michigan

Church Burns on Morning of District Meeting

Saginaw Saints were much depressed, December 8, to get news that their church was badly burned on the very morning on which President F. M. McDowell was to be here to hold a district meeting. All who came from other points in the district to attend this meeting with as many as could from Saginaw motored to Bay City and met in the Saints' church. Everyone enjoyed the association of President McDowell, and felt better at the end of the day because of the uplifting message he brought.

Members of this city feel that much was accomplished in 1932, in spite of hardships caused by depression, fire, and other things. The department of women raised a considerable sum of money to pay on the church mortgage and expenses through a bazaar, bake sales, and socials. At one time they cleared twenty-five dollars from a chicken supper.

The young people also did their share in raising money through socials and various other methods. Junior church and intermediate boys and girls have helped through socials of different types. At one social, sponsored by this group, the entrance fee was some useful article in the way of food. This was turned to the storehouse committee for distribution to the needy. This committee also has conducted activities to secure materials to assist those who lack food and clothing.

The church school has been conducting a Book of Mormon study period at six o'clock Sunday evening, and during the past year Brother Lewis Grice, the teacher, has attracted many to the class through his ability and his teaching methods.

The Saints feel that the Master has blessed them with a marked increase of his Spirit. A few Sundays ago when Elder John Wade was the evening speaker, the Saints were blessed with the spirit of song and inspiration from the opening of the service. That Spirit was also given the speaker.

Fifteen souls have been added to the church. Some of the priesthood have been very busy visiting and doing whatever they were asked to do; others have done their best though handicapped by their work. Let this be the motto of the Saints throughout the new year, "Onward to Zion!"

Knoxville, Iowa

Sister Erma Fee, a faithful and devoted church worker, passed away at her home here December 4, after an illness of several months with heart trouble. Her place in the Sunday school and recreation department will be hard to fill. She was loved by everyone. Her dependability and willingness to work in any department were her choicest gifts to the church. She was patient, kind, and loving through her illness. Her funeral was one of the largest held in the city for some time.

Church work in Knoxville is progressing. The Saints are using the Adventist Church, which makes a comfortable meeting place. A number of good people are near the kingdom, and the members are sure they will unite with the church before long.

The Christmas program caused considerable interest among the young people and filled them with the holiday spirit.

Wichita, Kansas

Osie and Water Streets

Wichita Branch is very active spiritually as well as socially.

The women met November 29, at the home of Sister Myrtle Fields for a book review. Sister B. B. Root, recently from Kansas City, told of Ellen Glasgow's book, The Sheltered Life, and brought to the attention of those present many things which they as mothers need to consider. They also enjoyed a luncheon November 28, at the Steffen's Ice Cream Plant, which was of a twofold nature. Each one paid twenty-five cents which was turned back to the church by the creamery. After lunch the group was shown through the plant, each piece of machinery being explained.

The choir of thirty voices is hard at work on a Christmas cantata. Mrs. Paul Nelson is the director. A Christmas play is also progressing under the direction of Sister Frances Balman. This will be presented December 23.

Wichita is blessed with an exceptionally fine group of young people who work together and enjoy many happy times as well as periods of worship and study. This group is under the direction of Sister Lena Curtis.

Recently Elder Stoft led into the waters of baptism Sister Manuel and her two boys, Ronald and Donald. Sister Manuel is a woman of wonderful character, and very active in community life.

Missionary Meetings in Louisiana and Arkansas

Communities Welcome Elder Baker and Stereopticon Lectures

In the past two months I have had some interesting meetings. About October 13, I commenced a series in the branch at Eros, Louisiana. This rural church is presided over by Priest J. E. Phillips. The Saints have a nice roomy church building. Grandma Fuller donates freely of her means in its upkeep, and she always remembers the missionaries. In fact this group is composed of members thoughtful in that matter. I preached to fair crowds for ten nights, using my stereopticon slides on the life of Christ, Paul's missionary journeys, the Prodigal Son, Book of Mormon, and old Bible scenes. On the closing day we baptized three children in the creek nearby, Marie Williams Joseph Perritt, and Mamie Mobley.

My next stop was at Dunn, Louisiana. Only one family of Saints lives there, Brother D. A. Byrd. The Baptist people have elected him superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school in which capacity he has been serving more than a year. I continued here for about two weeks, preaching short sermons and showing my pictures. At the conclusion five gave their names for baptism, Brother and Sister William Pitts, their two daughters, and the little daughter of Brother and Sister Byrd. Brother Byrd and wife are very sacrificing Saints. If all members of the Arkansas and Lousiana District were as particular in paying tithes and making offerings to the church, this district would not be in arrears as it is today.

Then I went to West Monroe, Louisiana and held meetings in a union church building for two nights. We have a group of Saints there who work at the Brown Paper Mill. The work seems to be on a standstill, but we are hoping things will take a turn for more prosperous conditions. However, the Saints make their contributions from time to time for missionary endeavor.

While at this point Brother J. J. Nelson and wife, drove up from Lafayette, Louisiana, and spent Sunday with us. I enjoyed the hospitality of Brother Henry Malone and wife; their doors are always open to the missionary. Again I spent the eleven o'clock hour, Lord's day morning, with Eros Branch. At this service action was taken by the branch for Brother Orland Phillips to be ordained at the next district conference to convene at Fisher, Arkansas, February 17 to 19. Brother Phillips is one of the promising men of the church.

In company with Brother and Sister Nelson Sunday evening, I headed for Lafayette, Louisiana, a distance of about one hundred and eighty miles. Brother Nelson secured the use of the courthouse for about one week. We used our pictures once more. Our crowds averaged about twenty-five each evening. The population there is about seventy-five per cent Catholic. We also attended the Baptist service Sunday morning. They were very friendly. Sunday evening I boarded Brother Nelson's car and they took me to Saint Charles, Louisiana, where I parted with our friends who had kindly cared for me, not forgetting that the missionary has expenses along the way.

Brother George Easton, of DeQueen, took me in his car to Dierks, Arkansas, where I began meetings in the Liberty Hill schoolhouse. The house was full almost every evening, but the interest was not as good as we expected. Brother Granville Trowbridge came out and filled his regular appointment on the third Sunday in November; also came back the following evening. This is in the vicinity where Brother J. D. Erwin was mobbed years ago, and unmercifully whipped. The Saints here, did have the lead. But they slept on their rights. While here I made my home with Brother Claud Jackson, and his splendid family.

My next point was Grannis, Arkansas. The Saints have a good church building. Crowds were reasonably good until the bad weather set in the last week of the meeting. The younger members of the church expressed great satisfaction in hearing the lectures and seeing the pictures. Brother Trowbridge, wife, and Dorothy visited this place on the first Sunday for his regular appointment. At the concluding service on Sunday night, according to Brother Budd's instruction, we ordained Brother Rye Morrison to the office of an elder and William Coker to the office of a priest. We expect some good results from the efforts of these men.

Branch News Gives Him Courage

I have been a reader of the Herald for years. It has been coming to our home ever since I was a small boy. I can not see how any Latter Day Saint can afford to be without it.

I love to read the letters from the different branches telling of their successes. It gives me courage to press on to higher ground.

Reaction

By E. Leola Nice

There is a plant in my garden that seems to be just an ordinary plant. It looks very much like others; its leaves are similar to some others, and it grows in a bush as many other plants do. Its flowers are small and not very imposing, and altogether one might think it is just an ordinary plant. But one day I stood beside it and idly pulled a leaf from it and crushed it in my fingers. And then I knew for the first time that it was not just an ordinary plant; for when I had pulled off its leaves and crushed them. the plant gave me, not bitter accusation for my treatment of it, but rather it gave me an odor that was sweet and fragrant. I inhaled its pleasant odor and mused over this so ordinary plant that needed adversity to show me its real character and worth.

There is a little furred animal that lives on the outskirts of civilization. It is almost like many other little furred animals; it has a warm, soft coat of beautiful fur, just as many others have, and it lives in the fields and woods as other timid animals do. To see it from a distance it would seem to be just an ordinary animal. But one day I got too near it—and hurried away in disgust and horror, for in its fear that I might harm it, it sent out an odor that was repulsive. I mused over this so ordinary animal which needed, not even adversity, but just the fear of it to make itself impossible and unapproachable and dreadful to contemplate.

There is a man I know who had always seemed to be just an ordinary man. He had an air about him of one well pleased with himself. He had good looks and knew it. He did not walk; he strutted. And then one day he met adversity, and they battled hand to hand. The struggle was brief, but he emerged from it with his self-satisfaction bruised, his good looks marred, his strut a shamble, his mouth full of foul words, and his heart dripping clear brine. I mused on this so ordinary man who had let adversity undermine his soul and sour his character and make of him a thing to be avoided.

There is a woman I know who had always seemed to be just an ordinary woman. Her looks were negligible, her mien calm. She looked at life through eyes that were unconcerned. She was not interested in things not related definitely to her, yet was never accused of being selfish. And then one day she met adversity, and it tore her from her accustomed place in life and crushed her beneath its weight. She struggled blindly and suffered intensely, then lay inert where she had been thrown. When she opened her eyes she found about her the imps of her opponent who hooted at her and taught her bitter things to say, and whispered untruths into her ears. They painted white things black, and blue things red, and thought to make her one of them in her wounded helplessness. But she looked at them a moment in dawning horror, and with a sudden motion of distaste turned her back upon them and bowed her head in prayer until that which had been growing bitterness in her heart became sweet generosity and love and gentleness. Then she went out among the people about her and was known as the most wonderful of women, and people gathered anxiously about her and basked in the light of her presence. I mused on this woman who had needed advertisity to make of her a joy and a person of value to her fellows, and decided that it is not, after all, what one is or can be that matters most in life. That which makes us one to be avoided or sought after is our reaction to adversity.

Notes of President F. M. McDowell's Lectures at the Somerville Conference

Thoughts Caught by the Reporter's Flying Pencil

It was a happy day when the church was born. It was a sad day when men forgot the purpose of its birth. Some members forget their church exists, financially or otherwise until suddenly on some stormy night, sickness visits their home. Some one is very ill, perhaps dying. Then the pastor's telephone rings, and that member must have immediate service.

Our service to Christ and his church must not be spasmodic. If we succeed it will be because we "continue in" His service.

Don't permit a loss of blessings through indifference.

Shoulder your part of the responsibilities financially and your spiritual experiences will multiply.

It is not the amount that counts, but the "widow's mite" regularly and freely given.

Don't let life's experiences sap your service, or cause you to shrink at the task.

The dramatic moments of life are found in decisions many of which are made at its crossroads.

Shall we be able to say: "We thank thee for the task which seems too great"? or "We thank thee for the experiences which seem too hard"?

The church needs you more today than at any period of its history, and you need the church more than ever before.

Elemental forces do not smirk and curtsey. The tides do not truckle. The stars do not apologize for invading our sky. There is in the prophet's soul an inevitable swing of the Spirit's tides, an oncoming as of starry hosts—he must speak his word.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

Go to friends for advice;
To women for pity;
To strangers for charity;
To relatives for nothing.

HEALTH IS WEALTH

Natural Foods make a Natural Body. Diseased flesh, Denatured-Devitalized-Unnatural Foods will bring on disease. Nearly all of our present ailments can be traced to improper foods, and tissue starvation.

Our bodies are made up of 16 elements, and if you do not eat foods that contain some of the 16 elements, in a short time it is first noticed by congested bowels, slow liver, lack of pep, and then comes nervousness, and as a rule the average person will reach for the pill box. Before you do this, get a can of PHOSFO and feed the starved tissues and save a lot of suffering and waste of time and money. Only a dollar bill will start you on the road to better health, greater efficiency and less expense for food. We are one of the pioneers in the Food Business with over 31 years of continuous work for suffering humanity. We want every Saint to be healthy and active. Save on food that is wasted and pay the debts of the church. I can prove that the average food wasted in the homes of Saints is better than $5.00 per month. We have something like forty thousand families. What would the bishop do if we sent him two hundred thousand dollars for just two months. I can live on a dime a day. What do you spend for food? I want to help every Saint in this church to feel better and to live cheaper and be of greater service to the church.

Any amount of reference. No risk of money or health.

All to win, nothing to lose.

—That 1933 will find me working with the church in every way possible. Will you?

If all the printing needs of the membership were cared for in their own printing plant we would be able to not only give work to many more worthy Saints but the church would profit in dollars and cents. Think this over when you need printing service of any kind.

Was baptized into the church by Elder C. A. Selbe, April 7, 1912, and since that time had lived a life devoted to the church. She was a consistent Christian woman, one loved and honored by all. The funeral sermon was by Patriarch Ammon White at Argentine Church, Kansas City Stake, December 8. Interment was in Maple Hill Cemetery.

From Westport Landing on the Missouri River by ox-drawn covered-wagons, the great plains were crossed in the spring of 1854, to Utah, and in the year 1866, together with her husband, Christen Christensen, she returned to Missouri by the same transportation, and their frontier home was established in Nodaway County, Missouri. In this home the same year was organized the Nodaway County Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, under the direction and assistance of Brothers Mark Forscutt, Robert Elvin, and John Vanderwood, sr. Mother Christensen united with the church in that year, and her faith has been unfaltering and her great love for her Redeemer has increased as the years passed by. In 1906, Mr. and Mrs. Christensen made their home at Independence, Missouri, where they lived for a period of ten years until the death of Mr. Christensen, since which time his widow had made her home with her daughter, Mrs. John L. She loved the Lord with a steadfast, unfaltering love, with always a prayer on her lips and thanksgiving in her heart for His mercy and goodness to her. The Pigeonhole

"Grandstanders"

The cult of snobbery will never die. Obliterate it in one generation and it pops up in the next. It is saddening to see a group of young people growing up who "play to the grandstand," and do little else. They can't join an organization until they know whether it has the families of the elite in its membership. They lead off in the parade with a proud stride, but they are never present when there are brooms, mops, and dust cloths to be used; such things are for the common horde. They never help with the business end of any job until the crowds are there and ready to cheer—and then they come to take the credit from those who have done the work.

Such youngsters are getting the wrong kind of character education, and it is sad to say that they are encouraged in it by their parents.

Parents ought to be careful of how they are training their children. Are your children too good for the common tasks allotted to others? Are they snobbish in their associations? Are they real workers, or do they only "play to the grandstand"?

Snobbish children are well understood by their own generation, and they get little pampering from their schoolmates. They are excluded from the real good times enjoyed by actual workers, they lose opportunities for friendship, and they are often unhappy. Then they wonder why. Who is responsible?

Once there was a man who habitually complained about the powder and paint that his wife used. One day she appeared without powder and paint. That cured him. He never complained again about her using it.

The pigeon was strutting in the sunshine on my window sill. He stopped, scrutinized a pile of manuscripts I was examining, and observed: "Many high-sounding phrases are priestly frailties in disguise."

"The trouble with a lot of you sinners that get caught," said the Pigeon today, "is that you are sorry but not penitent. Your consciences don't trouble you till you are found out."

"Jesus started with the heart—the affections of men—and you can rest assured that where our affections are, you will find our service. What better place to find the affections of a man than with God?"—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "This Do and Thou Shalt Live," preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Faith in Ultimate Success

Faith is an ever-present factor in the warfare of a Christian, for we walk by it; yet there are times when we lean more heavily upon it to keep us "plodding on" our way than at others. In the gloaming and the twilight we find it coming to the fore to be a lamp to our feet when the darkness settles. Our times of difficulty may have their twilight periods when the coming darkness is foreshadowed, or they may come upon us with the suddenness of an eclipse; but it is fortunate for us as a church and as church members that through our periods of depression we can have the sustaining power of an abiding faith.

Everywhere among us today are our people not only finding anew the value of trust in Divinity and faith in His guidance, but our stock in store of faith is increasing. "Oh, abide with me," is the cry of faith, and "Though He slay me yet will I trust in Him" is the more firmly yet determined expression of faith pressed to the limit of endurance.

We do have faith! and amidst the pressure of our needs we still see the outcome of our struggles in victory.

These thoughts have been called out by a paragraph in a letter which has just passed over the desk. To a business man in the church in a letter of at least partial business character we had said, "Tell us, if you will, what the outlook in business is, and what the church might expect along these lines." Here is the answer:

"I wish I were able to answer your question regarding the business outlook. I am, I think, like most people. I can tell more about what has happened than what will happen. So far we have been able to hold ourselves together, and still have a sincere desire to endeavor to analyze and work out the problems that arise.

"I am very hopeful and I am a firm believer that the financial difficulties of the church will right themselves in due time; and as a business man and a member of the organization, if it is any encouragement to you, I feel sure that while we are going through some very hard times which possibly were coming to us and will further develop us, yet in the end I believe if anything can exist and continue our organization will."

And we in turn feel sure that this feeling is quite general throughout the membership. It bespeaks the faith which is fundamental, and holds promise of ultimate success in meeting the issues, however severe conditions might be, providing we move unitedly towards meeting the problems, and all do the best we can.

We still have faith.

These Shall Call You God

By Cora Paxton Stewart

They are ashamed to hold Thy name in awe
And seek in divers ways to show their scorn,
These souls who find no grandeur in Thy law,
Nor in a wonder-world of music born.
They never kneel before a minister gate
Nor hear a whisper from a wind-swept sky;
Scoff at the Name on which the ages wait,
And find no song or flower to track Thee by.

Only the coward and the knave shall dare
To mock Thy name. Crusaders on the fields
Of Infidel were not ashamed to wear
The flaming cross emblazoned on their shields . . .
Martyrs, and shrines where pilgrims' feet have trod
And children's voices,—these shall call you God.

—The Churchman (New York).

"In an unconscious way as I grew older I came to realize that everything that is a part of life is inevitable to it, and must therefore be good. I could not be borne high upon the crest of ecstasy and joy unless I also knew the dreadful depths of the trough of the great waves of life. I could not be irradiated by such love without being swept by the shadow of despair. The rich teeming earth from which all beauty comes is fed with decay; out of the sweat of the labor of men grows the corn. We are born to die; if death were not, life would not be either. Pain and weakness and evil, as well as strength and passion and health, are part of the beautiful pattern of life, and as I grew up I learned that life is richer and fuller and finer the more you can understand not only in your brain and intellect but in your very being, that you must accept it all; without bitterness the agony, without complacency the joy."—Helen Thomas.

The success of the church depends on an informed membership. Every home should receive and read the Herald regularly. How about your neighbors?

Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric

The council comprising the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric was called by the Presidency to convene on January 3 and 4. Two sessions were held on the 3d (forenoon and afternoon), two on the 4th, and the final session on the morning of the 5th. The chief purpose in view in convening the council was to scan the present situation and analyze so far as possible the conditions confronting us and the problems demanding solution. And to this purpose the council adhered rather rigidly though some incidental matters received attention.

That the disturbance of normal conditions generally prevailing had placed us as an organization under unusual stress was evidenced by the attitudes of the men of the council, for all without exception bore signs of the strain under which they had labored in recent months; and yet it is safe to say that at few councils in the past have the men shown a finer spirit or approached the work of the council more seriously determined to keep the interests of the church to the fore. Personal factors were submerged in a splendid way with the result which is inevitable when men approach the problems of an institution in this manner. Solidarity was enhanced and a larger degree of cooperation developed.

As may be easily deduced, the chief consideration was given to the financial aspects of the work of the church, for here our problems are more acute. The convening of the council had been preceded by two days of conference between the Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, and at the Council there was presented by the Bishopric a clear-cut analysis of our situation and the chief factors pointed out which must enter into the solution of our group of problems. The able work of the Bishopric in this matter was a large factor in the success of the council in its work. It was easy to determine from the analysis presented what the logical course should be, though there was and is no mistaken idea that our work would be easy. There was less "resolving" and "moving" done at this council than any one for many years, yet it is doubtful if more careful and thoughtful consideration has been given to church problems at any other time. With the exception of a few incidental or minor details, the time of the sessions was given to discussion of the problems. Even the serious financial conditions prevailing within and without the church were envisaged in the light of our spiritual and religious objectives; and when at the close of the council the work before us was summarized, it was caught up in the expression that our task is to evangelize the world and "Zionize" the church. And if this can by all members of the church be seen as our great objective and each member can catch the charming attractiveness of such a goal, there will, I am sure, be given to the general officers of the church such a whole-hearted and unreserved support as will rapidly and substantially place us to the fore. With some exceptions made necessary by personal or individual factors or conditions, the men of the council are committed to their work without reservation and carry into it a devotion which lies at the root of a deep determination to put their best and their all into the task before them.

This solidarity maintained and carried into their work by the men of the council can not but be a dominant factor in the progress of the church. It causes us to feel that despite our handicaps the work of the church is hopeful.

Onward with the work! F. M. S.

Announcing

Youth Conference and Leadership Convention

June 17-25, 1933, Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, Iowa

It is likely that the church has rather definitely entered upon the policy of having its general legislative conferences biennially rather than annually. There was a time when these general assemblies were twice a year, in spring and fall. The reunions held in various parts of the field in late summer or in the fall have supplied a need for conferences or gatherings which are for instruction and spiritual or ceremonial activities, and their work has been effective for good.

In fostering or promoting the idea of biennial conferences there was had in view the necessary distinction between legislative and administrative functions. We need less legislation and more activities which will enhance our knowledge or appreciation of the laws already accepted.

But at no time have we lost sight of the need for educational gatherings. In fact, recent years have seen the expansion of the General Conference along these lines. And so the Presidency now makes a move which is in consonance with that which has created the two-year period for General Conference. The call is issued by the Presidency for a convention to be held in Lamoni in June for educational activities along definite lines.

The problems of the church are not confined to any particular class of members, but there are groups of persons who have problems in common. Our youth is one such. What the church shall do for and with its youth is closely allied to the question of what the youth shall do for and with the church. In meeting the situation presented by these problems all are interested, not only youths themselves, but those who have to do with them.

The purpose of the convention at Lamoni in June will be to enter frankly with the youth into a discussion of our problems and discover the common grounds on which we must approach them. So to this convention will be invited all who envisage these questions, or who feel the pressure of solving the problems. Parents, ministers, officers, educational workers, as well as youth will meet in joint efforts to see the problems and hunt for the solution. Of the details and plans more will be presented in subsequent issues of the Herald.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God"

V.—Conserving Our Gains

Had the church held all of its converts our gains would have been very rapid. However, it is too much to expect that there shall be no losses. Some have "gone out from us because they were not of us"; they had no abiding faith in fundamental Latter Day Saint doctrines, and in a time of stress turned elsewhere. Some were by temperament and cultivated habit so given to contention that eventually they fought themselves out of the church. Some have been unstable and have yielded to temptation or discouragement. It is the old story of the seed that fell among thorns, or on hard ground, or where the fowls of the air devoured it. No possible effort could prevent some of these losses.

Preventable Losses

Yet it is too sadly true that all down the history of the church many have been lost to us who might have been saved. A helping hand in time of need; more patient, Christlike consideration than we have been willing to give in times of division; pastoral attention at all times by the standing officers of the church: these would have minimized our losses.

We have gone to very great expense and labor to make converts, and too often after they have been made and duly baptized and their names recorded in the "Lamb's Book of Life" we have closed the book and gone away and forgotten about them. They have died, spiritually, as a result of neglect. The continued care and sustenance that newborn members need was not forthcoming. The brotherly and sisterly contact that was desired was not found.

The Standing Ministers to the Church

It is the work of the missionary to go out and preach the gospel in the world and make converts to the church. It is the work of the "standing ministry" to care for the converts that are made. Theirs is the commission, "Feed my sheep." The high priests, elders, priests, teachers and deacons of the church are "standing ministers to the church" to "minister to the needs of the Saints." They are not only set apart to preach the word to the Saints, they are also to have watchcare over them, to visit them in their homes and minister to their spiritual needs.

It is not merely a matter of making formal, official visits periodically; these shepherds to the flock should be alert to visit those homes where there is special need: sickness, poverty, sorrow, despondency, alienation, loss of faith. Many of our local men are working hard at this task, beyond their strength, in fact. Many, alas, are asleep on the job; they should awake! Some are worse than asleep: they go to homes where already faith is shaken, and they go with such a despondent and hopeless spirit that the ruin is completed. They should learn to carry a reviving message or to carry none. "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." One who weakens the faith of all who listen to him, clearly has not yet himself been converted and has need that one shall convert him.

Jesus strengthened those who even touched the hem of his garment. When he visited a home and went away again, he left peace: "My peace I leave with you." At one time our men were advised when they left such a home to say: "Peace be to this house." Whether the utterance be audible or not, in fact they should leave behind them the spirit of healing, of strength, of peace.

Others May Help

If we have need of "missionary families" we have also need of "pastoral families"—those who are sociable and who visit (as time and strength permit). A sister moved from a far distant province of Canada, where she had been isolated. She came to a large branch where she fondly hoped to enjoy the association of those of like faith. Months passed and no Saints came to visit her humble home. No visiting officers came. She felt more lonely in the midst of a great gathering of Saints than she had felt when alone in the world. The Saints in every branch should be alert to make friends with such newcomers who have not yet "fitted in" and found friends.

This work of visiting is not limited to the priesthood. The sisters may do much good, and in some branches are doing great good visiting homes where there is need of their help and sympathy. Meddlers and gossipers obviously have not much to contribute here; but wise and good women are of invaluable aid to the church.

A Sacred Calling

A certain glamour has attached to missionary endeavor. The man who leaves home and family and goes away for months or years, perhaps overseas, to preach the gospel has and deserves to have great admiration. The local men who toil for a living and after a hard day or week of work sacrifice their ease and their family association and give over their own hobbies and pet recreations to go out in the discharge of their duties among the Saints attract no such attention; but their work is no less sacred, and certainly, in the light of that which we have written, is no less important in the upbuilding of the church. They more than any others may help to conserve our gains and prevent loss of good and valuable members who may be in immediate need of help to stand through some emergency or stress. Many a good and active man, almost invaluable to us, is now with us because some brother was a pastor to him in time of need. Many a man equally valuable has been lost because he did not find such help. Elbert A. Smith.

The relationship between God and man, we must never forget, is a reciprocal relationship. It is not man who takes the initiative in seeking after God: but God who goes out to find man. Religious faith is not simply discovery, though it is that. It is response. The God of living religion is the self-revealing God.

God's revelation comes to different people in different ways, but however it comes it is always a surprise. Something has happened to make life different—something unanticipated, something creative. Where once there was darkness, now there is light. Where once there was strain, now there is inner harmony and peace. How the change happens we may never completely understand. We know only that it has taken place and that it has altered the experience of living for us.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

"No One Is Going Hungry or Cold"

Many Means Used to Prevent Distress

This word comes to us from a branch correspondent: "But no one is going hungry or cold!"

As a result of the Harvest Festival movement, and this year's decision to retain the bulk of products in the communities where they have been gathered, little storehouses have been established in many of the branches, where the surplus goods gathered and saved minister to the needs of the local poor and needy.

In many places poor families have been "adopted" by those families in better circumstances, or by clubs composed of young people, or of older ones.

In Independence a campaign of education and supervision to train women in better ways of caring for their families and of preserving their resources has been effectively started. This movement is bound to be taken up elsewhere. Many a family is in distress that would have plenty if they could know how to use what they have.

The economies and sacrifices of the women are directed to the aid of the church, as well as to the aid of unfortunate homes, with splendid results.

During the holidays classes of young people have undertaken to entertain and provide food and clothing for children of unfortunate families. Thus they receive an excellent training in practical Christianity.

"Pound parties" to which every person invited brings a specified quantity of something to be given for some charitable purpose have effected relief in some cases. Gifts of groceries and clothing have been found in many cases to be better than outright gifts of money.

It is by these means that many a community can say, while reviewing the difficulties to be encountered, that, "No one is going hungry and cold."

In these hard times we must help each other. We are put to the test as to whether our Christian training and teaching mean anything after all.

CURRENT EVENTS

New and More Deadly Gas for Warfare—

Information about lethal gases more deadly than any used in the World War has been current for some time. A recent dispatch to the New York Times quotes the Earl of Halsbury, in the British Legion Journal, in part as follows:

"One modern asphyxiant bomb would kill everybody within a radius of a half mile, the victims being driven so mad with irritation that they could not stand respirators.

"Inquiries made from three foreign firms of the highest integrity show that any one could easily manufacture these gases in a very short time. Within a week they could be producing 100 tons of diphenyl-chlorarsine daily, which could easily be converted into diphenyl-cyanoarsine. The total amount of poison required to fill the main part of the London area with a lethal mixture of arsenical poison gas to a height of forty feet is only forty tons."

Another gas mentioned is lewisite, which "aircraft could spray through hose pipes in liquid form."

Defense squadrons, Lord Halsbury concludes, can not protect towns from aerial bombers.

"Air manoeuvers in 1927 were intended to reassure the public that our defenses against hostile aircraft were adequate, but actually proved that London can not be defended."

New Theory of Creation Hints of Old One—

Every little while the scientists amuse themselves and the world at large by springing a new theory of creation. Doctor Harlow Shapley, a world famous astronomer located at Harvard University, says, according to press reports, that "the heavens and stars were created all at once in mighty action," which offers some similarity to the Biblical story of a creation that took six days. This theory is different from the idea of an evolutionary process that took billions of years.

This change of front on the part of science should teach devout believers to hold fast to their ideas. Eventually they will find the wayward scientists agreeing with them.

There is, however, a disparity in point of time. Doctor Shapley thinks that the creation of our galaxy, out of a "big cloud of something—possibly hot gas," occurred ten billion years ago. The lay mind is astounded at the prodigality with which scientists casually toss the quantities of years about. But give them time—they may get in line yet.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle G. G. Lewis in the Society Islands

"The work of the Society Islands' Mission is in a flourishing condition. Spiritually they are alive. They are keenly interested in the church and in Zion." So writes Apostle George G. Lewis after a month's visit to this mission on his way to Australia.

Brother and Sister Lewis and their baby daughter arrived in Papeeti, Tahiti, September 10. Soon Brother Lewis and Missionary J. H. Yager set off on a tour of the Tuomotuan Group of islands, visiting Makatea, Rairoa, Matahiva, Tikehau, Kaukura, Niau, Apataki, Ahé, Manihi, and Takapoto.

During this trip the missionaries made the acquaintance of hundreds of native Saints, and found themselves in numerous unusual and interesting situations. Some of these experiences Brother Lewis relates in a letter printed in this issue of the Herald.

Graceland Pair Are Wed

Miss Katherine B. Schafer, of Philadelphia, and Myron C. Fisher, jr., of Somerville, Massachusetts, both Graceland graduates, were married December 19, at the church in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by Henry L. Livingston. Details of the ceremony are given in "The Bulletin Board" of this issue.

Would Hold Meetings at Miami, Florida

This is Miami's busy season of the year with dog races, air races, and horse races attracting the attention of sports lovers all over the United States. Miami is a winter resort for many northern residents. And because this is the busy season there, the little branch of Saints is seeking a meeting place large enough to hold missionary meetings. Some time back a series of special meetings there was most successful, and the Saints, led by Pastor Lawrence Willey, hope in the near future, to win others to the truth.

Golden Wedding Anniversary for Lamoni Couple

Elder and Sister J. D. Stead celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in their Lamoni, Iowa, home, January 4. For thirty years Brother Stead was a missionary, representing the church in all the States west of the Mississippi River except Louisiana and Arkansas; in four States east of the river; three Canadian provinces, and two islands. They were married at Jacksonville, Illinois, in 1883, and moved to Lamoni in 1899.

Homesteader Families Winter in Canadian Bush

The ten Latter Day Saint families who have settled on claims in northern Ontario, not far from Monetville, are experiencing real pioneer life in the midst of a Canadian winter. These homesteaders are busy building homes, constructing roads, getting acquainted with the new country, obtaining provisions, and living their religion.

Of his experiences in carving a home out of the Canadian bush for his family of a young wife and five small children Brother Francis Reynolds writes interestingly in the News of this issue.

A Descendant of Lyman Wight Blessed

Jeanne Fae Gardner, infant daughter of Jack and Fae Emmerson Gardner, of Kansas City, Missouri, and a member of the sixth generation of the Lyman Wight family, was blessed Christmas Day at Central Church, Kansas City. Elders officiating in the blessing were her grandfather, J. A. Gardner, and her great-grandfather, H. O. Smith.

Centennial Service at Place of Prophet's Birth

An impressive part of Kirtland's commemoration of the Joseph Smith centennial occurred Sunday afternoon, November 6, when the congregation descended Temple hill to the old building where the second Prophet of latter days was born November 6, 1832. There the Saints held a brief ceremony, a meaningful part of the memorial services of that week-end.

London's Contributions to the Church

The contribution of tithes and offerings to the general church for last year from the branch at London, Ontario, amounted to $2,476.54, or an average of $6.37 per person. More and more these members are made conscious of their financial responsibilities to the church.

Nor have these Londoners confined their progress to the financial aspects of local and general work. In the past twelve months they have grown spiritually and numerically. Nineteen were baptized into the church, sixty-eight per cent of this number coming from the junior church school division.

Our Call to Teach

By C. B. Woodstcok

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 19, 20.

CHRIST was about to depart from earth life when he gave his disciples this ringing message, "Go ye, therefore, and teach, . . ." Jesus had fulfilled his mission; he had set the stage for the salvation of the world, he had brought the gospel of love and service, he had begun to build his kingdom. He left a major task to be accomplished by his followers on whom he bestowed his spirit. It is ours to complete for our day the unfinished work of the Master. So shall we be his disciples. It is clearly evident he would have our teaching effectual unto conversion, for he continues: "baptizing them . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, . . ."

It is worthy of note that the teaching should both precede and follow baptism and that it should include the observance of "all things" which Jesus as the Son of God commanded. On this condition the comforting assurance is further given, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

In Saint John 21: 15 Jesus is quoted, talking to Peter. It was the morning of the marvelous draught of fish. After Jesus had fed the disciples from a breakfast of his own cooking, he inquired, "Peter, lovest thou me more than these?" In reply, Peter repeatedly declared his love for the Master, and Jesus said, first, "Feed my lambs," and then, "Feed my sheep."

The Master's call comes down to us. Do we love him, his truth, and his people, the lambs of his fold, more than "these"—the passing things of this world? The most severe criticism to be passed upon the lay Christian of today is the complaint of selfishness which permits us to aspire to the blessing of God for ourselves, but which does not lead us to give of ourselves that we may be spent in his service. Too much of our allegiance to the Christian faith is based upon what we may hope to receive. Jesus feared even Peter followed him because of the loaves and fishes he had seen dispensed at his hands. True faith is manifest in our ability and willingness to render service unto the least of his handiwork.

As we sense the words of the Master to Peter they echo our call to the teaching work of the church. Are we able to say with Peter, "Lo, we have forsaken all and followed thee"? To follow means that we have learned to love the things he loved, that our lives have been fashioned after the pattern he came to demonstrate, that we are loyal to the ideals which moved him, that, in turn, we may exemplify in our lives the beauty, power and joy of godliness. So shall our lives be a source of blessing to all about us. Jesus was especially mindful of the poor, the weak, the needy. He would have Peter minister to the sheep, but he was especially concerned for the lambs.

How clearly our first duty is to feed the lambs of the fold! I recall most vividly the occasion of my father going out in the early morning to the sheep pen, and the eagerness of the sheep to respond to his call and to eat of the generous feeding of oats and clover. But to the little lambs of the fold he was most tender and thoughtful. Often, if sick, or cold, or neglected, they were brought to the house and carefully nursed and fed until they could be safely returned to the flock.

THE test of the shepherd is found in his care for the sheep and the lambs. Most any one may put in time "looking after sheep," but only he is successful who knows his task, who loves the sheep, and is willing to give of himself in his care for them. Most any one may accept appointment as an officer or teacher in the church school, but few really feed the lambs and the sheep. It is easy to become engrossed in the material things of life, in the passing pleasures of self-satisfaction, and to neglect the feeding process. "Lovest thou me and the little ones, more than these?"

The Master proclaimed his message of love and light and salvation. He invited men to come to him, to believe on his word, to accept his love, to take upon them his name, to help perform his service, to grow into his likeness. In return Jesus promised the presence and power of his Spirit—"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Such was his message and his personal call two thousand years ago. Of the many who heard the call in his day, few responded, and of those few who followed the Master not many proved worthy of the final choosing to be teachers and leaders among the people. A chosen vessel is not one picked by chance, but one found worthy of a particular use.

How May We Discern the Church of Christ?

By J. E. Vanderwood

Many people apparently fail to place the necessary value upon the church of Christ; they have allowed tradition or custom to influence their moods, and by reason thereof they have neglected the most important and vital claims of the church. The church of Christ is more than an organization or an institution; it is the body of Christ, the divinely authorized, and divinely appointed institution, and is therefore of vital importance and uncomparable value to the children of men. We read in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, that, "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." It is therefore readily understood that there is saving power in the church. This being true, it is of imperative importance to me that I should know something about it, that I should be able to recognize it and distinguish it from the organization of men.

The first thing to be considered by mankind in connection with this matter is that the church is of divine origin, that Christ is the one who has instituted it, and that it was of sufficient concern to him to cause him to take particular pains in having it meet the necessary requirements. He has said: "My Father gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should do, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting; whatsoever the Father commandeth me that therefore also I do." It is well to observe that the things that were taught and done by Christ were the things that the Father required of him. We find him again saying: "I do always the things that please him." Since we have an abundance of evidence along this line we are assured that in the building of the church our blessed Lord placed in it that, and only that, which the Father had commanded.

In very unmistakable terms Jesus said, "I will build my church." Saint Paul tells us he built it for an habitation of God through the Spirit. (See Ephesians 2: 22.) Having learned that he is going to build his church, and the fact that it is to be builded for an habitation of God through the Spirit, I think it is of great importance to us that we acquaint ourselves with his teachings, so that we may be able to recognize the church of Christ if we should come in touch with it. If we fail to do this we might be so unfortunate as to come in contact with it and be unable to recognize it. This would indeed be a serious situation to find ourselves in, but I am persuaded there are many good meaning people in the world who are in this predicament. "How are we to avoid or overcome this?" I am asked; and my answer is, "By searching the Scriptures." "To the law and to the testimony, for if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8: 20.) As we search the word we see that before Jesus undertook the responsibility of organizing or building the church he went into the mountain and continued in prayer to God all night. When the morning was come he called unto him his disciples, and of them he chose twelve whom he called apostles, and he ordained them that they might be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach. (See Luke 6: 12, 13; Mark 3: 13, 14; Matthew 10: 1.) This is in perfect harmony with the teaching of Saint Paul who says that God set in the church "first apostles." (See 1 Corinthians 12: 28.) There is a very definite reason why he should set apostles in the church first, for the apostle is a missionary and he was first needed. These men were sent out to win souls for Christ. They are an important part of the church organization. We should therefore remember that if we find a church that does not have in it apostles, it is not the church of Christ.

We are then told in the same scriptures we have been reading that Christ set in the church secondly, prophets. There is a very definite reason for this, too. The prophet is a spiritual leader and standing minister unto the church. He is to feed the flock and to build them up in the most holy faith. The prophet then fills a very important place in the church as a spiritual teacher. Any church therefore that does not have prophets is not Christ's church. (See Acts 13: 1.) Not only did the Lord place apostles and prophets in the church but he also set in the church the seventy (Luke 10: 1.), and high priests (Hebrews 5: 1). There were elders in the church also. (Titus 1: 5; Acts 20: 17, 28.) There were evangelists (Ephesians 4: 11), there were Bishops (1 Timothy 3: 1-7). We find also that there were pastors and teachers (Ephesians 4: 11), and then deacons (Philippians 1: 1). Thus in searching the Scriptures we see that Christ set in the church ten branches of divisions of the priesthood, which are known as apostles, prophets, seventies, high priests, evangelists, bishops, elders, pastors (or priests), teachers and deacons. When we find the church of Christ we will find in it all these officers, and where they are not to be found we do not find the church of Christ.

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Chapter 2.—The Maid Serves the Soup

"COULD ever a Thursday be more discouraging?" dismally thought Polly as she watched the rain from the leak in the eve trough just above the kitchen window, drive in a steady rivulet down across the pane. Was it the rain? the smell of mentholatum in her nostrils? She was trying to ward off a cold. Was it because Carrol had been cross? Or was she just tired? She wished Brad were home.

Polly was secretary of the Saturday Club, a small organization of young Latter Day Saint matrons, and all afternoon she had been trying by telephone to get up the program for the regular meeting of the club. First, the woman she wanted to secure as speaker was out; then three times the line had been busy. She could not get in touch with a special doctor guest as he was out of town. The musician, too, was not at home. She worked in Kansas City and would not be in until late that evening.

There were dozens of things for Polly to do, important things for which some one was depending on her, but somehow she could not get at them. The electric iron was out of commission; something had gone wrong with the connection, and so the ironing had to wait until Brad could mend the iron. Somewhere she had misplaced the recipe of a cake she had planned to bake, and there wasn't syrup enough in the house to make the candy she had promised her group for the candy sale they were to have in connection with a play at the Dining Hall tomorrow night. Tomorrow, of course, she could get out, but there would be many other things to do. And so the young woman resigned herself to the ample basket stuffed with socks and stockings to be mended.

At that moment the telephone sounded noisily. Indeed it rang so long and so loudly before she could free herself of the socks and stockings, that she was afraid Carrol would wake up. He had been asleep almost an hour, blessed relief! And sure enough, before she reached the disturbing instrument, a sleepy call wafted down the stairway—"Mummie! Mummie!"

"Oh, dear!" she sighed thoroughly sympathetic with herself.

But the voice at the other end of the wire made her pulse leap—Brad. "Hello, dear," he greeted, "something important has happened. An official of the company, Mr. Russell, is in town, and Mr. Weatherby's in the city for the rest of the day. He's staying over until tomorrow, and it doesn't look so good to let him go to the hotel for dinner. How about my bringing him home? Would it be all right?"

Since their marriage Polly had made it a rule to hold open house for her husband's friends and business associates. They enjoyed sharing the comforts of their home with all their friends. Often she had entertained men of Brad's company. But today—in the face of everything else—a strange man to dinner! Her enthusiasm seemed to dwindle down to her toes. Why couldn't he have chosen some other day to drop in on the Independence office? or why could not Mr. Weatherby, the superintendent, have been in? She felt a wild desire to laugh or to cry, maybe do a little of both. But no—she must say something. Brad was waiting.

"Why—of course—"

"What makes you sound so queer, darling, sick?" His tone was anxious.

"Sound queer? Oh, I'm all right. Just in a hurry. The baby is yelling for attention. The telephone woke him when it rang and he's been awfully cross today. . . . Why, of course, dear, bring your man home." Then, like the thoughtful wife she was, "Is there anything you would like especially for me to fix?"

"U-m-m, well, you make wonderful meat loaf. Maybe if you'd make some of that—"

There. She would have to order groceries after all, and she had not counted on that until Saturday. This supper was the climax to her day of ill luck.

Carrol was very much awake. He was telling the world about it with all the power of a healthy pair of young lungs.

"My goodness, Polly, what have you done to the son and heir?" demanded Edith. Polly, busy over her grocery list, had not heard the girl enter. She was on her way home from school.

"He's just expressing himself." Polly tried to smile.

"What's the matter?" Edith, quick to sense dejection, pitched a battered advanced algebra and Vergil into an armchair. "Can I help? You aren't sick are you, Polly?"

"No," smiled the other. "Echo would say I had a 'sinking feeling.' But this has been the queerest day—everything's gone wrong. First it was the rain; then it was the Saturday Club program, and my cold, and Carrol's crossness. On top of it all I've been lonesome. There hasn't been a soul in today except you. I'm so much the dash-about Dora and up-and-at-'em Polly, that I'm getting to be terrible company for myself and baby. Really, child, I find it hard any more to sit down contentedly in my home to read or think. Isn't that awful?"

"You poor dear," sympathized the girl. "You always try to do too much. You ought to rest. And a person who has a cold always— Yes, Carrol, Auntie Edith's coming," and she whisked her one hundred and one pounds lightly up the stairway without finishing her sentence. A moment later, she returned with the little fellow, all smiles now but with tears still on his cheeks.

"And we're having company tonight!" Polly tragically announced, "a strange man from Brad's office."

"Young or old?"

"I don't know. Brad didn't say—he was more interested in meat loaf—and I have to order groceries."

"Carrol wants gummie," was the unexpected announcement of the now gurgling youngster. "Mummie, Carrol wants—"

"Gummie, dear, is his name for a graham cracker. Will you get him one and some milk?"

While Edith established the baby in his highchair in the kitchen and poured the milk, Polly ordered the groceries. She had scarcely finished when, the self-appointed nursemaid called from the kitchen: "Oh, Polly, I have an idea!" and an animated girl stood beside the desk. "You've so much to do. Let me help. And tonight at dinner, play I'm your maid, will you? That would be fun!"

"But—"

"We'll wink at Brad, so he'll understand, and I'll take these books home, explain to mother, and get my black dress with the white, ruffled collar. Really —I'd love to."

"Sly minx," laughed Polly. "You want a look at this man Brad's bringing. Always the eternal feminine!"

"Oh, well, what if I might be a little curious? You know that I'm doing it for you—" There was a note of reproach in Edith's tone.

"Of course, you darling. You're always so helpful."

"Then you won't mind?"

"Well—"

But Edith had vanished. Only a coo from Carrol was her answer. This really wouldn't do. Probably Edith had plans of her own for the evening. Polly knew that the girl would sacrifice any date she might have if she thought her teacher needed her help. Her devotion was of that caliber. She would call up and tell her. . . . Mechanically her hand took the receiver from its hook.

INSTEAD of central's "Number please," Polly heard voices. A cross connection or an open key at the switchboard. Quickly she moved to hang up, when mention of her own name stayed her: "It looks as if Polly really wouldn't have the face to enter into so much right now. Common reserve and decency—"

"Yes, doesn't it? It seems with domestic troubles and a divorce pending, she wouldn't be quite so active in church work, but then this younger generation of women, you know, Sister Shirley. . . . Our homes and mothers aren't what they used to be."

The eavesdropper gasped. Could they be discussing her? Surely it was some other Polly!

"Well, I guess all of it's true," the other pursued in her leisurely drawl. "Sister Coven told me that she heard they wouldn't speak to each other nowadays and that Polly was going to sue Brad for divorce because he's running around with other—"

Anger like a hot tide surged over the listener. So overwhelmed was she that with a sharp cry she slammed the receiver in its place. Gossips! How she hated these talebearing women. She and Brad mad at each other! Wouldn't speak to each other! She was going to sue him for divorce? How perfectly preposterous! How could such things get started?

Dizzily she arose from the desk and groped for the kitchen. Carrol was clapping his empty cup on the table of his chair, a sign that all the "gummie" had gone "down the red lane."

"But, Polly, dear, don't cry. You're just nervous. Of course there's nothing to it! I'd like to wring their necks!" was Edith's vicious wish. "But just you keep quiet. I'll find out how this started. Really I wish you'd listened more. You might have heard the names of the people Brad's supposed to be running around with."

"I wouldn't have listened for the world," hotly declared Polly.

"Well, I would—"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Meddlesome old women! Why can't they tend to their own business?" wailed the other.

"Oh, my dear, you don't suppose anyone could be talking because Brad has driven me up to school two or three times recently." Edith paled.

"Crazy!" choked Polly.

But the girl was thinking. She was more angry than she cared to admit that anyone should talk so of her two best friends, Polly and Brad. She would find out how this gossip started and if she was mixed up in the so-called scandal.

"Come, dear, here are the groceries," a moment later. "Shall I fix the pear salad and the celery?"

Soon the two of them were at work, each busy with her own thoughts. It was not until she had placed the salads in the ice box along with the celery, that Edith spoke again. "Did Brad mention this man's name he's bringing home?"

"Russell, I think. Why?"

"Just wondered." Edith liked men, and they liked her. She was popular for her eighteen years at William Chrisman High School where she was a senior. Her small, piquant face, the tilt of her nose with its scattering of golden freckles, the light in her brown eyes—all combined to make her an attractive bit of femininity. Polly had known her since her tomboy days when the world was composed of overalls, roller skates, and hard-to-understand Sunday-school teachers.

"Well, as our maid," chuckled Polly, "you'll have a dandy opportunity to 'size him up' as Sister Smith would say. They say one of the most severe tests through which a person can be put is that of eating." There was something about Edith's presence that always cheered Polly, and she was beginning to feel better.

"Now what, young fellow?" quizzed Edith of Carrol who clung devotedly to her skirt.

"Did you get those coats finished yesterday, Polly? Mother brought a dress home with her to work on."

"Goodness no, child. What do you think I am, a magician? I worked on two or three until the other women took them over. One I brought home with me. It's a gorgeous thing of blue broadcloth with black fur, fox, I guess. Some one will have a lovely wrap for the winter, if my remodeling is successful. The material is unusually good. Bet the coat when it was new cost not less than a hundred dollars—why, it's better than any I ever had. Looks as if it had been worn not over two winters."

"Gee, think I'll patronize the Commodity Shop."

"Anybody home?" and there on the threshold stood Polly's nearest neighbor, old Sister Livingston, whose fluffy white hair curling all about her face gave her an unusually childish, gentle appearance. "Polly, my child," she began as she closed the back door. "Oh, hello, Edith. I baked some of those scones you and Brad are so fond of." Edith loved to hear her soft English voice. She had come from the old country soon after the days of Reorganization. "I thought you might like some for supper."

"Oh, thank you, Sister Livingston. I can't tell you how grateful I am—"

"Better not try then. I only hope you enjoy them as much as I did that graham cracker pie of yours. That was a new one on me, but was it good! . . . How's my fine boy?" she crooned sweeping Carrol into her arms. "Do you have a kiss for Grandma?"

"But, Sister Livingston, really, you don't realize how you are saving the situation. We're having company from Brad's office tonight, and the cake I had meant to bake, well, it isn't baked."

"What, company? Now, dearie, I'll run right over and get some more—"

"Oh, no, please. This is lots."

"But menfolk love 'em with butter. You can't tell me, dearie. My Henry used to say there wasn't a thing in the world better than scones. I'll be right back."

"Isn't she the dearest thing? She's always saving my life like that. Her heart is as large as—as the Auditorium."

"Well, of course, she never has any reason for doing anything for you, Polly," severely. "You never do anything for your neighbors!"

Polly flushed. "Well, I get my biggest thrill in life out of doing things for other people, Edith."

"And don't we all know that! But listen, did I hear a car stop? If it's Brad, on with my apron, and you run upstairs and dress."

"Oh, it couldn't be. It's too early. He generally—"

"Yes, it is too," from the girl who had flown to the window near the driveway. "They're getting out, and gee, Polly, he's good looking! A regular Adonis." She was rapidly tying her apron.

Polly, with one last look at the cooking dishes on the stove, tucked her son under one arm and vanished upstairs.

"Bet he's married," Edith speculated, glancing at herself in the hall mirror before she opened the door. "Still he doesn't have that 'married' look. It would be interesting if he wasn't!"

The success of the church depends on an informed membership. Every home should receive and read the Herald regularly. How about your neighbors?

Are We Keeping Christ's Commandments?

By Lula Jackson

Since I am isolated from church privileges and the Saints, it seems there is little that I can do to help except to write a letter at intervals.

During the past summer I visited some old-time Saints. They seemed to be strong in the faith. I stepped into one home which I had not visited in years and the first thing I noticed was a copy of Zion's Ensign. The last time I visited that home none of the family belonged to the church. They seemed to be so strong in the faith that I rejoiced.

The longer I live, dear Saints, the more I see that life is grand and glorious if we walk on the King's highway. This faith is worth living for.

Here is a matter over which I frequently ponder. Friends, do you read your Bibles? Or do you let them remain in the dust until you can write your names on the backs? Do you have your name written in the book of everlasting life, or is it written only on the back of a dusty Bible? We are commanded to search the Scriptures, for in them we shall find everlasting life. God will give us eternal life if we will walk on his highway, for he is the king of heaven and earth. He will bless and keep us safe from wicked thoughts if we put our trust in him.

Are we living for Christ? Let us say this:

"But drops of grief can ne'er repay
The debt of love I owe.
Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

Jesus is calling us to follow him. He pleads with us to come. And if we will not listen, if we will not learn of love, if we will not walk in his way, we do not deserve an eternal home. He will help and keep us if we obey his commandments.

I would be glad if an elder of the church could come to Shawnee to preach to us. I don't believe an elder of the Reorganized Church has ever preached here.

May God bless his church and minister to its members. I have been warned of things to come, and it seems as though God is warning me of something now. Please pray for my family and me. I would be happy to hear from Saints who care to write.

Ways We Can Express Our Thanks

By Laura S. Jernigan

The Saints of Latter Days have much for which to be thankful. We should show our thanks to God by the way we live, our appreciation for his daily blessings by our actions. Let us make a new covenant with our heavenly Father, that we will try to follow the example of Elder Jacob Halb who recently conducted very successful missionary meetings in our branch (Alaflora Branch), being humble, gentle, kind, and considerate of everyone. Let us practice the Golden Rule.

Let us remember our goals and go forward as one great and united band of people to build Zion. Let us be of good courage, for, after all, we have many things to hearten us.

Pray for me, brothers and sisters, that I shall never waver but go steadily on in the calling to which God has summoned us all.

God Bless the Church

By Mrs. J. A. Teeter

I trust throughout the year 1933, we shall be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord. Let us work, watch, and pray. Above all, let us not bring shame to the church of God by going into sin of any kind. In these trying times temptations are greater; it is easier for us to step aside from the straight path. I often think of the song:

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.

"I love thy church, O God,
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye
And graven on thy hand.

"For her my tears shall fall
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my cares and toil be given
Till toils and cares shall end.

"Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

May God bless his church that it shall stand is my prayer.

Makes Friends for the Church

By J. A. Maas

(Excerpts from a letter written to Elder J. E. Vanderwood.)

We went to Milwaukee and I preached yesterday morning (December 25), but dispensed with the afternoon service. I took orders for four Herald subscriptions and sold some extra copies besides. I gave them a good talk on the Herald after the sermon, and the response was gratifying.

Best of all, I had been invited to attend a meeting of the Farmers' Party in the evening. This was certainly a success from our point of view. Ethel and I went and there was a full house. About thirty were there and none of them had heard of our faith. As had been arranged, a friend of mine asked me if I brought the chart. I told him I had, and he asked if I would be permitted to talk on it. The host said this was all right. So I hung up the chart and began talking. When we went there I told Ethel that I should be in bed, I was sick; but after we arrived, I felt perfectly well, and the Spirit was with me in power.

After the service they asked me if I would talk at the men's club on Tuesday night, and I replied that I would at any time they wished. So they are making arrangements to have me talk there if it is agreeable with their president who was not present on that first night. They seemed well pleased at what they had heard, and thanked me for talking to them.

I have always felt there was a work to do here in Watertown, and now my belief is being confirmed.

A Time for Praise and Thanksgiving

By Mrs. J. H. Thomas

Christmas time should also be a season of thanksgiving and praise for us for the many blessings our kind heavenly Father has showered upon us. I have so many blessings for which to be thankful that I feel I can not serve my Lord enough. I want to do kind deeds for everyone around me, to love my brothers and sisters, and to work wherever my hand finds something to do.

Here I wish to tell of a wonderful experience that was my mother's a few years ago. She was very sick and wanted to be administered to, but for some reason we could not get the elders. So mother prayed that God would come to her rescue. About midnight she was lying in bed with her eyes closed when she felt that there was some one else in the room besides my father. She opened her eyes and there stood Brother A. B. Phillips at the bedside. He administered to her, then left the room. Mother was healed at that very hour. This happened at her home at Andover, Missouri. She can tell of many beautiful experiences that have come to her since she entered the church.

This gospel is very dear to me and I want to live a good and pure life so as not to bring reproach on the church. Let us be workers together with Christ, to help in the great work there is to accomplish before Christ comes to live with us. Pray for me.

God Is Good and All Powerful

By Everett E. Landon

Many experiences have been mine proving God's providence, love, and power, too many of them for me to relate here. I have been very happy this fall for the church privileges that have been enjoyed by our little family. I have been glad to talk to the young folks at the junior church in this little branch, and have also received pleasure in working in other ways with the kind people at Dow City.

One of the testimonies for which I am thankful to God, came to me less than two months ago. At the time I was husking corn on a farm near here. While at work the impression came to me to pray for my folks, and especially for my youngest brother. At that hour I wondered at the singularity of my brother's need. This very strong impression did not leave me until after some moments at which time I, in my conviction, prayed for my father's family and especially my brother.

Four days later—it was Monday of the following week—I received a letter telling me that my father had just been released from a hospital after several days of illness and that my youngest brother was in the hospital very seriously injured from an accident which occurred when a frightened team of horses had run away. The accident happened at the time I was led to pray for them. They live about two hundred miles from here.

God has given other proofs and testimonies of his goodness, but time and space do not permit my telling them. I hope that the time will soon come when we can all count our blessings more and our troubles less, for then we shall be a happier people. May God bless his children with willing and consecrated hearts.

Studies the Christ Philosophy

By Mrs. Marie M. Englebrecht

In my study of the most modern religious writers I have found a beautiful unity in considering Christ-like living. One God whom we all revere. One Savior who came to earth to die in our stead, that he might bring us back into the presence of our Father. He will take away all our fears. We can love him without condemnation.

This is the doctrine of treating our fellow men as our equals, of doing with others as we would be done by, of living and letting live, of being merciful with our enemies and of praying for those who despitefully use us.

These writers picture a society in which nations, churches, and governments join hands, look with tolerance on one another, not on the idiosyncrasy of the individual, hating the sin, yet loving the sinner; a society which agrees to disagree peaceably. With such a society we can have a people with whom the Lord can reign on earth.

We must make an individual fight against all intemperance. We must set up one flag, the flag of truth and righteousness.

I bow my head in all reverence to my Master for having drawn me into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, whose doctrine is to me the most wonderful because he did it himself. I heard only one short talk on the fundamentals of the church, and the still small voice whispered to my soul: "This is my church for which you have been praying these many years. Join it today." I did.

It is the keenest desire of my mind, the deepest intent of my heart, to live my life as a true and faithful wife to my companion, a devoted mother to all my children, to walk humbly with my God, that my Redeemer need never be ashamed of me. To this end I ask the prayers of the Saints.

I should like to hear from others who have made life a serious study.

THUNE, NEBRASKA.

Request Prayers

A sister who designates herself the daughter of an old missionary, desires the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her daughter who is in a critical condition from inward goiter. The sufferer has three small children and is doing well in rearing them in the belief of the church. "Many, many times have I asked for the prayers of the Saints," writes the mother, "and I have received many blessings. Though I feel weak spiritually, I know in God and his work there is great power."

PLEASANTON, IOWA.

Brother George Elson, of the State Hospital, Norfolk, Nebraska, is in failing health this winter, and requests the prayers of the church that he may be helped. He gives the cause of his affliction to be severe injuries received in a fall in 1925. Many times before he has asked for prayers and has been relieved of suffering.

QUESTION TIME

Should sick Saints go to doctors for healing, instead of asking administration of the elders of the church?

Doubtless the ideal procedure would be for the sick to receive healing of the Lord in administration or by the prayer of faith. It should be remembered, however, that while it is one of the functions of the elders to administer and pray for the sick when properly called for that purpose, it is more in the nature of a privilege possessed by the Saints to call for administration than a command or requirement on their part. One would hardly desire to condemn the sick one simply because he did not ask for administration. He might feel reluctant from lack of faith, or because he felt that his sickness was the penalty of his own folly. But whatever his reason might be, it would be a matter between himself and God, rather than a matter for the church to pass judgment upon.

The attitude of the church should always be one of sympathy and helpfulness, but not of arbitrary interference with the problems of another. This seems to have been the spirit of the revelation to the church which provided for a sanitarium and a physician to the Saints, for it states:

"It is in accordance with the instruction given to my servant Joseph Smith that my servant Joseph Luff, who has been giving his attention to the study of medicine and has been preparing himself for usefulness in this direction, be associated with this sanitarium as a medical director and physician to the church and be put in charge, that he may be an assistant to those who seek the aid of this institution of the church, in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician, with those who from time to time may be called to administer in laying hands upon the afflicted and sick, where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick."—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 2.

In the New Testament age, Paul called Luke "the beloved physician," and Jesus himself appears to sanction the medical office when he says, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Knowledge of the laws of health and of the healing properties of the many things that God has created for the use of the sick is of itself commendable, and it is largely this knowledge that physicians study to obtain and apply for the blessing of those in physical distress. It is not a sin to use these healing agents while seeking at the same time such relief as faith may obtain of the Lord.

What did ancient biblical nations know about medicine and remedies for disease?

The Jews had some knowledge of medicine, probably derived mostly from the Egyptians. It is stated that Moses was learned in Egyptian wisdom, which included considerable knowledge of remedies for various diseases. Among their remedies were diuretics, purgatives, liniments, and fumigation. They knew that the heart action produced the pulse and connected with vessels of the body, and they understood something of the action of the lungs. The Assyrians and Babylonians also were considerably advanced in medical knowledge, and the Babylonian laws prescribed the pay of a physician and penalties for injuring the patient.

Physicians were known as far back as the time of Job, and probably much before then. Much advancement was made by the Greeks, particularly in the time of Hippocrates (c.400 B. C.), who is called the "Father of medicine." Roman medical knowledge was more crude, and largely derived from the Greeks, but was dominated much by superstition. Hippocrates taught the healing power of nature aided by art and correct diet, and this is still recognized to be of vital importance.

Were the early Christians at Jerusalem destroyed at the siege of Titus?

The historian Eusebius, who lived about two hundred years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and Epiphanius, another writer who lived a few years later, both declare that the Christians escaped to a town beyond the Jordan, having been divinely warned of the coming disaster. Eusebius states:

"The whole body, however, of the church at Jerusalem, having been commanded by a divine revelation, given to men of approved piety there before the war, removed from the city, and dwelt at a certain town beyond the Jordan, called Pella."—Ecclesiastical History, Book III, Chapter V.

Jesus himself had warned them:

"And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh."—Luke 21: 20.

Programs for February

The Church School

Worship Programs for February, 1933

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturgis

GENERAL THEME: "STEWARDSHIP OF TRUTH"

FEBRUARY 5, 1933

Theme: "Seek Ye the Truth."

Instrumental Prelude: "Break Thou the Bread of Life," number 70.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8, 7. "What I the Lord have spoken I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice, or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; for behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth for ever and ever. Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."

Group Response: Psalm 85: 8. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people and to his saints."

(S) Hymn: "O God, whose presence glows in all," number 73.

(S) Prayer: A petition addressed to God for truth, a confession of our need of illumination, and forgiveness, and a humble realization of the love of God.

Scripture Reading: John 1: 1-16. (This may be read by the leader, or in unison by the group.)

(S) Hymn: "Praise to him by whose kind favor," number 91, verses 1 and 2.

Talk Suggestions: During the last one hundred years there has been an amazing growth in the body of accumulated knowledge. Conquest of the land, the sea, the air has been made possible by the discovery of new truth. Time and space have shrunk unbelieveably. Men rush feverishly about. The average man has an enormous breadth to his range of knowledge, yet there is a world within us, where God would like to dwell that we do not know much about. This we must discover. He has promised to reveal himself by the seal of an inward Spirit if we desire it, and through that revelation of himself all truth is disclosed to us. We are that we might know him. In our best moments we have felt this to be true. Let us seek the truth that dwells within—"stir up the gift that is within us"—and see how God writes "His law on to our inward parts." The world within is more important than the world without. What we are, matters more than what we have.

(S) Hymn: "What of truth we have been hearing," number 91, verse 3.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4b; 10: 6. "The Spirit of truth is of God. I am the Spirit of truth. And John bore record of me, saying, He received a fullness of truth; yea, even of all truth, and no man receiveth a fullness unless he keepeth his commandments. And now, verily, verily I say unto thee: Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit."

(S) Benediction: II Thesalonians 2: 16, 17: "Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work. Amen."

Postlude: "How firm a foundation," number 245.

Picture: Zimmermann: "Christ and the Fishermen."

FEBRUARY 12, 1933

Theme: "Know the Truth."

Instrumental Prelude: A medley of the hymns which are used in the service.

Call to Worship: Psalm 85: 9-12. "Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase."

Group Response: John 17: 17. "Sanctify us through thy truth: thy word is truth."

Scripture Reading: Isaiah 29: 11, 12, 16, 25, 26, 30. (Inspired Version.) "And it shall come to pass, that the Lord God shall bring forth unto you the words of a book; and they shall be the words of them which have slumbered. And behold, the book shall be sealed; and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof. And the day cometh, that the words of the book which were sealed shall be read upon the housetops; and they shall be read by the power of Christ; and all things shall be revealed unto the children of men which ever have been among the children of men, and which ever will be, even unto the end of the earth. For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same, yesterday, today, and for ever; and I work not among the children of men, save it be according to their faith. And again it shall come to pass, that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him, Forasmuch as this people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men, therefore I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people; yea, a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid. And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book; and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness; and the meek also shall increase, and their joy shall be in the Lord; and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."

(S) Song: "Book of Mormon hid for ages," number 403. (Pianist may repeat the hymn softly while the congregation is seated.)

Period of Meditation and Prayer: (The following suggestions may be offered by the leader with a moment of silence after each.) Let us think of the vision of the prophets who foresaw the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Of the courage and faith of those who made it possible for us to receive it. Let us thank God for this record of the past, for its guidance and its counsel. Let us ask Him to enlighten our minds that we may understand it more clearly and discover those truths which it offers. And now, O Father, we ask that thou wilt create within us the desire for greater knowledge and the ability to build that knowledge into our lives so that we may become beautiful in thy sight. Amen.

(S) Song: "When earth in bondage long had lain," number 413. (Verses 1, 2, 3.)

Talk: On the purpose of the Book of Mormon and the place it should hold in our lives today. It is rich in promises of future blessings for those who serve God, and is emphatic in its denunciation of sin. (See Mormon 2: 39-43; 1 Nephi 3: 187-188; 3 Nephi 13: 1-3.)

(S) Commission: Moroni 10: 3-5.

(S) Hymn: "I know that my Redeemer lives," number 256.

(S) Benediction.

(The background of the service should be symbolic of the truth which is being stressed. Over the pulpit or table may be laid a covering, or a runner, of dark blue velvet (Numbers 4: 6ff). Blue represents truth. On this should be placed a copy of the Book of Mormon.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

FEBRUARY 19, 1933

Theme: "Love the Truth."

Instrumental Prelude: "O God, whose presence glows in all," number 73.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18. "And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him: for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will."

(S) Group Response: Hymn number 402, verses 1, 2, 3. "O Word of God Incarnate." (Conclude with an instrumental "Amen.")

(S) Prayer: A petition for light and the ability to recognize it when it is given; the disposition to love its possession more than any other possession; the courage to live by its precepts; the will to cause that truth to show forth continually in our lives.

(S) Group Response: Last verse of number 402 sung softly, adding an "Amen."

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 10: 3, 7, 10, 12. "Behold I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold, he that hath eternal life is rich. Verily, verily I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy, and then shall ye know, or by this shall you know, all things whatsoever you desire of me, which is pertaining unto things of righteousness, in faith believing in me that you shall receive. Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments; yea, with all your might, mind, and strength; . . . then if you desire, you shall have my Spirit, and my word; yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men; . . . study my word which hath gone forth among the children of men, and also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men, . . . yea, until you have obtained all which I shall grant unto the children of men in this generation; and then shall all things be added thereunto. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world. I am the same who came unto my own, and my own received me not; but verily, verily I say unto you, that as many as receiveth me, them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name. Amen."

(S) Song: Number 131. "Love Divine all love excelling."

Talk: In preparing for the talk read John 14: 15-27. It is only as we know Jesus Christ and keep his commandments that a real passion for truth will develop within us. To know him we must study that literature which he has entrusted to us; to love him we must see him in our fellow men. Do you truly know him? How much do you love him? For after all he is Truth.

Group Response: Psalm 119: 30, 127-130, 15, 16. "I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me. Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold. Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way. Thy testimonies are wonderful: Therefore doth my soul keep them. The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple. I will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways. I will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word."

Song: Number 120. "The Lord Jehovah Reigns."

Benediction.

Picture: Hofmann, "Christ and the Doctors."

FEBRUARY 26, 1933

Theme: "Make the Word Flesh."

Instrumental Prelude: "Take Time to Be Holy," number 322.

Call to Worship: John 14: 15-17. "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."

Group Response: Psalm 119: 88. "Quicken me after thy loving kindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth."

(S) Song: "Take time to be holy," number 322.

(S) Prayer: Petition for the coming of the Holy Spirit, that it may dwell in us and find fruit in our lives.

Scripture Reading: 2 Peter 1: 3-8. Galatians 5: 22-25. (Inspired Version.)

(S) Song: "O love that will not let me go," number 285, verses 1 and 2.

Talk Suggestions: It is a word of life we have coming to us through the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. It is a word that can only find confirmation as it lives in our lives. The books are records of how this word of life has found fruitage. In this they can help us now tremendously. The promise of love, joy, peace, etc., are for those who live by those precepts today. Our message of life and peace is clothed with flesh as those hearing the word, are not "forgetful hearers, but doers."

(S) Song: Verses 3 and 4, number 285, "O love that will not let me go."

(S) Group Statement of Belief: Mosiah 2: 13, 14, 4, 15, 16a.

We "Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth;"

We "Believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth;

"We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who created heaven and earth, and all things, who shall come down among the children of men."

We "Believe that man doth not comprehend all things which the Lord can comprehend."

We "Believe that we must repent of our sins and forsake them and humble ourselves before God."

(S) Commission: Mosiah 2: 17, 20-23. "And now, if you believe all these things, see that ye do them. Even so I would that ye should remember, and always retain in remembrance, the greatness of God, and your own nothingness, and his goodness and long suffering towards you unworthy creatures, and humble yourselves even in the depths of humility, calling on the name of the Lord daily, and standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come, which was spoken by the mouth of the angel; and behold, I say unto you, that if ye do this, ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins; And ye shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created you, or in the knowledge of that which is just and true."

(S) Benediction: Moroni 9: 28. "And may the grace of God the Father, whose throne is high in the heavens, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who sitteth on the right hand of his power, until all things shall become subject unto him, be and abide with you for ever. Amen."

Suggestions to those carrying out the worship services:

All hymns are to be found in the new Saints' Hymnal.

It is usually more effective if an instrumental "Amen" be appended to the hymns which just preceed the offering of prayer. This will cause the worshipers to assume an attitude of prayer almost automatically and will do away with any need for asking the group to bow their heads in prayer.

(S) Means that the group shall stand during that portion of the service.

It will be noted that in the Scripture readings which have been chosen only those verses are used which bear especially on the subject. The reader should copy out the verses quoted, omitting the incidental verses, and then familiarize himself with the material before he attempts to read it to the group.

Be sure that the group know the hymns which are to be used. If the hymns are new have a teaching period sometime previous to the worship service during which an appreciation of them may be developed and they may be learned.

When it is possible the outlines for each service should be mimeographed and in the hands of the people before the opening of the service. However, the services may be carried out very effectively by placing the outlines on a blackboard which must be placed so that all can see it easily. In this latter case it will probably be necessary to shorten some of the group responses.

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for February

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

FIRST SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1933

Adults and children meet in sacrament service together. It will be helpful if the teachers will spend a few minutes at the close of the class period, recalling to the children's minds the purpose of the sacrament.

SECOND SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1933

Theme: "Speaking the Truth in All Things."

Prelude: "Onward to Zion," new Saints' Hymnal, 436.

Call to Worship: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." (Psalm 122: 1.)

Hymn: "Let Us Go to the House of the Lord," Zion's Praises, 119, new Saints' Hymnal, 67.

Prayer.

Scripture: What the Bible says about "Truth." Juniors. Suggested verses: Deuteronomy 32: 4; 1 Samuel 12: 24; Psalm 33: 4; Psalm 119: 30; Psalm 119: 160; Zechariah 8: 16.

Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," Zion's Praises, 147, new Saints' Hymnal, 209.

Sermon Talk: Text, Ephesians 6: 14. Speaking the truth in all things means in actions as well as words. Many people would not deliberately tell an untruth, but their actions sometimes do not speak the truth. Sometimes we do not keep a promise and that is not telling the truth. Sometimes when we tell about a thing that has happened we exaggerate and that is not telling the truth. Truth and honesty are closely linked together. A person who does not tell the truth is not honest.

Special Music: A piano or violin solo, by a junior boy or girl.

Closing Hymn: "The Song Gift," Zion's Praises, 162.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1933

Theme: "Doing the Things One Should."

Prelude: "Consecration," new Saints' Hymnal, 293.

Call to Worship: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." (Psalm 1: 1, 2.)

Hymn: "Stepping in the Light," Zion's Praises, 100.

Prayer.

Scripture: Ecclesiastes 9: 10.

Hymn: "Dare to Do Right," Zion's Praises, 79.

Sermon Talk: Tell about men in Bible times and in our day, who did what they should in spite of obstacles. (Jesus, Joseph, Stephen, Joseph Smith the martyr, and others.) They found true happiness in performing their tasks. Many times it takes real courage to do what you know you should do. Think of the times you have done the things you should, and then think of a time you shirked your duty—got out of it some way. Which made you happier?

Story: "Serving God in a strange land." (Daniel, chapter 6.) This story should be told by a junior boy.

Special Musical Number by Juniors: Song, "Dare to be a Daniel," found in A Junior Hymnal, compiled by J. E. Sturgis and W. S. Martin, or "I Would Be True," new Saints' Hymnal, 294.

Closing Hymn: "Something to Do," Zion's Praises, 228.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1933

Theme: "The Reward of Truth."

Prelude: "The Old, Old Path," Zion's Praises, 207, new Saints' Hymnal, 260.

Call to Worship: "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" (Psalm 15: 1.)

Response: "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." (Psalm 15: 2.)

Hymn: "I Would Be True," new Saints' Hymnal, 294.

Prayer.

Scripture: Psalm 96: 12, 13.

Hymn: "He That Overcometh," Zion's Praises, 72.

Sermon Talk: There are many rewards for telling the truth. First, it pleases our heavenly Father. Second, it makes our parents and friends happy to know they can rely on our word. Third, it brings happiness to us. If you always tell the truth, you will escape many sad experiences, because telling an untruth brings punishment. Tell of the boy who cried, "Wolf, wolf," and about Gehazi, found in 2 Kings 5: 20-27.

Stories: Told by juniors. "An Untruth Condemned." (Acts 5: 1-10.)

A short time after Jesus had ascended to his Father, Peter and John preached in Jerusalem and converted a great many people. These people were very happy together. Those who owned land and properties sold them and brought the money to the apostles, to be distributed among God's people, so they would all have the things they needed. But there were two people, Ananias and his wife, Sapphira, who, when their property was sold, held back a portion of the money for themselves and took only a part to the apostles. They thought no one would know that they had not been truthful concerning their possessions, but even though man is often deceived, God never is, and Ananias and Sapphira lost their lives because of their deceitful act.

"Truth Rewarded." (Acts 4: 36, 37, 11: 22-26, 13, 14.)

A good man named Barnabas was also in Jerusalem at that time. Barnabas owned property, which he sold, and brought all the money and laid it at the apostles' feet. Because of his love for God and the truth, Barnabas was chosen by the Jerusalem church to go forth with the gospel to other nations. Barnabas become one of the great missionaries of the early church.

Special musical number by a junior boy or girl, or junior choir.

Story: "A Lie Brings Distress," (Zeezrom, Alma 8: 41; 10: 111.) Lesson One, in quarterly, "Lessons From the Book of Mormon," Part 2, by Hazel Dexter Smith.

Closing Hymn: "Yield Not to Temptation," Zion's Praises, 80, new Saints' Hymnal, 269.

Benediction.

IN THE CHURCH of today, especially in the church school, there is the greatest demand for leaders of personality, training, and consecration, who are willing to feed the lambs and the sheep. All who have heard and accepted the Master's word have received this calling. The gospel must be lived and taught, not alone by the priesthood who are called and ordained unto a particular ministry, but all are called to labor, and "the field is white unto the harvest." And all may labor, as many as will "thrust in their sickles and reap." But those are "chosen" who have diligently sought to qualify for service.

Too often in our Sunday school teaching we are content to expound mere ethical principles, hoping thus to influence the building of Christian character. True, the emphasis of the Master was always upon moral righteousness. He lived it, exemplified it, taught it. Jesus' way was always a way of conduct, a way of thinking, feeling and doing: a way of living among men. But first of all, Jesus was the Son of God, who was obedient to the heavenly vision and to the letter and spirit of the divine law. Hence he led the way as our Exemplar, as well as Savior and Lord. The character of Jesus was the by-product of the life he lived. He was not the Son of God because he led a virtuous life. He was the Messiah, sent of God to reveal the law of righteousness, to set in order the Lord's house, and to demonstrate the beauty, joy and power of a virtuous life, "hid with Christ in God." Jesus came to give life, to demonstrate its fullness. The Master of all, yet became he the servant of all that he might bring us to fullness of life and joy. Obedient in all things, yet learned he obedience by the things he suffered—Jesus led the way.

True, Jesus could not have been the Son of God and lived otherwise—nor yet can we become the sons and daughters of God and live below our calling. There is grave danger that we conceive of mere ethical teaching and living as the whole message Jesus came to give. His teaching and life were ethical in the highest sense, but, more, he came to reveal the Father, and to establish his kingdom among men. He came to lead the way, to demonstrate the power of God which accompanies obedience. He came to reveal the divine plan of salvation.

WE FIND no justification for a program of religious education which stops short of a full discovery of the way of life as declared by the Christ in his ministry. It is ours to teach Christ and his message, obedience to the law and will of God, loyalty to the ideals and purposes revealed in his word. It is ours to lead in the great Christian adventure of discovery; a discovery of God and his ways in the marvels of nature and life pulsating all about us; in the vast expanse of time and space and matter in the worlds he created; in the matchless wisdom, order and power manifest in his handiwork; in the wondrous revealment of divine mind; and in the beauty, joy and strength of godliness made possible in human life when in touch with the Infinite. The religion of Jesus Christ is a vast endeavor which embraces all that is good, noble, sublime and true; it encompasses all that is desirable and worth-while within and about us. It touches life in its innermost, delicate and sensitive parts, yet reaches out to the utmost bounds of time and space and matter.

Christian character follows as a consequence of the experiences made possible through our teaching and leadership. It is the product of directed experience which builds appreciation, leads ever to higher and nobler ideals, and motivates life choices upon a basis of practical Christian ethics. The church is responsible for the revealment of the way of Christ in personal and group righteousness.

To follow the Master leads one to understand and appreciate Jesus as the supreme example of obedience, to accept him as the Savior, yet as a personal companion and friend. Our allegiance to God is sealed with a covenant of baptism in water, and we have the right to receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit. It is inconceivable that one should follow the Master in obedience to his word and neglect the development of moral righteousness in conduct which he as emphatically commanded.

As a matter of fact, we must teach the two together; either without the other is incomplete, and can not produce a perfect people. A vital religion must have more than a moral philosophy or a social economy to measure up to Jesus' standard. We must first teach Jesus Christ, and his message of light and truth and power, as well as his principles of social and moral life.

IN A WORD, our teaching, our example, our urge must be evangelistic. We must lead boys and girls, men and women, to Jesus' way of life, but we must in a very definite and positive way lead them to the Master himself, and to God. Back of all the social and moral righteousness which must characterize a covenant people there is the personal acknowledgment of responsibility, the formal as well as the virtual act of obedience, which places one in a covenant relationship with the Father, entitles him to divine recognition, and to fellowship with others who have committed their lives to the Master's service. Only through this commitment is life vitally touched by the Savior's sacrifice; is the way opened for the working out of the purposes of God in human life and service.

So, without detracting from the necessity of high moral and social behavior and the developing of the highest Christian character, which must ever be true of our teaching program, we shall as continually be conscious of our need so to present the way of life to young and to old that our teaching shall lead to conviction of the truth of our message. With our ethical teaching there must be a discovery of the sublime and eternal nature of Christ and God and the principles of the gospel revealed in the Word.

But in Christian religion is found a supreme source of motivation; a supreme loyalty to the good, the true, and the beautiful to be established by a covenant relationship with God and fellowship with Jesus Christ. This should not be considered a too difficult task. It is comparatively easy to explain moral principles and to help organize life on a moral basis. Such is the function of the public school. Many popular churches, lodges and philanthropic agencies are accomplishing good in this direction. In these secular agencies there is little or no emphasis laid upon the point of obedience, or authority, or organization, or of faith and repentance and baptism by one having authority, as a necessary fulfillment of the divine law.

THE COVENANT of baptism serves as a connecting link between man and man, and man and God. It is the basis of loyalty, a common bond; it is the fulfillment of a divinely inspired injunction, an initial rite which opens up marvelous possibilities of communion and personal achievement in Christian growth and service. Indeed, if one would consistently follow Jesus, grow into his likeness and partake of his power, he must give heed to Jesus' word and follow his example. He must fulfill his part of the contract.

It is no vain thing for us to claim the presence of power and authority in the church of our day. But we who would teach and lead must ourselves be converted; we must see with a clear vision; we must be able to speak with certainty. The testimony of our words and our lives must ring true. Our teaching must evangelize. It must be clear and convincing. It must lead to true repentance, and to a desire for the pledge and covenant of baptism, and to active membership in the church.

But evangelism does not close with baptism. Our effort should constructively lead those we teach to demand and to be ready for the rite, but this is a small part only of the evangelistic process. Our leadership must continually lead on and inspire further discovery and achievement in ways of fruitful Christian living. Indeed, one does not "obey the gospel," except as an initial ordinance, in baptism. The real test of obedience is made in the days and years that follow in spiritual growth and service. Hence the charge of Jesus, "teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded."

Children's Day is to be observed on

June 15. Among Christian churches this is to be made a special day of decision and covenant making. It is fitting that this should be so, not only for the children, but for others who are ready to enter the church. It is especially important that our teaching in the primary department should be definitely planned in materials, methods, and in personality of teacher to lead the little ones to an appreciative desire for baptism when they reach years of accountability. Our program must provide an occasion, a setting convenient and inspiring in which the formal steps in membership shall be consummated. It is equally imperative that the teaching of succeeding years shall be constructive in feeding the little lambs and the sheep of the fold.

Religious education is conceived as a way of Christian nurture, of spiritual horticulture, a way of character growth and soul development. The feeding process must consist of such attempts at life enrichment by way of instruction, study, discussion, worship, play and work, as shall nurture the hungry soul, provide suitable exercise of faith, love and sympathy, develop powers of initiative, and of self-control, establish an intelligent loyalty to an idealism that lifts the individual from the sordid worship of material things to a realization of spiritual values which are eternal.

The child of God must be so initiated into the Christ way of life that he shall continually find broader and richer ways of demonstrating his love and consecration as he walks and serves among his fellow men.

The feeding process should enable the soul to grow in all ways like unto the pattern that was set in Christ. So shall we fulfill the divine injunction, "Feed my lambs, and feed my sheep."

HOW MAY WE DISCERN THE CHURCH OF CHRIST?

In addition to this the church of Christ must be in possession of the doctrine of Christ. Paul states that the principles of the doctrine of Christ are faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. (Hebrews 6: 1, 2.) Here we have something else worthy of careful thought, for any church that does not teach the principles of the doctrine of Christ can not be his church. There is in the church also the manifestations or gifts of the Spirit, which Paul names as wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues. Then there is to be found the fruit of the Spirit mentioned in Galatians 5: 22, 23. Namely, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. When we have considered these we have a fairly good concept of what it takes to constitute the church of Christ, and any institution lacking these qualifications is not the church of Christ.

Paul tells us that these officers were set in the church for the work of the ministry, for the perfecting of the saints, and for the edifying of the body of Christ. (See Ephesians 4: 1-16.) Herein he tells us they were to continue until we all come in the unity of the faith, and to the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man. Since we are not there yet we must look for the church of Christ to possess all of these things. I am therefore convinced that he who will carefully inform himself will be able to find that the church of Christ is easily distinguished if we will take the Scriptures as our guide and make our beliefs conform with their teaching.

While all church organizations possess some parts of these principles, and a few of the offices of the ministry, I have found by a very careful investigation that the only body in the world that conforms wholly to the pattern is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and we therefore insist that the people who would know the truth shall acquaint themselves with our philosophy and come to know the excellence of the teaching of the church that offers life and salvation to all who believe and obey the message of Christ.

We insist that he who will carefully consider the teachings of Christ will assuredly come to understand the requirements of his church, and that they will be able to discern it when it is brought to their attention. The Master intended the church to be a means of bringing mankind to salvation, and we as ambassadors for Christ wish to plead with all mankind that they become reconciled to God. If men will seek faithfully they shall come to know. Will you not give the claims of the church your careful and prayerful attention?

Invictus

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be,
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.

It matters not how straight the gate
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Destiny of "British Israel"

By Mrs. L. E. Hills

(Editor's Note: A number of our people have become interested in a theory, advocated here and abroad by organized groups, that the Great Pyramid was built with prophetic significance, and that the present ruling house of England is a lineal descendant of the kings of ancient Israel. The Editors neither endorse nor deny these views. The following article is presented only for the interest it contains.)

"The Lord hath yet more light and truth to break forth from his word."

"In the latter days ye shall consider it."—Jeremiah 30: 24.

In approaching the study of any subject, one must have an honest desire to know the truth of the matter, a mind open to receive that truth, and above all, must feel his need of the enlightening influence of God's Holy Spirit. We find a beautiful example of this in Luke 24: 45: "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures."

These words were spoken by our Lord, just before his ascension, to the eleven apostles who had been with him all through his ministry, and yet they needed the enlightening influence of the Spirit, before they could understand. How much more need have we of that Spirit! It is a gift from God!

"In the latter days ye shall consider it."

As we believe that we are living in the latter days, is it not time for us to make an intensive study of God's word, and the words of his prophets? If we do so, we discover that many of the prophecies of both Old and New Testaments are being fulfilled right before our eyes.

We, above all people, should not be found among those who having eyes, see not; and having ears, hear not and do not understood. Jesus himself said in Luke 21: 34-36, "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of man."

Again he says in Mark 13: 33: "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is." In 1 Thessalonians 5: 2-6, Paul says: "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For

when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. . . . Therefore let us not sleep, as do others, but let us watch and be sober."

What shall we watch? If we read the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, it will tell us many of the signs of the second coming. The forty-fourth verse says: "Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

In the article, "Until Shiloh Comes," written by John Fassnacht, and published in the Saints' Herald of August 17, 1932, can be found material for many lessons on prophecy. Let us take one found in the thirty-third chapter of Jeremiah. In verse seventeen it says: "For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel." In verses 20-22: "Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; . . . As the host of heaven can not be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant," etc.

1. Where is this line of kings, sons of David that was to come down through the years?

2. Where is the throne of David that was to stand for ever?

3. Where is the mighty nation that God would multiply till they could not be numbered or measured?

The Lord said that this promise to David was just as sure as his covenant of day and night.

Before we answer these three questions, let us read one more quotation from the thirtieth chapter of Jeremiah. This is also the word of God to Jeremiah. Verse three: "For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel" (the ten tribes) "and Judah" (the two tribes), "saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it."

This was literally fulfilled December 11, 1917, when General Allenby delivered Jerusalem from Gentile rule; since which time it has been under the flag of Great Britain.

Verse four: "And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah."

Verses seven and eight say that it shall come to pass in that great day of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it. And that God will break the yoke off their neck.

Verse nine: "But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them."

That verse nine is one of the greatest prophecies in the whole book. It is to be fulfilled in that "great day" when God was to lead Israel and Judah back into the land that God gave their fathers; and they were to be serving God and their king, David, whom God was to raise up unto them. This indicates that they are to be a Christian people. Now let us answer our three questions:

1. The British Nation is the only one that has come down through the years, and there is most wonderful evidence to show that the present King and Queen of Great Britain are literal descendants of King David.

2. The throne of David is in Westminster Abbey.

3. The mighty nation that can not be numbered is Great Britain and her colonies, "a commonwealth of nations," with the king of Great Britain at the head.

Many students have spent years of study in following out these lines of lineage from King David to King David; and in proving the Hebrew origin of the British or Anglo Saxon race, which includes the United States of America. Notable among these students was the Reverend F. R. A. Glover, whose work was later authenticated by Reverend W. M. H. Milner, M. A., who also added much evidence to the work of Reverend Glover. It is wonderfully interesting to read their writings.

Among the many proofs of the Davidic descent of the royal family of Great Britain are these facts. David was crowned king of Israel about 1048 B. C. "There are eighteen generations from David to Zedekiah, whose daughter, Tea Taphi married Eochaid, King of Ireland. Eleven generations from Eochaid to Angus the Prolific, of Tara, ancester of both Irish and Scottish kings. From him, thirty-four to Kenneth McAlpin. Four lines, Stuart, Bruce, Plantagenet, and Guelph, bring us in twenty-eight generations to George I, whence eight more lead us to Prince David, the present Prince of Wales." King George V and Queen Mary are both of the ninety-ninth generation, and their son, David, Prince of Wales, is the one hundredth.

George O. Barnes, evangelist, speaking of the descent of the present reigning house of the British Empire says: "In Windsor Castle, today, prepared for Queen Victoria of blessed memory, there hangs upon the wall, her Royal Pedigree, traced not through Tudor or Plantagenet, but through James I of England (before that James VI of Scotland) up through the kings of Scotland, then through the kings of Ireland, to Eochaid, wedded to Tea Tephi, daughter of Zedekiah, King of Judah."

The forty-third and forty-fourth chapters of Jeremiah tell us that Jeremiah (who was not only the guardian but the grandfather of Zedekiah's daughters) took the girls to Egypt, but that a remnant should escape from there.

History tells us that Jeremiah the prophet with the King's daughters, Baruch the scribe, and a few others, escaped and came to Ireland, bringing with them the throne stone of David, or the coronation stone, sometimes called the Stone of Destiny.

It would take pages to tell what is known of this stone; and of the wonderful work of Jeremiah, in building and planting in the new land. He established the School of the Prophets, abolished the worship of Baal and did many good works.

I have a picture of the "Coronation Chair" (which is now in Westminster Abbey) and of the "Stone Wonderful."

Beneath this picture is written the following: "The Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey, is a large, solid, old-fashioned chair, at least six hundred years old. Resting on a shelf under the seat, is the Coronation Stone. At each end of this stone is a large ring (with a few links) much worn. This stone is the oldest Monarchial Regalia known to man. It has been used in England for 622 years, in Scotland for 981 years, and in Ireland for 905 years. It was brought to Tarah from Spain and to Spain from the Holy Land."

It was this very stone or pillar (II Kings 11: 12-14; 23: 3) upon which David and all his successors were crowned.

It is called "The Stone of Fortune," "The Stone of Destiny" (Lia Fail). It is identified in history and legend with the rock on which Jacob slept and one of its many names is Jacob's Stone (the Rock of Bethel, or House of God).

This Sacred Stone will ever be the Pillar of Witness and the Stone of Destiny between the God of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, and the children of promise, for it has witnessed all the solemn compacts between Jehovah and his people."

In the Saturday Evening Post of April 23, 1932, in an article written by Alexander, Grand Duke of Russia, is found this remarkable statement. "My Russian Cousin (then the Czar of Russia) believed that the imperial regime would last as long at it 'pleases God'; while my British Uncle, King Edward VII (of England) bluntly told me that his then very youthful grandson, the present Prince of Wales was to be the last King of England."

One of our own church officials who recently visited England, told us in a lecture at the Stone Church that when a King or Queen was crowned in Westminster Abbey, a statue was made of him or her and placed in a niche in the wall; and that there remained only one vacant niche. He also said that many thought when that was filled, their Lord would come to sit upon the throne of David, as King of kings.

"Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Apostle G. G. Lewis and Family in Society Islands and Australia

The Welcome at Sydney

Sister Lewis, baby, and I arrived in Sydney, Australia, November 18, and were met by a fine group of Saints and relatives. They gave us a royal welcome. We were very glad to be at our journey's end and to know that at last we could unpack our suitcases without having to worry about packing them again soon.

The Sydney Saints had arranged a banquet to which over two hundred and sixty had been invited. The Saints were glad to welcome me home, and many of them were overjoyed because I could call them by name. I noted that there were some changes, the most noteworthy being the advancement of the young people. It was cheering indeed to see young men and women who were former colleagues, still working in the interests of the church. But it was more pleasing to see the young men and women who were youngsters when I left, active and happy in their church work. I have found this to be the case in every branch I have visited so far. The young people are the mainstay of the branches in some places.

The Family Reunion

We stayed three days in Sydney and then journeyed homeward for a family reunion. All the family were present except the one who had been the head of our home. The absence of father was the only thing that marred our happiness.

The Saints of Wallsend, Teralba, West Wallsend and Hamilton Branches united at my old home branch, Wallsend, for a welcome. It was grand to be home once more, to meet old friends, to greet new ones. Time has left its heavy hand upon some, but progress can be reported.

Soon Busy Visiting Branches

Over the first week-end I visited three branches in the Northern New South Wales District while attending a meeting at Tiona, our reunion grounds. This week-end I attended a reunion of the branches in Sydney. We had a very good spiritual feast. Brother W. J. Swain was ordained a high priest as was provided for by General Conference. I am now getting ready for our reunion at Tiona which is held at Christmas time.

Sister Lewis and I have decided to settle in the vicinity of my old home town so that she can be near my people while I am traveling.

The work is moving forward in Australia. That is my first impression. I trust that it will continue to move forward.

Chronicle of Visits in Society Islands Mission

We arrived at Papeete, Tahiti, September 10, and remained there until October 3, working and visiting in the interests of the church.

The first island (of the Tuomotuan Group) we visited, Brother Yager and I, was Makatea. The French shipping company kindly took us as guests and treated us nicely on the trip. The Island of Makatea is about eight miles long and five miles wide. Rocky precipices rise to about one hundred feet. It is a pretty island and very interesting. Phosphate is dug from the ground and shipped overseas. There is a nice branch of the church there and they are well respected. The governor of the island is president of the branch. I spoke four times to the Saints and friends. We were delayed at Makatea for a couple of days waiting for transportation to an island seventy miles away. Transportation difficulties are exasperating. One must sit and wait for boats to arrive, and when they do come, there is no hurry to depart. The mere matter of a schedule does not enter into the native mind. Tomorrow is just as good as today and usually several tomorrows may pass by before one gets started.

A Rough Sea Journey

Finally, much to our relief, the fish boat owned by Brother William Bennett, a native brother and president of the branch at Avatoru, Rairoa, put in appearance. Brother Bennett was waiting for us at Avatoru. The boat was manned by Protestants and Catholics. It was a twenty-foot open motorboat with a little cover over a small section. About 5.30 p. m., on Saturday, the crew was finally gathered together, the usual parting prayer for a safe journey was given in the rain, and we set off over the ocean in this small boat. It had been raining intermittently during the day, with frequent gusts of wind, so the sea was not altogether calm. On leaving the harbor we struck a wave and I received a drenching, but once out it was rather pleasant, as we were in the shelter of the island. Brother Yager, as was his usual custom, settled down for rest or rather, comfort. I sat out on deck. There was no rest that night. When we did not get wet with the rain, the salt water would take its place. Several times we bumped the crest of a wave and got a good wetting. The water was rough. Neptune was very insistent, so I paid tribute. After a night of buffeting and unpleasantness, we reached Avatoru about 8.30 a. m. After we cleaned up, the meeting of welcome was held, followed by preaching. The Saints from Tiputa Branch on the same island of Rairoa arrived in their sailing boats and they all had a time of rejoicing. There is a fine group of Saints on this island. They constitute nearly half the population.

After we spent two days there, a trading boat arrived on its way to the island of Matahiva. Here the Saints from Tikehau, a nearby island, were working at their "rahui" or copra making place. This was sixty miles away. Brother Yager and I set off for this island. In the morning we arrived and then went ashore to meet the Saints. The people on this island are nearly all members of the church. On our arrival we discovered another boat was off the port. This boat was leaving that afternoon for Kaukura. As there was no likelihood of another boat coming for weeks, we held a hurried meeting with the Saints and then embarked for Kaukura. The boat took us back to Rairoa where we stayed for two days, then sailed for Kaukura. The sea was very rough, but we proved to be good sailors. The only complaint to make was that the deck was very hard for sleeping purposes.

These Are Coral Islands

All the islands are of coral formation. The best description of them is that they remind one of a doughnut. A narrow fringe of coral and sand separates the water or lake inside from the ocean outside. The narrow fringe of land may be only about half a mile wide, but the lake in many instances is forty miles long and twenty miles wide. To land at Kaukura one must wait his chance for a favorable wave. He disembarks into a rowboat and then pulls toward the reef. When the wave comes he goes in

www.LatterDayTruth.org

with it into a crevice. Quickly the sailors drag the boat onto the reef, otherwise it would fall into the crevice when the wave recedes and disaster would follow. It is very easy in calm weather, but not so pleasant when the waves are high. I have tried it both ways.

Natives Joyful at Visit From "Aposetoro"

The Saints of Kaukura are lovely people. The natives of all the islands are very hospitable and generous, and they were overjoyed at having an "Aposetoro" present. They gathered together that night to celebrate our arrival. Many beautiful gifts of native handwork were presented to me as gifts of love. The Protestant congregation united with the Saints in the welcome and they too made their gifts of handwork, money, and chickens. We stayed only a few hours with the Saints there as a nice boat had arrived on its way to other islands.

This boat was operated by John (Tihoni) Mervin, an excellent church member. We promised to return to Kaukura during the week, so the Saints from a nearby island, twenty miles away, were to gather in for our return.

These Saints Will Have Finest Church Edifice in Islands

We went to Niau and held one service (Sunday afternoon). Tihoni bought up some copra and left it with the intention of returning later. At this island there is a lovely church in process of erection. The Saints have been meeting in an old wooden building which was very dilapidated. They had been forty years in building the church and it was not yet completed. The custom is not to use the building until it is ready for dedication. Because of the very poor church in which our people had been meeting, and because the new church was usable, Brother Yager had advised the Saints to worship there. They agreed to do so, but some one raised an objection, and so they did not begin worship in the new edifice at that time. The native missionary said that to worship in an incomplete church was similar in effect to a man living with a woman in an unmarried state. When this building is completed it will be the best of our church edifices in the islands. It would be a credit to many of our branches in the United States.

Hold Very Early Morning Services

From Niau we set out for Apataki, forty miles away, at which place we arrived at 1 a. m. Immediately the Saints went into the church for their welcome and a preaching service. They had been waiting several days for our coming and so had delayed going to their working place. The meeting lasted until 5 a. m. These Saints are planning to build a new church. This island is the official residence of the French Governor of the Tuomotus.

Next morning we found ourselves at Ahe, an island belonging to the people of Manihi. It is peopled by young men and women from Manihi. All, or nearly all, are members of the church. The elder in charge of the group is a man in his eighties.

Manihi Branch is a live branch. Most of the people are church members. As the captain of the boat was pushing on we did not stay with the people there, but promised to meet with them on our return. We went on to Takapoto, left word with the Saints that we would return next day, and pushed on to Takaroa which is a Mormon stronghold. Our members who live there were away at their "rahui" or copra making place, so we did not get to meet many of them. We could stay only as long as the boat would stay. It had rained so much that there was no copra. We had had rain and wind every day in every island.

Young People Are Good Singers

Then we returned to Takapoto and held a service with the people. Most of the Saints there were away also, working in their rahui. Returning to Manihi we had a happy meeting with the Saints. Most of these meetings last five hours. It is encouraging to see the young people in some of these islands enjoying church privileges. They sing very well and at the tops of their voices. At this place the leader of the "himene group" is a Catholic boy who has had training in a Catholic school. I had a pleasant conversation with him, partly in French, doggerel Tahitian, and with the aid of an interpreter. He will probably join the church sometime.

For a Week Cut Off From the World

Again we set sail for Kaukura. The branch from Aratua had arrived three days earlier and had begun festivities then. Our captain left us here under promise to return within two days, but a whole week went by without any word concerning his whereabouts. We were cut off from the world, no means of transmitting any messages. We began to get worried as we had only a few days left before I was due to leave Tahiti and it was two hundred miles away.

But we had some wonderful meetings with the Saints at Kaukura. The Spirit was present in power there as in other places. The natives were very kind to Brother Yager and me. One learns to love such people for their simple-hearted faith and generosity. This is true of all the Saints in the islands where I visited. I found that God was blessing them. I found that they were strong in the church. They look forward with keen anticipation to a visit from "Peropheta" or Prophet. I hope that President Smith can have this experience sometime. It is something to treasure.

The Mission in Flourishing Condition

The work of the Society Islands' Missions is in a flourishing condition. Spiritually the members are alive. They are keenly interested in the church and in Zion. The unbounded faith and confidence of these native Saints in the church and its leaders would be an inspiration to many Saints in other parts of the world.

On to Australia

I reached Papeete three days before the arrival of the steamer from America. In that time I was unable to do some of the work which I had planned to do before leaving. Rain set in with our arrival and it rained until we left. I found that Sister Lewis and the baby had contracted tropical colds, the heat had been very debilitating, and some poisoning had affected Sister Lewis. Along with this, the anxious wait by the sea for two weeks, without any knowledge of our whereabouts, did not help matters. She remained in her cabin practically all the way from Tahiti to Sydney. Her physical condition was such that she could not bear any delay in New Zealand, so we canceled all previous arrangements with the Saints there and hurried on to Sydney, where we arrived two weeks earlier than our schedule had provided.

Extra Effort to Increase Sacrifice Offering

During the month of December Saints of this branch tried to increase their Christmas and sacrifice offerings. At a party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Buhler, December 9, several articles remaining from a former bazaar were auctioned by Cal Crisman. The proceeds were put into the sacrifice offering.

The young people's class is finding the quarterly, What It Means to Be a Latter Day Saint, very helpful.

Because a number were to be away during the holidays, a program was given December 18. There were Christmas carols by the different classes, readings, and other features.

The Christmas tree party was held at the home of Brother and Sister Amundson, December 21. The play, "A Box From Aunt Jane," was given by the adult class. "A Surprise Package," a one-act play with the Christmas spirit, was given by the young people. The auction of useful articles for the home, hand lotion, and foods added more to the sacrifice offering. A telegram from Santa Claus, read by Nina Amundson, regretted that he was unable to be present, but he sent candy and nuts for everyone.

As the last event of 1932, the Saints held a watch party at the home of Ralph Braidwood at Ravinia. Games were in charge of Eupha Braidwood, Nina Amundson, and Cal Crisman. A potluck lunch was served.

Experiences in the Canadian Bush

Homesteaders Taste of Pioneer Life

The following are excerpts from a letter written by Brother Francis Reynolds to his wife's mother, Mrs. E. C. Dunlap at Oxford, Michigan. It is a long way from Monetville, Ontario, to Independence, and parts of this letter make us think of the hardships and privations our pioneer grandparents went through to make this country what it is today. Brother and Sister Reynolds formerly lived at Essex, Ontario. They are a young Latter Day Saint couple, parents of one daughter and four sons. Sister Reynolds was formerly Anna May Dunlap, of Oxford.

Monetville is a distance of close to seven hundred miles from Essex. The trip cost us forty dollars, and we all rode down on the back end of the truck after it was loaded. We were about a day and a half on the road.

About a month before I drove down and picked out a homestead and filed on it. Our lot is about one half mile in the bush off a gravel road, so we are not altogether isolated, although it is lonesome enough after being with other people so much. The nearest place where we can obtain supplies is twenty miles away. We go in once a month after food and clothing.

After we arrived up north, Brother George Mercer kindly loaned us their tent, which we pitched on our claim and started housekeeping again. This is a Latter Day Saint settlement, there being about ten families. About thirty-five are in attendance at our meetings including children. After getting the tent up we found there was not enough room inside for the stove, so we had to leave it outside which made it very inconvenient in cold and rainy weather. We roughed it like that for a month before getting our house in shape to move in.

I began by cutting down red pine trees peeling the bark and sawing them into eighteen and twenty-two foot lengths, and counting the underlays (floor) and overlays (upstairs floor) rafters, I had in all seventy-two logs. A couple of the Latter Day Saint boys came a day or two and helped me on the logs, and then when all was ready we called a "bee" and about ten men came for two days and put up the log house, that is the walls and roof. I had to put in the floors, cut the doors and windows, chink inside between the logs, mud outside between the logs, paper the gable ends inside and out, and tar paper the roof all by myself with Anna assisting when necessary.

No Depression There

Apart from that I have put in my time working two weeks a month on a road at two dollars a day, picking pine cones which I sold for $1.50 a bushel; cleared some land around the house, built a chicken coop; started to dig a basement; dug a well and put a pump in the house; cut firewood; worked for Brother James Mercer and received twenty-five bags of potatoes, and found time to go to town once a month Talk about being busy! And they try to tell me there is a depression on!

The weather is getting cold now. We have had a foot of snow and all the lakes, rivers, and swamps are frozen solid. The work I am doing is opening up new roads through the bush which is very interesting. In the warm weather we dug ditches and graveled the used roads. We do not receive any money. This is the way the government works it out. Brother J. Fryer, our pastor, is the government man for this district. We go to him the first of every month and tell him our needs. Last month (November) we received fourteen dollars for groceries and fifteen dollars for clothing. I then worked it out on the road at two dollars a day or fourteen and a half days' work. We have had a deer and a half given to us, besides a quarter of beef, so we have meat every day and enough to last a month or more. Then we can go out and shoot another deer. We have had rabbit and partridge which are very tasty when cooked through. Sister Fryer is very good to us, having given us cabbage, onions, and turnips as we arrived too late to put in a garden. She also has given us a ten-pound syrup pail full of milk every day.

We are two miles from the schoolhouse where we hold our meetings. On Wednesday nights prayer service is held at Sister Mercer's about one and a half miles from our place, but distance does not mean anything here. Up till now we have both been able to get out to the services. Now Anna takes Lillian and Donald (the two oldest children) and comes home about ten o'clock at night through the bush with a lantern. She is getting quite used to it and thinks no more of it than walking down the main street in Oxford.

We are trying to have our family prayer with our children, and read stories from the Bible. We would like to get a children's Bible storybook because it puts the facts much plainer for children.

We are surrounded by beautiful scenery. Our homestead is about two miles from a lake, but we have not had much time to travel and view the scenery as yet.

A person has to be very careful not to get lost in the bush. We heard of a young man of nineteen years out hunting with a rifle, packsack of food and matches, who got lost for four days. When they found him dead from exhaustion, he had chewed half his cap and coat away from fear. He had lots of food left when they found him. He went crazy with fear. I am told that it is a terrible feeling when you know you are lost in the bush, and that it takes quite a pull to steady yourself long enough to reason things out and find your way home again. I heard the wolves howl one night. Luckily Anna did not wake up, but I tell you it fairly makes the hair stand straight up on your head. I suppose we shall get used to it before the winter is over.

God has blessed us wonderfully this last year and many times I feel very unworthy of these blessings. He is watching over us and I know that we shall come out all right if we continue to trust and serve him.

Toronto, Ontario

Comprehensive Branch Program Goes Forward

The second anniversary of the opening of Toronto's church building will be held the week-end of January 15, at which time a large gathering is expected. There will be special speakers, and the men have set as their financial objective five hundred dollars to be raised by that time and applied to paying off the mortgage principal. This branch has a heavy financial obligation, but at the same time it has a wonderful accommodation, and these things are working out well.

The Saints also expect a special missionary effort by Apostle D. T. Williams for a full week in the church sometime in February. This is planned to acquaint people of this neighborhood and of the entire city with the gospel.

President F. M. McDowell and Apostle D. T. Williams were principal speakers at the convention held in Toronto over the week-end of November 27. Their instructive lectures and sermons were gratefully received.

Attendance during the winter months is very satisfactory.

Four young men, lately called to the ministry, spoke for fifteen minutes each on certain subjects at a recent Sunday evening service. They are Eldon Oliver, James Bavington, Samuel Crump, and Ernest Newton, and their speeches were favorably received by the congregation. They are announced to speak again soon.

At the quarterly meeting of the department of women in December, the balance necessary to make the interest payment for six months, due January 1, was collected. This amounted to nine hundred and fifty-eight dollars, and the women had a balance over. Mrs. Elsie Castle, captain of one of the groups presented a cantata, "The Real Santa Claus," at which a silver collection was taken and presented to the department. The women are now arranging the church anniversary banquet for January.

The junior Sunday school had a Christmas party for the children with a program, games, and refreshments, and the adult school presented a pageant on Sunday, "The Babe in the Manger." Mrs. Blanche Needham assisted by Mrs. Faye McLean, directed the pageant, with Margaret Prentice at the organ and Bill Clifton at the piano. That day was what was known as the branch's "white gift Sunday." Each member brought a gift wrapped in white paper and presented it. This is usually done through classes in the school, each group's donation being carried to the front in large baskets during the church school session. These parcels were then distributed in Christmas baskets by the deacon to more unfortunate families of the branch. Such a plan gives every member an opportunity to assist in the good work of helping others.

On Christmas Eve the choir gave the cantata, "Yuletide Memories," by Ira B. Wilson, under the leadership of Elder S. G. Clark. This proved a fitting climax to the different programs leading up to Christmas. Two children were inducted into the kingdom on that day by Pastor J. L. Prentice, and the confirmation service was a part of the evening program.

The Thursday evening cottage meetings appear to be quite successful. Brother Frederick Lefeuvre has charge of one in the north end and Brothers James Whiteman and James Kirkpatrick take care of the east end meeting. Two more homes have been offered for similar meetings, and they will be started shortly.

Officers of the branch have worked out a system of having all work such as cleaning and heating done without remuneration. This plan has been in operation a number of years and seems quite successful. Eleven of the brothers divide the work of caring for the church building. Four have charge of the lower auditorium and choir loft; two handle the boiler and heating; one has charge of each of the two sets of stairs, and a man has charge of the second floor, another, the third floor, and yet another, the fourth floor. In this way the work is done without hardship on any one person.

Speakers for the past several Sundays were Bishop A. F. McLean, Elders J. A. Wilson, J. L. Prentice, James Pycock, B. H. Hewitt, and Douglas Cameron, of Toronto; Elder Charles Hannah, president of Hamilton Branch, and Elder Ernest Rowett, president of Humber Bay Branch.

Pleasanton, Iowa

Thankful for Many Blessings

The first day of the year being Sunday and the first Sunday of a new month, Pleasanton Branch held its regular sacrament meeting. Many members were present both at the church school and communion service. Brother J. Emmett Leeper had charge of the latter meeting, assisted by Brother L. W. Moffet. God's Spirit was strongly in evidence during the service, the Lord speaking through one of his servants. It is encouraging to know that He is mindful of his people at all times. Although hardship and distress are abroad in the land, this group feels that its members have much for which to be thankful.

The young people of the church and also of the town worked well together in preparing a Christmas program which was presented to a full house on Christmas Eve. It included two Christmas plays.

Members are looking forward to the new year with a greater desire to do the work of the church. There is work for everyone. No one needs to be idle.

Miami, Florida

Saints Would Hold Meetings; Busy Season for This Southern City

This is a small but active branch. The membership number between twenty-five and thirty, and for the past year and a half have met for services in the home of the pastor, Elder and Mrs. Willey, pending the time when a more adequate place of meeting can be had. A committee of three was appointed several months ago to consider the matter of a meeting place. Brother and Sister John A. Fisher and Brother George H. Butler compose this committee, and are now considering two buildings as possible places where services may be held.

Though the members have suffered heavily from the economic depression, it is thought none has suffered from dire want.

Owing to the scattered condition of the Saints only two services are held each Sunday, Sunday school at ten o'clock in the morning and preaching at eleven. Like other branches, Miami has its absent members, but even with this handicap, it musters a good little band of faithful workers, and average attendance at services is about four fifths of the membership along with four or five nonmembers. Though this number seems to occupy every seat in the house, there is always room for the visitor who is made welcome and comfortable.

This group is blessed in that the young people under twenty years of age by far outnumber the older members in attendance at services. Sometimes the regular meetings take on the aspect of young people's services.

Another blessing is the spirit of unity which prevails. This spirit is manifested to a remarkable extent.

Two years ago the branch held a two-weeks' series of servies, local men doing the preaching. At these services fifty nonmembers were in attendance. And now the pastor has suggested that it is about time the Saints secure a place to hold more special services.

This is the busy season of the year in Miami with dog, horse, and air races. The dog races are already on. The fifth annual all-American air race will be held here January 5, 6, and 7. The Navy's largest airship, the Akron, is due to arrive here about January 5, for its winter training course. One of the greatest horse-racing institutions in America will open its meet here January 19.

Kirtland, Ohio

Christmas at the Temple

The Christmas program presented by the children of the church school was held in the church auditorium the evening of December 23. This was a successful event under the leadership of Sisters John L. Cooper and Arthur Shepherd. On Monday evening a large and beautiful Christmas tree was lighted on the Temple ground, and the choral club furnished the music. Christmas stockings were passed to all the children, and everyone received a popcorn ball.

The first Kirtland High school vesper service was held at the school auditorium Sunday afternoon at four o'clock, December 18. Many of the youth of the church participated.

The morning program on Christmas day consisted of choir selections; carols by the congregation; scripture reading; "The Holy City," a solo by George Neville, and a sermon by Pastor John L. Cooper.

That evening the Christmas theme was carried out in songs, scripture reading, choir music, directed by Sister Anne Householder, assisted by Mrs. Robert Flack at the piano, and Mrs. Raymond Clough at the organ; and soloists were Sister Agnes Martin, soprano; Elder George Neville and Brother Leslie Davies, tenors; W. E. Householder, baritone. Elder Neville talked on "The Influence of Music in the Church."

Recent speakers at the Temple have included Elders Ernest A. Webbe, Joseph Biggs, John L. Cooper, and D. H. Propper, and Priests John R. Booher and William F. Webbe. Patriarch George W. Robley preached a few evenings, and the Saints were inspired by his helpful sermons.

The local priesthood canvassed Kirtland Branch with fine faith in connection with the sacrifice period, and report good returns.

Last rites were held at Kirtland Temple for Sister Elizabeth Malkie, November 29, with John L. Cooper and Thomas Freeman in charge. She was a devoted member of the branch and her life was one of devotion to her responsibilities.

Brother Andrew H. Gill is convalescing after a ten week's stay at Lakeside Hospital, Cleveland, where he underwent two major operations.

Sister Mabel Thomas who had the misfortune of meeting with an automobile accident in November, is convalescing.

November 6, Kirtland District celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith III with special exercises at the Temple in Kirtland. On Friday evening, November 4, the program consisted of a play given by the Kirtland Dramatic Club, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III." On Saturday evening, November 5, a stereopticon lecture was given by District President James E. Bishop, on the life of Joseph Smith. A prayer meeting Sunday morning for young and old drew many to the Temple. Then came church school, and at eleven o'clock a sacrament service.

Sister William F. Webbe was in charge of the basket dinner at the auditorium, and with the assistance of Sister J. L. Cooper one hundred and fifty were served. About half that number ate supper at the auditorium.

The Kirtland Choral Club, under the leadership of Sister Josephine Ebeling, sang in the afternoon, and Patriarch G. T. Griffiths gave an oration, "Memories of the Late President Joseph Smith." Later in the afternoon the Saints descended Temple Hill to the old building, where Joseph Smith was born and held a brief service. Patriarch George W. Robley delivered an excellent sermon in the evening, and Sister Anna Householder, chorister, furnished music with the choir.

Des Moines, Iowa

Church at 717 East 12th Street

The Holy Spirit has not been manifested here as a "rushing wind," but as a gentle zephyr it has touched the spirits and hearts of many, bringing understanding and light to assist them in carrying on their work and in obtaining work. Workers feel that the spirit of 1830 has touched the trained minds of the Saints of 1932 and that Divine Wisdom instead of human intelligence is directing the people in their work.

Since last General Conference there seems to be a closer association between the branch, the district, and the general church. Every appeal from headquarters has received immediate attention throughout the district, and every appeal made to the general church for special speakers has been met by the "First" officials of the church.

A series of meetings was held in the city by the president of Lamoni Stake, Elder Blair Jensen, the last two weeks of October. Brother Jensen preached some splendid sermons to an ever-increasing number of interested listeners. Only a few responded at first, but the attendance grew each night until the close. He dealt with subjects that were vital to the members of the church and awoke anew the feeling of individual responsibility for carrying on the work of the Master. Workers from Graceland came to Des Moines on College Day and made a splendid contribution to the evening service. Elder Roy Cheville, also of Graceland, preached in the morning of the closing day of the series.

Local work went on as usual during these meetings, as the yearly interest and payment on the local church debt had to be met on November 1. A chicken dinner was held on one night of the series before meeting, and brought in sixty-five dollars. More than eight hundred dollars was paid to the bank on November 1. This was the result of continuous work on the part of our branch treasurer, Stephen Robinson, assisted loyally by all division leaders.

Sister Hattie Clark, leader of the home and service group, donated food for one supper that brought fifty dollars to the church treasury. She received the unselfish assistance of her husband in this noble work. The sisters of the branch helped to cook and serve the dinner. This group raised more than four hundred and fifty dollars toward the yearly budget, receiving special mention at the yearly business meeting.

The centennial anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith was observed in a fitting way. Many tributes to this noble character were given during the sacrament service by those who had known him. The church bears the stamp of his faithful and pure life, which has had a lasting influence on the hearts and minds of all who knew him.

The yearly home-coming, November 13, was well attended. District President Henry Castings was the speaker, preaching a sermon on the subject of "The Home" that will not soon be forgotten. The personal experiences that he told and the vivid illustrations that he gave made a deep impression on the minds of all. A successful prayer and testimony meeting was held in the afternoon, and Elder J. L. Parker, now of Ames, preached at night.

The annual election of officers has passed, and several changes were made in officiary and division supervisors. Much prayer and fasting preceded the business meeting, and brotherly love, understanding, patience, kindliness, and sympathy were manifest to an unusual degree. The business meeting was in charge of Branch President E. O. Clark on the night of December 5, with a very large number of the members in attendance.

District President Henry Castings made the statement at the beginning of the election that he was going to do something he had never done before in Des Moines, make a nomination for the office of branch president. He stated that the man whom he was about to nominate would by humility and much prayer become a spiritual leader of unusual ability and power, for he would receive much spiritual direction to assist him in his work. Then followed the nomination of Elder V. L. Deskin, who has been counselor to Brother Clark and church school director. Brother Deskin responded humbly, after which a number of speeches were made supporting the nomination, many saying that they had been impressed before the meeting that he should be the man for the place. A sweet spirit of unity pervaded the congregation as Brother Deskin was elected.

Brother C. Wayne Wolf was elected to the office of church school director and after his election spoke feelingly of the spiritual dream he had had a few weeks previously and the light that it had brought to him in regard to the work he should take up.

Sister J. L. Dalbey was elected to succeed herself as adult division leader; Sister Gladys Barr Loyd was chosen as young people's leader; and Sister Leona Howard for the children's division. Brother Stephen Robinson was reelected branch treasurer; Sister Margaret Mayer, leader of the home and service group; and J. G. Carpenter and E. E. Spencer, trustees. Sister Eva Cook was chosen chorister and R. D. Williams, clerk. Raymond Thompson was elected assistant church school director, to have charge of Sunday evening class work and programs. Sister Doris Nelson was reelected publicity agent, Elder C. E. McDonald to be her assistant, and write articles for the church papers. Associates to the pastor have not been chosen as yet.

E. E. Spencer was recommended for ordination to the office of priest, and will be ordained as soon as arrangements are completed.

Brother E. O. Clark was commended by the body for his long and faithful service, having served at two different periods in his life as branch president, one a seven-years' term and last a two-years' term, the latter under very trying times. It was suggested by one that he might be spared to this branch longer if he were relieved of the heavy burden he has been carrying. He has been a member of the church for nearly half a century and an active minister for many years. Brother Clark stated that he would continue to work as hard as ever for the advancement of the work.

Brother George Mayer and family have returned to Des Moines as permanent residents and are helping in the branch in every way possible.

Brother Bernard Rudkin, son of John and Mary Rudkin, was overcome by escaping gas in a manhole Sunday, December 4, and died soon after. This came as a shock to his family and to the branch. His father and mother were at Helena, Montana, when they received the sad news, and they returned to Des Moines as quickly as possible. They have the sympathy of the entire membership of the branch, as well as of their many friends who are not members. Bernard leaves his wife and two small sons to mourn his untimely death, besides his parents and sister.

Independence

Sessions of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, January 3 and 4, brought to Independence at the opening of the year the entire group of leading church officials with the exceptions of Apostles John W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis, foreign appointees. Though he could not be present at the meetings, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, of Texas, was in Independence the week-end preceding the council sittings.

The women of Independence held their regular Monday afternoon meetings during the holidays, and on January 2, announced their total collection of sacrifice money as $2,174.40.

The Sunny South Club has a number of pleasant and progressive plans for the coming year. These were made known by the president of the club, Elbert Mock, at a new year's watch party at Liberty Street Church. The purpose of this club is to bring together all natives of the South now living in Independence, missionaries who have labored there, and other people interested in that region. Club endeavors for the year will include orchestral and dramatic activities in addition to work for the Harvest Home Festival with which the club has a good standing. Other officers of this group are vice president, Howard Cook, and secretary-treasurer, Roberta McPherson.

A program representative of district talent entertained the young people of Independence at their Sunday afternoon service in their Auditorium room January 1. Elder D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education in Independence, talked on "New Year," and Kenneth Morford, who was in charge of the program, also spoke. The program opened with the song, "One Day When Fell the Spirit's Whisper," and in addition to the two talks mentioned above, included a vocal solo by a young man from Liberty Street; a reading by a Walnut Park girl; piano solo by a girl from the Stone Church; the poem, "The Old Year Passes"; a period of meditation; the hymn, "Consecration," and benediction by a young man from Englewood.

Among those recently passed on was Elder Henry C. Smith, former missionary of the church and resident of Independence, who died January 6, at the home of a daughter in Kansas City, being ninety-five years old. His funeral was held from the Stone Church, Monday afternoon at two o'clock, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Sister Sarah A. Gard, seventy-nine years old, and the mother of eight sons and one daughter, passed to her reward December 29, at the home of a son in Independence.

Stone Church

"Sweet the time, exceeding sweet!
When the saints together meet . . ."

That was the hymn with which the Stone Church congregation opened its first sacrament of the new year.

It seemed appropriate that Apostle J. F. Curtis should make the sacrament talk, especially when he mentioned that in this church building at a new year's Sunday sacrament service forty years ago, he had resolved to stand by the right and serve Christ. A short biography of Brother Curtis's boyhood and young manhood, to appear in Stepping Stones for January 29 and February 5, tells of this service many years ago. Brother Curtis based his short talk on Paul's chapter on charity (1 Corinthians 13).

His many friends in Independence rejoice to see Brother Curtis recovering health and vigor.

A large congregation participated in this communion service, and the spirit of hope and resolution, harmony and purposefulness, was felt by hundreds of worshipers.

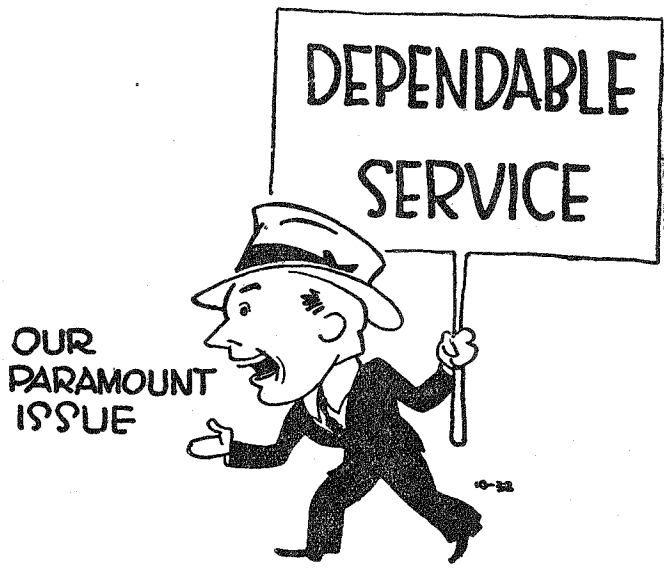
Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge of the hour, and assisting him in the stand were Bishop R. T. Cooper, Apostle Curtis, Patriarch U. W. Greene, and Elders C. Ed. Miller, H. G. Barto, and T. A. Beck, Priest Earl Audet, and the priesthood who served the emblems. Robert Miller played the organ.

In the evening President F. M. Smith preached the first sermon of the year, centering his fine discourse about three pertinent questions: (1) What of the past? (2) What of the present? and (3) What of the future? In connection with these he discussed our heritage, ideals, moral standards, and our duties as true Latter Day Saints.

The program of music was by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig; Hazel Scott Withee, organist. Elder J. F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder O. W. Okerlind.

This congregation was privileged last Sunday to listen to sermons by two of the younger Apostles who spent the latter part of 1932, laboring among the branches on the West Coast.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards, the morning speaker, presented a vivid discourse which named God as our background, his love all pervading; Jesus, the center of things. He stressed the great necessity of a revolution in the hearts of men, a getting back to the bigger things of life.



Dependable, trustworthy service has just as much value in connection with your printing needs as it has in your selection of the family physician or the grocer. Your own institution offers such a service—one upon which you can depend as to stock quality, printing quality, or delivery . . . and besides this you help the church. When you need such service think of the

The Stone Church Choir, considerably grown in numbers, gave the morning program, singing "Father Thy Paternal Care," "Met in Thy Sacred Name," and an anthem, "Gloria," by Mozart. Edward Brackenbury, tenor, sang solo numbers.

"This Do and Thou Shalt Live," was the stirring theme of Apostle E. J. Gleazer in the evening, and for texts he read Luke 10: 25-28 and 1 John 2: 15. His sincere presentation of the philosophy of Jesus caused his hearers to review their attitudes toward God and his church, and their measure of service.

The evening's music was given by a quartet of singers from the choir, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wheeler, Mrs. Earl Nunn, and Charles Magargee. Mrs. T. A. Beck was the organist.

Second Church

January 1, being the first Sunday of the month, communion service was held. The address was by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and the service was very well attended. Sunday afternoon a baptismal service was held. Three adults and five young people were baptized into the church.

The speaker of the evening was Apostle R. S. Budd whose sermon was fine and helpful. The opening and closing prayer were given by Brother Roy Settles.

Sunday, January 8, Elder William I. Fligg spoke at the eleven o'clock service. He took as a test Doctrine and Covenants 4. Assistant Pastor Ben Sarratt was in charge of the meeting, aided by Elder John Miller. "Cavatina," by Raff, a violin solo, was played by Harold Buseth accompanied by Miss Irma Quick on the piano.

Vern Hays took charge of the junior service Sunday morning. Nadine Inman and Mrs. B. C. Sarratt were in charge of the music. A talk on, "The Opportunities of the New Year," was given by Brother Conyers. An unusual story, "The Man He Wanted to Be," was told to the young people by Sister Agnes Edmunds.

Special music for the seven thirty service was furnished by a girls' quartet composed of Nadine Inman, Geraldine Fields, Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Lee Street. Their first number was, "Guide Me, Oh, My Savior, Guide Me." The opening prayer was by Finis Beebe. Following the prayer the quartet sang, "Savior Like a Shepherd Lead Us." Mrs. M. E. Trego gave an illustrated lecture on her War Mother's trip to France.

Starting January 1, a six o'clock service has been held on Sunday. There are classes for everyone. A special class is held for the young people.

Walnut Park Church

New Year's Day, sacrament Sunday, saw a large audience present at the communion service. Pastor Frank McDonald was in charge, assisted by Elders Mansel Williams and Benjamin Bean. Just previous to the serving of the emblems, Lawrence Dale Gouldsmith, infant son of Brother and Sister Noel Gouldsmith, was blessed, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and Elder Frank McDonald officiating.

Quarterly election of officers was held at the Religio session Sunday evening. The following will serve this organization during the first quarter of the new year: President, Vernon Sackman; first vice president, Fern Price; second vice president, Harold Dillee; secretary-treasurer, Lois Butterworth; chorister, Melba Moorman; pianist, Thelma Schwab; membership committee: Alta June Moorman, chairman, Kathryn Price, Helen Brown, and Dehryl Grimes; social committee: Helen Moorman, chairman, Kenneth Barwise, and Henry Countryman; devotional committee: Ruth Bryant, chairman, Violet Chase, and Forest Kester.

Preceding the program of the evening, the new Religio officers were installed, the prayer of installation being by Elder W. T. Gard. Numbers of the program were: A reading, Lois Jean Williams; piano solo, Margaret Chapman; and a vocal duet, Melba and Helen Moorman.

Elder Frank McDonald was the speaker at the evening service. A good audience was present to hear the pastor's first sermon of the year.

The Walnut Park Quilting Society held its annual election of officers last Thursday. Sister Leona Jones was chosen president, Sister Minnie Nace, secretary, and Sister O. J. Hawn, treasurer. Sister Ellen Pennell was chosen to act on the ways and means committee for the coming year. This society has accomplished much in the past year with its quilting and other work, one thing of importance being the redecorating of the church building.

Prayer services are held at eight o'clock each Sunday morning at the church, under the supervision of Elder W. T. Gard. Brother Gard announces that next Sunday a family prayer meeting will be held, and requests that all families in the district be represented.

Enoch Hill Church

"An Open Door to Higher Levels of Living," was the theme of the church school the first Sunday of the New Year. Elder J. E. Martin used a blackboard to show that there are two doors open to each person, the door of selfishness, leading downward, and the door of unselfishness leading upward. Lawrence Martin read the poem, "He Came to My Desk," and Mrs. Amos Allen sang, "I Would Be True."

If the first sacrament service of the year is a criterion, this year will be one of spiritual progress for the Saints on Enoch Hill.

At the evening service the choir sang, "We Would See Jesus," and a quartet composed of Lewis Hays and Helen, Margaret, and Robert McDonald sang, "Go to the Father in Prayer." Elder David Allen was the speaker.

Supplementing the first Sunday's theme, the church school topic, January 8, was, "The Open Door for a Closer Companionship With Jesus." This was discussed by members of the senior young people's department. Closer companionship by increasing our faith was discussed by Helen McDonald; closer companionship gained by coming to the house of the Lord, by Pauline Alexander, and closer companionship by using our best talents in service by Martha Chrestensen. A duet, "I Have Heard the Sweetest Story," was sung by Lavon Kramer and Doris McDonald.

Jacquelyn, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Hugh Moore, was blessed at the eleven o'clock service by Pastor H. L. Barto and Elder J. E. Martin Sister Moore was formerly Miss Velma Ziegenhorn.

An inspiring sermon was delivered by Elder C. H. Rich on, "The Foundations of God Standeth Sure." Preceding the sermon the choir sang, "A Song of Thanksgiving," and Mrs. Ruth Hays sang, "God's Care of the Sparrow."

In the evening the Saints were pleased to have Apostle J. F. Curtis with them. The choir sang, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," and Mrs. C. S. Warren and Mrs. Amos Allen sang, "A Friend to Man."

The women of the various groups are busy sewing for the Red Cross. Several machines have been loaned for this enterprise and the workers meet for the entire day on Thursday in the basement of the church.

Spring Branch Church

High hopes for the new year are cherished by the members of this district. Everyone felt blessed in the opening services of the year; on Sunday morning, the church school hour and then a harmonious sacrament meeting, and in the evening a helpful sermon by Pastor G. W. Eastwood who chose several scriptural texts on which to base his new year's message. His subject was "Bettering Our Best."

Though for the past few weeks there has been considerable sickness in this congregation, the Saints rejoice at the blessings they have received. God has been very near them with his watchcare. He has helped them in their prayer services.

Spring Branch is fortunate in that it has a group of lively and ambitious young people, active in church service. Church school sessions on Sunday morning and evening are profitable. The choir often contributes its part to Sunday's meetings. And frequently young and old are gathered together in a social similar to that held at the home of Brother and Sister Morris Jacobsen Friday evening, December 30.

At the church school last Sunday morning the three older classes united to hear Elder J. W. A. Bailey talk. Brother Bailey also gave an interesting lecture at the seven forty-five evening hour.

The morning speaker Sunday, was Elder T. A. Beck who chose for the theme of his sermon the words of the song, "The Morning Light Is Breaking, the Darkness Disappears." Sister Corinne French, former musical director in this congregation, visited the Saints, and sang a solo at the morning hour.

The church school plans to have a young married people's class to take care of the twenty-one to thirty-five age range. This group will endeavor to bring nonmembers to church services.

Alice Rice, of Blue Springs, and Everett Wells, of Grain Valley, who were married the past week, have the congratulations of this branch. For several years Brother Wells was a member of Spring Branch congregation.

Kansas City Stake

Gladstone Church

Christmas night this congregation presented its program, children, young people, and adults taking part. The tree and treats were donated by the Saints and much enjoyed by the children. A play, "Going Home for Christmas," the second part of the program, was much appreciated.

The New Year's day sacrament service was one characterized by deep contemplation. It brought out some splendid purposes and plans for 1933, in prayers and testimonies. Pastor R. E. Jones presided, assisted by Elder George Harrington.

Manchester, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street

This branch was lately entertained by what was called a "ladies' effort." Such efforts have developed into a form of competition between the brothers and sisters who vie over the success they attain. Such a spirit of contest, it is thought, bespeaks good and progress for the church.

This is a good form of missionary work. The Saints get fifty per cent of their friends to join them in entertaining and working, and so spread around news of the glorious gospel. These "efforts" mean considerable work, and the band of good sisters put their best into the undertakings.

No doubt Saints who have left Manchester to go to America would like to hear of these activities and to know of those who are still doing their part. Here are a few of the women: Sisters G. W. and C. Leggott, Sister Mayne, Sister Tapping, Sister Noble, Sister Emmy Schofield, Sister Minnie Brien, Sister Lena Wilson, Sister Bickerton, Mother Bell, and there are many others.

Many laughable regulations were imposed at the entertainment which if not complied with by the brothers, were the source of bringing in money through "fines." Unless a brother had an exemption badge, he found himself subjected to many strange feats and customs. The "police force" was in evidence, and rules were strictly enforced.

Sister Minnie Brien was in charge of the entertainment, and many friends gave their services to the program. The senior girls of the church school presented two humorous sketches. "The Vote," and "That Piece of Silk." And throughout the evening a royal good time was enjoyed by about one hundred and fifty adults and thirty children.

Pastor G. W. Leggott has not been well of late, but the heavenly Father blesses him with a renewal of strength to carry on his good work.

Marriage

SCHAFER-FISHER. — Miss Katherine B. Schaler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schaler, of Philadelphia, was married, December 19, to Myron C. Fisher, jr., of Somerville, Massachusetts, at the Saints' church in Philadelphia. Before the ceremony, David Wiesen, church organist, played a group of selected songs, and Mrs. Charles Thumm sang, "I Love You Truly," and, "Because." The bridal party entered to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, and Mrs. Thumm sang, "O Promise Me." The bride was given in marriage by her father, and the double ring ceremony was performed by Henry L. Livingston, pastor of the branch. The bride was attended by Miss Anna Schafer as maid of honor, and bridesmaids were Mrs. Elmer G. Dymond, the bride's sister, and Mrs. E. L. Traver, jr. A reception was held in the lower auditorium of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher are graduates of Graceland College. Mrs. Fisher attended from 1927 until 1930, and was a member of the E. T. A. and G. G. A. C. Clubs. Mr. Fisher was at Graceland from 1928 until 1930. He belonged to the "G" Club and the All Over Six Club. After leaving Graceland he attended the State Teachers College at Salem, Massachusetts, and Harvard University Summer School. He is now head of the commercial department and coach of boys' athletics at the Chester Vermont High School. The bridal pair went to Washington and New York for a short wedding trip and then returned to Boston to spend Christmas.

HEALTH IS WEALTH

Natural Foods make a Natural Body. Diseased flesh, Denatured-Devitalized-Unnatural Foods will bring on disease. Nearly all of our present ailments can be traced to improper foods, and tissue starvation.

Our bodies are made up of 16 elements, and if you do not eat foods that contain some of the 16 elements, in a short time it is first noticed by congested bowels, slow liver, lack of pep, and then comes nervousness, and as a rule the average person will reach for the pill box. Before you do this, get a can of PHOSFO and feed the starved tissues and save a lot of suffering and waste of time and money. Only a dollar bill will start you on the road to better health, greater efficiency and less expense for food. We are one of the pioneers in the Food Business with over 31 years of continuous work for suffering humanity. We want every Saint to be healthy and active. Save on food that is wasted and pay the debts of the church. I can prove that the average food wasted in the homes of Saints is better than $5.00 per month. We have something like forty thousand families. What would the bishop do if we sent him two hundred thousand dollars for just two months. I can live on a dime a day. What do you spend for food? I want to help every Saint in this church to feel better and to live cheaper and be of greater service to the church.

Sermons by Mail

A little story comes to us of what A. H. Parsons, of Elk Mills, Maryland, is doing to carry on the gospel work as long as he is able. Advanced in years, partially disabled physically, and confined to his home by the cold weather, Brother Parsons is not discouraged, but carries on his good work with the aid of his typewriter. To date he has put ninety-three sermons in circulation through the mails from his study desk. Whenever he can, of course, he gets out to make calls and to attend services, or administer to the sick and visit.

This is a worthy record, and serves as an inspiration to many who do not suffer his handicaps. All of us should be as diligent in working for the cause as Brother Parsons is.

Help From the Young People

A friendly letter to the Editors from Sister J. A. Gunsolley says:

"I am of the opinion that there are many themes that are written by our young people in school, that if they could be obtained, would lighten the labors of the Editors, and be an encouragement to many of our people. But many of our young folk feel that what they produce is not of worth . . . so they do not try."

This good idea is worth passing on. We think so much of it that we are willing to make it an invitation. We hope that our young friends will be patient if we do not always find immediate opportunity to use what they send. We have to keep some stock on hand for the times when manuscripts do not come in. And then there are the many contributions that, though good in themselves, do not fit with current needs. But send in the articles at all events. We shall welcome them.

In the Presence of Jesus

"Our fellowship among and with Latter Day Saints has been made possible only because other men and women have stood in the presence of Jesus. If we are to be chosen vessels of the Lord in helping to effect His Latter Day Work, if we are to transmit, to those who follow, the rich, spiritual heritage that has come to us, we (today and every day) must so live among one another that we shall be worthy to stand in the presence of Jesus."—Dwight D. W. Davis.

"Heaven help the man who is never satisfied," ejaculated the pigeon on a recent brisk morning. "There's the man who, when the weather is cold, wishes it were August, or when summer has come, pines for the cooling breezes of fall. That isn't the 'divine discontent' we sometimes hear about. And it isn't the brand of dissatisfaction that will see this church through to its goal. That's just plain, unadulterated faultfinding."

Two Things to Do

In an editorial in last week's Herald, discussing the work and spirit of the recent meeting of the Joint Council, President Frederick M. Smith summarized the spirit and intent of the council as being "caught up in the expression that our task is to evangelize the world and 'Zionize' the church." In broadest aspects, this statement covers the whole work and program of the church. Everything else is contributary to these two objectives.

If all had an equal understanding of these two goals of the church, further comment would be unnecessary. But in order to make them alike clear to all the membership of the church it will be necessary to express them in terms of a number of smaller and more specific objectives that must be attained, especially as they relate to our immediate problems. The present situation must now, as often before, be taken into consideration in connection with our principal tasks.

> OUR task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church." —President Frederick M. Smith.

I. We must evangelize the world. With our reduced forces of maintained missionaries, the work of bringing the gospel to the world must be carried on with increased vigor by volunteer missionaries. Until our missionary lines can be rebuilt, each branch should assume an obligation of prosecuting missionary work. Missionary sermons, invitations by members to bring nonmembers to church; missionary campaigns; these are the chief means by which the missionary work of each branch can be carried on.

II. We must "Zionize" the church. This will require a greater growth in spirituality and morality in every way than we have yet seen. The spiritual condition of the people is the foundation upon which all other progress must be based. It will also require a general improvement in moral, social, and cultural standards. It will require some vision and consciousness of our economic problems.

It is expected that we shall have more to present during the coming weeks in the columns of the Herald concerning specific tasks of individuals and branches during the year 1933, in order that we may realize our two great ideals by accomplishing some very definite objectives and performing some real bits of work.

In this task for the year 1933 we must have the whole church cooperating—officers and members alike. We shall have to sacrifice of course, but more is required of us than to sacrifice. We are needed to serve. This church is too big, and its cause is too great, the scope of its mission is too wide, to be confined to the ordinary task of raising money. We must, of course, raise the necessary funds to finance our operations and relieve the church of debt. But we must also carry on the spiritual mission of the church, for our own salvation and the saving of others.

To the work of the church we address ourselves with courage and hope, believing that He who has guided our destiny so long will not leave us alone now. L. L.

A Page for Youth

Readers will notice in this week's issue a special page of interest to young people, bearing the title, "A Page for Youth," carrying an important announcement concerning the coming convention.

This new page, as well as the story material that we are regularly printing, is used in response to definite suggestions from our readers that material should be printed for young people now that they have been deprived of their own separate publication.

Of course, some will not care for the new material. It is hardly to be expected that every one will. We must try to carry what will satisfy the needs of the greatest number of our church people, and the young people are also members.

To one reader who objected to the presence of the serial story in the Herald, we replied, "Maybe you would do well to read the story. It contains some good Christian teaching."

It will not be long until the young people of today will be filling positions of responsibility and authority in the church. In truth, some of them are doing it now. Them also we must reach and serve.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God"

VI.—Keeping the Peace Among Ourselves

Many years ago President Joseph Smith advised the church that we need not fear another apostasy such as occurred following 1844, involving invasions of the moral and doctrinal laws of the church; he warned us that our gravest danger would be that the Adversary would sow the seeds of discord and division among us, particularly among the ministry. This warning was several times repeated. Not only did he have prophetic foresight concerning the future, he had also the lessons of history to guide his judgment.

The High Cost of Contention

A hundred years ago the Saints seemed well established in Independence, they had high hopes for the building of Zion. A hundred years ago next summer they were driven violently from Independence and subsequently from the State of Missouri. The mob had no adequate reasons for its lawless conduct, but why was it permitted? The Lord said:

"I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them . . . in consequence of their transgressions . . . they must needs be chastened and tried . . . there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 1, 2.

Just a handful of people, surrounded by bitter enemies, bayonets rather literally at their breasts—and yet they had among themselves jarrings and contentions and strifes. These things cost the church Zion a hundred years ago. Yet the Lord promised mercy, and that the Saints should return. The promise was kept. How has it been in our more recent history? Was there occasion for the warning that we have quoted?

President Joseph Smith was right, and it were well had we given more heed to his warning. If in the future we are to profit by that warning and by our own experiences of the past, we may well consider the high cost of contention. If our lesson is learned by us now, from this time forth it will be our first endeavor to keep the peace among ourselves.

The Ministry First

This responsibility comes first upon the ministry, who are set to be exemplars to the membership. They are disciples of the Prince of Peace. There should be no two of them who can not work together in peace. How about it, brethren? Let us all say, Amen! So be it! The membership generally are ready to follow a united leadership on the part of the ministry. A divided ministry leads to a divided membership. Even two ministers at loggerheads set the example of division and strife; the quarrel spreads, and their personal following line up and take sides for a fight. Christ put us all under bonds to keep the peace. We should not forfeit our bonds.

The Members Next

With the ministry committed to a program of unity, to be fostered in patience and kindness, we may well ask the membership to forego the doubtful and costly pleasure of personal quarrels. Such quarrels in stakes, districts, and branches have greatly hindered the upbuilding of the church. From small beginnings they sometimes grow to amazing proportions.

Two sisters fell into a quarrel about a matter involving only a few cents. Their quarrel divided the branch and district, disturbed the mission, ran through one or two elders' courts, a Bishop's court, and finally came to the High Council, taking the time of the First Presidency and twelve members of the High Council for days, in addition to the time of attorneys and witnesses, and, "believe it or not," found its way into the General Conference taking the time of the entire Conference—and then back to the High Council.

One day I had an enormous bonfire of rubbish in my back yard, and a small nephew, in an awed voice, said, "Uncle Awlbert, did you start all that fire with only one match?" To him it was amazing, as it was to the wise man of old, "What a great matter a little fire kindleth."

James warned the Saints against the unwise use of the tongue, which he averred was sometimes quite capable of starting disastrous conflagrations. Probably every penny of the sum mentioned in the foregoing "true story" cost the church one hundred or more dollars. There have been countless cases similar but less noticeable that have cost us an enormous sum total in money and an incalculable amount in good will, harmony, and the power to do things that goes with a united people.

Better Suffer Wrong Than Do Wrong

May we not well resolve to put a bridle upon tongue and temper? Let us bear affront and injury if necessary? Better suffer a little personal wrong than to inflict a great wrong upon the church. Sometimes we excuse ourselves under the old familiar plea, "It is the principle of the thing that I am fighting for." No one should be asked to violate a fundamental principle of right; but quite often the only principle involved is our desire to have our own way. Jesus said, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily [not on Sunday alone] and come and follow me."

His gospel is one of peace. Only in the spirit of

peace can we build up his kingdom. Three times in his last recorded prayer, he prayed that his followers might be one. Shall we each definitely resolve to keep the peace, to deny ourselves the personal luxury of quarrels and disputations? Shall we cultivate the fixed habit of mind, the courage, the charity, the will power, that must be had by those who keep themselves under control and so can work, always, under whatsoever trying conditions, in the "ministry of reconciliation."

Correction Re Church of Christ

In the Saints' Herald for November 9, 1932, in one of my articles, "The Foundations of Our Faith," appears the statement that at the Conference of 1930 we took action declaring void our articles of agreement with the Church of Christ. This is an error in date: the action was taken at the Conference of 1926, see Conference Minutes that year, pages 4029, 4030.

1,600 Heralds Sold From Branch Bundles Each Week

Business Increasing Steadily Under New Method of Distribution

Nearly two hundred branch salesmen for the Herald are getting bundles every week and selling copies to individuals at five cents each. This new method of distributing the Herald, started a few weeks ago for the purpose of getting the Herald and its message into homes of nonsubscribers, has grown in popularity until at the present time 1,600 families are buying the Herald each week, where formerly they did not take it.

Many a family can not afford the subscription price in an outright payment, so bad are economic conditions. Others, we imagine, simply do not subscribe because they do not "get around to it." But many of these families can afford a nickel each week for the church paper and not miss the money.

It is still most economical to take the Herald by subscription, and you are assured of not missing any numbers. But we are happy to have the message of the church going into many homes that have been without it.

If there are some in other branches not now getting the weekly bundle of Heralds, it would be a good thing to start this movement. Get in touch with the Business Manager, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

"Riches Untold"

Those who are starting our serial story, Riches Untold, are wondering how it began. For their benefit, here it is:

A group of good looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Brad brings a handsome young business friend home to dinner, and Edith, one of the Half Dozen who has helped Polly in the emergency by playing maid, exclaims in a swift aside, "Polly, he's good looking! . . . Bet he's married. . . . Wouldn't it be interesting—if he isn't?" And now you can go on with the story.

The Christian Life

The Christian life ought to be a life of peace; but how can a man's heart be at peace if he knows that something tremendous has happened, but does not know the nature of the event. When you are awakened at night by a slight sound, you are not at all disturbed if you know what the sound is. It may be the dripping of water from one of the faucets, it may be the teeth of a mouse in the wall, it may be the wind toying with one of the blinds; no matter what the noise is, it is not disturbing if you know what it is. It may be that it is the crackling flames —in that case you know what to do. But if you can not tell what it is that is causing the noise, you are both impotent and wretched, and sleep becomes impossible. The boy who travels down the hall stairs in the dark and sees something standing at the bottom of the stairs, would not be alarmed if he could see all of this object, whatever it is. The reason his heart palpitates is because he sees a little of it, but not all of it. Its edges fade away into the darkness, and this gives the boy's imagination a chance to work, and his imagination increases the action of the heart.

And so it is in religious matters. If we do not see clearly what it is that has caused this world-wide commotion in religious circles, we shall be the victims of a vague mistrust and an undefined dread, and this alarm will paralyze all the nerves of action and close the avenues of peace. Christians, of all people on earth, ought to be positive and radiant. They must know themselves and the world in which they are living. If they are nervous and hysterical, shrinking and scared, they will not be able to do their work effectively, nor will they be able to bear eloquent testimony to him who said, "Be of good cheer. I have overcome the world."—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Remember the YOUTH CONFERENCE and LEADERSHIP CONVENTION June 17-25

Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, Iowa

THE biggest thing in the history of our young people's work," is the description one enthusiast has given of the coming YOUTH CONFERENCE and LEADERSHIP CONVENTION which is to be held on the beautiful Campus of Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, June 17 to 25, 1933.

President Frederick M. Smith, in issuing the call for the convention in last week's Herald, said: "The purpose of the convention at Lamoni in June will be to enter frankly with the youth into a discussion of our problems and discover the common grounds on which we must approach them."

TWO SEPARATE MEETINGS, COOPERATING

It should be distinctly understood that the meeting at Lamoni is to be of a dual nature. This will be necessary in order to make the best possible approach to problems and to assure the best possible results from the discussion. There will be the separate meetings for young people, where they may freely, fully, and frankly present their problems and their ideas. There will also be the separate meetings of the leaders and friends of young people, whose purpose it will be to try to arrive at some general understanding of the problems and work of the young people from an administrative viewpoint. Then there will be combined meetings for a pooling of findings.

A FULL PROGRAM

The evenings will be occupied by a series of inspirational addresses by eminent speakers, whose names will be announced later. Plays and musical programs by the young people of various branches are expected to be arranged soon, and tentative plans are being formed. Everything is being arranged to make the conference a rich experience for all who attend.

A BEAUTIFUL SETTING

Those who know the Graceland College Campus are aware that no finer place could be selected for such a convention among all the properties in which the people have an interest. The buildings, classrooms, assembly hall, the grounds, dormitories, and dining room will be made available, so that the finest quarters possible will be at the disposal of visitors.

DELEGATES SHOULD REPRESENT EVERY DISTRICT

The young people of various districts should begin now to plan on sending delegates to the convention. Transportation in many cases will be a great obstacle, and present conditions make it inadvisable to urge many to come great distances. Yet some may be found who are able to finance their own trips or manage them inexpensively. And it will be desirable to have as nearly representative a conference as possible. Young people's district officers may well begin to consider now who will be available to go as delegates.

A PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

This page will be devoted to the interests of young people and to news and plans for the Conference as often as it may be found desirable. Our young people are urged to watch for the page as it is expected that much good material to come up for discussion during the Conference will be given preliminary presentation here.

Tithing

By L. F. P. Curry

VIII

A certain business man, in control of large operations, will patiently listen to the explanation of some project under consideration. If at the end he has been convinced that it should be undertaken, he utters one word, "When?"

Similarly, if one is convinced that tithing is one of God's principles, that obedience to it is enjoined upon us, and is a desirable thing, the question will be asked, when should payment of the tithe be made? In these days when it is so easy to yield to the lure of captivating advertising, parting with our money for the perishable things of life is not a difficult undertaking. There is no easy way to pay the tithe. The will to pay must battle the urge of many other impulses. There is, however, a simple way to pay the tithe that must appeal to every one. A brief statement of this way follows.

The last paper included an outline of how to make a proper accounting of tithing due, pointing out that the majority have an income reaching them at periodical intervals, usually weekly or monthly. The time at which the income is received is the time to sit down and determine how much is due the Lord as a tithe. Then when the annual Financial Statement is prepared and filed, these weekly or monthly payments added together will show whether the tithing has been paid in full; if not a further payment to balance the account should be made.

Once the sum to be paid has been determined, and the check drawn or the actual cash set aside, the solicitor or other officer appointed to receive the tithe should be sought without delay and the funds turned over to him. In the ordinary course, this will occur at some branch meeting, but if attendance is not to be immediate no delay in getting the payment into the hands of the solicitor should be permitted oneself. Payment deferred often means tithing lost, causing suffering both to the person and the church.

During the biblical times there was a beautiful practice set forth by the Mosaic law, and followed by the people, which we might emulate. This was the payment as an offering to God of the first fruits of the flock, vine or field. Before the owner partook, God was asked to share. It was a gesture of hospitality, a token of thankfulness, and acknowledgment of the source of all good things. Could we today do better? Is it not easy for most of us to make the first payment from our monthly or weekly income to the Lord?

After all, unless we pay the tithe when the income is received, under normal conditions the accumulations increase at such a rate that payment soon becomes difficult if not in part impossible. This places a great and unnecessary strain upon our better qualities, and we may be overcome to our everlasting detriment. Money kept from the Lord is usually money spent for other things. And the consequence is that the knowledge of disobedience pricks like a thorn in the flesh, or we become indifferent and definitely lower our spiritual tone.

To pay the tithe when the income is received is good for these reasons, but there is another side to the case. Payment at once is also desirable because the church needs the money. In some respects the church is like a business institution. Its ministerial force and office personnel are its employees. These people have rent, grocery and milk bills, taxes, and what not, to pay just as do the employees of a corporation. They should be thought of when our income is received. Then the church itself has expenses to meet, covering light, heat, fuel, postage, stationery, taxes, insurance, repairs to property—all that multitude of things needed in the day by day conduct of its affairs. Finally, let us not forget the debts which must be paid. There is no magic source of funds, no Midas touch to turn base things to gold. The church may keep itself square with the world only as its people pay the tithe at the time their income is received. "Now is the accepted time."

Living Dangerously

On the walls at Mount Vernon you may read the inscription by a noted English philanthropist, Doctor Andrew Reed, written in 1833: "Washington, the brave—the wise—the good. Washington, supreme in War, in Council and in Peace. Washington, valiant without ambition—discreet without fear—confident without presumption. Washington, in disaster calm, in success moderate, in all, himself. Washington, the Hero—the Patriot—the Christian. The Friend of Nations, the Friend of Mankind, who, when he had won all, renounced all, and sought, in the bosom of his Family and of Nature, Retirement—and in the Hope of Religion, Immortality."—By Herbert B. Hudnut, The Christian Century Pulpit, July, 1931.

NEWS BRIEFS

Independence Checks Over a Year's Work

Reports read at the quarterly conference in Independence, held at the Stone Church, January 9, contained several items which will interest the general church:

During 1932 there was a net gain in local membership of thirty, this in the face of eighty-two deaths and 432 transfers. (The total number of known members is now 6,059.)

Average attendance of the church schools was higher than in 1931.

The young people's council sponsored an inventory-filing movement among the young people, and as a result thirty per cent of the young church members of the city have their inventories or financial statements in the Bishop's office.

During the twelve months Independence members contributed $28,894.78 to the general church.

The women's sacrifice offering campaign has raised a sum of $2,333 (including collections for two weeks in January) which has been turned over to the Bishopric for general church expenses and debt reduction. This money was raised by less than one third of the women of Independence. Organizations responding to the call of the women's department and contributing, are the Laurel Club, Tuesday Club, Northwest Club, Home Beautiful Club, Patroness Society, Ladies' Aid, Oriole Girls, To-Ko-Lon Class, and other organized classes.

One hundred and sixty bushel baskets were made up at Christmas by the various groups and organizations for needy families, foodstuffs being donated by individuals and taken from the Harvest Festival store.

Carthage Church School Council Studies Handbook

The church school council of Carthage Branch, Missouri, meets once each month to make plans for the coming month's activities and to study the Church School Handbook with the school director, J. J. Linder, as teacher.

Organized Classes at Alliance, Ohio

A progressive branch program is being carried out at Alliance by organized classes. The W. W. W. (We Will Work) Intermediate Class recently won a lively attendance contest between the classes of the church school, and has participated in other phases of service. The young people's class is busy, and the senior class meets every Friday evening to study stewardships, the pastor being the teacher.

Pittsburg Pioneer Passes Away

Brother Jasper M. Richards, ninety-two-year-old pioneer of Crawford County, Kansas, and a long-time Latter Day Saint, died at his home at Pittsburg, December 2, 1932. He was one of the oldest settlers in that region, having come there before the county was organized sixty-five years ago.

He was a veteran of the Civil War, having answered President Lincoln's call to arms back in his home State, Ohio. Soon after the war, he went west to Kansas, living with his bride in a wooden house with an earthen floor. He plowed his acres, using six yoke of oxen hitched to a 24-inch plow. Pittsburg was then just another bit of unbroken prairie, and the Richards family traded at Weir, Cherokee, and Fort Scott.

He joined the church in 1875, and served as an elder for many years, preaching almost till the last. Friends have paid tribute to him as a "deeply religious man and one who had a great breadth of interests." He was a worker and builder in Pittsburg Branch, giving time and means to the support of the cause he loved.

Missionary Spirit in Kansas City Stake

Kansas City Stake is acquainted with missionary zeal. During 1932, there were one hundred and eleven baptisms in that territory, thirteen being performed in the month of December. This speaks well of the work of the local ministry.

Elder J. Charles May, missionary in the stake, has, since June, given special attention to the Bennington Heights, Gladstone, and North East Churches, holding services at each place, and visiting the homes of several hundred members and their friends.

Good Tidings From Detroit

Nineteen hundred and forty-five members compose the branch at Detroit, Michigan, according to the statistical report given to the local conference the night of January 10. This number is divided into the following congregations: First Church, East Side, River Rouge, Roseville, and Wyandotte. During 1932 baptisms in the branch increased approximately fifty-one per cent, numbering eighty-three.

Finances of the branch, in charge of a board of stewards, have been conserved and consolidated. Though Detroit is a city in which the economic depression has been acutely felt, total receipts for the past year amounted to $8,917.19, and the net worth of the branch is $45,487.59.

The Depression: Its Cause and Cure

Old-fashioned Religion and Morality Seen as Basic Factors in World Conditions Today

By Charles Hannah

WE CAN only judge this condition by looking back upon the days of forty to fifty years ago when the people of the world were blessed because of their devotion and attention to the mandates of God. In almost every household that professed religion the family held Bible reading and family prayer, at least, once a day and frequently twice, and, if they did not, they were not counted as Christians. On Sunday the Bible was the chief reading matter of the household; mother and father setting the example by reading and discussing chapters of the book and making it a matter of study.

I can recall the instance of a farmer who made it a household rule to have family worship in the morning. On one particular occasion, the threshers were there and in their anxiety to get out to work in the morning the family prayer was neglected. All the work started was a failure and everything seemed to go wrong until finally, the farmer called a halt, everyone went to the house where a chapter of the Bible was read, prayer offered and then the work at the barn was resumed, and, everything went smoothly. This is but one of the many incidents which are brought to mind.

A reverence for the Word of God and the family altar holds the family together so that when the gospel is presented it falls on fertile ground and produces men and women that are hard to equal. The children emulate the example of the parents which is always before them when their minds are young and easily impressed and this impression remains with them. So that, when they neglect the teaching of their youth they feel condemned and, in nine cases out of ten, their early teachings of—"Take time to be holy, think oft of thy Lord," returns and guides them when, in later life, they are faced by trials and perplexities. How this harmonizes with the prophet's utterance—"Cry over your flocks and herds and your families and at all times let your heart be drawn out to God in prayer."

When sons and daughters went away from home they carried with them the Bible, the counsel of their parents to put their trust in God, read His Word, and never forget their daily prayers; remembering that mother and father at home were ever upholding them at the family altar. We can recall easily the type of men and women these homes produced and are led to compare them with the products of the modern home. How many homes of today have family reading and prayer? When religion is mentioned in the modern home it meets with indifference and possibly some one of the family will say that the ministers are paid to go to college so that they can interpret the Scriptures. Or, that religion is a subject that causes ill feelings and that, anyway, the churches are full of hypocrites who don't live any better than they themselves. The result is that the sons of these families are sent to university, not with the idea of learning to benefit humanity, but that they may obtain a degree and become a prominent professor. When the grandfathers sent the fathers of these boys to university they instilled into them that God should come first. Alas, many of our college students of today are agnostics.

Let me cite an experience that came to my notice. While on my holidays two years in succession I was privileged to stay in an old-fashioned Latter Day Saint home. The family was a large one and they had a large, well-stocked farm. Before we retired each night the hired help and all the family gathered, a Bible chapter was read and prayer offered. In the morning the same thing occurred, the head of the family committing the family and all their interests to the Lord's care. Upon asking the brother, who was visiting there with me, if this was the custom, I was told that he had been in that home for weeks at a time for the last thirty years and it was always the same, just as I had witnessed. What was the result?—There was no snapping or short answers, no flurry nor fuss and even the animals seemed to partake of the benign influence that pervaded the place. As the brother said, "Everything is in harmony because these Saints take time to be holy and think of and talk with their Lord." On Sunday and whenever church services were held, not one or two, but the whole family was present. That home is the nearest to Zion I have ever seen.

Compare the home described above with the modern home—no Bible reading, no family prayer, no blessing on the food, no talk of God, no church paper, no particular interest in church affairs unless attendance if some speaker from another branch is preaching. Too many of our modern homes have Sunday papers, popular magazines and the whole

A Faith for the Modern Age

By A. H. DuRose

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

To the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews this faith of which he spoke was not some indefinite, intangible thing; it was an inward certainty stronger than any outward proof, of things beyond the reach of the senses. It was an assurance whereby he lay hold of things yet in the future, predicated upon a knowledge of the past.

He was evidently endeavoring to encourage his readers by the thought that the heroes and prophets, the noble lives of the past, were but the vanguard of their own army, and that the fight had still to be fought by faith. He seemed to emphasize the fact that the promises given to Israel of old were reaching fulfillment, and that the old community and the new were linked together by this faith which was once delivered to the saints.

The things of God are not discerned by the physical senses alone. There come experiences in the lives of men that no possible combination of the five senses can account for and yet we know we have had the experience, just as surely as we know any of the physical happenings of our lives. Every real Latter Day Saint has experienced contact with the Divine, has known within his own soul that his spirit has been in communion with the Spirit of God. And yet the physical senses did not record it. We know it but we can not prove it, we have evidence of things not seen.

Men of science are becoming convinced that there is something beyond the reach of their measuring instruments; in fact many of them are ready to admit that the most potent powers of the universe are the unseen, uncalibrated. Quotations from two present-day scientists, leaders in their field will suffice for the occasion. Robert A. Millikan, physicist, says, "The assumption that our feeble finite minds understand completely the basis of the physical universe is the sort of blunder that has been made over and over again in all domains of thought." Arthur S. Eddington, astronomer, says, "I think that those who would take cognizance of nothing but the measurements of the scientific world made by our sense organs are shirking one of the most immediate facts of experience, namely, that consciousness is not wholly nor even primarily a device for receiving sense impressions."

The prime moving factor in the world is faith, faith in the ultimate triumph of good, of right. If this confidence in the ultimate triumph of right were destroyed, the comparative harmony of our existence would be turned into chaos, every man for himself. Civilization, such as we have, would decay, and the statement made by Robert Blatchford in his book, God and My Neighbor, "Nature is red in beak and claw," would be literally true of mankind.

But something within the consciousness of man gives us the assurance that the Ultimate Reality behind this great universe is beneficent, and that the course of human progress is being more or less closely directed by a power interested in bringing man to perfection, that however black the outlook may be now, when error seems to prosper on every hand, right will come out victorious in the end.

Careless seems the great avenger,
History's pages but record,
One death grapple in the darkness,
'Twixt false systems and the word.
Truth for ever on the scaffold,
Wrong for ever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow

All the strength and force of man comes from his faith in things unseen. He who believes is strong, he who doubts is weak. And there is nothing miraculous about this; it is not necessary for God to strengthen the believer—he is already strong, and his belief makes him so. Neither would God take away strength from the doubter, his doubt has already done that. They are just logical effects of the cause, faith, belief, is upbuilding, constructive, while doubt is destructive, undermining.

Affirmative belief in the powers of righteousness is the background of strong convictions which in turn result in great actions.

Another quotation from a present-day scientist, this time a biologist, Edwin Conklin. "No one can furnish scientific proof of the existence and nature of God, but atheism leads to fatalism and despair, while theism leads to faith, hope and love. By their fruits ye shall know them."

Faith, then, is not blind credulity, it is not believing in something which you know is not true, rather it is the holding of reasonable convictions in matters upon which immediate proof is not available. These convictions are often based upon the thought, that belief will explain the phenomena in the case, while denial will not. This method of reasoning is not unscientific.

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Chapter 3.—"My Father Is Rich"

NO MATTER how busy the week, Sunday always comes, and for some people in Independence, it is the busiest day of all. So it was for Polly.

Brad was what he sometimes laughingly named an Excuse-Me member of the church. "It's always please excuse me when it comes to taking a Sunday school class, or leading a boys' chorus, or turning scoutmaster. Why, Polly, you're doing enough church work for a family of five, and there's a limit to all things. The church simply can't expect everything of the Nelsons. Besides, dear, I have my business to look after."

Polly was not satisfied with this reasoning, but she was thankful that he was a good loyal member in a financial sense—he paid tithing regularly and often donated really more than their limited finances could afford, to the needs of the church; that he was friendly with everyone; that he went to church frequently, and that he was willing and happy to welcome Saints to his home on all occasions. And if the warmth of the church people's liking was less for him than it was for her, Polly was sure it was because they did not know him so well. Brad was really a fine fellow.

On Sunday morning Polly arose earlier than any other day in the week. There were so many things to be done before going to Sunday school, and Sunday school was for her the big event in the day. Of course, she stayed to church at least once during the day. She sometimes went to the general prayer meeting in the afternoon. Often there was committee work scheduled for Sunday. Chorus work, especially in the wintertime, occupied her from four until six o'clock. But Sunday school—well, her dozen junior girls meant much to Polly, and she seldom missed meeting them at nine-thirty.

Polly was used to being told by the superintendent that as a teacher she was a "jewel" and a "prize." She always was on time, and only serious illness, death, or something else most unusual kept her away from class. If the Nelsons had company, they either stayed home with Brad or went to Sunday school with Polly, what they did depending on their own inclinations.

On this particular morning Polly shivered as she slipped out of bed and wrapped her kimono about her. Already in Carrol's room, she had heard a muffled coo or two. She wanted to get him downstairs without disturbing Brad if it was possible.

Tiptoeing into the tiny room, very trim and bright with its Mother Goose wallpaper, blue window hangings, and ivory-colored woodwork and furniture, she found her young son preparing to announce his awakening by clapping "Remus," his red rubber rabbit, against the side of his crib. Two blue eyes smiled up at her, and two chubby arms still entangled with bedclothes were upraised.

Quickly wrapping him in a heavy, woolly blanket, Polly kissed the pink forehead and crept downstairs. There she propped him still carefully wrapped, in the window seat, and went to the basement. Brad always banked the fire so that only a shake or two brought the coals to life, and soon the rooms would be warm.

Ascending to the kitchen, the young woman closed the door into the rest of the house, so as not to disturb Brad—he would get up later to take care of the baby while she was gone to Sunday school. And then before giving her entire attention to Carrol, she put on the roast for dinner. It had to cook at least three hours.

Polly always prepared more than her family would need for dinner on Sunday, because they frequently had company. It was quite likely that there would be some one at Sunday school or church with whom she wanted to discuss some work, or just visit, or some one might arrive in town and call them up at the last moment.

But although she was always ready to entertain company, Polly planned to have a dinner of thrift and convenience. Like other housewives in Independence, she was giving a thought to her weekly sacrifice offering, and was delighted in the extra nickels, dimes, and sometimes quarters which practices of economy enabled her to slip into that envelope. She knew that in the envelope she had turned into the group leader yesterday, there had been exactly one dollar. That dollar of sacrifice meant that the little house dress she had seen in the

Fashion window would not be hers; she would buy material and make one, if she got time.

First it was a bath and breakfast for Carrol, then she started peeling the potatoes which she planned to brown with the roast.

THEN came two telephone calls. In the first, a Girl Scout wanted to know if any of their late dahlias were left. The Scouts who decorated the church with baskets of flowers each Sunday morning in spring, summer, and fall, were having difficulty in finding enough for the service this morning. Yes, Polly thought she had a few.

"Is that Joseph Smith memorial service this afternoon or next Sunday afternoon, dear?" Sister Livingston's quaint voice carried well over the telephone.

"This afternoon. This is the anniversary, isn't it?" Polly meditated into the instrument. "Yes, I'm sure the service is this afternoon. It will be at the grave in Mound Grove."

"Are you and Brad going?"

"I think we shall unless something very unexpected happens. Would you like to go with us?"

"Well—if—"

"Of course we'll have room. Do come. We're always glad to have you go along. And I'll speak to Brad as soon as he gets up."

The pies she had baked yesterday looked good enough for a queen to eat, and Polly was glad. At least the dessert was cared for. There was a head of crisp lettuce in the ice box, and soon she had a tuna fish salad, Brad's favorite, under way. Then she set the table for dinner, leaving the toaster on the table in the breakfast nook for Brad if he were hungry when he got up.

The roast was coming along fine, and the house was full of the rich odor of cooking meat. Quickly Polly squeezed orange juice for herself and drank it between trips from worktable to stove and from stove to sink.

Some one knocked at the backdoor. It was the Scout after the dahlias.

"You know where they are," said Polly, handing her a garden knife. "I think I'll let you get them alone this morning. Cut them carefully, will you?"

And then, somehow, all the work was done. She was dressed before Brad came downstairs and began to fuss about with the toaster, his hair exceedingly tousled. He looked like Carrol, or rather, of course, Carrol looked like him.

"Good morning, Sister Nelson," her dozen juniors greeted her. "We saw Louise Williams bring in a basket of your flowers. They are, aren't they—those red ones?"

Before she could nod, they broke out with a dozen questions and stories of happenings during the week:

"You can't guess what happened at school—"

"Aw naw, let me tell her!"

One dark-eyed little girl had brought a rose: "It's the last one on our bush this fall," she shyly informed Polly. "That's the bush Mother planted before she died. Roses were her favorite flowers, and she named me Rose because she liked them so much. I like this rose bush most of all because she planted it." The child's gift was a tiny, dark red bud. Little Rose Benson had been motherless for two years.

"When can we have a party, Sister Nelson?" a wigglesome, little creature demanded.

"Couldn't we have a party this week?" from another. "You know you were too busy for us to have a Halloween party."

"Can you change a nickel?"

"Are we going to have a Thanksgiving basket?"

Then the organ announced the opening of the service. "One Hour With Jesus" and "Lead Me, Savior." The school hushed except for a class of boys a little way off whose teacher had not yet come. Polly's dozen sat close enough to the organ, that they were deeply fascinated by the organist's pedaling. Perhaps that was the big reason they were always so well behaved during the opening worship service.

Brother Amos Terry, the superintendent, spoke briefly, his voice carrying to the three departments assembled in the main room—adults in the gallery; intermediates on the west side of the lower floor, and juniors on the east.

As usual the class period was one vast passing of sound. Because there were so many talking and reciting in the same room, Polly gathered her dozen very closely about her, and began the story. This Sunday they were having something special. They were studying about the late President of the Church, Joseph Smith. The day marked the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. Polly, always a good story-teller, put drama and pathos that the girls could understand into the life of this great man of the church. She made him a living boy, then a young man, then President of the early Reorganization, then a father. "He was our friend, girls," she said. "Hundreds of people loved him and still love him. That's why today we're remembering that it is his birthday."

"Wasn't he rich, too, Sister Nelson?"

"Rich? Yes, Mary, he was very rich, but not with dollars or houses, or cars or things like that. He was rich in good deeds and in the love of the church."

"My father's rich," declared a bob-haired elf.

Elder T. J. Jett

A Biography

By Inez Kinney

YES, I've seen many changes brought about, many important events take place. I have experienced great hardships, and have received many wonderful blessings during my life here in Southeastern Texas." Serenely and modestly spoke Elder T. J. Jett—words which opened as a vista, scenes of action, stirring events, developments, and struggles incident to the growth of a great commonwealth.

Born in a log frame house on a large ranch in Medina Rio, thirteen miles southwest of San Antonio, Texas, his life began at a time and place, the events and influences of which would, of necessity, mold or mar the souls of men. Out of that molding process would emerge men of strength and valor—men who would be unswerving when committed to a cause. Thus was formed the life and character of Thomas Jefferson Jett.

His grandfather, Absolem Kuykendall, came to Texas in an early day and joined the Lyman Wight group, later leaving to unite with the Stranghites at Beaver Island. Dissatisfied there, he went on to Galland's Grove, Iowa, became president of the branch, and married Galland's widow—Drucilla—having for years had the urge to find "the young Joseph." Absolem Kuykendall's son, Andrew, an elder, came to Texas and later sent for Elder D. H. Bays to come out and preach in his house and it was this missionary who helped stir the religious interest of the young lad, Thomas Jett.

His father, William Glen Jett, was born in White County, Tennessee, in 1821 and came to Texas in 1840, obtaining certificates of land grants on the Medina Rio. He was a charter member of the first twelve rangers under Jack Hayes. The first sheriff of Bexar County, Bill Knox, presented him with a rifle which he carried through the Mexican and Civil Wars and which now rests among the relics in the Alamo.

While a member of the Texas Rangers William G. Jett, then in his twenties, once rode into the yard of a ranch home and saw a beautiful young girl getting a pail of water from the creek near the house. He remarked to a companion, "There stands my future wife." Soon afterwards when he came to pay his respects, he gave the girl a piece of poetry, which he had written to her. She cherished this "classic" and when an old woman wrote into her memoirs that she was still in proud possession of the poetry. Her name was Ruth Clarinda Kuykendall.

Her father, Absolem Kuykendall, later moved to the Jett ranch which was then in charge of W. C. Jett, and here the young couple was married, April 22, 1852, and went to housekeeping. The settlers in this region were occasionally subjected to Indiana raids, and depredations by lawless whites, and the young ranger kept a diligent watch over his family and possessions. His wife's mother, Nancy Dean Kuykendall, died in 1853 and the father soon left Texas, finally settling at Galland's Grove, Iowa.

W. G. Jett helped to survey the first road from San Antonio to El Paso. He served through the Mexican War in General Taylor's army being a second lieutenant in Captain Connor's company. He fought through the Civil War, rising successively from the rank of first lieutenant to captain and major. His wife carried on the affairs of the ranch during his absence and in her memoirs tells stirring tales of the hardships, privations, and adventures of this period. After his return from the Civil War, W. G. Jett engaged in the freighting business, but his health giving way, the active work fell to the care of the sons with the help of Mexican laborers.

ON NOVEMBER 25, 1856, of this history-making period, Thomas J. Jett was born at Medina Rio, thirteen miles Southwest of San Antonio, and here he grew to manhood. During his childhood he was privileged to attend school a few months of each year. This school was maintained by the private subscriptions of the parents and the teacher "boarded around." Later, when public schools were provided, Tom was unable to attend. When twelve years of age he began regular work with the freighting crews, directed by his father, who was at this time too frail to engage in hard labor.

The amazing progress made in transportation since that time, 1866, is apparent from the description of freighting operations as carried on by these pioneer companies.

Wagons drawn by ox teams were used, the freight consisting of corn, cotton, wool, and other products, carried on the down trip to the coast, while lumber, groceries, hardware, and general merchandise was brought on the return trip.

Three yokes (six oxen) were used to the wagon and there were four, five, or more wagons, of six thousand pounds capacity. A charge of two dollars per one hundred pounds was usual for freighting. The first freighting was done between San Antonio and Indianola, or Victoria, on the coast—originally called Powder Horn from the shape of the land extending out into the bay. This port was later washed away by a tidal wave. Three days and nights the water was driven by the gale over the point, and the whole settlement was washed away.

Freighting was later carried on between San Antonio and Brownsville, and Laredo on the Rio Grande. Young Tom early learned the Spanish language from the Mexican laborers, and found this a great advantage in later years when he entered the missionary work among the Mexican people.

Of this early freighting to Victoria, Elder Jett tells an interesting episode, which might easily have had a more serious ending:

The four wagons were loaded with freight while at the rear were driven extra or loose oxen for relay purposes. A young man by the name of Gale, who was the brother-in-law of the Jett boys, rode a pony and drove these oxen behind the last wagon—which was driven by a brother of Tom. Somewhere along the trail young Gale cracked his whip and rode his pony with a sudden rush past the hind wagon. This frightened the six-unit ox team which stampeded, running out past the next team which in turn stampeded, and so on down the line of teams. Soon twenty-four oxen, hitched to the heavily loaded wagons were lumbering madly along—scattering corn, wool, and cotton over the landscape—followed by the loose oxen and the badly frightened young rider. Most of the drivers jumped from their wagons and they also came pounding along behind, but young Tom on the head wagon, stuck to his post, finally getting down on the tongue and endeavoring to quiet his frightened charges. The first team to stampede soon landed in a narrow ravine, wedged the wagon fast, and stopped. The other teams eventually tired, running with the heavy loaded wagons and were headed off by the rider and drivers and brought to a stop. By his skill in handling his animals, Tom soon halted his team and small damage was done. However, the young lad had courageously placed himself in a most precarious position and might have been shaken from his perch and trampled to death. After the work of "restoration" was completed, the caravan resumed its interrupted journey. It is a safe guess that young Gale never again repeated the stunt that so startled the rear team.

ELDER JETT records that the winter of 1866 was very cold, that there was no pasture for the stock, and one thousand head died, that the poor creatures would "bog down" and of course, die when efforts to release them failed. These were stern times for the young Texan, but he grew strong in spirit through adversity, and failure was never admitted. About this time, the McCrae family moved up on the Medina, on the "Old Thompson place," and from then on, life held a vastly greater interest for young Tom, for Sarah Eliza, then a girl of fourteen years, soon found a place in his heart which she has held throughout all the eventful years since.

Her father, Robert W. McCrae was born near Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in 1831, and died in Atascosa County, Texas, 1885. His wife, Martha Rosanna Noble, was born in Claiborn Parish, Louisiana in 1840 and died in 1914 at Houston, Texas. The young people came to Texas with their parents and settled in Atascosa County where they were married in 1856. A fine group of children were born to them of which Sarah Eliza was the eldest. During this strenuous period when each member of the family had a party in the responsibility and work of maintenance, Sarah Eliza had her full share. Being religiously inclined, she found time, even during the very busy days on the ranch, to read the Bible, and the young head was often filled with perplexities and wonderment. Trained in the Methodist faith, she wished to be true to it, but even in her childish gropings could not make the Methodist creed and the New Testament scriptures harmonize—especially on the subjects of baptism, of gifts of the gospel, etc. Speaking of these apparent conflicts to her mother once, she stoutly declared that if she ever found a church which taught these things she would join it. Her mother, being a very conscientious and careful one, worried over the peculiar ideas of Sarah Eliza, but probably felt sure she would never find such a church.

AT THIS time the McRae and Lyons families were quite intimate. Doctor Lyons was a prominent physician and was for many years mayor of San Antonio. A beautiful friendship grew up between Mrs. McRae and Mrs. Lyons which remained steadfast until the death of the latter—in spite of the fact that Mrs. Lyons was a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. It is interesting to note the fact that Mrs. Lyons was a sister of Marietta Walker who was president of Moreland College in San Antonio for a number of years. After the death of her sister, Marietta Walker adopted the daughter, Lucy Lyons—returning later to her home in Iowa. Many still remember Marietta Walker in San Antonio. Her keen intellect and kindly personality had their refining influence on the community and she is remembered with respect and honor today. Mrs. Lyons was very beautiful and in her youth was called the belle of San Antonio. Doctor Lyons continued his residence in San Antonio until his death in 1880.

When still a child, Sarah Eliza frankly informed her family that she did not like her name, so her mother began calling her "Lida," assuring her daughter that her namesake, Mrs. Lyons, was the "finest and most beautiful woman in the whole world," and she could be proud to be called by her name. Sister Jett confesses that while she loved and respected Mrs. Lyons, she didn't like the name of "Lida" any better than her own.

After the McRae family moved up to the "Old Thompson Place" on the Medina Rio, the girl, Sarah Eliza, began to hear of a peculiar doctrine through Tom's Grandfather Kuykendall, and some elders of the Latter Day Saint Church. The first Latter Day Saint sermon she heard was preached by Heman C. Smith. Later she heard Elder Kuykendall, her future husband's uncle, Elder Bays, and others. She also attended a conference at Medina.

Her mother became greatly concerned about the evident interest the young girl was taking in the belief of these peculiar people and in this she was staunchly upheld by her grandfather, the Reverend Smith, who was one of the early pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church in San Antonio. But the young girl went her way, weighing evidence, searching scripture, and seeking spiritual light. One day when quite convinced of the truth, yet hesitating on her mother's account, she testified that a voice said to her: "You remember what you told your mother." She had always remembered what she had said to her mother, so now her hesitancy was replaced by a determination to obey, and she was baptized by Elder Johnie Currie, October 18, 1888, in a river near San Antonio. Sister Jett tells the story of how her mother, nearly frantic over the "terrible" step her daughter had taken, would go to the meetings in order to hear something "with which to accuse" the preacher. In her anxiety to attend a meeting one Sunday, she swam her pony across a swollen stream and was nearly drowned. But as she listened to the message of those servants of God she gradually became convinced of the truth and became one of the most valiant and faithful members of the church. She gave of her time and means unstintingly to advance the work of the kingdom, and died strongly in the faith in 1914.

SARAH ELIZA met the young Thomas Jett when she was fourteen years old and he seventeen. They were mutually attracted at the first meeting, and shortly began "keeping company"—each being the first and only sweetheart of the other. They were married four years later by the Reverend J. W. DeVilbis. The "Infair" wedding was attended by one hundred guests, the celebration continuing throughout the day when a great feast was spread. A recent issue of the San Antonio Light gives an interesting account of the wedding and a picture of the house, which was considered unusually fine for that time. The Reverend DeVilbis preached the first protestant sermon delivered in San Antonio and was for forty years pastor of Travis Park Methodist Episcopal Church in San Antonio. His picture and the above items, are still to be seen in one of the stained glass memorial windows in that fine old church.

The young couple remained at the McRae home for a time, then established a home at the Arroyony Media creek, on a ranch of three or four hundred acres. The first house was log, and the first child was born here. The young ranchers later moved to Oak Island settlement, built a home and here several of their eleven children were born.

Elder Jett continued freighting, and at the age of twenty-two was making regular trips between San Antonio and Fort McIntosh on the Rio Grande, and also to Fort Ewell on Nueces Rio, working under government contracts. In San Antonio at that time there was a warehouse on top of the building, now the famous old Alamo—the business being under the management of Hugo and Smeltzer—merchants. Corn and other provisions were freighted to the forts and merchandise brought up for these merchants.

On one of these trips a series of incidents occurred which tested the strength and stamina of the young freighter. The native Texan is a great lover of horses and young Jett was no exception. He had acquired a beautiful pony and had in time secured saddle, bridal, spurs, (and a six shooter)—all worthy of so fine a mount. After his marriage he had given the pony to his wife, possibly to prove his devotion to her—but continued to use the animal on the freighting trips, since a rider was needed to bring up the loose oxen and also to care for the whole herd when turned out to graze. On this particular trip, when the "train" drew near Tanacias, about thirty miles from Loredo, a poor, ragged Mexican sheep herder approached the freighters, begging for a ride to Loredo. His sandals were worn out and his feet were bleeding. He was in such a pitiable state that the kind young freighter permitted him to ride on one of the wagons. The weather being hot and dry it was decided to drive during the cool of the night in order to get to the Rio Grande—and water—by morning. The teams were, accordingly, driven all night, plodding loyally along, reaching Fort McIntosh by morning. After being refreshed by water and rest, the oxen were driven about three miles out from Loredo to graze. The men took turns looking after the herd and the strange Mexican was given his turn with the rest. He rode the prize pony and all went well, until a relief rider was sent out, when it was discovered that the hombre malo had absconded with the pony and of course, all the valuable equipment—including the spurs, whip, and six shooter. Vamos! Caballito y todo! Needless to note that neither Mexican nor pony was ever seen again.

Wise Men, Fools---or Inspired?

By I. A. Smith

The American public, last week, were given the benefit of the observations and conclusions of a modern scientist. Mr. Walter Russell, president of the Society of Arts and Sciences, delivered an address before a meeting of that organization on December 30, 1932. The Associated Press account is found in the Kansas City Star of the 31st of December, 1932, from which we quote:

In the discoveries of Einstein, Eddington, Jeans and others about the puzzling nature of space, Walter Russell, president of the Society of Arts and Sciences, says that science is likely to find a new conception of God and more tangible evidence of His existence.

The universal nature of light is one of the keys to this new puzzle. Light, according to tests with scientific instruments, is not merely what human eyes see, but essentially the same radiation as heat, X-rays, radio waves and all other forms of radiation. Moreover, light also is energy. And solid matter is also a form of "light" when the word is used in its broader meaning of radiation.

Getting down to the ultimate particles which form matter, which seem to constitute light and which carry energy, scientists find them all acting suspiciously like some of the processes of human thought.

"The question arises," says Russell, "is there any line of demarcation between a spiritual and a physical universe, and have we been calling the invisible universe spiritual just because we could not see it?

"We have begun to see something tangible and inspiring beyond place, mass and dimension. There must be a limitless source of static energy somewhere back of all dynamic expression.

"If science finds itself justified in altering the traditional concepts of our Newtons, Kepplers and Maxwells in regard to energy, space and motion, the first of the necessary steps will have been taken toward explaining God.

"Tomorrow physics undoubtedly will divorce energy from matter and give it to space. Perhaps space is all there is; all energy, all intelligence and all concept. It is to space that science should look for a comprehensive God.

"Einstein forecast this far-reaching change of base from matter to space when he said that the next great step in science would be solution of space.

" 'It appears,' he says, 'that space will have to be regarded as a primary thing with matter only derived from it, so to speak, as a secondary result. Space now is turning around and eating up matter.'

"What we call the spiritual universe may prove to be the static source in space of electric energy. If Einstein's prophecy is fulfilled it would cause a far greater upheaval in science than Copernicus caused to the concept of Ptolemy."

[Copernicus showed that the planets revolve around the sun, instead of the earth being the center of the universe as Ptolemy believed.]

"Basic conclusions of today would be either reversed or discarded entirely, for if energy belongs to space as the new cosmogony suggests, light would belong to space as Jesus inferred. When energy is found to belong to space, light will be understood to be an emergence from space, and God will have been found to be what Jesus said He was—light.

"As we study His (Jesus') teachings from the point of view of science, we become convinced that He understood light, energy, motion and space and knew what filled space. Jesus taught that life is eternal; that there is no death. Science may soon prove this to be literally true, and that the body, like all other material phenomena, merely registers the intensity of the thinking of a supreme intelligence.

"If science proves this it will give meaning to the words of Sir James Jeans that 'matter may eventually prove to be pure thought.'

"Jesus did not teach that bodies are eternal, but that life is eternal. If the church would realize this, and science prove it, the present dismal idea of death would end, for it would then be understood that our bodies are merely borrowed from the planet, for light to flow through for a time, and must be returned to it as 'dust to dust.' "

Does this not have a familiar sound, and where have we seen something like it? Memory comes to our rescue and we reach for our Doctrine and Covenants where, in Section 85, we find the following language:

"Wherefore I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you, my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise, which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John.

"This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, his Son; he that ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

"And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through Him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things."—Paragraphs 1 to 3.

In all candor, let us consider the significance of Professor Russell's statement in connection with the foregoing quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants.

The learned scientist spoke on December 30, 1932; Joseph Smith wrote just one hundred years and three days earlier.

It is fair to assume that Mr. Russell is a very learned man, a very scientific gentleman. He undoubtedly pretends to be such or he would not presume to make such remarkable statements.

Certainly we doubt that anybody will arise and question Mr. Russell's learning and knowledge, and

Prayer and Testimony

A Last Word of Testimony

By Henry C. Smith

(This testimony was written before the death of the author, at the age of 95, on January 6, 1933.—Editors.)

I was born June 4, 1837, at Vermillion, Erie County, Ohio. I have been interested in the cause of my Master, Jesus Christ, since I was thirteen years old. I united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on March 29, 1866, being baptized by J. W. Gillen.

I was ordained an elder under the hands of E. C. Briggs, David H. Smith, and Henry A. Stebbins, August 13, 1868, and from that time to the present, have been engaged in church work as the supreme object of my life. Because of poor health I have had to resign important places of trust, and refuse positions of honor in the church; yet I have served under the appointment of the General Conference, the First Presidency, and members of the Twelve, as circumstances would permit.

I have witnessed many wonderful acts of Providence during my ministrations, such as healing of the sick, mending of broken bones, restoration to life of those whose eyes were set in death, the blind restored to sight, and devils cast out.

I have seen the enemy (Satan) face to face, and have heard him talk, have seen him walk, have noticed his gestures, and he has expressed to me his plan of procedure in doing his work. I do hereby testify that he is a personal being, and capable of doing physical injury to those who oppose him, as I have experienced several times.

I have seen and have been visited by four angels at different times, and have been greatly comforted by their ministrations. I have heard the voice of God several times, speaking words of comfort and cheer, and have received a communication from a friend in Paradise (as I believe) stating his feelings of regret because he had not done more for the Master while on earth. At three different times I have been surrounded by a heavenly light, and have been greatly comforted by what I saw and heard during its presence.

My life has been miraculously prolonged since 1874, and a goodly portion of youthful vigor enjoyed. I have been threatened with violence many times, but the Lord has always stood by me, and no violence has ever been felt by visible forces, but by invisible forces, several times.

At the present time (July, 1926) I wish to state that during my experience of sixty years in this church, I have learned that it is of divine appointment; that the Bible (Inspired Translation), Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants are divinely appointed to be the three standard books of the church; that God is true and faithful in fulfilling his promises, and a helper in every time of need.

Because of the evidence which I have received, I can testify that our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and that He represents the fullness of the Godhead bodily (Colossians 2: 9). In Isaiah 9: 6 he is also mentioned as the everlasting Father, and note, also, his plain statement in the Book of Mormon, Ether 1: 77, "Behold, I am Jesus Christ. I am the Father and the Son."

These facts point us to Jesus Christ as the only God with whom we have to deal, and this knowledge may be obtained by him by personal revelation as shown in Luke 10: 23, Inspired Translation, and that is a most glorious attainment. Let us ascribe to him all glory, all honor, all might, and dominion.

I have learned that the dwelling place of His Father is in the midst of his works, which would be in the center of universal gravitation, and Jesus Christ is his only Begotton Son, to whom he has given "all power in heaven and in earth." The Son, then, is our Father, and should be worshiped as such.

These are personal findings, and I am responsible for them before God.

Encouraging Response to Missionary Meetings

By G. H. Wixom

I closed a series of meetings at Marfa, Texas, December 4. A fine interest has been developed there. I baptized three adults on the closing day and blessed three babies. Collected ten dollars tithing and two dollars and fifty cents oblation, and sent an order to the Herald Office for Saints' Herald, books, etc., to the amount of more than twenty dollars.

The pastor of the Christian Church, Reverend McKessick, gave us the use of the font in his church and even warmed the water for us. I made a talk in the church, expressing our appreciation for this courtesy and explained some of our views as a church in relation to other churches, and Reverend McKessick replied in a very friendly manner, assuring our people that it was his desire to cooperate with us in every way possible. He was free to acknowledge that our members were always ready to help him in any way they could. He then offered the closing prayer for us.

I was urged to return to Marfa as soon as possible and to conduct another series and to invite any of our missionaries who might pass that way to stop over and preach for them.

Brother Floyd Gatrost, Box 271, Marfa, has charge of the church school at that place.

Cause to Rejoice

By Carrie Trapp

It made me very happy to read a letter from Sister Roderick May in a recent Herald. Her sweet disposition endeared her to all English Saints when she was here with her husband a number of years ago.

I remember on one occasion Brother and Sister May were staying in our home. My son was then one year old. Sister May remarked: "I can hardly believe you have a baby here. He is so good." The peace and joy we felt while they were here was as if angels were in our midst.

We have cause to rejoice in this great latter-day work. In Gloucester Branch we have witnessed the power of God in the healing of the sick. We have a nice little meeting room now and feel the influence of God's Spirit in our meetings, being blessed with the gift of tongues and prophecy. We rejoice because God is true to his word. He told us of those who had gone out, saying that they were seeking their way back to the church. They are now coming back and rejoicing with us. A week ago a brother called on us who has not been attending our meetings for a number of years. When I opened the door and recognized him, and called him by name, Brother ————, his face lit up with joy. We talked about the gospel until late in the evening, and tears of joy were shed. This brother is earnestly seeking his way back to the truth. He can not forget his early experiences in the church.

We ask the Saints to pray for us in Gloucester, that we may be able to accomplish a work for the Master in this city.

I take this opportunity to express my gratitude for the good things we are continually receiving in the Herald, our wonderful messenger, which comes regularly week by week.

No Cause to Worry

By Mary Hogle

I have been in the church about thirty years, and as I see the working of God's hand with his people and his love and mercy to me, my heart swells with gratitude and thankfulness to him. I want to help his church in any way I can.

I would love to have had the Herald for Christmas presents this year, but there were too many to help. I think from now on, however, that I am going to try to get something every month from our publishing house, Many people have no work so this is a good time for them to read the church paper and books.

As for myself I have a good "job." I cook every day for thirty-two people. I am sixty-seven years old and am up every morning at five o'clock, work all day doing the ordering and looking after things. But without the grace of God, I could do nothing.

I am not discouraged. God is still in his heaven, why should we worry? My prayer is for the church and those whom God has appointed to look after it.

"It Brings Out the Very Best in Me"

By Mrs. William H. Dechow

Some time ago some one asked me, why I was a Latter Day Saint. My answer was: "It brings out the very best in me, and if I could not live as a Latter Day Saint should live, I could not live any religion at all."

To me this is a wonderful work, a wonderful church. It has enabled me to see into the lives of others and to understand them.

During the summer I asked for the prayers of the Ensign family, that God would give me wisdom and knowledge to understand those with whom I came in contact, and I can truthfully say that those prayers were answered.

Pray for me that I may have wisdom to convince others of the necessity of obeying the gospel; that my desire to live the gospel may grow stronger and that I may grow stronger in the faith.

How We May Help

By Sarah L. Cole

I rejoice in the gospel and am not ashamed of it, for it is the power of God unto salvation. I have belonged to this church since 1920, and was privileged to attend one General Conference, that of 1925. At that time I was pleased to meet and visit with our Prophet, Frederick M. Smith and his wife.

As I have read the church papers for twelve years, I want to say that the brotherhood of love and unity seems to prevail throughout the ministry. As a laymember I am not discouraged, but want to do my part to heed the warnings of our Prophet as much as those of his grandfather. He needs our help in many ways. If we are not blessed with much money, there are other ways we can help. We can cheer those at home who may be discouraged and who may not be financially able to subscribe for the Herald. I hope to be financially prepared to send the Herald into three homes during the coming year, for it is encouraging to read the sermons and the wonderful testimonies that appear in it.

I desire your prayers that our God will strengthen me in body and spirit and help me to overcome all obstacles that hinder a better and more humble service in his cause during this year.

Would Teach Children the Faith

By Mrs. Edward E. Melvin

Last summer seemed longer than usual to me, conditions existing which made it impossible for me to attend church each Sunday. I live about sixteen miles from the branch at Ionia, Michigan.

I was baptized twenty-four years ago by Elder J. O. Dutton, and have never regretted the step I took then though many times I have regretted the missteps I have since taken.

I am thankful for my children, and my hope is that I shall be able to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. I want to instill in their souls a deep love for the church, that they will stand firm in the faith and use their God-given talents for the good of the church. If I can accomplish this I shall feel that my life has not been in vain. I love this work. I want to see Zion redeemed.

Some time ago my niece requested the Saints through the Herald to pray for me. I had been in poor health for over two years, but I received great blessings through this request.

Request Prayers

Brother R. Melvin Russell, of Detroit, Michigan, writes that his mother, Mrs. W. H. Russell is critically ill and desires that the Saints remember her in their prayers. For many years she has been a faithful member and a fervent worker, and is worthy the spiritual support of her brothers and sisters.

REDICKVILLE, ONTARIO.

Brother and Sister A. L. Lauber request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their son who had his arm amputated and is not doing well.

MONTE NE, ARKANSAS.

Sister Effie Mae Smith, of Lincoln, Nebraska, seeks the prayers of the church for her mother, Mrs. Susan J. Mecham, Chico, California, Route 3, Box 190, who suffers intensely from a fall five months ago in which her hip was injured. She is helpless and is cared for constantly by her eldest son who is not in good health. Sister Smith asks that Brother Hintz, of Chico, call on and administer to her mother, and invites other Saints of that city to visit her.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, Route 3, Box 190.

Sister Amanda Jane Wiles, eighty-one years old, desires the prayers of the faithful. She had been strong and in good health until about three weeks ago, when she was seized with a severe pain which at times confines her to her bed.

QUESTION TIME

Does the Bible in any instance teach baptism by immersion?

Both by precept and by example the New Testament repeatedly teaches immersion. The language of the New Testament before being translated was written in Greek. Hence the meaning of the Greek words used, when rendered in English, is the real teaching of the text in each instance. The command to be baptized is unequivocally stated in Mark 16: 16; Acts 2: 38; 10: 48; 22: 16, and Matthew 28: 19. In every one of these texts the Greek word for baptize is baptizo, which Greek scholars state means immersion or its equivalent. On this point, Ball's Christian Baptism cites sixteen authorities recognized in colleges and universities of all denominations, and states:

"The whole sixteen declare as scholars learned in the language of the New Testament that baptizo means to immerse, plunge, dip, wash by immersing, sink, submerge, overwhelm, and not one of them ever defines it to mean sprinkle in any case or under any circumstances whatever."—Page 25.

The Emphatic Diaglott, which contains every Greek word parallel with its English equivalent, renders the word by "immerse," "immersed," "immersing," etc., as the form of speech demands. The English word baptize is not a translation of the Greek word, but is the Greek word itself spelled according to the English method of spelling. Its meaning therefore is always properly the equivalent of immerse. However, this word has been used by those who sprinkle as a substitute for baptism to apply to sprinkling, and many therefore call sprinkling baptism. But the fact that any number of people might decide to use the word for a different purpose than that of the New Testament writers, which actually is the case, could not change the meaning of the word as used by the scripture writers or the Lord and his disciples. As used by them, it always meant to immerse.

Pursuant to the meaning of the command, immersion is clearly shown to have been used in New Testament days. This is shown by the texts in Matthew 3: 6, 16; Mark 1: 5, 9; John 3: 23; Acts 8: 38; Romans 6: 4, and Colossians 2: 22. All of them show that the baptism was in the water. Even such leaders as practiced sprinkling admitted that it was not the meaning of the word as used in Scripture. Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley, and others who allowed sprinkling, declared that scriptural baptism was immersion. The Christian Fathers of the first and second centuries, Barnabas, Justin Martyr, and Tertullian, state that the church practiced immersion. The Catacombs still contain the ancient baptisteries where running water was provided for immersions in the early church, the depth of the water being sufficient for that purpose.

When will the "perilous times" predicted in the Bible take place?

Inasmuch as the Scriptures do not specify the times referred to in any definite way that would indicate actual years, it is a matter of conjecture to a great extent. But some specific idea may be possible from the statement of the text that says:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy."—2 Timothy 3: 1, 2.

A careful study of each word in this prediction leads one to conclude that it is apparently being fulfilled in our age as never before. This might cause us to believe that we are living in the last days. But if so, in what part of them is not so certain. We do know that such conditions as here specified are existing on earth today.

What reason have we to think that the thief on the cross had been baptized?

Perhaps the best reason to believe that such may have been the case is the fact that the thief evidently knew Jesus, knew that he was the Lord, that he had a coming kingdom and would himself appear in that day. Unless he had been a baptized believer, it seems hardly probable that he would have been so well informed at that time. From the fact that the believers were baptized, it may be inferred that the thief was a backslider who repented and turned again to Christ as his Savior.

In any event, there is no reason for the argument sometimes made that baptism is not necessary because the thief went to paradise without baptism. The evidence is against any such supposition, though perfect candor suggests the admission that there is no proof to show whether or not he had been previously baptized. The command to be baptized is not annulled by anything that others may or may not have done.

Scientists themselves set up a hypothesis as being explanatory of the phenomena in question and then await subsequent discoveries to either substantiate or destroy their hypothesis.

Jesus said, "Have faith in God." Is it reasonable to have faith in God? or suppose we ask the question another way. Is it reasonable to not have faith in God? Can we look around us and see the order, the unity, and the orderliness of creation and then affirm that it all came by chance, by accident? Is it not much more reasonable to affirm that as the watch proclaims the watchmaker so creation proclaims the Creator?

Edwin Conklin, again says, "If there is no purpose in the universe, then indeed there is no God and no good, but, if there is a plan, if there is a purpose in nature and in human life, then we may feel confident that it is the imperfection in our own mental vision that leads us sometimes to cry, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity."

Again the words of Jesus, "Ye believe in God believe also in me." Why should we believe in him? Is it enough reason to say that he commanded it? Is there a reason that will appeal to the intellect? Note what Robert A. Millikan has to say: Why is it that all the world is still willing to say of Jesus, 'Never man spake like this man'? Is it not because he literally spoke two thousand years ago the words of everlasting life, the words of rich, full, abundant, satisfying, unselfish living, for all times and all places?"

On another occasion Jesus said, "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed ye could say unto this mountain, be removed."

Real faith is intelligent, otherwise it would have no connection with our God, whose glory is intelligence. If it were necessary to remove the mountain, faith would do it. Possibly tools suited to the job might be necessary, as for instance a steam shovel. But do you say that this method would be leaving faith out of the question. Not so: You might entirely surround the mountain with steam shovels and it would not move. It still needs faith. Faith alive with works. "Faith without works is dead being alone."

There is need for faith today—for a vital, dynamic faith in God—a faith which recognizes that the power which seems to control the physical universe is also a spiritual intelligence—a faith which sees behind the harmony of nature something more than blind force and a fortuitous concourse of circumstances—a faith which impels us, with the knowledge that we are "workers together with God."

Do we need faith in the church? We believe it to be the kingdom of God reestablished in these last days. We point to its background of prophecy of the manner, time and place of its organization, to its type of organization, its officers, doctrine, teachings, as in harmony with the scriptures. We say the gifts of the gospel, healing, tongues, revelation, etc., are enjoyed among us today as in ancient times. Are these things alone sufficient? Can these things alone constitute the kingdom of God? However perfect and complete might be the organization it could not be the kingdom of God unless it was constructed of kingdom-building material, men and women who are good citizens because they obey its laws, exercise its franchise and pay its taxes (tithes). Yes, we need faith in the church, in its officers, its program and its task. Faith that will vitalize us into being good members in every sense of the word.

We need faith in ourselves. Faith that we are the children of God, having been created a little lower than the angels. And that God, having delegated to us the task of giving to the world a practical demonstration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in action, we must have faith in our ability to accomplish the task with his aid. We must have faith in our partners in the task, in our fellow men, in fact a real vitalizing faith in God, is not possible without faith in mankind. We can not have a proper attitude toward Christ unless our attitude toward our fellows is right. "If thou bring thy gift to the altar and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee—go and be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift."

We need faith in our destiny, an assurance that God who gave to man the ability to reason, thus making man alone of all the creation of his hands like unto himself, did not do so merely to snuff out that spark of divine intelligence after a few short years. This is another one of those things which can not be proved. But it is also one of the things which it is more reasonable to affirm than to deny. Faith in the immortality of the soul is affirmative, constructive, progressive, while denial would destroy most if not all of the incentive to progress. Our end then is not oblivion in some forgotten grave, but we can with the poet say:

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal,
'Dust thou art to dust returnest,'
Was not spoken of the soul."

And lastly we should have faith in that God-given power of constructive progressive thought, that with the exercise of that power to the welfare of mankind, to the upbuilding of the church, and to the salvation of society we may even become the sons of God.

THE THEFT of the pony was keenly felt by the young man—not more for the financial, than for the personal loss, and for the certainty of sorrow it would cause his young wife. On the return trip when the freighting train had reached the Nueces Rio, it was found that the stream was so swollen by flood conditions farther up state, that the teams would not be able to cross. Camp was made accordingly, and the oxen turned out to graze. The night was spent without mishap and early the next morning Tom went down to the river hoping to find that the water had fallen enough to permit the crossing. He found the river still too high and started back to the camp when a noise of shouting and shooting broke the morning stillness. He was too wise to rush to the village nearby, to learn the cause of the tumult, and being a native Texan probably suspected the cause, so went quietly back to the camp. He later learned that twenty to twenty-five outlaws, full of depravity and bad liquor had suddenly swooped down on the place and "shot up the town." After this playful gesture, the outlaws had rushed off to another settlement to repeat the performance. That night an old Mexican, a resident of the village, made his way down to the freighter's camp and urged Tom to cross the river and get away as soon as possible for, he said, the outlaws were drinking and carousing and would surely come back for a "return engagement." If the freighting crew were still there, they would undoubtedly drive off the stock and appropriate the merchandise. Knowing the old Mexican, who claimed to be one hundred years old, and having confidence in his integrity, Tom decided to attempt the river in the morning, at all hazards.

On investigating the next morning, he found the river "still running" so went to work to devise means of getting the freight across without a wetting in the flooded Nueces. The freight on this trip being frijoles (Mexican beans) it was essential to keep it dry. So by the help of the crew, Tom set to work to build "pens" (espanchides) high up on a frame, so that even though the wagon were submerged, the beans piled, in sacks, up on the "pens" would remain dry.

It was a blistering hot day and when the device was finished, the work of carrying and loading the frijoles on the "pens" began. Before the loading was finished, shoulders were raw from the continued wear of the heavy bean sacks on perspiring flesh. When the wagon was ready with its first load, the three yokes of oxen were hitched and the moment had come to attempt the raging river. The tense, but subdued excitement; the keen concern; the urge to be away before the return of the raiding bandits, can all be sensed. Fortunately the deep, swift-running part of the stream was not wide, so the faithful oxen, after patient and careful urging, started forward, and when the first team reached the swimming depth the back teams pulled the load, and by the time the back teams were swimming the head team had reached shallow water and took the load. Imagine the sighs of relief when the staunch old oxen drew the load safely upon the firm ground.

Five such crossings were made, and the beans were "over the river" and not one wet. When the freight was safely across, the wagon beds were tied to the axle with ropes and floated over—the box with the "pens" having been floated back after each load and placed on another set of running gear.

family is away on a pleasure jaunt if Sunday is a pleasant day. The children play ball, father plays golf, and the Sabbath day is a real holiday on which the pleasures, for which there is not time during the week, may be indulged in. The old cry that Sunday is the only day on which we have time for a picnic is rather reversed because the masses have time now to take exercises looking for work. Israel of old cried to the Lord for meat which God said was not good for them, but, to satisfy their pleadings, He gave them plenty.

The people who said, "We have no time but Sunday for pleasure," are finding plenty of time now. Would it not be better to follow the good old way, "Love God and keep His commandments"? Jesus said, "My peace I give unto you." But, following the ways of the world does not bring peace and they find themselves worse off in 1932 than ever before. Men have been going their own paths for years and we see the results. Surely it is high time to call a halt and try God's way. Let us build anew our family altars.

We recall with pride the last fifteen or twenty years when there was work for everyone and money was easy to get; but did prosperity make us better Christians? did we feel after God? Most all will confess that it did not. Then when the distressing times come could God help us or must we suffer with the world? If we were like the world only in our belief, then we should not grumble if we have to suffer with them. Jesus said, "Ye shall be in the world but not of the world," and "They will think it strange that you do not run with them in the same riotous pleasure."

Then, if we have had a long trial with the world and it has not brought us near to God, and, if reverses will draw us closer, then let us thank God for the reverses. Surely none will want to go to the prison house as did the disobedient in the days of Noah. "Come out of her, O ye, my people, that ye be not partakers of her evil deeds." If we have partaken of her pleasure we must expect to share her judgments. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 105: 9 and learn what is coming on the world.) Surely our time is short. Why not start now, and find the good old way?

in making the statements referred to in the newspaper article, he doubtless spoke from what may be properly termed his profundity of experience and learning.

And thus the following reflections naturally arise in our mind:

If Walter Russell is a wise man, then Joseph Smith was either a wise man or was the medium through whom wisdom flowed by the power of inspiration. If the latter, it is fair to assume, according to Russell's own statements, that the source of the inspiration was God himself.

However, if anything may be predicated on the claims of the world, generally, Joseph Smith was unlearned—in the eyes of the world a fool. Hence, from such admission, in the light of Russell's pronouncement, he, Joseph Smith must have been inspired—a prophet.

If Joseph Smith was a fool, (which we do not admit,) his utterances in 1827 must have been foolish and simple, as they doubtless seemed to a hostile and bigoted world, and by the same token, Russell is no more and no less than a fool himself; but Russell's folly must be far the greater, for he speaks with all the authority and prestige of science.

What a sad commentary on modern science to be confronted by the indisputable fact that an ignorant boy of twenty-two years of age over one hundred years ago, announced a theory to the world which is just now being discovered by these gentlemen of great learning and wisdom with the advantage of one hundred years of research and discovery!

And at that, in the mind of the writer, of the two pronouncements, that of Joseph Smith is far better.

Eternal life does not necessarily refer to life beyond the grave. Eternal life is God's life. What it is necessary for us to do to live here will guarantee life hereafter, and it is equally true that what will bring us life hereafter will bring us life here now.—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "This Do and Thou Shalt Live," preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

"He has a hundred dolars in the bank! I heard him telling mother yesterday." The other girls looked at her with awe, all save little Rose.

"But he isn't rich," she stoutly denied. "I saw him get mad the other day and kick a poor dog. I don't think a man that kicks poor dogs is rich if he has two hundred dollars in the bank!" A big and brave speech for shy little Rose.

"Now, children," began Polly, smothering a laugh, "there are different kinds of riches. There are jewels and money and beautiful things to wear and see. But the riches Brother Joseph had and the riches we're most interested in are the things that make life happy and lovely—"

The gong sounded for the second time, and Polly found herself hurriedly distributing Sunday school papers before she sat down. It was invariably like that. The time was always gone before she had finished her class. She always felt uncomfortable with that "unfinished" sensation. She wondered if the girls did, too.

Twelve little voices around her joined in the closing song:

"My Father is rich in houses and lands,
He holdeth the wealth of the world in his hands;
Of rubies and diamonds, of silver and gold,
His coffers are full, He has riches untold."

Our Late Sister Jackson's Message

By Leonard S. Rhodes

In the recent death of our Sister Lula Mae Jackson, of Boise, Idaho, hundreds throughout the church will mourn the loss of one who was a helper and friend of the sick and afflicted; for Sister Jackson, I am convinced, was the greatest exampler and teacher of the Word of Wisdom the church has ever had. She could not refuse the pleas of the many sick who sought her for advice and help, given without charge, until the load became so great she broke under the strain and died, a victim of her great desire and love for helping others. I regard her as one of the great women of the church, whom we shall some day place upon our roll of honor.

For eighteen years Sister Jackson had been an invalid, going from doctor to doctor, and from hospital to hospital, seeking relief and health. Always they told her she must submit to an operation, however with but little chance of recovery; and always she replied: "I came here to get well, not to be operated upon!" Finally becoming so weak she could scarcely move or speak, and hope seemed gone, she cried to God from her heart: "Lord, I do not ask to be healed by miracle, but only that you will give me strength enough to make the start, and I will put everything else aside, and put my whole trust in thy Word of Wisdom and thy commandments."

The story of her remarkable recovery is too long to publish here, except to say that she earnestly studied the Word of Wisdom and sought to observe it literally and in every detail. Eventually she was rewarded with vigorous health and abounding vitality; then followed years of study and research until her increasing enthusiasm led her to open an office in one of the large office buildings of Boise. Most of those who there sought her aid were not members of the church, and never suspected that her advice was based largely upon teachings contained in a revelation given through Joseph Smith. Here as a teacher of principles founded in revelation she tested and proved them and her interpretation of them, and became what I believe is the first and only Word of Wisdom practitioner.

Closing her office, she organized the Word of Wisdom Correspondence Club in March, 1929; and a few months later she began editing a little monthly paper called Words of Wisdom. Through these avenues her message and influence began to reach individuals and groups in all parts of the church, pointing the way to physical health, temporal relief, and spiritual wisdom. Words of Wisdom and her personal advice were sent free to all who asked, except for voluntary offerings, which fact caused her load to become too heavy, and brought about her death at the beginning of what I believe would have developed into a great pioneering work.

Sister Jackson was the lonely bearer of a message that to my mind is among the greatest the church has been asked to learn. I deeply regret that, so far as I know, she never attempted to formulate her message in a system of principles. Therefore as her pupil I shall undertake to do so briefly as I interpreted her message:

Sister Jackson interpreted the Word of Wisdom literally. And her interpretation was strongly fortified by her experience in keeping it herself, and by observing its results with her pupils. She was also led to the conclusion that no one could correctly interpret it who did not also live it; for to those only who remember to "keep and do" its sayings is the promise that they shall find wisdom and hidden treasures of knowledge.

Accordingly she taught her pupils to avoid the use of foods known to be "not good for man." Strong drinks, tobacco, tea, coffee, and hot drinks head the list; then follow all canned and artificially preserved foods as not in season; denatured or unnatural foods, such as white flour, white sugar, etc.; and commercialized foods, as the many breakfast foods sold by designing men for a profit.

She taught her pupils to use for their staff of life the products of whole grains, especially wheat and whole wheat flour, instead of meat. The more she observed the effects of meat eating the more sparingly she used it herself, and the more strongly she advised her pupils suffering from chronic affliction to eliminate it entirely from their diet. She believed the food of a country has a natural relation to its climate; and taught her pupils to use only the foods grown in their locality or climate. Foods shipped in from other climates can never be "in the season thereof."

Sister Jackson taught that the Word of Wisdom is a principle given for the health and temporal salvation of the Saints. As such she believed that it takes precedence of stewardships, and is second only to the first principles of the gospel. Jesus is her authority; who came "preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people" (Matthew 9:35). The Word of Wisdom not only points the way to health, but also to temporal salvation in a day when designing men have commercialized our foods for the sole purpose of gaining a profit. Obviously health and release from the clutches of commercial greed are first essentials to a steward from whom shall flow a surplus.

Several years ago while I was convalescing in the pines near Prescott, Arizona, under the stimulus of Sister Jackson's remarkable personality I made the discovery that the law of administration is not merely an isolated manifestation of God's concern for the sick; but that it is the first principle of a coherent system or plan for the physical and temporal salvation of God's people as truly as stewardships, surplus, storehouses and the gathering are parts of a plan for their industrial salvation.

This plan is divided into two complementary divisions: (a) "the Spirit of healing from the Lord in faith," and (b) "the use of that which wisdom directs" (Doctrine and Covenants 119:9). The first includes the laying on of hands, and the second is based primarily upon natural methods, the first of which is revealed in the constitutional law to the church, which declares:

"And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:12.)

To amplify the law that the sick "shall be nourished" the Word of Wisdom was given. Other commandments point the way to sanitation (Doctrine and Covenants 85:38); to the observance of daily and weekly periods of rest and relaxation alternating with periods of physical and mental activity (85:38; 119:7, 8, 9); and to the cultivation of cheerfulness instead of complaining (119:9).

The foregoing provides a broad and excellent foundation upon which to build our own school of medicine; and I believe this should form the basis of practice at our sanitarium, as interpreted by the Church Physician. It is my further conviction that in the management of our sanitarium, and in the working out of our own medical theories, based upon divine law, we should be less concerned about recognition by the leading medical organizations, and more concerned about carrying out the plans and principles which God has revealed. It appears evident that their principles are not identical.

In conclusion I pay tribute to Sister Jackson's faith. Her faith in God was deeper, more vital, and more workable than any I have known among latter-day Saints; and was at once a challenge and an invitation to those of lesser faith. To her the will and commandments of God were not merely his wish; they were the law! When God spoke, it was not as the arbitrary decrees of a king, but the revealment of law as actual as the laws of gravity, of light, or of energy. In commanding us to love one another God did so not only to keep us at peace, but also because love benefits and hate injures those exercised thereby.

Ten days before her death she knew she was going, and although she suffered intensely she never complained. A few months ago she expressed her attitude toward death: "I would not miss the wonderful experience of death," she said. "I want to go through what those before me have gone through, see what they have seen, and learn what they have learned. Think of the wonderful mysteries to be solved that way; think of being with Christ, and of coming back to earth with Him! No, I would not miss the experience of death!" Truly a great, a wise and fearless woman has gone to her reward.

Evolution

By F. J. Earl

God gave us hope one day,
No one can tell us when;
We took the cup
And then looked up;
God gave us men.

God gave us faith one day,
We learned no more to shirk,
But forward prest
To strive, to test:
God gave us work.

God gave us man one day
Two thousand years ago;
Forever He Calls, "Follow me:"
God bids us know.

London, Ontario

Reached Some Goals in 1932; Now Going Forward to Higher Goals

The sixteenth anniversary of the opening of London's church building, November 20 and 21, was very successful. A large crowd was in attendance and much interest was taken in the services. Everyone enjoyed the sermons by Apostle D. T. Williams especially at the Sunday evening service when he talked on the theme, "The Sacrifice of Service." There were many nonmembers present and quite a number from various branches of the district. The music provided by the choir and orchestra was commendable. On the Monday evening several musicians of the city took part in a concert that will be long remembered. The banquet was enjoyed by everyone. All felt that this anniversary was the best since the opening of the church in 1916.

At the annual election of officers and business meeting, December 5, a good many were present to choose the new officers for 1933. One pleasing feature was the splendid reports presented by the various bodies on their activities for the past year. These reports were very comprehensive, indicating the increased interest and development in church work. With an enrollment of three hundred and eighty-eight London Branch contributed in tithes and offerings, etc., to the general church for twelve months $2,476.54. This is an average per member of $6.37. Christmas offering this year from the church school was well over two hundred and fifty dollars. Sister Ward is the offering booster and has worked hard.

Nineteen were baptized during the year and due to the excellent work being done by the junior church school, with Sister Grace Perry as supervisor, sixty-eight per cent of these were from this division.

The church school with Elder Frank Gray as director and an efficient corps of active young people, has more than doubled attendance. A goal was made of two hundred, and this was reached on several occasions at the Sunday morning church school. The average attendance was one hundred sixty-six. The week-night church school was likewise boosted and a goal of one hundred was set.

The Young Men's Class of the church school held a successful banquet recently in the parlors of the church. For special speaker they had His Honor Joseph Wearing, judge of the Middlesex County Court, who gave an interesting talk on "British Law and Justice." There were forty-eight members present and they selected as their teachers for the coming year Bishop J. C. Dent and Doctor D. A. Campbell. W. A. Alford was chosen president and Lincoln Rankin, assistant. William Risler was elected secretary-treasurer.

The officers of London Branch as selected for 1933 are: President, Elder J. E. MacGregor; first counselor, Elder W. A. Hardey; second counselor, Elder J. F. Winegarden; church school director, Elder Frank Gray; secretary, Arlo G. Hodgson; assistant secretary, William Risler; financial secretary, Fred Timbrell; treasurer, Harry Ward; chorister, Fred Heddington; organist, Miss E. Matthews; bishop's solicitor and publicity agent, Elder W. A. Hardey; finance committee, Thomas G. Timbrell, Charles W. Alford, James F. Winegarden, Darrell A. Campbell, W. A. Hardey, and John Vasbinder; auditors, A. Henry, F. Heddington, L. Rankin, and visiting director, William Harrison. The choir has selected for its president, Brother Alfred Henry; the Dramatic Club has chosen Brother J. Vasbinder, and Brother Roy Bicknell was elected president of the orchestra.

A splendid spirit of cooperation and good will is present among the members, and they hope to accomplish a greater work in the interest of the church in the future than we have in the past.

Missionary Meetings in Kansas City Stake

Works Chiefly in Three Groups

Since the middle of last June, I have been laboring as a missionary in Kansas City Stake. My work has been done mainly in Bennington, Gladstone, and Northeast congregations. A series of preaching services has been held in each of these groups, and several hundred visits have been made in homes of both members and nonmembers. I have been given splendid support in all three groups, and the missionary spirit manifested by Saints and friends is commendable.

There have been one hundred and eleven baptisms in the stake during the last year. There were thirteen in December and two more in early January. This represents splendid work of the local ministry in some of the branches.

At present I am engaged in a series of meetings at Blythedale, Missouri, about twenty miles south of Lamoni. Since Elder E. G. Beye and family, formerly of Rhodes, Iowa, moved here, the work has been revived. Ten were baptized here in September, and this was thought an opportune time for a missionary effort. There were thirty-five or forty nonmembers present at our first effort of the series last night. From here I will go to Allendale, Missouri, for a two-weeks' missionary effort.

This is an opportune time to present the latter-day gospel message to the world. Would that we were better able as a church to take care of the many urgent calls for missionary effort which come from every direction.

J. CHARLES MAY.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-Second Streets

A pleasant and helpful spirit characterized the December sacrament service. In the evening Elder G. H. Kirkendall preached on "Loving and Serving."

The women's department gave their Christmas party December 8, thirty-five members being present. The "mystery girls" were revealed, and gifts were exchanged. A good time was enjoyed, and hostesses served ice cream and cake. Sister Georgiana Brush was taken into the organization.

Patriarch J. E. Matthews preached two splendid sermons on Zion December 11.

Prayer meetings are well attended and of high spiritual order.

"Spiritual Gifts" was the theme of a sermon by Elder John R. Grice, December 18, and Elder W. B. Reeves chose for his sermon topic, "Arise and Walk."

The church school gave its Christmas entertainment the evening of December 23. The junior choir wore robes of black and white, and sang several selections. There were also two short plays, recitations, and carols. Santa Claus arrived with gifts and candy for the children.

On Christmas morning Bishop H. E. French preached on "What Think Ye of Christ?" That evening the choir gave a beautiful cantata. This was given by women's voices, Sister Hazel Gribben, Lucinda Madden, Ethel Kirkendall, and Ada Bierly singing principal parts.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Third Church

For this group, December opened with Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith as speaker for two evenings, assisted by District President A. E. Anderton, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, and F. C. Welsh.

The sacrament hour, in charge of Pastor F. C. Welsh and C. H. Foster, proved a spiritual season. And in the afternoon C. H. Foster spoke on "A Living Sacrifice." That night Patriarch J. E. Matthews was the speaker, his theme being "Lineage."

During the day sacrament was taken to the sick and also into homes where the dead lay, and to hospitals.

The local choir is composed of loyal young men and women who add much to the attractiveness of the church services by their contributions.

At the annual business meeting Pastor F. C. Welsh was sustained by a standing vote of confidence. Ted Dougherty was elected president of the new Religio. Brother Robert Bohlen was elected Sunday school superintendent. All other officers were sustained. The watchword for Third Church for the New Year is "The Work Goes Forward."

On December 11 there were three sermons, the morning discourse by Pastor Welsh, the afternoon by Elder E. Dixon, and the evening by Elder Gard Kirkendall.

The epidemic of flu in Columbus seriously affects schools and churches. At one time two hundred and fifty were absent from one school. The sick list at Third Church increases. Numbers of faces have lately been missed from services.

The Religio promises to have big attendance and an active program and organization. Ted Dougherty, deacon, is the president, and Robert Albright is vice president.

Other sermons of the month were delivered by Brother Schafenberg, Pastor Welsh, and C. H. Foster.

Christmas was a busy day. The Sunday school program occupied the forenoon, the children giving the numbers. Ted Dougherty gave a sermonet, and Charles Mathias presented two collection plates to the pastor which he had made with his own hands. Brother Welsh accepted these, and Brother C. H. Foster offered the dedicatory prayer. After dinner at the church the young people and their cars were pressed into service to deliver bushel baskets of food to needy families. Pastor Welsh with his associates made visits along with these deliveries. "Come Unto Me," was the evening theme of C. H. Foster, and his sermon was heard by a good congregation.

The Wednesday evening prayer services have been well attended. The last one of the year was delightful. The gifts of the gospel were manifested and several Saints were spoken to individually; the congregation as a whole was also admonished and encouraged.

Alliance, Ohio

Organized Classes Conduct Lively Activities

In spite of serious problems members of this branch are facing because of industrial conditions, there is a decided increase in church activities as well as in attendance at all services. This is due in part to a lively attendance contest between the classes of the church school which ended with the beginning of the present quarter. The intermediates were the winners and were guests of the losing classes at a wiener roast. They gained five new scholars, four of whom are children of nonmember families. One of these, a boy of fourteen years, has asked for baptism. At the last sacrament service he bore a beautiful testimony of his belief in this cause.

In October the intermediate class organized. Meetings are held every two weeks on Friday evening from seven to nine o'clock. A devotional leader is chosen for each meeting. Roll call is answered by sentence prayers from each one. Then there is a Bible contest for accuracy and speed in finding references, each member having a Bible. This is keenly enjoyed. After the business meeting, games are played. The initials W. W. W. have been adopted as a name, meaning "We Will Work," and their aim is to make their influence felt for good in their homes, church, and community. They presented a three-act play in the Christmas program.

The young people's class meets every two weeks under the leadership of the teacher, Brother Alba Smith. On Christmas Day they visited one member in the hospital with a tubercular hip, each taking him a small gift.

The senior class meets every Friday evening to study "Stewardships." This class is not confined to seniors, but all are welcome. The pastor is the teacher.

To save cost of fuel and lights at the church, the Wednesday evening prayer meeting is held in the different homes, and the Saints are encouraged at the increase in attendance and spirituality. If attendance continues to increase, there will be meetings in two places instead of one.

At the annual business meeting and election in October, all officers were reelected. They are taking their responsibility most seriously, and growth should be the result. Elder R. A. Smith has been the president of the branch since its organization in 1917, and without complaint has faithfully shepherded the flock through a variety of experiences.

In September there was one addition by baptism, a brother who came in contact with this work while visiting relatives who are members here.

The anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith III, November 6, was observed in a special manner on the evening of November 23. District President James E. Bishop was here and showed stereopticon slide scenes from the life of this Prophet.

The Christmas program was presented to a full house, the largest attendance ever had. Following the recitations by the little folks, the intermediates presented the play, "The More Abundant Life," and the young people then gave the pageant, "The New Earth." Special lighting effects by a young brother, Joseph Gordon, added beauty to the scenes. Hard work and splendid cooperation from all made this program possible, and it was appreciated. To Sister Arlene Lambert goes much credit for her efforts and patience in directing the program.

McKenzie, Alabama

Elder Halb Holds Meetings

Saints of Alabama District met in conference with Pleasant Hill Branch, of McKenzie, December 10, with the district presidency and Elder Jacob G. Halb, of Middletown, Ohio, presiding. All the other officers necessary to carry on the activities of the conference were elected. The report of the last conference was read and approved. All district officers gave their reports; also the branch reports were given as well as those of the priesthood.

Pleasant Hill Branch recommended that Brother W. H. Drake, teacher, be ordained to the office of elder at the conference. The conference approved the ordination, and arrangements were made to provide for the ordination Sunday afternoon.

The following district officers were elected: President, Elder D. E. Sellers; counselors, Elders W. H. Drake and J. W. Baldwin; secretary, W. H. Drake; chorister, G. W. Miniard; publicity agent, B. E. Barlow; bishop's agent, Elder J. W. Baldwin. Elder Halb preached Saturday evening on "The More Abundant Life."

Sunday morning at nine o'clock an interesting and active prayer service was held. It was followed by the church school and preaching by Elder Halb, his theme being, "Go Forward." Sunday afternoon the ordination service was held, in which beauty was witnessed, and the Spirit of God was felt. At this hour Brother W. H. Drake was ordained to the office of elder by Elder Jacob G. Halb, of the quorum of seventy, and two local elders, H. H. Wiggins and D. E. Sellers. Regular Sunday evening preaching service was held, Elder Halb in the stand.

Elder Halb remained with Pleasant Hill Branch for a week after conference and conducted services, but because of the heavy rains, attendance was not as large as had been expected. All who were present enjoyed his preaching, and are longing for the spring and summer to come, at which time they expect to have him again under more favorable weather conditions.

On the last Sunday evening Elder Halb was here, the annual branch business meeting was held. The following officers were elected to preside for the year 1933: President, Elder Lyle D. Flynn; counselors, Elders W. H. Drake and D. E. Sellers; clerk, D. T. Parker; chorister, G. W. Miniard; pianist, Edith Odom; treasurer, A. A. Odom; publicity agent, B. E. Barlow; caretaker, D. W. Clark; cemetery committee, J. C. Parker, Z. K. Patrick, and Lon Parker, and L. G. Sellers was chosen to preside at the church school. Following the business session, Elder Halb preached his farewell sermon.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Plays, Pantomimes, and Pageants Entertain This Congregation

Some pleasing programs have been given during the past months. On November 4, a moving picture entitled, "Lest We Forget," was given under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

On November 20, the pantomime, "The First Thanksgiving," written by Sister June Whiting Lea, was given under the direction of L. H. Lewis, nearly all the members of the branch being called upon to take part.

Christmas was observed with a play, "Fires of Yuletide," on the evening of December 18, by Arnold and Florence Ourth, Mildred Sanford, Roderick Lewis, and Elmer Garrett. And on the 25th Mary Lee told the story of the first Christmas, "In Days of Long Ago," during the morning worship period. The pastor gave the Christmas sermon on "God's Gift to Man," and in the evening the primary and junior departments presented a pageant, "The Children of Bethlehem."

The marriage of William John Williams and Mrs. Mary Edna Snively was solemnized at the home of the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Elsie Williams, Sunday afternoon, November 27, J. C. Page officiating. The attendants were the brother and sister of the bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Williams, of Moline. Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was played by Mrs. Arnold Ourth and Mrs. August Lee sang, "O Promise Me." A reception followed the ceremony, fifty persons being present.

A wedding took place on Christmas Day at the home of William Kachle when his daughter Nina was united in marriage to Lloyd Rahn by J. C. Page in the presence of immediate relatives. This couple will make their home on a farm near Yates, Missouri.

The pastor was called to Rock Creek November 19, to conduct the funeral services of Edwin Pitt, son of H. T. Pitt, an elder of the early organization.

On November 26, Brother Page was called to the bedside of Don Carlos Millikin, son of Lucy Smith, the youngest sister of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and Brother and Sister Page were by his side when he passed away. Brother Millikin often visited the Pages at the Mansion House, where he loved to talk of the early days when he played there as a little boy. He was ninety years old, and his entire life had been spent in the vicinity where he died. Millikin, Illinois, where there was a post office at one time, was named after him. He was a veteran of the Civil War. He is survived by his wife, Emma Smith; two daughters, Clara A. Smith, of Shamrock, Texas, and Mary F. Fluckey, of Keokuk, Iowa, and two sisters, Clara Hendel, of Colchester, Illinois, and Sarah A. Nichols, of Portland, Oregon. The funeral was held from the Christian Church at Hamilton and burial was in Oakwood Cemetery, J. C. Page officiating.

On December 21, Sister Sophia Head Hart passed away at Keokuk, and her funeral was conducted December 23, from the Methodist Church in Montrose by J. C. Page, assisted by Orville Miller. Burial was in Montrose Cemetery.

The prayer meetings have been held at the various homes during the winter months in order to save fuel. There has been a good attendance, and the meetings have been characterized by activity.

The bishop's agent reports a sum of $108 collected during the sacrifice period. A bake sale was held by the women's department which netted twenty dollars toward the fund, and Sister Hayer, of Carthage, sent the proceeds from a supper served to a fraternity of Carthage College that occupies rooms in her house.

A near tragedy occurred on November 19, when the car driven by Mary Lee left the road and turned over three times, rolling down a twenty foot embankment. Mary and her friend, Gladys Bolton, were badly bruised and shaken but no bones were broken. The girls were able to crawl out from the wreckage, climb the embankment and hail a passing car. Mary's car was completely demolished.

New Castle, Pennsylvania

Young People Organized as "Willing Workers"

The young people of this branch have been organized for a year and a half as the Willing Workers, a movement sponsored by Eleanor McCune as president; Edward Ryhal, vice president; Marie Bartberger, secretary and treasurer. Edward Ryhal is the teacher. Officers for 1933 are: Caroline Engle, president; William McCune, vice president; Marie Bartberger, secretary and treasurer; Edward Ryhal, chorister, and Charles Hanna, assistant chorister.

The Willing Workers meet every other Monday. After a short season of prayer, they study for an hour. Their topic now is "Faith." Then there is a social program.

It is the desire of this group of young people to assist the branch in promoting the truth of Christ, abiding always in the spiritual and financial law of the church.

The branch is now composed of fifty-six members. During the year five were baptized and one was transferred to the local record. One member was lost by death.

Carthage, Missouri

819 West Chestnut

The past year has been one of progress for this branch, financially and spiritually, even though most of the Saints have personally felt the effects of the existing conditions, but as one brother has said: "Such times show what can be done by cooperation."

Brother Shank and Sister Hobbs offered to furnish material to build a new rostrum and made screens, and Brothers Cale and Hogan did the work. Brother Shank also presented a wall clock to the branch. Brother Pratt, of Monett, furnished carpet to cover the new platform and aisles. These have added greatly to the appearance of the church, and the Saints are grateful for such help. The congregation has started a "shingle" fund, anticipating a need of the near future.

Carthage was happy in August to entertain one of the four institute sessions held in this district during the past year. With Sister Lena Hobbs, adult supervisor, as chairman the plans for taking care of the institute were well organized and carried out. Sister Hobbs and her committee deserve much credit for their untiring efforts.

One of the young people, Sister Clara Hobbs, is privileged to attend Graceland this year, thus realizing a dream she has cherished for a number of years. Her friends are proud of the splendid record she is making. She was a tireless worker in the branch, and is greatly missed by Carthage people even though they rejoice at her opportunity to prepare for greater service.

Another loss the branch has suffered this year was the removal of Brother and Sister Van Talcott and family. Carthage Saints hear, however, that they are doing a good work in their new location near Taneyville, Missouri.

District President Amos T. Higdon visited here several times, and on his last call in December, was accompanied by Apostle J. F. Garver who preached one evening.

Immediately following the district conference held at Joplin the last of November, Elder Lee Quick came to Carthage, intending to hold a week's services ending December 4, the regular homecoming day, but attendance and interest were such that he was asked to continue another week. He enjoyed splendid liberty throughout the meetings, and the largest number of nonmembers attended of any series held here. Everyone enjoyed his stay. It was as one sister stated: "It was just what the members needed, too."

Election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows: Branch president, Elder A. M. Hogan; clerk, Sister Elsie Linder; treasurer and solicitor, Sister Jessie Rhoads; chorister, Sister Edith Meador; librarian, Harry Shank; publicity agent, Sister A. M. Hogan; church school director, J. J. Linder; adult supervisor, Sister Lena Hobbs; young people's supervisor, Frank Shank; children's supervisor, Sister Edith Cale; Christmas offering superintendent, Harry Shank.

The church school council meets each last Monday night of the month when plans are made for the activities of the coming month and the church school handbook is studied with the supervisor, Brother Linder, as teacher. Programs in keeping with special days throughout the year have been presented under the direction of the church school department supervisors.

Two watch parties were held New Year's Eve. The young married people's class, taught by Sister Martha Green, and the senior class taught by, Brother Frank Shank, met at the home of Sister Ora Shields. The rest of the branch met at the home of Pastor Hogan. Games, visiting, and refreshments helped to pass away the time.

The members are hoping that the first sacrament service of 1933, is an indication of the coming year in Carthage. There was an unusually large attendance, and an excellent spirit prevailed throughout the service.

Stonington, Maine

Branch Has Good Spiritual and Financial Standing

Stonington Branch held its annual business meeting December 14. Elder E. T. Robertson, visiting here at that time, acted as chairman, and in his opening remarks, reviewed the year's work. He expressed pleasure at finding the branch work so well organized and carried on. The report of the treasurer, A. M. Shepard, showed the branch to be in good standing, financially. Last year's board of officers, with one or two exceptions was sustained for the coming year. Brother Cecil Billings will be in charge of the Sunday school this year.

On Tuesday afternoon, December 20, the ladies' aid held its annual sale of cooked food and fancy articles. The sale was well patronized by the members of the branch as well as by many nonmembers, and netted a goodly sum for the Christmas offering.

In the evening the newly-organized Zion Builders' Club gave a social. Ice cream, cake, and candy were on sale and the proceeds went to the Christmas offering fund.

The junior department of the Sunday school presented an excellent program at the Christmas concert, given Sunday evening, December 25. Sister Marion Barter was in charge of the concert this year. The church was appropriately decorated, and added much to the program so well presented by the young folks.

Kansas City Stake

The stake-wide sacrifice campaign covering nearly three months, ended December 31, with satisfactory results. The personal solicitation of each member gave him an opportunity to help liquidate the general church debt and maintain local upkeep.

Now the organization that has done so well in this respect will be continued as a permanent institution for the laudable work of raising money and getting better acquainted with the membership.

Apostle John F. Garver will conduct a regional stake service on Wednesday evening, January 18, at Grandview Church for Grandview, Armourdale, and Argentine congregations.

Argentine Church

Bishop C. A. Skinner was the speaker at seven forty-five Sunday evening, January 8, his lesson being taken from the second chapter of Daniel. The Saints enjoy hearing Brother Skinner speak, because he can preach an old-fashioned Latter Day Saint sermon as well as present his thoughts on financial law.

Grandview Church

The Laurel Club held its annual bazaar December 1, in the church basement. A dinner was served at six o'clock. About ninety dollars was cleared from the bazaar and dinner.

The carol singers did their bit the evening of December 22, to cheer those unable to leave their homes to attend Christmas services.

The celebration of the anniversary of Christ's birth began with the morning services of December 18. Many beautiful hymns were sung, and a Christmas sermon was preached by Elder C. D. Jellings. In the evening under the direction of Lester Fowler, the choir sang the cantata, "The Prince of Peace."

December 25, the family worship program consisted of Christmas hymns, a Christmas story by Sister Blanche Mesley and the blessing of John Roland Brose, infant son of Brother and Sister Fred G. Brose who was born November 1. Elders L. W. Hayes and Daniel Tucker officiated.

At the eleven o'clock hour Sister Mesley told the story, "The Gift," and Brother Mesley talked on "Our Gift." The Savior's birthday cake with thirty-three candles was lighted by the children, and while the candles glowed against a manger scene, the congregation brought their gifts to the church. The cake was then removed to the vestibule, cut, and served by intermediate girls as church was dismissed.

A Yuletide vesper service was had at five o'clock on Christmas Day after which all were dismissed to enjoy the evening at home.

Southern Ohio Observes Joseph Smith Centennial

Unusual Spiritual Experiences at Sunrise Sacrament

Southern Ohio observed the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the late Joseph Smith, known in this district as "Joseph the Just," and memories of these services will long linger in the minds of the Saints.

The meetings were held at First Church, Columbus, commencing the evening of November 4, with a play, "The Life of Joseph Smith." In the crowd which enjoyed this production were about two dozen out-of-town Saints.

Saturday's activities opened with an eight o'clock prayer meeting very well attended, and until noon not a moment was idle. Again at two o'clock in the afternoon the Saints were called to order, and enjoyed the manifestation of God's power in every feature of the meeting. The afternoon closely resembled the morning, and the Saints were given a veritable Pentecost until five o'clock, every speaker occupying with power.

Elder J. R. Grice preached a forceful sermon in the evening, and the Saints were urged to go home and retire to bed early in order that they might be on time for the sunrise or seven o'clock sacrament meeting. When those in charge of the service entered the rostrum at 6.52 a. m. that morning, November 6, there were not more than ten vacant seats in the building, and the stillness of the congregation was impressive. The priesthood occupied the choir seats. All this was an inspiring sight so early in the morning.

The visitors who on Saturday evening numbered about one hundred had increased to about one hundred and forty-five. Some had left their homes very early indeed in order to be on time at the sunrise sacrament. About seventy-five were unable to find seats even after extra chairs were brought into use.

The sacrament service lasted from seven o'clock until 10.05 a. m. There were a number of spiritual manifestations through God's servants, a gift of tongues, and the telling of a dream. Words can not describe the powerful influence felt.

The pictures of Joseph Smith the Mar-

tyr, his brother, Hyrum Smith, and Joseph Smith the Just, had been decorated with flowers by the women's department of First Columbus Church late Saturday night.

"The setting was complete for these services and God displayed his power. The congregation was greatly moved. The gift of tongues was in fulfillment of a spiritual experience related at the Saturday morning prayer service," writes District President A. E. Anderton, of Columbus. "It was divided into three parts, a tongue, a change of tongues, and a tongue of angels, taking into consideration the picture of the three Smiths and the beautiful flowers which decorated them. At the close of the interpretation of what had been said, Brother H. E. French was called upon to speak and in a broken voice said he had seen angels that morning in the building, and that some of the tongues which had been heard were of the purest Hebrew."

And so the Saints of Southern Ohio go on growing, spiritually and numerically. They pray God will remember his people and bring them through the crisis now at hand.

Because of the hospitality of Saints of the three Columbus congregations, all visiting Saints were entertained more than two days free of charge. Credit and thanks are due all who helped to make this celebration the success it was.

Nebo, Illinois

Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin Make More Friends for the Gospel

The Saints of Nebo still rejoice over the meetings held by Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin in the old Howell Hollow Church, October 4 to 16. At the close of the services six promising young people were baptized.

Those were happy days for the members of the faith, and time passed all too soon. Brother Baldwin's message was pointed, forceful, without any improper concessions, profoundly convincing, and so full of love that all enjoyed hearing him, and are living those days over and over. In like manner Sister Baldwin won the hearts of the people, especially those young in years, and set them aflame with new zeal for a forward march to Zion.

Many nonmembers heard the word of truth. All spoke of the sermons and wondered that people of such broad experience could and would find time to come to this small place.

The young people gave a play the night before Thanksgiving to a full house, and the effort proved a splendid satisfaction to all concerned. Not long after the workers began practice on the pageant, "At the Manger," giving it at the same place they had presented the Thanksgiving entertainment.

The church school is sponsored by Latter Day Saint young people and a few older members. Regular weekly preaching services and monthly sacrament meetings are also held.

On New Year's Day church school and sacrament were held, and a talented young man was baptized. A fine spirit prevailed at the confirmation.

Independence

President F. M. McDowell presided over the quarterly conference in Independence, Monday night, January 9, which opened with the singing of the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel." Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Bishop J. S. Kelley, and Elder D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education, were also in the stand, and Mrs. T. A. Beck was the organist. The conference approved reports from the pastor and the director of Religious Education, but after considerable debate, returned the bishop's report to the budget committee with instruction to reconsider and reapportion the 1933 budget. Since the hour was growing late and much of the conference's business was yet to be transacted, the body acted to meet again the night of January 23, at which time, in addition to other matters, the revised report from the budget committee will be considered.

An institute for all the priesthood members in Independence—and they number around six hundred—will be conducted at Liberty Street Church, February 6 to 10, and all men of the ministry are urged to attend. President Elbert A. Smith will teach the subject, "Spiritual Aspects of Our Ministry," and Bishop G. L. DeLapp will present "Financial Aspects of Our Ministry."

Stone Church

The boys' choir, directed by Miss Marcine Smith, furnished music for the opening worship service of the church school Sunday morning, and Elder H. W. Harder, associate superintendent of the school, talked especially to the juniors in the congregation on "Picture Taking and Making."

"Current Viewpoint of the Dry Organization," was the topic of the Reverend J. L. Pickett, designated as the oldest man on duty for the Anti-Saloon League in the State of Missouri, Sunday morning.

The choir, led by Paul N. Craig, sang for its usual radio broadcast and eleven o'clock service two hymns, "Joyful, Joyful, We Adore Thee," and "My Jesus, I Love Thee," and an anthem, "Send Out Thy Light," by Gounod. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the hour, assisted by Elder C. B. Woodstock.

It had been some time since the Stone Church congregation listened to a sermon by Elder Hubert Case, active missionary in the church, and president of the Central Michigan District. His discourse Sunday night was full of inspiration and fine thoughts. For a scriptural background he read John 4, and other references in the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants, and he stressed the necessity of those who worship God doing so in spirit and in truth. He presented the spiritual significance of the gospel as it is reflected in our lives, urging humility before God, confidence in his word and in ourselves to keep his commandments, thoughtfulness of the things we are doing, and consecration.

The Aeolian Chorus, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang, "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," "Savior, Teach Me Day by Day," and "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," by Ambrose. Elder D. S. McNamara was in charge of the hour, assisted by Elder H. O. Smith.

Second Church

"Jesus Lover of My Soul," by the choir, opened the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning, January 15, and the invocation was offered by Elder H. C. Fields. The hymn response of the choir was "Be Thou Merciful," and after the offertory the singers contributed, "The House by the Side of the Road," to the program. Solo work was by Miss Mildred Fulk. Elder J. A. Holsworth was the speaker, and the basis of his remarks came from John 3: 1-10. Elder Ben Sarratt, assistant pastor, offered the benediction.

R. L. Conyers took charge of the junior service on this morning, and music was in charge of Mrs. John Davis, leader, and Bethel Davis, pianist. Elder J. H. Miller talked briefly on "The Golden Rule," and Mrs. Ben Sarratt told the story, "The Most Unselfish Boy."

President F. M. McDowell, the evening speaker, was introduced by Pastor William Inman. Priest Roy Settles assisted in the stand. Music was supplied by Mrs. Florence Koehler Campbell who played the piano solos, "To Spring," by Grieg, and "Alt-Wiew," by Godowsky; and by the ladies' quartet, Mrs. Ethel Schuyler, Mrs. Edna Fetters, Mrs. Ethel McBride, and Mrs. Alice Minton, sang "The Unwritten Gospel," and "O Jesus, I Have Promised." Mrs. Maudel Sellers accompanied the quartet.

Miss Vera Redfield and Wilbur Edison Thomas were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Willard, the bride's parents, the evening of January 12. They will live at 817 South Crysler Street.

Ontario, California

The desires expressed in the prayers and testimonies of Ontario members on the first Sunday of the new year, emphasized the keeping of that covenant which all made at the water's edge. They feel if they can do this there is little need to make New Year's resolutions, for they have already made one that is binding.

Ontario Branch is following the second outline for the church school. Its election was held the last week of the year, and the following officers were chosen: Pastor and director of church school, Frank J. Lacey; superintendent of adults, Brother Lorne Swain, superintendent of young people, George Givens; secretary, William H. Kemple; treasurer, and chorister, Charles C. Swain; pianist, Fern Roberts; librarian, Mary Swain, and publicity agent, Clyde C. Roberts.

Mikado, Michigan

Active in Gospel Work

This branch is alive and working under the leadership of the branch president, Elder M. J. McGuire. Brother McGuire is a devoted and consecrated young man.

The Saints enjoyed an all-day meeting Thanksgiving Day. Brother M. A. Summerfield, of Tawas City, was here, and a wonderful spirit was felt in all the services.

The local business meeting occurred December 14, in charge of the pastor. Those elected to serve as officers were Pastor, Elder M. J. McGuire; counselors, Elder Richard Stewart and Priest James McGuire; church school director, Clayton Harmon; secretary, Dorothy Deforest; treasurer, James McGuire; organist, Jennie Procunier; chorister, Cora Lefiur, and publicity agent, Bertha McGuire.

Each Sunday morning the members meet with Pastor McGuire under the new organization of the church school, and are desirous of keeping up with the progress of the general church.

Apostle D. T. Williams preached at Mikado, November 10, on the theme, "The God Who Speaks Today." Members look forward to another visit from him.

The department of women gave a supper November 17, receiving fifteen dollars. They sent five dollars to Missionary Hubert Case for hospital expenses after the automobile accident in which he suffered a scalp wound.

The Christmas program was given Saturday afternoon at the church, and the women made candy and popcorn balls for the children.

Newton, Iowa

Commenced Year With "Self-examination" as Theme

Newton Saints commenced the new year with an inspiring sacrament service. The theme was "Self-examination." Mrs. Emma Williams and son and daughter-in-law, Mr and Mrs. Arthur Williams, drove nearly thirty miles that they might participate in the service. They are isolated from the church.

During the past year the Saints here have been blessed as a group, and they enter the new year with a faith that they may continue to live worthy these blessings.

The annual business meeting was held early in December and District President Henry Castings, of Des Moines, was in charge. The adoption of the church school plan and election of officers were features of the meeting. Officers elected were: Pastor, Harold E. Shippy; church school director, Earnest Kirlin; adult supervisor, Ira Shippy; young people's supervisor, Keith Stokes; children's supervisor, Mrs. Ira Shippy; Marietta Walker Circle leader, Mrs. Uhle Blackledge; secretary, Mrs. Harold Shippy; treasurer, Mrs. Frank Park; auditor, Seibert Chesnutt; chorister, Ira Shippy, and publicity agent, Keith Stokes.

A series of meetings was recently held here by Elder Clyde McDonald, but because of intense cold few visitors attended. The meetings, however, were uplifting and enjoyed by local Saints.

Hammond, Indiana

Lately Visited by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle D. T. Williams

On December 14 the members of Hammond Branch were fortunate in having President F. M. McDowell here. He pled for consecration and support of the work of the church and for personal advancement and righteousness.

Apostle D. T. Williams also visited the branch on Sunday morning, January 1, and preached a fine and appropriate sermon for the beginning of the new year. His subject was, "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint."

The visits of these two church officials were inspiring and should form a basis for renewed activity and consecration for the new year.

Sister Eleanor Myers arranged and presented a nice Christmas program Thursday evening, December 22, and on Christmas Day a special service was arranged to celebrate the birth of the Christ.

The Sunday school is progressing under the leadership of C. C. Ellis, and the women of the branch are busy with a variety of activities, led by Sister Lola Smith.

Will the Races Blend?

Scientist Predicts Union of All Bloods

The fusion of all races has been predicted recently according to a news paper dispatch:

"The possibility that within the next one hundred generations there may be but one human race is suggested by Dr. Henry A. Erikson, physicist at the University of Minnesota. . . .

"Terming the world's present racial status a 'consequence of geographical accidents sustained by primitive and limited transport possibilities,' Doctor Erikson said that, because of improvements in methods of transportation and communication, preservation of races may be 'ultimately impossible.'"

Perhaps this is one more link in the chain of events that proclaim and further the "brotherhood of man" toward which idealists have pointed for centuries.

"The salvation of the individual which is the first concern of the gospel can only be made good as he contributes to the renewal and reformation of the social order in which he plays his part. The need to moralize economics, and to set human relations on a higher level than one of self-interest alone can never be absent from the mind of the Christian preacher and should be made a definite charge on the Christian Church."—R. W. Selbie, D. D.

"I suppose that a very large part of spiritual healing is that faith liberates Nature that she may do her own work—God's work—of restoration and healing. 'I make things make themselves,' as Mother Nature says in Kingsley's Water Babies."—R. H. Strachan.

SUPERSTITION

An Early Magazine Extract

Selected by Audentia Anderson

BROWSING in a library, recently, I was much interested in examining the earliest issues of the North American Review. Its first issue was dated May, 1815, and was printed at Boston. These early publications contain many articles which seem odd to us, reflecting the rather stilted styles of literature then in use, as well as many quaint customs and viewpoints. The country was not flooded at that time by the deluge of reading matter which today bulks the mail trains or sags the library shelves, and no doubt the Review, going monthly into the homes of aristocrats and work-a-day people, found an eager welcome.

One article I saw seemed of peculiar interest for Latter Day Saints. I have copied it for their perusal, preserving the old-fashioned spelling, punctuation, and use of capitals as best I could. It was found in the issue for July, 1815, and is captioned "Superstition."

"To the Editor.
"Sir,

"Travelling the last Autumn in the District of Maine, I was one day induced to stop, by seeing a large concourse of people very busily engaged in digging in a barren spot, in the town of Dresden. With great difficulty I learnt the object of pursuit. One of the party had dreamed three nights successively, that gold was concealed at this spot. As a large portion of every community have ever believed this kind of evidence indubitable, there was no difficulty experienced in forming a company to search for and share the hidden treasure.

"They had toiled several days to no purpose, when one of the party proposed sending for a philosopher who lived about fifty miles distant, and who possessed a stone in which he could see everything that existed, or was transacted in any part of the world. The proposal was acceded to, and a messenger was dispatched to the philosopher. Having examined his talisman, he at once perceived the treasure, and accurately and minutely described the spot where they were digging; which, he declared, he had never before seen.

"He was intreated and consented to go, and direct their labors in person. His presence gave animation and vigour to their exertions. No one doubted, as he pronounced that they were near the object of their pursuit; —but alas! it constantly eluded their grasp. At length, worn with fatigue, they were obliged to abandon their golden dreams. They kindly charged the devil with their disappointment, and the philosopher returned home, with the satisfaction of knowing that the belief of the people in his supernatural powers could not be shaken, even by their failure.

"The digging for money is renewed at intervals in every part of New England. The magick hazle wand usually directs the exertions of the labourers. The treasure is almost within his grasp, when the devil puts it in some new place of concealment. The philospher with his wonderful stone is an unusual character. There exists, however, a number of them in the country. They are distinguished at their birth by being born with a veil* over their faces, and kind nature provides a talismanick stone for every child thus born. To common eyes these differ not from other people, but to the gifted, they discover everything at the spot to which he directs his attention." [*The footnote here said: "This is an accident attending the birth of some children, very familiar to surgeons and midwives, and which gives rise to this piece of superstition.]

"We have boasted in this country of being more enlightened than the nations of the old world; and of being freed from the bondage of superstition to which they have been subject from the remotest periods of antiquity. But laying aside the stories of ghosts, which in the country still enchant the trembling auditors, instances of imposture, though less impudent perhaps than in Europe, are sufficiently common to attest the credulity of the people. Two or three years since, a man in Vermont undertook to cure all manner of diseases by prayer to heaven. It was only necessary to state the name and disease of the sick person in a letter; the prophet prayed and gave an immediate answer from heaven. Multitudes flocked to him from all through New England States, and unopened letters are said to have accumulated upon him by bushels before he could get time to read their contents.

"Many instances of a like kind might be mentioned. There are various superstitions respecting the weather. One man believes the twelve days succeeding christmas, to regulate the twelve months in the year; another supposes the weather of each month to be governed by that of the last Friday of the preceding; a third judges by the moon; a fourth by the stars. The prognosticks shall all be different but the event will confirm each more strongly in his belief. Whether the horns of the moon are up or down, whether she is on the wane or increase, in what part of the body the almanack places her—are all important particulars to the farmer, regulating his sowing, his treatment of his domestick animals, and many of his operations in husbandry.

"Credulity seems to be a natural principle in the human mind. Reason was given us to regulate it, but reason can only have its full effect in those minds that are accustomed to trace effects to their causes, and to perceive that God governs the world by second causes operating by immutable laws.

Notice to Florida Saints

This is to notify the Saints residing in the vicinity of Orlando, Florida, that sacrament services will be held at the residence of Brother Theodore Smith, 1410 Philadelphia Street, the first Sunday of each month, at three o'clock in the afternoon. We enjoyed a happy meeting the first day of the New Year. The spirit present was uplifting and encouraging. One brother whom we baptized last spring, partook of the sacrament for the first time. One isolated sister who has been assisting in other churches for years was present and testified to her faith in the latter-day work. We trust there will be a still larger attendance Sunday, February 5, as the result of this notice.—F. G. Pitt.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—District conference convened at Beardstown, Illinois, December 17 and 18, 1932. On Friday evening preaching service was enjoyed, Apostle J. F. Garver, the speaker, giving a splendid discourse. Immediately following the preaching, a baptismal service was held for the following candidates: Fred Kruppenberg, James Skiles, and Mrs. Alice Sousy. Saturday at 10.40 a. m. the opening session of the conference was held. Those giving talks were Apostle J. F. Garver; Elder E. E. Thomas, who discussed the envelope system and its effects on tithing; and Elder Joe Williams gave some ideas on the interest in music in the district. The regular business session opened at 2.30 p. m. in charge of the district president, Elder R. L. Fulk. At this time special reports of the bishop's agent and church school director were read and approved by the conference, after which began proceedings to disorganize the branches of Casey, Pana, and Springfield. At the close of the regular routine of reports, the following officers were elected for the coming year: District president, R. L. Fulk; secretary, Lena E. Fusselman; treasurer, E. E. Thomas; musical director, Joe Williams; church school director, E. E. Thomas; bishop's agent, E. E. Thomas. The counselors appointed were: M. R. Shoemaker and Arthur Henson; Lena E. Fusselman was to be recommended to the church historian for district historian. On Saturday evening the conference was entertained with a pleasing program by the Beardstown Branch in charge of Mrs. E. E. Thomas and Joe Williams. Several selections were rendered by the orchestra and a trombone solo was given by Maurice Corcoran; a vocal solo, "When the Mists Have Cleared Away," by Joe Williams. This was followed by an interesting talk by Elder R. L. Fulk who gave a historical sketch of the author of the song. A spiritual prayer service was in charge of R. L. Fulk at 9.30 a. m. Sunday, and was followed by a preaching service, Apostle J. F. Garver being the speaker. He brought out the thought that we must learn to keep the laws in the family and live together in the branch, for these things are the basis of stewardships. In this way Zion will be established, for Zion comes through the growth of our lives. A roundtable discussion at 2.30 p. m., proved most instructive. Some of the things discussed were tithing, and the law of Enoch. A solo, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning," was sung by Elder Joe Williams and an anthem by the choir, "Bow Down Thine Ear." Preceding this discussion a spiritual sermon was presented by Elder R. L. Fulk. The Spirit prevailed throughout the afternoon and evening, strengthening the Saints. Preceding the evening service, selections were given on the accordion by Mrs. E. E. Thomas, followed by two numbers by the Beardstown Orchestra; a trombone solo was played by Maurice Corcoran, and a vocal solo was contributed by Mrs. Thomas. A standing vote of thanks was extended Beardstown Saints for their kindness and hospitality and the bounteous dinner. Conference adjourned to be convened by the district president.

His devotion to his family was a model to all. He was a worthy citizen and his memory is worthy of the life he lived unmarred and unsullied. He enjoyed fairly good health until the last ten days of his life; was confined to his bed only five days. His mind remained clear up to a short time before his death, a blessing he had always hoped for. The day before his death he called his family about him and bade them good-by. The funeral services were held at the Methodist Episcopal Church at Minden City. By special request of the deceased, his son-in-law, Elder T. Summers, of Port Huron, preached the funeral sermon; Elder T. Rawson in charge of the service. Interment was in Minden City Cemetery.

after a major operation. She was married to C. E. Dixon, February 21, 1923. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, May 25, 1920, near Emeline, Iowa. She was brought back to Emelene, her former home. The sermon was preached at the Presbyterian Church by Elder John Heide, of Fulton. Interment was in Hickory Grove Cemetery.

Died at her home near Caraway, Arkansas, December 30, 1932, from pneumonia. She married I. A. Nuckles, November 22, 1896, and to them eight children were born. Six survive their mother: Cleo Nuckles, Elzie Nuckles, Roy Nuckles, Ammon Nuckles, and Della Nuckles, of Caraway, and Mrs. Velma Rawson, of Michigan. She is also survived by her husband, aged mother, four sisters: Mrs. Nancy Nuckles, of Canada; Mrs. Etta Carmack, Mrs. Belle Booth, and Mrs. Leona Sitz, of Caraway, and by two brothers, Will and George Wood, of Caraway; three grandchildren, other relatives and many friends. She moved with her family to Caraway the latter part of 1925 or the first part of 1926. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Williford, Arkansas, April 28, 1894, by Elder Jeptha Spurlock. For some time previous to her death she had been engaged in Sunday school work as a junior class teacher. For over thirty-eight years she remained true and faithful to her covenant with Christ. She constantly expressed a natural religious life, and will be remembered for the kind deeds she did. Just two days before her death she was administered to by Brother Daniels, of Jonesboro, Arkansas. The funeral services were held at the Nuckles home, January 1, 1933. Services were conducted by Brother Daniels, a large crowd attending. Interment was in Cane Island Cemetery.

HAYTON.—Ethel Marie Oliver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Oliver, was born at Woodbine, Iowa, October 31, 1903. Passed from this life Sunday morning, December 25, 1932, at Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the church at Iowa Falls, Iowa, November 8, 1914. Married George L. Hayton, October 14, 1922. To them three children were born, Dorris Ellen, seven years old, Earl Jennings, four, and one who died in infancy. Besides her immediate family she leaves to mourn her untimely departure, her father and mother; five sisters: Mrs. Nellie Scott, Harlin, Iowa; Mrs. Corrine Wilhite, Kansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Essie Isenhart, Mrs. Pearl Redfield, and Mrs. Irene Willis, of Independence, Missouri; other relatives, and friends. JOHNSON.—Rusha A. Johnson was born September 4, 1871, near Caldwell, Ohio. Passed away at her home near Eldorado Springs, Missouri, December 14, 1932. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, May 27, 1894. Married L. F. Johnson, December 14, 1898. Leaves to mourn, her husband, one son, Fred M., of the home; one grandson, William Ivan. One daughter died in 1920. There also survive other relatives and friends. A true and faithful companion and mother has passed to her reward. The funeral sermon was by Elder R. T. Walters, and interment was in the city cemetery beside her daughter.

PATTON.—Helen Edith Curtis was born April 4, 1905, at Colorado Springs, Colorado. When seventeen years of age, she graduated from the Colorado Springs High School. In 1924, she was united in marriage to Charles F. Patton, and to this union were born three children, Lois, now seven years of age; Edward, four years, and Marvin, three years of age. She was a great admirer of the beautiful things of life, a devoted wife and mother, and was kind and unselfish toward all. In her youth she entered the Christian fellowship, uniting with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and she took a leading part in the activities of the young people. She spent her entire life in the Pike's Peak region. She passed to her reward Friday, December 9, 1932, being in her twenty-eighth year. She leaves her husband and three little children, also her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Curtis, one brother, three sisters, and many other relatives. The funeral was held at Colorado Springs, the sermon being preached by Glaude A. Smith. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery of that city.

McNULTY.—Rebecca McNulty was born February 16, 1881, at Lucas, Iowa. Died at her home at Chariton, Iowa, December 31, 1932, after a long and painful illness. Her love for the gospel came by the kindly interest in her by her Sunday school teacher, Brother Thomas Hopkins, of Lucas, and the testimonies of the Saints made a lasting impression on her. In 1915, she united with the church at Hiteman, being baptized by Elder Edward Rowley. Was a faithful member until death. She leaves her husband, daughter, Mrs. Nellie Stark, and other relatives. The funeral sermon was by Elder Parley Batten, assisted by Elder Willian Wilson.

CALKINS.—Maude Elizabeth Elwood was born March 3, 1890, at Colfax, Wisconsin. Died at her home at Chetek, Wisconsin, January 2, 1933. Was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Elwood. She spent nearly all of her early life in the vicinity of Chetek. October 23, 1907, she was married to John Leonard Calkins, and their home for the greater part of the remaining years of her life was at Potato Lake, about fifteen miles east of Chetek. She and her husband were baptized at Chetek, August 27, 1917, and have been earnest, active Saints as opportunity permitted. She was a cheerful, kindly woman, and leaves many friends besides her family and relatives. There are three daughters and a little son who mourn her departure besides her husband, several sisters, brothers, and other relatives. The funeral was held at Chetek, January 4, by F. A. Atwood, the sermon being preached by Elder Leonard Houghton. Interment was in Twin Lakes Cemetery.

ELLISON.—Addie Elfreda Larson was born July 31, 1894, on a farm near Anamosa, Iowa, and died at Sunny Crest hospital at Dubuque, Iowa. March 5, 1918, she was united in marriage to Cecil C. Ellison, and went to live on a farm near Martelle. Two children were born to this union, Violet Marie and Hilda Maxine. August 6, 1922, she united with the church, and kept her faith until death. She was an ideal wife and mother and a true Christian. Her interests were in her family and friends and in trying to live in a way pleasing to her God. She leaves a beautiful memory of a faithful wife and mother, a cheerful friend, always ready to help those in trouble and sickness. Left to mourn her departure are her husband, Cecil Ellison; two daughters, Violet and Maxine; her mother, Mrs. L. P. Larson; a brother, Will Larson, of Anamosa; three sisters, Mrs. Hilda Rinard, of Waterloo; Mrs. Ellen Baker, of Cedar Rapids; and Mrs. Jennie Raymond; also her husband's mother whose home she shared, Mrs. Daisy Ellison, other relatives and friends. Her father, L. P. Larson, two sisters, Marie and Louise, and an infant brother preceded her in death. For eighteen month she fought a losing fight with disease, and passed away November 5, 1932. The funeral was held at the Fairview Church, Elder E. R. Davis in charge. Interment was in Norwich Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

The Will to Do

An example of courage and unfailing devotion is always admirable, wherever one sees it. One may not always sympathize with the object, but one can never fail to admire and pay tribute to those who do fine things against enormous difficulties. A clipping sent to us from some unidentified source brings us the following story:

"People must thrill to the achievement of that little group of Benedictine monks who, after nearly twenty-six years of steady labor, rebuilt out of the dust the Buckfast Abbey, at Devonshire, England, as a successor to the powerful medieval monastery founded eleven hundred years ago and destroyed by Henry VIII. The Abbey, restored to its twelfth century proportions, was consecrated recently in the presence of the Papal Legate and many foreign bishops and abbots.

The monks, to rebuild the Abbey, worked in relays of six, and used their own slender funds earned with their wine and honey. Moreover, it was stated that none among them had any knowledge of construction when they started their task. It proves over again what can be accomplished where there's a will."

The Work and the Credit

"Judging from the number of letters from feminine writers approving the article by Mrs. Ruth M. Kirby, 'The Bible on the "Woman Question,"' urges the pigeon, "there are several women in the church who resent the you-can-be-the-assistant-and-do-the-work-but-a-member-of-the-priesthood-must - be - in-charge-and-get-the-credit attitude of certain august church members."

Wanted: Diplomats

"I'm a believer in sincerity, truthfulness, and frankness," declared the pigeon cocking his eye at me, "but I am also a believer in the gentle art of tactfulness. What would the world do without diplomats?"

"And half of the muttonheads," continued the Pigeon, "that are always bleating out their notion of the truth are wrong. They could at least keep discreetly quiet until they know the facts."

The Ways of Poets

"Isn't it curious?" asked the Pigeon the day before yesterday. He was standing on my shoulder and had just finished polishing his beak on my locket (ulp!)—I mean, on my collar button. "What's curious?" I asked. "Isn't it curious that so many who can't write a single sentence of correct prose will write reams of poetry and send it to some poor editor?" "Yes it is curious. I've never been able to understand it. But I fix it easily. I send it back and tell them to write me the same stuff in prose. They never do!"

And that's the truth.

THIS REMINDS US," says one of our ministers in sending in his application for 1933 certificate, "we have come to the end of another year. I have been blessed and have enjoyed my work more this past year than for ten years previously." And he wishes us a happy New Year.

Well, this is not an unusual letter. Everywhere our men and members of the church are giving expression to feelings of renewed pleasure and interest in the church. And when the opportunities for service are seized, there follows a satisfaction which warms the heart and inspires the zeal for even greater service.

ONE WHO IS GIVING HIS WHOLE TIME TO THE CHURCH wrote the Presiding Bishopric a few days ago saying that he and his wife were asking that their family allowance be reduced, the reduction to be effective January 1. And he says:

"We recognize that this is not much intrinsically, but it represents about four per cent, and we feel that it will still be giving us as much as we were getting a year ago."

The move was entirely voluntary, and bespeaks a fine devotion and willingness to serve as nearly as possible on the basis of "needs and just wants." We commend the brother and his wife for the fine spirit displayed.

ONE OF OUR BRETHREN, an old-timer in church work, in a letter extending New Year's greetings, writes that in an old volume he found a New Year's wish that he wanted to pass on to us. It is good, and we pass it on to our readers. Here it is:

" 'I wish you a vision of God that shall make you eager to guide others to the place of vision; a vision of yourself that shall give you charity for the weakness of others; a vision of others that shall reveal their virtues more than their faults; a vision of life that shall make you eager to work, willing to endure, patient in waiting, a master of self and a servant of all.' Let this be my salutation for the New Year."

F. M. S.

How Shall We Build on Our Foundations?

"Seek ye first to build up the Kingdom of God."

VII.—By Personal Growth and Development

The church is only as strong as the aggregate strength of its individual members. Sometimes the man who shouts loudest, "Why don't they do something?" is himself doing nothing. He contributes no strength to the total strength of the church. An immediate and certain way to build up the church is to begin at home and develop ourselves spiritually.

A "Spiritual Program"

In years gone by the Joint Council has spent much time discussing subjects upon which there seemed little hope of agreement. During the Conference of 1932 the Council sat down and attempted to map out the things upon which we could agree. As a result several documents came from the Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishops with unanimous approval, were also approved by the seventies, and later received unanimous approval of the Conference. These were set forth in the pamphlet, Church Objectives. The first of these documents deals with "Major teaching objectives of the Church." The things to be stressed in teaching the Saints are set forth as follows:

"We suggest an affirmative spiritual ministry to the Saints, including the urging of:

"a. Individual and family devotion.

"b. The study of the Word of God, especially as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

"c. Intelligent and regular reading of the church periodicals.

"d. Regular attendance at church services.

"e. Intelligent, alert, and efficient participation in the work of the church.

"f. Financial support of the church through whole-hearted compliance with the financial law.

"g. Godly walk and conversation."

Any member who will faithfully carry out the program outlined will soon find his or her spiritual power greatly increased. It is not too much to say that any branch whose members will unitedly observe these teachings will find its power doubled. The suggestions are simple and practical.

Prayer and Study

It is not necessary to pray long, loud, and tediously; but every member should pray every day. A people united in praying for certain results will get together and work for their accomplishment. The Lord is quite likely to hear and answer such prayers.

These are times when many are unemployed and may well heed the advice, "Study the word of God." Those who have work and must work twice as hard as formerly to hold their jobs will be surprised to find how much ground they can cover in a year if they give even ten minutes each day to reading some one of the three books of the church.

The admonition to read the church periodicals may now be amended, since Vision and Ensign have been merged with the Herald. All now go out as one at the former price of the Herald. Every family should take and read the Saints' Herald. Branches may well work out some such plan as that being tried out in Houston, Texas, to help those take the Herald who can not spare the money for an immediate cash payment by the year. (See Herald, December 7, page 1252.)

Branch officers and missionaries as they preach to and visit among the Saints should stress this matter of reading the Herald. It is vital. The Herald is the one channel through which we may well attempt to reach all of our members with any given message that the church should hear and consider. It is impossible to visit each family or even each branch. We can only put our message in the Herald and pray that it may reach the greatest possible number of readers. Will you help increase that circle of readers?

Regular Attendance at Church Services

Some are hampered by illness or other adverse conditions and can not attend church as much as others do; but all should endeavor to make attendance habitual and not spasmodic. I attended a district conference recently at which the average per capita attendance (at all services) of members in different branches was reported. The largest and best equipped branch had about the lowest average. (A large branch with widely scattered members is at a disadvantage in that regard.) This branch had less than one half of one meeting each week to the credit of each member. One of the smaller branches had nearly four times as high an average. How is it in your branch? Not so good as you would wish? And at that, the only reason the average is now lower is because some can always be depended upon.

A member of the Presidency or an Apostle is advertised to preach, and the church is full—the pastor knows too well how it will be the next Sunday when the "special occasion" is over. The church must depend upon the dependable ones or the church building would be closed excepting on "special occasions"—and soon there would be no special occasions. Why not be one of the dependable ones? "Surely the Master can depend on me!" Why not make it a point to invite and even urge others to attend. Those who drive to church and have space in their cars should do a little telephoning each week and pick up passengers to fill their cars—those who might wish to go but have no way.

Participation in Church Work

If anyone is happy it is usually the one who is at work. Why not take part in the work of the church locally or generally rather than to be a "spectator" standing on the "side-lines." The church work, including the church school, offers a very wide range of opportunities for service. "All are called, according to the gifts and callings of God unto them."

A part of this work is included under the specification: "Financial support of the church through whole-hearted compliance with the church law."

Godly Walk and Conversation

A soldier is known by the way he carries himself. He has been trained to walk erect. He does not go slouching down the street. His uniform is not soiled and his weapons not tarnished. If they were he would be discharged or put in the guard house.

The term, a "Godly walk," is a figure of speech. Saints, like the soldier, should be distinguished by their general deportment. They should at all times carry themselves like men and women of God. That fact should also be discernible in their conversation. A church composed entirely of those who so walk would grow rapidly in strength and power.

The advice briefly set forth as coming from The Council and the Conference is wholesome and practical. We may say with the Apostle Peter:

> "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." —2 Peter 1: 8-11.

Financial Information

Practically complete returns covering the sacrifice period for the month of December have now been received. While the result did not come up to the requirements, yet we are quite sure that the membership has responded to the best of its ability. The total income from tithes and general offerings for December, subject to further increases covering districts whose reports have not yet been received, was $43,331.79 as compared to $68,067.76 for the same month a year ago. A comparative statement by districts is given below.

In the Herald of November 9, 1932, it was stated that the amount needed for the months of October, November and December to meet current operating expenses and principal and interest was $120,000. The amount received during these three months was $77,824.40, which was $42,175.60 less than the amount needed.

However, as has been the case during the last two years, additional adjustments have been and are being made which will enable us to "carry on." One of these adjustments is that of the reduction of interest on our notes and bonds. Splendid cooperation has been given by the majority of our creditors. An actual saving of over $5,000 annually has already been effected with many of our bond and note holders yet to be heard from. This reduction of interest has made possible the payment of some allowance to the missionary families. Our fixed charges had to be met from cash received. The reduction of interest permitted an equivalent amount of cash to be paid on allowances. Further comment will be made in regard to this when final figures are available.

A detailed statement of how the December income has been distributed will appear in an early issue of the Herald, but there are a few items already taken care of in which the Saints will be interested, such as the payment of $16,000 on the principal and $8,000 interest which was due January 15 on the Auditorium Bond issue, one half month's allowance to missionary families, amounting to approximately $5,000, $1,500 to Graceland College, $7,816.38 for consecration contracts and aid, and other budget items. As previously stated, a detailed statement of disbursements will be published at an early date.

The total income from tithes and general offerings for the year 1932 subject to some further increases as above mentioned was $277,731.07 as compared to $421,635.39 for 1931. Our books for the year 1932 are just being closed so that it is impossible to state definitely just what our total expense has been during the year, but a rather cursory examination would indicate that in spite of adverse conditions during the year we find ourselves in just a little better position than we were a year ago.

The constant support of the members throughout the year has been greatly appreciated. All should feel encouraged to move forward in faith.

Young People's Problems

Young People Invited to Write for "A Page for Youth"

Looking forward to the Youth Conference to be held in Lamoni, on the Graceland College Campus in June, we realize that there must be some preliminary discussion of problems if the conference is to reach the mark of success that is expected of it.

Some of this discussion ought to come from the young people themselves, and from the leaders who are really interested in this part of the church work.

Accordingly, we invite young people and their leaders to write to us concerning their problems. As far as possible, we shall attempt to print the best suggestions from all of the letters. These will be presented on the "Page for Youth" and so will be sure to come to the attention of those who are coming to the conference.

Watch the Herald next week for the "Page for Youth" for a statement of some of the problems that have already come up for discussion in the preliminary plans. Then sit down and "take your pen in hand" with the determination of telling your views as they should be told. L. L.

Sympathy is an understanding pity, and we can not have sympathy for those passing through trials save as we shall have in our own lives experiences which help us understand. Even the Master himself was under the necessity of becoming a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, that he might stand as our advocate before God.—President Frederick M. Smith.

Tithing

By L. F. P. Curry

IX

The last subject to consider in this discussion of tithing is the reward of obedience. Is there any?

When a steam engine is offered for sale, it is possible to say almost exactly what the performance of the engine will be. One may not be so precise in stating the rewards which follow obedience to God in the keeping of his law, but we are persuaded that such rewards exist. It is not a question of singling out one principle, such as tithing, and rendering obedience to that, for balanced obedience is as necessary now as in Christ's time, when he rebuked the foolish Scribes and Pharisees, saying:

"For you pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin; and have omitted the weightier things of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Matthew 23: 20, Inspired Version.

If we remember that God requires us to keep all of his law, and not a part only, the inquiry concerning the result of obedience to the principle of tithing will not be misunderstood.

Once, after a sermon about tithing, a woman approached the writer and asked why the church could not promise specific blessings of a material character if the tithing were paid. She pointed out that one organization at least did that, and she felt that we, of all religious groups, should be better able to do so. Possibly it is unfortunate, but the record is too mixed to enable us to do this, even if we desired to sponsor such teaching.

There is the case of one faithful tithepayer whose funds were placed in a bank which later failed. It is a serious question whether the balance deposited there will ever be returned. Yet during a terrible storm this person received miraculous protection. In another instance, the tithepayer loaned funds to a business man. Subsequently, when reverses set in this business man voluntarily confessed judgment on the Court records, thus creating a prior lien in favor of the tithepayer. In the failure which afterward took place this man was the only creditor to receive payment in full. In both these cases there was a reward, but how different they were. Who shall say what gift God desires to grant his children?

A reward is negatively expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5, in the words, ". . . he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)." This is the other side of the promise of Malachi 4: 1, Inspired Version, which reads that "all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up. . . ." The works of the righteous man endure and they go before him to judgment. Because of their worth they may endure the severest test. "He that is tithed" blesses others through the means he contributes to the church; he also receives blessing himself.

A positive promise is found in Malachi 3: 10, Inspired Version. Yet if the remainder of the chapter is read carefully, it will be found that a spiritual blessing was to crown the material, and raises the thought that the blessing to be poured out, as mentioned in the tenth verse, was a spiritual blessing. The sixteenth and seventeenth verses, particularly, reflect this view. If the tithing law had been fully obeyed in that day, its very operation would have prevented undue accumulations of material goods. But there is no bound to the spiritual goods God's children may receive, save their ability to contain the abundance bestowed. One of our beloved elders relates an experience of his which occurred some years ago. Occupied by especial problems with which it was his calling to deal, he was for days blessed with such a degree of God's Spirit that the physical strain began to tell upon him. He was compelled to cry, "It is enough." His earthly possessions may endure for a time, but this unusually rich spiritual experience may not be taken from him.

Recalling the growth of pride in those of the past who have become wealthy, and their subsequent forgetfulness of God, there is no doubt that greater happiness would have come had they sought "first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness," and the needful things would have been added unto them. (Matthew 6: 38, Inspired Version.) The fruit of disobedience has always been a bitter thing. Many have seen this clearly, but none, perhaps have put it more expressively than Dante, in Canto VIII, of the Divine Comedy, when after seeing a group in dire torment, inquires:

"O say, my guide!
What race is this? Were these whose heads are shorn, on our left hand, all separate to the Church?
He straight replied: 'In their first life, these all
In mind were so distorted, that they made according to due measure, of their wealth
No use.'
. . . 'That ill they gave, and ill they kept, hath of the beauteous world
Deprived, and set them at this strife, which needs
No labored phrase of mine to set it off.
Now mayest thou see my son! how brief, how vain,
The goods committed into Fortune's hands,
For which the human race keeps such a coil!
Not all the gold that is beneath the moon,
Or ever hath been, of these toil-worn souls
Might purchase rest for one.' "

The scriptures are rich with promises of blessings to God's people (and instances of fulfillment are many), but the promises are conditional upon obedience to his commands. Possibly it is a concession to our human frailty, as well as a constant reminder of His love, that the promise of reward as well as the reward itself so frequently appear. Christ, however, gave all, not for himself, but for us. There was in his mind no thought of reward. No labor was too great, no pain too severe, no death too terrible, that he would not endure for us. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." These were his own words. They completely reflect his attitude. Should, then, we ask if there is a reward for the payment of tithing? Rather should not our question be, Will obedience in this thing enable us to serve as Christ has served?

* * * * * * * *

Truly, as stated at the outset of these brief studies, tithing is a precious fundamental of our faith. If the pilgrim rising from his shrine, again refreshed and strong in spirit, turns eagerly to his world of work, may not we, too, renewed by our meditations, return to our tasks with new insight of a way we may work with God to build a better world.

Only Christ Satisfied

Carlyle once said to Professor Tyndall, "There is something in man that your science can not satisfy." Science is good, philosophy is good, culture is good, but that can not satisfy the human soul. Money, for which men are losing their souls, can not satisfy, and whosoever drinks of these waters shall thirst again, but in Christ, there is a fountain from which, if we drink, we shall never thirst. During a serious illness through which Rudyard Kipling was passing some years ago, the nurse noticed the author's lips were moving, and thinking he desired something, she bent over him and heard him pray, "Now I lay me down to sleep." She apologized and begged his pardon, saying she thought he wanted something, and he replied, "I want my heavenly Father."

No man can be satisfied until his deepest nature is satisfied. Deep longings require something deeper than man's wisdom can offer. Christ comes from the depth of God's love to satisfy, and when we come to Him and awake in His likeness here and hereafter we shall be satisfied with His forgiveness, likeness, and love.—John L. Brandt, in Finding Christ; Richard R. Smith, Inc.

It is well if we take an inventory of our resisting powers and our ability to adapt ourselves to the things which may come to pass.—President Frederick M. Smith.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle E. J. Gleazer on His Way West

Apostle E. J. Gleazer left Independence yesterday, to resume work in the Pacific Slope Mission. Sunday, January 29, he will be in Salt Lake City, Utah, and from there he plans to go to Las Vegas, Nevada. A flourishing mission of the church has been established at Las Vegas, a considerable number of Saints from neighboring States being employed on the Boulder Dam project there.

Brother Gleazer's itinerary will then take him into southern California. At San Bernardino he plans to confer with W. A. Teagarden, president of the Southern California District, and a stop will be made in Los Angeles. Then he will go into Arizona to visit various branches.

Apostles Gleazer and M. A. McConley are this year associated in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, Brother Gleazer taking the southern regions, and Brother McConley the northern.

Santa Barbara From Struggling Mission to Thriving Branch

After eight years Elder G. H. Wixom returned early in January, to preach to the Saints at Santa Barbara, California. For twelve days he conducted services, being delighted to find the group now organized into a thriving branch of seventy-nine members in charge of a good corps of the priesthood. Brother Wixom, Apostle J. A. Gillen, and Brother T. M. Chapman organized the Santa Barbara Mission in January, 1925.

Burn Church Mortgage on New Year's Eve

It was with a happy feeling that the Saints of Yakima, Washington, entered the new year. They were free of debt! The crowning event of the New Year's Eve watch party at the Nutley home, was the burning of the mortgage on the church property.

The Gunsolleys in New England

Evangelist and Sister J. A. Gunsolley are conducting a series of meetings at Dennisport, Massachusetts, and plan to go from there to Fall River. They recently spent a few days with Bishop and Sister E. L. Traver at Arlington, Massachusetts. Last summer Brother and Sister Gunsolley took a trip into Maine in the interests of church work which they much enjoyed and which also was greatly appreciated by the church members of that region.

Puyallup Priesthood Set Example

The priesthood of Puyallup, Washington, are setting a splendid example of obedience to the financial law. In addition to regular ministerial activities, each priesthood member has filed his inventory, and is a regular tithepayer.

New Philadelphia Women Help in Community Project

The women's department of New Philadelphia, Ohio, cooperating with the women of the Methodist Church South, of that city, began the year by supplying noon lunches to the needy children of the vicinity. Meals are prepared and served at the Methodist Church, and collection boxes have been placed in both churches and various business places for donations to help further the project.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp Visits Minneapolis

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp has just returned to Independence after visiting his home congregation at Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he was guest and speaker the week-end of January 21 and 22. For a number of years he was an active member of that branch, and his visit home was enthusiastically received.

Next Sunday Brother DeLapp plans to spend with Saints at Richmond, Missouri, in Far West Stake.

Omaha Organizes for Young People's Convention

Workers in Omaha were thoroughly organized for the two-day young people's convention which convened there January 21. Letters were sent to about twenty-five branches and groups in eastern Nebraska and western Iowa, inviting the young members to attend the convention, and urging as many as could to avail themselves of the opportunity offered by the week of services following. Several teams of young priesthood were dispatched on the Sunday preceding the gathering to speak in neighboring branches and build up enthusiasm. Local young people were called together on an evening shortly before the convention opened, and the majority of them were assigned definite tasks.

As a result of these preparations more than one hundred and fifty young people were expected to attend these meetings designed especially for them. Council Bluffs promised to respond with from forty to fifty; Lincoln, twenty to twenty-five, and smaller groups, too, were quick to seize the opportunity offered.

The Leadership of Jesus

By A. B. Phillips

IN ALL of the great movements of past ages there have arisen outstanding men upon whose leadership these movements depended for their success. Political giants have builded great empires, resourceful generals have won critical battles and wars, inspired artists have placed fame on canvas, and powerful orators have swayed the multitudes. The great men of distant centuries are more and more fading from the consciousness of today. They are becoming less and less real to this generation, for we are living in a different world—a world of different concepts, aims, and surroundings.

But even the vastness of the past could not lose one great figure of long ago. Indeed, that figure grows in reality and worth and might with each passing century. It is the peerless Teacher of Nazareth, who lives today more vividly and completely than ever before over all the broad earth. Never in all the ages of history has any personage arisen with such power to lead men after more than a thousand years have passed away. To what may we attribute this unequaled power? Was it in Himself, was it in His message, was it in both, or was it in neither?

Elements of Christ's Leadership

Political leaders have arisen who gained their objects by deception and at the expense of human misery. Their fame today is mingled with aversion and reproach. The military genius of the past is shrouded in our memories by the death and destruction that he wrought upon the field of battle, and perchance by the loss of a better cause than his own. The master painter has left us a portrait that grows dim and unreal after the lapse of many centuries, and more modern claims are increasing their distractions from the past. Life hurries on, and its changing scenes and interests are claiming our attention.

But in the leadership of Christ something has survived that grows more powerful and inspiring year by year. No one today knows anything about the personal appearance of Jesus, whether his form was commanding or unimpressive, whether his voice enthralled the people or seemed ordinary to them, or what were his features. Yet he must have had surpassing elements of leadership, for the fishermen were ablaze with faith when he said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." He kindled within his followers a fire that burned brightly through all the dark nights of their persecuted lives.

The leadership of Christ can not be judged by ordinary standards, for he did not employ ordinary methods. He never raised a false hope or uttered a deceptive promise; he did not seek the favor of the powerful or offer flattery to the proud; nor did he attempt to buy the patronage of the rich or the protection of the rulers. Yet his power to lead grew with astonishing rapidity, and on many occasions he led the multitudes by the thousands, actually feeding more than five thousand people who followed him on one occasion. Among the elements of his leadership were spirituality, truth, faith, wisdom, sincerity, holiness, and love. But with these went a vision of ideals and a conviction of their reality that won the devotion of yearning and honest hearts.

How Jesus Approached Men

The great spiritual comprehension of Jesus enabled him to see that worldly things do not endure and do not satisfy. He saw them only as incidental means to higher ends; and, when he saw men striving for wealth, it was his clear insight into the purpose of life that enabled him to caution his disciples:

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."—Matthew 6: 19, 20.

"Provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Luke 12: 33, 34.

In his dealings with men, Jesus did not employ the ordinary methods of approach, nor did he use them for similar ends. His every effort in human associations was directed toward the twofold objective of individual improvement and collective well-being. Every precept and every act of his amazing career gave notable emphasis to this purpose. It was fundamental to his consistent harmonizing of acts with thoughts that he should warn his followers of the disingenious methods of certain pharisaical teachers, by saying:

"Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known."—Luke 12: 1, 2.

The outstanding importance of the truths which Jesus taught were so impressive that no one could easily forget them. Indeed, they seemed to grow in power with the passage of time, so that thirty or more years afterward Matthew, Luke, and others were able to commit them to writing, apparently in all their living potency. When but twelve years old, Jesus held the rabbis of the temple enthralled by his power to teach. Years later he amazed the Pharisees when he pointed unerringly to their weakness in emphasizing little things and omitting the great things of life, and when he bared to public view the unworthy motives of their hearts while they sought the chief seats and places of honor.

Reaching the Heart of Life

Jesus reached the heart of life, both in his teachings and his deeds. To the Pharisees he gave warning:

"Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. . . . Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity."—Matthew 23: 24, 28.

To the superficial worshiper he declared:

"And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6: 46.

His advice was always supremely adapted to the type of persons with whom he discoursed. He was able to see the weakness that would prove the undoing of its possessor. To the impetuous and overzealous Peter who smote his enemy, the discerning Master commanded:

"Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."—Matthew 26: 52.

It is marvelous to realize that every one of the precepts of Jesus has found place in the very heart of the civilized world, and the growing comprehension of mankind enables them more deeply than ever before to appreciate the immortality of his great message. There is no experience or trial that is not given more divine meaning and purpose through him. To the indigent and discouraged he could say:

"Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows."—Luke 12: 6, 7.

When the humble and despised disciples contrasted their condition with that of proud and envied men of prominence, it was perhaps natural that they should begin to worry and become anxious for their own future. But Jesus showed them the insignificance of such empty and vain things, when he said to them:

"Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Luke 12: 27.

Making His Work Immortal

An element in the leadership of Jesus was his power to make the right sort of people conscious of supreme principles and to inspire their complete devotion to him and his message. Of this great power his disciples demonstrated the most wonderful examples ever known to history. It was his own sincerity and utter devotion to God that contrasted so strangely with the shallowness of those around him. Even the Roman commander who observed that devotion and faith while on the cross was forced to exclaim: "Truly this man was the Son of God!"

Though he was greater than all others among men, yet Jesus exalted his message rather than himself, declaring to the Jews:

"It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6: 63.

"My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7: 16, 17.

"If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works."—John 10: 37, 38.

In the highest sense it would be impossible for us to separate Jesus from his divine message, for he was the living embodiment of the sublime precepts which he proclaimed. But it is largely from his language, as well as from his remarkable deeds, that we are able to discern something of the wonderful and forceful personality which not only drew multitudes wherever he went but inspired them with living words of truth and light.

It was not any social or political distinction of name or family that caused the people to follow Jesus. Indeed, it was the apparent lack of any such prestige that caused those of the synagogue to become offended because of his great influence, for in astonishment they said:

"Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works? Is not this the carpenter's son?"—Matthew 13: 54, 55.

The sublime truth is that Jesus made his mission and his teachings immortal by expressing perfectly in life and words the principles that gave life in the hearts of men. Such great principles can never die, for they have the power of growth, like the mustard seed, until all nations of the world may enjoy their enduring potency.

Jesus Gave Surroundings New Meaning

Another secret of the wonderful leadership of Jesus, if it may be termed a secret, lay in the fact that he gave new and living meaning to the surroundings of life. It is well recognized as a common experience that daily and yearly contact with

By Florence Tracey

Chapter 4.—Sister Livingston Talks About People

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Brad brings a handsome young business friend home to dinner, and Edith, one of the Half Dozen, who has helped Polly in the emergency by playing maid, exclaims in a swift aside, "Polly, he's good looking! . . . Bet he's married. . . . Wouldn't it be interesting—if he isn't?" And while Polly became so absorbed in church and social duties that she nearly forgot him, Brad stayed home from church, holding company with his private thoughts. Meanwhile—

WHY so serious this evening, old dear?" gaily demanded Edith as she bounced in at the front door and tossed her books upon the lounge. "And just when I have gone and made an enormous E in a Vergil test, too."

"I was thinking."

"No! . . . Oh, is that the coat you were telling me about? What a lovely color! Blue as a—a, as —a hailstorm, isn't it? There, give me credit for being original at least."

"Yes, I'm just putting on the finishing touches. I've worked three hours on it this afternoon. Hope whoever gets it will appreciate the work on it."

"Probably won't, but, don't worry, they'll appreciate how pretty it is. Gee, I envy the girl who does get it!" And Edith danced across the room, dropped herself upon the piano bench and played a bar or two of a popular air. . . . "Oh, something happened today!"

"I surmised as much." Calmly.

"How?"

"Why, from the way you act, of course. Like a suppressed cloud, or something."

"Can't guess who I got a letter from today. It was there at noon when I got home." Edith paused only long enough for breath. "That delightful Mr. Russell that Brad brought home to dinner the other night! Why, think, Polly, it was less than a week ago that he was here! And yet," dreamily, "it seems that I have known him for years."

"What! Big business man falls for maid, and maid—" grinned Polly.

"Really, now don't tease, Polly, he wrote the nicest letter—just a short one, you know. Wants to know if I'll write to him. He says Brad told him that night that I wasn't your maid but that I was just playing at the job and helping you. He said he had more fun watching me. I'll have to scalp Brad for that! . . . Why are people always wanting to tease me, Polly?"

"Because you're so cute," smiled the other, giving her a hearty hug. "Come, want to talk to me while I start supper?"

"Let me help."

"No, there isn't much more to do. I don't want any more maid-acting around here. It seems to be too romantic for some of my friends," and Polly gave the girl a keen glance.

"Don't be funny, dear! I just think he's nice. There is no danger of my falling for him, you may rest assured. You know there isn't. You know I have my life planned. First I'm going to Graceland after I finish school, where I shall take up nurses' training. I intend to devote my days to nursing and shan't have time to fall in love, besides I'm not the romantic type."

If Polly disagreed with these assertions, she did not take the trouble to state her disagreement.

"Where's the baby?"

"Grandma Livingston has him. I went to the women's meeting at the church this afternoon, and her rheumatism was bothering her so badly that she didn't want to go, so she kept Carrol. He was asleep when I got home, and I haven't been over for the last hour or so. Oh, by the way, our sacrifice envelopes of the women in Zion totaled three hundred and sixty dollars again this week!"

"Hurrah for the feminine economists! The women will get this church out of debt yet. . . . But it occurs to me, Polly dear, that I rather rudely interrupted your chain of thought when I came in. What was it—anything I may know?"

"Why, yes. Maybe you'll be interested. We're going to have a new member in our family."

"Why—why, Polly!"

The young housewife paused long enough to put the sweet potatoes she had been preparing into the oven. They were to have a baked supper.

She laughed: "Oh, no, not that. Brad's mother is coming to visit us for a time at least. She has lived for a number of years with her two married daughters, but Brad is her only boy, and she hasn't seen him for seven years. She belongs to the church and hopes eventually to come here to live. While she is visiting us, she plans to look about for a place to stay, as if that were necessary. I'm sure she will always be welcome to stay here as long as she likes. I'm really anxious to see her. I've never met her, you know, except by letter. We planned to go out and visit her on our wedding trip, but that has never yet materialized. So, instead, she is coming here. Well—why so silent?"

"Oh," the girl's laugh was a little forced, "guess I was just stunned at the announcement. I—I hate to sound selfish, Polly—but it won't seem the same with her around. I like you and Brad and Carroll so much that—"

"Don't be silly, dear. She'll just be another person for you to like, I'm sure. Her letters are so sweet and sort of devout. She must be nice, for she has a wonderful son, you know."

"I'm afraid I don't like some devout people. Of course I like sincere devoutness like Brother Evans's kind, but some of these people who pray long prayers and bear long testimonies and then go right out of the meeting and do mean things and talk about their neighbors. Why, Polly, there's that Mr. Dalton. Hardly misses a Wednesday night telling how much he loves the gospel—and then he goes right out and teaches his children to cheat by the very things he does. He thinks he's a Christian—"

"Don't be bitter, dear."

"You'd be bitter, too, if you knew some of the people I do—always so pious and ready to tell you about your own faults."

"Oh, I think I know them," and Polly sighed. She was thinking of all the gossip she had heard about herself and her own family as well as tales about her friends,

"When's Mrs. Nelson coming?"

"In a week or two. You see it'll take her some time to get here. Oregon's a long ways."

THAT night Polly and Brad laid plans for the coming of their mother-guest.

"She can have the guest room, of course," from Polly. "And I want to finish that orchid quilt before she comes, to match the drapes. Does she like orchid?"

"I guess so. She'll like anything you fix for her, but, Polly, don't go to too much trouble."

"And while she's here we want her to have a good rest?"

"Rest? With you chasing about as you do with your work, and with her in her long-dreamed-of Zion? I wouldn't worry about her. She'll find plenty to do. She's not the idle kind."

There was something about Brad's tone that startled his wife.

"Oh, but we want it to be as pleasant as possible. I'll invite some of the women in so's she can get acquainted with them, and take her to group meeting with me."

"Now listen, Polly. This sounds funny, but don't put yourself out making things pleasant for Mother. She prefers—"

"Why, Brad!"

"Well, you don't know her as I do. She's sweet and generous and all, but Polly, she's 'agin' finding things pleasant in this world. She's oppressively religious and resigned to the sins of mankind, and you can't argue her out of it. It's just her nature. I don't mean to worry you, but just get her acquainted and then let her pick out her own friends, and she'll be happy in her way. She revels in religious melancholia, but I hope she doesn't bring it into our home. She likes to read of accidents and earthquakes and storms and terrible things, and simply exudes sympathy for the suffering."

"You mustn't talk like that, Brad. She's your mother."

"But it's the truth," he protested. "Just wait. Only, I hope she won't make my bright-eyed Polly down-hearted." His arms were about her.

"As if she could," Polly laughed up at him, "with you around to help."

But the look in his gray eyes troubled her for the rest of the week. Perhaps it was the doubt in them that caused her to take extra pains to prepare the guest room. One evening Edith helped her to clean it from top to bottom. The floor was newly waxed. The rug was sent away to the cleaners. The new quilt was a beauty. Polly brought two of her choice colonial silhouettes, wedding presents, from her treasure chest and hung them on the wall. She even sacrificed her wall picture of Brad that had hung upstairs since their marriage. And when the room was finished, the Happy Half Dozen declared it "just too peachy for words!"

Then Polly flung herself into other work that had piled up during the week. She wanted to "catch up on everything" before Mrs. Nelson's arrival.

She was still puzzling over a paragraph in the last letter from their guest-to-be: "It's lovely of you and Brad to invite me to visit you. I always try to do my best in the homes of my children. Of course, I'm used to staying with my own daughters; but I depend on my son's taste in the choice of a wife. I know that we shall be happy together, Polly, dear.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And to be with the church in Zion, I consider one of the greatest blessings. I hope that in these hard times and in the midst of a world of sin, we shall be a mutual comfort to each other, for I imagine there is the blackest sin even in Zion."

What did she mean by "try to do my best"? And what was her conception of happiness? Mutual comfort? Well, people had told Polly that she was a comforting soul.

PERHAPS the most enjoyable task the young housewife had was to fulfill a promise to Sister Livingston. She devoted Wednesday afternoon to making over a dress for her neighbor. Just after lunch she bundled Carrol into his blue jersey suit, and tripped with him across the lawn.

Since the death of her own mother, Polly had depended on Sister Livingston for counsel. The old English lady's deep faith in fundamentals and her sound judgment had many times proved a boon to her young friend.

"Polly, my child,"—that was the way she always addressed her—"I couldn't love you more if you were my own blood. That's what the gospel does for us. It is the tie that binds."

"I like to hear you talk like that, Sister Livingston, your faith helps me because nowadays there are many people who don't seem to have much of it left."

"Well, we are told to have faith in God and each other. And if we presume to be Saints of Latter Days, we must keep his commandments."

"You certainly do," the words were indistinct because Polly's mouth was full of pins. She was pinning on the new collar. "If there ever was a Christian—"

"Latter Day Saint, Polly my child. That's the title I'm proud of. Have been proud of it for more than forty-five years, long before I crossed the water. That name's something to live up to."

"Well, you certainly are a Saint," warmly. "Who is it people always call on if they have sickness or trouble or death or need of any kind. Why you'd take off your coat and give it to somebody who need something warm if I'd let you. I simply have to watch you all of the time to see that you keep something for yourself. And as for advice—" Polly cut the last snip from the new armhole—"you just can't be equaled."

"Did I ever tell you my favorite passage from Paul's writings?"

"No."

"He wrote to the Colossian Saints: 'Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom.' It takes all of my time to live that, Polly, my child."

"But you certainly do, and how I wish there were more like you." And right then and there Polly confessed a great worry—the gossip she had heard of herself and Brad. She had not told a soul except Edith whom she trusted without question. "There's not a thing to it, Sister Livingston," she declared at the end of her story, her eyes full of tears. "Some one is just maliciously doing it, or jumping to the wildest of conclusions."

Seriously, tenderly, the older woman heard her to the end. "Now just don't you worry, Polly, my child. In spite of the fact that the Lord in latter days has said, 'And let all my people be very faithful, and prayerful, and humble before me,' some aren't. We can't hide our eyes to that fact. Some don't have a mite of faith it seems. They don't know what prayer is unless awful trouble or loss drive them to their knees, and they're as conceited as," she groped for a comparison, "as a male robin in the early spring. Human frailty doesn't seem to let some people see straight, hear straight, or think straight, and you can't keep 'em quiet. I wish it were possible for all of us to be so busy we wouldn't have time to gossip, but it isn't. A gossip will tattle and make trouble no matter how busy she is, or he is. In some ways we're all of us just little children, just plain fussers. Haven't I watched the women in our Sunday school class for years, and some of our clubs. I love them every one, but sometimes I'd like to spank them."

Polly's laugh rang out. She could not help it—the picture of Sister Livingston spanking anyone was so funny.

"As long as we're human, Polly, my child, we'll go on suffering from talebearers. Most gossip is just the outgrowth of envy and jealousy; that's why people who do things are always gossiped about. Haven't you read what terrible things people told on Christ—why, they crucified Him! And the servant is no greater than his Master, so we must suffer. It's a part of our growth. And someday there'll be a checking up of all the things that have happened here on earth, and we'll find where we each stand. Just forget it, Polly, my child, as fast as you can. But just let me hear anyone say something like that. If I don't put my foot down!—"

Carrol had waked up from his nap, and as soon as she was released from a fitting, Sister Livingston bore him away to the kitchen to milk and crackers.

Polly sat quietly stitching on the hem of the dress. She was thinking of her neighbor's favorite quotation: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." Was she doing that to the best of her ability? She would forget what she had

The Heritage W. W. Phelps Has Given Us

By L. B. M.

Sometimes we are distressingly casual about things which should mean much to us. Sometimes we take our privileges so for granted, that we miss a world of appreciation. Here is an example—

"Redeemer of Israel,
Our only delight,
On whom for a blessing we call:
Our shadow by day,
And our pillar by night,
Our king, our companion, our all."

THE other night I heard a congregation, a large congregation, sing this traditional song of the Saints. How appealing is its sentiment; how reassuring are its words! It is a song of assurance and exaltation, a dream realized in song. It breathes bigness, joy, and hope. And yet very often we sing it matter-of-factly, even laboriously, and sometimes almost grudgingly.

In Independence "Redeemer of Israel" is an important conference-opening song whether for the General Conference of the church or for quarterly conference in Zion. The worn copies of the old Saints' Hymnal are much thumbed in the neighborhood of No. 158; and it will not be many years before the new Hymnals will bear a like appearance at No. 190.

While we were singing, I fell to thinking of the man who gave us this song as it is, who rearranged another's thoughts to fit our particular Latter Day Saint need, William W. Phelps.

He was a pioneer of the press, a printer, an early churchman and missionary, a gentleman, a stalwart. His was an eventful life, and it leaves us a heritage rich with faith, conviction, loyalty, and hope.

Almost one hundred and two years ago William W. Phelps and his family arrived at Kirtland, Ohio. He was a man who "desired to know the will of God concerning himself," and after praying over the matter, he received instruction directing him that he was called to the ministry and to assist in the literary work of the church. (In this connection read Doctrine and Covenants 55.)

He was a member of the party which accompanied Joseph Smith to the land of Missouri in the summer of 1831. They left Kirtland, June 19, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Martin Harris, Edward Partridge, Joseph Coe, W. W. Phelps, and A. S. Gilbert and wife. At Saint Louis Brothers Smith, Phelps, Harris, Partridge and Coe went on foot to Independence, arriving about the middle of July and a little ahead of the rest of the party who came by water.

On the first Sunday after the arrival of this party in Jackson County, there is record that W. W. Phelps preached to an audience of white pioneers, Negroes, and Indians, and that on that day two were baptized.

We have every reason to suppose that he was present on the second day of August when Joseph Smith assisted the Coleville Branch to lay the first log for a house, as a foundation for Zion in Kaw Township, twelve miles west of Independence. At that hour Elder Rigdon consecrated with prayer the land of Zion and dedicated it for the gathering of the Saints.

He is named as one of those present at the dedication of the spot for the Lord's Temple, "A little west of Independence," August 3.

The next day the first conference in the land of Zion convened, and we can picture the interest of Brother Phelps in all the affairs of Zion and the church.

Those were eventful days for the few chosen to give the gospel again to the world. Many times they were given revelations, helping, instructing, rebuking, teaching. And during those days W. W. Phelps was frequently mentioned in revelation.

During the year which followed, Brother Phelps was instructed to purchase a press and type and to establish and publish a monthly paper at Independence. This was The Evening and the Morning Star. The journal's purpose was to give the Saints fair press representation, to print revelations from time to time and other information to enlighten the inquirer after truth. It early advocated the establishment of common schools for the education of the children in a pioneer country. Its first copy, issued in June, 1832, proved a treat to the Saints back at Kirtland. In May of that year W. W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer were chosen to review and prepare such revelations as were deemed proper for publication, and three thousand copies of the Book of Commandments were ordered for the first edition printed by W. W. Phelps & Co.

But the work of this company was rudely interrupted in July, 1833, when the printing office and dwelling house of W. W. Phelps was demolished by a mob. Mrs. Phelps, with a sick infant child, and the rest of her children and the household furniture, were thrown out of doors. The press was broken, type pied, book work, furniture, and other office property and equipment destroyed. Feeling ran high. The mob ordered the Saints to leave the county, and threatened their lives. Three days later with others Brother Phelps offered himself as a ransom for the church, being willing to die if that would appease the anger of the mob toward the church.

During the stormy days which followed he conducted himself as a minister for Christ. Once he accompanied others of his brethren to visit the governor of Missouri, carrying a petition concerning the Saints. In July, 1834, the High Council of Zion was organized in Clay County, Missouri, and he was one of the assistant presidents. A year later he and John Whitmer, "Presidents of the Church in Missouri," arrived at Kirtland, and there Brother Phelps and his son, Waterman, assisted the committee in compiling the book of Doctrine and Covenants. In 1836 he was a president of the High Council in Zion; at another time, assistant president of Far West Branch.

What faith it must have taken in the midst of such vicissitudes as the early Saints in Missouri experienced, to write:

"We know he is coming
To gather his sheep,
And plant them in Zion, in love;
For why in the valley
Of death should they weep,
Or alone in the wilderness rove?"

Was he thinking of their plight, driven from home, their property confiscated, their lives threatened, when he wrote the third verse?

"How long we have wandered
As strangers in sin,
And cried in the desert for thee!
Our foes have rejoiced
When our sorrows they've seen;
But Israel will shortly be free."

They had wandered in sin. God rebuked them for their disobedience. They were admonished to be faithful and prayerful. Revelations given to them during this season contain such significant statements as: "Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands," and "My people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience," and "In consequence of the transgression of my people . . ."

But great were the promises given the Saints if they would do the will of the Lord. He would fight their battles. He would give their elders a "great endowment and blessing" if they were faithful. He would bring them together in a redeemed Zion.

And so the last verse of our hymn is one of joyous promise:

"As children of Zion,
Good tidings for us;
The tokens already appear;
Fear not and be just,
For the kingdom is ours,
And the hour of redemption is near."

To us this hymn should be a living lesson. We can not afford to take it for granted. It catches up and presents to us the heritage not only of one man but of a people. Are we so much better than they that we can afford to be casual over this the expression of their faith and hope?

It is well that we sing this song often, that is if we think of the words we sing. Thoughtful singing of this hymn will dispel confusion, antagonism, personal littleness and selfishness. If the Redeemer of Israel is truly "our only delight," if we do honestly call on him "for a blessing," if we know "he is coming to gather his sheep, and plant them in Zion, in love," if we are assured that "Israel will shortly be free," if we have a knowledge that "the kingdom is ours, and the hour of redemption is near"—in short, if we (every member) believe what we sing, the ensuing meeting can not but be one of harmony, unity, and helpfulness.

Notes on Prohibition

Prohibition has been a great benefit to American agriculture, to the increase of dairy products and the increased standards of living of the consumer. It takes more grain to make a quart of milk than a quart of beer, and the increase in the use of dairy products has been especially marked since Prohibition.—Walter H. Lloyd, editor of the Ohio Farmer, of Cleveland.

Everyone of the older faculty members and citizens with whom I have talked is positive that conditions have improved both as to the town and university as a result of the prohibition law.—Dean H. E. Stone, West Virginia University, Morgantown, West Virginia.

My conviction is very strong that there is much less drinking by students than there was before 1920. Drunkenness among undergraduates seems to be exceedingly rare at the present. It was not at all uncommon in the earlier period.—Professor Cecil C. North, Ohio State University, sociology.

Elder T. J. Jett

By Inez Kinney

ALL THESE grilling experiences, hard work and dangers did not harden the heart or coarsen the fine character of Thomas Jett. Rather they tended to build a strong fibre of body and a clean, wholesome quality of soul. The religious influence of grandparents and parents, contact with early Christian leaders as well as a natural tendency toward the religious—inborn faith in God—had their great part in shaping a religious attitude that has grown finer throughout the years. At one time, Elder Sutherland, a Methodist preacher, held services for the Mexicans at Medina Rio and the lad attended some of these services and learned to read Spanish from the hymn books. Services were held in one of the Mexican houses or in an open space outdoors, and often the whole family attended. Then came Elder Bays who first preached in the home of Tom's uncle, Andrew Kuykendall. He was impressed by the sermons, saying they had the "right ring" but he did not then obey. He attended meetings of various denominations and being a "thinker" weighed the evidence carefully for he was determined to find the right church. The more he studied, the truer became the "ring" of the Gospel story as taught by these missionaries. As time went on other Latter Day Saint elders had come into the community, confirming the message of the first. Among these were Heman C. Smith, I. N. Roberts, Elder Kato, J. W. Gillen (Apostle Gillen's father), A. B. Moore, and Johnie Currie. Full obedience came in 1893 when he was baptized by Elder A. B. Moore, the ordinance of confirmation being given under the hands of Elders Moore and J. W. Gillen. The words of that confirmation which Elder Jett remembers so distinctly were, "show forth the preparation of the gospel, and you shall carry this gospel to a dark and benighted people." From then on he earnestly endeavored to obey that injunction and did verily carry the gospel to a dark and benighted people, working for many years among them and bringing many of them to a knowledge of, and obedience to it.

After baptism the young member greatly desired a spiritual manifestation which would confirm his belief and strengthen his faith. He had studied the word and believed he had joined the true church, but prayed for a spiritual experience which would prove an added assurance of the truth of the Gospel and of the angel message. Others had told of seeing lights and of having wonderful experiences and he wished for himself a like blessing.

The bedroom of the house in which the Jett family lived at this time was large. Besides the bed in which the parents slept was one in which the three little sons slept, and a cot for the two little girls.

The experience in Elder Jett's words:

"One night when the family was sleeping in a dark room, some being touched me and woke me up. I woke and looked. I saw a light and a personage, seemingly right by the side of the bed, in the air, on the side where my wife was sleeping. I, of course, had a desire to wake my wife that she might see this also, but I was speechless. I couldn't talk—couldn't utter a word. I felt my weakness in the presence of a heavenly being. It continued there for a short time then moved to the northwest corner of the room where my two little daughters were sleeping on a cot. Their feet were together and heads in opposite directions. So bright was the light that I could see the little feet as plainly as I can see you at this moment. The personage stood in the air over the children's feet. It stayed for a moment or two then disappeared right out of the northwest corner of the room.

"I wondered why it was I could not show the heavenly being to my wife, and it was made known to me that I had prayed for a testimony and she had not, and this was the reason I was not permitted to wake her. Also I was unable to move with the knowledge of my sinful condition in the presence of the heavenly being.

"I wondered why the personage went to the cot of the little girls. It was made known to me in the latter part of my life, that these two girls were to be a comfort to me in my old age. Three small boys were also sleeping in the bedroom. The light was about the personage and was pure white."

SOME time in the year 1894 a brother, T. J. Shepherd, then living in the Chicasaw nation—now Oklahoma— visited Oak Island, Texas. He advised the Saints of the better soil and living conditions in the territory, altogether a more prosperous land. The young rancher and his wife were finally persuaded and made immediate preparation to move to Oscar Branch, "The Nations."

It appears that the venture was unfortunate, for bad luck attended from the beginning. Shortly after the new home was established at Oscar Branch, Elder Simmons gave a prophetic message at a meeting of the members, which brought consternation and dismay to the Saints—especially to the new arrivals.

The message advised the Saints of a scourge that would shortly be visited upon the infidels of "The Nations," and that wisdom directed leaving as soon as practicable. Brother Jett and his wife with the others of the branch later met at the Gooch home for prayer—T. J. Shepherd also being present. At this prayer meeting, brother Jett was spoken to in prophecy and told that it was wisdom to leave the territory. Then came a time of distress, turmoil, and grief for the young couple. They were living—crowded and uncomfortable—in a half dug-out; there was little or no money; oats had been planted and it seemed unwise to leave, losing the seed, their time and labor; and it was difficult to sell the oats in the field. All the members except the family of Brother Jett and his uncle, left the territory—headed Zionward.

The young man prayed every day in the open for further light, but his prayers seemed not to avail and his distress of spirit was keen. One day when out in the field he say a red cloud coming. He hurried home and told his wife that a sand storm was coming. They gathered the frightened children and went into the dugout as the storm struck—screaming, tearing, twisting, and driving sand into crack or crevice, through everything not solid enough to resist the terrific force. A large box (four feet square) full of bedding and clothing, left outside because of the need for haste, was taken up and carried away—not a vistage of either box or contents ever being seen again. The loss was serious for most of the family clothing was in the box and there was little or no money for more. Great damage to gardens, crops, and stock was done and the young strangers felt their sore afflictions keenly, though their faith in the gospel remained firm. The dugout home had been so damaged by the storm that the family moved into a better log house and dugout combined. Here the young couple were praying one day for direction when the spirit of prophecy fell upon the wife and she arose from her knees and said to her husband—"Go home. Your work is there—waiting for you."

But Brother Jett was not satisfied; he continued to pray saying, "I want the evidence for myself." While still on his knees the spirit came upon him in such power that his whole body shook and he exclaimed, "Lord! It is enough." About this time Sister Jett was given a dream in which she saw that they were all asleep. A storm was coming and Elder A. B. Moore came to warn them of the danger. He carried a lantern and the family followed him to safety. Some time after the dream, Elder Moore made a trip to the territory and visited at Brother Jett's home. He said, "Go home to San Antonio. Your work is waiting for you."

The family now began active preparations to move, and the oats were finally sold in the field. Possibly because of the hardships and worry of this distressing time, Sister Jett became ill, but bravely continued preparations for the departure, in accordance with directions given. Heavy rains brought flood conditions making river crossings difficult and dangerous. At this time a beautiful little two-year-old girl became ill, and died in a few days. (Sister Jett tells of this time, with agitation and she arises to pace the floor.) After the burial of the baby, the family went to stay with the uncle, and in a short time left for San Antonio.

AFTER starting back to San Antonio Brother Jett was given a night vision in which he saw the group of Mexicans he was to labor among in the "bottom" at Medina. He carried the gospel message to them and afterwards worked among them in San Antonio, baptizing about forty there.

He was ordained a priest, then an elder by Heman C. Smith and was told at this time that his work would be "among a people whose language he knew." His first work, in carrying the gospel message, was with this people, has continued largely, with them since—and has born fruit.

In 1901 when preaching to Mexicans on Medina Rio, Elder Jett was approached by a Mexican who had listened to his sermons and told of a Mexican Baptist minister who was preaching to a group of Mexicans in San Antonio and asked him to visit the services as the Baptist preacher had said he would be glad to permit men of other denominations to preach also.

Elder Jett, accordingly, attended a service and was invited to preach. He occupied only about twenty minutes, but the Mexicans were pleased. Elder Jett depended on the Lord for spiritual direction and told the listener that he would preach the truth "though the heavens fall." After the short sermon a number came and asked him to come again and preach the truth to them. However he hesitated about coming again for the Baptist preacher, though apparently friendly, was not eager to have the stranger invade his sheepfold and disturb his little flock.

Of this group of Mexicans were a Senor Menchaca and his wife. They were a very intelligent and capable couple, and Senior Menchaca was greatly impressed by the evident sincerity of Elder Jett. He told his wife, who was not present at the meeting, of the talk by the strange preacher.

Senor Menchaca felt free to choose any preacher they might prefer, since he provided the little church building; so decided to ask Elder Jett to preach the next Sunday. However no one knew his address and there was difficulty in locating him. Among the group who had attended the Sunday service was one who said he had seen Elder Jett at the City Market. Accordingly, Senor Menchaca went to the market place and soon found the man he sought. Approaching, he said, "Are you the man who preached for the Mexicans Sunday?" Elder Jett answered that he was. "Will you came and preach for us next Sunday?" Elder Jett assured him of his willingness to come and preach to the group, but hesitated to offend the Baptist preacher. Senor Menchaca then asked Elder Jett to come and take full charge, assuring him that he (the Senor) had authority, since he furnished the building and equipment. All was then settled and the real work began.

The next Sunday he preached in the morning to an interested group, held prayer service in the afternoon and preached again in the evening. After the morning service, Elder Jett went to an old quarry for a half hour of prayer and meditation. While he was gone, Senora Menchaca was going from door to door among her neighbors, inviting them to come to the services. From then on Senora Menchaca was a tireless and faithful worker, and Elder Jett speaks of her in highest praise—not merely of her faithful work but of her intelligence, ability, and spiritual insight.

Before the coming of Elder Jett, she had asked God to send a man "as sincere and as valiant as John the Baptist." Later she testified that when he came she had witness of the spirit that he was the man sent in answer to her prayers.

Senor Menchaca brought a picture to Elder Jett of two men laying hands on the head of a youth. He asked Elder Jett if his church practiced the laying on of hands, and on being assured that it did, he answered, "Well then, I am ready for baptism." Shortly after this both he and his wife were baptized, and later their daughter.

The Mexican Baptist preacher was somewhat disturbed by the evident preference for Elder Jett. He would endorse all that Elder Jett preached, but tried to dissuade the people from being baptized, saying it was not necessary. However, those who believed were baptized and the preacher accused Elder Jett of "stealing his flock." Great faith was manifested among many of the members and they have remained strong in the faith.

AN INTERESTING story is told of the religious experience of the daughter of Senor and Senora Menchaca. She had not obeyed the gospel, though believing, but one afternoon Elder Jett went to call on her in pastoral capacity. She was living on an acreage and was out tending her cows when Elder Jett drove in. She came to the vehicle and said, "I want you to baptize me Sunday. When I saw you drive in I knew I should be baptized." Accordingly, arrangements were made for the ordinance, but sometime during the week she was taken ill. She continued ill up to Sunday, and some of the elders as well as members, questioned the wisdom of baptism under the circumstances. However, the daughter was determined and her mother settled the question by saying, "She is my daughter and she is ill, but I want her to be baptized; then if God wants to take her, es bien—it is all right."

On Sunday, the party drove fourteen miles to Salado Creek but found the stream muddy and difficult to walk into. Elder Jett walked up stream until he came to a deep clear pool of water. The banks being very steep here, two of the brethren lifted the daughter and let her down into the water to Elder Jett. He noted her lips moving and saw that she was in prayer, so waited till the prayer was finished, then baptized her. He helped her up the bank to the brethren and she was taken home. She then asked for food, and declared she was instantly healed when baptized. The rejoicing of this group of trusting people, in this added evidence of God's approval of them, can easily be understood.

Afterwards severe trials came to this daughter. Her husband, none too reliable in prosperity, abandoned her when adversity came. Having no children of her own the daughter had adopted a boy. A mortgage had been placed on her modest home and there seemed no possible way to save the place and provide for herself and the adopted boy. It is quite likely that in the effort to encourage her daughter to carry on bravely the mother had appeared unsympathetic. Whatever the cause of the misunderstanding, the daughter went back to her little home after a visit to her mother, feeling that she was forsaken of all—her husband, her mother, and her God. In her overwrought condition she decided to end her life. She secured poison and afterward told the pitiful story of waiting until the boy was asleep and she was quite alone, then lifting the glass of poison to her lips—or making the attempt. She testified that some force prevented the glass from reaching her lips. In wonderment she tried again and—behold, the Master stood before her. He chided her for the attempt on her life. Then, when able to speak through the paralyzing effects of awe and amazement, she told him of her griefs and struggles; of her failures and discouragement. She told Elder Jett, that the Master smiled on her and said, "Trust me. I will help you." It was an amazing experience, and she, "one of the least of these." It brought peace, courage, and confidence. The next day she was able to secure work and her fortunes began to improve. She not only found pleasure in her work and in providing for her adopted boy, whom she educated and raised to be a credit to her, but had great joy in the service of her Master.

She paid for her little home and is still carrying on—a faithful servant in the kingdom.

SOME exciting and probably dangerous experiences fell to the lot of Elder Jett during the years of his labors with the people "whose language he spoke." One night when preaching in the neighborhood of the Menchacas, a mob gathered, and soon stones began to hit the small building in which the meetings were held. These buildings in the south are none too substantial at best, and there are numerous windows, usually, for the climate is warm enough to make the advent of any stray breeze very acceptable.

Elder Jett continued preaching, but the men of the audience quietly gathered about him to take the blows from any stones which might be directed at the speaker. One does not remember of having read or heard of any such loyalty, or protecting care as this, from a Gentile congregation. When the service was ended, the same group of men kept closely about the elder ,until he was safely on his car so that none of the stones thrown should hit him.

At another time, after an evening service, he was walking through a lonely section to reach a car line. The road passed by a thicket and under a bridge. Near the far end on the right-hand side of the bridge was a house, on the porch of which sat a man and woman—evidently quarreling.

As Elder Jett came out from under the bridge, he saw the woman enter the house and immediately the man left the porch and made his way past the thicket and off toward the railroad tracks. As Elder Jett was walking past the house, the woman came out of the door holding a revolver in her hand. Seeing Elder Jett walking past she undoubtedly mistook him for the man who had just left the porch. She took a shot at him, then shouted out, "You'd better move along. I'm coming again." At that she fired again, the bullet scattering gravel on Elder Jett's feet and legs—as the first shot had done. He reported the occurance to police but on being questioned, the woman declared that a prowler had disturbed her and she had attempted to frighten him away. Having heard something of the quarrel, Elder Jett doubted her story and believed she had mistaken him for the man sitting with her on the porch and with whom she had been quarreling. Moreover, he believed that she had intended to shoot him.

Many heart-stirring incidents developed and passed on into the "shadow land of memory," leaving their impress and their influence. Who knows how far such influence spread, or how potent for good. One such incident occurred during the early years of Elder Jett's ministry among the Mexicans. He had been preaching in a house across the street from his own. Many became interested, among whom was an aged Mexican by the name of Cruz. The old fellow loved to walk, and was seen here and there about the city—always walking.

One day he tripped on a stone and fell —breaking his hip. He was taken home and put to bed—suffering great pain. He called for Elder Jett and asked for administration. Elder Jett administered several times and each time the old man experienced relief from pain. However, it became evident that the end was near and the Priest was called to absolve him. He had also been attended by a physician, but had received no benefit. The family was opposed to the ministrations of Elder Jett, and after the priest was called, was instructed not to permit further administrations. The sufferings of the poor old fellow grew more intense and he kept calling for Elder Jett, holding out his hands in pleading, but the family refused. They sent for a young man to say or read prayers over him since they could not afford the services of the priest, but the old man found no relief. At last Elder Jett was told that the old man was calling for him and that he could come in and see him, but could not administer. When the elder went in Senor Cruz held out both hands saying, "Jette, Jette," "Jette, I've been raised a Catholic and the priest has visited me and prayed over me and the doctor has been to see me and the young man has said prayers over me but I never did get any relief. But every time you administer to me yo seinto alevia— I felt relief. I've been raised a Catholic, but your church is the true church of God."

When he was dying, his relatives would place the Crucifix on his breast, and each time he would brush it off. This continued until the last breath. Needless to say that Elder Jett was not permitted to offer spiritual solace after the instructions of the priest.

Elder Jett continued to preach in the "house across the street," as opportunity offered. On a lot fronting on the next street a Mexican by the name of Eulajio Valdez had a store. The back of the lot, which was fenced, ran up close to the back of the house in which the meetings were held. The Mexican had often been invited to come to church, but had refused. However, he would walk down his lot, lean on the fence and listen to the sermons. Afterwards he said to Elder Jett, "I listened many times and all you preached is true. I could not come in because I had to watch the store, but I believe your preaching." He lived in a jacal (small Mexican house) near the store and early one morning when Elder Jett was standing out in his yard he heard a gun shot. At that, the Mexican's girl came running out of the jacal screaming that her father had killed himself. In Elder Jett's words: "I ran to the house to learn the cause of the trouble and found Senor Valdez lying across a single bed with his feet on the floor, blood oozing from his breast. He had shot himself through the heart with a Winchester rifle, using his toes to pull the trigger. So that ended the story of his life. He had told me that his wife and another woman were gossips. That he wanted to sell his place but the woman 'kept his wife from signing the deed.' Senor Eulajio Valdez was a high spirited and excitable man and in a moment of insanity had committed the deed. He was pursuaded concerning the truth of the gospel and admitted he should obey, but delayed."

Thus flowed and ebbed the tide of life for the man who took the gospel to a "dark and benighted people." He has continued his ministry among this people until now, at an advanced age, being too frail to engage in active, continuous work. He will continue to labor where and when he can, according to his strength. While the number of baptisms were not great, the extent of his influence for good, only the living God can know.

Here is his simple testimony: "I know this is the true church of Jesus Christ. I have received many manifestations which have proved to me that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true church. My desire and determination is to continue faithful and to be worthy to meet my Lord and Master."

heard as fast as she could. She would go right on working and working even though she knew she would be tired and discouraged at times. It was not an easy thing to live in Zion.

"O Lord," she prayed within her heart, "give me courage for my tasks. Teach me thy patience and thy love. Help me to be grateful for the church, my family, my friends, and guide me as I learn to 'dwell in you richly in all wisdom.' Amen."

It is all a matter of contrasts. The fetish worshipers of Africa kill through ignorance, superstition and distorted reasoning. Civilized people kill for greed, for love, for hate, for political power. In the last analysis, it is easier to forgive the savage slayer than the killer of an enlightened race. Civilization must progress far before it protects human life adequately, and that progress is needed as badly in New York, Chicago, Paris, and London as in the jungles of the "dark continent."

Youth Builds a New World of Its Own

A Courageous Challenge of Our Economic System by Young People in British Columbia

The following, selected from an Associated Press dispatch to the Kansas City Star, gives the story of how a group of young people, determined to work out for themselves a better way of life, are going ahead with the plans for an ideal community. We shall watch their progress with great interest.

Planning a Utopia where "each shall labor for all and all for each," the Canadian Young People's Cooperative Society has taken an option on a site for a communal colony at Sooke, near here. . . .

Eighty acres of rich land, blessed by climatic conditions which insure bounteous crops, a long stretch of sandy beach, a harbor providing shell food and fish, and virgin forest abounding in game—that is the picture which has attracted the interest of the Young People's Society.

A colony of about three hundred religious students spent nearly one quarter million dollars in establishing the settlement. A general assembly hall and twenty-four buildings, including an office structure, laundry, cheese factory, workshop and small cottages still stand, although somewhat overgrown by thick underbrush.

The Young People's Society, which has its headquarters in Jasper, Alberta, is headed by H. A. MacDougall, president, and A. C. Morris, secretary-treasurer.

Literature of the society explains the organization believes that "by concerted effort in the field, factory and workship, in religious and spiritual matters and in every branch of endeavor generally touching the common interests of man, social equity and happiness may be ultimately attained."

By midsummer, it is hoped, sufficient progress may have been made to permit the admittance of wives of the first colonists or other young women. While Morris points out that it is "essentially a young people's colony," the presence of older people will be considered necessary as "a steadying influence."

"No man or woman entering the colony will be compelled, except under the direct necessity, to work at any phase of industry to which he or she is by nature unfitted," a pamphlet says. "The proceeds of each colonist's labor, be it mental or physical, will go to the general welfare of the colony, of which each colonist is a component member.

"The profits will afford an opportunity to concentrate more and more upon those finer things in life which only sound economic conditions and true domestic felicity make it possible for us to enjoy."

Three hundred to five hundred colonists are expected. They will live in family groups. Applicants will be selected from members of the society who convince a governing committee that they believe in "production for use and not for profit."

our surroundings may make them seem commonplace and lacking in interest and incentive to high action. It is only our own dullness and lack of mental vigor that most commonly produce this result, for all things around us are filled to overflowing with new wonders waiting to be discovered and employed for our enjoyment and good.

Jesus showed convincingly that all the temporal things of life are designed of God for spiritual and eternal ends. It is the temporal things alone that decay and lose their charm and desirability. From this truth the poet drew his inspiration when he said:

"Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away:
Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, abide with me!"

In every act and purpose of this life Jesus saw eternal significance. When Satan sought to tempt him, urging that he satisfy his hunger by turning stones into bread, the great Metaphysician refuted the false proposal and reasserted the true motive of action by saying:

"It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matthew 4: 4.

With the useful salt, which had come to be full of symbolic meaning in the "covenant of salt" and other Jewish ceremonials, Jesus illustrated another most important lesson when he charged the disciples with their great responsibility to the world by saying:

"Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted?"—Matthew 5: 13.

From the familiar flocks of sheep scattered over the Judean hillsides came another great lesson to his followers from the "good Shepherd" who "giveth his life for his sheep." Even in the presence of that great mystery, death, came his assurance of endless day. Eternal power was in his voice when he proclaimed before the tomb of Lazarus:

"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11: 25.

His Leadership Personal and Social

A new purpose, a new meaning, and new ideals of life, were expressed in the leadership of Christ. This expression gave inspiration in the lives of men in two important ways. It moved them to higher endeavors of personal conduct worthy of immortality and the society of their Lord. It also turned their hearts toward the brotherhood and fraternity which Jesus proclaimed as the only power that can regenerate the social body among all nations. Without the consciousness of God personal responsibility to the highest ideals will not be assumed and observed, and without the sense of brotherhood in this world there will be no recognition of the divine Fatherhood which is over all.

The influence of Jesus in the personal conduct of men is become so widespread and so deep-seated in daily thinking, that no man fully realizes to what extent it actuates his purposes and his life. But it is even more impossible to estimate and express the multitude of influences derived from him which permeate the complexity of social relations among all the highly civilized nations of the world today. Without this stabilizing monitor to uphold organized society, our social order would disintegrate and collapse throughout the earth.

The Messianic concept will change swords into plowshares, make the vine and fig tree the symbol of social safety, because he whose interests are expressed in brotherhood will merge all interests in the God of beneficence and love. Jesus was the supreme moralist, but he was also the perfect economist. He taught that to secure social and economic safety we must abolish antagonism, envy, rivalry, and greed. And he proclaimed and demonstrated the law of brotherly love as the means to that end.

The Miracle of Unselfish Leadership

Jesus was not the leader of a moment, but of all ages. Many leaders of tremendous worldly power and resource have arisen, dominated for a brief time, and disappeared for ever. Most of them are now all but forgotten, save for the bloodshed and misery they caused. But Jesus was without wealth, political friends, or social supporters; yet he rules more men today than any empire on earth. He saw the things of which enduring kingdoms are made, and he showed men how to sift the chaff from the wheat. His inspiration is still the greatest power in all the world, for his leadership is that of devotion to all. Even Renan the skeptic is eager to render him homage, and I close with this selection of his eulogy:

"Jesus was not a founder of dogmas, or a maker of creeds; he infused into the world a new spirit. . . . He was the first to proclaim the royalty of the mind; the first to say, at least by his actions, 'My kingdom is not of this world.' The foundation of true religion is indeed his work: after him, all that remains is to develop it and render it fruitful."—Life of Jesus, page 382, ff.

Prayer and Testimony

This Is a Marvelous Work and a Wonder

By John McCoy

About thirty-three years ago I was invited to the meeting place of the Saints on West Crosier Street, Akron, Ohio. Elder McConnaughy was preaching and later A. H. Parsons lectured on the two-way chart (Matthew 7: 13, 14). Among the many good thoughts he gave us was that if we wanted to know which church was right we should ask God. I considered that the most reasonable thing I ever heard. I listened to the sermons and was convinced that this man had more truth than I had heard before. So one night wife and I went home and after discussing the matter for some time, she retired, and I knelt down and offered a prayer to God. I was thirty-two years old and had never offered a prayer before. Light and truth came to me which I will never forget. I was convinced that God still speaks to his people.

About three months later my wife and I were baptized. It was the middle of January and the water was icy cold. My wife had a cold and could not speak aloud, but after she had changed her wet clothes, she had no cold. After I was confirmed by the laying on of hands, the Spirit rested on me and I could see that chart and could understand it from one end to the other. This I had not been able to do before.

I was ordained to the office of teacher about three months after that, and then the Saints wanted me to preach. I was scheduled to preach the next Sunday night, but when the time arrived I had a very sore throat and could not talk. The appointment was made for the next Sunday night, and when I arrived at the church that night the room was full. In the front seat sat a retired preacher of another faith. He liked our people and came frequently. I took my place and thought of Ezekiel and the dry bones shaking in the valley, for I was shaking with fear. But when I picked up my Bible, all fear left me. For a text I took John 3: 5: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." I preached for one hour and twenty minutes and saw only one man in the congregation and that was the preacher. I enjoyed a spirit that I had never before received, and from that night until the present time, I have been preaching. Later I was ordained a priest, and January 28, 1906, to the office of elder by G. A. Smith, E. Miller, and A. R. Manchester. I have preached all over Summit County, on the streets, in halls, in houses, in parks, and in the American Catholic Church.

The Sunday that we went to the Catholic Church, wife and I were late. First mass was over, and the priest said that the next mass would start in about one half hour. He said that there were some things in the Bible they did not understand, and I asked him what some of these things were. "The Godhead" he replied. So when mass was about half over, he blew out the candles and said, "We will hear from Elder McCoy." I took the Godhead for my theme and for about thirty minutes endeavored to show that God is the eternal Father and Jesus Christ the Son of God and that the Holy Ghost is to guide all men to all truth. What a glorious thing it is to be in the light! They thanked me for the talk.

I have been blessed many times and in many places, and some of the greatest blessings I have received in the pulpit. I have found everything in this church that I expected to find and some things I did not expect, but that has been the case in all ages.

We retired early one night and at ten o'clock a man knocked at the door. He wanted me to go with him to see his neighbor. The man had run a nail in his foot and gangrene had set in. He was suffering severely. I knelt down and prayed for him and administered to him. The next morning he was much better and his foot got well. That was about ten years ago, and I met him the other day and he said, "Mr. McCoy, do you see that foot?"

"Yes," I replied.

"I can thank you that I have it."

"Not I," was my reply, "but God. Give the praise to him."

Here I would like to tell of a wonderful case of healing. A brother in Barberton, Ohio, who is a carpenter by trade, hit a nail with a hammer, and it slipped and struck him in the eye, point first. He was taken to the hospital, and the doctor said his eye would have to come out. He was lying there one morning with his eyes closed. Suddenly he looked up and an old man stood beside his bed. Though his lips looked as fresh as a young man's, he wore a long white beard. As the sick man was about to speak, the visitor waved his hand over the bed and disappeared. "Who do you think it was?" I questioned the brother, and he replied that he was impressed it was John the Revelator. That afternoon he sent for the elders, Brother Hammond and A. R. Manchester. The next morning he slipped the bandage off and could see. When the doctors told him they were ready to remove the eye, he said, "But, doctor, I can see!"

"You can't see and you will never see out of that eye," replied the physician.

But when the patient insisted, he slipped the bandage off, and to his surprise he saw the eye had filled up and was again normal.

I saw this man about two weeks ago and one could not tell by his appearance that he had ever been hurt. Christ said these signs will follow those that believe.

My Christmas of 1932

By D. H. Schmidt

Recently I attended the Christmas program at the Church —a pageant depicting the coming and mission of the Christ child. In its contemplation I was led to exclaim: "Say what we may of Christianity, there is in this a more beautiful inspiration, a wonderful fascination that is unequaled in any other story the world over." I do not believe any theosophy or other philosophy in all the ages has ever evolved such a sublime and wonderful story to attract the attention, engage the emotion, and stimulate the thought of man to higher aspirations than this wonder of wonderful stories. Under its inspiration I feel it has a power (if we were fit) to revive and enliven our souls. I can not help thinking that if I were sufficiently responsive it would, as it were, lift me beyond the limits of the present environment unto a taste of the great eternity, and in spite of any present outward suffering, I might realize heaven within my soul. I can not help thinking that what I lack of being able to envision this fully is my limitation and not the limitation of this Christ story. I feel it to be my shortness and not the lack of an actual Christ in the story that causes my blindness. That sense of divine love and mercy that sometimes to a degree pervades our sordid minds is nowhere so beautifully depicted, or accounted for as in this story of Divine birth, of mother love, of angelic regard of the Babe of Bethlehem that I saw portrayed in drama that night.

Prayer and Testimony

Dreams of Church's Need of Loyal Support

By William C. Porter

The gospel means everything to me. I have had many evidences that it is true. I feel impressed to write this experience to you.

I have been much concerned about raising the church budget. I prayed that it might be done. On the night of November 23, I had a dream. In it I thought I saw a large signboard. This board was large and white and decorated with beautiful painted letters, but I was not able to read the writing. The sign had been blown over by a terrific gale. The standards were not broken, but had become loosened from their support, thus letting the sign about halfway down to the ground.

In my dream a few people were working on the sign, trying to lift it up into place. They lifted again and again, but were unable to raise it. It was too heavy for them. As I looked upon the scene I thought, if only a few more would come, it could be easily raised.

As I awoke and thought of my dream, I was given to know that the sign represented the church and that financial support was what was needed to put the sign into place.

We Are Brothers in Christ

By James A. Hervey

I am glad to get the Saints' Herald each week, for it brings joy to my soul to read the wonderful testimonies from God's children. I am thankful that the Lord opened my heart to obey the gospel, and pray that I shall live faithful to the end. I have many trials, but the Lord is willing to help those who try to help themselves. He wants willing workers in his army, and I am willing, but I am weak and need the prayers of the Saints.

A few years ago I was burned and hurt in a refinery and became so weak that I had to give up my job for good. Now I am living with father and am a salesman for a product that he manufactures.

Brother J. W. A. Bailey was holding a five-week series of meetings in Tulsa Branch, and I was telling the mother of a sick friend about the church. She questioned me about our belief, and I told her that we believed in prayer. Later, when I called to see the patient, the woman said, "I want you to pray for me; I believe in what you say." The Spirit came upon me and I prayed to God in heaven that he would heal her. He did.

A few years ago I took up the use of tobacco. On October 26, 1930, when I returned to my home a still small voice spoke to me and told me to throw away my pipe. I went into the house, laid the pipe on the stand table and went on through the house and out the back door. That same small voice spoke to me again telling me to throw the pipe away. It bade me deny myself and follow Him. I did as I was told. I threw the pipe away and quit the use of tobacco in every way. Tea and coffee went, too, and I am glad to do what the Lord wants me to do.

Pray for me that I shall prove faithful to the end, and pray for my father who has been sick for six weeks.

For the Sake of Christ and His Church

By Mrs. John Teeters

I feel the deep need of the church in my life. I feel that the church needs my best efforts to live close to the Prince of Peace. Are we, whom He died to save, doing all we can to help him carry on through this world-wide depression? Many are helping as they can.

This Christmas I put a dollar bill in a church envelope to be placed in the manger at the Christmas pageant of Alexander Branch. Many others gave their offerings for Christ's sake, giving as they could.

All of us should help the church. It is our privilege. Some of you may say, "Oh, Sister Teeters can do that easily." But it is not easy. Times here are hard, too. We have no bank account. I have only one coat, and it is ragged at the elbows and has no lining. We need potatoes, sugar, fresh fruit, vegetables, and many other things. I was urged to keep my offering and use it to purchase necesary things for my family and myself, but I felt that it was God's money, that I must give it. Let all of us give as much as we can to the need of the church.

My faith is in the Reorganization. I have a deep belief and trust in this church and its people. If we do our part, God always does his. The letters and testimonies of God's people help us. I read with much interest the latest writing of Gomer T. Griffiths. That grand old servant of God has wonderful faith at the sunset of life, and is worthy of emulation. And how Brother Elbert A. Smith's writings inspire us to go forward until the victory is won!

May the time not be long when we shall have learned our lesson, and can go forth with more zeal, and with God's power working through us, bring about Zion to which all shall be gathered in love and peace.

Missionary Family in Spirit and in Deed

By Vida H. Hartman

We greatly enjoy reading the testimonies of the Saints in the Herald, and think perhaps a few words from this section of the country will be welcome. We feel that a number in and near Hershey would obey the gospel if they could hear a few sermons by a minister of the Reorganized Church. We have four families taking turns reading our Heralds.

The Brighamites have been holding meetings at Harrisburg for several months. They had twelve members before Christmas.

We are looking forward with pleasure to meeting with the Saints at Philadelphia some Sunday morning in the near future. Philadelphia is only about ninety miles from here.

Our twelve-year-old daughter is ready for baptism when an opportunity offers. If an elder should pass through Hershey any time in the near future, and could stop for a visit with us, we would deeply appreciate it. We have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since Elder A. M. Chase visited us and baptized my husband ten years ago.

We desire the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will open the hearts and minds of our neighbors that the seed we scatter in our humble way, may take root and grow. May the Holy Spirit be with the Saints everywhere.

QUESTION TIME

Did the Reorganization have apostles before Joseph Smith became president? If so, how were they called?

In both the first organization and the Reorganization the apostles that were first chosen were selected by a committee of three pursuant to revelation. In the first case the committee selected twelve men in February, 1835, according to instructions given in June, 1829. Why the delay occurred is perhaps best explained by the fact that there were not many men available who were suitable for the position at first.

In the Reorganization a committee was authorized at a conference on April 8, 1853, to choose seven men for the office of apostleship, pursuant to previous instructions. This was about seven years before Joseph Smith became president of the Reorganization. In both organizations the subsequent apostles were mostly named in the revelations, but this was not the case invariably.

Did Joseph Smith use the same Urim and Thummim that was had by Aaron?

In Exodus 28: 30 the taking of the Urim and Thummim for the breastplate to be used in the priestly office is mentioned. They do not appear necessarily to have been the same as was used by Joseph Smith, who states that "God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book" (Church History, volume 1, page 13). The time when they were thus prepared is stated in the Book of Mormon (722-3: 88-93) to have been in the days of the brother of Jared. This was at least several centuries before the time of Aaron. In the Book of Mormon they are called interpreters, but Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1 leaves no doubt as to their identity with the Urim and Thummim.

The interpreters, or Urim and Thummim, prepared for Jared's brother were sealed up and deposited with the plates or records of the Jaredites, and later with those of the Nephites, and were had by Mosiah (232-3: 72-75; 202: 35; 291: 15-20; 723: 95), having been handed down with the plates from one age to another. In the time of Ezra and Nehemiah the Jewish Urim and Thummim is referred to as objects with which they were familiar, but whether or not they had them at that time is uncertain, though Josephus indicates that they did not cease to function until about two hundred years before his own time. The evidence seems to support the existence of two sets of instruments.

Is there any record that makes known the name of the brother of Jared?

So far as I know there is no evidence to indicate his name. Some have thought that possibly his name might be Gazelem, from the statement in the Book of Mormon which states that the Lord prepared for Gazelem a stone, or the Urim and Thummim as some understand the words to mean. But this could just as easily refer to Joseph Smith, who was the translator of the work there referred to, it seems (Book of Mormon 440: 55; 233: 73-79; 722-3: 87-95; 724: 100). This may be supported by Doctrine and Covenants 77: 2; 101: 4, 8, where the word Gazelam, or Enoch, is understood by many to refer to Joseph Smith, the term being used at a time when much persecution was suffered because of the activities and plans of the Saints for building Zion.

What is paradise, and who are to go there, and when do they go?

The Bible does not contain any lengthy description of paradise. Jesus promised the repentant thief on the cross that he would be with him in paradise, and the angel said to John:

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Revelation 2: 7.

Paul declared that a certain man known to him was caught up into paradise and "heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." The word is derived from a Hebrew word, such as is rendered "orchard" in Ecclesiastes 2: 5. Literally it meant a park or garden ground, and anciently was used to denote the garden of Eden. The question asked, however, is given this fuller answer by Alma, stating that at death:

"The spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow, etc."—Book of Mormon 448: 44.

While the spirits of the wicked go to God for a judgment or assignment, they are then cast out "into outer darkness; there shall be weeping, and wailing and gnashing of teeth."

Nonmember Artists Assist in Programs

Last month the members of the church school enjoyed a splendid program of music, given by the most outstanding artists of the city. Mr. Lyell Justin spoke twenty minutes on "Youths in Music," beginning with early Bible musicians and touching on the musical genius displayed in the early years of Liszt, Schubert, Brahms, and others. Here is the program: Song, "With Joy the Impatient Husbandman," Haydn; piano, "Perpetual Motion," Weber; songs, "Hark, Hark the Lark," and "Wasted Serenade," Brahms; piano, "The Waves," Moszkowski; song, "Erl King," Loewe; violin, "Scherzo Tarantelle," Wieniakski; songs, "Land of Heart's Desire," Kennedy-Fraser, and "I've Been Roaming," Horn; piano duet, "Allegro Vivace," from the Symphony in C Major, by Schubert.

On the succeeding Friday, Doctor Boughton, superintendent of the sanatorium for tuberculosis patients, lectured on prevention of infection, and displayed an interesting moving picture, "The Seal of Prevention."

An excellent Christmas program was arranged by Sister Ward L. Christy. An episode from the pageant, "The Lamp," was portrayed by a group of young people. This was followed by a playlet, "The Magic Star of Bethlehem," which was well staged, and held the attention of the audience. A quartet sang several numbers supported by children's voices. They sang "Starlight and Song," "O Come, All Ye Faithful," "To Us a Child of Hope Is Born," "Joy to the World," "Hail the Blest Morn," "The First Noel," and "Christmas Bells."

Following the program, Santa Claus appeared and distributed gifts and sacks of goodies to the children. The latter were provided by members of the women's department in order to conserve branch funds which this winter have been inadequate for all local needs.

On Sunday morning, Christmas Day, a seasonable program was provided, and in the evening the superintendent of the school for the deaf, Mr. Peterson, told the Christmas story while a young girl, dressed as an angel, gracefully and dramatically depicted in the sign language the scene at Bethlehem.

Iva Cornish, fourteen-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister John Cornish, of Wilkie, and a granddaughter of Brother J. J. Cornish, attends the school for the deaf, and was unable to spend the Christmas holidays with her parents. Their loss was the gain of Brother and Sister C. E. Diggle and family, for by her sweet personality and naive humor, she gladdened their hearts and added joy to the festive season.

The young men of the branch were hosts to the young women December 29. Games were enjoyed during the afternoon, and at six-thirty the group sat down to dinner. After the dishes were done, the girls having volunteered their help, skating occupied the evening. Then another visit was paid to the basement. Question: What became of the seven and one half pies and the kettle of noodles left over from the supper? The girls voted the boys the best of hosts.

The young people are organizing a club to promote their special activities.

The radio broadcasts at three o'clock every Sunday afternoon, and Elder Ward L. Christy's sermons are delivered with even more earnestness and power than in former years. Many favorable comments are heard.

The members of the women's department after a three-week holiday, are carrying on with more zeal than ever, hooking rugs and making quilt tops. They are succeeding admirably in making something out of nothing, a real art in these times of depression.

Brother Christy had an interesting letter from Brother Elgyn Clark who recently journeyed to Ontario to visit his mother. He is preaching and endeavoring to spread the gospel among his kin and old neighbors. Brother Clark gave faithful and efficient service in Saskatoon Branch for many years, not scorning to do the menial tasks as well as to assist in teaching and expounding the truth.

It has been voted to hold a young people's convention here this year, but all arrangements and the setting of the date are under the jurisdiction of the branch council.

"The mistake of the best men through generation after generation, has been that great one of seeking to help the poor by alms giving, and by preaching of patience or of hope, and by every other means, emollient or consolatory, except the one thing which God orders for them, justice."—John Ruskin, "Unto This Last."

Apostle F. Henry Edwards in Western Montana

Spends Three Days in Young People's Convention

November 16, 17, and 18 were designated by Apostle F. Henry Edwards and the district president, Elder N. P. Coleman, of Great Falls, as a convenient time to hold a young people's convention at Anaconda. The event was considerably affected by the cold wave, when the thermometer registered around thirty degrees below zero a short time previous to the convention. Two days before the convention convened, however, the mercury began to rise and the weather moderated until it was possible for many of the Saints of Deer Lodge and Race Track to attend. Owing to the fact that highways were closed in many places, members from Great Falls and other locals were unable to come. This was regretted by the Saints of Anaconda, who had been very generous in arranging to care for the visiting members.

This was Brother Edwards' first visit to this part of Montana and while some were already acquainted with him, and others knew him through the church papers and his quarterly on the Doctrine and Covenants, all now know him as an apostle and representative of Christ. He made friends for himself and more consecrated workers for God, and his reward will be in the lives and souls of men.

Each day was filled with the morning prayer meeting in charge of Patriarch George W. Thorburn, and class periods and preaching services by Brother Edwards. His theme was, "We Should Expect Big Things of God," and he illustrated from church history how the early men of the church expected big things from God and received these things of him. His strong faith in God and the church, and his masterly, yet humble, way of presenting his subjects caused the people to remark, "He makes us think," "He brings God closer to us," "He makes us think of the church as our church."

Young People at Work

At the reunion in August, a plan was started to organize the young people of Deer Lodge, Race Track, and Anaconda for social activities as well as church work. A meeting was called shortly after, and a committee composed of the church school supervisor and two others was chosen in each branch. Deer Lodge was represented by Dorothy Perrin, M. G. Perrin and Lois Pears; Race Track by Harvey Eliason, Eva Meagher, and Kenneth Eliason, and Anaconda by F. W. Kendall, Grace Allen Staton, and Lawrence Beck. At this meeting F. W. Kendall was chosen Chairman and Harvey Eliason, financial secretary. The work was outlined by the committee, and money was raised to remodel the building which was in need of repairs for reunion purposes and which will now furnish a meeting place for the young people's organization. The labor was donated by members of the three groups. The committee is planning a big program and social time to be held sometime in February to celebrate the victory of an undertaking that some said could not be done. They are looking forward to some interesting achievements from this organization.

Parsons, Kansas

Many Reasons to Rejoice and Go Forward

The Saints have been encouraged to move forward in the great latter-day work by the inspiring messages of those holding the priesthood and by the blessings of the gift of prophecy.

The women's department has been a help in various ways. The workers have quilted, held candy sales, given a dinner at the hall, and in other endeavors have raised funds and turned them to the bishop's agent for the furthering of the work of the general church. They have also given assistance to several families in the branch who have needed help, contributing some of the necessities of life.

The branch enjoyed a short Christmas program after the regular church school session on Christmas Day. The program included an appropriate sermonet by the pastor.

Those who have been ill are now improving.

This branch was well represented at the district conference held at Joplin in November, and all enjoyed meeting Brothers Elbert A. Smith and John F. Garver. They also were glad to have the opportunity of hearing Brother Garver speak at Cherryvale shortly after the conference.

The new year opened with the members renewing their covenant with the Master and rededicating themselves to the service of the Father. Testimonies of the goodness and mercy of God inspired and uplifted the worshipers, causing them to desire to continue in this great work.

Parson members desire your prayers, that they may be found acceptable and worthy in the sight of God.

North Star Branch at Underwood, Iowa

Change in Organization Brings Renewed Zeal; Young People Active

A new spirit and zest have come into Underwood Branch as a result of the recent change in branch organization. At the December business meeting the membership voted to conform to the church school plan and to reorganize the different departments accordingly. Brother Nels Johnson, recently moved into this vicinity, was chosen as pastor with Brother David Carlile and Brother K. W. Klopping as his assistants. Brother Johnson has brought to the Saints a new spirit of love and unity. He is a kind, fatherly and uplifting leader.

The branch is proud of its young people. This group numbers over twenty in regular and active membership. These young workers have been given the responsibility of various community projects and important branch offices.

The Christmas program which was well attended by friends outside of the church as well as by church members, was sponsored by the young men and women. Everyone was given a treat and a beautiful tree was laden with gifts which Santa Claus presented.

On New Year's Eve the young people invited those of their age from the neighboring branches, Hazel Dell and Crescent, to join them in watching the New Year in.

The class, under the direction of Sister Iona Damitz, makes choral work a specialty. Due to a variety of excellent voices along with real endeavor, they have been able to render many pleasing anthems and special numbers. In class work, Roy Cheville's quarterly, What It Means to Be a Latter Day Saint, is being studied.

These young workers are active individually as well as collectively. Darold Sewing holds the position of church school director and is giving much time and conscientious effort to the work of his office; Lavonne Carlile, Carol Sewing, David Damitz, Ardis Scott, Maxine, Elmer, and Glen Johnson assist in branch work by teaching classes or leading the music. Cyril Damitz, whom many Graceland ers remember, is finishing the medical course at University of Iowa this year. Another Graceland alumna, Doris Swain, teaches in Underwood's public school and assists in the publicity work of the branch.

The older people, too, have well-planned class work in the study of the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon.

The branch was encouraged by a recent visit from President Frederick M. Smith. A reception was held for him after the service at the home of K. W. Klopping. This was the president's first visit here.

Underwood members are studying the financial law and are cultivating the spirit of sacrifice. With the opening of a new year they have set up anew an old goal: "Evangelize the world and Zionize the church."

Brooklyn, New York

Hear Lectures by Apostle P. M. Hanson and President F. M. McDowell

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here delivering a series of lectures from November 27 to December 4, on such subjects as "Essentials of Christian Conversion," "Missionary Experiences in Many Lands," "Momentous Events of Our Times Foretold in the Scriptures," and others equally interesting and instructive.

President Floyd M. McDowell was also here and lectured November 15, 16, and 17, his topics being of general interest.

The semiannual business meeting was held December 7, at which time the following officers were sustained: Branch president, Ephraim Squire; counselors, Paul Belleisle and William Nichols; secretary, Gladys Harris; treasurer, Joseph Squire; chorister, LeRoy Squire, and junior superintendent, Ethel Squire. Glenn Parrish resigned as correspondent, and Sister Paul Belleisle was elected to succeed him. Howard Mousley was elected church custodian and Martha Mousley, young people's superintendent. Paul Belleisle was also sustained as director of Religious Education. A number of committee reports were read and other business was transacted.

The various clubs are active as usual except the Kappa Sigma Literary Club.

The junior department presented its Christmas pageant with Brother LeRoy Squire as Santa Claus.

On the evening of December 30, the local budgeteers met at the church to discuss the budget for 1933.

Yuma, Colorado

Have New Meeting Place

Saints of Yuma group have changed their meeting place from the schoolhouse in the country to the Legion Hall in town, where it is possible for many more to attend. Interest is good and several members who have been indifferent for years, are now coming out to services.

It is also possible now to have preaching service each Sunday by either Brother Reno Auld or Brother Ralph Vincent from Otis.

On New Year's Day the group had an interesting sacrament and testimony meeting. Attendance has increased until on January 15, forty-five were present for the preaching service.

The Sunday school is under the direction of Superintendent C. F. Klusman, aided by Sister Klusman as pianist and Ramon Lutz, secretary and four able teachers. The members hope to interest people not of the faith.

Far West Stake

A glorious spring-like day added to the success of the second stake-wide day held within two months, as Saints gathered from the various parts of the stake to hear their chief executive, President Frederick M. Smith, on January 22 in Saint Joseph. A maximum crowd listened attentively to two splendid sermons from President Smith at the morning hour and again at two thirty in the afternoon. The services were a great success in all phases. Roads and weather made it possible for most of the branches to have representatives present.

The results of the Sacrifice period in Far West Stake were beyond the expectations of those in charge, as many of the branches made a splendid showing in the face of discouraging conditions. Various groups made special efforts, and the local solititors cooperated in a fine manner.

Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, spent January 7 and 8, in Far West Stake, preaching at Kingston Branch Saturday and Sunday. He also preached at Cameron Branch Sunday evening. Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, also spent a recent Sunday in this stake. He preached twice at First Church and once at Second Church in Saint Joseph. Patriarch F. A. Smith commenced a series of meetings at the Third Church, Saint Joseph, the evening of January 22. He will continue each night of the week. The Saints are glad to have these visiting brothers augment the efforts of the local priesthood of the stake, numbers of whom are traveling many miles throughout the stake, filling appointments in the various branches.

Stewartsville Church

The Christmas season was a happy and profitable time for Stewartsville Branch in commemorating the outstanding birthday of all ages. The true meaning of the Christmas spirit, "In Him was life and the life was the light of men," was fittingly portrayed in all of the services Christmas Day. The theme for the church school worship period was "We Would See Jesus." A beautiful sacrifice gift service was held at the ten forty-five hour with the theme continued with tableaux, music and readings, and the Three Wise Men bearing the offering of over one hundred and fifty dollars to the Little King.

At night the pageant, "Where the Young Child Lay," was impressively given by all of the young people and children of the church school, under the supervision of Sister Madge Head, the director, and her group of helpers. The first part of the pageant emphasized the wonder and beauty of the Christ Child's coming. It was his coming that linked the outer world with the Bethlehem scene; and so they came, first the shepherds, then the Wise Men, and on down through the ages, bringing their tribute of love to the Little Savior of all the world. The two antiphonal hymns, "The Light of the World Is Jesus," and "Watch man, Tell Us of the Night," were especially effective. They were given by the Hinderks quartet, and Miss Mildred Powell.

New Year's Eve, the Rustlers of the recent contest, entertained the Hustlers with a watch party in the church basement. This included the entire church school. A general good time was had, with especial merriment at the close of the evening, when Old Father Time appeared much worried because, he said, some one had kidnaped a member of the Time Family. A court was established, and was in progress trying to convict the guilty one, when at twelve o'clock in bounded the kidnaped member, Little New Year 1933. The church bell then welcomed in the new year.

An impressive Christmas star service was held on the church lawn just preceding the party.

Although the hour of parting was late the night before, there was a good attendance on time at church school, with director for the new year, Leonard G. Ehlers, in charge. This was a beautiful setting for the communion service, being the first day and first Sunday in the new year. Brother Gordon Hidy, pastor, and Brother Z. J. Lewis, and Brother B. J. Dice, counselors, were in charge. Brother Lewis gave an inspiring and onward message in the opening talk.

On January 8, the branch was happy to have Ward A. Hougas, stake president, with them. Brother Hougas said as it was the beginning of the new year, it was a good time for a check-up. His theme reference was, "Behold I set before thee an open door, which no man can shut."

Sunday, January 15, at the close of the church school period, the three classes of young people were merged, and effected their organization, under the direction of the supervisor, Sister Madge Head. Twenty-seven were present. Miss Mildred Powell was chosen president, Loraine Powell, vice president, and Miss Vernelle Powell, secretary-treasurer. These three are cousins. The object of the organization is character building, by working, playing and praying together. They expect to enjoy many pleasant and profitable activities during the year. They are looking forward to the youth conference at Lamoni in June and hope for a large number to attend.

At ten forty-five on the fifteenth, Gordon Hidy gave an inspiring and interesting sermon, using as his subject, "The Golden Rule."

Sister Fern Ehlers, superintendent of the children's division of the church school, conducted junior services at the same hour in the basement.

At 7.30 p. m. the Saints joined in a Temperance Union service at the Methodist church commemorating the thirteenth anniversary of the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. F. L. Ferkins, a superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Western Missouri, gave a forceful and convincing sermon on Prohibition. A strong supporting program, of music and readings, was also given under the direction of the local Women's Christian Temperance Union. A number of the local church were active in the program. Sister Maggie Powell is president of the union.

Priesthood meeting was held at six thirty at the church. The Priesthood Manual is being studied under the direction of the pastor.

The music committee for the new year is Leonard G. Ehlers, chairman, Mrs. Stella Hidy, Willard Hinderks, and Misses Mildred and Vernelle Powell.

Sister Frances Mauzey has been chosen leader of the women's department, with Sister Cora Lewis, assistant. Much the same program as last year will be followed with weekly meetings for work, and once each month an educational service with lesson study is held. Sister Stella Hidy was reelected as teacher.

Brother and Sister Gordon Hidy gave a party at their home Tuesday night, January 10, for his class of young people.

There were no services at the local church the morning January 22, as all looked forward and expected to be in Saint Joseph, where President F. M. Smith occupied in a stake-wide service.

Cameron Church

Members of Cameron Branch seem to be infused with the spirit of enthusiastic service founded on loyalty, a sentiment that marked the five-day meeting held in the early part of November by Bishop C. J. Hunt. "Why bless your hearts!" came his comforting assurance to the Cameron Saints, "We have a bigger, and grander thing on our hands than that of any other people in the whole world! While we work, prophecies are being literally fulfilled. God is counseling us. The outcome of his work at our hands depends on how big we are!"

Brother Hunt's talks were attended by numbers who evinced keen appreciation of the cheerful tone of his messages.

At the annual business meeting of the branch few changes were made; however, a resolution was adopted which changed the time of the election to September, making the fiscal year to conform to that of the study outlines used in church school activities.

On December 18, Far West, Oakdale, and Kingston Branches united with Cameron in an all-day meeting here, to hear Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp talk concerning the financial law of the church. He was assisted at the eleven o'clock hour and at the two thirty meeting by Elder Ward A. Hougas who accompanied him from Independence. A basket dinner was served at the noon hour.

In the evening the church was filled to capacity by an audience made up of

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Saints and nonmembers. The choir presented the Christmas cantata, "The Bright and Morning Star," under direction of Brother Paul Fiddick. The Latter Day Saint choir was the only one in Cameron which presented a cantata this season. Choir practices began early in the fall and are still going strong. They are the source of many special numbers for evening and morning services.

A beautiful service was carried out Christmas morning with the presentation of the Christmas offering. The goal aimed for was seventy-five dollars, to be raised by the church school. This quota, in turn, was divided into thirds, making the goal of the juniors, the adults, and of the young people's division twenty-five dollars each. However, the three divisions raised a total of eighty-eight dollars. The goal of 1933 for Christmas offering has been raised to one hundred dollars.

Brother Blair Jensen preached here the evening of January 8, bringing a message which sounded as its keynote, the necessity of preparation for "the worldly expression of a spiritual Zion."

On January 15, Elder F. L. Hinderks, of Stewartsville, and a member of the stake presidency was the speaker at the morning hour. Elder Hinderks was formerly pastor at Cameron. In the evening the Saints joined in a Women's Christian Temperance Union meeting.

Everything is moving forward smoothly, on the whole, and the Saints are enjoying a measure of peace and abiding comfort that marks wholehearted activity throughout the branch. Blessed by its share of spiritual blessings, Cameron too, would pour its energy into the preparation for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Saint Joseph Branch

It was fitting that the opening service of the new year should be an amalgamated sacrament service for the four churches in the city. A very good crowd attended the initial service where covenants were renewed and another year's work was begun. Elder Ward A. Hougas, city pastor, gave the theme talk, his subject being, "What of the New Year?"

A city-wide priesthood meeting was held in the afternoon of January 1, at which problems and plans were discussed.

First Church

Christmas Day at First Church was an outstanding day this year. From the opening worship period of the church school until the close of the vesper hour the true spirit of Christmas was presented through music, and dramatics. At the morning worship period, "The Story of the Other Wise Man," was given in three parts with fitting music interspersed. The children's division also gave songs and exercises.

Perhaps the outstanding thing about the Christmas programs was the spirit of giving that was expressed in all parts of the day's program. The children had prepared two Christmas trees and took these, with many toys, fruit, and candy, to two families for whom Christmas might not have meant much otherwise. The girls in the junior young people's class helped materially by dressing dolls and repairing toys. Again this year the children willingly voted to sacrifice their Christmas treat and give the money to the church. This was turned in to the general church with the sacrifice fund.

In the evening the program was divided into two divisions. The children's division again presented short playlets and several songs. A pageant, "The Road to Bethlehem," was very beautifully presented by young people, assisted by the choir which sang from the balcony. The theme of this, too, was gift bringing to the Christ Child, culminating in the general offering of the congregation.

On the first Sunday of the year Elder Ward A. Hougas preached at the vesper service using the subject, "The Open Door," for a fitting new year's sermon. On January 8, he also preached in the evening. Elder John F. Sheehy was a welcome guest January 15, when he preached at the morning service and also at the vesper service.

The regular O. T. Z. meeting on January 10, was in the form of a debate and was very well attended.

On Thursday, January 19, the Ul-Lik-Us Players met for their annual party. After a short business meeting, an interesting program was presented which included a review of Apple Cart, by Bernard Shaw; a reading of the one-act play, "Dust of the Road"; several impersonations and humerous skits. The next big task of this club will be a religious drama for the coming stake conference. Rehearsals will be started soon on "The Slave Maid of Israel."

Fourth Church

On December 16, the religio society held a silver medal preliminary contest in oratory under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. There were five contestants, all from Fourth Church group. The medal was won by Floyd Wheat, his subject being, "Tell it to Dad."

Although the weather was very cold, the contest was well attended by Fourth Church members as well as by a good representation of the Women's Christian Temperance Union members and officers. Mrs. W. L. Butts, State vice president, made a stirring speech showing the fallacy of the idea that revenues on beer will help the working man.

Meetings at Fourth Church have been well attended recently. The Saints were fortunate in having as a recent guest-speaker, Bishop C. J. Hunt, whose words of encouragement were gladly received.

A Christmas pageant was presented Friday, December 23, by the dramatic club and another Christmas program was given Sunday morning, December 25, including the "Story of the Other Wise Man," told by Mrs. J. L. Bear. No service was held in the evening of Christmas Day.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The ministry of the stake were given a practical lesson in caring for the church interests placed in their hands, at three o'clock the afternoon of January 15, Apostle J. F. Garver the speaker. A representative number gave Brother Garver close attention. He was also the Sunday evening speaker at Central, opening a series of meetings in the stake which continued throughout the week.

Bishop C. A. Skinner was the morning speaker.

Thursday, regular church day, was crowded full of activities. The women's club met and had luncheon at one o'clock following morning class work. The usual program was held in the afternoon, and at six thirty a supper was served. This was followed by prayer meeting at seven thirty and the choir practice at 8.15.

The new choir director, Brother Eugene Christy, is also sponsoring the organization of an orchestra.

Bennington Heights Church

On Christmas night vesper services were held at Bennington Heights Church. The service consisted of a number of songs by the choir, scripture and response readings and an address from Elder George Mesley. There was large attendance.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was the speaker the evening of January 8.

Two days later the O. B. K.'s of the local congregation had a get-together party as one of their organization events. Many of these young people attended the stake young people's prayer meeting at Mount Washington Church Wednesday, January 18.

The eleven o'clock service the morning of January 15 was devoted entirely to the blessing of babies. Those blessed were Virginia Shirline Davidson, Dorothy Elizabeth Jones, Don Kirby Maxon, Thomas LeRoy Maxon, James Audrey Glayzer, and Flora Jean Glayzer. Ministers officiating in this ordinance were Pastor O. G. Helm, E. W. Lloyd, and Edward Larson.

Mount Washington Church

Sacrament services for this congregation in the months of December and January were well attended, and a good spirit prevailed.

During the forepart of December the boys' choir from the Stone Church, directed by J. Glenn Fairbanks and Miss Marcine Smith, gave a program of several numbers. The McCarty sisters sang a selection, "The Lord Is My Shepherd,"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Esther LaVerne Bolinger played a piano solo, and Franklin Hunter sang, "The Prayer Perfect." The sermonet was by Priest Howard Cook.

During the latter part of the holiday month the epidemic of flu grew to such proportions that it was thought wise to dispense with the Christmas service.

These speakers from Independence have visited Mount Washington this year: Elders R. S. Salyards, E. A. Thomas, and Leonard Lea. Each brought a helpful message.

The O. B. K.'s installed new officers at their fellowship meeting on a recent Sunday evening. Those who will this year serve the organization are: President, Mark Gerber; vice president, Jack Winegar; secretary, Pauline Waldron; treasurer, Ruby Davis, and historian, Edith Burbridge. Elder Chester Constance was the speaker at this service using as his theme, "Our Opportunities in Life."

The women's division has been meeting at the home of Sister Frank Hunter, 539 Arlington Avenue, each Friday, spending the day sewing and quilting. They are working to buy paint for the church.

One hundred and forty-seven young people were present at the O. B. K. stake prayer meeting held at Mount Washington the night of January 18. Their prayers and testimonies brought renewed hope and courage to the few adult members present. Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder George Mesley met the young people at this hour.

Franklin K. Hunter has enlisted in the United States Army.

Yakima, Washington

Local Organization Free of Debt

During 1932, Yakima Branch was busy proving to Old Man Depression that where God is, all is well.

There is not a large group of Saints at Yakima, but the members are active. The membership of the church school has materially increased under the supervision of Mrs. Ben Nutley as director of Religious Education. Each Sunday a devotional program is prepared by one class of the school. Up to the present there have been no preaching services except when visiting members of the priesthood are present. Recently one of the young men, Paul A. Anderson, was ordained to the office of priest. He is a willing worker and is preparing himself for more efficient service.

Mr. Ben Nutley, who for the past few years has been teaching the young people's class was forced to leave Yakima because of a change in divisional headquarters. December 2, his class gave a surprise party for him at his home, and presented him a pen and pencil set in appreciation of his service to them.

The ladies' auxiliary has only a few members, but is eager to serve. On the evening of December 9 the women gave an oyster supper at the Nutley home. Two quilts, pieced by the auxiliary, were also disposed of, and the proceeds from the quilts and supper were applied on the branch indebtedness.

The church school gave its Christmas program the evening of December 21, at which the Christmas story was retold in pageant and song.

New Year's Eve the Nutley home was the scene of a happy watch party. The crowning event of the evening was the burning of the mortgage on the church property just before the midnight hour. It was a pleasant feeling to greet the new year free from debt.

This little group was saddened by the death of one of its number. Norvil Clapshaw, a young man twenty-five years of age, died, January 8, at the Northern Pacific Hospital in Tacoma following an operation for appendicitis. The funeral services were held in Yakima, January 12, Elder A. C. Martin, of Seattle, being the speaker. Norvil was a member of the priesthood and held the office of branch teacher. All will miss him greatly.

Bishop D. S. McDole, of Seattle, spent Sunday, January 15, with Yakima Branch. The Saints appreciated this opportunity of becoming acquainted with Bishop McDole.

Atchison, Kansas

Ninth and Santa Fe Streets

For the past few weeks illness has prevailed among the members of the branch. Brother and Sister William Scarcliff, sr., Robert Johnson, Brother A. R. Ranes, Nora Marie Lentz, Lyla Brink, and Donna Jean Dittemore have suffered attacks of influenza. Brother Robert Johnson has a cancer that has been very painful. It has separated and come out and the continued prayers are that it may not return. Mrs. Charles E. Lentz has suffered some time from neuritis. Sister Lentz requests remembrance in the prayers of her acquaintances throughout the church.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey held a series of ten meetings from November 14 to Thanksgiving. His sermons were interesting and instructive. Brother Bailey is highly esteemed by the membership.

An entertaining Christmas program and treat were provided for Christmas morning by the Misses Anna Lentz and Isabelle Gildehaus.

January 8, Apostle Roy S. Budd and Sister Budd were visitors. At the morning hour Brother Budd delivered an interesting and comforting sermon on the theme of "The Fatherhood of God and the Sonship of Man." At this service Gilbert Paul, the infant son of Gilbert F. and Eva Keller Hedrick, was blessed by Brother Budd and Frank G. Hedrick. Brother Budd visited this branch December 31, conferring with the officers.

Brother and Sister H. B. Sprague, of Independence, were visitors at the morning service January 8. Brother Sprague assisted in the service.

Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Independence, will be the visiting speaker January 22.

Holden Stake

Grandview Missouri

Elder Richard Bullard held services for several nights, last fall, encouraging the Saints to go forward with faith and courage.

On October 13, Sister Morse passed away, and the funeral was held at the church, Brother Charles Martin in charge.

Thanksgiving was observed by the Saints at Grandview with a dinner in the basement.

A week of instructive and helpful services was conducted by Elder S. S. Smith in December.

Christmas was observed with a special service, and a collection of food was taken to the needy members.

A cottage prayer service at the home of Brother C. Taylor on Wednesday night closed the activities of the year, 1932. Cottage services of this kind have been conducted since the coming of cold weather.

For this branch the closing months of the year were quiet ones, but the members are busy keeping the gospel light shining.

In October the children's division of the Atherton Church, visited this congregation, and presented a program.

Dayton, Ohio

Resolve to Help Locally and Generally

The Saints here are trying in some way to be helpful to the local organization and to the church as a whole. The branch reached its quota for tithes and offerings for 1932, and looks with renewed hope to the year ahead.

The young people of Dayton, known as the C. S. M. Club, are taking greater interest in the church work. They sponsored a splendid Christmas program which was enjoyed by everyone. January 13, they sponsored a squab supper in the church basement. The club members gave the food and the proceeds from the supper were presented to the branch.

Sunday, January 8, Elder John R. Grice was the speaker morning and evening. Dayton members always look forward to his meeting with this congregation.

Elder E. L. Ulrich, of Bradner, Ohio, has found employment in Dayton, and has been the speaker at a church service.

Prayer meetings have been well attended, and a wonderful spirit has prevailed. God is very mindful of people in their time of need.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Independence

Roy Settles, of Second Church, was reelected president of the young people's council at the meeting the evening of January 16. The council is composed of representatives from each congregation, and meetings are held in the pastor's office at the Auditorium the first and third Monday nights of each month. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Kenneth Morford, of Walnut Park; secretary, Ruth Bryant, of Walnut Park, and treasurer, Ruby Johnson, of Enoch Hill.

The council is sponsoring a play contest, which any young people's group of the church in Independence is eligible to enter. More than a score of entries are now listed, and preliminaries will be held in each congregation. Two plays may be entered by each congregation in the finals, which will be held February 27, 28, and March 2.

Brother Kenneth Morford this month is in charge of the young people's Sunday afternoon programs, another undertaking sponsored by the council. Entertaining programs have this year attracted a representative group of young people. Among the speakers have been Elder D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education, President F. M. McDowell, Elder Ward A. Hougas, president of Far West Stake, and Mr. Frank Rucker, of the Independence Examiner staff. These Sunday afternoon meetings open at two-thirty in the young people's room at the Auditorium, and are designed to promote friendliness and sociability among the young members from all the congregations of the church in Independence. The variety of programs is one of the attractive features of these services. All young people are invited.

Stone Church

Sunday's speakers at the Stone Church were Elder Leonard Lea in the morning who took for his subject "Our Project for 1933," and Apostle J. A. Gillen who spoke to a large congregation in the evening. Brother Gillen stressed the fact that we as a church are not living up to our opportunities, that we have not yet fully accepted Christ's invitation: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel," and urged the Saints to come up to the high standards of the gospel requirements.

Music for the morning service was given by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. This half hour program was broadcast over KMBC. In the evening Earl Audet led the congregational singing, and Albert Brackenbury sang a solo.

The funeral of Sister Cloe I. Wiggins occurred at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon at one-thirty, Elder J. E. Vanderwood in charge. Brother Vanderwood baptized Sister Wiggins into the church sixteen years ago in Texas. She was a woman of faith and conviction and had many friends. Her life was one of service to others. She passed away January 20, 1933, being seventy-nine years, seven months, and twenty-four days old. She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Pearl W. Moriarty, of Independence; Miss Loretti S. Wiggins, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Mrs. Columbia C. Havens, of Chicago; a son, F. G. Buchanan; ten grandchildren, one great-grandchild; two brothers, Lucian and W. H. Cole, of Loughman, Florida, and other relatives. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

Sunday, January 22, junior service was directed by Brother R. Conyers. The pianist for the meeting was Helen Willoughby and the leader of the singing was Helen Bolt. Mrs. Jess Queen told the story, "Rebecca at the Well." Brother J. Warnock talked a short time on "Sharing God's Gift."

The eleven o'clock service was opened by an organ prelude played by Mrs. Sam Inman. The choir then sang "In Heavenly Love Abiding." Elder B. C. Sarratt offered the invocation. "Soul of Mine" was sung by the choir, and the sermon was by Apostle F. H. Edwards. The benediction was by B. C. Sarratt.

After congregational singing, Sunday evening, a male chorus of fourteen voices sang "Day Is Dying in the West." Following the opening prayer by Elder D. A. Whiting the chorus sang "I Am Thine for Service, Lord." The speaker, Elder R. S. Salyards, used as his text section four of the Doctrine and Covenants. The closing prayer was by Elder D. A. Whiting.

The funeral services of Sister Emma A. Burke, seventy-one years old, were conducted at the church January 20, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Pneumonia caused her death. She is survived by her husband, Peter Burke; two sons, Frank Payne and John Payne, of North Platte, Nebraska; three daughters, Mrs. Lille Owens and Mrs. Pearl Johnston, of North Platte, and Mrs. Ollie Wright, of Denver, Colorado; two brothers, Charles Taylor, Oklahoma City, and Harry Taylor, Maywood, Nebraska.

Liberty Street Church

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith was the Sunday morning speaker January 22. His text was taken from Matthew 5: 13: "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of man."

At seven-thirty the juniors and intermediates gave a short play directed by Sister Osa Curnott.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer gave the evening sermon. Liberty Street Saints were happy to hear him speak before leaving Independence for his Pacific Slope mission.

Sister Emma L. Curtis, sixty-five years of age, and wife of J. M. Curtis, died of influenza and pneumonia at her home January 17. She is survived by her husband, J. M. Curtis; four daughters: Mrs. Violet Tracy, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; Mrs. Lavena Brown, Mrs. Mabel Paschall, and Mrs. Bessie Cain, of Independence; six sons: Samuel J. Curtis, of Kansas City; Mack W. Curtis, H. Thomas Curtis, Walter E. Curtis, Joseph V. Curtis, of Independence; and Frank W. Curtis, of Englewood; two sisters; three brothers; twenty-six grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. She was a member of this congregation for many years, and a faithful Saint. Her husband is dangerously ill with heart disease and dropsy at the home. The funeral was held from the Stone Church Monday morning.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday morning, January 22, the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, spoke, using as his text Philippians 3: 13: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before." Around this Scripture he builded a message of hope and counsel, enumerating some of the accomplishments of the past and also a few of the things which he hoped to see done in the future.

Sunday evening the Walnut Park Religio journeyed to Englewood, and presented a program for the Religio of that congregation. About fifty members of this young people's group made the trip. This was a return visit, the Englewood group having visited at Walnut Park two of three weeks previous.

Thursday evening, January 26, the Dorcas Society, a young women's sewing organization of the church, will present a musical program and a one-act play entiled "An Economical Boomerang" in the church basement. Those who will have parts in the play are: Violet Chase, Kenneth Morford, Gene Douglas, Ina Lutz, Vernon Sackman, and Lois Butterworth. Laura Scott Pennell is the director.

Considerable interest is being shown in the one-act play contest, which is being sponsored by the young people's council. Four, and possible five, plays will be entered in the contest by groups of Walnut Park young people. The Swastika Class and the young people's class taught by Brother Athey have each chosen "King Row" as the play which they will enter in the competition. "Afterwards" has been tentatively chosen by the Dorcas Society; and the A. W. Z. Class has yet to select its entry. There also is said to be a possibility of another play being entered by a group of young people of the congregation composed of those who do not belong to any of the organizations previously mentioned. This play is yet to be selected also. An interesting preliminary to determine which two plays will represent Walnut Park in the finals, is assured.

Enoch Hill Church

"Opportunities for Service in the New Year" was the topic of E. H. McKean at the church school the morning of January 15.

The choir opened the eleven o'clock service by singing "Israel Is Free." Special music was also furnished by a double quartet of younger choir members.

The Saints were pleased to have Elder Ward A. Hougas pay his first visit to Enoch Hill, and to listen to his admonition not to be satisfied with the smaller things of life, but to reach also for the greater things. He likened men's lives to those of fishermen. Some fishermen are content with the small minnows found along the shore; others dare to sail into deeper waters to find more worth-while fish.

A pleasing concert was given Sunday evening by members of the Enoch Hill Choir and the Liberty Street Orchestra. This was the first time these two organizations have combined their talents for an occasion of this kind, and their efforts were received by a full house. Every number was well rendered. Sister Amos Allen, director of the choir, and Alfred Waters, orchestra leader, are to be complimented on the splendid work they are doing along musical lines.

"Service to Others," the church school worship theme last Sunday, was carried out by congregational singing and by a talk from Elder C. S. Warren.

Pastor in Zion J. F. Sheehy spoke forcefully of the need of true worship among the Saints in his Sunday morning sermon, and urged his hearers to live in such a manner and to so revere their church building that they may go there any day in the week in a worshipful attitude, and be brought nearer to God.

"Loyalty Unto Christ" was sung by the choir Sunday evening, and Mrs. Willis Young sang "Abide With Me." Pastor H. L. Barto was the evening speaker, and took his Scripture reading from Revelation 19.

At a recent meeting of the young people, Richard Maloney and George Griffin were selected as members of the young people's council. The interest in the different young people's activities is increasing. New faces are seen at each Wednesday evening prayer service. The cast for the play to be entered in the dramatic contest, has been chosen, and rehearsals will start next week.

A fine spirit of cooperation is being shown by the three groups of the women's department. This week they will meet at the home of Mrs. E. E. Kramer to make shirts for the Red Cross.

Spring Branch Church

Attendance at the Wednesday night prayer services is increasing. Following the service at the church the night of January 11, the young married people formed a class with Kenneth Davis as president and Laurel Gool as secretary.

Bishop J. A. Koehler, speaker Sunday morning, January 15, used as the foundation of his sermon Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7. "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful." Using other passages in this book of present-day revelations, he impressed upon the congregation the great need of Zion.

An entertaining program was enjoyed at the evening church school hour, Brother J. Andes' class being in charge. There were instrumental and vocal numbers.

Elder Leonard White was the evening speaker, and his text was chosen from Matthew 16: 18: "And upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Last Sunday's speakers were Bishop J. S. Kelley in the morning and in the evening Elder E. A. Thomas who chose as his subject "Spiritual Gifts."

Pastor G. W. Eastwood furnished the program for the evening church school. It consisted of a piano solo by Shirley Ann McFarlane; a piano solo by Kenneth Turner; recitation by Helen Robertson, and a piano number by Miss Violet McFarlane. There was a short talk by Brother Eastwood.

Thirty-one young people from the classes of Brother Andes and Sister Velma Jones enjoyed a party January 20, at the Andes home.

Gudgell Park Church

The opening sacrament of the year found the church crowded with worshipers. Other services of the day were also well attended.

Good attendance is characterizing the midweek prayer services held in the homes of the Saints. Between thirty-five and forty are present.

Among those who have spoken to the congregation at regular church services this month were Elders Walter Chapman, W. A. McDowell and Sister A. V. Trego, from Mount Washington, who showed pictures and presented a lecture on her trip to France with the War Mothers.

On a recent Tuesday evening Brother Fred Mollison, of Walnut Park, organized a class of music students with a view to orchestral work.

The choir rehearses on Thursday nights at the church, Sister John Hook in charge. The young people are giving this organization strong support.

Women of the congregation are alert to the opportunities for good service. Thirteen sisters held an all-day meeting recently at the home of Sister Melvin Atwell for whom they sewed. On Friday, the thirteenth, there was no ill luck for these workers. Thirteen gathered at the home of Sister Joe Barnhard and tied two comforts. Fine work is being done under the leadership of Sister Nina Tucker. They also have a study class in the Doctrine and Covenants, Sister Hallie Gould, the teacher.

On January 15, the church school, in charge of Brother C. E. Martin, had good attendance. The total membership is now seventy-three, and seventy were there.

That night at the Religio hour Brother Fred Mollison entertained the congregation with a half hour program by his young people's orchestra from Second Church.

East Independence Church

The new year was ushered in with the church school session in charge of local officers, director, C. Edgerton and assistant, Richard Smith. It was followed by the communion service in charge of Pastor Frank Minton and the local priesthood.

Much sickness in this community has of late cut down attendance at church services, but all are grateful that those who have been ill are improving.

Recent speakers have been Brother Joseph Friend; Elder H. V. Minton, who brought an earnest message; T. W. Thatcher the local bishop's agent, who talked on current events and their bearing on the latter-day work, and Brother Harry Friend. Sister Charlotte Koehler was here January 15, bringing a message to the family and especially to the women in the home and branch.

The young people of this branch have entered the dramatic contest sponsored by the young people's council of Independence. Miss Opal Newcomb is coaching their play. They will have their preliminary tryout February 10.

Santa Barbara, California

Meetings by Elder G. H. Wixom

The Saints of Santa Barbara have enjoyed a fine spirit. They are blessed with an active young people's group as well as a group of adults who have started out in earnest to build up the local organization and to assist in taking the gospel to interested people.

Elder George H. Wixom conducted a series of meetings here, beginning January 3, and concluding January 15. All were much edified. This visit and contribution caused the Saints to remember the month of January in 1925, when Brother Wixom came to Santa Barbara with Apostle J. A. Gillen and Elder T. M. Chapman to organize the mission. He was much pleased this year, to find the group grown into a branch of seventy-nine members and a priesthood of six, one elder, two priests, two teachers, and a deacon.

There is a vast field at Santa Barbara for the work at the Lord. The members pray that God will assist them with his Spirit in their endeavors to go forward.

Our Departed Ones

RICHARDS.—Jasper M. Richards was born October 3, 1840, and spent his boyhood and early manhood in Ohio. There he answered President Lincoln's call to arms, and in the early days of the Civil War joined the fourteenth Ohio battery. At the battle of Shiloh a piece of bursting shell struck him in the leg and he spent three months in the hospital. He returned to his company afterwards and served the remainder of the conflict. Almost immediately after the war he went to Kansas and settled in the region which is now Crawford County. He was married February 12, 1868, to Miss Clara Ellen Holden. He and his bride lived in a wooden house with an earthen floor. He plowed his acres, using six yoke of oxen hitched to a 24-inch plow, and knew all the hardships and labor of a pioneer. He traded for a number of years at Weir, Cherokee, and Fort Scott. For about thirty years he lived on a farm four miles south and one mile east of Pittsburg, and since that time he had lived in town. He united with the church about 1875, and was soon called and ordained first to the office of priest and later to that of elder. He was a fearless and faithful exponent of the faith, going night after night on foot or in a lumber wagon to fill his appointments, often after a hard day's work on the farm. Since moving to Pittsburg, he had labored constantly to build up the work, giving liberally of his time and means in support of the cause he loved. He preached almost to the last. His faith was unwavering and he passed away with the firm assurance of a glorious resurrection in the kingdom of God. Died December 2, 1932, at his home in Pittsburg, and the funeral was held the following Sunday. Surviving are his wife, eighty-three years of age; one son, Ira; three daughters, Ella Ross, Ollie Williams, and Ida Thomas; twenty-two grandchildren, twenty-five great-grandchildren, and a host of friends. The funeral was held in the Saints' church and the sermon was by Elder S. Farrington. Interment was in Landon Cemetery, four miles south of Pittsburg.

HARMON.—Mary Ann Speaks was born in Vermillion County, Indiana, December 3, 1849. She died December 12, 1932, at Hollene, New Mexico. She was married to Jesse J. Harmon in 1868, and to this union were born ten children, five boys and five girls. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Walnut Park, Independence, Missouri, in 1918, by Elder A. H. Parsons. There remain of the children, John W. Harmon, of Brock, Oklahoma; J. C. Harmon, Marysville, Texas; R. M. Harmon, Hollene, New Mexico; Charles M. Harmon, Cleveland, Oklahoma; Mrs. O. C. Duncan, Hollene, New Mexico; Mrs. Sam Hadam, Noble, Oklahoma; Mrs. J. W. Downs, Butler, Missouri; J. E. Harmon, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and many grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn her passing.

THORESON.—Theodore Thoreson was born in Norway in March, 1854; died at Salt Lake City, Utah, January 4, 1933. He was married in Norway, and with his wife came to Utah, settling in the southern part of the State, but after some years he moved to Salt Lake City, where he resided for about the last fifty years. His wife preceded him in death some ten years. He leaves relatives in this country as follows: A sister-in-law, Mrs. Anna Thoreson; one niece, Mrs. L. H. Moshier, both of Ogden, and one nephew, Harold Thoreson, of Salt Lake City. Funeral was held in the Larkin Mortuary, Elder A. M. Chase preaching the sermon, and members of the Reorganized Branch furnishing the pallbearers and much of the singing. Interment was in the City Cemetery. The attendance at the funeral attested to the respect his many friends held for him.

RULE.—Ellen Westhead, daughter of Robert and Mary Westhead, was born in England, June 4, 1849, and died December 18, 1932, at Dunreath, Iowa. Her husband preceded her in death seven years, and since then she had lived alone most of the time. She had no living relatives in the United States. Saints at Dunreath looked after her needs and nursed her in her last sickness which lasted about two weeks. She contracted a cold which developed into pneumonia. She was a faithful Saint; cared for the missionaries; did the janitor work of the church for several years, and did not miss a service when she was able to attend. Funeral obsequies were held at the church in Dunreath Wednesday, December 21. The sermon was preached by Elder Clyde McDonald, of Des Moines, Elder Norman Anderson assisting him.

BAILLIE.—Janet Wilson was born in Airdrie in the parish of New Monkland, June 20, 1850, and departed this life January 9, 1933. She was united in marriage to James Baillie, February 28, 1879, and to them were born six children, two daughters and one son having preceded her in death, also her husband who left her just four months before her death, lacking two days. She came to this country in 1882, with her husband, and they located in Pennsylvania. Moved to Scranton, Kansas, in 1883, and had lived on their farm two miles south of Scranton for the last thirty-five years. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, July 6, 1889, and was a devoted member the rest of her life. Leaves three daughters: Mrs. L. C. Oliphant, of Commanche, Oklahoma; Mrs. Dave Little, of Burlingame, Kansas; Mrs. Jean Hatfield, of Ottawa, Kansas; three brothers, Thomas, Joseph, and James, of

Patches of Silver

The women of Dow City, Iowa, have devised an interesting method of raising money, for the purpose of obtaining additional funds to help with the general church debt. Since it met with approval and aroused considerable interest, workers wish to pass it on to Herald readers. A sister raided her attic and found an old pair of boy's trousers. Another woman attached the following lines:

"The 'britches' are old and need a patch—
What does it matter if colors don't match?
Don't try to cover a little tear;
Just sew on a patch most anywhere.
But—beneath each patch, is asked of you
To place a coin, either old or new.
In this act, sisters and brothers all,
Is your chance to answer the church's call.

"When the time is up, in a month or so,
The cash will be counted so we all will know.
And so if you help, thanks very much,
And the Lord will bless in the doing of such.
In doing what little 'bit' we can,
We are helping along a wonderful plan."

The trousers were placed in a box and after patching, each person signed his or her name on a piece of paper, and handed all to another member or friend of the church.

Be Brief

Know what to say,
  And make it brief,
Loquacity
  Is a petty thief.

Long-winded talk
  Is so unjust;
Talk to the point,
  If talk you must.

Talk less and less,
  Not more and more;
A wagging tongue
  Is such a bore!

—Grenville Kleiser.

Conditions Improving

AT DIFFERENT TIMES we have called attention to the fact which is apparent to many observers, that a fine feeling and sense of unity is being developed in the church. It is by some believed to be one of the results of the difficult financial and industrial times through which we have been passing. Adversity seems to drive us closer together as well as closer to God, and so we are not surprised to read in a letter from Brother H. L. Livingston, pastor at Philadelphia, that the work there seems to have taken on new life in the past few months, that every organization of the branch is looking to ways in which they can help the general church financially. He finds it encouraging to see the people concerned so much about the church. Their interest has increased in the filing of inventories as is evidenced by the fact that a number have been added to the list in that district. He expresses appreciation of the improved Herald and tells us that the members of the branch are praying for the men in the leading quorums of the church, and in addition to this are manifesting a willingness to work with these men in any way that promises help in solving the problems before the church.

THE CONDITIONS reflected in Brother Livingston's brief paragraph of news relative to the spirit prevailing in Philadelphia are similar, we feel sure, to conditions existing in many other places. If this feeling of unity can be continued and this helpful interest become more widespread, as it seems to be doing, we are encouraged to believe that in due course of time under the blessing of the Lord the way will open for us to enter into richer fields of activity toward the goals toward which we have so long been working.

John A. Grant Passes

AN ITEM in the last issue of the Beacon Light of Detroit attracted my attention. It was to the effect that on the 28th of December at his Florida home John A. Grant passed into the beyond. It will be recalled by many of the readers of the Herald that Brother John A. Grant was for a number of years an active representative of the church, both in missionary and local work, and for many years he served as an honored and useful member on the Standing High Council of the church. His many friends in the church will regret to learn of his passing and will, with us, be disposed to extend to the family their expressions of sympathy and condolence. F. M. S.

The "Oxford" Movement in Kansas City

Doctor Frank Buchman's Four-point Gospel to Middle West

"Absolute honesty, absolute purity, absolute unselfishness, absolute love"—these are the fundamentals of the four-point gospel presented to Kansas City men and women in a large room of one of the best hotels by a group of young men and women drawn from the highest circles of culture and education. All of them have university degrees, and some of them have been tutors and instructors in famous institutions. They speak the language of those who have enjoyed the best that the world has to offer, and they bring a message that they have found ultimate satisfaction in the teachings of Jesus, and in submission to the will of God.

There is no hint of the "saw-dust trail" in their meetings—no sensational condemnations of sin, no exploitation of emotionalism. And yet one knows that they have encountered the Something which has deeply moved them to devote their lives to a sacrificial service in a cause that they believe to be true.

Their views—despite the depth of their learning—are those that satisfy the most naive fundamentalist: they believe implicitly in God, and say that they have experiences of Him; they accept a personal devil as a part of the arrangement of life and death; they believe in cleansing and forgiveness by confession, and in the guidance of individual lives through daily contact with the Holy Spirit.

This has been called a "house party" religion, because men and women of the moneyed and aristocratic circles have been brought into it at the house parties where they have been invited to hear testimonies of "changed" lives, and to witness the cleansing effects of a total confession of sin. In the intimate association of the party, the whole matter of life and religion is talked over in a personal way, for there is never anything like a revival meeting or any of its tactics. The group aim to convert the "top layers" of society first, believing that they will bring its effects to the masses afterward.

As a party of our own church members were driving home from one meeting, one remarked, "Why, that is only a part of Latter Day Saintism." "Yes," replied another, "but there are not enough of us working at it."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

We do believe that we could do far better than we have been doing with those four absolutes: honesty, purity, unselfishness, and love. L. L.

Blue Pencil Notes

In the museum room of the public library in Kansas City there are two very complex and interesting "perpetual motion" machines—neither of which is in motion. One such machine invented near Lamoni ran well and shares sold excellently until some inquisitive person discovered how it was wound up. A little later still more ingenius persons discovered how to wind up the stock market and secure "perpetual prosperity."

A popular New York minister, pastor of a wealthy congregation, went into his pulpit during this present winter, and after setting forth plainly the needs of the poor and of the community in general concluded, "If these things do not interest you, you may go to hell and take your money with you and be damned." Some thought he was swearing but to others it sounded more like prophecy—not unlike Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

When I was in California, November last, I visited the fruit ranch of Brother Sylvester Garner in the beautiful Valley of Sunland. Sylvester avers that his fruit is not only "sunkist," it is "star loved and moon hugged." He had just marketed sixty-two boxes of fine oranges (full sized boxes). The fruit growers' association deducted the cost of picking, packing, and marketing the fruit and sent him a check for forty-two cents for his sixty-two boxes. He says that he will never cash the check—it cost him too much and he will keep it for a souvenir. The sun and moon and stars did their part, but somewhere on earth some one failed. In the East at that very time one dozen first-class oranges cost the consumer as much as the sixty-two boxes brought the producer. We have not gone far yet on the problem of distribution.

In the days of our grandfathers every family produced or manufactured most of the things that it needed, and bartered directly for those not produced at home. Every one had employment—too much of it. We have developed "mass production" and invented machines that with the supervision of a comparatively few men will produce all that every one needs; but people generally did not profit by this change as they should have done. Swollen fortunes for a few and unemployment for the many resulted. The machines need but few laborers, but they need many to buy their products; while the many, being out of work, can not buy. It seems improbable that any returning wave of prosperity will bring market enough to furnish employment for all in running the machines at the speed at which they have been geared and working the hours hitherto observed in industry. It seems inevitable that if all are to have their turn at the work, and so have money with which to buy, the hours of labor must be shortened very radically. That means in turn that very much more of the profits of the machines must go to wages. Will those in power submit? If not there is an alternative: here stand the Communists at our door, saying, "If that plan does not please you, we will take over the machinery of production ourselves, and run it entirely in the interests of labor." There is yet one other way, which it is hoped will emerge in the building of Zion; and that is the Lord's way—which is neither competitive nor communistic.

If there is one thing more than another to strengthen our faith in the divinity of the Restoration movement it is found in the fact that Divine wisdom so clearly revealed to the Prophet a hundred years ago conditions coming in the industrial world (not then dreamed of by the wise men of the times) and so definitely commanded the setting up of another order. We may well trust the power and wisdom of the Lord to carry through this project. Ours it is to learn to cooperate with him.

The Religion of Youth

An anguished father, who, through circumstances that could not be helped, saw his son go to a university rather than to Graceland College, discovers that the university has done something to the faith of his son; that something has not been all for the good. In writing to us of how deeply he feels about the matter, he sends us a clipping which, he says, expresses a great deal of truth about what the institutions of higher education may do to young people.

This may not be an inopportune time to say to parents who have young people soon to be ready to choose the college they are to attend: "Send your boys and girls to Graceland." Do not be too wise in the wisdom of the world.

Graceland is in no sense a reformatory for children who, due to your own mismanagement, have escaped your control. But Graceland builds young men and women, develops character, and provides a

www.LatterDayTruth.org

bulwark for a reasonable and wholesome faith. The clipping follows:

COLLEGES AND RELIGION

To say that college does something to the average student's religion is to state a truth which will be conceded by anyone who has given the matter a moment's thought. Nine young men and women out of every ten who received their degrees this June would probably admit, if they were called to testify, that education has acted as a poison to their faith.

In many instances the virus generated by the reasoning processes induces only a mild distemper of skepticism, but in others it works like an acid, eating its way into the bump of credulity until in the end this estimable organ is completely corroded.

Though I am an apostate, I must admit myself that it gives me no satisfaction to realize what a large company of young men and women now share the label with me. But I see no help for it. The church has lost its power to move us. Its conceptions seem as unreal to my generation as the gods of ancient Greece.

In so far as the colleges destroy religious faith without substituting a vital philosophy to take its place, they are turning loose upon the world young barbarians who have been freed from the discipline of the church before they have learned how to discipline themselves. Perhaps this was what one of my least orthodox Harvard professors had in mind when he once said, "There are only a few men in the world who have earned the right not to be Christians."—Philip E. Wentworth, in the Atlantic Monthly.

The La Da Sa Clubs

Women in various branches of the church have formed social organizations under the name of "The La Da Sa Club," a name which is taken from the first two letters of each word in the name "Latter Day Saint."

These clubs help to solve the problem of social, cultural, and benevolent activities for church women who do not want to engage in the usual bridge-and-gossip of ordinary club work. A record of their activities is very interesting.

Some of them meet once a month to eat lunch together, report activities of committees engaged in church work, and to listen to a lecture from some good speaker. The subject matter may include church topics, general information, or culture. Sometimes the groups hear programs of good quality music, or readings.

An outstanding feature of the club work is the "talent money" idea. Each woman selects some talent with which she endeavors to earn extra money to be given to the church. Some take passengers to church in their cars, and so receive the money that would have gone for car fares. Some make and sell cakes or rolls. Others perform the humbler tasks of pressing suits or laundering shirts. Some give dinners for which charges are made. Remarkable ingenuity is often displayed in finding talents and exploiting them.

Members of the clubs are women who are active in all lines of regular church work. Musicians, Sunday-school teachers, secretaries, and general workers are in the ranks.

Much good is done in providing interesting cultural activities for church people, and in contributing to the cause of the church.

Other clubs in some branches are doing the same kind of work for the women, although they do not use the same name. This, of course, makes no difference, so long as the benefits are being realized. The women of the church are to be commended for their enterprise and energy. L. L.

Hope

The tragic suffering of the world through the past few months has brought many to the verge of despair. The fact that our troubles are man-made and have their roots in selfishness and greed, scarcely makes the load lighter while it must be borne.

During this time of great stress, the church has had its finest opportunity to reveal those eternal qualities of goodness that help to share the load of those too heavily burdened.

There are many today who can thank God that they have learned anew the meaning of the Gospel through their helping of some one who needed them. There are many others who thank God that through the Christlike attitude of their fellows, there has come to them a new vision of one of the principles of the gospel—that of hope.

The world has far to go in the solution of present pressing problems. But surely none of us dare say that the nation which has survived Valley Forge, Gettysburg, the Chicago fire, and the San Francisco earthquake can not survive the present shock.

We are going forward, with the hope of the gospel as our shield and buckler. We shall give help where help is needed and thus attempt to "forget ourselves into immortality."—C. E. Wight, in Central Church Bulletin.

In religion, as everywhere else in life, attention is the key to success. Yet we are often too busy or too preoccupied to give the time and the concentration that is needed. Meditation in the sense in which it has been practiced by the great masters of religion has become all but a lost art. For this there is but one remedy. We must change our habits. We may not be able to will God's presence, but we can desire the things that his presence would bring and we can take time to wait for them and to prepare our spirits for their reception.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

A Page for Youth

Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, Iowa

YOUTH'S PROBLEMS are many, and can be stated in an almost unlimited number of ways. To state them at all it is necessary to group them around certain fundamental institutions and interests: adjustments with the family, training for life, work in the church, gaining economic independence, preparation for the new home, and world citizenship.

In the center of this page we are presenting a brief statement of these problems, which will be discussed in greater detail later by a number of writers. If we can secure contributions from the young people themselves, we shall be glad to print several articles on the same or related subjects. Everything depends upon the general interest in the Youth Conference and the problems it will discuss.

If you are a young person, or if you are a young people's leader and intensely interested in these problems, we invite you to write about them. Keep in mind that we are trying to give the discussion a trend that will develop something to start with when we go to the conference at Lamoni. We shall use your contribution, or some part of it, if we can. At any rate, let us hear from you.

Youth's Problems

1. Youth's Place in the Family.
2. Youth's Training for Life.
3. Youth's Way to Economic Independence.
4. Youth and the Church.
5. Youth Prepares for Its New Home.
6. Youth and the New World.

THE METHOD OF THE CONFERENCE, according to those who are interested in promoting it, will be to explore—to get the young people to state their problems, their convictions, and their offerings that may suggest solutions. The conference will be flexible, and will therefore be in a position to give free expression to the thoughts of the young people.

IT IS TO BE HOPED that leaders who will be present at Lamoni for their separate convention will not go with any cut-and-dried conclusions; that they will not go with the intention of securing the endorsement and support of youth for any particular set of pet theories. It is the purpose of those who are arranging the conference to prevent that very thing and any effort at domination that may grow out of it. This, primarily, is the reason for the separate meetings of youth and leaders. Among the leaders, to be sure, there will be a vision of the goals toward which we should be driving, and these goals will be discussed adequately in their own meetings. Old and young, facing the problems honestly, but with Christian kindness, will probably find a meeting ground of agreement.

IT SEEMS CERTAIN that, facing the extreme difficulties that it does today, youth may have some striking and even severe things to say to the older generation. The older men and women will need courage to face problems frankly with youth. It will be a meeting of a generation who have had to face disappointment in giving up certain romantic illusions about the world, and a younger generation who have never had the opportunity for any such illusions. Youth will need courage, but older men and women will need courage, too.

One thing must be realized. We will get nowhere in attempting to fix blame, or in harping on the old subjects of guilt and incompetence. A generation of young people that grew up slashing at and satirizing their elders have inherited the world, and have done not a bit better than their elders did. If anything they have done worse. The generation of young men and women now going forward to meet life, seeking to find their places in the world, are serious-minded, realistic, and somewhat analytical. But they are not heartless. They have learned to "be human" in a world where all too many have reverted to their animal instincts.

The Call of God to Youth always has been one of Christian Service; and the response of Youth to that Call always has been one of self-sacrificing usefulness.—Dwight D. W. Davis.

There are two kinds of people who never change their opinion, and those are the foolish and the dead.—J. Russell Lowell.

NEWS BRIEFS

With Members of the First Presidency

President Frederick M. Smith spent January 28 and 29, with Saints of Joplin, Missouri.

President Elbert A. Smith represented the Quorum of the First Presidency in Independence over this week end, speaking to the Walnut Park congregation Sunday evening.

President Floyd M. McDowell conducted services at Omaha, Nebraska, all last week, following the very successful young people's convention held there January 21 and 22.

To Open Saginaw Church February 5

Saginaw, Michigan, Branch reports a church building as good as new. Their church edifice was badly damaged by fire the morning of December 8, but the work of reconstruction has been rapid. Carpenter work is done, plastering finished, and the workers are now painting and decorating the interior.

The church will be opened for services by an all-day meeting on sacrament Sunday, February 5, and plans are, to follow this event with a series of meetings by Elders William Grice and Hubert Case.

Prefers His Brother in Office

A recent action of Elder Franklyn Steiner, former pastor of the branch at Mobile, Alabama, bore testimony to his wish to give his congregation the best in experience and training. At the arrival of Elder and Sister Amos Berve in Mobile, Brother Steiner, who is a very young man, suggested that Brother Berve, who has served thirty-three years in the ministry, be chosen pastor. The congregation approved the suggestion, and former pastor and present pastor are working in harmony for the good of the group.

Spring River District Has Good Financial Standing

Good news from District President Amos T. Higdon: Spring River District paid into the coffers of the church in 1932 $1,100 more than in 1930. The district income for 1932 amounted to $5,242.35, not including that paid in on the Auditorium fund or all that was sent directly to the Presiding Bishop's office during the month of December. In 1931, this district raised $4,923.91.

The Saints of this district are elated over its present financial standing in the face of a depression that has almost taken from them their coal, oil, lead, and zinc industries.

"I am of the opinion that our district gatherings and the hearty response we have received from headquarters have had much to do with our success," writes Elder Higdon. "During the year we had one young people's convention, two conferences, four institutes, and the young people have met monthly since June with the exception of November. We have had with us Elbert A. Smith and F. M. McDowell of the First Presidency; J. F. Garver, F. H. Edwards, E. J. Gleazer, and R. S. Budd, of the Quorum of Twelve; G. L. DeLapp of the Presiding Bishopric, and Elders C. B. Woodstock, John F. Sheehy, and Leonard Lea. All brought messages of encouragement."

Golden Gate Well Represented at Graceland

East Bay Church (Berkeley and Oakland, California) is well represented at Graceland College this year. This congregation sends four, Mildred Bronson, Muriel Bush, Russel Ralston, and Ned Jacobson, to the church college, besides other young people who are attending the University of California.

Women Hold Week-day Morning Prayer Meeting

The women of First Church congregation, Columbus, Ohio, are alert to both spiritual and temporal needs of the church. A feature of the department's activities is a weekly prayer meeting held at the different homes each Thursday at 10 a. m.

2,667 Church Families in Independence

There are 2,667 church families in Independence, according to the statistical report approved by the late conference in Zion. Six thousand and fifty-nine known members compose this large number of families and are divided as follows into the congregations: Stone Church, 2,473 members; Second Church, 597; Walnut Park, 821; Enoch Hill, 317; Liberty Street, 603; Englewood, 475; Spring Branch, 248; East Independence, 102; Gudgell Park, 73; Sugar Creek Mission, 70; nonresidents, 280.

Letter From Seattle and British Columbia District

A comprehensive letter from officers and branches in the Seattle and Columbia District, printed in the News of this issue of the Herald, gives highly encouraging information as to the spirit and work of the Saints in the Northwest.

Experiences by the Way

By J. F. Garver

EVERY MISSIONARY for the church has experiences worth telling, and time was when our church publications were full of these stimulating stories of God's goodness to his ministers and people. Of late years, however, there seems to have grown up among us a sort of mock modesty, or by some other turn of events we have been drawn aside from this long-time custom in these matters. It ought not to be so. God is as good to us now as in our former days. Our experiences are as enduring. And as they have not needed them before, the Saints these hard days have need of the warming and quickening influences that come with the bearing of testimony concerning blessings received.

This work had its beginning in testimony. Joseph Smith ran forth from his first experience to testify to what he had seen and heard and felt, in the presence of God. And ever since, sincere testimony has borne fruit in honest hearts. So shall the cause be continued in the power of testimony.

This was brought home to me in renewed force in the home of Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, on the morning of January 10, when after Brother Anderson had gone to his work, I visited with Sister Anderson till the time of my train, late in the forenoon.

At no time have I thought of myself as being much. Indeed, growing no doubt out of the hard lines of my childhood and early youth, in the presence of people of superior opportunities, I have not infrequently sensed a near inferiority complex. It had never occurred to me, therefore, I could be of help to Sister Anderson—a strong woman, of abiding convictions and broad background in spiritual life.

I found her at this time, however, despite her clear vision and strength of personality, as eager for reassurances of the present-day divinity of our cause as might be the most obscure of my acquaintances of the church. And as we talked together of conditions in the world, and in the church, and in the lives of its ministers and its people, pointing to the need of Zion; as we talked of the spiritual experiences of her father, the late Joseph Smith; and particularly when I spoke of blessings received during recent months and weeks in my work, her countenance bore evidences of renewed hope within for the cause to which we give allegiance, so that as I left to take train, and since, I was and have been buoyed up and sustained in the consciousness of God's continued care over his own.

We men who go about among the people may be considered strong. If and when so, it is in the strength of God. Many times when left to ourselves, we are weak, and in need of help. Happy are we then when the blessing of God and the response of Saints bring us newness of life by which to go on. Under the skin, we are as other Saints, in need always of others' help, and of the help of the divine presence.

I recall in this connection an occasion of last June when I was in sore need, and received. This was at Lancaster, Wisconsin. I had for many weeks driven myself to be with as many Saints as I might, to give encouragement. Under continued pressure from the depression, the affairs of the people as well as those of the church were in a bad way. It seemed that material relief was not forthcoming in the measure necessary. I noted how some Saints would help the church financially, but could not. How some could, but would not. I wondered how much longer our families under appointment could continue to serve in the general ministry of the church. How much longer we could continue those who could go on. I recounted over and over again my own weaknesses, and the weakness of my brethren. I magnified our limitations all along the line. I recalled how in past times the church had been broken up, and asked myself if it was to be so again. In this time of discouragement, I asked myself, Is the Reorganized Church to break up as an organization, that God shall have again to take of that that remains, and rebuild his church of latter days?

It was in this mood, worn in body, and mind, and spirit, I went to the Sunday morning prayer service of this Lancaster conference last June, when it seemed I must have help to move on in confidence that our efforts were to be rewarded. I declined to have any official part in the meeting. I contributed nothing to its success. A goodly number were present. They were active. They were hopeful. They spoke of their confidence in the final triumph of the cause and the church. They built in me a new spirit.

And as I rose up within myself, it was to be met

The Ministry of Women

An address delivered at a union service of the Women's Groups of Tulsa and Sperry Branches, at Tulsa, Oklahoma.

By O. A. McDowell

MANY years ago in far-away Palestine, there occurred an event of unusual news value. It seems that at least four reporters were present and, as usual, all differed in the details of the event. The occasion was a meeting of Jesus and a woman named Mary who was carrying a supply of very precious spikenard with which she anointed his feet and wiped them with the hair of her head. One reporter carries us further in the story and says, "The whole room was filled with the fragrance of the ointment," and I would like to carry you still further and say of her anointing that the fragrance fell upon the life of Jesus and herself in this beautiful and loving deed.

God has somehow particularly fitted women and given them great opportunity to fill the lives of others with the fragrance of their anointing. Virtue, courage, self-abnegation, are the fragrant issues of a godly companion and a saintly mother.

The same year this church came into existence there was born in Cork a little Irish girl who at the age of seven, came to this continent with her parents. Later, during the awful scourge of yellow fever, she lost her husband four small children. Blinded by grief but not deaf to the call of the needy, she went where the dreaded disease was at its worst, nursing the sick and comforting the dying. She later turned her activities to the needs of the poor and became known as the workers' friend, whose cause she pleaded and in whose interests she incessantly worked. When a century of time had rolled over her head and she was laid to rest, among other tributes to her wonderful life one wrote thus: "I bring the laurel crown of greatness to place upon the brow of Mother Jones. I call her great for she has given bread to those who hungered and rest to the wearied. She has clothed the naked and worn rags in the doing. She has worked that the homeless may have homes, and sacrificed that the laborer may be happy." Thus did the fragrance of her anointing fall upon untold numbers.

I call to mind another girl who, very early in her life developed an intense interest in every living, suffering thing. Always did she think of how she might help others. Often she was seen astride her faithful riding horse, a basket over her arm, carrying food or some good things to the sick, the poor or the needy. Her days and many hours of the nights were filled with dreams of a more extended ministry for others who, like herself, found it the ruling passion of their lives. She knew they must have training and preparation to make their work more effectual. Traditions were ever against her, stating most emphatically that no decent woman ever took up nursing as a vocation. Many, too, believed that nursing was a gift and therefore one needed no training; but the profession was raised to the high place it now holds through the ceaseless dreams, the tireless efforts and the indomitable will of Florence Nightingale. Millions of lives have been filled with the fragrance of this Christlike ministration, for Florence Nightingale early and thoroughly learned to differentiate between good work and make-believe, between really giving one's self to a worthy cause or merely drifting along with the masses.

The world, too, has received the fragrance of the life of that girl who was so tremendously handicapped with blindness and deafness, Helen Keller. But whence came this overflow of fragrance? Let us glance back of the scenes for a moment. The parents of Helen, wishing to overcome this great handicap and give their daughter the benefit of such training as would bring about the highest possible development, chose Miss Sullivan who had herself been blind at one time, as Helen's teacher. Science and medicine had not then been developed to the stage they are today. Her equipment was inadequate, experience limited, and alone with her faith and her pupil, little by little and with the most infinite patience, Miss Sullivan laid upon that life from her treasure of precious spikenard, a fragrance that is the marvel of the world.

Fragrance Dissipated

There are many women today with these God-given charms and possibilities with which they might anoint many lives, who are dissipating and wasting their precious ointment. There is many a home presided over by a tired, irritable, careworn woman, made so by the pitiable slavery she permits. Too many are so eternally busy with just things, things, THINGS. Unlike Florence Nightingale, they have not learned the importance of distinguishing between being busy and giving themselves to some worth-while accomplishment. Too busy with just mere things to anoint those within the home from their supply of precious and fragrant ointment.

Then, there are many other homes bereft of this fragrance because of numerous outside interests and attractions. There is such keen competition to the home today. Of course, there is the social standing to maintain, the social code to observe. There are dinner engagements, card and theater parties, dances, afternoon teas, a week-end picnic, and—shall I mention it?—yes, sometimes excessive church activities until the home is robbed of the fragrance flowing out of the service of a loving wife and mother who thrills with excusable pride in that ministry. In search of diversion, many are drawn down in the whirlpool of outside and competitive activities. These diversions, created for needy women, now rise up in their insistent demands, and reaching out their mighty tentacles, enslave the very beings the diversions were created to liberate. No longer is the home filled with the fragrance of their anointing.

True of the Church

What is true of the home is equally true of the church. For many years we have been building up keen competitive forces and activities within the church which now all but stifle it. The fragrance of its ministry which fell upon the whole church organization and its membership, and whose fragrance also attracted many not of the church, has become dissipated and wasted. Its fragrance has been ofttimes supplanted with many cheap, gaudy and spiritless activities, exhausting the supply of priceless spikenard whose sweetness might fill the whole church and countless souls. A minister of our time sums up the trials of some of his parishioners in the dizzy whirl of activities, carrying their burdens to the Almighty, and terms this a "Modern Prayer." It is expressed thus:

"Oh, Lord, I come to thee in prayer once more, but pardon if I do not kneel before Thy gracious presence, for my knees are sore with so much walking. In my chair instead I'll sit at ease and humbly bow my head.

"I've labored in Thy vineyard, Thou dost know, I've sold ten tickets for the minstrel show; I've called on fifteen strangers in our town, their contributions to our church put down.

"I've baked a pot of beans for Saturday's spree; an old-time supper it is going to be. I've dressed three dolls, too, for our annual fair, and made a cake which we must raffle there.

"Now, with Thy boundless wisdom, so sublime, Thou knowest that these duties all take time; I have no time to fight my spirit's foes, I have no time to mend my husband's clothes. My children roam the streets from morn till night, I have no time to teach them what is right, but Thou, O Lord, considering all my care, wilt count them righteous and wilt heed my prayer.

"Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show, and put it in the hearts of all to go. Induce the visitors to patronize the men who in our program advertise, because I've chased these merchants till they hid whene'er they saw me coming, yes they did.

"Increase the contributions to our fair, and bless the people who assemble there; bless thou the grab-bag and the Gypsy tent, the flower table and the cake that's sent. May our whist club be to thy service blest, our dancing party gayer than the rest; and when thou hast bestowed these blessings, then, we pray that Thou wilt bless our souls. Amen!"

Too often have we measured the success of the church generally and locally as well as the qualifications of our pastors, by the number of these activities entered into, even though the house of prayer has been turned into a house of merchandising. I predict that when Christ comes again there will be another overthrow of the tables of the money changers. Indeed, he does not await his coming to speak his disapproval of our dissipation of precious ointment upon activities unworthy and our spikenard upon these lesser things. And after all, with all our money-grabbing methods, with this department often functioning primarily to make money, and with all the activities centered upon raising funds for the churches of this country, the flesh, the world, and the Devil are getting four hundred times as much as the Lord's cause. Why? Because we are training lives for future activity in the "Money Changers Club" instead of training them to live God's way in matters of financing his church, and altogether too many within our homes and in their church experiences are living in an atmosphere of ticket selling, bazaars, bake sales, advertisement soliciting, refreshment stands, quiltings, socials, suppers, etc., to the impoverishing of spiritual supplies.

Church Objectives

May I ask you ladies just what is the objective of our church? And answering that question, will you ask yourselves another? Do the activities you now carry on in your branch always propel us toward that objective? The recent General Conference declared two outstanding objectives, the first of which has to do with carrying the good news and instructing in the GOSPEL, viz; "Evangelizing the world." No side issues or outside attractions, but actually carrying the gospel. The second objective, like unto it, is "Establishing Zion." My dear sisters in this worthy cause, these can never be realized until we have homes pungent with the odor of real missionary and Zionic ambitions and ideals. Homes, whose inmates have had laid upon them by you mothers and wives, the spirit of the Master who came to seek and to save. I appeal to you in whom I have learned to place great confidence, that without your entire support to the cause, we are doomed. But

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Brad brings a handsome young business friend home to dinner, and Edith, one of the Half Dozen, who has helped Polly in the emergency by playing maid, exclaims in a swift aside, "Polly, he's good looking! . . . Bet he's married. . . . Wouldn't it be interesting—if he isn't?" And while Polly became so absorbed in church and social duties that she nearly forgot him, Brad stayed home from church, holding company with his private thoughts. Brad's mother writes that she is coming to make them a visit, and Polly is surprised to find that he is troubled rather than pleased with the news. Now let us introduce Grandma Nelson—

Chapter 5

Carrol Entertains His Grandmother

CARROL was doing his best to entertain his new grandmother. Though she had been there not quite one hour, he already felt quite at ease with her. He liked her big black pocketbook with the bright chain, for hadn't she taken from it just a moment ago a white and red stick of candy, and given it to him? And now as he sat astride of the end of the lounge, licking the red off the candy, he gave her a wide, besmeared smile.

"Yes," Mrs. Nelson was saying, as she anxiously inspected her grandson: "He's the only grandson I have. Milly and Evelyn have all girls, you know," nodding at Polly who sat on the lounge within arm's reach of her son. "Milly has three of them, and Evelyn, two, and I've always been anxious for a grandson though I didn't expect one with blue eyes. The Nelson's, you know, are brown or gray-eyed. But Carrol, now, Polly, are you sure he's healthy? We must be careful of him. It wouldn't do to lose him as a neighbor lady of Milly's lost hers last winter, just from neglecting a little cold. Carrol doesn't have a cold, does he? He isn't a mite too heavy, is he?"

Since Mrs. Nelson's arrival, her daughter-in-law had had the sensation of one trying to stem or turn an irresistible tide of words. Never had Polly heard a woman talk more continuously. Her conversation consisted of questions, and very personal questions at that, with a pathetic illustration thrown in now and then. Monosyllable answers were all the hostess could offer and keep up with the trend of thought.

"Oh, no, he's all right. He's quite healthy, and his weight is good. You see he is growing." The young woman flushed almost guiltily as she glanced at her son. Carrol was in one of his "moods" today. You could never tell what he would think up next. The presence of a visitor stimulated him to "show off," and since inexperience bound him with no inhibitions, this he was proceeding to do.

"Carrol, you mustn't climb up there!" Her son was in the act of climbing atop Polly's eighteenth century occasional chair. Three weeks before, Brad had shown him how to mount the hitherto insurmountable and taught him a trick of diving from it into his father's arms. Polly knew what would follow if the child attained the top. She started toward him. With a last scramble he reared himself on the back.

"Dive, Mummie. Dive—" and without more ado, extended his arms and flung himself head foremost.

"My goodness! He'll break his neck!" shrieked Mrs. Nelson.

"He's all right," breathlessly. "It's just a trick Brad taught him the other day. He doesn't know what fear is." Returning to the lounge she attempted to keep the child on her lap.

"A lot to do Brad has to teach him such a trick as that!" severely.

"No, no," protested Carrol, squirming free, and worming his way toward his grandmother's handbag, "Tandy?"

"No more until supper, child. You'll be sick."

"Carrol not sick," and he smiled coaxingly.

"I'm eager for you to make the acquaintance of some of my neighbors," smiled Polly. In her heart she was troubled that her son was not making the best impression he might. Ordinarily he was very well-mannered, but today—well, he just would have to show off! "Here, son, let's play with your train," and she removed him from the lounge and the tantalizing bag. "Right next door I have the dearest old English friend. She's an active church worker. I hope you two will be great friends."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Can you understand her?"

"Oh, dear yes," laughed Polly.

"Well—you can't some of 'em, these foreigners, I mean."

"But she's been in this country more years than I am old, and then—Carrol"—there was a note of sternness in her tone—"hasn't mother told you to leave those alone?" He had wandered into the dining room, clambered up on a chair and was endeavoring to reach some lovely porcelain candlesticks Polly kept on her buffet. "Excuse me," hastily. Claiming her son, she took him to the kitchen, perched him in his chair, and thrust a cracker into his hands. That would keep him still for at least two minutes.

"What, a cracker at this hour?" demanded the grandmother. "Why, it isn't more than half an hour until supper, Polly."

AT THAT instant the telephone gave an imperative peal, and Polly whisked herself away without having to explain the problem of Carrol and a cracker just before dinner.

"Polly," as she reentered the kitchen some two minutes later, "this child's heart beats awfully fast even for a child."

"But he's been running about."

"And look, he has a little breaking out on his neck here."

The young mother stifled a sigh. Was Carrol always to be the object of all ills. How glad she would be to have Brad home to entertain his mother. He had brought her from the station, but had had to return to the office after the introductions.

"Why don't you cook potatoes with the peelings on? They're so much more healthful and economical, too, and you wrote that you were trying to economize and sacrifice to put more in your envelope each week."

"Once in awhile I do cook them that way," desperately, "but Brad doesn't like them so well—"

"Humph! Brad—why—"

"Who's 'humphing' Brad already?" was the gay question from the door. And the person in question advanced toward the stove, put one arm about his wife, and the other about his mother. "Two of 'em now instead of one," he chuckled. "My, what's one poor fellow to do?"

Carrol was beating the table of his chair with small, pink fists and shouting at the top of his lung power: "Dadee! Dadee! Dade--ee!"

"Got you penned up, have they, old chap?" and his father had claimed him and flung him high in the air—

"Bradford! Don't you know you shouldn't do that to that child?"

"But, Ma, he likes it. Hear him yell? Don't you like it, old boy, eh?"

"More, Dadee, more!" excitedly.

"See there."

"But—stop. You must be careful. His heart!"

"His heart? Whatsa matter with his heart?"

Behind their visitor's back Polly was going through the entire category of hush signs for her husband's benefit. But he refused to see them. Abruptly he turned to her, "Has the doctor ever said there was anything wrong with the kid's heart, Polly?"

"No, Brad."

"But there is! I know there is. It acts just like Mrs. Smith's cousin's little boy's heart did back home, just a week or two before he passed away. They wouldn't believe anything was wrong either," and she closed her lips with a now-I've-warned-you-and-the-responsibility-isn't-mine air.

"Aw, shucks! Carrol's all right. Why, he's the son of Polly and Brad Nelson, and we're both huskies."

The evening meal went nicely until Polly served the pie.

"You may have you choice tonight, Mother," she said; "pumpkin or mince, which do you prefer?"

"None at all, thank you. I never eat pie. The crust is indigestible and stays on my stomach for hours. Pies aren't good for anyone, and I don't eat them."

"It's awful, this job of keeping fit, isn't it, Ma?" agreed Brad at the same time serving himself to a quarter of a mince pie. Polly wanted to giggle.

"Brad." Most disapprovingly.

"Well, you see how healthy I am, and my wife knows the old man must have his pie."

"Any drinker will use that argument, Brad. Just you wait until you're forty." And her lips drew into a thin line, but she said nothing when she saw Polly cut a small piece of pumpkin pie and remove the filling for Carrol's plate.

IS SHE always going to be putting me through the inquisition? the young woman was wondering. Brad must have been right about his mother, but she looked sweet. From her guest's opening greeting, "So this is Polly, well, bless your heart," she had felt as though she were being scrutinized and not altogether with approval. Carrol certainly had not put her in the light of a good parent. The room she had so carefully and hopefully prepared had been casually surveyed, and called forth: "Well, I'm sure this is a lovely color, but, Polly, how can you afford all these pretty things on Brad's income?" When told that Polly herself had made the most of them, she had replied with finality, "Well, I'm sure I don't see where you find time with all the church work you ought to be doing."

Nevertheless, Polly was determined, for Brad's sake, to be her sunny self. Somehow she maneuvered to get Brad and his mother away to the study while she washed the dishes and brushed up the kitchen. Twice the telephone called her away, and the water cooled too fast, and Carrol had an unusually rowdy spell, requiring the attention of both his parents.

"If you don't mind," Polly apologized as she joined them, all unconscious of how young her flushed face and trim house dress made her appear, "I'll mend while we talk." It was not nearly so late as she thought—half an hour yet until Carrol's bedtime. "My mending basket is my closest friend when I'm home. It always seems to be full," she laughed.

"Well, now, my dear, you won't need to worry about the mending. I'm sure I'll be glad to do that for you. Brad always was hard on his socks, and with Carrol coming up the line, you'll soon have double duty."

That was the first genuinely kind-hearted speech Mrs. Nelson had made, and Polly stammered her appreciation.

"That's nothing at all." Her tone was matter-of-fact. "I'm sure I've had years of experience, and what are a few socks more in an old woman's life?" Then her tone changed to one of inquiry: "Brad, do you carry much life insurance?"

"Why?"

"Well, if something were to happen to you, do you have your family well provided for?"

Carrol was occupied hauling the magazines out of the rack, opening them, and putting them face down on the floor about his father's feet. He was "making houses."

"Why, ma, you aren't selling insurance, are you?"

"Of course not."

"Well, your question sounded exactly like one dozen other questions propounded to me this fall by Latter Day Saints who are out of a job. This town is simply stuffed with insurance sellers. You don't suppose, good-natured as I am, that I could escape them for ever?"

"But you aren't answering my question."

"Oh, don't worry. I think they'll be safely provided for in case the old man kicks off," Brad's slang sometimes troubled Polly, and especially so tonight though she knew he was putting it on. Surreptitiously he was looking about for the paper. "You're not by any chance thinking of poisoning me to collect?" teasingly.

To this Mrs. Nelson deigned no reply. To Polly she explained: "We had a neighbor who had a lovely wife and two small children, and when he dropped dead on the street, they discovered that months before he had carelessly let his insurance lapse—"

"I beg your pardon," to their guest. "Son, come here," from Polly.

"—And the result was his wife had to go in debt to pay his funeral expenses, and she lost their nice little home—"

"Hard luck," from Brad who had deliberately walked to the lounge for the paper, and buried himself behind it.

Mrs. Nelson folded her hands resignedly, and looked about her. Polly thought wildly for something to say, but Carrol was keeping her pretty well occupied. He had what Brad often described as "the get-ins."

The evening paper crackled.

"My gracious, if you haven't Aunt Mary's picture on the wall! Now, Polly, there was a woman who endured worlds of suffering. She—"

Carrol was into the music cabinet now, but Polly let him explore rather than interrupt her mother-in-law's speech. The little mischief! What unfair advantage he was taking of this liberty! He was really diggin' in.

"—Her oldest boy was barely fifteen months when the second was born, and before his mother was out of bed again and at her work, he put his eye out with a splinter," the story went on.

POLLY fidgeted. Carrol was into the picture shelf now! She sat on her right hand to appear at ease. Brad did not move.

"—and then her husband died and she had six children to support, and they found out she had tuberculosis." Already Polly had resolved to remove Aunt Mary's picture from the wall. If she had known all these terrible things, she never would have enjoyed having it there. She did not make a specialty of using martyr's pictures for living room decorations.

"So you can see—"

"'O-o-k, Mummie, Mummie!" Carrol had made a discovery. He staggered toward her under a load of pictures, dropping them all the way across the floor.

Polly lifted him to the lounge between Brad's mother and herself. On top he had a picture of himself taken only a short time before.

"Who is this, son?" hoping to divert her guest's attention from Aunt Mary's picture.

"'At's Carrol. See Carrol," and sociably he shoved the picture toward Mrs. Nelson.

The Work of the Church

A Working Guide for Teachers and Leaders

By C. B. W.

President McDowell has continually challenged church school workers with the task of making a definite, concrete contribution to the work of the church. Most any one may be called to the work of a class teacher or leader, but few can measure up to the standard of efficiency demanded of one who would really share with the Master the supreme task imposed in the injunction, "Go ye therefore and teach."

It is obvious that we must, (1) sense clearly our goals, (2) understand the interests, needs and capacities of those whom we would teach, (3) organize our materials for effective presentation, (4) adopt effective teaching method, (5) provide for adequate outcomes of our teaching in constructive life experiences, (6) lead and inspire in worthy Christian endeavor by virtue of our own dynamic Christian character.

Among these perhaps the first in importance is that of a series of clearly defined goals. In recent years these have been variously stated. A concise and stimulating statement was recently made by Doctor Paul H. Vieth of the International Council of Religious Education. This has been adapted by President McDowell and expanded into a challenge or guide to our own church workers. The challenge may well be used as a personal check upon one's own work, or be studied by a group as a basis for a cooperative effort in improving the teaching work of the church school. It may well serve as a guide by supervisors who must pass upon the work of teachers, and assist them to a point of maximum efficiency.

Note the continual emphasis upon "the changes taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead." This is the keynote of all successful teaching.

A Working Guide

I. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their relationship with God?

Are they discovering God for themselves? Am I revealing God to them in what I do and say? Am I providing opportunities for actual practice of communion with God? Do they give evidence of an increasing faith in Him and increasing willingness to trust and obey Him? Is their concept of God becoming more true and rich and their relationship with Him increasingly intimate? What evidences have I that they are more willing to let God have first place in their lives? More willing to yield themselves completely to His will than they were a month ago or a year ago?

II. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their relationship with Christ?

Are they daily learning more about Jesus? Do they show greater appreciation of His nature and purpose? In what measure has Jesus become a living presence in their lives? In what measure has He become their highest ideal? Does the quality of their allegiance to Him seem to be growing? What expressions or evidences have come to my attention that they would go with Jesus all the way, whatever the cost?

III. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their philosophy of life, their ability to give a Christian interpretation to life and the universe?

Are they more apt to put God into all they do? What evidences have I that they are putting on the mind of Christ? Have I provided opportunities for practice in thinking things through in terms of the standard of Christ? What is their attitude toward themselves, towards their neighbor, towards God? Have I noticed any change in their standards of value? What do they put first in their lives, material or spiritual; things or persons; self or others? Are they in life for what they can give or what they can get? Do they see in the universe a divine, on-growing purpose? Have they evidenced a desire to align themselves whole-heartedly with this on-growing purpose?

IV. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their character?

Have they evidenced a progressive and continuous development of Christlike character? What growth have I observed in this respect? Are they evidencing an increasing ability of self-direction and self-control? What changes in their ways of doing things are actually taking place? Have they grown

To many of our readers the return of the Jews to Palestine is a subject of perennial interest. Important developments have been made within recent years in the movement to fit the Holy Land for occupation and to bring the Jews back to their "Promised Land." The author of this article has studied the matter for many years, and has corresponded with Jewish leaders on the subject.

The Jews Are Gathering---Millions of Dollars Expended in Palestine

By C. J. Hunt

THE never ceasing activities, the increasing faith and loyal devotion of the Hebrew people to the faith of their fathers is commendable.

Of the Israelitish prophets who predicted the present movement of the Jews to Palestine, was Jeremiah (Chapter 30: 3), who said, "For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it."

In Saint Luke 21: 24, Jesus declared that, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

All students of sacred writings should be interested to know that one of God's prophets named Nephi, on the American continent, about the sixth century before Christ, recorded the following concerning the Jews: "And it shall come to pass that my people which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will shew unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham, that I would remember his seed for ever." (Book of Mormon, page 158: 73, 74.) A sacred promise indeed. And it should be encouraging to the Saints to know that the time is nearing when a special effort will be made by our church to present the blessed message of the restored gospel to the Jews, in fulfillment of revelations given by God's prophets in this generation contained in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, Sections 39: 3, and 87: 3. Every member of the church ought to renew his dilligence in the Lord's work. His promises are sure.

In confirmation of the prophecies recorded in the three standard books of the church concerning the gathering of Israel, a glorious heavenly vision was given to Joseph Smith, and Oliver Cowdery Sunday, April 3, 1836, in the Kirtland (Ohio) Temple. In this vision the Prophet Moses appeared to them "and committed unto them the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north." (Church History, Volume 2, pages 46, 47.) Hence this church has a very deep interest in all developments favorable to the rehabilitation of Palestine by Israel.

Most all Jews are strong in the Hebrew religion and Christians should be charitable towards them. It is generally admitted that they "are the purest-blooded people, nationally, and have the best established descent in the world." Their statistician says the Jewish population of all nations has increased from about four million to nearly sixteen million in the last century. For nearly two thousand years Israel has had an eventful life—adventurous, prosperous, and at times filled with extreme adversities—yet they maintained courage and held to the sacred objective prophetically assured to them: a strong nation in the Holy Land. Although they have not yet accepted the true Messiah, Jesus Christ, impostors have from A. D., 130 to 1872, tried to satisfy their longing desires for a Savior to the number of twenty-five different false Messiahs, all of whom made special claims but were exposed and their spurious title to Messiahship soon ended. (See fuller account in the Saints' Herald, December 5, 1894.)

Jerusalem and Palestine—Partially Reclaimed

It was a glorious, and much appreciated event to Bible believers when Great Britain authorized General Allenby and his army, December 11, 1917, to take possession of Jerusalem and Palestine, liberating the places from the Arabs (Ishmaelites), to such an extent that the Jews could have greater opportunities and special privileges in reinhabiting the country and rebuilding cities held sacred to all Israelites. Their loyalty to an inherent principle and a devout religious cause as evidenced by published reports show that the Zionist Movement has two hundred million dollars invested in Palestine, although payments to their land fund by American Jews has fallen off fifty per cent since the great financial depression began.

Doctor Nehum Sokolow, of London, president of the world Zionist organization, organized thirty years ago, says two hundred thousand Jews are living in Palestine and that one half of that number have returned there during the last ten years under the stimulus of Zionist supervision. The universal interest in Palestine by the Jews was so great in the world that in July, 1931, Zionists of thirty-four nations signed the Federation Pact at Basle, Switzerland, uniting all general Zionists. Judge Julian W. Mack, of the United States, acted as chairman of the Jewish congress and was the first to sign the document. The activities of that Federation are far reaching for good in the Holy Land.

It was my pleasure in October, 1931, to have about two hours visit with a rabbi lecturer, in Illinois, who represented the Zionist Movement of Palestine. He said the Zionist organization had purchased three hundred thousand acres of land in Palestine; had fifty thousand acres of orange groves, forty thousand acres of grape vineyards, and harvested twenty thousand acres of wheat that year. It had one hundred and nine thousand Jewish people, young and old, on farms. They controlled one modern city of 42,000, all Jews, called Tel-Aviv near Jaffa, in which they have good schools, colleges, factories, etc. He showed me a book containing bequests, large and small, made by Jews in many countries, which means a constant yearly income, as well as from other sources, of money to purchase real estate, etc., in their Promised Land. (A good example for us.)

During that pleasant interview I asked the noted rabbi what textbook they used when preaching to their congregations. His reply was, "the stick of Judah, commonly called the Bible," meaning the Old Testament. Then I asked, do you ever use the stick of Ephraim (at times called the Stick of Joseph) mentioned in Ezekiel 37: 15, 23, where also the Stick of Judah is named. He quickly answered that he never saw the stick of Ephraim, knew nothing of such a book or record. With Bible in hand I turned to Isaiah, Chapter 29, and read the verses telling of the "book that is sealed" to be given to the world in our day, to which he said that he knew nothing of such a book. Then it was my pleasure to take from my brief case the Book of Mormon, known to the church as the "stick of Ephraim," or "sealed book," and placed it on the Bible, the "stick of Judah," and explained to the rabbi many things pertaining to the great Restoration of God's church, including the two Priesthoods, the Urim and Thummim, the visitations of Moses and Elijah in the Kirtland Temple, our promised Zion in America, etc. He asked many questions, showed deep interest and said, "This is all new to me, I am interested. Your church has the best intellectual and most satisfying approach to the Jews I have ever heard of." He expressed a strong belief that God made selection of certain families from the nine and a half tribes of Israel about 720 B. C., and took them into a land northward, a place not now known to present civilization, and that they would be returned in God's own due time. (Jeremiah 16: 14, 15-23: 59. 2 Esdras 13: 39, 50, Apocrypha, Old Testament.) We must be of good courage, for this Latter Day Saint Church will, by and by, do a great work among the Jews.

Gratifying Results From Money Expended in Palestine

It is claimed by prominent Jews that in rebuilding the Jewish homeland, "the investments have proved much safer than those in most other countries," and "the Jewish center, Palestine, is increasing in prosperity and population." Their Zionist organization having a cash surplus of over two million dollars.

The Dead Sea of Palestine is proving a veritable gold mine, as millions of tons of muriate of potash, bromine, magnesium chloride, etc., a year, are produced from that sea, and sold to many countries, giving employment to hundreds of Arabs and Jews which means that the Dead Sea is becoming a sea of life and usefulness from an industrial, productive and money-making point of view. Jerusalem is now favored with "a Jewish engineering wizard who is forcing the Jordan River to do his bidding and is electrifying the whole of Palestine," which all means that good substantial developments are taking place in that land.

It was my pleasure in 1898 to have a visit with Mr. Kennedy Henry, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, who superintended in 1887 the building of the first patent roller flouring mill in Jerusalem. He said the only kind in use prior to that time was those where "two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one be taken and the other left." (Matthew 24: 41.)

Important Religious Views of Jews

Permit me to say that in letters from Jewish rabbis of different states, answering questions on several matters of vital interest to Latter Day Saints, that the Jews do not claim to have High Priests or any one having divine rights, since Old Bible times, to confer by ordination ministerial privileges in priesthood by the laying on of hands.

On the subject of priesthood, a rabbi wrote:

"In the days of the tabernacle and temples, every male descendant of Aaron (not sufficient to be a descendant of Levi) who was without physical blemish or moral corruption was a priest, but at thirty he had to be ordained by the high priest.

"Today every male descendant of Aaron, one whose name is 'Cohen,' is a priest. As there are no sacrifices, nor any high priest, his only duties are to bless the people three times a year and is the first to read the scrolls on Sabbath.

"I believe that we are priests after the order of Melchisedec in that we may approach God in his sanctuary, but that does not make us pastors, evangelists, or elders. These offices are obtained only by the laying on of hands."

Another prominent rabbi and assistant editor of a popular monthly Jewish magazine says, Moses and Aaron "presided over the church as its first presidents." . . . "Moses is regarded as the first emancipator of Israel, the mediator of the Covenant of Yehweh, the real founder of the nation and also the founder of the legal system which the prophets and priests developed later. Moses was the high priest of the Hebrews during the forty years journey through the wilderness, but was denied the priestly descent in his family. Aaron the other high priest was granted the descent." . . . "In the days of the Second Temple the Hebrew nation was ruled for five hundred years by a high priest and aside from external troubles was very successful." It seems quite evident that in order for a church to fully interest the Jews it must have high priests and a first presidency, the Melchisedec and Aaronic or Levitical priesthoods, with divine rights to ordain by the laying on of hands, to offer to them. This church can and will be the one to supply their long felt want.

From the New Testament viewpoint on a first presidency in the Lord's church, two presidents of Protestant Christian colleges wrote me, in 1902; namely, J. W. McGarvey, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Kentucky, and J. A. Beattie, of Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, that it would be proper in speaking of Peter, James and John whom Saint Paul called "pillars" (Galatians 2: 9), to call them presidents or a first presidency of the Christian church.

Of the growing liberality favoring an acquaintance of the New Testament by prominent rabbis, I am pleased to report Doctor Isaac Landman, editor of the American Hebrew, saying, "the time has come when the New Testament should no longer be a closed book to the Jews."

by the Spirit of God. New hope came to me. I can not describe the experience. I can only say, as I sat there under ministry of the Spirit, there came to me its reassuring power. It filled the whole of my being. It brought the conviction the church shall go on. This does not say no man will fail. Any one of us may fail, or any number of us. But the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints shall go on, and under God's outstretched hand shall finish the work he has called it to do. This was the assurance of the Spirit that Sunday in June—The church shall go on!

And with the assurance came the occasion for the rededication of what little I have and am to the unfinished task of the church. So that be the time long or short for me, I can but give to the cause the best I have.

Oh, yes, we enjoy today the presence and power of God, as in earlier days of our church life. And it occurs to me we ought to tell each other about it.

"Well, that is a nice picture."

"Yes, I had those taken on his second birthday. Brother Charles Manner takes remarkably good photographs. I have one here of Brad somewhere, and here's another of Carrol."

After all, Carrol's idea of showing the pictures was a pretty good one. At least there were no martyrs among them.

"This is my neighbor of whom I was telling you," from Polly.

"'O-o-k! Mummie. Mummie!" from Carrol. It was a picture of herself in wedding veil and with bridal bouquet, taken four years before.

"Who's that, Carrol?" Mrs. Nelson politely asked.

"'At's my Mummie wif flowers!" proudly declared her small entertainer, giving her a round-eyed smile.

When everything goes crooked
And seems inclined to rile,
Don't kick, nor fuss, nor fidget,
Just—you smile!

When some one tries to "do" you
By taking more than half,
Be patient, firm and pleasant;
Just—you—laugh.

But if you find you're stuffy
(Sometimes, of course, you will)
And can not smile, nor grin, nor laugh,
Just—keep—still.

Standards of Pleasure

By O. J. Tary

THE DESIRE for pleasure is inherent in every normal person. This God-given attribute in humanity sustains the idea that the Creator designed that his people should have pleasure, beginning in this life and reaching completeness in celestial life. In all civilized countries, standards of value have been adopted for the benefit and protection of the people, the wisdom of which no one questions.

When a citizen of one country desires to become a citizen of another country, he must qualify according to the standard of citizenship adopted by that country. In the gospel of Christ the call goes to people of every kindred, tongue and nation, to become members of the kingdom of God on earth. The King who extends that call reserves to himself the undisputed right to set the standard to govern those who apply for citizenship in the kingdom. The law of adoption as set forth in the Word of God contains principles that are fundamental, upon the acceptance of which the promised blessings are predicated. Adoption into the household of God places us under "The perfect law of liberty." (James 1: 25.) Under this law our activities may not be restricted by the mandatory "Thou shalt" or "Shalt not," but the responsibility in choosing our course is just as great if not greater than before. When under the light of Divine truth, reflected in teaching and example of the Master and inspired writers, together with that which comes under our observation in the world, if then we choose unwisely we will be without excuse. Under the law of liberty, higher ideals and a higher standard should motivate our conduct, for liberty grants no license to do wrong. Environment and social custom often determine the kind of pleasure sought, and quite often the mind is diverted from real pleasure to an illusive substitute. It is easy for young people to fall into the habits that are popular with their friends, and when these turn to the dance, the bridge parties and other forms of worldly amusement, say, "I can see no harm in them." There may be no immediate harm, as the divergence from the gospel standard may appear almost invisible, but the farther followed, the wider the breach grows, and safety is supplanted by danger.

The Lord has been calling on the church to "Come up higher." Shall we respond by lowering our standard to that of the world? To do so will be to forfeit the blessings of the gospel, the things that bring real pleasure, and partake of the shallow pleasures that are not uplifting and which often bring remorse. The Perfect Law of Liberty gives to the children of God freedom to choose in seeking pleasure, but holds up a high standard to direct in choosing safely.

The Preamble and Resolution introduced in the recent conference by the Order of Patriarchs, called attention to the divinely approved standard, and gave timely warning against lowering it. As spiritual fathers to the church, none are better qualified to give counsel than the Patriarchs. Warnings from watchmen on the towers of Zion can not safely be treated with indifference. While the conference did not by vote adopt the resolution to reaffirm, the position of the church is just as clearly set forth in the former resolutions that remain unchanged. The Resolution from the Order of Patriarchs urged the necessity of more fully teaching the laws and rules of the church by example and precept as set forth in Conference Resolutions number 317 and number 377. Also Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7, and 59: 2, 3. The position of the church as set forth in the Resolutions and Doctrine and Covenants should have the united support of the church membership. The attention of the Saints is called to the danger in the growing tendency to depart from the recognized standard. If the preaching of the gospel is to be successful, gospel converts must live its precepts. Living to the gospel standard increases spirituality and develops a capacity for pleasure of a higher degree.

He who would gain real and lasting pleasure will regard the admonition, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." (1 Thessalonians 5: 22; also Romans 12: 1.) "I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." As children of the light we are charged with the responsibility of winning souls to Christ.

If we adopt a lower standard, that is popular in the world and that appeals to present desire for pleasure, we may not be condemned for having violated a specific law of the church, but we may stand condemned for failure to win souls to Christ because of lowering the gospel standard. Surely the pleasure that comes from winning souls from darkness to the light, greatly exceeds the momentary pleasures of the world. The church can rise no higher than the individual members of the church.

Recently two ladies, in relating their experience in working and teaching in rural Sunday schools and churches, stated that they had never taken part in dancing or card playing. It was evident they found greater pleasure in the work they were doing. They were sisters, and one had served two terms as county superintendent of schools, and is a successful teacher. What does the Restoration mean to us if we allow our standard to fall below that of the people we try to enlighten? Do we find comfort in the words of Jesus, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light"? (Luke 16: 8.) Pleasure will be real and enduring, or fantastic and disappointing, according to the standard we adopt.

"in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man"? Are they becoming more clean, more honest, more dependable? What have I observed about their conduct, their team work, their attitude and treatment of the opposite sex? The kind of games they enjoy, the kind of books they read, their attitude towards worship and the house of God?

V. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their relationship to the church?

What progress have they made in the acquiring of necessary knowledges about the church, its mission, its message, its organization, its history and doctrine? What definite changes in their attitude toward the church? Are they more able to assist in the work of the church than before? Are they more willing to carry their share of the load? Are they more intelligent, active, and efficient members of the church? Do they attend church regularly? Do they understand and obey the financial law? Are they specialists in some field of church work? Have I provided them opportunities for sharing in the work of the church? What evidences have I observed of an increasing devotion to the church and concern about her welfare? Has the church become their church in a very real sense?

VI. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their knowledge of and appreciation for the best religious experience of the race?

What have I observed in respect to their knowledge and appreciation of the standard books of the church? Have they evidenced any development in this respect under my instruction? Have those books become increasingly meaningful, beautiful, and helpful in their lives? What opportunity have I provided my pupils for growing appreciation of the best religious pictures, religious music, and religious dramas? Have they evidenced a growing desire to claim their spiritual heritage? Have they grown in their appreciation of the best thought and ideals of other faiths and other times?

VII. What changes are taking place in the lives of those I teach and lead with reference to their relationship to the task of building a Godlike social order—Zion?

Has there been noticeable increase in their ability and disposition to work together in harmony with the Christ pattern? Have they learned to love righteousness and hate iniquity? Have they developed a passion for the welfare of mankind? To what extent do they evidence a desire to substitute social righteousness for social unrighteousness? Have they in their group activities in a measure depicted the potential beauty of Zion as a symphony of social relationships? Have I provided them opportunities to practice the parts which they are prepared to play and would like to play in a Godly social order? What opportunities have I provided for them to actually participate in building the kingdom?

D. M. Wiesen, church school director, Philadelphia, has made a very practical use of the above guide. A copy has been sent to each teacher and leader of the school to be made the basis of consideration in the coming year's work. The church school of Philadelphia is, in many ways, a model of organization and administration. Its success is doubtless due to a clear vision on the part of leaders and to the spirit of earnest cooperation and willing service on the part of all. The school naturally becomes a most vital part of the total program of the branch.

from a confidence born of experience, I know you are not going to withhold your support, but the fragrance of your intelligent and Christlike anointing is going to fill your homes and your branch and spread to the membership of the church.

HOME SUPPLIES THE CHURCH

The home as an institution is second to none in its power, its possibilities and its duties in sending to the church its finished product. Whatever that product is, that must the church work with toward its objectives.

Whatever the home has accomplished or failed to accomplish, these are coming to the church as they are. Is it not high time to consider seriously the relationship of the home to the church and its responsibility in this connection? What greater condemnation can befall you than to have failed by allowing your precious spikenard to flow out to other and less worthy interests until a life who needed its fragrance shall be wholly unfitted to make its contribution toward the church ideals? What kind of a contribution will make possible our objectives? I would have you know that it will require the same kind of a contribution that was made by men and women of the early church.

What was the activity of the church during those dark days of uncertainty, when driven from Missouri, a number had gathered at Nauvoo, and from that place fourteen Seventies and five High Priests were appointed to foreign missions, and over four thousand souls were brought into the church in one and one half years? Making due allowance for our present depression, and even that can not be compared with conditions obtaining then, with a membership of more than 110,000 we have had to wait over four months to send one of the two Apostles appointed at last General Conference to his field in a foreign land. What kind of a contribution is necessary to reach our objectives? The same spirit of sacrifice that sent Lyman Wight walking six hundred miles, baptizing three hundred ninety souls in less than three months' time, or the fragrance of a life like that of Orson Pratt who, in his zeal, walked three hundred miles in a short time carrying the gospel message. These are but samples of the host of courageous, enthused, zealous souls of those days and since, who worked in the interests of mankind, and the whole church is fragrant with their anointing. Please note also, "God gave the increase."

Were their activities caught up in a continuous round of socials, suppers, quiltings, parties, money-making schemes? Was their conversation, their interests, their efforts related to just things?

THE COST IS HIGH

There were those who complained at the cost of Mary's anointing. It is going to cost you dearly to anoint the lives of others. That anointing is too sacred to be cheap. How it costs to maintain a home where the fragrance of honor, of love and high ideals eternally dwell. Where individual interests become subservient to the rights of and interests of the group, and where characters are developed who shall be fitted to work in and toward our mighty and most worthy objectives. The church is the power house from which must go a mighty ministration to all the world, and it is depending upon you to dip deep into that alabaster box and send down the mill stream the fragrance of your energies, your interests, your means. By constantly tapping this source of power, leading off here and there to give life and power to lesser interests, we but dry up the sources of fragrance and lessen its power until the church has a difficult time of it turning its wheels and its machinery, much less generating power to minister to a needy world.

Then, carry back into your homes and your branches this mighty missionary spirit. Let all your activities and interests center in the objectives of this church, sending these down the main stream to power the church and in the name of Christ minister to the needs of your fellow men. How worthy and how fragrant might your anointing become were you to go into homes where sickness and need are apparent, speaking words of comfort and courage, and like fragrance bearers of the long ago, say in word and in deed, "Such as I have, give I unto thee."

Mothers, hear me, for you, more than any other beings, can understand. That day you went down into the valley of the shadow of death, that day God must have shown you that He was not much interested in just things. To Him, humanity counted most. That moment you were willing to sacrifice your life if needs be that another being might live, you must have known how God loved those whom he created in his image and upon whom he placed glory and honor. Enslave not yourselves then, to the cheap, the gaudy, the lesser and sometimes the trifling things of life, but lay the fragrance of a worthy ministration upon the souls of men until they shall come into the image of their Creator.

"Why Are We Surrounded by Mysteries?"

By E. L. Acord

Little children, when they begin to reason and think, find themselves surrounded in a world of mystery too big and complicated to understand. For this reason they are continually seeking information, and this is never outgrown. Their questions, to us, seem simple and amusing, but very complex to them. But ofttimes with our advancement in knowledge, we find it a very difficult task to explain some of the simpler things to them. Why? Because their minds have not developed to that degree of understanding. For instance, a small child would ask, "What makes a clock run?" Try as we may, and explain until we run out of breath, we could not make the child comprehend, because it is too far advanced.

So it is with us, we, too, wonder what is the meaning of many of our mysteries. But could we comprehend, would our minds grasp the real meaning if God would try to explain them to us? Or is it better for us to work up to that degree of understanding as the child does?

Righteousness

(A Selected Reprint.)

By Thomas Ward

"He that doeth righteousness is righteous." This quotation is the solemn declaration of an ancient servant of God, and if we examine the sacred oracles of divine truth, we shall find that although it is "not for works of righteousness which we have done, but by grace are we saved through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God"; yet every man of God has performed works of righteousness—he has been moral, virtuous, upright, and consistent in his deportment, and that he was saved by works as well as by faith.

Some have supposed that Paul did away with the necessity of good works, by telling us that it is "not through works of righteousness that we have done, but by grace that we are saved, through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God." We shall find, however, that this reasoning is very fallacious.

There were many in those days who thought that if they fulfilled the moral law, that they were pursuing the right course, doing the will of God and would be saved. Paul tells them something else; that in the fulness of time God sent forth his Son into the world to redeem those that were under the law; hence, if redemption was needed, they were not in a salvable state without redemption, and he thus speaks emphatically of the necessity of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as being the great foundation of a sinner's hope, for if Christ was not the Messiah, then indeed was their faith vain, as was also the preaching of the apostles and elders. This was the doctrine that was taught by our Savior and by all the apostles. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

Although Paul speaks so much about faith, he contends as strenuously for works. He complains that some had turned the grace of God into lasciviousness, and positively says, that "if any man defile the Temple of God, him will God destroy." And further remarks, "know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Corinthians 6: 9, 10.

Many of the ancient pleaded before God their righteousness and good deeds, as even being meritorious; hence Job says, "my righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go"—Job 27: 6. David says, in speaking on the same subject, "O Lord my God, if I have done this; if there be iniquity in my hands; if I have rewarded evil unto him I was at peace with; (yea, I have delivered him that is without cause mine enemy): let the enemy persecute my soul and take it; yea; let him tread down my life in the earth, and lay mine honor in the dust. Selah." . . . "The Lord shall judge the people: judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me." (Psalm 7.)

The apostles were not forgetful of these things either. Peter in speaking to Cornelius says, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted of him."—Acts 10: 34, 35. John says, "every one that doeth righteousness is born of God." And again, "whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God."—1 John. And we are told in Revelation 19: 8, that "the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." We know that "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness:" but then James tells us that his "faith was made perfect by his works." So that we shall find after all, that it is not the hearer, nor the believer, alone, but the doer of the word, that is justified; and that whatever virtue there is in faith, that without works it is dead, even as the body without the spirit is: and that faith is of no use unless it "works by love, and purifies the heart." Paul speaks of the saints in his day, "having on the breastplate of righteousness," and being "filled with the fruits of righteousness."—The gospel indeed makes us free: but let us be careful how we use our freedom, and not turn the grace of God into lasciviousness; as, says Peter, "As free and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God."

The Lord has done great things for us, he has revealed unto us "the abundance of peace and truth"; he has made manifest his will, and unfolded his purposes; he has put us in possession of great blessings, even the blessings of the new and everlasting covenant, and has planted in our bosoms a hope that blooms with immortality and eternal life. Let us then walk worthy of the high vocation to which we are called, and as free servants of God be governed by his law, keep his commandments, and do his will; for man shall "not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." Paul has very clearly elucidated this subject in the following words, the which, if we observe we shall do well.

Not until we become united workers in the branches can we become unified colaborers in the district. When we attain the latter stage of comparative perfection, we are ready to be called "Zion Builders."—Dwight D. W. Davis.

Prayer and Testimony

Your Testimony May Help

Since these letters of testimony began appearing in the Herald we have not had to ask anyone for them. All have come to us unsolicited. Only once did we print a general invitation in these columns for people to write. Yet we have never lacked for enough good letters to fill these two pages, and more.

You may never know what good your written testimony may do. It may bring hope and comfort to some isolated person far from you. Some have been brought to a belief in the gospel through reading these letters, and have written to us of it.

Have you borne your testimony for the sake of those who do not have church privileges? Are you holding the blessings that you have received all to yourself? If you have enjoyed reading these pages, it may be that you should help to fill them with the message of your testimony.

Two Outstanding Blessings

By Mrs. Holma Johnson

I have written at other times testifying of the goodness of God to me and my family. He has not ceased to bless us, and I feel it my duty and privilege to praise him and tell of his goodness.

The testimonies of others always strengthen me. I have often said as the editor stated, that reading the wonderful testimonies is like attending a large prayer meeting. My husband was largely converted to the faith through the letters written in the Ensign. We were not taking the Ensign at the time, but a good sister gave us copies of it from time to time. Experience causes me to admonish the Saints not to neglect handing out the church paper to nonmembers. We never know how much we are doing in this little act. Words can not express my thankfulness to God for showing me the truth.

Each day I realize how much more I need God and the gospel. Without these I know that my life would not be pleasant. The gospel has taught me trust and the blessings of faith and how to serve God more acceptably. It is a comfort to know what our heavenly Father has in store for us when our cares and toils here are over. How my heart reaches out to many good people who are in darkness, those who do not understand this beautiful gospel as God intends us to see it.

Here I wish to tell of two of the many blessings that have come to us. We have five girls and our baby is a boy, our only son. When he was but two months old, the other children fell ill with red measles. They had a high fever and a hard cough. Little Bobby, too, fell ill. We had not noticed how sick he was until we woke up late one night and he was struggling for breath. He threw his head from side to side and moaned. He was our only boy and the thought of losing him made us very sad.

My husband said that we should send for the doctor. It was the spring of the year and the roads were very muddy. We would have to go two miles to meet him with horses. I told my husband that God wanted us to put our trust and faith in him, that we should pray, asking him that if it was his will, our baby should be healed of his affliction. At once we knelt in earnest prayer. God heard our petition and was ready to give us aid. The elders of the church were too far away at that time to be called, but the heavenly Father understood our need, and when we had finished our prayers, the baby was breathing naturally and resting quietly. He rested like that for a number of hours and then he was better.

I thought he had pneumonia, and two days later took him to our family doctor. He looked at him, talked, and tried to make him smile, but little Bobby did not feel well enough to smile. The doctor told me: "You have had a very sick baby. He has pneumonia in one lung, but he will get along all right now." He gave me no medicine.

The baby will be five years old soon and is a sturdy, healthy boy. I may add to this that his five sisters have knelt beside him in prayer at different times, asking God to spare him.

About three years ago my husband was very low in health. He went to several doctors, stayed overnight and a day in a hospital to be examined by a specialist. When they were through with him, they gave him no medicine because they thought there was no hope for him. They said they could do nothing for him. They told him as all the other doctors had told him, that his lungs were affected with tuberculosis.

It was hard for my husband to think of leaving a family of six small children not old enough to earn their living. He grieved over the matter. Again dark clouds hung over our home. Then again I told him that he must not trust in the arm of flesh, but obey the commands of God, send for an elder and be administered to. So he wrote sending money for train fare to Brother L. Houghton to come. After we had mailed the letter we found that Brother Houghton had been called here to preach a funeral sermon. He came to our home and administered to my companion that night. At once strength and comfort came from the Power on high, and at different times since, he has been healed of afflictions. He is able to do his own work about the farm.

Yes, God is good. Who can say in the face of these experiences that he is not the same God who blessed Israel?

We have not much reason to rejoice because of worldly goods, but I am happy when we are so rich with blessings from the throne of heaven. We have not as much to give to the church as we should like, but from time to time we give as much as we possibly can. Only the Lord knows of the sacrifice offerings we have given, but we can truly say these things are worth while. I often think of His promise to us: if we give to help this gospel work along, he will always give us his watchcare.

Receives Divine Promise

By Viola Coswell

I am thankful for the many blessings God has given me. Though there are no other Saints here, I am not alone, for the Lord is with me. Often his presence comforts me while I look to the day when I can be associated with Saints.

Some years ago I was on my sick bed. My husband was in the hospital, and a son was sick at home. I prayed to our Father to help all and to take care of us. My prayer was answered. On that night the Lord came to me in a dream and said: "I will be with you always." Oh, those wonderful words—and how happy I was!

I can truthfully say that God has healed my body several times. Once I was healed of heart trouble under the hands of Brother Roth. Almost nine years ago the Lord healed me of a serious affliction. I had been ill almost a year and at times did not know what to do. I went to my room one morning and prayed to the Lord to take me home, or make me well as it pleased him. My friends and neighbors were surprised at my getting well and not having a doctor. What a loving Father we have if we put our trust in him!

I ask the prayers of the Saints for me and all of my family. Pray for me that I shall be faithful.

Many Testimonies Prove Truthfulness of Gospel

By Mrs. Fred Baber

For the past ten years I have enjoyed the testimonies of my brothers and sisters, and I can say they, as well as the experiences of our missionaries which I have read in our church periodicals, have been a great strength to me. I would not want to be without these, for in addition to the pleasure we derive from reading them, there is real study value in these letters.

I know that the latter-day gospel is true. God has given us many testimonies proving the truthfulness of his work. Many times he has come into our home as the Great Physician, healing our bodies and speaking peace to our souls. I am grateful that he permitted us to have a knowledge of his truth. I was baptized when a child, but at a very early age I lost my mother whose responsibility it was to teach and instruct me in the way of truth. I drifted into the ways of the world and did things which were not pleasing in the sight of God; but he in his infinite mercy brought me back to the fold and gave me an understanding of the gospel. I can say now with the hymn writer:

"The world and its folly,
I bid them all adieu;
I find there no comfort
That's lasting and true."

I feel that there is no time to be spent in the follies of the world, and think that as mothers, we women, have a great responsibility in teaching the children intrusted to our care.

How thankful we should be for the gospel in these latter days, for it is an anchor to our souls.

There is much I desire to do to help advance the cause, but being under the hand of affliction I am hindered to a great extent. I ask to be remembered before God's throne that this affliction may be removed and I may be able to accomplish any work He has for me to do. I know it is within His power to do this thing if it is in harmony with His divine will, for I have been the recipient of many blessings bestowed by His bountiful hand.

The Gospel an Inspiration

By Edwin O. Butler

I have been associated with this work a number of years, and while I have not made the advancement I might have, I feel that the gospel has been an inspiration in my life. With its precepts before me, I hope to attain a place in which I can be of greater value to the church.

We can only reach such a height by putting into effect in our lives the law God has given. As Saints we must rise above the present conditions if we expect to be successful. Many adjustments need to be brought about in our lives before we can become the pure in heart. May the time speedily come when we shall place our all in the hands of the Bishop and trust in God who is true to the promises he makes to his people. Frequently we hear the statement from latter-day revelation: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3.)

There must be a willingness on our part to keep the commandments of God so that we may develop into a spiritual people. Just as rapidly as we develop, the heavenly Father will reveal to us more and more. Let us strive to carry on the marvelous work and a wonder which has come down to us through the suffering of those who gave their lives that we might have the privilege of hearing the angel message.

I thank the Lord that I have lived to see this glad day in which God speaks as of old. It has been my happy experience to labor with men who are true servants of the living God.

We know not what the future holds for us, but we have hopes of seeing greater achievements, and I am quite sure if we place our hands in the hand of God and go with him all the way, this will be the best and happiest of our experiences. It is my prayer and desire to go forward.

Request Prayers

Brother Henry Brown who suffered a broken back in an accident over two years ago, is still paralyzed. Some time ago he requested the prayers of the Saints in behalf of his recovery, and as a result of these he has enjoyed better health and grown stronger in every way. He hopes to walk again if it is God's will, and would like to ask the Saints once more to pray for him.

ONTARIO, CANADA.

Alice Sousy, a young woman who is an invalid now confined to her bed for some months, asks the prayers of the Saints. She is not a member of the church but believes the gospel and is seeking more information concerning truth and light. Her father acquainted her with the Restoration movement last summer, but since she is ill and isolated from association with Saints, she has not yet been able to comply with all the gospel requirements.

QUESTION TIME

Shall we know each other in heaven?

The intent of this question is not quite clear as to whether it refers to those whom we have known in this life, or to everyone that is in heaven. I do not recall any text of scripture that specifically tells us that we shall know all of those who are in heaven, but several passages quite clearly imply a reciprocal understanding of each other there, and this might refer to a divine enlightenment which shall make all persons known to each other. Or it might simply mean that we shall know fully those whom we have understood but partially in this life. For instance, Paul states:

"For now we see in a mirror, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know fully even as also I was fully known."—1 Corinthians 13: 12. (Revised Version.)

The question is suggested: Was Paul fully known by any one except God? If not, then the full knowledge he refers to would appear to be the fullness of knowledge to be enjoyed in the future life. That the heavenly life is a life of divine knowledge, is a reasonable supposition; for he who obtains the resurrection of the just will become a new and an immortal creation, possessing in fullness those powers of comprehension and intelligence which belong to an eternal being.

The use of perfect powers in the perfect and eternal realm is so far beyond anything we now experience, and so outside of our realm of knowledge, that we can only grasp an imperfect idea of them. Paul tells us that:

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Corinthians 2: 9.

From the implications of scripture and the fact that the heavenly life will be a complete brotherhood of infinite love, it seems reasonable to conclude that perfect knowledge of each other and of God will be enjoyed in the heavenly life.

When and to whom does the command, "Feed my sheep," apply?

These are the words of Jesus to Peter, just before the ascension (John 21: 16). But a revelation to the church records this command to apostles of this age also. It says:

"Now, I say unto you, . . . and what I say unto you I say unto all the Twelve, . . . Arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep."—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 6.

The duty to feed the flock, however, is also extended to those elders of the church who have been appointed over the churches. Peter expressly commanded it (1 Peter 5: 2); and Paul also, after he had called together the elders of Ephesus, enjoined them by saying:

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Acts 20: 28.

It must be noted here, however, that the word overseers is properly translated by the term "bishops," and it is so translated in the Revised and Douay Versions. The apostles had ordained bishops over the saints in various important church centers, and some hold that these were the ones addressed at this time. But the term also meant overseer or inspector, and therefore was doubtless applied to those in charge of the flock of God. It seems clear that it would apply in all ages of the church to these officers.

Was the ark of Revelations 11: 19 the same one had in the time of Moses?

It will be noted that this great manifestation is represented as being at the time of the judgment of the dead (verse 18) and the giving of reward to the righteous. The opening of the "temple of God" in heaven is believed to indicate the opening of the holy place of judgment. When this judgment takes place, we are informed that all shall be judged by the things written in the books:

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Ibid., 20: 12.

The ark of the Mosaic covenant contained the books of the law to stand as a witness against Jews who broke the covenant, and it was probably this witness that was shown by the ark of "the testament" in the temple of judgment.

Seattle and British Columbia District

Spirit of Sacrifice and Consecration Prevails

The branches of Seattle-British Columbia districts manifested an excellent spirit of sacrifice during the months of October, November, and December.

Catching up the spirit of the occasion, the officers of Puyallup Branch conceived the proposition of suggesting that families go on a missionary allowance basis for December, and put in as a special sacrifice all the funds they received in excess of what they would be allowed if they were on a missionary basis. All of the members who are employed are receiving modest wages and this meant no cash reserve to draw from. The group at Puyallup paid in approximately two hundred and thirty dollars for December, alone. An excellent spirit of consecration characterized their sacrifice period, and the need of the church has apparently been realized in a fine way.

Tacoma branch, with but two employed, managed to show a nice spirit of sacrifice and surprised the district with a very nice return.

The Bremerton Group did a fine piece of work during 1932, setting their goal at six hundred dollars for the year. The solicitor reports that it became necessary to borrow one dollar and forty-eight cents to complete their six hundred dollar goal for the year. The few families making up this branch have shown a constant spirit of sacrifice throughout the whole year and have made a good showing in each month. For the most part, this group is employed in the Navy Yard at Bremerton.

Both Vancouver and New Westminster Branches made good showings with a large number of tithing and offering receipts written for each branch, indicating a widespread interest in participating in the spirit of sacrifice. Knowing something of the conditions of unemployment, together with local church debt obligations, officers in charge feel the assurance that these good Canadian Saints are looking forward to the day when they will be a part of Zion.

The Saints at Seattle who, in company with all the other branches, are suffering from widespread unemployment and are therefore lacking of income, succeeded in raising nearly one thousand dollars during the month of December alone. One hundred and four tithing receipts were written for that month, indicating that virtually every home was well represented. In a prayer service one widow was heard to say that she had recently been reading of the hardships and trials of the earlier civilization of this continent and she did not know whether she could endure what they endured or not. She and her family had made up more than one fifth of the December tithes and offerings.

Centralia, which has been unusually severely injured with the recent burning of their last remaining and large active sawmill, the transfer of the railroad terminal to the adjoining town of Chehalis, and the closing of their last remaining bank, which was a consolidation of the three former banks of the city, succeeded, in the face of these conditions, in showing rather liberal offerings and tithe payments which came from a real spirit of sacrifice.

The new group at Willapa Harbor, which does not have a single person employed, succeeded in increasing the amount of their monthly offerings.

Bellingham greatly increased the number who had tithing receipts written for them and Everett hopes, in the year 1933, to show a good spirit of sacrifice and cooperation.

Seattle, Washington

Apostle F. H. Edwards was the principal speaker at a district workers' conference held at Seattle church, December 2, 3, and 4. Although the conference was not very well attended, due, probably, to the financial conditions of many Saints in the district, each worker present received much inspiration from the classes, lectures, and sermons of Brother Edwards. The members are determined to qualify for more efficient service that the work of this church might be hastened.

Upon the recommendation of Elder Monte Lasater, who for the past year has been serving as branch and district president, Elder Alma Johnson was elected pastor of Seattle church. The new pastor has selected Elders Carl Crum and Dwight Davis as his counselors. Sister Emma McDole was again made the director of Religious Education. Elba Crum succeeded Alma Johnson as supervisor of the adult division; Harold Watkins succeeded himself both as supervisor of the young people's division and branch treasurer; Mary Jane Johnson succeeded Irene Emslie, who is to be commended for her faithful and efficient services, as supervisor of the children's division; Charles Powers, pastor of junior church, was elected to this responsibility again; Austin Earl was made director of music, and Alice Phipps was retained as branch clerk.

The quarterly meeting of branch officers and leaders was held at the home of Sister Emma McDole, January 9. Bishop McDole opened the evening's work with a message challenging the group with the question, "Why are we here?" and pointing out the necessity for greater church-wide unification of effort in the future if the will of God is to be accomplished in this generation. The new pastor, Elder Alma Johnson, pointedly summarized Brother Woodstock's recent Herald article, "Training for Service in the Teaching Work of the Church," and was followed by Dwight Davis who spoke on the topic, "Our Branch Secretarial System and Suggestions for its Improvement." A round table discussion followed these talks.

The young people of Puyallup Branch made a good will tour to the young people of Seattle, January 8. Puyallup was in charge of the entire evening, and made the most of the opportunity by presenting numerous musical selections, a two act play, "Faith," and a sermon by one of Puyallup's young men, Burr Bronson. Sitting room was at a premium. Everyone is talking about the "wonderful" program the young people of Puyallup put on. This is but another testimony of the willingness of the young people to assume their place in the work of this church.

The pastor is busily at work endeavoring to charter on a large city map, the membership of the branch, with an eye to establishing missionary centers in strategic locations. He also is endeavoring to set monthly themes for the evening preaching services with all sermons dovetailing into the month's central thought. The advantage of this will be manifested in a more systematic, educational method of presenting the gospel message to both member and nonmember.

Rosedale, British Columbia

Some time ago this small group was organized under the new church school

plan which seems to fit the need of the local school.

Guest speakers for December were District President Elder Monte E. Lasater and Sister Lasater, Sister Emma McDole, district director of church school work, and Elder Alma Johnson, all of Seattle, Washington. The visits of these Saints as well as the inspiring addresses given by them were the source of strength to all privileged to attend. Rosedale Saints are happy to welcome visitors at any time. The church school department held its annual Christmas concert the evening of December 22. The program, which consisted of choruses by the school and junior classes, recitations, monologues, and readings, was greatly enjoyed by all present. From a prettily decorated Christmas tree, gifts and bags of candy were distributed to all the children. Refreshments were served during the social hour which concluded the evening's program.

The members were happy to assemble on Sunday, January 1, it being the first day of a New Year, as well as the first Sunday of the month, and to partake of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It is the desire of all who were present to strive during the new year to assist in the onward march of the church.

Centralia, Washington

Activities of Centralia Branch are moving. A teachers' training class has been organized, with Brother O. L. Oppelt as teacher. Although the class is small, the students are greatly interested and are striving to earn certificates.

The dramatic society, under the direction of Sister Jessie Ward, produced a three-act play, "Dollars and Cabbages," by Lillian Mortimer. The players are made up of our young people and members of the high school. The dramatic society serves a twofold purpose. It is a means of entertainment and also it brings the high school girls and boys into closer contact with church life. The play was given two evenings, and had very good attendance.

Brother F. Henry Edwards and Brother H. I. Velt were here November 29, and Brother Edwards spoke. In spite of the rain, there was good attendance, and the Saints went home with renewed courage and determination.

Pastor C. E. Schmid, conducted a series of missionary talks on Sunday evenings.

Friends of Sister Drebis will be sorry to hear that she has passed away. Sister Drebis was a member of the church for many years, and will be remembered as a stanch worker.

The Christmas entertainment was furnished by the young people and the children. Christmas songs were sung and a play, "The Christmas Guests," were given.

Now is the time of reports and Solicitor George Green is very busy with the tithing reports. The majority of the Saints here have lost considerable in temporal things through this depression, but the spiritual gain and the bond of fellowship, and understanding that now exists are far greater than all temporal losses. These times have brought the Saints closer together than ever before.

New Westminster, British Columbia

New Westminster, British Columbia, Branch has at last requested a hearing, then between the request and the writing, time sped on. The merry season of the Christmas, the more solemn, but onward looking New Year's, season are gone.

One Sunday toward the close of 1932, was devoted to the centennial program in the honor of Joseph Smith III. The hymns he wrote, were the hymns sung. Brother Pope preached the sermon.

One evening that was quite outstanding, a program of Schubert was given. All were invited to an evening with Schubert. Brother Lewis and Sister Lillian Cross were instrumental in arranging and in helping to carry it out. Sister Strachan, who teaches music and elocution, gave her ready assistance in both her arts. Sister Cross gave a short account of Schubert's life, which intensified the interest with which the program was received. A picture of the great teacher and musician was hung over the platform. Flowers from Sister Harry Butterfield's florist shop added beauty. There was one number by the orchestra; piano and organ solos; piano and organ duets; violin, and other numbers. "Ava Maria," was read after its setting had been pictured. Other recitations were, "The Second Minute," and "The Erlking." Vocal solos and duets added lightness and variety. Thanks were due to Miss Ruth Lewis, not of the church, who gave of her talent; also to Brother Percy Quance, of Vancouver, who assisted with vocal numbers. The violin and the able hands of Brother Lewis Cross, accompanied at times by Brother Reed and Brother Morrison, added much to the charm, but Sister Lillian received the flowers presented by Sister Butterfield at the close of the performance.

The young people frequently have social gatherings at the church. The girls have a Dorcas Society, and the ladies are diligent in carrying on the Laurel meetings, during which a paper, written by one of their members, is sometimes read, work done, and business transacted. Before Christmas, they had two bazaars to dispose of quilts, fancy work, and home cooking. They are under the leadership of Sister Woods.

On New Year's Day, a short program from "The Messiah" was rendered instrumentally by Mrs. M. L. Strocham, organist; Lewis W. Cross, violinist, and Lillian Pope Cross, pianist.

Bremerton, Washington

At a business meeting held in June, it was decided to alter the church building in order to have class rooms, and a place for recreation, so the building was turned at right angles to face Montgomery Street instead of ninth as here before. A full basement has been placed under it, making an auditorium, a large kitchen, a small room for prayer meetings, a furnace and coal room, and an inside stairway has also been provided. The improvements are nearing completion and Saints are hoping now to have activities that have hitherto been impossible. This year they have not tried to have any thing except the regular services.

The women of the harmony club are busy. They have contributed most of the money used for supplies and branch expenses. As soon as possible they expect to have a kitchen shower for the church, then start a money raising campaign to buy dishes and silver. A sink and range have already been donated. Their regular meetings are always of interest. They assemble at one o'clock in the afternoon for a dessert luncheon followed by the business meeting. Then either study or work is taken up. This year the history of different countries are being studied, each woman choosing a country. So far Spain and Palestine have been reported on.

During the year Apostle J. A. Gillen, Bishop D. S. McDole, and District President Monte E. Lasater have visited this branch, preaching to and encouraging the Saints. Brother and Sister L. E. Larson have gone to Soap Lake for a year. Sister Larson has been in poor health, and all are hoping she will be much improved when she returns home. Brother Bacher and Mrs. Bacher were in an automobile accident. He was only slightly bruised, but she received injuries that will keep her in bed at least two months.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Since reunion at Silver Lake, Vancouver has had short visits from Brother J. A. Gillen, Brother F. H. Edwards, and Brother A. C. Martin.

In November six girls and one boy were led into the waters of baptism by Brother Isaac McMullen. Previous to their baptism, Pastor George Miller conducted a class for a month in preparation for their baptism. At the confirmation they were each presented a junior stewardship book and were made to feel that the financial law is as important as any other law that God has given.

The sacrifice period was a success spiritually as well as financially The Daughters of Zion, under the leadership of Sister Dallyn, worked hard and turned in the money made on their talent dollar as offering. On December 25, a Sunday morning gift service was held when the money saved through sacrifice was turned in.

On January 8, a special service was conducted for the turning in of inventories and financial reports.

January 9, the Fidelis Club held business meeting and election of officers. The following were elected: Sister Staynoff, president; Sister Bertha Morrison, vice president; Hazel Stanbridge, secretary; Sister Dolly Krause, treasurer. On January 12, a number of Saints from Vancouver and New Westminster spent a social evening at the home of Sister McConnell, of Burnaby. Sister McConnell also invited in a number of her neighbors. There is a wonderful opportunity there to open up a mission. The guests spent a lovely evening in games and singing, and enjoyed the opportunity to become better acquainted.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Sunday, January 15, the young people of Vancouver went to New Westminster and took charge of the evening class. New Westminster came to Vancouver about two months ago and took charge.

Puyallup, Washington

Among the visitors in the past few weeks have been Apostle J. A. Gillen, Bishop D. S. McDole, District Missionary A. C. Martin, and Elder M. H. Cook. They have been of much help to Saints in this city, and also the local priesthood are to be commended for their untiring efforts and the example they are setting the members of the branch. Every minister has filed his inventory and is a regular tithe payer.

No special service was held here on Thanksgiving Day, but on the evening before an interesting program was enjoyed. This event caused each one present to sense the importance of the month of sacrifice.

The members were happy to have here during the holidays Sister Elma Stong, who is attending college in California.

On Christmas Day the young people presented the play, "Faith," by Maxine Post. They thought it fitting at this time of sacrifice to remind the Saints of the struggles of the missionary families. Another special feature was the blessing of Brother and Sister Claude Wheeler's young son, the fourth generation on both the Wheeler and Reed side of the family. He was blessed by his grandfather and great uncle, and the father and mother presented him as their offering to God. Also they had him present his inventory and sign it with the help of his father) before the congregation and pay his tithing to date.

The sacrifice period made a real impression on the members in Puyallup. Some of the wage earners pledged their salary for the month, over fifty dollars, which amount they figured was the average of that received by the missionary families. This small group sent $229.75 to Bishop McDole.

The young people's division is going to Seattle soon to meet with the Saints there and will furnish the entire program for the evening. Seattle Saints will return the visit in the near future.

The sudden death of Pete Sorrells came as a shock to many. His wife, Edna Moore Sorrells, is a niece of Apostle Gillen. Mr. Sorrells was not a member of the church, but a believer in its teachings.

The church school director, Charles Hufferd and his family, made a trip to Spokane during the holidays to visit Sister Hufferd's mother. On account of the snowstorms since, they have not been able to return.

Pete Stong was married on Tuesday after Christmas. His bride is not a member of the church, but she frequently attends services.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Cooperative Project to Help Needy Children

The women's department, cooperating with the women of the Methodist Church South, began the year by supplying noonday dinners to the needy children of this vicinity at the Methodist Church where more facilities are available. Collection boxes have been placed in both churches and in various business places for donations to help further the project.

At the annual branch business meeting held December 13, Brother John Carlisle, pastor, tendered his resignation. All other officers were reelected except Sister Edna Howells who was elected branch secretary to succeed Sister Minnie Cramer. Sunday morning, January 8, Richard Watkins was elected church school superintendent; all other officers retained their positions. Sister Ada Stein will remain president of the women's department as will her associates. All pastoral work of the branch will be in charge of the four elders, Charles Cramer, William Goudy, A. B. Klar, and John Carlisle..

District President James E. Bishop was a visitor December 18, and preached at the morning service.

Sunday evening, November 6, a program was carried out in honor of the centennial of Joseph Smith's birth. Elders John Carlisle, Charles Cramer and William Goudy spoke at length on important incidents of his life. Several musical numbers were enjoyed. A large number attended this service.

The evening of November 10, Elder Carlisle, then the pastor, was pleasantly surprised by a large number of Saints at the church. It was his birthday, and the occasion was also in honor of his five years as a successful pastor. The event was sponsored by the young people of the branch. The program was entertaining, and refreshments were served. Brother Carlisle received useful gifts and many good wishes.

Funeral services were conducted for Sister Maud Cramer Friday, November 25, Elder William Goudy in charge, assisted by Elder John Carlisle, and interment was in East Avenue Cemetery. Sister Cramer's father, Richard Watkins, sr., followed her in death one week later. Deepest sympathy was extended to the bereaved families.

Elder William L. Goudy was in charge of funeral services for Kenneth P. Robb, a nonmember and husband of Sister Alice Robb nee Benbow, November 30. Sympathy goes to his widow.

A large number of Saints surprised Sister Margaret McMillen and her husband, A. J. McMillen, the evening of December 23, it being their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They were presented a nice gift.

A program was given by the children the morning of December 25, and they received their usual treat. The evening program, a cantata, was postponed owing to a large number being ill with influenza.

East Bay Church

Berkeley and Oakland, California

Knowing that the years bring lessons of growth and development, Saints of the East Bay Church look to 1933 for greater hope, more faith, and deeper love. Death has called from them in the past year Bishop Cecil Hawley and Sister Dekoto who had always helped as director of dramatics, and others whom they loved.

The sacrament service on New Year's Day, a most fitting service for the opening of the year, inspired them with a determination to do all within their power to aid the church.

Under the direction of Elder Guy P. Levitt as pastor and Elders M. F. Ralston and Eli Bronson as associate pastors, a complete organization has been brought about. Each department has its capable director who is cooperating in every way to make the year outstanding.

The adult division under Sister Julia Christensen's supervision is doing a great deal. The women have helped with dinners, bazaars, socials, plays, and quilting, to lighten the financial strain. The Dorcas Club, Sister Ruby Strand, president, belongs to the Federated Women's Clubs, and has a junior club of young women with Margaret Christensen as president, which is helping in a philanthropic way. They are specializing in the making of layettes. They also entertained the mothers at a tea last Mother's Day, and made charming hostesses.

The department of music, under Sister Irene Gatchett's direction, has helped and is helping greatly to make each worship service more beautiful.

The church school leaders of morning and evening sessions deserve much praise. Brother William Collins has charge of the morning adult service and Sister Camilla Collins has the children's division. Brother Stanley Sessions has charge of the evening church school.

Midweek prayer services are a blessing to those who desire spiritual help.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It is regretted that more can not avail themselves of this opportunity to leave the hustle and bustle of worldly affairs for a peaceful hour with the Master. Doctor W. P. Bush is in charge of this service.

The outstanding service of the new year thus far, took place the evening of January 8. The young people of the church had charge. The beauty and effectiveness of this service are hard to describe. "Our Quest for Jesus," was the theme and Elder Arthur Oakman, the young district missionary, was guest speaker. The service began with a processional, followed by a call to worship, response, prayer, song, offering, Scripture reading, and the singing of two verses of "Consecration." Then came the sermon, the singing of the last verse of "Consecration," charge to the ministry, lighting of the candles, commission to youth, and the young people's response, "I Would Be True," benediction, and recessional. Sister Elva Sturges who helped to make this service possible, deserves much praise. It was a real worship hour for young and old, instilling in the hearts of all a desire to become better men and women and more worthy of being affiliated with the church of Jesus Christ.

Several young people of this branch are attending Graceland College: Mildred Bronson, Muriel Bush, Russel Ralston, and Ned Jacobson. Others are attending the University of California among these being Maxine Reese, James Savage, and Stanley Sessions. Elizabeth Smith, of Independence, Missouri, is also here attending the University of California.

Omaha Young People's Convention Is Outstanding

President McDowell's Challenge: "Be Not Spectators But Participants"

On January 21 and 22, there convened at Omaha a convention of young people from about twelve branches and groups in Western Nebraska and Eastern Iowa. It was one of the most successful meetings of its kind ever held in that part of the church. About two hundred and fifty young people attended, coming from branches at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Lincoln, Hazel Dell, Missouri Valley, Logan, Morehead, Nebraska City, Woodbine, Pisgah, Fremont, and Dow City. President F. M. McDowell, speaking of some of the meetings during the convention, said they were among the finest meetings of this kind he had ever attended.

The convention opened with a banquet at which President McDowell was the guest of honor. There were about two hundred and thirty-five young members in attendance. The Odd Fellow's Temple was filled nearly to capacity and the speakers had difficulty in reaching the last table with their voices. Besides President McDowell, the speakers were Marion Cooper, of Omaha; Paul Harding, of Council Bluffs; Pastor Ray Whiting, of Omaha and Council Bluffs; Richard Stakes, of Lincoln; and Merl Grover, toastmaster, of Omaha.

A reporter from one of the newspapers in talking to Brother McDowell during the banquet said, "I've seen a lot of church young people's affairs, but never anything like this. How do you do it? What is the challenge you hold before them?" and Brother McDowell summed that challenge up in the words, "Be not spectators, but participants."

Sunday services began with a devotional at eight thirty at which a splendid spirit of unity and peace was felt, and during which Brother McDowell pleaded that the youth spend less time in seeking God, and more time preparing themselves so that God can reach them.

A heavy fog had hung over the city the previous day, and considerable rain had fallen during the night, leaving the sky overcast and gloomy when the service began on Sunday morning. During one of the prayers, the sun broke through for the first time, and when the youthful congregation arose from the attitude of prayer, the whole room was lighted, and the rays of the morning sun shone beautifully on Brother McDowell and the two young men assisting him. Someone commented on the symbolism of this fact, that the fog of yesterday was being penetrated by a new spirit, and that the young people of the church were entering upon a new and brighter day.

Following the regular church school worship program, Brother McDowell conducted a large class of young people using as his theme, "The Primary Factor —the Hearts of Men." At the eleven o'clock preaching hour, he continued this theme, taking as his text, "Wilt thou be made whole?"

The convention met with a well-filled house for a round table discussion of young people's problems at two thirty Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Esther Schrunk, of Lincoln, spoke on, "Ways of Serving"; Joe Hufford, of Missouri Valley, on, "What the Church Means to Me"; Don Hendrix, of Council Bluffs, on, "Problems Difficult for Us to Solve," and Edgar Salts, of Logan, on, "Young People's Problems in a Small Branch." These talks were followed by an hour and a half of interesting and animated discussion, during which there were often four or five young people on their feet at once attempting to get the floor to present the problem of their group, or suggest possible solutions for problems of perplexities which had already been presented. Among the questions brought up were: What shall we do for the boys and girls from twelve to fifteen? How shall we hold the interest of youth of high school age? What shall we provide to hold the interest of youth of mixed ages? At the close of this meeting Brother McDowell stated that while he had sat in and conducted many round table meetings of this kind, this was the most interesting and enthusiastic he had ever attended.

Many of the out-of-town visitors had to leave following the afternoon service, but those who were able to remain were inspired by a musical program by the Omaha Choir, under the direction of Mrs. Don Stoft, and by a short sermon by President McDowell at which time he presented an introduction to his series to be given during each evening of the following week. He used as his text, "I Come That Ye Might Have Life," saying that long ago he himself dedicated his life to the youth of this church.

Independence

About six hundred people composed the body which assembled Monday night, January 23, at the Stone Church, to continue the transaction of quarterly conference business, carried over from the meeting of January 9. President Frederick M. Smith was in charge of the service, and opening hymns were, "Redeemer of Israel," and "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah." President Elbert A. Smith offered the invocation. In the stand with the Presidency were Elders D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education in Zion, and Bishop J. S. Kelley.

One of the first items of business was the adoption of the 1933 budget for the churches in Independence, $7,965. The budget for the year had been referred back to the budget committee at the previous business meeting with instruction to reduce as widely as possible, and reapportion among the churches in the city.

Then came the business of approving names of officers for the year. Pastors for the various congregations were approved as follows: Second Church, William Inman; Walnut Park, Frank McDonald; Liberty Street, J. R. Lentell; Enoch Hill, H. L. Barto; Englewood, Perry Hiles; Spring Branch, G. W. Eastwood; East Independence, Frank Minton; Gudgell Park, Walter Chapman; Sugar Creek Mission, Ira G. Clutter. The First Presidency of the Church are the pastor of the Stone Church, Elder John F. Sheehy being their assistant and at the same time pastor in Zion. The names of H. G. Barto and D. S. McNamara were approved as assistant pastors in Zion; W. Earl Page, director of Religious Education in Zion.

The conference also approved the following recommendations for ordination: W. Earl Page, elder; James Moses, priest, and J. N. Sherwin, priest. Oliver McKevit, of the Stone Church, was elected to fill a vacancy on the Campus Board. Names of local custodians and bishop's agents were also approved.

Among other matters of business transacted by the conference was the approving of the names of Frank McDonald and J. E. Kelsey as counselors to E. A. Thomas, president of the first quorum of elders.

"An evening of friendship and conversation," is the way one who was there describes the Laurel Club's entertainment in honor of President Frederick M. Smith's birthday last Friday night, at his home in Kansas City. A large number of friends, old and new, were there to visit, to wish him well, and all contributed to a purse of money which was presented to him by Elder R. V. Hopkins. Brother Smith's natal anniversary is January 21; the postponement of the celebration was made necessary by pressing business matters requiring his time and attention.

Stone Church

The Stone Church Choir sang two anthems Sunday morning at the eleven o'clock service, "Peace I Leave With You," by Roberts, and "O Lord Most Holy," by Franck, Edward Brackenbury singing the tenor solos, and Gomer Cool playing the violin obbligato. Paul N. Craig was the director and accompanists were Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist.

The morning's sermon by Elder A. B. Phillips called a large congregation of Saints to thought and worship.

In the downstairs auditorium the juniors meet for worship at the eleven o'clock hour each Sunday. The service, January 29, was one of baptism, Elder W. A. McDowell baptizing eight-year-old twins, Mary Frances Darmon and Robert Lee Darmon, and Kenneth Eugene Savage. These three candidates were confirmed by Elders McDowell and S. A. Thiel.

"Launch out into the deep," the words of Jesus, composed the theme and text of Elder Ward A. Hougas, the evening speaker, and his discourse challenged the large congregation.

An attractive musical program was presented by the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig. The chorus sang the hymn arrangement of, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," "Song of the Night," by Dunn; a Negro spiritual, "Chillun, Come on Home," arranged by Noble Cain, and "The Lost Chord," Sullivan, arranged by Spicker. Mrs. Juanita Resch Roedel, soprano, sang, "Give Thanks and Sing," by Harris, and there were selections by the organist of the chorus, Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee.

Elder D. S. McNamara was in charge of the service assisted by Elder J. A. Gardner.

The Y. K. T. (Ye Know Them) Class, a unit of the adult division of the Stone Church School, counts the year 1932 as one of achievement. Pastor John F. Sheehy is at present giving the class a lecture course on church history at the church school hour on Sunday morning. The annual report of this group bears record to a pleasing amount of progress, touching on such high points of helpfulness as the class's participation in receiving and making comfortable guests of the General Conference; in a decorative exhibit at the Harvest Home Festival, and in other events. This group of men and women raised more than two hundred dollars for Christmas Offering.

Second Church

The eleven o'clock adult service opened Sunday with an organ prelude played by Mrs. Leslie Sellers. "Gospel Restored," was sung by the choir. The opening prayer was offered by Brother Ellis Murdock, then another choir number was, "Jesus My Shepherd." For his excellent sermon Elder R. D. Weaver used as a text Daniel 5: 27.

The seven thirty service was the first of a series of four illustrated lectures by Elder C. E. Miller, this series being sponsored by the young people. An interesting program of music was composed of the following numbers: "The Little Green Valley," a piano solo by Nadine Inman; "Face to Face," and "My Task," solos by Mrs. Irene Barnhardt accompanied by Mrs. Gladys Inman, and a duet selection, "Unanswered Yet," by Mrs. Ethel Schuyler and Mrs. Alice Mintun.

Elder Miller's first lecture was on the Old Testament. The opening prayer was given by Pastor William Inman and the benediction by Apostle J. F. Curtis.

The junior service Sunday morning, January 29, was led by Elder R. C. Conyers. Helen Willoughby and Bethel Davis supplied the music, playing the piano and leading, respectively. There were readings by Shirley Davis and Helen Willoughby, and a piano solo was given by Billy McPherson. "Take Time to be Holy," a duet, was sung by Alice Willis and Ruth Bolt, accompanied by Geraldine Fields. The talk was by Brother Roy Settles. "A Measuring Rod; a Dream," was a story told by Mrs. J. Hopkins. Elder S. H. Fields assisted in the service.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday, January 29, Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker in the morning, and President Elbert A. Smith in the evening. Attendance was good at both services, and also at the Sunday school and religio sessions.

At the regular meeting of the priesthood of the congregation, held at two thirty Sunday afternoon there was a splendid attendance. Pastor Frank McDonald discussed the duties of the various officers and sought to encourage them to greater efforts during the present year.

Funeral services for Brother Carl V. Hopkins were held at the Walnut Park Church Friday morning, January 27, at ten thirty o'clock. Brother Hopkins was a faithful member of the priesthood, holding the office of high priest. He was a member of the high council of Holden Stake for a number of years after its organization. He also was pastor at Grand view for a period of twelve years. Elder W. S. McCrae was in charge of the services and Elder F. A. McWethy preached the sermon. Both of these brothers were associates of Brother Hopkins in the work in Holden Stake. Music was furnished by members of the choir of the Enoch Hill Church and those who served as pallbearers were J. A. Koehler, D. R. Hughes, G. W. Bebee, W. H. Stevens, A. E. Allen, C. W. Childers, Neal Crandall, and W. T. Chipley. Burial was at Olathe, Kansas.

Thursday night, January 26, the Dorcas Society, an organization of young women of the congregation, presented an entertainment in the church basement. The program consisted of musical numbers arranged by Miss Maurine Nace, and a one-act play under the direction of Laura Scott Pennell. Those who assisted in the musical program were: Brother and Sister Joe Countryman, Helen, Thelma, Alta June, and Melba Moorman, Harold Dillee, Maurine and Milford Nace, Arlon Chapman and Evalyn Phillips. The cast of the play, "An Economical Boomerang," included Kenneth Morford, Violet Campbell Chase, Vernon Sackman, Ina Lutz, Lois Butterworth, and Gene Douglas. The basement was crowded with a fine and appreciative audience.

Brother and Sister Lloyd Masterson announce the birth of a daughter, Betty Gwendolyn, born Friday, January 27. Mrs. Masterson formerly was Miss Lila Green, daughter of Elder and Sister C. K. Green of this congregation.

Spring Branch Church

At the church school Sunday morning, Elder D. S. McNamara talked and introduced his successor in office, Brother W. Earl Page, the new director of Religious Education.

Brother A. B. Taylor was the speaker at eleven o'clock, and the service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood and J. Andes. Sister Alma Edwards sang a solo, "Just for Today."

In the evening, following an entertaining church school program, Elder James Gault was the speaker. For a theme he chose the signs of the times.

Home Variety of Winter Experiences

On the evening of December 25, the young people presented a Christmas drama, "No Room at the Inn." The children gave their program in the morning, sponsored by Sister Neva De Coster and Sister Harrison.

January 2, the branch held its annual business meeting, electing officers for the year: Branch president, J. E. Ebling; secretary and treasurer, Charles Leggett; church school director, Sister E. E. Conway; musical director, Sister Ina Engstrom.

Another joyful occasion of the holiday season was the wedding of Miss Margurite Sade and Mr. Roy White. The marriage occurred at the home of Elder J. D. Curtis who performed the ceremony.

Church attendance has been poor due to the flu and other illness. But those who have been sick are much better. Brother Root, who was seriously ill, is greatly improved. The Saints have fasted and prayed for the numerous afflicted ones.

Sister Helen Patton, daughter of Brother and Sister J. D. Curtis, passed away December 9, 1932, after a long illness. Elder Glaude A. Smith, of Denver, conducted the funeral service.

The branch still has one credit class each Sunday evening. Willard Cummings is the teacher.

The young people's class enjoyed a cabin party in Black Forst, January 14 and 15. Skiing and tobogganing served as entertainment. These outings, sponsored by Brother and Sister Engstrom, are much enjoyed.

Mobile, Alabama

Advancing Under Able Leadership

Members of Mobile Branch are fortunate in having Elder and Sister Amos Berve with them. Brother Berve has served thirty-three years in the ministry, the last four years being in Southern Wisconsin District. It was the suggestion of Brother Franklyn Steiner, a young man, that he resign as pastor of Mobile Branch, and that Brother Berve be chosen to occupy his place. These two ministers are working in strict harmony for the development of the congregation.

The priesthood have organized their work so systematically that each member has been given a definite task to perform, and is taking up that task with diligence. The weekly priesthood meeting is proving successful to the priesthood as well as to the members of the congregation. During each week members are being visited.

The choir is being organized anew, and is endeavoring to secure new members from the congregation to make a more proficient organization.

The church school is under the leadership of Brother Franklyn Steiner who, with his teachers and other coworkers, is making Religious Education a special work. The junior church department is supervised by Anna Mae Hough. The priesthood cooperate with her by responding when she asks their assistance in the worship services.

The young people's department, under the direct supervision of Brother Earl Smith, is doing its share in educating the youths in religious life. Various activities are provided including an instruction period as well as a recreation period.

The women have weekly meetings in which they engage in worth-while projects.

Members of Mobile hope to have a successful year with their church activities and are striving to put forth efforts to make this hope a reality.

North Platte, Nebraska

Encouraged by Visiting Ministers

A branch business meeting was held here December 18, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Branch president, Elder E. R. Sivits; church school supervisor, Elder J. F. Payne; branch secretary and treasurer, L. C. Reneau; chorister, Sister Faye Payne; librarian, Sister Jessie Morant; publicity agent, Sister Lillie M. Reneau; adult supervisor, Sister Nora Baskins; junior supervisor, Will Sivits, and janitor, E. R. Sivits. All officers are functioning in their calling.

The Saints enjoy preaching services at eleven o'clock following the ten o'clock church school held in the Adventist Church on Willow and Tenth Streets. On Sunday evening at seven thirty class work is had at the home of Sister Lillie M. Richards, 1123 West Sixth Street.

The adult class is taught by Elder J. F. Payne, and is studying the Book of Mormon. Elder E. R. Sivits is instructor of the junior class in the study of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Sister Fenner was taken away by death January 2, 1933, having been ill for a period of two years. Her husband, Doctor H. Fenner, and son are not members of the church.

Two others were called away by death last year, Sister Mabel Wallameth and Sister Grant Tibbles.

Elder Ralph A. Harder visited church services here the second Sunday of the year and in the evening preached a good sermon, his text being the words of President F. M. Smith, "Zion Is Still calling for Redemption."

North Platte members are especially happy when some of the elders from a distance meet with them. Elder O. Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, has stopped while passing through here and preached helpful sermons. Elder Frank Holmes, son-in-law of Apostle J. A. Gillen, preached one sermon here last year. He also preached Sister Wallameth's funeral sermon.

The Saints hope that Brother Smith, president of Southeastern Nebraska District, will soon come here to hold meetings, also Elder Glaude A. Smith, of Eastern Colorado District.

Rock Island, Illinois

Bishop G. L. DeLapp Teaches Financial Law

Saints of this city are looking forward to advancement. Elder F. C. Bevan was reelected pastor, and Elders Lee White and Leonard Stiegel will again assist him as counselors. The branch is working completely under the new plan of Religious Education and has a full corps of officers.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp spent a week-end here in December while attending to some business matters at Davenport. He spoke Saturday evening and both preaching hours Sunday and conducted an interesting round table discussion Sunday afternoon. Due to inclement weather, very few Saints from neighboring branches were able to attend, but those who heard him were much encouraged over the definite progress in debt reduction and successful budgeting which the church has carried out this year. Brother De Lapp decried the fact that too many of the church members follow, as in the time of Christ, "afar off," waiting to see if it will be profitable for them to cast their lot with the church, including their financial support. Rock Island members are gratified to know that the church has at the helm men of such ability and integrity as Brother DeLapp. His personality is one to inspire confidence and trust.

The membership has been divided into four social groups which provide consecutively an evening of recreation each month. The Halloween and Thanksgiving parties were well attended, and an attractive display of harvest home produce was arranged at the Thanksgiving season. To this display many generously contributed. Part of this has already been distributed to needy families.

Saints of this city were happy to make the acquaintance of Elder F. T. Mussell, of Des Moines, Iowa, who was the speaker here on Rally Day in September.

The board of stewards is installing a new furnace to improve the heating facilities of the church. The women's department has purchased a large steam table which will be of valuable service in preparing meals for conferences.

Friends of Graceland will be interested to learn of the marriage of Cecil Willets (1928-30) to Miss Lennea Peterson in a pretty ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. They are living at Quincy, Illinois, where the bridegroom is employed by the government.

A Christmas program was well attended, and there were the usual treats for the children. A silent drama of the Christmas story was prepared by the young people, and the children gave songs and recitations woven into a clever playlet.

The slogan of this branch for January was "Every member of the church a tithepayer."

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Pastor C. E. Wight preached the morning sermon Sunday, January 22, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the evening guest speaker.

The usual Thursday evening dinner was held at six thirty, January 26, Sister Lucy Bowser in charge. This enterprise is going forward and contributes to the success of other week-day activities.

Brother Al Simpson who, with his wife, spent several years in active service in this congregation, is in poor health. He is being remembered in the prayers of the Saints.

Second Church

The few Saints of this group valiantly endeavor to keep the gospel before the people in this part of Kansas City. Difficulties are many, but the faithful ones persist in their activities.

In the death of Pastor Francis A. Evans, which occurred January 23, not only Second Church congregation, but also the church at large has sustained a great loss. He was an indefatigable worker, spending his entire ministerial activity for the advancement of the cause of Christ as represented in the Reorganized Church. His endurance knew no bonds. His labors in Bevier, Missouri, and surrounding territory are an index to his love of the work. Sometimes he took care of four local appointments over the week-end which required a walk of some thirteen miles and return. He worked arduously with Second Church congregation, responding to every demand the membership made upon him in making sick calls, adjusting difficulties, counseling, and encouraging. For fifty-five years he honored the financial call of the church, paying tithes and offerings. He was a contender for God's inspired word as contained in the three standard books of the church. Many souls were added to the church by his ministry. He was loved and honored. Brother Evans was employed by the city at the Turkey Creek pumping station of the water works, and many of his fellow workers attended the funeral. His former calling was as a stonemason and coal miner.

Brother E. W. Lloyd preaches frequently in this group.

Among those whom the Saints are remembering in their prayers is the little son of Brother Mont and Sister Elizabeth Raw Flynn.

Elder Ed. Sanders preached a series of five Sunday night sermons here, inspiring the congregation. Brother John Siebert was the speaker the evening of January 8.

Sister Mildred Lungwitz prepared a nice Christmas entertainment for Christmas Day.

A contest between the reds and the blues of the church school has just closed. This event helped to increase attendance.

Saints are happy again to have in their midst Brother and Sister Gilbert Burnett and children who have been absent a long time on account of illness.

Sister P. J. Raw is director of the O. B. K.'s. She is an ardent worker with young people. The stake O. B. K. prayer meetings held once each month at different churches, have fostered growing interest and an increasing number of spiritual blessings.

This congregation is glad to report that it reached its goal for the sacrifice period.

Saints of Second Church want to do all they can to get the church out of debt. The sisters make and sell pies to care for local expenses.

Brother George Burnett and son, Gilbert, are out of employment. They have done much work around the church, but refuse to take pay for it, saying that this is the only way they can help the church at present.

Grandview Church

Apostle J. F. Garver gave this congregation an excellent discourse, January 19, it being one of the series of missionary meetings held in the stake, beginning the fifteenth. His lesson was taken from the first letter to the Thessalonians, chapter one, verse five: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake." Brother Garver's other speaking appointments were at Central Church, Mount Washington, and Quindaro.

Grandview is to be congratulated for the orchestra which is being developed into a unit of service under the direction of Frederick Brose. Brother Lester Fowler is the efficient choir leader and has the support of a fine group of singers.

Pastor George Mesley is recovering from a severe cold, but is busy with his many duties.

Argentine Church

Elder George Mesley of the stake presidency gave an illustrated lecture on Australia and the work of the church in that country not long ago. The congregation was happy to get better acquainted with a country which is practically new to Saints in America.

Brother William Fox gave the sermonet at the church school on a recent Sunday.

Bennington Heights Church

January 15, Elder Carroll L. Olson, church statician, was the evening speaker.

A large number of this congregation's O. B. K.'s attended the young people's prayer meeting at Mount Washington, January 18.

Apostle J. F. Garver delivered a sermon here, January 20, one of a series preached in various congregations of the Kansas City Stake. Mount Washington, Gladstone and Northeast were visiting congregations, and furnished musical numbers on the program.

Elder William Bolinger, pastor at Mount Washington, spoke here the morning of January 22.

Brother Edward Larson preached that evening, his theme being, "Progress."

Missionary Work at Blythedale, Missouri

Our third week of the missionary effort here at Blythedale, began last night (January 22). We had one hundred or more nonmembers present, whereas when we began the series there were about fifty out.

Graceland musicians and others from Lamoni, Iowa, deserve special mention for the splendid assistance they have given in music and song on several evenings.

It may be necessary for us to remain here this week and next.

J. CHARLES MAY.

Four Corners Mission

(Seven Miles South of Ava, Missouri)

Three families of Saints live within a radius of three and one half miles of here, and there is no branch closer than sixteen miles. These scattered members crave the association of those of like faith, but none are financially able to drive the long distance to church. And so the little handful of members has started a mission of its own.

They met January 8, and organized, and now regular services are held at the home of Brother C. L. Hursh. D. A. Fuller, a priest, is the leader. Everyone is willing and eager to do his share.

The Sunday school has a membership ranging between fifteen and twenty persons and most of these remain for preaching.

Members are hoping for a prayer meeting about twice a month, for they realize that prayer services are essential to spiritual growth.

The Herald is read by each family and enjoyed, and the Saints desire to go forward in discharging their duties. They invite members traveling this way to visit their meetings.

to act as superintendent. The secretary of the district was instructed to write a letter of sympathy and condolence to Sister R. L. Fulk concerning her late illness and the death of her father. Recommendation for the official disorganization of the branches as follows was accepted: Bellair, Dry Fork, Joppa, and Skillet Fork. Sister Helen Cisne was sustained as head of the women's department. H. O. Plumb and Henry Sparling, former missionaries to Southeastern Illinois District, sent their regards to the conference. A sum of $7.25 was voted by the conference for the replacement of the fence on the south side of the reunion grounds. Saturday evening's sermon was by Apostle J. F. Garver. Sunday at 9.30 a. m., prayer meeting was in charge of Brothers Garver, Fulk, and Wesner. A good degree of the Holy Spirit was present. The eleven o'clock sermon was by Brother Garver; 2.30 p. m. sermon by Charles Wesner. Conference adjourned to meet again at the call of the district presidency.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—The semi-annual conference of Northeastern Kansas District convened at Topeka, January 14 and 15. Saturday at 11 a. m. a prayer service was held in charge of G. G. Cadwell and F. G. Hedrick. All groups and branches except one were represented in this initial service. The business session at 2 p. m. was in charge of the district president, Dave Little, with whom was associated Apostle Roy S. Budd. Ministerial and bishop's agent's reports were read and passed upon by the conference. The present status of Netawaka Branch was discussed, looking forward to ways and means of reviving interest there and reorganizing the branch. Joe Green led the discussion. By vote the office of district church school director was declared vacant and O. E. Weedmark was elected to fill the vacancy. The choir presented the name of Virgil E. Sheppard as counselor to fill the unexpired term of James A. Thomas who had moved out of the district. The appointment was ratified by the conference. After the treasurer, O. E. Weedmark, reported the depleted financial condition of the district treasury, the conference voted twenty-five dollars for funds to be prorated among the groups and branches to reimburse the treasury. A motion prevailed that the district presidency and apostle in charge take up the matter of a reunion for this district this year and if a reunion is advisable, they be empowered to make arrangements for the same, also to decide upon time and place. Apostle Budd spoke on building up the district, and emphasized that this must be done by the talent and priesthood resident in the district. At a subsequent meeting Brother Budd submitted the name of J. W. A. Bailey as an additional member of the reunion committee. This was approved. A committee on resolutions of condolence to the family of the late James Baillie and his companion, Janet Baillie, was authorized by the conference and Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger. Mrs. B. F. Deller, and Mrs. C. H. Happe were appointed. By vote the time and place of the next conference were left to the district presidency. Preceding the evening preaching service by Brother Budd a short program was given in charge of O. E. Weedmark. Since the prevailing conditions in country, government, and nation have a tendency to place the Lord's work in the background, it was the primary intent of the early Sunday morning prayer service to concentrate the mind upon things of the conference through the attitude of prayer. There was a good attendance at this service. Music for the conference was in charge of Sister B. F. Deller. The church school was in charge of local officers. Adult class period was in charge of G. F. Hedrick. At the eleven o'clock preaching service two babies, Charles Harvey Hays and Merle Wayne Zirkle, were blessed under the hands of Apostle Budd and G. G. Cadwell. The sermon was by Evan Fry, of Kansas City, and his theme was, "Laying Aside the Weights." He also assisted with the music and conducted the adult class period in the evening. The ordinance of administration for the sick was given to four people at the close of the morning service. Apostle Budd's theme for afternoon and closing service in the evening were "Loyalty," and "Go Through the Gates and Gather Out the Stones." As a child feels his parents' interest in his welfare, so did the conference feel the interest of this general church officer. The following places were represented at the conference, Lawrence, Scranton, Burlingame, Netawaka, Atchison, Barclay, and Blue Rapids.

Greater and Lesser Things

"Sometimes," declared the pigeon as he perched on the rim of my wastebasket this morning, "I think I'd like to be a preacher. Preaching has lots more variety in it than editing, don't you think?"

"Possibly, but you see I can speak only from the editorial point of view," I replied. "But tell me, if you were a preacher, what would you preach about?"

"U-um, well, I think I'd take for the text of my first sermon the first two lines of a hymn:

'Rise up, O men of God!
Have done with lesser things.'

And my objective would be to give the people a pretty clear understanding of their own responsibility. I'd explain that the word men as it is here used, means men and women and children; that this church business demands one hundred per cent participation. After I had convinced them of that, I would take up the clarifying of their understanding of the word lesser. In that case I'd tell them it doesn't mean the important little things—it refers to the trivial, the unimportant, the time-wasting little affairs which plague us all."

"Too bad you can't manipulate the typewriter," I sympathized a little absently, reaching for my paste pot; "you'd make a splendid editor."

"Don't be sarky," admonished my visitor; "then if I ran out of material for my maiden sermon, I'd just fall back on the rest of that hymn. It has some stirring ideas. Why don't we sing it more?"

Testimonies, Not Arguments

Christianity has become weak in the modern world because it has exhausted itself with arguments and has forgotten its testimony. The world is sick of arguments. In whatever direction men open their ears they hear the wrangling of discordant voices debating, debating, debating about things that do not matter and about which nobody cares.

But the world now is, as of old, ready to listen to one who has been in the Divine Presence, who knows whereof he speaks, whose life has been changed by a great experience. God is real; his goodness and mercy are boundless; he sends his Spirit to heal and to save; Jesus lived through all that we are asked to do, and his sacrifice made salvation possible for us. This is our testimony. Let us speak it and forget our arguments.

Working at Our Project

SO FAR AS adult education is concerned, the pulpits of our church are the most important educational factors we have. And our ministry, especially the pastors, occupy most strategic positions as the educators of the church. In their hands rest a great power and a great responsibility. They determine whether their congregations shall go forward, or whether they shall merely mark time.

We know that the year 1933 will be a difficult one —and some unfortunately are minded to let it go by without hope of accomplishing much because of the financial condition of the world. But we have a spiritual mission that must not halt and need not halt even during the worst of depressions.

Conscious that a great deal of our pulpit teaching proceeds from Sunday to Sunday without any definite objective or related program, it occurred to us that a statement of a project would be of help as a suggestion to some of our pastors. Searching for what that statement should be, we referred to the "Seven Standards of Sainthood" which was issued from the last General Conference, and revised it to fit our present purposes. After considerable discussion by the editors we feel that the present statement is worthy to be presented.

We have often thought how wonderful it would be if all the pastors could meet in one place and arrange, by common consent and agreement, a teaching program for all congregations. How the work of the church could be unified! How we would go forward together! How much we could accomplish!

Time and distance make it impossible for the priesthood to get together. Each follows his own plan without benefit of counsel from brother ministers not of his branch.

Yet it is possible for our priesthood to unite on an educational program for the congregations of the church through the columns of the Herald. It is not that anybody wishes to dictate what should be taught from the pulpits of the church. But many a pastor could as well be teaching something that would help the congregation keep in step with the rest of the church as not, especially where he has no particular plan of his own. It is merely a matter of whether he wishes to use the material, or to construct something of his own.

With the hope of presenting something that would be helpful to the pastors and the priesthood, we printed in a recent Herald, an editorial on "Our Project for 1933." That has been modified, after consultation, into the statement which occupies the center of this page. This statement will be made the subject of several editorials that will appear in succeeding issues of the Herald.

Criticisms and suggestions will be in order. We shall be glad to hear, too, from pastors who use them, and the results of their experience. We should be happy to have helpful suggestions of whatever kind from pastors in order that these good things may be passed on to others who may profit by them.

We need a task for 1933. We need a program to work at. We need to keep this program before our people. Pastors can help in this important task. On this work and our devotion to it, depends our spiritual life. Let us measure up to the full requirements of our duty.

"The work of the church must go on," has been the call of our leaders in time of stress and difficulty. It must go on, but it must also go on toward something definite. It will go on better if we can get in step and go and work together for some common ends. We shall be the stronger and the safer if we stand together, work together, keep together. Our combined service to the church shall be the more effective if it is unified under the leadership of the priesthood, directed by the pastors, working under the leaders of the church, who look to Christ for their inspiration. "Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

The good die young—they are prepared for it.

An Encouraging Report

A DISTRICT PRESIDENT, in introducing a splendid detailed report of his activities in the district over which he had been called to preside, has extended to the Presidency a wish for a happy New Year "with many business reverses." He says:

"There come to me the words of the prophet: 'And the prophet came to the King of Israel, and he said unto him, Go strengthen thyself . . . for at the return of the year the King of Syria will come up against thee.' This was given to the king that he might prepare to protect himself. But what will the new year bring to us?

"A renewal of life's battle. The nobility of life's conflict.

"The return of the same old antagonists, the same old Syrians, with new faces possibly, but certainly with reenforcements.

"The need for adequate preparation in strength, in alertness, in self-possession.

"The same victorious leadership, to whom hill or valley battlefield is alike, and with whom menacing numbers and parading chariots do not count.

"The call for individual loyalty and fidelity.

"Realizing somewhat the task that is before me in this part of God's kingdom, I want to pledge myself to its tasks and to the support of the leaders of the church this year, 1933."

And then follows a detailed report of activities which have carried the branches in the district over the goal set for them by the Bishopric in the effort to raise the needed finances.

SUCH A REPORT comes with encouraging effects. It is always encouraging to know that men of consecration, of devotion, and willingness to spend and be spent are at the call of the church, and to these splendid local workers who are giving so unstintingly of time and talent midst discouragements and trials, we pay our tribute of praise, and we know from our own experiences that, despite the handicaps and discouragements, service of this kind brings a compensation that can not be measured in dollars and cents, for the knowledge that the best we have is given to the best cause we know and which has our deepest love and affection brings a peace and satisfaction that serving for the emoluments of the world never brings.

A MISSIONARY writes to the Presidency and near the close of his letter he adds a comment about "Technocracy." He says:

"I am wondering if the 'Technocrats' who are being lambasted from every side and even disowned by the past fostering mother, Columbia University, do not very pertinently point out some stubborn facts with which Zion must, sooner or later, have to do? There is a very fine article in December Outlook, by Parrish, and the Technocracy Review, which is devoted entirely to an examination by some of the brightest minds, have a lot of good things to say also. They seem to reach the conclusion, that though some of Technocracy's claims may seem a little strained and untimely, yet many facts are pointed out. Oh, for the establishment of Zion and a solution to present world problems. What a gigantic task awaits us! Will the church answer the call? From present spiritual experiences I would say Yes! And I hope it may be soon."

It is fine to read such emphatic optimism about the accomplishment of our task. Sure, we must finish it.

"Technocracy" raises the question of distribution of goods, and challenges the present system in that regard. In and under Zionic conditions that question need not be raised, for with initiative to create wealth coupled to consecration of individual surplus to group stock in common goods, equitable distribution is automatically assured. There will be no incentive to hoard, except as groups, and even group surplus will be kept in a state of mobility whereby it can easily and quickly flow to where any local disturbance of economic factors creating shortage or need can easily and smoothly be adjusted and met.

Even the problems raised by the "technocrats" yield or will yield to Zionic solution.

BROTHER DUTTON, writing of conditions in Indiana, says that a local officer in writing to him says that among a certain group of Saints conditions are so bad that they can not buy gasoline for their cars, and so have no way to get together, as many of them have no horses. They are not grumbling, just facing facts and doing the best they can.

Of course they are! As a people we have faced untoward conditions many times, and our power to adapt ourselves is a factor in progress. The guess is ventured that those Saints will find some way to meet, if not in large groups, then in smaller ones, where they can "walk to meeting." And through their present troubles, if their faces are turned towards the heavenly Father, and their trust is still safely planted in him, they will come with enriched faith, for from trials and tribulations come refinement of soul and enrichment of the spirit.

Blue Pencil Notes

When I was a small boy I had an uncle who derived a lot of pleasure from arguing with me that a pound of feathers is as heavy as a pound of lead. He could not convince me; I had lifted feathers and I had lifted lead, and I knew. The hardest man to reason with is the man who knows something that is not so.

Sometimes when I would ask for a piece of pie, this same uncle would cut a piece in two and give me one of the half sections. I would insist that it was only a "half piece" of pie while he would maintain that it was a "whole piece." We never came to an agreement. A good many religious disputations in the past have been about matters no more important—and ofttimes both parties to the controversy were right—from their standpoint.

"The trouble with some folks," said Deacon Goodentart, "is that they feel, and then talk, and then think."

Christ came first to the Jews with his message. They had the first opportunity to accept it, but they refused to do so. The gospel then went to the Gentiles. It would have gone to them in any event, for it was to be "preached in all the world"; but the Hebrew people were given a chance to bear that message and to be the teachers of the world under the Christian dispensation as they had been under the Mosaic economy. The prophets held that after the "times of the Gentiles were fulfilled" the gospel would again go to the Jews. Our people have always had a definite interest in the gathering back of the Jews, since their return to the Holy Land was foretold in the message that the angel gave to Joseph Smith, and so has been wrapped up in our traditions as a part and parcel and a sign of the prophetic character of that message.

In the light of the foregoing, Saints will be interested in statements recently made in Kansas City by Maurice Samuels. Even after making due allowance for the over-enthusiasm of a special advocate, his statements as reported in the Journal-Post, December 15, hold much of interest to us:

Unemployment and financial depression are unknown among the Jews of Palestine, and Zion rapidly is becoming Eden, according to Maurice Samuel, Jewish author and lecturer, who addressed the Young Men's Hebrew Association Wednesday night at the Y. M. H. A. auditorium.

"Although Palestine is only one twelfth the size of Egypt," he said, "it has become the focal point of industrial activity in the near East. The Jews are employed, to a man; and the national ledger shows a surplus of $2,000,000."

Mr. Samuel, who spends half his time in the Jewish national homeland, declared that while rioting between the Jews and Arabs had not entirely ended, it is decreasing and "they are doing business on an unprecedented scale."

"The Jews are rooted to the soil of Palestine," he said, "not in the spirit of men clinging tenaciously to all that is left, but in the spirit of men inspired to build and achieve. The time will come when Palestine will not be known for its sentimental news value, but because it buys and sells."

More recently the Literary Digest (January 14) contained a similar report:

In the midst of world-wide depression, searchers are able to find one country which is actually shaking off the burdens of depression and was more prosperous last year than it was the year before. And that country lies on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean—it is Palestine, the holy land of Christian and Jew. As the New York Evening Post remarks:

In that little country, not so long ago the scene of bitter strife between Jews and Arabs, it is reported that exports are higher last year than year before, that the unemployment figures are showing an impressive downward curve, that building activity and general industrialization are steadily going forward. At the great annual fair at Tel-Aviv, for example, the number of exhibitors has increased from 300 in 1928 to 1,300 in 1932.

The explanation of this phenomenal state of affairs is that deprest conditions in other countries have caused the immigration of a more substantial class of Jews, and that by resisting whatever impulse there may have been to tighten the ban on immigrants Palestine is now reaping the reward of its liberality through definite economic recovery.

We hope the reports of this situation are fully justified. It is a distinctly bright spot on a none too promising international horizon.

O well for him whose will is strong
He suffers, but he will not suffer long;
He suffers, but he can not suffer wrong;
For him nor moves the loud world's random mock,
Nor all calamity's hugest waves confound,
Who seems a promontory of rock,
That compassed round with turbulent sound;
In middle ocean meets the shock,
Tempest buffeted, citadel-crowned.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle J. A. Gillen Leaves for Southland

Apostle J. A. Gillen left Independence yesterday for the Southeastern Mission, where he has been appointed to serve the church. His itinerary will shortly take him to Alabama and Florida, a territory he has not visited for two years, and the Saints await his arrival with anticipation.

Graceland in Front Ranks in College Training for Nurses

Graceland is in the front ranks of colleges which this year, have increased their standards to include the preparatory college training for graduate nurses. And now the dream of Graceland's administration, of combining regular college work with the nurses training course, is being realized. The experiment is working out well.

Ten students are this year enrolled in the prenursing course, and will complete the work in May. After a four-week vacation, they will begin three years of practical training at the Independence Sanitarium, according to the Lamoni Chronicle. At the close of the three-year course, they will receive the degrees of associate in arts and graduate nurse.

The prenursing course offers work in psychology, biology, English, physiology and other subjects.

Thirtieth Anniversary for Traverse City, Michigan

The branch at Traverse City observed its thirtieth anniversary January 28, with a program and social. A check on the changes which have taken place during that period shows that only two who were present at the organization meeting of the branch, remain in the city. The branch now has a membership of approximately one hundred and forty.

Independence Women's Sacrifice Offering $3,005

One of the largest weekly offerings yet, $276, by the women of Independence, brought the total of their sacrifice offering up to $3,005 on January 30. This offering has been collected weekly through the personal sacrifice of hundreds of women in the center place. The movement began late in October, Sister Charlotte Koehler, women's leader, working in full accord with general church officers and the pastor in Zion. Fine enthusiasm and interest continue to mark the various sacrifice activities this movement involves.

Twenty Baptized in Alpena, Michigan

Twenty have been baptized at Alpena, Michigan, as a result of missionary meetings conducted there during the winter weeks by Elder J. J. Ledsworth, Northern Michigan missionary, and Sister Ledsworth. Beginning at Christmas time and continuing through the month of January, Brother Ledsworth aroused much interest in the gospel in this community. It is the opinion of the Alpena pastor that many others will accept the gospel.

J. A. Gunsolley Reports Storm Along New England Coast

In a letter to The Lamoni Chronicle Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley writes: "Have been having the worst storm for thirty years along the New England coast with millions lost in damage to property, houses and shipping. Streets in Boston close to the shore were flooded eight or nine feet deep. Not much snow or severe cold, but a gale up to seventy-two miles an hour. We are secure in the midst of Cape Cod on south shore."

Brother and Sister Gunsolley are in Fall River, Massachusetts, where he began a series of meetings Sunday.

Big Sacrifice Offering for Central Chicago Church

Though the City of Chicago has suffered acutely from the depression, and her unemployed number in the thousands, Central Church sent to the Bishop a sacrifice offering, during November and December, amounting to $359. In view of the fact that numbers of the people making this offering have only half-time employment, and some are jobless, this was a sacrifice offering in every sense of the term.

Alaflora Branch Has New Pastor

Alaflora Branch, about eight miles from Brewton, Alabama, has a new pastor in the person of Elder Earl T. Higdon. Brother Higdon, son of Missionary Amos T. Higdon, is young in years and in the ministry. He was ordained an elder in the Melchisedec priesthood last November, and his work is consecrated and full of zeal. The Saints are happy to acknowledge his leadership.

This is one of the oldest branches of the church in the South. It stands on the Alabama-Florida line, hence the name Ala-flora, and in this church edifice have spoken many of the church officers and stalwarts.

A Page for Youth

Remember the YOUTH CONFERENCE and LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

June 17-25 Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, Iowa

Our contribution for this week is a report bearing on Problem Number Four: Youth and the Church. It shows what the young people are doing for the church in various branches. The items have been collected by C. B. Woodstock.

Young People in Action

Grandview Branch, in Kansas City, Kansas, reports an active Boy Scout Troop and a young people's orchestra. The young people frequently furnish church school programs and the orchestra regularly provides music for the church services.

At the monthly meeting of young people in the Spring River District, held at Joplin, Missouri, December 13, a special Christmas service was had. The theme was, "Bringing Our Gifts to God." In an impressive ceremony each brought his gift, amounting in all to $17.80, which was sent to the Presiding Bishop.

The months of January and February are to be occupied in good will tours of the branches of the district under the direction of a sponsoring committee.

Spring River promises several automobile loads of young people to attend the June Convention in Lamoni.

Carthage, Missouri, has an active group of Intermediates, organized as "Second Milers." Their organization under an able teacher has made possible a number of very fine experiences. They gave a local play, then took it to a district meeting; they have parties, hikes, and wiener roasts. The class has been using the quarterly, "Seeing Life Whole," and has enjoyed carrying out many of the home projects. On the side they have been studying artists and the great pictures. At the close of the year Plockhorst's "The Good Shepherd," was presented to the church.

The Young People's Council in Zion organized for the coming year on January 16. Here are gathered representatives of all the organized groups of young people in Independence. Thirty elected council members represent some two thousand or more young people, very earnestly seeking the good of all and planning ways in which the entire group may be enthusiastically enlisted in the constructive work of the church. A program of activities for the year is under construction, various projects being assigned each to a certain committee of the council.

Projects already set up include the following:

A play contest in Zion to be held February 27, 28, March 2.

A week's series of services followed by a young people's banquet in March.

A young people's rally in April.

Attendance at the Youth Conference and Leadership Convention in Lamoni, June 17 to 25.

One of the most successful winter projects has been the holding of a young people's gathering each Sunday afternoon at two thirty in the Young People's room at the Auditorium. Speakers are chosen who have a message for the hour. Group singing and special numbers are enjoyed. Recently a group of young people from the Watson Memorial Methodist Church presented the program of several musical numbers and Frank W. Rucker, a prominent business man and leader among Methodist young people gave the address, "The Measure of True Success."

The occasion was greatly enjoyed by a large gathering and indicates the type of good fellowship and high idealism which should characterize Christian young people engaged in the task of building a Christian community.

The Jonesport, Maine, "Zion Builders" is a group of 40 young people, members and friends of the church. They meet each Friday evening under the leadership of the pastor, Elder Newman Wilson, for a varied program. On Monday evenings a young folks' prayer meeting is held. At social gatherings the High School faculty members and others are invited in. "Good will" socials are held to carry out local projects.

The young people of Pontiac, Michigan, have sponsored two cantatas and are preparing to give some short plays. They provide the musical numbers and a speaker for one service a month.

Grand Rapids, Michigan, young people are well organized for an interesting program. A monthly health lecture by a medical student of their number has been a helpful feature. A Saint Valentine party is being planned under the title, "A Silver Tea," at which a Silver King and Queen will be host and hostess and the silver contributions will be used for church projects.

Two Builders

A builder builded a temple
He wrought it with grace and skill;
Pillars and groins and arches
All fashioned to work his will.
Men said as they saw its beauty
"It never shall know decay,
Great is thy skill, O builder!
Thy fame shall endure for aye."

A teacher builded a temple
With loving and infinite care,
Planning each arch with patience,
Laying each stone with prayer.
None praised her unceasing efforts
None knew of her wondrous plan,
For the temple the teacher builded
Was unseen by the eyes of man.

Gone is the builder's temple,
Crumbled into the dust;
Low lies each stately pillar,
Food for consuming rust.
But the temple the teacher builded
Will last while the ages roll,
For that beautiful unseen temple
Was a child's immortal soul.

Living Waters

By E. G. Hammond

WHEN the Lord commissioned Peter to feed his sheep he employed a figure of speech that is full of meaning for those who embark in this service today, if they will search its implications.

For instance, a most important consideration is the fact that sheep manifest a profound preference for blue grass above baled hay. All of it is grass, of course, whether pasture or provender, but everyone must concede that it loses vitally when cut and dried. All the life-giving and digestion-aiding juices which impart flavor to grass in the pasture stage, and make it food for sheep evaporate when it is cured, and if they eat it dry it clogs their systems, and induces disease and death.

Happy the flock therefore, of whose shepherd it may be said:

"He maketh me to lie down in green [that is, living] pastures."—Psalm 23.

And since sheep thrive on green grass so much better than dry hay, we should not be surprised to find a corresponding principle to be observed in dispensing the gospel. Indeed, such a principle is traceable in the description of the Master of himself as the living bread, followed by the declaration that the bread he will give is his flesh. (John 6: 51.)

This does not mean, of course, that mortals are to eat him bodily, any more than it was meant that Peter was to feed sheep in the literal sense. But it means, rather, that as to his word which was "made flesh," mankind may enjoy it, even as the prophet who said:

"Thy words were found, and I did eat them."—Jeremiah 15: 16.

The prophet could relish the word of God for the reason, doubtless, that it came to him fresh and first-hand rather than by that second-hand process, consisting of the repetition of what may have been heard but indistinctly and related but imperfectly. He received the living word, rather than the report of those who had heard it.

And again the principle requiring green pastures for sheep is apparent in the words of the Master to the woman by the well, by which he declared:

"If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that sayeth unto thee Give me to drink, . . . he would have given thee living water."—John 4: 10.

Even so, when we think of the word of God as the bread of life, we realize that, like the manna of the Israelites, it is most wholesome when we "gather it every morning, every man according to his eating." (Exodus 16: 21.) And if we think of it as the water of life, it should come to us fresh, and not from storage tanks.

Something deep in our nature causes us to prefer to wash in a running stream; and no one ever drinks from a cistern, but as a last resort. But notwithstanding He has endowed them with a taste for better things the Lord has complained of his own followers, saying:

"My people [Saints; people] have committed two evils: they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and have hewn them out cisterns."—Jeremiah 2: 13.

It is difficult to understand why mortals will thus pervert their own natural tastes to partake of things contrary to their nature, but this they will do. Nevertheless there is always present a hidden, better quality in both men and brutes which rejects stale food, such as fallen apples, or withered vegetables, and the flesh of animals found dead.

This taste for the better things is attested by the fact that no one pays but half price for fallen apples, in the one instance, and again Moses commanded Israel to "eat nothing that dieth of itself.' But the lion seems to be wise enough and strong enough to follow his better appetite without instruction. At least, Shakespeare has said of him:

" 'Tis the royal disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead."

The lion of the jungle is no scavenger, and neither is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah so resourceless that he must turn to the leavings of dead generations, those seeking meat from his hand, today. The seasons give a more correct pattern of his ways: and as each succeeding springtime clothes the fields with new grass, the gift of that particular spring, so at this season of the world's history in the gospel sense, we seek fresh fields not browsed upon, nor trampled under the feet and defiled.

IN THIS connection it is significant to note that when this Church of Jesus Christ was organized among men in 1830, the angels of heaven participated in the ceremonies; and when it was established the Lord said of it that it was,

"The only true and living church . . . with which I, the Lord, am well pleased."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

Wherefore, without denying the value of scriptures given in former times, but making acknowledgement of a deep, natural craving for something these scriptures can never supply, we turn hopefully to the fountain opened to this generation through this "living church," which was organized

The Great Temptation

By Roy F. Davey

WHEN SATAN tempted Jesus after Jesus' forty days in the wilderness, we can be sure he used the three most powerful temptations his cunning brain could devise. Times may have changed greatly in the past two thousand years, but fundamentally man has not. Civilization and so-called progress have brought man the complexity of modern life and modern human relations and have given him a veneer which has a high polish but which is also very thin.

The temptations that were powerful in Jesus' time are as powerful today. It is these three temptations which Satan uses at the present time with the greatest effectiveness. Of course, he dresses them up in modern garb, but essentially they are the same. In order for us to protect ourselves from these subtle wiles of the adversary of our souls we must understand just what the modern version of these three temptations is that we may successfully meet them.

As recorded in Luke 4: 1-12, these temptations seem to have a symbolic meaning or significance. "And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God command this stone that it be made bread." Jesus was hungry and bread would satisfy it. Here is the temptation to satisfy his physical appetites by whatever means possible. "And the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it. If thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be thine." In this there is the appeal to his natural desire for power and wealth and all that goes with them. "And he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence: For it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee: And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." In modern parlance the devil would have said, "I dare you to jump." This is plainly a dare.

Let us see how these subtle wiles appear in their modern form. First, the satisfaction of our physical appetites. How well we like to eat delicacies that tickle our palate, wear fine clothes, live in a large, well-furnished house, ride in a luxurious automobile! And to what end do we sometimes go in gratifying these appetites and innumerable others. The temptation does not lie so much in the satisfying of these appetites as in the manner and method in which they are satisfied. However, the Doctrine and Covenants admonishes us to be temperate in all things. Looking at the matter from a different angle we observe that we are more susceptible to temptation when we are hungry, tired, cold, or sick. Then, we are irritable or melancholy to an extent at least.

The third temptation touches a spot in the human make-up that usually brings a sure response. Only a coward or a very wise man will refuse to accept a dare—even a foolish dare. So with his tongue in his cheek today Satan says, "I dare you to break the law and try to get away with it," and expectantly awaits results. When we risk life or limb for no good reason at all we tempt God.

The second temptation is the appeal to the fundamental urges of man, to forces within him even stronger than his appetites. This is the one which merits the name of the Great Temptation, because it is more fundamental than the other two. It is the one which I wish to discuss somewhat in detail.

THERE are four urges, wishes, desires—call them whatever you may. They are universal in that all humanity has them. They are the basis of life and without them civilization, progress, society would cease to exist. Yet as Satan well knows, these fundamental urges wrongly directed can produce havoc.

These urges are for security, adventure, recognition, and response. To be more specific: the security urge is that one which gives us the desire to save money for a "rainy day," that keeps some of us from going eighty miles an hour in a car, or that prevents some from taking a ride in an airplane. When it is completely satisfied we experience a feeling of entire safety and well-being. The urge toward adventure is responsible for our seeking after new experiences in the way of "going places and seeing things," and of seeking new thrills in the way of performing dangerous feats or of experimenting with the moral code. Every one likes to be recognized as being of some consequence. With most people this urge for recognition is especially strong. It is the motive power behind their striving for fame. Recognition they must have by whatever means possible. The urge for response, however, is even more pervasive. We like others to respond to us. In fact, it is necessary for our happiness that we get a response whether it be the intimate response of a loved one or the well-wishing response of a nation.

Thus, the second temptation was the Great Temptation in Jesus' time, and today Satan still finds it the most potent lure. On every hand we hear his voice saying, "Bow down and serve me, and all your urges will be gratified. I will give you security, new experiences, recognition, and response."

Certainly the unscrupulous seem to prosper. The "swinishness" of the political system continues apace. For example, Jimmie Walker for many years was secure, had adventure, enjoyed great recognition, and received unbelievable response—witness the path of roses given him to walk upon as he returned to New York City from Albany after one of his forced trips to the Capital city. Then, too, the "muckrakers" earn a more lucrative sum of money, become more widely known and generally have their desires gratified to a greater extent by peddling their literary filth than do many of those who strive to write wholesome, uplifting literature.

Besides this, Satan playing upon their fundamental urges deludes many honest, good-intentioned men. With honest trifles he betrays them in deepest consequence. He says, "If you want to help humanity and the church the right thing to do is first to become rich and famous because then you can help so much more." He knows that after a man surrenders himself solely to the gaining of fame and fortune he will forget, unless he is extraordinary, about all the good he intended doing for humanity when he became "successful."

OF COURSE, it would be poor tactics for Satan to point out both sides of the case. And human beings have a strange tendency to believe that they can get something for nothing, that they can gratify their urges in whatever manner they please and still not pay the price that cosmic law insists must be paid for such a gratification. Thus, many are ensnared by the devil's wiles. Still others also see only his side of the case even though they do not yield to the lure of Mammon. They do not yield, simply because they believe that would prevent their going to heaven. After all, going to heaven is really a matter of secondary importance. Living a worth-while life here is the matter of primary importance.

The other half of the case is as has been intimated: no matter how we seek to satisfy our fundamental urges we reap our reward here as well as hereafter. Everything has an inexorable price. It is not necessary to go to the Bible to discover that here in this life we reap what we sow, for many famous authors represent this fact in their works. Goethe in his story of Faust recounts how a man who sells his soul to the devil in return for a gratification of his urges lives to regret it. In Macbeth Shakespeare tells the story of a man who pays a terrible price because he satisfied his desire for power and wealth wrongly. Also Richard III, that multi-murderer for the sake of power, discovered the other side of the case too late. He exclaims at last, "There is no creature loves me and if I die no soul shall pity me."

Yes, in this mortal life inevitably the way we have sought to satisfy our urges reacts upon us. If we surrender to the Great Temptation, we will start reaping our woeful harvest long before we reach the pearly gates.

ONE FACTOR complicates the matter greatly. With some people the urge for security is strongest of the four, with some others the urge for adventure is quite intense. Likewise with the other two urges. No two individuals have urges of the same relative strength. Then, too, the urges as a whole are stronger in some than in others. As a result what is the strongest temptation for one person is not the strongest temptation for some one else. Power or influence appeals to some individuals, fame to some others, wealth to still others.

For this reason there is a need for tolerance and consistency. "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye." (Luke 6: 41, 42.)

Here are a few examples of this very thing. A glutton on pork will reprimand another for drinking coffee and tea. Some won't play bridge and berate those who do, but see nothing wrong in wasting their money as well as their time in going to all sorts of shows—some of rather questionable character. Others are sure that those who dance are Satan's own children, but their righteousness is not one whit disturbed by their attendance at petting parties. This is not intended as a defense of either alternative in any of the cases cited.

This line of reasoning leads us to the conclusion that we can be penny-wise and pound-foolish in matters of conduct. It is for this very reason that Jesus so bitterly condemned the Pharisees: for keeping the letter of the law and not the spirit of it, my pet ways of breaking the cosmic law are

A Problem Story for Young Home Builders

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Can Church Work Break Up a Home ?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Brad brings a handsome young business friend home to dinner, and Edith, one of the Half Dozen, who has helped Polly in the emergency by playing maid, exclaims in a swift aside, "Polly, he's good looking! . . . Bet he's married. . . . Wouldn't it be interesting—if he isn't?" And while Polly became so absorbed in church and social duties that she nearly forgot him, Brad stayed home from church, holding company with his private thoughts. To complicate matters, Brad's mother arrives for a long visit, and from the first she begins to criticize the life and habits in her son's home. Beginning here the reader can watch Grandma Nelson in action—

Chapter 6
A Matter of Views

"POLLY, I like the view from my window. Sight of that great Auditorium dome just lifts my soul up and fills me with new courage in the struggle of life. Have you noticed how perfectly majestic it looks with the snow drifted into those ridges or spines or whatever they are on the dome?"

"Yes, Mother Nelson. I'm glad you like it. It is pretty."

The two were sitting in the breakfast nook soon after Brad's departure for the office. Mrs. Nelson insisted on rising and breakfasting with the rest of the family, and she and Polly were fast falling into the habit of lingering at the table to talk.

"Pretty! I didn't say pretty, I said majestic, and by that I meant glorious, soul-stirring, magnificent. That's the way the Auditorium appeals to me even if it isn't finished. It stirs my very soul. But you people here in Independence accept it just as you accept all the other rare blessings of the church in the center place, with only a casual 'It is pretty all right.' "

Mrs. Nelson had lost no time in establishing herself in the household of her son, and in making her acquaintance with church people. She came and went among her new friends and even though winter had set in in earnest, she was out of the house almost as much as her daughter-in-law. Inside the house she had asked to be allowed to take over the family mending, had assumed entire charge of her own room, and was trying to make herself helpful in many little ways. She even offered to do the family ironing.

"I love to iron, dearie. When I iron I think of how wonderful it is to be able to smooth out the rough places in life. I think maybe the reason I like to iron is that I can use my missionary spirit in doing it. Now at Evelyn's I did all the ironing. Evelyn works out, you know. And I cooked there, too. I'd be glad to help here."

But Polly thanked her gratefully, assuring her that the mending would be a big load off her mind. As for the cooking, she could not explain that she preferred to work alone in her kitchen, but she did mention her weekly household budget and the fact that her meals were planned a week ahead to insure thrift and economy.

"What, you and Brad have a budget? Well, I declare! Milly and Henry started out with one, but they didn't get far. It was the cause of many quarrels, because, you see, they're both extravagant. And so one night after a real bad quarrel they put the budget in the furnace and agreed not to mention it again. Those two used to have such scenes over money! Of course, you can depend on it, when they started, I kept my mouth shut, but Henry could always see where my sympathy was. My dear, he was absolutely the most stingy man—"

"But Mother Nelson, I don't want to hear of Milly and Henry's quarrels or of Henry's shortcomings. We all have them."

"Henry Brown's are *long*comings if I do say so."

Somehow Polly managed to shift the subject to a more comfortable one, the ladies' aid. Not three days after her arrival in Independence, Mrs. Nelson had become acquainted with some of the members of a quilting society composed mostly of elderly women, and she planned throughout the remainder of the winter to devote one and sometimes two days a week to quilting. "You seem to have your household pretty well regulated, my dear," she had declared, "and I don't want to interfere. But I must be busy. I'm never happy when I'm idle, and you know what modern revelation says about there being no idle in Zion." And so she was quilting to her heart's content.

BRAD'S mother puzzled Polly. Sometimes the young woman admired her intensely, and the next moment she would find herself rebellious under the look in Mrs. Nelson's brown eyes. Her mother-in-law had shown that she could be sweet and helpful, but so often she seemed to prefer to be perverse, critical, and melancholy just as Brad had predicted.

And it was Brad that worried Polly most. His mother's very presence seemed to irritate him. He was restless, and no wonder, for no longer after dinner, was he permitted to retire to the study to read the paper, lounge alone, or listen to the radio. If he tuned in to hear the next installment of a mystery serial, or a blues singer, the noise worried Mrs. Nelson. If he played with Carrol, every movement was closely watched for fear he would hurt the child. If, after the paper was disposed of, he showed an inclination to do nothing but rest in his chair, his mother talked enthusiastically of study courses and lectures that "ambitious" and "consecrated" men were taking in. Home wasn't the same to Brad.

Polly had not thought so much about it until one evening Brad followed her into the pantry, closed the door, and took her in his arms and kissed her. "I may not do it every night when I come home, dearest," he confided, the old light that Polly loved in his eyes, "because of mother, but you can depend on it I think of it and want to do it. I can't very gracefully kiss you without kissing her, too, and she does have an awful peck."

"Foolish," chided his wife as she laughingly patted his cheek and then turned away to reach for the salt and pepper shakers. "Mustn't have such naughty thoughts!"

But there had been several evenings that he had not kissed her when he came in from the office.

The night before, after they had gone upstairs, Brad had hesitated, looked at his wife, and then began with the air of a man who is doing something he doesn't like: "I suppose I'm a selfish brute, Polly, and I don't want you to think I don't love Mother, but the place just doesn't seem the same with her around. Sometimes when she starts her hard luck stories at the dinner table, I just want to swear."

"I know, dear," comforted Polly. "It's bound to seem like that until we get used to her." She did not mention her own reactions to her mother-in-law, how she puzzled, and wondered, and sometimes worried, and Brad did not question her. Polly kept in her own heart any fears she might have had concerning Mrs. Nelson's ever being able to adjust herself well to her son's family. She had not tried to remember the numberless little arguments that she herself had turned aside with a smile; how already Mrs. Nelson was talking a little too much to the neighbors about Polly's work and problems; how sometimes she interfered with Carrol, and a dozen other little things.

"Don't ever grow to be like her, Polly," growled Brad as he snatched off his tie and threw it on the dressing table.

A low laugh, and Polly's hand slipped into his. The forefinger of her other hand was placed on her lips: "Come," she invited, "let's look at the baby."

And together, as they had often done before, they gazed upon the cherubic countenance of their small son, their hearts throbbing with the wonder of his perfection. Brad's clasp on his wife's hand tightened. For a long moment neither spoke, and then he said very reverently: "With him, dear, we are rich!"

"Excuse me, Mother Nelson." Polly jerked herself out of the world of her own thoughts. "Did you say something?"

"I asked if you are going to prayer meeting tonight. My arrival last Wednesday night deprived you of that privilege, and I thought you would be going—"

"No," a little hastily, "I really hadn't planned to. I had other plans. But Sister Livingston generally goes and I thought if you felt like going—"

"However I might feel physically, unless I was actually ill, I should feel it my duty to go." There was a touch of asperity in her tone. "The prayer meeting is the source of our spiritual power, and without spiritual power, we can do nothing for the Lord. He commands us to assemble together."

"Yes, I know. I like to go, and generally I do go, but sometimes there are other things I just have to do on Wednesday night."

"Nothing can be more important on Wednesday night than prayer meeting."

"But there are some things that demand one's attention—"

"I'm surprised, Polly, that you are no more interested in prayer meeting than you are, and you such a church worker, too. Do you think you are setting a proper example—"

"Yes," flashed Polly, "I do, just as long as I try to make my religion really vital, practical, helpful, and kindly. I'm trying to do the best I can. I do get help and strength at prayer meeting, but just because I do not go all the time I don't think I'm setting an unholy example for my girls." Something in the look of the other's eyes stopped her. She wished she had not said so much. Confusedly

she went on: "I'm staying at home tonight with my husband. I promised Brad—"

"Why don't you take him to prayer meeting with you? I'm sure it would hurt neither of you," coldly.

"But, Mother Nelson, he does go frequently. Tonight we just want to visit as we used to do before—before we got so busy." She was surprised at the feeling of rebellion and perversity that swept over her. She had almost said "before you came."

At that moment Carrol, who had taken a great fancy to his grandmother, demanded that she "Tome an' see my house." In the hall between the kitchen and the guest room was a nook where Carrol had play space. It was warm and light, and as long as his mother remained in the kitchen or his grandmother was in her room, he was content to play there. Brad had built a small railing to pen him in his corner.

If during the day there was a slight chill in the manner of Mrs. Nelson, Polly pretended not to notice it. Before lunch time the former donned her coat and hat and announced that she intended to "step over to Sister Livingston's." Half an hour later, she returned, jubilantly announcing that the prayer meeting was to be over there that evening. "So you and Brad will have to go out of common civility, my dear," she added as an afterthought.

SO IMPORTANT a part does the telephone, as the vehicle of sound and communication, play in the lives of people of this age, that we allow it to become common, and fail to realize its aids and blessings. Often the telephone's propitious ring had rescued Polly from an embarrassing situation, from answering an unanswerable question. Many times it had saved her from confusion. "If I ever write a story—imagine my settling down to write!—I shall make its title 'Then the Telephone Rang.'" Just now, true to form, the telephone did ring.

It was Arthea Kent. She wanted to give a mid-January tea for the Happy Half Dozen and a few of their girl friends. "Just something social, dear," she explained. "I want to prove to the girls that I am serious about cutting out cards and dancing. Do you think they will like the tea?"

Polly assured her that she knew the girls would be delighted, and offered to help.

"There is something you can do," came the eager voice over the wire. "I want to have it in about a week, and would like to get the invitations out." Could Polly help her pick out special friends to be invited? Could she, Arthea, come over this afternoon?

Rapidly Polly reviewed her plans. All she could remember for this afternoon besides some baking she hoped to do, was to coach one of her Sunday school girls on a story for junior church the next Sunday. That was scheduled for three-thirty.

Certainly Arthea could come.

IT TOOK quite a struggle to reserve this night for you, Brad, darling." Polly was curled up in the corner of the lounge. She smiled entrancingly across at her husband who was comfortably established in his favorite easy-chair near the fire. He had dropped his paper, turned off the reading lamp at his elbow, and for several minutes, had been enjoying the picture his wife made, as the lights from the fire gleamed in her hair and set out the oval of her cheek.

"Nothing like a winter evening and an open fire to make things cozy, but it seems strange, doesn't it?—so quiet," she continued.

"Strange?" and her husband's hand closed over hers as he took the place beside her. "It seems wonderful. It reminds me of the times when I used to come to see you down at Mrs. Stevenson's. Remember the nights we used to sit beside the fire and talk of the future?"

"Do I remember?" Polly's brown head now rested comfortably on Brad's shoulder. "How could I forget it, Brad?" His arm tightened.

"We stayed before that fire because we wanted to be alone together, and because it was cheaper, too. We were saving our money," he pursued as though to himself.

"Yes, and we were dreaming, too."

"Dreaming, yes. But we didn't dare dream, dear, of all the happiness we have now, did we?" huskily.

"No, Brad," very low, "we couldn't comprehend it then."

The fire was burning lower, but neither of them noticed it.

After a time Brad murmured: "It's wonderful having you alone this way, Polly. It doesn't happen very often." Was there a wistful note in his statement? "You're so capable, and are called on so many times to help. I wouldn't have it different—I'm proud of you, and your church work means a lot to me, dear, but sometimes—I miss my wife."

Something made Polly shiver. "Oh, darling, I don't mean it to happen that way." The words were muffled in the lapel of his coat so that he had to bend nearer to hear; "but it seems there are so many things over which we don't have control. Sometimes I want to drop it all and just stay home with you and Carrol."

He held her closer: "I know, dear, but it's your nature to do things, you're so sweet and generous. You'd miss it terribly."

"But it makes me tired, and then I'm cross to you—"

Programs for March

The Church School

Worship Programs for March, 1933

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

GENERAL THEME: "FELLOWSHIP IN TRUTH."

MARCH 5, 1933

Theme: "Let us go up together."

Instrumental Prelude: "Thy Holy Day Returning," number 32.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, 17. "Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church. And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."

Group Response: Isaiah 2: 3. "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths."

(S) Hymn: "Great God! As Followers of Thy Son," number 64.

(S) Prayer: A petition that we may hear the call to "come up higher." That we may realize that we can go to God only in company with each other. That we may understand our fellowship with God only as we come into fellowship with one another. That each of us counts for one and only one. God is "Our" Father and this is His Church.

Talk: As a basis, use Matthew 5: 1-3. When Jesus sought to give the law pertaining to His kingdom he turned away from the multitude and went up into a mountain. The reason for His ascent was not that He did not wish every man to hear His voice, but rather because He knew that His words would be drowned in the noise of the crowd. To some of the people the climb seemed most foolish—they remained behind on the hillside. To some it was another opportunity to be with Jesus—they followed Him upwards. Because they chose to follow Him they were His disciples. It is much the same today. Those who would discover the laws governing the kingdom must climb to the high places where Jesus is—away from the noise of the multitude. They must climb in company with the others who are also eager for Jesus' companionship, for it is only during the quiet moments when we are at our best, when we are on the high places of spiritual vision, that we can hear the voice of Jesus in that message that begins, "Blessed are ye who believe on me."

Hymn: "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," number 243, verses 1, 2, 3.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 5: 3-12, Matthew 6: 38.

(S) Hymn: "Lead on, O King Eternal," number 181. (Unless the service which follows takes place in the room in which the group are worshiping, the last verse of the hymn may be used as a recessional.)

Picture: Tissot, "Sermon on the Mount."

MARCH 12, 1933

Theme: "See that ye love one another."

Prelude: "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," number 288.

Call to Worship: John 15: 16, 17. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it to you. These things I command you, that ye love one another."

(S) Prayer Response: "O God, Whose Presence Glows in All," number 73.

Story: "The Monk's Consecration," from "He Took It Upon Himself," by Margaret Slattery. While getting his early education a young monk tries out all the pleasures that life has to offer. Finding them vain he enters a monastery. He is assigned work in the city and there the sorrow, suffering, and ignorance of the people sickens him. At last he is permitted to return to his native village, but he finds that poverty and sin are predominant there, too. In dismay he builds for himself a hut far up on the side of the mountain. Then one day as he sits looking at the village which lies in the valley below, he pauses to wonder if Jesus ever had periods of hopelessness when it seemed that he must fail in his mission. He reviews the various incidents of Jesus' life and kneels to pray. A vision is granted him. In the darkness he is traveling through briars and over sharp rocks. Gradually it grows lighter and the way becomes easier. Finally he comes to an opening that is beautiful with flowers. Meeting the Master he kneels and urges Christ to go back to the earth where people need him so badly now. Christ tells him that he has finished the work that he had to do and that now he is sharing with those who understand his mission, the burden of men's need. The monk in puzzled wonder asks what if men fail him. Christ's answer comes with a power and force that thrills him, "I am counting on them, for he that loveth God loveth his brother also." The monk awakes, leaves his hut and goes down the mountainside to take up his work among men.

Hymn: "Teach Us, O Lord, True Brotherhood," number 341. Sing verse 1.

Read: Jacob 2: 24. "After ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted."

Sing: Verse 2, number 341.

Read: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5b; 42: 8. "And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just." "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."

Read in Unison: Verses 3, 4, and 5 of the hymn, number 341.

(S) Hymn: "Let Us, Brothers, Let Us Gladly," number 287.

(S) Benediction: 2 Thessalonians 2: 16, 17. "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work."

Picture: Burnand, "The Great Supper."

MARCH 19, 1933

Theme: "Witness Righteously."

Instrumental Prelude: "The Whole Wide World for Jesus," number 391.

Call to Worship: Matthew 16: 24. "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

(S) Hymn Response: "Breathe on Me, Breath of God," number 191.

(S) Prayer: Petition asking God to forgive us for our past failure to always live up to the light which has been given to us, asking His help that we may see the truth more clearly so that in the future we may be able to witness for Him as He would have us.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2; 85: 18-20.

(S) Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me," number 192.

Talk: Acts 4: 32, 33. "And with great power gave the apostles witness." The early followers of Jesus believed on Him. They believed His companionship mattered more than anything else in the world. All of them loved Him with an affection that made their love of earthly things seem insignificant. They gave of their wills, desires, and material things freely. They were of one heart and one mind. "Then," says Luke, "with great power gave the apostles witness." Today the world awaits the same witness. It will be given when our righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the world. Our faith in Christ must make us want to be with each other; for we must witness with a social righteousness. When this goal is achieved then again will apostles be able to testify with great power to the reality of the Lord Jesus and His resurrection. Upon each one of us lies the responsibility for the coming of this endowment.

(S) Hymn: "It May Not Be on the Mountain's Height," number 292.

(S) Benediction: Jude 24, 25. "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, To the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion, and power, both now and ever. Amen."

Picture: Tissot: "Jesus in the Synagogue."

MARCH 26, 1933

Theme: "Onward to Zion."

Instrumental Prelude: "Onward to Zion," number 436.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 135: 2, 3. "The hastening time is here and greater unity than ever before is necessary if the forces of opposition are to be met; and such unity will prevail if those holding the priesthood will remember their commission to preach the gospel, and each officer will strive to discharge his own duty and magnify his calling. The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace."

(S) Hymn: "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," number 415, verse 1. (Conclude with an instrumental "Amen.")

(S) Prayer: This should be a petition for understanding and forgiveness; for the coming of the Holy Spirit of promise; for the possession of the love of God and our fellow men.

(S) Period of Meditation: (An unseen quartet may sing, "Father, Whate'er of Earthly Bliss," number 274.)

Reader: "Love's Response," by Joseph Luff.

"Why criest thou to me
So tenderly—
Breathing thy prayer the while
In melody?
Doest thou this thoughtfully
And in sincerity?
Wouldst thou in verity
Be nearer me?

"Dost thou with fervor yearn
To know my way?
Wouldst thou new virtue learn
Each passing day?
Or is the blend of tone
The yield of lips alone—
Directed toward my throne
In formal way?"

Hymn: "Father, When in Love to Thee," number 151, verse 1.

Reader:

"If from thy heart thou wouldst
Thus fondly pray
And thou wouldst sanctify
Thy word and way—
Pleasures of earth decry
And each himself deny—
Bearing his cross, that I Might shine alway.

"If, with my bread alone—
Fed thee from heaven,
Thou wouldst be content—
Seeking no leaven,
Then, by that faith made whole,
Each prayer would find its goal
And waft thy pleading soul
Nearer to me."

Hymn: "Father, When in Love to Thee," number 151, verse 2.

Reader:

"If thou wouldst near me be,
Enter this door.
Climb not some other way
As thieves before.
He pleads availingly
Who can behold in me
Immutability,
And ample store.

"Seek not one stake to draw
Set by my hand,
Nor yet a wider path
Than I have planned.
Few—few, alas, there be
Who ope' their eyes to see;
Blind they prefer to be
To my command."

Hymn: "Father, When in Love to Thee," number 151, verse 3.

Reader:

"Followers of Christ alone,"
They sing in glee
While yet they tread the paths
Untrod by me.
Pleasures and shrines by me
Unsought, they seek, yet see
No insincerity—
No mockery.

"Oh, heritage of grace,
Seest thou in me
Naught to be loved or feared
Sufficiently,
To rouse thy consciousness
And bring forth righteousness
Superior to this
In troth to me?

"Oh, Israel, how oft
Must I implore?
How long in mercy, thus Knock at thy door?
These gods of self displace
And give me ampler space
Or seek in vain my face
For evermore.

"All that now separates
Thy souls from me
Thou canst remove at will
And nearer be.

But while these intervene
Thy prayers but little mean.
Choose thee, this day between These gods and me."

Hymn: "Onward to Zion," number 436.
Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 136: 3. "The movements towards better understanding of ministerial responsibilities, duties, and goals, and towards unity of endeavor in teaching, preaching, evangelizing, and the perfecting of the Saints, are pleasing to the Lord. Contentions, bickerings, and strifes are unseemly, hinder the work of the church, and should not find place among the Saints. Only in the peace of fraternity and the unity of those caught up in the spirit of Zionic redemption can the work of the Lord be accomplished. To this task let the church devote its energies."
Benediction: 2 Corinthians 13: 14. "The Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen."

Suggestions to Those Carrying Out the Worship Service

(S) means that the group are to stand during that portion of the service.

All hymns are to be found in the new Saints' Hymnal. Other hymns on the same theme may be substituted by those using the old Hymnals.

Every hymn that is a prayer or just preceeds a prayer should end with an instrumental "Amen."

Be sure that all know the hymns before they are used in this type of service.

The outlines which are given for the talks are only suggestive—not final or binding. The assignment for the talk should be made sufficiently in advance so that the talk itself can grow out of the experience and the study of the one making it.

The reader of the poem which is the basis for the fourth worship service should make himself thoroughly familiar with it. It is hoped that it will have deep meaning for him, otherwise he will not be able to make it live for the group.

The pictures which are suggestive are merely to serve as a focal point in the background. When they are so used there should be a previous period devoted to their interpretation. They should help in the creation of a beautiful setting for the service.

Each person who attends these worship services should realize that he can worship only when he has made his own heart ready for that spirit to enter in. Those who come to be entertained will probably be disappointed for that is not our aim. The services will be successful only to the extent that each person prepares himself so that Christ's Spirit can there blend with his.

Sacrament Service

We suggest that a short appreciation of the picture, "The Last Supper," by Da Vinci, be given to the children before they join the adults in the sacrament service. If the picture talk is followed by a brief period of meditation, during which, "Till He Come," (new Saints' Hymnal, 383), is played softly, the children may enter the service with a feeling of reverence.

SECOND SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1933

Theme: "God's Plan for Us."

Prelude: "Did You Think to Pray?" Zion's Praises, 105; new Saints' Hymnal, 327.
Call to Worship: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." (Isaiah 52: 7.)
Hymn: "Glad Tidings," Zion's Praises, 149.
Prayer.
Scripture: John 3: 16. (Memorized.)
Hymn: "We Come With Joy the Truth to Teach You," Zion's Praises, 132; old Hymnal, 164; new Saints' Hymnal, 393.
Sermon Talk: Explain briefly, in simple language, the necessity for the gospel plan. Help the children to understand something of the result of Adam's disobedience and to appreciate God's kindness and mercy in giving us the gospel plan. Outline the principles of the gospel. Help them to sense its beauty; that it is not a set of harsh rules, but a plan designed to help us make our lives useful and happy here, and to develop us so we shall be worthy to live with God and Christ. For many years the gospel was not here. We are thankful God has restored it to the earth.
Story: "The Gospel Brought to the Nephites." (Book of Mormon, pages 631-681; 624-630.) (See this issue of Saints' Herald.)
Special Music: "What Was Witnessed in the Heavens?" This should be sung in the form of questions and answers.
Story: "The Gospel Restored in the Latter Days." (Suggested material for the story: Chapter XVIII, "Joseph Smith the Prophet and His Progenitors," by Lucy Smith; chapter 8, Young People's Church History.)
Closing Hymn: "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," Zion's Praises, 206; new Saints' Hymnal, 408.
Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, MARCH 19, 1933

Theme: "Faith in God and His Word."

Prelude: "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," old Hymnal, number 12; new Saints' Hymnal, number 281.
Call to Worship: "Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation." (Isaiah 12: 2.)
Hymn: "What Is Your Song?" Zion's Praises, number 121.
Prayer.
Scripture: Mark 11: 22, Matthew 17: 20.
Hymn: "Have Faith in God," Zion's Praises, 214.
Sermon Talk: "Faith" is the first principle of the gospel. In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, we are told of many wonderful things accomplished through faith. Sometimes we believe in our friends and they disappoint us, but we can rely on God's word. His "words are true and faithful." (Revelation 21: 5.) All that God has promised He will do, but we must do our part; we must have faith in Him and show our faith by our works. Joseph Smith believed what he read in God's word (James 1: 5) so he prayed and his prayer was answered.
Story: "Tamati's Faith," Stepping Stones, August 2, 1931, or "Elements Confess His Power," Stepping Stones, August 28, 1932.

Hymn: "Holy, Holy, Holy Is the Lord," Zion's Praises, number 26; new Saints' Hymnal, number 7.
Prayer.
Scripture: John 14: 15, 21, 23.
Hymn: "Trust and Obey," Zion's Praises, number 4.
Sermon Talk: Text: Proverbs 3: 1, 2. When Joshua said to the Israelites, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," they answered, "The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey." (Joshua 24: 15, 24.) The Israelites' experiences taught them it was best to obey God's commandments. The people in Book of Mormon times found out the same thing. We should obey the first principles of the gospel, and then "go on unto perfection." (Hebrews 6: 1.) We should do the things God would have us do. Mention some of these things, including the "Word of Wisdom." God has promised us health and spiritual blessings if we keep it.
Story: "Another Brave Minister." (Sidney Rigdon. Page 16, Junior Quarterly, The New Testament and its Writers, by Hallie M. Gould, January, February, March, 1933.)

The Gospel Brought to the Nephites

One morning a large number of Nephites were gathered around the temple in the land Bountiful. Some time before this there had been a terrible earthquake, and for three days there had been darkness in the land—a darkness so dense that the sun or moon or stars could not be seen, and the people could not even light a fire. Many people were killed, only the more righteous ones being spared, and many cities destroyed, some being sunk in the depths of the sea. This was the sign given to let them know that Christ had been crucified. Out of the darkness Jesus had spoken to them, telling them that the awful destruction had come upon the people because of their wickedness, and appealing to them to repent and turn to Him. Finally the trembling of the earth stopped and everything was calm and peaceful. The people's sadness was turned into joy and their cries of distress into praise and thanksgiving to the Lord.

On this particular morning they were talking about Jesus and also about the wonderful changes that had taken place. Suddenly, there came the sound of a voice as if it came out of heaven, a small voice that pierced their very souls. They listened, but did not understand. Again it came, but still they did not understand; but the third time they understood, and this is what the voice said:

"Behold, my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him."

They looked toward heaven and saw a person clothed in white come down and stand in their midst. They thought it must be an angel, but He spoke to them, saying:

"Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world."

Then the people remembered the prophecy that Christ would visit them after He had ascended into heaven, and they all fell to the earth. Jesus in a loving voice told them to arise and to come near Him and feel the wounds and nail prints in his hands and feet and side. One by one the people did as Jesus directed and satisfied themselves that it was really Jesus. Then they fell at his feet and worshiped Him.

Jesus called Nephi and eleven other men to be his disciples and taught them the gospel, which they were to declare to the people. He gave them authority to baptize and told them just how it should be done. Then Jesus taught the multitude as he had the people in Palestine, in the Sermon on the Mount. "Blessed are the merciful," "Blessed are the pure in heart," "Love your enemies," "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and thieves break through and steal," the Lord's Prayer, and many other wonderful things.

When Jesus told the people he had to return to his Father, their eyes filled with tears and they wished they might ask him to stay with them a little longer. Jesus was sorry for them and told them to bring their sick to him. He healed every one and raised a man from the dead. Then he told them to bring their children to Him, and taking them one by one, He blessed them, and angels came down from heaven and encircled the little ones and ministered to them. Jesus told his disciples to bring bread and wine and he gave the sacrament to the people, and then ascended into heaven, having told the people he would come again.

The news soon spread over the country that Jesus had been there and that he would come back the next day. The people were so anxious to see Him that many of them worked all night so they might be in the place where Jesus would come the next day. When Jesus came there was a great multitude there to see Him. Again He served the sacrament to the people, but this time there had been no bread or wine brought by the disciples or the people, and the miracle He performed reminds us of how He fed the multitude on the shore of Galilee.

Jesus again appeared to his disciples as they were praying. He taught them many things and finally ascended to his Father. The disciples went about preaching the gospel, and in two years all the people in the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, were converted, and there were no contentions or disputes among them, and this peace and happiness lasted for many years.

What Was Witnessed in the Heavens?

(Revelation 14: 6, 7)

What was witnessed in the heavens?
  Why, an angel earthward bound.
Had he something with him bringing?
  Yes—the gospel—joyful sound!
It was to be preached in power
  Upon earth, the angel said—
To all men, all tongues and nations,
  That upon its face are spread.

Had we not before the gospel?
  Yes—had sev'ral taught by men.
Then what is this latter gospel?
  'Tis the first one come again:
This was preached by Paul and Peter,
  And by Jesus Christ, the head;
This, we Latter Saints are preaching—
  We their footsteps wish to tread.

Where so long had been the gospel?
  It had truly fallen away.
What became of those neglected?
  God is just—that's all we say.
Seek no crop where 'twas not planted,
  Nor a day where reigns the night;
Now the sunshine bright is beaming,
  Let all creatures see aright.

and is in operation by direction of the living God, through a living prophet, to minister to living needs.

And how refreshing it is to find here the offer to the woman by the well renewed to us in our day, fresh from the throne of glory, and charged with all the vigor and value which characterized it two thousand years ago, as it fell from the Master's lips, declaring that,

"Unto him that keepeth my commandments, I will give the mysteries of my kingdom, and the same shall be in him a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 7.

But if these mysteries of the kingdom are to enlighten rather than to mystify, we must realize that the true relationship of man with God is expressed in terms of obedience, friendship and understanding, rather than in terms of fear, awe, and adoration, alone.

The world is filled with churches and aggregations of people who worship God, and adore, and praise him, but the true disciple enjoys an additional privilege as he is found among those who worship not only in spirit, but in truth. He is numbered among those who truly understand God. (See Psalm 14: 2.)

It is our privilege to understand the mysteries of the kingdom as they are interwoven with the mysteries of life and death, of origin and destiny. Everyone is concerned in regard to these mysteries, or would be so concerned, but for the fact that the fashion of the world's thought is to despair of ever comprehending them. It is the vogue not only not to know anything about such matters, but not to seek to know. But in the silent, sacred hours, when retiring from the world and the fashion thereof, there springs in every honest breast the cry for understanding. Men inquire naturally, as Job of old, saying:

"Where can wisdom be found? and where is the place of understanding?"—Job 28: 12.

If there is reason to believe that a true understanding of death would abate the fear of it, then it would seem profitable to seek that understanding. And if a correct knowledge of the power of God and its applications to the affairs of men could make it available in obliterating the specter of poverty now haunting the land, we should seek that knowledge.

Few people have ever heard that heaven is concerned with our material, as well as spiritual welfare, and that on conditions of observing his counsel God has promised his children that,

"The fullness of the earth is yours; the beasts of the fields, the fowls of the air, . . . and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens or for vineyards."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4.

Ephemeral as these things are, they are essential to our present state, and it is comforting in this time of depression to find them on the list of things available through godliness. Yet mortals lack these things, and leave unused all the power of God for obtaining them, because they do not understand its applications.

I doubt if it is true in as large a sense as we might wish to find it, but the poet says that,

"Poor men's children, they, and they alone,
By their condition taught, can understand
The wisdom of the prayer that daily asks
For daily bread."
—Wordsworth (quoted from memory).

There is probably a wisdom in the practice the world, and the poor as well, have never comprehended. But as the invitation is extended to us to seek to understand God, though "the well is deep," as the woman said, we venture to indicate an Order of Men on earth having something, in her words, "to draw with."

When this Samaritan woman could not see how Jesus could give her drink from so deep a well, since he had apparently nothing with which to draw, he said to her in effect, that if she had known the "gift of God" he had "to draw with," she would have asked him.

It must not be supposed that this woman and the people of her generation were the only people who could ever have this water of life, for when Jesus returned to His Father he appointed Peter and the other ministers of his day to continue the work he had started. Likewise, when Peter and the others were gathered to the fathers men were appointed in their stead, and finally, to be brief, we come to our own day, when the command has been given:

"If ye desire the glories of the kingdom, appoint ye my servant Joseph Smith, jr., . . . and if ye desire the mysteries of the kingdom, provide for him, etc."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

It is evident that Joseph Smith and the brethren of his day were concerned with these mysteries of God, even as Paul and the brethren of his day were to be accounted of as "The ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God."—1 Corinthians 4: 1.

That is, as before suggested, the ministers of Christ in all ages are invested with the divine gift, or power, to explain the mysteries of the kingdom, and thereby to refresh and to nourish the people, even as the Lord himself did while among them.

Wherefore he saith:

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life,—whether by mine own voice or the voice of my servants, it is the same."—John 6: 63, with Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8.

Or in other words, "He that heareth you heareth me."—Luke 10: 17.

That makes the true and chosen ministry of Christ an order of great importance to mortals, and Paul seems to infer that mankind can not understand the mysteries of heaven "without a preacher," and that no one can preach "except he be sent." And if that truth needs any more definite statement, it may be found in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3, which reads:

"This greater priesthood administereth the gospel, and holdeth the key of the mysteries, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3.

Thus we see that the "bread of life" or the "living bread," and the "living water," are administered by the priesthood, by the gift which is in them, and in no other possible way. Regardless of the many activities with which we may bestir ourselves we come by the one means. And the health, vitality, and well-being of the Saints will probably reflect the measure of space on the program accorded these ministers, and the degree to which they adhere to the principle which prescribes green grass for the sheep, rather than dry hay.

CHRIST put the value on the "words that I speak unto you," I believe, rather than on what he wrote, and you can imagine an important difference, as the same is reflected in a measure in the statement of Aeschines concerning the orations of Demosthenes by which he himself was defeated. After he read them to his disciples and they said they were very wonderful, he replied, saying, "Ah,—but you should have heard the beast himself."

As we have before suggested, it is not sufficient to give the people the scriptures, alone, helpful as these may be. The Eunuch had a book of scripture, and could read, but he could not understand until the man of God got into the chariot and preached Jesus unto him.

As the grass can not retain its life-giving juices when cut and dried, so there is something vital in the word of God which can not be impressed upon the dead leaves of a book, or upon stone, or gold, or upon any substance but the living soul. And neither can the word be transmitted in its living form, but by some living agency, "some man" endowed with the Spirit of God.

Wherefore, in order to have the Eunuch understand, Phillip "preached unto him." He did not give lessons to the Eunuch, nor lecture, nor teach him, but he did what was a divinely different thing in that he preached unto him. And since the Eunuch was ready presently for baptism it may be assumed that the

preaching he heard was of no ordinary sort, but such as is possible only by the "Gift of God," which is more particularly designated as the "Gift of Preaching." (Book of Mormon, page 332: 31.)

It is by this means that we receive the word in digestible, assimilable form, so to speak, and we should constantly concern ourselves to beware of substitutes. For there is no makeshift whereby to replace the gift of the gospel and produce the same results. The art of teaching can never produce the results obtained by the "gift of preaching," and while it is conceded that the word "teaching" and the word "preaching" are used interchangeably throughout the scriptures, the two functions differ about as widely as the "wisdom of this world" differs from the "wisdom which cometh down from above."

The difference between these two functions is seen when it is considered that the aim and end of teaching is education, only, while that of preaching, divinely better, is edification. Teaching must assume that the pupil is ignorant, and therefore inferior, and that the teacher is learned, and somewhat superior. But preaching regards the speaker and the one spoken to as being on the same level before their Maker, so that as once was said: "The preacher was no better than the hearer." (Book of Mormon 301: 39.) Finally, the teacher knows beforehand what he will teach, and his work can profit no one but the learner only. But in the use of the Heavenly Gift, "He that preacheth and he that receiveth understandeth one another and both are edified, and rejoice together." — Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6.

". . . Neither take ye thought beforehand what ye shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14.)

Therefore by this peculiar gift of the gospel we have a double benefit. Like the quality of mercy, and all other heavenly qualities, "it blesses him that gives and him that takes." That is God's better way in which it is designed that,

"Man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.)

Or, in other words,

"If any man speak, let him speak as an oracle of God."—1 Peter 4: 11.

That would be to speak like holy men of old, "as moved upon by the Holy Ghost"; and it would fulfill the promise to the Melchisedec Priesthood that, "Whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture; shall be the will of the Lord; shall be the mind of the Lord; shall be the word of the Lord; shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 1.

Thus, speaking the mind of the Lord and the will of the Lord, is like drawing water from the bottom of the well. And only in this way can we legitimately publish the most sacred invitation ever given to man, and give a present-day, living meaning to the same as it is written, "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."—Revelation 22: 17.

We may be the servants of God to break the bread of life to the people, that is our privilege. But if we "neglect the gift" that is in us, and incite the people to "climb up some other way," they will doubtless be found spending their "money for that which is not bread, and their labor for that which satisfieth not."

Oh, that we might cease to neglect the gift that is in us, and as those who are diligent about the peculiar business for which they are "called out of obscurity," we might hail the wayfarers along life's road, like as the holy man of old, saying, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money."

I pray that the Lord may bless those who love his ways, and who seek to walk therein, and to give them strength to go steadily forward until they shall lie down in green pastures, to go no more out. Amen.

THE GREAT TEMPTATION

justifiable, but your pet ways are not.

Too many so-called righteous people are negative in their refusal to yield to the Great Temptation. They worship neither God nor the devil. They are the insipid folk in whom the fundamental urges barely exist. Those who do not feel the power or the call of the Great Temptation are worthless — the luke warm that Jesus said he would spew out of his mouth—the kind that the devil would not have. They have not the energy to do bad—or good either. It is a pretty small person whose time is taken up solely in keeping himself unspotted by the world, who will not go into the world to help remedy the grave ills that flesh is heir to for the fear of spoiling his lily white soul.

There was a time when people thought that repressing and suppressing these fundamental urges was being religious. On the contrary the church and humanity are desperately in need of militant men and women, those in whom these urges are powerful and abiding. Heaven forbid that anyone attempt to repress them. They are the motive power of all human actions. It would be as possible to go somewhere in your car by shutting off the engine as it would be to repress these urges and still do something for the church or for mankind. On the other hand it is ridiculous for us to expect to get somewhere in a car by simply starting it and stepping on the accelerator without placing at least one hand on the steering wheel. But that is not as absurd as the expectation of accomplishing worth-while feats without directing and controlling the fundamental urges.

It is by people who do things that Zion will be redeemed, which is of more importance than going to heaven. Passive goodness is not enough. Reading the Bible and going to church services in themselves are not going to bring about the brotherhood of man.

The reason Satan tempts us as he did Jesus is because he appeals to man's deepest wishes and desires which are in themselves a blessing or a curse just as we make them. How great is this temptation because it is so subtle. If we realize that these urges are not in themselves bad, but are the mainspring of all action we can be on our guard against the insidious promptings of the evil one and can direct our energies to the glory of God and the edifying of mankind instead of merely damming them up.

It may be helpful for us to keep fresh in our minds that we are rewarded here for our actions. So when the evil one says our lives will be complete and rounded out only by serving him let us ask what is the price. But also let us remember that the sin of omission is as great as the sin of commission. As long as man is mortal he will continue to make mistakes. But in the Day of Judgment it will be better for the man who has made mistakes in doing much good than for the man who has not made a single mistake but has been of no service whatsoever to his fellow men.

RICHES UNTOLD

"You cross, why, Polly darling, what are you talking about?"

"Don't you think I'm cross?" Polly raised her head and regarded him in the light of the dying fire.

"Of course you're not cross. It's I that am cross—always."

And then the old humility swept over her. Polly felt almost crushed with the sweetness of life. When Brad was in that kind of a mood, taking all the blame on himself for misunderstandings, hastiness, ills, and hurts, he was wonderful. She felt that she did not deserve him.

Prayer and Testimony

The Lord Blesses Those Who Obey Him

By Arthur C. Poquette

I wish to bear my testimony of the goodness and loving-kindness of our heavenly Father towards me.

My past life has been sinful and wicked. One day in December, 1931, or January, 1932, something caused me to take a New Testament and start reading. I became interested as I read further until I read where the Savior had been crucified to save me from my sins. Something struck me with sorrow, and I decided to make a start for Him, serving him and helping. I visited a neighbor who talked about his church, and invited me to attend. This I did but did not find there that for which I searched, and so I took the matter to God in prayer. I asked him if he had an altar or church on earth to make it known to me. At that time I was given a spiritual minifestation of light and instruction. In this I was told that I should study my Bible. And I was convinced that the New Testament church was his church.

Not long after, I was visiting an old sister, Mrs. Annie Leverton, who lives near me. I told her my experiences, and she spoke about the Latter Day Saint Church.

As I read the Scriptures I found where I could not enter the kingdom of heaven without baptism. So I inquired and learned from Sister Leverton where I could find a man with the authority from God to baptize me. In the meantime I continued to pray over the matter and am confident that the Spirit was directing me although I did not realize it at the time. Sister Leverton directed me to Elder E. S. Grinnell of this neighborhood, and I made arrangements to obey the gospel as early as possible. January 24, 1932, I was baptized.

I want to tell you of this experience. When we left the house and started for the creek, a strong wind was blowing and it was cold, but I noticed that when we were ready to enter the water the wind ceased to blow. After the ordinance, when we came out of the water, Elder Grinnell and I were as warm as if not a drop of water had touched us. It encouraged me greatly to know that I was entering the straight and narrow path, but I have had many trials and temptations to overcome and many bad habits to break. The worst of these, it seems, is to quit my pipe and tobacco. I have used it since I began going to school, or for eighteen or twenty years, and in this matter I still need the prayers of the Saints. I have tried many times to quit but to no avail.

Several wonderful experiences have come to me since my baptism, which I am here unable to relate. One experience, however, proves to me that I am on the right path, and I think it will help you. Last spring just before time to sow buckwheat I was asked if I would go to town six miles away to get the seed. I was almost barefooted and we had just enough money to pay for the seed. I wondered how I was going to get anything to repair my shoes. I had just two dollars in money and thought that was what the seed would cost, but something drew my attention to a shoe repairing sign on the street as I was going into town. First I went to the elevator and made my purchase. I had money left after buying the seed, and something told me to go to this shoe shop. When I asked for what I wanted, the clerk brought out a pair of oak leather soles, but I told her that I always bought the chrome leather when I could afford it. Of course I knew that I had not the price to buy a first grade pair, so she brought a pair that the shoemaker had discarded and was going to send back to the wholesale house. She said if I wanted them I could have them for fifteen or twenty cents. Ordinarily they are worth about sixty cents. She also gave me the rest of the materials I needed, nails and other things. When I returned home I still had over fifty cents. This little incident causes me to believe that the Lord was blessing me for obeying his will.

God has blessed me financially and he has blessed me in many other ways by protecting, enlightening my understanding and speaking to us in the gift of tongues and interpretation of tongues. He has thus informed me that he has a work for me to do.

It is my desire to live worthy the calling he has in store for me, to let my light shine before men that they will see my good work and glorify God.

Pray for me that I may overcome all evil, and may God help us all.

Happy When Telling the Old, Old Story

By S. W. Simmons

The last time I spoke through the Herald I was in great need and was asking your prayers for what was supposed to be my affliction. Indeed my suffering was intense from what I have recently learned was not eczema, but weed poison. I am glad now to be able to say that I am well and never felt better in my life. I cured myself by applying a solution of soda and vinegar.

I am thankful for relief. I was at my daughter's home at Davidson, Oklahoma, when I discovered the remedy which cured me. As soon as I was able to return home, I preached several sermons on my way.

Since coming home, I have held a two weeks' series in a nearby schoolhouse, enjoying the finest liberty and a crowd of between two and three hundred people. There was fine attention. All were nonmembers except wife and I and another brother and his wife.

This is the first time the restored gospel has been preached at this place, and there seems to be a great interest.

I am never so happy as when I am telling the people of our wonderful gospel and the angel message. I love to tell the story, and want you to know that I am busy and expect to be as long as I have strength and ability to tell the old, old story we love so well.

Hungers for Association of Saints

By Mrs. George H. Cook

If missionaries or district officers come to Phillipsburg, we should be glad to have them visit us. We live five and one half miles northwest of Phillipsburg and a mile off the Phillipsburg-Buffalo Road and on the Lebanon-Buffalo Road, eleven miles out of Lebanon, Missouri.

I am the only Latter Day Saint I know of in this community, but my husband knew many Saints at Independence. (I went through training at the Sanitarium there.) I have many relatives, good neighbors and friends here, but I believe no one understands the loneliness of isolation except those who have been denied church privileges, especially when there is nobody with whom one can talk of the precious evidences and blessings God has given. Though we love the world and are loved by many, we hunger for the understanding and unity that is ours in Christ Jesus.

I am thankful that God has blessed me, and I hope to be of service to him.

A Dream and Its Fulfillment

By Mrs. Sarah Scott

When our oldest boy was small, I dreamed that he was very sick and that we were giving him medicine. Brother Decker was present and he said to me: "If you keep on doctoring the child, he will die."

That dream was given me in August, and the next May the child fell ill. The elders were gone to conference and we sent for a doctor, who seemed to do him no good. In a few days the elders returned and I wanted to stop the doctor's treatments and call the elders. My husband thought the child would get well, but he said, "If you want the elders, send for them." However, I did not want to take all the responsibility on myself.

In a few days Brother Decker heard that the boy was sick and came to see him. He asked us what we were doing for him, and we replied that we had a doctor. "If you keep on doctoring him, he will die," he told us. "Brother Decker, you told me that almost word for word in a dream last August," I exclaimed. His reply was that that should be evidence that the dream was from the Lord.

We stopped the medicine and sent for the elders, and the child was healed. He is living today.

Though we have been isolated thirty-one years, I have been blessed many times during my life.

Jesus Is the Good Shepherd

By L. J. R.

In John 10: 9, 11, we find recorded these words of our Savior:

"I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. . . . I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

What food for thought is here given! "I am the door." In Christ we enter the door by baptism, to walk in newness of life. Having entered the door, are we, his covenant children, able to exemplify the Christ life? Can we say: "The good Shepherd giveth his life for his sheep."

Under the divine urge, are we, having entered the door, as did the Christ, able to say in our lives: "The good Shepherd giveth his life for his sheep"?

Jesus, my Shepherd,
Holy, divine,
Give me Thy Spirit,
Tender, sublime.
Oh, may Thy unction,
Pure from above,
Fill and pervade,
Foretaste of love.

May Thy peace linger
Granting all grace,
Being my guerdon,
Armed for the race.
May Thy prompting,
Thy whispering sweet,
Ever find Thy will
In me complete.

Thus down life's vista
Storm-crested wave,
Be Thou my Pilot,
Mighty to save.
With Thy hand tenderly
Holding my own,
I shall be never,
No—never alone.

Blessed With Divine Vision

By Alice M. Moyle

Words can not describe my gratitude and thanks to God for his goodness to me and the way in which he brought me into his fold. I know this is the true church. I was never a member of any church, having gone to almost any Sunday school convenient to my home in my childhood. And in later years I did not go at all, and I knew nothing of dreams and visions.

My husband was the first to be interested in the Reorganized Church, and after he was convinced that this was the true church, he became a member. As I was not very strong and was unable to go to the little church at Bisbee, Arizona, to attend meetings, my husband told me a great deal about it. I was just getting over a serious sickness. We discussed the gospel many times, but that did not seem to be all I wanted to know.

One night before going to bed, I prayed asking God if this was the true church. It was not long until I was sound asleep. In the night, I heard a knock at the door. I sat up in my bed and opened my eyes. Christ stood before me. I will never be able to tell how wonderful he was, dressed in a long white robe reaching to his ankles. His face shone with kindness. His hair was long and wavy, also his beard. On his feet he wore sandals as they did in ancient days. He put out his hands and showed me the prints of the nails. Then he showed me his side.

This was a wonderful experience. I joined the church soon after. I want to do the little I can for Christ's church.

Request Prayers

Sister Helen Smith Logan, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, asks prayers in behalf of an old schoolmate and a sister in the church, Sister J. L. Lancaster, 1419 South Gary, Tulsa, Oklahoma. She is about to lose her eyesight. The doctors say there is no hope. "But we all believe in the loving power of God to heal if he wills it," writes Sister Logan, "so we are asking the Saints all over the world to pray for her, that God in his mercy will remove the obstruction whatever it may be." Sister Lancaster is mother of the pastor of Tulsa Branch.

Sister Nellie I. McCulley, of Newberg, Oregon, seeks the prayers of the church for her daughter-in-law who has the flu and is in a weakened condition. Sister McCulley hopes for the time also when her daughter-in-law will understand and accept the gospel.

QUESTION TIME

Please explain Luke 21: 32: "This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled."

The language preceding this text deals with events far removed from each other. The siege of Jerusalem took place less than forty years after the crucifixion of Christ. The "wars and rumors of wars" appear to refer to a much more extensive period than that of the destruction of Jerusalem, so that Jesus evidently was referring to some particular period of all those he had dealt with, when he used the words quoted above. After mentioning many events to come, Jesus uses this significant statement:

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."—Luke 21: 24-26.

Following these events, Jesus promises that he will come in power and great glory. It is concerning these events that the generation referred to evidently applies, and not to all of the matters which he had previously mentioned. The generation when all shall be fulfilled is therefore that in which the "times of the Gentiles" is to be fulfilled; and this is made clear in the Inspired Version, as follows:

"Verily I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 32.

The New Testament was written many centuries ago when punctuation and many other developments in grammar had not been brought into use. Both this and other texts of that period are therefore easily confused with their contexts in some instances, as they do not always clearly show the scope of their application, which might lead one to erroneous conclusions.

Why does John say that Jesus baptized, and then say that he did not baptize?

This supposed contradiction is explained or avoided differently by different writers on the subject. It arises from the fact that John 3: 22 states:

"After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized."

John 4: 2, of the Authorized Version, states that "Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples," which some interpret to mean that Jesus baptized only his disciples. Others claim that John 3: 22 is intended to show that the disciples baptized under Jesus, but not necessarily that he baptized personally. The Moffatt Version omits John 3: 22 and the verses which follow until verse 31, but on what authority, I have not learned. But the Inspired Version reads as follows:

"Now the Lord knew this, though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples."—John 4: 3.

In this way the two texts are made to harmonize. Of course the two texts are written so closely to each other that they evidently relate to the same period, and probably to the same occasion.

What land did Isaiah 18: 1 refer to as Ethiopia?

The Bible uses this term to mean the descendants of Cush, of Hamitic stock. There were no fixed boundaries to the country mentioned, as they were changed from time to time by conquest or otherwise. The Greeks and Romans used the term of any of the countries where lived people of a sable complexion, but the scriptural use was more restricted. Doctor Morren states that "it for the most part exclusively designates the 'Ethiopia of Africa.'" It was sometimes called "African Cush," and probably more or less included Nubia and Abyssinia, though some authorities insist that it included Arabia as well.

In this connection it should be noted that the word Ethiopia is related to the Hebrew word Cush, and is so translated in some versions of the scripture text. The sacred writers did not, however, employ the term uniformly. Sometimes it specifically referred to the kingdom of Meroē in Nubia. The king of Ethiopia appears to have united with Hezekiah at one time (2 Kings 19: 9) against Assyrian threats of invasion, and in an earlier period Moses is said to have married an Ethiopian woman (Numbers 12: 1). The "rivers of Ethiopia" which Isaiah mentions were probably the Nile and tributaries, and possibly the Orange, Senegal, and Cambia.

Young People Help in Church Financial Program

The young people of this branch are enthusiastically helping in the financial program of the church.

A trip around the world was recently staged by the Book of Morman Class, composed of boys fifteen to nineteen years old. The program was arranged by Brothers Samuel Dyer and Adolph Edwards.

It opened Friday evening, January 13, with a visit to Germany, guests sharing wieners and sauerkraut with root beer as a substitute for German beer. German songs were sung and the customs of the fatherland were presented by Sister Quedenfeld and members of her family.

A visit to France revealed French cookery and grape juice instead of French wines. This program was by Sister Ostertag who was born and reared there.

Guests were ushered into China by a Chinese servant who spoke Chinese as Chinese dishes were served. Chimes and oriental music entertained, and incense filled the room. This country was arranged by Sister Elsie Wilson.

Welsh folk songs were sung to those who visited Wales. The guests were served delicacies of that country, tea and Welsh cookies. The hostess was dressed in Welsh costume, and several voices joined in the songs. This program was arranged by Sister Benson and a group of her friends who were born and reared in Wales.

As a result of this entertainment a sum of twenty-five dollars was raised and presented to the general church for the missionaries.

The heaviest snow fall of the year, the week before Christmas, did not mar the festivities, or dim the spirit of joyfulness. On Sunday evening at the vesper service the story, "The Other Wise Man," was read and illustrated by lantern slides. This service was enjoyed by all both as a lesson and an entertainment. At eight o'clock the young people's department, under the direction of Sister Phoebe Fowler, presented a pageant, "When the Star Came." The cast was large and each part was admirably played.

The following Wednesday evening the pageant, "Where the Young Child Lay," was given by the junior department. The setting was the manger scene with Mary and the Christ Child guarded by two angels. The junior girls as angels caroling their way to the manger led by a Bambino carrying a lighted candle, made an impressive picture. The junior children with a few grown-ups in appropriate costumes, represented shepherds, wise men, and people of all nations, coming to pay tribute to the child.

Though it was terribly cold the carol singers from the young people's department left the church at two thirty Christmas morning and visited shut-ins and various others, singing all the old Christmas hymns. After their return to the church, breakfast was served, and all attended the six-thirty prayer service.

The evening service on Christmas Day was devoted to the singing of "The Holy City," by the choir, beautifully rendered, and conducted by Sister Clara Thumn. This cantata was enjoyed by all. It was given again at a neighborhood church on the following Friday evening.

Sacrament service on Sunday morning, January 1, was well attended, and the spirit of hope and resolution was felt by all worshipers.

The young people of the church are planning to charter a bus to attend the conference which is to be held in Brooklyn, February 11 and 12. Great enthusiasm has been shown by this group of young people, and with the hearty cooperation of the elder folk they will go far in their efforts toward Zion.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church, Tompkins Street and and Medary Avenue

Since the visit of President F. M. Smith, last October, this congregation has been gaining in spiritual understanding of the church work. He gave the members just what they needed, and they have moved forward. They were glad to see so many branches throughout the district take advantage of the meetings while Brother Smith was here, making themselves this group's guests.

Toward the latter part of October there was a general meeting of the women's department of this city, bringing together the women and their companions from the three churches here. After a light lunch, they heard several short talks. The branch president, Elder J. R. Grice, spoke, the women's department presidents from the three congregations, and others. The room was adorned with fall and Halloween decorations.

One of the features of this department's activities at First Church is the weekly prayer meeting held at different homes each Thursday at ten o'clock in the morning.

The district meeting commemorating the centennial of the birth of the late Prophet Joseph Smith will long be remembered by those who attended. It was held November 4, 5, and 6. The program Friday evening partook of a dramatic, musical, and biographical nature, centering about the life of the Prophet. On Saturday classes were conducted by Bishop H. E. French, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Elder C. W. Clark, R. M. Gray, J. R. Grice, Floyd Rockwell, and others. The music was in charge of the district chorister, Hazel Gribbens. A sunrise sacrament service in charge of Southern Ohio district officers, the presidency, bishopric, missionary, and patriarch, started at 6.50 a. m. with an organ prelude by Sister Elsie Gabriel, beginning a wondrously spiritual day. This service lasted for three hours, and there were one hundred and thirty-one testimonies and three prayers besides unusual manifestations of the gospel gifts. The sermons throughout the day were most helpful.

Patriarch F. A. Smith visited Columbus, November 27, and the Saints were blessed by his uplifting advice.

The Loyal Club began December with a supper, the proceeds going to the general sacrifice fund.

The annual business meeting was held early that month, Elder C. W. Clark being retained as branch president. All other officers were reelected for the year except the librarian. Mrs. Lola Miller is now functioning in that office.

A class studying stewardships and the problems of Zion is generating good interest. It meets the first and third Sundays of the month.

The closing week of the old year was marked by a variety of activities.

The Loyal Club had a supper and bazaar on Thursday, January 22.

The Sunday school Christmas program was given to a large congregation. On Sunday morning a vesper service was carried out according to the program of the Herald for December 14. The choir gave a musical program and there were readings for the evening service.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Third Church

The activities of the year opened with Sunday school in charge of the new officers, and there were increased crowds and collection. Pastor F. C. Welsh was in charge of the sacrament service. Ray Dougherty and C. Schafenberg of First Church, Columbus, visited the evening Religio, which held its first prayer service.

District President A. E. Anderton and Homer Owens were cospeakers that night, and their theme was "Loyalty."

The Spirit of the Lord was manifested through the services of the second Sunday of the year. "Thirsting for God," was the theme of the morning speaker, C. H. Foster, and Elder A. E. Anderton was the evening speaker. Music for the day increased the attractiveness of the services, and Pastor Welsh spent the afternoon visiting throughout the city.

Sister L. Schmidt was again elected to head the women's department, and this group of workers gave a Swiss steak supper for the benefit of the church not long ago. They also had a sale of handwork. The ladies now have their "mystery girl" club in full swing.

The largest Sunday school and collection of the new year were had January 15. On that day the church was presented some beautiful ferns and palms by Brother Robert Albright. Speakers morning and evening were Elder Schafenberg and Elder F. C. Welsh. The Religio had its monthly prayer meeting in the evening, and at the church hour the young people sang their first musical offering of the year, "God's Way."

The first teachers' and officers' meeting of the year occurred January 22.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths visited Third Church, January 29, and taught the juvenile class. He was also the morning speaker and his theme was, "The Vines and Foxes." In the evening Elder L. C. Lewis talked on "Angels."

That evening the church's twelve-year-old soloist, Robert Pinkerton, sang a solo, and C. H. Foster sang a number assisted by the young people's choir, which is doing a good work.

Papers and talks have been given at the Religio by Ethel Walters, Robert Bohlen, James Bohlen, Ted Doughterty, Robert Albright, and others have assisted with music.

A high standard of order is maintained by the midweek prayer meetings which are enjoyed by the Saints.

Brother and Sister Wright celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary not long ago. Sister F. C. Welsh was also surprised on her birthday.

Sister Nichols is out of the hospital and living again with her sister at Kenton. She will long remember the divine message she received at the last prayer service she attended in Columbus.

Plano, Illinois

Had a "Sacrifice" Christmas

Plano members are more determined than ever to be a help to the church.

The Christmas season was very pleasant here. On the morning of Christmas Day the primaries contributed their part of cheer, and treats were given to the church school pupils. That evening the house was crowded for the service. There were no presents and no Santa Claus, only a small decorated tree. A sacrifice offering was taken, and the children responded well.

On November 6, at the district anniversary service, Saints were pleased to have present President F. M. Smith. Sister Clara Easterbrook, district supervisor of Religious Education, was in charge of the morning church school session. A peaceful communion hour followed, and at two o'clock in the afternoon Brother Smith gave a sermon concerning the life of his father. That evening the play, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III," was presented by local talent, assisted by some from Aurora. This was followed by an illustrated lecture by Brother Smith.

Elder L. O. Wildermuth, missionary to Montana, came home for the holidays. Doris Wildermuth, widow of Charles Wildermuth, and four children are living at the home of Brother and Sister L. O. Wildermuth and their son, Richard. Brother and Sister Jerome F. Wildermuth, wife and son, from Mansfield, Ohio, came to spend Christmas under the parental rooftree, and when they returned, took Helene May, youngest child of Sister Doris, for a visit.

Miss Irene Johnson, who is teaching in Iowa again this year, spent Christmas at the home of her parents.

Brother Walter Sanderson who was severely burned in September is still confined to his home. While he was at his work at the railroad pumping station, a blowtorch ignited his clothing, and his leg was badly burned. He has been a great sufferer, but has often found relief through administration. He is missed from local services. His father is totally blind and his mother is an invalid.

The death of Brother Ren Reynolds, December 20, brought sadness to Plano Saints.

Branch officers for the new year are: Pastor, J. M. Blakely; director of Religious Education and church school, Sister Roberta Gregory; adult supervisor, Sister Alice Blakely; young people's supervisor, Richard E. Wildermuth; chorister and teacher of Zion Builders' Class, Ilah Blakely; junior division supervisor, Sister Ruth Gregory; treasurer and clerk of the branch, Sister Rillie Moore.

The women's class which meets during the week held a business meeting January 4. Attendance was good. Sister Easterbrook was present and Sister Grace Johnson, of DeKalb. Sister Daisy Reynolds was chosen president, and Gladys Gregory, secretary-treasurer; Sister Moore is teacher, and Sister Cretia Sanderson is assistant. This class has been studying Doctrine and Covenants, but they decided to have that study when the men could attend and to use Sister Salyards book, Jesus and His Message. At a meeting Sunday afternoon they decided to hold study class Thursday evening after prayer service and use Brother Edwards' outline.

Much sickness and unemployment are here, but the Saints are thankful for the many blessings they have received and that there is no suffering among them at present for the necessary things of life. They gladly responded to the call to sacrifice.

Fanning, Kansas

Interest and Energy Enjoyed Here

It seemed especially fitting that the first sacrament service of the new year should come on New Year's Day. A large crowd was in attendance and a splendid spirit was enjoyed. Many testimonies were given and the predominating thought of each speaker was that he desired to do more and better work for the church this year than ever before.

Attendance at all services has been good since the new year, and the Saints seem to be working with renewed zeal. The evening services are better attended at present because of a Book of Mormon contest which is being held at the religio hour. The contest is under the leadership of Brother William Gurwell. Sister Inez Pilcher and Brother Virgil Sheppard were selected for captains and sides have been chosen. Questions are asked by one side and answered by the other. The study began with the Book of Ether. Elder Samuel Twombly is the judge. The losers are to entertain the winners when the contest closes.

The women's department went to the home of Sister Mabel Mortimore for an all-day meeting Thursday, January 12, Sister Marie Sheppard, leader, had asked each woman to bring to the meeting, a covered dish, a game, and plenty of energy.

A sale of home-made candy at the store of Brother Sheppard in Fanning, recently, netted ten dollars. With each dime's worth of candy a number was given. The person holding the lucky number, when the number is drawn, will receive the embroidered quilt recently completed by the women's department. On Friday night, January 27, a social will be given at District Forty-nine schoolhouse near Fanning. A program will be presented, refreshments will be sold, and at this time the quilt will be given to the holder of the number drawn.

The Jolly Gang Club of the young people's class are working on a three-act comedy, "The Dutch Detective," which they plan to present the latter part of February. During the holidays Sister Elsie Long entertained the young people's class with a depression party.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Some inspirational sermons have recently been heard by Fanning Saints. Recent speakers have been Brothers, Fred and Will Marsh, Samuel and Will Twombly and Virgil Sheppard.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

At the joint priesthood meeting held at Evansville in December, Elder Henry Woodstock, pastor at Madison, suggested a theme for the district for December and January, "Think on These Things."

These are the things Madison has been thinking on at prayer services: "Bearing Fruit," "Sacrifice," "Giving," "Reverence," "Loyal Saints," "Obedience," and "Trustworthiness."

Indeed the branch thought so much on sacrifice during the sacrifice period that the local solicitor reports $252 sent to the Bishop. Christmas Offering for the year was $84.56.

Christmas Day was much enjoyed at the church. In the morning the children rendered the program. In the evening the young people presented the play, "The Christmas Voice."

The annual business meeting of the local occurred December 14. After a short season of prayer, Henry Woodstock, branch president, introduced the business. Brother Woodstock was given the loyal support of the branch and re-elected to his office. Other officers are: Branch clerk, Mary Woodstock; director of Religious Education, Lee Root with Charles Fields and Helen Richardson, assistants; financial agent, Orville Dahlem; musical director, Carl Wirth; librarian, Tom Johnson; custodian of building, Orville Dahlem; publicity agent to take orders for Herald Office, Leda Colbert; organist, Mary Woodstock. Since there is no teacher in the branch, Floyd Griswold was elected to act in that office.

Elder L. G. Holloway spent a week visiting here. December 18, he preached morning and evening.

On that day District President H. W. Woodstock was in Milwaukee assisting the branch with its business meeting.

Brother Woodstock read the marriage ceremony which united Beatrice Lambke and Stanley Drefahl in wedlock, December 10. Beatrice is the daughter of Brother and Sister Albert Lambke, of Evansville. The wedding occurred at the home of her sister, Mrs. Miller, of Madison.

Margaret Johnson was married to Roland Bender December 7, by Brother Simpson, of Rockford.

An all-day meeting was held at Evansville, December 11, at the home of Charles Hoague. The morning service was unified, prayer meeting, church school, and a short sermon by Brother Woodstock, "Do Today." A sumptuous dinner was served by Evansville members. In the evening Elder J. E. Vanderwood gave the sermon.

A watch party was held at the home of Robert Brigham on New Year's Eve, and a happy time was had.

The opening sacrament service of the year was highly spiritual. In the evening Brother Paul Utnehmer gave a sermon.

New officers for the women's organization of "Gleaners" are: Director, Mrs. Carl Wirth; assistants, Miss Wilson and Leda Colbert. The object of this organization is to study and to raise money to help in church funds, local and general.

At the January joint priesthood meeting an organization was perfected: President, Harry Wasson; secretary and treasurer, Lee Root. The purpose of this organization is that the members may help each other in solving their branch problems and in study. Priesthood members living in branches a distance from the meeting place of this organization, may write their problems to the secretary. These questions will be considered and discussed at the next meeting of the priesthood, and the conclusions reached will be sent back to the writer. The priesthood hope also to work out uniform and central themes so that the entire district may be thinking along the same line.

Lee Root was invited to Beloit, January 15, to help in the young people's service. He was the speaker. Carl Wirth and Floyd Griswold spoke there January 29.

The Madison priesthood are launching out to help other branches. The work in Madison is forward that the members may help Zionize the church.

Windsor, Ontario

Successful in Meeting Financial Obligations

During the term of office of the late pastor, Elder Isaac Andrew, this branch has been able to meet all its financial obligations as well as to assist the general church to some extent. In a recent letter to Windsor Branch, Bishop John C. Dent wrote: "It is with a great deal of pleasure and pride that I look over the several accounts of Windsor Branch with her departments and see the many thousands of dollars sent by them to the general church while at the same time they supported themselves."

The official personnel of this group for 1933 has undergone quite a change. Elder Lawrence D. Campbell succeeds Brother Andrew as pastor. William Garnier is taking charge of the church school instead of Basil E. Barrick. Musical activities, formerly under the direction of Mrs. Edith Moore, are now under the care of Harry E. Depew, who is also branch treasurer.

On New Year's Eve a special meeting was held in which the branch paid respects to the retiring officers in the way of letters and tokens. The Saints feel indebted to them and know that they have not relieved themselves because of a loss of interest in the work.

The first Sunday evening service of 1933, took the form of a New Year's Welcome Service. Messages of greeting and instruction were read to the congregation from President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop John C. Dent, District President D. J. Williams, the branch treasurer, publicity agent, and the pastor. These messages were interspersed with hymns and vocal numbers. The arrangement was both pleasing and novel.

London, Ontario

Special Missionary Effort by Young Men's Class

London Branch was much encouraged by a visit from President Floyd M. McDowell recently. Although here for one night only, he gave the members new hope and a greater desire to move forward in assisting the work of the church.

The church school held one of the most successful Christmas Concerts in years on December 19, in the parlors of the church. Many were obliged to stand owing to the large attendance. It was very gratifying to witness the cooperation and enthusiasm exhibited by all participating. The program consisted of Christmas plays, dialogues, songs and readings by children of the junior church division and members of the intermediate grades of the adult school. The three prizes offered as highest awards of merit for the year went to Jean Bicknell, first; "Billy" Bicknell, second; Vera Millman, third. These were beautiful books.

The church school has appointed Sunday assistants for Elder Frank Gray, director; Nelson Ridley and J. Lincoln Rankin, first and second assistants, respectively; on Friday evening, Carlyle Dent and Norman Fishleigh, first and second assistants. Activities have been divided among members of a program committee.

Brother Archie Ebsworthy, a young man, was called to the office of a deacon, and on Sunday, January 8, was ordained under the hands of Elders J. E. MacGregor and J. F. Winegarden.

On the first Sunday of the new year the local had a visit from Elder Percy Farrow whose sermon was much appreciated.

The pulpit has been occupied lately on Sunday evenings by the pastor, Elder J. E. MacGregor, Bishop J. C. Dent, Elder F. Gray and Elder J. F. Winegarden. Elder Gray has also occupied the pulpit of a local church in the absence of their minister who was ill. His sermons were well received and created considerable interest among the members.

With the purpose of making the Latter Day Saint Church and position better known in this city which has a population of about 80,000, the Young Men's Class undertook a special missionary effort Sunday evening, January 15. The service was conducted entirely by the class. The young men composed the choir, and under the direction of Fred Heddington, rendered two anthems. Doctor D. A. Campbell sang a solo. W. A. Alford and J. L. Rankin, priests and president and vice president of the class, assisted in the stand. Brother Archie Ebsworthy was assisted by C. Dent in his work as deacon. The orchestra through the efforts of Roy Bicknell, was augmented by several musicians from the orchestra of the Dundas Centre United Church. Mr. S. Byfield, conductor at that church, acted as guest conductor here. The orchestra and choir invite musicians from other organizations of the city to assist in the music from time to time and thereby indirectly cause them to hear the restored gospel message.

Through personal invitation and boosting, this service was largely attended with over three hundred present. Many of these were nonmembers. Several citizens prominent in civic and judiciary circles of the city attended. With the church crowded Bishop John C. Dent, teacher of the class, preached a wonderful sermon, referring particularly to Latter Day Saint church doctrines, and also made clear the distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Mormon Church. He stressed the point that it does make a difference what church a person belongs to. At the close of the service the sixteen-piece orchestra presented a sacred concert lasting about a half hour. This evening was one of the most successful efforts of the Young Men's Class, and it is hoped that the message presented will bear some fruit.

Some members have been ill lately. The familiar figure of Elder W. A. Hardey is at services. He has been confined to his home and bed since November. He is just now getting around again. Sister Muriel MacGregor has been quite ill with pneumonia, but is now on the road to recovery. Sister Jessie Renecker is sick, necessitating hospital treatment. Sister Irene Duesling had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, but is now home from the hospital.

Brother and Sister W. A. Alford were recently blessed with the gift of a new daughter and so were Brother and Sister Risler.

In an effort to assist in the expenses of the coming missionary services, the Young Ladies' Class had an oyster supper, January 24. Members of the class sang a song specially composed in honor of their beloved teacher, Brother John Vasbinder, familiarly known to all as "Uncle John." He has been teacher of the class for young ladies for fifteen years or more. The program was exceptionally good with dramatic skits by the girls, readings, and solos. The orchestra assisted with appropriate music.

Alaflora Branch

Near Brewton, Alabama

At a business meeting held early in the year, new officers were chosen. By unanimous vote Elder Earl T. Higdon was elected pastor with E. N. McCall and Ben Jernigan as associate pastors. Other officers are: Branch treasurer, Jeff Barnes; clerk, J. A. Bishop; in charge of young people, Sister Earl T. Higdon; director of music, Ben Jernigan.

The Saints are encouraged as the spiritual outlook of the branch is good. The workers are enthusiastic and anxious to be about their Father's business. Elder E. N. McCall is again at the head of the church school.

The Saints are especially proud of the new branch president, Brother Higdon. He truly has the work at heart, and to associate with him as leader is inspiring. He was ordained to the Melchesidec priesthood last November. Brother Earl and Sister Faith are big assets to this branch. They moved to Brewton from Independence, Missouri, last year.

Brother B. Jernigan promises to "make things hum" in the music department, and some good choir work is expected among young people and adults.

Some of the juniors are adding their bit to help in the church school programs.

Last summer Apostle Roy S. Budd gave some wonderful lessons on the fundamentals of stewardship. These are still talked about in Alfaflora Branch.

Nor must the good work of Elder J. G. Halb be overlooked. He spent some time here in November, and his personality was one to draw friendships and make people hopeful and humble. He baptized five into the church, two being promising young man. His influence here was one for good.

Apostle J. A. Gillen is expected in February.

Merlin, Ontario

District Helps Celebrate Local Anniversary

The gospel work in this locality is making progress. The Saints held branch anniversary services November 13, with a good representation from all parts of the district.

The morning prayer service was in charge of Elders D. J. Williams and Henry Atkinson, of Chatham, and of R. T. Brown, pastor of this local.

The morning sermon was on "Individual Responsibility," and Elder David Dowker, of Detroit, a released missionary, was the speaker. Eight Blue Birds girls sang the anthem.

The Sunday school hour was in charge of Elder Ezra Mifflin, of Essex.

Elder Percy Farrow preached at three o'clock in the afternoon, and his topic was, "The Church's Foundation."

Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, was the evening speaker, and was assisted by Elder John Dent, of Merlin and the Reverend J. C. Mitchell of the United Church in Merlin. The Reverend Mitchell dispensed with his evening service so that his congregation might attend the Saints' service. Solos were sung by Miss Jean Dawson and Miss Jeanette Sales, of Merlin, and Fred Moore, of Windsor.

Meals were provided in the basement of the church by the women's department for visitors and members. About three hundred people were served through the day. The women deserve much credit for the success of the anniversary services.

Apostle D. T. Williams has paid this branch two recent visits and his themes were, "A God Who Speaks Today," and "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint."

Brother Charles Atkinson, priest, with Clarence Smith, teacher, is visiting the Saints and trying to place a Herald in every home.

Kansas City Stake

Chelsea Church

Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, conducted a series of special services at Chelsea, beginning January 22 and closing the evening of January 29. He was given splendid attendance each night and the best of attention. Though some nonmembers attended, Brother Sheehy's appeal was especially directed to the members of the faith. His sermon topics were: Sunday night, "How We Worship"; Monday, "Unchangeable God"; Tuesday, "Following Jesus"; Wednesday, "Ye Must Be Born Again"; Thursday, "Choose You Today What You Will Do Well Tomorrow"; Friday, "I Must Decrease, But He Will Increase," and Sunday, "The Power of Example."

Quindaro Church

This congregation is going forward under the leadership of H. A. Higgins, assisted by the local officers. It is advancing spiritually and financially. Members moving into the neighborhood are invited to worship here.

Christmas morning the "White Gift" was given by the junior department and the giving of gifts by the whole congregation demonstrated the Christ Spirit. Tables across the front of the church were laden with gifts for the needy.

The young son of Brother and Mrs. Berwyn Lungwitz was blessed by Elders H. A. Higgins and E. N. Palmer and given the name, Teddy Vance.

The choir under the leadership of Otis Swart, furnished an evening of music which was much enjoyed.

Apostle Paul Hanson was the speaker on New Year's night. For a text he chose Matthew 13: 16: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear."

The opening sacrament service of the year was well attended, and helped the

www.LatterDayTruth.org

congregation to enter the new year full of hope and courage.

Good attendance characterizes the Wednesday night prayer services.

On a recent Tuesday evening Quindaro was pleased to have as a speaker Apostle John F. Garver. Chelsea and Heathwood congregations met with Quindaro on that night, to hear Brother Garver's discourse.

Bennington Church

The young people as a group, attended the regular weekly prayer service, January 25, and it was generally agreed that meeting with the older members was of great value to the young people.

The confirmation service for Sister Tressa Nelson and her daughter, Virginia Lee Nelson, was held at the eleven o'clock hour, January 29. These two sisters were baptized January 22.

Brother Bishop, former pastor of Bennington and Mount Washington Churches was the evening speaker, January 29, giving the congregation a good sermon on "Spiritual Power."

Argentine Church

At the church school hour, January 29, Elder Levi Gamet gave the sermonet on the words of the jailor to Paul and Silas, "What shall we do?" and the question of the people to Peter on the day of Pentecost, "What shall we do?"

In the evening Elder Joseph Ray Lloyd preached on a lesson from Alma 3: 8-63.

Gladstone Church

As the result of cottage sermons by Stake Missionary J. Charles May, Brother Thomas Staff and Sister Lue Dema Williams were recently led into the waters of baptism. They have been investigating the work and attending services for the past three months.

Sunday morning, January 8, Elder L. C. Connelly gave a historical survey with reference to the periodical literature published by the church from June, 1832, when the Evening and Morning Star was published at Independence, Missouri, down to the present official publication, the Saints' Herald. Brother Connelly is the publicity agent of the group and brought out the importance of the Herald's being in every home. The Herald is on sale at the church each Sunday for five cents a copy for those who do not subscribe for it.

Junior church is held each Sunday morning. All children under O. B. K. age are represented in this service. A special theme is followed, and individual participation is encouraged.

Midweek prayer meetings are held in the homes of the Saints under the direction of Elder George Harrington.

Once a month the social committee arranges a social evening at the Saints' homes. Both adults and children participate in the games, programs, and treats, and a pleasant time is enjoyed.

Dow City, Iowa

Church School Divisions Are Busy

This group appreciates speakers from other branches. Recently the Saints have listened to M. O. Meyers, Warren E. Oliver, and C. C. Talcott, of Deloit; George Hansen, of Dunlap, and Frank Fry, of Woodbine. Local priesthood members who have talked are Fred Baber, Everett Landon, and Elvin Baughman.

Interest is good and the desire to go forward permeates the actions of the members.

Although unemployment has affected several families here, there has been no suffering among the members.

Lynn Talcott and Phyllis Pearsall attended the banquet in Omaha, January 21, an event of the young people's convention. Zeta Clothier was there on Sunday. Dow City was glad to be represented.

Officers in charge of the work in this branch are: Pastor, Fred Baber; church school director, Mrs. Bessie Pearsall; clerk, Mrs. June Griffin; financial agent, M. A. Pearsall; church school secretary, Leta Riley; pianists, Zeta Clothier, Phyllis Pearsall, and June Griffin; organist for the basement, Ruth Justice; supervisor of adults, Mrs. Nettie Smith; supervisor of young people, Zeta Clothier; supervisor of children, Helen Jackson.

All divisions of the church school are active. Four teachers are employed in the children's group each Sunday, and junior church is held with the exception of sacrament day.

The young people's division has opportunity to express itself in choir work, and arranging the early worship service each Sunday evening. They have responded a number of times with anthems for the services: "He Leadeth Me," "King All Glorious," "Jesus Savior Pilot Me," and others.

The adult division functions in a class period in the church school, studying the Book of Mormon quarterly. Numbered among these members are some not of the faith who are very regular in attendance.

In addition to the study class, a group of women is working under the leadership of Sister A. L. Jackson. Not long ago they sent to the Bishop a sum of money earned by their quilting.

Christmas was appropriately observed with music, scripture reading and a sermonet by Frank Fry, of Woodbine, at a special service Sunday, 10 a. m. An offering was taken and turned into the Christmas offering fund. The children's program was given December 22.

In November the Joseph Smith centennial was beautifully observed. A special feature of the church school service was an autobiography written by Mrs. Nettie Pearsall Smith and read by her granddaughter, Wilma Griffin, grandniece of the one whose birthday was celebrated.

The branch is happy to have Brother and Sister Elvin Baughman and family worship here. They are residents of Buck Grove, a small town about six miles from Dow City.

Social diversions have been few of late. The children's division under those in charge enjoyed a Halloween party in the church basement, and the women of the working group gave Mrs. J. L. Butterworth a birthday surprise by taking supper with them when they went to spend an afternoon of quilting at her home.

Prominent in the Graceland College Day program last fall were four ex-Gracelanders: Lynn Talcott, Helen Jackson, Mrs. June Smith Griffin, and Frank Fry.

Alpena, Michigan

Twenty Baptized There in December-January Meetings

Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth, Northern Michigan missionaries, came to Alpena at Christmas and from that time until January 30, had baptized twenty candidates into the church.

These new members are to be admired for their determination in stepping forth to obey the Master's commands when, of necessity, the baptisms must be perfomed in Thunder Bay River, and the last two steps leading into the river of ice.

The Saints also feel confident of the calling and authority of Brother Ledsworth who ably presents the gospel in power and beauty.

One outstanding confirmation was that of a fifteen-year-old girl who was spoken to in a gift of tongues by Brother Ledsworth. There were many who believed the gospel that night.

After the baptism, January 29, a Jew stepped forth and announced that he wanted to be baptized. It seems there was only one who knew this, Brother Marshall McGuire, of Mikado. When the man was informed that the baptismal service was ended, he said, "Well, never mind, I only have on my rough clothes anyway." Workers will visit this man and make him feel at home among the Saints.

The group at Alpena needs a better building, also a baptismal font. When a baptism is carried on at great discomfort to both candidates and minister, and when crowds stand laughing, smoking, and jeering on the river banks, the Saints especially wish for a better building and a baptismal font.

Many feel that there is much more to be done here, and workers wonder if they are equal to teaching these new Saints and helping them over the rough places which are frequently encountered. People seem to have been waiting to hear just such a message as the Restored Church has to present. It appeals to them as nothing else can.

Among the new members are several heads of families, some young men and women and some fine boys and girls. And there are others who even now are convinced of the genuineness of the gospel. The pastor of Alpena Branch, Brother W. C. Scott, feels that if Brother and Sister Ledsworth remain, others will be baptized in the near future.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Corinth, Ontario

Organize a Religio

Brother Henry Pearson was reelected branch president at the regular business meeting, January 1, and all business was transacted in the proper spirit. At this service it was decided to hold a Book of Mormon study one night each week for the purpose of increasing knowledge of that book and promoting sociability. The first of these meetings was held in charge of Brother Laur, January 5. A good crowd attended for so small a branch, and an interesting address was given by Brother Clarence Weeks, of Delhi. There was also a short musical program.

These meetings are proving very helpful. The second was held January 13, and was declared a real success. Brother Laur was in charge and Brother Best, the speaker, talked on "The Confounding of Languages," as a topic with which to begin the study. There is half an hour of study then a short program of music, piano, violin, cornet, and accordion selections as well as orchestra music.

At the meeting, January 20, the Religio was organized to carry on studies. Brother Leo McCurdy was appointed leader, Brother Wray Best, teacher; Sister Ruth Beemer, secretary; Sister Norma Best, treasurer and pianist. Brother Ernie Best was also added to the orchestra as first cornet player.

After discussion as to the future possibilities of this work, it was decided to hold these meetings every Wednesday evening at eight o'clock after which the orchestra will practice. A good number of visitors have attended the meetings, and the members are hoping for success and profit to the branch.

Fanshawe, Oklahoma

Young People Alert

Although the Saints of this town are few in number, and congregations attending church school and other services are chiefly composed of young people, the workers feel that God is blessing them. It seems as though the young people are remembering the statement of Brother E. A. Erwin who has gone on to his reward, "Keep the campfires blazing."

Church school is held at nine forty-five each Sunday morning and prayer meeting at eleven o'clock following the sacrament service on the first Sunday of the month. There is preaching in the evening.

Because of much sickness among the members, the branch was late in holding its business meeting. New officers for the year are: President, J. J. Jackson; church school director, Joe Mangrum; secretary, Kate Sartor; chorister, Maxine Sartor; organist, Cecile Moore, and church school secretary, Mary Goss. A splendid spirit of cooperation and good will was present at this meeting.

Last September a visit from Brother C. E. Goss was enjoyed. He held a short series of meetings, and baptized three young men, Ezra Goss, John Glenn, and Joe Mangrum.

Apostle Roy S. Budd preached an interesting sermon here last fall, and the Saints hope for another visit from him.

Brother J. J. Jackson was given a Bible for Christmas by his adult students.

Sister Etta Jackson has been ill with pneumonia. The doctor expressed surprise that she has survived as long as she has, but she was remembered in the prayers of the Saints, and is now able to be up again.

Traverse City, Michigan

Visited by District Missionary C. E. Harpe

The flu has visited many homes of Saints in this branch.

District Missionary C. E. Harpe came to Traverse City, November 23, and held three weeks of meetings, preaching the gospel, administering to the sick, visiting the Saints, cheering, and advising. He is a wonderfully clear and interesting speaker. Though no baptisms marked the immediate results of his labors, the Saints pray that seed sown by him in the hearts of his hearers will soon spring up and bear fruit.

Brother John Clark was returning home from church, December 18, when by some misstep he slipped and seriously injured his leg. He suffered intensely for five weeks and is not yet able to sit up.

Sunday evening, January 22, an interesting and instructive program was given at the Saints' church, several nonmembers assisting. There was a piano number, and organ duet, a song by a mixed quartet, a vocal solo by Sister Florence Richardson, and Elder H. A. Doty showed slides of his trip to the Holy Land. During the evening a collection was taken for the benefit of Brother Clark and his family. Such helpfulness is always timely when the husband and father of a family has been sick in bed for a long time.

January 28, marked the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of Traverse City Branch, and was a time for checking up on the changes that have taken place in that period of time. Only two are left in the city who were present at the meeting of organization. The evening was devoted to a program and social similar to other anniversary observations in the past.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

This branch responded to the call of the church during the sacrifice period, sending in a sum of three hundred and fifty-nine dollars. Workers were pleased to be able to raise this amount in view of the half-time work of some members and the lack of employment of others.

At the Christmas season they tried to remember the shut-ins and needy with baskets of fruit and purses of money and cards of good cheer.

Brother A. Edstrom preached the Christmas sermon the morning of December 25, and special music was by Sister Pearl Kerr and Arthur Sherman. That evening a White Christmas program was had, and the setting was made beautiful with colored lights, and a white cross. Scripture reading and carols by a hidden choir and by the junior choir, the story, "Little White Cross," by Sister Ruth Hall, sermonet by Brother H. P. W. Keir and the gift processional were features of the program.

The women will meet in the homes of the members during the cold weather. They made and presented a friendship quilt to Sister Ruth McPeak, a young bride.

The passing of Sister A. Sherman, January 11, saddened the branch. For several years she has been in failing health, but her passing was peaceful. The funeral sermon was preached at Bartz Funeral Home, by Elder Roscoe Davey. The heart-felt sympathy of the Saints is given her loved ones.

The first sacrament of the year was a happy event, Brothers Lowe, Keir, and Clark in charge. Many encouraging testimonies were given, and the gifts of the Spirit gave encouragement and instruction.

The annual business meeting in December saw some changes. At his request, Brother H. P. W. Keir was released from the branch presidency, and a rising vote of thanks was given him for the many years of untiring service he has contributed. Brother E. Lowe was elected branch president; J. J. Olliver, clerk; Steve Lester, church school leader; William Keir, leader of young people; Arthur Sherman, chorister; Floyd McNickle, organist; Jean McDonald, pianist; Ralph Swanson, treasurer; Sister E. Horton, correspondent, also leader of the women's group. As assistants Sister Horton has Sister Woods, Emily Nelson, Florence Daalde, Lucille Olliver, and Fay McDonald. Committees for visiting the sick, sewing, and social and entertainments were selected.

For the past ten weeks on Sunday evening the congregation has listened to a series of sermons from Brother A. Edstrom. These have been intensely interesting. Brother Lowe, Keir, and Davey have also given splendid sermons.

Independence

Uplifting communion services for the congregations on Sunday opened the week of the priesthood institute in Independence. The first session of this institute gathered priesthood members from all over the city and surrounding territory to Liberty Street Church on Monday night, February 6. This week the men of the ministry are giving intensive study and thought to church problems. President Elbert A. Smith is teaching "Spiritual Aspects of Our Ministry," and Bishop G. L. DeLapp is presenting "Financial Aspects of Our Ministry." Nightly class periods will continue throughout the week.

Interest in the young people's Sunday afternoon meetings at the Auditorium, continues good. Last Sunday R. L. Bishop, formerly pastor of Mount Washington Church, was the speaker, and on the Sunday before Sister Charlotte Koehler, leader of women in Independence, spoke. These Sunday afternoon programs are designed to give the young people from the various congregations in Independence, opportunity to participate and become acquainted. They are sponsored by the young people's council.

Stone Church

One of the most impressive services held in the Stone Church for many weeks was enjoyed by the young people last Wednesday night when they witnessed the sacred ordinance of ordination. W. Earl Page was ordained an elder under the hands of the two assistant pastors in Zion, H. G. Barto and D. S. McNamara, and James Moses was ordained a priest by S. A. Thiel, superintendent of the Stone Church School, and T. A. Beck, superintendent of the young people's department at the Auditorium. Both of these young men have for some time been working in the church school, and are now assuming additional responsibility. Brother Page is the new director of Religious Education for Independence, and Brother Moses has taken up the work of pastor of the junior department at the Stone Church.

The service was in charge of Pastor J. F. Sheehy, and President F. M. McDowell delivered the charge. Bishop J. S. Kelley was in the stand to assist. The ceremony was one which appealed to the large group of friends and young people.

The sacrament service Sunday morning was dominated by the spirit of worship. Though the weather was wintry, the congregation was large and attentive to the communion address by President Elbert A. Smith who based his thoughts on the twelfth chapter of Romans. Pastor J. F. Sheehy presided, and assisting him in the stand were President Elbert A. Smith, Elders H. G. Barto, D. S. McNamara, and T. A. Beck, and Bishops R. T Cooper and J S. Kelley. Opening organ music was by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee.

The junior sacrament service was held in the lower auditorium at the same hour.

Pastor J. F. Sheehy, the Sunday evening speaker, chose as his subject, "The Prophet and the Book," honoring the To-Ko-Lon Class of young people which attended the service in a body. This class is studying the Book of Mormon. Reading Isaiah 29, Brother Sheehy showed how the coming forth of the book and the life of the young Prophet Joseph Smith are inseparably linked, and are among the outstanding features of our belief. After a discussion of external evidences of the book's truthfulness—scriptural substantiation and the testimony of the book's witnesses—he named two fundamental and internal testimonies: (1) The book teaches righteousness, and (2) It leads you to do good.

An excellent program of music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir of more than fifty singers. Paul N. Craig directed and Robert and George Miller accompanied on organ and piano. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Ephraim Brown.

Among those lately passed into immortality was Charles Raymond Mathews, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar C. Mathews, who died February 1, after many days of illness. He was eight years of age. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, February 4, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. The child leaves his parents, two brothers, two half-brothers, and other relatives.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor Frank McDonald was assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and H. P. Andersen at sacrament service Sunday morning. In making the opening remarks Brother Andersen stressed the value of the communion service in the life of every Latter Day Saint. The Saints at Walnut Park are always out in large numbers on sacrament Sunday to partake of the emblems, and the main auditorium was filled on this occasion. During the few minutes remaining after the serving of the emblems, two former pastors of the congregation, Elders B. J. Scott and Samuel Smith, were called upon to give messages of cheer and counsel for the members of their former flock.

At six o'clock Sunday evening the religio was entertained by the juvenile orchestra conducted by Brother Fred Mollison. The orchestra gave a short concert preceding the class work. After the classes had reassembled in the upper auditorium, a program was presented by the family of Brother and Sister Benjamin Bean. Brother Bean announced the numbers and four members of his family took part. Following the program, since the organization had been operating successfully for several months without an official name, a motion was made and carried unanimously that the organization be known as the Walnut Park Religio Literary Society. Two hundred and nineteen were present at this session.

Elder Cal Rich occupied the pulpit in the evening and was greeted by a splendid Sunday evening attendance.

A Book of Mormon class has been organized by the Saints in Group 29 East. Sister L. E. Hills is the teacher and the class meets each Tuesday evening at the home of some member. Tuesday night, February 7, the meeting was held at the home of its president, Brother Imal Burke, on the Blue Springs Road.

Englewood Church

The young people, lately organized, are doing a good work under the sponsorship of Sister Florence Moore, Ralph Dunlap acting as president. Brother Dunlap is comparatively new in this branch, having come from Flint, Michigan. J. R. Closson is vice president, and Alice Richardson is secretary.

They have entered the dramatic contest now being sponsored by the Young People's Council of Independence, assisted by the White Masque Players. The preliminary of the contest will be held soon.

Three plays are being prepared. "Ambition," the story of a young prosecuting attorney whose ambition in his profession means more to him than anything else in life, is being directed by Sister Florence Moore. "Gas," a tragedy is directed by Miss Pauline Siegfried, and "Aunt Martha Pays," a thrilling drama, is directed by Delmar Goode. This trio of plays is well cast, and the young people are enthusiastic over the contest.

It is expected on the night of the preliminary that there will be music between the plays by the Shupe sisters, and numbers by Mrs. Harold Henderon, and Donald Webb, instrumentalists. Candy will be sold, the proceeds to go to the women's sacrifice offering, and a silver collection will care for the expense of the plays.

"The Influence of Dramatics on Everyday Life," was the topic of Brother W. Earl Page, who addressed the dramatic class at the Religio hour Sunday evening, A playlet, "The Lover's Errand," was presented at the close of the lecture, as illustrative of salient points, by Miss Ethel Thomas and Edmund Gleazer.

A class studying "Parliamentary Practices" has been organized at the young people's service on Sunday evening and is taught by Virgil Julian. Elder Jesse Holsworth is teaching Book of Mormon, and Sister George Gould has the juniors.

The women's department under the leadership of Sister Gladys Closson Welch is doing excellent work in a spiritual, temporal, and social way. The women meet all day on Wednesday and have luncheon. Their headquarters are in the home of Sister Pauline Clow Seymour. They are now carrying out some novel and socially attractive ways of adding to the sacrifice fund. In the past twelve weeks the department has raised $150.80 for the sacrifice fund and forty-six dollars for branch expenses. This is an exceedingly good record in view of the shortage of work for the breadwinners of the congregation.

Elder Leonard Lea talked on, "The Unseen Guest," at the sacrament service Sunday morning.

Spring Branch Church

The largest attendance in a long time was had at the midweek prayer service, February 1, and Brothers C. D. Brewer, Elmer Peer, J. S. Andes, and Morris Jacobson were in charge.

Sister Robert Fish gave a talk concerning Lazarus and the rich man at the Sunday school hour, last Sunday.

Pastor G. W. Eastwood was in charge of the sacrament service, assisted by Alma Tankard and Robert Fish. A quartet sang, "Take Time to Be Holy."

Elder J. S. Andes was the speaker in the evening, and his text was, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matthew 28: 19, 20.) This helpful sermon on the principles of the gospel, was heard by a considerable number of nonmembers.

Our Departed Ones

HALL.—Almond Stanhope Hall was born July 10, 1848, in Canada. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Hall. At the age of twenty, in 1868, he came to the United States. January 1, 1869, he married Priscilla Alton. Eight children were born to the couple, two of whom died. Mr. Hall died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ernest Steidley, of Keokuk, Iowa, January 14, 1933. For thirty years he was an employee of the Keokuk Barrel company, and for seven year he operated a grocery store. He retired from active work five years ago. January 1, 1933, he and his wife celebrated their sixty-fourth wedding anniversary. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints a number of years ago. Funeral services were held at the Keokuk Funeral Home, January 16, Elder W. H. Gunn officiating. Surviving are, his widow, six children: A. W. Hall, of Huntington, West Virginia; Mrs. William Gunlock, of Rock Island, Illinois, Mrs. Walter Laing and Mrs. J. B. Thomas, of Chicago; R. A. Hall, and Mrs. Ernest Steidley, of Keokuk; a sister, Mrs. Lottie E. East, of Valparaiso, Nebraska; twenty-six grandchildren, and nineteen great-grandchildren.

HOLMES.—Amy McDaniel was born June 9, 1864, in Williams County, Ohio. She was married to Virgil E. Houck, at Bryan, Ohio, November 23, 1884, and to them eight children were born, five sons and three daughters: Bert, of Napoleon, Ohio; Frank, Florence, Charles, and Marie, of Toledo, Ohio; Beatrice, of Auburn, Indiana, and Glen, whose address is unknown. Dewey passed away in infancy. She was widowed May 5, 1906. She joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints July 28, 1915. Married August A. Holmes, January 28, 1924, and passed from mortal life December 5, 1932, at Toledo, Ohio. Besides her husband and children there survive, three brothers, Ellis and Charles McDaniel, of Ann Arbor, Michigan; Samuel, of Montpelier, Ohio; two sisters, Mrs. Julia Kollar, of Toledo, and Mrs. Maud Fair, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; eighteen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild.

SAURES.—Aaron Saures was born in Brent County, Ontario, February 10, 1838. He was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Banister in 1865. To this union were born three children; Minnie, Annie, and Robert. Mr. Saures became acquainted with the church through the ministry of Bishop R. C. Evans and was baptized by him July 12, 1902. At the time of his death our brother's faith in the work was strong, and despite weakness due to advanced years he attended service Sunday, January 1, by the help of loved ones. For several years he enjoyed a fair degree of health, but on Tuesday, January 10, became seriously ill. After a short illness of four days he passed peacefully away, January 15. His wife, Charlotte, and children, Minnie and Robert preceded him in death. He leaves his only daughter, Mrs. Pierce Hughs with her husband and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the home of Brother and Sister Hughs, Chatham, Ontario. The sermon was by Elder D. J. Williams, Elder R. H. Jones assisting.

Testimony

Almost any of us would rather listen to a tongue-tied explorer who had been to the north pole than to the most brilliant rocking-chair conversationalist who had only read about it. Experience gives validity to the humblest of words.

Out of all that is written and spoken concerning Jesus and the gospel, it is the testimonies that do the most good. For they are born of actual experience of life and religion. And they come directly from those who have felt the touch of the Divine hand and the inspiration of the Spirit.

Testimonies are the notes from the laboratory of life. They have about them a directness and simplicity that is not to be found in books, nor in philosophies.

You may argue with a man, and prove that his philosophy is false. You may move one to reconsider who has all his information at second hand. Wherever he has learned his religion, it has not become a part of him until it is something that he has learned from an intimate understanding of God that is to be obtained from experience. But the man who has a real and personal testimony is not to be moved by anything less impressive than experience itself.

Two Brands of Religion

"I overheard two women talking the other day, and their conversation was so interesting that it made me forget I was looking for a crumb or two," confided the pigeon. "One woman's brand of religion—yes, they were talking about religion—made me think. Hers is the kind that is dominated by fear. She prides herself on being a good Latter Day Saint, and because she thinks she is, she is sure that she must accept every jot and tittle of the law without question. She doesn't know what it's all about, and she dares not to reason over her religion. The poor soul said to her companion: 'I'd be afraid not to believe so-and-so. If I didn't believe every single word in our standard books and that our ministers utter, I'd be afraid of horrible judgment because of my disbelief.' Well, the other didn't see the matter just that way. She said something about intelligence being the glory of God, and how He has given each one of us intelligence with the gracious privilege of using it."

Afraid

"We're all brothers under the skin," consoled the pigeon. "Everybody is afraid of something. Me? Well, I'm afraid of a boy with a bean-shooter in his hand; and you? Why, you are afraid of the sharp-tongued, swift-penned critic, and a hundred others."

"There are some people," remarked the pigeon this morning, "who seem to have been born to boss. They delight in it. It is meat and drink to them. We do need leaders and good ones who know their own minds. But when personal dominance exceeds wisdom, good leadership goes into the hole."

Editorial

The Growth of Spiritual Life

This is the first of a series of five editorials on "Our Project, 1933" which is summarized below. It is suggested that this project may be of value to pastors in their pulpit work of education for their congregations.

It is one of the first tasks of religion to bring men into the presence of God, working upon them reforms of mind and heart necessary to bring them into that Presence, and necessary to continue them there. Upon this first work of religion, every other social and moral good depends. Many a time ministers have said, "You can not build a righteous society with unrighteous people." The most perfect system in the world will fail if it is managed by people who are immoral, incompetent, or ignorant. But more depends on righteousness than on all the others. If that is lacking, all else fails.

The spiritual way of life, which is the ideal, is not something that has an existence apart from daily living. It is integral with the other motivations, interests, and factors which give character and significance to human life. There is no way for a man to enjoy the blessings and advantages of the spiritual life on Sunday and to go the way of the world during the remainder of the week. The dual existence can be lived only by those who start by being hypocrites; and the dual existence will eventually lead to a breakdown of personality, and the destruction of its better parts.

The spiritual life, therefore, has its foundation in the acts and modes of daily living. If a life is to be spiritual, it must proceed in the way of righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer. Without these things the attempt to gain the spiritual way of life will be frustrated, and the individual defeated, and ultimately self-destroyed.

The spiritual way of life is dependent upon an observance of the fundamental principles of the gospel. It is not sufficient to have faith enough to bring us into the church; we must always have faith renewed by constantly seeking God. It is not enough to repent of sins once for our entrance into the Kingdom; we must repent daily and purge ourselves of sin, selfishness, deceit, and error. It is not enough to be baptized with water; we must again and again be baptized with the Holy Spirit, which is the center and essence of our religious life.

Therefore we set as the first item in our project for 1933 this ideal: "Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar." We must do this, and teach others to do it as well. We should teach it to our families, to our children, and—insofar as possible—to our neighbors and friends. But first of all we must see that we follow that way ourselves.

We become accustomed to wrong ways of living and thinking in the world until we see no harm in ways that are full of harm. It is our duty, not to measure ourselves by the standards of the world about us, but to measure ourselves by the Absolute standard set by Jesus Christ. Only by following that standard can we hope for the improvement that will enable us to establish the kingdom of God on earth.

The constitution, the mechanics, the structure of economic and social institutions of a new order must be achieved before any considerable improvement can be effected in the present conditions of the world. But it is a mistake to suppose that these mechanical features alone will be effective for the redemption of mankind. Our present conditions are an outgrowth of our mores rather than a result of our economic and social institutions, so will future conditions be.

There must be spiritually and morally better men and women to build the better world. Our immediate task is to do what we can to bring that spiritual improvement to ourselves, our young people, and then to others.

L. L.

"Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

IT IS ALWAYS A PLEASURE to have the work of our colaborers well-appraised. In a letter to me Brother Whiting speaks of the work of Brother McDowell at Omaha in words we pass on. He says:

"We have all been inspired and blessed and encouraged by the splendid work of President McDowell in the Omaha Branch this last week. His work, it seems, is always outstanding, but I believe he was at his best this time. He was clear, forceful and definite. At times he was almost painful for he struck with such force right in our weak places, our tender spots. He made us ashamed of ourselves, then he would point the way out and up and lift us up to high resolve.

"When he went away he left some real tangible evidences of his good work. Several young people who had been indifferent toward the church for a long time rededicated themselves to God and the church and a large number of the rest of us who had been carrying on in the past have definitely decided to do more and better work in the future.

"He left the young people better organized and with a new inter-city movement which gives promise of some fine things. We appreciate his work very much."

Again we say, Fine! The awakening among our people is not confined to the older ones. The youth are feeling the stirrings of spiritual and religious longing. It is right and natural we should "feel after God." And to find him brings peace as well as joy.

BROTHER BIRCH WHITING is one of the busiest district presidents in the church. He seems to find work for everyone who is willing to lend a helping hand. He even has Missouri mules helping out. Note what he says in his letter to the Presidency:

"I have had eight and ten head of mules and that many men for two weeks grading our church grounds consisting of one city block. It was low in the center and high on all sides. Counting a team the same as a man there have been 130 days of work donated here this month. You know it is predicted that the valleys would be exalted and the hills made low. Well, that is in process of fulfillment here just now."

I know from observation that Missouri mules when rigidly handled can do a lot of work. To handle them one must be able "To talk their language." Must be some one in Rich Hill who can talk to mules. F. M. S.

The Branch Bundle is now taking the Herald into more than sixteen hundred church homes.

Blue Pencil Notes

"We have passed through a great number of peculiar exigencies which have happened to the church, and it has only been by the intervention of God's providences . . . that we have been more than once kept from being overcome by internal dissension among ourselves. This was as I predicted to you years ago, and some of you will remember it, that which the adversary purposes as the entering wedge—that he would create dissension in the councils of the church, and thus prevent our onward progress. And you will bear me witness that I warned you against it time and again."—President Joseph Smith, 1897.

He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win;
We drew a circle that took him in.

—Markham.

A brother writes that after reading one of my editorials pleading for unity among the Saints, especially among the priesthood, that no two should be found at variance one with the other, he offered prayer, then lay down to rest, and suddenly found himself saying, "What a burying of hatchets that will be." Amusing? Well, not altogether, and in any event the words served me as a springboard for the following verses. Fortunately a great many hatchets have been buried during very recent years; but if you still have one, you might sing these verses at the funeral, to the tune of "What a gathering that will be."

DISARMAMENT

When the servants of the Master each and all shall cast aside
Every grievance, every hatred, and be free
To forget the petty quarrels, and the grudges that divide—
What a burying of hatchets that will be!

When the ministers of Jesus, be they small or be they great,
From the prophets to the deacons, bow the knee;
Bishops, teachers, and apostles, have more love and less debate—
What a burying of hatchets that will be!

And I think it would be blessed just to live myself to stand
O'er the last grave of the last feud men shall see Found among a faithful people in fair Zion's lovely land—
What a burying of hatchets that will be!

When we learn to walk in kindness, wear the smile, forget the frown;
When we gladly shall forgive men, full and free;
Every small and bitter envy, every malice trample down—
What a burying of hatchets that will be!

When no two of all our number, Lord, shall longer be at strife,
When we walk in love and mercy close to Thee,
We shall know a joyful service, we shall find abundant life—
What a strong and happy people we shall be!

June 17-25 Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, Iowa

Getting Ready for the June Conference

MAKING THE CONFERENCE COUNT

By F. M. McDowell

In this critical time in the history of the world and of the church it is necessary to count the cost of each undertaking and challenge the worthwhileness of each activity. The program of the church has been curtailed. The budget has been cut and we must live within its provisions. Each undertaking of the church must be made to count. Each activity must take us toward our established goals.

Emerging from this process of rigid selection is the June Youth Conference and Leadership Convention. This is the one general church effort of the year. Those responsible for this arrangement are convinced that some of our most vital problems as a church center in the interrelations, the spiritual nurture, the moral guidance, the sympathetic understanding of and cooperation with our young people. They are certain, also, that the young people themselves must share in the solution of these problems.

Let us keep in mind that the June conference is not an end in itself, but is rather but one step in the program of the church. Preparation for this conference is therefore in reality but preparation for carrying on the work of the church.

Financial Considerations

Perhaps the one outstanding obstacle to a wholly successful conference is the financial situation. Careful consideration was given to this problem by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric before the official call for the conference was sent out. It was their united opinion that while rigid economy must be practiced on every hand, yet the spiritual ministry of the church must go on. They feel that the solution of our problem will be found not in the elimination of such gatherings but in their wise selection and careful planning. The June conference and convention is a definite part of the on-going program of the church. It is the one big church-wide effort for 1933. It is the response of the church to the call of its youth.

Every effort will be made to keep the expense of the conference down to a minimum and yet make it self-supporting. Board and room will constitute the main item of expense. These will be furnished at a total cost of one dollar per day. The incidental expenses of the conference, such as programs, printed matter, outlines, credit cards, etc., will be covered by a nominal registration fee of not more than one dollar.

The Effort Must Be Church-wide

If possible every district of the church in the United States and Canada should be represented. It is hoped that a number of district and branch presidents will be able to attend. The conference will be of special interest to them as well as to the young people and their teachers and leaders.

We are well aware that in many places the financial conditions are very bad indeed. Hundreds of those who otherwise could be counted on to attend the conference will not be able to do so. If you can not attend you can still help and share. How?

1. By giving moral and financial support to your representatives. A branch or district may help provide transportation and expense money for one or more representatives.
2. By sending to the Herald a discussion of your problems, programs, plans and activities. Watch the Herald for suggestions. Let the "Conference" begin now in every branch.
3. By joining whole-heartedly in the program of preparation herein outlined. Study, work and pray for the growth of our young people in the work of the church.
4. By subscribing for the Herald so as to receive the special "Youth" number and other issues which will contain the findings of the conference.
5. By becoming alert, intelligent, and efficient participants

www.LatterDayTruth.org

in the work of the church, joining forces with the other workers of your branch in carrying your share of the load. The call to youth is for active enlistment in carrying forward the Restoration.

Preparation, Mental and Spiritual

The problems to come before the conference and its forums are vital problems which youth and the church must face. Adequate preparation is imperative. Superficial expressions of opinion, random and purposeless discussion will be worse than futile. Conclusions of value will be arrived at only through the pooling of knowledges, appreciations and convictions which are based on real study, intelligence, and experience.

We are urging that the young people of the church and their leaders enter upon a period of intensive preparation for this conference and forward movement in the church. Such a program might well include individual and public prayer, meditation, carefully planned worship, purposeful reading, individual study, creative thinking, class study and discussion, class and round table services, the preparation and reading of papers, and local and district young people's conventions. The editors of the Herald expect to furnish from time to time some definite suggestions as to worship themes, themes for prayer services, references for selected reading and study, problems and topics for class and round table discussions, subjects for papers, talks and addresses to young people's classes, gatherings, or conventions. In fact there would seem to be no end to the worth-while activities in this connection which may be carried out by young people's organizations in the various branches and districts, not only before June, 1933, but onward to the General Conference of 1934, and beyond.

Shall We Not Expect Divine Guidance?

Let us recognize as a vital truth the fact that God stands ever willing to bless us with divine light, power, and wisdom. He not only loves young people but is cognizant of their problems and ever anxious to aid in their solution. This is his church. He has in times past guided its destinies. He will continue to reveal his will to us if we shall actually seek and expect such guidance. Let us enter upon our preparation with the determination not only to study and pray but actually to live in harmony with the best that we know. Let us give to the consideration of our mutual problems the best that we have to offer. Let us ask God to supplement our human intelligence with his divine wisdom. Let us uphold those who shall be asked to teach and lead that they shall be blessed with power from on high. Manifesting a consciousness of our needs and limitations, bringing to our mutual tasks the best we have to offer, humbling ourselves before the throne of grace and confessing our insufficiencies, we may call upon God for light, strength, and wisdom. Expecting great things of him, he will hear and bless.

"Herald" Climbs Right Up the Line

The Herald Branch Bundle keeps gaining in popularity. By actual count, bundles are now going to two hundred and seventeen branches, and the number will probably be greater by the time the reader gets this statement, for new bundles are being added daily.

At the same time, despite the depression, the Herald bids fair to double the circulation it had at the time just after the consolidation of publications last fall. At the present time it is going into more than nine thousand church homes; and a conservative estimate would say that it is read by at least thirty-six thousand people.

Just recently one branch bundle was discontinued. The brother who acted as agent wrote: "This is the last bundle that will be needed at our branch. All of my customers have become subscribers now." Which is a fine tribute to the good work that the brother did. The branch bundle is meant to take the Herald to people who can not afford to subscribe at the time. When conditions improve it is hoped that all will subscribe.

The management take this opportunity to extend an expression of sincere thanks to all who are laboring to extend the usefulness of the Herald.

Philosophy should make us know the ends of life, and the elements in life that have value on their own account. However our freedom may be limited in the causal sphere, we need admit no limitations to our freedom in the sphere of values: what we judge good on its own account we may continue to judge good, without regard to anything but our own feeling. Philosophy can not itself determine the ends of life, but it can free us from the tyranny of prejudice and from distortions due to a narrow view. Love, beauty, knowledge and joy of life: these things retain their luster however wide our purview. And if philosophy can help us to feel the value of these things, it will have played its part in man's collective work of bringing light into a world of darkness.—From Bertrand Russell's Philosophy.

We have a feeling as a faculty that the conditions are better than they ever were. Certainly our social functions have less noticeable drinking than ever before.—Professor M. L. Fisher, dean of men, Purdue University.

NEWS BRIEFS

Patriarch Albert Carmichael in California

For two weeks now Brother Albert Carmichael, ordained a patriarch at the 1932 General Conference, has been laboring in the interests of the church in Northern California District. First he held meetings in San Francisco, then in Sacramento.

Brother Carmichael left Independence the latter part of January for the Golden State, visiting first the Southern California District. His purpose is to visit and hold meetings in as many branches as his time will permit. He expects to return home about the middle of April.

Golden Wedding for Davidson Couple

Elder and Sister B. F. Renfroe celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at Davidson, Oklahoma, January 18, with a repetition of their marriage service of fifty years ago. This was a happy occasion for the branch, and the bride and bridegroom of many years were assisted in the ceremony by their children, grandchildren, and friends.

The pair settled on a farm near Davidson in 1901, and Brother Renfroe performed the first wedding ceremony and preached the first funeral sermon there. They are charter members of the branch.

Officers Attend Lamoni Conference

Leading churchmen to attend the conference of Lamoni Stake, February 5, were President F. M. Smith, President F. M. McDowell, Apostle J. F. Garver, and Elder C. B. Woodstock. These assisted local officers in the business and programs of the day. President Smith's afternoon address was on "Fidelity to Ideals."

Record crowds attended the conference services held at the Coliseum, and a communion service proved a fitting close to the day's activities.

Elder Arthur Oakman Gives Concert

A high point in recent activities for Central Church, Los Angeles, California, was the concert sung one Sunday evening by Elder Arthur Oakman, missionary to that State.

An especially appealing number was "Rest in the Lord" from Brother J. T. Gresty's oratorio, "The Course of Time." Brother Oakman was assisted in the program by Sister Margaret Wickes Jones, pianist, and Sister Viola Bogue, reader.

The Women at Work

The women of the church are busy, and their services in their local groups are indispensable. They help the priesthood, visit the sick, work as officers in various departments, and in many places have functioned largely this winter in raising branch moneys, general funds, and caring for the needy. They use blanket terms such as "performing other tasks" to tell what they do, and are happy to give service wherever it may help. Here are some things they are doing in this week's News:

The second Sunday of the year was Go-to-Church Sunday for the women of Second Church, Columbus, Ohio, and the department attended in a body. They added five new members to their group at their monthly meeting in January. On the last day of that month, they had a get-together dinner in honor of their husbands. These women meet regularly to work, study, read, and visit.

The women at Davidson, Oklahoma, recently refinished their church floor, applying varnish and wax.

Mrs. J. M. Johnston, a nonmember, presented Davidson Branch new rostrum drapes, scarfs, and chairs on Christmas morning.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Pisgah, Iowa, serves lunch each month, remembering those who have birthdays. They quilt, sew, and help in other ways.

Brooklyn, New York, women are organized into groups under the adult division, and these groups call themselves the Luncheon Club, the Needlework Guild, and the Patroness Society. There are also prospects of organizing a literary club for weekly study. These workers are whole-heartedly in favor of doing their part to supply the branch budget which designates a definite amount to be sent to the general church each month.

Feminine church workers in Ontario, California, are organized, and lately enjoyed a quilting "bee."

The women of Independence have now set their weekly sacrifice quota at two hundred dollars. Their total collections February 6, reached the sum of $3,200.13. These workers are giving much time and ingenuity to the raising of their sacrifice offering to the general church, and are holding well up to their quota. They hope to see other groups of women throughout the church take up the weekly sacrifice idea in an effort to help the general church pay off its debt.

Woman's Rights

By Helen Smith Logan

The Editor has certainly thrust a stick into a hornet's nest when he asked if we women would be willing to give our opinion on "Woman's Rights." If we can put the blame on him and the Bible, we will give some of our ideas on rights of both. However, we are glad he said to be reasonable. What is "Woman's Rights" anyway?

I think the sister's points are well taken, for no doubt tradition plays a great part in the molding of thoughts and opinions, and even to establishing of laws and customs in these days of ours.

It does seem that the Bible is rather obscure on woman's activities (only as a trouble maker), save a few exceptions. I do not think it was because the woman was ignored or held inferior to man, but rather recognized as equally responsible with man, because God said they twain were one flesh; and the woman was part of man. That is fair and just to both, but it is quite evident from the Bible that both man and woman had a distinct and separate work to do, although cooperative. The first body formed from clay in the image of Christ was called man, and he certainly is considered the head and protector of his household—That is his right and privilege.

No doubt God made man and woman equal in all things intellectually and physically, otherwise they could not be efficient helpmates. Nor would it be possible for them to carry out God's purpose in them were it not true.

Again, according to Bible lore, woman was given higher honor and rights than man or the world could give her. God gave her the right (without competition) to be the mother of a world of unborn people—to training the minds and thoughts of nations, molding characters that make noble men and women.

Woman was chosen to be the mother of the Savior of the world. And many others were the proud mothers of men that walked and talked with God anciently.

Are there any women prepared to say what the conditions might be today in the Christian world and in the nations of peoples, had they been satisfied to remain on the pedestal where God placed them, where they had the high and holy privilege of molding the thoughts and actions of boys and girls, building strong characters for both man and woman? Can there be any higher right than that? God gave them the best he had, but they were not satisfied, she looked and beheld forbidden fields to investigate and stepped down with her curiosity to see what she could do.

Study of the Bible does not reveal any difference of rights in male or female, but rather as a whole were they considered. Man was by all odds her shield and protector. But people have become perverse in these days, and seek to change God's plan and way of doing things, and woman has become her own jailer. I think it will be conceded by all fair-minded people, man was meant to be the ruler, provider and protector of his household, but for reasons best known to the man, he has made these privileges very tyrannical and abusive in the home life. Some even claim that God made woman exclusively for man's use as he saw fit. Woman rebelled at this interpretation of man's right, and tried to establish her opinion of woman's right. As the result of these contentions for sex right, we see nearly a wild and lawless people stalking the earth today.

If man will treat his wife as he wishes her to treat him and love her as his own body, and the wife reverence her husband, be keepers of the home, be sweet and clean, this fight for their rights will adjust itself.

I am for woman first and last, but I am also for justice and fair play—that is the only way—it is God's way.

Here is another view on the disputed question of woman's place in society. Apparently stimulated by an article that appeared in these columns some weeks ago, it gives us something serious to think about. We are not inviting controversial argument, but we shall be glad to have other articles on women's work and their place in the church, the home, and society.

After the death of Jesus his disciples were discouraged and defeated. They were a company of nerveless, timid, cowering men. There was no song on their lips, nor any light in their faces, nor any fire in their voices; and yet after a few days these men, for some reason, became bold as lions, and fairly sprang upon the world. They were eloquent as archangels entrancing men's hearts. They were as mighty as Titans, and turned the world upside down. How are we going to account for a transformation so marvelous? These eleven men, filled with a burning conviction that Jesus had risen, began to organize men around themselves.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

The Gifts of the Spirit

By J. Frank Curtis

ST. PAUL had broad experience, both within and without the church, and in writing to the Corinthian saints on the question of spiritual manifestations, he gave them the benefit of that which he knew to be the working of the Spirit of God.

Evidently in his day and time there was a necessity for instructing the membership as to their right and privilege pertaining to the work of the Spirit; and if the manifestations of the Spirit or workings of the Spirit were as little understood in the world then as now, Paul's effort with the Corinthian saints along this line was certainly a necessity.

One of the things that divide the religious world today is the question of the manifestation of the Spirit of God. Indeed, if there were a unity of the faith on the question of the Holy Spirit, a full understanding of how it should work and operate in the lives of men and women, there would be much more of a unity of the faith than there is at the present time.

Paul assures us the gospel of Christ that he represented came not in word only, but in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. Writing to the Corinthian saints, he says, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." It is not simply for the man's entertainment, but for profit. Then it is to profit us all.

THE BIRTH OF THE SPIRIT

Jesus said in his day, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." This being true then, is it not just as true in our day? There must be the birth of the Spirit, as well as the birth of the water.

Again, we are told that as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. Paul says in Romans 8:

"Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

But there are many spirits gone abroad in the land, and there must be some way of distinguishing between the true and the false. The true Spirit of God is to be in the church, to be received by the membership of the church, that they may be profited. They must have this Spirit to enlighten them in order to accomplish the work necessary to be done in the church. And the Spirit is for us today as it was for the former Christians.

The statement of Peter on the day of Pentecost, as recorded in the Acts, is possibly well known to all of you. The Apostle Peter said:

"Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, [and here comes the promise] and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord, our God shall call."

That includes us. So the Spirit of God is for us, and we are to be profited by it. It comes from God.

THE OFFICE WORK OF THE SPIRIT

The Spirit of God performs a double office work, as shown by 1 John 5: 7:

"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."

And the next verse says:

"And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."

So the Spirit has its work to do in heaven and also on earth. It has a double office work to perform. No wonder that Jesus Christ said, "It is needful for me to go away. If I go not away the Comforter will not come, but if I go away, I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter, that he will abide with you forever." And then he tells some of the things that the Spirit has to do.

"It will take the things of the Father and show them unto you. Whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak, and he will show you things to come." God's mind is to be revealed to the children of men, through the operation of the Spirit of God; and it is to guide into all truth.

Paul, in speaking to the Corinthian saints, makes the statement more positively, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." This world at the present time would be in a terrible condition, if, out of all of the thousands who claim to be followers of Jesus there were no one who could say positively that he knew that Jesus was the Lord; and that can be said knowingly only as the Spirit of God reveals it to the individual.

An individual might say he believed that Jesus is the Christ, but he could not say he knew that Jesus was the Christ, without the Holy Spirit revealing to him that fact.

My mind goes back to a statement made by the Prophet Jeremiah, in the 31st chapter, wherein he says:

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord; but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."

Why? Because the Spirit of God would come into their lives, and that Spirit would reveal to them the fact that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

Jesus himself makes that statement in substance, when he says in the closing verses of John 15, "When the Spirit comes he will testify of me."

And the angel said to John the Revelator on the Isle of Patmos, that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

Thus, when we talk about the manifestations of the Spirit, we are talking about something that is of great value to the church in all ages.

Paul Instructs the Saints

Paul said to the Corinthian saints who had just come into the church, "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." No, he wanted them to be well informed. He said to them:

"Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."

Formerly they had worshiped idols, but they became members of the church, and so Paul instructed them:

"Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

The Gift of Wisdom

The word of wisdom—this is one of the first gifts mentioned by Paul. I remembered once hearing one of our leading ministers make the statement that wisdom was not only mentioned first, but that it was one of the greatest gifts, if not the greatest. At that time I was not in full sympathy with the speaker on that point, but the more I know of the work, the more I am persuaded that one of the best, if not the best gift of the Spirit, is the gift of wisdom, for without it it is almost impossible to accomplish anything for the Lord in his work. So wisdom is represented here as a gift of the Spirit.

Some people have some wisdom. There are degrees of wisdom, but the wisdom that cometh from God, the gift of wisdom, the gift of the Spirit, brings divine light and intelligence, qualifying the individual to perform a wonderful work pertaining to the great cause of God; for without wisdom it is impossible to accomplish much.

I am reminded here of a story of an elderly couple, an old man and his wife, who sent their boy John to college to get an education. The old folks had no education. The good old mother was very spiritual, however, and was trying to live close to God. She knew enough about education, or the lack of it, to make her willing to sacrifice that he son might be educated, which was very commendable in her.

When John returned home from college, and it came time to retire to bed, the old lady said, "Well, let's have a word of prayer." She bowed down to pray, and in her prayer were these words: "O Lord, you know our son John has a good eddication. Now, O Lord, give him some gumption." That's as near as she could come to her desire for John. She meant all right, just the same, and she did all right.

So it is with any wisdom, the wisdom that is divine. Yet some very well meaning people in the world and in the church do not have any more than they need.

The Gift of Knowledge

Again we read, "To another the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit." Knowledge is given by the Spirit of God. Yes, some people have knowledge, but they can have more knowledge. There are degrees of knowledge, just the same as there are degrees of wisdom, degrees of light, or degrees of heat. So God reveals knowledge to individuals.

Some people think that about the only gift there is by the Spirit is the gift of prophecy, and that isn't true. Prophecy is indeed one of the gifts of the Spirit, but it is not the only one. There are different spiritual manifestations, or ways in which the Spirit may manifest itself, so to one is given the word of knowledge by the same Spirit.

Sometimes people are made to know things from above. They receive that knowledge from God. That's the way it used to be in the days of our Lord and Master. So it is today. And so this gift of knowledge is to be enjoyed here and there as God may see fit to designate the individuals who may

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Can Two Women Ever Keep One Home?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Edith Sterling, one of the Happy Half Dozen, helping Polly in an emergency, meets Dan Russell, a handsome business friend of Brad's. What looks like a happy romance begins to grow between them. Dan is not a member of the church. Into Polly's home comes Brad's mother, critical, sharp-tongued, and gossipy. Polly faces the future with forebodings of trouble, but she feels powerless to do anything to save herself and her family. Brad, too, is restless and unhappy. Anything might happen—

Chapter 7

Problem Mosaics

EVERYONE knew that Polly Nelson was a sociable soul, that she enjoyed opening her home to her friends, and that everything in that home breathed the most natural, the most perfect brand of hospitality—grateful sharing of what you have with others. The Nelson latchstring hung out to friends at all hours of the day. Indeed the girls of the Happy Half Dozen designated the place as the "Wayside Inn." Hardly a day passed but one or two of them dropped in to see their leader, inquiring after the health of the whole family, bringing a "play pretty" for Carrol, or offering to help.

The girls knew that they were welcome to have their teas at Polly's, their regular meetings, and even to bring their dates to the Nelson fireside for little get-togethers. Polly often told them that she needed only a moment's warning, and if they did not give her that, they helped her mix up waffle batter, make cocoa, search out the grape juice in the basement, or all of them lent a hand at pulling molasses candy. The radio, games, puzzles, the piano and Polly's music, with always Polly's or Brad's smiling supervision, helped them to have a jolly time.

Elder Evans had once told Polly: "You're doing a great work among our young people, Sister Nelson."

Brad enjoyed these gatherings, too. Of him Marial Bris often remarked: "Brad Nelson is the worst tease of any man I know, and how he gets away with it and still has so many friends, I don't know." He teased the girls when they came to their regular club meeting, or he teased them before their dates. Nothing escaped his teasing notice—a new dress, a peculiar mannerism, a social inclination, something at school, or work. He was always at it.

"Makes me feel like a kid again," he frequently chuckled after their guests had gone. "They're so young and happy. I hate to see 'em disillusioned. It makes them happy to be here, Polly. Anyone could see that with half an eye. I'm glad you do it."

Polly was interested, too. There were budding romances in this little group, and she was standing watchfully by her girls.

MOST charming of the young fellows who frequented the Nelson living room, Polly thought, was Postelle Jennings, red-haired, freckled, small of stature—he measured five feet, five—but quick-witted, clever, and good-natured. Postelle got along well with all the girls, but he was the self-confessed admirer of Echo Duncan. He took her places, waited on her, endured her merciless teasings, and the two, as some of the girls laughingly dubbed them, were "Tillie and Mac" in person.

But Echo consistently refused to take him seriously. "Postelle's sweet as he can be," she once admitted to Polly when they were alone, "and I appreciate his devotion, even though sometimes it is uncomfortable, but, my dear, he's too little. He's two inches shorter than I!" Her eyes were as serious as Polly had ever seen them except once at a funeral. "And then, too, he has a brain for real thinking, and mine is nimble only for the frivolities of life."

"Nonsense, my dear. Your imagination—"

"Polly, do you think after I have gone with him on and off for two years, my imagination would still have full sway. It's true. When I try to be serious in his way, I'm bored to tears. His conversation bores me. He has studied and can talk about a thousand things I've never even heard of."

Postelle was a Graceland boy who had finished his

four years at the University of Kansas. He was a promising young architect employed by a firm in Kansas City. Echo, on the other hand, had finished William Chrisman High School and promptly gone to work to aid a needy family of little sisters and brothers.

And so, knowing them as she did, Polly was not surprised on the morning after the prayer meeting episode with her mother-in-law, to receive a telephone call from Postelle. He wanted to see her about something important. Could it be today? The anxiety of his tone stirred her to action, but there were big plans on for the rest of the day and she dared not make conflicting promises. And so she put him off until tomorrow, which had its advantages, too, for that was Mrs. Nelson's day to quilt.

"Can't you come down to lunch?" she asked. "Brad will be here, too, of course, but if there's any way I can help you, we can snatch a little time." Of course it was something about Echo, and though she generally didn't approve of third person work in romances, what was a person to do when sought out in an instance of this kind?

Ever since her high school days, people had taken Polly to their hearts as confidant and counselor. Women with recreant husbands and sons and brothers had launched their problems and troubles in the quiet sympathy of Polly's heart. Though often confused as to what she should tell them, because of her own inexperience, Polly had always done her best to comfort and advise. She liked people and was deeply interested in their joys and ills. The seemingly insufferable anguish at the loss of her own mother seemed to mellow and mature the girl Polly, and she soon turned from her own grief and loss to sympathize in the griefs and losses of others. Still—many times she had not felt herself competent to counsel people who came to her. Often she had prayed over the matter, and there had been occasions when she said: "Go to your group elder. Ask him to pray with you over it."

Meanwhile, after her telephone conversation with Postelle, Polly was feverishly at work in her kitchen. Tonight that "ravishing Mr. Russell that Edith talks so much about," as Echo designated him, was to be the Nelsons' guest, also Edith Sterling.

Dan Russell was making another business trip to Independence—Brad had winked at his wife at this news, and emphasized the word "business." Edith had blushingly admitted that she knew Dan was planning to come. He had written that he hoped "to make it soon."

"Now, sonny boy," Polly addressed Carrol who was engrossed with some building blocks in his pen, "Mother's busy today, and you must be a good boy."

"Mummie busy. Mummie busy!" chanted the child, waving a block which bore the letter "B" and the picture of a bear on it.

"Polly, the way you keep that child penned up is pitiful," protested Mrs. Nelson. "I'm going to take him into my room if you won't let me do anything to help you."

"He's quite contented there, Mother. I don't want him to get used to being always under my feet. It was a little difficult to train him to like his pen, but now that he does, please don't disturb him. And as for work, will you please see that Brad's shirt is mended, the one he tore yesterday, and those socks, too—"

"I've mended things a lot longer than you, Polly, and I always set aside one day a week to do the mending, Tuesday. That's why I didn't promise to quilt on that day. So I could stay home and do the mending after you wash on Monday. I don't believe in scattering the mending out all week!"

"But—I don't always wash on Monday."

"Well, you should," and decisively she marched away to her room.

Polly bit a trembling lip and turned back to the sink full of dishes. She would not argue or quarrel. Since keeping house for her family, she had made a practice of picking up the mending whenever she could. She never could seem to spare several hours at a time to give the mending basket; and to devote a day to it, with all the other work, was out of the question.

But the warm water, fluffy soapsuds, and shining clean dishes soon restored her good humor, and she was busy with tonight's menu. She had planned to have spare ribs and sweet potatoes, one of Brad's favorite dishes; but, of course, that had to give way to something more elaborate in view of special circumstances.

She was not a slave to the old tradition that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach, but Polly knew that most men like good, home-cooked food, and that Mr. Russell, being a traveling man, would doubly enjoy the meal. He had been very appreciative last time, but this evening, with Edith as a fellow guest, it would be even better. However, Polly was not sure that she wanted to find the way to this man's heart for her friend.

THE young lady under question was to help her as soon as school was out, though she could stay no longer than an hour, for she had to get dressed to meet her guest. Polly was glad that she had canceled a trip to the city planned for the afternoon. There were many things to be done. She would have potatoes and gravy, pork roast garnished with red baked apples, creamed peas, and mince pie. That sounded like a real man's meal.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The kitchen was strangely quiet. Something was missing. The young housewife looked about inquiringly. Carrol and his baby chatter! Where was he? The pen was empty. Though frightened for a moment, Polly understood—Mother Nelson! As she brushed past the tiny wall mirror near the clock, she caught a glimpse of herself, her face white but calm, her eyes very dark.

She knocked twice on the bedroom door before she opened it. Mrs. Nelson started half-defiantly, half-guiltily. "Well?" Carrol was exploring the contents of the wastepaper basket.

"Didn't I ask you please to leave Carrol in his pen?"

"But Polly, he gets so lonesome. He—"

"He's perfectly all right there. Come to mother, Carrol." She wanted to get away before anger made her say something she would regret.

"But there's a draft in that hall, and he'll take cold."

"Nonsense."

"Well, I'm sure if you want to kill your own child, it's none of my business," stiffly.

How the busy hours flew! It was four o'clock.

"Oh, Polly, I'm so excited!" The heightened color in Edith's cheeks would have told that had she hesitated to confess it. "This evening's going to be so thrilling—Gee! Having a date with Dan won't be like having one with the home-town boys. . . . I can't decide what to wear. Do you think my red or my brown dress would be best? What are you going to wear?"

Polly was glad that the most of the work was done. What if she had almost broken her rule about going to a lot of special pains to entertain? What if she was just a little shaky about the success of the pies? Everything would be all right, and soon she dispatched Edith homeward with a pie for her mother.

"As a matchmaker I'm sure I'd make a wonderful ditch digger," she giggled. It had been a long time since she had put so much time and elegance into preparing for company. "One would think I never had anyone to dinner in my life," she scolded, "and all this when I've decided he mustn't be too well pleased with everything."

WHAT a good-looking pair they made! Edith in her brown velvet dress just the shade of her eyes, with the soft hair framing her diminutive face. Broad-shouldered Dan, with dark, wavy hair, and deep, expressive eyes alight with humor and admiration. He was a handsome chap. Polly could not blame Echo for using the adjective "ravishing."

"Mrs. Nelson," he queried after a second helping to roast and potatoes, "may I ask if your home is the home of all wayfarers, and do you feed them such good—"

"My wife's the best cook in the world," Brad broke in, seeing his mother about to speak. Tonight she was looking unusually nice in her black dress with the fine lace at her throat, and her brown eyes twinkling.

Everyone looked happy, Polly thought. She did hope the food tasted nice. As for herself, she had no appetite.

"How did you know that pork roast was my favorite diet?" from Dan.

"Diet," scoffed Brad, "with all that double chin!"

"He hasn't a double chin," stoutly contradicted Edith. "His chin's just as good-looking as yours, Bra—" She blushed hotly.

Perhaps Polly was the only one who caught the look Dan Russel gave the girl, a glance of tenderness almost instantly concealed by a bantering grin.

"Don't worry, old man," he retorted, "the goblins will git you yet. You look plumper even than when I was here last time, and I don't blame you—with such good cooking!"

"I do feel sorry for you men who have to eat restaurant-cooked food," politely offered Mrs. Nelson.

"Doesn't it get so that it all tastes the same?" from Edith.

"Yes, for the traveling man, life is just one greasy spoon after another." But Dan's eyes laughed.

"Well," Brad dared, "you know what you can do about it." Polly's foot just couldn't quite reach Brad's shin under the table. "There are lots of pretty girls in the world longing to feed up some poor, restaurant-starved man. We have 'em in Independence."

"Do you really?" The young fellow's question was directed to Brad, but his look was given to Edith who was industriously buttering a bit of bread.

At last Polly managed to swerve the conversation away to more comfortable subjects—politics, the President-elect, business, Prohibition, and the farm problem.

"Polly, my dear," Mrs. Nelson's voice was honeyed, "I promised to run over to Sister Livingston's to pick out some quilting patterns this evening. She has some old English designs that I want. Will you excuse me?"

And the four of them were left to sit before the fire and talk. Brad tuned in on his mystery story, and called Polly to sit beside him on the lounge while they followed the dramatic actions of Sleuth Robbin and Death-dealing Pete. Like every other happily married man, Brad wanted to give one of his sex looking over matrimonial prospects a picture of happy home life. "A fellow who doesn't

What the Gospel Will Do for You

By George W. Thorburn

The epistle to the Romans is classed as first in importance among the Pauline writings. It is so placed, not because it is first in point of time, but because of its doctrinal importance, and for the reason that it is addressed to the church in the capital of the world. It is not my purpose to employ my text in the way it is generally used, for giving you an explanation of its doctrinal aspect, but rather to emphasize the reason Paul was not ashamed of it. "For it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This language implies that it required some courage to bring to the world what "to the Jews was a stumblingblock and to the Greeks foolishness." But its inherent glory as God's life-giving message to a dying world, so filled his soul, that, like his blessed Master, he "despised the shame." For it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Here and in the next verse the apostle announces the great theme of his ensuing argument: Salvation, the one overwhelming necessity of perishing men; this revealed in the gospel message; and that message so owned and honored of God as to carry, in the proclamation of it, God's own power to save every soul that embraces it, Greek and barbarian, wise and unwise.

Jeremiah, in the ninth chapter, gives us a very interesting statement in this language, "Thus saith the Lord, let not the wise man glory in his wisdom." Why? "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching [the gospel] to save them that believed." (1 Corinthians 1: 21.) In this statement Paul informs us why the wise man should not glory in his wisdom, for by the wisdom of man (or the world) God can not be found. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Don't think that these scriptures are trying to convey the thought that the man who by study of nature can tell us much by the laws governing and beautifying the many things we find in nature, knows nothing about God, for God is in all these things. To know God we must be born again, of water and the spirit. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." The man then that accepts the gospel and lives it, that Paul said was the power of God unto salvation, will be saved in the kingdom of God.

Jesus is recorded as saying, "Howbeit when the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: and he will show you things to come." I believe there are what may be called experimental truth and truth revealed. To illustrate, a young man may go to college to study medicine and surgery, and after a few years of strict application on his part he is given his diploma. When he goes out to make use of the knowledge he gained in school we would not say he knew all about the sciences of medicine and surgery, but by putting into practice the things he learned in school he comes into possession of truth that he could learn only by actual experience. So it is in a spiritual sense, when we first obeyed the gospel principles which Paul names in Hebrews 6:1: Faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands. These are the fundamental principles of the gospel that Paul said he was not ashamed of, for they are the power of God unto salvation.

Back to our text in the ninth chapter of Jeremiah we find another wonderful statement. "Neither let the mighty man glory in his might." Why? Because man can not save himself apart from God and the gospel. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." (John 1: 11.) It is true we are all sons of God by creation, but in a gospel sense we must become the sons of God by adoption. "When the fullness of the time was come; God sent forth his Son, to redeem them that were under the law, [the law that was given to Moses] that we might receive the adoption of sons, and if sons then heirs of God through Christ." (Galatians 4: 4, 5, 7.) "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (3: 26, 27.) Going back to Jeremiah again we find another very interesting statement. "Let not the rich man glory in his riches." Jesus speaks a parable: "Take heed and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." Experience has taught every man and woman both in the church and out of the church that life consists not in the material things of this life, for every day thousands are leaving them behind and they are passing on to try the realities of another world. "And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." (Luke 12: 21, see Matthew 6: 30.) In the tenth chapter of Luke we get a beautiful lesson there from one of Jesus' visits to the home of Martha and Mary.

I have often thought that our Lord and Master after holding what we would call a long series of meetings, till he got tired and weary, liked to go to the home of Mary and Martha where he could be quiet and rest. I imagine it was one of those visits that Luke has recorded. The record says, Martha received him into her house, and she began to prepare something for him to eat. Martha made complaint to Jesus about Mary not helping, when Jesus said, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things: But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Which was the good part that Jesus referred to? Let me quote it: "And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus feet and heard his word." Mary was not only interested in obtaining that which would sustain the physical man, but she wanted to sit at the feet of the great teacher to be fed with the bread that comes from above.

Some people say if God is all wise and all powerful, knows the beginning and the end, and he wants all men to be saved, why don't he stop wrongdoing? I stepped into the library at Anaconda, some time ago and picked up a magazine and went to reading; and in answer to this question I read: "All virtue consists in choosing to do right, all sin is in choosing to do wrong." One could not choose to do right unless he had power to choose to do wrong. No man can be virtuous if he has not the power to be vicious. There could not be a world of good men and good women unless they were free to become bad men and women. Man, made virtuous against his will would not be virtuous. God is stopping sin in the only way in which it is possible to stop it, by training men to stop sinning of their own accord. I think it is one of our old time songs that beautifully endorses this sentiment in the following language: "He'll call, persuade, direct man aright, bless him with wisdom, love, and light; in nameless ways be good and kind, but never force the human mind."

What will the gospel do for us? It will bring peace. "And the angel said unto them, fear not for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." (Luke 2: 10.) "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace." (John 16: 33.)

All the world is in search of peace; every heart that ever beat has sought for peace and many have been the methods employed to secure it. Some have thought to find peace in political prominence, but whether office comes by birth, as in a monarchial government, or by election, as in a republican government, it does not bring peace. I am glad that our heavenly Father did not make the peace of the human heart depend upon the accumulation of wealth, or upon the securing of social or political distinction, for in either case, but few could have enjoyed it. But when he made peace the reward of a conscience void of offense toward God and man, he put it within the reach of all.

Christ is prophetically called the Prince of Peace, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, his name shall be called Wonderful, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." (Isaiah 9: 6.)

Christ deserves to be called the Prince of Peace because he has given us a measure of greatness which promotes peace. "But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them, but it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Matthew 20: 25-28.) Christ has given us a measure in this lesson which promotes peace. True service is a measure of greatness; it always has been true; it is true today and it always will be true, that he is greatest who does the most good.

The gospel will increase our love for that which is lovable, and make us hate that we once loved. Love is the first moving principle in all good acts, and Paul says without it we are but "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." This same great man, in his letter to the Romans, and at the closing scene of an active life we find him making this statement, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Romans 8: 38.)

The gospel brings to us that more abundant life. "Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (2 Timothy 1: 10.) Again, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. For the law (gospel law) of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Romans 8: 1, 2.)

The Gift of the Holy Ghost

(From the Times and Seasons)

WE BELIEVE in the gift of the Holy Ghost being enjoyed now as much as it was in the apostles' days. We believe that it is necessary to make and to organize the priesthood—that no man can be called to fill any office in the ministry without it. We also believe in prophecy, in tongues, in visions, and in revelations, in gifts, and in healings; and that these things can not be enjoyed without the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We believe that holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and that holy men in these days speak by the same principle. We believe in its being a comforter and a witness-bearer—"that it brings things past to our remembrance, leads us into all truth, and shows us of things to come." We believe that "no man can know that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost." We believe in it in all its fullness and power, and greatness and glory; but whilst we do this, we believe in it rationally, reasonably, consistently, and scripturally; and not according to the wild vagaries, foolish notions, and traditions of men.

The human family are very apt to run to extremes, especially in religious matters; and hence people in general, either want some miraculous display, or they will not believe in the gift of the Holy Ghost at all. If an elder lays his hands upon a person, it is thought by many that the person must immediately rise and speak in tongues and prophesy; this idea is gathered from the circumstance of Paul laying his hands upon certain individuals who had been previously (as they stated) baptized unto John's baptism; which, when he had done, they "spake with tongues and prophesied." Phillip, also, when he had preached the gospel to the inhabitants of the city of Samaria, sent for Peter and John, who, when they came, laid their hands upon them for the gift of the Holy Ghost, for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; and when Simon Magus saw, that through the laying on of the apostles' hands, the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money that he might possess the same power.—Acts. viii. These passages are considered by many as affording sufficient evidence for some miraculous, visible manifestation, whenever hands are layed on for the gifts of the Holy Ghost.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is imparted by the laying on of hands by those in authority; and that the gift of tongues, and also the gift of prophecy, are gifts of the spirit, and are obtained through that medium; but then to say that men always prophesied and spoke in tongues when they had the imposition of hands, would be to state that which is untrue, contrary to the practice of the apostles, and at variance with holy writ; for Paul says, "to one is given the gift of tongues; to another the gift of prophecy; and to another the gift of healing." And again, "do all prophesy? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?" evidently shewing that all did not possess the several gifts; but that one received one gift and another received another gift; all did not prophesy; all did not speak in tongues; all did not work miracles; but all did receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; sometimes they spake in tongues and prophesied in the apostles' days, and sometimes they did not.

The same is the case with us also in our administrations, while more frequently there is no manifestation at all that is visible to the surrounding multitude, this will appear plain when we consult the writings of the apostles, and notice their proceedings in relation to this matter. Paul, in 1st Cor. xii., says, "Now concerning the spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." It is evident from this that some of them were ignorant in relation to these matters or they would not need instruction. Again, in the xiv.c., he says, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." It is very evident from these scriptures that many of them had not spiritual gifts, where was the necessity of Paul telling them to follow after them? and it is as evident that they did not all receive those gifts by the imposition of hands, for they as a church had been baptized and confirmed by the laying on of hands; and yet to a church of this kind, under the immediate inspection and superintendence of the apostles, it was necessary for Paul to say "follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy"; evidently showing that those gifts were in the church, but not enjoyed by all in their outward manifestations.

But supposing the gifts of the spirit were, immediately upon the imposition of hands, enjoyed by all in their fullness and power, the skeptic would still be as far from receiving any testimony, except upon a mere casualty, as before; for all the gifts of the spirit are not visible to the natural vision or understanding of man, indeed very few of them are. We read that "Christ ascended into heaven and gave gifts unto men; and he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors, and teachers."—Eph. iv.

The church is a compact body, and composed of different members, and is strict-analagous to the human system; and Paul, after speaking of the different gifts, says, "Now ye are the body of the Christ, and each one members in particular; and God hath set some in the church; first apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues; do all interpret?" —It is evident that they do not, yet are they all members of the one body; all members of the natural body: are not the eye, the ear, the head, or the hand? yet the eye can not say to the ear, I have no need of thee, nor the head to foot I have no need of thee; they are all so many component parts in the perfect machine—the one body—and if one member suffers, the whole of the members suffer with it; and if one member rejoice, all the rest are honoured with it.

These, then, are all gifts; they came from God; they are all the gifts of the Holy Ghost; they are what Christ ascended into heaven to impart, and yet how few of them could be known by the generalty of men. Peter and John were apostles yet the Jewish court scourged them as impostors. Paul was both an apostle and a prophet, yet they stoned him, and put him into prison. The people knew nothing about it, although he had in possession the gift of the Holy Ghost. Our Saviour was "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows," yet so far from the people knowing him, they said he was Beelzebub, and crucified him as an impostor. Who could point out a pastor, a teacher, or an evangelist by their appearance; yet had they the gift of the Holy Ghost.

But to come to the other members of the church and examine the gifts as spoken of by Paul, and we shall find that the world can in general know nothing about them, and that there is but one or two that could be immediately known, if they were all poured out immediately upon the imposition of hands. 1 Cor. xii., Paul says, "There are diversities of gifts, yet the same spirit; and there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord; and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestations of the spirit is given unto every man to profit withall. For to one is given, by the spirit, the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge, by the same spirit; to another faith, by the same spirit; to another the gifts of healing, by the same spirit; to another the workings of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning spirits; to another the divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the selfsame spirit, dividing to each man severally as he will." There are several gifts mentioned here, yet which of them all could be known by an observer at the imposition of hands? The word of wisdom, and the word of knowledge, are as much gifts as any other, yet if a person possessed both of these gifts, or received them by the imposition of hands, who would know it? Another might receive the gift of faith, and they would be as ignorant of it. Or suppose a man had the gift of healing or power to work miracles, that would not then be known; it would require time and circumstances to call these gifts into operation. Suppose a man had the discerning of spirits, who would be the wiser for it? Or if he had the interpretation of tongues, unless some one spoke in an unknown tongue he of course would have to be silent.

There are only two gifts that could be made visible, the gift of tongues and the gift of prophecy. These are things that are the most talked about, and yet if a person spoke in an unknown tongue, according to Paul's testimony, he would be a "barbarian to those present." They would say that it was gibberish; and if he prophesied they would call it nonsense. The gift of tongues is the smallest gift, perhaps of the whole, and yet it is one that is the most sought after, so that according to the testimony of the scriptures, and the manifestations of the spirit in ancient days, very little could be known about it by the surrounding multitude, except on some extraordinary occasion as on the day of Pentecost. The greatest, the best, and the most useful gifts would be known nothing about an observer. It is true that man might prophesy, which is a great gift, and one that Paul told the people—the church—to seek after and to covet, rather than to speak in tongues; but what does the world know about prophesying? Paul says, that it, "serveth only to those that believe."

The manifestations of the gift of the Holy Ghost, the ministering of angels, or the development of power, majesty, or glory of God, were very seldom manifested publicly, and that generally to the people of God, as to the Israelites, but most generally when angels have come, or God has revealed himself, it has been to individuals in private—in their chamber—in the wilderness or fields, and that generally without noise or tumult. The angel delivered Peter out of prison in the dead of night—came to Paul unobserved by the rest of the crew—appeared to Mary and Elizabeth without knowledge of others—spoke to John the Baptist whilst the people around were ignorant of it. When Elisha saw the chariots of Israel and the horseman thereof, it was unknown to others. When the Lord appeared to Abraham, it was at his tent door. When the angels went to Lot, no person knew them but himself, which was the case probably with Abraham and his wife. When the Lord appeared to Moses, it was in the burning bush, in the tabernacle, or on the mountain top. When Elijah was taken up in a chariot of fire, it was unobserved by the world; and when he was in the cleft of a rock, there was loud thunder, but the Lord was not in the thunder, there was an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and then there was a still small voice, which was the voice of the Lord saying, "what dost thou here Elijah?"

The Lord can not always be known by the thunder of his voice, by the display of his glory, or by the manifestation of his power; and those that are the most anxious to see these things are the least prepared to meet them; and were the Lord to manifest his powers as he did to the children of Israel, such characters would be the first to say "let not the Lord speak any more, lest we his people die."

receive and enjoy that gift; and a wonderful gift it is—gift of knowledge.

That doesn't mean that individuals should not study, should not read, and try to acquaint themselves with histories and countries, and so on. No. God expects us to study, and to qualify ourselves as best we can; but in addition there comes the gift of knowledge that God gives here and there to whomsoever he may bestow it upon.

THE GIFT OF FAITH

To another faith by the same Spirit. Yes, there's difference in faith. There are degrees of faith, just the same as with the other gifts. The apostles said not only that they had some faith, but they said, "Lord, increase our faith." They needed more faith.

Faith is a wonderful gift; a gift of the Spirit: faith—belief in God—belief in Christ—the Holy Spirit—ah, more faith to believe in the written word of God. Some people are subject to doubt, and that is why Paul said, "Our gospel came not in word only"; but it did come in word; don't forget that; and we have the word to guide us, and to direct us. We must not forget that God has given us the word, but that is not all he has given to us.

Paul says in 1 Corinthians 3:

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's works shall be made manifest: . . . of what sort it is."

We must all preach the word of God—the gospel of Jesus Christ. That is what the world is hungering for today. That is our mission in the world. That is our reason as a church for being in existence. If we set aside the message of truth, the gospel of Jesus Christ, in its fullness, then we have no right to exist more than any other church. Our message is to declare the gospel of Jesus Christ unto the world.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Gift of Healing

"To another the gift of healing by the same Spirit." Recently in the papers there has been a great ado about the gift of healing. Why, that's nothing strange. Ever since the beginning of this Restoration, in 1830, the faith of the people has been in the gift of healing.

It was taught, too, in the time of the New Testament, and in the days of Moses. When his sister was very much afflicted, Moses prayed and said, "O Lord, heal her now." He had faith in the gift of healing. That is our faith.

But I want to say this: there are many of us who live beneath our privileges. Many blessings there are that we might receive and enjoy that we do not enjoy because we do not contend for them as much as we should. Sometimes we do not ask enough; we do not pray enough. Sometimes we do not have enough faith. We ought to fast sometimes, and pray, in order to get these special blessings, the blessings of healing. I know many who have been blessed with these wonderful gifts.

We have known people who profess to be religious, and haven't been taught as we have. It is their misfortune. They may be just as honest as we are. They may not have had their attention called to this special gift of healing as provided in the word of God. Yet it is here, and to be enjoyed by those who have walked the way God has appointed.

It is no wonder, then, that James says:

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil, in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

The Gift of Miracles

To another the working of miracles; another gift of the Spirit, or manifestation. "Why," says one, "I thought the day of miracles was past." Oh, no, it is nothing very strange if a miracle is wrought. Some people say it is the Devil. They seem to have more faith in the Devil than in God. They think he can work miracles, but that God has gone out of business.

There is one thing that comes to me very forcibly by way of comparison; the evil spirit is performing the same kind of work in the world now as he ever did. When men and women are possessed of the evil spirit, they will commit all manner of sin: lying, stealing, murder, adultery, drunkenness, swearing, and profanity. In everything in the line of sin, the evil spirit manifests itself today, just the same as it used to do.

That being true, why isn't it just as logical to say that the good Spirit, God's Spirit, will manifest itself today just the same as it used to? If not, why not? We know that the evil power works just the same now as it formerly did.

Yes, and we read more than that. We also know if we have come into the kingdom of our God—that close relationship provided in the gospel of Jesus Christ—we know that his Spirit, the Spirit of God, bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. We have the knowledge, the evidence, the testimony. To this end Jesus Christ laid down the proposition when here, He that will do the will of the Father "shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

Yes, we will have the testimony as to whether this is his church, if we will always do the right thing. Every man and woman is under the necessity of living in harmony with the light of the Spirit, however, in order that each may be continually in touch with God.

You can grieve the Spirit after you receive it. We are commanded by Paul, or he commanded the Ephesian saints, rather, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." You can grieve the Spirit. How? By doing things contrary to it. We should avoid doing anything like that.

Well, here is the gift of miracles. Let me read another statement on miracles. In the latter part of this same chapter, 1 Corinthians 12: 28, Paul says:

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."

Who has a right to say that God hasn't the right to put miracles in his church? And who has a right to take them out? Here is a positive statement that miracles were placed in the church. So, then, we have a right to expect to find miracles in the church.

The Gift of Prophecy

"To another prophecy"—a splendid thing. Wonderful indeed, the true gift of prophecy. Through it the people of God have been encouraged and strengthened and built up in the faith. Men and women need the gift of prophecy.

There are men and women living so close to God that they are worthy of receiving and enjoying the manifestations of his Holy Spirit. As the Apostle Peter said, This gift did not come of old by the will of man. No, it is a gift from God. God spoke, as he willed, through holy men and women. They prophesied through the influence of the Holy Spirit. I am glad of that. That is my belief. I am sure that gift is enjoyed in the church today, and it is a wonderful gift. As Paul said in 1 Corinthians 14, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." It is a wonderful gift, and one enjoyed by many of our people in the world today.

The Gift of Discernment

I come to another, the discerning of spirits. A wonderful gift also. A gift to prevent us from being deceived. Yes, there are many gifts abroad in the land, many spirits, and it must necessarily be that we have the discerning of these spirits, in order that we may know which are true and which are false, that we be not imposed upon. Sometimes it is easy to detect a false spirit; at other times it is not. Sometimes a false spirit seeks to counterfeit the true; and sometimes many are deceived thereby. So there is a necessity for the discerning of spirits.

Tongues and Interpretation

Diversities of tongues. That's very essential, too, since there are so many people in the world today claiming this gift; and God has at different times used the gift to bring about his purposes among men. We have it in the Bible, and also in our day and time, and a splendid gift it is when properly used.

The gift is used that God may reveal something with it. That was the way it was on the day of Pentecost, when the servants of God were moved upon by the Holy Spirit, and spoke in seventeen different languages. The representatives there of all these nations heard the gospel, or the manifestation of the Spirit through this gift, as revealed to them in their own language.

I wish to say here that when a person speaks through the gift of prophecy, or the gift of tongues, it is intended to bring light and understanding to some one.

Interpretation of tongues. No need to go into that. If we have tongues, we know we must have interpretation.

All these different gifts, Paul says, work through the one and selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. That is, God will see that all these gifts and manifestations are enjoyed by receiving and accepting the one Spirit of God.

So may God help us in the study of his word, to search the truth of Christ, and to know how we may expect to enjoy the manifestations and blessings of the Spirit, which are just as essential today as they were in the former age of the world, and which are promised the faithful.

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces, and took the changes and chances of this mortal life like men, facing rough and smooth alike, as it came.—Kingsley.

The Gathering of Israel

A Letter to the Editors

Editors Herald: The Herald has come to our home as a welcome visitor for more than forty-nine years. Each week it comes with its editorials, letters, special articles, etc., keeping us in touch with the membership of the church, instructing us in righteousness, and giving spiritual food.

Its editorials are of first interest because from these we get the views of the authorities of the church upon the live issues of the day. Many special articles are also full of good things, and the letters are of interest because by them we come in touch with kindred souls. The Herald is a worth-while paper, and should be carefully read by all members of the church and their friends.

This week we are specially interested in an article under the head "Of General Interest," on "The Destiny of British Israel," by Mrs. L. E. Hills, of which the editor says: "A number of our people have become interested in a theory, advocated here and abroad by organized groups, that the Great Pyramid was built with prophetic significance, and that the present ruling house of England is a lineal descendant of the kings of ancient Israel."

After reading the above statement we read with care the article and failed to find the Great Pyramid mentioned. We found many scriptural references, and some historical and legendary data, and found the writer following more or less closely lines already laid down by others. The subject itself is of absorbing interest for it follows closely the promises made to Abraham and his seed; the establishing of the throne of David; the separating of Israel into two kingdoms; the dispersion of Israel, and their promised restoration in the latter days.

The Great Pyramid may have a bearing upon the subject, but if it were never mentioned, or considered, the question of the predictions of the prophets concerning the restoration of Israel in the latter days would still be a vital one with the student of the scriptures.

It should be of interest to all Latter Day Saints that one of the fundamentals of our faith is, "We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes. That Zion will be built upon this continent. That Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisaic glory."

It may be news to some that the "British-Israel-World Federation," with headquarters at London, England, has a membership of more than one million members, with branch organizations in Australia, South Africa, Ireland, Canada, the United States, and possibly in other countries. Their writers are of the higher type of scholarly attainment. Their literature and "The National Message to the British and All Anglo-Saxon Peoples," bring to their readers a wonderful message of hope concerning the working out of God's purposes in the earth in the latter days.

We are seeking to build Zion on this continent. We ought also to believe and teach the literal gathering of Israel and the restoration of the Ten Tribes. This was taught in the early days of the restoration. It seems to be a neglected subject of late years. Surely we are willing to accept the testimony of the angel Gabriel concerning the coming of Christ: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1: 32, 33.)

Sometime ago the writer prepared a work giving a brief biographical, historical and prophetical account of God's dealing with man, particularly as touching the promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their seed; the establishment of the throne of David; the division of the kingdom of Israel under Rehoboam; the promised restoration culminating in the glory of Israel and the enlightenment of the Gentiles under the reign of Christ according to the scriptures.

Being thoroughly engrossed with the subject, and looking forward to the fulfillment of the promises of Jehovah as made through the prophets, he was led to compose the following hymn as a song of triumph prophetic of the time when Christ shall reign as "King of Kings, and Lord of Lords." (Revelation 19: 10) and when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Isaiah 11: 9.)

Let all Creation bow;
The Lord Jehovah reigns.
His sovereign sway does now
Bring balm for every pain.
The year of Jubilee has come.
And Israel now is gathered home.

Ye men of earth give ear:
Nor hear His voice in vain.
Let all the nations fear,
And turn to God again.
The year of Jubilee has come,
And Israel now is gathered home.

The Prince of Peace shall come,
And reign on David's throne:
He'll gather Israel home,
And justice will be done.
The year of Jubilee has come,
And Israel now is gathered home.

The reign of peace extends
To all the earth abroad:
And all created things
Shall worship Christ the Lord.
The year of Jubilee has come,
And Israel now is gathered home.

The Lord Jehovah reigns:
His throne exalted see:
And Nature in her pains,
Shall bring the Jubilee.
The year of Jubilee has come,
And Israel now is gathered home.

Then shall wars for ever cease:
The reign of peace will come:
Christ will bring to all release,
And gather Israel home.

Dan was an ardent conversationalist. He had traveled four years and could tell of people and places and amusing incidents in a way that gripped the interest of his hearers. He knew something of architecture, and commented on the fine lines of the Adam mantel of Polly and Brad's fireplace. He entranced Edith with college tales. He was in fact a charming guest. Edith's face told that she thought this, too. The girl followed Dan's every expression and action as one hypnotized. She was strangely silent, and silence in Edith was not a good sign. Polly sighed to herself. She was afraid Edith was falling in love with this young fellow of whom she knew little, and, after all, it might prove difficult to persuade the girl that Graceland was more important at nineteen than a husband.

("Ole Marster," by B. B. Valentine.

The individual who finds satisfaction in sunsets, sunrises, in the beautiful skies, in the mountains, or at the seaside, unless these things make him more God-like and more considerate of his fellowmen is guilty of worshiping idols.—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "This Do and Thou Shalt Live," preached at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Radio Audience Enjoys Book of Mormon Reading

By L. B. M.

For many months hundreds, perhaps thousands of people, have participated in the seven o'clock worship service conducted over KMBC by Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Independence, Missouri, and Paul N. Craig, musical director, commonly known as "John and Paul." Though this service is but fifteen minutes long, it includes organ music (familiar hymns), Scripture reading, brief comments, and an earnest prayer.

All over the central part of the United States, and beyond the central boundaries, too, people have worshiped with John and Paul, as they prepared for the day. The housewife in her kitchen preparing breakfast for the family, has listened, hummed the hymns with the organ, and bowed her head in prayer at the close of the service. The tradesman, the office girl, the school-teacher, the farmer have heard and taken up their day's work with new zeal. The sick and shut-ins, too, have been blessed. And the dying? No, I am not exaggerating when I say they also have heard, and been helped—it has been one of their last and closest links with the church.

Some time ago Brother Sheehy completed reading the New Testament to his morning audience, and began the reading of the Book of Mormon. Here are excerpts from letters he has lately received in response to his reading, to show you the wide area over which his talks are heard, and give you an idea of the appreciation with which his morning devotions are received. Most of these communications are addressed to "Paul and John," KMBC Studio, Independence, Missouri.

From Alva, Oklahoma:

"To say that I enjoy the devotional service each morning is not expressing half the good I receive. If I but hear your prayer, it starts the day off beautifully. I get more enjoyment in reading the Book of Mormon than any other book. . . . I hope and feel sure there are great numbers getting this service."

From Polson, Montana:

"We are receiving your early morning programs. Come rather early out here, but we hear you nearly every morning. There are but a few of us church members here. Brother F. L. Casey is our speaker. We hold services and Sunday school every Sunday. We are thankful to be able to hear from headquarters. Makes us feel nearer home. May God bless you in your work, for it is doing much good."

From Detroit, Michigan:

"We enjoy your morning programs very much, especially the talks on the Book of Mormon."

From Hiteman, Iowa:

"I am taking time from my household duties to let you know I enjoy your reading every morning. I enjoy the reading of the New Testament, and I am more than enjoying the reading of the Book of Mormon. The organ music is inspiring. Those hymns help me so much. . . . I hope some one will be converted to the Book of Mormon by your efforts, because it is a wonderful book."

From a church family in Wagner, South Dakota:

"We worship with you every morning, Brother Sheehy, and doubt if you can realize how much we enjoy the service. Isolated as we are, until we got the radio at Christmas, we did not know what it was to hear a sermon connected with our church. The radio has meant much to us, for now we hear you, and bow in prayer with you every morning.

. . . We hear all the church services over KMBC except the one at eleven o'clock Sunday morning. We are at Sunday school at that hour. Yes, there are six families of us, and we have Sunday school and a social evening every two weeks. Although there are only a few of us, in December, we sent over thirty-nine dollars in tithes, Christmas Offering, and sacrifice to the Bishop."

And from Independence comes the assurance:

"Glad to hear your voice again this morning, Brother Sheehy. We never miss your seven o'clock program of morning worship. Worship with you helps to start the day right. So when you receive letters and cards from far away, remember that right here in Independence, we appreciate what you are doing."

People are writing in their questions concerning the Book of Mormon—What is it? Where can one secure it? Some living as near the headquarters of the church as Kansas City, Missouri, confess that they never heard of the book until they tuned in on the morning worship by "Paul and John."

Faith Strengthened by Sign

By Mrs. Harry Richardson

I was reared in the creed of the Presbyterian Church, the church in which my forefathers had believed for generations. Therefore I was quite satisfied until 1925, when that church became a United Church with the Methodists. That act of the church set me thinking and hunting up scripture to find what commandments Christ gave for the building of his church.

I studied prayerfully, visiting different churches, examining their creeds, dogmas, and ceremonies. I studied one winter at the Toronto Bible College, thinking I might find what I wanted there. I enjoyed the fellowship of the school, became better acquainted with my Bible, and came to the conclusion that the doctrine of the Baptist Church (that is the doctrine of the old Baptists) was worth considering.

Immediately I started to attend that church, asking in my prayers that I might be directed in a way that was pleasing to God, for I recognized by that time that none of these church doctrines were in accordance with the teachings of Christ. However, I did not know of any church that came nearer, so I decided to be baptized into that church. I set the date for the beginning of June, but I was filled with anxiety. I wondered if I was doing right. My sincere desire was to do right in the eyes of God.

In the last week of May I fell ill and in a most unexpected way the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was made known to me. That incident is a testimony in itself which I will give at some other time.

You may imagine my delight when I found just what I had been looking for. I was intensely interested, and read all the church literature that was loaned to me. At times, however, I was assailed with doubt. I had had so much to do with man-made doctrines that I was afraid if I accepted the teachings of this church I would not be doing right; all this in spite of the fact that I was almost sure of the divinity of the church.

In one of my doubtful spells, I covenanted with God in prayer. I asked if this was the true church of Christ, that some member of it present me with a gift of one or more of

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Prayer and Testimony

the church books. I waited for those books, but at that time they did not come. However, I was given such assurance of the divinity of the church that all my doubts vanished. After studying the doctrine of the church prayerfully, I received a degree of enlightenment sufficient, I thought, to ask for baptism. Ten days after my baptism I received in the mail a gift of a Doctrine and Covenants; a few weeks after, I received a gift of the Book of Mormon, and a few weeks later still, I received a gift of the Inspired Version of the Bible. This was a complete gift—the three standard books of the church.

Sometimes when I look back I feel sorry that my faith was not sufficiently strong without my asking for a sign from heaven. I have been seriously admonished concerning my lack of faith and have pondered over the words of Alma 16: 137-144, Book of Mormon:

"Yea, he that truly humbleth himself and repenteth of his sins, and endureth to the end, the same shall be blessed; yea, much more blessed than they who are compelled to be humble, because of their exceeding poverty; therefore blessed are they who humble themselves without being compelled to be humble; or rather, in other words, Blessed is he that believeth in the word of God, and is baptized without stubbornness of heart; yea, without being brought to know the word, or even compelled to know, before they will believe. Yea, there are many who do say, If thou wilt show unto us a sign from heaven, then we shall know of a surety; then we shall believe. Now I ask, Is this faith? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for if a man knoweth a thing, he hath no cause to believe, for he knoweth it. And now how much more cursed is he that knoweth the will of God and doeth it not, than he that only believeth, or only hath cause to believe, and falleth into transgression? Now of this thing, ye must judge. Behold, I say unto you, that it is on the one hand, even as it is on the other; and it shall be unto every man according to his work. And now as I said concerning faith: Faith, is not to have a perfect knowledge of things; therefore if ye have faith, ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true. And now, behold, I say unto you; and I would that ye should remember that God is merciful unto all who believe on his name: therefore he desireth, in the first place, that ye should believe, yea, even on his word."

I have received many blessings since I obeyed the word of God, and I sincerely desire an interest in the prayers of my readers, that I may continue worthy of the watchcare I have experienced.

Missionary Opportunity

Mrs. Grace Goodrich and her family, of Klamath Falls, Oregon, would like to have an elder or missionary of the Reorganized Church visit them. Sister Goodrich writes:

"There are quite a few Saints living at Klamath Falls, about fifteen grown people and ten children, and we have not seen or heard one of our elders for years. My house is always open to our missionaries, and I believe there are many here who would accept the gospel if they could hear it preached. If it is God's will that a work be done, I pray that we may have an elder sent here."

Saints' Prayers Are Answered

By M. R. Shoemaker

Last summer I sent in a name for the prayers of the Saints, and this person wrote me a few weeks ago that she was healed. I am telling you this so that you will know such requests printed in the Herald are not in vain.

Here I would ask the prayers of the church for Mrs. M. R. Shoemaker. Four weeks ago she fell ill with the flu and was sick one week when my mother, lacking two months of being ninety-five years old, became sick. She died in six days. Mrs. Shoemaker tried to wait upon her in her brief illness and suffered a relapse, the disease settling in her ear. She has suffered severely. Her eardrum has burst, and the doctor is using his skill, but we know of a Physician who is greater than all others, and who answers prayers.

Gospel Message a Challenge

By Joseph Pichler

A few years ago when I heard the gospel for the first time, I thought it more wonderful than anything I had ever heard. Its beautiful message was as if some one were calling from a distance with a voice sweet and full of melody. It was like a star in the distance that beckoned me on to new life, and new hope. This message came nearer and nearer, "On earth peace, good will toward men."

To me this is the sweetest message ever heard by man. It brings peace and joy to all those whose hearts are open to receive it. It is the message of the beautiful things of life.

A flower through its fragrance and beauty breathes peace and joy.

But such a message also carries a challenge. It requires preparations on the part of mankind, a growing into the likeness of Christ. This preparation is necessary before God can use men as his instruments, to bring and establish the kingdom of God here on earth so that peace and good will shall reign.

I desire with you to be worthy to publish that peace on the earth.

Request Prayers

Sister Patsy Peevy, Route 2, Brewton, Alabama, has been sorely afflicted for three months. Her head, throat, and ears have troubled her greatly. She desires the prayers of the faithful, that she may be healed and given strength to carry on in the gospel. She also seeks prayers for her son who suffers from heart attacks.

Sister M. S. Holt, of Oswald, West Virginia, desires the prayers of the church that she and her family will remain strong in the faith and hope of latter days. She is suffering severely from rheumatism, and desires prayers that her physical condition may be improved. She bears a strong testimony to the goodness of God to her and her loved ones.

Sister Emily C. Hillman, North Platte, Nebraska, Tryon Route, asks the prayers of her brothers and sisters. Her eyesight is very poor, and she has other physical afflictions. Her faith in God's power to heal is strong.

QUESTION TIME

Can you suggest any book or reading about the gospel for the use of Christian friends?

It is not easy to suggest a work equally suitable for all, and what might interest one would not attract others in some instances. You can supply your friends' needs better if you learn their religious convictions and interests first, then select such topics as appear to touch these interests, adding to them as the needs of the individual require. The principle of conversion requires that one be induced to change, and the change in each instance depends upon the errors that may need to be corrected, willingly.

For those who know little of our message, perhaps the Angel Message tracts would be best in most cases. These can be varied as circumstances require by any of the following titles: Why I Became a Latter Day Saint, The name of the Church, A remarkable church with an Unusual Message, A Glimpse at the Government of God, An Open Letter to the Clergy. For more comprehensive books, one or more of the following may be used: The Restoration Movement and the Latter Day Saints, Old Jerusalem Gospel, Voice of Warning, With the Church in an Early Day. You should obtain a catalog from the Herald Publishing House, and select any other topics your friend may particularly need.

When was Paul called to be an apostle? Did he previously hold any office?

If the chronology of Bishop Ussher be correct, Paul must have been called to the work of an apostle about 45 A. D. The account of this call is stated in the following words:

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13: 2.

The apostolic office is not specifically named in this text, but in the next chapter of Acts it states that they were apostles (verse 14). Immediately after this inspired call Paul and Barnabas were ordained by laying on of hands, and following this event came the recognition of miraculous power, in which Elymas the sorcerer was stricken with blindness through the words of Paul. Some have thought that it was as successor to James the brother of John that Paul received his office, for James had been martyred but a short time before (12: 2).

There is evidence that prior to his apostleship Paul had exercised some office in the church, for soon after his conversion he preached in Damascus (9: 20), and was later sent by the disciples to Tarsus (9: 30). It was there that Barnabas found him, and they went together to Antioch and preached there for a year prior to their call to the office of apostle (11: 25, 26). It is uncertain what office they had previously held, but they are mentioned as of the prophets and teachers at Antioch (13: 1). It is safe therefore to say that Paul had been either a prophet or a teacher during his ministry at Antioch.

Were the Seventy chosen by Christ before the apostles, or afterward?

In the ninth chapter of Luke we are informed that Jesus called his twelve disciples together and sent them to preach. After this the apostles returned and recited their experiences to the Master. Three of these apostles were with him in the mountain when Moses and Elias appeared to them (9: 28-32), and afterward he sent some of them before him into a Samaritan village. It was after all these events that Jesus appointed seventy other disciples and sent them by two's into various places where he would come (10: 1). It is clear therefore that the Seventy were not chosen until some time after the Twelve had been ordained.

To what do you attribute the wonderful growth of Christian teachings?

First and chief of all, I would name the spiritual power of Christ and his message. Both Jesus and his teachings are divine, and this divinity inspires the soul that seeks the higher life. It even moves the soul to repentance and conversion, and it bears witness of the truth in such an indelible manner that one can never forget it. Next I would name the spiritual power of his disciples, for through conversion and consecration they have power also with God and men, and this has been a mighty influence in the world. The message of Jesus is adapted to the highest needs of men, and this has drawn millions to him. An essential reason for the growth of Christianity is the fact that it transforms the lives of men and gives them new vision of the purpose of life, and thus uplifts all around them.

Brooklyn, New York

One Hundred Per Cent for the Church

The activities of this branch are being very much stimulated by the definite aim set before them by the able pastor, Brother Ephraim Squire. Associated with him as counselors are Brothers William Nichols, sr., and Paul N. Belleisle. Under the supervision of these three men, the priesthood is well organized, and is anxious to carry into effect the program given by the General Conference of 1932. The local budget has been made for the year, and in it workers have planned a definite amount to be sent to the general church each month.

The church school, under the supervision of Paul N. Belleisle, with Glenn Parrish and Fisher Carlile as his associates, is being organized so that every member of the church may be reached and made to feel the need of being present in the hour when the church meets for study.

Brother Harry Moorman has been chosen corresponding secretary, and his especial job is to seek after the absent ones.

Henry Schaffer was chosen secretary of church school, Walter Suydam, musical director, and Hazel Konstantin, organist.

Sister Ethel Squire has charge of the children in the church school and junior church. Associated with her as teachers are, Sister Adeline Harris, Ada Skank and Ethel Parrish. The work they are doing with the children is of the highest type of training. The children's schoolroom has been transformed from a dismal, gloomy place to a bright, colorful room. This makes little hearts happy. A number of beautiful pictures of Jesus have also been hung on the wall. Sister Squire approaches her work with a full understanding that the children of today will be the church of tomorrow.

Sister Kathryn Nichols, supervisor of the adult division, is a talented and capable director. The different groups working with Sister Nichols are: The Luncheon Club, with Sister Gene Deane as its leader, meeting every two weeks at the different homes for luncheon and social functions.

The Needlework Guild, Sister Eliza Squire, leader, is busy working on plans made for the first three months of the year.

The Patroness group, Sister Anna Box, leader, have as their purpose the furnishing and maintaining of a room in the new Sanitarium. This is to be a memorial to the late Sister Ella Squire, who was in charge of this work here.

Sister Nichols is also arranging for a literary club to meet once a week for study.

The priesthood is planning a study class in this group.

On January 19, the young people met at the home of Brother and Sister Howard Mousley, to consider the young people's council. They organized, planned their work, and chose for their leaders, Harry Moorman, president; Dorothy Potts, vice president, and Gladys Harris, secretary-treasurer. There will be more to report later from this group.

The members looked forward to and planned for their district conference, which convened in Brooklyn, February 11 and 12.

As a branch, Brooklyn stands with the church one hundred per cent. The Saints send out to everyone their wishes and prayers for a happier year in 1933.

Manchester, England

Beresford Road Church

Members of this church and school held their annual tea party in the schoolroom adjoining the church on New Year's Eve, the most successful event of this kind in many years. The occasion was sponsored by members of the school under the supervision of the director, Elder Abel Hall, and the committee worked industriously, preparing and decorating. Outstanding among the decorations was a large Christmas tree in the center of the platform, literally covered with presents for all.

The number of guests exceeded expectations there being over one hundred present, including Patriarch W. H. Greenwood and several Saints from North Manchester Church, a few from James Street Church, and a large contingent from Stockport Church with their pastor, Elder Black. This branch had passed a resolution to join the Beresford Road party, and their smiling faces added to the joy of the occasion.

There was food for all even if the caterers were forced to hurry to keep pace with the appetites of the guests.

Following tea, a short program was given some of the items of which were two anthems by students of Beresford Road School; two songs by Miss Betty Baty who played her own piano accompaniment; a solo by Elder S. F. Mather; a duet number by S. F. Mather and William Hall, and a recitation by Elder Black. Elder James Schofield, of James Street Church, was the chairman.

Then followed the awarding of book prizes earned by members who regularly attended school. These were presented by the pastor of the branch, Elder W. R. Armstrong. Presents were from the Christmas tree, a novel and amusing method of distribution being employed. The school director personally presented each of his pupils a beautifully colored almanac for 1933. Games were played, and at the close of the evening Patriarch Greenwood expressed his gratitude at the Spirit of the Master present during the evening.

An abundance of this Spirit was poured out upon the worshipers at the services on the day following, New Year's Day. The sacrament service was blessed with this spirit of peace, and many testimonies of thanks were given for the evidence of a revival of interest in Beresford Road Church.

On the first Wednesday night of the year came the customary election of officers, also the monthly business meeting. Only one change was made, that being in the branch presidency. The personnel of that quorum for the year is: President, Elder W. R. Armstrong; counselors, Elders S. F. Mather and Abel Hall.

Cheboygan, Michigan

A Visit From Founder of Branch

This group has been blessed by those who have visited here and given messages of inspiration and helpfulness.

Elder William Henry Sheffer, of Snover, Michigan, visited in Cheboygan in November. He is the founder of Cheboygan Branch, and is much loved by the Saints. While here he gave a number of sermons.

In November also Apostle D. T. Williams presented a sermon that was wonderfully helpful.

Then just before Christmas Elder M. A. Summerfield, of Tawas City, Michigan, preached several sermons, delivering a gift of prophecy. The members have enjoyed the divine Spirit and have been provided for.

At Christmas Brother and Sister Alfred Keehler took their nineteen-months-old son to the hospital for an operation. Doctors and nurses did not expect the baby to recover, but through the prayers of the Saints, he is again healthy and normal.

Pastor Irving Sheffer is doing well with his congregation, giving his best to their needs. In return, the Saints give him their loyal support and stand behind all members of the priesthood.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe and Apostle R. S. Budd conducted a series of meetings here, January 15 to 29. Elder Renfroe delivered the sermons during the first week; Apostle Budd was present for the second week.

During the second week, the business men cooperated by closing their places of business from ten until eleven o'clock, to attend the morning lectures.

An excellent spirit prevailed throughout the series because of the splendid cooperation of the Saints and the contribution of the speakers. Although no one was added to the church, the Saints have been encouraged to move forward in the great latter-day work by the inspiring messages given, and they feel that a spiritual uplift to some extent has come to the community.

The branch enjoyed a short Christmas program, December 24. Santa Claus was present with his pack of treats for the children. On Christmas morning Mrs. J. M. Johnston, a nonmember, presented to the local church, new rostrum drapes, scarfs, and chairs. Following the presentation an impressive dedication service was held at which time the chairs were dedicated to Elders B. F. Renfroe and E. B. Stafford, faithful charter members of Davidson Branch. The Davidson charter members took their place on the rostrum and sang, "The Old, Old Path," followed by their children and grandchildren who sang, "Faith of Our Fathers." The evening service was the story of the birth of Christ told in song and silent scenes followed by a sermonet by Elder Z. Z. Renfroe.

The new year was ushered in with a joyous watch party at the home of Brother and Sister Roy Skinner.

The women's department have repaired the church floors with a new coat of varnish and wax. Due to this work, regular Wednesday night prayer service was held at the home of Brother and Sister Tom Skinner. The spiritual nature of this service causes the Saints to hope for more cottage prayer meetings.

Brother and Sister B. F. Renfroe celecrated their golden wedding anniversary, January 18, at 8.30 p. m., at the church. The building was filled with friends and neighbors.

As the notes of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, played by Miss Edith Skinner, were heard, the flower girls, Glenna Sue Burks and Doris Young, entered, followed by the ringbearer, Charles Renfroe, grandson of the pair, the ushers, Ray Carrow and Iral Parker, the bridegroom and best man, Roy Renfroe, a son. Next came the bridesmaids, Mrs. L. A. Carrow and Mrs. G. R. Hood, the matron of honor, Mrs. Homer Qualls, a daughter, and the bride At the altar a mock marriage ceremony was performed by their son, Elder Z. Z. Renfroe. After the ceremony the following program was given: "When You and I Were Young Maggie," sung by Valeria Parker, Mrs. Iral Parker, and Mrs. G. R. Riding; a musical reading, "It Takes a Heap o' Living in a House to Make it Home," by Mrs. C. E. Bacon, Mrs. J. H. McClure at the piano; "Silver Threads Among the Gold," by Mrs. T. H. Parker.

Elder and Mrs. Renfroe settled on a farm one and a half miles from Davidson, October 22, 1901, and he performed the first wedding ceremony and preached the first funeral sermon in Davidson.

"Love's Old Sweet Song," was sung by Mrs. Z. Z. Renfroe and a male quartet composed of Grady Hood, Glen Robinson, L. A. Carrow and Ray Carrow, sang, "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet." Lovely gifts were presented the couple by three grandsons, Eldon and Ray Qualls and Jimmy Renfroe.

Miss Emma Carrow and Iral Parker were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Parker, the bridegroom's parents, the morning of November 20, Elder Z. Z. Renfroe officiating. A miscellaneous shower was given the newlyweds at the church.

Los Angeles, California

Central Church

A high point in recent Los Angeles Branch activities was the Sunday evening concert sung by Brother Arthur Oakman, missionary to California. Many heard him for the first time, and were especially pleased to have him sing the number, "Rest in the Lord," from Brother J. T. Gresty's oratorio, "The Course of Time." Brother Oakman has promised to sing here again. He was assisted in his program by Sister Margaret Wickes Jones, pianist, and Sister Viola Bogue, reader.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael has occupied this pulpit several times recently. He brought a message of courage and strengthened the Saints determination to join hands with members of other branches in making the year, 1933, a year of achievement.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, newly-appointed to this district, has visited Los Angeles and given words of counsel and advice. Members look forward to his return, and hope he will see that his words have not fallen on barren ground. Apostle M. A. McConley, formerly over this district, has departed for work in the Northern Pacific slope.

The branch was saddened by the death of a young brother, Jack Kempf, January 22, who succumbed to a cancerous infection. Sympathy goes to Sister Lola Kempf, his mother, a loyal member. The family was formerly enrolled in Spring River District.

Brother M. D. Hall, formerly of Omaha, Nebraska, now a student at Pasadena Junior College, suffered a narrow escape from asphyxiation at his home. However, he is recovering nicely and will be on his feet again soon.

Under the direction of the pastor, D. B. Sorden, the various groups have been laying plans for the new year. The plans include new classes for the different age groups; dramatic activities, which include devotional services for occasional Sunday evenings, as well as plays for Friday evening programs; also novel means of raising funds to help the church financially.

The Saints are happy to read of the progress made in other branches, and hope to have some further reports to make soon of their own efforts.

Large District Gathering Greets President F. M. Smith at Joplin

Fourteen Branches Represented

The most instructive and spiritual gathering in Spring River District recently, was held Sunday, January 29, at the Joplin, Missouri, Branch with President Frederick M. Smith as the guest speaker. The pleasant influence of the Holy Spirit was felt throughout the prayer service at 8 a. m. and in each meeting thereafter during the day. The prayer service was in charge of the district president, Amos T. Higdon assisted by Elders Andy Jones of Columbus, Kansas, and G. E. Carter, of Joplin.

Such a large crowd was in attendance at the church school hour that the intermediate and adult classes were combined and Brother Higdon was the teacher.

In his morning sermon, President Smith urged the Saints to remember the church objectives passed at last General Conference and especially did he emphasize the reading and rereading of the Saints' Herald. "It is necessary to do this," he said, "in order to keep in touch with the general church's program and for the greatest development and growth of individual members in the church work."

In the afternoon, a second sermon was delivered by President Smith. When he departed for Independence following his sermon, he left behind a large group of Saints who are ardent admirers of him. It was the first chance that many have had to become intimately acquainted with the personality and preaching of this spiritual leader, and, coming from many distant places, all felt well repaid for the effort made to attend. His discourses on the ideals of the church and the benefits derived from living up to them, and also on the duties of the members and priesthood were especially elevating to the mind and spirit. It is expected that his talks will show results in the lives of Spring River District Saints.

The church building was filled to capacity, and many were turned away because of lack of standing room at the morning services.

The afternoon meeting was held at the South Joplin Christian Church where all were cared for comfortably. Fourteen of the sixteen branches in the district were well represented in what was perhaps the largest crowd that has ever attended a meeting of this kind in the Joplin branch.

S. G. Carrow, of Joplin, and Sister A. N. Deavers, of Webb City, led the singing throughout the day. A vocal duet number was given at the afternoon service by Brother and Sister J. E. Leslie, and the Joplin Orchestra, under the direction of Sister Marguerite Sheppard, played several selections at the morning services.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The new year opened here with bright prospects. January 1, 1933, has gone down in the history of the branch as one of its most impressive sacrament meetings. The emblems were served and there was no testimony meeting following. Elder A. E. Anderton gave a short talk on "The Significance of the Sacrament," and the Spirit was present in power and assurance. This day in January also marked the tenth anniversary of the opening of the church. Elder A. H. Nieman preached on the theme, "A Sure Foundation."

Elders John R. Grice, R. M. Gray, and A. E. Anderton were present at the first prayer service of the year, and the gifts of the gospel brought an encouraging message to the members.

The second Sunday was the women's Go-to-Church Sunday, and the department attended in a group. Elder R. E. Madden preached a splendid sermon on "Opportunity."

January 11, Elder J. E. Matthews baptized Mrs. Kathrine Scharfnecher and Mrs. Luella Swisher.

Five new members were added to the women's department at their meeting, January 12. A paper, "A Statement of Our Belief," was read by Mina Turvey, and Ethel Kirkendall read a good paper on "Responsibility."

Other speakers for the month have been Patriarchs G. T. Griffiths and J. E. Matthews, Elders A. E. Anderton, G. H. Kirkendall, Bishop H. E. French, and Chester A. Carey, teacher.

January 31, the women gave a get-together dinner in the church social room in honor of their husbands. Bishop H. E. French was toastmaster, and the Humbolt Masonic Quartet furnished music for the evening much to the enjoyment of the guests. Speakers were Mrs. A. H. Nieman, Mrs. J. E. Matthews, Mrs. G. H. Kirkendall, Elders A. E. Anderton, G. H. Kirkendall, and J. E. Matthews. Elder W. B. Reeves showed some stereopticon views of Independence, Missouri, with a few taken at one of this local's Sunday school picnics.

Cleveland, Ohio

Steady Progress in All Departments

Five new members were added to the ranks here during the last quarter of the year, Sisters Katherine Marr and Dorothy Van Alstyne, and Sister May Sheppard's three little boys.

At the annual business meeting of Cleveland Branch held on the first Wednesday of December, 1932, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Pastor, Elder J. A. McNeil; associate pastor, Elder George Lindsay; secretary to branch, Sister Harry Campbell; church school supervisor, Frank Ray; religio superintendent, Lester Vanderwerf; young people's supervisor, Arthur Hanna; children's supervisor, Florence McNeil; organist, Sister Clarence Thomas, and chorister, Sister J. A. McNeil.

Steady progress is being made in all departments, and the branch as a whole is on the upward trend. There is fairly good attendance at religio in which the adult group is taking up the study of Elbert A. Smith's booklet, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." This class is much enjoyed by all who attend and considerable benefit is being derived from it. The young people have also formed a class in the religio. Wednesday night prayer service is on the upward trend and on some occasions since the first of the year, the Saints have enjoyed the presence of God's Holy Spirit to a marked degree.

On December 2, eighty people were served at a supper held in the downstairs auditorium, followed by a delightful evening's entertainment. The Saints and their friends are enjoying the sociability of these suppers, which also serve as a financial aid to the branch.

Recent visitors to the branch have been Brother Bishop with an interesting lecture and lantern slides on Joseph Smith, III; Brother Clark and his family of circus fame; also Brother and Sister Hurst, from Chicago, and Patriarch George W. Robley.

On the first Sunday of the year the gift of prophecy was manifested in the sacrament meeting, several of the young men of the branch being spoken to and the branch as a whole commended and admonished.

Small Branch Is Active

The women's department has been organized once more under the capable leadership of Sister Bates, of Pomona. One quilting bee has already been held and every one enjoyed it.

Sister Frances Maria Sanderson, of Pomona, who has been ill for months, unable to be about at all, has passed away. She remained faithful to God and her church.

Brother Moyle, of Long Beach, gave a fine sermon Sunday, January 29, on "Our Individual Responsibility."

The Saints are looking forward to a social February 14, sure that everyone will have an enjoyable evening.

Missionary meetings are being held at Riverside by Pastor F. J. Lacey. Much interest is being shown.

El Reno, Oklahoma

Missionary Meetings by Brother Lloyd Harding

The Saints of El Reno have been enjoying a two-week series of meetings by Brother Lloyd Harding, temporarily from Oklahoma City, formerly from Council Bluffs, Iowa. Brother Harding was not content to be idle, but went to different small towns near the city, trying to find a place to preach. On coming to El Reno, he received a welcome, and arrangements were soon made for the meeting. In company with the pastor, Brother Piatt, and Brother Eddie Powell, Brother Harding made personal visits, and a notice was put in the little paper that is said to go into every home in the country.

Members were pleased with the response, which was considered the best in recent years. Brother McMullin brought two carloads of nonmembers almost every night. Several Saints who are rarely seen at services, attended a number of times. The young people gave valuable assistance with music.

Brother Harding proved himself a true servant of God. With his kindly manner and smile, he won the hearts of his hearers. With his knowledge and the aid of charts, he presented the subjects from the church in Christ's time on through the Apostasy, the Reformation, and the Restoration "when the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed." All these things were given in such a plain and powerful way, that some of the members felt to cry out: "Why can not our friends believe and obey?" Though no one obeyed the gospel and was baptized, much interest was aroused. One woman has taken a number of books and is preparing to read extensively. She asked for the Book of Mormon. May God give the increase.

On February 1, the Saints laid to rest in the city of the dead, Sister Julia Spears whose greatest pleasure was in her church. She had suffered poor health a long time. The funeral sermon was preached by Lemuel Dyke, of Minco, Oklahoma.

Independence

The second annual young people's play contest, sponsored by the young people's council, will be held in the Stone Church Dining Hall, February 27 and 28, and March 2, at seven thirty in the evening. Preliminary contests have been held in nearly all the congregations, and the casts which are taking their plays to the final contest are working hard.

Because of intensely cold weather and snow last week the priesthood institute sessions were discontinued until this week. Weather conditions after Monday night, February 6, made it impossible for all to attend. Two class periods are now being conducted each evening at Liberty Street Church, President Elbert A. Smith teaching, "Spiritual Aspects of Our Ministry," and Bishop G. L. DeLapp, "Financial Aspects of Our Ministry."

Stone Church

Bishop J. A. Koehler preached what he chose to term "three sermons in one" to the Stone Church congregation Sunday, in the first of three Sunday morning talks during this month. For a text he chose: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." His discourse on Godly government was most instructive.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang, "Holy Father, Great Jehovah," an anthem by Gomer Jones, Mrs. Nina G. Smith singing the soprano solo, and a hymn, "More Love to Thee, O Christ." There was also a solo by Mrs. Smith. The morning's accompanists were Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist.

Elder H. G. Barto was in charge, assisted by Elder R. V. Hopkins.

Three classes are conducted at six o'clock each Sunday evening at the Stone Church in which students may earn Religious Education credits: "Message of the Book of Mormon," taught by Elder C. I. Carpenter; "Study of the Doctrine and Covenants," by Elder J. F. Sheehy, and the "Three Book Class," by Bishop R. T. Cooper.

H. Roe Bartle, chief executive of the Kansas City area of the Boy Scouts of America, was the speaker at the evening hour, the occasion being a special Scout service honoring the twenty-third birthday of scouting in America, and the fifth birthday of Troop 223 of the Stone Church, Francis Holm scoutmaster.

Chief Bartle, who was introduced by Scout Commissioner Henry Stahl, impressed upon his hearers that daily life is what makes a scout. The spirit of scouting is that of unselfish service; it is not just to be good, but to do good.

For the past three years Independence has had more scouts for its population than any other city in America. In this large number of boys who are scouting the Latter Day Saint Church is strongly represented. Attention was also called to the fact that ninety-five per cent of the scout troops in America are sponsored by churches.

The members of the Kansas City Central Church Choir, directed by Eugene Christy, were musical guests at the service and sang an anthem, "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me." These singers gave the broadcast at the ten o'clock radio program.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the scout service, assisted by Elder S. A. Thiel, committee member of troop 223, and Scout Commissioner Henry Stahl.

Second Church

An organ prelude by Mrs. Gladys Inman, opened the sacrament service, February 5. Pastor W. N. Inman was in charge, and the invocation was by Elder S. M. Inman. Apostle J. F. Curtis read Luke 24, and, following the oblation talk by Elder Inman, gave the sacrament address.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was also the evening speaker, taking for his subject his trip to the Holy Land with Apostle Paul M. Hanson. The song service was directed by Brother Earl Audet. In the stand were Pastor W. N. Inman and Brother Lane Bolt. The choir assisted with music.

Sister Martha C. Chappelow, wife of the late Frank W. Chappelow, passed away February 3, 1933. She was fifty-four years old and had been ill three months. She leaves to mourn, her mother, two sisters, three daughters, two sons, two grandsons, and many friends. Her funeral was held from Second Church, February 5. The sermon was by Patriarch F. A. Smith. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Walnut Park Church

The birthday of scouting was observed with a special service Sunday morning for both Boy and Girl Scouts. The meeting was in charge of Claurice G. Closson, assisted by Kenneth Morford. As the orchestra played, "Marching With the Heroes," the scouts marched in, the boys coming up one aisle and the girls the other, occupying the choir seats on either side of the pulpit. Harold Dillee and John Crandall were color bearers. After the singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," by the entire congregation, and the invocation, the combined Boy and Girl Scout troops sang, "America the Beautiful," accompanied by the orchestra. The history and purposes of scouting were explained by Francis Holm, speaker of the hour. Following the address, the audience was led in the civilian's pledge of allegiance by Jessie Anderson. The program ended with the singing of "America."

The church school is continuing under the supervision of Brother Albert Chapman with splendid attendance. After the classwork Sunday a short program was given by the A. W. Z. Class, consisting of a piano number played entirely with the left hand by Mrs. Thelma Countryman, and a cello solo by Milford Nace, accompanied by Miss Maurine Nace.

The program at the religio session Sunday evening consisted of a play by the women's department and a musical reading by Miss Thelma Moorman. Both play and reading were written by Sister Erwin Moorman. Patriarch F. A. Smith visited the classes during the religio session, and was the speaker at the evening service which followed.

The preliminaries for the play contest were given Monday evening in the basement of the church. The plays given were: "Afterwards," sponsored by the Dorcas Society; "King Row," by the Swastika Class, and "Sons of Soil," by the young people's class taught by Brother Odess Athey.

Enoch Hill Church

"I Have Resolved," was sung during the church school hour, January 29, and Church School Director C. E. Beal spoke on, "What Are You Doing for Your Church?"

At the preaching service the choir sang, "Rock of Ages," and Mrs. Lilla Warren and Mrs. May Jones sang, "Choosing My Path." Elder C. S. Warren, morning speaker, urged the Saints to more complete trust in God, that they might have enlightenment in the hour of trial.

The congregation was made glad on that day when Mr. and Mrs. Jack Jeffers were led into the waters of baptism by Apostle J. F. Curtis. The ordinance took place in the font at Second Church. The new members have been attending church school here for some time.

In the evening the beauty and symmetry of the gospel was clearly brought out by Elder Petre, who used a blackboard to illustrate. The choir sang, "We Would See Jesus," and David Allen played a cornet solo.

A good-sized crowd partook of the sacrament on the first Sunday of the month, and that evening Elder Amos Allen delivered an instructive and uplifting sermon. Alfred Waters played a clarinet solo.

On February 12, Mrs. Agnes Hartman talked at the church school hour on, "Your Branch and You." A quartet sang, "Bringing in the Sheaves."

"Restoration," was the theme of the morning discourse by Pastor H. L. Barto. Preceding the sermon a male quartet sang, "Nearer My God to Thee," and "Restoration," the latter an original composition of W. T. Shakespeare, one of the quartet members. The choir sang, "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly."

"Win Them One by One," by the choir opened the Sunday evening service. Mrs. Amos Allen sang, "An Evening Prayer." Elder D. S. McNamara was the speaker and his theme was "Zion."

Spring Branch Church

Both Wednesday night prayer meetings last week, were one hundred per cent services.

The bishop's agent of this congregation, Brother Morris Jacobson, was the morning speaker Sunday. Pastor G. W. Eastwood was in charge, assisted by Jesse Smith. The first part of the hour was given to the Boy Scouts in honor of their nationally observed birthday. There was a solo by Alma Dixon.

At five o'clock in the afternoon ten of the young people went to the home of W. A. McClain and sang hymns for an hour. Sister McClain has been an invalid the last few years and has not had opportunity to attend church. She was very happy to be so remembered.

J. F. Weston was the evening speaker. The choir sang, "No Work to Do," and the service was in charge of Robert Fish.

Pisgah, Iowa

Some Officers Introduced

During the past year Pisgah Branch rejoiced under the instruction and inspiration of Elder E. Y. Hunker, Brother A. Carmichael, and President F. M. Smith.

The branch is trying to go forward. Sometimes it encounters difficulties, but with the help of good leaders and teachers these are being overcome.

A few changes have been made for the coming year in the teaching staff, and Sister Pearl Van Eaton was chosen as president of the Aid Society.

Much credit for the work which is being done goes to the leaders, and here is something about Pisgah's officers:

Branch President George Meggers is an aggreeable and courteous coworker. He encourages his helpers, works with them, and is earnestly trying to be what God has ordained.

Mark Hutchinson, an elder acting as deacon, did very well with the financial problems in this local. His entire collections for the year amounted to $1,453.36, which sum includes Sunday school and religio collections, tithes, and offerings.

Mrs. Charles Wall was president of the Aid Society which served lunches each month, remembering those having birthdays during the month. The women quilted, sewed, and performed other tasks to help the church.

Scott Hough is president of the Sunday school, and he is one of the best workers Pisgah has ever had in this office. He tries to enlist the help of all. A number of the young people play in the high school orchestra, and the branch has a church orchestra, Mrs. Mark Hutchinson acting as the leader.

Religio is held on Sunday evening, Mrs. Scott Hough the president.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

Blue Springs Branch is growing spiritually and numerically.

The congregation is considering the purchase of a building site for a church. Meetings at present are held in a hall, the upper story of a business building, but a more permanent and commodious meeting place is fast coming to be a necessity. Average attendance at all services is increasing.

Among the activities drawing attention during the last few months has been a religio organized for the young people.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe is presenting an interesting series of sermons, on the theme, "What Do Latter Day Saints Believe About God?" Another theme he recently used was, "What Is Our Religion Doing for Us?"

The young people's O. T. Z. Club enjoyed a sleigh ride party after which a lunch was eaten at the home of Brother Frank Stowell. A toboggan slide party was another outdoor activity, and Sister Florence Rife entertained them with a lunch.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Julius Wilson, January 27, at Saint Luke's Hospital.

Missionary P. T. Andersen spent a few days here before going to his home in Council Bluffs for the holidays. He preached some spiritual sermons.

Several members have been ill with the flu, but all are now recovering. Because of prevailing illness some meetings have had to be postponed.

The children's division enjoyed their gaily decorated room and a cheery fireplace during the Christmas season. They gave a nice program Christmas morning in the main room in connection with several numbers by the young people. Santa arrived to make the children happy with treats.

A council meeting was held for the director, supervisor and officers to arrange a budget for the remainder of the year, to be presented at a business meeting held here February 2. A change in the arrangement of Sunday services, and other problems were discussed.

The five-cent-a-week Heralds are now being sold to families who are not regular subscribers. Fargo members think the Herald has improved wonderfully and should be in every home.

A good spirit has been evident at the prayer meetings. Many earnest testimonies come from old and young. In these days of depression Saints are telling how God's blessings have been abundantly felt.

Birmingham, England

Blessings Are Increasing

The year 1933 has been called a year of hope. Looking back on 1932, Saints of this city realize how richly the Lord has blessed and protected them. They have called on him in prayer and have not been turned away empty. Prayer meetings have increased from one to five every week, and these services are a source of strength to the members.

At present there is a scourge of sickness in the city. One hundred and fifty-eight deaths were reported last week. Some of the Saints have been suffering from influenza. But those who are well have prayer for them, and all are recovering.

On Christmas morning the Saints met at the church and enjoyed a happy hour of service. Pastor P. S. Whalley spoke in love and reverence of the Savior's birth, reading from the Book of Mormon the beautiful account of the fulfillment of the prophecy of Samuel. The Saints sang their carols to the living Christ and felt his peaceful Spirit in their midst.

The church school party held January 7, was a happy affair. There were plenty of good things for tea, fruit and presents from the Christmas tree, and games and entertainment at intervals. How happy the children were! What pleasure to help in giving them so glad a time!

January 9, Pastor Whalley and members of the women's guild visited Sister Rose Foster. Sister Foster met with an accident and has been confined to her bed for twenty-six weeks. Although she suffers considerably, she is improving, and is full of hope. Those who visit her, come away cheered; and Saints in Birmingham are praying that such a spirit of hope and trust may find place in the heart of every Saint.

Religion enables a man to believe that there is in this world something worth while, something worth living for and dying for inasmuch as it has at least a fighting chance to succeed. It begets in him the all-essential conviction that his labor is not in vain. It encourages him to labor for the needed reforms even though there is hardly a chance that they may be brought about in his own lifetime. It stretches his horizon, extends the range of his vision.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—Conference convened October 28, 1932. Friday evening a play, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith, III," was given by Lincoln Branch, commemorating the one hundredth birthday of Joseph Smith. The opening meeting of the conference was called at ten o'clock, October 29. This was a prayer service in charge of District President O. L. D'Arcy. At the opening of this hour a talk was given by Apostle R. S. Budd touching on the life of the late Prophet of the church, and stressing the necessity of more earnestness in prayer and its importance in our daily contact with the world. An organization meeting was called at eleven o'clock, and B. M. Anderson presented the program of the conference. The business session assembled at two o'clock, minutes of the previous conference being read and approved, also reports from branch and groups. Reports from district officers were read and accepted, and the election of officers followed. O. L. D'Arcy was sustained as district president, and W. A. Poague and B. M. Anderson as his assistants. Mrs. F. M. Black was sustained secretary and treasurer. Mrs. A. A. Thiehoff was elected church school director. W. A. Poague was sustained district musical director. E. N. Byergo was sustained bishop's agent. Immediately after the business session Apostle Budd talked on the question, "What Characterizes a Prophet of God." The subject of Brother O. L. Apostle Budd's morning sermon was a tribute to the exemplary life of the late Joseph Smith. After lunch a general meeting was held and those who knew or had been associated with the late President were given opportunity to speak. His daughter, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, was the first speaker. Priesthood meeting followed, and Apostle Budd was the evening speaker. The conference adjourned to meet at the call of the district presidency.

Our Departed Ones

BURGER.—Rose Barbara Burger was born April 22, 1904, at Monroe, Michigan. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, November 4, 1928, at Toledo, Ohio. Died November 30, 1932, at Toledo. She leaves to mourn, her husband, Fred Burger; two daughters and one son, of Toledo. Her baby boy, six months old, was buried with her.

CHRISTIAN.—Sarah F. Dillon was born March 21, 1842. With several others she was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the Salinas River, March 9, 1930, by Elder A. Ray Lawn. This was the only church she had ever joined, but she readily accepted the angel message when she heard it. She died at Watsonville, California, January 8, 1933. A few hours before she died she sent for her pastor and asked for administration. Though she had been suffering, her relatives said after the administration, she went to sleep and slept soundly all afternoon. When she was wakened, she remembered that the elder had been there, and was very thankful and happy. Her passing was peaceful and followed an illness of only thirty-six hours. Had it not been for a sudden attack of acute indigestion following too hearty a meal, she might have lived many more years, for she looked and acted far younger than her age, Sister Christian was a cheerful woman, always looking on the bright side of life; her friends were legion, and many came to render their last loving service. As a young woman she was signally honored; she and her sister were selected to carry the Stars and Stripes between them on horseback leading the parade at Lincoln's inauguration. She has literally seen "Knowledge increase in the earth," as many great inventions have come forth since her birth. She lived to see four great wars. Her first husband was killed in the Civil War. Her funeral sermon was preached by Elder A. Ray Lawn, and interment was in the I. O. O. F. Cemetery, Watsonville, California.

He leaves to mourn, his wife and daughter Mrs. Hazel Crouse and three grandchildren, Russell, Robert, and Warren Crouse, of Chicago, Illinois; his aged father, of Readstown, Wisconsin; one sister, Mrs. Charles McDowell, of De Soto, Wisconsin, and many other relatives and friends. He was a good citizen, a devoted husband and father, and to those who enjoyed his confidence and friendship, a warm friend. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1917. Occupied in the office of priest for sometime and later as an elder. The funeral was held at the Methodist Church at Readstown. The service was in charge of Phillip Davenport, jr., and the sermon was by Elder George E. Noble. Interment was in Liberty Pole Cemetery.

To them eight children were born. Her husband and two children preceded her in death. She leaves to mourn, three sons and three daughters: Lee and Roy of Harrison; Ervin, of Ellenboro; Minnie (Mrs. Neil Clements), Ada (Mrs. John Brogley), and Agnes (Mrs. Roy Cushman), all of Platteville; twenty-two grandchildren, and twelve great-grandchildren. Eleven years ago she joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and was a faithful witness for her Master. Her Bible was a much read book. Passed from this life at the Toronto General Hospital November 13, 1932, from the effects of an automobile accident which happened the previous night. Brother Richards died December 2, 1932, preceding his wife into the spirit world by one month and seventeen days. For thirty-five years Mr. and Mrs. Richards had lived in Pittsburg, and for many years she was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church. Like her companion she was loved and respected. Langford, of Byrneville, Indiana. Besides her husband and four children she leaves thirteen grandchildren, three brothers, and one sister. Her earnest testimonies will long be remembered by Saints of Byrneville Branch. She was faithful to the end. May her rest be sweet. She was baptized by Elder George Jenkins, March 9, 1894. The funeral was conducted at Byrneville Church, Elder W. O. Robertson in charge, sermon by Elder J. O. Dutton. Interment was at Byrneville, Indiana.

PARKIN.—Elizabeth J. Parkin, wife of the late Bishop Charles A. Parkin, died December 26, 1932, at San Francisco. This was a great loss to the church and especially to San Francisco Branch. She was one of the oldest living members of the church, having been born August 16, 1849, at East Camden, Ontario, and was seldom absent from church services, and hardly ever late. Always active, she was among the first to take part in any service to help the branch or church in general. She had been a member of the women's department since its organization, and served as its first president in the local. She was ready to help every worthy cause with her advice and money, and was always ready to help a brother or sister in time of need. She had the love and esteem of all the Saints many of whom considered her their best friend. She was lovingly called "Aunt Lizzie." For years her home was open to the missionaries. She will be missed at the district reunions and conferences, for she was a faithful Latter Day Saint. Was baptized September 2, 1894, at Alameda, California. She had no children of her own to mourn her death, and was the last of her father's family. She fell downstairs and was injured some time ago and this weakened her to the extent that she was an easy victim of the flu. She contracted pneumonia which caused her death. The funeral services were held at the undertaker's parlors. Elder John A. Saxe officiated, assisted by Elder George S. Lincoln, her two oldest friends. She leaves two sisters-in-law, several nephews and nieces to one of whom she gave her home and possessions previous to her death. Her busy life on earth is finished and she has gone to her reward. Her body was cremated.

KUTT.—Nellie J. Murray was born September 15, 1874, at Webberville, Michigan, and was united in marriage to John J. Kutt, October 27, 1895, at East Leroy, Michigan. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder Rathburn, April 25, 1894, and was a devoted member. She was held in high esteem by all who knew her. Died at her home in Lansing, Michigan, January 17, 1933. She was a member of the women's department for many years, always ready to do her utmost to help. Her life was a living testimony to the gospel. About three months ago she fell downstairs in her home, suffering injuries which confined her to her bed most of the time until her death. However, toward the end she seemed to be improving, and her death came as a shock to all. She is survived by her husband, John; two daughters, Mrs. Katherine FerDon, of Dayton, Ohio, and Mrs. Eleanor Norris, of DeWitt, Michigan; four sons: J. Murray, Lawrence, Clayton, and Robert, all of Lansing; one sister, Mrs. Fred Miller, and one brother, Willard Murray, of Webberville. Funeral services were held at the church, Elder S. A. Barss officiating. Interment was in the Alchin Cemetery near Webberville.

JAMES.—Walter L. James was born at Arcadia, Manistee County, Michigan, April 6, 1872. Died November 25, 1932, at his home in Lansing, Michigan. He married Harriet G. Perrigo at Saint Genevieve, Missouri, August 13, 1895. To this union six children were born five of whom are living. He was baptized into the church in November, 1917, by Elder S. F. Brackenbury. He with his family moved to Lansing in August, 1926. For the past seven years he has been much afflicted, but has borne his suffering patiently. Surviving are, his mother, Mrs. Caroline Norcott; one brother, George D. James; four sisters: Mrs. Retta Scott, Mrs. Ida Giles, Mrs. Blanche Johnson, and Mrs. Estella Dennis; his wife, Mrs. Harriet James; three sons, Leonard, Richard, and Howard; two daughters, Mrs. Gertrude Wagner and Mrs. Caroline Cain, and eight grandchildren. The funeral was held from the Nellar-Smith Funeral Home, Elder S. A. Barss officiating.

SHERMAN. — Margaret Isabell Eaton, daughter of John and Martha Balmer Eaton, was born in Toronto, Ontario, August 18, 1861, and died January 11, 1933, in Chicago, Illinois. She was married to Arthur F. Sherman, September 1, 1886, and to them were born six children, Lewis J. Sherman, Mrs. Laura Boehm, Mrs. Leta Swanson, Arthur A. Sherman, Mrs. Olive Evans, and Mrs. Eva Lgons. Two daughters, Olive, and Eva, preceded her in death. She was baptized by Apostle John H. Lake at Saint Thomas, Ontario, in February, 1889, where she lived for several years. She had lived with her family in Chicago, since 1902. Her parents came to Toronto, Ontario, about 1859, from Liverpool and Manchester, England.

KYSER.—Dorothy Lou, daughter of B. Frank and Gail Kyser, was born September 3, 1927, at Miami, Oklahoma. Blessed December 4, 1927, by Elders Alvin Smith and A. J. Jones. Passed to the other side Sunday evening, February 5, 1933, as a result of an unavoidable accident. She leaves to mourn her departure, besides her parents, five brothers: Donald, Robert, Eugene, Frank Junior, and Billie, all of the home address; her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Nora Kyser, of Miami, Oklahoma, and maternal grandparents of Los Angeles, California, together with a host of other relatives and friends. Services were conducted from the Baptist Church with Elder Alvin Smith in charge; sermon by Amos T. Higdon. Interment in Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery.

HARTNELL.—William G. Hartnell was born October 11, 1863, at Illigon, Cornwall, England. He came with his parents to Canada when about four years of age, and settled near Bothwell, Ontario. His parents were among the first to embrace the gospel in that section. He was baptized at Carlingford, Perth County, June 20, 1878, by Joseph Luff. His parents moved to Michigan when he was about fourteen years of age and settled near Lapeer, Genesse County, later moving to Juniata, Tuscola County, where they remained until after the death of his father. His father's home was always open to the missionaries and visiting members, and John and Elizabeth Hartnell were widely known among the church people of that section and time. He was married to Polly Baxter, July 4, 1887, and to them ten children were born, nine of which survive. He was ordained a teacher, August 27, 1888, at Juniata, by J. J. Cornish and R. W. Hugal; served Juniata Branch in that capacity for many years. He was ordained an elder on June 21, 1901, at Shabonna. He spent several years in Otsego County, living at Salling, and later at Gaylord, and at both places was active in church work. In 1906, he moved with his brothers, Richard and John, to Maple Grove, British Columbia, this place later being renamed Clayburn. While living here he spent some time under General Conference appointment laboring in Washington, and British Columbia, traveling chiefly with Elder J. D. Stead and Patriarch E. Keeler. After about three and one half years he moved to Post Oak, Missouri. His wife died there in 1916. September 17, the same year, at Holden, Missouri, he was ordained to the office of high priest, and also to the Holden Stake High Council, by F. M. Smith and David J. Krahl. In 1919, he moved to Centerview, Missouri, and later lived at Paola, Kansas, and at Kansas City, Missouri. In 1922, he returned to

He was baptized July 12, 1894, and remained a loyal member of the church throughout his life. Was ordained a priest in 1888; elder, October 5, 1891; high priest, April 14, 1903, and was appointed a member of the High Council of the church at the conference of April, 1905, and served as a member until 1922, when the permanent council was appointed. His ministerial activities were in Michigan and Southern Ohio. Moved from Detroit, Michigan, to Tampa, Florida, in 1923, and lived there until his death, December 26, 1932. He came to America fifty-two years ago, settling in Pennsylvania, where he lived a few years, then moved to live at Bevier, Missouri, where he served as pastor several terms and held meetings at a number of nearby places. Twenty years ago he moved to Kansas City, where he was active at Second Church. He served a goodly portion of time as pastor, having occupied continuously in that office for the past few years. mon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, at Independence. Brother Evans witnessed many wonderful acts of providence during his ministry such as healing of the sick, mending of broken bones, restoration to life of those whose eyes were set in death. WOODS.—Eliza P. Larkey, daughter of Edward and Nancy Larkey, was born at Iron Hill, Iowa, April 8, 1853. She passed to her reward January 26, 1933, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Carl Dostal, near Maquoketa, Iowa. She was the last of sixteen children in her father's family to pass away. For thirty years she had been an invalid, spending much of her time in a wheelchair. During all this period of time she was cheerful and never lost faith in the goodness of God. She united with the church when she was thirteen years of age, and was true to her covenant, passing to the other side with the hope of a glorious resurrection. A large circle of friends gathered at the last service to pay tribute to the faithful, devoted life she lived. The funeral was from her late home in charge of E. R. Davis, the sermon by L. G. Holloway. Interment was in a cemetery near Maquoketa, Iowa. A noble woman has gone to a well-earned reward. She leaves one daughter, three step-sons, many other relatives and friends.

CONDIT.—Mary Carmelia Hawley was born August 23, 1854, at Bandera, Texas, the daughter of Aaron and Ann Hawley. When she was three years old, her mother died while they were making their home in the Cherokee Nation Indian Territory. In 1859 when living with her uncle and family she moved to Gallands Grove, Iowa, and it was there she united with the church, being baptized in Mill Creek during the General Conference held at Gallands Grove in 1862. She was married December 31, 1869, to Leonard M. Condit at Little Sioux, Iowa, where they made their home for a few years before moving to Dunlap, Iowa. Leaving Iowa in the spring of 1881, they went to the Washington Territory, traveling by wagon. Winter of that year found them in the Soda Springs country, where they remained until the autumn of 1882, then moved to Cassia Creek and later to Malta, where they were living at the time of Mr. Condit's death in 1912. Since that time Mrs. Condit had lived with her children in Iowa, Arizona, Oregon, and California, the last two years being spent in Idaho. She passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. A. Handy, of Heyburn, Sunday, January 8, after an illness of several weeks. Services were conducted at the Saints' church at Rupert, Idaho, and interment was beside her husband at Malba. She is survived by four sons and two daughters: Leon A. Condit, of Arizona; H. M. Condit, of Vernonia, Oregon; J. S. Condit, Van Nuys, California; Arthur Condit, Rupert, Idaho; Mrs. J. A. Handy, Heyburn, Idaho; Mrs. Ed. Haas, Stockton, California, and Fred L. Condit, Lamoni, Iowa. Two sons and a daughter preceded her in death. There also are left, twenty-nine grandchildren, and eighteen great-grandchildren. Mrs. Condit was a faithful member of the church for many years.

CURTIS.—Emma L. Bishop was born April 27, 1866, at Provo, Utah. Later she with her parents moved to Missouri, and April 3, 1873, she was baptized into the church by Albert Bishop, at Thud Fork, Missouri. She was married to J. M. Curtis, December 29, 1886, at Independence, Missouri, and to this union nine children were born, five sons and four daughters, all of whom survive with her companion. January 17, 1933, she answered the summons of death, and passed on to the estate promised those who have remained faithful. Her obedience to the gospel was rendered because of her love for her Lord, and through the nearly sixty years that followed her baptism, her devotion was daily manifested in her willingness to endure, to sacrifice, and to labor for the promotion of the gospel, and in the earnestness with which she sought to train her children in the way they should go. She was one who could always be counted on to serve her Lord, her family, and her friends. The funeral sermon was by Doctor Joseph Luff, and interment was in Mound Grove, Independence, Missouri.

CURTIS.—Josiah M. Curtis was born in Maryville County, Missouri, October 18, 1860. He was baptized into the church by Elder A. J. Cato, at Sedalia, Missouri, July 4, 1875. Was united in marriage to Miss Emma L. Bishop at Independence, Missouri, December 29, 1886. Five sons and four daughters were born to them: Mrs. Violet R. Tracy, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; Mack W. Curtis, Thomas H. Curtis, Mrs. Emma L. Brown, Joseph V. Curtis, Frank W. Curtis, Mrs. Mabel E. Paschall, and Mrs. Bessie Cain, all of Independence, Missouri, and Walter E. Curtis, of Kansas City, Missouri, who was seriously ill at the time of his father's death; Samuel J. Curtis, a son by a former marriage. All of these survive him together with four sisters and one brother: Mrs. Mary Caley, of Cameron, Missouri; Mrs. Nancy Gibbs, of Kansas City, Missouri; Martha Curtis, Mrs. E. W. Bishop, and William Andrew Curtis, of Kansas City. August 15, 1877, he was ordained to the office of teacher at Montserrat, Missouri. He passed from this life, January 24, 1933, at his home in Independence, Missouri, just one week after the death of his wife. He was a devoted member of the church, seeking, like his parents, to support and honor it unfalteringly. Persecution in his younger days and sacrifice and toil were cheerfully accepted, and his confidence in the divine origin of the church and its final triumph continued until the last. It was his delight to render service to the church and its members. The funeral sermon was by Doctor Joseph Luff, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

Careless Mother

It was twenty-two degrees below zero during the recent cold wave. A mother sent her little five-year-old boy across town to school, alone, and without mittens. When he arrived at school his fingers were frozen, and his teacher had to thaw them out, with the help of other children who brought in snow for the purpose. In this emergency the children showed a great deal of kindness to the unfortunate boy, one of them even going so far as to get his mother to make mittens for him.

The family is poor, but not so poor that they can't afford mittens, according to report. In any event, even if the child had possessed mittens, it would have been thoughtless and cruel to send one so young alone to school on such a day.

Mothers are the kindest and most considerate of all people. But some of them show little fitness for the responsibilities they should bear.

The divinity of motherhood is not manifested in bringing new life into the world, but in caring for that life after it arrives. It is a tragedy that so many thoughtless and indifferent young women rush into marriage and motherhood with no equipment for their tasks but their sex, which alone is inadequate. Brains can not be installed where there are none, but the weakest of minds can be furnished with a little necessary information, and it would seem to be the duty of every young woman to learn certain fundamental things about the treatment of children.

Cleaning day for the Pigeonhole ⊠ A man and wife, separated during years of prosperity, found that they needed each other when trials and reverses came, and have reunited their broken home. One of the few good effects of the depression ⊠ "You print it in the back if we die," says the Pigeon, "you print it in the front if we work, and you print it in the middle if we write. Is there any way to escape getting into print?" ⊠ Yes, several. The best way is to try to get into print, especially if you haven't done anything to deserve it ⊠ Is anything more treacherous than a snowbank? Yesterday it held us up. Today we sink in up to the knees, and the cold water trickles in around our socks ⊠ And I had to leave my rubbers in St. Jo the one time of year I really need them ⊠ Three years old last week, and I had become quite fond of them ⊠ Nothing in the world like the feeling of guilt and deficiency that I feel when I look into the eyes of a grieved and hurt author ⊠ "What have you decided about my Article?" (Dear Brother, I can not remember your Article.) "The one about the Three Nephites." (Oh, yes, I remember. It is misplaced; I can not find it.) "Why didn't you use it?" (I wouldn't hurt your feelings by telling you why I couldn't use it.) "What is wrong with it?" (I'd hate to have to tell you all the things that are wrong with it.) ⊠ In three days I find it and return it ⊠ And my rating is N. G. with just one more person in the ranks of the faithful.

Preparation for Work

The tragedy of unpreparedness stalks in every church, in every branch, in every Sunday school. It robs men and women of opportunities, it robs the church of valuable service, it robs children of teachers. It is the more lamentable because it is in a large measure preventable.

If one were going on a winter journey to the far north, he would take nourishing food and stout warm clothing along. He would take medicines, and would make all of his preparations very carefully. But many a person will attempt to go about the work of the Master without any real preparation at all.

In the year 1933 many people are out of work. While they can do nothing else it may be their great opportunity to study. The story was told that when Nathaniel Hawthorne came home to his wife with the news that he had lost his position, she said, "Good. Now you can write that book." Not one word of regret, but the sensing of an opportunity.

A group of young people of Independence, unemployed, are now preparing to study and do what they can to help each other, so that when opportunities come again they will be better prepared to fill new positions. They are also planning to make a serious study of church work that perhaps they have never had time to undertake before. This is the real spirit of Christian service.

It is one thing to declare in prayer meeting a willingness to serve. But that declaration is without real meaning for the church unless the individual does something to get ready for the tasks that he sees ahead.

Lincoln said: "I will get ready, and maybe some day my chance will come." The chance will come to every man and woman some day if they will get ready now. There is use for every kind of knowledge, although some kinds are more practical than others. But all our study should be directed with some plan of future usefulness. L. L.

"Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

ONE OF THE PASTORS writing to the Presidency tells of meeting some conditions which he terms hectic, and says the church assigned him no small task when he was sent where he is, yet he is glad the church sent him there. "There have been times," he writes, "when I wondered if I were big enough to cope with the situations. On several occasions I had to be firm in decisions affecting established precedents and minority groups; thereby earning for myself the titles 'Supreme directional control' and 'Czar.' We weathered the storm and the vessel is still intact."

Now that seems to have a familiar sound—those names hurled at one trying to exercise necessary control to straighten out things. And I am glad that pastor has the courage to carry on irrespective of the charges and names applied. Of course the church handed him a big job in sending him as a pastor. These jobs are as big as the man sent has the capacity to make them. They are opportunities for service, and service in this church means calling upon the best and the most a man has in him.

As if to encourage us after a bit of troubles told, he adds:

"You will be surprised to learn that our Wednesday evening prayer services have had an average attendance of between eighty and ninety since the beginning of the year, and one week ago we had one hundred present. God is pouring out his Spirit upon the people and young and old are enjoying its influence."

Now that is fine! And so, my brother, you just must carry on towards even better things and conditions.

A BROTHER who has a spiritual charge to burden him and consume his time, talents, and energies, writes that since the beginning of the year he has preached on "Stewardships," "The Gathering," etc., to large crowds, and asserts his intention to "indoctrinate our people with our message." Well, why not? Isn't that the duty of the ministers? That's far better than riding some hobby continuously that has to do with what after all is incidental. The task of leading the Saints onward to Zion is our great divinely imposed task. And that the Saints will respond to such teaching and preaching, is evidenced in this case by what the pastor adds, "I find the people eager to move forward," and "a greater disposition to file inventories and comply with the financial law of the church, and to read church literature."

Well, again, why not? Our people hunger for the Zionic message, and the testimony of the Spirit is that the redemption of Zion is our great task. All who are indoctrinated can not but feel the urge, and the witness of the Spirit. And under the urge of this divine impulsion, the hearts of the Saints will be turned towards Zion; and they will be anxious to make moves towards the land of Zion—geographical as well as economic and industrial moves towards the land of Zion. And such longing and desire must be encouraged; but we must not forget the oft repeated injunction, "Let the way be prepared before you." Close contact with the general officers, Presidency and Bishopric, must needs be had on these matters. F. M. S.

Blue Pencil Notes

When my Grandfather Hartshorn removed an old nail from an old board he carefully straightened the nail with his hammer and put it in a box with other "reconditioned" nails for future use. When my Grandmother found a pin she picked it up and saved it. When the wick burned short in the lamp and would not reach the oil my mother put in a new wick, but first she sewed to it the remnant of the old wick, making a careful joint that would draw oil and not stick in the burner. When there were bits of stale bread they were saved for a bread pudding. There were reasons: it took money to buy nails and pins and lamp wicks and bread. And often there was no money. Ralph Waldo Emerson's wife is said to have added three commandments of her own to the ten that her husband preached. They were: "Wear it out. Eat it up. Make it do."

And yet with all this economy—some call it "parsimony"—there was a curious liberality. When a neighbor bought a bushel of potatoes it was a part of religion to heap up the measure until not another potato would stick on the basket—"Measure pressed together, heaped up, and running over." When a neighbor bought a dozen eggs he got a "baker's dozen." There was always room at the table for a guest. There was always a "spare bed," even if the host slept on the floor. My great-grandmother, Lucy Smith, saved all the stub ends of tallow candles and melted them in a pot to help make new candles; and yet when the Saints made their first journey from York State to Kirtland, part of the way via the old Erie Canal, from her own store and purse she fed twenty adults and thirty children who were without provisions.

That day passed. People learned to laugh, too loudly, at little economies. To be a "tight wad" was worse than to be a crook. "Time was money," and it did not pay to take time to straighten crooked nails. If the bread was a bit stale throw the whole loaf into the garbage can. But there was time to put the biggest apples on the top of the barrel, to raise the bottom of the berry box so that it might be heaped up and still not hold a quart, to put water in the milk and alum in the bread, to give short weight, to sell worthless "securities," to—well, time for everything but economy and honesty.

Today, again, many people have more time than money. The old economies are once more in order: "Eat it up. Wear it out. Make it do." And out of the common need comes again, as a hopeful sign, thought for the needs of others. After all, our grandfathers who themselves economized that they might afford the luxury to deal honestly and even generously with others were wise in their generation. E. A. S.

Short Story Contest

The back page of this issue of the Herald calls attention of our readers again to the Short Story Contest that was announced at the beginning of the year. We hope that many are hard at work on their stories now. There is still time for many to try who have not started yet.

No formal entry is necessary except to send in the story before April 1. If the story arrives by that time it is properly entered.

While the prizes are not great, they are enough in these times to be worth while, and many young writers will be interested. Entrants are conscious of the fact that the dollar will buy twice as much now as it would a few years ago.

The response of our readers to story material of good quality has been encouraging, and younger people in increasing numbers are found to be reading the Herald—not only the stories, but the articles as well.

YOUTH LOOKS AT LIFE

A PREVIEW OF CONFERENCE PROBLEMS

By F. M. McDowell

What Shall I Do With My Life?

What shall I do? What can I do? What difference does it make? What does life amount to anyway? What are my interests? My capacities? My ideals? What is my life's purpose—money—pleasure—fame—power? Why not?

"Seek first to build up the kingdom of God."

There's the matter of my Education.

Why high school? College? University degrees? Grind? Does it pay? Should everyone go to college?

"Seek learning by study and also by faith."

In what capacity may I best serve the church? Humanity? Suppose the church or government should ask me to list the various ways I could serve expertly in an emergency. Could I name one way? What would it be? Where shall I go to college? How much will it cost? Can't afford it. Why not study at home? How about the thousands of college graduates now unemployed? Education hasn't helped them. High schools and colleges seem to be out of joint with life. My uncle made a success. He never even finished high school.

And the problem of choosing my life's work.

Shall I be a doctor, lawyer, merchant (thief)? Where can I get the most money? Where can I give the most service? How can I find what I ought to do? What are the opportunities for successful achievement? What is success? To what extent should I consider my own abilities? The needs of the church? The needs of the world?

"Workers together with God."

What are the purposes of God? How can I help? Why should I help? How may I get ready to help most effectively?

What about my leisure time? My recreation?

What shall I do when I am not compelled to do anything? Why not do as I please? Must I not express myself? I never have to bother about what I shall do anyway. There is the comic supplement, the radio, the picture show. Why not do the first thing that is suggested? What determines what is good or bad recreation, just so it is fun? Somehow I am not satisfied with ready-made recreation. That last picture show left me disgusted. I burned up the magazine my friend loaned me. The other night when I came home I found I had to choose between respect for my sister and mother on the one hand and the kind of recreation I had been indulging in on the other. What difference should church membership make in my standards? What should be the difference between church members and those who are not church members?

And Health?

"Body for the sake of soul," said Plato. "How are you?" means what is your health today? Have I a program for my physical health? What shall it be, style or health? Can it not be both fun and health? "The highest efficiency of man comes from a perfect mind in a perfect body."

My stomach revolts at food from the garbage can. My mind—what shall I feed it? "Cleanliness is next to Godliness."

Proper food? Wholesome exercise? Plenty of sleep? A task worthy of my best? Why not?

And Home?

Home, house, family, what is the difference? "Home," said a little boy, "is a place you quarrel and fuss." Said another, "It is a place to go when you can't find anything else to do."

Dad and mother are a bit old-fashioned. They never want anyone to have any fun. They are looking old and worn. When did I ever do anything to help them? What can I do? How many does it take to make a real family? What does it cost to make home life happy? Am I willing to pay the cost?

It looks to me like it costs too much anyway to build a home and rear a family. It is not worth it. Let's see, just what does it cost? Money? love? patience? self-sacrifice? self-denial? teamwork? What a price! and I haven't really qualified in any of these points in my father and mother's home.

Youth Looks at the Church

What shall I believe?

My science teacher the other day said he had completely lost faith in man. Why not? Isn't man just an animal? Yet our pastor said last Sunday Christ gave man power to become sons of God. God? Jesus? Man? Sin? Immortality? Out of date in this scientific age? Superstition?

What can an intelligent young person like I am believe anyway? The Russians are teaching their young people there is no God. Are they right?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

How can I help the church?

Why should anyone want to help the church? What can our church hope to do anyway? Some of the old folks seem to think that anything done for us is a necessary burden. They condemn us because we don't help and yet seem jealous when we take their places for a time. Sometimes I think they treat us like babies.

Wonder what I could do if I did get a chance to help. Most of my high school class meet with the ..... church. It is large and popular. I could get into the basket ball team if I went there.

Hello, what's this? Tenth Legion? Never heard of it. File inventory, pay tithing, make offering, attend church, support the missionaries, lead boy scouts, sing in the choir. Why not? Wonder if this is what the church wants us to do? How old should a fellow be anyway before he helps out in church work? One of my friends said the church work limited self-expression. I wonder if it does. What kind of pay should a person expect for working in the church?

Why don't we organize?

The church has no program for its young people. They took away our Religio. Wait—what's this about the Young People's Division of the Church School? It seems to me I read somewhere about the O. B. K.'s in Kansas City, and that the young people of Seattle and British Columbia had set up a district organization. It seems to me that I remember something about a young people's council in Independence doing a lot of things. I wonder just how we can go about it in our branch to effect the organization of our young people's division. I believe there are enough young people in our district to organize a district organization. Guess I'll write to headquarters and find out what we can do. Better still, I believe I'll plan to go to the June conference in Lamoni.

Youth Looks at the World

Well!

What do you make of it? Plenty of coal. Plenty of machines. Plenty of cotton. Plenty of wheat. BUT Poverty, idleness, cold, hunger.

Science, intelligence, skill, academic degrees. BUT War, crime, corruption, injustice, breadlines.

Despotism to democracy, and back again to despotism.

"Love your enemies," said Jesus. BUT Twenty thousand dollars for war for every hour since he was born.

"Hunger after righteousness?" YET Men glorify the ungodly.

"Life comes first." YET Killed 350,000 in one year with automobiles.

"God made of one blood all nations." Japanese? Negroes?

What is love? What comes first? What is justice? What is right?

"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth."

NEWS BRIEFS

"Word of Wisdom" Centennial

February 27, 1933, is the one hundredth anniversary of the giving of the revelation familiarly known as the "Word of Wisdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 86) to the church. Scientists and food specialists are now teaching many of the principles set forth in this document taught for one hundred years by the church.

February also marks another church centennial. Times and Seasons quotes the words of Joseph Smith the Seer: "I completed the translation and receiving of the New Testament on the second of February, 1833, and sealed it up, no more to be opened till it arrived in Zion."

Missionaries Push Forward

Checking up on the activities of some of the missionaries in their fields, as their stories appear in this week's News, tells something of the devotion and zeal with which they labor.

Apostle D. T. Williams is very busy in Michigan. He has lately spoken to congregations at Coleman and Tawas City.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer spent sacrament Sunday this month with the branch at Bisbee, Arizona, and later visited Douglas Branch in that State.

Elders George Njeim and A. E. Boos have lately awakened considerable interest among the people on Bruce Peninsula, Ontario, Canada, by missionary meetings.

Elder Hubert Case, since his return to Central Michigan after the Christmas holidays, has been actively at work. He was the morning speaker at the reopening of Saginaw's church February 5, and has also preached at Mikado and Tawas City.

Elders A. M. Baker and Thomas W. Emde made a new opening for the church at Russell, Arkansas, a short time ago. They made many friends for the church, and have been invited to hold summer meetings there.

Elder William Grice is now conducting meetings at Saginaw, Michigan. He began his series the evening of February 5.

Elders E. R. Davis and L. G. Holloway closed a series of services at Dahinda, Illinois, the first Sunday of the month.

Elder S. T. Pendleton, of Beaverton, held helpful services at Coleman, Michigan.

Elder G. H. Wixom stopped at Bisbee, Arizona, on his way home to California before Christmas. Returning to his field in Southwestern Texas District, he visited Bisbee again and preached to the Saints January 25 and 26.

Elder Leonard Dudley held a series of meetings at Coleman, Michigan, from January 29 to February 12. That evening he went to Loomis, Michigan, to begin meetings where the work of the church is being revived through the help of Coleman priesthood members.

Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin returned to their old home at Sharon, Pennsylvania, for Christmas, arousing considerable interest and drawing good attendance at church services while there. They returned to Saint Louis District the latter part of January, and opened meetings at Brentwood, Missouri.

"Tenth Legion" for Spokane Young People

The Tenth Legion movement has been introduced to the young people's class of the congregation at Spokane, Washington. A special meeting was held in its interests February 4, and several of the class members are now qualified as full-fledged legionnaires.

Large Reunion in Australia

Attendance at the reunion of the Australasian Mission at Tiona (Zion) this year was larger than that of last. "More members put in an appearance from the north coast." says The Gospel Standard, the mission paper.

A fine sacrament meeting was enjoyed by the reunion on New Year's Day. There were six splendid sermons by the general ministry on the theme, "Fundamentals of Our Faith."

The camp saw the old year out and the new year in with the aid of a huge bonfire on the beach.

Classwork conducted by Apostle G. G. Lewis and Elder W. J. Haworth was given a hearty response by regular attendants. And the little folks gained pleasure from daily junior church sessions conducted by Sister Lewis and her helpers.

The Church in Michigan

The unusual number of letters from Michigan in this week's News, calls attention to church activities there.

There are 11,166 Latter Day Saints in that State, according to figures for January 1, 1933, from the Department of Statistics, and eighty-three organized branches. Priesthood members number approximately 850.

Michigan is a part of the Great Lakes Mission assigned to Apostle D. T. Williams by the last General Conference. Elders Hubert Case, A. C. Barmore, William Patterson, and C. E. Harpe are also laboring as missionaries there under General Conference appointment. The activities of district and local priesthood members bespeak the interest in the church of Michigan Saints.

"No Man Hath Hired Us"

By Grace L. Krahl

"And about the eleventh hour he [a householder] went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them why stand ye here all the day idle? They said unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, that ye shall receive."—Matthew 20: 6-8.

THE PARABLE from which the above quotation is taken, in its entirety, refers, we have been taught, to the dispensations of time in which God has called men to repentance and salvation. We have no desire to misapply the meaning; nevertheless no language could more accurately or pathetically describe the lamentable situation of a large number of people today. Would that the unemployment problem could be as promptly and as effectually solved as it was in the parable of Jesus, when he said, "Go ye also into the vineyard and whatsoever is right ye shall receive." But apparently, there are not enough "householders" to go around to meet the demand of the laborers.

Without question every man needs, and is entitled to a job or a position according to his abilities; but must men stand all the day idle because no man hath hired them? God is always looking for employees to engage in his service, and service to God is service to one's fellows.

In these dull times when time hangs heavy after daily hours of searching for employment could not some sort of labor and assistance be engaged in for the good of one's neighborhood or community, without wages in anticipation? Since one's time is unemployed anyway, why not banish dull gloom by starting out to do something for some one else. For in a very important way this would react favorably upon the individual because, obviously, the more contacts one makes with people the more likelihood there is of becoming known in one's trade or profession.

I am reminded here of one of Seth Parker's stories which appeared in the July issue of the Christian Herald. The story was as follows:

"Up in a little town right near here is a store called Johnson's Groceries. When the times get bad and folks couldn't pay and they didn't buy much, he got hit pretty hard but instead of setting down and a-crying he got his old thinking cap to working. 'I'm going to advertise,' he says.

"Everybody laughed at him, because he'd advertised in the local paper and he'd put up signs and he'd tried every conceivable way, but Johnson he kept a-thinking and a-thinking and then he thought some more.

"Well, sir, I'll tell yer what he done. He went out inter the town and he hired three men what weren't working and he says to them, 'I don't want you to do nothing but walk the streets all day long, and every time you see a person doing something you step up and help them. When you get all through just smile and say it was done with the courtesy of Johnson's Groceries.'

"And so them three men started out. A woman would be hanging clothes up on the line, and all of a sudden a man would come up and tip his hat and hang them clothes up for her. She'd be lugging home some bundles and this man would walk up and carry them home for her. If a feller was cutting wood he'd find another by his side helping out, and then when it was all cut the feller would grin and say, 'With the courtesy of Johnson's Groceries.'

"Well, sir, news of that spread from one end of the state to the other. Johnson saved his business, and he done more in three months than he ever had in a whole year since he'd been in business.

"He just got his thinking cap to working.

"And it seems to me that if instead of making so much stew about things and gitting nowheres, and even praying to the Lord to bring back good times, that we'd get a heap sight further if we'd get our common ordinary horse sense thinking cap to working. Yes, sir, if we're going to pray for prosperity let's do our praying while we're working."

Johnson saved his business because of the human touch of helfulness, as well as by his wit. To have had an unexpected, helping hand in a moment of need, awakened the finer feelings of gratitude and appreciation which found expression in the people wending their way, when they had money to buy, to the little store.

"No man hath hired us." Must men always be hired to perform little tasks or even greater ones that would mean so much to the many? Have men only eyes that can see the dollars and cents attached to a service? Must the question always be "What is there in it?"

The story of "The Stone in the Road" that is frequently told to the children is a simple tale but it contains a great lesson. The high points of the story as I recall them are that in a road entering a city lay a great stone. It had lain there a long time. The milk wagons had to go around it. The farmers with their produce, driving to the city had to go out of their way to get around the stone, even the soldiery marched around it and the old and feeble men followed the others, but no one ever moved the stone. So the good king in passing one day observed what the people had been doing and he was grieved over their selfishness. He resolved to teach them a lesson. He ordered his men to move the stone, make a little depression in the earth and lay therein twenty pieces of gold and replace the stone. Then he summoned the people both near and far to meet him at the place in the road where the great stone lay. When they had gathered there he stood in their midst and reminded them of what

He Went Up

By Arthur Oakman

"And Jesus, seeing the multitude, went up into a mountain, and when He was set down, His disciples came unto Him, and He opened his mouth and taught them saying: Blessed are ye."

THUS in a terse sentence Saint Matthew's gospel describes the setting for the giving of the law of the kingdom of God. The King was tended by no scribes with a glittering golden pen to write the words as they fell from his lips, there was no effusion of courtiers with their mock adoration and courtly graces, no cloth of gold, no bejeweled throne, no diadem on his brow; just a crowd of ordinary people, a mountain and Jesus.

Seeing the multitude, Jesus went up. It seems that the reason he went up was because he saw the multitude. Here was a group of people encompassing various temperaments and varying and differing avocations. Maybe some were hungry, some socially prominent, others were busy men; some may have been skeptics, others merely curious; many of them no doubt "followed the crowd"; while a few were seeking the Kingdom. One must suppose that Jesus saw these different types, and moreover, foresaw their effect upon the setting He needed in order to give his law. His words were still and mighty, and their import could best be gained in stillness and reverence. Crowds are distressing, the various temperaments, degrees of sincerity and power of absorption were not calculated to give him the setting he needed, so he went up.

To Jesus the mountain represented an opportunity to teach those who recognized their need of instruction. His climb was merely a willing act to bring them to Him. How strenuous it was we do not know, neither does it concern us.

The people must have watched him ascend with mixed feelings. Those who thought of Jesus as a philosopher of keen mind and flashing wit might follow him. If they had no pressing social engagements or were not very hungry or otherwise physically disturbed the chances were they would follow. If on the other hand they were engaged or hungry, they would see in the mountain only a further obstacle to their satisfaction and turn away. Jesus intended them to see either him or the mountain. The longer these people considered the latter in light of their longings the more reluctant they would be to follow the Master. To some of them it seemed useless. Why, if he wanted them to hear his teaching did he not stay down among them? He claimed to be a teacher; let him stay down among them on their own plane. Some of them no doubt considered they could hear him at a more convenient time. "He will be teaching again," they said, "let us go and eat."

To the wily Pharisee and scribe, the climb was utterly foolish. They liked to be with many people. The greater the crowd the better the chance of impressing them with their own importance. They thought every teacher would naturally be as they were, jealous of the good will of the multitude. "This fellow hath a devil. Why climb after Him to listen to His lies?" They would return to their books and councils—confounding him would be easier after further study. They saw the foolishness of the climb; that was all they saw. To them this appeared as a happy chance for them to escape. The words and deeds of Jesus were sources of perpetual disquietude to them. Duty and vanity had compelled them to remain with the crowd so long as it chose to follow Jesus. Now they could go home with the people and use the wonderful opportunity to discountenance His words, and sow seeds of mistrust and evil into indifferent ears. What the mountain represented to them was a happy release from the smart of the conscience, and an opportunity to "teach" the "law."

Some simply could not follow Jesus. These waited below, they were too sick to climb. He would heal them when he returned, and his words were just as real whether they came from the lips of his followers, or from his own. They wanted to listen but could not. These people never seriously considered the mountain. It was no difficulty to them. Others who would have ascended into the hill where the Lord was, but could not because they had urgent and legitimate business to attend, did not consider the mountain either. They looked forward to hearing his law from the lips of some friends who went up with Jesus.

But "His disciples" came unto him. They saw Jesus, He was bigger than the mountain. It was much more imperative that they hear what he had to say than that they go and fill some other engagement. The business friend could wait, when the delay was explained to him, he would understand, and even be happy to share the experience when it was told to him. The evening meal was hardly considered. What matter the loaves and fishes? This

Junior Stewardship Awards

By C. B. Woodstock

Junior Stewardship is a project in real earnest obedience to the financial law of the church. It is designed as an experience for young people from eight to fifteen, and older, in which they actually share in the responsibility of managing their own affairs as young stewards. Boys and girls who have joined the church are old enough to earn and to spend their money with due consideration for the value of a dollar. To earn honestly and to spend wisely are two of the most valuable lessons of life.

Junior Stewards not only learn the value of money but they learn to account for the money which passes through their hands in an accurately kept record. They recognize their partnership with God and pay regularly one tenth of their increase as a tithe. They have opportunity to learn in a group under the guidance of a Sponsor, the meaning of the tithe and the method of calculating the tithing due. They have the joyous experience of consistently obeying the financial law of the church, and of feeling that they are partners, indeed, with God.

For Junior Stewards the Presiding Bishopric provide a very convenient and neat Record Book at ten cents each for project use. The Record Book contains carefully prepared directions for Junior Stewardship, sample entries for a month and a double page ruling for the entries of each of the twelve months of a yearly record. In recent years several hundred records have been kept each year. There is a growing body of young people who are informed in the principles and trained in the practice of individual stewardship.

Each year those who keep a well kept record and fulfill the conditions of a steward as vouched for by their Sponsor and the Bishop's Agent, receive a special Award of Commendation signed by the Presiding Bishop. This year there are at this date nineteen who have been thus recommended. No doubt there are many others who might have been on this list if they had been more faithful in their work, if they had had more cooperation on the part of parents, or if the Sponsor had been more diligent in following up those under his charge.

We commend the following Juniors. They have been faithful in this responsibility. We may expect these people to render a worthy service in the church in the coming years.

Those who urge evangelism as the greater duty of the church are basically right. For the crucial thing, now and always, is the inner spirit that comes from one's life with God. No social problem can be finally solved without solving the problem of how to change the motives of men's lives. The Psalmist's prayer still pierces to the heart of every complex problem, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."

And this is something that those who are zealous for a better social order are in danger of forgetting. Their forgetting of it is what justifies the charge that much of the emphasis upon the "social Gospel" is thin and superficial. Too often they do not reckon sufficiently with the fact that man is a spiritiual being. Surely we have learned from our experience in dealing with the liquor problem not to place too much reliance on external adjustments or merely legislative methods. We know now that in the end the crucial problem is how to substitute self-control for self-indulgence, a concern for social welfare for a selfish private whim. The word with which Jesus began His ministry—"Repent"—is the word with which we have to begin.—"Why Evangelism and Social Service Must Go Together," in Federal Council Bulletin.

The Branch Bundle is now taking the Herald into more than sixteen hundred church homes.

A Problem Story for Young Home Builders

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Can a Wife Share a Husband With His Mother?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Edith Sterling, one of the Happy Half Dozen, helping Polly in an emergency, meets Dan Russell, a handsome business friend of Brad's. What looks like a happy romance begins to grow between them. Dan is not a member of the church. Into Polly's home comes Brad's mother, critical, sharp-tongued, and gossipy. Polly, loaded with responsibility and enmeshed in the tangle of other people's affairs, can not extricate herself. Unhappily she watches the dark clouds gathering over her home.

Chapter 8

Groping for the More Excellent Way

POLLY was not hearing the sermon. Nevertheless she gave all appearances of being an attentive listener. Sitting in her favorite seat in the gallery, where if Carroll became too noisy, she could take him out without feeling that she was doing so in the face of the entire congregation, she kept her hand near the baby's shoulder, her eyes on the speaker. Vaguely she remembered that he had read a rather lengthy Scripture lesson from 1 Corinthians. His name was William Jerome and he was of the old school of speakers, his oratorical powers seeming to catch and hold the interest of everyone in the room. Polly wondered how many actually were following his sermon, and how many, like herself, were worrying.

Behind Brother Jerome sat the purple-robed Stone Church Choir, their countenances relieved and relaxed. A few moments before they had completed their weekly 11 o'clock until 11.30 broadcast over KMBC. In the stand with the speaker were two of the elders whom Polly knew well.

But she saw none of them. She was thinking, and her heart was heavy. Life at that moment didn't seem worth a great deal to Polly.

Brad was not there this morning. He was rabbit hunting near the river with two of his friends. His wife had noticed for a week now that his restlessness had increased. Twice recently he had dined downtown in the evening and worked late. "We have a lot to do, darling," he had excused himself, but he had avoided looking at her. Brad had honest eyes, and he knew that often his eyes told Polly things that his tongue never voiced. And Polly's woman heart told her in this instance that it was not work that was keeping Brad out. It was his mother.

Not a day passed but what Polly scolded herself because of her seeming inability to get along with her mother-in-law. Many times she reminded herself that Mrs. Nelson was an elderly woman; that she was set in her ways; that she had difficulty in understanding younger points of view; and that, after all, she was generous and good, and wished to be helpful. The young woman had not spent hours and days with her husband's mother in vain. In the final analysis of her character, she had decided that most of Mrs. Nelson's actions were motivated by a deep craving for affection, a desire to be loved sincerely and intensely for her own merits. This love she had never found in the homes of either of her daughters, Polly was sure, and her son had not given it to her. Mrs. Nelson had been a widow for years, and in the extremity of her loveless condition, she had turned to the church for solace.

It was this belief that held Polly to patience and sweetness many times when anger set ablaze its fires in her heart. Because of it she kept to herself all the little home incidents of frictions and disharmony. She never mentioned happenings over the dishpan, or the baby's pen, or the milk jars, or the unmended socks, or a dozen others. There was no use.

But what was she to do about Brad? After all, he and Carrol were first considerations in her life. If it were only within her power to reconcile the different elements in her home, molding them into a family life of unity and peace!

Was there a way? Her soul wrestled with the problem, but still she felt lost, helpless, and almost hopeless. Here again, as so often before, humility flooded her consciousness. She felt the overwhelming need of the great Father of humankind. Her grip on Carrol's shoulder tightened until he paused in his drawing of "a house for Mummie" to look up into her face. Polly was thinking again the hymn-prayer the choir had just sung from the new Saints' Hymnal:

"Father, hear the prayer we offer;
Not for ease that prayer shall be,
But for strength, that we may ever
Live our lives courageously.

"Not for ever in green pastures
Do we ask our way to be;
But the steep and rugged pathway
May we tread rejoicingly."

The steep and rugged pathway? Surely hers was that now. And was she treading it rejoicingly? No.

Carrol squirmed in her grasp, uttered a protesting, "Mummie." Instantly Polly's finger lay on his lips. A woman sitting near smiled at them.

HOW Polly loved that congregation! Everywhere she looked familiar faces greeted, kindly faces, sober faces. Some were sad. Some looked lonely. But all were peaceful faces. These people she had known since girlhood.

Three seats away sat the Bris twins. Arthea Kent and her widowed mother were in their accustomed place below the clock. Cora had not stayed to church. She had slipped by Polly murmuring something about a headache. On the opposite side of the gallery were Echo and Postelle, their young faces seriously quiet as they listened. Postelle was taking notes. People said he was a rising young man in the ministry. He had been recently ordained a priest. On the west side of the main floor, near the front, sat Elder and Sister James Evans. Two more devoted souls Polly had never known. With them was a frail-looking neighbor woman whom they brought to church when her health permitted. Near the front row also Polly discerned the white-tipped plume of Mrs. Nelson's hat. Edith, her eyes downcast, sat with her mother and sister. The little brown felt hat she wore set off her face becomingly. The girl was motionless, but Polly knew that she, too, was far away from the sermon. Edith was thinking of the future, probably a future in which a dark-eyed young stranger constantly paraded. Then there were the Porters and the Weicks, and Sister Livingston, and the Matthisons.

Carrol was rustling the paper she had given him to "draw" on, and when she raised her eyes from quieting him, Polly found Echo watching her. Echo was a beautiful girl, and Polly could not blame Postelle for loving her. She admired his constancy and devotion. And then Echo deliberately winked. No one except Echo could do that in church and not seem ill-bred and even vulgar.

But Brad. Brad! It was the old cry in her heart. He knew that she did not like to have him hunting on Sunday. Nevertheless all he had said the night before was: "It'll have to be Sunday this time, honey, don't you see? We haven't been yet this year, and Moore can't get away any other time. Besides Sunday's getting to be quite a drag nowadays."

Sunday, a drag! And wasn't it for him? From his mother's crisp: "Well, I should think you could get up early enough to take us down to the church. It would make the neighbors think you were a little interested!" until she went to church at night, Sunday was a day of nagging for Brad. Mrs. Nelson never missed a service on Sunday, or at any other time, if she could help it. Attendance at every meeting was a strong principle in her religion. She attended the eight o'clock prayer meeting, Sunday school, church, afternoon prayer meeting, class at six o'clock, and church again at night. And she reveled in many church activities. It was a real sorrow to her that her son was not equally as wrapped up in churchgoing.

"He's just downright lazy, Polly," she had said more than once. "And I'm surprised that you encourage him in it."

"But Mother Nelson, you're mistaken—"

"What? Haven't I watched him time and again? He doesn't do a thing for the church. If all Latter Day Saints were like him, Zion would never be redeemed. You ought to keep after him. It's your wifely duty."

"But he's tired—"

"Tired, fiddlesticks!"

"—and on Sunday he wants to rest. He always has been good to go to church with me—until lately."

"Well—what's the matter with him lately?"

That old rebellious feeling in Polly's heart made her want to shout: "You!" but she stifled it, and turned away.

"I'm sure it's one of the greatest sorrows of my life!" and Mrs. Nelson went to her room shedding actual tears.

"Gwamma cwying?" Carrol's blue eyes were round with concern.

Polly could have wept, too, but she didn't.

Resolutely the young woman brought her mind back to the sermon. It was what some term a "doctrinal discourse." The white-haired speaker was saying:

"Each of us as church members must have and know his place to serve. We can not all serve in high offices. The divine plan does not provide for that, but we must occupy in the different places whereunto we are called. Some must be the hands, the fingers, the feet, the toes of the body. Some must occupy very small and seemingly insignificant places, but yet they are parts of the great whole.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Paul tells us, 'God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.' Then he questions the Corinthian saints as he tries to impress his lesson: 'Are all apostles?' Of course they are not. Again he questions: 'Are all prophets?' Naturally not. We are chosen and established by the Almighty God that we may serve where we are. There is something for each and everyone of us to do.

"The poet compares life to a great stage and the action thereon. Let us carry out the comparison. We can not all be leading actors. If we are, who will remain behind the scenes shifting, moving, prompting, directing, managing lights and sounds? No, I say, there is something for everyone to do on this great stage, but unless all work together, the effect is neither harmonious nor satisfying. When some one refuses to do his task, some one else suffers.

"In carrying out his comparison of the church to the human body, Paul tells us that the eye can not say that it is not of the body, nor can the foot say it is not of the body, and on down the line.

"Saints, in this time of great need, of crisis and peril in the church, in these days when the prophecies of old are being literally fulfilled, there is need that we come to a common basis of understanding—"

"Can we?" cried Polly to herself. "Is there such a thing as a common basis of understanding?" She thought of her own varied experiences, of Brad's and those of their friends. Mrs. Nelson, too, had had many experiences, but did any of these insure a common basis of understanding between her and the other members of her family. If there was such a basis and it could be found, Polly fervently believed that her home would cease to be a place of misunderstanding and discontent. Understanding —it was a wonderful thing.

SOME ONE shoved a note into her hand. It was addressed "Mrs. Polly Nelson." A telltale movement of the twins revealed its authorship:

"Dear Polly:" it read, "We got a 'listin in' on some rare gossip the other day! Thought you ought to know it. Some one is telling that you and Brad are getting a divorce because Brad is losing interest in the church. Isn't that the biggest lot of hooey? We certainly let them know a few things." It was signed "Dittos."

Polly almost cried out in protest. She was stunned. But she managed to give them an arch smile. Gossip again! She was afraid of gossip, for she had seen how it had hurt the lives of several she knew to be good people. And then she was angry, deeply, intensely angry. Mother Nelson was partly responsible for this. At least she had given definite expression to her son's disinterest in the church. And it wasn't true. Brad was interested. He helped in many ways, the greatest being in the loyal support he gave Polly in everything she undertook for the church. How could Mrs. Nelson—how could she thoughtlessly talk until she started the rankest kind of gossip about her son whom she really loved? For a moment an unholy desire possessed Polly; she wanted to rise in her place, point out her mother-in-law, and say to the congregation: "There sits a female Judas!" And yet that would not be just. Mrs. Nelson had never meant to do such a thing. Her purpose was not malicious.

The sermon was taking on that tone of finality so often characteristic of old-time speakers close upon the conclusion. "A sort of running-down-almost-to-the-end tone," Brad had described it.

"Gifts? The church has many gifts," Brother Jerome was saying. "Paul was especially interested that the Corinthian saints be reminded of the gifts of healing and tongues and interpretation of tongues. He speaks also of knowledge and prophecy and others, but this is his grand conclusion: 'But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.' That, my friends, is the divine message to us today—covet earnestly the best gifts. Seek the more excellent way."

"Oh, Lord," prayed Polly. "Do. Do help me. I would bring the best gifts into my home—the gifts of thy love and peace. And I would know the more excellent way. Teach me."

Then the congregation, the choir, and the organ filled the church with one mighty and majestic melody:

"Holy, holy, holy! Lord God Almighty,
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee;
Holy, holy, holy! merciful and mighty!
God over all, who rules eternity."

Autobiography of a Dime

I am a dime—ten cents.
I never talk to the butcher.
They tell me I am too small to be seen or heard,
So I remain in the pocket or purse.

I am ignored at the ball game, and never invited to see a good picture.

When it comes to "joy riding" I am invisible, because gasoline, oil and repairs cost money.

Clubs and lodges positively refuse to admit me.

I am too little and insignificant to buy a Christmas or birthday present.

I AM HARDLY FIT FOR A TIP!

But, believe me, when it comes to supporting the church—I am considered—SOME MONEY!

Word of Wisdom Centenary---1833-1933

By Earnest A. Webbe

STILL ANOTHER CENTENARY in the great work of the Restoration falls on the 27th of February this year for on that date in 1833 was given the revelation known to Latter Day Saints as the "Word of Wisdom," found in Doctrine and Covenants, 86th Section. One hundred years have passed over the church since that day, many of which were passed in great stress and tribulation so that doctrinally we were not able to give needed study and consideration to a matter more suited to smoother-going times.

But, until recent years, we had been prospering; the old persecutions had abated, or at least changed to milder forms; we had reached a vantage place for culture and refinement of life, a season when thoughtful people were giving time to self-improvement. We then had the time to dig down in the treasure-box of our Faith and see if there were not some old and sterling valuables there. Not antiquities, but bright and shining accoutrements well adapted to our present-day needs. One such is the Word of Wisdom.

Is it not remarkable that this centenary of "The Order and Will of God for the temporal salvation of All Saints" should find the church and its people in such straits? We have partaken so largely of the world, been so dominated by its customs and vagaries that we have been caught in the same slough of depression; we have been influenced by its standards, suffered its ills, and are expected to pay the price it exacts. The Spirit has cried, "Come up out of her, O ye My people, and be not a partaker of her," and all along this counsel of the 86th Section has lain mostly dormant when it should have been flourishing as the green bay tree in our midst and preparing us to withstand the stress now upon us. It is not too late for us to examine and consider whether or no we have been cheating ourselves in the neglect and diffidence we have accorded the Word of Wisdom.

We desire to call attention to a few salient features of the revelation that may inspire you to turn to it more avidly and delve for yourself amid its promises, for they are indeed significant to the true Latter Day Saint.

Do not read this 86th Section merely as an isolated revelation but consider it in sequence with those preceding and following. Surely this was a period in which the church reached its highest spiritual plane; see the latter part of 83d; and the 84th on Priesthood; the wonderful doctrine and philosophy found in the 85th, the deportment and ethical requirements necessary in the life of our ministry, then the 86th or "Word of Wisdom," undoubtedly one of the "Keys of the Kingdom" delivered to the prophet and his counselor with which to unfold the "mysteries of the kingdom" since "great treasures of hidden wisdom" are promised by observing the principles given therein. Thus are the 86th and 87th linked together as well as earlier ones on the work of the bishopric for the temporal salvation of his charges. Then the work of the Order of Enoch followed by the beauty and sublimity of the 90th in which is amplified the statement that even Jesus learned obedience by the things he suffered since "He received not the fullness at first, but continued from grace to grace until he received a fullness and thus he was called the Son of God."

Our mortal bodies are made up of the elements to become temples of God but he will not permit his Spirit to abide therein when there is uncleanness there, nor shall the mind function at its best or be attuned to his will while we are content with the common and even unclean that satisfies the world. Again we ask, "Are we not cheating ourselves greatly by our neglect of so good a counsel?"

Let us seek a little deeper into this treasure chest: It was given in trust to the "council of high priests assembled in Kirtland" for their personal benefit first and then to be sent (i. e., taught) kindly and considerately to the church. Now unless they put it to the test (and it will bear some strong testing) personally how could they properly indorse and recommend it to the Saints at large? Is not that largely why we find ourselves in the present distress today and for precisely the same reason? It would pay to "take time out" to study and analyze the values set forth in this counsel so that as a Priesthood we could present them intelligently to our congregations and families and study groups. Some may say there is too much variance of opinion and private interpretation to set out on any definite course but we know that there are half a hundred references in our books to "the restoration of all things had from the beginning"; Christ referred the lawyers to those conditions when they heckled him. Enoch managed to get his people off this detour through the "valley of the shadow of death." We shall have to learn how if we hope to reach the Mil-

The Martyrs of Old

By Charles H. Arven

WHILE conversing with my neighbor the other day, he asked me why the martyrs of old were such outstanding Christians and loyal unto death, and if I thought there were Christians today who would sacrifice their lives in the way the martyrs of old did. The question surprised me and I confess I was not prepared to give him the kind of answer I should have given. Since then, I have thought of those questions and expect I could give him a better answer.

One reason the martyrs of old were so loyal, even unto death, was they drew their strength and acquired their loyalty from the bodily presence of the divine Master. They talked and associated almost day and night with him and it is not to be greatly wondered at that they absorbed so much strength and the courage needed to be loyal unto death. Those martyrs did possess a loyalty that was outstanding, which, perhaps, has never been equaled in a religious way; but today the Christian, if he is loyal, is loyal by faith. Jesus walks with us in bodily form no more. And I believe that we sometimes forget that we still may walk with him in the spirit just as closely as did the martyrs of old.

I am inclined to think the martyrs of old did have a little advantage over the Christians of today, for what could be more inspiring to give courage of the kind needed to be loyal unto death, than to walk and talk with the blessed Savior as he was in person then? We are only human and though we may still walk with Jesus in the spirit, I suspect if he came again to earth to talk with us, our faith and loyalty would promptly increase a thousandfold.

Jesus was an innovator; he gave us a new life and taught the better way to live it. Centuries have passed since he walked the shores of Galilee but his glorious message and the way of everlasting life, which he taught his disciples, we have in our homes in black and white today. We are not left to grope our way blindly but a Comforter is provided to guide us in all things. Just why, then, should there be any doubt as to whether the Christians of today would prove as loyal, if brought to the test, as were the martyrs of old?

There is considerable criticism today as to why the gifts, promised by Jesus on the eve of his departure, are not in force as strong as they should be. These gifts were indeed promised by Jesus but he also made a proviso: "Go ye into the world and preach to all nations, observing all things whatsoever I have commanded you and these signs shall follow them that believe." If these gifts are not in full force as they should be, what is the reason they are not? Must we admit a lack of the Holy Spirit today? Is it because of the stress of the world and the many temptations that beset us on every side, or is our careless and indifferent natures alone to blame? I suspect it is up to the Christian to ask himself the question, "Why?" and also to find the answer.

The world has produced many martyrs and the name is sufficient praise for those who sacrificed their lives. It is to the martyrs of the Bible that I confine this article as they are more essential to the Christian and furnish the kind of instruction needed in our lives today. Men, who were not Christians, have died without a show of emotion or fear but the martyrs died with a willingness that is amazing and met death rejoicing, for they knew that only by separation of the spirit from the body, could they hope to be with Jesus again, and they welcomed the separation gladly.

Now I suspect the real secret of the loyalty of the martyrs of old was the power of the Holy Ghost with which they were filled. Peter was a peculiar character from the very first and at times seemed to be overenthusiastic, but failed woefully when asked if he knew the Master. Peter certainly did not have the Holy Ghost when he denied the Savior, but he did have it abundantly when he gave up his life on the cross. The sad request that he made, as to the manner in which he desired to die, could never have been made without the power of the Holy Spirit to sustain him in the greatest trial of his life. But, like Paul, he became a beautiful character in the end and is one of our outstanding martyrs.

The martyr Paul was educated and perhaps possessed some advantage over Peter, and in his early career was probably haughty and a rigid disciplinarian, and was almost forced to become loyal by the stern reprimand that Jesus gave him on the road to Damascus. But the incident quickly brought Paul to his senses and paved the way for a loyalty unsurpassed, and I suspect that Jesus wanted to make of Paul an outstanding disciple and if He did, Paul certainly proved he was well worthy of the Master's selection.

The years that Paul spent in prison at Rome awaiting his impending doom must have been sad and lonely ones. His writing probably furnished a

Personality Through the Christian Spirit

By Roberta Lewis

IT MATTERS NOT how we define personality—as "individuality in sociality."—some one in meaningful relations with the universe, "time transcendence," "realization of universal values," "self-giving," or, "climbing up from the valley of man to the windswept mountains of God,"—each definition finds its truest exemplification in the life of him whom we call Jesus.

Into a world dominated by selfishness, strife, and crass materialism, he brought his constructive gospel of God's good will, peace and spirituality.

He came teaching, not so much by word of mouth as by way of life. He was indeed the word become flesh, dwelling among men. He taught and achieved his ends in the way God has always ordained his will to be taught, through "the impact of one divinely appointed soul on other souls," or the influence of one strong personality on other personalities.

Jesus was keenly aware of the many conflicting aspects of the life about him and with unerring judgment sifted the chaff of hypocrisy and lifeless ritualism, from the wheat of the life-giving, integrating forces. He synthesized the best of the Hebraic and Hellenic spirits and imbued it with his own philosophy and gave the world its most comprehensive formula for personality-building.

Standing midway on the mountain with one hand firmly clasped in God's, he stood reaching his other hand down to struggling humanity, thus giving mankind its best revelation of what God is like and what man may become.

NO ONE can list all the contributions of Jesus to humanity, but an arbitrary division suggests five important ones:

First, The Fatherhood of God. In ancient days God had been imaged in varying conceptions, as a king, as a stern judge, as heartless destiny, and as an avenging spirit, but it is to Jesus we owe the conception of the loving fatherly God with a personal interest in the welfare of his creations.

Second, Potential Sonship of Man. Jesus said, I will give them "power to become the sons of God." If men believed sincerely that they were sons of God what a vital difference it would make in their activities and attitudes. If God is our father, then through obedience to his way of life we will be his heirs.

Third, The Brotherhood of Man. By his fine disregard for lines of party cleavage, his respect for the sanctity of personality, and his anxiety to help all who needed what he could give, he gave us the concept of true brotherhood.

Fourth, Possibility of Eternal Life. Eternal life is more a matter of quality than of quantity of life. He taught men how to live a quality of life that is eternal even while on this earth—an ever-expanding life, until it becomes the life of the eternal Father.

Fifth, The Redeeming Power of Love. Few of the leaders have gone about setting up their kingdom armed with love rather than with weapons of warfare, as did Jesus, and yet Jesus' kingdom is still growing while theirs have fallen into decay in a short time.

How much agony and desolation would have been spared the world had it learned just this one lesson even twenty years ago.

The high estimate Jesus placed on the sanctity and power of personality is evidenced by the fact that he intrusted his great message to but a small group of Galileans. He wrote no autobiography, no memoirs, no written instructions to his disciples; he deemed it sufficient to leave his influence indelibly engraved in the hearts of his little band of followers. ("I will put my law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts.")

A few of these disciples, urged by varying considerations, wrote down his sayings which they had treasured in their souls. Such an one was Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; and such an one was Nephi, of whom I write.

FOR MORE THAN A HUNDRED YEARS a book has been published by a certain church. It is difficult to say whether the church or the book has received the greatest share of the unjust invective that has been constantly poured out since the book was published and the church was organized. And yet this same book—if true, and few who have read it doubt its veracity—is one of the rarest of all American books. In fact, it is the American book, for it is the record of the ancestors of the American Indians, written by themselves and hidden away in a New York hill until discovered there in 1827.

This book tells of their journey across the ocean; of their prophets and leaders, their wars and contentions, their great cities and their industries; it gives the only satisfactory explanation of the South and Central American ruins (few explorers go there unarmed with its helpfulness), but its most important recording is of the dealing of God with his people here, paralleling the record kept by the Hebrews, climaxed in each case by the revelation of Jesus unto them.

John records the words of Jesus, "and other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." And in the Book of Mormon we find Jesus saying, "And verily I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. And they understand me not, for they supposed it had been the Gentiles; for they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching; . . . But behold ye have both heard my voice, and seen me and ye are my sheep, and ye are numbered among those whom the Father hath given me."

When the Spanish explorers first came to this continent they were surprised to find many symbols and traditions among the natives reminiscent of Christianity. Perhaps most interesting of all is the legend of one of their gods called Quetzalcoatl. From the history of Mexico, by Claverijo, I quote, "Quetzalcoatl was among the Mexicans and all other nations of Anahuac, the God of the air. He was said to have once been high priest of Teula. They figured him tall, big, and of a fair complexion with an open forehead, large eyes, long black hair, and a thick beard (a virile Jesus?) . . . he was thought to possess the greatest industry, and to have invented the art of melting metals and cutting gems. He was supposed to have had the most profound wisdom, which he displayed in the laws which he left mankind."

Might such a legend have rise in this Book of Mormon account? "And it came to pass that while they were thus conversing one with another, they heard a voice, as if it came out of heaven; and they cast their eyes round about, for they understood the voice which they heard; And it was not a harsh voice, neither was it a loud voice, nevertheless, and notwithstanding it being a small voice, it did pierce them that did hear it, to the center, insomuch that there was no part of their frames that it did not cause to quake; yea, it did pierce them to the very soul, and did cause their hearts to burn. And it came to pass that again they heard the voice, and they understood it not; and again the third time they did hear the voice, and did open their ears to hear it; and their eyes were turned towards the sound thereof; and they did look steadfastly towards heaven, from whence the sound came; and behold, the third time they did understand the voice which they heard; and it said unto them, Behold, my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him. And it came to pass as they understood, they cast their eyes up again towards heaven; and behold, they saw a man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them, and the eyes of the whole multitude were turned upon him, and they durst not open their mouths, even one to another, and wist not what it meant, for they thought it was an angel that had appeared unto them. And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand, and spake unto the people, saying, Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world; and behold I am the light and the life of the world, and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning. And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words, the whole multitude fell to the earth, for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should shew himself unto them after his ascension into heaven."

Thus came Jesus to his "other sheep." Here he chose twelve disciples and here he taught the multitude. In a few days he gave them the quintessence of his life of ministry in Palestine.

Nephi was one of the twelve whom Jesus chose, and he it was who chronicled the story on plates of brass. A few quotations from his record will show Jesus taught the same soul-liberating message here as he did on the other continent. There was the same conflict between the Mosiac law and Christ's teachings, for these people had brought the Pentateuch with them.

"And he said unto them, Marvel not that I said unto you, that old things had passed away, and that all things had become new. Behold I say unto you that the law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfill the law; therefore, it hath an end. Behold, I do not destroy the prophets, for as many as have not been fulfilled in me, verily, I say unto you, shall all be fulfilled. And because I said unto you, that old things had passed away, I do not destroy that which has been spoken concerning things which are to come. For behold, the covenant which I have made with my people, is not fulfilled; but the law which was given unto Moses, hath an end in me. Behold, I am the law, and the light; look unto me, and endure to the end, and ye shall live, for unto him that endureth to the end will I give eternal life. Behold, I have given unto you the commandments; therefore keep my commandments. And this is the law and the prophets, for they truly testify of me."

There are a few verses that eloquently describe the mysticism of the Christian spirit, that somehow give a revealing glimpse into the greatness of Jesus and bespeaks the awe felt by any group when they see personality at its height, the respect of one soul for a greater soul.

"And when he had said these words, he himself also knelt upon the earth, and behold he prayed unto the Father, and the things which he prayed, can not be written, and the multitude did bear record who heard him. And after this manner do they bear record; the eye hath never seen, neither hath the ear heard, before, so great and marvelous things as we saw and heard Jesus speak unto the Father; and no tongue can speak, neither can there be written by any man, neither can the hearts of men conceive so great and marvelous things as we both saw and heard Jesus speak; and no one can conceive of the joy which filled our souls at the time we heard him pray for us unto the Father."

In Palestine Jesus associated freely with all classes of people, seeing the true person and not judging by superficialities. His message was universal in scope, intended for all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, and so likewise he taught his disciples in America saying:

"And behold, ye shall meet together oft, and ye shall not forbid any man from coming unto you when ye shall meet together, but suffer them that they may come unto you, and forbid them not; but ye shall pray for them, and shall not cast them out; and if it so be that they come unto you oft, ye shall pray for them unto the Father, in my name; therefore hold up your light that it may shine into the world. Behold I am the light which ye shall hold up—that which ye have seen me do. Behold ye see that I have prayed unto the Father, and ye all have witnessed; and ye see that I have commanded that none of you should go away, but rather have commanded that ye should come unto me, that ye might feel and see; even so shall ye do unto the world; and whosoever breaketh this commandment, suffereth himself to be led into temptation."

Jesus gave of "the water of life" to the woman at the well, the water which satisfies the thirst of the soul. One verse in the record of Nephi tells of similar spiritual food:

"And he said unto them, He that eateth this bread, eateth of my body to his soul, and he that drinketh of this wine, drinketh of my blood to his soul, and his soul shall never hunger nor thirst, but shall be filled."

THROUGHOUT the recorded words of Jesus, "Father" is the term used for God. The loving paternity of Jesus' God is well illustrated by this verse, "Ye must always pray unto the Father in my name, and whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is right, believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be given unto you."

Neither in Palestine nor America did Jesus confine his teachings and activities to the mystical and spiritual aspects of life. Well he knew that for its best expression a personality needs an unmaimed body—a body wholly sound, filled with the zest of living, and so he said, unto them:

"Have ye any that are sick among you, bring them hither. Have ye any that are lame, or blind, or halt, or maimed, or leprous, or that are withered, or that are deaf, or that are afflicted in any manner, bring them hither, and I will heal them, for I have compassion upon you; my bowels are filled with mercy; for I perceive that ye desire that I should shew unto you what I have done unto your brethren at Jerusalem, for I see that your faith is sufficient, that I should heal you. And it came to pass that when he had thus spoken, all the multitude, with one accord, did go forth, with their sick, and their afflicted, and their lame, and with their blind, and with their dumb, and with all that were afflicted in any manner; and he did heal them every one as they were brought forth unto him; and they did all, both they who had been healed, and they who were whole, bow down at his feet, and did worship him; and as many as could come, for the multitude, did kiss his feet, insomuch that they did bathe his feet with their tears."

He knew also that men could not realize their highest self if they were racked by economic worries, so he taught the gospel of love for one's brother and consideration for all. The record started by Nephi is continued by his son Nephi after the death of the elder Nephi, and he gives a very beautiful account of the effect of this visit of Jesus to them and the type of life led by the inhabitants for two centuries afterwards: "And they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift . . . there was no contention in the land because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people . . . and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God."

The world today is groping for happiness and security. It has tried war and hatred and greed and has reaped its harvest in more wars, more hatred, and more greed. The way of competitive individualism has been tried and found wanting. Happiness has been sought in the possessions of "things," but the result is a fear of losing them and an insatiable desire for more "things."

When will men try Jesus' way to a more abundant life? When will they put the emphasis on the spiritual rather than the material? On men instead of things? When will they try love instead of hate? Peace instead of war? When will they think of sharing rather than acquiring?

Is there any real reason why it should not be said of America today, America, with her vast resources, her civilization, her opportunities, that "Surely there could be no happier people among all the people who have been created by the hand of God?"

HE WENT UP

man had the words of life. These were his disciples because they came unto him. Nothing else mattered.

We still come, each one of us, to the foot of that same mountain. The only reason Jesus came down among us at all, was that he might lead us up there. The kind of people we are, the dominant interest of our lives will determine whether we follow him and listen to the law of the kingdom, or stay below with the crowd at the foot of the hill, a prey to the words of evil men and doctrines of devils.

Each of us, let me repeat, comes to the foot of that same hill if we follow Jesus. There is no escape. He leads us there, and compels us to choose to follow him and listen to the words he has to give, or remain with the crowd. What Jesus sees in the mountain is his opportunity to compel us to evaluate him and ourselves. Strange as it appears, the hill of the Lord judges us, because in it are the words of eternal life and the law of the kingdom. To those of us who are his disciples, he will count more than the mountain, and his first words are, "Blessed are ye."

lennium and our progress to Zion will fail without. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mount," is the eventual condition even as it was "in the beginning." As the waters of obstruction rolled not back until Israel's priesthood stepped therein, carrying the Ark of the Covenant, so today it is desirable that we elders and ministry without privilege of omission, shall carry forth this Latter-day Covenant, for this seems to be near the time designated in Section 45: 4, ". . . They perceive not the light and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; in that generation the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled and there shall be men in that generation that shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come upon the land . . . but my disciples shall stand in holy places and shall not be moved," or as the Word of Wisdom concludes, "I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them." (By the way, have you ever read Numbers 11, to the end? or the seventy-eighth Psalm?) There are in our day many baffling diseases such as the flu, diabetes, cancer, etc., which honest doctors admit are beyond present medical science; yet, "strange to say," many of these dread diseases are alleviated and even cured by a return to natural living.

source from which he derived considerable comfort and, no doubt, kept him from much brooding. He was probably aware of his coming fate but awaited it cheerfully and calmly, and the power of the Holy Ghost comforted him. But Paul was tired, worn and weary with the constant strife in the Master's work and at times, perhaps, was impatient for the end to come. "I have fought a good fight," he said, "and I know a crown awaits me." And Paul was indeed worthy of the reward and his memory always will be vivid in the minds and hearts of the Christian world. Thus, through his sad martyrdom, Paul becomes a shining example of what a Christian may attain.

Stephen was also an outstanding martyr, though not spoken of so often or so well known as Peter and Paul, perhaps, nevertheless he was an earnest and zealous worker and performed a number of miracles and his loyalty was true unto death: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," he cried as he was being stoned to death and fell asleep. And to think that at this time Paul stood by consenting unto his death, which, in after years, may have caused Paul much sorrow and regret.

John, the disciple who was beheaded, was also a martyr, for he perished for his belief while doing the will of the Master, yet like all the rest, he was abundantly endowed with the Spirit and even while in prison, the work of conversion was carried on. Much of the prevalent belief in regard to the manner in which certain disciples met their death, among whom was one of the most prominent, is not wholly confirmed by Bible historians but seems to rest on tradition alone. Even so, there may be more truth in tradition than Bible historians suppose.

There are other Bible characters spoken of as martyrs in religious history and by tradition, such as James, and even Isaiah who was supposed to have been sawn in two pieces, but the authority for and description of their death is very uncertain and had better be left to the imagination of our poets and artists. There seems, however, to be but little doubt that most of the disciples died martyrs for their belief, but whatever record of truth there may have been in the early times, in reference to certain ones and the manner of their death, it seems to have been lost for ever in vague antiquity.

Thus, a review of the Bible martyrs, will naturally draw the Christian's mind

to that all-important subject, immortality of the soul. It has always been my belief that man was created immortal and is immortal today. His passing on from the materialistic environment here is only transition to continuous immortality, where it may be reasonable to infer, he continues on from where he left off here and steadily advances to that high standard of perfection. Creation is spiritual; that is, all life is spiritual. It is the throbbing and dominant force of the universe and the sooner unbelievers acknowledge the spiritual power of a spiritual God, the sooner the problem of immortality will cease to confuse them and leave them the comforting thought that immortality is for all.

The older the world grows, the more enlightened man becomes. The primitive times of superstition and belief in an unjust and revengeful God has long since passed away. In its stead, is the knowledge that God is love and little by little he releases knowledge of things spiritual for those of his children who earnestly desire to enter the door of truth. We can not, at this time, have any great conception of God's great plan. We have only a glimmer of the glory to come but we do know that the Father is love and loves humanity and offers immortality to all.

Book after book has been written on man and the ape, and the theory of evolution has been broadcasted over the world, but always, as has been the case with other false books of this nature, it has been rejected as an unbelievable theory. Man can not escape from that inherent belief in a living God. His nature is impregnated with it. He has believed in it since the day he was born and his soul cries out in protest to any materialistic form of belief that does not carry with it complete assurance that man's soul is immortal. When man leaves his environment here and passes on into a spiritual world, it is but a logical inference that he was created immortal here and simply gone on to fulfill the mission that was predestined from the birth of his creation. Thus, a review of the martyrs may lead the Christian into a deeper study of the life to come, and fuller realization that man does have an immortal soul, and inherits eternal immortality.

It is the desire of the writer, through portrayal of the martyrs, to create in the Christian's mind, a more earnest desire for a clearer conception of the marvelous power of the Holy Spirit, which enabled the martyrs to bear with fortitude, their greatest trial and the darkest hour of their turbulent lives. And I would appeal to all Christians to strive earnestly to acquire the precious gift of the Spirit which insures our loyalty, faith and obedience, even unto death. It is obvious that the Christian can not enjoy full and complete fellowship with Christ, until he receives the Divine Spirit. The uncertain span of our short lives should be ample warning not to let the opportunity pass by.

they had been doing for a long time and said, "No people can be a happy people who do nothing for one another." The stone was then moved and there lay the shining gold before the eyes of all the people.

On our roads and highways the overgrown hedges that obstruct the view of an approaching car, could be cut; a wall nearby made safer; steps more steady; a few shovelsful of earth filling up a hole in the road; a menace removed from the neighborhood; a widow's yard made more tidy; the snow removed from an aged couple's sidewalk, and dozens of other things that would call forth the gratitude of neighbors and travelers, and touch the finer feelings of appreciation to which no appeal has been made, "for every man goeth his own way."

The days of Jesus were full of ministering. That he could accomplish so much can only be accounted for through his immeasureable love for humanity. The Apostle John said, "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." (John 21: 25.) We can hardly compare our lives with the Master's—rather, must we contrast them. Jesus gave us these words: "Give and it shall be given unto you good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over shall men give into your bosom." (Luke 6: 38.)

We shall be the happier for the unpaid service that we can give even in these depressing times, when "No man hath hired us."

Natural Increase

By W. H. Deam

In Brother E. A. Smith's article in the Herald of December 7, I note the following: "If the church could retain its own natural increase from generation to generation," etc. It reminded me of a remark Bishop Keir made to me once: "If we could retain our own natural increase we would become a great power in a short time. Take for instance, the Catholics. Their missionary work is largely in the families. A child born in a Catholic family is brought up a Catholic from infancy. It knows nothing else."

When I came to Independence a good many years ago I was asked to teach a class of girls, whose teacher was absent. They were young maidens of about sixteen years of age. I asked each one if she had studied the lesson. Not one of them knew a thing about the lesson. They were supposed to be studying the Religio Quarterly. I asked each if she knew who Lehi was, Nephi, Moroni. They did not know there was such a book as the Book of Mormon. All had been baptized. All were daughters of very prominent men in the church.

Those girls have long since been married, are stanch members of the church. They have children and have been bringing them up in the belief of the angel message. At the time I undertook to teach the class they were in the giddy time of life, known as the adolescent age. They were good girls, but at that time their minds were filled with other things than religion. Their parents were trusting in the teacher, who evidently had not taught them much. I mention this for a purpose which will be seen further on.

Children should be taught with the same rigidity that the Catholic children are, by precept and example, should be taught to reverence God, and Christ, and Mary, too, not to worship her as the Catholics do, but we should reverence more than we do the mother of our Lord and Savior.

Now here is an example of what a mother can do for the church by teaching her children. She is a mother of four daughters. She taught the first two so that when they were eight years of age they wanted to be baptized, but there was objection by one member of the family. Finally outside pressure was brought to bear on the one having the objection, which was removed, and permission was granted. This paved the way for the other two to be baptized as soon as they arrived at the age of accountability.

That mother, through the careful teaching of her children has seen, not only her four girls in the church, but their father, and the husbands of all four girls. All have children and I suppose they have been baptized also, if the girls are anything like their mother. Had those girls not been baptized when they wanted to it is just possible they never would have been baptized.

What would be the increase if all mothers of the average family of four had the same amount of influence over their children as the one mentioned above had? It would be like an endless chain, ever increasing.

As soon as the little one's heart is right he or she should be baptized, even if they don't know exactly what it is all about, they will grow into it. Section 67 and paragraph 4 of Doctrine and Covenants states parents should teach their children the gospel, and if they do not and the children sin, the sin shall be upon the parents. People who go to church and live godly lives except they fail to teach their children will have something to answer for. They had better never go to church than to let their children run wild.

God Is Adding to the Church Daily

By Hubert Case

The work of the church goes on. Having spent Christmas with loved ones at home in Independence, Missouri, I returned to Michigan to take up the work again, to work with a great people, a people whose hearts have been touched with divine fire. This is the fire of inspiration that is felt by every earnest worker for the Master when he enters the Latter-day work.

I know that God is adding to the church daily such as should be saved, just as he did in former times. On the first Sunday after my return to the work here in Central Michigan, the date was January 22, while I was preaching in the morning, one young woman said that the Spirit completely enveloped her, and impressed her to be baptized. That night during the preaching two others gave their names for baptism. Brother Murdock, a doctor, had also given his name, so on next Sunday, February 12, our class will be ready for the water.

The three days at Tawas City proved to be a real spiritual feast. The splendid group there is under the leadership of Brother M. A. Summerfield, a stanch worker for many years.

Yesterday (February 5) was the first day of meeting for Saginaw Saints in their newly-decorated and remodeled church. This was the building which was damaged by fire when Brother F. M. McDowell was scheduled to speak in December.

It was a great day for us at Saginaw. The Lord was with us in power, speaking to us at the sacrament meeting. Brother William Grice commenced a two weeks' meeting there last night, and I shall be here at Midland at least a week.

The Saints are increasing in spiritual power as they are willing to walk in the law of the Lord. May we all learn this lesson. Then Zion will be redeemed.

Missionary J. J. Ledsworth Healed

By a Contributor

On Saturday, December 3, Elder J. J. Ledsworth and wife were at the home of Brother and Sister Wood, of Onaway, Michigan, for the purpose of carrying on a series of meetings. Having had good interest and attendance for two weeks, they had decided to continue another week when Brother Ledsworth was taken ill. It looked as if his work was finished. He lay unconscious of the things of this world for almost two hours.

We sent Sister Mabel Wood for Elder Ernest Burt and telephoned for the doctor. The doctor arrived first and found our brother in a critical condition. When he left he said he would be back in about an hour. Then Elder Burt offered prayer and administered to Brother Ledsworth, but we saw no change.

Brother Burt returned home to do his chores, bidding us to come for him again if Brother Ledsworth did not get better. Within an hour he took worse and we had to work diligently to keep him breathing.

We sent again for Elder Burt who brought Elder Fred Truax with him. Brother Burt anointed with oil, and Brother Truax offered the prayer, followed by Brother Burt. At the close of Brother Burt's prayer, he asked God to cause our brother to breathe normally. Then the sufferer opened his eyes, looked around the room, recognized each one, and spoke to the elders by name. "Where is Mabel?" he asked. She had gone into the dining room. We asked if we should bring her in, and he replied, "Have them all come in."

We did so, and as he looked around the room, all were silently grateful, their hearts full of praise. Brother Ledsworth raised his hand and spoke in tongues, speaking directly to Brothers Burt, Truax, Wood, and to Sister Ledsworth. He then gave the interpretation, and those in the room sang, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

Brother Ledsworth said that he was tired and believed he would be rested if he could get up. This he did, came into the dining room, and sat in a rocking chair visiting as if nothing had been wrong.

Sister Wood prepared a light lunch and Brother Ledsworth took his place at the table. Just as we were seated the doctor drove up to the door. Sister Mabel met him there. He asked how the sick man was, and she replied: "Sitting at the table ready for lunch." He came in with a surprised look on his face, and advised Brother Ledsworth not to eat any food, only to take plenty of hot drink and broth.

Brother Ledsworth was in the pulpit Sunday morning at the eleven o'clock service, and occupied each evening until the close of his series. He bore testimony Sunday morning that he took two journeys during his illness. He went to a place where there was a large and spacious mansion. Over the entrance was the word Faithful. The gate was closed. He came back and then made the second journey to the same place. This time the gate was open and he was permitted to look inside. The beauty of the place he could not describe, but he was told to go back and finish his work.

He closed his series of meetings the next Sunday. Four were baptized into the fold.

Thankful for Healing

By Alice Sousy

I am so thankful that my heart overflows with joy. I had been confined to my bed with tuberculosis of the walls of the bowels from July 18, when early in December my doctor told me he could do no more for me. All during this time I had taken his advice, but immediately I arose from my bed, and having heard of the church before, went at once in search of it. I found it at Beardstown, Illinois, and was administered to December 13. Administrations followed, one each day for several days. Then the Central Illinois conference opened, and on Friday evening Brother J. F. Garver, of Lamoni, Iowa, gave a sermon on the text, "O, My Little Flock." After the services I was buried in Christ's likeness, a wonderful ordinance.

Now I am at home with my family and doing my work for the first time in nearly a year. I have no pain and am sure that as long as I walk with Him, he will ease all my suffering. I thank the Lord daily for my earthly parent whom I had not seen for nearly fourteen years, and who came and brought this message of peace to me. I am thankful that the truth has been given to me.

Visits Old Home in Virginia to Bear Testimony of Gospel

By Samuel C. Andes

The last of August, 1932, I went on a visit to my old home in Virginia, which I left March 29, 1875. It was there I found the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, November 17, 1874. I wanted once again to see the Saints I had known so many years before.

The days of my young manhood were spent searching for the truth. I had been in three churches before I found the latter-day gospel. I was satisfied with no faith, but kept going from church to church until the Father gave me a witness that I had obeyed his law by being baptized by one having authority from on high.

Always I have enjoyed living with men who kept the laws of God.

When I left my mother she asked: "Sam, do you believe you are right?" "I know I am," I answered her, "and I am thankful that always when I do God's will, he fulfills his promises."

And so this past summer I returned to my old home to tell my friends why after so many years, I am with this church. I had a pleasant visit everywhere I went.

Years ago Brother James Mohler went there and built up quite a nice branch. Another brother was with him, and the Spirit spoke to him saying that the branch would go down and would hardly be known. Now there are two sisters living in that place, one brother and his wife are about ten miles northeast and another brother about eight miles south. They have had no meetings for some time. I am quite sure, however, that the rest of the prophecy given that brother, will be fulfilled, and the branch will be revived.

My friends welcomed me hospitably and treated me well. I went about one hundred and twenty-five miles and visited two families of Saints near Washington, District of Columbia. Often I find myself wishing that the church had a missionary who could give considerable time and labor in that region.

The Challenge

By F. J. Earl

If all the papers in the land
Would really care to lend a hand,
To show us how and when and where,
We all could take a part and share

In picking up the threads once more;
In opening up each fast closed door;
In banishing each silly fear;
In wiping every silent tear;

In lifting every heart that's down;
In helping every crook in town;
In giving everything we can;
In making everyone a man.

If all the papers in the land
Would really care to lend a hand:
One word they'd print, but that each day:
His word, who is the Living Way.

The Lord Does Provide

By Mrs. Burt C. Adams

We live eight miles from Hartford on what is known as the Grace Witter Farm, two miles southeast of Lawrence, and one mile south of Baker Lake. If any of the Saints living near or going through here, see this letter, we should be pleased to have them call on us. We visit Brother and Sister Earl in Hartford now and then. Brother Earl is an elder and is growing old. I have been blessed under his hands when he has administered to me.

I wish that I could pay some tithing to help others lift the burdens under which they are striving so hard. If only I could, but like many others, I am poor in this world's goods. I was wondering how I was going to have the Herald, this year, and God sent the money to me among my Christmas presents.

A few years ago I wanted to take the Ensign in order that I might hear what the church was doing. So I asked God to direct me how to earn the money. One morning a woman came to my door and said to me, "Mrs. Adams, for some reason I have had you on my mind so strongly that I could not think of anyone but you. I do not know if you will do it, but I should like to have three dresses altered. I have only one dollar and fifty cents to pay you for your work." "Yes," I answered, "I will gladly do them for you." I knew that my prayer was answered.

Again I asked God to tell me the name of a nonmember to whom I should send the Ensign, if I could make enough money to subscribe for another paper. That night the name was given me in a dream. Next morning I went to unlock the chickenhouse door. In doing so I dropped the key and as I reached down to pick up the key, I saw on the ground a twenty-five cent piece. My heart was filled with joy for I knew again that the heavenly Father had answered my prayer. Then I made out my order. As I was going through our yard to mail my letter, I found a dime.

I could relate many incidents of how the Lord has come to my rescue. If we stop to count our many blessings, we realize how if we but do our part or try to serve, we are blessed. If blessings are withheld from us, there is a good reason. Perhaps we ourselves are to blame.

Request Prayers

Sister Trecie Rice, 202 Albott Street, Oil City, Pennsylvania, wishes prayers in her behalf as she is suffering from heart trouble. She would like also to be administered to if there are Latter Day Saint elders near Oil City.

Sister Nettie Doggett, of Pond Creek, Oklahoma, asks the prayers of the church for a friend of her family, Dave Miles who lives out West. He is not a member of the church, but has great faith in the healing power of God, and prays that he may be relieved of a severe affliction. Sister Doggett also desires prayers for herself and her husband in their isolation. She is afflicted with ear trouble.

Mrs. Nellie Brumbaugh, of Franklin, Nebraska, asks prayers for her little fourteen-months-old grandson who is sorely afflicted.

QUESTION TIME

If Mary divinely conceived Jesus, how could he be of Joseph lineage?

As it was the Jewish custom to trace lineage through males, even when actual blood descent did not exist, it would be proper from the Hebrew viewpoint to trace Jesus through Joseph as the husband of Mary. The work of Doctor Fallows explains this, and states:

"On this principle Joseph, begotten by Jacob, marries Mary, the daughter of Heli; and in the genealogical register of his wife's family, is counted for Heli's son. . . . Joseph and Mary are of the same tribe and family; they are both descendants of David in the line of Solomon; they have in them both the blood of Nathan, David's son."—Critical Bible Encyclopedia, volume 2, page 696.

This was probably the most convincing lineage to the Jew of that day, but the Bible does not confine itself to the legal lineage. It also gives the lineage of Mary and thus proves that Christ was of "the seed of David," and fulfilled the requirement of prophecy concerning the coming Messiah, in this respect.

Is not the genealogy of Jesus doubtful?

There is no more reason to doubt the genealogy of Jesus as given in the records than most other accepted historical facts. It is true that two lines of descent are given, but the reason for this is quite clear and logical. They are not, as some questioning critics have supposed, inconsistent with each other, when well understood. Certain supposed differences have been clearly shown to be in harmony by scholars who gave the matter careful consideration. Africanus, one of the earliest Christian writers, gives us the solution which he states was received from relatives of Christ concerning Heli:

"It is to the effect that Matthan, the third in the list from Joseph, in Matthew's genealogy, and Melchi, the third in Luke's list, married successively the same woman, by whom the former begat Jacob, and the latter Heli. Heli dying without issue, his maternal brother took his widow to wife, by whom he had Joseph, who, according to law was registered by Luke as the son of Heli, though naturally the son of Jacob as Matthew records him."—Ibid., page 696.

Whether or not we accept this statement by Africanus, there is no proof of conflict in the genealogies given, as there are several other possible explanations which would be entirely reasonable. Paul was learned in the Jewish law, yet he states that Jesus was of the seed of David (Romans 1: 3), as one who was accurately informed. To warrant rejection of the record, it must be disproved, and no objector has yet done this.

Should any except church members partake of the sacrament of bread and wine?

This sacred rite is something more than a ceremony to be indulged in by any one at will or pleasure. It is connected with a personal covenant made between God and the person who obeys its terms. These terms are essential to a right of partaking the sacrament, and unless the conditions are complied with it would be useless for one to attempt to do so under the notion that some mysterious benefit would be derived. The only ones authorized to partake are those who have obeyed the gospel, received baptism by one sent of God, and entered into covenant relationship with him and his church.

Not only is no benefit to be derived from an unauthorized attempt to obtain the rite, but there may be actual harm in the result. Paul warns all people of this, and says:

"Wherefore whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of the bread, and drink of the cup. For he that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, if he discern not the body."—1 Corinthians 11: 27-29. (Revised Version.)

Christ sent specially chosen representatives to perform the ordinances which he had commanded. Those who obeyed the message were baptized into his church and thus became a people united in one covenant and having the same teachings. This unity of belief was declared to be essential to the Lord's body, the church, and therefore those who did not unite in that teaching and with that body were not officially made members thereof, and could not properly receive the sacrament which symbolizes the divine covenant relationship. Even unworthy members were forbidden the sacred emblems.

These facts show clearly that the sacrament is a rite of Christ's church, therefore no church of human origin has authority to administer it. The rite pertains to a covenant existing between God and men who have entered into that relationship under divine sanction, thus forming his church, and does not therefore extend to those outside of these provisions.

Coleman, Michigan

Makes Spiritual Gains

This branch numbering about seventy-five members is taking on new life and for the past year has made great gains spiritually. It has added several members by baptism, three children and one adult being baptized September 5.

Elder S. T. Pendleton, of Beaverton, held meetings here from December 26 to January 1.

Apostle D. T. Williams has made several one-night calls, and his lectures have been enjoyed.

Elder Leonard Dudley began a series of meetings at Coleman January 29, and closed on the morning of February 12. On February 8, three adults were baptized by the local priest, R. Lewis Johnson and confirmed by Elder Dudley February 10.

Elder Bert Turner, of Midland, assumed the duties of pastor here January 1. He is a devoted and tireless worker for the cause, and under his leadership and with the cooperation of the rest of the priesthood, the members hope to accomplish much in the year ahead.

Last fall a new roof was put on the main part of the church, and workers expect to roof the rest of the building as weather permits.

The men of the branch gave a chicken and rabbit supper the latter part of January, making more than twenty-three dollars. In this effort they were loyally assisted by the women.

The testimony of the Spirit was felt to a great degree at the February sacrament hour, and several of the members were spoken to in a gift of prophecy.

Elder Dudley went to Loomis the evening of February 12, to hold meetings.

The Loomis Church has been closed for a few years, and January 8, Coleman's priest, Brother R. Lewis Johnson, opened a series of meetings there for one week. He was assisted by John Burns, priest, who has lived at Loomis for years. A Sunday school was organized, and the latter-day work looks very encouraging. Brother Burns preached to a group of thirty-three on a recent Sunday evening. The workers feel that others will be added to the kingdom through Brother Dudley's effort.

The Coleman Sunday school now has an enrollment of seventy, and is ably directed by Brother Leo Tessman, a young man whose heart is in the work.

Spokane, Washington

Variety in Winter Services

Apostle J. A. Gillen came to Spokane in November, started a series of meetings. At this time the annual business meeting was conducted, in charge of Brother Gillen and Pastor Andrews. The officers elected were: Pastor, Brother Andrews; counselors, W. W. Wood and D. V. Coleman; secretary, Sister Orpha Coleman; church school director, H. E. Kinney; division supervisors: Adult, Brother Bagley; young people, Margaret Kenny; children, Orpha Coleman. Supervisor of music, Sister Grace Nichols; treasurer, Lloyd Whiting; home visiting, Arleigh Weeks; publicity agent, Millicent Kinney; historian, Catherine Porter; librarian, Lorraine Coleman. With the present crop of workers Spokane Branch is going to make much progress. They are consecrated helpers.

A beautiful Installation service was conducted on New Year's Eve. Each of the officers and workers dedicated his services to the church. The crowd dispersed to meet at the home of Brother and Sister D. A. Coleman to watch the old year out and the new year in.

Conference convened November 25, and lasted over the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh. Brother Fout, district president, presided over the conference. Brother Cook, from Vancouver, Washington, paid Spokane a visit at this time. Brother Gillen was the principal speaker. The Spirit of God was present.

Young people's institute, December 9, 10 and 11, conducted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards. The classes were well attended. Young people from Yakimaw, Pasco, Kennewick, Chelan Falls, and Coeur d'Alene attended the conference.

The adult and young people's divisions have organized their classes with a president and secretary.

The "Tenth Legion" has been introduced to the young people's class, by their president, Merle Chiles. A meeting was held February 4, in charge of the young people's supervisor to encourage the young in this step. Several members have qualified.

A Christmas musical was presented on Christmas Eve in charge of Sister Grace Nichols.

The children's division was a busy group during the month of December, furnishing the Christmas program and attending the parties given for them besides participating in all other activities.

Spokane has been favored during the past few months by the visits from Apostle J. A. Gillen, Apostle F. H. Edwards, Bishop D. S. McDole, Brother M. Cook, and Joseph Sandidge.

The branch regrets to lose the family of Sister Mary F. Porter. They will make their home in Seattle. A farewell party was given them.

Sister Mary E. Cummings passed from this life December 24, 1932. She has been a member of the church since 1917. The funeral was held in the church, the sermon being preached by Brother Andrews. The body is in vault keeping until removal to her former home in Kentucky.

The unity manifested thus far has been brought about by the splendid cooperation and the attendance of the midweek prayer services. A goodly portion of God's Spirit has been experienced at these meetings.

Pleasant Valley Branch

Lucasville, Ohio

The branch business meeting was held here February 4, and the following officers were elected: Branch president, Elder Emory Williams; first counselor, William Altman; second counselor, Norman Pollock; secretary, Sister Ora Altman; treasurer, Norman Pollock; chorister, Sister Alta Culp. Delegates to the district conference to be held at Columbus, are Sister Mable Culp, Sister Ivy Williams, and Brother William Crabtree.

Brother Crabtree has been caring for the church building here of late, building fires and keeping the lamps trimmed and burning.

Brother Charles Altman is an active Sunday school teacher, instructing the adult class. He teaches the Bible Class held every Saturday night, of which William Altman is president and Orville Altman, vice president. These brothers are rendering a faithful service, and many in the branch hope to see the time when they will be members of the priesthood.

Sister Eleanor Culp, secretary of the Bible Class since its organization, is a splendid worker.

The women's department is doing a good work under the management of Sister Hill. The women are making progress. They have more than twenty-three dollars in their treasury.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brother Norman Pollock is superintendent of the Sunday school, and is assisted by a fine group of teachers, officers, and young people.

Pleasant Valley Saints want to work to redeem Zion. They realize that such a big goal requires the cooperation of all.

Prophecy Is Being Fulfilled on Bruce Peninsula

Elders George Njeim and A. E. Boos Labor There

The Saints of Bruce Peninsula, Ontario, Canada, are enjoying a fine spirit of understanding in the glorious latter-day work. They have had laboring with them Elders George Njiem and A. E. Boos who have won their way into the hearts of many people on the peninsula. Saints who have been isolated are now rejoicing in the fulfillment of God's promise, and are looking forward to further blessings. They feel they have much for which to be thankful even though they are living under adverse conditions. They are convinced that though man may fail, God never fails, and it is satisfying to know the wonderful promise that God will not leave or forsake them.

They do not wish to give inordinate praise to the missionaries who have labored among them, but think that they should say good things while these workers are yet with them. The wonderful way in which Brothers Njeim and Boos have presented the truth has appealed to many. This series of lectures and sermons has inspired both Saints and nonmembers. People have attended services who had not been in the church for twelve years, and local faithful ones feel that the time has come when God will work and is working upon the hearts of these indifferent ones.

Two brothers and two sisters went to visit Saints in another town and heard a prophecy uttered, that the slothful servants would be cut off and that God would raise up others to carry on his work. They were also told that God will remove prejudice from the minds of the people. That prophecy is now being fulfilled.

Elder Boos deserves the prayers of the church in the sacrifice he is making. He is living by faith alone and standing up to represent the Father of light and to serve his fellow men. Elder Njeim has given some wonderful lectures on the Holy Land and Syria, his native country. These were accompanied by steropticon scenes. As he lectured he wore his native costume, and as he explained the Twenty-third Psalm, the minds of his hearers recalled the shepherd David.

One man who was bitterly opposed to Latter Day Saints has given his house for the holding of services, and has extended an invitation to the missionaries to come often to see him and his family.

The Saints are grateful to God for the manifestation of his love, and rejoice to be counted as his faithful followers.

January 19, an illustrated lecture was given at Stokes Bay which met with fine approval, and after a short talk the invitation was given to come back soon. Here the workers see a good opening and pray that the time will not be long when this part shall be a fruitful field for the church.

At Spry where the other meetings have been held, the Saints are making the best of their time. Every night of the week is spent in service to God. The Saints pray that their labors will be blessed.

Tawas City, Michigan

Benefit From Visits of Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder Hubert Case

District President Hubert Case was present January 30, when this branch held its regular business meeting. He was asked by the pastor to take charge of the meeting. The good Spirit was present and order prevailed throughout the entire service. Elder M. A. Sommerfield was elected pastor and Brother Harrison Frank his counselor. Other officers are: B. C. Bowen, secretary; Sister Mabel Ulman, treasurer; Sister Florence Ulman, chorister and organist. Brother Harrison Frank has charge of church school; B. C. Bowen, the religio. Sister E. L. Pringle is solicitor for Tawas City Branch and is to be commended for the interest she has shown in her work. The branch raised its quota for the year. The branch slogan is "Now all together, and everyone at his post with the spirit of love." Surely with all cooperating with the priesthood, there will be growth and development here.

Apostle D. T. Williams was here January 18, and delivered one of his excellent lectures, "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint," which met with much favorable comment.

Brother Case delivered a forceful sermon on the topic, "The Handwriting on the Wall," February 1.

February 2, twenty Saints and friends surprised Sister E. L. Pringle. It was her birthday, and the evening was spent in singing songs and telling experiences. Brother Hubert Case entertained the guests with a song in the native tongue of the South Sea Islands. After song and prayer and wishing Sister Pringle many more days, the party was over.

Four days later this group met at the home of another sister to cheer her on the way, it being her eighty-third birthday.

New Opening in Arkansas

Meetings by Elders A. M. Baker and Thomas W. Emde

Elders A. M. Baker and Thomas W. Emde have just closed missionary meetings at Russell, Arkansas, Brother Baker doing the preaching. Russell is a new opening, and the ministers secured the use of the Methodist Church. The meetings were well attended, many having to stand, and interest was high when the pastor of the church had his steward inform the missionaries that the meetings would be closed. This action was not favorably received by some of the members of the pastor's own church, and they suggested that the high school auditorium be secured for a continuance of these services. One man of the Methodist faith walked all day to see the school board and to advertise the meeting.

Not a service was missed and there was larger attendance at the school auditorium than was had at the church.

On Friday night before the latter-day ministers and their hearers went to the schoolhouse, the Methodist pastor filled his regular appointment, and Brothers Baker and Emde attended his meeting.

During the meetings a question box was had, and many questions were asked. A considerable interest has been generated in that place. Brother Baker closed the present effort there with two lectures on "Christ in America," using his lantern slides.

The ministers left Russell feeling that they had made several friends for the church. They were invited to hold summer meetings there.

Bisbee, Arizona

Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Others Minister Here

Saints of this city enjoyed the presence of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, February 5. Douglas Branch joined Bisbee in sacrament service and the evening meeting. They ate dinner together in the church. Following the meal was a round table talk, Brother Gleazer presiding. In the evening the apostle's theme was, "Come Out of Her, My People."

Brother Gleazer remained for the business meeting held February 6. He ordained Brother Dave Meyers a priest. Brother T. R. Davis was reelected branch president. Then the business meeting adjourned, and Brother Gleazer continued his sermon of the night before. He left for Douglas where he preached February 7.

Early in December, Elder George H. Wixom was at Bisbee and held meetings. He was on his way to his home in California. He returned and held services January 25 and 26.

Elder W. P. Bootman was also a visitor and helper here in December.

Saginaw, Michigan

Elder William Grice Conducts Services in Newly-finished Church

Saints of Saginaw met in their refinished church for the first time, February 5, about one hundred and fifty people congregating there in the morning with visitors arriving all through the day. They came from Midland, Bay City, Flint, and Beaverton.

The interior of the church is now differently arranged. The pulpit is at the side of the room and the seats are in a semicircle, which arrangement gives a greater seating capacity. Under the back of the place where the rostrum formerly stood is the baptismal font and above it is being painted a picture of Christ. The pulpit platform stands about eighteen inches above the main floor level, and the choir platform is still higher. In the kitchen there are cupboards which are to be inclosed, and a sink will care for hot and cold water faucets.

The services on the opening Sunday were young people's prayer meeting at eight forty-five; church school at nine forty-five; preaching by Hubert Case at eleven o'clock; song service at one thirty; sacrament at two o'clock. At the evening preaching service Elder William Grice opened two weeks of meetings.

The noon meal was furnished by Saginaw Branch, the women serving.

A correction of the number of baptisms here is in order. It was said in a former letter that fifteen baptisms had taken place at Saginaw, but a closer check on the statistics reveal the fact that twenty-six were baptized here during 1932.

Wagner, South Dakota

Winter Social Events for Saints' Families

A "kid" party at the Crisman home was the initial social event of this group in 1933. The Saints gave a surprise and farewell party for Mr. and Mrs. Owen Crisman and Phyllis, who have moved to Beardstown, Illinois. Letters to be read at intervals in their journey, were written by the group.

Some of the Saints worship with Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, Missouri, each week day morning by radio, and also enjoy the Sunday talks and vesper hour.

A "sing" of familiar songs from Zion's Praises, was enjoyed at the Caldwell home January 29.

Both the young people and adult classes are enthusiastic about learning more of the church history and becoming more acquainted with the Doctrine and Covenants.

Preceding the Sunday school hour the Saints have a brief prayer service.

Holden Stake

Holden, Missouri

A reception was recently tendered the choir in the Holden Home dining room by the pastors. Light refreshments were served, and mutual pledges stimulated hope for the continued activity of the singers. About forty-five were present. Among other recent choir activities was a fine vesper service in charge of the chorister, Sister Bernice Hampton.

The morning service hour was occupied by the junior church, February 12. Awards for attendance were given a number. About thirty rendered service in this department.

Special numbers are being prepared in the music department by Sister Kate Doty, who is specializing in quartets. A program of music will be given by the choir at Easter when "The Risen Lord" will be presented.

The young people's division is active under the supervision of Brother Freelin Hampton. A service of program and study is held each Sunday evening, and prayer meeting Wednesday evening is well attended. Teams are being organized to encourage attendance at the stake young people's institute at Lees Summit, March 17 to 19.

The women's activities under the supervisor, Sister C. A. Silsby are concentrating on the gathering of funds for the general church. The response has been gratifying.

The young people of Warrensburg treated this congregation to a play on a recent Friday night.

Through the neighborly kindness of Brother and Sister Abe Butler, of Kingsville, Brothers W. S. Macrae and C. F. Scarcliff were called to conduct the funeral of a Baptist friend and neighbor in the Baptist Church at Kingsville. This opportunity has missionary significance.

Brother and Sister John Lovell celebrated their golden wedding anniversary February 15, and their family circle was complete for the first time in several years. Four generations were present and a picture was taken. In the evening the happy couple were serenaded by the Saints' choir. Brother and Sister Lovell were married February 15, 1883, in Lucas County, Iowa. For twenty-four years they have lived in the Holden community.

Two deaths have occurred at the Holden Home for the aged this winter. Sister Elizabeth Lawhead, over ninety-two years old, passed away, and Brother Philip Rogers. Brother C. J. Spurlock was quite ill with the flu, but is recovering. Brother Dan Boren is in poor health.

Missionary S. S. Smith is holding a series of services at Post Oak, Missouri, and Gomer R. Wells is busy, too. He spent a week visiting Saints of Grandview.

About thirty Saints from Strasburg Mission, under the leadership of Brother Roy Kleckler, attended the sacrament service at Holden the first Sunday of February. The weather was near zero, and they had considerable car trouble; but they were happy for the opportunity to be present.

Lexington, Missouri

Sister M. R. Swift, of Pleasant Hill, eighteen miles west of here, brought eight young people in her car, and they enjoyed the trip. This group possesses the pioneer missionary spirit.

The young people's institute at Lees Summit, March 17 to 19, is especially arranged for the young people, and their attendance is urged. President F. M. McDowell and possibly Apostle J. F. Garver will be there.

An aged sister, Elizabeth Enlow Nance, has passed to her reward. She was born March 26, 1856; married Isaac L. Nance sixty years ago. To them were born five sons and two daughters. She lived in the State of Missouri all her life. Died December 15, 1932. She united with the church, March 11, 1924, and was a devoted and faithful member. She leaves many friends.

Knobnoster, Missouri

Under the leadership of Pastor J. T. Nutt, Knobnoster Saints are striving to move forward. The visit of Missionary S. S. Smith before the holidays was much appreciated, and his sermons were encouraged.

The young people of Warrensburg gave two short plays at Knobnoster a short time ago.

The church school is progressing under the leadership of a promising young brother, Ben Kramer. Knobnoster has a number of young people of whom the church is proud. These will surely assist in the redemption of Zion if they continue faithful.

A stewardships class is being conducted by Brother E. E. Petre with Brother Nutt as the teacher. Bishop J. A. Koehler's "Problems of Industrial Zion" is the study text.

Manchester, England

Gospel Hall, James Street

The church school held an empire surprise party and prize distribution Saturday, January 28, in a room gaily decorated with flags of the empire. This was highly successful, judging by the response of young people and adults.

About one hundred sat down to tea at five o'clock, then came the program which was of varied and novel character. First there were instrumental and vocal numbers and readings by the children, made more interesting when the audience was asked to judge the best by its applause. The prize was awarded to one of the youngest, Miss Rose Roslin. Then followed a yo-yo contest, three boys and three girls demonstrating their skill. Here Miss I. Dargue was judged the best performer. Community singing was led by the director of the school, then came the surprise of the evening. Four cases were carried to the platform, and while the audience curiously waited to see what was going to happen, Miss Edith Noble, the pianist, began to play national airs, first English, then Irish, Scotch, and Welsh. As each tune was played the covering on a case broke and from it arose a little girl dressed in the costume of that country. Each one in the audience was finally asked to choose a country from which he should receive a present. The novelty of this performance caused great amusement.

This led up to the school prize distribution long waited for by those who merited awards for regular attendance. Many beautiful books were piled high on the table awaiting distribution—picture books for the children, and more advanced books for older ones including some beautiful Bibles. Pastor G. W. Leggott distributed the prizes, and also received one himself from the school director, H. Barrington.

The evening's program was closed by prayer and the remainder of the time was given to games under the leadership of Mr. C. Chorlton and Mr. John Tapping. These ended when young and old joined hands and sang, "Auld Lang Syne."

Mikado, Michigan

Branch Goes Forward

When the Saints met January 1, the spirit of admonition was present, and a number were spoken to individually through Brother M. J. McGuire. The Lord expressed his pleasure in the work of this group, but told his children to pray more.

The young people's Sunday school class is studying the Young People's Church History, which they find intensely interesting. The adults are studying the Doctrine and Covenants which Elder Hubert Case advised them to read.

Wedding bells were ringing the evening of January 7, when Zella A. Kurtz and Ellis W. Smith, of Fairview, were united in marriage by Elder M. J. McGuire at the Saints' church. The bride was attended by Miss Marie S. Notestine, of Curran, and Henry L. Smith was best man. This has the distinction of being the first wedding in Mikado's new church.

The first funeral in the church was held, July 5, 1932, and was that of Miss Ilean Mayes, who was accidentally shot. Brother Amos Guy, of Hillman, preached the sermon.

Elder Hubert Case was here a short time ago to preach to the members. Brother M. A. Summerfield accompanied him from Tawas City.

Independence

It is with new inspiration, zest, and consecration that the priesthood of the center place return to routine duties after a week of spiritual and social regeneration in the priesthood institute held last week at Liberty Street Church. This institute was designed to meet the needs of all the priesthood in Independence, and one hundred and sixty-six men participated in classwork under the instruction of President Elbert A. Smith who taught, "Spiritual Aspects of Our Ministry," and Bishop G. L. DeLapp who taught "Financial Aspects of Our Ministry."

Twelve plays will be given by young people from seven congregations at the finals of the second annual play contest sponsored by the young people's council February 27 and 28, and March 2 and 3. This week finds the casts shaping their performances for the final night. The twelve plays may be seen for twenty-five cents, the price of a season ticket, or for ten cents a night.

About fifty young people responded to a call meeting last Tuesday, in charge of Pastor J. F. Sheehy and Elder C. B. Woodstock, to consider the organizing of classwork among the ranks of those who have no work. A committee of ten members representing five congregations, has had several meetings to consider the organization of classes to study civil and electrical engineering, architecture, drafting, and mechanical drawing, commercial law, landscape gardening, music, leadership, journalism, and other subjects.

Stone Church

For the past month the junior, intermediate, and adult departments of the Stone Church School, which meet in the main auditorium of the church, have enjoyed the musical services of children's choruses during the school's opening exercises. For three Sunday mornings the boys' choir, directed by Miss Marcine Smith and J. Glenn Fairbanks, sang sacred numbers, and last Sunday the Clematis Chorus of girls, directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, contributed music.

Elder J. A. Koehler preached the second of his series of three Sunday morning sermons to the Stone Church congregation Sunday. His general theme is, "Kingdom Building," and in this discourse he presented the characteristics of the church which make it the instrument through which God will build his kingdom.

A fine musical broadcast was presented by the Stone Church Choir from eleven o'clock until eleven-thirty, Paul N. Craig directing, Robert Miller at the organ. Mrs. E. N. Brinkman, contralto, and a new member of the choir, was the morning soloist, singing, "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings," by Liddle. Miss Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, took the solo part of one of the anthems.

For the theme of his evening sermon Apostle J. F. Curtis chose "The Second Coming of Christ." This was a profound discourse calling into use many scriptural prophecies of and references to the second coming of our Lord.

Congregational music was led by Paul N. Craig, and the Æloian Chorus of ladies presented two special numbers, "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," and "Lift Thine Eyes."

Brother Henry Booker, seventy-six years of age, died at his home, February 14, and his funeral was held from the Stone Church the morning of February 16, Elder U. W. Greene in charge and Elder J. F. Sheehy preaching the sermon. Brother Booker was a priest in the church. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary Ann Booker and a large circle of relatives and friends.

Second Church

Elder E. A. Thomas was the morning speaker, Sunday, using for his text John 14: 6. Brother Thomas is president of the first quorum of elders in Independence. The choir sang, "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works," directed by Earl Audet, and the service was in charge of Elder B. C. Sarratt, assisted by Elder John Miller.

The junior service at this hour was in charge of R. C. Conyers, and Brother James Hopkins talked on "Doing the Things One Should Do." A story, "How Jimmy Kept His Promise," was told by Mrs. B. C. Sarratt, and there were two readings, a piano solo by Billie McPherson, and a story, "Serving God in All Lands," by Helen Willoughby.

Elder C. Ed. Miller was the evening speaker and he talked on parables of the New Testament. Musical numbers, "I Shall Be Ready," and "Angel's Dream," were sung by a ladies' quartet of this congregation, and Miss Katherine Warnock played a piano solo.

A baptismal service was held at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, February 12. Janette Darman was baptized by Elder William Inman; Billy Campbell by Elder Soderstat; Mary Jane and Alda Gene Warnock by William Inman, and Theresa Vincent by William Inman. These candidates were confirmed by Elders Self, Soderstat, Conyers, Ben Sarratt, William Inman, and Sam Inman.

Speakers to the adult congregation, February 12, were Patriarch Ammon White in the morning, and Elder C. Ed. Miller gave the second of a series of illustrated lectures in the evening. Brother Miller's lectures on the New Testament are sponsored by the young people. At both these services music was supplied by local musicians—the choir in the morning, and quartets in the evening.

Elder D. A. Whiting talked at the junior church on "Speaking the Truth in All Things," and there were other program features which interested the children.

Friday evening, February 10, three

www.LatterDayTruth.org

plays were presented in the preliminary try-out of the branch. They were directed by Miss Palace McPherson, Mrs. Irma West, and Mrs. Agnes Edmunds. The last two were chosen to represent Second Church in the dramatic final contest next week.

Liberty Street Church

For two Sunday mornings Pastor J. R. Lentell has been the speaker. Last Sunday his subject was, "The Organization of Zion as I See It." The choir sang, "The Woods and Every Sweet Smelling Tree," by West.

In the evening the orchestra gave a brief concert preceding the sermon by Patriarch Ammon White.

The class of senior girls taught by Miss Mabel Tignor, presented a play, "The Conspirators," January 30, in behalf of the new hymnbook fund. The girls were assisted by Brother Cecil Walker's class, Hubert Mills, John Isaacks, Virgil Woodside, Alice Woodside, and Betty Crawford.

The young people of this district will give a play, "The Kettle Singing," Saturday evening. Those taking part are Gertrude Davis, Fanita Anthony, James Moses, and Mabel Tignor. This play will be presented in the play contest February 27. Sister Osa Curnutt is the director.

Walnut Park Church

Following the eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning, two children were baptized, Elder W. T. Gard officiating. Those baptized were Ruth Hannah Atkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Roy Atkins; and Donald Dean Barber, son of Mrs. Blanch Roberts Barber. Both children were confirmed at the eleven o'clock preaching service by Brother Gard and Pastor Frank McDonald.

After the classes of the church school had reassembled in the main auditorium for the closing exercises, a short program was given consisting of a piano number by Miss Margaret Chapman and a trumpet solo by Brother Joe Countryman, accompanied by Sister Countryman.

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker at the morning preaching service, and at this time, in addition to the confirmations mentioned, the baby daughter of Brother and Sister Carl Bateman, Viola Margaret, was blessed by Elders Roland Kapnik and Nathaniel Mann.

A splendid religio program was given after the classes, the following numbers being given: Reading, Virginia Moorman; vocal duet, Beulah Jean and Virginia Byrne, accompanied by Juanita Byrne; reading, Enid Moorman; reading, Lois Jean Williams, and piano numbers by Mrs. Thelma Countryman.

Mrs. A. V. Trego was the evening speaker and presented an illustrated lecture.

The judges placed "King Row" first, and "Afterwards" second, giving honorable mention to three of the characters in "Sons of Soil" for individual acting. The last two plays will represent Walnut Park in the finals.

Spring Branch Church

Saints of this congregation especially enjoy their prayer services. Attendance is good, and a wonderful spirit is enjoyed.

At the Sunday school session Sunday Sister Grace Smith gave a reading, "The Greater Vision."

Brother Robert Fish was the eleven o'clock speaker. At this service which was in charge of Morris Jacobsen and Leonard Roberts, Sister Roberts was announced as having charge of young people's activities. Mrs. Winogean Boyse sang "Come Unto Me."

In the evening the congregation enjoyed an attractive church school program. Elder J. A. Holsworth was the evening speaker. The choir sang, "Rejoice, Jerusalem, and Sing," and Sister Beulah Donkawich sang as a solo a song given by the Spirit through Brother Holsworth.

Gudgell Park Church

The Wednesday night cottage prayer meetings of this district are very well attended, and the Saints are finding them the source of strength and help.

The women's department meets in the homes each Friday afternoon for work and study. They have tied several comforts and done some quilting. A thirty-minute study class is conducted by Sister Hallie Gould in Doctrine and Covenants.

Not long ago they had an all-day meeting at the home of Sister J. S. Myers, tying comforts and doing mending for the hostess. A nice lunch added to the happiness of the day. Two members of the priesthood, not employed that day, were also present for lunch.

The orchestra in charge of Fred Mollison practices each Monday evening and has a beginners' class of twenty. And the choir practices on Thursday night.

Recent speakers have been Brother Will Haskins, W. A. McDowell, W. A. Atwell, William Odom, Charles Pooler, and others.

The church school is going forward under the direction of its officers and teachers.

The young people enjoyed a taffy pull at Sister Bean's home on Blue Springs Road on a recent Friday night.

Brother William Odom and family have recently moved into this district from Akron, Ohio. Their help is most welcome.

East Independence Church

This district has been blessed with good speakers during the past Sundays. They have preached the word with power and courage. Patriarch Ammon White brought fatherly council which appealed to young and old. His sermon was followed in the evening by an earnest discourse from Brother Joseph Friend.

On the following Sunday the Saints were very happy to welcome the pastor in Zion, Elder J. F. Sheehy. Brother Clair Austin was the evening speaker, bringing a vivid word picture of people who are continuously "trampling underfoot the Christ."

Because the weather was bad sacrament this month was administered to a small congregation. Brother H. V. Minton closed the day's services with a lantern lecture.

Pastor Frank Minton brought a message full of pastoral insight and concern as to the spiritual needs of the members February 12. That night Brother Erwin Moorman was the speaker.

Two members have found it necessary lately to enter the Sanitarium for operations, Brother Herschel Green who is now at home and able to be up and about, and Sister Florence Minton, the pastor's wife, who is not yet able to return to her home.

Friday night, February 10, the Rainbow Class of young people held their preliminaries in the play contest. They are entering "Detour Ahead," in the contest which is sponsored by the young people's council. The play on this night was followed by a short program of varied numbers. Then the young people sold pie, doughnuts and cocoa, the proceeds to go to local branch expenses.

The intermediate class of the church school, taught by Sister Rena Friend, gave a good program at the church school hour not long ago. They are studying the Book of Mormon, and their program gave an original sketch of the book as far as they have gone.

He who does not advance falls back; he who stoops is overwhelmed, distanced, crushed; he who ceases to grow greater becomes smaller, he who leaves off, gives up; the stationary condition is the beginning of the end.—Amiel.

Kansas City Stake

Argentine Church

The stake bishopric furnished speakers for the eleven o'clock hour at the various stake churches Sunday, February 12, and the Argentine appointee was Brother Berwyn Lungwitz, a young man who was blessed in his efforts. For his lesson he took a text from Doctrine and Covenants.

A Boy Scout program was planned for seven o'clock. The first number was not given according to schedule. It was to have been a moving picture reel of the life of Thomas A. Edison, but the film was delayed so that it could not be shown. This circumstance gave the evening speaker, President F. M. McDowell, an early start, and he made good use of his time. "Building Boys," was his theme. His sermon was impressive and instructive.

Brother Frank Tuttle is the local scoutmaster. Two other troops are sponsored by Kansas City stake churches. There are seventy-seven hundred scouts in Greater Kansas City.

Chelsea Church

Twenty-four O. B. K.'s from Chelsea Church were guests of Elder and Sister John F. Sheehy at their home in Independence the night of February 4. Theirs was a happy party. The young people enjoyed the hospitality of the home of the pastor in Zion.

Sunday morning, February 12, Sister H. A. Higgins, wife of the pastor at Quindaro Church, gave a talk at this Sunday school, her subject being the Book of Mormon.

At the eleven o'clock service, in accordance with Bishop's Sunday, Elder T. A. Beck, of Independence, talked on "Tithing."

On Saint Valentine's evening the O. B. K.'s had a jigsaw Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister James McHarness, who surprised their twenty-three guests with refreshments of white heart-shaped cup-cakes with the letters "O. B. K." written across the top in pink. There was also jello with whipped cream and candy hearts.

A fine stake O. B. K. prayer meeting held at Heathwood Church was attended by ten Chelsea O. B. K.'s, February 15.

Brother Ralph Freeman, O. B. K. councilor at Bennington Heights, gave a short talk at Sunday school February 19. "Love the Truth," was his subject.

Bennington Heights Church

Sister Emily Beaman, a loved and honored member, died Friday, February 10. The funeral service was held at Bennington Heights Church Sunday, February 12. Burial was at Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Beaman was born September 7, 1869, at Hope, Ontario. She was baptized into the church August 15, 1889, at Oscodo, Michigan. She moved to Independence twenty-seven years ago where she took normal work at the Stone Church. In May, 1912, she moved to Kansas City and began to attend Bennington Heights Church. She was a woman of faith and conviction and had many friends. Much of her life was devoted to service to others. Living close to the church, she opened her home for church meetings or gatherings. Interested in all church work, she gave all the help that she could. She was at the head of the women's department for a number of years. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Mary S. Black, of Kansas City; a son, Glynn Beaman, of Osage City, Kansas, and six grandchildren.

Brother Joe Curtis met with the Bennington Heights group February 12. Brother Curtis has been in southern Missouri preaching.

Brother Paxton, a member of the stake high council was the speaker for the morning service February 12.

The first speech for tryouts in the stake debate contest was given by Ralph Freeman February 12. His speech was on the subject, "Resolved That Industry Should Take a Part in Christianity." After this speech, Brother O. G. Helm gave additional ideas on the subject.

The young people of Bennington are planning to attend the stake young people's prayer service at Heathwood next Wednesday.

The young people's study class, held at six thirty o'clock each Sunday evening, had a social meeting, January 30, at the home of Ailene and Maxine Schwartz. Twenty-two were present and they decided to begin the study of the Doctrine and Covenants within a few weeks. Brother and Sister Don C. Stafford were reelected teachers. Cleo Renninger was elected the new president of the class, and Dorothy Helm, vice president.

The regular sacrament service for February was well attended, and under the leadership of Pastor O. G. Helm and Brothers Don C. Stafford and A. L. Myers, many took active part in the meeting.

That evening the young people had a prayer meeting at their six thirty hour. The theme was, "My Task."

Claude Vernon Maxon, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Vernon Maxon, was blessed January 15, at the morning hour.

The things that we prize most in ourselves do not come without effort. They have to be won by concentration and sacrifice in the course of the discipline of life. This is true of freedom. It is true of happiness. It is true of character. Certainty is no exception. We have to work for it. And because we have to work for it, and often to wait for it, it is all the more precious when it comes.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

Far West Stake

Saint Joseph Branch

First Church

First Church Saints are busily engaged in the various activities that demand attention. All regular Sunday and week-day services have been carried on in spite of the bitter cold, and attendance has been very good.

On January 29, the Saints were glad to hear Patriarch F. A. Smith again. His message was one of hope and good cheer, and was much appreciated by a good-sized congregation.

Another month was begun with a fine sacrament service, February 5. In the evening Elder Howard C. Timm, associate pastor, gave a good sermon.

Pastor Ward A. Hougas spent February 12, in Saint Joseph. In the morning he gave a heart-to-heart talk, pleading for loyalty on the part of the Saints as they may move forward with the church Zionward. In the evening a beautifully illustrated story of Nauvoo was much enjoyed. Brother Hougas used the failure of the Saints at Nauvoo as an example of what happens when people do not remain loyal to their task. He urged that the present-day Saints strive to prevent any such catastrophe today.

A pleasant evening was spent in the lower auditorium of the church, February 14. The occasion was an O. T. Z. Banquet which was a decided success. An interesting program was presented after all had partaken of a fine dinner. Elder Leonard Lea, of Independence, was the guest speaker and Mrs. Lea assisted with her talent. Elder Ward A. Hougas was toastmaster for the occasion. Committees had been at work for some time and every effort was well repaid as comments were many on the decorations, program, and, of course, the food.

On February 19, Brother Hougas was again present, delivering a timely sermon in the morning and giving another illustrated story at the vesper service. "The Early Plymouth Story," was especially fitting in this month of great men's birthdays. At the morning service the girl's chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Ruth Haden, sang a group of three songs preceding the sermon.

A wonderful degree of the Spirit was felt by those present at the regular young people's prayer service Sunday morning, February 19. Although the number was not large, the meeting did not drag but came very near being one hundred per cent in testimonies. It is this type of meeting that gives the young people strength to go out and perform their daily tasks of service.

Second Church

On December 18, Second Church had the privilege of having at their church Rabbi Myron Meyer. He took for his subject, "Jesus the Savior or Christianity."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

On Christmas night the children gave a miscellaneous program. At the close of the exercises, eight junior girls passed through the congregation and took up the sacrifice offering.

In starting the new year, the following department heads were installed: Pastor, Elder O. Salisbury; church school director, J. Gilbert Bowser; junior church director, Alma J. Moffet; music director, Verne Goodenough; department of women, Mrs. Mae Goben; financial clerk, Orvall Carpenter; church pianist, Zelda Witlow; group recorder, Mrs. J. Gilbert Bowser.

Attendance at all services is growing from Sunday to Sunday and the Saints feel greatly encouraged. The young people's society, under Marybelle Bear's direction, has shown a decided increase in attendance.

Brother Salisbury, in his sermons this month, has been telling the difference between our church and others. There are a number of nonmembers attending.

Brother John F. Sheehy, of Independence, was a guest speaker recently. The message that he gave was enjoyed.

On January 22, Second Church congregation had the privilege of hearing President F. M. Smith deliver the evening sermon. As usual Brother Smith's talk dwelt upon the social ideals of the church, comparing the peace and comfort of the Zionic community to the chaos and squalor existing under the present social order. The Saints are praying that under the leadership of the President something effective may be done to bring about security and order. They appreciate President Smith's visit.

Third Church

Third Church is progressing nicely under the leadership of their pastor, Brother Roscoe D. Peterson, who does a great deal of visiting among the Saints as well as among many nonmember families.

Patriarch F. A. Smith came again to Saint Joseph, January 22, this time to hold a series of meetings at Third Church. While the weather was very cold, good crowds attended each of his services which lasted about a week and a half. He brought a message of courage and strengthened the Saints in many ways.

On February 12, Brother Ward A. Hougas gave an illustrated lecture on old Nauvoo which was very worth while.

A feature at Third Church worth mentioning is a short talk on church history by the pastor which precedes the prayer meeting every Wednesday evening. For about fifteen minutes previous to the opening of the service proper, Brother Peterson tells of some church history event which puts the entire group in the spirit of worship.

The Saints at Third are determined to go on and with the church accomplish those things that are required at their hands.

Fourth Church

There has been marked improvement in all departments at Fourth Church since the first of the year. Brother Floyd Wheat, church school director, has increased the interest and has organized a junior choir for the school.

Brother J. A. Ferris, assistant pastor, is selling ten Heralds to different members of the group each Sunday.

On February 5, at the evening service, the pastor, Elder J. L. Bear, gave an illustrated sermon for the young people. His subject was, "The Line Shall Not Break Where I Stand," and the choir sang a hymn with the same name.

Thursday, February 9, the women's department gave a play at the home of Mrs. J. L. Bear, entitled, "Burglary at Mrs. Day's," which was very interesting.

Sunday morning, February 12, at the ten forty-five service, the choir sang, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder I'll Be There." The subject for the morning was a roll call which was very successful in getting the addresses of many whose whereabouts was not known to the church as well as getting up-to-date information on a number of marriages and deaths that had not been reported.

What the hand is to the lute,
What the breath is to the flute,
What is fragrance to the smell,
What the spring is to the well,
What the flower is to the bee,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

What's the mother to the child,
What the guide in pathless wild,
What is oil to troubled wave,
What is ransom to the slave,
What is water to the sea,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

Don't Have Your Tonsils Removed; 'Try' Treatine First

"TREATINE" IS A MEDICINAL Preparation for treating the throat, and the first and only medicine on the market that is a competent treatment for the tonsils; can be taken with safety by the young and old alike and will in most cases restore the tonsils to a normal, healthy condition and prevent the cost and suffering of a tonsil operation.

YOUR TONSILS WILL RESPOND TO TREATMENT

It is surely about time that the public was offered some relief from this wholesale slaughter of tonsils that has been going on for the past five years. If your tonsils were not part of you for some special function to perform, they would not be there. "THINK IT OVER."

WILL YOU INVEST THE SUM OF $3.00 TO SAVE $50.00?

If it is worth the sum of $50.00 to have your tonsils removed by an operation, not saying anything about the loss of time, hospital expense, or the suffering caused by such an operation, IS IT NOT A GOOD INVESTMENT TO TRY TO KEEP YOUR TONSILS WHERE THEY BELONG FOR THE SUM OF $3.00?

"TREATINE" will stop a sore throat within 24 hours and the worst attack of tonsilitis within 48 hours if taken according to directions.

WE SAY, "KEEP YOUR TONSILS WHERE THEY BELONG"

People are talking more about this new discovery than any other medicine that has been introduced to the buying public in years, and it is with great satisfaction on our part that we are in position to offer such a preparation as "TREATINE" and especially to those who have been advised to have their tonsils removed by an operation.

SIX CHILDREN
(And No Chance to Do Anything for the Church)

A mother writes to us: "Many times I have asked my husband what good am I accomplishing. I am in poor health most of the time, and have six children to care for, so I am unable to do church work, or teach a Sunday school class, which I dearly love to do."

It would seem to us that this mother has six wonderful opportunities to do a marvelous work for the church. Her Sunday school class is right with her most of the time. She can do a lot to form their characters. Hers is the rare chance to make six good citizens for the kingdom of God. What better opportunity should she ask?

Apropos this incident, a friend tells us one that happened many years ago. A mother had her little son at a general church meeting with her. He was a lively, lovable little fellow and found it hard to keep still, and the mother acted very disagreeably and mean-tempered in continually nagging and reproving him. At that time a well-known woman church worker was making a brilliant speech. The mother said, "Oh, how I would like to do something like that! But I have no chance, and no abilities, to do anything for the church." She little realized that she would probably drive her own son out of the church by her attitude toward him. No opportunity, indeed!

Some people want to do something for the church, and others only want to stand in the limelight. It is true that mothers seldom get conspicuous public attention for raising their children to be good church members, but they have the satisfaction of doing the noblest work in the world.

Wallflowers and Cactuses

Of all human futility, none is more pathetic and amusing than that of the mother who tries to snare a beau or make dates for the daughter that she considers a wallflower.

Nothing will frighten all the young men into a more rabbit-like fear and flight than to know that the mother of any young woman is trying to arrange social contacts for her. It immediately isolates the daughter more than if she were shut behind prison walls. And the news soon gets around to all the young men, too.

The mother's ambition is especially hopeless if her wallflower is a flowering cactus. No young man will be caught picking the thorns from it with a mother watching, even if she approves.

Romance does not blossom under observation and supervision.

The whole thing would be funny if it didn't result somewhat tragically for the young people. Well-intended but misguided parental influence can do more to upset the social life of young people than any other one thing.

The social salvation of young people must be worked out by themselves. Parents can advise, but they must keep out of the way and not interfere. Every young person should wear a sign on his back: "This is my life. Keep out."

Our Project, 1933

3.—Church Attendance and Services

Every church has its attendance problems. Half of a congregation will come all the time. Another quarter will come when there is a good speaker, which varies from a half of the time up. The other quarter comes but rarely, and must be spoon-fed and handled with silk gloves when they get there.

The kingdom of God can not be built with a major part of the army serving half time and when they choose. And if it should be built in spite of them they could never enjoy it or share in it.

In some branches there is a legitimate complaint, to be sure, that the church has too many services for all to be well attended. If one went to everything he would never be at home, and would neglect both family and private obligations.

No Sunday ought to pass without every family that is in reach of the church getting there for church school and preaching services: to the church school to study or teach, and to the preaching service to hear the weekly message from the pastor or other member of the priesthood. This should be a minimum spiritual requirement for all.

It is quite obvious that a program of life which does not allow frequent contact with the church, and association with other church members will result in spiritual starvation if not in spiritual death. Isolated members testify of the trials they suffer, of loneliness and temptation. But many people who could attend allow indifference, fatigue, and mere laziness to keep them away.

If the services are not attractive, parents and members should feel responsible to exert an influence to improve them.

We are all vitally interested in the building of the Kingdom. Yet many members, through nonattendance and indifference, help to let the work go to pieces in some places, and see whole branches disintegrate. The work of the church can only be kept up through faithful, steady attendance. L. L.

"Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

IT HAS SOMETIMES BEEN A QUESTION with me how plainly I should speak in discussing before the public some of the problems and situations facing us as a people, and in presenting the unfinished tasks of the church in relation to our individual and group responsibilities. It is always more pleasant to speak of the good things accomplished than to point out some of the failures and their causes. It is more pleasant to emphasize our securities than to point out the dangers with which we are confronted, especially when the latter involve individual lapses and yielding to insidious forces.

This question arose again in my mind as I returned by car from a visit to Lamoni recently, where I addressed the Stake conference and pointed out or indicated some of the dangers. So it was with interest that I read a letter from the stake president, Brother Blair Jensen, wherein he spoke of the reaction to my sermon. Our readers may find his comments of interest. He says:

"Upon returning, we find the favorable reaction to your sermon to be more than one could hope for. All concede it to be a timely message and the inspiration and power manifested in its delivery is accepted quite generally as an indication of prophetic leadership. Words at best could hardly express the value of this message. Frankly, I believe it has done more to strengthen the cause here than anything in years. Several have expressed the thought that the message caused them to accept it personally in such a way as to cause them to gaze within themselves and apply the content of the message. I am sure that such messages from you and similar contacts by you with our people are not alone going to insure the accomplishment of the work, but will hasten the arrival of the day that shall see our material loads lifted.

"I found that personally I was strengthened and encouraged, as well as challenged by the message, and this feeling is augmented naturally as we find a similar feeling existing among the stronger ones of our members here. Our only desire is to play our part according to our ability and the demands of the church, and we pray that the blessings of our Father may be with you in your office and according to your needs."

The call to duty is meeting with a fine response from our people. Everywhere they want to know what is to be done. May we soon be in condition and position to move forward with our constructive social program! In the meantime there is our present great task of freeing the church from the delaying effects of the shackles which bind us.

Yet again, "Onward."

ON MY DESK is a tabularly made report of the finances of the Kansas City Stake comparing the income for the month of January in 1932 and in 1933. In local receipts a gain of 17.6% is shown and in general receipts the gain is 53.4%, a very fine showing. The results were probably affected by what is reflected in another column of the table, for in 1932 (January) there were seventeen solicitors in the stake and no assistants, while in January 1933 there were thirty-three assistants. With fifty solicitors and assistants working a field where seventeen were working previously the factor of personal contacts is certain to be much larger, and the results prove the efficacy of the plan. Blue Pencil Notes

Who said "Love is blind"? Probably some old crab who had grown so dim of vision that he could not see the good qualities that Love saw.

"Some people go to church on Sunday morning," said Deacon Goodentart, "and some people catch up on their sleep, and some do both."

In the Herald for February 15 one of our most energetic district presidents writes that he has had some of the brethren with mule teams grading up the church lot in a certain branch. He adds that counting two mules as the equivalent of one man they had put in 130 days work. The estimate is fair—though there have been times during church difficulties when every man engaged seemed more than a match for—ah, two of the creatures under consideration.

A Sunday school teacher being desirous to impress upon his class the value of practical Christianity, said, "If I should see a man beating a balky donkey and should persuade him to stop beating the poor donkey, what Christian virtue would I be practicing?" A small boy replied instantly, "Brotherly kindness!" When our brother is most stubborn and intractable, if we would only examine our own natures we might find something in common with him that would enable us to understand and be patient.

There are a great many changes contemplated in Holy Writ as the prophets forecast future conditions; we shall have to adjust ourselves to those changes. Brother T. W. Williams used to say, "Three times I have seen God. I have seen him in the mountains, by the sea, and in the desert." Blue Pencil Notes had their beginning at Hermosa Beach in 1917, right down near the water's edge, in a little cottage close to whose front steps the waves came when the tides were high. When I am near the ocean I never miss an opportunity to get down to the beach and watch the breakers come roaring in. When the earth shall become "as a sea of glass," when there shall be no more ocean, and the mountains "shall flee away," I shall have to change my own habits a bit. At present I feel:

I would like to walk the strand
Of that glassy sea,
For an hour; it would be grand,
(So it seems to me),
But I could not longer stand
It's monotony.

I would rather feel the spray
From the heaving sea,
Watch the billows blue or gray,
Hear the breakers free,
Roaring from the vast sea way,
Sent from God to me.

Herald Branch Bundles Growing Rapidly

The circulation of the Herald through Branch Bundles is expanding so rapidly that one must specify the day for which he quotes figures. On Tuesday, February 21, the bundle list was prepared for 1,975 copies going to 225 separate branches of the church. Individual bundles average nearly nine to the bundle, as against an average of five a few weeks ago. The largest bundle to date is that of Council Bluffs, which regularly takes forty-two.

When it is realized that this circulation is all in addition to the regular subscriptions, the real value of the Branch Bundles will appear.

Is it too much to hope that the Branch Bundle will carry the messages of the church into three thousand church homes within the next few months?

Youth's Place in the Family

By L. B. M.

This week's discussion concerns the first one of our list of problems of youth: "Youth's place in the family." We shall be glad to have articles and letters on any of these problems, preferably under 1,000 words in length.

ZION can never be unless it has Zionic homes as its foundation. There is nothing new in that statement, but I wish to add something more: And Zionic homes can not exist unless they are built by Zionic families. And families? Well—you are a member of one, I of another. Families compose one of youth's big problems. Let us here consider our place in our father's family.

We have heard (more than often) that ours is an age of machinery, of swift communication and transportation, of commercial recreations, of crime, of luxury on one hand and poverty on the other, of large scale production, of glutted markets, of unemployment, of complexes, of attitudes, of promiscuous social relationships, and a thousand other things. This is a time of confusion, of strife, of materialism, of selfishness—nothing at all like the "good old days!"

Are we big enough to untangle ourselves from these things long enough to take an objective look at the world and at ourselves?

FIRST, let us look into the family. Youth is as essential to produce full happiness and usefulness in the family circle as strings are essential to a violin, or steps to a stairway. Youth's place in the family is by no means small.

But one caution as we go on into our problem: Be careful that you don't let your own little self and your own problems get between you and the big world of other people and their problems. All of us tend to do that, because we're pretty well acquainted with ourselves.

Fortunate is the young man or the young woman who lives in a home ("abiding place of the affections"—Webster). Today there are thousands of homeless people and among these are great numbers of the teen age, drifting from city to city, jobless, hungry, unwanted, desperate. They understand the feeling of Wordsworth when he said:

"And homeless near a thousand homes I stood,
And near a thousand tables pined and wanted food."

If these drifters were organized or going toward any particular place, history might one day speak of the Crusade of the Homeless away back in 1933. Whole families have turned wanderers because they have no home.

"Be it ever so humble" there's something wholesome and stabilizing about home. Let us begin by appreciating our homes and exerting ourselves to make them more than just part-time "hang-outs" "filling stations" and "parking" places for ourselves and our families. That is part of our responsibility.

"But I've always had a home," objects twenty-year-old Johnnie; "what I want to know is, don't I have any rights in my own family and my own home?"

Of course you do, Johnnie. Your rights are comparable with those of the rest of the family. You have the right to remember that:

1. Unselfishness is a flower of unsurpassed loveliness when found blooming in the family flowerbed.
2. Cooperation will get you a long way even in your own family.
3. Gratitude, truthfulness, honesty, and helpfulness contribute to family happiness.
4. You owe much love and service to your family, for it has given wonderful opportunities to you.

You have a right to:

1. Grow up to be a self-reliant individual.
2. Broaden your understanding and be big in soul.
3. Be a friend to all who need friendship.
4. Pass your heritage, made more attractive by your own experiences, to your children.

ONE OF THE BIGGEST things Johnnie can do is to adjust himself to his parents, family, and home until such a time as he shall step forth to build a home of his own.

Contrary to the opinion of some, it is possible for a young person to remain at home during high school and college age and after without developing a "mother complex" or similar malady. This, however, is not always easy. It is up to the family concerned, first the father and mother, second, the young person himself, and third, the rest of the family.

A big aid in determining the conduct and actions of the family and building faith, trust and understanding is the family council. Each member should have a seat in this council. A good time for such a council to hold session is just following the family worship.

"Oh, but our family never finds time to have worship," protests some one, "we're all so very busy. We're never together in the evening and seldom even at mealtime."

Such a family is to be pitied—and the church is to be pitied, too, because there are so many of its families just like this one. I wonder that it has never occurred to some member of such a family that it is possible to hold a short worship before breakfast. This is being done by some families I know, "And it starts the day off wonderfully," they say.

Problems of dating, of chaperons, of accepting invitations, of forms of recreation, of smoking and drinking, of "old-fashioned notions" compared with modern ideas, of school work, and of religious and moral views are constantly coming before growing boys and girls. Many of these can be safely and helpfully solved by the family council; or if for some reason, it is not wise to bring such individual matters up there, it would pay twenty-year-old Johnnie and eighteen-year-old Mary Jane to make good friends out of Dad and Mother.

WE AS YOUNG PEOPLE should think, too, of the problems of habit forming. While you yet live at home with your parents are you practicing the Golden Rule? I mean are all the habits you are forming such as you wish to have in your own home and to see in your own children. If they are not—if they are careless and indifferent and even dirty habits, you are doing your family an injustice. You are imposing on those who love you most.

Let me illustrate. Johnnie is not much of a thinker. He doesn't appreciate the

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By F. M. MCDOWELL.

Thank You Very Much

The Business Manager wishes to express his thanks to those who have written in with regard to the time their copies of the Herald arrives. So many responded that they have given a great deal of help toward the solving of some of our problems. We are now studying mailing schedules and will do everything in our power to get the Herald to domestic subscribers by Saturday of the week of publication. We will not be able to do so in all cases, due to train connections, but we promise to do our best. Meanwhile, we shall appreciate it if subscribers, especially those who are distributing branch bundles, will keep us informed.

blessings of his home, and every day acts his lack of appreciation. He grouches. He criticizes the food on the table. He throws things about in his own room and never puts anything away. I have seen dozens of such Johnnies. But someday Johnnie will pay the price of forming these habits with embarrassment, and perhaps social or economic hurt.

Mary Jane may be a little "grandstander" (May I borrow the term, dear Pigeon?) She may fail to learn to do such humble things as sew, keep house, and cook because of "other more important things." But I should not be one bit surprised if the day would come when her sins of omission will find her out to her grief and discouragement. Life is astonishingly like that.

We have heard many things about Zion—how beautiful and lovely the city is to be; how the people are to gather here from everywhere; how there will be peace and love and harmony. The youth of the church are conscious of the fact that Zion is far from flourishing, that especially at present conditions are most adverse to Zion. It is a big, a very big task that lies before us—but who wants a small one?—a task committed to the church more than one hundred years ago.

Right now the church challenges us to grow up and lend a hand in the mighty endeavor of building Zion. The opportunity for us to help will not be open for ever, to be embraced just when ever we get ready to help. Calls are coming now, and they find us unprepared. Let us remind ourselves every day as we think of the work ahead of us that Zion depends on Zionic homes, which in turn, depend on Zionic families. And Zionic families must, of course, be composed of Zionic people. Does that bring it close enough to you? It does to me.

Zion Builders at Work in Tahiti

I have always enjoyed the reports of the work of the young people of Independence as they went from branch to branch giving programs and encouraging the weaker congregations, but did not think that it would be our privilege to report such activities from the Society Islands Mission.

We have a sister branch at headquarters about six miles away, that has been sustained by the work of Tarona Branch officers. They are struggling along making occasional gains. By request the young people from the headquarters' branch arranged a trip by truck to meet with Outumaoro Branch Sunday evening, January 29.

The huge passenger motor truck arrived at Tarona at four thirty sharp and about thirty-five young people, members and nonmembers, with their guitars, mandolins, ukuleles, banjos, and violins were loaded ready for the trip. They were all happy and report a most enjoyable time with even a noisy battle between one of our members and a Catholic friend over some point of difference in doctrine.

The young folk, excepting two who ate supper before leaving, experienced a good joke when the supper that they were expecting at the expense of Outumaoro Branch was not forthcoming, and all of the eating places and stores were closed when they returned. They did not mind though for a native is accustomed to eating when he gets the food and not regularly as Americans are. A good time spiritually is the report and I am afraid that I will get criticism when I try to check a too-soon repetition of the trip. Young people in Zion, we are following you.

NEWS BRIEFS

Sixty-five New Members for Kansas City O. B. K's

Sixty-five new candidates for the O. B. K. organization of Kansas City Stake were presented by the vice-councilors at the sixth annual initiation and offering service at Central Church, February 20. And about one hundred and eighty people filed or pledged to file their inventories. Of the one hundred forty-nine O. B. K's filing inventories in 1932, forty-six have paid tithing in full and sixty-five in part. Others are paying tithing who have not yet filed inventories.

At this service President F. M. Smith, C. E. Wight, stake president, and C. A. Skinner, stake bishop, were asked to accept honorary membership in the organization because of their interest in young people's activities. All the stake pastors and their wives are honorary members.

Milwaukee's Pastor Zealous in Church Work

John Maas, priest and pastor of Milwaukee Branch, lives at Watertown, Wisconsin, forty-five miles away. He is a man who is alert to the needs of the church both local and general, and is not satisfied with conducting a successful pastorate at Milwaukee alone, but is arousing interest by missionary meetings in his home town.

Recently in sub-zero weather Brother Maas and his family drove ninety miles each Sunday to minister to Milwaukee Saints.

The Women at Work

The women of the La Da Sas, Pasadena, California, are sacrificing in many ways. Through their help the mission's sacrifice offering was greater in 1932, than the year before. They have sacrificed in their homes, at their social functions, and are now trying to save a mile of pennies. They also have an apron accumulating "silver" patches.

The sacrifice offering of the women of Independence mounted to $3,490 at the February 20 meeting. It was at this session that the women unanimously voted to turn every fourth collection to local expenses.

Through their local storehouse, Milwaukee women, twenty in number, have done much relief work. They gladly responded to the church call to sacrifice, reserving in their treasury only enough to carry on their relief work.

At a special meeting for the women at the Central Texas district conference, at Houston, President Frederick M. Smith presented a vivid description of the women's activities in Zion in behalf of the general church debt.

The women's group at Valley Center, Michigan, numbers twenty-one members, and meets each Wednesday for work. They are quilting at present. Frequently on the department's meeting day, the men of the branch gather to do some good turn. Once they cut, sawed, hauled, and stacked eight cords of fuel for the church. Another time they had a corn husking bee to help one of the brothers.

Wife of Horahitu Is Dead

Sister Teata a Tamariki, wife of Missionary Taruiarii (Horahitu) Tauhiti, is dead, according to word received from Elder J. H. Yager, of Papeete, Tahiti. She passed away January 10, 1933, at Mataura, Tubuai, Society Islands.

Sister Teata and family went to Tubuai with Horahitu in 1931, and was very active among the young people and the old in the island until she was taken ill in October, 1932. Her ailment is given as heart disease. She was forty-five years old.

The Saints of the islands mourn with the native missionary and elder in his loss, and an impressive memorial service was held for the sister at Tarona Branch, mission headquarters, January 22.

Brother Horahitu made the acquaintance of many in the church when he visited the Centennial Conference, 1930.

J. Charles May in Lamoni Stake

Elder J. Charles May is finding the southern part of Lamoni Stake a fertile missionary field. He spent thirty days at Blythedale, Missouri, and is now conducting meetings at Allendale. Attendance of nonmembers is unusual, and some are considering baptism. In a period of four weeks Brother May has preached forty-four sermons.

Seventeen Baptized at Brentwood

Seventeen candidates were baptized during the four-week series of missionary meetings conducted in Brentwood, Missouri, Branch by Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin. The series closed February 12, after having awakened considerable interest in and friendliness to the church in that community. Brother and Sister Baldwin are now laboring at Sawyerville, also in Saint Louis District.

The Foundation of a Successful Ministry

A Life of Training and Spiritual Sensitiveness Without the Experience of Sin

By Earl T. Higdon

ONE OF THE religious concepts of the restored gospel that we present to the world affirmatively is the concept of a "restored priesthood with divine authority for the ministering of salvation unto mankind." Such a concept is easily defended from point of scripture and reasonableness. But the greatest test that this concept so beautiful in theory and appealing in religious expression can be asked to pass is, "Is the ministry successful?"

It is no new experience for a pastor or young peoples' supervisor to have an adolescent youngster of the local branch ask the question, "Why is brother S—— not able to inspire people to conviction and activity while Brother T—— with the least effort can inspire an eager following, both holding the same office of priesthood?"

Such questions as this have been asked, and are still being asked, and must be answered. It is not too bold for our young people to ask such questions, nor is it too much for us to expect the absence of such questions when our priesthood members have lived a life of training and spiritual sensitiveness without the experience of sin.

Training

While some have argued in the past that no training is necessary for the ministry, that has not been the teaching of the church. The church has ever been in favor of the education and development of the individual and this not to the exclusion of the ministry or members potentially eligible for the ministry.

On a certain occasion the Lord by divine injunction, advised: "O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may be blameless before God at the last day." (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.)

If we should see a teacher in the branch who seemingly had been living prayerfully and humbly make a mess of a social problem, that had arisen in the branch, because he was tactless and did not understand the approach to the problem; are we to indifferently shrug our shoulders and excuse the affair from our mind by saying, "He evidently is not in spiritual atunement?" Do you think that this teacher, who has been ordained to this particular office will "be blameless before God at the last day"? How will he account for his ministerial stewardship?

The message of the Restored Gospel is one of vital importance. Christ expected that we should put every principle into effect. The gospel was created to function through a human ministry, but in this very function itself, it makes a challenge so ringing until every member of the priesthood must be brought to the realization that he must be a fit vessel for the ministering of salvation.

The Lord again commanded, (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21) "that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms."

The Lord gave this very specific instruction as to what should be studied by the ministry so, "that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you."

Becoming Spiritually Sensitive

While we are polishing our mental equipment, in order that we may magnify our calling, knowing that we must interpret the principles of the gospel to a practical world in such terms as will be understood, we must become spiritually sensitive. Becoming spiritually sensitive is a matter of individual cultivation and development. Of course, our training, study and environment have a great deal to do with our spiritual sensitiveness, but, to a great degree it depends upon our mental reflection and introspection, cultivating those thoughts and feelings which bring to us those desires which will motivate our actions into noble service for our fellows.

Becoming spiritually sensitive is necessary for the constant intercourse of the holy spirit. It is

The Forgiveness of Sins

By A. B. Phillips

THE DIVINE CREATOR has placed us in a world that is full to overflowing with beauty and beneficent gifts. He has endowed us with capacity to enjoy them, and with ability to use them for the good of ourselves and all mankind. The proper use of the material things by which we are so richly surrounded brings joy to our hearts and adds to the happiness of everyone with whom we are concerned. When these beneficent gifts of God are employed in accordance with their intended purposes, or are enjoyed in innocent and harmless ways, they have the magic power to open our eyes to the glorious love of our Creator and to the wonderful brotherhod in which all humanity may find the fullness of life.

In order that we shall have the added power to become builders of great and noble things in accordance with upright desires, God has bestowed upon us that most priceless of all possessions, the ability to choose our own course subject to environments in which we live. It may be that our Divine Maker could have created us with such restricted powers that no choice would be ours but to act mechanically and automatically as he might will. But had this been our fate, we never could have known the wonderful satisfactions that come to us when we choose for ourselves the desirable things of life. Nor could we have enjoyed the sublime consciousness of making and possessing our own personality, which, after all, is our most cherished creative work as individual builders. Charles Arnold has said:

"If my thoughts were passed through me by another; if my desires, affections, resolves, were phenomena of the psychical force that came my way; if, further, the whole genius and knowledge of the human race, the moral struggles of its heroes, the literature, philosophy, and art of its cultivated nations were but the ripplings of the Divine Reason upon a world, itself the aggregate of divine powers—there would, in fact, be only One Person in the universe, and the whole drama of our life and history would dissolve into an illusion."—Cosmos, the Soul, and God, pages 206, 207.

Sin, and What it Implies

Individually we possess the power to choose and to make selections from the many roads that lie before us. But because we may choose, and because we have power to affect the lives of others, justice demands that we shall be held accountable for our deeds. God has loaned to us the use of earthly things, but forbids us to employ them to the injury of ourselves or others. To those who do his will and choose righteously he has extended the assurance of eternal life, but those who refuse to live uprightly must pay the penalty of their evil deeds and must also be denied the blessedness of the heavenly life.

The life that disregards the will of God and the happiness of mankind is the life of sin. The divine law is based upon the wisdom and goodness of God, and its observance leads to the well-being of all mankind. To break the divine law is to bring misery into the lives of men, and therefore we can discern infinite love as the motive which commands us to keep it. The Beloved Disciple explains the nature of sin, and declares:

"Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John 3: 4.

The very meaning of sin implies a wrong committed. This wrong may be against God, or it may be against men. But sin committed against men is also a sin against God, who gave man his agency and holds him responsible for its use. Unless men were accountable for what they do, they would not be guilty of sin when they do wrong, for the wrong could not in justice be charged to them. The fact that one may sin therefore implies that he possesses the agency or power to choose between sin and upright conduct.

The Offer of Forgiveness

Because of the frail and imperfect nature of man, and perhaps also because of his lack of extensive experience and far-seeing knowledge, he could never realize the offer of eternal life if a single act of sin were an immovable barrier to its possession. But the love and mercy of God has provided a means of release from the disastrous consequences of sin, provided the sinner will avail himself of the opportunity and comply with certain conditions which constitute his alternative.

Through the divine atonement our Lord has opened the way by which all who have sinned may obtain forgiveness and remission of sins, and by this means they may return to the path that leads to eternal life, and may come into the enjoyment of divine grace. It is one of the perfect attributes of God that he condescends to the needs of man, and as no one can make full restitution for all the errors of life, the gracious Creator offers to remit the penalty deserved.

It is no difficult, costly, or unreasonable demand which God makes of his creatures. He only requires that they repent and turn to him in faith and sincerity of heart. The life of sin has always brought unmeasured misery and trouble to mankind. On the other hand, the greatest blessings ever enjoyed, and the greatest peace and satisfaction ever known, have come to those who were free from the troubles wrought by sinful lives. Sin is a terrible plague to the innocent, as well as a moral disease that wrecks the life of the guilty, and only by repentance may healing be obtained. John the Baptist preached "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." And Jesus solemnly warned his hearers: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Meaning and Nature of Forgiveness

The forgiveness of sins is conditional, and the application of forgiveness is also to a great extent dependent upon the circumstances of the individual seeking it. For instance, forgiveness does not in every case mean that the sinner will not be required to make restitution for his wrong. If one has stolen from another, he must return that which he stole, or else make such other restitution as lies within his power and as justice requires. If he refuses to do this, he has not repented, and has no claim on forgiveness. The effect of forgiveness, therefore, is to remit such penalty as the sinner incurs but is unable to pay, or to restore him into confidence and former relationship.

Several Hebrew terms are translated by the English word forgive, or its equivalent. But all of them mean to pardon, besides several other meanings not uniformly possessed by all. Most of the New Testament Greek terms which are translated forgive also mean to pardon. This uniformity of meaning is by no means accidental, as the application of the texts will show. For the Divine forgiveness is clearly shown to be in the nature of a pardon for an offense committed, and it involves a freeing of the offender from the penalty which might otherwise be exacted from him. This is indicated in God's promise to "heal" the land of Israel, if they would repent; for evidently their land would suffer as a penalty for their sins. But Jehovah said to them:

"If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."—2 Chronicles 7: 14.

So also the promises of God's forgiveness as taught by Christ always implied that he would remit the Divine penalty that otherwise the guilty one must suffer, and would remove the barriers between him and the acceptance of his devotion. God would be gracious to him. His pardoning grace is no temporary consideration, for he declares that even the memory of past transgressions shall be no more, in the day when his people return to him. With sublime unction his words declare:

"I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."—Jeremiah 31: 33, 34.

Forgiveness Requires a Right Attitude

The scriptures are explicit in revealing the fact that forgiveness is not secured from God by purely selfish appeals of the offender. On the contrary, it is his manifestation of repentance from selfish deeds and purposes that entitles him to divine consideration. For this reason Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." We must approach God in the spirit of forgiveness toward others, and with justice in our hearts, for otherwise we shall be denied. Our Lord expressly states:

"And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses."—Mark 11: 25, 26.

The selfish and cruel attitude of the servant who begged his Lord to have patience with him, because of the great debt he owed, is shown in his harsh treatment of a fellow servant who owed him but little. The parable of our Lord shows that such cruelty will receive the condemnation and punishment which it merits. The Apostle James emphasizes the need of clean hands and pure hearts, which he uses as symbols of honest deeds and upright thoughts. He admonishes the wayward:

"Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded."—James 4: 8.

God also requires an attitude of fraternity toward others, in order that our petitions and offerings to him may find acceptance. For this reason comes the warning of Jesus:

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."—Matthew 5: 23, 24.

The Confession of Sins Required

One of the important requirements of scripture is the confession of sins. The world today is sadly lacking in sincerity and that true spirit of humility which God desires of his people toward each other. It is not sufficient to be sorry for a sin which has been committed. Many people have been sorry for

A Problem Story for Young Home Builders

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Where Do the Two Generations Meet?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Into Polly's home comes Brad's mother, critical, sharp-tongued, and gossipy. Polly, loaded with responsibility and enmeshed in the tangle of other people's affairs, can not extricate herself. On the same Sunday that Brad goes on an all-day hunting trip, Polly, sitting alone in church, receives a note telling of a rumor concerning a divorce between her and Brad. Heartsick, she blames Mother Nelson's wagging tongue. In desperation she prays for help. At this point a surprising complication occurs. Echo Duncan, a tall and beautiful girl, one of the happy Half Dozen, who can not reconcile herself to her short admirer, Postelle Jennings, becomes involved in Polly's life in a serious way. Right here is where things begin to break.

Chapter 9

Echo Meets a Life Pattern

SAINT AGNES' EVE—Ah, bitter chill it was.

"The owl, for all his feathers, was a-cold—" chanted Echo as she kicked off a pair of brown galoshes on the Nelson doormat. "Do you have any cold owls, Polly?" She was brushing snow from her coat collar: "It was awfully sweet of you to invite me over to dinner tonight. Gee, Polly, but you're a grand friend!"

"Off with that snowy coat, my dear," the hostess ordered, "and follow me to the kitchen. I left only Carrol to mind the oyster stew!"

"Oyster stew and English literature—my two most intense loves! I'm crazy about both of them, but until this minute I have never been able to associate them closely." And having hung her coat and hat in the hall, the tall, blue-eyed girl followed Polly into the kitchen from which crept all over the house tempting odors of oysters and of apple pie. "Why, where is everyone tonight?"

"Brad had to make a trip to the city with a friend of his, Mr. Moore—some business matter—and Mother Nelson is sitting up with old Sister Benson. So we have the evening to ourselves, you and Carrol and I." If her visitor's cheek paled and a slender hand nervously pushed a lock of hair away from her face, Polly was too busy to notice it. "We'll have a lovely chance to visit here all alone," the young housewife continued.

"I—I almost didn't get to come," Echo hurried to say. "Postelle wanted to go to a show, but I hardened my heart and told him that I was coming over here. When I mentioned you, he seemed to relent awfully quick. You and he couldn't be organized against me?" teasingly.

At that moment, Carrol, having restrained himself as long as he could, plumped all the eagerness and interest of his two years into the situation: "Big horse!" he crowed rounding his mouth like a letter "O" and pointing a stubby finger toward his play pen.

"Big horse? Where's the big horse?" demanded Echo.

"Over there."

"He wants to show you the horse his grandmother gave him for Christmas. He adores it, seems never to get used to having it, and shows it to every visitor time and again," explained Polly who was rapidly dishing up the meal.

"See—Spotty," proudly proclaimed Carrol, leading his guest over to view a squatty hobby horse of black and white.

"Well, my dear, your son shows comprehension of black and white, nay even a sense of humor. That varigated animal is properly named—Spotty," chuckled Echo.

This was the heaviest snowfall Independence had seen for years—eleven inches in a little more than twelve hours, and still fitful gusts of flakiness. During the day traffic had frequently been blocked. Snow shovelers and plows had worked for hours, and still business people had difficulty in getting up town. All whom necessity had not compelled to go outdoors, had remained inside, snowbound.

And so as the meal progressed, it was natural that Polly and Echo should discuss the weather. Then they talked of work. Echo was a clerk, spending her days selling hose, gloves, and beads. Her business ability and courteous manner made her a valued employee of her firm. She had worked there for a year.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"It's not very often that one catches you in seclusion this way, is it, Polly?"

"No, but even the postmen want to go into seclusion this kind of weather, poor fellows," smiled the other. "I haven't been out all day, and Mother Nelson has been gone since one o'clock. She'll probably stay all night. Brad was home for just a minute before he started for the city."

"Brad's pretty busy these days, isn't he?" The tone was casual.

"Oh, quite. He's tired, does too much. I'm worried for fear he'll get sick."

"He ought to be like Postelle. Honestly, that boy can stand anything."

"Are you sure?"

"Of course. Haven't I tried him out? Put him through the third degree, so to speak? Did you ever see a red-haired person who wasn't pretty sturdy and enduring?"

Polly laughed: "So many questions all at once. I'll answer them all with a single statement: It's interesting to watch you two."

"I call that being downright irrelevant," from her guest. "Well, what would you do?" she challenged. Never had Echo looked prettier, thought Polly, than she did at that moment, across the table with the glow of candlelight on her face. There had been a note of defiance in the tone, but the expression on her face was one of sweet seriousness. There was a tiny flutter of the long, dark lashes. The oyster stew was forgotten by one of its devotees.

"I'm a poor one to advise," countered the hostess. "It's all I can do to solve my own problems—and more, too." What had put that startled look in the girl's eyes? "But I do think Postelle's a fine boy."

"That's just the trouble," groaned Echo; "so does everyone else, and to complicate affairs, he is a fine chap. I admire him intensely. In a way, sometimes, I think I even love him. But, Polly, I'd just as soon marry a—marry a," she groped for a comparison. Her eyes lit on the cracker bowl. "I'd just as soon marry a cracker box!"

"Why, Echo!—"

"Oh, I know I've shocked you, but I would. I've known Postelle a long time. He's terribly clever, but in spite of all his cleverness, he's just the same, Polly, possessive in a hundred ways, old-maidish about my taking care of myself, and—oh, I don't know what I want just now, Polly, only I'm sure that I don't want Postelle Jennings. . . ." She was actually trembling.

"Well, come, dear, let's don't discuss such deep subjects when our stew is getting cold," cheered Polly. "Plenty of time for that later, after we get Chappie here to bed," and she nodded at her son who was demanding.

"More 'tew, Mummie. More 'tew—pwease."

AFTER they had washed and put away the dishes and left the little Dutch clock ticking to itself in the kitchen, Echo was the delighted spectator as Polly prepared Carrol for bed. In honor of his "pwetty lady," Carrol's name for Echo, the boy was allowed to sit up ten whole minutes longer, and was toasting his little pink toes before the fireplace.

"Polly Nelson," Echo's voice shook, "I should think you'd have every reason in the world to be happy—this wonderful baby, a comfortable home, your own splendid personality, and your work—"

"You forgot the most important of all," Polly reminded, "Brad."

"Oh, yes, and—Brad." Did a shadow flit over Echo's face at that moment? "You ought to be a happy woman," she mused. "Now take some of the rest of us—unsettled, don't know what we want, probably couldn't have it if we knew, battling with problems, poor as poor, wanting and needing so much and getting so little. Sometimes, Polly, I'm utterly lost. I tell you it's awful—this business of being twenty!"

Polly squeezed her hand sympathetically: "Come," she bade her. "It's time to get this youngster into bed."

The trio softly mounted the stairs, and while Echo hovered in the shadow, Polly took her son in her arms and heard his prayer. It ended: "An' Dod bwess Mummie and Daddy an' Gwamma, and Ediff and my pwetty lady. Amen."

"And now, my dear," the two were again in front of the fire which Polly had replenished until it leaped merrily into the black throat of the chimney, "I've wanted to talk with you for weeks, but the opportunity just hasn't offered itself. I know something's wrong. What is it?"

"I'm not one of these people who like to talk about themselves, Polly." The voice was low, the glance averted.

"There's been a difference in you this winter, Echo," went on the calm voice, "and I can't just put my fingers on it. I can't name it. You seem older, but more flippant than ever."

"Oh, Polly, don't you understand? I have to be that way! But—but I must go," and she hurriedly jumped to her feet. "I really must. I—shouldn't have come here tonight, Polly."

"My dear child," a light hand fell on her shoulder, "if it hurts you, we won't talk about it. We'll talk about other things. I'm afraid you're working too hard."

"Oh, no, I'm not! no, I'm not! If only I had enough just to throw myself into work and forget everything else!" Her words were hurried, fearful. Polly was troubled.

"Do sit down, dear," she pursued. "I want to

www.LatterDayTruth.org

show you the quilt I'm working on before you go."

"Do you know," she continued after the two had watched the fire for a moment, "I sometimes think you are a little more selfish than you used to be, Echo. I'm not scolding, dear, but I know you pretty well, and I've been watching you lately."

"I have to be, Polly." The voice was muffled. "If I don't think of myself, no one else will."

"Postelle—"

"Oh, don't throw him in my face every time I say anything," implored the other. "That isn't true what I just said. He would look after me; he does look after me in spite of myself. He is a real friend."

"He's more than that," gently. "He's a lover." Echo only shrugged. "What I meant by selfish was this, dear. I know that you pay more than your share of the family expenses, and that you always are giving presents to your family that you can't really afford, but you're so wrapped up in Echo and her problems that you forget other people have their problems and troubles, too."

"That's what's all wrong, Polly. Because I'm silly and flippant, no one thinks I have problems. It's just all clear, smooth sailing for Echo Duncan. She should become Mrs. Postelle Jennings and fulfill her destiny. It seems so easy when you don't know—They don't know how he bores me with his talk, smothers me with his attention, how I can't, simply can't marry him because sometimes I dislike him!"

"Echo," the tone was low, "is there some one else?"

For a full moment the girl gave Polly a stark stare. Her eyes were wide with fright, and yet she did not move. She seemed hypnotized. When she did recover the power of motion, she flung herself into the pillows at the end of the lounge and sobbed heart-brokenly.

"There, there, dear, you're tired," soothed the older woman. Who would have thought that merry, lovable, teasing Echo could be this tempestuous creature? "Come, it can't be half so bad as all this. If you don't love Postelle there's no reason why you can't send him packing and give your whole time and attention to the other man."

"But I can't! I can't! Please, Polly," she begged. "Let's forget all this. Let's don't talk about it. I'm—I'm going now.'"

"Oh, don't. The evening is young yet, and I'll be lonesome." Polly smiled winningly. "It'll be hours yet before Brad is home."

THOUGH, a few minutes later, color began to ebb back into her guest's cheeks, the hunted expression remained in her eyes. Who could this man who merited Echo's favor be? wondered Polly. What was back of her unhappiness? Perhaps it was just an outburst of temperament characteristic of adolescents.

Polly's workroom was the storeroom upstairs, a large unfinished place under the eaves where she kept her sewing machine, pressing board, iron, and a dozen other useful things. It was her workshop, and when she took her guest there that snowy night, a half-finished quilt of the pine-tree pattern stood in the frames.

"Oh, I love green and white, Polly."

"So do I. Mother Nelson works up here quite a lot, and Sister Livingston, too. They seem to enjoy it on these afternoons when they can't get out to quilt with their club."

"You're always sewing, aren't you?"

"I love it. Only wish I had more time for it. I'd rather have a closet full of lovely patchwork quilts than almost anything else. Here's one we took out of the frames last week," and she opened the lid of a large cedar chest, revealing a mass of color, orange, yellow, and white. "This is the French star pattern."

"It's gorgeous," breathed the girl.

"There's something about sewing and making quilts that makes me think of the woman in Proverbs."

"Who was she?"

"Suppose you read about her tonight when you are home, the thirty-first chapter. I love that chapter; it gives me a sort of life pattern."

Then it was time to go. "Isn't Postelle coming after you?"

"No, I told him not to." Echo was hurriedly donning her galoshes.

"It's starting to snow again. I'd better call a taxi."

"Please don't. I love to walk in the snow."

As Polly hesitated, the girl tucked in her scarf and turned toward her. "Good night, Polly. I—I had a lovely time," and then a rush of words: "Truly I did, and I'm glad I came. Won't you forget about my scene a few minutes ago?"

"I'll try to, dear," a little dubiously, "but I feel responsible for you in a way, and it hurts me to see you suffer needlessly. I've been through some rough places, and if I can help—"

"You do help me, Polly. Believe me, you do."

"But I could do more if I knew what it's all about, Echo. It's like stumbling around in the dark, trying to find a match—" She choked over the double meaning of her words. And then: "Won't you tell me the name of the man, Echo?"

"No, no. For heaven sakes no!" wildly cried the girl. "Goodnight, Polly—goodnight."

The Child's Religious Education

By Annie Twaddle

(This paper was prepared by a very earnest and talented young sister who is devoting her life to the teaching of children. We appreciate the warmth of her love for them and her desire that their little feet may early find the path that leads to God. How wonderfully teachers may share with us parents the intimate problems of growing boys and girls! We thank God for such teachers.—C. B. W.)

"As the bough is bent, the tree is inclined," is a very true statement. With this in mind, parents should start the religious training of the child very early.

If I were a mother, I would do as follows: As soon as I had tucked the baby in for the night, I would drop on my knees by his cradle and offer up thanksgiving for care given me, and a short, earnest appeal for guidance and wisdom for my task. When the child was old enough to take notice he would want to do as I and would want to know why we were doing it. In very simple language I would tell him about God as our heavenly Father. Rather than teach him a formal prayer I would lead him to express thanks for his gifts and ask forgiveness and help to be a good child.

This outcome would not take place immediately, but could be brought about by a series of bedtime confidences. As the child grew he would naturally continue telling me of his experiences and problems, provided I received them sympathetically and together we sought wisdom for their solution from God, our Father. Not only would he be gaining an idea of God as Father, an ever present help, but I would also better know his particular problems and perplexities.

I would try at all times to be his companion (not to the exclusion of his little friends, however). To give me the necessary time he would have to learn to help me. At first he could acquire the habit of replacing his toys in their places when through with them. As he grew older other tasks requiring more skill could be assigned him. If he failed to do these I would explain to him that I would not have time to play as I had to do his work. If carried out properly, I'm sure the child would acquire two valuable habits—neatness and cooperation.

On our hikes we would study nature and thus see how our Father cares for us, how he has provided us with the means of livelihood. In very simple terms the idea of stewardship could be introduced by explaining that God requires us to give the tithe, surplus, and offering in return for his goodness. Do not stress the idea too much at this time, but refer to it again when the subject occurs in Bible study.

The part of the evening just before family devotions could well be utilized by the family as a story hour, the type of story, of course, depending on the age of the child. Fairy tales, myths, legends and hero stories should receive attention. These may be selected from sources other than the Bible. A few well chosen from each of these classes, well learned and well told would prove more beneficial than a larger number less well prepared. Be interested in your story and really live it while telling it. Never read it. This hour would automatically develop into the family reading hour when history, travel, biography, and good fiction could be enjoyed.

As soon as practical let each child join the family circle during devotions. Encourage him to take part but do not force him to do so. Before or after the Bible reading it might be well to discuss the history of the Bible. Suitable material for this discussion could be found in the quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible." Perhaps the history of each of the standard books of the church could be treated in this manner.

While stressing God's care for us, parents should not forget to teach the child to help God care for him. Here a family health chart could be introduced on which each member would check his record. A little family competition would do much toward helping the child to acquire correct health habits.

Since the child's welfare is of prime consideration attention must be given to obedience. While generalities can not be made, there are certain fundamental principles which should be kept in mind. During the first six years of a child's life absolute obedience should be demanded. Be sure you know what you wish the child to do, state it simply, being sure he understands. Never promise him anything that you can not, or do not, carry out. In as far as advisable let the punishment take the form of a natural result of his deed.

During the next six years try to reason with the child. Do not punish without giving definite and sufficient warning. By allowing sufficient time between warning and punishment the child is given an opportunity to use his will power. When it is necessary to punish try to have several penalties so that he may select his own.

The father should take time to be a pal to his son, entering into his games whole-heartedly. Let him relive the adventures of heroes, being careful only to substitute worth-while heroes for the poor

ones the son may have chosen. The mother may gain the admiration and trust of the gang by judiciously preparing "eats" for the adventures. She, too, should enter into the spirit of the game by addressing the children according to their title.

When the child has reached the adolescent stage, parental authority should be less in evidence, but always should the parent be the sympathetic, confidential helper and adviser. Now the youth should be encouraged to act more and more on his own initiative. If the family altar and prayer life have been consistently carried out he will seek divine aid in solving his perplexing problems. The parents should continue their companionship with the children and make the home a happy meeting place for the young people. Be young with the young people.

At an early age, let the child realize that he is a part of the family. When decisions are to be made let him be a member of the family council. He must be led to see that each member can not have everything that he desires, but must at times sacrifice for the good of the group. The family budget with the temporal law as the basis should be worked out in these councils and strictly observed so that the family may do its part in the great work of the church. When first admitted to the council the child must be made to understand that he should not tell the family affairs to his friends. Methods suitable to the occasion will have to be devised by the parents.

Whether he is given an allowance or earns his spending money, care should be exercised in helping him to learn to spend it wisely. Do not strive to implant your ideas on him. Let him learn by experience. If he has spent his money and still wishes to buy something else explain to him that it will be impossible for him to secure it as he has already used his money. If he really needs the article, it may be best to lend him the money with the understanding he will have to repay it, a little each week or month from his allowance. Should he discover later that he did not want it or that he had made a poor selection hold him to his bargain. One or two experiences similar to this will teach him to select carefully and spend wisely.

During the entire period—from infancy through adolescence—emphasis should be put on the distinctive features of the restoration movement. If the family live in a town where there is a branch the family could supplement the Sunday school lesson in the family devotions. If the family is isolated, particular attention should be paid to the selection of quarterlies and the material should be carefully studied.

In the latter case, if it is not practical to start a Sunday school it may be well to allow the child to attend a Protestant school. If he does so, at least one parent should take an active part in the work by teaching a class. If there is a young people's meeting, encourage the child to attend, for in it he will meet many splendid young people and will have many enjoyable social evenings.

The family life should be such that the child will unconsciously realize that the keynote of life is to "love God with his heart, might, mind, and strength," and to show that love by loving service to his fellow man. He should learn through the examples of his parents to "put the kingdom of God first."

The religious education of the child is a sacred duty and one which should only be undertaken with much prayer and study. The result should more than repay for the effort expended.

A Prayer for Peace

"Lord, teach us to cultivate peace of heart, even while the waves of anxiety dash against our mind, and though our bodies are bruised in the conflict of life. Teach us to rest at the feet of the Prince of Peace.

"Teach us to bring men into a peaceful relation with their God, and help us to cool the heated jealousies of men; as much as lieth in us, may we live at peace with all men, remembering that no life sheds its sweetest fragrance while it is torn by strife.

"When we carelessly offend others, may thy 'good will' heal the wounds we make, and may each approaching Christmas find us the more, proclaiming and practicing 'good will to men.'—Amen."—Marvin M. Walters, in Church Management.

"For thousands of years men will look on at some simple operation such as the falling of an apple or the boiling of a kettle, without thinking it necessary to ask why. The first why? is put, the answer is sought and found and in a century the face of the earth is transformed by the practical application of the new knowledge. It was a genuine inspiration to demand a reason for the obvious; to the rest of mankind it was a revelation. Intuition is swifter in action. It seems to find an answer to a question never put; it is perception not based on previous experience. For the intuition of the saints, says a Catholic writer, there is no proof. Believer and atheist are alike incapable of refuting each other, for their belief and disbelief are concerned with what is beyond the human horizon. But the poet stretches one hand out to reach, and his intuitions have a richer spiritual significance than they have been normally credited with.—Selected.

It will be noticed that among the losses for this month are 4,401 names transferred to the unknown from the old disorganized file. Regarding these names, we have made a continuous effort to locate them ever since we came into the office. They are the remnants of branches which have been disorganized, but at the time of disorganization proper disposition or transfer was not, or could not, be made. Some of these branches were disorganized thirty and forty years ago. Lists of these names have been sent to the officers of the district in which the branches were formerly located, and by these means a large number of the names have been properly transferred or accounted for. The above total of 4,401 represents the residue remaining after such efforts have been made. This total is being transferred from the counted enrollment of the church in harmony with the resolution passed at the last General Conference.

There are, however, approximately 5,000 more names of persons whose addresses we do not have and who are still counted in the total enrollment of the church. We believe that a large number of these can be located by publishing the names in the Saints' Herald, and for that reason we do not feel justified in transferring this total from the counted enrollment of the church until further efforts along that line are made to locate them. As soon as it is practicable to do so these names should be published in the Herald. At the present time, on account of financial conditions, it has been thought best not to publish the list.

A complete report covering the year 1932 in summary form will be ready for the next issue of the Herald.

THE FOUNDATION OF A SUCCESSFUL MINISTRY

like an electric wire becoming sensitized to the electric current. If Peter had not been spiritually sensitive, he would not have been able to deliver his pentecostal speech with such power. "The spirit of Peter spoke much more than the lips of Peter could utter." (President Elbert A. Smith.) The Spirit of God saturated the whole speech of Peter on account of his sensitiveness.

The Experience of Sin

In the minds of some people it is thought that the experience of sin is necessary for the sympathetic understanding of the sinner. We have all heard the expression, "Every youth must sow his wild oats." Some, however, are slowly coming to recognize the fact that sin is not a necessary experience of life.

Sin is not only unnecessary but it has a blighting influence upon the effectiveness of the ministry. "Sin is a spiritual parasite which produces blindness so that sinners can not see the awfulness of their wrongdoing. Moreover sin which is persisted in gives rise to habits and is thus incorporated into the life of the sinner and becomes a part of him." (Apostle F. Henry Edwards.) This principle is effectively illustrated by putting a drop of black ink in a glass of clear water, the glass of water illustrating the spiritual life of the individual and the drop of ink, the stain of sin. It will be surprising to see the amount of clear water that will be necessary to pour into the glass before the last traces of the ink stain are removed.

So it is in the life of the ministry, even if a black stain of sin is incurred during adolescence; it will take years of spiritual living before our ministry will become effective. One of the factors that made the ministry of Christ so successful, was his sinlessness. The hypocritical Pharisees could not point their fingers of scorn at any clouding experience in the life of Jesus. Moreover the disciples of Jesus placed in him absolute confidence on account of the life which supported his ministry.

It is a sad experience we too often encounter, when we find a local pastor not receiving the support of his congregation because some in his congregation are remembering an event which has beclouded his life and ministry; the Saints having lost their confidence in his integrity.

The membership generally are eager to follow a ministry that has been conscientiously trained and spiritually sensitized. The membership expect the ministry to have a clear vision of the objectives and how they shall be accomplished. A ministry that is suffering from spiritual blindness as the result of some staining sin can not picture to the flock the process of "Evangelizing the world and Zionizing the Church."

(The author is pastor of Alaflora Branch, Florida.)

their sins, particularly in the early stages of their downward career, whose sorrow did not lead them to repent. Such people often conclude that they can not be very bad, or they would not regret their evil conduct. This is a dangerous attitude, for it leads almost inevitably to an unrepentant life, the end of which is stated by Paul when he says, "the sorrow of the world worketh death."

From very ancient times God has required the repentant one to make confession of the wrong which he has done. It was strictly commanded in the time of Moses. And when John the Baptist ministered at Jordan, the record states that those who were baptized confessed their sins. This same practice was observed in the Christian Church, for we are told that under the preaching of Paul, "many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds." The importance of this is shown by the Apostle John when he declares:

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrightousness."—1 John 1: 9.

The meaning of the Greek word which is rendered confess in this text is significant. It is the word homologeo, and is a compound from two other words, homou and logos. The direct and implied sense of these terms would show that to confess according to the intent of this text would be to covenant together with God, or to promise him with full thought, reasoning and motive. Confession to God therefore partakes of covenant relationship with him, actuated by full purpose of heart.

The spirit of humility and fraternity also requires that we shall confess frankly to those whom we may have wronged in any way. The wonderful blessing of healing that Christ bestowed upon his people was offered to those who confessed their sins, and the Apostle James commanded:

"Confess therefore your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed."—James 5: 16. (Revised Version.)

Forgiveness Is Not License to Sin

The Divine promise to forgive sins is based, as we have already noted, upon proper faith and repentance. It does not mean that God will not hold one answerable for any future sin he shall commit. Forgiveness is not license to commit future sins, for even past sins are forgiven only those who cease to commit them. The Divine Lawgiver tells us:

"I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: . . . The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth."—Ezekiel 33: 11, 12.

This message warns us that past righteousness is not a cloak to protect against merited punishment for later sins. The backslider and the hypocrite must repent, or be shut out of the kingdom of God. Paul tells us that the righteousness of Christ was manifested for the "remission of sins that are past, and Peter solemnly observes:

"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteousness, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil."—1 Peter 3: 12.

The Results of Forgiveness

As repentance leads to forgiveness, so also it leads to a pure and consecrated life. The kingdom of heaven must compose a social order in which love and good will toward God and man shall prevail. It must preserve undivided allegiance to righteousness, truth, and equity. Therefore Jesus warns us: "Ye can not serve God and mammon." Forgiveness is the purifying benediction of God, and it revives the souls of men as the rare perfume of a flower wafted from the garden of Paradise. He whom God forgives is cleansed from sin.

It may bring brief misery and humiliation to one who confesses his error and seeks the forgiveness of him whom he has wronged, but through his repentance he becomes a stronger and better man. He acquires a clear conscience toward God and man, and in his heart reigns a new love and abiding peace. He enters the sublime realities of a new life, and finds himself amid the wonders of a new world. Upon his soul dawns the light of righteousness and truth, and the whole universe sings to him one grand symphony of praise. Upon him rests, as a mantle from heaven, the benediction of Jesus:

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. . . . Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."— Matthew 5: 6, 8.

"This is serious," mused the woman as limply she dropped into a chair by the fire. She would have been amazed if half an hour later, she could have seen a twenty-year-old girl sobbing over an open Bible:

"Strength and honor are her clothing;" read Echo, the hot tears almost blinding her vision. "And she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; . . ."

"Oh, if she knew," choked the girl, wringing her hands, "Polly would never forgive me. I'm—I'm a traitor!" and she cast herself on the bed in a storm of grief.

Let's Be Positive

By Ella Brackenbury Lambkin

In this case "positive" does not mean stubborn nor contrary. It means saying "do" rather than "don't."

Any sensation reaching the brain over the sensory nerves goes out over the motory nerves and spends itself in action. We stand before a class of small children and we say, "Now, children, let us not shuffle our feet because it makes so much noise." There is an irrepressible urge to action of some sort in response to the suggestion received. The attention being upon the feet, the muscles of the feet just itch to be in motion. The negative suggestion can not be acted upon and there is a bottled up feeling among the group, a sense of repression.

Then we add, "You must not mark on the songbooks," "Don't turn around in your seats," "Don't chew gum in church," "And don't talk," and so on. Then we complain because we have a restless group, fidgety and noisy. Not one of the processes can be completed and there is no room for anything further in the children's minds with so much unfinished business on hand.

Suppose we try being positive. We say, "Let us sit straight in our seats and place our feet straight on the floor. We will put our books in the racks. Now we will listen to the story of the Baby Moses." These are all positive suggestions, requiring an action or an effort of the mind. One action is completed and the child is ready for whatever comes next. There is a feeling of freedom and activity.

Even older people meet this difficulty. I attended a baccalaureate sermon one time. Two ministers shared the honors of presiding. One of them at the opening of the service said, "We will sing number—. We will not rise." The prelude was played and the audience half rose, uncertainly waited. There was an awkward pause while the minister gestured and the audience finally settled in their seats looking slightly sheepish. Possibly one difficulty was in the ease of misunderstanding the statement. But it was partly because the negative suggestion was confusing, as negative suggestions always are. There was a feeling of uncertainty, since he had said what not to do, leaving any number of things one might do.

At the close of the same service the other minister said, "We will remain seated while we sing this hymn and remain seated until the graduates have marched from the room." There was no dodging that. There was a positive suggestion, something to do and only one thing to do about it even though that thing was to sit still. There was no confusion. It may seem foolish that grown people become confused in such a little thing but it appears to be natural.

I wonder if this same principle will hold good in another type of teaching. We say, "You can not enjoy the spirit while you live as you are living." The result is a feeling of despondency. The person may say, "Well, that's that," or "What's the use?" There seems to be nothing to be done about it. "It's just too bad."

Suppose we say instead, "Live your religion, really get to work at it, and you will be surprised how much more you enjoy life and how much more of the spirit you will have." The suggestion may not be accepted at first, but there is that suggestion that has not been acted upon, that process of the mind that has not been completed. The thought will come back again and again with always the natural impulse to act.

There are time when it is necessary for teachers, parents, and preachers to tell people of their mistakes. There are times to say don't. But a don't should always be accompanied by a do. Jesus said to go and tell a person of his fault, but that is not the end of it. His philosophy is: You have done wrong. Now go and do this to make it right. LET US BE POSITIVE.

The Polite Mother

There is but one way that I know of to teach good manners to children; good manners, that is, that are worth the practicing, and are not mere polish and sham and hypocrisy; but one way, and that is—oh, simple formula—to practice good manners ourselves.

It is a simple means; it does away with worry, with anxiety, with tedious training, with mortification and a hundred other ills; and yet, it is the means we most neglect. All over the land, unthinkable women are still saying to the casual guest: "How good of you to come! Oh, no, you are not late. Well, it doesn't matter a bit"; but to the child the old formula: "What did I tell you!" "Don't let me have to speak to you again." "Thomas, shut that door!" and a hundred other unexcusable crudities.

In speaking of good manners, I would not have you think I refer only to that ease and graciousness of manner which we are wont to call politeness. The crudities we display in dealing with our children affect, unfortunately, far more than their outward deportment. They influence harmfully the mind and spirit as well as the manner. Our contrasted manner toward them and toward strangers cultivate in the child an indifference to truth; they teach him insincerity; they give him standards of crudeness and unkindness which are at variance with the standards of high-minded and noble people. These failures and inconsistencies of ours rob him in a hundred ways. They wear upon his nerves as only illogical, irrational, unharmonious, and inconsistent things can do. The child brought up in a home of rude, crude manners, goes into the world gravely crippled, harmed and handicapped. He has been robbed before he begins his journey.—Laura Spencer Porter.

Those who have become thoroughly awakened to the actual conditions of human life and who have formed a deep-seated passion for social and economic transformation—and there are many such—are profoundly impressed with the glaring inconsistency between the ideals of the gospel and the dull reality which passes for Christian civilization. A kind of chilling blight falls on the spirit of a young man who has been quickened by the hopes and aims of progressive teachers, when he comes home from college and finds his church busy with bygone issues and unconcerned over what seems to him the most vital questions in the world. Instead of hearing about Joshua's conquest of Hittites and Jebusites, he wants light and guidance on the way to conquer the real giants and Philistines of his own time. He keeps his eye on the discrepancy between the original Christian program and the sequel of it, and he wonders how a church, representing Christ in the world, can be so complacent and comfortable in the face of the manifest failure to apply the gospel to the needs of the world. No matter how much one tries to explain away this point of difficulty and smooth it over, it remains in the minds of many noble youth as an obstacle of first rank. It can be taken for settled that persons of this type will never be won to Christianity until its leaders become dedicated to the actual tasks for which Christ lived and died.—Rufus M. Jones, in A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age.

QUESTION TIME

What procedure is required of a member who is offended by another?

The first step required by the gospel is stated by Jesus in his instructions to his disciples, as follows:

"If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established."—Matthew 18: 15, 16.

It will be noted that for the second visit to the offender the one offended should have at least one witness besides himself. These visits should in every case be made in the spirit of Christian love, and not in the spirit of a bully, nor with an "I am holier than thou" attitude. The code of procedure adopted by the church requires:

"The offended party shall seek the offender and opportunity to state the offense between themselves alone and to effect a reconciliation in the spirit of fairness and brotherhood. If such effort shall fail the complainant shall take with him an officer of the church or a member, as may be practicable, but in no case shall it be party in interest, and shall again seek an adjustment of the matter, stating it before the witness only in the presence of said offender."—Church Court Procedure, V: 16.

If every effort made fails to effect an adjustment of the matter, the complaining member may file complaint with "the administrative officer having jurisdiction of both parties." In cases where it is impossible to reach the offending member in person, the required effort may be made by registered mail with return receipt. The code also provides (II: 5):

"Member action shall be unlawful unless filed within one year from the time of alleged acts complained of, except that action may be filed at any time within sixty days after such acts became known, and provided further that if the whereabouts of the accused is unknown the action may be filed within sixty days after the accused shall be found."

This limitation as to time does not apply to cases of crime in jurisdictions where the civil law provides for a longer period. After complaint is lawfully made out and filed, the administrative officer refers it to the proper court, if no adjustment can be otherwise effected.

What birth is meant by the statement in 1 John 5: 1?

This is a very significant text, and one that is often misunderstood. The birth there referred to is the one that makes the individual a child of God. The text and context read as follows:

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments."—1 John 5: 1, 2.

Many persons put the emphasis on the idea of belief, rather than on that of love and obedience, which John says is the real test. But the Greek word here translated believe is pisteuo, and is derived from pistis, which means conviction, reliance, and constancy. To believe in Christ, as the Greek term implies, means that one's conviction, reliance, and constancy are in Christ. One of the definitions is: "To remain stedfast in." Hence he that is born of God is one that remains stedfast in Christ with conviction, reliance, and constancy. The simple English word believe does not convey all that is implied in the Greek term here used, but perhaps is about the best single word that could well be used in a strict word-for-word translation.

To remain stedfast in Christ is clearly to comply with his requirements by love and obedience. He who does not regard these requirements does not believe in the full sense of the Greek text. That this is the objective of John's words is proved by the verses that follow:

"For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous. For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world."—Ibid., 5: 3, 4.

On what mountain did Satan tempt Christ?

The name of the mountain, which is referred to in Matthew 4: 8 as "an exceeding high mountain," is a matter of uncertainty. The kingdoms of the "world" were not necessarily all existing on earth, as the term world was sometimes used of a much less portion of the earth, as in Romans 4: 13 and elsewhere. Herman, the highest point in Palestine, is about 10,000 feet high. Ararat, in Armenia, is about 17,000 feet high. But it may not have been either of these.

Prayer and Testimony

Remarkable Cure Through Prayer

By Fannie Reed

I want to write of God's goodness to me. I am an isolated member, and for one who has been in the church thirty-seven years, have heard little of the angel's message, but most of the time I have had access to some of the church papers, and have bought and read several church books. And I feel now that I understand the gospel which has been restored to the world in latter days.

Many times the evil One has come into my home and if I had not put my trust in the heavenly Father, I could not have lived to see my sixty-fourth birthday.

For many years my health has been poor. Ten years ago I had dropsy of the liver. I was tapped nearly a hundred times, and the fluid that was taken out measured from eight quarts to twenty pounds every two or three weeks. This condition existed for two and a half years, and my doctor told me many times that I could not recover. This did not trouble me for I had placed my trust in God and committed myself to his will. I prayed often. I told the physician, however, that I felt as if there was a cure for me. He remarked that he would give a pile of money to see such a cure. "Doctor," I said, "the Lord can cure me." "Mother," he laughed, "that would be the biggest miracle the Devil ever performed." "Oh," I returned, "you misunderstand me—I didn't say the Devil, I said the Lord."

And the cure did come from the heavenly Father. It has been six years since I was tapped, and I in that time have not had the least sign of dropsy.

It is my testimony that the Father in heaven has not changed. Let us follow where he leads. I trust this message will cheer you as it has cheered me. Will the Saints pray for my son and me?

The Dark Day

By Swain Marshall

Last May, 1932, I had a very plain vision of how this darkness would cover the earth and heavens. In the vision I put on a hat and coat and walked out the front door, facing the south, just at noon. This I do every day except Sunday. The sun suddenly left the sky in complete blackness. Only the moon could be seen, and it turned to blood red, and I awoke and wondered about the vision.

A few weeks later on one Sunday, I was walking by a church and seemed to be prompted to go in. I did and was disappointed in the service until the speaker read Amos 8: 9: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." Isn't that very plain?

Another testimony is found in Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12 where God was speaking to Enoch: "And the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; . . . and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; . . . to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, . . . and it shall be called Zion, a new Jerusalem."

Saints, what a wonderful gospel we have! This gives me courage to go on. We are isolated, my wife and I and seven children. I firmly believe that so far as physical things are concerned, we as a church have almost reached the end. Here is light, and I pray that light and divine power (the endowments) will soon be given to the elders. I note in the Saints' Herald of January 18 that President Elbert A. Smith will teach at the priesthood institute, "Spiritual Aspects of Our Ministry."

Read Doctrine and Covenants 102. It deals with the redemption of Zion. ". . . And this can not be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, . . . for, behold, I do not require at their hands to fight the battles of Zion; for, as I said in a former commandment, even so will I fulfill, I will fight your battles."

Yes, Saints, Zion will blossom and be mighty when we put our faith in our spiritually-called leaders, and pray as a church for these blessings, and when we keep the commandments which are in one accord at this new Jerusalem. Then the wicked will say, "Let us not go up to fight against Zion, for they are terrible." Why? Because of the endowments—God will fight our battles.

Pray for me and mine that we may be able to stand in Zion.

Responsibility of Isolated Members

By D. A. Byrd

It does not profit any member of the church, especially any living in isolation, to drift away from reading the church papers. We are about fifty-four miles from our branch of the church and do not often get to attend regularly.

Our missionary, A. M. Baker, visits us when he is in this part of Louisiana. He was here the latter part of October and held two weeks of meetings, baptizing five before leaving. The Baptist people gave him permission to use their church, and fine crowds of interested listeners attended every night.

Right here, dear isolated member, I want to say a word which I hope will be of some encouragement to you. We who are isolated have no excuse for sitting down and doing nothing. In fact, I believe that we have a greater opportunity for service than those living in the branches.

I moved into this neighborhood about two years ago. The Baptist church here was almost dead and the Sunday school was dead. On the first Sunday in April, 1931, the Baptists came together and organized a Sunday school. I told them that I belonged to the Latter Day Saint Church, but if they had no objections, I would be glad to help them. So they elected me teacher of the advanced class for that quarter, and I had some real work on my hands. There was an average attendance of twenty-five young men and women in the class and they represented several churches. I asked God to help me in this work, and he has. After the first quarter, they elected me superintendent and teacher of the Bible class and in that capacity I am working today.

The subjects of the lesson studies give a Latter Day Saint a real opening to discuss our belief and doctrine. Some of the subjects have been, "Face to Face With God," "God Dealing With Other Nations," and others. I find it a pleasure to work with these people.

So my brother or sister, if you are not busy and can not attend our church school, fall in line with some one else and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Prayer and Testimony

see if you do not have opportunity to do some good work.

My desire is that our Father will continue his goodness to me and that my knowledge may be increased as to what he has for me to do. May God bless his church, and may the finances of it be sufficient to put more missionaries in the field soon.

The Gospel Is True

By Louis Ryberg

I rejoice in the gospel, and want to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the latter-day work. I have received many blessings since I entered the church, but like numbers of others, I have had trials through which to pass. I know what it means to do without many comforts of life which seem almost necessities, yet I have received many blessings in answer to prayer. I have been healed through administration when I was ill, and this has given me an understanding of the gospel, peace of mind, and assurance that God is leading me.

I am much interested in reading the good articles and letters in the Herald, and am glad to see so much exhortation to the Saints to prepare for the building of Zion. I realize that this is the hastening time and a day of sacrifice, and that the Saints must be completely free from the spirit of selfishness and utterly consecrated in order to be able to help in establishing Zion.

My prayer is that the heavenly Father will bless us with the spirit of peace and the assurance that we are his children, and that we may be enabled to overcome temptation and walk in such a way that we shall be permitted to enter his kingdom.

Administrations

By J. L. Bear

Thinking it might be interesting, as well as encouraging to many, to read of the experiences and blessings that come from administering, I am therefore writing some of my experiences and wonderful blessings many have received through administration.

In the years since I have held the priesthood and pastorates, as well as visiting throughout the Far West Stake, I have administered hundreds, yes, thousands of times, and to many who do not belong to the church.

I have been called to administer for relief from bodily sickness, from some hereditary ailment, from some impediment, from some overt act, and to others who desired a spiritual blessing, encouragement, knowledge, and to know that their redeemer liveth, and many received wonderful blessings.

I recall two instances of nonmembers who were at the point of death and the physicians had said there was no hope, who were restored to health; one joined the church; the other in whose case three of the most eminent physicians in the community said they could do no more, that it was impossible for the person to live; the party called for the elders and another elder and I administered several times but with no apparent relief. The next time the party made a vow that if God would heal her she would join the church. I told her to be sure and keep her vow for if she failed to keep her vow, if she got sick again she would not recover. In a few days she got well and grew strong and hearty, to the astonishment of the physicians and all who knew about her, but she did not keep her vow. A few years passed—I heard she was sick; I remembered her vow, and what I had said; I trembled, I feared. The next morning word came that she had died.

When you make a vow to God, keep it.

But there was one thing puzzled me for years. With all the wonderful blessings that many had enjoyed, there were sometimes parties who did not receive a blessing, and they were good and faithful members of the church and the community, faithful at services, visited the sick, and were helpful and kind; while others who were careless and indifferent, indulged in the pleasures and sins of the world and only thought of God and the church when in sickness and distress, when administered to, almost invariably received a blessing.

This was on my mind so I went to God in prayer. I said, "God, why is it? Art thou not just?" I pled with him for some time. No answer, I went the second time. I heard a voice, though somewhat faint, say, "That is all they get, would you deny them that?" I wanted to be sure I heard a voice. I prayed the third time, when a voice, mild and calm, spoke and said, "That is all they get, would you deny them that?" This voice was plain and distinct as if some one stood at my side and spoke.

Impressions of the Priesthood Task

By C. S. Warren

As a result of my missionary work in Missouri and neighboring States, my impressions of our task are these: Locally, the Master wants us (the priesthood) to get into the homes of the Saints, building them up in faith in him and his work. When they have such a faith, and are deeply rooted in the gospel, disturbing conditions and experiences will not overwhelm them. It is our work to cause the people to have the assurance that if they trust him and are sincerely trying to do his will, the promise is for them and they may feel in truth: "I shall not want," as far as the necessary things of life are concerned. Read Isaiah 26: 3, 4, and Psalm 37: 3.

Trying to analyze the conditions and needs of the church in the large cities, I am made sick at heart to see so many elders of the church inactive or just waiting to do a little local work occasionally. If only they could catch the vision of the field "white already to harvest"; if only they could realize how many are groping for something to satisfy the cravings of their heart; if only they could understand how many there are searching for something to serve as an anchor when so many things are pressing them down, they could not help but heed the call of the Master to be dilligent, and so in a measure fill the church's need of missionaries.

As I have tried in my weak way to be active, reading my books, preaching, teaching, and visiting, the Master has been good in unfolding to my understanding the things which are needed by the people of the church. So kind has he been with the gift of his guiding Spirit, that many times, returning from preaching or visiting, I have fallen on my knees and thanked him for his help.

I have confined my work largely to the Saints, but lately I have felt the urge to get into the homes of nonmembers as well.

Altogether I am very happy in the work and thankful to my heavenly Father for the privileges afforded me to work, and I want to be faithful.

Valley Center, Michigan

This Branch Builds Spiritually

Trials and perplexities of 1932, did not cause the membership at Valley Center to waver or lose faith in God and his work. Instead they have taken a firmer hold of the rod of iron which leads to the life celestial.

In October the branch enjoyed an all-day meeting with good attendance and edifying services. Speakers were District President Bruce Brown, Elders William Patterson, James Davis, and Alma Ledsworth. Special music was rendered by Earl and Ernie Deim, Mrs. Eben Miller, and Mrs. Harold Muir.

Brother Bruce Brown conducted services in the week following the all-day meeting.

The Nativity was portrayed by readings, pantomine, and songs, at Christmas time. Mrs. John Gray directed the readings and pantomine, and Mrs. Harold Muir was in charge of the music. Previous to the drama, the children's division gave their program under the supervision of Mrs. Harold Muir. At the close of the preaching service Christmas night, Brother Ardrey Murray presented the pastor, Elder H. E. C. Muir, and his wife, Bernadine, two lovely gifts, tokens of the membership's appreciation of their services. Brother and Sister Muir expressed their thanks for the Saints' thoughtfulness.

The New Year's watch party was held at the home of Pastor H. E. C. Muir at Melvin, and the young people devoted their time to games and music while the older members visited. After refreshments at midnight, all sang hymns before departing.

Apostle D. T. Williams lectured to the Saints and their friends January 31, and after his talk, members gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Thomas Isles for a social hour and visit with Brother Williams.

The sisters and friends of the church meet every Wednesday in one of the homes to quilt. On some days they quilt two quilts. There are twenty-one women in this group. A potluck dinner is served at noon. Jaunary 25, the women met at the home of Brother and Sister Neil Muir. The women made two quilts, and fifteen men and friends of the branch cut, sewed, hauled, and piled eight cords of wood for fuel in the church shed. The wood was donated by Brother John Muir.

February 1, two quilts were put on at Sister Elizabeth Isle's home, and the brothers had a corn husking bee for Brother William Isles. So the Saints are working together, and the more work they do and the busier they are in the church, the happier they are and the greater blessings they enjoy.

February 6, the membership gathered at the home of Brother and Sister John Muir as a surprise event in honor of Brother Muir's birthday, also in honor of the birthday, February 8, of Sister Everet, formerly Sister Blanche Muir.

February 22, the branch met at the home of Brother and Sister Ben Isles for their monthly social event, a "George Washington" party.

The Sunday school is in the hands of the young people of the branch for the coming year. May God bless them abundantly. The superintendent is Brother Floyd Silverthorn; secretary-treasurer, Thomas Muir; pianist, Isabell Murray; librarian, Willard Green; chorister, Bernadine Muir. Elder H. E. C. Muir was elected pastor for the twenty-third consecutive year. Sister H. E. C. Muir is women's leader, and Sister Myrtle Isles is secretary-treasurer.

Elder E. D. Finken is in charge of the spiritual and educational needs of Brown City Branch, meeting with them every Sunday and very often walking from his home in Valley Center, a distance of five miles. Brother Finken sometimes walks both ways when a ride is not available.

Missionary Meetings at Allendale, Missouri

"Now Is the Time for Us to Heed the Call of the Church," Says Elder May

At present I am in the midst of a series of meetings with Allendale Saints and friends. Since January 8, I have spent thirty days at Blythedale, Missouri, and twelve days at Allendale, preaching forty-four sermons during the six weeks.

The attendance of nonmembers at these meetings has been unusual even though the weather at times has been very unfavorable. Many friends have been made, and several are considering baptism. About two thirds of the attendance at both places have been friends who are investigating. Attendance at Blythedale averaged one hundred, and at Allendale is nearing the hundred point.

The southern part of Lamoni Stake is proving a fertile field for missionary effort, and we are assured that the wonderful interest will bring the desired results during this year.

It was my privilege to be present at the Lamoni Stake Conference at which a very fine spirit prevailed. The sermon by President F. M. Smith in the afternoon was a timely warning and was well received.

Now is the time for us to heed the call of the church. It is an S. O. S. call, a call to service, to consecration, and to sacrifice. How else can we "evangelize the world and Zionize the church"?

"Though the task be great that lies before us,
[May] We trust in One divinely strong."

—J. CHARLES MAY.

Kirtland, Ohio

Forward Under Leadership of John L. Cooper

During January at 5.45 each Sunday evening, a class of church school workers studied the accredited course, "How to Teach Religion," by Doctor George H. Betts. This course was well taught by Miss Beatrice Gale, a church member and one of Kirtland's public school teachers.

Thursday night is the time when the Kirtland Dramatic Club presents its plays. One Thursday night in January, they presented a three-act comedy, "One Minute of Twelve," under the leadership of their capable director. Ten members took part.

The Boy Scout flag and the American Flag were shown at Temple February 12, when the Boy Scouts sat in the front pews on Sunday morning. Pastor John L. Cooper emphasized the significance of the ideals and principles of scoutcraft. Brother Rex Mason, now residing here but formerly from Cleveland, is the new scoutmaster.

Elder George Neville preached that evening, taking his lesson from the story of the Prodigal Son. He emphasized the necessity of people's becoming repentant before they can help the Master.

New Year's resolutions were made for the year on January 1, at the sacrament service in the Temple. That evening Pastor John L. Cooper preached a didactical sermon which was helpful to everyone.

Elders F. T. Haynes and E. A. Webbe were the speakers on the second Sunday of the year. Among the other speakers of the month were Elder D. H. Proper, and Elder Victor Hall. The local ministry are active in preaching the word. Pastor Cooper frequently speaks at the Lake County Infirmary on Sunday afternoon.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Excellent Conference for Central Texas

President F. M. Smith, Apostle R. S. Budd, and Elder G. H. Wixom and Other Workers There

An outstanding conference in the history of Central Texas District opened at Houston, Texas, February 10, with dinner served in the recreational hall near the church home of Houston Branch. Then came an educational program by the Boy Scouts and other young people's organizations of the branch. A playlet, "New Year Resolution Troubles," was given by four young people.

Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder and Sister J. A. Robinson came over from San Antonio on Friday. Brother G. H. Wixom was already on the grounds helping to complete arrangements for the conference. Saints from Dallas, Hearne, Bryan, Fairbanks, Spring and other points of the district were also there.

Saturday morning the arrival of President F. M. Smith was a high point, as this is the first time a conference of this district has had the privilege and pleasure of entertaining the President.

The services were well arranged, one following closely after the other, no time being allowed to go to waste. President Smith and Apostle Budd freely gave their services.

Houston Branch had anticipated every need of visitors for both comfort and pleasure, not forgetting their own. The most generous welcome a conference has had in a long time was prepared by Houston Saints. The noon and evening meals were served, free to all, in the dining and recreational hall near the church. Nights were spent in the homes of the Saints, where breakfast was served. The perfection of this entertainment was made possible only by the finest kind of cooperative endeavor on the part of every worker in the branch. When one finds a membership of willing workers, and a leader as efficient, resourceful, and unassuming as Brother "Charlie" Tischer, (he is pastor of Houston Branch and also district president) he has found the basic ingredients of success in church work.

At nine o'clock Saturday morning the first prayer service of the conference was in charge of Elders G. H. Wixom and J. A. Robinson. The weather was very cold and disagreeable, but a large congregation enjoyed this service.

The conference business meeting convened at ten o'clock with the district president, C. W. Tischer, associated with President Smith and Apostle Budd, presiding. After the minutes of the last conference were read and approved, reports from G. H. Wixom, high priest, and Lester Hershey, bishop's agent, were read. A summary of the ministerial activity of the local priesthood was read, being compiled from the reports of twenty-three of the thirty-five men in the district. Reports of the activities of the several departments were read. Statistical reports show the total enrollment to be six hundred and sixty-six.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of President Smith, Apostle Budd the speaker. The subject, "Let Your Light So Shine," was beautifully treated, and greatly enjoyed by the Saints.

The women's service at 3 p. m. was turned into a general meeting where the work of the women of the church was discussed. Sister J. E. Wilder was in charge of this service and called upon President Smith to address the gathering. His talk was very encouraging, especially his description of women's activities in Zion. Following President Smith, a short talk by Apostle Budd was enjoyed. Experience talks from Sister Chattie Everett, of Dallas; Sister J. A. Robinson, of San Antonio; Sister H. P. Hill, of Hearne, and Sister Waters of Houston, showing some of the results of the work in the different parts of the district were given. Sister Wilder also told of Houston's work.

President Smith was the speaker in the evening, and after giving some statistics on the financial conditions of the church, made a touching appeal for a reasonable exercise of our responsibility as members of the church. The deep concern shown by President Smith and his earnest manner in presenting his subject, should convert many of the membership to renewed effort.

Thirty young people met for a prayer service under the leadership of Apostle Budd, Sunday morning at eight o'clock. A fine spirit was enjoyed.

At nine o'clock a general prayer service, under the direction of Brother G. H. Wixom assisted by Brother Ira Snedaker, was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation. Time was well filled in prayer and testimony, the spirit of the service was familiar to Latter Day Saints.

The session of church school under the leadership of the district director of church schools, Ira L. Snedaker, was opened at ten o'clock being attended by a well filled house. At 10.45 the service was given to the Boy Scouts in commemoration of their founder. Scoutmaster DuBois was in charge of this service, and called upon President Smith to make a short address.

At eleven o'clock President Smith was the speaker. His pointed remarks about the Saints' responsibility to heritage were most impressive. The President's power of observation has given him an almost inexhaustible fund of information with which he clearly illustrates his views.

Priesthood meeting convened at 2.30 p. m. in charge of President Smith and Apostle Budd, with an address by President Smith to the men on their duties spiritual and temporal. This was a profitable service in which the ministry, gathered from different points, were favored with suggestions and advice concerning the advancement of the work. After addresses from both President Smith and Apostle Budd, the meeting was open to questions and problems the men might wish to present.

A round-table meeting was held at 4 p. m., in charge of President Smith and Apostle Budd. The theme of the meeting dealt with the "gathering" and other things concerning the conditions to be in Zion. Interest in this long-preached-about subject is more widespread in this district than ever before.

Apostle Budd addressed the young people at 7 p. m. The young people are encouraged and hopeful of an organization that will absorb their interests and further the growth of friendship between the several groups in the State of Texas. Apostle Budd spoke in favor of such an organization which, he thinks, may be perfected not later than the next conference of the district.

At eight the last service of the conference was in charge of District President C. W. Tischer, and President Smith was again the speaker. His subject was "Two Great Objectives of the Church." His appeal was powerful and earnest.

Press Notice for Newman Wilson

Talented and Busy Elder Wins Recognition

The intensive ministerial and secular labors of Elder Newman Wilson, of Jonesport, Maine, have earned for him the attention of the press. Under the heading, "Jonesport Man Is Master of Five Trades," the following story appears in the Portland Press Herald:

"Jonesport, Feb. 12.—Holding the position of chairman of the selectmen, doing carpenter work, interior finishing, designing and painting, and preaching from two to four hours a Sunday in widely scattered churches, Newman Wilson of this town by the sea is a man with a remarkable record for service to his fellow citizens.

"Mr. Wilson, a few years ago, took a civil service examination, in which he attained a high mark, and was offered a position elsewhere in the State. It would have taken him away from the labors he deemed to be his portion in the affairs of the community, and after consideration, he decided to cast his lot with his own people. Since that time fortune has favored him somewhat. An enthusiastic and sincere member of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, he not only occupies the pulpit of the home church, but those at Beals Island and in other small communities, asking no salary for his efforts.

"Some years ago, Mr. Wilson began contributing a tenth of his income to the church, and found that this plan left him at the end of the year with more money than before. He is at the head of all church movements, and proposals for civic improvement find him with his coat off ready to help. He was chairman of the Jonesport Centennial Committee, which put this seaport town on the map, and furnished educational and amusement features for a host of residents and visitors.

"Mr. Wilson is sometimes hard to find, as his multifarious talents carry him into many homes, but those who hear the tap of a hammer or the swish of a paint brush generally find that he is somewhere in that vicinity."

Brother Wilson is an ardent and consecrated church worker. The press story describes his church work with exactitude when it says, "He is at the head of all church movements." Brother Wilson is president of Eastern Maine District.

Seventeen Baptized During Four-Week Missionary Series at Brentwood

Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin Busy in Saint Louis District

Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin have just completed a most successful four-week meeting at Brentwood Branch in Saint Louis District. They began January 15, and held meetings each week-day night with the exception of Saturday. Sundays were very "full" days so far as services were concerned.

Sister Baldwin occupied for thirty minutes each evening, preceding Brother Baldwin to the stand. Her lectures dealt with junior work and worship, and the church school workers who heard her series have learned some valuable things concerning this phase of church activity. Sister Baldwin gave the Friday evening sessions to the children, telling them stories some of which were illustrated by chalk talks, and on one night scissors and paper played an important part.

Brother Baldwin delivered some powerful missionary sermons in which the law of the church was fully explained, the place of the church in the lives of men and women, etc. His outstanding thought was to instruct people how to link their lives with Christ and become like him. The Holy Spirit attended this minister's words.

The communion hour February 5, was given over to the serving of the Lord's Supper, and a profitable and holy time was spent. This service will long be remembered.

On February 11, seven souls were baptized, and on the following day they were confirmed members of the church. Since the twelfth was also the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, thirty minutes of time were given to honoring the day. Lincoln's Gettysburg Address was read by a junior boy, and Brother Baldwin and District President Roy Remington took Lincoln and his challenge or uncompleted task as subject matter, each speaking five minutes.

Ten more souls were baptized February 19, and the evening hour was devoted to an impressive confirmation service. The altar and rostrum were draped with white; the books of the church lay open on the table. The candidates were seated in a semicircle across the rostrum. Patriarch Baldwin delivered the charge to the candidates and during the address tapers were lighted and hidden lights turned on. Following this the confirmations took place. The lights were extinguished with the exception of the tapers and the footlights, as Patriarch Baldwin and Elders Ivor Davies, J. J. Billinsky, and the Brentwood pastor, Elder C. J. Remington, proceeded with the service. At the close of the confirmations, lights were brightened, and District President Roy Remington presented to the newly-confirmed members a statement concerning the three standard books of the church, urging them to have these books in constant use in their homes. The address of welcome and the hand of fellowship were given the new members by Elder C. J. Remington.

Sister Blanche Cooke, musical supervisor, provided a song service for each evening of the meetings, following the general theme of the series.

For one week the weather was extremely cold, but attendance continued almost normal.

Since the meetings were designed to close February 12, the Good Fellows' organization of the group tendered Brother and Sister Baldwin a party the night of February 10, following the service. Impromptu speeches, music, and songs were enjoyed for thirty minutes, and then everyone was given an ample supply of cocoa and cake in the lower auditorium of the church.

Brother and Sister Baldwin have done a good work at Brentwood and as they journey to Sawyerville (another part of the district) the prayers of Brentwood Saints go with them, that the Lord will bless them there as he has here.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

The Saints of this mission have been blessed with the Spirit of the Master. On the last Sunday in January, Brother James Chaffen was called to the office of priest through one of God's servants. He is a teacher at present.

Church work is moving along rather slowly, but workers feel that good is being accomplished. Some candidates are about ready for baptism. Meetings are well attended, there being several nonmembers present. The members are alert to opportunities for service.

Elder O. A. Rexroad is the Sunday evening speaker, and he is often blessed with the Spirit.

Midweek prayer meetings have just been started, assembling on Tuesday evening. On Thursday evening Bible studies are held, Elder Walter Culp, superintendent. A keen interest is shown in these activities.

The Sunday school is most interesting and has grown by almost half its number in the past few months. Martin L. Crabtree is the superintendent. Elder O. A. Rexroad, the adult teacher, is conducting a fine class in Bible study. Sister Rexroad, intermediate teacher, has a class of fine young people, most of them nonmembers. Sister Harry Culp, teacher of juniors, also has a promising class. Sister May Crabtree, primary worker, has a class of fifteen, and Sister May Culp has the beginners. Sister Julia Culp is the cradle roll teacher and has names of several nonmembers' babies on her list.

One outstanding social event was sponsored by the teachers last fall, a Halloween party.

Dahinda, Illinois

Series of Meetings by Elders E. R. Davis and L. G. Holloway

A series of meetings conducted by Elders E. R. Davis and L. G. Holloway, closed here February 5. For the first time in nine or ten years nonmembers came out and cooperated with the Saints in song service, special music, etc. The workers hope and pray that some good seed has been sown which in due time will bear fruit. Brother Holloway will return sometime in April by the request of both members and nonmembers. Brother Davis had already won many friends among the townspeople, and Brother Holloway created an impression which was gratifying.

The Sunday school has been held in the homes during the cold weather this winter, in this way cheering those who could not otherwise have attended. One sister, Grandma Farquer, soon to be eighty-four years old, was present when the Saints met at her home. She testified of her hope and faith in God. She always tells how she loved to attend Sunday school until ill health and infirmities made that impossible.

This branch has another aged sister and a brother, in their eighties, both strong in the faith and doing what they can to keep the gospel light glowing.

Sister Audrey West is in the State of Washington where she has employment. She is missed, having been a faithful attendant at all church services when at home.

Branch President Ambrose King, of Victoria, Illinois, has been unable to meet with the Saints for several weeks on account of unfavorable roads and bad weather, and so unless some visiting member of the priesthood comes in, the Saints keep only the Sunday school going. But they feel well repaid in doing that.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The members are comparatively cheerful in spite of lack of work. They enjoy health and strength, and food and clothing are thankfully provided by each family for its own members, and help is given others less fortunate. None are in dire need, and they have much for which to be thankful.

Will the Saints everywhere remember Dahinda in their prayers, for the success of the meetings soon to be held here? People are being reached as never before.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

"Higher Ground" Branch Motto

The gospel work is going forward in every department of this branch under the leadership of Brother John Maas, priest, who was reelected branch president at the annual business meeting in December. He is ably assisted by the following officers: Branch secretary, Charlotte A. Pratt; treasurer, Floyd Kirshner; chorister, Carrie Vanderhoof; organist, Jenette Peterson; director of Religious Education, Charlotte Pratt, assisted by William Laurence and Hazel Coney who is in charge of the junior department.

On January 4, the women's working group of twenty members, having a gain of four over last year, elected the following to carry on the work of that department: Superintendent and friendly visitor, Charlotte A. Pratt; Cradle roll worker, Vida Laurence; secretary-treasurer, Carrie Vanderhoof. This group of women has done much relief work through their local storehouse. They gladly responded to the call to sacrifice, reserving in their treasury only enough to carry on their relief work.

Much sickness and unemployment are here as elsewhere, but the Saints are more determined than ever to be a help to the church through sacrifice and righteous living.

Among the most faithful and consecrated members is Sister Emma Hoyler, who though she is aged, enjoys good health and is untiring in her efforts to serve.

The young people began the new year by organizing a weekly study club which meets at the homes on Friday night. They are studying the Book of Mormon. Marlyn Moe was chosen teacher of the class and Sister Daisy Kirshner was elected director of activities. Several nonmembers are regular attendants at these meetings, and the youth are hopeful of doing good in a missionary sense. They were pleasantly entertained at the home of their leader on a recent Friday evening after the study period with a Valentine party and a "heart to heart" talk by Elder J. E. Vanderwood who for the past few weeks has made Milwaukee the objective of missionary work.

The Saints have been greatly encouraged by Brother Vanderwood's stay. He has scattered good cheer and kindness in the homes he has visited.

They also feel uplifted by a recent visit from Apostle J. F. Garver whose words of hope and admonition will long be remembered.

The district director of Religious Education, Harry Wasson, worshiped in Milwaukee, February 12. His timely remarks on the reverence and respect due to the house of worship were well received by the Saints who hope to show improvement along this line. Meeting in one small room as they do, they find it very difficult to maintain perfect order and quiet.

Milwaukee members appreciate the fine, consecrated effort of the pastor and his family who during the recent subzero weather drove ninety miles each Sunday to minister to them. On their way to town, they stopped to bring in others of the group, saving carfare which can be given to the Lord's work.

Brother Maas is also creating an interest in the gospel message among his friends and neighbors in Watertown and has on several occasions preached to goodly crowds there in his own and in other homes.

Although the Saints here are few in number, a fine spirit of unity and sacrifice prevails, and they are hopeful of the future. "Higher Ground" is their motto. They have also set their minds to work at "Our project" for 1933.

Pasadena, California

Sacrifice in Many Ways

In spite of the depression, or perhaps because of it, Pasadena Mission made a larger sacrifice offering for 1932, than the previous year. No one could give much, but each one contributed something, and altogether a sum of thirty-two dollars was paid.

The La Da Sas each pledged one dollar, and at the Christmas party they sacrificed refreshments, adding the five dollars to their offering. This made sixteen dollars from the women's department. Already they are preparing for another offering and are trying in every way to earn a mile of pennies. At sixteen pennies to the foot this is a stupendous undertaking for so small a group, but they intend to go part of the way at least. For some time they have had a little apron which is slowly accumulating silver patches.

This mission has been favored with some splendid sermons in recent months. Speakers have been Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Elders R. C. Chambers, George H. Wixom, and Ray Knowlton.

The Book of Mormon class on Thursday evening is not so well attended as workers would like, but a few are much interested in the study.

The Herald is in the home of nearly every active member of the group, and is read with keen interest.

Another member lately joined this group. Sister Della Downs was baptized by Elder Lawrence Brockway at Central Los Angeles Church.

Independence

About three hundred women attended their regular weekly meeting the afternoon of February 20, and on that day their sacrifice offering grew to $3,490. By unanimous vote they decided to give every fourth weekly offering to local expenses. Liberty Street women presented a playlet, "Opportunities." This was another of the instructive weekly plays which with their songs are being kept on record and are available for use for the asking. Pastor John F. Sheehy was there and gave an inspiring talk.

The women feel that while the offerings are very important, they are fast becoming a secondary matter and that the spirit of earnest cooperation and good fellowship is overshadowing everything else. On February 13, a cold and disagreeable day, about two hundred and fifty women heard a talk by Bishop C. A. Skinner, of Kansas City Stake. Bishop J. S. Kelley and Pastor Sheehy were also present. The weekly playlet, "Tithing," was presented by District 1 B.

The play contest finals opened at the Stone Church dining hall Monday night with presentation of three plays: "The Eyes That See," by the Stone Church; "The Man Who Came Back," Sugar Creek, and "Gas," Englewood. Tuesday night brought another trio of dramatic productions: "Detour Ahead," by East Independence; "Kettle Singing," Liberty Street, and "Aunt Martha Pays," Englewood. Tomorrow night, Thursday, the contest will continue with "Afterwards," by Walnut Park; "Aunt Martha Pays," Second Church, and "The Violin Maker of Cremona," Stone Church. And Friday night will end the contest with "Sunshine Lady," by Enoch Hill, "The Man Who Came Back," by Second Church, and "King Row," Walnut Park.

This is the second annual play contest sponsored by the young people's council of Independence. The plays are being enjoyed by record crowds.

Six-week courses in the following subjects are being offered unemployed young people of the church and their Independence friends: Civil engineering, architecture and drafting, commercial art, journalism, leadership and teacher training, dramatics, bookkeeping, shorthand dictation, English and spelling, artcraft, public speaking, history, and appreciation. These are all afternoon classes. Landscape gardening and commercial law will be taught at night. Most of the classes began work at the Auditorium Monday afternoon. Considerable enthusiasm has been generated by this school among the unemployed young people who find classwork an excellent activity for their leisure hours.

Stone Church

The Stone Church Choir of over eighty members presented an attractive program for the combined radio broadcast and church service half-hour Sunday morning beginning at eleven o'clock. With Robert Miller at the organ and George Miller at the piano, and under the direction of Paul N. Craig, the choir opened the service with "Choral Grace." Then the Wahdemna Male Quartet composed of Roderick May, Duane Swalley, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold, sang, "Father, Take My Hand." A hymn, "Gracious Spirit Dwell in Me," was sung unaccompanied by the choir, and L. A. Woodside sang "Behold, What Manner of Love." The organ-piano offertory, "Grand Aria," by Demarest, was played by the Miller brothers. "Judge Me, O God," by Gounod, was the anthem offering of the choir.

The Stone Church congregation appreciates the musical contribution of the choir each Sunday morning, and is grateful to Brother Craig for his faithful directorship. The choir is now maintaining a higher regular attendance record than for many months.

"The Hope for Zion" was the third and concluding talk of the Sunday morning sermon series on "Kingdom Building," by Bishop J. A. Koehler. For a text he took words from the first revelation in Doctrine and Covenants: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful."

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the evening speaker.

Apostle and Sister F. Henry Edwards are happy to announce the birth of a son, Paul Madison Edwards, who arrived Sunday night, February 26. On that date six years ago their first son, Lyman Francis, was born. Sister Edwards is the older daughter of President F. M. Smith.

Brother Charles H. Anway, father of Brother George Anway, of Independence, passed away at the home of his son here February 21. Brother Anway, whose home was at Lamoni, Iowa, was fifty-nine years of age, and had been at the home of his son George since Christmas. His suffering extended over a period of many months. Surviving are his wife, Catharine Anway, of the home; five sons: George, Paul, Harold, Joseph, and Mark Anway, and one daughter, Leila Anway. The services and interment were at Lamoni.

Miss Wilma Ruth Luff, daughter of Mrs. Annie Luff, and Bernard A. Specht, assistant credit manager of the Gleaner Combine Harvester Corporation, were married at the home of the bride's mother, February 22, by Bishop J. A. Becker. The bridal couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Turner, of Maywood. A reception followed the ceremony. Two days after the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Specht left for Chicago where the bridegroom has been transferred by his company.

Second Church

Sunday, February twenty-six, Pastor William Inman was in charge of the eleven o'clock service. The opening prayer was given by Brother Lane Bolt. "Cast Thy Burdens On The Lord," was sung by the choir. Elder Ray Whiting, the speaker used as the theme of his talk "The Time Has Now Arrived for Each Member to Have a Personal Testimony of This Work."

In the absence of R. C. Conyers, Brother Roy Settles conducted the junior service. A reading was given by Grace Dillee. Brother J. Foulk talked a short time on "Truth." "Keeping His Word," a story, was told by Mrs. Jess Queen.

At the six o'clock service, Leon Snow with his intermediate orchestra, presented a short program. The regular classes followed.

At the seven-thirty service, "Lord, Abide With Me" was sung by a male chorus. The chorus was accompanied by Mrs. Gladys Inman. Opening prayer by Brother Ellis Murdock. The men's chorus sang "Father, Take My Hand." Two violin solos were played by Finis Beebe, accompanied on the piano by Edna Stobaugh. The lecture was the concluding talk of a series of four, by C. E. Miller, sponsored by the young people. His subject was "Christ's Visit to America."

Liberty Street Church

Brother J. N. Sherwin was ordained a priest under the hands of Elder J. F. Sheehy, Pastor John R. Lentell, and Elder D. S. McNamara at the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning. Brother Sheehy was the morning speaker.

Sunday afternoon Sister Florence Carr was pleasantly surprised by a group of her puplis. A short time was spent singing hymns and listening to talks. Mrs. Carr was presented with a third volume of Church History. She with her son and his family, is moving to Springfield, Missouri, to live. Liberty Street Saints extend to them best wishes and many thanks for their help.

The Clematis Chorus of young girls, directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, furnished the music at the evening service. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker.

Spring Branch Church

Last Wednesday night a prayer meeting was held at the home of Sister Florence Smith. Sister Smith is unable to attend church, and this day was her forty-fifth birthday. The house was filled with Saints, and a wonderful meeting was had. Local members of the priesthood are very zealous in their prayer meeting activities, and as a result these services are deeply enjoyed by everyone.

Speakers for Sunday were Pastor G. W. Eastwood and Brother Jesse Smith. Their messages were enjoyed by the congregation. At the morning service music was by the choir.

Spring Branch's men of the ministry are very grateful for the priesthood institute held a few days ago at Liberty Street Church. They appreciated the lectures by President E. A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

Kansas City Stake

O. B. K.'s File Inventories

The sixth initiation and offering service of the Kansas City Stake O. B. K.'s was held at Central Church Monday, February 20. This year's guests included President F. M. Smith, Stake President C. E. Wight, and Stake Bishop C. A. Skinner.

The church was arranged to create a lovely setting for the service which dramatized the story of Joash and his temple chest. The curtains were draped to reveal the high altar with its seven branched Hebrew candlestick. Banks of palms and ferns were arranged on either side of the platform and in front of these stood tall candelabra for the pledge renewal. On either side of the auditorium front were the altars where the pledges were signed, and in the center stood the tall candle symbolizing the spirit of the church. Candles illuminated the gallery seats which were reserved for visitors.

After the organ prelude, played by Velma Lewis, the service opened with a renewal of their pledges by the O. B. K.'s. Group by group they stood while their councilor lit their candle from the spirit of the church "symbolizing the desire to take the light of His Spirit with us in 1933." Then "Just as I Am" was sung and the initiation service started.

Sixty-five new candidates were presented by the vice-councilors of the groups, and they pledged to give their active support to the work of the organization and the church of Jesus Christ of which it is a part. When all were seated, President F. M. Smith, C. E. Wight, stake president, and C. A. Skinner, stake bishop, because of their deep interest in all the work of young people, were asked to accept honorary membership and take the pledge. They were introduced by Mildred Lungwitz, councilor from Second Church and a devoted O. B. K. worker. The pledge was read by the council president, George Mesley, then colors and welcome were given by Lloyd Siebert, vice president, and Marion Worden, secretary, officiated at the pledge signing. The Kansas City young people feel honored to have these men associated with all stake pastors and their wives in honorary membership.

The offering service followed immediately. After the story of the chest of Joash and the things that this righteous king of Israel accomplished through the people's support had been told, President Smith addressed the group on "The Of- ferings We May Bring." Following this, two Hebrew priests entered carrying a chest of beaten brass which was placed on the "right side of the altar." Led by President Smith and the stake officers, a large number of the O. B. K.'s filed by to deposit their inventories. About one hundred and eighty people filed or pledged to file as a result of this effort. The prayer of dedication was offered by C. E. Wight, and then from the candles of the church, every O. B. K. lighted a candle and held it high to sing "I Would Be True, for There Are Those Who Trust Me."

After the service the councilors and their friends held a reception for President Smith and the other guests. One visitor wrote of his impressions and said, "The ceremonies were impressive with the element of sincerity an outstanding feature. I am sure that lives were changed last night and new starting points were established. Godspeed."

Of the hundred and forty-nine O. B. K.'s filing inventories last year, forty-six have paid tithing in full and sixty-five have payed in part. There are many others who have not yet filed inventories but who are paying tithing.

At present five teams are working on the debate question, "Resolved that Christianity Should Be Concerned With the Problems of Industry," and many musicians have started their preparation for the spring music festival.

The O. B. K. monthly stake prayer meetings which are held in different churches each month, continue to show development and interest. We are trying to go forward with the ongoing work of the church.

Young People in Action

By C. B. Woodstock

Responding to the call by the First Presidency for a church-wide Youth Conference and Leadership Convention in Lamoni, Iowa, June 17-25, young people are already making active plans to share in the conference. The industrial depression has thrown a large number of young people temporarily out of employment. Those who are employed are asking for vacations at the time of the conference. By concerted effort and rather rigid economy the total expense of the trip may be kept at a minimum. Perhaps as never before conditions are favorable for a large gathering of outstanding young church people and their leaders for a week of most earnest worship, conference, research, inspiration, and training.

The following extracts are taken from letters recently received.

Lawrence Brockway, Pasadena, California, assures us, "This district will be fairly represented at the Lamoni Youth Conference. All of the branches have been notified of our plan to have a motor caravan make the trip, and that we shall help each other to travel in the least expensive way. At present my personal plans are to be present in June when the opening session convenes. If the Lord is willing these plans will be carried out. I shall do all I can to persuade him."

Miss Doris Nelson, Des Moines, Iowa, sends us a long list of promising young people of her district and writes, "I am enthusiastic about the conference and am planning to attend. I have already made tentative arrangements for my vacation, June 17 to 25, and have talked with several others who are planning toward that end, also."

Sanford Fisher, Boston, Massachusetts, writes of a plan in the Southern New England District to help finance representative young people to attend the June conference with the understanding they are to return with new vision and inspiration to help advance the interests of the young people in their church work. This would seem to be a worthy investment in the young people of the district and a definite challenge to the young people who have the privilege of the conference.

Miss Ruth Hobart, Webb City, Missouri, sends us the names of four who already have made plans to attend the June conference. She says, "If our plans work out as we hope they will we shall have ten people at the conference."

Integrity

In an article entitled, The Luxury of Integrity, Mr. Stuart Chase asks us to consider the situations of those pioneer Americans who, when there was still an abundance of free land from which a living might be won by honest toil, could afford to be independent, to say Yes when they believed Yes and No when they believed No, and who, when occasion demanded, could dare "to look any man level in the eye and tell him to go to hell." Then he asks us to consider the situations of certain modern Americans who, in constant fear of losing their jobs, feel constrained to say Yes when they believe No, and, day after day, to do a number of things against which their own better self violently protests, kotowing to people for whom they have no respect, back-slapping people whom they thoroughly dislike, selling their soul for a salary, an automobile, a radio, and all those other things which they and their families have come to think they must have in order to be happy. Integrity does indeed appear to be a beautiful luxury when in awful fear of losing your job you feel that you can not afford to possess it. But integrity is something more than a luxury, as increasing numbers of us are beginning to suspect. The practice of saying Yes when you believe No and of doing day after day a number of things against which your better self protests is turning out to be a practice exceedingly injurious, not only to the individual concerned in it, but to the whole structure of human society. For the very foundation of human society is faith—ability to believe that when a man says Yes he means Yes, that when he writes an editorial or an advertisement he really believe what he says, and that when he invites you to dinner and showers you with attention it is because he feels friendly disposed to you, not because he is slyly hoping and planning to get something out of you. Let that confidence be shaken and civilization begins to totter. Integrity is an imperative necessity and blessed, said Jesus, are men who possess it. Blessed are men whose souls are not for sale, who can always be counted upon to say what they think is true and to do what they think is right, regardless of personal consequences; for they shall inherit the earth.—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in We Need Religion.

A Good Name

By Arthur H. DuRose

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver or gold."—Proverbs 22: 1.

FOR many years we have preached to the world that when we shall stand before the judge of all the earth it will be to be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body, not for what we have professed or believed in our minds, not for our particular church affiliation, but according to our works.

We may believe with our minds all of the philosophy of Jesus but unless our lives are actuated by his life so that his philosophy finds practical application therein we are "as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

Of all the things we may accumulate in our lives, wealth, fame, honor, we may take nothing with us when we desert this body of clay, except that intangible thing we call character.

No doubt, it was "character" that the writer of Proverbs had in mind when he said, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

Character is not something given to us like our hands and feet, rather it is something which grows within us, something which we ourselves are the chief factors in creating. Something which becomes so closely interwoven with our real self that it is almost impossible to think of a person without thinking in terms of his character or his characteristics.

Character is not tied to, or controlled by the physical body, rather it is an attribute of the spiritual body, the real you. It is for this reason that character is enduring, and is not transitory as is the outward and visible man.

But what is this thing called character? We recommend a man for a job or for membership in a club and we say, "He is a man of excellent character."

What do we mean?

John Stuart Mill defined character, as a completely fashioned will, will being defined as the tendency to act in a firm, prompt, definite way in every emergency.

The man of excellent character is stable, not erratic; we know in advance about what he will do, how he will act under specific conditions.

We know he will pay his bills, "play the game," observe the rules, speak the truth, count his putts, behave like a gentleman, accept responsibility.

But, these characteristics, these demonstrations of character are not the work of a moment. Years of persistent and consistent doing of the right and turning away from the wrong are required before our make-up becomes so ingrained with righteousness that we may be said to have a good character. Doing right for right's sake, not from a fear of being caught doing wrong. Persistently cultivating ourselves so that every stimulus is followed by a definitely desirable action, so that we do not have to stop and argue with ourselves, shall I do this or not.

This is the fundamental reason why conversions are not usually made in a minute, why all the sorrow for past sins at the penitent form can not substitute for long continued choosing of the right. True conversion, may be begun at the penitent form but it is never complete until the fully fashioned will has been created, which governs our every action for righteousness.

The man of poor character vaguely wants to do right, but long procrastination, long evasion of the issue has robbed him of the ability to generate the power to act.

Let us not be afraid of becoming automatons through the forming of habits of right doing, there probably never will come a time when our courage will not be tested out, in new situations. But even in the new situation the habits of a lifetime of right choices will enable us to choose wisely and well.

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Questions and Answers

COLDS IN THE HEAD—(IOWA)

"I enjoy your Health Letters in the Herald and was pleased with your health lectures at General Conference. For years I have had frequent colds in my head accompanied by frontal headaches and a constant dropping of a heavy discharge that seems to drop down from the back and upper part of the throat which causes more or less coughing. Even a very slight draft not noticeable to others where I work makes me worse. I believe I wear sufficient clothing, and use a great deal of caution, but in spite of that I catch a fresh cold three or four times a week. I am afraid I will lose my job as it so often causes me to lay off from duty. Can you suggest how I may overcome this disagreeable condition?"

REPLY: You probably have infection of one or more of your sinuses. This very easily could infect your bronchial tubes and cause the cough. Do not neglect this condition, consult a specialist, regulate your diet, keep the bowels regular. Do not use tobacco or alcoholic liquor of any kind.

OZENA—(UTAH)

"My doctor tells me I have ozena. Can I be cured by a series of treatments? I am very much alarmed about it as my breath often has a bad odor, my hearing is becoming affected. I am continually "hawking" a thick greenish mucous from the back of my throat worse in the morning after rising. I have an almost constant dull frontal headache. Any sudden change in the weather seems to make it worse."

REPLY: The prognosis as to cure is unfavorable, but much can be done to relieve the symptoms and prolong life by appropriate treatment. Treatment is often neglected on account of the impairment or complete loss of smell, the patient being unable to detect the offensive odor the crusts produce. Your general health should receive any necessary treatment. Any evidence of syphilis, tuberculosis, rheumatism should receive necessary treatment. Cleanliness of the nasal passage is absolutely necessary. Dobell's Solution is splendid for this purpose. All crusts should be removed before making any local application. Peroxide of Hydrogen or ordinary coal oil is frequently beneficial for removal of the crusts. Advise you to consult your physician as often as necessary for advice and treatment.

TREATMENT OF COLDS AND CATARRH—(NEW YORK)

"I am constantly bothered with frequent catarrh of the nose and colds in the head. In some of your Health Letters, you described some colds as dangerous. We are poor and I am unable to consult a physician every time I get a cold. I have a painful sensation in my nose when I sneeze or exhale a deep breath. What is the cause of it? Please tell me what I can do, or a home treatment I can use."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

REPLY: Catarrh is only a symptom and may be one of several conditions. You should have your nose examined by a specialist and treated. Not much can be done for your colds until the "catarrhal" condition is corrected. When first attacked with a cold try going to bed, take a purgative and drink an abundance of lemonade or orange juice. Drinking an abundance of water during the interval between colds may be of benefit as a preventative.

ILLINOIS: "Am just recovering from a bad sore throat. Do bad tonsils have anything to do with it? I have them three or four times a year. They usually begin with cold in the head. Are they contagious?"

REPLY: You no doubt have diseased tonsils and probably sinuitis. I advise you to have your tonsils treated. They may need removal. Yes, colds are contagious and are classed with the spray borne diseases.

The Symbol of a Ship's Anchor

In a simple little country chapel on the coast of Maine the only symbol is a ship's anchor, painted on the wall back of the pulpit at the focus of attention. It is a fishermen's village. Most of the worshipers in that little church have either experienced storms at sea in which life itself hung in the balance for terrible hours, or the anxious vigil of the fisherman's family while the howling gale warned them of the deadly peril of loved ones on the sea. By unerring instinct they chose that symbol of an anchor to rest their eyes and steady their faith in hours of worship. No other symbol, the cross, crown, shield, star, open Bible, or what you will, could possibly be so challenging or meaningful in a fishermen's church as that great sturdy anchor, though as pure art it is crudely done. Thoughtless visitors may laugh at it; but the home folks never weary of it. With every passing winter its precious meaning grows on them, enriching their experience of religion. They could not put in words all that it symbolizes, but in general it sums up all the invisible resources of their most holy faith, the glorious gospel of the blessed God. It means the rescuing hand of the Christ who saved Peter from drowning. It means the infinite love of a Father God, who never forgets those who go down to the sea in ships. It means anchorage for prayer. It means peace in the storm, relief from heartbreaking worry. It means something a bit different after every test of faith.—George W. Fiske, in The Recovery of Worship; The MacMillan Company.

The Land of Beginning Again

I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches,
And all of our selfish grief,
Could be dropped like a shabby old coat at the door,
And never put on again.

I wish we could come on it all unawares,
Like the hunter who finds a lost trail;
I wish that the one whom our blindness had done
The greatest injustice of all
Could be at the gates like an old friend that waits
For the comrade he's gladdest to hail.

We could find all the things we intended to do
But forgot and remembered—too late:
Little praises unspoken, little promises broken,
And all of the thousand and one
Little duties neglected that might have perfected
The day for one less fortunate.

It couldn't be possible not to be kind
In the Land of Beginning Again,
And the ones we misjudge and the ones whom we grudged
Their moments of victory here
Would find in the grasp of our loving clasp
More than penitent lips could explain.

For what had been hardest we'd know has been best,
And what had seemed loss would be gain;
For there isn't a sting that will not take wing
When we've freed it and laughed it away;
And I think that the laughter is most what we're after
In the Land of Beginning Again.

So I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches,
And all of our poor selfish grief
Could be dropped like a shabby old coat at the door
And never put on again.

The Divine in the Savage Faith

In Adelaide Sir Arthur Conan Doyle met an elderly professor who had known Bully Hayes and other South Sea celebrities, and who told him a good story:

"They landed upon some outlying island in Carpentaria, peopled by real primitive blacks, who were rounded up by the ship's crew on one of the peninsulas which formed the end of the island. These creatures, the lowest of the human race, huddled together in consternation while the white men trained a large camera upon them. Suddenly three males advanced and made a speech in their own tongue, which, when interpreted, proved to be an offer that those three should die in exchange for the lives of the tribe. What could the very highest do more than this? And yet it came from the lowest savages. Truly we all have something of the divine, and it is the very part which will grow and spread until it has burned out all the rest."

The Pigeonhole

The Neighbor

He is only a poor man, and he has been out of work for months. Trouble and perplexity have been heaped upon him, and, like many others who have no particular skill for the more difficult jobs, he has suffered. Yet he has not become bitter, and he has maintained his usual cheery smile and his innate kindness of heart.

Some months ago a terrible calamity befell a home near him. The man, with a family dependent upon him, was stricken, and for many weeks it was a question whether he could continue to live. People came to console the family, and to offer help. They were kind and wanted to do something. Most of the kindness, though it was well-meant, never got beyond the living-room of the house.

Now it happened that the family needed no help in the living-room—they could take care of that themselves. But there was genuine distress in the basement. There was the furnace to fire, the ashes to take out, and other things that women could not do.

The Neighbor came every morning and took care of the fire, carried out the ashes, and cleaned up the basement. He did this for months. When there was snow he cleaned the walks and brought in the paper. And when they wanted to pay him he would accept nothing, but said: "It is only a little that I can do, but I want to be able to give that much."

"And Jesus said, Which now of these, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him?"

Marthas and Marys

There are many women who could never be Marys, but they make some wonderful Marthas. A pretty face is forgotten in a fortnight, but a good deed is remembered for years—which gives the Marthas a great advantage. A pretty face may get wrinkled before its owner is forty, but a kind heart is pretty near immortal. And after all, it is what a woman is and does that makes her beautiful, and not so much how she looks. How often one's first look at a woman will give him no particular impression, but after he knows her better he identifies her as an angel of light. We were talking about one who was known far and wide for her good deeds: "She is not much of a Mary," said my friend, "but she is a wonderful Martha!"

Our Project, 1933

4. Talents and Labor

One of the greatest difficulties that the local church can encounter is the problem of enlisting the active aid and sympathetic effort of those who profess to believe the gospel. Every branch has a number of people who have been baptized into the kingdom, but who are satisfied to linger just inside the gate and observe what is going on without joining in the work.

The poorest excuse that is offered is this: "But I haven't any talent!" Nonsense! The best workers in the church are often those who began without any talent. But they worked and trained as they went, and the talent grew in them. The best talents for church work are not those given at birth, but those that are cultivated in active service.

On every hand we hear the call for workers who will consecrate their abilities and train for specific tasks in the local church work. More can always be used than are available. Even if one sees no place to work, let him or her prepare, and a need will arise for that training and help.

There are people who think that if they work at all they are entitled to stand in the limelight of publicity, and live a life of glorified exemption from common things. Those who work only for praise and earthly glory will never serve the church to its credit or theirs. With futile and shallow aims, they are almost certain to be ineffective and unsteady in their work. Church work, above all other kinds, requires devotion and unselfishness.

The depression has forced the church to rely more and more on volunteer workers. It is quite certain that much of the good work in every branch will always call for those who labor without hire. If the work of the church is to go forward this year, and in succeeding years, it will have to be carried on by many new workers. The call comes to you to prepare, and to serve. Are you ready to do your part? L. L.

"Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

The Bank "Holiday"

In another column is an article from the desk of Bishop DeLapp in which the financial income for January is discussed, and comments made upon some of the factors involved. The readers of the Herald, particularly those who have deep concern in the welfare of the church, will find interest in the Bishop's article. Read it.

The past week has brought another crisis in financial circles generally in the United States; or is it but the final approach to the working out of an increasingly difficult situation? Saturday found all the banks in some thirty-six States of the Union closed on a "holiday" in banking so-called. It is a move to find time and means and ways for the banks to readjust themselves to conditions. It is a "breathing spell," a "rest period," a cooling off of heated brows (and heads), a "survey period," wherein banker and patron can sit down and quietly (?) talk things over.

Of course the papers are full of this matter of "news," and so we are bringing nothing novel to the attention of our readers; but as a people we are affected by the situation. Some months ago the Jackson County Bank closed its doors, and our financial officers went through some trying days in meeting the difficulties brought on by having our funds tied up. Other depositories were secured. Friday last the Fidelity National Bank and Trust Company, our present chief deposition, went on a "holiday," restricting withdrawal of funds to five per cent of amount in account. And so our Bishops were again under the necessity of meeting an upset in conditions. The day following every bank in Kansas City and Independence went into "holiday" array as per edict from Governor Parks. And there we are at present writing.

Brother DeLapp and I went into the Fidelity Bank on Friday to see about things. It is not our purpose to go here into the details of the financial situation, but to tell a bit of our observations, experiences, and the information secured. For some weeks a persistent withdrawal of funds from active and savings accounts had been going on until more than half the deposits had been withdrawn. So far as could be learned, these funds were not being used in industrial or commercial activities, but were being placed in safety deposit boxes, or put into Postal Savings accounts.

To protect its own interests the bank was compelled to restrict withdrawals to a small per cent. Besides all this, the closing of banks in other States had temporarily, at least, frozen funds in checks on other banks which could not be "cleared."

When we (Brother DeLapp and I) went into the main banking room of the bank, the place was thronged with people. Every officer had a small group of persons about him, "talking things over." Every clerk and employee was busy to the last man. On the faces of all employees and officers were looks of care and concern, and the same look could be seen on the faces of many if not all the patrons; but there was no excitement, no loud talking. On the faces of many could be seen the smiling question, "I wonder what's coming next?" The usual optimism seemed to prevail, "It will be all right soon."

From the news in the press since Friday, it seems probable that what has been transpiring in banking circles in Kansas City has been happening in most if not all the States of America, and so banking holidays are in vogue.

These are "signs of the time." They indicate again how delicate is the balance between confidence and distrust. They indicate again to us as a people how essential it is for us to be organized socially on a basis where Christian charity can displace selfish greed and where fraternal sympathy and desire to help, rather than self-interest, can become the social and industrial dynamic, and provide the motivation for the social contribution.

Later, perhaps, our financial department will tell us more particularly how the situation affects us. In the meantime, we must carry on, and remember that for long have we been warned against the coming of just such times. So it is not for us to have fear functioning to the failing of our hearts, but rather it is for us to face the situation with the faith and trust which cast out all fear, and in this spirit take up anew our tasks of establishing Zion. For still the cry is, "Onward to Zion."

F. M. S.

If you would live, remember: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." (See Luke 10: 27.)

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

THAT FINER FEELINGS along religious lines are developing as a result of the "depression" and our adversity has been noted frequently, and comments passed thereon. Evidences thereof are many. Here is one coming to the desk from Brother McElwain, president of North Dakota District:

"My report has been delayed. But North Dakota is trying to do her bit. The fine spirit to carry on when there is nothing of a monetary consideration helps one to know that the old saying is still true: 'The kingdom of God can not be purchased with money,' etc.

"North Dakota is developing some young men in the church's service that will give their measure of devotion in their time.

"When the winter breaks we expect to hold meetings in Fargo and ordain two more young men to the Aaronic priesthood. Brother P. T. Andersen, our missionary, will be present. He has done a splendid work in the State during the past year.

"I feel that there is as much opportunity as ever to advance the truth among the people. Am trying to do my part. One week around the holidays I drove between four hundred and fifty and five hundred miles with my car to see sick people. One cold night I was called on a one hundred and fifty mile drive to administer to an old sick sister. Somehow, the name of my son in Minot got into the message. He was at Minot, and only a priest; hence two elders from Minot answered the call and cut off sixty miles that would have been extra for me. I am a rural mail carrier and keep a new car. I always feel that I should go when called upon.

"My two sons now will have to take some of the load.

"I have gone at length a bit to give your office an idea of the conditions under which we labor."

That's the spirit of devotion and service, isn't it? And how many more are feeling the urge and quietly carrying on "as opportunity permits." God bless our silent earnest workers, who are willing to spend and to be spent in his service! F. M. S.

A Page for Youth

A Call for Leaders of Youth

(At the General Conference in 1932, a Committee of Eleven was appointed by the First Presidency as a church-wide advisory council on young people's work. These were selected from widely scattered areas in United States and Canada. The following extracts are taken from an interesting letter from one of these who summarizes the situation in his area. We submit the impersonal part of his letter, for his observations seem to fit any part of the country.)

"The program for youth outlined in your letters of November 16 and December 28 covers in a comprehensive way the very urgent need in this territory for an enlistment of the interests of our young people. The fact that only about twenty per cent of the young people enrolled in our branch are regular church attendants and that fewer than half of this number are available at the present time for dependable service is an appalling indication of spiritual lassitude. It would appear in general that the church is still an external attribute in the lives of the young; that the vision of the church as a guide to happy and purposeful daily living has not yet come.

"The most outstanding and immediate problem is the need for qualified and inspired leaders for the young people in each of the local branches. We need badly leaders who are thoroughly imbued with the Zionic vision, especially those who know that the temporal life is no more than a concrete expression of the spiritual life and not a thing apart, whose experience in the church has brought them an immovable conviction of faith in the ultimate outcome, and yet are not old enough to have lost sympathy with the point of view of youth. Perhaps it sounds as if one could enlist such leaders only from the ranks of the angels; but I do believe that one or more in each branch could be chosen from among the more promising young people themselves and trained by the adult officers of the church in special district gatherings and church-wide conventions of the sort which you propose for the month of June. These representatives could very well constitute a district young people's council which would convene at regular intervals for meeting general church officers, for instruction and in general to unify the work of the young people in various branches. Judging from the situation in our district I think that the need for proper leaders can not be overemphasized. Is it not true that the success of any group movement depends upon the existence of leaders whose personal interests and sympathies are in complete harmony both with the aims of the movement and also with the members of the body?

"The next problem is of course the provision of definitely planned and organized programs for the guidance of the local leaders. Our local needs would best be met by a three-part program: intensive study, organized contributions to the church service (especially dramatic and choir work), and organized recreation. The intensive study should be of temporal stewardship, of spiritual stewardship, of church law, of church history by a topical method. Especially do I believe that no class should be engaged in a straight reading through of the standard books. Too many young people have been introduced to the books by a tedious and uninspired reading through in a class in which discussion is stifled by the necessity of covering the text in a reasonable time. In cases which are far too rare an exceptionally qualified teacher may so illuminate the reading with the fruits of a broad personal study and experience that the desired inspiration is imparted to the class; but in general the same result is more likely to obtain if a carefully prepared topical method is used. These study classes should be supplemented by round table meetings which combine a discussion of spiritual values related to current youth problems with a prayer meeting. In my experience such combined discussion-prayer meetings are more successful in provoking thought and meditation in young folks than are meetings of the type designed for older folks, in which we tacitly assume previous spiritual experiences and a developed capacity for meditation.

"The second and third parts of the program suffer chiefly now from lack of proper organization and definite plans. Most deplorable is the tendency toward least effort which turns a church social gathering into a bridge party. Here again the problem is one of qualified and conscientious leadership.

"These items which suggest themselves from a survey of the local situation seem to be fundamental to any general youth program. Entirely paramount is the proper choice and training of local leaders, the banding of these leaders into a close-

knit church-wide organization so that at all times each may be in close accord with the general church, and the preparation by the general church representatives of definite study, worship and recreation programs for the local organizations of young people. My only addition to your list of suggestions is to place emphasis upon the importance of good leaders."

OFFICIAL

Report of Income

A comparative statement of income for the months of January, 1933, and 1932, is herewith submitted. It was to be expected that the income for January this year would be less than that of a year ago because of continued business and economic distress. It is to be noted, however, that thirty-seven of the stakes and districts raised more money in January this year than last.

Particular attention is called to Independence and Kansas City Stakes where a substantial increase is evident. This is largely due in Independence to the activities of the women who have kept persistently at the task of raising money for the general church. The exceptionally fine organization, personal contact and untiring devotion on the part of the women has made it possible for Independence to make such an excellent showing. Greater activity has also been shown by the regular corps of bishop's agents and solicitors.

In Kansas City under the direction of Bishop C. A. Skinner an additional corps of workers, men and women, were put to the task of raising money through personal solicitation. Thirty-three more solicitors were on the job in January of this year than a year ago. It is quite apparent that one of the solutions to the problem of declining income is the enlarging of our working force.

It is quite probable that the increase in other districts was due to the extra effort put forth by those soliciting general church funds, as well as the increase in the number of workers.

At the present time a study of every district is being made and suggestions and recommendations will be sent to district officers based upon the information obtained.

The general banking situation has had its effect upon our organization as well as all others whose activities cover most of the United States. At present we are confronted with additional problems to which no immediate solution is apparent, yet we are confident that through the cooperation and faith of all concerned there will come the solution of our major problems.

NEWS BRIEFS

President F. M. Smith to Lone Star State

Saints of Central Texas were greatly encouraged by the presence of President Frederick M. Smith at their conference held at Houston, February 10 to 12. His messages stimulated them to greater purposefulness and consecration in the work of the church.

Other church officials there were Apostle Roy S. Budd, Elder G. H. Wixom, missionary, and a number of the district ministry. Saints came to the conference from Dallas, Hearne, Bryan, Fairbanks, Spring, and other points.

President Smith also visited Dallas and other cities while in the Lone Star State.

First Vested Choir in Southern New England

To Attleboro Branch, Massachusetts, belongs the distinction of having the first vested choir in Southern New England District. The choir's first appearance in its vestments will be at the vesper service on Palm Sunday, when it will sing "The Crucifixion" by Stainer. To the women of the branch goes much of the credit for these choir robes.

Apostle G. G. Lewis and Family at Home

Apostle and Sister G. G. Lewis and their daughter, Alice June, are now settled in a neat little home at Hamilton, near Newcastle, Australia. They find rents and living expenses high in that country when compared to the United States, but are glad to be in their own home once again.

Comprehensive Program for Young People

The young people's organization of Seattle and British Columbia District has adopted a big program of activities. Recent events in this program were two young people's conventions. The first of these, held in Seattle, February 10, 11, and 12, for the southern half of the district, had as its theme "Lest We Forget." The second met at Vancouver the following week-end. Apostle M. A. McConley was guest speaker at both conventions, and a program of worship, social and educational services was well carried out.

The young people's organization of this district is thriving under the leadership of Dwight Davis, of Seattle, and its endeavors are caught up in a comprehensive program. At the close of Silver Lake reunion last August, the young people began good-will tours between cities in the district including New Westminster and Vancouver, British Columbia, and Bellingham, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, and Puyallup, Washington. Among the many other undertakings which have this winter held the attention of the young people has been the district-wide attendance-at-Sunday-evening-service contest.

Mrs. Fern Weedmark Honored in Her Field of Work

Sister Fern Weedmark, of Topeka, Kansas, an ardent junior worker in the church, has been chosen one of a committee of five to represent workers with children of the various churches in the city. The purpose of this committee is to formulate a play for a permanent, city-wide work group to be called the Topeka Council of Children's Workers. This movement has the indorsement of the Topeka Council of Religious Education, and was voted upon by a large, representative body of city workers. The first city-wide meeting was held in January.

Winning Spirit of Independence Young People's Play Contest

"We're all winners, even though our play didn't place in the contest!" That is what the young people of Independence are saying about their second annual play contest held last week. During the course of four nights a large crowd enjoyed seeing twelve one-act plays presented by a group of eighty young people representing the following congregations: Stone Church, Second Church, Walnut Park, Liberty Street, Enoch Hill, Englewood, Sugar Creek, and East Independence.

Every play cast won a finer fellowship, a deeper appreciation of each of its members, a better realization of their place in the work of the church. Every play brought to light dramatic talent.

"The Violin Maker of Cremona," winning play given by a Stone Church group and directed by Helen Page Brackenbury, will be an entertainment feature of the young people's convention at Lamoni in June.

Sixty-fifth Wedding Anniversary for Massachusetts Couple

Brother and Sister Solomon Lawrence celebrated their sixty-fifth wedding anniversary February 19, at their home in Boston. Brother Lawrence is ninety-seven years old, and Sister Lawrence is eighty-seven. They are old-time members of the church, having lived for a considerable time in Nova Scotia where they were baptized.

"Go On"

By Berwyn O. Lungwitz

(A sermon delivered to the congregation of the Quindaro Church in Kansas City, Kansas, on the morning of January 8, 1933.)

"Let us go on unto perfection."—Hebrews 6: 1.

The New Year season is over. The inventory and checking-up period is passed. Most of us know our standing for the year that is now history. We come now to the time when we look to the future; when we determine what we will and will not do. It is rather a delicate period in every person's life. Discouragements are put aside and forgotten for the time being. New hopes come with renewed opportunities. We say to ourselves, "This year will be better. I will accomplish more." I believe that every person who thinks seriously at this time of the year makes some kind of a resolution. It may not be voiced, but within us we make the resolve, and earnestly, for a time, try to keep that resolve. As for myself, I think it is a very fine thing to do, and that resolutions rightly made and often renewed, are character building materials.

I would like you to consider four proposals—call them resolutions if you wish. I prefer to call them challenges. The first one is: Let us "go on" to more knowledge. In 2 Peter 1: 5 we read these words: "Add to your faith virtue, and to your virture knowledge." Have we discovered all the truths contained in the Bible? In the Book of Mormon? In the Doctrine and Covenants? No! Then there is some studying yet to be done. Some knowledge to be gained. Our church school is functioning nicely. Good work is being done in the Book of Mormon classes here and there. The educational work of the stake in the way of institutes and lectures is taking definite form. But these efforts must be supplemented by you and me with some personal study in the privacy of our own homes if we are to increase our knowledge. When we begin to know the teachings and revelations that God has given to his church in these the last days; when we begin to put into operation the laws and commandments he has given us; then and only then, will God speak to us again, giving us more light and guidance as we travel onward, upward.

Our second challenge is: Let us "go on" to richer experiences. Our entire life is made up of experiences. Our pastor has told us that we know nothing except by experience. Each one must live his own life. Each life is a story. Some of us have had experiences that are outstanding. They are worth repeating over and over again. The experiences that are the most worth while are those where God has come to us in the time of need. We count our blessings greater when in the hour of despair, when, after having exhausted every earthly remedy, we get down on our knees and pour out our very soul to God. Knowing that he will reward all those who diligently seek him, we arise with our mind relieved and our spirit revived. There is not one present this morning who does not know the need and value of prayer. So I beg of you, learn how to pray, then talk with your God both in the secrecy of your room and in the gathering of the Saints.

The words of Christ to Peter in that dark hour were: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." The Latter Day commandment puts it this way: "Pray always, lest you enter into temptation and lose your reward." And again: "What I say unto one, I say unto all; pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you and remove you out of your place." If this church is to gain its goal of establishing Zion, it will be because the members have become a praying people and a consecrated, united body. Richer experiences can only come as we grow more Christlike. Every day of the new year can be made to bring us richer experiences if we will but make each day a step upward toward God. And we are more able to make the step by being found more often on our knees.

Our third challenge is: Let us "go on" to higher attainments. Most of us are, or should be, grounded in the fundamentals of our faith. This is the function of the church school and supplements the teaching of the home. We should know of Christ and his teachings. We should be familiar with the New Testament writers and of their labors with the early church. We should have a knowledge of the Restoration and of God's commandments and council to the Church in our day and time. These are attainments, or mileposts, in our lives, but our journey is not complete. First principles are important, but there are things higher and nobler to attain—a personal intimacy with Christ, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, the power of prayer—into the mystery of things like these we should be stirred with a noble discontent to enter.

Paul, in his Corinthian letters, says that we are

Today's Opportunity

By L. S. Wight

OPPORTUNITY is knocking at our door. Probably not at any time since the gospel was restored to the world through Joseph Smith have our people had such an opportunity to show the full value of the principles of Zion as we have today. The conditions which made the years 1931 and 1932 a pessimist's paradise, make this true.

It has been said that "Hope springs eternal" and certainly God knew what he was doing when he put this attribute into the hearts of men. I am thankful above all else for a background of faith which has enabled me to keep up the fight, and for hope based on that faith which constantly whispers, "Never mind, the next effort may be more successful." To give credit where credit is due, perhaps I should give most to my mother who succeeded in implanting this quality of hope in my mind in spite of adversity which would have caused any one with less courage to give up.

She left her homeland to come to America with her missionary husband. She fought adversity constantly during the years when there was no regularity of allowances, in order to see that her hungry, growing boys would have a chance. Not content with that, she turned to the study of music late in life in order to help with the choir music, for she believed literally that Satan finds mischief for idle hands. It was necessary for her to do tatting and other such tedious work in order to earn enough to pay for her music lessons but she had hope, and she would not quit as long as she thought she might be able to do something more to help the church. Many times have I met her on the street when I knew the load on her mind was heavy but always was she humming some hopeful tune. She could not let even those moments go to waste, and then when the load became too heavy and she suddenly passed on it was discovered that she had literally worn out her body in the service of her beloved Master. With such an example as this, is it any wonder that I can express a constant hope?

BUT MY EXPRESSION OF HOPE today is not just because of that training. It is based also on evidence that present conditions can be overcome by a return to well-planned, organized work, and that most of the people of this country, as well as those in the church, have the willingness to try to adjust themselves to every necessity. One of the marvels of this depression experience is the courage with which so many have "taken it on the chin," without much complaint. All they want is a chance to work back. Not long ago it was my privilege to call on an old man who had spent nearly thirty years in one community in the insurance business. He had built a fine business with hard work and honest interest in his clients. Two weeks before I saw him he would not have sold his business, including built-up income, for $100,000. One week later he found that the company he represented was bankrupt. His whole life work was wiped out and though past seventy he had to start again to build up. His optimism was so strong that a few days later I found an excuse to make a second call just to get a little more inspiration from him. I felt to thank God for men of such strength of character.

A STUDY of the more apparent conditions which are all about us, would certainly give the pessimist every justification for his despair. But the real trend is not always visible. What does a study of this underlying trend show today? In spite of tremendous losses which have been sustained by almost everyone the same courage which actuated the Pilgrim fathers to come to this land, and the pioneers of the church to start Zionward, is increasingly found in the hearts of men. There is a desire and willingness to "buckle up the belt and knuckle down" to the hard work necessary to get back on their feet. There is a desire to find the way which will give people the security they have a right to look for. Therefore there is in the minds of many church members today a willingness to fit into Zion-building plans, and there is in the minds of many outside a willingness to hear something about the plan of Zion. Fields are ready for harvest in places where in prosperous days no interest could be aroused. If this be true, then have we not the basis for greater hope than we have ever before enjoyed? No problem in human relationship has ever been too big for those with the courage of the pioneer. With that courage we can "Zionize the church," to an extent that will not only solve the problem for us but will cause the world to recognize that perhaps we do have something which justifies our claims, and to listen more willingly to our efforts to evangelize the world.

To substantiate this line of reasoning let us go back for a moment to the years 1928 and 1929. When the speculative fever was at its height the optimist could see only the tremendous increase of fortunes, mostly paper profit. Nevertheless more and more people were apparently being freed from the necessity of working and many were blindly led to believe there was actually a "pot of gold at the end of the rainbow." The real wise men of the world could see that foundations were being torn away, that the basis on which all this overexpansion was being built would soon give way with the consequent fall of hopes which would cause much trouble. Many country bankers with whom I talked at that time were seriously concerned because so much money was being diverted from legitimate trade channels and sent to Wall Street attracted by the fabulous profits which were being made. The dramatic climax to this hysteria was the crash of the stock market in 1929. Even then many would not believe that the business structure was doomed and they made many desperate attempts to maintain a structure which was not built on secure foundations.

During 1932, which an analysis shows as the probable turning point of this business debacle, the substantial type of citizen gradually came to the realization that there is only one way out of the dilemma. And that way means the hard work of getting back to fundamentals and rebuilding the economic structure from the foundation up. This thought has found expression in the many instances in which communities have worked out successful methods to create work and to carry on local trade on a basis of old-fashioned barter. So today men realize that after all there is only one way for any individual or group to progress; that is that it takes well-directed hard work to build and keep the foundations on which all successful enterprises have been built.

TO ME this awakening is very heartening. We must admit that the world has shown us that we can, if we will, and as we have been repeatedly commanded to do, organize and build Latter Day Saint communities, where we can be independent of conditions in the country if the necessity arises. Will we learn and remember the lessons of this period? I believe we will. And my hope is that I believe the younger generation now formulating its ideas and ideals will insist on analyzing causes and effects and will make every effort to accomplish the task assigned us one hundred years ago. Youth will cling to the lessons of this period, one of which is that Society, the Church or State, can not always be expected to find a square hole for a square peg, if there be only a round hole available. Youth will remember that adjustment to fit conditions will always be necessary and is an individual responsibility. The square peg may even need to use a little sandpaper on the corners to make himself into a round peg to fit the available round hole, until he can create the square hole which he prefers.

In expressing this hope I am not unmindful of the conditions existing at the moment which still cause real concern. The continued failure of financial institutions, the crashing of falsely built structures, the desperate fight being made by farmers to salvage their losses, all indicate that we have not overcome our troubles sufficiently to justify the hope that there will be an immediate return to business stability. The pessimist can see plenty of evidence in these instances as they appear on the surface, to prove such pet theories as, that civilization is disintegrating, that we are headed for the rocks, etc. But even if these things were true I should not be willing to give up in my efforts to find a way out. I shall keep fighting no matter what the odds.

This period of depression has its hysteria just as the period of speculation did, but opposite in kind. The radical business reformers are in clover for even hard-headed, careful men are inclined to lend a listening ear to any proposal of an idea for some kind of cure. We have many legislative schemes proposed in spite of the record which shows that every legislative effort to control a natural business movement artificially has resulted in failure. Perhaps the most ridiculous of all such schemes is the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives in Congress to help the farmer by building up a huge bureau to control and regulate production. Such a measure is doomed to failure at the very beginning. This is a happy time for those who would attempt to bring about social reform through legislative action, in spite of the fact that history indicates that we can not depend on legislation to solve our problems. To substantiate this thought I suggest a reading of the history of any movement created by legislative effort, anywhere at any time the reading to follow through a period of several years so that judgment can be made based on a series of incidents, and not on any one incident. Even the most ardent "dry" is forced to admit that the much-debated Eighteenth Amendment has failed to accomplish its purpose for the simple reason that a moral standard can not be attained through legislation.

IT ALSO SEEMS to be a favorite time for renewing the suggestion of doing away with private ownership of property and substituting some kind of social control. Such plans are based on incidentals, they are not the main issue nor the important thing. Why be concerned about the detail of the method, if the motive or attitude of the man is right? The

The Religion of Jesus Christ

(A sermon delivered at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 29, 1933. Reported by Mrs. J. V. Hiller.)

By John Zimmermann, Jr.

I ASSURE you I count it a great privilege to be able to worship here with you this morning, and it is my purpose to review with you at least some of the teachings which have been given us by Jesus Christ in order that we may come to a better understanding of his words and the message he left with us. I feel that perhaps we would make better progress if we understood them better. I feel that our lack of greater progress is due to the fact that we do not more fully understand his teachings and his mission. As a basis for the remarks I may make, I call to your attention the reading of the first Psalm.

Jesus said, "If ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The teachings of Jesus Christ would not deserve so much of our attention were it not for the fact that he comes to us so well recommended. Christ was no ordinary man. John says, in the first chapter of his gospel, that in the personality of Jesus Christ, "The Word of God became flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." He says further that Christ was a light that shineth in the darkness, but the darkness comprehended it not, but unto as many as believe on his name, to them giveth he power to become the sons of God."

You recall the time of the baptism of Christ. It was attended with some very unusual circumstances. The Spirit of God descended in the form of a dove, and a voice from heaven cried, "This is my only begotten Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him." This is the testimony of the Spirit. Again Christ says of himself, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father except through me. . . . I am the bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever."

At one time during his ministry, at the close of the day, he sat down by the side of a well, and a woman of Samaria came to draw water from the well. She offered him a drink. He said to her, "He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but he that drinketh of the water I shall give, shall never thirst, but it shall be as a well of water within him, springing up unto everlasting life."

In the light of these remarkable statements, it should be worth our while to look to Him for light, guidance, and direction, especially so in these trying times when there is confusion, misunderstanding and woe. Is not the message of Jesus Christ sufficient to take us through these times? We often sing:

> "Whether the wrath of the storm-tossed sea,
> Or demons or men or whatever they be,
> No water can swallow the ship where lies
> The Master of ocean or earth or skies."

If we can keep Christ in our hearts, and his teachings always before us, we need have no fear for "With Christ in the vessel, we can laugh at the storm."

The world today is in economic distress. Just what the cause is is not quite clear. Some people say it is due to inflation, some due to the recent war, and some to overpopulation in certain centers, but whatever it may be, we find in Jesus Christ a panacea. Here is the light, here is the guidance that can take us through all these times. He says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for I am meek and lowly of heart and ye shall find rest unto your souls." This is the message of Jesus Christ to us this morning, true today as it was two thousand years ago. Lay aside those cares and those worries that so easily beset you. Take upon you the legitimate responsibility of service for the kingdom of Christ.

When we come to analyze the teachings of Christ, we find they may be divided into three classes: (1) Christ was a teacher of the principles of conduct. A great many of his teachings have to do with the ethical side of life. A large part of the Sermon on the Mount was devoted to these teachings, for instance, "Judge not unrighteous judgment, for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." We have here a very beautiful statement of the law of compensation. (2) The expositional teachings. These deal with the relations existing between man and God, and Christ and the Spirit. They are made clear sometimes in parables. Some of these teachings are concerning conduct, and are overlapping, being both ethical and expositional in their nature. Take for instance the parable of the vine: "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in the vine, abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit. If a man abide not in me he is

The Spirit, or Soul, in Man

(Radio sermon, February 12, 1933)

By J. F. Curtis

"But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8.

This statement of Job's shows that man has two parts—a body and a spirit; a body of flesh and bones, and a spirit within. Job says that there is a spirit in man. Then he tells us that the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. The intellectual part of man is the spirit that is in man.

In James 2: 26 we read: "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." At death the spirit leaves the body and returns to God. But as long as the spirit is in the body, the body is alive. In Ecclesiastes 12: 7 we read: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The dust returning to the earth has reference to the body, the body that the spirit has left. The intelligent part has withdrawn from the body; then the body being dead returns to earth. In this condition the body possesses no knowledge or feeling and no power of action.

In Genesis 2: 7 we read how God made the first man, Adam: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground; and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Yes, man was made from dust. This may seem strange to us at first, but the more we think about it the more we will be convinced. Did you ever stop and think that all we eat comes either directly or indirectly from the ground? Tell me what you had for dinner and I will trace it back to the ground or dust. Our bread comes from the wheat, barley or corn. Our vegetables, potatoes, beans and such like, all come from the ground. The meat that we eat is obtained from the cattle, hogs, and sheep; all these secure their living from the ground. This is also true of all our fruits. They come from the ground. No wonder then that at death when the spirit leaves the body, the body, having come from the dust or earth, returns to it.

Now, let us find out what becomes of the spirit at the death of the body. In the statement we have already quoted from Ecclesiastes, Solomon says: "The spirit returns to God who gave it," When God formed Adam from the dust of the ground he breathed into Adam's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. This breath of life has reference to the spirit that came from God, which, at death, returns to God who gave it.

In Luke, eighth chapter, we read that the daughter of Jairus was dead, and when Christ raised her from the dead, the Bible says: "And her spirit came again and she arose." The body was dead until the spirit came again, and then his daughter was made alive.

Jesus our Lord was crucified. We read in Luke 23: 45: "And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost." Here spirit and ghost are used to mean the same thing. The word "soul" is also used at times instead of the word "spirit." We find it so used in Genesis 35: 18 where Rachel, the wife of Jacob, died when her son Benoni was born. We read: "And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died), that she called his name Ben-o-ni but his father called him Benjamin." Here we find the soul or spirit leaving the body at death.

The soul or spirit is alive after the body is dead. This is clearly set forth in Matthew 10: 28 where Jesus when talking to his disciples said: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Here the word "soul" is used instead of the word "spirit." And Jesus says the body can be killed but not the soul. The word "soul" sometimes is used to refer to the body and spirit combined as in Acts 7: 14 we read: "Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, three score and fifteen souls."

In Luke, 16th chapter, Jesus tells the story of the rich man and Lazarus showing that both were conscious after death. Lazarus was worthy of being with Abraham, who was the father of the faithful, while of the rich man it is said: "In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." Here are contrasted the righteous and the wicked. The righteous man, Lazarus, was in a place of happiness while the wicked rich man was in a place of punishment. Jesus used this illustration because it was true. In Psalm 9: 17 we read: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." According to the scriptures, the spirits of the righteous after death go to Paradise or Abraham's bosom, while the spirits of the wicked go to the

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Friendship or Love—Which?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Into Polly's home comes Brad's mother, critical, sharp-tongued, and gossipy. Polly, loaded with responsibility and enmeshed in the tangle of other people's affairs, can not extricate herself. On the same Sunday that Brad goes on an all-day hunting trip, Polly, sitting alone in church, receives a note telling of a rumor concerning a divorce between her and Brad. Heartsick, she blames Mother Nelson's wagging tongue. In desperation she prays for help. At this point a surprising complication occurs. Echo Duncan, a tall and beautiful girl, one of the happy Half Dozen, who can not reconcile herself to her short admirer, Postelle Jennings, goes home from an erratic talk with Polly, and in the privacy of her own room breaks out into a storm of grief crying: "Polly would never forgive me. I'm a traitor!" At this point, the story gets down to some real fundamentals.

Chapter 10

Wrong-side-out Saturday

WHEN you are very busy, the days crowd rapidly upon each other. Time flies and yet you are unable to account for all the time spent. You can not say: "Now in the last week I have done this and this and this," and feel altogether satisfied with yourself. At least Polly could not.

Arthea's tea for the Happy Half Dozen had been over almost two weeks, and Polly had spent her days doing group welfare work—there were many needy in Independence, sewing, gathering up and giving out sacrifice envelopes to the women on her street, teaching her Sunday school class, visiting some who were sick, caring for her family, entertaining guests, and thinking up the hundred and one little acts of consideration that so endeared her to her friends. Once Elder Evans had said of her: "If there ever was a woman who is a Latter Day Saint clean through the heart to her pocketbook, it's Sister Nelson."

And now she was planning something else, another event to make some one joyful, a Valentine party for the Happy Half Dozen.

She had, in fact, hoped to complete plans for the entertainment today, for the event was just three days away. But she was upset and unhappy. She couldn't think of silly little red hearts and Cupid's arrows today.

It began at the breakfast table. Brad had crawled out of bed half an hour late only to find that the fire in the furnace could not be revived. A new one must be built. The house was cold. Outside a raw north wind was blowing, and the temperature hovered near ten degrees above zero.

Her teeth chattering, Polly had hustled about the breakfast. She closed the door into the dining room, and the other into the hall, and lit the oven of the gas cookstove. In moderate weather this often served to warm the room. But this was not moderate weather.

Not many minutes later Mrs. Nelson had joined them over toast and cocoa. She was clad in a decrepit sweater, and shivered even as she greeted them.

"Goodness, it's cold! I'm sure, Brad, if you would only get up earlier, the house would be much more comfortable for breakfast. Then, too, you ought—"

"Won't you have some toast, mother," interposed Polly. "I got a lovely brown on this piece. And some honey?"

"What happened to the fire? Didn't you bank it last night? Although I'm sure I couldn't blame you for not doing it—you got in so late. I—"

What a shrew she could be! thought Polly. "It'll be warm in a few minutes, Mother," she smiled. "There's been something wrong with that grate for several days, hasn't there, Brad? Do you think I should call the man to see about it?"

"Oh, of course, you would try to smooth over your husband's shortcomings, Polly." Mrs. Nelson did not give her son opportunity to answer his wife. "I notice you spend half your life doing that anyway. But when I stayed with Milly and Henry—"

"Why didn't you?" croaked Brad who was developing a cold. He snatched up a cup of cocoa which was so hot that drinking it brought tears to his eyes.

"Wh-hat!"

But without another word, he was gone, leaving his breakfast only half finished.

"I'm sorry, honey, the house is so cold," he said as

www.LatterDayTruth.org

he wrapped his scarf about his neck. "I should have fixed—oh, I'm getting to be a general inconvenience about this house!" The two were standing in the front hall.

"Nonsense, Brad, dear, you know you're not!" The words were loyal, the look that accompanied them loving. Two white hands busied themselves turning up his overcoat collar and fastening the top buttons. "I want you to take care of that cold, do you hear?"

For an instant Brad captured the hands, looked into his wife's eyes: "Can't we get away from this sometime? Can't we go somewhere tonight?" he eagerly demanded. "There's something I must tell you—explain."

"But, Brad, tonight is club. Saturday, you know."

Disappointment flickered in his eyes. "That's just it," he complained bitterly. "You're always busy when I want you to do—"

"I wouldn't go tonight only I'm responsible for the program."

"You're too responsible a person, dear. My, but you're sweet!" as he buried his lips in her hair. "Guess I'll just have to get me another play girl, Polly," but the clasp of his strong arms about her assured her that he was only teasing.

"I'll try to get free, Brad, truly I will."

"Bradford Nelson," his mother had come into the hall in time to hear his last remark. "Don't ever let me hear you say such a thing again. I don't want my son a scandal figure!"

Hastily kissing his wife, Brad stepped out of his home with a sharp click of the front door. The episode was ended—but was it?

IT TOOK exactly five telephone calls and an hour's time to free Polly for the evening. And a whole hour cut out of her morning schedule almost wrecked it. But she was ashamed at being so continuously occupied at church and community work that she had no time for her husband. The situation was a hard one for Brad with her out almost every evening and no one at home but his mother who was anything but congenial company. As a result he was spending fewer and fewer of his evenings at home, preferring the company of business associates to that of his mother. Though neither of them had spoken of it, Polly was positive that Brad was returning to the poker and pinochle habits of his premarriage days. This troubled her.

But what could she do? Each week as it came, brought with it more than its quota of activity. For five evenings in succession she had not been at home. On Monday night she had helped to serve at the group chili supper, given by the women in the interests of their sacrifice money. Of course Brad had gone and eaten his share of chili, but in the hurry and the crowd she had seen him only twice the entire evening. A special meeting of the teachers of her department had taken her to the church the next evening. On Wednesday she had gone with Edith to prayer meeting. Brad had been in the city that night. On Thursday evening the Happy Half Dozen had met, and last night Brad had been out with Mr. Moore, and Polly had spent the evening with Sister Livingston, listening to stories of England which she hoped on occasions to pass on to her Sunday school class.

At this moment the young woman felt almost overwhelmed with responsibility and work. She sighed as she reached for the telephone and called Brad's office. She would tell him that she was free. They could go out—anywhere, for mother would be home.

"Mr. Nelson?" the secretary's voice repeated. "He isn't in just now, madam."

"This is Mrs. Nelson. Will you have him call me when he returns?"

Then in the immediate tasks of the morning, she forgot for a time plans for the evening. Always she cleaned the upstairs rooms on Friday, and downstairs on Saturday morning. She planned this morning to dress a chicken for Sunday dinner, but the woman from the country was late. One of the Saturday club members was coming over at ten o'clock for the secretary's book and Polly's program of the meeting.

WHILE she was in the midst of cleaning the living room, Carrol escaped from his pen and fell halfway down the basement stairs, scraping his nose and one wrist badly. A small cut on his hand bled profusely, and he would not be comforted. His grandmother was so frightened over the accident that she chattered and wept and called for her smelling salts all in one breath. And while the child continued to yell his entire disapproval of basement stairs in general, Polly was called to the door by two salesmen, one hunting a market for a newly-patented can opener, the other, wax flowers.

And then the grocery boy straggled into the kitchen. He had not brought the sugar with her order, and from sheer awkwardness he had broken two eggs. Polly was on the point of calling up the store, when the club member came.

Not half an hour later something exploded in the furnace and blew soot into every room in the house. Polly could have screamed with exasperation.

Quite naturally the telephone claimed her before she had opportunity to reckon the entire sooty damages. It was Brad.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Oh, I'm so glad you called, darling. I'm so miserable!" wailed Polly.

"Why? What's wrong?"

"Oh, the baby fell and skinned his nose and cut his hand, and the groceries aren't all here, and the woman with the hen hasn't come, and the furnace has just blown up!"

"Poor child. Did an earthquake happen, too?" His teasing tone made her feel better almost instantly. She could even laugh, and she did.

"I called to tell you, dear, that I won't be home for lunch."

"But, Brad, I'm fixing you something special!"

"Now I'm sorry about that. Won't you save me some? I have a little trip I just must make, honey. I'll be home by four maybe."

"And—I have a surprise for you, too."

"What?"

"A surprise."

"Won't you tell me?"

"No, not till you get home."

"Then it'll have to wait."

Polly swallowed a big lump of disappointment. "Yes, I suppose it'll have to."

"I'm real busy now, and I'm keeping you from your work, too, so I'd better—oh, I almost forgot—there's a possibility, dear, that I won't be home tonight after about five-thirty. Mr. Moore wants me to go—"

"But—Brad! I—I, aren't we going out? I—I chucked the club so that I could go with you!"

"Why didn't you tell me you were going to—"

"I did."

"I didn't hear you."

"Well, that wasn't my fault." She waited expectantly.

"I wish I'd known it sooner," he began slowly. "But I'll be busy, Polly. I told Mr. Moore I'd see some fellows for him in the city." How callous he sounded! "I'm sorry you called off the club—now."

"So am I!" she blazed, all her independence asserting itself, and without waiting for him to say any more, she snapped the receiver into place. He hadn't sounded a bit sorry. He hadn't apologized for not hearing her this morning. It wasn't at all considerate of him not to cancel his engagement to take her out. Busy? Yes, his business would probably be card playing. She dropped her face into her hands and sat thinking.

WHEN the telephone rang not half a minute later, she knew, of course, it would be Brad. He would say that he was going to make a special effort to get home at noon, and to be free in the evening. He would be sorry and apologetic. But no. It wasn't Brad. It was Edith. Promptly Polly invited her over to lunch to help eat the Boston baked beans, the cranberry sauce, and the pork chops she had prepared for her husband.

After an afternoon of shopping, the two dropped exhausted upon the lounge in the Nelson living room. Brad had not yet come in. Mrs. Nelson was napping in her room, and Carrol had been asleep two hours. They were discussing the Valentine party scheduled for the coming Tuesday:

"I wish Dan could be here," smiled Edith. She was coming to the party with a young fellow whom she frequently dated. His invitation had gone out with the others more than a week before. But still, she thought of Dan. "Do you know, Polly, I think we made a mistake about Echo and Postelle."

"What?"

"Well, it might have been a wise thing to have invited this new boy friend of hers. She certainly has a crush on him. Wouldn't tell me his name, but she has bragged quite a bit lately about him. Mentioned being over at one of the city dance halls with a 'hot papa,' and all that adolescent stuff, you know."

Polly stifled a smile. After all, Edith was two years younger than Echo. "Maybe you're right, but I do hate to leave Postelle out in the cold. He's such a dandy fellow in a crowd!"

"Sometimes Echo puzzles me."

"She certainly had me puzzled the other night. I can't tell you about it—it's a matter of confidence, but that's the first time I knew she cared for anyone besides Postelle." Polly sank back against the end of the lounge and smilingly regarded her guest.

There was a worried pucker on Edith's forehead. "I don't understand it. Echo and I used to double date some, but we haven't done so much of it lately because Postelle and John don't care about each other's company. But, after all, Echo's a pretty girl, and she ought to get quite a ways. I don't want her side-stepping too far. And right now there's a lot of talk. Of course it's gossip, but I've heard that this fellow she's so crazy about is a married man!"

Something cold and heavy seemed to close about Polly's heart. She stared at her friend.

"Of course," Edith's voice was scornful, "he must be a perfect cad to take advantage of a kid like Echo. She's so sweet and cute and entertaining. I've a notion the next time Dan comes up to see me, to ask Echo and Postelle to double date us. I believe Dan and Postelle would enjoy each other. Whatever is wrong, Polly, I intend to find out." The brown eyes were determined.

Brad opened the door and walked into the hall.

suggestion that private ownership of property makes it impossible for redistribution to benefit the many is hardly well taken in the light of what is actually happening now. Many who have been classed as wealthy, both farmers and business men, large and small, have seen their holdings entirely wiped out, going back not only to bondholders, but to the state. In fact so much land has gone back to the states that we have a new problem of public domain.

Most of these losses are a result of wrong attitudes or motives, or of poor management on the part of these who suffered the loss. At a time when things were apparently going well, they mortgaged their future earnings to get more property under control. Their greed led them to their destruction. It is a matter of record right now that farmers as well as business men who kept themselves under control during the days of hysteria are not suffering today as are those who are losing their property. They are able at least to make a living and can keep going without undue concern until things return to normal. When our troubles will have subsided, in most cases the owners of property will be those who used common sense continually and the law of private ownership will have acted merely as a guide in getting property under the control of those who have proved their ability to handle it. Of course there will be some who suffer innocently as always in any storm, but we must base conclusions on the rule, not on the exception.

HOWEVER, in spite of the discouraging situations still existing, I do not hesitate to say that I see in the present trend the basis for the greatest expression of hope that we have ever seen. Latter Day Saints should welcome the situation as one that challenges our plan of building a Zion. It is in times of adversity all through the history of the world that movements sound in character have found the footing for their development. Therefore the situation today indicates the greatest opportunity we have ever had and my hope is strong because I see our people recognizing to a greater degree the fundamental rules of right living. There also seems to be a greater desire and willingness to put these rules into action and to discard schemes which may sound good in theory and work out well on paper, but which when put to the test of actuality would prove inadequate.

Among business men to whom I am constantly talking, there seems to be an increasing feeling against all legislative attempts to force an economic situation. Our church members undoubtedly are expressing the same feeling. Since we are thinking now in terms of hard work and of willingness to cooperate, was there ever a better time in which to begin to perfect our organization as we have been instructed? In the humility resulting from recent experiences we will be willing to listen to reason and we will discover, if we have not already done so, that the financial law of the church gives us the proper foundation. Had a structure built on that foundation been in existence during the last decade our people would now stand out as a distinct group, healthy, happy, and prosperous in spite of the conditions existing all around us. Obedience to the financial law is the starting point for material Zion building. There is not a member, no matter what his condition, who can honestly claim exemption from this law, even though in fulfilling it he can do no more than file his inventory.

The increase in interest in the law of tithing, especially among the younger people of the church gives me more hope than perhaps any other one thing. They are learning the real meaning of this wonderful law of life at a time when the ideas will be effectively implanted in their growing minds. They will not be concerned with incidentals as they get into a position to be of real help to the church program. They will realize, for instance, that the paying of the tenth of the increase is the soundest investment they can make for the simple reason that to pay it, it will first be necessary to know what it is. To know that it will be necessary to have some kind of record. Such a record will picture the wise or unwise use of energy and hence show the way for them to get the most out of the nine tenths. They will not be concerned about assurance of blessings just because they hand this money to the bishop, but they will be able to see that they have already had their reward in the greater benefits derived from the wiser use of the nine tenths.

This will make them see then that to go farther and build up a surplus which can be used to create further capital for the work of Zion building will give them greater security and greater assurance of success in the efforts they are making. Again I say they will not be concerned with incidentals, but will be very much concerned with motives and attitudes. They will infuse into their organizations an enthusiasm which in itself will make it easy to spread the good effects of their work. They will build on solid foundations and many will be strong enough to remember the lessons of the sad experience the world is now going through, and will keep down any spirit of speculation which might lead to ruin.

They will remember that during the troublesome year of 1932 communities all over the land which knew nothing of the church, were able to use old-fashioned barter to keep up trade and work within their own borders, and will ask why organized groups of church people can not do the same thing on a permanent basis. They in their youthful enthusiasm, which refuses to believe a thing can not be done simply because it hasn't been done, will find a way to create such community effort. They will accept God's commands for what they mean and will see to it that storehouses are built, both to handle money or other medium of exchange, as well as all kinds of products, and they will see that consecrated men are developed to take the responsibilities of leading in this work. They will see that every one has a chance to fulfill the financial law in terms of what he can produce, and they will see that no one suffers. The needy, the maimed, the blind, etc., will be treated in accordance with their actual condition. They will see that no man is turned away hungry, whether member or nonmember provided that if he is able bodied he gives or does something in return for the help he receives.

They will not lend encouragement to the type of people who as a result of governmental or community effort to feed them during this depression, get the idea that the government owes them a living. That by the way, is one of the serious situations which will come out of the depression, but our youth of the church will find a way to curb any such expression of thought. The lazy and incompetent will naturally drift away because they can not find comfort in association with an industrious class of people who are hard-hearted enough to insist on some kind of work being done to replace that which is taken out of the storehouse.

IT IS NO IDLE DREAM which gives me this hope and courage at this time. It reflects the recollection of many experiences, some of which have been unpleasant. It results from the knowledge that many of our people are suffering today because they refused to make their investments in prosperous days with the thought of the church first in mind. Investments made on the basis of worldly wise decisions which proved to be very poor. If the investor had first determined that the church interests would be best protected by his investment he would have made many changes in his investment plans and today those investments would represent far more actual value than they do.

These thoughts are the reflection of a man who during his school days in Graceland became imbued with the determination to help create a Zion, and who did try in his weak way to make his work fit in with church needs, but who so far has failed to accomplish his purpose. He saw situations over which he had no control develop to wreck his plans. They are not the reflections of a man who can sit back with some kind of security to himself and figure out something for the other fellow. But they are the reflections of a man who is fighting to keep going as so many other church men are doing today. They are the results of daily experiences, not theories.

Finally they are the reflections of a man who still believes that God is ever ready to reach down and take the uplifted hand of his wandering child and lead him to the path that will permit him to accomplish something worth while. Then since many of us are thinking along right lines, since apparently a greater percentage of us than ever before actually have our hand uplifted asking for guidance, for the directing influence of that divine hand, are we going too far when we say that today is a day of hope, of real opportunity? It is the greatest opportunity the church has ever had and with God's help we can if we will, ZIONIZE THE CHURCH and build those communities to which the people of the world will be anxious to come.

THE SPIRIT, OR SOUL, IN MAN

prison house, called hell, pit, or prison. No wonder Paul in Galatians 6: 7-9 said: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Most punishment is for reform. God does not delight in the death of the wicked. All men are invited to come to Christ that they may have eternal life, but some will turn a deaf ear to his pleadings. God's way is the best way and God's way is the right way. All men can come to Christ if they will.

In Matthew 7: 21 Christ says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Obedience to the commands of Christ will bring forgiveness of sins and make us sons and daughters in his kingdom. But disobedience to his laws will bring punishment. The spirits of the righteous will remain in paradise until the time of their resurrection, and then the spirit and body will be reunited again.

The spirits of the wicked will remain in the prison house until they have paid the punishment for their transgressions and then their spirits will come out of the prison house and be reunited with their bodies and they will receive whatever glory they are worthy of. While the wicked are in the prison house the gospel is preached unto them that they may repent and reform. The Apostle Peter tells us that Christ, after his crucifixion, went to the prison house and preached to those in prison who were destroyed by the flood in Noah's day. This account is found in 1 Peter 3: 18 as follows: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls were saved by water."

The mission of Christ was not only to the living, but to the dead whose spirits were in the prison house. To make it more easily understood the Apostle Peter in 1 Peter 4: 5, 6, tells us that Christ preached the gospel to the dead. He says: "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead [or in other words, the living and the dead] for for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." Or as a better translation renders it, "live in the spirit according to the will of God."

John, the apostle, in Revelation 1: 18 quotes Christ as saying: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell, and of death." Yes, Christ had the keys of hell. This agrees with the statement of the Apostle Peter that Christ went to the prison house and preached the gospel to the prisoners. Now we will show that the prisoners are released from the prison house.

In Zechariah 9: 11, speaking of Christ, he says: "By the blood of they covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." The pit here spoken of could not be the grave as there is no water in this pit, but there is plenty of water in the grave. There was no water in the pit where the rich man lifted up his eyes in hell. He could not find even a drop to put on his tongue. That hell will finally give up its captive spirits, just as the grave will give up its captive bodies, is shown by reading Revelation 20: 13. Speaking of the last resurrection, we read: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works." This is positive proof that the prison house called hell, at the last judgment delivers up the spirits that are in it. After getting out of the prison house these persons are judged according to their works. For there are different degrees of punishment and there are different degrees of glory. But why should we live so that we have to be placed in prison? The right way of life is to live so that when this life is over we may go to Paradise, a place of joy, peace, and happiness, until the time of the resurrection and then come forth and live in the resurrected state with Christ and the righteous on this earth for a thousand years.

May God help us so to do is my prayer.

"GO ON"

"called to be saints." As saints in the Latter Day Church of Jesus Christ our duties are plainly set forth. There are more duties given to the membership of this church than in any other church we know. Let us learn what these duties are, enter into them, then "go on" to higher attainments.

Our fourth and final challenge is: Let us "go on" to larger usefulness. I need not enlarge on the conditions the world found itself in when it awoke on the morning of January 1, 1933. You know of these conditions as well as I. You know the condition of our church at large. You know the condition of this local congregation. You do not need to be told there is work to be done. You can see it on every side. Our inquiry then must be, "What would you have me do?" not "What is to be done?" We can not rest on the victories of yesterday, but must face the tasks ahead with a light heart and cheerful face knowing God will be with each and every one who works constantly for him. During the year to come each of you will be called upon to perform some task. To undertake the job and succeed is to grow. To fail to make the attempt is to die.

Let us, then, on the stones of past attainments build, upward toward God. Know and you will feel. Feel and you will pray. Pray and you will aspire. Aspire and you will work. Let us each one work for God as never before. God will use us if we are willing and prepared. Let us be ambitious to make the most of ourselves and do the best we can during the year ahead. We have but one life to live. Let us seek to realize its utmost possibilities.

THE RELIGION OF JESUS CHRIST

cast forth as a branch and is withered and men gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned." Here we have set forth the relation existing between Christ, God, and man, Christ being the vine, we being the branches and the Father being the husbandman. We have here the principle of dwelling in Christ. We may have him dwelling within us if we will, just as the branches abide in the vine. Jesus has said, "Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man will open the door I will come in with him and sup with him." In another place he says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments and I will pray the Father that he may send you another comforter, even the Spirit of truth, and when he the spirit of truth is come, he will lead and guide you into all truth." So we have the opportunity of living with Christ and he with us. Then we have another, (3) the prophetic teachings of Christ, those that have to do with the final destiny of the soul, and ultimate end of life. Whither are we headed for? Christ tells us the ultimate consummation of the world will be in his kingdom. Isaiah says, "The government shall be upon his shoulders, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, and of the increase of his government there shall be no end." Christ in his teachings confirms these words, for example in the Lord's Prayer and at the Last Supper. There are other prophetic teachings of Jesus Christ which have to do with the death and resurrection of the body. There are great mysteries connected with these things, many of which we do not fully understand. As Paul says, "We see through a glass darkly, but then face to face." Christ says, "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live." In another place he says, "In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am ye may be also." So whether it be to live or die, we need have no fear. Christ has promised to go with us all the way.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In speaking of Christ, one of the poets has said:

"Thou art the way, hadst thou been nothing but the goal
I can not say that thou hadst ever met my soul.
I can not see, I child of process, if there lies
An end for me, full of repose, full of replies.
I'll not reproach the path that winds, my feet that err Access, approach art thou, Time, Way, and Wayfarer."

—Alice Meynell.

So Christ has offered to go all the way with us. He has offered to live with us. He has offered to be our shepherd:

"In every condition, in sickness, in health,
In poverty's vale or abounding in wealth,
At home or abroad, on the land or the sea,
As thy day shall demand so thy succor shall be."

This is the message of Christ. I wish you would drink it in and realize what it means to be a child of his. I think we ought to be more diligent and anxious to serve him. He has said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and to establish its righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you." This is our responsibility as followers of Christ. It is the command that has been given particularly to this church, the building of the kingdom. The Church of Jesus Christ is the Herald of a New Order. We have been at this task now for over one hundred years. We have made some progress. It has been slow. It has been fraught with difficulties, with set-backs, with conflicts, with confusion, but Christ has said, "I will build by church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This is a prophecy, and he has sworn to build his kingdom. Modern religion tends to deny many of the teachings of Jesus Christ, and among these is this teaching of the gospel of the kingdom. Take that from the life and the teachings of Jesus Christ and from religion, and what have you left? The entire Old Testament looks forward to the coming of the kingdom of Christ. Christ teaches it in the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." How much we need that in the world today. How keenly we feel the lack of it in the world today. The confusion and turmoil, many places on the brink of chaos, some crying lo here and some lo there. Russia has the Five Year Plan and is collapsing—it can not hold water. The nations of Europe are collapsing, due to the internal conflict and turmoil with which they have to contend. They are on the verge of bankruptcy and failure. What does the world need? It needs a better understanding of the message of Jesus Christ, the message of the brotherhood of man, the message of the Fatherhood of God. People of the world are not turning to these things. They are relying upon their own strength, upon their own wisdom, but Isaiah says, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid and because this people draw nigh to me with their lips but their hearts are far from me, therefore, I will proceed to do a marvelous work, even a marvelous work and a wonder among them." This is the building of the kingdom which Christ and God have sworn to consummate. We are invited to be builders with them. The question we should ask ourselves is, Are we building, are we following the mandate which he gave: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all things shall be added to you"? This is our task, our belief individually, and as a church. If we are not doing it we are living beneath our opportunity and the work of God is to this extent languishing.

Jesus has said, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He has promised never to leave us. Friends may desert us, turn their backs upon us, forsake us. He had that experience when he was here. Peter denied him three times, and Judas sold him for thirty pieces of silver. All the disciples forsook him and fled, but Christ was not forsaken by God, and he has promised he will not forsake us. That was the experience of David, "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Again, "If I take the wings of the morning, and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, thou art there." Paul says, "Neither life nor death, nor length or breadth, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus." "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." This is a glorious invitation. Christ is living, ever present, anxious to help us on our way, to show us the way—the Father's way in which we should walk. Will we build for him? Will we continue the task he has set for us? He has promised us, "If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

The Forts of Folly

"I shouldn't be ashamed of being a Christian if I was one, but I'm afraid I shouldn't make much of it."

"Yes, that's where the shame comes in: we ought to be ashamed of making so appallingly little of it. We say we are, every time we go to church, but we aren't. If we lived up to our formulas, you'd soon see the world begin to move. All one can say is that the formulas don't seem to expect it of us. To me the most cheering thing about the whole Communion service is that every time I go I'm expected to say I intend to lead a new life, as if I'd been up to date the failure I know I am."

"Not very cheerful, is it? said Jim.

"I don't know. Isn't it the spirit behind all your scientists? How many experiments fail for every one that comes off? Can't you imagine Pasteur saying, 'Next time,' just as we do? And what about the scientists who never did bring it off? I don't think there's any epitaph better worth having than 'There goes another faithful failure.' Nothing succeeds like failure, just as nothing fails like success."

"Oh, if you're going to be epigrammatic I'm going to bed," said Jim, rising, with a laugh.

"Well, let's part in peace," I said. "Here's a verse of Matthew Arnold for you; I dare say he had more sympathy with you than me, though I'm not sure:

'Charge once more then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of Folly fall,
Find your body next the wall.'

"For the forts of Folly hold your enemies as much as mine, and if I believe Christ is the Way to go and the Life to lead, I'm just as sure He is the Truth to find."—Cyril Alington, in Doubts and Difficulties.

Prayer and Testimony

The Gospel Is True

By Fisher H. Carlile

About ten years ago I left my home and parents to work and travel. All their lives my people have been faithful workers in the service of the church. But for some reason I never cared much for religion until about a year ago, when after a great deal of effort on my mother's part—writing long letters about the Bible and the Book of Mormon, the fulfillment of the scriptures, and many other interesting subjects, I began to get interested.

Finally I decided to give the church and religion one final, good, thorough try-out, and I started in by reading the little book, A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, written by Daniel McGregor. Mother said this would give me an insight as to the purpose of the Book of Mormon besides many other good things, and for proof I could refer to the Bible.

This book stirred my interest, and then she sent me the Book of Mormon. I had not read far in the second book when the Spirit came upon me so strongly that I shall never in my life forget it. I continued through the wonderful book, feeling the Spirit several times as I read.

Then I ordered three books for myself, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The Doctrine and Covenants has increased my faith all the more.

I am thankful to God far more than I can express for his loving-kindness, for not forsaking me, and also my gratitude goes to my mother, father, and sister for their efforts to bring me to see the glorious goodness of the gospel.

Now I can plead with the young people and the older folk, too. Just give yourselves a fair chance and take the book (Book of Mormon) and read it from cover to cover. The knowledge in it will astound you and the purity of it will cleanse you.

I used to say: "I never have time to read the Scriptures." But I believe now that it is our business to find the time to read them. We shall never regret it.

Another testimony to me of the truthfulness of this gospel is the ordinance of laying on of hands. Two weeks ago when I was sick with bronchitis which followed the flu, I was administered to by Brother Ephraim Squire and Paul Belleisle. That night I slept without coughing for the first time during my sickness. I believe if I had had the proper care the next day, I would have been entirely healed. It is my desire to be faithful and to keep every commandment.

Your Copy of the "Herald" Should Keep Busy

By Mrs. William H. Dechow

Late in the fall of 1929, Elder Peter Muceus came to stay at our house four weeks. He preached at Burton, a village five miles from our home. We enjoyed his stay, and often wish we could see and have another good visit with him. I believe he is a man who has tried to live and is living as God would have him.

January 31, Calvin, our son, was born, and when he was six weeks old, my mother passed into the great beyond. Brother Muceus preached her funeral sermon, and also blessed Calvin.

Shortly after that, the spring work opened up with its usual rush. The Zion's Ensigns were put away, after being read, and I was planning later to send them to friends who also enjoyed reading them.

Time went on and this task was neglected. Later I felt that something was amiss; something was wrong, something I should be doing. I felt blue and worried; I prayed to the One who understands, and asked what was wrong. It seemed to me that my answer came in a dream in which I saw Brother Muceus picking up scattered Ensigns. This experience was given for me to know that the little missionary should not be idle.

The Saints' Herald is also finding a place among our friends and neighbors. Pray for us that we may have greater faith and courage to press on, that we shall not be found wanting.

God's Promises Are Sure

By Mrs. Mabel Wyman

Alone in my room in the quiet of the morning hours, afflicted, and isolated from the church I love, after communion with God and my usual reading of his word, I turn with eagerness to our loved Herald which means so much to us isolated ones. I note the requests of the afflicted for prayers, and I plead with God for each suffering one.

Then how I do enjoy the testimonies recorded there which relate the experiences of my brothers and sisters in the gospel! The Herald is full of cheer and encouragement. I have just finished reading, "Experiences by the Way," by Brother J. F. Garver, and my heart rejoiced at the assurance which he has received of the triumph of the church. Never for a moment have I entertained the least doubt but that the church would pass safely through the present crisis, because I know it is God's work and that his promises concerning it can not fail.

Forty-six years ago this summer I entered the waters of baptism in obedience to the gospel. Though I was quite young, I well remember how the gospel sermons seemed to fill my heart with gladness and joy, for I recognized the ring of truth in them. And this gospel has continued to grow brighter and dearer to me with the passing of years. Though I have passed through severe trials, the Lord has been with me all the way, and often have I heard the still small voice of the Spirit speaking words of comfort and cheer in times of sorrow, and uttering promises which have been fulfilled. Many times in the lonely hours of night when racked with pain, I have found comfort in singing softly to myself the beautiful songs of Zion, and I have been able to rejoice in my suffering. And though my way be considered hard, I do not grieve over the loss of earthly pleasures, for the Lord has been my portion, and the true gospel of the Son of God has brought far greater blessing and more lasting peace than I know is to be found in the world.

I want to thank all who prayed for my daughter in answer to my request in the Herald. The Lord was with her, and the doctor and nurses seemed surprised at her marvelous recovery. Shortly before she entered the hospital, while my heart seemed filled with grief and doubt as to whether the Lord would spare her, a voice seemed to say: "Thy child shall live, and I will fulfill my every promise. I will be with her and bring her safely through, and it shall be well with her."

So while she lay in the hospital, apparently at the point of death, I clung to his promise, knowing well that he was able to and would fulfill it. It was a great comfort to know that the Saints had prayed for her. How good it is to have a stronghold in the day of trouble, and to realize that our help cometh from the Lord who made the heavens and the earth.

I feel that the Saints of God should never be downcast or discouraged for the Lord has bidden us: "Be of good cheer." He is our hope and our trust, and he has given unto us exceeding great and glorious promises. We are told in the Book of Mormon: "Inasmuch as ye shall put your trust in God, even so much shall ye be delivered out of your trials, your troubles, and your afflictions, and ye shall be lifted up at the last day."

What a glorious hope is extended to us, of dwelling in the presence of God and our Savior through the endless ages of eternity, where pain and sorrow shall be no more, and where peace eternal and love and joy shall fill each heart. This will be a joy unspeakable and full of glory which shall never pass away.

Jesus said, "Pray always that ye faint not until I come." And he will come quickly. Let us trim our lamps and keep them burning that we may be ready to meet him with joy. May God give strength to all his people and courage, too, until that day shall dawn.

The Gospel His Treasure

By Fred A. Severy

Almost forty years have gone since I obeyed the true gospel of Jesus Christ. I have learned the truth, and the truth has made me free of the bondage that Satan held over me. I have received the gift of the Holy Ghost which has taught me, little by little, the way of spiritual life and what and how I should do in order to keep in the way and not depart therefrom.

It has been pleasant traveling all the time. My experiences have proved that our lives as in nature, have seasons —spring, summer, fall, and winter. Passing through these, especially through winter, has brought me when spring and summer arrived, wonderful joy, peace, and contentment. My spiritual weather now is continuous sunshine which makes me feel ready and willing to do as my Savior directs, and fills my heart with love for all mankind and a desire to do all the good I can while here in the flesh, to those who stand in need of any thing I can do for them.

The gospel is everything to me, my treasure, my life, my all. I am, with the help of Jesus, ordering my life so that others, Saints or sinners, may not have any reason to condemn me for my acts or words. It would be out of the question for me to be a stumblingblock to anyone. I desire to be a stepping-stone, a help, a light (perhaps not a very bright one) so that others, seeing my consistent life, may be encouraged to seek the straight and narrow way and walk therein; and also that the weak or discouraged Saints, who may be acquainted with me, will be spurred on to new spiritual life and become strong. We have the greatest, the grandest, and the best religion on earth, one that will do more for you than any other; but it requires faith, diligence, sincerity, trust, and patience, and in due time, our Father's reward is sure. He makes no mistakes. He always keeps his word. He is the light of the world.

Let us walk in the light he so liberally gives us, that we may reach our destination (home) before the day closes and the night begins. Now is the time to prove to him that we are true and faithful and no matter what comes, more depression or temptation, that we are loyal and that he can count on us to the end. May God bless you all abundantly is my prayer.

Grateful for "Youth and the Restoration"

By Mrs. S. M. Hudson

To the youth of our church I am just "grandma," and I want to thank everyone who contributed to the book entitled, Youth and the Restoration. The spirit of unity, the love for Christ and his work and the determination to help him breathed by this book brought tears of joy to my eyes at times, and a prayer to God filled my soul. I am thankful for the knowledge of our young people which this book brings to me. And I ask God to lead the young men and women on to victory.

When finances favor me I wish to order twenty-five of these books to give to my friends and relatives.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Nellie Deck, of Outlook, Montana, writes for the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her daughter, Christine. Sister Deck's family have been blessed many times through prayer, and they are thankful for all God's blessings.

Mrs. H. D. Morrill, of Linwood, Kansas, desires the prayers of the church for her mother who is ill with flu at Bald Knob, Arkansas. The sick woman is a member of the church.

A sister in the West who withholds her name, earnestly requests prayers for her father who has again taken to drink. Her only hope for him is in prayer, and she seeks the prayers of the church that the Lord will spare his life until victory comes; also that her father may hear the gospel preached, and be willing to accept it.

Miss Minnie Tremain, of Hartsburg, Missouri, desires prayers in behalf of her mother, brother, and herself. They have a small mortgage on their home, and those who hold the mortgage are trying to sell the place. The Tremain family must let the place go, but they pray God's direction as to where they shall move. Mrs. Tremain is almost blind, and it is hard for her to go from place to place. Her daughter also asks prayers for the mother's eyesight.

Sister Elizabeth Goodwin, of Bellaire, Illinois, desires the prayers of the church. She is eighty years old and has ulcers on her eyes and a sore on her nose which the doctors say is serious. Sister Goodwin has been a member of the church forty-five years, and she has great faith in the power of God to heal.

Sister Fern Brockman, wife of Brother Owen Brockman, 321 Wisconsin Street, Sparta, Wisconsin, has been sorely afflicted for several weeks. She has been very sincere in her faith, and is an excellent young woman. Her family desires the prayers of the church, that she may be restored to her normal condition.

Elder J. G. Slover, of Rinard, Illinois, Route 2, asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. He has been sorely afflicted with a severe nerve trouble for more than two years.

Sister Nina Lynts, of Cheboygan, Michigan, wishes the Saints to pray in her behalf. She is suffering from a broken hip and heart trouble. She entered the University Hospital, February 28, for treatment.

QUESTION TIME

Explain the text about "many mansions" promised in John 14: 2.

This text contains the promise of Jesus to his disciples of a place which he would go to prepare for them. The meaning of the term mansions appears somewhat obscure from the Greek word itself, as it is the only place where it is translated thus. Literally it means a staying-place, or abode, and the same word is translated abode in John 14: 28. The text reads as follows:

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14: 2.

We have here the figure of many mansions being in a house, which proves that these terms are not to be interpreted according to ordinary ideas of houses and mansions. The Greek word for house means residence, abode, or, by implication, family home, and it is translated home in the Twentieth Century Version. The word for mansions is translated abode by Moffatt. The Emphatic Diaglott renders it dwellings, and Weymouth translates it resting places. The Greek term is from another word which means abiding, endure, to stay, and in the text mansions probably refers to abiding-places. Literally construed, it probably means that in the family home of God there are many abiding-places for his disciples, and that Jesus himself would prepare them so that he might himself receive into them his faithful disciples.

Who is the "son of perdition"?

The word perdition is found in eight places of the New Testament, of which two use the term "son of perdition." The Greek word is apōleia, meaning ruin, loss, destruction, or damnation. It is believed to be derived from another Greek word which means to die, perish, or destroy. That it sometimes conveys a somewhat different meaning than the word destruction, is indicated in 1 Timothy 6: 9 which refers to "destruction and perdition." The term son which may mean any descendant or offspring, seems to convey the thought that the text in John 17: 12 refers to Judas Iscariot as the offspring of Satan (or of damnation). It is possible that the text in 2 Thessalonians 2: 3 refers to some person who shall come in the spirit of Satan as his emissary; or it may refer to evil forces in opposition to the work of God that shall be revealed.

Is the consecration of oil for administering to the sick commanded of God?

So far as I know there is no direct command to consecrate the oil to be used for administering to the sick. However, from very ancient times the anointing oil was called holy, as may be noted in Exodus 30: 25, 31; 37: 29. This word in the Hebrew is qodesh, meaning sanctified, consecrated, dedicated, hallowed. It would therefore seem to indicate that it was set apart by some ceremony or other means, being dedicated to its intended use. Inasmuch as we are commanded to "do all things with prayer and thanksgiving" (Doctrine and Covenants 46: 3), it does not appear inconsistent to set apart oil to be used for sacred purposes with a prayer of consecration.

Does the Lord require his people to ask a blessing upon food at meals?

The blessing of God upon his people and their substance is evidently conditional. If one asked him to bless, and lived an evil life, the Lord has said that he would not hear his petition. But his blessing is promised to the righteous, to whom he states:

"And ye shall serve the Lord your God, and he shall bless thy bread, and thy water; and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee."—Exodus 23: 25.

There is no command, I believe, requiring one to ask a blessing upon his food. But there are many scriptural instances showing that one should give thanks to God for such blessings. Jesus our example gave thanks for food, as may be noted in various texts. When he fed more than four thousand people with the loaves of bread and fishes, he gave thanks for the bread and blessed the fishes (Mark 8: 6, 7). But the word for blessed as used here means to praise, thank, or invoke a benediction; hence it is not certain just what form Jesus used. The same is true of the event recorded in Mark 14: 22.

Paul also gave thanks for bread on a ship, in the presence of 276 people (Acts 27: 35). It was evidently the custom among the Roman saints to give thanks, for Paul mentions it in connection with the partaking of food among them. In harmony with this usage, we are instructed to "thank the Lord thy God in all things" (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2).

Seattle and British Columbia District

Young People Have Convention

The theme, lest we forget the responsibilities of the young people to God, to church, and to fellow citizens, dominated the young people's convention of Seattle and British Columbia District, February 10, 11, 12. The convention was opened by a preaching service by Apostle M. A. McConley, followed by a mixer in the basement of the church in Seattle, Washington. Saturday found many carloads arriving in time for the classes. At the close of the day's activities one hundred and one persons had signed the register, representing every branch in the district.

The young people of Seattle are to be commended for the beautiful tables decorated in the red and white motif and a dinner which can not be surpassed even at a greater cost. A good social time was enjoyed with Harold Watkins as toastmaster and Apostle M. A. McConley, Miss Jessie Ward, and Dwight Davis as the principal speakers for the evening.

Early Sunday morning seventy-seven young people gathered at the church for a prayer meeting, to worship and commune with their heavenly Father. This was a memorable occasion. The entire time was spent with prayers, testimonies and songs centered around the theme of the convention, "Lest We Forget," with emphasis on the qualities of character that are worth while and lead to Zion and to the Lord.

This same spirit was experienced in the classes conducted by Brother McConley Saturday and Sunday in which young men and women were taught how important God is in their lives. God is at work today to give his people truth, and he gives this when they conform to his universal laws. All creation was planned and created by the Master Mind for a particular purpose. The conditions of the world today make it imperative that all mankind learn to know and associate with God. He has planned Zion and it is up to Saints to make this city actually exist upon this earth. This will employ the services of all. All are called of God to live Christ-like lives, and all activities can be made spiritual. Brother McConley's advice was:

"If you have not been working, go home and begin. If you have been a worker, continue—in humility and love. Just keep on keeping on."

This convention was not the beginning of the district young people's activities, but the outgrowth of the program ably outlined by the president, Dwight D. W. Davis, of Seattle. At the close of the reunion at Silver Lake last August, the program began with goodwill tours between the cities conveniently located: New Westminster and Vancouver, British Columbia, and Bellingham, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, and Puyallup, Washington. The responsibility of the visiting group is to provide the evening's service for the group that is visited.

The large attendance at the convention was the natural outgrowth of the one hundred per cent attendance contest at the evening church services. This is conducted in each branch of the district with most of the members of the church as well as the nonmembers participating. Some have blanks with a pledge to be signed by the young person, promising to be present at this service for a stated period of time. A great deal of enthusiasm an dinterest is encouraged in this manner, and the project gives a greater responsibility to the young person signing. At the close of each month the percentage of attendance is sent to Seattle, and the standing of each branch is determined. Centralia won first place for the month of November; Seattle next, and Puyallup, third. In December there is a change with Vancouver, British Columbia, at the top of the list; Centralia, second, and Seattle, third. Many young people are becoming interested in the other services as well as the weekly prayer service in some of the branches.

The closing session of the convention was spent in discussion of the activities for the coming six months. This month they are starting the monthly paper in order that a closer contact will be made between the branches. Each branch will type one page of their activities, making seven copies to be sent to Seattle, where the pages will be sorted and compiled into seven papers. Each month this will be made and sent out to each branch in the district to keep each one informed of the work of the district. Other plans were discussed, and the details will be formed for a very profitable six months before the annual reunion.

Seattle Branch

Perhaps the most enjoyable vesper service the young people of Seattle Branch have sponsored was held in the upper auditorium of the church the evening of January 22. To this were invited the adult membership. The program with the theme, "Comradeship," was capably handled by Earlita Emslie. Dimmed lights and soft music effected a spirit of meditation. The climax of the service was the charge delivered by Pastor Alma Johnson and answered by the young people's representative, Grace Emslie.

Seattle was host to the young people of the southern half of the Seattle and British Columbia district, when they held convention, February 10, 11, and 12. Plans for the convention were first laid when, at a mass meeting of young people at the last reunion, the workers organized and elected the following officers: President, Dwight Davis, of Seattle; vice president, Walter Gerow, of New Westminster, British Columbia, and secretary, Gladys Swenson, of Centralia.

For the past few weeks Seattle young people have been busy preparing for the convention. Several groups of girls met at the home of Grace Emslie to make favors and decorations for the banquet. Programs for the banquet and for the convention were hectographed by the young people themselves. Sister D. S. McDole gave much of her time and assistance in this matter.

The guest helper, Apostle M. A. McConley, was greatly enjoyed in the class session he taught.

The theme of the convention, "Lest We Forget," probably never will be forgotten by the happy and consecrated groups which met together those three enjoyable days.

The most outstanding activity of the convention was the banquet held Saturday evening with the theme, "Lest We Forget" our responsibility.

The prayer meeting, held on Sunday morning, was permeated by a splendid spirit of gratitude and the earnest determination to work harder for the Master.

Centralia young people showed their cooperative spirit by one hundred per cent attendance at the convention. They accomplished this by holding a special social prior to the convention to raise funds for their transportation from Centralia to Seattle.

February 15, Seattle Saints joined with Brother and Sister Holman in celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

Bremerton Branch

February 1, District Missionary Elder A. C. Martin arrived for a series of meetings. He has been here three weeks, and members feel that much good resulted from his sermons. The crowds are not large due to bad weather, but interest is good. These meetings are of much edification to the Saints, as well as to nonmembers. All say they have learned new truths.

Tacoma Branch

Tacoma Branch reports an active membership. There is a high percentage of attendance in all services. They were sorry to lose Brother Bradshaw, the church school director, but find an able leader in George Sowers, jr., new leader in the school. The young people held a progressive contest party, the adults, an oyster social, and the juniors a Saint Valentine party during the past month.

Willapa Mission

Elder and Sister H. I. Velt left for Centralia, Washington, after having been here two months, preaching and visiting. Many new friends have been made through their efforts. One was baptized and a number of babies were blessed. Friends look forward to their return in the summer.

Apostle Myron A. McConley was here, January 21 to 30. On Sunday, January 22, this mission was honored by the presence of Bishop D. S. McDole and District President Elder Monte E. Lasater and Sister Lasater. An all-day meeting was held at the home of Brother Albert Ellsworth. After church school, Bishop McDole spoke to an appreciative group, and in the afternoon Elder Monte E. Lasater was the speaker. The spirit of fellowship and brotherly love was manifested throughout the day.

Clubs are active. The Tiona Club has a membership of fourteen women. The young people's Club has seventeen members between the ages of fourteen and eighteen. The Oriole Girls have twelve members. The church school has had an average attendance of forty for the past year, and indications are that the average will be higher this year. Workers hope to have a church building in the near future and are lending their efforts to that end.

Vancouver Branch

The Saints feel that under the leadership of Pastor George Miller, and the director of Religious Education, Brother N. Morrison, they are progressing toward the goal, "Zion."

Services are being held each Sunday afternoon at Central Park, and members feel that good will result from the efforts.

The outstanding event for the month was the young people's convention that has just closed. The convention opened Friday evening, February 17. Apostle M. A. McConley was the speaker. Then followed a social evening of games in the lower auditorium of the church. Saturday was spent in classwork, Brother McConley the teacher. The lessons on the fundamental principles of the law were wonderful. Saturday evening a banquet was given in honor of the leaders and the young people. Sixty-five were seated at the table. Brother E. Spargo, young people's supervisor, was toastmaster.

Brother Kirk Gerow, of New Westminster, gave the toast and Sister Genevive Sprague, of Seattle, responded. Brother McConley spoke on the workers of the past; Brother A. Spargo spoke on the workers of the present, Brother Walter Gerow on the workers of the future, Dwight Davis, district leader of the young people, gave a talk on conditions in general. These speeches were encouraging and instructive. Several branches were represented by the young people: Centralia, Seattle, Mount Vernon, Washington, and Chilliwack, New Westminster, Bellingham, and Vancouver, British Columbia. Greetings were received from representatives of each branch.

Sunday morning more young people arrived from Seattle, and the church was well filled. The day started with a sacrament and prayer service. The theme was, "Zion Builders." After this service, a lesson was taught by Brother McConley, then a sermon on workers was presented by Brother McConley. Sunday afternoon Brothers McConley and Dwight Davis spoke. Sister McDole, district leader of Religious Education, was here during the three days and had a short talk with the leaders and teachers. She also addressed the Daughters of Zion. Brother Pope, of New Westminster, preached an interesting sermon Sunday evening which closed our convention.

As the result of this convention the Saints feel much encouraged. The youth in this part of the vineyard have demonstrated that they are capable and willing to do their part.

Pisgah, Iowa

Organize Young People's Class

The young people of Pisgah have organized themselves into a class called the O. V. B. Class (Our Very Best). Their motto is "Excelsior," and Mrs. Mark Hutchinson is the teacher. Bernice Chase is the president and Drexel Heistand, the secretary. Since the young people have organized, attendance has considerably increased.

The O. V. B.'s had a Valentine party, February 11. Instead of having lunch, each person brought a dime and the sum of two dollars and ten cents was given to the deacon as sacrifice money.

The class poem is the last stanza of, "The Chambered Nautilus."

Sacramento, California

Spiritually Blessed This Year

The winter months just passed through have been most unusual and severe in this community, according to the weather man. As a result many homes have been invaded by pneumonia, and some have been claimed by death. Brother Ralph Ensley and Sister Mary A. Hook were taken away by this disease. Brother Ralph was a devoted worker in the church and in his office as deacon performed his duties with the spirit of service. He leaves his wife, Agnes, and three daughters, besides an aged father, two brothers, and one sister, all members of the church. Sister Hook, an active member in the church for many years, had in recent months confined her activities chiefly to attendance at church services because of poor health and advanced age. She leaves a daughter, Zayda, and a son, Henry, besides friends and other relatives.

On the morning of January 8, Saints of this branch were blessed with a beautiful message through the gift of prophecy. Many souls were made joyous at this gift. The Saints were admonished to be of good courage and cheerful hearts and to climb to the heights where eternal blessings shall be theirs to enjoy and His countenance shall rest upon them. They were told to consecrate their lives to the building of God's kingdom. At this time two young men were called to be set apart to offices in the priesthood; Melvin Howe to occupy as a teacher, and Ives Honeychurch as deacon. The sincerity and earnestness of these young men lead all to have faith in their success as they strive to do the Master's will.

As a result of these blessings the Saints are now putting forth a greater effort to assist the church in reaching its goal. They feel that as a small group their responsibility is to go forward in the spirit of unity, having faith in the goal set for 1933, "Evangelizing the world and Zionizing the church."

The dramatic club has done well under the direction of Marion Burton and has presented three productions of educational and entertaining character, "Balancing the Budget," "Tithing," and "America."

Elder E. C. Burdick has been chosen and ordained to fill the vacancy of first counselor to the district bishop. Brother Burdick is a young man and his heart and soul are in the latter-day work. He feels the responsibilities of his new office and has a clear vision of the things to be accomplished.

Saints of Sacramento with many others in the district shall in the spirit of unity and in prayer, hold in remembrance these young men who are called, that in humility of spirit, they may verify the will of God to mankind.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael was here one week and preached six fine, clear, and convincing sermons. These covered conditions of vital importance in the temporal as well as the spiritual affairs of life. Quite a number received their patriarchal blessings from him.

Winter activities of the branch were somewhat retarded due to cold weather, sickness, and curtailment of expenses.

Battle Creek, Michigan

Investigator's Bible Class Feature of Interest

Battle Creek members have been spurred to greater activities by an increased desire to accomplish the arduous task of presenting the gospel message to the honest in heart in this part of the Master's vineyard. Many of the difficulties confronting the work in this place can be obviated by following the counsel of the pastor whose constant urge is for humility, love, and unity among the members.

Marked interest has been shown in the attendance of the Investigator's Bible Class, organized last November with a charter membership of thirty-five. The class is managed by an executive board of twelve members and has maintained an average of forty-three at each session.

The class has adopted a pledge which reflects the attitude of its members and is a declaration of the purposes and intentions of the group: "With the assisting grace of my Lord and Savior I will not walk in the counsel of the ungodly, nor will I stand in the way of sinners, nor will I sit in the seat of the scornful. But I will endeavor to find my delight in the law of the Lord by forming the habit of meditating in his law day and night. (Psalm 1: 1, 2.) Then each member is asked, "Why do you pledge yourself thus?" and he replies: "That I may be like unto a tree that is planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season, whose leaf doth not wither; that whatsoever I may do shall prosper." (Psalm 1: 3.) He is then asked: "What assurance is given you that such blessings will be yours?" And his answer is: "Because, the Lord knowing the way of the righteous hath declared that they shall stand in his congregation; (while the unrighteous and ungodly shall perish), and, it is written, that those who follow peace with all men and holiness shall see the Lord." (Psalm 1: 5, 6, and Hebrews 12: 14.)

The pledge in itself is an incentive to a more consecrated life. And the instruction the class receives from the teacher, Elder Pement, is drawn from a fund of knowledge in the restored gospel covering a period of nearly forty years of study.

In January Apostle D. T. Williams delivered another of his powerful sermons on the theme, "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint." His effort was enjoyed by a good audience.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Bertha Evans, is busy in assisting in the Master's work. At Christmas they presented the branch a gift of twenty dollars. Besides this, they started the year by paying tithing on their income. The branch happily welcomed District President A. C. Barmore, February 8, and he held a two-week series of meetings. With the aid of stereopticon views he beautifully and eloquently portrayed the life of the Savior to the uplift of everyone who heard him and saw the pictures. Brother Barmore's method of telling the old, old story gripped the hearts of all who heard. In addition to the lessons taught, he has endeared himself to Battle Creek Saints by his congenial personality and spirit of helpfulness.

Houston, Texas

Host City to Central Texas Conference

This branch looked forward for many days to the district conference held February 10, 11, and 12, which was attended by President F. M. Smith and other high church officials. The spirit of fellowship which prevailed was wonderfully enjoyed by everyone.

President Smith's presence during this period served to stimulate the people to greater hope and greater effort in the restored gospel. They were happy to make his acquaintance and to acknowledge him their leader and Prophet. They wish him health and the Spirit of the Master as he leads the church toward its goal. And they pray that they may always give him loyal support and assistance.

The conference also was glad to welcome Apostle R. S. Budd for the people love him, especially the younger members. They cherish his counsel.

Elder G. H. Wixom's return was hailed with joy. Elder and Sister J. A. Robinson also came over from San Antonio.

During the conference President Smith preached three fine sermons, holding before the people the needs and objectives of the church. The theme of his Sunday night sermon was, "Two Great Objectives of the Church." Apostle Budd preached Saturday morning, and his theme was, "Let Your Light So Shine."

Saints from Dallas, Hearne, Bryan, Fairbanks, Spring, and other points were present at the conference. The business meeting of the conference convened at ten o'clock Saturday morning, C. W. Tischer, district president, presiding in association with President Smith and Apostle Budd.

Workers were loath to see the conference close for even in so short a time they had learned to love and appreciate each other, and when the visitors had departed Houston Branch felt lonely.

Pastor C. W. Tischer is ill at present, but the Saints are praying for his speedy recovery. He is faithful in his calling.

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

It is with sadness that Topeka Saints report the passing of Sister Janet Baillie, of Scranton, Kansas. Her life was one of service to her home, her church, and her community. Her death occurred January 9. The funeral sermon was by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, of Independence, Missouri, assisted by B. F. Deller, of Topeka.

Eight days later there occurred the death of R. Mann at the home of his son, J. W. Mann, of this city. The body was taken to Little Sioux, Iowa, for the funeral and interment. Brother Mann was at one time under conference appointment as a missionary, and though he was in feeble health when he came to Topeka, the Saints remember his earnest and appealing efforts for the sake of the cause he loved. When it was possible for him to be present at services in this branch, during his short stay at the home of his son, he attended.

The district conference, held at Topeka, the middle of January, was a source of strength and inspiration to both members and priesthood. In various ways enthusiasm and determination are finding expression. One activity, probably the most outstanding, is the priesthood class under the supervision of Pastor G. G. Cadwell which meets during the regular study period of the church school. Six members are enrolled.

Prayer meetings are being regularly held at the church instead of the homes of the Saints, as wisdom seems to suggest a central place of meeting.

The February sacrament service was in charge of B. F. Deller. Members of the priesthood on the rostrum were G. G. Cadwell, O. E. Weedmark, W. A. Poort, F. O. Kelley, and H. E. Wege. A marked degree of the Spirit was enjoyed by those present to renew their covenant of allegiance to the Master

Recently G. G. Phillips occupied the stand in the evening. It has been some time since he was present and his influence and help are much appreciated.

Sister Emma Happe has been very ill, but is improving. Sister Eva Ruffcom has also been sick. They are in need of the prayers of the Saints.

Richard Eden, of Kansas City, had charge of the young people's meeting Sunday evening, February 12, which was characterized an appropriate Lincoln program.

Fern Weedmark was one of a committee of five chosen from among workers with children in the various churches of the city, to formulate a plan for a permanent city-wide work group for those interested in children. The name of this group will be the Topeka Council of Children's Workers. This movement was indorsed by the Topeka Council of Religious Education and voted upon by a large representative body of city workers. The first city-wide meeting was held January 23, at one of the larger churches. Mrs. Craig, instructor of music, from Ottawa, Kansas, gave lectures and demonstrations with children in the art of teaching choice and appreciation of music.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

Turn Local Aid to General Church

Repairs are needed on the local church building, but workers have decided to do all in their power to help the general church at this critical time. A supper was given for this purpose and the proceeds from this together with the sacrifice offering of the branch made a good sum which was turned over to the church. Though numbers have little or no employment, all enjoyed sacrificing what they could for the church.

The adult Bible class has been organized under the leadership of John Shaffer. They call themselves "New Leaves," and presented a Christmas pageant which was well received. They meet twice a month and at present are studying the church history.

The women's organization which meets once a month, is faithful in lending support to the local and general church. Sister Hyde, who had charge of this work for over two years, has moved to Natichoke, Pennsylvania, and Sister Elsie Hyde is now in charge. Much could be said about the women and their work.

The Sunday school is growing under the leadership of Brother H. A. Cunningham. Several prizes were given for perfect attendance during 1932. Sister Pealer tells a story every Sunday morning to the junior department. The priesthood met twice a month to study the Doctrine and Covenants quarterly written by Brother F. Henry Edwards. The class is taught by Pastor Lewis. Brother A. D. Angus is teacher of the Book of Mormon class which meets each Tuesday evening at his home.

The priesthood have been blessed in preaching, especially some of the young men.

Nearly every family in the branch is reading the Herald and the members often remark about the fine articles it contains.

Patriarch G. W. Robley visited here on his way back to his mission after a trip to his home in Providence, Rhode Island. He preached two uplifting sermons.

Brother and Sister Hartman, of Hersey, Pennsylvania, visited Bloomsburg and listened to the first Latter Day Saint sermon they had heard in ten years. They were much encouraged and promised to return soon. They traveled about ninety-five miles to be here, arriving in time for Sunday school.

Sister Eva Mourry was baptized recently by the pastor and confirmed by H. A. Cunningham.

Sister Pealer's son, Isaac M. Shaffer, has enlisted in the United States Army, and will be stationed at the Panama Canal for the next two years.

Branch officers for this year are: President, Walter Lewis; counselor, Brother Cunningham; publicity agent, William Derr; secretary, Sister Iva Shaffer; branch treasurer and chorister, William Hyde, and organist, Mrs. Schuyler, a nonmember, but a faithful helper.

Several babies have lately been blessed: John E. Ellsworth Shaffer, son of Brother and Sister John Shaffer; Donald Reginal Hartman, son of Brother and Sister Clark Hartman; Joan Stewart, daughter of Brother and Sister Walter Stewart; Robert Eugene Brown, son of Brother and Sister B. C. Brown, of Elmira, New York, and Joann Yodack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Yodack.

Missionary Meetings at Brentwood, Missouri

Patriarch and Wife Blessed in Their Work

We closed a series of meetings at Brentwood, Missouri, February 19, with a church packed to capacity on the last night. For four weeks the interest did not wane. On two nights when the temperature was ten below zero, we were astonished to see how many came out.

We went to Brentwood for two weeks, but our stay lengthened into four. It seemed impossible to stop even though we found it necessary twice to write to Sawyerville, where we are now, and postpone services advertised to begin. After two weeks were gone, we were requested to stay at least another week, and as we felt that there were some who were keenly interested, and the Saints, too, were being benefited, we decided to do so. On the eleventh of February we baptized seven people. One of the sisters whom we baptized was so insistent that we stay another week (for she was sure her husband was partly converted, and would be baptized) and so many others came to us, too, that we thought it would be unwise to leave such fine interest. And so we delayed our Sawyerville meetings for another week, and stayed.

During that last week we were given a taste of the endowment, for each night some gave their names for baptism, and on Sunday we had the pleasure of baptizing ten candidates. The church was packed for the evening confirmation service, and people stood at the back and on the platform. Brentwood Saints think they will have to have a new church. And during Sunday afternoon and evening five others told me they were ready for baptism. They will no doubt be cared for by local ministers.

We were surprised at the results of these meetings, for we left Sharon, Pennsylvania, still feeling weak and ill from the flu and feeling also that we must exert a tremendous effort to care for the work before us. We were wonderfully blessed. We were given strength for almost continuous activity, visiting, talking, administering, giving blessings, preparing sermons, preaching, answering questions, and all the other things that go with conducting meetings.

Sister Baldwin worked hard, too. She held services each night prior to my sermons, sometimes for the children and sometimes for the teachers.

We baptized two entire families in this series, one the De Margel family consisting of father, mother, son, and two daughters; the other was the Aaron family, a man and his wife and daughter. We united one family group where the husband was a member and the wife did not belong. We baptized another woman and her son and daughter, leaving only the husband not baptized. He too is interested. Thirteen of the candidates were over fifteen years of age, and may be classified as follows. Wage earners, seven; mothers at home, four; high school girls, two. Several of these are going to file their inventories at once, as we preached on this phase of our work, and also talked with them personally about it.

We are grateful to God for his help and the success of these meetings.

Look Forward to Missionary Meetings

The gospel fire still glows in this little city, and the faithful few are hoping for the time when a missionary will be here to hold services. Though sickness and discouragements have been experienced this winter by the Saints, they have continued to hold meetings.

In some ways economic conditions are improved here, the people being better off than last year. The families who received help last year are now able to extend help to others.

The Saints are looking forward to a visit from Elder R. L. Fulk, feeling that much good can be done here through missionary work.

Branch officers have this year had their share of sickness and death. But with the coming of spring the hope of the few workers here is renewed. They, too, wish to add their efforts to the redemption of Zion.

Blessed With Greater Spirit of Unity

Though the Saints in this branch have been subjected to the same condition of unemployment, financial uncertainty, sickness, and bereavement, that have swept over the world, these things have but served to draw them together in a closer bond of love and sympathy, and a deeper concern for the welfare of all. As a result of this unity of heart and purpose, their spiritual experiences have been rich and helpful.

Officers this year are: Pastor, C. J. Smith; assistant pastor, G. M. Vandel; superintendent of Religious Education, C. E. Burnett; superintendent of adult church school, Blanche Heviland; junior church school superintendent, Bessie Johnson; supervisor of music, Florence Tiller; superintendent of women, Bessie Johnson; branch recorder, Bonnie DeHarty; financial secretary, G. M. Vandel; organist, Genevieve Sands; publicity agent, C. J. Smith. Brother G. M. Vandel, pastor for a number of years which were filled with devoted service, was released from active pastoral duties at his request.

A group of young men and women has been organized under the direction of Ramona Burnett, teacher of the class. In the short time since its organization, the class has sponsored a number of worthwhile projects. This group shouldered the responsibility of clearing up one of the branch debts and already has gone a considerable way toward this goal. The third Sunday evening in each month has been assigned to this class as its particular time to present constructive entertainment. In December the members gave a pre-Christmas program of pantomime and song depicting the birth of Christ. The program drew a good crowd, and was well received. In February, an inspiring and colorful pageant, "The Restoration," told the story of the church since its organization in latter days. These plays have been under the direction of Sister Burnett and Sister Grace Smith. The group sponsored a "soup supper," January 13, and the proceeds were applied on the debt they are endeavoring to pay. February 15, a class meeting and Valentine party were held at the church. These enthusiastic young Saints are attracting others to their work. As their numbers increase, their place in the affairs of the branch is growing more important. They are setting a commendable pace for the rest of the workers.

The music department presented a program of anthems and solos accompanied by tableau scenes on Christmas night. Brother Clem Evans gave a brief talk.

The women have been busy this winter. In addition to their work of sewing, quilting, mending, etc., they distributed at Christmas seventeen baskets of provisions to needy families. Much of the material which went into these baskets was found in the church pantry for which these women canned last summer and fall. Baskets of fruit were given to some of the much loved and respected old people who are shut-ins. Through the efforts of some of these women, Santa Claus found his way to several small children whom otherwise he would have missed.

On New Year's Day five new members were received into this group by baptism.

Death has invaded this congregation. December 30, pneumonia claimed fourteen-year-old Vernon Smith. Vernon lived in Worthington, Minnesota, but he left many relatives and friends in Sioux City. He died while visiting his grandmother, Sister Effie Thomas. January 5, the husband of Sister Tiller, branch chorister, was taken by pneumonia. Although not a member of the church, Mr. Tiller had many friends in this group. February 19, death came to one of the oldest members and a stanch defender of the work, Sister Delia Smith, mother of Pastor C. J. Smith. It released her from suffering which she had endured for months.

Apostle J. F. Garver spent Sunday, February 26, here, his morning and evening sermons being received by large congregations.

On Friday evening, February 24, the intermediate boys and girls entertained at the church with a group of playlets and other numbers. A pie social followed the program, and proceeds of the event went to assist in the missionary visit of Brother Garver.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Impressive Baptismal Ceremony

Sunday, February 26, brought an impressive baptismal service when three candidates were inducted into the kingdom. The invocation was offered by John Jenkins; Sister Robert Clugston, of Philadelphia, sang a solo, "Have Faith in God." E. W. Lewis read the scriptures. The address by Pastor Thomas Jones stressing scriptural examples, enjoined upon parents and officers the responsibility of training and leading the candidates for church membership. Then Elder R. J. Hawkins led Bobby Watkins, Calvin Thomas, and Edith Davies into the waters of baptism. The Spirit of the Lord was present throughout the entire service. Elder Ernest Davies, church school superintendent, expressed appreciation at the results of the school's work.

The effort to make this service one of reverence and impressiveness was commended by Saints and friends. Officers wanted the new members to remember the day of their birth into the kingdom with joy and reverence.

The candidates were confirmed members of the church on March 5, the first Sunday of the month.

Centralia, Illinois

Meetings by T. C. Kelley

A week of missionary meetings conducted by Elder T. C. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, closed here February 27. These services were well attended and enjoyed by Saints and visitors. The able manner in which this servant of the Lord explained his faith and belief strengthened the members of the church here, and gave all a better understanding of the scriptures. Surely these services will help the branch grow.

Apostle J. W. Rushton at Birmingham, England

Two Weeks' Stay Profits Members

Apostle John W. Rushton has made Birmingham his headquarters during his stay in England, and the Saints have profited from his presence in this branch even though he has been ill and has found the English winter a severe trial.

Brother Rushton arrived here following his survey of the church work on the Continent including the countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, and Holland. He landed in England to be straightway stricken with flu and bronchitis, and for a time was a very sick man.

He has made his home with Pastor and Sister Whalley, and as his health has permitted has worked on a great mass of writing and typing which accumulated during his travels.

A unique opportunity came to Brother Rushton to preach in a Baptist church. He delivered two excellent sermons, January 29, at the Regent Street Baptist Church. The pastor of that church who has now retired, congratulated him on his addresses and requested him to come again to visit them. This is the first occasion for Brother Rushton to preach outside our own church.

February 5 he spoke at Priestley Road in the morning, and following the sacrament service in the evening.

During his two weeks' stay in Birmingham Brother Rushton and Pastor Whalley did a great amount of visiting and attending meetings. He left Birmingham to keep an appointment in Leicester.

Pastor Whalley is conducting a study class for adults on Sunday afternoon, using the quarterly on Doctrine and Covenants as a subject. This is an elevating theme, and the minds of the students are enriched and enlightened. They are blessed as they read the sacred books of the Church of Christ. They realize that if they would help others they must first study to obtain a knowledge of the truth for themselves.

Prayer meetings continue in full force, and many blessings have been the result of worshipful communion with God.

Jonesport, Maine

Olive Branch

Jonesport Branch has three hundred and sixty-five members and a good number of the priesthood: Three elders, nine priests, four teachers, and six deacons.

Elder Newman Wilson is doing a wonderful work in this territory. Though he receives no money from church headquarters, he preaches just as much now as when he was under general church appointment. The Lord has blessed him with health and strength to carry on his work. He labors in the day-time and preaches at night, speaking from pulpits at Jonesport, South Addison, Corea, Indian River, and Kennebec.

Officers of the branch, elected at business meeting early in the year, are: President, W. E. Rogers; clerk, Cora Rogers; secretary, Chester Gray; treasurer, Millard Gray; chorister, Lewis Hinkley; organist, Georgia Wilson; publicity agent, Florence Davis, and correspondent, Orel Noyes. Brother Rogers chose as his counselors Newman Wilson and Arthur Rogers. Josiah Alley is superintendent of the Sunday school and has a reliable corps of officers to assist him.

Brother W. E. Rogers has served as branch president nineteen years, and at the business meeting in January the Saints took pleasure in electing him to the office for the twentieth time. He has had many experiences to show him that this is the work of God. Young people look to him for advice, feeling sure he is directing them rightly. At the sacrament services he is always ready to speak words of encouragement, telling the people of God's goodness to him.

The young people of the branch presented the pageant, "Follow the Star," on Christmas night. Because of an Atlantic fog storm on that night, the program was repeated the following Sunday, and in this way was enjoyed by a large number of people. Sister Jessie York coached the production.

The church of Beals is a part of Olive Branch, it being only a mile across the water from Jonesport. Saints there are doing a good work in the worthy cause. They were given a Sunday school quota which they successfully filled. Superintendent Josiah Alley, of Jonesport, assists the people at Beals in their meetings when it is possible for him to be there, also Brother W. E. Rogers helps them at their sacrament services the second Sunday of each month.

The church auditorium and vestry are newly-painted, the expenses being cared for by the ladies' aid society, and the work being done by Newman Wilson, Ed Wilson, and Lewis Hinkley. Sunday night, February 12, the auditorium was again opened to services after having been closed for several weeks. There was special music by the choir, and instrumental numbers were given by two violins, a flute, and a trombone.

Independence

"The Violin Maker of Cremona," a play given by a cast of Stone Church young people directed by Helen Page Brackenbury, was awarded first place in the one-act play contest which closed last Friday night. Second place was given by the judges to "King Row" from Walnut Park congregation; third to "The Man Who Came Back," Second Church; fourth, "Afterwards," Walnut Park, and fifth, "The Kettle Singing," Liberty Street.

For four nights during the week the contest drew a representative crowd from the nine congregations in Independence, filling the Stone Church Dining Hall to capacity. This is the second annual dramatic contest sponsored by the young people's council.

In addition to possession of a silver loving cup for a year, the winning cast will receive a trip to the young people's convention to be held at Lamoni in June, where the play will be presented as a part of the entertainment given there. Mrs. Brackenbury, the director, also directed the play for the Stone Church which won first place last year.

Council members and many others are happy at the spirit of good fellowship and real appreciation of each other that this contest has generated among the young workers in the congregations in Independence. In all, twelve plays were presented, three each night, and the casts included about eighty young people. Judges of the contest were Mrs. Leonard Lea and Miss Grace Rowe, of Independence, and Wallace Burlington, of Kansas City.

The eighteenth consecutive weekly meeting of the women in Independence occurred Monday, February 27, at the Stone Church. Workers of District 8 were in charge of the program and used as the theme of their playlet the poem President Elbert A. Smith wrote and read to the women several weeks ago, "Disarmament." They started with a meeting of the "Hammer Club" and hammered so fast and furiously that their hammers soon became hatchets. But after a happy awakening they "buried" their hatchets, and everyone helped to put in the sacrifice envelopes the sum of $135.35.

Each week these feminine enthusiasts think, "This is the best playlet yet," and each play teaches a helpful lesson. The women feel that in working together as they are, they are gaining something dollars and cents can never buy.

A series of special services for the young people of the city will be held the week of March 19 to 26, President Elbert A. Smith, the speaker. Young people in all congregations of the church in Independence have been asked to promote no local activities which will hinder anyone from attending these meetings. There will be a young people's banquet in the basement of the Auditorium the night of March 25.

Stone Church

"How are we taking our trials and troubles?" asked President F. M. Smith in his sacrament address at the Stone Church Sunday morning. "We ought to rejoice at our troubles, for to us is given the task of building and conserving the kingdom of God on earth, the biggest and best task in the world. We are our brother's keeper, and our lives should be dominated by the spirit of charity that comes to us from the love of Jesus in our hearts."

A large crowd was present to worship in this service of the Lord's Supper in charge of these officers: President Smith, Bishops G. L. DeLapp, R. T. Cooper, and J. Stanley Kelley, Elders C. Ed. Miller, H. G. Barto, and T. A. Beck. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist, accompanied the opening hymn, "Lead Thou Me On."

Because the weather was stormy the Sunday evening crowd was smaller than usual. Nevertheless those who were present enjoyed a unique service in charge of the women of the Stone Church, directed by Sister Charlotte Koehler, leader of women in Independence. Two playlets were chief attractions, "Burying the Hatchet," given by District 8, and "Tithing," by District 1B. There were also short talks by Sister Koehler and by Miss Olive Curtis. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge and offered the invocation and benediction.

This being sacrament Sunday, the Stone Church Choir assisted in the evening service, singing "Remember Now Thy Creator," by Carrie B. Adams; "O Gladsome Light," by N. Lindsay Norden, and "The Radiant Morn Hath Passed" by H. H. Woodward.

Second Church

Sunday, March 5, the sacrament service was conducted by Pastor William N. Inman. An organ prelude was played by Mrs. Gladys Inman. The invocation was by Elder John Miller. The talk on the oblation was also by Elder Miller. Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt talked on the sacrament.

Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt was in charge of the seven-thirty service. The opening prayer was given by Elder S. H. Fields. The choir, directed by Brother Earl Audet, sang "More Love to Thee." The speaker, Patriarch F. A. Smith, chose as his texts Matthew 16: 3 and Hebrews 9: 27, 28.

Enoch Hill Church

February 19, the church school paid tribute to the memory of Washington and Lincoln. Nellie Mae Kramer told a story of Washington and E. H. McKean discussed the life of Lincoln. C. S. Warren and Richard Bullard sang, "Faith of Our Fathers."

Pastor H. L. Barto was the morning speaker, and Elder C. E. Beal occupied the pulpit in the evening. Preceding the evening sermon the beginners' orchestra, conducted by Fred Mollison, gave a half hour of music.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The women's department gave a farewell dinner February 23, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Millard Pace for Mr. and Mrs. George E. Whitehead who are moving to Woodbine, Iowa. Brother Whitehead has been the teacher of the women's Doctrine and Covenants Class held every Thursday afternoon. Original songs composed by Mrs. C. S. Warren and W. T. Shakespeare, were sung in honor of Brother Whitehead.

Local men were the speakers February 26. At the church school hour Elder C. S. Warren gave a splendid talk on "The Word of Wisdom." At eleven o'clock the choir sang, "He Waits for Thee," and Richard Maloney sang, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," accompanied by Edmund Allen. J. E. Martin, the morning speaker, took his text from Romans 1: 16: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation."

Before the evening service a string orchestra played several numbers. Ruth Hays and Robert McDonald sang "Crown of Thorns." Elder W. T. Shakespeare was the speaker.

Quite a number from Enoch Hill attended the play contest at the Dining Hall last week. While Enoch Hill's play did not place in the contest, the workers feel they can count themselves among the winners as their experience will prove invaluable to them. Those taking part in the cast of "The Sunshine Lady," were Verla Waters, Ruth Hays, Richard Maloney, and Donald Winegar.

The theme of the church school worship hour March 5 was "God, the Unchangeable." Talks were given by Mesdames Allen, Young, and Warren, and the ladies' quintet sang, "The Man of God" and "Rejoice."

The house was filled for the communion service and the local priesthood occupied the platform. Pastor H. L. Barto talked on "Our Need of Faith in God."

Two children were blessed preceding the evening service, William Walter and James Arthur, small sons of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence B. Gow, of Chicago.

"Let Us Live Life and Feel the Value of It," was the theme of the evening sermon delivered by William Inman, pastor of Second Church.

Gudgell Park Church

The spirit of fellowship and helpfulness pervades the many activities of this local. During the past month the congregation has been benefited by sermon messages from Apostle F. H. Edwards, Elder John F. Sheehy, Bishop A. B. Phillips, Elder P. A. Sherman, Bishop J. S. Kelley, and Apostle J. F. Curtis.

The Wednesday night prayer meetings, held in the homes of the members, are given a good response by the congregation and are a profit and help to everyone.

Other weekly meetings include orchestra practice on Monday night, directed by Fred Mollison, of Walnut Park District; choir practice on Thursday, and the women's meeting on Friday.

The communion service for February was in charge of Pastor Walter Chapman and proved to be a spiritually uplifting hour. Many attended.

On a recent Monday night the Saints had a farewell party for Brother and Sister Johnson who are leaving to make their home at Mount Washington, Missouri.

The women of this district are quilting and holding class study. They have also worked on rugs and performed other helpful tasks. Recently at an all-day meeting at the church they helped Sister Sadie Burch observe her birthday.

Frederick Hurshman, fifteen years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Hurshman, who live eight miles southeast of Independence, died March 1, at his home, after a long illness of heart trouble. He leaves to mourn, his parents, five brothers: Bernard, Dwight, David, Guy, and Richard; three sisters: Mrs. Alta Donner, Mrs. Pearl Potter, and Ethabell. The funeral was conducted at the Liberty Street Church Saturday morning, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Spring Branch Church

The sacrament service for this district was in charge of Robert Fish, J. Andes, William Bath, and Alma Tankard, and was an inspiring service. Sisters Winogean Boyse and Irene Roberts sang, "Come, Holy Spirit."

Brother Leon Snow brought his junior orchestra to visit the evening church school, and they entertained with splendid numbers, and also assisted at the church service hour. Elder C. Ed. Miller, the speaker, chose for his text Revelation 21: 7: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." This, he termed the "greatest promise ever made." For his subject he chose "Our Hope Chest."

Last Friday night was play night for this congregation, the first evening of this kind enjoyed in a considerable time. Several games were played and contests were enjoyed. Refreshments completed a happy evening.

West Branch, Michigan

Pastor Conducts Successful Missionary Meetings

This congregation is glad to assure the Saints that the Lord has blessed its members. Due to the depression and to the widely scattered condition of the members, some having to come as far as sixteen miles to church, attendance is not what officers wish it could be, but workers are doing the best they can, and hope the future will be brighter.

The passing of two members has saddened the group, Brother William Hyslop and Sister Ida Mavis. Brother Hyslop was a good Saint and father, and sympathy goes to his widow and children. Sister Mavis was a motherly woman whose presence in the women's department in which she was a valiant worker, will be greatly missed. She left as her last testimony, "My last days are my best days," ringing in the people's ears and spurring them on to greater effort to live better.

Elder Joseph Priddy, pastor, is holding a two-week series of meetings at Butman, Michigan, having just completed a two-week series at the Numae School which was highly successful. One asked for baptism and there are several more prospects. Good attendance and interest on the part of those who previously scorned this message makes the members feel that the time is at hand when all must "reap while the day lasts." May God strengthen his people for their task and cause all of them to awake to the call of duty and prove their love by keeping his commandments.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

The February sacrament service was well attended, the adults partaking of the Lord's Supper in the upper auditorium while the primary department, under the leadership of Brother H. Gould, held communion downstairs.

That evening a beautiful ordination service took place. Brother Raymond Gerber was ordained a teacher by R. L. Bishop and Orville Helm, and Brother Mason Stobaugh was ordained a deacon by Joseph Stobaugh and James Stobaugh. The charge to the candidates was given by Pastor Will Bolinger, and the charge to the congregation by Brother H. Gould. Music for the evening was furnished by the choir, directed by Ross Moore, and Mrs. Hazel Moler and Miss Ina Hattey sang. Local and visiting priesthood members occupied the rostrum.

February 12, was Bishop's Day in Kansas City Stake, and Elder Amos Allen, of Independence, spoke in the morning and Elder George Mesley at night. The latter showed pictures of Australia and talked of the customs of the people of that country.

Forty-two members of the primary department, with their officers and teachers, attended a Valentine party in the lower auditorium of the church February 11. Sister Frank Mitchell is superintendent of the department, and her assistant is Irene Hunter.

The morning service of February 19, found the Saints observing Washington's birthday. There were readings by David Ryder and Pollyanna Bolinger. Clifford Siler, a primary boy, offered prayer. "America" and "Little Band of Knights Are We" were sung. The pastor spoke on "The Heroism of Clean Living."

In the evening following the number by the choir Sister Alice M. Burgess

sang, "Open the Gates of the Temple." Patriarch F. A. Smith was the speaker, and his theme was "Consider Perfectly the Ways in the Latter Times."

Elder R. S. Salyards spoke on the morning of last Sunday of the month, and the O. B. K.'s had charge of the evening service. Brother Milford Nace played a cello solo, and the sermon was by Elder Amos Allen. The O. B. K.'s will continue to contribute one service each month.

Columbus, Ohio

Hilltop Church

District President A. E. Anderton was the speaker Sunday evening, February 19, and also visited the Religio meeting.

The branch accepted the calls of T. Doughterty and R. Bohlen to the office of priest. These are promising young men.

Sister Welsh who has been seriously ill, has improved sufficiently to be at services.

February 22, Elders J. R. Grice and C. W. Clark, District President A. E. Anderton, Sister Fay Clark, and Brother and Sister Knagie were visitors at a spiritually uplifting prayer service.

Final arrangements have been made for a series of meetings by Elder J. R. Grice.

The women of the branch have held two successful potluck meals during the past month, presented entertainment features, and engaged in other helpful activities. They are boosters.

Speakers during the month besides the district president have been Pastor F. C. Welsh, Brother Ted Dougherty, and Elder Schafenberg.

The religio literary society continues good attendance and attractive classwork and program numbers. On one evening Brothers Jim Bohlen and Donald Bohlen gave talks on, "What I Think of Zion's Religio," and "What I Think of the Book of Mormon." Always there is a variety of musical numbers.

The Sunday school has generated much interest this year.

February 15 was a happy day for Hilltop congregation. Five candidates were baptized into the kingdom. Virginia Pinkerton, Harvey Pinkerton, and Thelma May Pinkerton and Janet Schmidt were baptized by Pastor Welsh, and Richard Earl Reece was baptized by C. H. Foster. Richard Reece is the son of a neighbor woman of Brother and Sister Foster, who died eleven years ago, leaving an infant son. The boy's people were not members of the church although his mother desired to be. Sister Foster has been a mother to the boy since his infancy, and Brother and Sister Foster have led him to take the step his mother wished him to take.

Hilltop members are grateful to the pastor and deacons of First Church for the use of their font and dressing rooms. The candidates were confirmed at the evening prayer service by Elders Schafenberg, J. R. Grice, and F. C. Welsh.

Conference Minutes

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—District conference met at Brooklyn, New York, February 11 and 12. Business session was held Saturday evening in charge of Henry L. Livingston and Ephraim Squire. Statistical reports from all branches were read, showing a net gain in the district in the last six months of twenty, and a membership of one thousand, five hundred and thirty-six. Reports were read from the various district officers and from the reunion committee. The minutes of the previous conference were approved. A recommendation that William Froyd, of Washington, District of Columbia, be ordained to the office of elder, was approved by the district, after having been approved by the apostle-in-charge and the First Presidency. The place and time of the next conference were left in the hands of the district presidency. The following officers were elected: District president, H. L. Livingston; counselors, Thomas Jones, and Ephraim Squire; musical director, Leroy Squire; director of Religious Education, E. Walter Lewis; treasurer, Bishop John Zimmermann, and secretary, Elizabeth Teal. Sunday was well occupied by priesthood meeting, church school, preaching by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, prayer and testimony meeting and preaching by Henry L. Livingston. There were quite a number of visitors present, mostly from Philadelphia, in spite of the fact that the East was digging itself out from the worst snowstorm of several years.

HEALTH versus SICKNESS

I fully believe God wants us all to be healthy. He has no joy in our sufferings. He does all He can that we might have JOY. He even gave us words of wisdom in Latter Day revelation.

We are getting wonderful letters from Saints, even from Canada. A part of letter just received:

"Our little girl has suffered constipation since birth; have tried all kinds of medicine; we find Phosfo the best yet. Send us five pounds at once. W. B. Simpson, Webb, Saskatchewan, Canada."

Constipation is due to tissue starvation, when you do not get the phosphate to feed the Nerves and the raw mineral salts to clean the blood and bowels, the blood becomes acid and the gall duct congested, and it's the gall that regulates the action of the bowels.

Why not send us a dollar and get a can, enough for a month; or better yet, send $2.00 and get three cans. Why not interest a friend or Saint?

The Pigeonhole

The Voice of Conscience

Not long ago a young man was asked to teach a class of boys. He had been enjoying very much the association of a Sunday school class of his own age, and was unwilling to leave it. He protested, as so many do when requested to teach, that he was not trained for the task.

The superintendent who had asked him gave up and started looking elsewhere for a teacher, though without success. Two days later the telephone rang and the young man was on the wire. "I haven't had a moment's peace since I turned down that request to teach. Something kept telling me that I ought to do it, and I have been uncomfortable ever since. If the job is still open I want to take it."

Superintendents everywhere in the church fervently wish that more people like this young man would heed the voice of conscience and consent to teach.

When we reflect how great the need is, and consider our responsibility for the lives of children and young people lost to the church, we should be more willing to help in its teaching tasks.

Bombs and Brickbats

Yesterday the Pigeon limped along the window sill with a wrecked and disconsolate appearance. There was a gap in his tail where five feathers were missing. He had a splint and bandages on one leg. Apparently some buckshot had passed through one wing. And there was a nick in his bill. "What happened to you?" I asked him as I adjusted my earrings. "I attended the pastors' meeting." "Apparently they got tough with you." "Not only tough, but violent," he mourned. "What was the matter?" "That item a couple of weeks ago on Wallflowers and Cactuses. They didn't like the last paragraph." "Well, you've been trying to attract attention for three months. At last you've got it. Don't you like it?" "No," he replied sadly, "not that kind!"

"The other night at business meeting," said the pigeon, cocking a fascinated eye at my shiny nose, "I heard a remark that interested me immensely. One man, replying to the argument of another asked the question: 'Why is it that the man who has failed in his own business or in his own home affairs, is always the most ready to tell you how to conduct a successful business or run a successful home?' Do you know I've wondered a lot about that too. Why is it?"

His Mansion

He dropped a nickel in the plate,
Then meekly raised his eyes;
Glad the weekly rent was paid
For a mansion in the skies.

Our Project, 1933

5.—Supporting the Church

Perhaps we may think that it ought not to be so, but the church has to keep up a continuous effort to get a part of the membership to bear its fair share of the cost of operation. All who are converted ought to be willing to do their duty without urging. Some support the church as consistently as they go about their daily work, or caring for their homes and families.

We need to realize that for all of us to enjoy church privileges while only a few pay the bills is unfair. We need to realize that Zion can never be built by people who are willing to share the benefits without sharing the expenses and responsibilities. We need to realize that we must, somehow, effect a change of heart among us which will make such inequality impossible. Only so can we ever hope to arrive at a spiritual condition for the accomplishment of our ideals. A part of our task is first to obey the financial law ourselves, and then do what we can to teach others, both young and old, in every branch in the church and among isolated members, to do likewise. It is a task for branch officers and organizations, for teachers, and for fathers and mothers. The future of the church depends upon whether all members will accept an equal moral responsibility.

The Presiding Bishopric are ready to furnish full information to all who wish to comply with the financial law, and to furnish the proper forms to aid in this work. Or one may consult with the local bishop or bishop's agent. The means of obedience to the financial law are accessible to all.

For those of limited means, the plan of putting aside a part of every week's income has proved to be effective and practical in operation. If we are not careful, the sums that should be paid as tithing will be spent for little extras, and when the end of the year comes we can not pay what we ought. Let us do our part that we may aid in the success of the church.

L. L.

"Our task is to evangelize the world and Zionize the church."—President Frederick M. Smith.

Our Project 1933

We must do these things, and teach others to do them:

1. Spiritualize our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.
2. Prepare ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.
3. Attend church regularly, and help maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.
4. Give willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.
5. Support the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

A Warning

Be Cautious of Hasty Plans

Herald readers and Saints generally have been and are interested in Zion and its development. In fact, since the foundation of the church in 1830 there has been a steady forward-looking to Zion, her redemption, establishment, and development. With this forward looking has been longing and yearning to sense and see operative the conditions of the social ideals we think of as clustering about the idea of Zion. With this longing we are prone, at times, to chafe under the delays we think are keeping us from entering this condition. This in turn may give rise to an impatience which disposes us to join hands with almost any movement among or organization within the ranks of the church members which holds any promise of moving in that direction. Furthermore, the pressure under which we find ourselves because of untoward industrial, financial, social, and I might even say political conditions, and realizing how much better conditions would be under or in the midst of the safety of Zion, engenders such a desire to do something, and do something now, that zeal may run away with judgment and lead us to run without tidings. Here we should remember several important things. The voice of divine instruction has warned us repeatedly that in our movement towards Zion the way must be carefully and prayerfully prepared before us. This whole Zionic movement, so far as we are concerned, is a church one. That is to say, that the dynamic, the motivation, is a spiritual force religiously generated. So, in a church organization where law and order prevail and must dominate, upon certain definite officers are laid responsibilities in initiation and direction.

This means that in Zionic movements, however much upon the Saints, the members, must and will rest the responsibility of furnishing the labor, the toil, the means, the wealth to carry on the task of "redeeming Zion," they have been admonished repeatedly to listen to the advice, counsel, and direction of certain officers. This counsel and advice must always be sought. Failure to do so lays us open to imposition by zealots we have mentioned. And it is really strange how some emotional zealot can stir people up and make them forget the very fundamentals of their philosophy, their religion and even common sense.

Now lest I may have obscured the purpose of this article, let me put it a little more plainly. Upon the Bishopric of the church has been laid heavy responsibility in the development of Zion, and when there are presented to the Saints plans for business organization, cooperative schemes, or industrial concerns, purporting or claiming to foster Zionic developments, the Saints before giving support to the movement should be careful to ascertain whether or not the proposed plan has received the indorsement, or support, or sanction of those officers of the church upon whom the law has laid the responsibility we have mentioned. For the Saints to fail in this is to endanger our whole Zionic movement. For as we approach Zion and her full reality we shall see many efforts made to frustrate the purpose of the Lord by inducing the Saints to give their support to other leaders, even among the Saints, than the law has indicated.

In recent years we have seen the misery brought about by the claims and efforts of self-appointed leaders who are impelled by inordinate ambition and misguided zeal.

This warning to the Saints will be heeded by the wise. F. M. S.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop

W. T. Wellman, who was ordained a Bishop recently, has been appointed to take over the work of the Bishopric in the Northeastern Nebraska District, succeeding Carl T. Self. Brother Wellman will also take over the work of the Southwestern Iowa District, succeeding Bishop W. R. Adams. Brother Adams, however, is still Bishop of the Northwestern Iowa District.

We take pleasure in commending Brother Wellman to the Saints of these two districts and trust that he may receive their loyal support in this phase of church work.

We request that the solicitors of the Northeastern Nebraska District, and the Southwestern Iowa District forward their March reports to Bishop Wellman, 115 South Thirty-fifth Street, Alsatian Apartments Number 1, Omaha, Nebraska.

A Pastor and Young People's Organization

By C. G. Mesley
President O. B. K. Council, Kansas City Stake

IN HIS Labels and Libels Dean Inge wrote: "Nothing can be more futile than to try to fill rows of narrow-necked, unsorted bottles by throwing a bucket of water over them. If we assist the young and thoughtful men and women by our preaching and ministry we fail to reach those of our hearers who are neither young nor thoughtful."

The last sentence reversed is equally true.

The Lord knew that even the bottle with the narrowest neck can be filled if an individual rather than a bucket approach is made and so he provided for a unique organization of priesthood pastors to visit, teach and share experiences with each individual member of the church.

WHEN ORGANIZATION is being considered the primary concern of the pastor should be to have this divine organization functioning.

In addition to this, the church school has been divided into three workable age-groups for the better functioning of group "bottle filling." These three divisions—children, young people, and adults—are complementary age groups. For well-rounded development they need the fellowship and association of each other in their church activities and services. Complete segregation of any one of these divisions would do untold harm to the individual members of the group and to the branch and church as a whole. Youth and age must work together to assure the continuity of our church culture.

TO PLAN FOR THIS, the proper functioning of the pastor's cabinet provided for by the church school plan is most important. This cabinet is composed of the pastor, the director of religious education, and the supervisors of the adult, young people, and children's divisions. The particular responsibility of these three supervisors is to study the real needs of the people in their division and then see that these needs are adequately provided for by the total program of the local branch. In its meetings this cabinet holds the scales of church unity and growth, and in all their planning it becomes their duty to see that each age group has the teaching, activity, and experience that will assure a well-rounded development in the gospel.

In this cabinet planning, young people are no more important than adults nor should children be shoved into some dark basement corner and be expected to find pleasure in the church classes. The needs of all these groups can best be presented and discussed in the workers' conference suggested on page 18 of the Church School Handbook. (Fellow "bottle fillers," this is a good book to read over twice a year just to see where we are failing to use the splendid organization we now have available.)

This may be a somewhat lengthy introduction to a discussion on young people's organization but in our young people's convention meetings we need to have a true perspective of the place of any such organization in the total program of the church. The church school plan already adopted by the church in General Conference provides for all the organization necessary to meet the needs of our young people. It is so designed that if we work out its program we will be able to avoid the dangers that other churches face today with their independent young people's organization, often getting the church cart or wagon wheel ahead of the horse. Therefore, our convention discussion on organization should center in the young people's division of the church school and until the program suggested proves inadequate we can well direct our efforts in the organization there outlined.

A YOUNG PEOPLE'S DIVISION CABINET is provided for in this plan. In extremely large branches this may be composed of the young people's supervisor, the heads of the intermediate, senior and young people's departments, and a representative from each organized class. In the small and average-sized church all the young people could meet to elect three or four representative young people who, with the young people's supervisor as advisor, could plan for a well-balanced program of activities that would meet the needs of the young people who elected them. Such a cabinet will provide several of the young people with leadership responsibilities and still others with the opportunities of temporary or permanent committee leadership. Given some opportunities for training, sympathetic adult counsel and contact with suggestive church-centered program material, this cabinet can plan an endless array of worthy activities that will lead the members of the young people's division to discover the joys of prayer, service, honest recreation and cultural expression. We may want to give its organized activity-expression program, another name but call it what we will, in its essential work it should be the young people's division of the church school functioning to do the thing for which it was created.

In any such a group the question of open or restricted membership is bound to come up. While standards and ideals are helpful guides for such a group, its chief purpose should be to reach out and interest every young person in the branch and its membership limitations should be no stricter than the recognized requirements for membership in the church.

THE O. B. K.'S IN KANSAS CITY STAKE have worked in harmony with the ideals outlined here for the past three years, and while the success of its program in local churches has largely depended on the quality of the leadership provided by that church, the plan has worked.

Here are some questions:

What proportion of the average church's program of services and activities is designed to meet the particular needs of the young people's group? Remember that too much is as bad as too little. The branch needs a balanced ration. How can the present church school organization better function to meet the needs of its members in this division? All the actual organization does is to sort out the rows of bottles into three well defined groups. Filling these bottles is only accomplished when the organization functions to adjust its methods to meet the different needs (neck size) of these groups. What part does the young people's division play in the program planning of the local church? What organization of the young people's division of the church is provided for in the present church school program? How can young people themselves function under this program? What opportunities for development, culture, service and real spiritual experience can the average branch offer its young people? Where the local church is not providing these opportunities what approach can the young people themselves make towards remedying this condition? Should there be any restrictions for membership in the organized activities of the young people's division?

Let us frankly discuss these questions at the young people's leadership convention.

This is a page for youth. May we hear from some of the "bottles" themselves—the "bucket throwers" do not have a monopoly on ideas for discussion.

NEWS BRIEFS

Many Saints in Earthquake Area Reported "Safe"

Authentic word of the safety of Saints in Los Angeles and Santa Ana, California, reached Independence Saturday and Sunday. Considerable anxiety was experienced at the centerplace during the hours immediately following the most violent and destructive temblors, for the safety of the many Saints living in that region and the welfare of traveling missionaries. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was in Los Angeles at the time of the disaster; Patriarch Albert Carmichael in Northern California District. There is still some anxiety regarding the fate of Saints at Long Beach.

Making a radical shift in his plans, President Frederick M. Smith will leave Independence today or tomorrow, going directly to the Pacific Coast. His first stop will be San Francisco where he will consider matters of church business relating to the interests of Northern California District. As soon as possible, he plans to travel south into the quake-stricken area of the State.

Elder N. C. Enge Passes in Death

From Arlington, Florida, comes news of the death of Elder N. C. Enge, one-time missionary in the church, February 27. Brother Enge was born September 27, 1850, and was ordained a priest in 1894, and an elder a year later. His first mission was to the State of Washington. He was a man of faith and missionary zeal. Many remember his labors for the church.

Eastern Colorado Makes Decisions

This summer instead of the district reunion Eastern Colorado will hold three three-day meetings, one at La Junta, another at Denver, and the third at Wray, so as to reach all the people of the district. This was the decision reached by the district conference and young people's convention, held at Denver, February 24-26.

President F. M. McDowell and Apostle R. S. Budd attended this conference-convention, teaching respectively, "The Work and Service of the Church," and "Doctrinal Beliefs and Fundamentals."

It was at this convention that the district young people were organized under the leadership of Brother McDowell. The immediate objective of their organization is to see that they are well represented at the Youth Conference and Leadership Convention at Lamoni in June.

Executive Committee, High Priests' Quorum Meeting

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the High Priests' Quorum recently brought John F. Sheehy, Ray Whiting, Ward A. Hougas, Blair Jensen, and George Mesley together in Kansas City. The committee studied "Stake Organization in the Church," and heard an excellent discussion by Apostle F. Henry Edwards on that subject.

Elder Swen Swenson Celebrates Eightieth Birthday

On Inauguration Day, March 4, Elder Swen Swenson, known to the church throughout the United States and Canada, observed his eightieth birthday at his home in Independence. Born at Helsinborg, Sweden, March 4, 1853, Brother Swenson was baptized at Cedar Springs, Missouri, in 1887, by I. N. White. He has served many years as missionary of the church, being ordained an elder in 1888, and a seventy in 1898.

Even after his superannuation in 1920, Brother Swenson continued missionary labors in the North Central States. For a long period he was a stalwart and dependable on the General Conference floor. His spirit of courage and cheer has helped all his friends. Brother Swenson is a regular church attendant when his health permits.

Many Activities for Council Bluffs Members

Among the variety of organizations are the Musical Arts Club; the young people who are organizing a Tenth Legion unit; the Harmony Group, and two chapters of Temple Builders—the Wa Ka Pa's and the Wo He Lo's. The adult and young people's divisions of the church school are contesting in church attendance during March and April, and the priesthood are planning to compete in a visiting program during April and May. Then they all come together for "Family Night" the first Friday of the month.

Following the Master

By Marion F. Cooper

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

Some one has said: "Life should be a search after truth and beauty and an endeavor to make both contribute to the richness of life." Today we find ourselves deeply steeped with almost insurmountable, mountainous problems. Each day that we press forward toward our goal in life, whatever it may be, it seems that the problems of life, (the very problem of life itself) becomes more difficult. We often wonder if we are, after all, searching for truth and beauty in life and whether we are making an endeavor to make these two very essential elements contribute to the richness of our life and to the lives of others.

Two thousand years ago there was sounded a challenge, by one whose life was bound by the greatest degree of simplicity, and the truths which he professed, taught, and practiced, have come to us today, as eternal truths. The scripture lesson which we have used was spoken by the lowly Nazarene, and it challenges the very best that is within every human being. "Follow me," were his dynamic words. He spoke as one having authority, and truly enough he possessed authority from "on high."

Consider the promises held out to those who followed this man called Jesus. We find that there were no promises of material wealth or prosperity. There were no promises of high honor. Rather they were to learn the real meaning of adversity and trouble. They were to learn by actual experience that "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

That call, "Follow me," has resounded through two thousand years and has called forth some kind of response each time. Not all those who have responded have understood the call. There have been some failures. For example the great crusades of the middle ages, the religious wars and persecutions of the different centuries. Yes, they were carried out in response to the call, "Follow me," but only as the follower of that time understood the call. Not all the projects started in the name of the Master, are truly religious in quality and purpose. Not all those who carried these projects forth are able to be regarded as his sheep. But let us also say that all those who have responded to the call, can not be classed as failures. There are many noble men and women who have endeavored to hear his voice, and they have followed Him. The call is just as insistent today as it was two thousand years ago. "Follow me," still has its magnetic appeal.

Because of the social and economic unrest that we find ourselves in today, we would do well to heed the call of the Master of men. He alone has the plan which will heal the severe wounds which have been made in our social and economic structure. He will lead us to a fuller and more abundant life. Many times the path will lead men into the valleys of depression of soul and then again the path of the Master will lead to the mountain tops, but always it will lead one forward toward that goal, "a more abundant life."

In response to the call of the Master one must possess courage and determination. The rocks in the pathway over which our master may lead us, may be jagged and rough, but, "My sheep hear my voice and they follow me." Jesus did not find the way easy. Instead he found Calvary. He mounted the cross as a martyr to his cause and was removed from it as the Savior of men.

There is no promise that the path will be easy for those who follow the Master, but there is a promise that the Comforter will be theirs, as well as eternal life.

I am sure that we all wish that the effectiveness of our lives should be measured by the richness of our influence in the lives of others and that we might find the gauge, measuring the effectiveness of our life, at the very peak, as was true in the life of the Master.

A large proportion of the world's greatest statesmen, painters, writers, actors, poets, and musicians came from the middle class. Shakespeare, Milton, Keats, Dickens, Hugo, Balzac, Whitman, Schiller, Beethoven, Handel, Gainsborough, Corot, Columbus, Lincoln, Booth, Patti, Jenny Lind, Edison, Pasteur, and a host of other remarkable persons somehow emerged from the stodgy Middle Class.

In this same despised class originated such great historical progressions as the Christianizing of the Western World, The Renaissance, the Reformation, the abolition of American slavery, the origin of printing, the spread of popular education, pioneering and exploration, the growth of medical science. —Selected.

Facing the Facts

By Evan A. Fry

"Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord."—Lamentations 3: 40.

OF ALL THE PEOPLE that we hate to have around, I think the pessimist would easily head the list. Everything looks black to him. Things are fast getting no better; the whole world is wrong; the younger generation is going to the "demnition bow-wows"; the government is going straight to the devil; the church is dead and doesn't know enough to lie down and quit. Fifteen minutes with such an individual is enough to give a normal man a headache, nervous indigestion, and an attack of the blues which it may take days and days to throw off. We shun the incurable pessimist as we would shun a man with smallpox—and for equally good and obvious reasons.

But on the other hand, there is such a thing as an insufferable optimist. Or, as one man of my acquaintance put it several years ago (and he was a man who occasionally flavored his sayings with a pungent and barbed piece of profanity): "There's a difference between an optimist and a blankety-blank fool."

You are doubtless personally acquainted with several persons of the type he meant. They always go around with a beaming face, lighted up with an expansive, if sometimes rather vacuous grin, and their motto seems to be, "Everything will come out all right." They go blithely through life, refusing even to take proper precautions or to look facts in the face, until some catastrophe which could have been avoided just as easily as not by means of a little forethought strikes them low, and because of their lack of thought and preparation, they can not even strike back.

Let me illustrate. If I tried to fly across the Atlantic in a worn-out, second-hand plane, knowing nothing of navigation or mechanics, and not even taking the trouble to estimate the amount of gasoline I should need on the journey, all the optimism in the world would not land me safely in Europe. If I try to go over Niagara Falls in an ordinary wooden barrel, all the optimism in the world is not going to keep me from being picked out of the rapids below in little pieces, if at all. If I go on day after day living the kind of life which pleases me best at the moment, with no thought of the good of my fellow man, or no thought of where I shall spend eternity, all the optimism in the world can not keep me from suffering the consequences of my selfishness in the hell of my own making.

A WISE MAN looks facts squarely in the face, even if they be hard, cruel, disagreeable facts. He takes facts into consideration in laying his plans for the future and in determining his course of action. If he has an unquenchable faith, based on a knowledge of all the facts, including the disagreeable ones; if he insists after a careful and prayerful analysis that everything will come out all right even in the face of tremendous odds, then I should call that man an optimist. But the blankety-blank fool of my statement above rushes blindly and ignorantly ahead, refusing to face facts or analyze the situation. His unquenchable optimism can not rightly be called optimism at all; it is plain foolhardiness.

I wonder how many church members are willing to face cold, hard, disagreeable facts about themselves? It is eminently right and proper that Christians, especially, should be the possessors of an unquenchable optimism and faith that everything will come out all right; that Christ and his principles of living shall yet hold sway in the world. But what do you think of the church member who shuts his eyes to the fact that he is a lazy, selfish, disagreeable, sensuous sinner; who goes blithely on his way, content in his belief that everything will come out all right? What do you think of ministers who see constantly dwindling congregations before them each Sunday, but who maintain that the church must be all right—that it is better than it has ever been before, and that the people of the wicked world are to blame? What do you think of churches and church congregations who sit back complacently to listen to stories about Jesus, and who repeat with Pippa that God's in his heaven and all's right with the world, while politics and graft run riot; while nations still vie with each other in competitive armaments (for defense only, of course!) while crime fills our penitentiaries to overflowing; while the specter of economic fear and want and oppression grows more ominous day by day; while men starve to death in the midst of plenty and the lavish opulence of rich men who revel in the ill-gotten gains of their legal piracies; while automobiles take a toll of lives every year greater than the total number of lives lost in the Civil War—oh, but why go on? It's only too easy to point out faults in society and in other individuals.

Are you facing the facts as an individual? Am I?

Preach the Gospel

By M. J. Crowley

"Behold I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now." So spake the Lord in 1834 concerning the great objective of his people, Zion.

To the modern mind, saturated to the point of intoxication by the wonders and miracles of scientific research, the above is hard to conceive. Zion redeemed in an age that knew not the electric light, the motor car, the railroad, the telegraph, the radio and a thousand other wonders of the inventive mind? In a day when psychology, biology, chemistry, metaphysics and such were still lying in their beds of obscurity awaiting the call to arise and shine? A call that was to come from as yet unborn generations.

Did God's people fail because of lack of these or are they but the high lights in man's beclouded vision in his search for happiness? Are they essential to the building of character, to a knowledge of God and to the consummation of all things? "Let God be true though every man be made a liar."

What sayest thou, sons of Aaron and Melchisedec, are these the paraphernalia of our profession?

"I come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly," said the Great Teacher. And when he graduated from this, which to him was a university of hard knocks, his parting words were: "All power is given to me both in heaven and on earth." "Knowledge is Power."

The scientific findings of the past and present are essential to and underlie the comforts of our present-day existence. They are the fundamental principles of our twentieth century life. They express in academic terms, too complex for the lay mind, man's eternal search for the Great First Cause.

Men of intellectual might, those who have transcended all others in their quest for truth, readily admit that they have not as yet passed from the primary grades in this great academy of research.

Great personalities, such as Lodge, Einstein, and Millikan, are made to feel how meager their equipment as they contemplate the immensity of their task. Yet others, who are still struggling in the kindergarten of scientific research, men whose inflated ego narrow the horizon of their intellectual perspective, have formed hasty conclusions and lay the cause of our wondrous existence to blind chance.

They are like boys of adolescent age who think they have the world by the tail, the young graduate as he steps for the last time through the portals of his Alma Mater, his sheepskin tucked safely under his arm, looking for other worlds to conquer.

The findings of scientific men help us in a measure to contemplate the glory of God. The heavens are festooned with the handiwork of his majesty. The electrical energy which seems to permeate the universe but bespeaks his kindly consideration for the race, and obedience to "Seek and ye shall find" has enabled us to harness this great force and make it our servant.

In the field of medicine these men have proved that God in his mercy and patience has provided a lesser law for those who will not react to a higher one. As a result, much pain and suffering have been alleviated and the longevity of the race has been increased.

After all, Saints, these wonderful men are but dealers in finite things, things which in themselves have no life, therefore, are not capable of expressing life. The proton, electron, the atom, their relationship to the mass and their functions therein will not reveal the Deity to the searcher after truth.

When we contemplate the strides science has made and its many gifts to the race in the last one hundred years, it is hard to believe—even had we no other witness—that the grave is the end of the road. It is hard to conceive that those who have gone on before who have played their part in making these wonders possible shall reap no reward for their labor.

What a blessing education has been to the race, what a wonderful superstructure it has erected but great as it is it falls far short of its mission; being founded on the shifting sands of uncertainty. Is there a God?

The youth of our church should be thoroughly grounded in the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the law of life, before they are permitted to enter the halls of higher learning to add to their virtue, knowledge.

No foundation can any man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ and any institution that is not built upon that rock will, through the erosion of criticism and infidelity to ideals, sink, as did the pagan institutions of the past, into the outer darkness of utter oblivion.

Men of the ministry, are our children being instructed in the fundamentals of our religion which are found in the Bible and Book of Mormon? Do our adult Saints have the distinctive feature of our

"In Whom Shall We Put Our Trust?"

By Ruth M. Kirby

NO DOUBT at some time in the life of every truly thinking person, he must stop to face squarely the question, "In whom shall we put our trust?" In the living God and Jesus Christ, or in the philosophers and metaphysics, or in materialism?

The world has chosen the philosophers. It has preferred the hopeless outlook of materialism to the brighter doctrine of the gospel of Christ. Is it because philosophy has outtaught Christianity? The philosophers believe so. But the Christian, by virtue of the spirit of truth which is promised to the followers of Christ to lead and guide them into all truth, knows better. The human mind can never attain, by its own merit, the height and the depth and the breadth of the Infinite.

It has been argued, no doubt with good intent, that faith can not be profitably subjected to reason. Indeed, the philosophers, in their attempt to sidestep the pitfalls of Christian apostasy, have endeavored to keep as far away from faith and religion as possible. They have gone to the extreme of refusing to look at but one side of the question. Scientific men that they have claimed to be, they have denounced, without testing, the true doctrine of Christ. And the unthinking world, endeavoring to appear to think, has followed them. Must reasoning inevitably lead one to such conclusions as atheism and materialism? God himself sounds the challenge. "Come, let us reason together, saith the Lord."

Is it, as they have charged, because the idea of Deity is a haven for the simple, that philosophers have rejected the God of Israel along with the pagan gods and have denied the divinity of Christ? Or may there not be other reasons?

First, it can not be any wonder that these men, living in days of brutality and bloodshed, seeing the poor demonstration of Christianity made by the Roman Church all during the Middle Ages, should seek elsewhere for the hope of the race. Even our contemporary philosophers have never seen a concrete example of the full workings of the doctrine of Christ. If, or when, this is accomplished, and only then, will many of our truth-seekers catch the ray of light that will reveal to them the truth of its Divine Origin.

Second, the philosophers did not have a true conception of God's manner of communicating with his children. They held that the Bible must be all eternal truth or all fable. It is true that no open-minded person can read the Old Testament and believe in a just and merciful Divinity unless he has a conception of the true nature of God while he is reading it. If the philosophers could have understood that God has dealt with us even as we deal with our children, according to our capacity and understanding, their understanding of the Bible would have been far clearer. We do not instruct a child at one year of age in the same way we do when it has arrived at the age of fifteen. Yet through all our training has been the one ideal of perfect manhood or womanhood. So has God dealt with us. He commanded us to work out our own salvation and he has helped us like a father helping his child with its school work, and I think we can see that it would not be profitable to the child for the father to solve all its problems. Our heavenly parent, like us, wants self-development.

We will take for an example the ancient Israelites. We can not conceive of a God who would command a people to go into a land and slay the inhabitants. Rather we would expect him to ask them to preach to them and labor with them. Yet we can not deny that God worked with and through the ancient Israelites according to their capacity to receive. It was this simple principle which caused God to give the Israelites a temporal, rather than a spiritual, law.

Another stumblingblock for our philosophers was the unjust religious idea of a system of rewards and punishments. Later revelation has made it clear to us, however, that the Bible does not teach a system of rewards and punishments as understood by the majority of Christendom, but that each individual will continue to live in whatever condition he is prepared to enjoy. After all, the highest joy comes from within and can be of none but our own making. How much more just and reasonable is this than the old conception of heaven and hell. Indeed, we as a people fully agree with Spinoza that "Blessedness is not the reward of virtue, but virtue itself."

In short, one can not help but feel that if such men as Spinoza had possessed the clarifying knowledge of latter-day revelation they might have ceased to be philosophers and have become apostles.

For the philosophy of Christ is sound. In it we find no contradictions, while in the philosophy of men there are many. No one man's philosophy has ever fully agreed with itself. This is one test of truth, even as we prove our simplest problems in arithmetic. Moreover, the philosophy of man, in-

Can a Man be Trusted ?

HOW IT ALL STARTED

A group of good-looking and lively girls, the Happy Half Dozen, just reaching the age of romance and beginning to think of homes and careers for themselves, are gathered around Polly Nelson, and recognize her as a sort of spiritual counselor and intellectual guide. A part of Polly's almost perfect background is Carrol, a little golden-haired cherub of a son, and Brad, a husband with a fascinating eye. Into Polly's home comes Brad's mother, critical, sharp-tongued, and gossipy. Polly, loaded with responsibility and enmeshed in the tangle of other people's affairs, can not extricate herself. On the same Sunday that Brad goes on an all-day hunting trip, Polly, sitting alone in church, receives a note telling of a rumor concerning a divorce between her and Brad. Heartsick, she blames Mother Nelson's wagging tongue. On a certain "wrong-side-out Saturday," Brad comes near an open quarrel with his mother, and later gives Polly a wrench of disappointment by missing a dinner she had planned hoping to lessen the breach between them. Meanwhile, unknown to Polly, Brad's name is being linked with that of Echo Duncan, one of the Happy Half Dozen.

Chapter 11

Valentine Revelation

NEVER had the Happy Half Dozen enjoyed such a Valentine party. It confirmed beyond all question their belief that as an entertainer Polly Nelson simply could not be excelled. There she stood in the midst of her heart-bedecked home, smiling a greeting to everyone as they entered. She looked even more slender and girlish than usual tonight, they thought, as she waited for them at the door in her gown of turquoise blue.

And the crowd was just the right size. There were Arthea and Pete, Cora and her Charley, the Bris twins and their dates, Edith and John, and last to come were Echo and Postelle. There were shadows tonight under Echo's blue eyes, and her clinging black velvet dress gave her a maturity far beyond that of the other girl guests. There was no denying it, Echo was an alluring creature.

As they entered Polly and Brad tied each couple together by means of strings fastened to each wrist and overlapped once with their partner's fastening. After they had freed themselves, there were games.

The study didn't look like the study at all. Brad's desk was camouflaged with red and white crepe paper. A gay scarf was draped over his big leather chair. Red geraniums in the window seat. It was a veritable Valentine hide-out. Who but Polly would have thought of making it such?

There were guessing contests, puzzles, and secrets. The guests raced to make Valentine hats for each other. They tussled with affectionate telegrams. How much fun they seemed to be having! thought Polly. Young, full of fun, expectant of what life held for them, how she did love them every one! Now they were hunting partners for another game by matching hearts and verses.

Brad seemed to be having as happy a time as any of them. His eyes were alight with a boyishness that seldom shone there any more. Polly was convinced that Brad was working too hard, and that he was worried, too. After all, he was only twenty-eight—why shouldn't he enjoy being with the crowd and sharing in the parties?

"Who's got one to match this?" sang out some one: "I'm hunting a pilot for my Loveland Balloon."

"Is this yours, Edith?" It was Brad's voice, and he was calling across the length of the room, "Queen of my Heart, with your great brown eyes, I'm waiting for you to hand me your sceptre"?

"No, indeed, I'm not hunting a king o' my kitchen or anything like that this season," she tossed him an answer. "Mine, according to this, must be something about a car—the crank I'll bet."

As she turned to receive a gay sally from Marial Bris, Polly missed the movement Echo made toward Brad. The next she knew they were playing hearts together, and winning. They passed one couple and then another. It was going well. The flush on Echo's cheeks deepened. Polly glanced at Postelle whose partner was Cora. He, too, was working hard at the game. But no need to worry about Postelle. Wherever he went he was counted the hostess' friend. Always he played well the game of the entertainer or the entertained.

And then Polly went to the kitchen to see that the jello hearts were holding their own against the heat of the house, that the cream was properly beaten. She lingered beside the long white table in the dining room decorated with candles, flowers, and place cards she herself had made. Here and there she touched a nut cup into more exact position. She loved the table this way with her red-stemmed goblets and her cut-glass wedding dishes. What was the joy of having beautiful things unless you shared them with your friends?

Back in the kitchen again she found that the icing on the fancy Valentine cakes she had made was just the right degree of softness. A trip up the back stairway assured her that Carrol was sleeping soundly and that he was well-covered.

THE DUTCH clock in the kitchen struck ten-thirty before she was able to return to the scene of festivity, but Edith was in charge of the games and so Polly was free to perform her other hostessly duties. Rather than disturb the players in the living room, she slipped through the hall and was about to open the back door into the study. It was already open two inches, and a line of soft light played through it into the dark hall. But more than light was coming through that crack, voices engaged in earnest conversation:

"But, Brad, we can't go on this way. You've got to tell her!" Probably the voice carried a little more than the speaker intended. It was Echo's.

"Tell her what, dear child?"

"Don't 'dear child' me, Brad. You know what I mean—tell her that you don't love her any more."

Polly was stunned, appalled. It couldn't be true! This right in her own home! It was too much like a movie and a ten-cent movie at that.

"Tell Polly? Are you crazy? I—"

"But you told me you loved me. Why do you hesitate?" burst in the girl. "You can't love us both at once. We've got to straighten it out. And I tell you, Brad, Postelle suspects something. He's been watching me like a hawk tonight." Crystal eardrops twinkling in the half-light, accentuated the girl's agitation. She was leaning against the back of the big chair. Brad was standing near her.

"Sit down, my dear." Brad's tone was patient. But Echo did not move. He went on: "I've made a fearful mistake, Echo. I guess we all do some time or other; still that doesn't excuse my thoughtlessness. I'm a selfish beast! You see, dear, it's something hard to explain. If you were married, you would understand; at least I think you're big enough to. But we won't have time here tonight to straighten out this thing."

"But, Brad, aren't you going to get her to divorce you?" she persisted. "You surely can't expect me to—"

"My dear, be sensible. I'm a married man, and happily married at that, or I thought so until a month or two ago. You've been a game kid to help me through the last few weeks, go with me places and play the game so square. But I never thought," he was choosing his words more carefully: "It never occurred to me that you actually cared about me. We mustn't go on like this, Echo. You understand that, don't you? Why, dear, I'm not even thinking of a divorce."

"You mean," the girl's cry was stricken, "you mean you aren't going to have a divorce?" Slender hands clutched convulsively at her throat.

"Of course I mean it. I don't want a—"

"Oh, Brad, darling!" and she threw her arms about his neck, sobbing, low, heart-breaking sobs.

The listener in the hall wanted to cry out too. She was shaking so that she had to lean against the wall. It was too horrible to believe.

"Now, Echo," sternly, and Brad shook her shoulders, "straighten up. No scene here. I won't have it. I'll see you about the rest of this tomorrow night. It's terribly unwise for us to even talk about it here—"

"Well, look at the pair of turtle doves!" There was an edge on Edith's voice as she stood in the living room doorway. "We missed you two from the games. What's the matter? Have you seen Polly anywhere?"

Echo had turned directly away from the other girl to hide her tears, and she was facing Polly. She paled at the mention of her hostess' name.

"No, probably she's in the kitchen," from Brad. "Echo has a headache and didn't feel like playing the last game. I was just entertaining her, telling about some of my books."

POLLY could never account for the rest of that evening. After midnight the guests departed. Echo and Postelle were among the first to leave. Her words of thanks were for Polly, but her pleading eyes were for Brad.

"I like your kind of party, Polly," Postelle frankly told her. "It breaks into all this ennui born of our sophisticated age. No weird stories. No stumbling over piles of cigaret stubs. No blue smoke. No cards. Do it again. It's good for our youth in Zion." The clasp of his hand was firm and sympathetic.

Edith and John were the last to leave. They helped carry chairs back to their customary places, and insisted on washing the dishes. For want of something else to do, Polly joined them.

"Everybody works but father," joked Brad, standing in the dining room door with the paper in his hand, "but my wife over there rushed me into this party so fast this evening, that I didn't have time to read even the weather report. And it's hard on my digestion not to get to read the—"

"Go right ahead, Brad," Edith flippantly broke in. "We shan't miss you out here."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Then they, too, were gone. As she turned back into the house, Polly wanted to scream. Her world at that moment was so topsy-turvy that she yearned to cry herself back into place and equilibrium even as her small son did.

Though it was growing late, Brad pulled her down beside him. The fire was almost out. For a long moment he looked into her eyes, seeming to read her very thoughts, and then without a word he kissed her hands and then her lips. She was glad he did not speak. Her heart was too full for that, and she contented herself hiding her face on his shoulder.

It was a terrible mix-up. Brad with no home-life, a nagging mother, an away-from-home wife, trying to find companionship. A sentimental little girl, flattered when he singled her out as a playfellow, doing the most natural thing in the world—falling in love with him. And suffering from all of this, too, was a red-haired lover who was powerless to do anything. Could there ever have been a worse tangle? This wasn't one of those much-talked-of triangles. It was a whole polygon, a "quintangle" as Brad had once described a similar situation.

A scalding tear slipped down Polly's cheek, and presently another, and then they were coming fast and furiously.

"Why, darling, tears after such a splendid evening!" Brad was astonished. He held her closer with his right arm while with his left hand he searched in his pocket for a clean handkerchief. "And after such a glorious evening, too!"

"Glorious evening!" gurgled his wife. "It was terrible!"

"Why, everything was lovely, and everyone seemed to have a fine time."

"Except Echo and I," said Polly to herself.

"What's the matter with you, dear, is it too much work?" he was watching her anxiously. "Polly—"

"Brad—" She gulped. "Tomorrow I'm going to—" But the sobs shook her so that she could not finish.

After a moment he gently prompted: "Going to what?"

"Cut—out some of—of my work! I haven't taken care of my home as I ought lately—I've—I've neglected—you!" The pressure of his arms tightened. "I'm going to resign—as secretary of the Saturday—Club. I'm going to tell Mrs. Henderson that I can't carry the responsibility of caring for the women's envelopes on this street. I'm going to get out of that play I'm working with at the church, and turn down that offer of directing the girls' Easter chorus—and—several other things!"

He did not reply for a long minute, but his warm cheek against her wet one was very comforting. "That's the best news I've heard for a year, Polly," very slowly. "But are you sure you will be happy without all those things to do?"

Happy—with the home problems solved! The dear old glow again in Brad's eyes. Quiet evenings at home or spent together somewhere else. The old playtimes with Carrol. Friends dropping in to see them. Happy? Polly thought her heart would burst. Still holding the handkerchief over her eyes, she nodded.

"Do you actually mean that for awhile at least, I may borrow my wife back from the church and the community?" The joy which throbbed in his voice accused her.

Another nod was his answer.

"Polly!" Gently he took the handkerchief away and looked into her eyes reddened as they were: "Darling, oh, if you could only understand what it will mean to me!" His face was rapturous. Her tear-washed nose found a resting place somewhere in the region of his collar. "There are so many things we have to tell each other," he continued in the same vibrant tone.

The Dutch clock struck two. Abruptly Polly raised her head from her husband's shoulder.

"Brad, if I get out of some of my work tomorrow, why don't we celebrate tomorrow night? We could go to a show, take dinner out, or—oh, just do something different."

"I'm afraid we can't tomorrow night." His words were like so many blows. "I have an important business meeting."

And Polly remembered his words to Echo: "I'll see you about the rest of this tomorrow night." Again she was stunned. She simply couldn't, wouldn't believe her ears. He had lied outright.

But she had to believe it. Hadn't she heard it herself? Somehow she kissed him good-night without letting him know that something was wrong. He went to the basement to fix the fire, and blindly she stumbled upstairs. She moved like an automaton. Looked to see if Carrol was all right. Slipped into her night clothes, and began to brush her hair. The motion seemed to soothe her, and yet there was desperation in her heart.

Then she crawled into bed, but not to sleep that night. Her eyes smarted from tears shed, but now her tears were dried. The hurt went deeper than tears, and she recalled the words of the hymn that mentioned something about "stony grief." That was hers now.

The sound of Brad's steady breathing almost maddened her. She knew that somewhere another woman, a girl, was tossing sleepless, too, and even while her love for him rebelled at the thought of it,

Programs for April

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

GENERAL THEME: "THE ATONEMENT."

April 2, 1933

Theme: "'Hear Ye Him."

Instrumental Prelude: "Holy, Holy, Holy!" number 39.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1, and 3 Nephi 5: 8.

"Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated." "Behold, my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him."

Group Response: 1 Nephi 3. 43. "Hosanna to the Lord, the most high God; for he is God over all the earth, yea, even above all."

Scripture Reading: Luke 9: 18-36, 51. (Inspired Version.)

(S) Hymn: "Strong Son of God," number 290. (Conclude with an instrumental "Amen.")

(S) Prayer: That we may be humble and full of love so that Christ can speak to us. That we may train our ears to hear his voice, our hearts to understand his message. That his word may come to us with new meaning and thus inspire us to greater service.

Talk: At Cæsarea Phillippi, Jesus had declared himself to be the Messiah, the deliverer of humanity. He had acted all through his life as a Son of God. He had committed himself irretrievably by word and deed to the task his Father had given him. But his work was unfinished. Now he could escape the cross if he remained in seclusion, or surrendered his claims to kingship. To do either would mean that he had failed. To go on would be a task which would require more than human strength. Only a Son of God could do it. So the transfiguration became a necessary prelude to Gethsemane and the cross.

We, too, have an exalted task. The unfinished work of Jesus Christ is committed to our hands. Only the realization of our Divine commission, our whole-hearted commitment to the task can fit us for that which is to come. When we have thus dedicated ourselves and have received a baptism of the Spirit of God bearing record of the Father and the Son we will move out with power and much assurance toward the salvation of our fellow men.

Hymn: "Consecration," number 293, verses 1 and 2.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 6: 16.

"Therefore fear not, little flock, do good, let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my Rock, they can not prevail. . . . Perform with soberness the work which I have commanded you; look unto me in every thought, doubt not, fear not: behold the wounds which pierced my side, and also the prints of the nails in my hands and feet; be faithful; keep my commandments, and ye shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. Amen."

Hymn Benediction: "Lord, Accept the Humble Consecration," number 293, verse 3.

Picture: "The Transfiguration," Raphael.

APRIL 9, 1933

Theme: "Behold the King."

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus Mighty King in Zion," number 361.

Scripture Reading: Luke 19: 29-41.

(S) Hymn: "Angel's Story," number 34, verses one, two, and three.

Poem:

"Ride on, ride on in majesty!
Hark! all the tribes, 'Hosanna,' cry:
O Savior meek, pursue Thy road,
With palms and scattered garments strewed.

"Ride on, ride on in majesty,
In lowly pomp ride on to die!
O Christ, Thy triumphs now begin
O'er captive death and conquered sin.

"Ride on, ride on in majesty!
In lowly pomp ride on to die!
Bow Thy meek head to mortal pain!
Then take, O God, Thy power, and reign!"

Meditation: For one minute.

Prayer: Petition for understanding of the mission of Jesus.

(S) Hymn: "Close to Thee," number 319.

Talk: The people of Jesus' time expected deliverance and salvation. The "Hosannas" of the multitude were quite sincere. To them Jesus was the Messiah who was to set up his kingdom and overthrow Roman bondage and oppression. They expected a temporal salvation which would satisfy their hatred of Rome. When it became evident that this was not to be, their "Hosannas" speedily turned into a demand for his crucifixion. Their hatred of the Romans had blinded them to the true nature of his mission.

We believe that Jesus is coming soon, to establish his kingdom on the earth. We hail him today, and call him king. But do we realize that his kingdom is for all? Do we desire merely to escape from men, or do we desire they shall be saved? The praise we offer must not be blinded by a hatred of others, or our indifference to their need, as was that of the early Jews. Zion is not so much a way of escape for us, as it is a means of salvation for all men. Only as we, in love, build that city, can we expect the meek and lowly Nazarene to come to us.

Commission:

"Your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. . . . Verily I say unto you who now have my words, which is my voice, Blessed are ye inasmuch as you receive these things, for I will forgive you of your sins with this commandment, that you remain steadfast in your minds in solemnity and the spirit of prayer, in bearing testimony to all the world of those things which are communicated unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8, 9.

(S) Hymn: "Jesus Mighty King in Zion," number 361.

(S) Benediction: "And may the grace of God the Father, whose throne is high in the heavens, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who sitteth on the right hand of his power, until all things shall become subject unto him, be, and abide with you for ever. Amen." (Book of Mormon, Moroni 9: 28.)

Picture: "Christ mourns over the city," Flandrin.

APRIL 12, 1933 (Wednesday).

(For the midweek prayer service.)

Theme: "Thy will be done."

Prelude: Quartette (unaccompanied) sing, "Go to Dark Gethsemane," number 160.

Scripture Reading: Luke 22: 39-46 (Inspired Version). Just prior to the reading of this scripture Hofmann's picture, "Christ in Gethsemane," should be placed where it may have a beautiful background, and where all may see it.

Hymn: "'Tis Midnight, and on Olive's Brow," number 163, verse 1.

A period for prayer: Leader may suggest some specific people to pray if he so desires.

Hymn: "'Tis Midnight, and From All Removed," number 163, verse 2.

Talk: To set the theme for the period of meditation and testimonies which are to follow. It is suggested that the central thought be, "Not my will, but thine be done."

Hymn: "'Tis Midnight, and for Other's Guilt," number 163, verses 3 and 4.

A Period for Silent Meditation.

Testimony Service.

Hymn: (If appropriate to the direction of the meeting) "O

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go," number 285.
Benediction.

APRIL 16, 1933

Theme: "Ye Shall Live Also."

Prelude: Instrumental. Hymn number 256, played softly.

(S) Call to Worship: (Isaiah 52: 9, 10; John 1: 29.)

"Break forth into joy, and sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

(S) Response: (Isaiah 53: 4.) "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows."

(S) Prayer: Should be a petition for the enlightenment of the Spirit of God.

(S) Brief period of Meditation while one verse of hymn number 256 is played softly.

The Testimony of the Resurrection: (To be read by the leader.)

According to Luke (24: 1-8, Inspired Version):

"Now upon the first day of the week very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre; and two angels standing by it in shining garments. And they entered into the sepulchre and not finding the body of the Lord Jesus, and they were much perplexed thereabout, and were affrighted, and bowed down their faces to the earth. But behold, the angels said unto them, 'Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here but is risen. Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee saying, ' "The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again"?' And they remembered his words, and returned from the sepulchre and told all these things unto the eleven, and unto all the rest."

And Peter says (Acts 10: 39-42):

"And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree; him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly. Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of the quick and dead."

So also Paul (1 Corinthians 15: 1-8):

"Moreover brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand. . . . For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the scriptures: And that he was seen of Cephas, and then of the twelve: After that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; . . . After that he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time."

Reader Continues: According to Nephi (3 Nephi 5: 1-17):

Hymn: Congregation sing second verse of number 166, "Oh, What Glory."

Leader: In Our Day (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 1, 3):

"Hear, O ye Heavens, and give ear, O earth, and rejoice ye inhabitants thereof, for the Lord is God, and beside him there is no Savior; great is his wisdom; marvelous are his ways; and the extent of his doings, none can find out; his purposes fail not, neither are there any who can stay his hand; from eternity to eternity he is the same and his years never fail.

"We, Joseph Smith junior, and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the sixteenth of February, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw, and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision; . . . for the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about; and we beheld the glory of the Son on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and say the holy angels and they who were sanctified before his throne worshiping God and the Lamb, who worship him for ever and ever. And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony last of all, which we give of him that he lives, for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the only begotten of the Father, that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

Hymn: "Life Eternal," verse four, number 166.

Leader Continues: Jesus' own testimony (Revelation 1: 17, 18; John 11: 25, 26; 5: 19-28):

"Fear not, I am the first and the last! I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore. Amen. And have the keys of death and of hell." "I am the resurrection and the life: He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." "For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth; for what things soever he doeth, those also doeth the Son likewise. For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself. . . . Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of the unjust.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my words, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."

Hymn: "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," number 256.

Benediction: (Hebrews 13: 20, 21):

"Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

Picture: "Peter and John," Burnand.

APRIL 23, 1933

Theme: "Walk Ye With the Master."

Instrumental Prelude: "Hark! The Voice of Jesus Calling," number 344.

Jesus' Statement (3 Nephi 12: 25, 26):

"Behold I have given unto you my gospel, and this is the gospel which I have given unto you, that I came into the world to do the will of my Father, because my Father sent me; And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; and after that I had been lifted up upon the cross, I might draw all men unto me."

Group Response (John 12: 34):

"We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever; and how sayest thou, The Son of Man must be lifted up? who is this Son of Man?"

Leader Reads (John 12: 35, 36, 44-46; 1 John 1: 5-7):

"Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me. And he that seeth me seeth him that sent me. I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." "This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

(S) Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," number 322.

(S) Prayer: Of thanksgiving for the light which has been given. Of petition that we may always recognize that light and walk in fellowship with him who is the giver.

Scripture Reading: Luke 24: 12-34.

Talk: The minds of the disciples who were on the way to Emmaus were clouded because of their misunderstanding of the nature of the kingdom of God. It was only after the Master himself had explained his mission, and had shared again with them the sacrament that they recognized him, and understood.

Our walk along the pathway of life today is often clouded by our misconceptions with relation to what we expect the kingdom of God to do for us. It is only as we listen to the still small voice by which the Spirit of the Master speaks to us that light will come. And only as we obey will our understanding be more complete.

(S) Hymn: "Trust and Obey," number 4 in the Zion's Praises.

(S) Benediction (2 Corinthians 13: 14): "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all. Amen."

Picture: "Walk to Emmaus," Gerardet.

APRIL 30, 1933

Theme: "Go Ye, Therefore, and Teach."

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus Is Calling," number 332.

Call to Service (John 4: 37, 38; Revelation 14: 15):

"Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he who reapeth, receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal; that both he who soweth, and he who reapeth, may rejoice together." "Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe."

Group Response (Revelations 5: 12, 9):

"Worthy is the lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. For thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."

Leader: (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22; Matthew 10: 2; John 16: 33):

"Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. He that seeketh me early shall find me, and shall not be forsaken." "And fear not them who are able to kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

(S) Hymn: "O God, Give Strength to All Thy Saints," number 246.

Prayer: For wisdom that we may better understand our mission, and, in the light of that knowledge, do Christ's bidding.

Leader (John 14: 11-15):

"Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it. If ye love me, keep my commandments."

Hymn: "The Church's One Foundation," number 359, verse 1.

Leader (Acts 17: 26, 27; Revelations 14: 6):

"God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; That they should seek the Lord, if they are willing to find him, for he is not far from every one of us." "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

Hymn: Number 359, verse 2.

Leader (John 15: 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17):

"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my live; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide his love. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it to you. These things I command you, that ye love one another."

Hymn: Number 359, verse 4.

Leader (Matthew 28: 17-19):

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

(S) Hymn: "How Firm a Foundation," number 245. (One verse only.)

(S) Benediction.

Picture: "The Ascension," Von Uhde.

Suggestions for Carrying Out the Worship Services:

All the hyms are to be found in the new Saints' Hymnal with one exception. That is clearly marked.

The Bible quotations are taken from the Inspired Version. The success of many of these services depends upon the way the scripture is read. The person who is responsible for that reading should devote some time previously to study and practice.

In order that the group responses may be given without delay it is usually advisable to make one person responsible for leading them.

(S) means that the group shall stand during that portion of the service.

The principle that we receive in direct proportion to the amount that we give, operates also in these worship services.

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for April

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark.

FIRST SUNDAY, APRIL 2, 1933

Sacrament service for adults and children together.

SECOND SUNDAY, APRIL 9, 1933

PALM SUNDAY

Theme: "The Triumphal Entry."

Prelude: "The Palms," by J. Faure.

Call to Worship: "Hosanna: Blessed is the king of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." (John 12: 13.)

Hymn: "Praise Him, Praise Him," Zion's Praises, 144; new Saints' Hymnal, 10.

Prayer.

Scripture: Luke 19: 35-40.

Hymn: "Come, Join the Cheerful Song," Zion's Praises, 190.

Sermon Talk: This is the day which we keep in memory of the day Jesus rode into Jerusalem on a colt, as foretold by the prophet. (Zechariah 9: 9.) It was a day of triumph. The people had been waiting for their king for many years. When they recognized Jesus as the one who had done so many wonderful things they acclaimed him king of Israel. The palm branch was an emblem of victory and triumph. As the people that day thought of Jesus as their king, let us think of him that way today.

Hymn Story: "Fairest Lord Jesus."

(Material for this story may be obtained at the Public Library or from the booklet, Great Hymns of Worship and Missions, mentioned in the Saints' Herald sometime ago. It may be ordered through the Herald office, 25 cents.)

Anthem: "Fairest Lord Jesus," new Saints' Hymnal, 23, junior choir.

Story: "Jesus Our Heroic Master," page 9, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw. (This is the story of the Triumphal Entry.)

Closing Hymn: "Blessed Be the Name," Zion's Praises, 113.

THIRD SUNDAY, APRIL 16, 1933

EASTER SUNDAY

Theme: "The Resurrection."

Prelude: "Open the Gates of the Temple," by Mrs. Joseph F. Knapp.

Call to Worship: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen." (Luke 24: 5, 6.)

Prayer.

Scripture: Matthew 28: 1-10.

Hymn: "Joyful Easter Bells," Zion's Praises, 229.

Sermon Talk (Text, 1 John 3: 2): When Jesus was crucified his followers were discouraged. The one on whom they had depended was dead. He had told them that although he would be killed, yet the third day he would be raised again (Matthew 17: 23), but the record indicates they did not understand. When he appeared to them after his resurrection their hearts were filled with joy; it meant new life, new hope to them. That is the Easter message to us today. (A beautiful object lesson can be presented by using a lily bulb and an Easter lily in bloom.)

Special Musical Number: Vocal solo, "The Holy City," an adult soloist.

Dramatization, "Easter Morning," given by Juniors.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

(Suggested material, "The Resurrection Story," pages 18, 20, and 21, junior quarterly, "Jesus and His Helpers," April, May, June, 1930, by Lucie H. Sears. The dramatization may end with Peter and John leaving the scene to go to the tomb. This will be very effective if simple appropriate costumes are used: For ideas about costumes, see pictures painted by Copping; Dramatization in Religious Education, by Florence Thompson, chapter 11, printed by the Herald Publishing House; booklet, Oriental Costumes and How to Make Them, printed by David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois, number 7424-J, 4 cents; also books available at any public library.)

Closing Hymn: "Sweet Are the Promises," Zion's Praises, 41.

Benediction.

(An appropriate picture to be displayed during this program is, "At the Tomb," by Plockhorst. A large copy may be purchased from David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois, for 15 cents.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1933

The Higher Loyalty

At the moment there is much speech, in current philosophical literature, regarding the "nature of truth" and regarding "pragnatism." An ethical treatise very naturally takes advantage of this situation to discuss the relation between the "practical" and the Eternal. I have done so in my closing chapters. In order to do so, I have had to engage in a certain polemic regarding the problem of Truth—a polemic directed against certain opinions, recently set forth by one of my dearest friends, and by one of the most loyal men; my teacher for a while in my youth; my honored colleague, Professor William James. Such a polemic would be indeed much out of place in a book upon Loyalty were it not that my friend and myself fully agree that, to both of us, Truth indeed "is the greatest friend." Had I not very early in my work as a student known Professor James, I doubt whether any poor book of mine would ever have been written—least of all the present one. What I personally owe him, then, I most heartily and affectionately acknowledge. But if he and I do not see Truth in the same light at present, we still do well, I think, as friends, each to speak his own mind as we walk by the way, and then to wait until some other light shines for our eyes. I suppose that so to do is loyalty.—From The Philosophy of Loyalty, by Josiah Royce.

"Peace does not mean the end of all our striving,
Joy does not mean the drying of all tears,
Peace is the power that comes to souls arriving
Up to the light where God Himself appears.
Joy is the wine that God is ever pouring
Into the wounds of those who strive with Him,
Lightening their eyes to vision and adoring,
Strength'ning their arms to warfare glad and grim."

FACING THE FACTS

What are we doing to change those disagreeable facts to something more pleasant and agreeable. Are we saying with the fool that everything will come out all right, or are we militantly concerned about seeing that they do come out all right, meanwhile being actuated and urged on by an overpowering certainty that things will be right only if we make them so with the help of Almighty God? Have you and your church faced those facts and made constructive plans in the light of those facts, or do you have merely a blind and foolish faith that somehow in due course of time, things will come out all right?

Applying this principle to our personal lives, can we face the facts about ourselves? The first step in progress is a recognition of the urgent need for that progress. Do you recognize your faults and take them into consideration in your plans for personal progress? Today—any day—is a fitting time to face facts. Look them all over—even the disagreeable and disgusting ones, if any; and then be a real optimist, not a babbling simpleton.

"IN WHOM SHALL WE PUT OUR TRUST?"

sofar as it has differed from the philosophy of Christ, has not been an uplifting moral or spiritual force. Philosophy, as a whole, has served an important purpose, we must agree, but, inasmuch as it has wandered from the principles of Christ's teaching, it has been narrow and self-seeking, and has driven the philosophers themselves into morbidity and even insanity. On the other hand, Christ, abiding by his own doctrine, was able to maintain perfect poise of mind even through the terrible ordeal of the cross.

The message of Jesus Christ is the only hope of the world. Without it we have no manifest revelation of a just and merciful Creator. Without a just Creator we are as orphans in a raging sea of lust and vice. Without a thinking, seeing, feeling God we are but tragic emotional atoms in an unemotional wilderness.

And here is one place where the philosophy of man falls in upon itself. The philosophers forgot that if the atoms, as they love to compare us, are emotional, then the whole of which the atoms are but a part must of a necessity be emotional. Can they reasonably deny emotion, then, in the Source of the universe—for even by the physical law that chickens produce chickens, and pigs produce pigs, or by the mental law that cheerfulness produces cheerfulness, and gloom produces gloom, we can not help but conclude it must take emotion to produce emotion. It is not so inconsistent to believe, then, that God is Love.

Love is creative, hatred is destructive. The source of creation then, must needs be one of love. The forces of disintegration are but the forces of hate which war against the creation of Love. God did not make hatred—it comes as a natural result of the broken law of love. The Infinite Intellect provided perfect laws but wherever a law exists, there comes with it the possibility of its being broken. Suffering, hatred, disintegration are not the will of Love, but are the natural consequences of its broken law.

No, the God of the Hebrews was not unjust. Through all the diversities of mankind he has stood, and still stands, a magnetic power which man can come to understand only through obedience to the law by which he moves, the law of love.

Love is the one grand universal truth. Inasmuch as anything springs not from the fountain of love it is not truth.

Can we afford to trust, then in the doctrine of materialism and disintegration, the doctrine of hate? Or shall we put our trust in the living God, the Source of hope and life, the doctrine of love? And if we really trust him, shall we not strive to fulfill His purposes in us, so that His kingdom may come, his will be done on earth as it is in heaven? "Choose ye this day whom ye shall serve."

PREACH THE GOSPEL

faith presented in order that they may erect that haven wherein God's people shall find peace? Or are our priestly minds dabbling in finite things that lead but to the grave.

The scientist reaches the end of his tether when he contemplates life. Sweet mystery of life. The view is closed to his vision; a sealed book which he can not read, the boundary of man's limitations, where the finite ends and the infinite begins. It is a wall beyond which he can not go. Worlds without end. WHY?

Beyond that barrier lies the Kingdom of God and except a man is born of the water and of the Spirit he can not see that Kingdom.

Faith is the research principle of the Kingdom of God, the pick and shovel of our profession. Dig in men and find God. Preach the Gospel!

she marveled at the seeming complete selfishness and thoughtlessness of her husband. But had it been entirely his fault? She cringed as her conscience accused: "It's your fault, Polly. Don't try to blame him. You are the one who was thoughtless and selfish first." And then a voice within her seemed to defend: "Oh, I know. I know I am mostly to blame. But—still if he really loved me, he wouldn't have lied to me tonight!"

Supplementary Notes on the Urim and Thummim

By J. W. A. Bailey

There seem to be different opinions as to the time when the Urim and Thummim were made or prepared, also as to how, and by whom they were hidden up from time to time.

There are also those who believe that there were two sets of this holy instrument. They believe that shortly after the confusion of tongues, God prepared the first set, which he gave to the brother of Jared, and that about seven hundred years later God gave another set to Moses who put them into the breastplate of judgment. Exodus 28: 30.

From my understanding of the history of the Urim and Thummim, I discover only one set of this holy instrument, and that they were prepared from the beginning, and that they were handed down to the different prophets or seers who used them, by the direction of God who is the keeper and preserver of them.

I have never read of any two prophets or seers using the Urim and Thummim at the same time. There is only one set which has been transferred from place to place by the power and will of God.

Let us now read a few passages from the Book of Mormon as to the time the Urim and Thummim were prepared, also as to their purpose.

There is not a word to be found on pages 722 and 723 of the Book of Mormon to indicate that God made or prepared the Urim and Thummim at the time he gave them to the brother of Jared. And if Gazelem, spoken of in Book of Mormon (440: 55), be Joseph Smith, jr., as claimed by some, then we can equally claim that God made or prepared the Urim and Thummim at the time he gave them to him, for it reads, "I will prepare unto my servant Gazelem"; but we all know that the Urim and Thummim were had long before the days of Joseph Smith.

"Now these things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages; and they have been kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord, that he should discover to every creature who should possess the land, the iniquities and abominations of his people."—Book of Mormon 291: 19, 20.

From the above statement we can plainly see that the Urim and Thummim were prepared from the beginning, that they were used for other purposes besides interpreting languages—by their use it was revealed who were entitled to possess the land, (live in Zion) also the secret works of darkness, such as came down from the day of Cain.

Alma speaking concerning the use of the Urim and Thummim said, "And now my son, these directors were prepared, that the word of God might be fulfilled, which he spake, saying: I will bring forth out of darkness unto light, all their secret works and their adominations."—Page 440: 56.

By reading Book of Mormon (733: 89-101) we will see that the term beginning as used in connection with the preparation of Urim and Thummim has reference to the time of Cain when these secret works of darkness began—"And Akish did administer unto them the oaths which were given by them of old, . . . which had been handed down even from Cain, who was a murderer from the beginning. And they were kept up by the power of the devil to administer these oaths unto the people, to keep them in darkness, to help such as sought power, to gain power, and to murder, and to plunder, and to lie, and to commit all manner of wickedness and whoredoms. . . . And they [people of Jared] formed a secret combination, even as they of old; which combination is most abominable and wicked above all . . . for it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations and countries: . . . Yea, even that same liar who hath caused man to commit murder from the beginning; who hath hardened the hearts of men, that they have murdered the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out from the beginning." From the time Cain killed Abel.

It is plain to be seen, that the present "underworld organization" has come down from the days of Cain, and has been kept up by the power of the devil for the purpose of murdering, plundering, committing all manner of wickedness, overthrowing all lands, and nations, killing the prophets, and destroying the church of God.

If, as stated by the Book of Mormon writer, the Urim and Thummim were for the purpose of discovering these secret works, then they were needed as much in the days of Cain as they were in the days of the Jaredites and the Nephites. If they were needed in the days of Mosiah to tell who was worthy to possess the land, they must also have been needed in the days of Enoch.

By reading Ezra 2: 62, 63 and Nephi 7: 64, 65, we will see that the Urim and Thummim is referred to as being deeded to discover who was worthy to partake of the holy things. We also notice that at this time which was about 536 B. C., they discovered that the genealogical record and the Urim and Thummim were lost. This is confirmed by the Jewish Encyclopedia, and Hasting's Bible Dictionary.

The Lord said unto the brother of Jared, "These two stones will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things ye shall write." (722: 88.)

The term "seal or hide up" does not necessarily mean to bury or deposit in the earth, for when we read Book of Mormon 151: 144, we will see that the Lord gave Joseph Smith about the same kind of a commandment concerning the records, as he did to the brother of Jared; he said, "When thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee, and obtained the witnesses which I have promised unto thee, then thou shalt seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me," etc. Yet we are informed that Joseph gave the plates and also the Urim and Thummim to the angel that called for them.

It could be that the brother of Jared also returned the Urim and Thummim to God or an angel who afterwards gave them to Moses; from Moses they were handed down until Lehi came in possession of them, or they were given unto Mosiah by the direction of God.

If the twenty-four gold plates that Ether hid up (759: 108) be the same record that God commanded the brother of Jared to write, then there is one thing certain, that the Urim and Thummim were not deposited with them; for when they were found by Limhi's party, (232: 60-64, 72; 270: 166-170; 273: 17, and 291: 14-22) King Mosiah already had the Urim and Thummim, the same Urim and Thummim that God gave to the brother of Jared.

These were not mentioned as being in two (silver) bows until we find them in the possession of Mosiah.

There is one thing sure, that Lehi either brought them from Jerusalem, or that God who is the keeper and preserver of them, (291: 20) gave them to Mosiah, for Mosiah had them before he met Limhi, 232: 72-83.

Admitting that Lehi brought them with him, and that they were handed from generation to generation (291: 19; 292: 1-2) until they were hid up in the earth by Moroni (723: 97-99) who afterwards gave them to Joseph Smith, we have the same result; that they were the same Urim and Thummim that were used by the brother of Jared. (Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.)

Revelation

Revelation is an ultimate experience, and therefore undefinable in words; but all may learn by experience something of what it means. It may be described as personal touch of God on our conscious life, bringing with it an assurance of ultimate reality, such as neither sense nor intellect can hear. And, if we ask again, what is revealed, the broadest answer is that God is the perfect person. Revelation, then, is the manifestation of the authority of God, the perfect person, through person; and most of all through the one person who has lived the perfect life.—the manifestation of this to immature persons who are drawn by it into the power of achieving their personality, and therefore of helping some one in their turn, is the work of revelation.—Edward Grubb.

Notes From Sermons by Elder Ray Whiting in Kansas City

By W. S. Brown

Elder Ray Whiting, pastor of Omaha and Council Bluffs Branches, finished a week's series of missionary-pastoral meetings in Kansas City Stake, March 5, his general theme being, "Save Yourself From This Untoward Generation." He was sincere in the presentation of his convictions, and his appeal to the membership was to lay all on the altar of God, this being their "reasonable service."

Following are some of the thoughts Brother Whiting presented in his sermons:

Our responsibility is to show the world the way out of its present distressing condition. The churches have not yet saved us. All the churches are not enough to save us from this untoward generation. The only thing that will save us is God. We must have His kingdom in which is the hope of the people. The church is essential to the kingdom, but the kingdom is more than the church.

What is the gospel? The gospel of the kingdom? The will of God to be here now in this world.

The mortality rate in our church is appalling, but not so much as that of other churches. Perhaps the ministry are chiefly guilty for this mortality rate. They picture the beauties of the gospel with too much emphasis. The way from where you are to where God wants you to be is hard and costly, and many people do not count the cost before they unite with the church. The prize is in the end, not in the beginning, of our membership.

The purpose of the gospel is to make men big. God expects us to stand up.

We see the clouds of lawlessness of every hue and shade, but God wants us to see the bright light. The church sees a dark cloud, black and portentous, but there is a bright light too. Paul "kept the faith" in spite of difficulties. God has said that this church must triumph.

It is what God can do with men that matters.

"Deep calleth unto deep." Deep things of nature move us to respond deeply—sunsets, the ocean with its moods and ceaseless motion, the paririe's wide expanse, the majesty of mountains, the beauty of art and music. The world is finding its pleasure from shallow and trivial things. Shallow also responds to shallow. But the large well-laden ship moves in a depth of water. The gospel calls us to worship the depths.

Where do you live? Not your street number, but your spiritual location? Is it deep or shallow? Do you have faith? From how deep does it call? Repentance? Baptism? Tithing? Stewardships? Can the church count on that which demands all we possess?

Prayer and Testimony

Many Join Brother J. F. Sheehy in Radio Worship Service

By L. B. M.

"Our heavenly Father, in the worthy and sacred name of Jesus, we come to thee and pray that the blessings of God shall attend every home today. Remember all that are bowed with us in prayer. Remember all who have joined with us in this morning devotional service. We come to worship thee and to return thanks for thy many blessings, and pray that we shall be instrumental in helping those about us. Be with the sick and suffering and those who are bowed down in grief; be near them and comfort them by the sustaining power of heaven. May thine all-sufficient grace be with them to comfort and strengthen. These blessings we humbly ask in Jesus' name. Amen."

With this prayer Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, closed his seven to seven-fifteen o'clock morning radio worship one morning last week. With him an increasing number is kneeling in worship each morning, and the response of letters and remembrances Brother Sheehy receives through the mail indicates that this quarter of an hour service of organ hymn music played by Drexel Mollison and Book of Mormon reading and prayer by the pastor in Independence, is appreciated by people in many States. Following are excerpts from the pastor's mail:

Word from Dallas, Texas:

"Dear Brother Sheehy, you can not imagine the pleasure it gives us to tune in on the devotional hour and bow our heads with you in prayer. It is true that we must have one sweet hour with Jesus every day to strengthen us in these perilous times. The morning program comes in clear as a bell."

Miles City, Montana:

"After reading in the Herald of February 15, of Saints getting the morning radio program from KMBC at Polson, Montana, we tuned in. Our joy was complete when we got you on the air. You were reading the sixth chapter of Mosiah, Book of Mormon, and we had just finished reading that book. Now we tune in on your program every morning. We are isolated Saints, and certainly enjoy this lone contact with the church."

From Cameron, Missouri, a sister sends a poem, "My Appreciation," to Brother Sheehy.

An isolated sister living in Arroyo Sico, New Mexico, writes that she enjoys the program each morning, obtaining new courage for the day and new spiritual light. She asks prayers for her nine-year-old grandson who is afflicted.

This quaint letter comes from a seven-year-old girl who lives in Independence:

"Dear Brother Sheehy, my mother doesn't have to call me in the morning, because I get up to hear you. Drexel is my brother's Sunday school teacher, and I like to hear him play the organ. I am seven years old and in the second grade at McCoy School. I am going to listen every morning so I can hear about the Book of Mormon. Good-bye."

From Deer Creek, Minnesota:

"I want you to know that you always have our family in your audience for your morning reading, grandfather, father, and mother. Of course we have read the Book of Mormon often and can read it again, but it is pleasant to read it with others. And your little prayers seem to start the day right."

From Holden, Missouri:

"Your Book of Mormon readings and your prayers are truly an inspiration to us."

This appreciation of radio services comes from Skiatook, Oklahoma:

"We enjoy Brother Sheehy's talks each morning, and Brother U. W. Greene's sermons each Sunday evening. Our friends come in on Sunday to hear the words of our Lord as his servants speak. We are thankful for the opportunity of hearing His words. I believe God inspired the bringing forth of the radio in order that many may hear this gospel preached."

From Clinton, Missouri, a woman who lies in a plaster cast, three bones having been dislocated in her hip and back, writes:

"I want to tell you how much the morning service means to me. I am a great deal better, and soon will be able to sit in my chair. I have great hopes of walking again. The only contact I have now with the church is through my radio. Will you tell the organ player that I love his playing of the old sweet tunes, and ask him to play, 'Abide With Me,' some of these mornings? The reading of the Book of Mormon pleases me very much. It was that book which brought me into the church. I did not hear the gospel preached until after I had joined the church. The Book of Mormon and A Marvelous Work and a Wonder convinced me of the divinity of this work."

From Littleton, Colorado, a brother writes:

"Heard your message quite well this morning. Weather was pretty cold for one to get up and tune in for KMBC—we could not tell how cold it was; the mercury was down in the bulb. The early morning program is the only one we can get. After the Denver stations come on KMBC is out for us."

From Nevada, Missouri, comes this message:

"Every morning I have my Book of Mormon open and read along with you, Brother Sheehy. I have read the book for twenty-four years, but never understood it as I do now. You make it very plain."

From Lamoni, Iowa, a mother writes this incident:

"I was very happy on a recent morning when you were reading. My daughter was waiting to study her algebra. I said: 'Jean, you may turn off the radio if you think you won't have time to get your lesson.' We had had company the night before and she could not study. She replied, 'Oh, I want to wait until this service is through. I think it is so interesting!' Jean is nearly fifteen years old."

In Evergreen, Alabama, a Latter Day Saint family consisting of the parents and two little boys are enjoying the morning worship services. They, too, write their thanks.

A Sister living in Kansas City, Missouri, who suffered a broken hip last June and still is almost helpless, is one of the morning listeners:

"This is to tell you how much I enjoy and appreciate the morning reading, and most of all the loving petitions to our heavenly Father, for us all, especially for the sick and afflicted ones. I wonder if you realize how it cheers and helps us."

And in Kansas City, Kansas, a woman is happy over the possession of a Book of Mormon, which her husband recently gave her. Each morning she reads with Brother Sheehy. She says: "You can not imagine how much I now enjoy the readings each morning as I sit in front of my radio. I am reading every day between times to catch up on the reading. You could not get me to part with the book for anything. Your readings and the morning prayers always start me off for the day feeling greatly inspired. I shall never forget you and the instructions you are giving for the upbuilding of God's kingdom."

Prayer and Testimony

To Labor in New Place

By J. J. Rusnell

The gospel has brought us many blessings which we could have obtained from no other source. Now as we are going to a new field of labor, I hope I can still have faith and confidence in my brothers and sisters. We shall labor with the Traverse City Branch. Saints coming that way will find a welcome at our home. We will live one half mile north of Williamsburg, about twelve miles east of Traverse City.

My prayer is that the gospel will find its way to all honest-hearted people and that through it, they will be led to higher ground.

Let us who are Saints remember the words of the hymn:

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare."

We are witnessing for Him.

The Lord Teaches His Truth

By D. W. Clark

I was baptized into this great latter-day work in 1912, by Brother Lloyd C. Moore, and have never regretted the step I took at that time. The Lord has blessed my family and me beyond our power to relate. I regret to say, however, that at times I have failed to live the gospel as I should; but when I have returned to the Lord, he has spoken to and instructed me.

One night in 1921 or 1922, I was given a wonderful experience. I had sinned in the Lord's sight and in the presence of my wife and baby. I knew that I was leading my children in the wrong way, and the Lord knew it. He said to me: "This night thou shalt pray for the salvation of thy soul." So I went to my knees and poured out my soul to him, and I arose a new man.

The Lord has spoken to me and to my wife, teaching and helping. He bade us try to live the Word of Wisdom, but I will not take time to relate that experience at present.

I know that this work is true. This is the Church of Jesus Christ. Pray for me that I shall strive to live worthy his divine love and care; that I may do the next helpful thing at hand and carry on his work in this part of the world.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA.

Thankful for Blessings

By Mrs. Anna Thiles

I have been in the church about five and one half years. Two weeks after coming into the church I was healed of a severe sickness which the doctor said could not be cured without an operation. My husband went after Brother Peter Hevermann and Brother William Kuykendall, and just as they closed the door to go home, I felt the pain leave my body. This was a testimony to me of the truth of the latter-day work. Many times since I have been relieved of pain by my own prayers, and these experiences convince me that God does hear and answer our petitions if we put our faith and trust in him.

Something like a year and a half ago while I was helping to serve at one of the dinners of the church, a young man was asked, "Will you have coffee?"

"No," was his reply, "I am a Latter Day Saint."

That remark remained in my mind for some time. It made me wonder: Am I a Latter Day Saint? I prayed about the matter, and finally I made a covenant with God. I asked him if there was really harm in drinking tea or coffee, to make it known to me by healing me of a serious ear trouble which has deafened me in one ear; this affliction I had had all my life. I promised him in return that I would never drink either tea or coffee again.

Now neither my husband nor I drink them. My ear has not bothered me since that day.

These are only a few of the many blessings we have received. I feel that the very best I can do is but small pay for my blessings. Will the Saints pray that we may be always faithful in God's work? We are praying for you.

Request Prayers

Sister Martha Luce, who is in the Tubercular Sanitarium at Lansing, Michigan, desires the prayers of the Saints, that she may be healed. She wishes to be able to return home to her two little daughters, and hopes in the future to be of great service to the church and her friends.

Sister Myrtle Yates, also in the Tubercular Sanitarium at Lansing, asks for the prayers of the church, that she may be healed. She declares that she is ready to accept the gospel and awaits the ordinance of baptism. Her mother has been a member of the church forty-five years.

Mrs. Lottie Wade, of Athens, Ohio, Route 3, asks special prayers for herself. Her eyesight is failing fast, but she knows God is able to restore it.

Mrs. Harry Parks, of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, Canada, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her husband who is seriously afflicted with neuritis. He is bedfast and suffers much pain. The doctors wish him to go to the hospital, but his family has faith in God to heal.

Sister Aubrey Spillman desires the prayers of the church in her own behalf. She is suffering from a long-standing heart ailment, and is now confined to her bed.

About three weeks ago M. R. Shoemaker, of Beardstown, Illinois, asked prayers for his wife who was suffering with mastoid trouble left her ear, but she was at once attacked with inflammatory rheumatism, and has suffered until she is so weak that unless the Lord blesses her, she can not live. Will the Saints remember her again? The Shoemaker family is grateful to the letters they received in response to the previous request for prayers.

Mrs. Elmer G. Neumann, of Central Lake, Michigan, Box 124, requests remembrance in the prayers of the Saints, that she may be healed of a severe case of diabetes. She wishes to be spared to her family and friends. Sister Neumann has relatives who are members of the church and who are daily praying for their loved one.

From Brother W. H. Greenwood, 23 Cicero Street, Moston, Manchester, England, comes the following note and request: "We have had a great deal of sickness and distress during the winter, and many are now suffering greatly. Only our heavenly Father can help or intervene. We are fasting and praying for assistance. Kindly remember us all in your prayers."

QUESTION TIME

What is meant by "the last times" of Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3?

The work of God on earth has been designated in scripture by various dispensations, each of which has had special significance with reference to the others. These various dispensations have been marked by certain events brought about under the overruling hand of Providence, and referred to as "ages" or "times," and similar designations. Thus we have such terms as "fullness of times," the "times of restitution," the "times of the Gentiles," and "these last times." Peter (1 Peter 1: 20) refers to "these last times" as those in which he then lived. Peter mentions the "times of restitution" as a period in which Christ shall come (Acts 3: 21). Both use the Greek word which means an indefinite space of time.

But the "times of refreshing" mentioned by Peter (Acts 3: 19), and the "times of the Gentiles" referred to by Jesus (Luke 21: 24) are derived from a Greek word that means a set or proper time. The "last times" of Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3 evidently therefore refers to an indefinite period, but the last period, in which a dispensation of the gospel should be committed. The plural word "times" probably has no other meaning than that it is inclusive of the events of the period to which it refers.

Is discerning of spirits, mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 50: 7, for all elders?

Before the growth of the church provided for many branch organizations, this word was given to the "elders of the church," who of necessity were the spiritual shepherds of the flock in all of the communities where members lived. To them came the work of protecting against evil spirits and false manifestations in various forms, so far as this could be done by virtue of the Melchisedec priesthood and the powers conferred upon them. Therefore they were to seek divine light and guidance in these matters, and were to be given power to deal with such of them as might be necessary.

But the office of elder is a presiding office, and a previous revelation had made plain the fact that the discerning of gifts and their sources was a part of the work of these officers as they ministered to the body. It declares:

"And unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all these gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 7.

The orderly arrangement of responsibility in the church would of course indicate that those who are appointed to "watch over the church," or preside as its proper officers, in the various districts and branches, are the ones to whom the Saints should look for the watchcare which this revelation is designed to provide.

Why does Psalm 90: 10 say our years are "three score years and ten"?

The method by which the average age of man was anciently determined appears to have differed from that of today. Just how the figures were arrived at is not clear, but it was probably not based upon exact statistics of all births and deaths over an extended period of time. More likely it was estimated with respect to those who reached a certain age, though some hold that the Psalmist was here declaring a divine dictum which placed this restriction upon human life. However, the fact that "by reason of strength" one might live longer than seventy years would indicate that it was not so much an attempt to fix the length of life as to state the result of observation to the effect that men commonly died at about seventy years of age. I would understand this to mean that natural deaths might be expected at this age, though deaths by violence and various diseases might come much earlier.

Did Nephites before Christ hold the Melchisedec priesthood?

It was in the ninth year of the "reign of the judges," or a considerable time before the Christian era, that Alma is represented as possessing "the high priesthood of the holy order of God." This holy order is understood to be that of the Melchisedec or "holy" priesthood (Alma 2: 28). It is specifically stated that it is the holy order which is in "Christ Jesus" (Alma 3: 73), and the book of Hebrews informs us that this was the order of Melchisedec (Hebrews 5: 5, 6, 10). However, they kept the law of Moses until it was fulfilled by Christ, as it was ordained to be a "schoolmaster" till that time.

Australian Branch Celebrates Fortieth Anniversary

A Message to President F. M. Smith

Balmain Branch, Australia, observed its fortieth birthday, January 22, with special services. Though attendance was not as large as was desired, because of unfavorable weather conditions, as many as two hundred and fifty attended the evening service. Officers made sure that all members were invited to attend either by personal contact or through the post.

A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout the day, and the Saints who were there send this glowing and reassuring message to President F. M. Smith along with their autographs: "As we think of the future we have no fear; on the contrary, we are full of hope, for we are surrounded by many young men and women whose lives are full of promise, and whose love for the church is increasing daily. Knowing this, we are feeling more than ever the responsibility of caring for them and of finding avenues through which they may give expression to their loyalty and devotion.

"We all love to think that we are colaborers with you on the other side of the globe in seeking to establish the cause of Christ on earth.

"Again we pledge our loyalty to God, his church, and the leading officers with the prayer that the disabilities under which we are at present laboring may soon be removed."

Speakers on this special day for Balmain Branch addressed the gathering with feeling as they recalled the many wonderful manifestations of God's Holy Spirit enjoyed in the early days of the branch.

Balmain Branch was organized with a membership of sixteen, by Elder J. W. Wight, and its present membership is two hundred and eighty-four. It is difficult to ascertain the actual growth of the branch as twenty-eight of its members became the nucleus of the Leichhardt Branch while thirty-five were transferred to the new branch at Guildford. These together with fifty-two who are placed on an unknown list, and those who have passed to the great beyond, make a substantial increase in the forty years.

From the local ranks the Lord has chosen many to act in responsible positions in the church: Elder W. J. Haworth, mission president; Elders G. W. Stewart, A. J. Corbett and R. McLaughlin, district presidents; the late Patriarch J. T. Gresty; Elders W. J. Vaughan, William Patterson, and John Blackmore. The two latter with Brother Colin Ferrett were students at Graceland College. Besides those mentioned, other brothers and sisters have filled offices in district and mission.

The present list of officers consists of four high priests, one seventy, six elders, eleven priests, four teachers, five deacons.

The present church building was erected in 1897, and the love those early Saints had for the work made it possible for the edifice to be dedicated five years later. Their ceremony took place at the district conference in December, 1902. Apostle C. A. Butterworth offered the dedicatory prayer, the preacher being Apostle J. W. Wight. Elder Seaberg, branch president, handed the title deeds and keys of the building to Bishop Lewis, who in turn handed them to the local deacon, Brother John Holden. Since that time the branch has erected a new church frontage, installed a pipe organ, and added a new hall and kindergarten room.

Eastern Colorado Conference and Young People's Convention

President F. M. McDowell and Apostle R. S. Budd Help

The district conference and young people's convention, held at Denver, Colorado, February 24, 25, and 26 is one that will not soon be forgotten by those who had the privilege of attending. From the opening of the first service of the conference, a prayer meeting, on Friday morning at eight thirty, to the close of the conference on Sunday evening, a fine spirit prevailed, which not only helped to draw the hearts of the people together in fine fellowship and worship, but also increased their understanding as they applied themselves to the studies of the conference.

During the week-end three fine prayer services were held. The one at eight thirty Friday morning was a spiritual feast in which members felt definite assurance of good things that were to come. On Saturday morning another worship period of prayer and testimony was enjoyed. And on Sunday morning the communion service was a fitting climax to the worship services of the conference. The spirit of devotion and consecration manifested in this service, and the prayer of consecration offered by President F. M. McDowell at the close of the service, made all feel that they were in the presence of God in the renewal of their covenants.

Two classes were conducted in which the Saints received fine instruction. President McDowell taught, "The Work and Service of the Church," and Apostle R. S. Budd taught, "Doctrinal Beliefs and Fundamentals." It was noticeable how harmonious were the teachings of the two men. Although the subjects were different one felt he had missed a part of the total thought if he had missed any one of the classes. A number took the studies for credit on their teaching certificates.

A fine banquet was had on Friday evening, at which there was a good musical program, group singing, and two fine talks by Brother McDowell and Brother Budd. Through the good cooperation of the women's department of Denver Branch, fine meals were served at the church throughout the conference.

At the business meeting on Saturday afternoon it was decided that since it seems unwise, under present conditions, to attempt to hold a reunion in Eastern Colorado district during this year, a series of three three-day meetings be held instead. One meeting will be held in LaJunta for the Saints living in the south and southeastern part of the district, another in Denver for those living in the central and northern part of the district, and another in Wray for those living in the northeastern part of the district. The next district conference will be held at the three-day meeting in Denver which will take place the last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in August. This decision was reached because present economic conditions prevent the people from traveling as far and spending as much time as would be necessary if a reunion were held. The scheme adopted will allow the folks to attend the meetings held close to their own homes and will make it possible for many more of the Saints to attend than could come to reunion.

Sunday was the biggest day of our district gathering. From the early morning communion service to the closing hour of the day the Saints came together in an attitude of eager anticipation, ready to receive the good things that were given to them. During the church school hour President McDowell conducted a class for adults and young people, his subject being, "Avenues of Service," which was a part of his series. At 11 a. m. Apostle R. S. Budd closed his series of classes with a discussion of the resurrection and its place in the fundamental beliefs and also in the lives of the people of the church.

At 2.30 p. m. President McDowell conducted a round table and organization meeting for the young people of the district at which officers were elected as follows: president, Glen E. Holmes, of Denver; vice president, Lois Cable, of Fort Collins; secretary-treasurer, Goldie R. Bell, of Denver. Beginning with this loose organization, it is planned that the work of the young people of the district shall be so organized as to plan for any activities which may be found wise and necessary in the carrying on of the work. At present the big project is to see that this district is well represented at the Youth Conference and Leadership Convention to be held in Lamoni, June 17 to 25. The young people also expect to take a definite part in the conferences of the district through their organization.

In the evening Brother McDowell gave a fine discourse on "Zion—The Perfection of Beauty," leaving with the Saints who found it possible to stay over for the closing session, some fine thoughts to add to the many that had given a great impetus to their spiritual development during the three days of activity.

All who attended voted this a wonderful conference, and went away strengthened for the tasks that lie before the church during the coming year.

Barberton, Ohio

Small Group Organizes Forces

Members moving away and deaths in recent years have decreased the number of Saints at Barberton. However the faithful few are busy.

The new branch president is Elder William Brown, of Akron, and his home address is 1128 Wooster Avenue. Under his able direction the workers are hoping to overcome each obstacle and make progress in local activities.

Out-of-town speakers in the last two months have included John McCoy, elder, of Wadsworth; A. R. Manchester, patriarch, and E. Guy Hammond, high priest, of Akron.

The church school supervised by Brother Edward L. Mosier, is striving to maintain the standards set for it by the general church. Leaders of the various groups are Sister A. P. Lehr, women's department; Brother Willard, adult supervisor; Sister Lulu Romig, young people, and Sister Gail Ravenscroft, children. These officers are showing their interest and cooperation by working together and trying to help the branch as a whole.

Plans are being made for an Easter program to include all divisions of the church school.

The young people had a Valentine party at the home of Sister Romig, February 14, twelve being present.

Brother C. Crispin, Sister Mary Romig, and Sister McConnaughy are seriously ill. They ask for the prayers of the Saints.

It is the desire of each Latter Day Saint at Barberton to do his part in the building of Zion.

San Bernardino, California

Since the harvest home festival held last November, this branch has been moving forward rapidly in every activity.

On Friday evening, December 23, the children's division gave their Christmas program under the supervision of their leader assisted by the junior choir leader. Christmas morning, one of the junior boys was baptized by Brother George Wixom, who was home for a short holiday visit with his family. This baptism makes a total of eighteen baptized in our branch during the year of 1932. The Christmas sermon was given by Apostle Myron A. McConley, and in the evening the senior choir gave the cantata, "The Joy Bells of Christmas."

Members of the senior choir held a watch party on New Year's Eve and a happy time was had.

The annual business meeting resulted in the reelection of all our present officers, and the council met a few days later to outline the work of the different departments.

The opening sacrament service of the year was well attended, and helped the members to enter the new year full of hope and courage. They are glad to report that the sacramental services held February 5, was the largest in attendance since the congregation entered the new church, and also very spiritual.

During the month of January, they were fortunate in listening to an inspiring sermon by Brother George Wixom, before he returned to his mission in Texas. Brother Jesse Johnson, of Long Beach, and Doctor A. W. Teel, of Los Angeles, have also visited here this year.

Sister Jane Smithson, one of the pioneers of this city, passed away January 7. Sister Smithson is greatly missed at our church services.

Friday evening, February 3, a young people's banquet was held in the dining-room of the church. The purpose of this banquet was to organize the young people's class and outline their work in the branch for the coming year in the way of dramatics, music and social activities. This was in charge of their leader, Sister Olive Draper, and thirty members were present. The class voted to meet the first Friday in every month for a report of their committees and also to plan further activities each time. Young people's prayer meetings are being held the second Sunday of each month at 8.30 a. m. and are well attended, as this also includes the intermediate classes. Many of the juniors are, also, adding their bit to help in the church school programs.

A teacher training class meets every Sunday evening at six thirty in addition to other classes in Doctrine and Covenants and in sociology at this same hour. Some of the young people are attending this training class and are also working for credits.

The women's department is active this year. They meet all day on Thursday of each week, doing the janitor work of the church and sewing for the needy, as well as visiting in the homes of the Saints. On the last Friday evening of each month, this department gives a dinner at the church followed by a program. These dinners are well attended by members and nonmembers. Their aim is primarily to promote sociability in the branch and also be able to earn a little money for the branch budget.

Midweek prayer meetings are very well attended, and officers are striving to maintain a high standard of order at all of our services.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Nonmembers Compose Large Per Cent of Branch Attendance

This branch began the year's activities with every hope to realize its goals. As a branch of the Toronto District, we have reverted to the former Sunday school plan, adopted by the district at its last conference. This local action does not imply that the branch has any fault to find with the church school plan, but that it wishes to be consistent with the district movement.

Branch officers are: President, Elder D. Clatworthy; counselors, Clarence MacDonald and Edward Barrick; secretary, Mrs. Clarence Barrick; solicitor and treasurer, Clarence Barrick; publicity agent and reporter, Mrs. Henry Minor. Clarence MacDonald is superintendent of the Sunday school, and Mrs. Clarence MacDonald is superintendent of the Religio. Each of these leaders is assisted by a group of efficient officers. Mrs. A. Minor is president of the women's department. Mildred Clatworthy and Delbert MacDonald are directors in the department of music, and the young people's choir numbers twenty members, fifteen of whom are nonmembers.

Lowbanks Branch is small. Average Sunday school attendance is forty-five, most of whom are nonmembers. Forty attend the Religio services, and there are ten in the women's department, six of whom are nonmembers. Church services are given good attendance.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

A Sunday school contest recently came to an end with the team led by Mildred Clatworthy winning. The losers treated the winners to a supper.

The first of January Lowbanks had the pleasure of a visit from Elder and Sister R. Barnhardt, of Independence, Missouri, and their daughter, Beethene. Brother Barnhardt gave a fine talk.

Elder Clatworthy is here as often as possible and gives the best of help.

The branch enjoyed a fine Christmas entertainment, and the young people are putting on some splendid programs after the Religio lesson.

Elder Grant St. John was here, February 19, and gave a good sermon. It had been twenty-five years since Brother St. John preached here, and his help was appreciated.

Saints from Niagara Falls visited here a short time ago.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Grow Socially and Spiritually

In recent weeks Council Bluffs has been favored with a visit from President F. M. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. President F. M. Smith spoke to the regular congregation at 11 a. m., and to the priesthood in the afternoon. He stressed the financial situation of the church and called especial attention to the responsibility of the priesthood in the present crisis.

President Floyd M. McDowell held a series of meetings in Omaha a short time ago, and many of our people took advantage of the opportunity to attend them.

The Musical Arts Club, Mrs. W. T. Spanswick, leader, gave a fine concert at the church, February 24. The musical numbers were of a type appreciated by a audience of music lovers. Many comments of appreciation were heard. It was intended to put this concert on at Crescent, Underwood, and Omaha, but owing to present conditions, it was thought best to postpone these events for a time.

The young people are working on the organization of a Tenth Legion unit in Council Bluffs and Omaha. Inauguration services will be the latter part of March.

The Saints are responding nicely to the new way of getting the Heralds before the membership. The local bundle now has reached forty-two. Some of the present subscribers are paying for extra papers to be given to some who are financially unable to buy them.

The Harmony Group, Sister Blanche Currie, leader gave a waffle supper the latter part of December. They gave out invitations in the shape of small aprons. A charge was made for the supper according to your waist measurement. While the people were eating they were furnished with a fine program of music and readings.

The Wa Ka Pa Chapter of Temple Builders met at the home of Olga Jorgensen, December 27, for a waffle supper. After the supper there was an exchange of gifts.

A banquet and watch party were given by the young people on New Year's Eve. About seventy-five were present.

The principal speech was made by the pastor. The theme of the talk was, "Transforming the Dead Past Into the Living Future." Following the banquet an interesting program was given. At the stroke of twelve Father Time (Gene Turpen) appeared followed by New Year (Biloine Whiting). Immediately there was a storm of the usual New Year's streamers, confetti and balloons.

The Wo He Lo Chapter of Temple Builders met at the home of Ruth Hendrix, January 3. A short business meeting was held, after which the remainder of the evening was spent sewing.

The young people held a vesper service, February 20, which was attended by about forty. Commencing March 5, the adult and young people's division began a contest for church attendance during March and April; the losing side is to supply refreshments for the winners, besides an evening's entertainment.

The priesthood have also arranged for a competition for visiting, during the months of April and May: the losers to provide refreshments and an evening's entertainment for all the members of the priesthood and their wives. This will be held sometime in June.

Pastor Ray Whiting has been holding missionary-pastoral services in Kansas City.

The first Friday evening of each month is set aside as "Family Night." This is open to all. The Saints bring their suppers and enjoy the evening meal together, after which games and other entertainment are provided. Members feel that these social gatherings are as important to their religious life as any other service and should be attended by the Saints whenever possible.

Lewiston-Clarkston Branch

Partake of Sacrament

Saints of this small branch in Spokane District were pleased to have Brother P. F. Klaus, of Grangeville, Idaho, here February 5. This was the first opportunity the branch had had to receive the sacrament for several months. The Saints hold prayer meetings on the first Sunday of the month, but there is no elder in the group, and it is not often that they enjoy the communion service.

Brother Klaus administered to several sick members, and helped many with his cheer and courage.

The few members here are striving to keep the campfire burning, hoping that a spark from it will kindle the fire of faith in the hearts of friends and neighbors. They pray that others may be added to their number making it possible for them to carry forward the work of the Lord in latter days.

Inspirational Convention for Spring River Young People

"I Must Be About My Father's Business," Is Theme

A most impressive and inspirational convention for Spring River district young people was held at the Joplin, Missouri, church March 3 to 5. President F. M. McDowell, Elder Frank McDonald and Elder Amos T. Higdon were the leaders who made the convention a success and one that will long be remembered by the young people of the district.

The theme of the convention, "I Must Be About My Father's Business," formed the basis of an address made at the opening session of the convention, a banquet Friday evening, by President McDowell in which he pointed out that the church awaits those persons "who attempt to make adventure in new fields of human understandings—adventures into the undiscovered resources and possibilities of the human soul."

The program for the banquet opened with a violin solo by Katherine Leslie, of Joplin. A vocal solo was given by Nadine Morehouse, of Webb City, and a piano solo by Una Wilson, of Joplin. The following toasts were given: "Rise Up O Men of God," Albert Cobb, of Webb City; "Have Done With Lesser Things," Ruth Reynolds, of Coffeyville; "Bring in the Day of Brotherhood," Raymond Linderoth, of Miami, and, "The Church for You Doth Wait," Elder Higdon, the district president. The attractive decorations for the banquet were supervised by Curtis Pearson.

Saturday and Sunday were given to classwork and periods of worship. Of especial appeal was the sermon by President McDowell following the sacrament service Sunday morning. He used as the subject, "The Way of the Cross."

At the election of officers Sunday afternoon, Frank Shank, of Carthage, was elected president; Estelle Weaver, of Pittsburg, vice president; Mabel Orr, of Carthage, secretary; Marguerite Sheppard, of Joplin, treasurer; Chester Carter, of Springfield, activities director, and Beatrice Deaver, of Pittsburg, chorister. Webb City was chosen as the site of the next convention, to be held March 4 to 6, 1934.

Preceding the convention, the following good-will tours were held to stimulate interest in the convention; February 16, Cardin; February 23, Coffeyville and Parsons; February 27, Liberal, and February 30, Springfield. The good-will tours were attended mainly by a large group of young people from Joplin, Webb City, Carthage, and Pittsburg. At each place a program was given, followed by a talk.

Apostle Roy S. Budd in Southwestern Texas

Visits District Points of Interest With Elder and Sister J. A. Robinson

Conforming to arrangements made with Apostle Roy S. Budd, the presidency of Southwestern Texas District, set the time of the spring conference for February 5. But fortunately Brother Budd was able to come into the district a few days in advance of that date to help with his counsel. Because he arrived ahead of specified dates, he found the Saints not exactly "on parade." Attending the Wednesday night prayer service at one of the San Antonio Branches, he found literally the "faithful few" present. He was asked to talk to the congregation in place of the scheduled prayer meeting, and this he did to good effect.

On Thursday night according to announcement, he occupied at the chapel of Second Church, and the following morning Elder and Sister J. A. Robinson drove with him into the hill country where at Pipe Creek, some forty miles from San Antonio, they dined with the Heisler family. They were glad to see the young son, Harvey, who has been very sick, now improving.

After dinner, they resumed their journey, stopping in to see the Hodges family and then on to Bandera, where they visited until time for the evening service with the Langfords. Sister Langford is a daughter of Sister Hay, the aged woman who sensing the need of a chapel for the Saints to worship in, built with her own money a neat edifice. Sister Hay will be eighty-nine in March, and as a youngster settled with the Lyman Wight colony on Medina River.

This part of Texas was experiencing what is here known as a "norther," the term being synonymous with that of "blizzard" in the North. The difference is in the way it comes. The day may be balmy when suddenly the wind shifts to the north and the temperature drops immediately. A norther arrived the following week when the drop was forty degrees in a few minutes. When one of these arrives in Texas, people and stock seek shelter and remain near the source of warmth until the storm "blows itself out."

But regardless of inclement weather there was a nice turn-out for Brother Budd at the night's service. Medina City, fifteen miles north as well as Pipe Creek, nine miles southeast, were represented, and a goodly number of Saints and friends came from Bandera.

After the service Brother Budd and the Robinsons drove to Medina City, where they had been invited to stay in the hospitable home of Doctor and Mrs. Carl Sherrill. Next morning Brothers Budd and Robinson visited an old-time missionary, Brother Dave Palmer, who lives a mile from Medina City.

The norther having passed on, and the day being sunshiny, Brother and Sister Robinson wished to acquaint Brother Budd with the nature of the country where for years there have lived many stanch Latter Day Saints. They drove up the "North Prong" of the Medina River, fording the stream a number of times in the twelve mile drive.

Southwestern District Meets in Conference

Sunday, the day for the conference, arrived slightly cloudy and quite chilly, but at the eight thirty prayer service, the visitors were beginning to arrive. They came from Bandera, Pipe Creek, Beeville, Harper, Elmdorf, Van Ormy, Melon, Leming, Sommerset, Pearsall, and Austin.

The church school session was in charge of the director of Religious Education, Floyd Jett, assisted by directors of the local branches, Brother Rauss Eastham, of first Branch, and Sister Gracia Robinson of Second Branch. A model church school worship service was demonstrated.

The sacrament service followed, and as many could stay only for that service, Brother Budd addressed the congregation following the serving of the emblems.

Dinner was served at the church, as has been the custom for years, everyone bringing lunch and eating from a common board. Because the weather was unfavorable the tables were laid into the main auditorium and there until two o'clock a social time was enjoyed.

At the business session which began at two, it was decided to hold a reunion near San Antonio sometime this summer. Routine matters were disposed of in a short time and at three o'clock Brother Budd addressed the priesthood, while Brother J. A. Robinson, district president, talked to the rest of the visitors on the necessity of activity among the youth of the district. Much interest was shown in both meetings, and some constructive work had its genesis there.

The evening meeting began with a seven o'clock song service, led by the district chorister, Sister Keo Robinson, who later sang as a solo, "Behold, the Master Passeth By." First Branch Choir sang the anthem, "Holy, Holy, Holy," at the preaching service. Sister Fay Hall is musical director for the branch while Sister Emma Jackson is choir director.

Brother Budd was the evening speaker, and with that service brought the conference to a close. But he remained with San Antonio Saints, preaching at the chapel at First Branch Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights.

An Effective Baptismal Ceremony

On Wednesday evening five souls were inducted into the kingdom in an impressive service of baptism preceding the sermon. The setting for this ordinance was effective, and Elder Floyd Jett, associate pastor, officiated in immersing the candidates, his first experience since his ordination last year. Elder Robert Jett was in charge of the service. Sister Fay Hall, whose husband was one of the candidates, sang, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

Those baptized were Sammy Hay, great-grandson of Sister Virginia Hay, of Bandera, mentioned above; Fay W. Hall; Claude Reeves, husband of Sister Zita Reeves, a loyal worker among the younger women, and Mrs. Lura May Canion and her daughter, Hazel Canion, granddaughter and great-granddaughter respectively of Sister Hay. Sister Hazel has been a contralto soloist in First Choir for some time.

Following the ceremony Brother Budd preached a fine sermon at the conclusion of which the confirmation service was held, Elders W. H. Mannering, T. J. Jett, jr., Robert Jett, and J. A. Robinson officiating.

On Thursday night the Robinsons drove eighty-four miles to Austin, Texas, in the midst of the worst norther in thirty years. They were well received by Saints of that city, who under the leadership of Elder W. L. Milner and his wife, have built up a fine group of workers. Elder Milner holds services in his home, and in spite of the weather there were twenty-seven out to hear Brother Budd preach a helpful discourse.

Attend Central District Conference

Friday they drove the one hundred and sixty-five miles to Houston to attend the Central Texas conference. One hundred of those miles were traveled through sleet and ice, very unusual for this section. There they received a hearty welcome. Brother Tischer, district president, has the work there in hand and everyone is busy.

On this occasion the travelers were happy to meet among other old friends, President F. M. Smith and Missionary G. H. Wixom.

This trip afforded opportunity for a meeting of council between President Smith, Apostle Budd, Missionary Wixom, and Elders Tischer and Robinson, to discuss the boundary lines of the districts and the care of the Saints who live in groups along these lines. A fine understanding and working agreement were reached.

A traveler in the Orient tells that on the walls of an ancient temple was found this picture in two panels. One shows a king forging from his crown a chain and the other a slave making from his chains a crown.—Albert Edgar Wardner, D. D.

Kansas City Stake

The regular monthly priesthood meeting was held at Central Church, February 19, at 3 p. m., Elder George Mesley of the stake presidency, in charge. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the guest lecturer, his topic being, "The Authoritative Church." His talk impressed upon his hearers the theocratic democracy of the church government and urged upon the men of the quorums the necessity of sharing their ministerial responsibilities for the help of all other quorum members. Their work should be characterized by the sharing of what they have learned and the best that is in them.

The stake missionary-pastoral sermon series, February 26 to March 5, conducted at Central Church by Elder Ray Whiting, pastor at Council Bluffs and Omaha, proved to be a soul-searching effort with desired results. Brother Whiting commands close attention from the beginning of his discourse till the end. No one can mistake his sincerity or the firmness of his convictions. His solicitations were for the membership to lay their all on the altar of God, this being their "reasonable service."

The general theme of this series was, "Save Yourself From This Untoward Generation." Sub-topics were "Fear or Faith," "God's Will," "The Best Story," "Two Choices," "Saving Ourselves," "Something Different," and Sunday, March 5, the last of the series was, "The Greatest of These." In these sermons Brother Whiting presented the condition of the church in the world today, the condition of other churches, the responsibility of our ministry, things that count with the membership, and thoughts concerning many other vital questions.

Sister C. E. Wight has been very ill for the past eight weeks and should be remembered before the Lord in prayer that she may soon recover.

Death unexpectedly visited the home of Brother and Sister Alma R. White, March 4, 1933, claiming their youngest son, John Lawrence, fifteen years old. He was ill only fifteen minutes. Leaves to mourn, his parents and two brothers. The funeral was held from the home in Kansas City, February 6, the sermon being preached by Patriarch Ammon White. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery, Independence.

The women's department consists mostly of women whose husbands do not belong to the church, or are not privileged to come regularly to weekly prayer meetings.

During a surprise luncheon on the superintendent it was suggested that they meet every Friday in one of the homes and instead of feasting, have fasting and prayer. The next Friday they did so and decided to study something. While they were deciding on the text of their study the Doctrine and Covenants was presented to one of the women and the Spirit spoke through three or four. They study the Doctrine and Covenants in order to find the full law, so that we may put it in practice. The class starts at eleven-fifteen with a five-minute period of meditation, songs, and prayer; then they study until one thirty when the prayer service starts.

The women started with eight present at the first meeting and at the last they had twenty-nine present. They always have not less than two new members.

After their prayers they have testimonies (if the priesthood is present) and administrations. They have had as high as eight administrations in one meeting. At their next meeting they are fasting and praying for the priesthood and the men of the church. Sometimes we fast and pray especially for individuals, unemployed, etc.

These meetings are proving to be a decided factor in the increasing spirituality of the branch. The women are grateful for the help of Brothers Lloyd and May.

John Alfred Steffee, seventy-eight years of age, died March 5, 1933, and his funeral was held at Bennington Heights Church, March 7. Interment was in Mount Moriah Cemetery. A pioneer in western Kansas, a carpenter by trade, and a mill worker, Brother Steffee was a student of the scriptures and his delight was to talk the gospel. He leaves his wife, three sons, one daughter, other relatives, and many friends.

Class Number Five held a meeting at the home of the teacher, Sister Mary Helm on March 7. The evening's entertainment was found in jigsaw puzzles.

The regular monthly sacrament service for March was in charge of Pastor O. G. Helm, Don C. Stafford, E. H. Agin, and S. D. Hastings.

Independence

Much anxiety prevailed in Independence over the week-end regarding the safety of relatives and church people in the California earthquake area. Scores of former Independence people are now living in or near Los Angeles and Long Beach. Messages of assurance began to arrive late Saturday and continued all day Sunday.

Elder D. B. Sorden, pastor of Central Church at Los Angeles, was able to get word to his mother living at Oklahoma City Saturday, of the safety of Los Angeles Saints, and Sister Sorden relayed this assurance to Sister E. J. Gleazer at Independence. The message from Brother Sorden contained special mention of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who for the past weeks has been laboring in the Southwest territory, and was in Los Angeles at the time of the quake.

A message from the D. B. Carmichael family living at Santa Ana, to Sister Albert Carmichael, of Independence, informed her that the Saints of Santa Ana Branch were also safe. Patriarch Albert Carmichael who has been laboring in California for a number of weeks, is at Oakland.

Others of the church in Independence hopefully await word from relatives and friends.

Preparations are under way this week for the launching of the young people's series of meetings Sunday night, March 19, at the Stone Church, to be held every night next week with the exception of Saturday. President Elbert A. Smith will be the speaker, and his subjects are: March 19, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God"; March 20, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Christ"; March 21, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About the Human Soul"; March 22, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About the Restoration Movement"; March 23, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Their Church Goals"; March 24, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Citizenship and Duty to Country," and March 26, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Marriaige and the Home." On Saturday night a banquet will be held in the Auditorium basement at seven o'clock.

Stone Church

It is a rare privilege for people of Independence to listen to Bishop L. F. P. Curry speak, but this treat was afforded them Sunday morning at the Stone Church, and his message was heard by a large congregation. It was a message of assurance, informing the listeners that though the church has been and is yet meeting the fiery test, it will emerge triumphant, stronger for its struggles, and more acceptable to God. Brother Curry emphasized the necessity of the members' starting from where they are in order to accomplish that which is to be done. His counsel was for each member to keep his head level, his feet on the ground, calmly face the situations that arise, and make his adjustments. Briefly he presented the trend in social and economic thinking away from the competitive, profit-making methods of business to the methods which foster production for human needs.

The musical program contributed by the choir to the morning service and to the radio audience opened with the singing of, "Bless Thou the Lord, O My Soul," from the Russian Liturgy. This number was given unaccompanied, Paul N. Craig directing. A solo, "Trust Ye in the Lord," by Scott, was sung by Mrs. Pauline James Arnson. Then "The Deluge," an effective violin-piano-organ number, was played by Orrin Fry, violinist; George Miller, pianist, and Robert Miller, organist. The choir sang another anthem, "Beneath the Shadow of the Great Protection," Mrs. Alice M. Burgess singing the contralto solo.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Fred O. Wilkinson.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker Sunday evening.

Among the list of those who have lately passed away is the name of Elder Thomas Reese. Brother Reese was born September 11, 1843, at Cwmaman, Wales, Brother Reese was reputed to be one of the oldest members of the church, having been baptized in his childhood in Wales. He had belonged to the church eighty years. He was first ordained a teacher in 1870, and then an elder in 1911. Brother and Sister Reese have lived in Independence for twelve years, and have been ardent members and workers in the Great Northwest Club. The funeral occurred yesterday afternoon at the Stone Church.

Frederick Eugene Keohler, twenty years old, accidently shot himself March 5, and death was instantaneous. The deceased was the son of Sister Ada and Fred Koehler, and leaves besides his mother, five sisters, and many other relatives. President Elbert A. Smith preached the funeral sermon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Religio, which meets each Sunday evening at six o'clock, was entertained by a thirty-minute concert by the Walnut Park Orchestra under the direction of Orlando Nace. The orchestra was assisted by little Glenna Dean Jacobs, reader. The program was given preceding the class work, due to the orchestra's having to keep another engagement.

Evangelist U. W. Greene spoke to a good Sunday evening audience at the seven o'clock hour.

Elder Howard Andersen, the morning speaker, chose as the theme of his sermon, "Will Prayer Work?" He left with this congregation many stimulating and helpful thoughts.

One of the evening attractions was a play, "Faith," presented at the evening church school hour by a cast of nine people, directed by Sister Fish.

Elder D. S. McNamara gave the evening sermon, speaking on the missionary work of the church, the signs of the times, and the need of Zion as a place of safety.

Pastor G. W. Eastwood presided at both morning and evening services. In the morning the choir sang, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and "Hosanna, to the Living Lord."

L. W. White and Perry Hiles, of Englewood congregation, occupied the pulpit, February 26.

The annual community "sing" was held February 19, at Fairmount Methodist Church, and the East Independence Latter Day Saint group with the two school districts, Spring Branch and De Kalb, combined in an evening of old-time singing. Each organization is always well represented with numbers given in song or pantomime. Large crowds characterize these community events. Sister Iva Edgerton, of East Independence Church, was chosen to preside as president of this movement another year.

During the recent contest held by the young people of Independence this local's Rainbow Class of young people did splendid work in the play they entered, "Detour Ahead." This was their first dramatic attempt, and the experience has been very helpful. The cast was composed of Charlotte Friend, Robert Smith, Eugene O'Neil, Elizabeth Friend, Hazel Collins, Richard Smith, and Laurel Minton. March 7, the young people held a social evening at the home of their teacher, Iva Edgerton, at which time a gift was given Miss Opal Newcomb, director of the play.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Almost every home in the congregation was represented at the February sacrament service in charge of Bishop H. E. French and Elder R. E. Madden. The former delivered the sacrament talk.

Twenty-eight women attended the meeting of their department, February 8, and opened the service with the hymn, "A Steadfast Faith." A splendid paper on "Faith" was read by Sister Fay Sensabaugh. Sister Elna Jackson read a short article on "Talking," classifying talkers under the following titles: Tiresome, drifting, tedious, tattling, temperamental, tantalizing, tortuous, torpedo, tangled, and triumphant. Her conclusion was that most people talk altogether too much for their own good and the comfort of others. Less talking and more thinking should be the creed.

During January, February, and March the women are giving "jitney" suppers to help meet their part of the general church debt. Thirteen women compose a committee to furnish the menu for the meals. Everyone is working willingly, and there is splendid teamwork. They cleared thirty dollars and fifty cents in the first two months.

Prayer meetings of the branch are of a high spiritual order and the average attendance is fifty.

The church school reached its goal of one hundred and forty in attendance, February 26, and hopes to keep this splendid record the rest of the year. The superintendent, with his assistants and teachers, is doing a good work.

Sermons for the month were edifying and the speakers and their themes were: Patriarch J. E. Matthews talked on "The World"; Bishop H. E. French, "Our Friendly Attitude"; Elder G. H. Kirkendall, "The Mission of Christ"; Elder John R. Grice, "Light and Salvation"; Elder W. B. Reeves, "Confidence"; Elder A. E. Anderton, "Love Ye One Another," and Elder C. W. Clark, "Sour Grapes."

The British Medical Journal, hitherto representing the attitude that attacked disease from the side of the physical and not from the side of the spiritual, as Jesus did, now says that "There is no tissue of the human body wholly removed from the influence of spirit."—E. Stanley Jones, in The Christ of Every Road.

WARNING!

Better not eat pork if the animal has not been fed according to Word of Wisdom. Government inspection will prove to you that over 90 per cent of the hogs are diseased. WHY? They are fed decomposed foods such as dead animals, decomposed garbage, all sorts of filth from slaughter houses and elsewhere.
