I suggest that a reading of the entire article would be a good thing for every Latter Day Saint, and this interview can be found in the February issue of Nation's Business, which is on file in most libraries, or can be obtained from some business man. Labor is not asking for the unreasonable. We as Latter Day Saints feel that there is something wrong. Millions of men cannot get the work they want because of a breakdown in a system over which they have no control. When they go so far as to suggest "forceful methods," we are forced to realize the seriousness of the situation. There must be a way and we believe that in Zion we will find the answer to the cry of millions of starving men who want work but cannot find it. God says there is enough and to spare for all. Therefore are we going too far when we say that in some way we can solve this problem so that in Zion there will be no involuntary loafing? I believe not.

Today there is another class of men who are finding that the supposed security of their jobs is a myth. I refer to government employees. Thousands of young people have been led to believe that once on a government civil service pay roll their worries as to a job are over. But in the situation as it has developed since 1930, we find the government going so far behind in cost of operation that it is forced to yield to the common sense principle of keeping outgo within income. We see Congress giving to the President drastic powers to wipe out all bureaus and departments which are not necessary. Therefore the supposed security of a government job, merely because it is a government job, yields to the natural law, that security is found only in profitable production. Unless there is some economic reason for the existence of a job, it should be discontinued.

Perhaps in this last statement the reader will get a hint of what I expect to suggest as the answer to the problem which I have emphasized in this article. So far, the problem is all that has been discussed. I am not quite ready to give that answer, but when I do it will be along the line that the biggest part of the security which we all look for must be found in self. In other words, I do not intend to suggest that the individual going to Zion can look to the church to carry the full responsibility of guaranteeing security to each of us. Adjustment of misfit conditions is largely an individual responsibility, dependent upon the ability of people to improve themselves, and as a result to improve group environment. This is the responsibility of every one, even of those looking for security. But more of this later.

In this connection I want to refer to a recent editorial which suggested that too many are dependent on "jobs." It hit the nail on the head. There are far too many who have permitted themselves to be limited in the development of their abilities, and they can work only when certain things are offered to them. The energetic individual will find some way even if he must make and sell something. Of course it is hard, but what man ever made a success without doing the hard thing? I know from experience that selling under present conditions is hard. To hear "no" constantly but to keep going to find the one who will say "yes" is a test of the metal in any man. However, it is being done. And in times of adversity many men are forced to find something to do which is entirely different from that for which they have been trained, only to find a field that gives them the very opportunity for which they have longed. Zion will be redeemed by men who have the courage to meet changed conditions, to make adjustments, to do things they "can't do," and who are willing to put up with things that in normal times they had not been called upon to endure. I say this from personal experience. My plans to help in church work have been frustrated by changes resulting from the business situation. If I had been perhaps a little more selfish by neglecting my church responsibilities, I could have been in a stronger position to fight the depression. I have been forced to stay away from home and friends under the most trying conditions I have ever experienced and in my human weakness I wonder sometimes if it is worth while. However, I also know from experience that man's extremity is God's opportunity, so instead of complaining or wasting my spare time I am attempting to use it. The more I try to do, the more I find that I haven't enough time for what I want to accomplish. If as a result of having to face changed conditions I can use my stumblingblocks as stepping-stones and find a new avenue of service, I am only proving to myself that God will lead when we give him the chance. But we, you and I, must furnish the initiative.

"THIS ONE THING I DO"

consider how far behind we are in the race—how far from the goal set for our personal achievement by Christ Jesus, and how far the church is from her oft-expressed Zionic ideals.

It is not wrong to spend money on fine buildings, or to spend long hours in attaining such musical excellence that the world will reward us with applause and good will. Neither is it wrong to strive for a place in the best society circles. But may we not be very foolish in thus scattering our energies and our means, when the church is still so far from its goals—the evangelization of the world, and the Zionization of the church? Let us not forget that we are in a race, and in the race, "THIS ONE THING I DO."

If we are trying to carry with us a weighty assortment of useless trifles; if we find ourselves shackled by sin; if we are stopping by the way to play to the grand stand, or to drink soda pop, or to pick flowers, while other runners pass us by, "let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and RUN THE RACE . . ." If we have lost sight of our goals and wandered from the way, let us repeat and practice again with Paul, "This one thing I do." And let us so order our lives and our activities, that every moment of our time, every ounce of our physical, mental, and spiritual energies shall be increasingly devoted to the completion of our unfinished tasks, and the attainment of our yet remote goals—the evangelization of the world, and the Zionization of the church. Let us be sure of our goals, and then resolve anew, "This one thing I do . . . I press toward the mark."

A BOOK REVIEW

lishing House and contents, located at Lamoni, Iowa.

2. Because of the small number existing a reprint was issued from Plano. This does not dovetail with the suppression theory.

3. The parts that are supposed to have been suppressed have been reprinted in later Heralds, as well as other matter which might be construed against the interests of the church.

The policy of the church has never favored the suppression of any documents or facts but rather to bring to light all the truth and all the facts and let them speak for themselves. We pointed this out to Mr. Arbaugh when he was in Independence. Certainly he could not accuse us of suppressing any information. While he was here we gave him free access to all the resources of the Historical Department. For a year afterwards we spent much time hunting material for him. We sent him many things, books and pamphlets which he had not discovered. We even sent him (and this courtesy we could not repeat) some rare books and manuscripts. All we asked in return was a fair representation of our ideas (as a church) of revelation. We do not deny him the right to form his own opinion and to express it, but we do decry his continual tendency to set up a fantasy, his own idea of what we should think, and then proceed to destroy this figment of his own imagination.

He proceeds to a discussion of the various factions: Charles B. Thompson, Strang, Morris, etc., and the existing factions, the Josephites, Brighamites, and Hedrickites. As a result of this review he states the following conclusions regarding 'revelation among the Mormon factions':

"In reviewing the history of these various factions, one finds revelation in much the same role. It adds little, is usually a means of exercising authority, and that not in a very colorful way and often is used as a means of last resort." —Page 145.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It would indeed be difficult to express in a few words an idea more wholly false than the above definition of the purpose of revelation among Latter Day Saints.

A truer statement of what revelation is, may be found in the Christian Century for March 22, 1933, in an article, "Where Is Barth Wrong?" by Edwin Lewis. (Page 386.)

"We are called upon to accept the word of God [the Bible] wholly on the word of man. The grounds of belief are purely authoritarian. But this cannot be satisfactory. If the transcendent God is not here how do I know he was ever there? If he does not speak to me I can too easily question that he speaks to you. Why this polemic against 'experience'? That I must believe to know —yes! That they tell me what to believe—yes! That they blazed the trail that I may follow—yes! That there is about their experience an originality that justifies the term 'revelation'—yes! Nevertheless, the God whom I know only at second hand, I still do not know," etc.

It is strange that Mr. Arbaugh and others should insist on such a false view of revelation, one which they will not apply to the Bible. They insist that every word of a modern prophet must be accepted without question, that he can thus enforce his every will and whim. They distort or reject the many statements concerning the right and duty of every member to know for himself.

The Book of Mormon asks the honest in heart to ask of God, not publicly but in private, and they shall be given a knowledge of the divinity of that book. The test still stands. But men have been baptized into the church who did not accept the Book of Mormon. Joseph Smith, jr., instructed the church that each revelation through him must go before the quorums, one by one, and 'if it strikes a snag it needs looking into.' The late Joseph Smith, his son, repeatedly expressed that ideal. It is not only the privilege but the duty of the priesthood and the church so to live as to have the witness of the spirit, the spirit of revelation to discern whether that which is submitted to the church is of God or not. This examination should be made in the spirit of love and support to the man who is chosen as prophet. But the burden should not rest on one alone.

The church with its liberality of "no creed" takes men of many minds, but its teaching is clear as to the right of every man to approach the throne of Grace and to receive for himself. It is a wonderful ideal, but one which Mr. Arbaugh has not glimpsed. So he has not written of revelation among the Mormons with any philosophical understanding of what that ideal means.

Well he had to get his degree, but one wonders that a University will grant a degree on such a basis.

Success as I Behold It

Success is not alone the accumulating of great wealth, the achieving of world-wide fame, or the performing of some daring feat. Success cannot be measured by the length of a day or the praise of men; nor can it be purchased with silver or gold.

Success may be the proud possession of the humble workman standing by his machine in some obscure corner of the shop.

The great executive directing the destiny of the largest industrial institution, deeply engrossed in some intricate problem, may hold this treasure.

Success is the immortalizing of a man's soul. It is the portraying in the life of a man those attributes which make him akin to all people.

Success is measured by the usefulness of a man's life—the service rendered and the impressions left on the lives of those passing by.

Success is to be found in the doing of the small, yet noble tasks crossing our path from day to day, cheerfully, willingly, patiently, and kindly.

Success comes only to him, who possesses vision, persistency of purpose, and a willingness to serve.—C. A. Edstrom.

A Creed

I believe in Human Kindness
Large amid the sons of men,
Nobler far in willing blindness
Than in censure's keenest ken.
I believe in Self-Denial,
And its secret throb of joy;
In the love that lives through trial,
Dying not, though death destroy.

I believe in dreams of Duty,
Warning us to self-control—
Foregleams of the glorious beauty
That shall yet transform the soul,
In the godlike wreck of nature
Sin doth in the sinner leave,
That he may regain the stature
He hath lost—I do believe.

I believe in Love renewing
All that sin hath swept away,
Leaven-like its work pursuing
Night by night and day by day:
In the power of its remoulding,
In the grace of its reprieve,
In the glory of beholding,
Its perfection—I believe.

I believe in Love Eternal,
Fixed in God's unchanging will,
That beneath the deep infernal
Hath a depth that's deeper still!
In its patience—its endurance
To forbear and to retrieve,
In the large and full assurance
Of its triumph—I believe.

—Norman McLeod.

The Awakening of Man

Progress is
The law of life, man is not Man as yet.
Nor shall I deem his object served, his end
Attained, his genuine strength put fairly forth,
While only here and there a star dispels
The darkness, here and there a towering mind
O'erlooks its prostrate fellows: When the host
Is out at once to the despair of night,
When all mankind alike is perfected,
Equal in full-blown powers—then, not till then,
I say, begins man's general infancy.
For wherefore make account of feverish starts
Of restless members of a dominant whole,
Impatient nerves which quiver while the body
Slumbers as in the grave? Oh, long ago
The brow was twitched, the tremulous lids astir,
The peaceful mouth disturbed; half uttered speech
Ruffled the lip, and then the teeth were set,
The breath drawn sharp, the strong right hand clenched stronger,
As it would pluck a lion by the jaw;
The glorious creature laughed out, even in sleep!
But when full roused, each giant-limb awake,
Each sinew strung, the greatheart pulsing fast,
He shall start up and stand on his own earth,
Then shall his long triumphant march begin,
Thence shall his being date—thus wholly roused,
What he achieves shall be set down to him.
When all the race is perfected alike
As man, that is; all tended to mankind,
And, man produced, all has its end thus far;
But in completed man begins anew
A tendency to God. Prognostics told
Man's near approach; so in man's self arise
August anticipations, symbols, types
Of a dim splendor ever on before
In that eternal circle life pursues.
For men begin to pass their nature's bound,
And fine new hopes and cares which fast supplant
Their proper joys and griefs; they grow too great
For narrow creeds of right and wrong, which fade
Before the unmeasured thirst for good; while peace
Rises within them ever more and more.
Such men are even now upon the earth,
Serene amid the half-formed creatures round
Who should be saved by them and joined with them. —Robert Browning.

Prayer and Testimony

The Testimony of Alma

I have been supported under trials and troubles of every kind, yea, and in all manner of afflictions; yea, God has delivered me from prison, and from bonds, and from death; yea, and I do put my trust in him, and he will still deliver me; and I know that he will raise me up at the last day, to dwell with him in glory; yea, and I will praise him forever, for he has brought our fathers out of Egypt, and he has swallowed up the Egyptians in the Red Sea; and he led them by his power into the promised land; yea, and he has delivered them out of bondage and captivity, from time to time; yea, and he has also brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem; and he has also by his everlasting power, delivered them out of bondage and captivity, from time to time, even down to the present day; and I have always retained in remembrance their captivity: yea, and ye also ought to retain in remembrance, as I have done, their captivity. But behold, my son, this is not all; for ye ought to know, as I do know, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God, ye shall prosper in the land; and ye ought to know also, that inasmuch as ye will not keep the commandments of God, ye shall be cut off from his presence. Now this is according to his word.—Words of Alma to his son Helaman (Book of Mormon, Alma, 17: 25-30.)

Branch Organization From Efforts of Two Sisters

By Mrs. P. A. Peterson

Let me turn back a few years before I knew about this gospel. Two sisters in the faith, Mrs. George and Mrs. Mercer, had a desire to start a Sunday school at Pasco, Washington. So they went to work. They invited the children of the neighborhood, and Sister Mercer opened her home to them.

Later Mr. Mercer found the little sixteen by sixteen foot building which was moved out on the prairie where it still stands. Later they had to add another sixteen feet or more.

As a result of these good sisters' prayers and efforts and also those of others we now have a little branch here. It was organized in December, 1930. We have a promising group of young people. It is to them that we look, and may the Lord guide them.

God Reveals His Truth

By Giles Byron Moore

Brother U. W. Greene's testimony in the Herald of July 25, greatly impressed me. He related incidents in which four people were told in answer to prayer that this work is of God. God has told us that in the mouths of two or three witnesses every word shall be established, and so I want to testify that in our family four members, my mother, my wife, my sister and I, had the knowledge of the truth revealed to us at the same time. My wife and mother were stanch members of two other churches, and no one had asked them to leave their faith, nor had anyone asked me to do so.

All of us had been listening to Brother Willie Smith preach, but not once had he asked us to join. All four of us asked for baptism of our own accord. I was the first, but I did not mention it to my mother, wife, or sister. They came of their own accord.

I know that God does indeed reveal his will to man. If in doubt when you read his word, just be honest with him and ask him for knowledge. He will hear you. Have faith in him.

Let Us Walk in the Way of Humility and Love

By Bertha J. Adams

I know this is the true church and the work of our heavenly Father, and to you who doubt I would bring the assurance that if you will humble yourselves and if you are honest in heart, God will answer you and bring you into his fold.

As God looks down upon us, he knows our thoughts; he knows everything we do whether we are trying to live the best we can or not. Are we placing stumblingblocks in our brother's way, or are we lending him a helping hand? Let us remember that all of us have faults to overcome, for Christ says that unless we are humble and full of love, it will be impossible to please our Master. If we are not humble, darkness creeps into our lives and we see only the faults of our brothers and sisters. But if we have the pure love of Christ in our hearts, we do not see the faults of another—we see our own faults. And seeing these faults, we endeavor to correct them, and to move on to higher ground. Then, and only then, shall we be able to see the beauty of life in helping those who need us.

If we walk in the way of stubbornness because we have been offended by misjudgment, and refuse to attend church, and keep our children from going, too, we are making a big mistake, and we shall be chastised for doing so. I know this to be true, for I did this very thing. It was eight long years before I could forgive.

I was taken very sick and had a serious operation. I lay unconscious for nearly two weeks, but when I went upon the operating table I said, "God, thy will be done." In the latter part of that second week, I was given a spiritual experience which impressed me with the fact that I had not been doing my duty, I had not been doing the things required of me. In this experience I was assured that if I would endeavor to do those things required at my hands, my life would be spared for a little longer. And I promised the Lord that I would try.

After that I gained rapidly, and in a few days left the hospital ready to do the work expected of me. I hope to be faithful in my purpose.

Saints and friends, this is God's work. We cannot afford to lose that which I have been shown is worth living and working for. We must win and not one must be lost. Let us help each other with our Master as our guide.

I am happy in the latter-day church, and I do not care for the things of this world. The gospel has stood the test from 1830, and when I think of the suffering and afflictions endured by our brothers and sisters for the gospel's sake that it might be carried to you and to me, I know more than ever that it is divine and that something is expected of us in return.

7, this year, by Brother Hayden, of Bangor. A few of the Saints of Bangor, Hartford, and Benton Harbor meet the first Sunday of each month, taking plain food and enjoying lunch together. August 6, we met at Sister Coonfare's at Benton Harbor. Saints of the community were invited to be present. We feel that if it is God's will, there will be a branch at Benton Harbor in the near future.

May God bless his people everywhere, young and old, and keep them free of sin.

Faith a Help in Trying Times

By Mrs. L. E. Clouse

I want to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel and the goodness of the Lord because my heart is full to overflowing with gratitude for the blessings I enjoy.

I became acquainted with this church in 1929. It was in 1928, that I ceased to attend the church to which I belonged, and began to go to different churches. None seemed to satisfy me until I began to attend the Saints' services. My children went with me, but my husband had lost faith in religious denominations.

Then we began to have Thursday evening meetings at my home, and my husband grew interested. The meetings continued for several months. My husband was baptized June 14, 1931, but I was reluctant to join. I feared that all religious faiths were alike, and was afraid to take the step.

But the Saints did not forget me in their prayers and in their conversations. They pleaded with me to make the decision, until I did join the church. When I was baptized, I was sure that I was doing the right thing.

Just prior to my baptism I was given a dream which set me to thinking seriously concerning my spiritual condition. Brother Farley was then preparing for a trip to California and did not know if he would return, and I wanted him to baptize me. So I went to him and asked that he would announce a baptismal service for May 29, 1932. He did so. But when the day arrived I still held back. However, on that day my eight-year-old daughter and two of Brother Farley's grandchildren were baptized.

A member of another church assured me that I was not ready to be baptized and the pastor of that church told me that none who failed to join his church would be saved.

And so I waited. It was not until that November 30, 1932, I was baptized.

I can say that I have had many blessings. My husband has been out of steady work for over four years, but I do not worry. I have the assurance that as long as I am true to the Lord, he will provide for us. My little four-year-old daughter praises Jesus for a recent healing. She was healed through the administration of Brother Farley.

I have a daughter who belongs to another church, and I desire the prayers of the Saints that she will find the true faith and accept it. Pray also that I may overcome my greatest weakness, the man-fearing spirit. Often I sit in the prayer meeting and hear the still small voice tell me to pray or to bear my testimony. I want to comply, but I am afraid.

My faith in the Lord is strong. I find faith a great help in these trying times, and God has made wonderful promises to those who exercise it.

We have a family of six children and all belong to the church except two who are too young and the daughter I mentioned. We have a fine branch at Durango. For a time it seemed to run down, but we prayed for some young man to be sent to help us, and our prayers were answered. Our helper has done a wonderful work. He is away for a time, but we pray that it will not be long.

Friend of the Herald of Long Standing

By Mrs. H. C. Hughes

For some time I have thought to write to the Herald and tell what it means to me. For the past ten years I have been hard of hearing, and get but little of the sermons, so the Herald and other church publications have been my greatest companions. I do not know what I would do without them.

I have been a subscriber continuously for fifty-one years; also I took Zion's Ensign and Autumn Leaves the entire time they were published.

Let me relate one experience which was mine several years after we had taken the Herald. We were in arrears on our subscription, and I was attending a reunion held at Woodbine, Iowa. There I talked with Brother Robert Elvin who was looking after the interests of the Herald Publishing House. He said, "I believe I have your name on the Herald list. Yes, you are in arrears." I replied that I was, and I wanted very badly to pay him something on it. But I knew that I did not have enough to pay that and to get me home, too. So I prayed about the matter and told the Lord that if he would provide some means by which I could raise the money I would send it to the Herald at once.

At home my husband met me at the station, and when we were on our way home, he told me that a woman had been at our house that morning to get me to make her a dress. She had left the goods and would be back that afternoon for me to cut it out and fit it.

Then I went to our little country post office. The postmaster hauled the mail to Fremont, a distance of twenty miles. He said to me: "If you will bring me your butter, I will take it to Fremont and sell it and pay you the cash." In those days you usually had to trade out your produce; you seldom got cash as we do today.

How thankful I felt, for I knew that the heavenly Father had heard and answered my prayers. In this way I soon raised money enough to pay up and renew our subscription, or pay in advance. Since then I have always believed that if we want the Herald enough, we can get it. I will do without something to eat or wear long enough to get it.

I had been a reader of the Herald several years before I came into the church. Back in the days when I was a little girl I stayed with my sister, Mrs. W. C. Hidy, and they took the Herald. It was a small paper then, about the size of Zion's Hope. I loved to read it.

Since then I have been publicity agent a number of years, and have sent in subscriptions at various times. I have belonged to the church over fifty-one years, and the only regret I have is that I have not done more for its upbuilding. My prayer is for God's people and the building of Zion.

QUESTION TIME

Does the church believe in war? And, if not, may its members claim exemption?

In 1833 a revelation was given to the church which clearly answers the first of these questions. It states on this point:

"For if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me; therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children." —Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

This statement, however, does not mean that war is never justified and should never be resorted to under any circumstances. The same revelation informs us that God gave the following law to his ancient people:

"And if any nation, tongue, or people should proclaim war against them, they should first lift a standard of peace unto that people, nation, or tongue, and if that people did not accept the offering of peace, neither the second nor the third time, they should bring these testimonies before the Lord; then, I, the Lord, would give unto them a commandment, and justify them in going out to battle against that nation, tongue, or people, and I, the Lord, would fight their battles, and their children's battles and their children's children until they had avenged themselves on all their enemies, to the third and fourth generation; behold, this is an ensample unto all people, saith the Lord your God, for justification before me."—Ibid., 95: 6.

After several gross violations of international law, pledges, and rights had been committed against the United States during the World War, the church by formal vote supported the nation in its war against the enemy. General Conference declared:

"As citizens of the United States, we hereby reaffirm our belief in and fidelity to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and . . . hereby denounce all organizations of any name or character which have expressed opposition to, or sought to hinder the administration of the Government's purposes in the conducting of the present war; and unreservedly express our loyalty to and support of the United States Government in its conducting of the war against the Teutonic allies, humbly praying God's blessing on the allied cause so that complete victory may bring to us an enduring peace, preparing the way for the coming of the kingdom of God."—Number 789.

It was believed by some of those who adopted this resolution that war was then justified under the revelation previously quoted. There were some who did not agree with this view, but believed that further aggression should be suffered before resorting to war. Had the church thought best to adopt their views, probably its members could have claimed exemption under the law which commands the church to renounce war and proclaim peace. The Quakers and some others were recognized as conscientiously opposed to war. Individuals have also been accorded exemption because of their opposition to war.

Explain Hebrews 11: 35 concerning those who were tortured, not accepting deliverance.

This whole chapter deals with the subject of faith and its operation and results. It shows that those who were moved by faith valued divine and righteous things more than personal pleasure or comfort. The verse cited states:

"Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection."

While the text does not state specifically what circumstances caused these to voluntarily endure torture rather than accept deliverance, it seems probable from other known events of ancient times that they were offered deliverance provided they would renounce their religion or some principle to which they were committed. They preferred the glory of faith and immortality to the worldly gain that might come from a betrayal of their convictions, thus meriting the "better resurrection."

Are bishop's courts held by the bishop's agents of districts?

Bishop's agents are primarily appointed to financial duties to act for the church in the jurisdiction to which appointed, but under the direction of the bishop in whose field he labors. In many cases agents may be appointed to act for the financial interests of the church under the presiding bishopric directly, when no bishop is acting for that particular field. But bishop's courts are presided over by a bishop, assisted by one or more counselors or elders, who might or might not be an agent, but must hold the Melchisedec priesthood in order to lawfully act as counselor to a bishop (see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8 and 104: 32.)

The above indicates that God's work or the major part of it during the first week was performed in some other planet, place, or world, and as the heavens were included in the creation and the herbs and plants were created before they were in the earth; and not knowing on what planet Jehovah dwells, nor how many days or years of the earth it would require to make a day there, the twenty-four hour theory of the creation days is merely an assumption.

Peter says: "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." (2 Peter 3: 8.) "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is passed, and as a watch in the night." (Psalm 90: 4.)

The term day is often used to denote a time or period in the world's history, as in Genesis 2: 4, already referred to: "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it and was glad." (John 8: 5, 6.) In Daniel 8: 13, also 12: 11, 12, the word day is admitted by Adventists to mean years. We do not question God's power, but there is to my mind no reason to believe that God's days are measured by the revolutions of this little earth.

THE FOUNDATION OF GOVERNMENT

That the Ten Commandments are the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth. If the above is true, there would have to be fathers and mothers in heaven, so that their children could honor them, or the fifth commandment would be meaningless. Death would have to be possible or there would be no occasion for the sixth commandment. There would have to be marriage and recognition of sex relation or "Thou shalt not commit adultery" would have no meaning. Unless there was a tendency to thievery why "Thou shalt not steal." Unless there would be rival gods in heaven there would be no occasion for the first commandment, "Thou shalt have no Gods before me." Then as a crowning absurdity, when we consider the fourth or "Sabbath commandment," in the fifth of Deuteronomy, we have the only copy of the Ten Commandments as they were on the tables of stone, so we will quote from there. "Keep the sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor, and do all thy work; But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day."

To make the above apply as a part of the foundation of God's government in heaven, it would be necessary that there should be in heaven, "manservants, maidservants, oxen, asses, and strangers." Also that the inhabitants had been servants in Egypt, so they might commemorate their deliverance from bondage. It seems that it would require quite a large imagination to make this apply to the angels and all the host of heaven. Jesus says: "The sabbath was made for man." (Mark 2: 27.)

Now since the sabbath was made for man, it would only apply where man dwells, or on this earth, and could only apply here. So the third proposition fails.

THE DURATION OF THE COVENANTS

The fourth proposition. "That the Ten Commandments are still binding as God's law." This will introduce the two covenants that God made with man. While salvation was preached through Jesus Christ from the beginning, and the gospel covenant has been, is, and always will be the only means of eternal salvation, the plan of redemption was not perfected until the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. There was a covenant made with the Israelite nation, including the Ten Commandments, given through Moses in the wilderness and on Sinai, with Moses as mediator and beasts as sacrifices, which was added because of transgressions (Galatians 3: 19), which being first completed is called, "The first covenant." The "gospel covenant" with Jesus Christ as both mediator, and sacrifice is called the second covenant. We read:

"For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." (John 1: 17.) "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Romans 10: 4.) "Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death written and graven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away." (2 Corinthians 3: 6, 7.) "For it is written that Abraham had two sons; the one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman. . . . Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. . . . But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. . . . So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond woman, but of the free." (Galatians 4: 22, 24, 26, 31.)

Here the two covenants are placed side by side. The one from Sinai represented by Agar, according to the thirtieth verse, was to be cast out: but the sons of the free were to be the heirs, and to remain. We have shown previously that the covenant made on Sinai was the Ten Commandments, or at least included them. (See Deuteronomy 4: 13, and 9: 9.) Again: "For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." (Hebrews 7: 19.) "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, The just shall live by faith." (Galatians 3: 11.) "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. . . . And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannull, that it should make the promise of none effect." (Galatians 3: 16, 17.) "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator." (Galatians 3: 19.) "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, . . . but after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." (Galatians 3: 24, 25.) "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; . . . In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Hebrews 8: 7-13.)

Now the Adventists try to destroy the force of the above texts, by claiming that where the law is spoken of as being done away, vanishing away, and no longer under it, etc. Reference is being made to the ceremonial law only: and that the Ten Commandments being God's Moral law the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth, written by the finger of God, and a copy of it kept in heaven, as Mrs. White claims to have seen in the ark in the temple there, must and will remain in force throughout eternity.

We here wish to note the fact that the Ten Commandments as quoted by the Adventists from Exodus 20 are different on the sabbath commandment from the copy in the fifth of Deuteronomy. A different reason is given for keeping the sabbath. Compare carefully Exodus 20: 8-11, and Deuteronomy 5: 12-15. The Adventists claim that what was written by Moses was the ceremonial law, and ceased to be in force when Christ established the gospel covenant: but what was written with the finger of God on the tables of stone was God's moral law and would never cease. Well, just what did Moses write? And what did God

write? In Exodus 20, we read: "And God spake all these words," the Ten Commandments follow. Exodus 24: 7 tells us that "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord." If he wrote all the words of the Lord he must have written the Ten Commandments, as in Exodus 20. Exodus 24 tells us that Moses read from the book, and the people agreed to do "all that the Lord had said." Moses returned to the mount and remained with the Lord for forty days. (Exodus 24: 18.) It was after this had happened that the tables were given to Moses. (See Exodus 31: 18.) Not until the Lord had made an end of communing with Moses were the tables given to him: so according to the Adventists' rule, the Ten Commandments of Exodus 20 would belong to the ceremonial law.

In Deuteronomy 5, we have the Ten Commandments, giving a different reason for keeping the sabbath, i. e. "To commemorate their deliverance from Egyptian bondage." (See Deuteronomy 5: 15.) For proof that we have the Ten Commandments here as they were written on the tables by the finger of God. (See Deuteronomy 5: 22.)

"These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice: and he added no more. And he wrote them in two tables of stone." That the Ten Commandments was the covenant made with Israel is positively proved by the following: "And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even Ten Commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." (Deuteronomy 4: 13.) "When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you." (Deuteronomy 9: 9.)

We have used the last two texts because Adventists sometimes deny that the word covenant used in Deuteronomy 5: 2, 3, means the Ten Commandments. The statement in verse three, "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers," would overthrow their theory that the Ten Commandments were in force from Eden down; therefore they try to dodge the meaning of the above text. But the texts referred to positively prove that the Ten Commandments are the covenant referred to as being made with Israel at that time, and was not made with their fathers.

In defining the difference between the moral and ceremonial law, the Adventists tell us that what Moses wrote was the ceremonial law and that it was put in the sides of the ark. In support of this they cite the following:

"And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, That Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee." (Deuteronomy 31: 24-26.)

Now the Ten Commandments as spoken by the Lord in Exodus 20 were part of the words that Moses wrote, hence were a part of the book of the law that was put in the side of the ark, thus according to their own theory would be included in the ceremonial law. Adventists always quote from the twentieth of Exodus in support of their sabbath claims, because it is given there as a memorial of creation and thus supports their contention that it is the only commandment that refers to creation. They do not quote from Deuteronomy 5, because it will not support their contention. We will discuss this feature later.

But on this proposition, to whom were the Ten Commandments given? "I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." (Exodus 20: 2.) The Ten Commandments follow. Each except the fifth beginning with "Thou" and the fifth addressed to the same people. Now who was being spoken to? Israel. Who was brought out of the house of bondage? Israel. To whom then were the Ten Commandments given? Israel. Were they previously given? No, for in Deuteronomy 5: 3 we read: "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." How long were they to be in force? "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." (Galatians 3: 24, 25.) What was to be the end of the law? "Christ." "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Romans 10: 4.)

We note six points of contrast between the decalogue and the gospel of Christ.

1. The decalogue makes no mention of Jesus Christ.

2. They do not require love for our fellow man.

3. They were given to the Israelite nation only. "Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." (Exodus 31: 16, 17. See also Deuteronomy 5: 2-22; 9: 9-11, 15; Isaiah 56: 1-7.)

4. They were to be observed by Israel on earth, and in the land of Palestine. "Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, forever." (Deuteronomy 4: 40.) "Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Deuteronomy 5: 16.)

5. The violation of them was to be punished by civil power on earth. "Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death." (Exodus 31: 14, 15. See also Exodus 35: 2; Numbers 15: 32-36.)

6. They give no promise of eternal life. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them." (Galatians 3: 11, 12.) "For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." (Hebrews 7: 19.) "Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." (Galatians 3: 21.)

The Gospel of Jesus Christ by Contrast

1. Jesus Christ is the only name by which we must be saved. "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. (Matthew 28: 18.) "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.) "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." (John 5: 24, 25. See also John 6: 37-40.)

2. Love is the greatest commandment in the gospel of Jesus Christ. "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." (Matthew 22: 37-40.) "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Matthew 5: 44.) (To be continued. This is the fourth installment of a cumulative tract publication which will be printed in sections until completed. The installments may be cut out and preserved for reference or loan purposes.)

Shenandoah, Iowa

A Training Camp for Young People

Saints of this branch witnessed an impressive service the morning of July 23, when the two small daughters of Mrs. Stewart Barton, Esther Marie and Ruth Joan, were blessed by Pastor J. R. Epperson and Elder J. O. Rennie.

The afternoon two were baptized as the result of missionary services conducted at Clarinda last summer by J. O. Rennie, assisted by A. M. Taylor and J. R. Epperson. Brothers Rennie and Epperson conducted the baptismal ceremony, which was immediately followed by the confirmation service.

Shenandoah Saints have an active group this year, and a number of events have marked their progress, especially among the young people who have for their leaders, Alfred Taylor, Roland Schneider, and Mildred Topham.

In May the young people gave a play, "The Gift," sponsored by A. M. Taylor, young people's leader, and ably directed and supervised by Mrs. John Topham. Miss Marguerite Schneider was make-up director. This play was given at Shenandoah, Tabor, Glenwood, and Carson, Iowa, and later was broadcast over Station KMA at which time Miss Schneider sang a solo; John Topham and his sister, Mrs. Eunice Martin, sang a duet, and Mildred Topham, Marguerite Schneider and Mrs. Adena Browne sang.

The purpose in giving this play was to advertise the young people's convention held at Shenandoah, May 27 to 31, when President F. M. McDowell was the main speaker. Tabor, Glenwood, Carson, Council Bluffs, and Shenandoah were well represented at the banquet Saturday night which was attended by more than one hundred. Sunday's activities began with an eight o'clock worship period in charge of Brothers F. M. McDowell, Peter Larsen, pastor of Tabor Branch, and J. R. Epperson. Church school was conducted by Brothers F. M. McDowell and Conrad Booten. Brother Booten is an authority on the Book of Mormon and is pastor of Glenwood Branch. Brother McDowell was the eleven o'clock speaker. At noon a basket dinner was served in the basement of the church. Round table discussion was the only program item in the afternoon at which time Brother McDowell gave some valuable helps.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights President McDowell delivered addresses full of inspiration for all, and each evening a short program was presented by Tabor, Glenwood and Carson young people in their turn.

The conference at Shenandoah was designed to get as many of the young people as could go to attend the Youth Conference at Lamoni. When Brother McDowell left, the Saints cherished a keener insight of the church work and their own responsibilities in forwarding the program.

A number of the young were privileged to attend all or part of the conference at Lamoni, and came home with renewed zeal and fervor in the church work. They gave "The Gift" at the conference June 19.

Sunday night, July 16, the young people gave a full evening program which was well received. Mildred Topham planned this entertainment.

For a time choir work was steadily carried on in this branch, there being a large group of young singers, but now a number of these have moved away, among them Miss Lenna Epperson and Mrs. Adena Browne, alto singers. The choir leader, Mrs. Mamie Miller, has been ill, and so choir activities are temporarily discountinued. Sister Miller is very much missed from services, and the Saints hope she will soon recover. She is also the church school superintendent.

A number of the young men have received promises of calls to the priesthood and are preparing themselves for the work they will be expected to do. There are a number of young people in this branch, and the Saints were told in prophecy several years ago, that this is to be a training camp for the young, preparing them to go into the world and preach the gospel. This prophecy is now being fulfilled in part.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The month of July opened with a splendid sacrament service, and Saints of Second Church feel much encouraged to press forward.

The annual Sunday school picnic was held at the South Young Men's Christian Association Park, July 4. Swings and slides entertained the children, while swimming was enjoyed by the older ones.

The women's department held their picnic, July 14. Each family was invited and a basket dinner was enjoyed.

Prayer meetings during the month of July have been of a high spiritual order with many beautiful and helpful thoughts expressed.

Recent speakers at Second Church include, Bishop H. E. French; Elders R. E. Madden, G. H. Kirkendall, S. E. Dickson, of Lancaster, Ohio; District President A. E. Anderton, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Priest Harry J. Hoffman, and Teacher Chester A. Carey.

Elder Harold I. Velt Finds Increasing Interest in Oregon

Excellent Press Notice at Hood River

Elder Harold I. Velt conducted meetings at Hood River, Oregon, the latter part of June, and his services were given generous attention by the Hood River Glacier. Here is what the paper had to say:

"Elder Harold I. Velt, of Australia, who for over fifteen years before coming to this country, did missionary work in Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, is holding a lecture series at the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on June Street.

"Elder Velt, who is considered by the church he represents, as one of their most successful proselytizers, has secured large audiences in many parts of British Columbia, Washington, and Oregon during the past three years, and has baptized many, establishing the work of the church he represents in new fields and adding materially to its enrollment in branches and missions already established.

"The subjects of his lectures in Hood River are largely dealing with present world conditions, and the solution offered by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who, for more than one hundred years have claimed revelations from God apprising them of present world distresses and directing their course of action along a system of stewardship operations which are being carried out by their church.

"The lectures began last Tuesday evening, and excepting Saturday and Monday will continue over next week. Lantern pictures of Australia are shown for twenty minutes preceding each lecture."

Missionary Meetings at Two Missouri Towns

Gospel Tent Is Crowded—New Interest Aroused

Since July 5, I have been associated with Elder W. E. Haden, president of Southern Missouri District, in two special missionary efforts, one at Thayer and the other at Kennett, Missouri, using the district missionary tent at both places. My association with Brother Haden has been a happy experience.

The meetings at Thayer resulted in twelve baptisms, eight adults and four children. Some fine people have united with the church, and we are assured they will prove a great help to the church at Thayer.

The Sunday of the first baptisms was a day that will not be forgotten by those who gathered at the beautiful stream to witness the ceremony. A great measure of God's Spirit was present and was felt by members and nonmembers. Some wept for joy as Brother Haden led the fine group of candidates into the water.

There were baptismal services the following two Sundays.

Others at Thayer are deeply interested, and the branch pastor, G. A. Davis, informs us in a letter that another man and his wife have stated their intentions of joining the church. "And I believe," continues Brother Davis, "that there will be several more come in, and when you come back again, there will be an ingathering here from the gospel seed that has been sown."

These meetings were held in the city park and the tent was well filled each evening. Splendid interest continued throughout the series. The Saints and friends supported the effort well.

Apostle J. F. Garver was present at the district conference which convened at the tent, July 15 and 16, and remained with us several days, preaching a number of times and adding greatly to the success of the meetings.

From Thayer the tent was moved to Kennett, Missouri. When we commenced here, three other meetings began, and we thought a mistake had been made in coming here. The tent was put up two blocks from the courthouse and from the very start has been taxed to its capacity. From three to four hundred have been present. One night it was estimated that there were between five and six hundred present. The interest has been unusual, especially with three other meetings in progress. Our meetings are continuing at the time of this writing.

We have a band of fine Saints here, and there must be from fifty to sixty young people who are moving to the front in various activities of the church. Both the young people and those of mature years are to be commended for their faithfulness in seeking first to build up the kingdom of God.

J. CHARLES MAY.

Successful Conference for Arkansas and Louisiana

President F. M. Smith and Patriarch F. A. Smith There

Saints of Arkansas and Louisiana District have just closed one of the most interesting conferences in their experience. They met at Bald Knob, Arkansas, and the district was well represented. Saints were present from Hardy, Jonesboro, Fisher, Little Rock, and Hot Springs, Arkansas, and from Eros, Louisiana.

President F. M. Smith and Patriarch F. A. Smith were present, and did much to help. The Saints appreciated getting acquainted with and hearing from these ministers.

Services were held in the city park at Bald Knob, Judge F. O. White and Thomas Emde and the local Saints are due much credit for their thoughtful preparations for the meetings.

Nauvoo Reunion Is Well Attended

Good Spirit Prevails—Greater Interest in Class Work

Nauvoo reunion began as scheduled, July 23, with District Supervisor Arnold Ourth and Sister Alice Baldwin in charge of the church school. The theme suggested was, "Did You Think to Pray?" and the hymn of that name opened the meeting.

At the eleven o'clock hour Evangelist Richard Baldwin used as his topic, "What of Your Life?"

Basket dinner in the grove was marred a little by a sudden but much needed rain.

At 1.30 p. m., Elder E. E. Closson baptized two candidates in the Mississippi River, one a little girl from Nauvoo, and the other candidate was from New Canton, Illinois.

A group of musicians from Beardstown, offered entertainment at two-thirty, being directed by Mrs. E. E. Thomas who also sang a number.

The theme of the afternoon as presented by Brother Baldwin was, "Called to be Saints," while the sermon of the evening formed the groundwork for a missionary series carried through the reunion. And thus the first day with its good attendance and fine spirit came to an end. The opening prayer had been that there might be enjoyed at the reunion the uplifting power of God from beginning to end, and that the best of the wine might be reserved for the last of the feast.

Owing to the coming of the group from Utah to unveil their marker (of which mention has already been made in the Herald), a number of local people were forced to forego the pleasure of attending the reunion for the first part of the week.

Class work began Monday at 10 a. m. Sister Baldwin and her helpers were in charge of the children in junior worship and handcraft until noon. Elder F. T. Mussell led the first class period for adults, devoting the first two sessions to consideration of prayer and its purpose and how people may improve in the art of praying. In the second period Brother Baldwin used as his topic, "Witnessing Church," and while neither of these two men knew what the other was to take up in his class, their thoughts and themes blended into a union of spirit and purpose good to behold.

The evening services were better attended than for some years previous and interest was all that could be desired.

On Saturday the Saints met at nine o'clock in the morning for prayer service, and it was good to be present and see the attitude with which the membership came to that service. The gift of prophecy was given, words of commendation and exhortation to a number of individuals as well as to the group collectively. With one accord they sang in conclusion, "How Firm a Foundation."

Sunday, July 30, the last day of the gathering, all who could were asked to gather for a testimony service at eight-thirty. Those in charge suggested that this be a continuation of the service held the morning before. After the offering of one prayer, the spirit of testimony prevailed, and at the conclusion of the service, the divine gift of comfort and admonition was again given.

"Workers Together With God," was the theme chosen for the day, and the church school worship period followed that thought very closely. After the class period, Sister Baldwin conducted a junior worship service in the lower room of the church, assisted by A. L. Sanford, who was one of the first to introduce this branch of service to the church a number of years ago.

At this same hour District President F. T. Mussell occupied with the older people, using the theme, "Making Our Lives Count for God," at which time he was blessed with the spirit of his office and calling in giving advice to those assembled. Brother Baldwin delivered the afternoon and evening messages, and the Beardstown Orchestra gave a thirty-minute program preceding the afternoon service.

Attendance of this year excelled that of the past two years and more interest was taken in class work than for some time previous. The Saints feel that the prayer of the opening day was fully answered and that there did come a greater outpouring at the latter part of the reunion.

The work of Brother and Sister Baldwin was appreciated as was that of a number of others. Saints were present from Belleville, New Canton, Carthage, Beardstown, Joy, Mathersville, and Carmen, Illinois, and from Montrose, Fort Madison, Burlington, and Des Moines, Iowa.

Among those present was Brother Lloyd Mussell who bore a strong and appreciative testimony of the evidence he had received that the prayers of the Saints were being offered for him during his hours of affliction. He rendered help in the musical part of the program.

Kansas City Stake

Second Church

The church school, directed by P. J. Raw, is progressing. Sunday morning services have been well attended. The last Sunday morning of each month is devoted to the O. B. K.'s, and Mildred Lungwitz is in charge. She always has an interesting story to tell as well as other program numbers.

The stake O. B. K. prayer meeting was held July 19, at Second Church, a successful service in every way. More than one hundred and fifty young people attended.

Brother E. W. Lloyd baptized two of the church school boys July 23, Von Burnett and Neal Burnett.

Recent speakers have been P. J. Raw, E. W. Lloyd, E. S. Zink, Ralph Goold, Thomas Newton, and James Maitland.

Mildred Lungwitz, Ida Belle Smith, Esther Lungwitz, and Edith Driver attended the Youth Conference at Lamoni in June.

The Saints are happy to have Brother and Sister P. J. Raw back at their posts of duty after a trip East and North. They visited New York City, Atlantic City, Washington, and the World's Fair at Chicago.

Mr. and Sister John Brahmer announce the birth, August 2, of a daughter whom they have named Hannah Irene. Sister Brahmer was formerly Miss Bessie Sherman.

Mount Washington Church

The sacrament service, August 6, was well attended and a fine spirit prevailed. Fifteen men of the local and visiting priesthood occupied the rostrum with the pastor. Elder H. A. Gould was in charge of the sacrament for the children in the lower auditorium.

The O. B. K. fellowship meeting, August 6, was held at Swope Park. Elder George Mesley was the speaker. A fine meeting and good time were reported.

During the recent service in which new officers of the O. B. K. organization were installed, interesting talks were given by Mark Gerber, Alice Constance, and Edith Burbridge, the last named reporting on the Youth Conference at Lamoni, Iowa.

The following children were baptized by the pastor on Children's Day, Ruth M. Lewis, Olga M. Nichols, Erma L. Fosberg, and Robert L. Tomlinson.

Among the visiting speakers who occupied during July were Patriarch W. A. McDowell and Elders Ward A. Hougas and Robert E. Jones, of Independence. All brought encouraging messages. Local men who have recently preached have been Elders George Winegar, T. C. Lentell, H. A. Gould, W. F. Bolinger, Priest E. S. Zink, Teacher Raymond Gerber, and Deacon Amos Tomlinson.

Over three dozen new Saints' Hymnals were purchased by this congregation not long ago. The church building received a new coat of paint through the combined efforts of the group.

The boys' volley ball team tied for first place with Chelsea in the stake tournament. The girls' team did not fare so well, but are doing better.

Sister E. S. Zink has been quite ill, but is some better.

Brother R. L. Bishop, who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis at Research Hospital, Kansas City, has returned to his home; he is doing well.

Both Brother Bishop and Sister Zink will be welcomed back to their respective places as teachers in the church school.

Argentine Church

Brother Hallier, of Quindaro Church, the speaker Sunday evening, July 30, gave the Saints an exhortation to more careful living.

The sacrament of our Lord was administered the morning of August 6, and followed by earnest prayers and valiant testimonies. This was a refreshing season.

That night the O. B. K.'s had charge of the service, and Elder W. Earl Page, of Independence, presented a clear, concise sermon on the theme, "Three Pictures." Miss Opal Williams, also of Independence, gave a reading. This was a fine service.

The following evening the O. B. K.'s sponsored an ice cream and cake social on the church lawn and cleared a neat sum of money besides making it possible for neighbors and friends to spend an enjoyable evening.

North East Church

Saints of this congregation feel that blessings increase as the days go by.

The meetings at the river are being kept up. Elder Joseph Curtis was the speaker July 16, when fifty-seven were in attendance, and Elder H. F. Davis preached July 23. Friends requested these services over a month ago, and the meetings are held under the trees on the bank of the Missouri, and people of the community are giving a splendid response. Elder Thomas Newton has also spoken to them.

Elder Thomas Newton was the speaker at the church on a recent Sunday evening and in closing, gave a testimony of healing that was very impressive.

A highly spiritual prayer meeting was held in the home of Brother Shackleford in North Kansas City, July 24.

Elder E. W. Lloyd baptized five, July 23, and more are expected to follow.

Elder Charles Lewis was the speaker Sunday morning, July 23.

The women's department meets on Thursday and quilts until one-thirty in the afternoon, then a prayer meeting is held.

The speaker, July 30, in the morning, was the Reverend Iben Ibraheem, from Syria, whose talk was most interesting. He told some friends that he had traveled much in the world, but had never seen such a spirit of brotherly love as he witnessed that morning at North East.

Elder Harry Sevy gave a good sermon on a recent Sunday.

The sacrament was served to North Kansas City Saints Sunday evening, July 30.

Crescent, Iowa

Great Interest in Church Functions

It is encouraging to see the interest that has been and is being taken in the work during the past winter and spring. Pastor O. A. Currie, of Council Bluffs, is a tireless worker, and has done much to promote the interest which has been taken. Pastor Currie is assisted by his counselors, John Adams and Daniel Butler. Other officers are, church school director, Samuel Butler; adult supervisor, Mrs. Adams; young people's supervisor, Lena Pratt; children's supervisor, Ruby McMullen.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Benson, meets every Thursday to sew and quilt. The women donated the time of one meeting to selling subscriptions to a magazine. A total of nine dollars was realized for the branch and in the enterprise the women made new friends for the church. Another interesting feature which the women have undertaken is that of making a friendship quilt. Ten cents is charged for each name, and up to date, 245 names are worked on the quilt. The money which is earned by the quilt is to be used for building a basement under the church, which is badly needed.

An oyster supper was held in the township hall a short time ago, which was well attended. Singing and games entertained the group.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, of Council Bluffs, presented a play in the hall. The play was sponsored by the branch, which is to receive one-half of the proceeds.

Each division of the church school is progressing rapidly. The young people's class is taught by John Adams. About twenty-five members compose the adult class, which is taught by Dan Butler.

Twenty-five of the young people met at the home of O. A. Currie for a social time and to organize their division. A lunch was served by Mrs. Currie, who was assisted by the young people.

Sunday evening services open at seven o'clock, with a half hour of class work, after which a program is enjoyed. A short sermon is preached, and the congregation is dismissed at eight-thirty. The young people's class of between thirty-five and forty members, is now studying the Book of Mormon, taught by Mrs. O. A. Currie, the adult class is studying the Doctrine and Covenants, under the direction of O. A. Currie. Vena Butler has the children's class which is composed of fifteen boys and girls.

Under the supervision of Lena Pratt and Vena Butler, the children dramatized the story of the resurrection on Easter morning. Preaching services were held at eleven o'clock by Brother Mintun. A vesper service was held at seven-thirty by the young people. Scripture reading by O. A. Currie was followed by several musical numbers. Pastor O. A. Currie preached a fine sermon.

A mothers' and daughters' banquet was held at the church on the evening of May 10, with an attendance of one hundred and fifty. The program consisted of a reading, by Mrs. Fred Zerwas, a Catholic; piano solo, Edna Blodgett; a vocal duet, Gladys Butler and Ellen Peterson, and a reading by Mrs. S. O. Mattox, a Quaker. A bouquet of flowers was presented the oldest mother, Mrs. William Tompson, the youngest mother, Mrs. Ethel Gill, and to the mother having the largest number of daughters, Mrs. M. A. Hough, who was accompanied by eight daughters.

Mother's Day services were well attended. Brother Charles Putnam was the eleven o'clock speaker.

A good many from Crescent attended the district conference at Hazel Dell, June 4, at which time John Adams was ordained to the office of elder.

Brother Cleo Hoover was the speaker on the evening of June 4, and in spite of the hot weather, a good crowd was in attendance.

The annual fathers' and sons' banquet was held, June 15, with an attendance of eighty-five. Dan Butler welcomed the guests. Elder Ray Writing was the speaker of the evening, after which the women and girls served ice cream and cake.

Lee Landon was the speaker, July 9. A basket dinner was enjoyed at noon, after which Bishop W. T. Welman conducted a round table discussion. O. A. Currie was the evening speaker.

The young people have cleaned the yard behind the church for a playground. A volley ball team has been organized, which expects to play Hazel Dell or Underwood soon.

Kirtland Reunion Opens

Kirtland reunion opened August 10, with a wonderful manifestation of the power of God in every service. This reunion promises to equal if not surpass that of last year. The reservations are the best for a number of years.

Moline, Illinois

Attendance Increases—Young People Are Interested

Moline Branch has had an increasing number in attendance during the past months. This congregation boasts a fine representation of young people, there being as many as twenty-five at the Friday night recreational meetings.

Two plays, directed by Sister Evelyn Eckright, were presented during the institute, held the last of July.

Moline Branch is happy to introduce two faithful attendants of Sunday school and church services, Brother and Sister Thomas Gainey, who celebrated their sixty-eighth wedding anniversary during the past year. Brother Gainey is ninety-one years old and his wife is eighty-four. They both love to tell their joy in the gospel and their knowledge of its truthfulness.

Marilyn Ruth, baby daughter of Brother and Sister Edward Giles, was blessed August 6. On the same day Donald Giles and Leo Shepherd were baptized by Elder E. R. Davis. A large number of Saints gathered on the bank of the Mississippi River to witness this ceremony.

Four members of Moline group are attending the Nauvoo camp for young people.

Lamoni Stake

Reunion Is Well Attended

The Lamoni stake reunion conducted from July 28 to August 6, was well attended. It opened according to schedule on Friday, with a group prayer service at nine o'clock very largely attended. Other meetings of the first day were the organization of class work conducted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards at ten-thirty, which continued daily; the business and organization of the reunion in the afternoon, and a program of one-act plays and music in the evening.

The presidency of the stake, D. Blair Jensen, T. S. Williams, and Roy Cheville, were chosen to preside over the reunion, and announced their appointments of workers to preside over special divisions of the reunion organization.

The young people's activities began Saturday. One of the busiest places in connection with reunion was Mrs. Haden's nursery, conducted at her home from nine to twelve o'clock, and from two to five every day. A large group of children of all ages enjoyed her playground equipment. Parents were invited to leave their children at the nursery while they attended services.

According to the Lamoni Chronicle the cottage north of the W. E. Prall home was pressed into service for the holding of children's activities; others were held in the park and the Haden home.

A large response was given by the young people to the know-your-church test, and a high average was made by those participating.

The program on Saturday night was presented by the stake young people's council, and was a climax to a month's campaign to enlist the young people in the filing of inventories. At the close of the program of talks, music, and a one-act religious drama, the young people who had complied with this law this year marched to the platform. There were thirty-seven.

The first Sunday was a big day for the reunion, there being almost twelve hundred people in attendance at the services. Representatives came from many outlying branches of the stake, from Independence, Missouri, from Des Moines, Iowa, and other more distant points.

The program was carried out, including young people's prayer meeting at seven-thirty; general prayer service at nine; ordination meeting at eleven; preaching by Apostle Edwards at 2.30 p. m. That evening President Elbert A. Smith started his series of sermons, "What Latter Day Saints Believe," which continued throughout the week.

The special ordination service Sunday was an impressive ceremony, officiating ministers being President Elbert A. Smith and F. M. McDowell, Apostles F. Henry Edwards and J. F. Garver, and Elders Roy A. Cheville and T. S. Williams. Walter Johnson, of Lamoni, and Floyd Spillman, of Allendale, Missouri, were ordained to the office of elder; J. Orren Barr, of Evergreen Branch, and Fisher Carlile, of Lamoni, to the office of priest, and Ammon Roberson, of Benton, Illinois, and Blaine Williams, of Lamoni, deacon. These ordinations were approved by the reunion at its business meeting on Friday. The name of Harry Lorance, of Lamoni, was also approved for elder, but his ordination did not take place on Sunday because he was absent from town.

Class work on "Creating an Internal Unity," conducted by Brother Edwards, elicited much interest during the reunion as did the forums conducted by Brothers J. F. Garver and Edwards at 2.30 p. m.

The morning prayer services were of a high spiritual order and largely attended as in previous years. The worship part of the children's and young people's services was also very successful. Miss Martha Young and Roy Cheville conducted these meetings. An early morning prayer service at north woods planned for the older people, failed to materialize because of rain and muddy roads, but a similar service was held at six-thirty on the college campus Sunday.

During the ten days of the reunion Lamoni musicians made outstanding contributions to the services. The summer choir, directed by Thelma Silsby, sang several times, and a mixed octet with

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Mrs. Grace Muceus as soloist, and other singers.

Miss Florence Thompson and her summer pupils in expression added to the pleasure of the gatherings with programs of one-act plays and readings.

The Boy Scouts presented a group of boys for awards won during the summer months. This program was given at the close of a service one evening.

The Patronesses of Graceland cleared a sum of more than thirty-five dollars at an ice cream social held on the reunion grounds Thursday evening.

There were many others who contributed greatly to the success of the reunion, supervising various activities, among whom were Miss Delma Newcomer, camp circle; Mrs. Alma Propst, children's Sunday morning session; Mrs. Ralph Lorance, children's story hour; William Haden, nature study.

Sunday, August 6, the closing day was also outstanding in point of attendance, there being between twelve and thirteen hundred present. President Elbert A. Smith closed the gathering with the concluding sermon of his series.

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

Recent guest members of the priesthood have been Elder J. W. A. Bailey, who held a series of meetings in May, illustrating his sermons with charts which reflect years of experience, research, and study. Elder Levi Gamet, of Kansas City, was present and assisted in the June sacrament service. He also preached the evening sermon. Bishop Charles Fry occupied both morning and evening services, June 25.

Services for July 2, were dismissed in order that the Saints might attend the all-day meeting at Netawaka, Kansas. The regular sacrament service for July was held on the nineth of that month.

The Children's Day program, directed by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark, was in charge of Gerald Hays. At the close of the service, George Veach, Junior, was baptized by O. E. Weedmark, and confirmed under the hands of G. G. Cadwell and C. C. Koehler, of Independence, Missouri. Robert Dean, infant son of Brother and Sister Everett G. Bartteson, was blessed by G. G. Cadwell and B. F. Deller.

The youth's day program was in charge of the young people. The sermon was preached by the pastor, G. G. Cadwell, his theme being, "Study to Show Thyself Approved." Special numbers included a violin and piano solo by Vernon and Mildred Goodfellow. Dorothy Deller and her grandmother, Mrs. Cora Eden, of Kansas City, sang a duet. They were accompanied by Dorothy's mother, Mrs. B. F. Deller.

The flower garden planted by the children's department adds much to the appearance of the church lawn. The plot was drawn by Sister Ella Smith.

Junior worship service for July 16, was built around "The Golden Rule." The sermonet was preached by F. C. Kelley, after which two original stories were told by Helen Cramer and Joyce Mariner.

Brother G. G. Cadwell, pastor of Topeka Branch, recently underwent an operation at the Missouri Pacific Hospital at Saint Louis, Missouri. The prayers of the Saints are for his speedy recovery of health and strength.

Independence

August may be vacation time for some, but for many people in Independence it is a time of preparation. Hundreds are looking ahead to and working toward the Harvest Home Festival, to be held in the lower room of the Auditorium October 3 to 8. The women's department, a score of clubs and classes, and the congregations of the center place and her stakes are hard at work making their plans into realities—gallons of canned fruits and vegetables, bushels of garden and field products. Previous Harvest Festivals have set a high standard, and to make this year's event the "best ever" will require the help of everyone. The committee in charge of the Festival hope to arouse again the old harvest festival spirit of giving and sharing.

The young people are beginning to think of activities for winter months. Nowadays when the thermometer hovers faithfully up in the 90's, plans are being formulated for the cold weather season. At its regular meeting August 7, the Independence Young People's Council appointed a committee to plan dramatic, musical, study and recreational events for the young members of the Latter Day Saint congregations in Independence.

Among the citizens of Independence, who are intensely interested in the Missouri vote to be held next Saturday on the question of repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, are many Latter Day Saints. Elder S. A. Thiel, of the Stone Church, is chairman of the Dry forces of Independence, and was in charge of a county-wide meeting of the United Dry forces of Jackson County which was attended by nearly a thousand people at the Campus last Monday night. Speakers were ardent Drys, Henry M. Beardsley, a Kansas City attorney, and Doctor Edwin J. Kulp, pastor of the Grand Avenue Temple, Kansas City. They spoke in praise of the Eighteenth Amendment and advocated absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Latter Day Saints also gathered at the Auditorium last night to be taken to Kansas City to participate in the huge meeting of Jackson County Dry Voters at Grand Avenue Temple.

About three hundred young men and women witnessed or took part in the inter-congregational volley ball tournament, held at the Campus last Friday night, when the Liberty Street girls' team and the Gudgell Park boys' team won the finals, and were declared champions of the tournament.

President Elbert A. Smith resumed his summer Sunday evening series of discourses last Sunday night at the Campus, and a large congregation welcomed him home again. He has been absent from Independence over two Sundays during which time he attended the reunion at Lamoni.

Stone Church

The Stone Church Young People's Council sponsored an ice cream social on the church lawn last Thursday night to help in the establishing of a reserve fund for winter activities and plans. Behind the council in this event stood the young people's division of the church school which meets at the Auditorium for class work on Sunday morning. Elder T. A. Beck is superintendent of this division which numbers about 350 members and is organized in thirteen classes.

A large congregation listened to a stirring appeal for Prohibition Sunday morning when Mrs. Martha Trimble, executive secretary of the United Dry Forces of Jackson County, was guest speaker. Special music was provided by LeRoy Smith, baritone soloist, and the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee at the organ. Elder Samuel A. Thiel, chairman of the Dry forces in Independence, and superintendent of the Stone Church School, was in charge of the service.

Second Church

Soft strains of music opened the eleven o'clock service August 13, Pastor William Inman in charge. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker and his theme was "Authority." Special musical numbers were a solo by Nadine Inman and a vocal duet by Hazel Clow and Edna Stobaugh.

Elder Roy Conyers was in charge of the junior service, and the talk was by Brother Ellis Murdock on "What Will Your Choice Be?" Two short stories, "Amulek's Choice" and "The Cross of Christ," were told by Mrs. B. C. Sarratt.

There will be a week of preaching services for all five of the Second Church groups on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Butler, 1227 West Hayward, beginning Monday evening, August 21. Elders J. F. Sheehy and J. E. Vanderwood will be the speakers.

The funeral of Earl Willis, son of Samuel Willis, was held at Second Church August 13.

Liberty Street Church

The Church Where a Friend Is a True Friend

Miss Erma Peek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Peek, of this congregation, and Mr. Bernard Wilson, of Fairmount, were united in marriage by Elder F. A. Cool Saturday evening, August 5, at the home of the bride's parents. Miss Mayble Tignor sang "I Love You Truly" and "O Promise Me." Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Phillips attended the bridal couple. Thirty-five guests were present. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are at home in Independence.

The Doctrine and Covenants class last Tuesday night was in charge of its vice president, Hubert Mills. The instructor, Bishop J. A. Koehler, explained vital points concerning the establishment of Zion. He called on Lee Davis and Cecil Walker to give their views on what can be done immediately toward the realization of the Zionic kingdom.

Arlie Zion took charge of the young people's meeting Wednesday evening at the church. Mrs. John R. Lentell furnished the entertainment. She gave the reading, "The Wedding Guest." Following this, the regular midweek prayer service was held at the home of Brother George Adkins. Fifty-four members were present, as many as possible taking part in the short season of prayer and in the offering of testimonies.

The basement rooms and kitchen of the church were the scene of much activity last Thursday when twenty-five members of the women's department, with their competent supervisor, Mrs. Lena Beck, met for their regular all-day meeting. The women donate their time and efforts to helping those in need. Some of them quilt, some do canning while others prepare the lunch which is served from eleven-thirty to one. All foodstuffs that are preserved here, and also one tenth of that which each woman cans in her own home, go to the Harvest Home Festival and from there to those who need it. The fruits and vegetables are given by members of the church who have a surplus of those things in their gardens. At times it is necessary to buy them at a nominal cost.

Stafford Holsworth has returned to active service in the latter-day work following an illness of almost two weeks.

Fifteen members of the Samaritan Class assembled last Thursday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rolla Bridges for their regular quarterly business meeting. The class unanimously re-elected Brother M. A. Smith to serve as its teacher for the next term. The members expressed their appreciation of the splendid service rendered by Brother Smith and voted their fullest cooperation for the future. A definite course of study was decided upon after much discussion. Sunday the class began its study of the Bible, starting with the first book, and planning to continue with each book in turn. The object of this study is to prove to all that the work of the latter days is authorized of God through his disciples and recorded therein. Lee Chrestensen is president of the class.

The "Liberty Belles," accurate, fast-moving sextet, won the girls' volley ball championship at the Campus last Friday night. This team defeated East Independence in the first round of games August 3. In the second round Liberty Street eliminated Spring Branch. The finals found Second Church matched with the champions. The two teams matched blow for blow and point for point, but the Liberty Belles won fifteen to nine. Members of the sextet are Esther Frisby, Bessie Merle Totty, Gertrude LaGrece, Elva Curtis, Katherine Curtis, and Gertrude Dutton. Mayble Tignor is their coach and manager.

A quartet composed of women from other congregations gave a program at the church school hour Sunday. They were Mrs. O. G. Helm, Bennington Heights, Kansas City; Miss Edna Stobaugh, Stone Church; Mrs. R. H. Hunter, Dayton, Ohio, and Mrs. Ola Davidson. They sang "God Is Love" and "My Jesus I Love Thee."

At eleven o'clock the choir sang the anthem, "The Lord Be With Us." Mrs. Thelma Vincent Krahl, soprano, sang "Teach Me to Live," and Milford Nace played a cello solo, "Elegie." Then Mrs. Krahl sang "O Loving Father," accompanied by Evelyn White, violinist, Milford Nace, celloist, and Harold Buseth, pianist.

Brother Bernard Hurshman delivered a soul-stirring sermon, "I Believe in Prayer."

Liberty Street was represented by about forty members on the missionary trip Sunday night to Quindaro. The program consisted of a piano solo by Inez Davis and a vocal duet by Mary Arteburn and Mayble Tignor. Hubert Mills played a trombone solo, Ruth Tignor accompanying. Here Cecil Walker delivered his first sermon, and his text was, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," from John 14: 6.

Sister Elizabeth Totty, of this congregation, announces the marriage of her granddaughter, Lois, to Albert A. Alberti, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Alberti, of Independence. They were married August 9, at Olathe, Kansas, and will make their home in Kansas City.

Enoch Hill Church

Pastor H. L. Barto was the morning speaker last Sunday, and the young ladies' quartet sang "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

The young people of Enoch Hill are actively engaged in church work. A number are acting as officers and teachers in the church school. Every other Wednesday night they meet for prayer and testimony meeting. On the other Wednesday nights they meet to study various problems. Questions are written and many fine points are brought out. They have gone on a number of missionary trips this summer, participating in this movement sponsored by the young people's council. The young men and women expect soon to begin to work for fall and winter plans.

Miss Gladys Cox, daughter of W. H. Cox, of this congregation, was married to Gerald Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Thomas, Monday evening, August 7, at the home of the bride. Elder Harold Hattey officiated in the ceremony, and the couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Edmundson. Mrs. Edmundson is a sister of the bridegroom. Only the immediate families were present. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are at home in Independence.

Spring Branch Church

Last Sunday morning at six o'clock, the young people met a few blocks east of the church and held a one hundred per cent prayer service with J. S. Andes in charge. At eight-fifteen a large number met at the church for prayer hour.

Special music at the eleven o'clock service was provided by Otis Brown and Frank Robinson, who sang a duet, and by the choir. M. C. Jacobsen was the speaker, his theme being "Confidence."

Sunday night the young people of this congregation went to Mount Washington Church. The musical numbers consisted of a trio from Sugar Creek, duet and a mixed quartet from Spring Branch. Bishop C. J. Hunt was the speaker, taking his text from the Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.

Tuesday, August 5, Brother J. S. Andes was surprised by ten young people from his Sunday school class, the occasion being his fifty-fifth birthday.

The choir is meeting every Thursday night, and at present is practicing on the Harvest Festival music. Sister Jalmer Nelson is the choir leader.

Dean Elmer Peer was baptized by his father, Elmer Peer, August 6.

The sacrament service for August was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood, assisted by Elders A. J. Tankard, Robert Fish, and M. C. Jacobsen. Gladys Smith sang a solo, "Beyond the Cross."

Holden Stake

Jefferson City, Missouri

Because of the great distance lying between Jefferson City group and the stake headquarters, Holden, Missouri, and because there are no other branches near here, the Saints have always felt that they were isolated. All feeling of isolation left them, however, on August 6, when, much to their happiness, they received a visit from President F. M. McDowell. This was the first time in the history of Jefferson City Branch, that a member of the First Presidency has met with them.

Immediately after receiving word from Elder W. H. Eliason, of Columbia, Missouri, to the effect that President McDowell intended to visit Jefferson City Branch, Saints were notified at Columbia, Hartsburg, Tebbetts, Holts Summit, California, Barnett, and Bonnots Mill, Missouri, thus making all services well attended.

If the general officers of the church or any of the traveling ministry realized

www.LatterDayTruth.org

what blessings they leave with Saints in Jefferson City, they would make it a point to visit there often.

Strausburg Mission

Sunday, July 30, an all-day meeting was held at the Little Brick Schoolhouse. Church school at ten o'clock was well attended by out-of-town guests, Brother and Sister W. S. Macrae, C. J. Spurlock, Brother Bowers, of Holden, and Brother and Sister Roy Klecker and daughter, Pauline, who are regular attendants of Holden church school. Preaching followed at eleven o'clock by Brother Spurlock of the Saints' Home at Holden. Immediately following the preaching, dinner was served on the lawn by Sister Charles Gentry.

At half past two in the afternoon, a large congregation was present when Almer Sheehy introducd his father as the speaker. It was Almer's first experience in taking charge of a meeting. Brother Sheehy used as his subject, "I am the Lord; I change not." Due to an unexpected rain, the meeting was closed before the regular time.

Brother Fred Scarcliffe, of Holden, occupied the stand during the evening service. His subject was "Faith."

Elder Roy Klecker, of Holden Stake, has been in charge of the Strausburg Mission since it started more than a year ago.

An invitation is extended to anyone who can to visit this mission. It is loccated three miles east of Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and two miles west of Strausburg, just north of Highway Fifty-eight.

Two-day Meeting for Northeastern Kansas

Apostle J. A. Gillen at Fanning

The semiannual district conference which was to have been held at Fanning, Kansas, July 29 and 30, was postponed, owing to the serious illness of District President Dave Little who on the previous day passed through an operation at the S. B. A. Hospital at Topeka. The apostle in charge was away attending a reunion and could not be present on the dates set, and so, at the suggestion of the district presidency, a two-day meeting was held, and Apostle J. A. Gillen was secured to help. He was assisted by Bishop Charles Fry, who had just closed a series of meetings at Fanning.

The first service on Saturday found a representative from each group and local in the district. With Charles Fry and F. G. Hedrick presiding, a resolution of sympathy was sent to Brother Little, and prayers were offered for his speedy recovery.

Brother Gillen presented two excellent discourses, based on "True Discipleship," and "On the Mountaintop." Music for the occasion was in charge of the district chorister, Mrs. B. F. Deller.

The church school Sunday morning was in charge of the district director, O. E. Weedmark. Bishop Fry gave a blackboard outline on the sacrament, to the adults, and at the same time a junior service was held for the younger members, thirty-four being present. Wayne Bullard, the youngest superintendent in the district, occupied with the other Sunday school superintendents on the rostrum during the worship service.

The afternoon sermon was preached by Bishop Fry at the Willey grove, after which dinner was served. Preceding this, a short talk on the financial status of the district was given by Bishop O. E. Weedmark.

Fort Collins, Colorado

Learning to Cooperate

Brother K. G. Brolliar, pastor of the Fort Collins, Colorado, Branch reports a fine cooperative spirit in his group, a general good feeling among the members, and a willingness to serve and support the church program. Attendance at regular services is about sixty-five per cent of the resident membership. Midweek prayer meetings have been well attended also.

T. S. Moore, superintendent of Religious Education, reports splendid cooperation, and says that all seem desirous of doing their part. The worship service, held after the class period and just preceeding the sermon, is participated in by young and old. The Saints are learning to cooperate.

A fine interest is shown in class work, all taking part in the discussions. A class on Sunday evening includes the whole congregation with the exception of the children's class. All seem deeply interested in the study of the Doctrine and Covenants under the leadership of Sister Letha M. Tilton. A class of eight members in the same course, is ready for the second examination. During the past quarter's study, the class has memorized the Epitome of Faith, adding one paragraph each night, so that when the thirteen lessons were finished the document was learned.

The young people are taking an active part in all church activities. An outdoor meeting was held by them on a recent Sunday morning at six o'clock. They hope to continue these meetings each month.

Three girls of Fort Collins were able to attend the Youth Conference at Lamoni, and came back with a desire and determination to help the branch. Just before they left, a handkerchief shower was given them.

The women's department held a special meeting at the close of the school year and invited the young girls of the branch as their guests. Their annual picnic was held August 10.

September 3. The continued illness of the district president, Brother R. L. Fulk, the early opening of public schools in that territory, and the difficulty in securing an adequate corps of workers are among the factors which were taken into consideration in arriving at this decision.

We trust that at a later date it will be possible to hold in that territory other meetings of an educational and inspirational character which will serve to compensate the loss of their reunion for this year.

All the meetings of the conference were well attended and the people listened with much interest. A good spirit prevailed.

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE. — District conference convened with High Hill Branch near Lynneville, Kentucky, June 10 and 11. The first service was one of prayer and testimony Saturday at 10 a. m., C. B. Gallimore and P. B. Bowlin in charge. After the prayers, songs and testimonies there was a sermonet by C. L. Ross. Business meeting opened at 2.30 p. m., C. B. Gallimore and P. B. Bowlin, of the district presidency, in charge. Brother Dan Dortch could not be present. The presidency was chosen by the conference to preside, and O. S. Caldwell was selected as chorister. (R. M. C. Ross, district chorister, was absent.) Mrs. C. B. Gallimore was chosen secretary with power to choose her assistant, C. L. Ross. Statistical reports were read from Foundry Hill, Paris, High Hill, and Swindle Schoolhouse group. Ministerial reports were read from Elders Roy Hunt, D. R. Dortch, C. L. Ross, O. S. Caldwell, E. N. Bumpass, Jeff Weston, and P. B. Bowlin; Priests John Byrd, L. O. McAlister Cleveland Reynolds; Teachers W. M. Hicks, Porter Reynolds and Mason Caldwell; Deacons A. W. Johnson and Henry Kennon. The bishop's agent's report was read, and the conference acted to adopt all reports. At the recommendation of Foundry Hill Branch the name of J. C. Gallimore was presented for ordination to the office of teacher, and this was approved. At the recommendation of Paris Branch, the name of B. F. Ross was presented for ordination to the office of priest, and this, too, was approved. A document touching upon the finances of the district was presented by the district president and approved by the conference. Preaching at seven-thirty was by Elder O. S. Caldwell. C. B. Gallimore and P. B. Bowlin were in charge of the Sunday morning social service at which time sacrament was served. During this hour a baby was blessed. The Spirit of the Lord was present, and the Saints expressed a great determination to move forward in this work. Preaching at two-thirty in the afternoon was by C. B. Gallimore. A basket dinner was enjoyed both days. All expressed their joy in the conference. The next conference will be held at Swindle Schoolhouse September 9 and 10.

Our Departed Ones

WHITE.—Esther Redrup was born in England February 1, 1868; died August 1, 1933, at her home in Bay City, Michigan. She was the faithful wife of Elder E. S. White, of Bay City. Together they traveled life's highway, reared a family of six children, and were outstanding pillars of the branch since its organization in that place. She is survived by her husband, four sons, two daughters, two brothers, three sisters, seven grandchildren, and many friends both in and out of the church. The law of kindness was in her lips. She loved everyone and her patience and charity were great. She was a faithful Saint, baptized February 6, 1894, by Elder R. E. Grant, with her husband and three others. Their home was the home of the missionaries for many years. Her life was spent in ministering to the needs of others. She was a public spirited person, interested in every civic movement, a good citizen of the kingdom of God and her community. All the Saints will miss her. The funeral was conducted by Hubert Case, August 3, at Bay City.

PATRICK.—Hattie Dora Patrick was born December 9, 1894, near McKenzie, Alabama; passed away July 31, 1933. She was baptized August 16, 1911, by Elder S. S. Smith, and was married to P. E. Patrick, February 28, 1912. To them were born five children, four of whom survive her. She is also survived by her father, mother, her husband, other relatives and friends. Funeral services were held at Liberty Street Church, Independence, Missouri, by T. C. Kelley. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

Shrine

Roused from slumber to rush in shirt-sleeved disorder on an early errand, we were surprised to see a number of aged persons clambering with rheumatic twinge and cumbrous halt up the front steps of the Stone Church. A full hour before any service, one wondered what brought them there. A glance at their clothing told a moving story. Poor, one knew that they spent the week in homes in which comfort and beauty must have been at a minimum—an endless round of the drab and hopeless. From all this the large church was a sanctuary. There was warmth and comfort, quiet and peace. The sun's early rays, filtering down through colored windows, fell on the altar like a divine blessing. The old church made possible a day spent in the contemplation of that other world toward which their thoughts and hopes turned. Hours later one would find them still there, nodding through the sermon, or rising at the afternoon prayer service to bear a testimony.

Tricks

"It is astonishing," said the Pigeon today, "how mad you will get when somebody plays one of your own tricks on you. And yet when you do it you think it's funny and clever."

"Yes," added Pigeonette, "He thinks it's fun to go away and leave me alone for a whole evening. But when I took an evening off for a visit and left him at home, he was so mean and surly he wouldn't speak to me."

Things We All Could Do Without

Dogs that bark at night. People who own dogs that bark at night. Children that make a disturbance in church. Parents that bring them to church. The fat dumplings who waddle out of church immediately after they have partaken of the emblems of the sacrament, without waiting for the closing song and prayer. (What can they have at home so important to be done?) More sunshine when we need rain. More rain when we need sunshine. Drivers who want to poke along, but won't let you pass. Drivers who signal for a left turn and then turn right. Drivers who make no signals at all. Radio crooners. Speakers who say, "And now in closing," and then continue to talk for twenty minutes. Men who, because they have not been asked to speak, decide to deliver their intended message in the opening prayer, and so thwart the man who has been asked to speak.

Save Your

Pied type: Here's a new one—a letter just came to the office informing us that the name of a solo at one of the services had been, "Save Your Breath, An Evening Blessing." This made the Pigeon cross-eyed in less than three minutes. But the Office Sleuth finally figured out that the writer had intended to indite, "Savior, Breathe an Evening Blessing."

"There's not a thought in a whole hogshead of beer," said Theodore Roosevelt, "nor an idea in a whole brewery."

Recovery

2.—Rebuilding the Credit Structure

Currency and Credit During the days of prosperity we had two effective mediums of exchange; there was the government currency, and there was credit. Rough estimates at the time said that ten times as much business was transacted with credit as was handled by cash deals. When the crash of 1929 came and ushered in the depression, the credit structure was rapidly undermined as far as large numbers of people were concerned. Today a great deal of business is transacted with immediate cash settlements, or with only very small extensions of credit.

There have been complaints about the scarcity of money. There is as much real money now as there ever was. We feel the pinch because real money is demanded, and credit has practically dried up. The reasons are various, important among them being a widespread failure to meet obligations, and some rather sinister outright repudiations—on the part of government organizations as well as business enterprises. Some rather high-priced writers neglect to mention the present condition of credit as a contributing factor to the tightness of the money market, for what reasons they alone may know.

Inflation The country needs something to trade with—whether it is currency or credit. Some think that when credit disappears it should be supplanted by money. But that would commit the government to a promise to exchange at par impossible amounts of gold for unprecedented amounts of paper—this is a form of inflation. Faith in the government's ability to fulfill its promise would slip, and paper money would soon lose its value if that ability to exchange gold for it would fail—and this would cause economic ruin. The national government cannot afford to multiply its currency several times over simply because the credit medium is suddenly contracted severely. To do so is a dangerous play with a power that may get beyond control, as it did in Germany.

The Nature of Credit Money is the medium of exchange that exists. Credit is the medium of exchange that is available. The existence of large amounts of gold and currency in a country is of no use to the person who cannot get any of it, even for legitimate and worthy purposes. Credit is stated in terms of the coin of the realm, and without the real currency could not exist; however, it does not depend upon the guarantee of a gold reserve, but upon a reserve of good will, trust, and confidence. In other words, it is built upon faith. It is built upon faith in men and institutions, upon faith in their strength and honor, upon faith in their willingness and ability to fulfill contracts, deliver goods, and pay agreed sums at stated times.

Credit resembles other mediums of exchange in that if you would have it you must not spend it too freely. It differs from other mediums of exchange in one important respect: when you spend your money it is gone, and you are neither worse off nor better off financially than you were before you had it; but when you spend your credit you are mortgaged to the future—you and your earnings and property. It then becomes a form of bondage from which you cannot escape except by payment of every dollar, or by default which is ruinous and dishonorable.

The Use of Credit It is a wise principle that credit should be employed only for purchasing necessary things that will guarantee positive return of the investment, with increase, in a reasonable time, and make it possible to liquidate the debt that was undertaken for the purchase. It is suicidal to use credit to finance heavy running expenses, or for the acquisition of properties that offer only vague and ambiguous promises of ever paying for themselves.

As It Affects the Church and the Members As individuals, as a church, and as a nation, we are interested in the reconstruction of credit for the uses of legitimate business. Even though we may not desire to go into debt, we wish to build a financial standing and a reputation that will assure our credit among all business institutions.

The future of financing the church program depends upon a membership who will have the wisdom and ability to avoid the pitfalls in the use of extended credit. Temptations will be thrust upon us in the days that are to follow when business is better and prosperity returns. We will be invited and urged by interested and unscrupulous men to make the same mistakes that we did before. But we must resolutely resist those temptations. Our personal salvation depends upon it. The future welfare of the church depends upon a membership who can chart a clear course through many economic dangers.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

BROTHER D. T. WILLIAMS has the faculty of uttering casually and almost epigrammatically some thought-stimulating expressions. In a prayer meeting recently I heard him say: "If I would be with this people when they wear the crown, then I must be with them when they bear the cross." That is something to think about by those who, in times of depression and difficulty, would slack in their contributions to the church, in either property or talent. The harder the tasks before the church, the greater must be our generosity in giving time, talents, energy, and wealth to support the work. Those who in these times of stress say, "Let us wait and withhold our money or services or both, till we see how the church comes out in her struggles," will come under condemnation, for what Brother Williams said is true—to wear the crown, one must bear the cross.

"I AM TRYING to be a one hundred per cent Latter Day Saint," is the way one sister expresses the tendency of her efforts along spiritual lines. To achieve this requires a whole series of deeds, a line of conduct that demands close adherence to ideals of the highest type. To be a one hundred per cent Latter Day Saint will be to attain the highest rank as a Christian, and should be the ambition and determination of every member of the church.

But just how can we determine when one has become a one hundred per cent Latter Day Saint.

I HEARD A YOUNG LATTER DAY SAINT in a prayer meeting express an ambition which is a worthy one to hold. "I want to be a leader," said the speaker, "but if I cannot be a leader, then I want to be a good follower."

To aspire to leadership without being worthy or capable, is inordinate and works mischief; but the ambition expressed in the foregoing indicates a desire to qualify for leadership. To become outstanding in capacity, talents, or capabilities, tends towards leadership; and to be ambitious to excel in the qualities of usefulness, of knowledge, of service is not inordinate but commendable.

Even in being a leader one is quite likely also to be under the necessity of being a follower. Organization—proper and useful organization—demands that offices shall be established; and persons filling offices must be properly recognized and the offices respected if progress is to be made and the organization kept stable; and to recognize offices properly is to yield a following. The ambition, therefore, to be a good follower is in line with good government and organization. And this can be given or rendered, too, without subserviency. So we may rightfully, if proper spirit is maintained, aspire to be leaders and followers both.

IT WAS NOT in a letter across the desk, but an expression in a prayer meeting that this came. It was at the Park of the Pines reunion, in the morning prayer service—the adult prayer meeting it was called. The speaker was a little girl, not over ten or twelve years of age, and after expressing a desire to serve God and be a better Saint, she said: "I have faith in the church and faith in my brothers and sisters." What a splendid thing to say! May that little sister never have occasion to lose faith in her brothers and sisters; and yet how frequently we do lose faith in them. I have heard even ministers in our church say they had not lost faith in God, but had in men. There is quite sure to be something wrong with us when we have. And yet, it is probable we give much cause for our brothers and sisters to lose faith in us, as we are likely to when we live below our ideals.

A thought worth keeping before us, especially when tempted to lower our standards, is that misconduct may sacrifice the faith others have in us; especially should we remember that youth of the church have a faith and trust in us. It would be a stimulus to such living that all of our brothers and sisters, both young and old, will continue to have faith in us. It would be a glorious condition, if the conduct of all of us at all times would be such that all might have faith in their brothers and sisters.

Writers Can Help Editors

We have pretty well succeeded in teaching our contributors, most of whom are now using typewriters, to "double space," in order to allow room for corrections. For this we are grateful, because single spacing makes a manuscript practically impossible for use, especially if it is long. And nobody writes on both sides of the papers any more, which is a help.

There are other nuisances in the business of writing which the Editors would like to see abolished: putting quotation marks immediately above periods or commas, abbreviating the names of books of the Bible and other reference works, and beginning the next sentence immediately after punctuation without leaving space. These are some of the worst and most inconvenient errors.

We would suggest these rules, which will make written work more acceptable, not only to us, but as well to all other editors:

www.LatterDayTruth.org

1. Typewrite, if possible, using only one side of the paper.

2. "Double space" your copy.

3. Allow two spaces with your space bar after each period and comma—but especially after the periods.

4. Spell out names of books of the Bible and names of other references. "Space stingy" abbreviations are an annoyance. (However, the abbreviations ibid. and op. cit. for repeated references, are advisable.)

5. Give a little room. Don't crowd your copy so close that we cannot make corrections.

OFFICIAL

A United Front for the Harvest Festival

One thing more than any other that will impress the visitor to the Harvest Festival (to be held this year at the Auditorium, October 3-8) is a united front from all districts of the church. To see an exhibit from Maine beside a display from California, and products from the great northwest contrasted with those of the sunny south is a delight to anyone who is privileged to visit the Auditorium Harvest Festival. For this reason we have asked each district of the church to furnish a display at the Festival this year if it is possible to do so.

This is the purpose of the giant relief map which is to have a center place in the decorations. Each branch or district can be clearly marked, and with a glance a visitor can discover the extent of our "far flung battle line" and then with signal interest can visualize the importance of our common effort to present a "united front."

Again let us caution that it is not advisable for distant points to attempt bulky shipments or to send perishable foods for display. Independence has been able thus far to supply foods of this kind for its needy. If your branch is of such distance that such a shipment is inadvisable, it is suggested that novelties, or quality products of an artistic design be sent or perhaps some miniature or pictorial peculiarly descriptive of your section, especially distinctive products of the soil or the factories.

Once more we invite you to join in what will likely be the largest and best Harvest Festival. See that your district is represented on the relief map with its streamers of purple and gold so that you may be present at least in the Festival spirit if not by personal representatives. Let us all join in the effort to the end that it may truly be said the Church Harvest Festival presents a united front.

Dates, October 3 to 8, inclusive.

Harvest Festival Chorus, October 8.

Address: Harvest Festival Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The Story of Etta Kett

A Surprise Party

When the Elmwood congregation went on a picnic, they went on a picnic. Everybody was there. Grandma wasn't left at home to mind the children. She rode triumphantly in a back seat with a basket of lunch on one knee, a kiddy on the other, and perhaps several with their arms around her neck.

There weren't quite enough grandmas to go around, and Etta gathered up a carload of youngsters who were glad enough to have almost anybody take an interest in them. Tense, excitable, noisy little bundles of energy.

Where is Bill? Etta thought. Probably will bring some other girl!

Etta played tag with the children. It was a romping, breath-taking, perspiring sport, though the day was cool.

Where was Bill? Not in sight.

Etta organized a soft ball game with the children. Their happy shouts filled the air. Round and around they went.

Where was Bill? Such is the state of a woman's heart that she doesn't want a fellow when he is around, and thinks about him all the time he is away.

Castles on the beach—towers, moats and donjon keeps in the wet sand—a tiny knight in armor and a lady fair to be rescued, all made out of sticks—the waves rolling near and shrill voices gleefuliy shouting. Where was Bill?

And then the sound of a quick, heavy tread in the sand, a quick turn—and, horror of horrors—Howard Bell! Etta felt in no mood for his steamy admiration, but she arose awkwardly, feeling at a disadvantage in her old clothes, with sand all over her skirt and a run in her stocking. She didn't know it, but her flushed face and her embarrassment made her all the prettier. This did not escape Howard's eye.

"Well, you are looking wonderful! I'm so happy my trip brought me this way. I met a friend of yours downtown who told me how to get here. It's certainly fine to see you again—" and his words seemed to tumble forth in torrents, overwhelming her ears.

Who had told him where to find her? Could it have been Bill? She wondered.

Howard wanted to take her to supper that evening. Wanted to take her to a show that night. Wanted to see her again the next day, which was Sunday, and she had a class to teach and some people to help. He wanted too much! Why should he try to sweep her off her feet? She resented it.

But evening found her with clothes changed and sitting across a small table from him in an alcove in a smart downtown cafe. A meal excellently cooked, but almost too rich—a waiter constantly at her elbow, and Howard urging things upon her. Too much solicitude for her wants, and no chance to relax! This man was oppressive!

On the way to the movie—too much tenderness and devotion. Oh, for a little good wholesome neglect! And all through the movie—too much leaning against her shoulder.

Where was Bill?

A Thought for Today

Nobody ever began a really great day's work by picking a fight with his family. This applies to the youngster who is learning to shave as well as to the father who should know better.

If you can't agree with your family in the same house, move to another. If that isn't enough, move to the next city. Wherever you settle, you will probably be so neglected and mistreated that you remember them with love. And before long, like the prodigal son, you will manage to return.

Start This Fall

Young people who find the fall approaching and their plans somewhat vague, should determine not to let precious time go to waste while they are waiting for opportunities to come to them.

They can prepare for those opportunities and so be better fitted to undertake the responsibilities that they will be asked to meet.

There will be opportunities in the work of the church. Are you ready to teach a class of younger people? What will become of the local church school work if some of the present workers move away, or if something happens to them? Are you ready to help? Determine this fall to prepare yourself for whatever new tasks may come. Do you understand the teachings of the church? Could you explain them to an interested nonmember? You never know when you may need to be ready for it. This fall will be a good time to begin your preparation.

There will be opportunities in business. Are you prepared for them? Is your bookkeeping ability in the best possible shape? Can you take dictation rapidly and turn out a neat and correct letter? Now will be the time to give added finish to your training. No school can force you to learn these things as well as you ought to know them. Competence in any business work will require you to know more than the schools can teach you. Get experience if you can, even if in getting it may not receive a salary.

When opportunities come they will go to those who are best prepared. Even with a "pull" an incompetent person cannot hold a place, except in politics, and not many of us go in for that.

A man cannot do his work alone. Trifles may be done without assistance, but the world has never known a mighty work accomplished without cooperation. Men must work together when they wish to do great things. Combination is one of God's great principles upon which the world is organizing its modern life.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle John W. Rushton Continues Survey of British Isles

Apostle John W. Rushton is continuing his survey of the British Isles, according to The Southern England and Wales District Herald. Not long ago he visited Scotland, and his attention now is focussed on the Southern England and Wales District. He also has Ireland in mind, where some interested people are calling out the old cry, "Come over and help us." English Saints hope the gospel standard may be firmly planted in Ireland. Following the Southern district conference, Brother Rushton plans to visit Basingstoke, Exeter, Paignton, Plymouth, and possibly Canterbury and Cliff on Hoe. He expects to sail for the States before winter sets in.

Hundreds of Visitors at Independence Auditorium

Two thousand visitors have registered at the Auditorium at Independence in two months, and many more did not register. These guests are received, made welcome, and guided over the mammoth building by Elders J. W. A. Bailey, C. J. Hunt, S. S. Smith, and others, and after the tour of inspection, they are invited to be seated and listen to a lecture on the church and its beliefs.

In this way the ministry are conducting a real missionary campaign, accomplishing as much, they think, as several traveling preachers would do. When special interest is shown by the visitors, follow-up letters give him more information about the church, and his name is sent to the branch or district president of his home community.

No Summer Slump in Baptisms

"And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved," says the Scriptures describing events in the time of Paul. Quite the same condition is apparent today. Many are joining the church. It is especially noticeable that during the warm weather months there has been no slump in the number of baptisms. Here are baptisms noted in the news of the past week:

Ten were baptized during the Southern New England reunion which closed August 6.

Two were inducted into the kingdom by Elder Francis May, of Dayton, August 4, and will be members of Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch, Ohio.

During the month of June three candidates were baptized at New Castle, and one at Darlington, Pennsylvania.

Thirteen people were baptized during the Southern Saskatchewan reunion. Apostle J. F. Curtis baptized seven, and Elder O. W. Okerlind baptized six.

Elder William B. Farley recently held a series of meetings at Grand Junction, Colorado, where he baptized eight people, July 23.

At the close of a three-week series of meetings at Wimer Mission, Oklahoma, Elder J. L. Creviston, of Mulberry, Kansas, baptized two adults, one an Indian woman.

Shenandoah Younger Generation Believes in Organization

The young people of Shenandoah, Iowa, Branch are both alert and busy. They are interested in dramatics, music and a dozen other things. Last winter they prepared a play, "The Gift," which they presented at home, at Tabor, Glenwood, and Carson, Iowa, and later broadcast over Station KMA. The play was designed to advertise their convention at Shenandoah the latter part of May when President F. M. McDowell was the main speaker. And the convention, in turn, was planned to induce all who could to attend the Youth Conference at Lamoni in June. As a result of these organized steps, a large number of young men and women from Shenandoah and neighboring points went to the conference.

Cooperation Keynote of Southern Saskatchewan Reunion

The cooperation of Weyburn Branch made possible this reunion on the farm of Brother John Neill. The attendance was large and representative of that region, Saints driving in cars as far as three hundred and five hundred miles, to attend. Several nonmembers attended the reunion to investigate the gospel.

Philadelphia's Daily Vacation Bible School

A most satisfactory three weeks' summer school for children from five to fifteen, was recently held at the local church in Philadelphia, and directed by Mrs. Clara Thumm and Miss Myrtle A. Weber. Seventy-seven children attended, and may be divided as follows: Latter Day Saints, 31; Roman Catholics, 26; Protestant Episcopals, 9; Methodist Episcopals, 4; Congregationalists, 2; German Baptists, 2; no church affiliation, 3.

A wide variety of handwork was done, which was made the basis of an exhibition at the church on the closing day. The children contributed a good share of the necessary expense in offerings, and the balance was made up in local subscriptions. The total cost was $18.41.

Thought Provokers

Rambling Reflections

By Poul S. Nielsen

That we are now living in a momentous age more replete with events than any other epoch in the history of mankind, is a fact that no serious-minded student of history can fail to notice. Distrust is rife among the nations. No one of them seems to trust another, and if it were not for the fear of the outcome, many of them would right now be embroiled in war. But money, for one thing, cannot be had as easily as it used to be. Without money, no war. And yet we may perhaps wake up some day and see what we thought was impossible happen again. Dictators are in many lands, although they are not always called by that name. In fact, many of the rulers are nothing less than dictators.

Dictators may be good if they are in sympathy with the general feeling for world peace, but experience shows that whatsoever the ruling class wants they will get, even with a dictator.

Tariff barriers are everywhere. It seems that every nation is for itself and nobody else. As with nations in their dealings so it is with individuals. Take up any of our great daily papers. The front page is filled with glaring headlines about murders, kidnappings and news from the divorce mill, that is working full time in spite of poor times. Doesn't it strike you as peculiar that a nation that poses as a world leader affords such a spectacle? Wonder what a really bad nation looks like?

Those who should take the lead and show a worthy example for their fellow man—what are they doing? Sleeping on the job? Taking money from Tom, Dick and Harry without questioning from whence it came. What is the difference if it is a little tainted? Many of them seems to think that it does not matter from what source their pay comes. No wonder that the man from Galilee said: "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

He could see that even in his own time the world was already drifting towards that which destroys the spark of life that is in all of us.

True enough there still are and have been in all ages noble souls that have tried to live their lives in such a way that their light should shine like beacons for a race of men who more or less grope in darkness. Many Latter Day Saints are of this type. Some are striving to do all in their power to help mankind, but far too many are only seeing the light dimly, for although they are baptized they are almost gone to sleep or at the best dreaming. All who are awake must make an extra effort to arouse those in our midst who are dreamers and not doers; for are we not our brothers' keeper?

Are we not in a measure responsible for his soul? Salvation may sometimes be free as far as money is concerned, but it is not free from work when it comes to our own salvation that of our fellowmen.

Many seem to think that all that matters is to save their own souls. But will we not enhance our own chance for salvation if we help those who are mired down, fallen as it were by the roadside? Often all that is necessary to bring a soul back to work is a smile or friendly handclasp. Sometimes it may take a little more work on our part, or perhaps we have to overcome some pride in ourselves in order to stoop down and reach the fallen one. But what of it? Well may we heed the slogan of The Salvation Army: A man might be down, but he is never out.

Some years ago a young man was going home from a party. It was a rather dark night. Some one was walking ahead of him but try as hard as he could, he was not able to catch up. So gave it up. By the road was a ditch. In passing some trees he imagined that he heard some one groaning, but thinking that it was the wind howling in the trees he walked on. Just as he passed a certain spot he felt sure that it was a human being in distress, so looked down in the ditch where he saw a man lying in the water. The man appeared to be sick, unable to talk; so the young man thought he had better get some help and went to a nearby farm. One was sitting by the table but refused to go with him saying, "I suppose it is only a drunken sot. Let him get himself out." "Well, if you do not feel like helping, can I at least have a cup of water to take to him." "Oh," replied the other, "I suppose you can have it, but be sure and bring the cup back." The young man took the water and brought it to the man in the ditch. Upon giving it to him he seemed to revive enough to tell him his name and address where upon the young man ran as fast as he could. Great was the excitement there, for it was some one's husband and some one's father who was sick.

Do you think that the man who refused to help, who would hardly give a drink of water to this man, will have as easy a time to enter heaven as the young man who never stopped to think of his only suit, but went down in the muddy water to help? Although he was poor and had only this one dress suit never asked if it would pay but did what he thought was right.

We have an inheritance that no other people have. But if we do not soon wake up, we, like Israel of old will be singing songs of Zion for years to come as they did by the rivers of Babylonia. Our church needs help now in a financial way, but what is far more important it needs the loyal support of all its members. If we are afraid to face facts, be they pleasant or not in regard to our own church, we are not true Latter Day Saints. And then again we must be the same whether we live in Independence or the most lawless mining town. For some one is always watching us, patterning after us. Although I have met with men who were considered real bad men, I have yet to meet the man who has not some small spot in his heart for religion that could be reached in some way. Living up to our religion will not hurt anyone. On the contrary, it will help us often in time of trouble or disaster. If the local officers of a branch should happen to do an unwise thing it surely will not make things any better to go around and whisper it over and over again. For sooner or later it will come to some one who has itching ears, who do not want to hear it for its news value (?) but only for its mischief value. If we are sure that a brother or sister have done a wrong will it not be far better to go to them and in a friendly way talk it over? Perhaps it was nothing but a small misunderstanding. No one has ever been the loser by trying to do a kind deed.

Since man is not perfect, we all talk; but we ought to guard our speech very carefully especially when it is our church we are speaking about. A little thought before hand may save us untold misery afterwards. Well has it been said by some one that there is so much bad in the best of us and so much good in the worst of us that we really have no business of talking about one another. If we feel like talking about some one or church affair we ought to make it an unchangeable rule to ask ourselves what Christ would do in our place, or rather to stop and pray about it. For that is the best there is to do at any and all times. We do not need to be in church or even at our family altar. A prayer offered anywhere, in all sincerity of heart will be acceptable. The lengthy prayer is not needful. A short one may answer far better if our heart is right with God.

Do We Share the Faith of Our Fathers?

A Visit to a Shrine of the Reorganization

"Faith of our fathers, living still
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword,
Oh how our hearts beat high with joy
Whene'er we hear that glorious word!

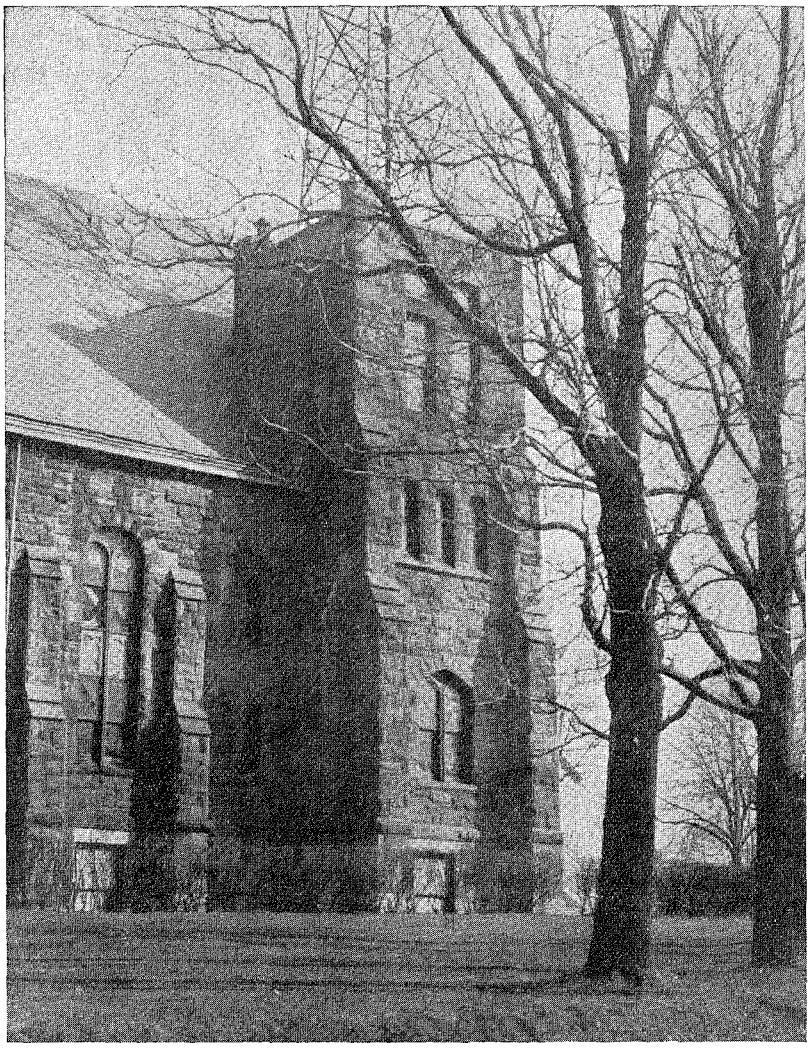
"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

We are visiting, you and I, one of the shrines of the church, the Stone Church. It is Sunday evening, and outside the world is still and the sky is blue with shadows, forerunners of night's darkness. As we enter, the congregation is singing "Faith of Our Fathers" fervently, meaningfully, and the tones of the organ add depth and significance to both words and melody of the hymn.

Quietly the influence of the service takes possession of us. We are standing in the largest house of worship in the church, a building approaching its fiftieth year of service. Everywhere are familiar objects—the brown pews, the carpeted aisles, the railed pulpit, the organ loft, the paneled ceiling, and through the stained glass windows high above the gallery comes the evening twilight seeming to deepen and purify the colors of the window. There is something about the place itself which lifts up our souls and rolls away routine cares and thoughts.

Hundreds of faces in the congregation, most of them aglow with the spirit of worship. Here we see aged people, their heads bent with the passage of years, their steps faltering. These were young, some of them very young, when the Stone Church was built. It was their vision and the vision of their fathers—and yes, it was more than vision; it was their great faith which erected this beautiful, big building and signalized the return of the Saints to Independence.

The building's cornerstone bears the date 1888. At first the Saints had only a basement church in which to worship, but the Spirit of God was with his people and they worshiped him. And later, how great was the exercise of the faith of the few Saints, when they erected the superstructure, a glorious monument of hope and promise. Gradually the Saints were gathering back to Independence, the city from which their fathers had been driven many years before.



Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Today these aged members recall the time when the church was heated by stoves and lighted by kerosene lamps. They remember when the organ was installed. The building both inside and outside has been decorated a number of times. The dining hall was added to care for church dinners and recreational features, and later still came the radio studio, the transmitter room and towers.

But now we are singing the stirring promise:

"Faith of our fathers, we will strive
To win all nations unto thee;
And through the truth that comes from God.
Mankind shall then indeed be free.

"Faith of our fathers, we will love
Both friend and foe in all our strife,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And preach thee, too, as love knows how,
By kindly words and virtuous life."

And we believe that we will.

As we bow our heads with the others in prayer we think of the author of this hymn and his good works. Frederick William Faber was born at Calverley, England, in 1814. He grew up to be a prelate and was ordained a priest in 1839. He greatly admired John Henry Newman. Today he is remembered for his fervent hymns. The popularity of "Faith of Our Fathers" attests the love and admiration of many peoples for the understanding and faith of a noble man. Mr. Faber wrote also "O Gift of Gifts, O Grace of Faith," and "Paradise, O Paradise."

Then our thoughts revert to the many things which have taken place in the Stone Church. Here have been administered all the sacred ordinances of the church. Hundreds of times the sacrament of the Lord has been served to the Saints. Men have been ordained to the ministry, and prayers of consecration and blessing have been offered for missionaries about to depart to preach the gospel on the other side of the world. Men, women, and children have been baptized into the kingdom of God in this building; babies of two generations have been blessed; here also many have taken their marriage vows. General Conferences have crowded the auditoriums of this place of worship. Many, many sermons, fired by the Spirit, have been delivered by God's servants, and regularly the Saints have met here for prayer. Little children have trampled over the pulpit on such occasions as Christmas and Children's Day. At Christmas-time also the main auditorium has been the scene of the rendering of Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," by the white-clad choir, and throughout the year musical concerts are given. Sometimes with the choir loft swathed in gray curtains religious dramas have told again the story of Christ and his church.

Listen to the Scripture reading. Appropriate, isn't it? The words of Jesus: "Have faith in God. For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

It reminds me of a prayer I heard not long ago, a prayer offered at group prayer meeting by a sister of advanced years. She is a woman of faith. Her life has been one of deep and abiding faithfulness since she accepted the gospel many years ago in England. Today she is an ardent worker in Independence; the dream of and desire for Zion possess her life. People seek her company because of her great faith. "Oh, Lord," she prayed, "give us, thy children, humility of heart and strength sufficient to do thy work. But above all, dear Lord, give us true faith in thee and thy work and in each other and ourselves."

Faith? Introspection seizes us. Do we have faith? All about us the world cries for faith—it needs faith sorely. But what of us? Honestly, do we share the faith of our fathers? Self-accusation reminds us that there have been times when we have been a little glib about it—we have talked about our faith more than we have exercised it. But further—do we have the faith of our fathers? Well, some of us have been rather occupied making a living, looking after our own interests and position, or having our own pleasure. We have not given much thought to the matter of faith; this is an age of indifference anyway, and we have put off deciding the status of our faith until a better day when the depression is over. Keeping up appearances takes so much of our time nowdays that we have almost forgotten Jesus' words: "He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Those words make our reasonings and excuses sound shallow. Our forefathers had faith great enough to take up their cross and follow Jesus. They proved themselves worthy, and they realized his promise—"he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." They carried the restored gospel to the world. They endured pioneer hardships and privations for its sake. They came to the land of Missouri, designated as the place for Zion by the Lord, and passed through harrowing experiences which included prejudice, mob violence, and expulsion from their homes and property. They made mistakes, but they tried to rectify their errors. And finally, back in the 1870's, they began to return to the center place.

To us these men and women have passed the gospel torch, bidding us keep it aglow with the fire of faith. Are we holding it high aloft to guide the feet of wandering souls? Do we say to them: "Here is truth. Here is light. See it burning in our lives"?

As we sit here in the Stone Church, you and I, we are thinking that much depends on us, much more than we sometimes realize. We look into the faces of young men and women sitting in the congregation and seem to read the message: "No, we do not want to go backward into the old days much as we may respect the faith of our fathers. We wish to carry that faith forward in our own lives of consecration to a grand New day!"

IS CHRIST HISTORICAL?

Part One

By H. O. Smith

Some time ago I clipped from the Kansas City Star the following from the pen of Robert Keable, and taken from the Atlantic Monthly of November, 1928:

"No man knows sufficient of the earthly life of Jesus to write a biography of him. For that matter no one knows enough about him for the normal times obituary notice of a great man. If regard were had to what we should call, in current speech, definitely historical facts, scarcely three lines could be filled.

"Moreover, if newspapers had been in existence, and if that obituary notice had had to be written in the year of his death, no editor could have found in the literature of his day so much as his name. Yet few periods of the ancient world were so well documented as the period of Augustus and Tiberius. But no contemporary writer knew of his existence.

"Even a generation later, a spurious passage in Josephus, a questionable reference in Suetonius and the mention of a name that may be his by Tacitus—that is all. His first mention in any surviving document, secular or religious, is twenty years after.

"We do not know, with any thing approaching historical certainty, of whom he was born, or when, or where; how long he lived, or how long he labored; and the sayings that are indubitably his are a mere handful. The stories of his resurrection are so contradictory and confused that it is impossible to make more than a guess at their true import.

"Yet 'lives' of Christ are poured forth on the world in ever-increasing volume. The most cursory examination of publishers' announcements in Europe and America shows that something calling itself a 'life' of him is published nearly every month.

"The real truth is that there does not exist enough historical evidence to produce a bigraphical sketch of Christ, let alone a life."

In order to make his assertion true that there is no historical evidence of Christ's existence, the author of the above brushes aside the statement of Josephus as spurious, but authors differ upon this matter. Ernest Renan says in his preface to his Life of Jesus, "I believe the passage respecting Jesus to be authentic. It is perfectly in the style of Josephus, and if this historian has made mention of Jesus, it is thus that he must have spoken of him." (Life of Jesus, page 29.)

He then cites a number of authors who quoted this passage from Josephus very early in the Christian era. To assume, as Mr. Keable and others do, that this passage is spurious, is to accuse some Christian writer with purposely inserting this passage in order to bolster up a belief in Christ's historicity, a thing that no true Christian would or could do. It would be a violation of the true code of Christ, and an act that the Christ could not sanction.

As to the reference to Suetonius I am unable to verify this man's statement, and neither can I prove it to be false, but as to Tacitus it seems to me that this author is guilty of exactly what he accuses the Christians of, that is falsifying the record. I have no means of verifying the quotation, but one whom we have always considered a careful student and writer has this to say of this quotation from Tacitus:

"Tacitus, the learned historian of Rome, who lived from 55 to 117 A. D., wrote as follows:

" 'The founder of the Christian sect, Christ, was executed in the reign of Tiberius, by Pontius Pilate, but the pernicious superstition burst forth again, not only in Judea, the birth place of the evil, but at Rome also, where everything base and atrocious centers and is in repute.' "—Compendium, page 245.

I understand that this was presented by Elder Henry Stebbins, a very learned and careful writer. If this quotation is correct then the statement made by Mr. Keable is not correct when he says, "The mention of a name that may be his by Titus." For not only is the name of Christ mentioned, but the name of the sect that was founded upon his teachings is mentioned, and mentioned in a way that indicates that it was a matter of common knowledge that Christ did exist, and that he was crucified or executed by Pontius Pilate in the reign of Tiberius.

CHRIST HISTORICAL BY DEDUCTION

We may get at the matter in another way aside from actual facts recorded. John Stuart Mill, a philosopher of the past, and who is mentioned by Will Durant as "Herbert Spencer's greatest rival" in the field of philosophy, and, by the way, an unbeliever in Christ's divinity, has this to say:

"And whatever else may be taken away from us by rational criticism, Christ is still left; a unique figure, not more unlike all his precursors than all his followers, even those who had the direct benefit of his personal teaching. It is no use to say that Christ as exhibited in the Gospels is not historical and we know not how much of what is admirable has been superadded by the tradition of his followers. The tradition of followers suffices to insert any number of marvels, and may have inserted all of the miracles which he is reputed to have wrought. But who among his disciples or among their proselytes was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus or of imagining the life and character revealed in the Gospels? Certainly not the fishermen of Galilee; as certainly not Saint Paul, whose character and idiosyncrasies were of a totally different sort; still less the early Christian writers in whom nothing is more evident than that the good that was in them was all derived, as they always professed that it was derived, from the higher source. . . .

"But about the life and sayings of Jesus there is a stamp of personal originality combined with profundity of insight, which if we abandon the idle expectation of finding scientific precision where something very different was aimed at, must place the Prophet of Nazareth, even in the estimation of those who have no belief in his inspiration, in the very first rank of the men of sublime genius of whom our species can boast. When this pre-eminent genius is combined with the qualities of probably the greatest moral reformer, and martyr to that mission, who ever existed upon earth, religion cannot be said to have made a bad choice in pitching on this man as the ideal representative and guide of humanity; nor, even now, would it be easy, even for an unbeliever, to find a better translation of the rule of virtue from the abstract into the concrete, than to endeavor so to live that Christ would approve our life. When to this we add that, to the conception of the rational sceptic, it remains a possibility that Christ was actually what he supposed himself to be . . . a man charged with a special, express and unique commission from God to lead mankind to truth and virtue; we may well conclude that the influence of religion on the character which will remain after rational criticism has done its utmost against the evidences of religion, are well worth preserving, and what they lack in direct strength as compared with those of a firmer belief, is more than compensated by the greater truth and rectitude of the morality they sanction."—Three Essays on Religion, pages 253, 254, 255.

This man proves Christ's historical existence by a process of elimination. He claims that it would have been impossible to imagine the Christ and his teachings, hence he must have been a real person, walking and talking with men; leaving his impression, not only the generation with which he walked and talked, but on all future generations, and because of this it is no use to say that Christ is not historical. Ernest Renan got at the matter in a different way. He took the history of Christ as contained in the Gospels, and with this in his hands he went to the land where Christ is supposed to have walked and talked with men, then records his conclusions as follows:

"I have traversed in all directions, the country of the Gospels; I have visited Jerusalem, Hebron, and Samaria; scarcely any important locality of the history of Jesus has escaped me. All this history, which at a distance seems to float in the clouds of an unreal world, thus took a form, a solidity, which astonished me. The striking agreement of the texts with the places, the marvelous harmony of the gospel ideal with the country that served it as a framework, were like a revelation to me. I had before my eyes a fifth gospel, torn but still legible, and henceforward, through the recitals of Matthew and Mark, in place of an abstract being, whose existence might have been doubted, I saw living and moving an admirable human figure."—Life of Jesus, Author's Introduction, page 61.

And Renan closes his introduction with this observation:

"Jesus cannot belong solely to those who call themselves his disciples. He is the common honor of all who share a common humanity. His glory does not consist in being relegated out of history; we render him a truer worship in showing that all history is incomprehensible without him."

The disputed passage from Josephus reads:

"Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ. And when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him; for he appeared to them alive again the third day; as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe of Christians, so named from him, are not extinct to this day."—Josephus, Book 18, chapter 3.

Renan, while making the statement that he believes the passage in Josephus is genuine, admits that the literary fortune of Josepuhs was made by the Christians, as they adopted his writings as essential documents of their sacred history, thus giving the enemies of Christianity a chance to make the accusation that they had changed the text to make it appear that Christ was historical. However, he cites the passage as it now appears, in very early writings of the Christian era, and argues from this that it must have been genuine.

Christ Not Historical?

Technically speaking Christ was not historical, if we say a man is not historical unless he has a scribe attending him all the time, and daily publishing his acts and sayings. But this definition of historical would relegate most of us to the nonhistorical ranks. And I think this is the thought that Mr. Keable has in mind in asserting that Christ is not historical. But supposing we admit that Christ's influence was so obscure while he was here with men that contemporary historians did not think his work worth recording, we are then confronted with one of the most astounding events that has ever occurred in history, and we are asked to believe something that would tax the gullibility of the most credulous. An obscure individual, unknown and unsung while here on earth, suddenly expanding into a personage of such proportions as to dominate the world, and, as Renan says, "Showing that all history is incomprehensible without him."

Christ Historical and Prehistorical

That Christ is a prehistorical character is shown by the fact that all nations have a traditional or legendary story of him. To such an extent does this legendary story of Christ prevail that some years ago a man by the name of Kersey Graves wrote and published a book called Sixteen Crucified Saviors, if I remember the title correctly. The book was written as an effort to discredit the story of the Christ as given in the Bible, and to belittle, if possible, the claims of Christianity to an exclusive Christ. But Paul says (Galatians 3: 8), the gospel was preached before unto Abraham, and in Hebrews 4: 2, he says it was preached to the Israelites. Christ being the central figure of the gospel it is fair to presume that he was taught in that early day as the Savior of the world through the gospel. From this early teaching of the Christ traditions and legends of his story went to all the world, and hence each nation had its crucified Savior.

The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit

A radio address by R. S. SALYARDS, Sr.

THE TERM Holy Spirit is much used in religious conversation and literature. It is a subject of frequent mention in sermons, in Sunday school teaching, and in publications of all Christian literature. Like other terms in frequent use, the very, very free use of it may become habitual or mechanical and the hearing of it that of customary repetition—"a matter of course," to use a familiar phrase. In other words, we may accept in a nominal or passive sense a belief in the Holy Spirit and yet fail to comprehend what the Holy Spirit is, and what its function or office in the plan of salvation.

In this twenty-minute address one can present but a very brief statement; I attempt therefore to state but a limited outline of my subject.

WHAT IS THE HOLY SPIRIT?

What is the Holy Spirit? When Jesus gave to his apostles the great commission, he said: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matthew 28: 19.) They were to officiate in the name "of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

In 1 John 5: 7 we read: "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word [or the Son], and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."

From this it is clear that the Holy Spirit is one of the persons in the Godhead; that it acts in unison with God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son. Its position or person is therefore clear, hence sufficient comprehension of its significance and office work is fundamental to spiritual knowledge and attainment.

It is the great creative power by which all things have been brought into existence. We read: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters," (Genesis 1: 1, 2). There follow in the account a succession of statements of the creative fiats or acts of God. The Holy Spirit is therefore the creative power, force, energy, or life by which God has brought into being the vast universe of planetary systems, including man and all other forms of life.

We have further information to this effect, from the Book of Job, the ancient seer: "By his Spirit he hath garnished [that is, created or appointed] the heavens." (26: 13.)

"The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life."—33: 4.

This is sufficient to make clear that the Holy Spirit is the creative power that is in and through all things, the primal force or power by which God has brought all into being, "even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3.)

The Bible in numerous statements gives us to understand that "God is a Spirit"—the great Presiding Intelligence who rules and controls and upholds throughout the boundless reaches of space. It also teaches that man, like his great Originator, is also spirit; for "man is spirit," much as many would limit him to a mere material being of flesh and blood. Man is the "offspring of God" (Acts 17: 28). We read again: "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32: 8.) "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." (Proverbs 20: 27.)

God is the Infinite, Eternal Spirit; man is finite, limited. God, therefore, as Father, has seen and known the needs of man, that the finite unaided cannot comprehend the infinite; and in all ages has communicated to man by inspiration a knowledge of the things of the Spirit; for as Christ said, "Man doth not live by bread alone."

COMMUNION WITH GOD

The history of God's dealing with man is varied, as recorded in the Sacred Word. What we have today of true religion has been made known to the race by ministrations of the Holy Spirit, through the agency of men inspired of God. The revelation of the will of God to man in the word is but the expression of the Holy Spirit. Jesus Christ, the manifestation of God in human flesh, was "begotten" and "made manifest" and accomplished his work "through the eternal Spirit." Of him it was said, "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord." (Isaiah 11: 2.)

The New Testament record describes Jesus as in constant communion with God through the Holy Spirit. We read that he ministered "in the power of the Spirit"; that God gave his Holy Spirit "not by measure unto him." The life and teachings of Jesus, therefore, reveal the character of the Holy Spirit—its intelligence, virtue, wisdom, love, power, etc.

A vital thing to the Christian is the provision for reception of the Holy Spirit. We quote briefly: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) John taught concerning Jesus, "he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." (Matthew 3: 11.) "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." (Verse 16.)

Jesus before his crucifixion promised the Holy Spirit to the disciples: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth." (John 14: 16, 17.)

"The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—Verse 26.

"But when the Comforter is come . . . which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." —15: 26.

"Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."—16: 13.

After the resurrection of Christ the promise of the Holy Spirit was fulfilled:

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 1-4.

Peter, the apostle, explaining the manifestation and answering the query of the multitude who witnessed the descent of power, said:

"Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39.

The Infinite

The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God, the Universal Spirit. The gospel is the universal, God-ordained plan of salvation, and Jesus the universal Savior saves by means of the gospel. From the foregoing it is clear that the promise of the Holy Spirit to the obedient believer is a promise, not to the people of the apostolic age only, but to believers in every age, as Peter said, "unto all," "even as many as the Lord our God shall call," etc.

Man, uninspired of God, is limited to the powers of his imperfect, finite spirit; more than that, he is subject to ignorance, darkness, and sin. Great as have been his attainments, standing as he does at the head of the creations of Almighty God, his failures and muddlings through have been and are being revealed in past and present civilization. He needs the inspiration of the Almighty to give him understanding and change of heart. It is the most logical of propositions and the sublimest philosophy of life that he should come into harmony with his Creator and Father, be obedient to his Fatherhood, and become a coworker with Him in establishing the brotherhood of man. Peter and the other apostles, notwithstanding their great natural gifts, were weak and human, and unable to meet the requirements of their ministry before they received the Holy Ghost; but when it came upon them at Pentecost, they became men of power, transformed into conscious, living witnesses of the divinity and resurrection of Christ and his gospel "to all the world."

The Nature of Man

Man is not a material being only; he has a threefold nature, of body, soul, and spirit. He is therefore "incurably religious," and through all the ages, in every nation, his soul-nature has reached out to find communion with the unseen spiritual world; for poets have sung, philosophers have mused and written, and seers in every nation have perceived the problems of immortality and eternal life in God. Man was made by God and for him, and he can never be normal nor complete without conscious sonship in God his Father. The doctrine of the Holy Spirit and its ministrations is therefore the doctrine of ministration of divine life and power and truth vouchsafed of God to man. It is normal, it is scientific in the highest sense; it is the great spiritual reality without which man can never realize perfection in any sense, either in his physical, moral, or spiritual nature. It is for this reason that the plan of salvation, the gospel, includes the promise to obedient man of the baptism or "gift" of the Holy Spirit.

The Apostle Paul, the able and inspired interpreter of Jesus Christ, says: "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." (1 Corinthians 2: 11, 12.) "But ye are not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, if so be that (Continued on page 1073)

DISCIPLESHIP

IV.—Alibi Disciples

By Thomas S. Williams

"A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come."—Luke 14: 16-20.

TO THOSE acquainted with the methods of the American gangster, the word alibi is a familiar term. By establishing an alibi, the crook endeavors to show that he was elsewhere when the crime was committed. Thus he hopes to disclaim responsibility. Perhaps the outstanding weakness of the alibi disciple is that he is unconscious of responsibility.

Irresponsible persons, when confronted with the consequences of their lack, draw quickly from a stock of trite excuses.

Our text gives us samples of the type of excuses offered. One man has purchased a team of oxen, another a piece of ground. They say, "The task of making a living is so difficult that I have not time for church activities." "Competition is so great that I must give all my time to business." We have some men in our church who refuse to make the sacrifice demanded of the church worker. We are happy to know, however, that we do have a great army of men who, fully aware of the cost, are willing to give time and money to the work of the church.

Another type of alibi disciple is the man who excuses himself because of his home responsibilities. "I have married a wife." The care of home tasks is the chief duty of men and women. The home should not be neglected. However, there are few men who could not use some of their wasted time in church activity. If the men of the priesthood would do no more than use their idle, wasted time in the discharge of some helpful piece of work in line of duty, what great good would result!

From the day of Cain until the present day, the favorite excuse is: "Am I my brother's keeper?" What a disclaimer of responsibility!

While it is true that each man must live his own life, it is also just as true we are the keepers of each other. To the alibi disciple, this is a doctrine to be believed but not practiced. To the true disciple, it is a policy to be lived and carried out.

The man of alibis sets a standard for others he does not live up to himself. It is difficult to apply to oneself the same test we are inclined to apply to others. We offer excuses for ourselves but without mercy condemn the other fellow. David's disposal of Uriah, and Nathan's method in dealing with the crime, are interesting reading with this thought in mind.

Another method of this type of disciple is to lay his failure to assist upon the weaknesses of a superior officer. "I cannot work with a man of that kind." He refuses to work because of some offense, etc. The parable of the talents reveals the alibi disciple in the sight of God.

Another excuse very frequently heard is: "I don't feel well," or "I am too tired." This individual is a habitual deceiver, for he may use these excuses until he even persuades himself. He may get a few of his brethren to believe them, but he cannot fool his Creator.

The alibi disciple may in the presence of his brethren wash his hands of responsibility as did Pilate. But in the end, he, too, will discover that alibis are not so easily established in the discerning presence of God.

Responsibility cannot be disposed of so readily.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—Matthew 7: 21-23.

The Growing Bible

What an inspiring conception it is, this notion of a growing Bible, this frank and joyful recognition of the fact that not only in scriptures written in the Hebrew tongue and not only in scriptures written in the Greek tongue, but also in scriptures written in the English tongue, in the German tongue, in the Russian tongue, and in the tongues of the Orient, many authentic words from God may be found; that not only in the literature produced between the eighth century before Christ and the second century after Christ, but in some part at least of contemporary literature do prophets speak!

And what a relief it is to discover that a sense of security may be had without cost to one's sense of truth! It may be had without recourse to those religions of authority which take a man back to the past and leave him there, cowering in the presence of every new discovery, afraid of science, distrustful of truth.

An even greater sense of security may be had through actual experience of the living God, for, in that event, every fresh discovery is hailed as another revelation, and science is seen to be one of the mediums through which the Eternal Mind reveals itself, and truth is recognized as the very tabernacle of the Most High.—Ernest Fremont Title, in the Epworth Herald.

History is a fine antitoxin for harmful propaganda.—Clarke Cunningham, in The Pilgrim Highroad.

THE SUBTLE BACILLUS

Furnished by - - - - - - - - - - Jackson County Tuberculosis Association

By A. SCHAEFFER, JR.

Not so many years ago smallpox marks were so common that the person who did not have them was almost a curiosity, diphtheria and typhoid snatched hundreds from the bosoms of their families, and cholera and the bubonic plague were a recurring feature of community life.

Deadly as these scourges were, they had one thing in common—the symptoms of each were recognizable very shortly after the onset of the disease and the victory or defeat of the ever-threatening Reaper was decided in a few days. Today medical science knows not only how to battle such enemies successfully but has even developed means to prevent most of them from ever beginning.

The fantastic realm of microbes has other methods of striking at mankind, however. Among its most subtle weapons is the disease tuberculosis. Tuberculosis, like all affections, has its own peculiar symptoms, but unlike those of other ailments they are not usually recognizable until the disease has made considerable headway.

Nor is its course determined in a week. It frequently demands years of treatment during which the patient must remain in bed. So subtly do tubercle bacilli work that a whole family can become infected from a single member before he shows even the first symptom of illness.

Obviously the only sensible step to take when a case of tuberculosis is discovered is to have every member of the family examined to make sure no one else has it. It is especially important that children be examined, and for this purpose a good doctor will use the tuberculin test and, if necessary, the X-ray.

Why should all members of a family be examined when a case of tuberculosis is discovered? The reason lies in the fact that tuberculosis is not an overnight disease. Modern knowledge tells us that practically every person has the germs of tuberculosis —tubercle bacilli—in his body, and that these bacilli were acquired in small doses usually during early childhood. If the youthful body is strong enough to withstand these small doses of infection the bacilli remain quietly in the body like a sleeping dog, waiting for an opportunity to crash through the delicate defenses.

That opportunity usually comes during the teen age, when the body is run down, tired, weakened by unusual and prolonged exertion, unwise participation in athletics, overstudy, continuous worry or strain, or by lack of proper food or rest. Then the bacilli silently, insidiously, begin their deadly work. As they overcome the defenses of the body they multiply enormously, so that the person who has the disease soon begins to throw off bacilli through his mouth and nose in coughing, sneezing, spitting and breathing. In the early stages of the disease no symptoms are usually apparent, and in many cases are never pronounced enough to make the person visit a doctor. Nevertheless, he continues to throw off the tubercle bacilli and thus infects those with whom he is closely associated, whether in his family or at business. Of those persons who thus acquire the disease, one may show active symptoms even before the person who gave it to him.

It is for this reason that the modern physician is not satisfied merely to place his patient under treatment, but demands that the rest of the patient's family be examined so he may discover whether his patient is the only member who has the disease, and whether he has given it to others or acquired it from one who may be totally unaware that he has it. Only by such procedure can tuberculosis be dethroned from its place as the greatest death-dealing disease between the ages of 15 and 45.

It is to broadcast this information as widely as possible that the two thousand and eighty-four affiliated tuberculosis associations of the United States conduct each year an educational campaign which they call fittingly an "Early Diagnosis Campaign." This year it will begin April 1, and under the slogan, "Examine and Protect All Contacts," will propound the questions, "From whom did he get it? To whom did he give it?"

The political ideal of the world is not so much a single empire with a homogeneous civilization and a single communal will, but a brotherhood of free nations differing profoundly in life and mind, habits and institutions existing side by side in peace and order, harmony and cooperation, and each contributing to the world its own unique and specific best, which is irreducible to the terms of the others. The cosmopolitanism of the eighteenth century and the nationalism of the nineteenth are combined in our ideal of a world-commonwealth, which allows every branch of the human family to find freedom, security and self-realization in the larger life of mankind.—Professor S. Radhakrishnan, King George V Professor of Philosophy, Calcutta University, India.

the Spirit of God dwell in you." (Romans 8: 9, Inspired Version.) He says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Certainly, Paul is right; for "the carnal mind is enmity against God."

THE GIFT FOR TODAY

Can men and women of today receive the conscious, indwelling, power and witness of the Holy Spirit, as received and enjoyed in the apostolic age? Certainly, they can, and they do, when obedient to the gospel. Why not? Is not man's nature the same, are not his needs the same, as in all past ages? Is not God unchangeable and impartial? Is not Jesus Christ "the same yesterday, today, and forever"? No one in all the generations mentioned in Bible times was able to receive of God without the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. No one today can be conscious of God in a living indwelling assurance without that Spirit. Jesus promised it to "every creature" obedient to him. "God so loved the world," not the world of the past only, but the world universal.

The order of God in nature remains unalterably the same unchanged physical order from the beginning. Man today lives in and because of the unchanging phenomena in the mineral, the vegetable, and the animal kingdom. This argues for the same order from the beginning to the end, in the moral and in the spiritual realm. The same law produces the same result, throughout the ages. God thus gives evidence that he thinks as much of man, that he loves him now, as in the past. To argue to the contrary is to misrepresent his word and to do violence to him. In the language of the ancient apostle, "We are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Spirit, whom God hath given to them that obey him." (Acts 5: 32.)

Jesus, when he began his ministry, presented himself to John the Baptist, the man sent of God to prepare the way of the Lord, as foretold by the prophet Isaiah. We read in the word that the preaching of John was "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ." John preached, saying, "There cometh one mightier than I after me, . . . I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost. And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descended upon him: And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Mark 1: 7-11.) Matthew's Gospel gives us the same account.

This record informs us that John preached and administered the baptism of water, testifying that Jesus, greater than he, and of whom he bore witness, would baptize with the Holy Spirit those who obeyed the gospel. Jesus himself, taking the nature of man upon him by being born into this world, and sent to teach and to be an example to man, rendered obedience to the law which he taught; he did not evade it, but received baptism by water at the hand of John. Honoring the law revealed in the gospel, the Holy Spirit descended upon him, and thus the Father openly acknowledged his obedience and proclaimed him to be his beloved Son. Jesus was thus born of water and of the Spirit, in harmony with his teaching to Nicodemus that the twofold birth of water and of the Spirit is necessary if a man would be "born again" and enter into the kingdom of God. (See John 3.)

THE SOURCE OF JESUS' POWER

Jesus accomplished his work by the power of the Holy Spirit. Having to meet the enemy of righteousness in the opposition, persecution, and various forms in which he met the powers of darkness, he constantly sought the ministrations of the Holy Spirit that he might accomplish the great mission for which he had been sent into the world. He did not attempt to do his work without seeking endowment of that divine power. He preached the gospel by the power of the Holy Spirit. By that power he healed the sick, cast out devils, gave sight to the blind, and caused the lame to walk. He stilled the waves of storm-tossed Galilee, he fed the multitude, by exercise of divine power. It is written that "he became the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead." He said to the apostles whom he had chosen: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1).

THE SPIRIT WITH THE ANCIENT DISCIPLES

The ministrations of the Holy Spirit attended the apostles and others of the ancient church. It was in that power that they were able to establish the church. That power is promised to men divinely called to the ministry of Christ in every age in which the gospel is preached in fullness. Without it the church cannot live and grow. The power and witness of the Holy Spirit must be enjoyed today if men and women are to know the things of God. Spiritual knowledge is essential to salvation. Jesus said: "This is life eternal that they might know thee, O God, the eternal Father, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

The Holy Spirit is the power by which intelligence, conviction, knowledge of God are made manifest. It was by its ministrations that men of God were able to stand as witnesses of the divine Being. They had indwelling knowledge of God. They knew in whom they had believed; otherwise they could not have stood out as such witnesses in the midst of the darkness, superstitions, and general ignorance against which they contended. No man can live unto God and stand in consciousness of the truth without that same indwelling, spiritual knowledge. Knowledge is power. It is by knowledge of the material world that men are able to use its elements and forces; and the greater things of the Spirit must also be known, must be actually experienced, if human nature is to become transformed into the character of Jesus Christ, the real and true man. The Scriptures promise and require that man shall attain actual, spiritual knowledge of God as essential unto eternal life. As it was manifest in Christ in knowledge of God, it must in like manner be known by men today, if men are to live in communion with God and attain unto eternal life.

Is There a Penalty to Service?

By Edna Stobaugh

Do we treat those who serve us with kindness and appreciation? Or is their joy in service only? The young man is always willing to lend a helping hand, and after the good deed is performed the fellow is snubbed.

A minister in the town holds a week's series of meetings in a city fifty miles away. Not having a car he asks the young man to take him. After the meetings are over the minister and family find much fault with the young man. A boy friend borrows his car to take a girl home from church leaving the fellow to come home on the street car or with friends. Neither boy nor girl are too generous with kindly feeling toward the young man. He asks a girl to go to a show with him and she accepts, but when he asks to take her home from church she has other plans. A mother has a sick babe and needs a perscription filled and she calls the young man with no thought of a whole-hearted "thank you."

The young man has faults—but who of us do not? He is somewhat oversized, but he is as sensitive to the "stings" as he is big. If a kind word is spoken to him a worth-while pleasure comes to the speaker.

Some say he is repulsive, but can't repulsiveness be overcome by brotherly love? Is that an excuse for asking favors and then being rude? Too many of us have made this mistake and should begin now to make amends for them.

Malta Fever (Undulant Fever)

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

This disease may occur in all sections of the United States, but is more frequently found in the older, goat-raising sections of Texas, and is found more or less constantly in the area three hundred miles along the Rio Grande and extending ninety miles to the north.

It is impossible, by the old method, to distinguish the germ of malta fever from the so-called bacillus abortus, which causes contagious abortion in cattle, hogs and other domestic animals. It is identical to the so-called Mediterranean fever. The germ enters the body through wounds and mucous membranes, or after a drink. Those who work in slaughter-houses and have in charge the care of cattle, sheep, goats and pigs, are attacked. However, it is chiefly spread through goats' milk and cows' milk. For this information, we are indebted to the British Commission for the extinction of Mediterranean fever.

While the usual way of becoming infected with this disease is by drinking goats' milk, the possibility of other methods of infection is quite evident, such as insect bites, or wounds infected after various modes of contacting infection. Contacting infection plays a minor role, because, as a rule, it is not directly transmitted from the skin of the well. Some of the first symptoms are pain and swelling of the joints, accompanied by profuse sweating. Or, it may resemble a bad cold, which seems to be hard to get rid of but if it is undulant fever, the trouble will persist for a long time.

Fortunately the germ is easily destroyed by pasteurizing and great heat. Those who are in direct contact with diseased animals can usually protect themselves by sterilizing their implements and protecting their hands by wearing gloves. Where there is the least evidence of an epidemic of this kind, I must impress upon my readers the utmost importance of pasteurizing the milk. Where the milk has been pasteurized no ill effect has been observed. General sanitary measures should be followed, the same as for a case of typhoid fever. Those just recovering from this disease should not be released until the germ is destroyed from the urine. Great care should be taken regarding flies, mosquitoes, and the laying of dust. The promotion of general cleanliness should be the slogan in handling these cases.

The List of Old Subscribers Continues to Grow

Mrs. Mary A. Mader, of Lamoni, Iowa, has taken the Herald the longest of any who have yet reported—sixty-five years. "My subscription to the Herald started in 1868," she writes, "since which time it has come to me continuously. I have greatly appreciated its good and helpful contents, and still anticipate its welcome arrival each week."

"We have taken the Herald for fifty years, as we came to this county fifty years ago last March, and went to housekeeping in July," reports Mrs. J. G. Cole, of Peoria, Illinois. "I have taken the Herald ever since." They also took Autumn Leaves and Ensign, and sent a copy of the Herald to Mrs. Cole's father in Birmingham, England, for a number of years.

W. A. Helms, of Bell City, Louisiana, has taken the Herald for thirty-two years.

"The longer I read the Herald, the dearer it becomes," says Mrs. Daniel P. Wade, of Port Huron, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Wade have taken the official church paper for over thirty-six years in their own home, and Mrs. Wade's father was a subscriber before she was baptized forty-five years ago. Her father still takes the paper.

J. F. Gunsolley, a resident of Independence, Missouri, since 1904, was baptized in 1884, when he was twenty years old. He has read the Herald since about 1880, and has been a subscriber more than half that period.

Mrs. D. E. Dunshee, of Everett, Ohio, has been a Herald subscriber thirty-seven years. She never throws away or destroys her paper, but gives it to some one who will read it.

Mrs. Saleda D. Shippy, of Lamoni, Iowa, signed up to take the Herald fifty-nine years last January during which time they have taken the paper continuously. She and her husband observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary last May. They moved from Michigan to Lamoni in 1888.

"It is one of my most valued friends. It never fails to bring messages of truth and comfort," writes Mrs. M. A. Cooper, of the Herald. Mrs. Cooper lives at 815 South High Street, Denver, Colorado. She became a member of the Herald "family" in 1878, and has been a subscriber ever since.

Brother A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, is also a veteran Herald subscriber. He was baptized into the church in September, 1880, and contracted to teach his first and only school beginning October 3, 1880. When he received his first pay early in November, in fulfillment of a pledge, he bought every book and tract published by the Herald Office, including the Inspired Version of the New Testament, book tracts, and The True Latter Day Saints' Herald. "In those early days," he says, "J. F. Anthony, M. T. Short, V. D. Baggerly, B. V. Springer, E. C. Brand, T. W. Smith, and Marietta Walker were probably the most voluminous writers, while Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair did most of the editorial work."

E. F. and Eldora C. Shupe, of Littleton, Colorado, have taken the Herald since shortly after their marriage, June 28, 1877. Brother and Sister Shupe moved to Colorado in 1888, and the first thing Brother Shupe did was to write to the Herald Office for the addresses of Saints living in Denver. In this way he located the faithful few and commenced to hold meetings in the homes. From this small beginning has developed Denver Branch of about four hundred members. Though Brother and Sister Shupe are now of advanced age, they still make the trip to Denver church once on Sunday in their 1922-model Ford.

"I distinctly remember reading the Herald when it was edited by Isaac Sheen," writes Brother Shupe. "I was a boy at home and a member of the String Prairie Branch. I was baptized December 4, 1863."

"We wouldn't be without the church paper," declare Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Sheppard, of Joplin, Missouri. They have been Herald subscribers since 1903 except for one or two years when they took the Ensign and Autumn Leaves.

Prayer and Testimony

The Testimony of Job

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.—Job 19: 25-27.

Rejoices in Gospel Blessings

By Mrs. Daniel P. Wade

When I was married thirty-six years ago, my husband did not belong to the church. But since that time I have seen him, nine children, two daughters-in-law, one son-in-law, and three grandchildren baptized.

There are five generations of us in the church, my parents and grandparents, myself and my children and grandchildren. We have one son who is an elder and three sons are deacons.

And so we rejoice in the gospel which we know is of God. I have received many great blessings from him. One of the most outstanding of these was a divine administration and healing one night in February of 1925.

The longer I read the Herald the dearer it becomes to me, for it contains much food and strength for the soul. The Herald and the three standard books of the church are about all I read. We have taken the official church paper thirty-six years in our home, and my father took it before I was baptized forty-five years ago.

Our prayer and testimony meetings here at Port Huron bring us much joy and comfort. Also we enjoy our pastor's talks and sermons; surely he is inspired of God.

This Church Is True

By Ruth Jennings

I know that this is the true church of God, and that if we live our religion, we shall receive the gifts and blessings which Christ told his disciples would follow those who believed.

I have belonged to the church nearly eight years, and I wish for the Saints to pray for me that I may ever be faithful.

Would Be an Example

By Mrs. Lillie Guyer Sowell

For two years I have been unable, on account of my health, to attend church regularly, but at home I study and pray and enjoy the services from the Stone Church studio when I can get them.

I enjoy the testimonies in the Herald, and hope more of the members will write. When I am at church I cannot hear the prayers and testimonies because of defective hearing.

I want to be faithful so that my daily life will be an example to those around me, and in this I feel that I need the Lord's help for my burdens are heavy.

Twice the latter part of June I gathered some of my neighbors together for prayer at the home of a shut-in. Certainly the Spirit was with us there.

Many nights I lie awake and pray for those who are sick and suffering and for wisdom. And I want to say to those who may be discouraged: Don't give up. Now is the time to keep busy. Stand fast, watch, and pray.

Please pray for me and my family and also for my mother, Mrs. Guyer, of Cameron, Missouri.

Finds Gospel Completely Soul-satisfying

By John J. Phare

While I was a member and later a trustee of a Methodist Church at Independence, Missouri, I attended the organization meeting of the Zion's Ensign Publishing Company, I think it was in 1891, and immediately I became one of the steady readers of the paper. I read it throughout its career and still revel in the spirituality of its successor, the Herald.

In 1901, I was baptized a member of First Kansas City Branch by Elder David Winn. After twenty years as a church school youngster, I served for thirty years in the Methodist church and school work; but I found the restored gospel more completely soul-satisfying. And while on the downhill side of life (I am eighty-three years old) I still vigorously support the gratifying and saving doctrines of the latter-day gospel and rejoice therein.

I am at present isolated from my own church services, but am active in other congregations, often injecting Latter Day Saint doctrinal points in church school Bible studies. In a short time we are hoping to return to Berea, Ohio, and then can again have more frequent association with Saints.

Hopes to See Missionaries Return to Fields

By J. F. Mintun

My desire to tell the gospel story has not abated because of my superannuation, and so far as there is opportunity I enjoy preaching the word and of late years have enjoyed fully as much of the Spirit of God in my ministry, if not more, than when I was an active missionary. I enjoy the thought of having had the privilege of laboring with God for so many years, and hope to enjoy many more years in ministering the word in a more local way.

My continual prayer is that my brothers who are being deprived of the missionary privilege may soon return to the work of their calling with greater power in the delivery of the word. I am inclined to believe that when the church has entered into a more humble attitude as a church, with the conviction that we will not only pay the debts now incurred, but also stay out of debt, and use the means coming into the hands of individuals as well as the storehouse of the Lord in a more economic way, we shall see many missionaries returned to their responsibilities in the field. This is my faith and my desire.

By what new doctrines or practices do the Saints justify the existence of their church?

If by the term new the questioner means that which had never before existed, the church does not base its claim for recognition on such grounds. On the contrary, it claims that important teachings and practices of the ancient church instituted by Jesus had been discarded and forgotten, and that new teachings and practices not in harmony with Jesus had been added by some of the denominations claiming to be his church. The Latter Day Saint movement restored the teaching and practice which had been discontinued, hence claim a restoration of primitive Christianity. Some of the things restored seemed new to other sects which had long ago forgotten their former existence.

Only in this sense were the teachings of the Saints new, but in restoring them it became necessary for God to give revelations to the church which made clear what things had been lost and what had been the ancient practice and belief on points not quite clearly understood. These revelations were of course new, and to some extent they revealed new concepts of truths previously taught more or less briefly or vaguely in the Scriptures.

To illustrate: the doctrine that God reveals himself to his people in all ages is taught in the Bible, but some did not understand its import. This was made plain to the church of the Saints and is an important part of their faith. Priesthood by divine call through revelation, the offices of the prophet, apostle, seventy, and other officials, were also unfolded more clearly and are essential to the work of the church. The existence of spiritual gifts and divine manifestations in the church were emphasized as necessary to the continuance of the divine plan. Baptism and other ordinances were explained, and it was shown that these could be performed acceptably to God only by a priesthood called by revelation as in ancient times.

The restoration of the ancient faith is therefore the chief justification for existence of the church, and not the claim to a new religion. The religion of Christ will not be improved upon, but to restore it in its original purity was made necessary after it had been flagrantly and continuously disregarded by those who claimed to be its teachers and representatives. This restoration involves many other items that would require more space than is available here.

Why does your church rest upon the basis of teachings concerning the tribe of Joseph?

Our teachings concerning the tribe of Joseph do not form the basis of our church, but are incidental, though considered of much interest and importance. We have pointed out the fact that prophecy clearly indicates great things concerning that tribe, the fulfillment of which involves many things affecting our own age or era. But it can hardly be said that these teachings originated with us, for they are to be found in various scriptural texts. As they in part concern our times, it is but natural that we should refer to them and point out their significance.

An instance somewhat parallel, at least in one respect, is the teachings of the New Testament writers calling attention to the lineage of Jesus, and the prophecies concerning the matter. To note the fulfillment of prophecy in regard to the seed of David was incidental to the great mission of Jesus, for many others were also of the same lineage. Yet it took on increased meaning in the light of his teachings. This is similarly true in the case of the tribe of Joseph.

Did Emma Smith ever see the Book of Mormon plates?

It is my understanding that she did not. On this point the Church History says:

> Q.—I should suppose that you would have uncovered the plates and examined them.
> A.—I did not attempt to handle the plates, other than I have told you, nor uncover them to look at them.—Volume 3, page 357.

She had previously explained that she had felt of them as they lay wrapped in a cloth on the table, and noted their metallic rustle when moved.

3. The gospel of Jesus Christ is for all nations. "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matthew 28: 18-20.) "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." (1 Corinthians 12: 13.) "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10: 34.)

4. The gospel of Jesus Christ is for all the world. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.) "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 14.) "And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." (Revelation 5: 9.)

5. Punishment for violating the requirements of the gospel of Jesus Christ, is to be administered in the future life. God and Jesus Christ will be the judge. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." (Revelation 21: 8.) "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thessalonians 1: 7-9.)

6. Eternal life is promised through the gospel of Jesus Christ. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.) "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Romans 6: 23.) "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thessalonians 4: 17.)

WAS THE DECALOGUE UNCHANGEABLE?

Adventists refer to Matthew 5: 18: "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." There they tell us that the law (the Decalogue) is more lasting than heaven and earth; because heaven and earth will pass away, but the law, never. But they should not overlook the phrase, "till all be fulfilled." Hear Paul: "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." (Romans 10: 4.) "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." (Galatians 3: 19.) The law thus being fulfilled, ended and ceased to be operative under the gospel. But the Adventists quote the next verse, "Whosoever therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 5: 19) and claim that this text refers to the Decalogue.

If the above applies to the Ten Commandments at all, the context plainly shows that the application would come under the clause, "till all be fulfilled." The next verse says: "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 5: 20.) Now the Pharisees and Scribes were Jews, and zealous of the law, for in it their righteousness consisted. Paul speaks of the zeal with which they observed the law, as follows: "Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God." (Romans 2: 17.) Paul was a Jew, also a Pharisee, and zealous of the law before his conversion to Christ. (See Acts 22: 3.) Still he was not saved in the kingdom of God, for a saving righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, or in other words, the Decalogue.

Let us look at these texts from another viewpoint. Jesus says: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." (Luke 16: 16.) Peter says: "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." (1 Peter 1: 24, 25.) The Decalogue was not given for over twenty-five hundred years after creation. (See Deuteronomy 5: 2, 3.) During that period lived Enoch, who was translated. (See Genesis 5: 24; Hebrews 11: 5.) There was Abraham who was called the friend of God, and his descendants, Isaac and Jacob, whom Jesus says are in the kingdom of God, and therefore saved. (See Matthew 8: 11.) All these were saved hundreds of years before the law was given, they being the fathers of Israel, and the positive statement already referred to that the Ten Commandments were not made with them. (See Deuteronomy 5: 3.)

Since there is none other name under heaven given among men by whom men can be saved but Jesus (Acts 4: 12), and the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth (Romans 1: 16), these men being saved must have been saved through Jesus Christ by the gospel. Israel transgressed, and lacked the necessary faith; so to them the law was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come. (Galatians 3: 19.) Thus Israel was kept largely separate from other nations, so there might be a witness to the truth of the prophetic promise given to Abraham that Christ would come through his seed. When Christ came and did his work and reestablished the gospel covenant among men the law that was given to the nation of Israel because of their transgression, therefore was ready to vanish away. (See Hebrews 8: 13.)

In speaking of Jesus Christ, Isaiah says: "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people." (Isaiah 55: 4.) Since Jesus Christ is God's witness, leader and commander of the people, it is quite reasonable to conclude that the commandments he refers to are those he gave at that time. He says, "Whosoever shall break one of the least of these commandments," speaking in the present tense. He refers to that which was said to them of old time, and then plainly showing that the old commandment was faulty, he tells them of a higher law. Listen while we consider Matthew 5: 21, 22, "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill [the sixth commandment], But I say unto you that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment."

In verses 23-26, Jesus gives us some special commandments not even referred to in the Decalogue. In verse 27, he says: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: [seventh commandment], but I say unto you that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Verse 28.) "It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement." [Verse 31, not in the Decalogue, quoted from Deuteronomy 24: 1.] But Jesus says, "Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery, and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery." (Verse 32.) "Again ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not foreswear thyself, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths." (Verses 33, from Numbers 30: 2.) But Jesus says, "Swear not at all." . . . (Verse 34.) "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," (Matthew 5: 38. From Exodus 21: 24.) But Jesus says, "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." (Verse 39.) "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy," (Verse 43. From Leviticus 19: 18.) But Jesus says, " But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Verse 44.) The sixth and seventh chapters contain instructions and commandments regarding alms, prayer, fasting, treasurers, wealth, judging others, etc., and at the close we read, "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." (Matthew 7: 28, 29.)

We have noted seven quotations that Jesus made from the fifth of Matthew from the old law and out of the seven only two were from the Decalogue. Now if he meant that whosoever should break one of the least of these commandments and teach men so, should be least in the kingdom of heaven; and that whosoever should do and teach them should be great in the kingdom of heaven, he certainly meant the ones he quoted, and in some of them he commanded exactly the opposite of what the original commandment said, viz.: "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil. Whosoever shall put away his wife let him give her a writing of divorcement. But I say unto you that whosoever putteth away his wife save for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery. All these things were allowable under the Decalogue. If the Decalogue had not covered them, Moses would not have given them to the nation of Israel for a national law. In all the seven references whether from the Decalogue or other parts of the law, his teachings and commandments bring out the imperfection of the old law: and in contrast show the perfection of the higher law that will make people wise unto salvation. So from these view points the fourth proposition fails.

The Fifth Proposition

"That the change from the seventh to the first day of the week was made by the Pope of the Roman Catholic church."

It is rather amusing to witness the attempts made by Adventists to prove this proposition. They refer in all their works, to the edict of Constantine, made in 321 A. D. as the first attempt to enforce Sunday observance by civil law. I quote from Bible Readings for the Home Circle, 1914 edition, published by The Pacific Publishing Association, and shall refer to it in the future as Bible Readings. Constantine's edict is given as follows: "Let all the judges and towns people, and the occupation of all trades rest on the venerable day of the sun; but let those who are situated in the country, freely and at full liberty, attend to the business of agriculture; because it often happens that no other day is so fit for sowing corn and planting vines; lest the critical moment being let slip, men should lose the commodities granted by heaven."

In a list of Catholic popes I have before me, taken from Catholic Belief, by the Very Reverend Joseph Faa. Di Bruno, D. D. I note the Catholic popes for the fourth century, as follows: 31st Pope, Saint Marcellus I, Martyr, 304 A. D.; 32nd Pope, Saint Eusebius, Calabria, 309 A. D.; 33d Pope, Saint Melchiades, Africa, 311 A. D.; 34th Pope, Saint Sylvester I, Rome, 314 A. D.; 35th Pope, Saint Marcus, Rome, 337 A. D.; 36th Pope, Saint Julius I, Rome, 341 A. D.; 37th Pope, Saint Liberius, Rome, 352 A. D.; 38th Pope, Saint Felix II, Rome, 355 A. D.; 39th Pope, Saint Damascus I, Spain, 366 A. D.; 40th Pope, Saint Siricius, Rome, 384 A. D.; 41st Pope, Saint Anastastius I, Rome, 399 A. D.— Catholic Belief, pages 176, 177.

The above shows that Constantine was not a pope, so we have eliminated him as the pope that changed the Sabbath. And if it should be urged that Constantine made the law to please the Pope, or the authorities of the church: it would prove that the church was already keeping the first day and asking Constantine to protect them in it. But as his edict in no sense harmonizes with the keeping of the Bible Sabbath there is little reason to believe that this was true.

The council of Laodicea is referred to in all Adventist books I have examined as, either the place where the change was made; or a very important step in the change. Date for said council given by Adventists in 364 A. D. Now Mrs. White positively asserts Early Writings, page 33 and 65, that the Pope changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. She claims to have been shown this by spiritual direction. Read, "I saw that God had not changed the Sabbath, for he never changes. But the pope had changed it from the seventh to the first day of the week; for he was to change times and laws." (Early Writings, page 33.)

If the pope changed the Sabbath, no one else did; and there should be definite proof as to what pope did as well as the time and place. Measures of discipline passed by different councils over a period of several hundred years will not do. Now as to the Council of Laodicea, Cannon No. 29, quoted from Bible Readings, page 461, "Christians shall not be idle on Saturday (Sabbath) but shall work on that day; but the Lord's day they shall especially honor." If the pope changed the Sabbath at the council of Laodicea, he did not do it elsewhere. So we will examine whether this council's action was directed or controlled by the pope or not. That Adventists so claim is shown by the following: "We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic church, in the council of Laodicea (A. D. 366) transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday." (Bible Readings, page 441. Quoted from The Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine, by Reverend Peter Giermann.) The above is the best authority I have found in Adventist works in support of the above action being taken at the council of Laodicea, and the very best Catholic authorities contradict the above statement. We have consulted several priests of the Catholic church including Bishop O'Reily of the Oregon Diocese, and their testimony was unanimous that the change was made in the days of the apostles. To this the Catholic Encyclopedia agrees. ". . . The Gentile converts held their religious meetings on Sunday (Acts 20: 1; 1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2), and with the disappearance of the Jewish Christian churches this day was exclusively observed as the Lord's day." (Catholic Encyclopedia, volume XIII, page 289.) I now quote from the latest edition of The Question Box, by the Reverend Bertrand L. Conway, which book is recognized by Catholics as setting forth their official belief authoratively. (Sunday observance) question: "Why and when was the Sabbath changed from Saturday to Sunday? Who gave the Pope the right to change the Sabbath? (Daniel 25.)

Answer. The third commandment of the old law: "Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day," (Exodus 20: 8) was partly moral, the natural law obliging all men to devote some time exclusively to the worship of God, and partly ceremonial in as much as it determined the time and the details of its observance. It is true that the church could not abrogate the natural law, but the apostles, as the divine infallible teachers of Christ's church, could and did change the time, the motive and the details of the Sunday observance. They substituted the first day of the week, Sunday, for the seventh, Saturday; they made it commemorate the resurrection of Christ instead of the creation of the world (Exodus 20: 11); they mitigated in great measure the severity of the Jewish law, abolishing, for example, the death penalty (Exodus 31: 15), and certain prohibitions. (Exodus 35: 3.)

Missionary Campaign at Auditorium

Hundreds of Tourist Guests Learn of Church When They Visit the Building

A missionary campaign is in progress from day to day for our church at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

For eight weeks, I have assisted Elder J. W. A. Bailey in conducting visitors through the Auditorium. Elder S. S. Smith devotes two days a week. For many months Brother Clarence Resch has taken charge of the Sunday visitors, selecting his own assistants and young Brother Orral E. Andes directs visiting every evening. Several other men have faithfully aided in this duty one or more days a week when additional help was needed. On some days visitors begin to come before eight o'clock in the morning.

Two thousand tourists and others have registered in two months, and hundreds did not record their names. These visitors represent nearly every State in the Union and some are from Canada, other countries and the islands of the sea. Many different beliefs are also represented, Protestants, Catholics, non-Christians, theosophists, and several hundred Utah Church people who showed the deepest interest in the Auditorium and also in our distinctive claims and positions on church polity, priesthood rites, doctrine, and lines of difference. (See Doctrine and Covenants 119: 4 and 127: 6.) A number of college professors and ministers of other denominations showed appreciation of the building and of the position of the church on faith and its purity of teachings.

Elder Bailey with his pleasing approach, his fund of information and affirmative address, wins the attention of a variety of listeners.

Seats are provided for groups, where, after they have been taken through the building and if they have the time and disposition, they may rest and listen to a lecture on our church. Some of the Utah people have remained for nearly two hours.

Our supply of Herald Publishing House church books, tracts, etc., offered for sale, interests many. Several dollars worth are sold every week; and many small donations from friends are put in the offering bank. A number of carefully selected tracts are given away daily.

Those who register and show interest in our church are taken note of on the records and follow-up letters will be mailed them; also their names will be sent to branch, district or stake presidents for consideration. Observing and experienced missionaries have said that the efforts at the Auditorium this summer are doing a more extended gospel work than ten traveling preachers, and what is true of the Auditorium is also true in many respects at Kirtland and Nauvoo, especially during the tourist season while the Century of Progress is in Chicago.

The foyer of the Auditorium has been made more attractive of late. Pictures of the Savior; of the three latter-day prophets (from 1830 to the present); of Emma Hale Smith, wife of Joseph Smith the seer; Kirtland and Nauvoo Temples; the Auditorium; a large photograph of the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and Centennial Conference Choir are now to be seen there. All these give us talking points in explanation of the great Restoration movement.

The present year is increasing in good prospects and possibilities for the church. Forward and upward should be our motto.

Changes in Faculty Personnel of Graceland College

Gilbert Returns After Year's Leave of Absence—Miss Hays New Librarian —Mrs. Warren Dean of Women

Prospects for attendance at Graceland College next year are promising, inquiries are coming in fast the last few weeks and reservations are equal or ahead of recent years.

Registration opens September 8, the first three days being freshman days. Other students will register Monday, September 11, and class work begins September 12. The first faculty meeting is scheduled for September 7.

A number of changes will be noted in the faculty personnel. A. R. Gilbert, who is finishing this month his work for a doctor's degree at the Columbia University, is expected to return the last week in August after a year's leave of absence, to resume his position as director of student personnel and director of athletics. He will also teach education.

Evan Walden, who directed the athletic department last year will continue in his position as superintendent of buildings and grounds on a full-time schedule.

Miss Gladys Marie Hays will take over the work of librarian, to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Mrs. Lyda Williams, who has served the college efficiently in this department for the last fourteen years. Miss Hays is a graduate of Grinnell College, majoring in history and also took a course in the library school of the University of Wisconsin. She had several years teaching experience before taking up library work and during the past year has been assistant librarian at Grinnell. Miss Hays, beside her library work, will teach one course in European history.

Mrs. Mae Clark Warren, director of the home economics department, will also serve the college as dean of women, taking the place of Miss Tess Morgan, who has held this position for several years. The English classes taught by Miss Morgan will be taken over by Miss Charlotte Condit and Miss Florence Thompson.

The combined nurses' training course which was launched last year in conjunction with the Independence Sanitarium, proved to be very popular, and will have a nice enrollment again this year. The college sent around a dozen students to the Sanitarium this summer to take up the practical part of the work after having spent a year in preparatory study at Graceland.—Lamoni Chronicle.

New Castle, Pennsylvania

Workers Are Pressing Forward

Under the leadership of Pastor W. G. McCune and his assistant, Elder Lamont Ryhal, the Saints of New Castle are pressing forward.

The branch held its annual Sunday school picnic, July 4, and a good time was enjoyed.

During the month of June three were baptized at New Castle, and one at Darlington, Pennsylvania.

The president of Pittsburgh District visited New Castle, July 16, and assisted with the confirmations, besides preaching two fine sermons.

Elders McCune and Ryhal have been holding meetings in other cities with good results and attendance, besides doing their local work at New Castle.

Ohio Celebrates Centennial of Laying of Kirtland Temple Cornerstone

President F. M. Smith Speaks to Large Congregation—The Press Gives Generous Attention to Event

"Sunday, July 23, 1833, was probably the most important day in the entire history of the village of Kirtland. It was on that day that the cornerstone of Kirtland Temple was laid by Joseph Smith—the temple which today is known throughout the United States and which has attracted thousands of visitors to this little village each year." So begins the press story of the Lake County News-Herald, which announces the celebration by the Saints of the centennial of the laying of the temple cornerstone.

President Frederick M. Smith, the speaker at this celebration, talked to a congregation of seven hundred people, urging them to look to the future and the realization of the ideals of the founders of the church.

Says a Cleveland paper: "Doctor Smith, who is a grandson of Joseph Smith, founder of the church, also recalled the sacrifices of those whose efforts resulted in the establishment of the church.

"Members from northern Ohio, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, and Pennsylvania supplemented the Kirtland congregation of three hundred in the day's celebration.

"The program began at 7.45 a. m. under Reverend John L. Cooper, pastor of the temple. Doctor Smith preached at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. A prayer of reconsecration was offered by Reverend Frederick Pitt, of Orlando, Florida, a retired missionary whose services to the church took him to all parts of the world.

"A stereopticon lecture on the Book of Mormon by Elder James E. Bishop concluded the program. Choral music directed by Mrs. William E. Householder, of Kirtland, was a part of each service.

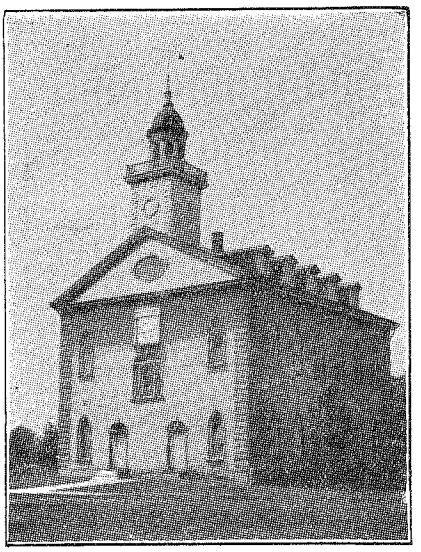
"An unexpected feature of the day was the attendance of two granddaughters of the mason who laid the cornerstone of the temple."

The Painesville, Ohio, Telegraph also carries a story of Kirtland's history from which we print:

"Around the quiet little village of Kirtland, cluster some of the most remarkable events of Ohio history, and in its presence the visitor still feels the spirit of a people who possessed the fullest measure of faith and whose temple stands yet today as a monument of their devotion.

"While Kirtland played a great part in the history of the Latter Day Saints, the opening scene was in another state and had taken place thirteen years earlier.

"In 1820, so the story goes, an angel had appeared to Joseph Smith, a young lad living at Manchester, New York, and it was made known to him that he was called to help in a work that the Lord designed to accomplish. He was told that the gospel, which had been perverted during the Dark Ages, was about to be restored to its original purity, and the priesthood, as held in Christ's church, would again be granted to men chosen by God as his ministers. He was also told that a record of the Indian progenitors, containing an account of their origin and a history of God's leadings with them, had been written centuries before, and had been hidden away in the earth, but soon would be revealed to him and power given him to translate it and publish it to the world as another witness for Christ.



Kirtland Temple, Kirtland, Ohio

"The church's history declares that in 1827 the plates containing that record were given to Joseph Smith, and eleven witnesses gave testimony of having seen and handled them. By 1830, the Book of Mormon was translated and published, and on April 6, of that year the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized.

"These people claimed that their doctrine was not new. They were Bible literalists and they believed that as God did anciently, so would he do for them.

"The clergy particularly were alarmed, and from the first they waged bitter opposition. But like the saints of old, these people clung tenaciously to their faith, and it spread. Family after family was converted, baptized and confirmed in the 'good old scriptural way,' and every new devotee became fired with a religious zeal that brooked no opposition nor hesitated at any sacrifice.

"Soon missionaries began to push out, and that same fall four men started for the West to preach to the Indians. On the way out, one of these men, remembering that a former Baptist brother, Sidney Rigdon, was preaching for a congregation in Ohio, determined to stop long enough to explain the new faith to him.

"The place at which they stopped was Kirtland, and thus this little Geauga county (at that time) village was drawn into the history. Sidney Rigdon, with Alexander Campbell, was a brilliant man and honest, and he gave ready ear to the new message. He was converted to the Book of Mormon and before the missionaries had gone on, they baptized one hundred and twenty-seven persons and established a branch at Kirtland which grew to one thousand members."

And then the paper goes on to tell how Kirtland became a mission base, of the Lord's command to build the temple, and of the sacrifice and labors of the Saints, and finally of the laying of the cornerstone July 23, 1833.

Here is its description of the building: "It is a massive structure of hewn native stone, and is plastered both without and within. The dimensions are 59 by 79 feet and the walls run 60 feet in height. The tower is 120 feet above the ground. The two main halls are 45 and 55 feet in the inner court and the building has two vestries in front and five rooms in the attic which were devoted to literature and for the meeting place of various groups.

"There is a peculiarity in the arrangement of the inner court which makes it more than ordinarily impressive—so much so that a visitor is aware upon entering of a sense of sacred awe. Four pulpits stand one above another in the center of the building from north to south, both on the east and west ends, those on the west being for the officers and higher priesthood and those on the east for the Aaronic.

"Each of these pulpits is separated by curtains which are let down and drawn up at will. In front of each of these two rows of pulpits is a sacrament table for the administration of that sacred ordinance. In addition to the pulpit curtains there are others intersecting at right angles dividing the main ground floor into four equal sections, giving each section one half of one set of pulpits.

"The second floor is similar in arrangement to the main auditorium, and the entire building is planned not alone for convenience, but also for the creation of a devotional atmosphere. The interior woodwork is curiously and beautifully carved, and the decorations have dignity and grace.

"Measured in terms of modern achievement, the Kirtland Temple is not imposing in size nor unusual in beauty. But measured in terms of sacrifice and viewed from the point of origin, it is unmatched in American architecture."

In every field of human activity belief comes first and proof comes second. —Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Ministerial Conference and Reunion of Southern New England District

Spiritual Services Encourage Saints at Onset

The reunion organized Saturday evening, July 22, choosing a committee to have charge consisting of Apostle Paul M. Hanson associated with the members of the district presidency, D. F. Joy and Raymond Bradshaw, and E. F. Robertson and J. A. Gunsolley. The district president, Bishop E. L. Traver, was not able to attend this year because of a broken hip resulting from a fall. F. L. Dobbins, secretary of the district, was chosen secretary, and other officers usual to such a gathering were provided for.

The annual ministerial conference of the district in charge of Apostle Hanson and district officers occupied Saturday evening and Sunday, July 22 and 23. This conference is regularly held on the first Saturday and Sunday in July, but was deferred this year on account of the impossibility of Brother Traver to attend because of his accident, and for the further reason that Brother Hanson could not be present at that time. Only routine business was transacted at the conference such as hearing reports, etc. Brother Hanson addressed the priesthood in the afternoon and Sister Lucie Sears addressed the women, and two who had been baptized at the noon intermission were confirmed. There was prayer meeting at eight-thirty, church school at nine-forty-five, preaching at eleven by Apostle Hanson, and at seven-thirty by E. F. Robertson.

The reunion proper opened Monday morning, the twenty-fourth, and the daily program for weekdays was as follows: nine-forty-five, Adult prayer meeting in charge of Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley; young people's meetings in charge of E. F. Robertson, time changed to nine after first week; junior church in charge of Sister J. A. Gunsolley; primary children in charge of Sisters Miriam Dobbins and Ethel Cowgill; and kindergarten in charge of Sister Florence Gordon. At ten-thirty institute class was in charge of P. M. Hanson, the subject, "The Church in Belief and Practice"; at eleven-fifteen institute class in charge of J. A. Gunsolley, subject the first week, "The Six Milestones of Life," and second week, "The What and Why of Religious Education." These classes were accredited by the Department of Religious Education, and those who attended all sessions were able to earn twenty-four credits toward a certificate. The interest and attendance were very good, forty-two earning credits and quite a number attending who did not enroll for credit.

The following occupied the preaching hours: J. A. Gunsolley, district missionary; W. A. Sinclair, of Boston; E. F. Robertson, president of the Western Maine District; J. L. Prentice, pastor of Toronto, Ontario, Branch; Bishop M. C. Fisher, of Somerville.

Organized athletics characterized the afternoons; Tennis, volley ball, playground ball, pitching horseshoes, swimming and boating. Each sport had its share of attention from young people, adults, and children. Games were also played by the young people and children in the evenings after services. The following entertainment activities deserve special mention: The annual moonlight sail was enjoyed by about fifty people chaperoned by Brother and Sister Hanson. They left the Onset dock at eight o'clock cruising about Buzzards Bay, meeting the Boston-Fall River boat at the Cape Cod canal, and returning at ten o'clock.

Saturday evening, July 29, members of the church school of Providence delighted a large audience with a drama from the Book of Mormon in three acts. The subject was the departure of Lehi and family from Jerusalem and the securing of the plates of Laban containing their genealogy. It was a fine production and impressed the audience deeply.

At the close of the service, August 1, the young people entertained the camp in the auditorium with an impromptu program of literary and musical numbers and several comical stunts.

At two-thirty Sunday, August 6, the choir and orchestra of Attleboro Branch, directed by Sister Helen Coombs, district director of music, gave a half-hour program which was of a high order.

The evening of August 5, was given over to Boston young people for a program of entertainment of a semi-minstrel character with literary and musical numbers. This good clean entertainment was greatly enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience.

Prior to this program the stewards in charge of the camp grounds held a round table session inviting questions and suggestions concerning the conduct and management of the grounds.

This was followed by a business meeting at which reports of the various activities were read. A motion prevailed by almost unanimous vote favoring a reunion of two weeks' duration for next year, though the district presidency recommended shortening the time. The district presidency was authorized to fix the time in consultation with the missionary in charge.

Ten were baptized during the sessions, about half of them being adults and the rest children.

The infant son of Sanford and Agnes Fisher was blessed by his grandfather, M. C. and his great uncle, E. H. Fisher, and named Scott Adams. A daughter of Brother and Sister Ernest Crowell was blessed by J. A. Gunsolley and E. F. Robertson, and named Elizabeth Blanche.

A sale of aprons, bedspreads, other useful articles and confections was held by the women, July 29, the proceeds from the sale to go to the benefit of the church.

Meetings of the priesthood were held July 30 and August 6, and were addressed by Brother Hanson. Elder F. W. Blanchard was chosen counselor to the president of the Eastern Quorum of Elders and was ordained at the afternoon service in connection with the confirmations of those who had been baptized during the noon hour, seven in number.

At the close of the sacrament meeting the last day of the reunion a simple and beautiful wedding occurred when Albert, youngest son of Bishop and Florence Fisher, was united with Sister Dorothy Mesle, daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Mesle, of Sherrill, New York, the ceremony being performed by the father of the bridegroom. This came as a complete surprise to nearly everyone in the large audience, all of whom wish them a happy and prosperous life.

Reunion meetings were of a high order of spirituality. Earnestness, humility and a desire for unity in the work of the Lord seemed uppermost. The gift of prophecy gave comfort, courage and admonition to the assembly in general, and to certain ones in particular.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Pool and Fifth Streets, Portsmouth, Ohio

Attendance at the church school, June 9, was not so good as usual, a number attending a two-day meeting at Highland County Branch. They report a fine spirit.

James Sheffin, teacher, occupied the pulpit of this branch the evening of June 9.

A short time ago Elder Jacob Halb, of Middletown, Ohio, spent two weeks in this branch, giving fine instruction each evening and strengthening and encouraging the Saints.

Elder Francis May, of Dayton, Ohio, was the speaker at Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch, July 23, his theme being, "Scales From Our Eyes." The following evening his theme was, "I Would See Jesus," and the next night, "The House We Live In." He remained here for nearly two weeks, giving fine instruction.

A few of the members met at Pond Creek, August 4, where Elder May baptized two into the kingdom, Wilma Jane Bealor, daughter of Brother and Sister Donald Bealor, and Ollie Chriswell, wife of Brother Edward Chriswell. He also blessed Virginia, daughter of Sister Grace Shump.

Elder O. A. Rexroad was in charge of the sacrament service, August 6, and the worshipers were blessed with the Spirit. A few of the Saints took the emblems to a sick sister, and while meeting there with her, Brother Charles Monroe was called to the office of priest.

Though poor in temporal things, the

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Saints of this congregation wish to help redeem Zion. They feel much encouraged by helps and events of recent date.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The Bible study class of Elder and Sister John A. Gardner has been active during the summer months. They meet once each week on the home lawns, of the members where supper is served, and a study period follows.

Sunday morning worship services during the month of August are in charge of the I. X. L. Class. A men's trio from the Linwood Boulevard Methodist church was enjoyed August 13. The trio was composed of Ernest Hyde, Fred Schurer, and Carl Smithy. Miss Thelma Lancaster was the accompanist.

The Central Church Choir has been working hard during the summer on the Harvest Home Festival Chorus. Their regular Sunday evening broadcast over station KMBC was given August 13, the soloists being Elizabeth Tanner Hitchcock and Larry Siegel. Sixty-four members were present to enjoy a picnic and swim, August 11, after which supper was served.

The Women's Department met in a special session Wednesday, August 16, to make final plans for their coming financial year. The weekly envelope plan was decided upon and their first meeting will be held September 20.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Coffeen, of New York City were recent visitors in Elder John A. Gardner's class.

Kennett, Missouri

Young People Organize Z. O. G.'s

Elders J. Charles May and W. E. Haden have just closed a successful series of tent meetings at Kennett, Missouri. In spite of other meetings in town, the attendance reached four hundred several nights.

This was Elder May's first visit to Kennett, and the Saints there hope to see him again soon. Music for the tent meetings was furnished by the young people. Fred Davis and Earl Baker, both of Thayer, Missouri, were especially helpful with their saxophone and violin. The young people feel greatly benefited as a result of these meetings.

The young people of Kennett have recently organized a club, the "Z. O. G.'s" The following officers were elected: president, Leon Wiggins; vice president, Hugh Darsey Jones; treasurer-secretary, Veva Johnson; business manager, Gerald Gabriel. The leader of this organization, E. C. Larche, was given a surprise birthday party, July 24, by the members of the club. Brother May was a special guest, and furnished the biggest part of the entertainment.

The Z. O. G. members were entertained, July 30, with a lemon party. A penny was paid for each lemon purchased, also a penny for each seed found in the lemon. The money was presented to Brother Haden.

The young people were recently entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Larche, with a lunch. A splendid time was had by all.

August 12, Sister Canna Shelly entertained the young girls at her home. She gave them a splendid lecture from ten to eleven o'clock. At the same time the young men were entertained by Brother Larche.

Park of the Pines Reunion

Last Saturday and Sunday, August 12 and 13, I was at the Park of the Pines Reunion. This is the reunion of the Northern Michigan district, and it has grown in interest, and in goodly proportion.

The grounds, some sixteen acres in extent, are located on the upper end of Lake Charlevoix, one of Michigan's many beautiful sheets of water. The surroundings are beautiful and hold a fine promise for future development, and I must say the Saints of the district have done splendidly so far in improvements. As a camping ground the natural woods there make it fine. This has been added to by the erection of some plain but neat and substantial buildings for general purposes. A pavilion or tabernacle was the first building used for meeting purposes. It is capable of caring for a congregation of about five hundred persons, and it was filled to capacity at most of the meetings Saturday and Sunday. There have been added a young people's auditorium, seating about one hundred and fifty or two hundred, and a two-story building combining commissary and dormitory. The commissary can easily care for three hundred at mealtime, and more if necessary. A light plant and good well water add to the comforts.

The last reunion was not only marked by a good attendance, but by a fine spirit of unity and service. The workers toiled together with cheerfulness and without contention. The meetings were characterized by a deep religious spirit, and prayer, preaching, and business meetings were all well attended.

A large group of splendid young people were in attendance, and meetings especially for them were outstanding in excellence. The daily class work was well conducted and attended.

With such men as Dirk Schreuer, Allen Schreuer, William Hartnell, D. T. Williams, Hubert Case, Byron Doty, and others directing, supplemented by the work of such women as Sisters Dirk and Allan Schreuer, Louise Evans, Sister D. T. Williams, and with others apparently anxious to do all possible to help, why should the reunion not be a success? It was, and my guess is that every Saint in attendance went away home strengthened and encouraged.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Doctor John R. Green will begin a series of lectures on "The Word of Wisdom" to the women, beginning Monday, August 21, at two o'clock at the Stone Church. Every one is invited to attend.

Stone Church

A junior dramatic club has recently been organized, under the leadership of Mrs. Olive Moses. At present, thirty-five members compose this club. The purpose of the organization is to prepare numbers for the junior church held in the Stone Church basement at the eleven o'clock hour each Sunday.

Two-hour meetings are held every Friday afternoon, and an excellent response is being given by the boys and girls. The officers of the club are hopeful that it will prove to be a means of self-expression for the members. Committees have been appointed for costuming, program numbers, stage preparation, and other phases of dramatic production.

Pastor John F. Sheehy delivered the morning address to the Stone Church congregation on the subject of building the community of the future to fit our ideals. Music was furnished by the choir, under the direction of George Anway. The Midwesterners Male Quartet sang "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me."

Second Church

The eleven o'clock service for Sunday, August 20, was opened by an organ-piano prelude of sacred music. Music for the service was furnished by the choir. Brother A. K. Dillee was the speaker.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday, August 13, the choir of Walnut Park, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, and the orchestra, consisting of twenty-five pieces, directed by Orlando Nace, visited Central Church, in Kansas City and furnished the program for the evening service. In addition to the members of the orchestra and the choir, others of the Walnut Park congregation made the trip, making a delegation of more than one hundred. The orchestra played a thirty-minute concert and the choir sang two anthems during the course of the service.

Church school attendance is holding up well. Sunday morning, August 20, three hundred and sixty-five were in attendance at the Sabbath school, in spite of the rainy weather. Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service, and Almer Sheehy spoke to the junior department in the lower auditorium.

A tennis tournament is being held by the church school young people and has progressed to the semi-finals in most divisions.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Closson announce the birth of a daughter, August 14, whom they have named Janet Clarice. Brother Closson is assistant superintendent of the church school.

Liberty Street Church

Girl Scout Troop 14 meets every Wednesday at the church. At present there are seventeen members who have passed Tenderfoot tests and are now working on their Second Class rank. This troop was organized last April. Their Scout captain is Mrs. L. R. Snow.

The general committee consists of Mrs. Fred Friend, Mrs. Faye McConnell, Mrs. Raymond Schutt, and Mrs. Bernard Hurshman. At least two members of this committee accompany the girls on hikes and outings to assist in emergencies.

The regular monthly inter-group prayer service, in charge of Pastor John R. Lentell, was well attended last Wednesday night at the church.

Those attending the church school Sunday morning were entertained by Miss Mary Arteburn and Mrs. Lois Bridges who sang "Whispering Hope." Other music was furnished by the Liberty Street Church choir. The speaker was Bishop J. A. Koehler.

A small group of young people met Sunday night at the home of Inez Davis to sing songs and to listen to the Seth Parker radio program.

Enoch Hill Church

Norma Jean, the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Leonard Crowl passed away Tuesday, August 15. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the funeral service.

In spite of the bad weather Wednesday night, August 16, there was a fair attendance and a goodly spirit at the prayer service.

Thursday night several young people from Blue Springs spent the evening with the Enoch Hill young people, playing volley ball on the church lawn after choir practice.

Sunday, August 20, at the church school, Sister Nellie Kramer conducted a question review from the "three books."

Brother J. W. Davis was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service.

Spring Branch Church

Members of the Spring Branch congregation enjoyed their annual picnic supper at the Campus, August 15. Special guests were the pastors of Zion and their families.

The following Wednesday, August 16, all of the groups met at the church for the monthly union prayer service. President Elbert A. Smith, Pastor John F. Sheehy, D. S. McNamara, and Pastor Eastwood were in the stand.

Brother C. Ed. Miller was the speaker during the morning service at the church, August 20.

Apostle J. F. Curtis at Southern Saskatchewan Reunion

Thirteen Are Baptized—Others Deeply Interested

Apostle J. F. Curtis attended the reunion of Southern Saskatchewan District, held at Weyburn Plains on the farm of Brother William Neill, July 19 to 23. Here is what he says of it:

"The reunion was well attended, and two hundred and thirty people registered. We estimated that over fifty more had been in attendance part of the time.

"On Saturday we baptized thirteen people. Elder O. W. Okerlind baptized six and I baptized seven. One young man who was a priest was ordained an elder. His name is Evans Fisher and he is an excellent worker. His brother, Alvin, who was a teacher, was ordained a priest, and another young man from western Saskatchewan was ordained a priest.

"Some thirty-three Saints and friends came to the reunion from Winnipeg, Manitoba, and five of this number were baptized. They came in a large truck three hundred miles. Four others came from Winnipeg by train. A truckload of twenty-eight people came from Regina, eighty-six miles away. Others came by auto, some five hundred miles to the gathering.

"A part of five different families came to the reunion at Weyburn to investigate our work, and returned home well pleased with it.

"The cooperation of members of Weyburn Branch made possible the reunion. After a full week and a busy Sunday I arose at 4.20 a. m., and came by car to Regina, then took train for Saskatoon, arriving there at 3.20 p. m. The next day we opened a five day convention, conference and reunion."

Grand Junction, Colorado

Group Is Organized and Active

Saints of Grand Junction began holding meetings at homes of the local members in February, 1932. Preaching services were held each week, and sacrament service on the first Sunday of each month. They continued meeting in this way until January, 1933, when a regular meeting place was established at the home of E. H. Perkins.

At that time a study class, meeting once each week, was organized, and this movement grew until a Sunday school was established April 2, 1933. E. H. Perkins was elected to serve as the director, and also the teacher of the adult class, using standard quarterlies. On April 9, a group organization was effected, with M. L. Schmid elected to serve as pastor of the group.

District President William B. Farley spent some time with Saints at Grand Junction in July, holding a series of meetings, and as a result of his labors, eight candidates were baptized, July 23. Another class was added to the Sunday school to take care of the young people.

Several members from Grand Junction attended the district conference held at Delta, August 4 to 6, and enjoyed splendid sermons by Glaude Smith, of Denver, and Leonard Rhodes, of Mancos.

Brother Clarence Wallace, a young man of the congregation, was ordained an elder.

Good interest is manifested at Grand Junction, and there are others that are almost ready for baptism. Workers are continuing their efforts to teach the gospel, and have several worthy people investigating the claims of the church.

This congregation is praying for a more suitable meeting place, so that they will have more room for those who have a desire to know the truth.

Atherton, Missouri

Visitors Help in the Services

The August sacrament service was one of high order wherein the spirit of good-will and fellowship reigned. At this service, Brother D. R. Hughes had the pleasure of blessing his little granddaughter, Thelma Marie Hughes. Pastor George Beebe occupied the stand in the evening, giving careful and earnest instruction to the Saints.

Brother F. A. Cool was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, August 13. Recent guests from out of town include M. E. Mortimore and family of Lamoni, Iowa, and Sister L. S. Wight and sons of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Brother Morti-more spoke at the church Sunday evening.

The young people of Atherton are giving serious consideration to their relation to local and general church undertakings.

The annual Sunday school picnic was recently held at Swope Park, this being the fourteenth successive year the trip has been made. It is always an enjoyable day for the children, and is looked forward to each year.

Mr. and Mrs. James Smith were given a shower Tuesday evening. Sister Smith was formerly Miss Louise Newcomber of Lamoni, Iowa.

Goreville, Illinois

Tunnel Hill Branch Enjoys Visit of Former Missionary

The Webb Town Saints are rejoicing in a series of meetings being held by Brother F. L. Sawley. The large congregations and good order at all services are greatly appreciated by the few scattered members.

People, crowded in wagons and cars, are coming a distance of several miles to attend services. The Saints, as well as nonmembers, appreciate the efforts of Brother Sawley.

Pensacola, Florida

Branch Thrives—Members Cooperate

This branch is thriving, and the older members are proud of the work of Brother Jesse Evans, director of young people. The young men and women are responding to his endeavors with interest.

The branch met, July 27, with the women's department for a social at the church. On this occasion those who had been taking part in the contest to raise money to buy new songbooks for the branch, turned in a number of pairs of pants which they had liberally patched, a coin under each patch. The money was counted and Sister F. D. Marquis was awarded the prize—a big cake baked by Sister Nina Rummel, president of the women's department—for having the most money on her piece. More than fourteen dollars was raised in this manner.

Sister F. D. Marquis chaperoned the girls of the young people's class on an early morning hike to Saunders' Beach, August 8. After a swim, they cooked and enjoyed their breakfast on the beach.

Brother Jesse Evans entertained the young people the evening of August 11, with a wiener roast.

Sunday, August 6, Brother Fred Baldwin baptized Dale Watson, son-in-law of Brother Vickery. This was the beginning of a good day for Pensacola Branch. It was the first Sunday of the month and the Spirit of the Lord was with the worshipers at the sacrament meeting to the extent that they communed together more than one and one-half hours.

In the evening Brother Watson was confirmed, and Brother F. Baldwin preached the sermon. The house was filled almost to capacity.

The Saints expect to grow and do a great work in Pensacola. Brother Jimmie Cooper is pastor, and C. C. Rummel, church school director.

Wimer Mission, Oklahoma

Elder J. L. Creviston Closes Series

Brother J. L. Creviston, of Mulberry, Kansas, has just closed a three-week series of meetings at Wimer Mission, Oklahoma. While there he was accorded the best interest and order. He baptized two adults, one an Indian woman who will be a good addition to the group.

This worker would have continued services at Wimer except that the Spring River reunion opened at Columbus, Kansas, and he wished to attend.

Undoubtedly there is a bright future for Wimer and vicinity, and Brother Creviston plans to return a little later and hold another series to the convincing of many who are interested in the gospel.

There is a group of thirty members about Wimer, but at present there is no resident priesthood member.

Brother Creviston opened a series of meetings southwest of Coffeyville, Kansas, August 20. Next he will go to Hudson Schoolhouse, Oklahoma, for another missionary series.

The Saints, in the part of Oklahoma where this elder has labored, are feeling good in the latter-day work and doing all they can to help. They are hard hit again this year, but do not complain. The weather has been so dry there that very little corn has been raised.

Isolated Family Renews Church Associations Through Groups at Baltimore and Washington

Invite Saints to Open-air Service

July 30, Saints from Baltimore and Washington, District of Columbia, gathered at the Canterbury home, at Gaithersburg, Maryland, for a picnic and open air services. Lunch was served at noon, and immediately following, Elder Adolphus Edwards, of Baltimore, preached an inspiring sermon, the first one the Canterbury family has heard since leaving Kansas City, Kansas, in 1923.

Edward Hunter, young son of Brother and Sister Canterbury, had been ill for some time, and was administered to, and by the next morning, was playing out of doors.

Immediately following the sermon, the young men enjoyed swimming, while the rest visited.

August 6, Brother Ralph Hardy, Sunday school superintendent, drove from Washington, and took the Canterbury family for an early morning drive, and then to the sacrament service, held in the city.

Baby Mathis has been ill for some time due to the contraction of poison at the beach. Although he has been administered to, he is still in a serious condition. Ethyl Canterbury was also administered to for eczema on her hands, which has bothered her for several years.

Elder William Froyd and family, were the first ones to look this family up, and invite them to attend services.

The Canterbury family rejoices once again to come into contact with Saints of different branches of the church.

Huron City Branch, Michigan

Forty Years of Active Work

A very successful all-day meeting was held, August 13, with the Huron City Branch. The day's activities consisted of a prayer service, three sermons, and an address by the district superintendent of religious education. During the prayer service four splendid young people, a young man and three young women, were confirmed. Elder Bruce E. Brown baptized these people the evening before the all-day service.

This branch is located in the center of Huron Township in Huron County. The branch was organized about forty years ago. Such men as J. J. Cornish, Robert Davis, Robert and John Grant, Arthur Allen, and several local men have labored in this vicinity.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Missionary Campaign Most Successful in History of the Branch

Due to the special effort of advertising by the pastor, A. G. Miller, assisted by the young people and the women's department, Vancleave Branch has just closed one of their most successful missionary meetings.

August 6, started the missionary meetings with a sacrament service in the morning. Instead of preaching in the evening the wedding of Miss Juliette Townley and Mr. Dave Andrews, junior, took place. Elder A. G. Miller officiated.

Brother Amos Berve, pastor of Mobile Branch, was the speaker throughout the series of meetings. Each evening at 6:30 o'clock was a teachers' training class, followed at 7:30 by a song service. Preaching began at seven forty-five.

The young people presented a play, "Happiness Wins," on Saturday night, which was a great success.

Sunday brought a spread dinner at the church.

Saints at Vancleave Branch were happy to secure as their teacher and speaker, Brother Amos Berve, who chose as his subjects, "The Three Great Pillars of Civilization," "Faith," "Habit," "Baptism," "Why Lovest Thou Me More Than These?" "The Judgment," and "The Restoration of All Things." These subjects each led up to the great purpose of Christ's gospel. There are now several people ready to accept the gospel.

Vancleave congregation regrets very much that during the series of meetings, their pastor, A. G. Miller, was taken sick with oak poison, but he is readily improving.

Due to the financial situation, the women of the branch collected canned goods amounting to over fifty quarts and presented them to Brother and Sister Berve. Others gave potatoes and other raw vegetables.

The meetings were well attended by the members and nonmembers.

Fulton, Iowa

Membership Is Growing

Attendance at Sunday school and church, at Fulton, Iowa, is steadily increasing. July 30, Mae Heide and Bertha Hardin handed in their pennies for birthday offering. The true meaning of how friendships are affected by the call of the church was discussed in the Sunday school lesson.

Special music for the service was furnished by Brother Drake, playing his clarinet, and a duet by Mae and Irene Heide, accompanied by Gladys Martins.

August 6, the meeting was well attended. The testimonies that were given showed that the true Spirit of God was present.

Saint Paul, Minnesota

Seven Men Called to Church Offices

As a result of the splendid meetings held at Minneapolis during the month of March, three people were added to the church membership. Mrs. Fred Goode, and F. Allan Olson were baptized March 29, and Mrs. Bertha Brown was baptized April 2.

May 24, seven men were ordained to the following offices: Elder, Lloyd Anderson, and Hans Olson; priest, Fred Sumption and Fred Goode; teacher, Anton Peterson; deacon, John Duffy and Floyd Whiting.

The woman's department of Minneapolis Branch, were recently entertained at the home of Mrs. F. A. Olson. Luncheon was served at one o'clock, after which followed a program.

Many Saints and friends were saddened by the death of Brother Harry Brown, who was baptized last April. He was the husband of Sister Bertha Brown. His death occured July 30, and interment was at Sheridan, Iowa, August 2.

Those who attended the reunion at Chetek, Wisconsin, report fine meetings, both spiritual and instructive.

Self Control

By Hubert Case

Time is the greatest of all adjusters. No other means has been known to bring about such changes. Man may plan, but God will settle the matter sooner or later. No wonder he said to man, "I will fight your battles."

Sometimes I feel that the Saints have never yet learned the lesson of self-control. The Lord has given us all the help needed to accomplish this one much needed objective. When it is done we shall have Zion. He told our parents and grandparents when they were driven out of Missouri that they must learn obedience by the things they suffered. In that connection he used the expression, "I will fight your battles."

He gave us these bodies as temples of the Holy Ghost; filled us with the Spirit when we made our covenant with him in the waters of baptism.

The sins of older generations by which they polluted their inheritance are still among us. The tongue was called the unruly member by James, who also said that man can tame every beast, bird and fish, can guide and control the horse with the use of the bridle, and guide the ship by a small helm; but found it hard to tame the unruly little member that rules the whole body, ruins our spiritual atmosphere, distresses and disturbs whole congregations and defeats the church of the living God in its work.

Contention and strife are fast disappearing from our midst, also many other hindrances to progress. While the world is wracked and distracted with turmoil and strife, and distress is in evidence on every hand, our people are seeing the handwriting on the wall, and I hope it is not too late.

We have sung:

"Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on."

We have painted word pictures of the glorious times ahead of this great institution, the church, but there is one picture yet to be painted in human activities—the picture of a people with spiritual self-control. This is the picture all the prophets have painted in vision—a people preparing to meet the Lord, a people who are pure in heart called Zion, a people who have no poor among them.

The majority of people in my district and elsewhere are poor. They are scattered over the earth. The gathering is very slowly taking place. My message to the people of the district with whom it has been my good fortune to meet has been one of peace, unity, and love, all of these prerequisites to the gathering. I have presented to them the ideal of self-control, which is giving the Spirit of the Lord the right of way in our lives and making the much needed preparation for Zion and his coming kingdom. Some branches are at their duty doing the things to make this possible; some are sound asleep, careless, indifferent, void of the Spirit.

The Dead

These hearts were woven of human joys and cares,
Washed marvelously with sorrow, swift to mirth.
The years had given them kindness. Dawn was theirs,
And sunset, and the colors of the earth.
These had seen movement, and heard music; known
Slumber and waking; loved; gone proudly friended;
Felt the quick stir of wonder; sat alone;
Touched flowers and furs and cheeks. All this is ended.
There are waters blown by changing winds to laughter
And lit by the rich skies, all day. And after,
Frost, with a gesture, stays the waves that dance
And wandering loveliness. He leaves a white,
Unbroken glory, a gathered radiance,
A width, a shining peace, under the night.

—Rupert Brooke.

Where Lightning Struck Twice

THE OLD SAYING that "Lightning never strikes twice in the same place" is disproved in one instance at least by the following copyrighted story from the American Weekly, a clipping of which was sent to us through the kindness of a reader.

The fact that the lightning did strike twice in the same place may have proved that the unfortunate man, Herb Beals, was unlucky enough to pick the wrong spot for building his house. Electricity, whether lightning or other kinds, will always try to reach the nearest effective conductor, and some land masses are in greater danger of being struck than others. Whether the avenging hand of the Almighty was active in destroying the man and his home is a question each reader must decide for himself.

At any rate it makes a good story, and here it is:

"The other day, during one of the most violent electrical storms that has hit the Maine coast for many a year, a bolt of lightning ripped out of the black clouds scudding over Casco Bay and scored a thunderous bull's-eye on the charred ruins of a crude shack set on the ledges of Pole Island.

"No one has lived on Pole Island for years, and if a fisherman living on the nearby mainland of Quohog Bay had not noticed that the lightning bolt set fire to the weather-beaten pile of boards, the incident would have gone unnoticed and unmentioned. But the fisherman did see the fire, and, knowing the history of that shack and of the hard-bitten recluse who once called it home, he saw in the direct hit from the overcast heavens an uncanny vengeance wreaked upon the place and the spirit of the man who used to live there.

"The man's name was Herb Beals. He caught lobsters and fish for his meagre living, and let everyone who came within range of his voice know that he was an infidel and a blasphemer. His favorite indoor and outdoor sport was reviling the Almighty and everyone who believed in him. But he seems to have paid for his sinfulness in a dramatic and spectacular way—at least, that's what the devout annals of the Seamen's Bethel Mission record.

"The strange story of the infidel and his shack, as set down, in part, in these records and related by the fishermen who witnessed the final destruction of the little shack on Pole Island, goes like this:

"Some years ago the Mormons and the Latter Day Saints used to visit isolated sections of the Maine coast and hold revival meetings in an effort to get converts. One summer the Mormons gathered at Bethel Point, a spot on the mainland just across from Pole Island. In their fervor they shouted and sang, and their goings-on reached the ears of Herb Beals in his shack.

"While the assembled men, women and children were on their knees praying, dark clouds rolled in from the sea and jagged forks of lightning flashed to the accompaniment of rumbling thunder. They ran to the shelter of a nearby barn and Herb Beals laughed and roared like a madman. He stood in the door of his shack, his mangy hound howling between his feet, shaking his fist at the sky and defying God to do something to him for his blasphemy.

"The Mormons watched the scoffer from the barn door and, being the good Christians they were, confidently expected something terrible to happen to such a misguided fellow man. Their expectations were suddenly and violently fulfilled when, with an explosion like the blast of a cannon, a jagged streak of fire descended from the black heavens and smote the shack on the island. Herb Beals, the scoffer, fell as though flattened by the hammer of Thor.

"When the storm had passed, some of the Mormons borrowed a boat and rowed across the little stretch of water to Pole Island. The blasphemous Beals and his gaunt hound were as dead as door nails. That bolt from the sky had killed them instantly. The floor of the shack was torn up as though it had been wrecked by some angry giant, and the walls were blackened as if seared by flames.

"The death of the doubter was duly recorded in the annals of the Seamen's Bethel Mission, with which the Mormons were associated, and now the chapter has been dramatically closed with the recent complete destruction of the scoffer's unholy abode."

kee. Interment was in Rush Lake Cemetery. Pallbearers were Charles Emerick, Harley Ward, William Fish, Robert Fish, Benjamin Fish, and William Troug. She lived in Mallard community all her life. January 1, 1902, she was married to J. A. Ward. Four children were born to them all of whom live at Mallard: Mrs. Alice Emerick; Harley, Norman, and Mary Maxine Ward. She is survived also by her husband, three brothers and two sisters.

CARBEE.—Alta Boren was born near Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 25, 1847, and died July 30, 1933, at the home of her daughter in Council Bluffs, of the infirmities of age. Her parents, Alabama Boren and wife, were members of the old church, and her grandparents, the mother and father of her mother started West, going on to California instead of locating in Utah. She was married to Hyrum Arnold by whom she was the mother of one daughter. After his death she married Howard Carbee. She was baptized a member of the church when about nineteen years of age, but after her second marriage she attended the Methodist church with her husband. However, she never lost faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and longed for association with the church and its people. She leaves one daughter, eight grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, three brothers, and two sisters. The funeral services were conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun, the sermon being preached at Crescent Church. Interment was in Crescent Cemetery by the side of her parents.

VANCE.—Sarah E. Hooten, daughter of G. W. and Sarah Hildenbrandt Hooten, was born March 24, 1851, in Jefferson County, Ohio, and departed earthly life July 9, 1933, at her home at Jackson, Ohio. Mrs. Vance had recently suffered a fall which resulted in a broken hip, but she seemed to be getting along well and was very cheerful in her affliction. Her family were severely shocked when the end came quite suddenly on Sunday afternoon. She was baptized into the church, August 31, 1884, at Limerick, Ohio, by James E. Moler, and spent nearly forty-nine years in the faith. Her determination to serve her Master enabled her to bring forth works of righteousness worthy of emulation. She married J. L. Vance, September 3, 1868, spending sixty-five years in happy wedlock. To them eight children were born, two of them passing away in infancy. Left to mourn are her husband; two sons, Eugene M., of Jackson, and Harley, of Chillicothe, Ohio; four daughters, Lucinda Bailey and Emma Burns, of Limerick; Minnie Rowland, of Jackson, and Mrs. A. H. Overley, of Joliet, Illinois; one brother, Elias Hooten, of Saint Albans, West Virginia; twenty-two grandchildren, and thirty-four great-grandchildren.

LANGLEY.—Tillie E. Tignor Langley was born February 8, 1865, at Blue Springs, Nebraska; died August 7, at Drumright, Oklahoma. She was united in marriage to F. C. Langley in 1905. She leaves to mourn her husband, one brother, James Tignor, of Crowder, Oklahoma, and one sister, Mrs. Florence Page, of Blue Springs, Nebraska. Funeral services were conducted in the Christian Church, Drumright, Oklahoma. The sermon was by B. F. Pollard, assisted by W. H. Ammerman, of Terlton, Oklahoma. Interment was in North Cemetery, Drumright, Oklahoma.

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—The district conference of Northern California convened at Sacramento, Saturday, July 29, at ten-thirty, with District President G. P. Levitt presiding, assisted by Elder Arthur Oakman, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Elder W. H. Dawson. Brother Levitt introduced Apostle Gleazer, who expressed his happiness in meeting with God's people. Elder Oakman, who gave a few remarks, was also welcomed at the conference. Reports from the various district officers were read and spread on the minutes. Brother Levitt stated that the past year had brought many varied experiences, religious, domestic, and commercial. Some of them were pleasant, while others were not. He commended every branch in the district for the way the people had met existing conditions. During the afternoon session, District President Levitt and Apostle Gleazer were in charge. The following committees were appointed: Publicity chairman, Don La Rey; Marie Hinton, and Elder Arthur Oakman; administration committee: Chairman, Roy Barmore, E. S. Parks, and John Howe. The bishop's and treasurer's reports were submitted by Brother Edward Ingram. The names of Brother Werner and Foley, of Oakland, were presented as the auditing committee. The following recommendations for ordination were then presented and approved by the conference. To the office of elder, Herbert E. Walker, of Santa Rosa, and Abe Heindricks, of Fresno; priest, Allen Roberts, of Fresno, and deacon, David Elliott, of Fresno. Brother Carmichael, chairman of the Irvington reunion grounds committee, appointed last conference, presented his report as follows: "There is little we have to offer in connection with the grounds, and the committee recommended that we continue to carry on the grounds as has been until a change offers itself, having our reunions whenever possible." The conference moved and seconded that it concur in the recommendation of the committee. A motion prevailed that the committee, constituting the district president and the bishopric, take action on the property as they saw fit. With Apostle Gleazer presiding, the election of district officers was then taken care of. Elder G. P. Levitt was sustained as district president; W. H. Dawson and J. A. Damron were selected as his counselors; Marie Hinton was nominated and elected district clerk; Edwin Burdick, was nominated and elected district treasurer; Edward Ingram was sustained as district bishop; Sister Hazel Blohm, was sustained director of religious education; Christiana Waller was sustained as director of music. Sister Gladys Carmichael was sustained as young people's advisor, and Sister Petz, as children's department advisor. Brother Levitt read a budget recommended by the district president and bishopric for the year 1933-1934. General discussion ensued. A motion was moved and seconded for the adoption of the budget. A further motion was made and seconded that the branches pay the budget on a quarterly basis. The business session adjourned with the singing of doxology, and prayer offered by Brother Levitt. Saturday evening a program given by the Sacramento Saints was enjoyed by the conference. The Sunday program started with a prayer meeting at eight-thirty, after which the ordination of the four officers took place. A cantata, "The Holy City," was presented by the joint choirs of all branches, followed by a sermon by G. P. Levitt. In the afternoon Apostle Gleazer spoke. Music was furnished by Edna Burdick and Elder Arthur Oakman, each offering beautiful solos. Sunday evening Elder Arthur Oakman occupied the pulpit. The conference was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and was pronounced a spiritual success.

Combat

The junior editor bent over a place on the sidewalk where two ants were engaged in mortal combat, literally cutting each other to pieces, though what for, the junior editor could not make out.

A senior editor joined the audience.

"It looks like they've had a conference," he said, "and the remarks have become personal!"

Diplomacy

The Pigeon was meekly virtuous—or was he virtuously meek?—this morning.

"I have given up trying to improve my neighbors," he informed us. "It is a hopeless and thankless task."

"Yes," Pigeonette chipped in, "he finds so much improvement to be made at home that he hasn't time to reform the world."

And in that connection we remember a short but notable testimony given in prayer meeting one time: "I want to make the world better, and I'm going to begin with me!"

Which is not a bad idea.

The Readers Speak to the Editor

Ballot Proves Popular—and Very Revealing

The ballot for the Herald department popularity contest has brought responses from large numbers of our readers—too many, in fact, to be counted at the present time.

The Editors wish to thank the many readers who have voted. Many of them sent notes and letters along with the ballots, which are greatly appreciated. Some of them will be printed later. We are always interested to know how our readers feel about what we are printing in the Herald—whether they find it interesting, and whether it meets their needs and desires.

Letters, either of encouragement or criticism, are always heartily welcome. And we don't insist on that kind of soft-soap known as "constructive criticism." Unbuckle your load of grievances and let us have them in plain English. We "can take it." (But don't be surprised if when you say something unfair, we fire back at you.)

These ballots are bringing us into direct contact with our readers. The Editors feel an almost personal touch in the votes that come in. And there is this fine thing about them. We now know where our majority stands. After this, lone protesters and complainers will have to be satisfied to speak only for themselves.

Use the ballot today, if you have not already voted. This may be the last time it appears.

Work and Pray

Thou dost not need to lay aside
The work that fills thy hands—
A thought can cleave its upward way
Where the Father waiting stands;
Thou canst be busy at thy work
And yet thy heart can pray.

Present Status of Mormon Polygamy

Pronouncements by Utah Authorities

RELATIONS between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and our friends of the Utah Mormon Church are more cordial than they were in years gone by. That is a matter for congratulation. There is no reason why a spirit of rancor and bitterness should be perpetuated between us. There remain, however, certain fundamental differences. Possibly these may now be discussed frankly, with fairness and generosity, and without resultant ill will: the question of polygamy is one of those fundamental issues.

Our friends in Utah have themselves voluntarily raised the question anew in an official article which appeared in the Deseret News, church section, June 17, 1933, signed by their president, Heber J. Grant, and his two counselors. Their article disclaims the present practice of polygamy. It sets up as the position of the church that only one man has authority at any time to solemnize plural marriages: i. e., the president of their church, and that the president is not now solemnizing nor has he solemnized such marriages. It announces that certain of their members persist in entering secretly into polygamous marriages contrary to church orders. It announces that such are liable to discipline and excommunication. The article reprinted in pamphlet form is sent out by their presidency to stake officers with an introductory letter signed by the Presidency and dated June 17, 1933. Instructions are given to stake officers to take action against those practicing polygamy. The pamphlet bears the title: "Official Statement From the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

The Deseret News article also went on to give a history of polygamy in which the doctrine is set forth as of divine origin and commandment (through the Prophet Joseph Smith), the practice of which they were reluctantly forced to give over because of federal prosecutions and which they are now bound to refrain from because of civil law and the terms under which Utah obtained statehood in 1895. (The State Constitution stipulates, "Polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.") Following are the opening two paragraphs of the Deseret News article:

"The First Presidency have recently received letters making inquiry concerning the position of the Church regarding the contracting of polygamous or plural marriages. It is evident from these letters, as well as from certain published material—some of it distributed during our last General Conference—that a secret and, according to reputation, an oath-bound organization of misguided individuals is seeking to lead the people to adopt adulterous relations under the guise of a pretended and false polygamous or plural marriage ceremony.

"While the position of the Church since 1893 has been repeatedly set forth, namely, that polygamous or plural marriages are not and cannot now be performed, yet in order that there may be no excuse for any Church member to be misled by the false representations or the corrupt, adulterous practices of the members of this secret, and (by reputation) oath-bound organization (of which the history of the Nephites and Lamanites show so many counterparts), it is deemed wise again to set out the position of the Church on this matter, at the same time tracing the outlines of the historical facts lying behind the Church's position, of which many young Church members may not be fully aware."—The Deseret News, June 17, 1933.

Former Similar Proclamations

This is by no means the first pronouncement of the kind to come from the authorities in Utah. The "Woodruff Manifesto" promulgated by their president, Wilford Woodruff, September 24, 1890, advised their people to cease the practice of polygamy and was approved by their conference of October, 1890.

Ten years later, their President, Lorenzo Snow, (Woodruff's successor), issued a warning in the Deseret News, January 8, 1900, announcing that certain of their members were going into Mexico to contract polygamous unions under impression that the manifesto applied only in the United States; this practice was denounced and forbidden.

At their general conference in April, 1904, Joseph F. Smith, then president of the church, made a statement to the conference, saying that numerous reports had it that polygamous marriages were being solemnized in Utah. He denied that the church had given sanction to such marriages or had knowledge of them. He announced that any one solemnizing such a marriage or entering into it would be deemed in transgression and liable to excommunication. The conference approved his pronouncement.

Six years later under date of October 5, 1910, Joseph F. Smith and his two counselors addressed a letter to presidents of stakes again warning on this matter.

Again at the general conference, April 9, 1911, the warning was repeated and was later published and distributed in pamphlet form signed by the three members of the presidency.

And yet again under date of January 31, 1914, their presidency addressed a letter to all stake presidents and counselors stating that members were still secretly advising and encouraging others to enter into polygamous marriages. They urged action against such. Now comes this latest warning from President Heber J. Grant and his counselors under date of June 17, 1933.

Unable to Control the Practice?

That makes at least six times in the past thirty-three years that it has been found or deemed necessary to protest innocence on the part of the church and to warn recalcitrant members and threaten them with excommunication. Taking these statements at their face value as sincere they make it quite clear that polygamous tendencies among many of the membership have continued with active manifestations sustained over a long period of time and apparently beyond church control. The church seems unable to stamp this thing out. At least these repeated and vehement public utterances indicate failure up to and including June of this present year.

The Root of the Trouble

This is not surprising. The church still cherishes the doctrine while denouncing its practice. A noxious weed in a flower garden may send up branches which may be broken off one by one from time to time, but so long as the root is cherished and cultivated and encouraged to live it will send up other branches. Utah Mormons have not repudiated the doctrine of polygamy. They still defend it as a divine institution commanded of God. They retain in their Doctrine and Covenants a purported revelation commanding it, condemning those who reject it, making it the spring board from which to leap into eternal progression and exaltation in the future world. Against this allegedly divine commandment is set up only the puny legislation of men. Inevitably always will be found men so taught who will say: "We ought to obey God rather than man"—especially those who feel that in this particular matter it would be rather interesting to obey God.

History Repeated

Heber J. Grant and his counselors complain that polygamy is now being taught and practiced by a "secret and, according to reputation, an oath-bound organization of misguided individuals." Moreover, singularly enough, they say that these individuals appear to be doing it on the strength of a revelation purported to have been received by their former President John Taylor, September 26-27, 1886, which revelation President Grant now declares was never approved by the church and if ever actually given was kept secret and from the knowledge of the church.

Is not this all reminiscent of the very origin of polygamy in the first instance? When Brigham Young first introduced the doctrine publicly in 1852 he said: "Though that doctrine has not been practiced by the elders, this people have believed in it for years." (Supplement to Millennial Star, 1853, volume 15, page 31.) Another version made him say "not preached by the elders." Later by their own testimony it developed that many of their elders had both practiced it and taught it (secretly) for years—they even tried to prove that Joseph practiced and taught it (secretly) as far back as 1843. John Taylor, afterward their president, in a debate in Boulogne-sur-mer, France, July, 1850, vigorously denied and repudiated the practice of polygamy (just as vigorously as President Grant now does) and quoted the Doctrine and Covenants to prove that they were monogamous, though afterward it developed that both he and many of his associates were deep in polygamy at that very time (the published report of the discussion between John Taylor and C. W. Cleve, et al, page 8, contains Taylor's denial).

Moreover, Brigham Young predicated the doctrine on the strength of a purported revelation given through Joseph Smith which had never been approved by the church and which allegedly had been kept secret and from the knowledge of the church. There is a singular similarity in this recent recrudescence of the doctrine as set forth in the Deseret News article.

A Clean Renunciation Necessary

Practiced secretly, covertly, and under most solemn protestations of innocence, for years, by its first advocates and apostles, it now persists under the garb of secrecy and fostered by "oath-bound societies of misguided individuals," on the strength of an alleged revelation. Not until the Utah Church shall put from them their belief in the doctrine, repudiate it and remove it from their creed, their teachings, and their Scriptures, will they stand clear before the world and be safe from its constant recrudescence in practice. When this is done a basis will be found for a more cordial approach of the churches to each other.

The Church Fairly Warned in 1831

It is to be remembered that in January, 1831, the Saints were commanded to go to Ohio and there the Lord would give them his law for their safety. They were warned:

"And now I show unto you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers to bring to pass even your destruction in process of time, and ye knew it not, but now I tell it unto you, and ye are blessed, not because of your iniquity, neither your hearts of unbelief, for verily some of you are guilty before me; but I will be merciful unto your weakness." —Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4; Utah edition 38: 13, 14.

They gathered to Ohio and received the law, and on the marriage question were told: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else" (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7; Utah edition 42: 22.)

Had this warning been heeded the spiritual adversary of the church secretly formulating his plans for "its destruction in process of time" might have been balked. Time passed on. The church up to the death of Joseph Smith in 1844 adhered strictly to monogamy. The law in the Doctrine and Covenants was specific and clear on that point; so was the practice of the church. But eight years after the death of Joseph, Brigham Young first publicly promulgated the doctrine and asked his church to accept it. Both the doctrine and the practice had been developing in secret chambers without general knowledge of the Saints.

Because the warning was not heeded, the church as organized came under condemnation and the Reorganization became necessary. Spiritual and material destruction came upon thousands. And now from this latest pronouncement from Utah we glean paragraphs showing how this thing brought them to the dust and close to ruin before they were forced to leave off its practice. And yet they cling to it as a principle of belief. We quote:

"During the entire period of the presidency of John Taylor, 1880 to 1887, relentless prosecution of men who had entered into the relationship of plural marriage was intensified. Under the provisions of the Edmunds-Tucker law the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was disincorporated, the Perpetual Emigration Fund Company was dissolved, and all property belonging to the Church, with the exception of buildings used exclusively for religious worship, was escheated to the government.

"Hundreds of men who had contracted plural marriages were heavily fined, and imprisoned. All persons who could not subscribe to a test oath which was provided especially for those who practiced or believed in the practice of plural marriage, were disfranchised.

"It became obvious that no human power could prevent the disintegration of the church, except upon a pledge by its members to obey the laws which had been enacted prohibiting the practice of polygamy."'

Out of such conditions, born of desperate inability to do otherwise, came the Woodruff manifesto renouncing the practice of polygamy. Had the revelation quoted been heeded, had each man of the ministry thus enjoined loved his one wife with "all his heart," and had he, as commanded, clung "to her and none else" this thing would never have come upon the church or any part of it.

Nor did the men of Utah alone suffer. President J. M. Grant, counselor to Brigham Young, and father of their present president, declared in a sermon September 21, 1856:

"If they could break asunder the cable of the church of Christ, there is scarcely a mother in Israel but would do it this day. And they talk it to their husbands, to their daughters, to their neighbors, and say they have not seen a week's happiness since they became acquainted with that law, or since their husbands took a second wife."—Journal of Discourses, volume 4, page 50.

An Invitation

May we not ask our Utah friends to recognize this matter in its true light and go further than they have yet gone? They have renounced the practice of polygamy; if they will now renounce belief in it they will be safe from its persistent and continuous reappearance among them to their chagrin and public embarrassment. Then can we draw somewhat closer together in amity, with one ancient and insurmountable obstacle removed from between us.

Beware of This Fraud

Church Embarrassed by Calendar Trick

The following letter from Ray Whiting, pastor at Council Bluffs, Iowa, clearly presents another of the many kinds of frauds that are practiced on unsuspecting church people. It is a warning to other pastors and officers who may be approached with similar propositions:

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, August 21, 1933.

Herald Publishing House, Independence, Mo.

Dear Sirs:

A man giving his name as Mr. Stone, called on me a few days ago and offered to give our local church 300 calendars and also distribute several hundred more through the city, if we would but give him permission to do so.

He secured a number of ads from business men of this city, to pay for the calendars and to pay for his trouble. The local church was to receive also 10% of the total amount received for the ads.

Thinking this was a good way to advertise our services and to secure a few dollars, I gave him my permission, but was soon made to regret it.

This Mr. Stone went to the merchants and said that our church was getting out the calendars and represented himself as a member of the church. He easily obtained the ads and printed only enough calendars to supply one to each man advertising. He collected his money and left town without giving the church a single calendar. This is not only a keen disappointment to our church but a disappointment to the merchants as well and it has necessitated a great deal of explaining on my part.

Fearing that this Mr. Stone, who claims to have worked many of our churches in the past, will go on to other churches and cause them the same embarrassment, I am writing this to the Herald thinking it might be wise for some statement to come out which would protect our other pastors. I am leaving this entirely to your judgment however.

Sincerely yours,

RW/MW RAY WHITING.

In general, it is a safe rule to be very cautious about any business propositions whatsoever with

The Harvest Festival

An Invitation

To all interested in the Harvest Home Festival:

It is almost impossible to write a personal letter to all who are intensely interested in the Festival, so we are taking this opportunity of reaching you all at once.

The Harvest Festival is under way. We shall appreciate all you can contribute to make this the best of all Festivals.

The Auditorium Band and Orchestra will furnish special music. The Harvest Festival Chorus promises to be a real musical treat. May I suggest that you plan a vacation in Independence during the Festival week? You will enjoy it.

The exhibit booths are always worth seeing. People come again and again to see the exhibits.

Remember now, the sooner you send your contribution the better.

This letter is intended for my old friends "way down east" and for all other points of the compass. We have missed some of you the last few years. We need an exhibit from Maine, Hawaii, Florida, New England, and all points west of the Rockies and east of the Mississippi.

Send the "work of your own hands." What is your talent? Anything you can make and send will be placed on exhibit and sold. The proceeds go to the relief of the poor. Your talent may be canning, sewing, crocheting, painting, wood carving, or any of the many arts. Your community may have a speciality in manufacturing or canning.

You can be a big help to us by getting all your friends interested in the good work of the Harvest Festival. Here is a secret, too—the interest created for the Festival is interest created for your own local.

We invite you to join us. We invite you to help us. We especially invite you to visit us during the Festival, October 3 to 8.—Harvest Festival Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Beware of This Fraud

traveling strangers. Pay no attention to statements that they have worked their propositions with other churches; such statements are generally gross exaggerations or outright falsehoods. Be sure that if you give them any authority to use the name of the church, they will be saying things that you gave them no authority to say. They can leave the town with broken promises and unfulfilled pledges left in your name. You have to keep on living there.

Most experiences with these people are concluded with Brother Whiting's words: "but was soon made to regret it." We thank Brother Whiting for the warning.

Summer Crew Have Graceland Ready for Fall Opening

School Year Begins September 8

THE GRACELAND CAMPUS is the scene of bustling activity, cleaning, scrubbing, painting, and getting everything in readiness for the opening of its doors to expectant youth. September 8 will mark the beginning of Graceland's thirty-ninth year, and a school year which will probably be the most pleasant, most worth-while, in the lives of many of the students. This week almost a hundred students in twenty-seven states who were asking for assistance through a job or a scholarship loan will receive a letter telling them whether or not it will be possible for them to attend Graceland.

THE ADMINISTRATION

The duties of the administration, of course, continue through the summer. President Briggs; Mr. Carmichael, Treasurer and Business Manager; Mr. Closson, Director of Student Personnel; Mr. Bergman, Registrar; Mr. Hynden, bookkeeper, and Messrs. Walden and Weddle, Superintendent and Assistant Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, are directing the activities of about eighteen students busily at work for the Gracelanders of 1933-34.

THE SUMMER CREW

Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Booker, of the Graceland commissary, have been cooking for the summer crew and canning food from the college gardens. Loleta Johnson, assistant librarian, and Edna Resch, recorder, left the campus in the earlier half of the summer. Clara Hobbs, of Carthage, Missouri; Beulah Read, of Centralia, Illinois, and Vida Sylvester, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, have kept the typewriters clicking messages to Graceland correspondents. Aarona Booker has been gaining some practical experience in the gentle art of housekeeping. Leslie Kohlman, of Houston, Texas, who some day hopes to benefit directly from her experience, assisted in the commissary until after the Youth Conference. At that time, Howard (Singing Janitor) Harpham, of Seiling, Oklahoma, also left the campers, and his mealtime jokes and free concerts were greatly missed. Howard Snead, of Independence, Missouri, was a late-comer, and he can usually be seen hanging out the window of Walker Hall with a paintbrush in his hand.

Marion Cooper, of Creston, Iowa, has been in Graceland only a short time, and has also learned how to wield a paint brush. Pataha Samuella, Papeete, Society Islands, is assisting the clean-up crew this summer, and plans to return to his native islands this fall. Peter Duyzer, Rotterdam, Holland, learns about reducing by way of a lawn mower. Ross Mortimer and Clifford Wood are Canada's contribution to the group. Reed Emslie, Seattle, Washington, has been specializing in the trucking field of work this summer.

Ammon Roberson, Benton, Illinois, while pushing the lawn mower spends his time thinking of funny things to say in his individual droll way. These thoughts come to light at mealtime when we are all together. Don Chesworth, Somerville, Massachusetts, has had varied duties, from picking apples to assisting the manager of the Coliseum Theater in seeing that the people of Lamoni are properly provided with amusement. Joe DeBarthe, Fairview, Montana, is the Graceland milkman, most of his work being on the college farm. Walter Johnson, Sydney, Australia, spends his summer reconditioning furniture.

THE NAUVOO TRIP

The high light of the summer was the trip of the summer crew to Nauvoo, Illinois. Several members of the administration, their families, and the student workers, a jolly crowd of about thirty people, made the trip in two trucks and a sedan. The Nauvoo House and the Nauvoo Camp bunk houses were occupied. Meals were served in the open and were so well arranged that each person was asked to assist in the preparation of only one meal. Friday and Saturday were occupied by swimming, boating, and sight-seeing trips through Nauvoo and to Keokuk Dam. Sunday an early morning prayer meeting, church school, preaching service, and baptism, in the quaint beauty of historic Nauvoo, made the trip an unforgettable one. All agreed that from Friday afternoon to Sunday evening was all too short a time for such a delightful vacation, but in spite of sunburns and sore muscles, they willingly responded to the seven o'clock siren calling them to work again.

To be just and wise; to be brave and kind; to live every day in God's high favor, and every night to find reward in his approval; to have for friends sweet thoughts, strong men, and good books; to bear disappointments with a smile; to face death with a cheer; to labor constantly at some useful task; to acknowledge a sympathetic and unshaken confidence in all men, rich and poor, white and black, learned and ignorant, civilized and savage, churchman and dissenter, saint and outcast—this is to have found peace.—Frank Pierson Tebbetts, in the Youth's Instructor.

NEWS BRIEFS

Lamoni Will Hold Harvest Home Festival

Lamoni's Harvest Home Festival, September 14, 15, and 16, will be a big celebration which will include a number of features—ball games, local horse races, horse pulling contests, music, picture shows at the Coliseum and free street shows daily, according to the announcement in the Lamoni Chronicle. There will also be a baby clinic. The fruit, vegetable and grain display will be had in the Coliseum basement, and there will be a showing of cattle, hogs and other livestock open to agriculture students and 4-H Club members only. To this will be added a horse exhibit open to everyone.

Lamoni looks forward to the fall festival as one of the most interesting events of the year, an event which proves a drawing card to the people in that section of Iowa.

Manchester Branch Celebrates Tenth Anniversary

On the tenth of July the congregation of Manchester Branch invited members from other branches to be present with them at the services celebrating the tenth anniversary of the dedication of their church. In spite of stormy weather a large number were present to participate in a varied program of worship, preaching services, and entertainment.

New Plan Increases Attendance

Sunday evening services at Santa Barbara, California, have improved both in interest and attendance due to the change in the order of the meetings.

The services are opened with song and prayer, followed by several vocal and instrumental numbers. The closing song selection is used as the subject of a fifteen-minute sermonette. The plan is proving a great success.

Branch to Be Organized at Willapa, Washington

The recent conference of Seattle and British Columbia approved the recommendations of the names of five men for ordination at Willapa, Washington, and authorized the organization of a branch there.

Northwesterners Will Remember Silver Lake Reunion

One hundred tents and thirty-four cabins were occupied by the campers at the Silver Lake reunion, Washington, August 4 to 13, and visitors poured in nightly from neighboring vicinities, according to a report from Elder Harold I. Velt. He says of the gathering: "From a standpoint of numbers, preaching and teaching, working harmony, the light of revelation from God, and in short, a demonstration of the spirit and power of Zionic living, the reunion was an experience never to be forgotten."

General church appointees present at this the reunion of Seattle and British Columbia, Portland, and Spokane Districts, were Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer; D. B. Sorden, pastor of Los Angeles, California; A. C. Martin and Harold I. Velt, seventies. These with the district presidents, Monte Lasater, J. L. Verhei, and Stanley Fout, composed the reunion committee.

Assistant Editor Recovering

Our readers will be glad to know that Miss Leta Moriarty, assistant editor, who has charge of the Herald news and who has written the News Briefs since they began, is now making a very satisfactory recovery from an appendicitis operation at the Sanitarium. She is the second editor to be stricken with this affliction and the others are trembling with apprehension. In Sister Moriarty's absence they have been doing heavy duty to keep up her work, and will rejoice when she returns.

Preaches a Sermon at Ninety-three Years of Age

Brother James Case occupied the stand at Oakdale, Missouri, July 16, at the eleven o'clock hour. His subject was, "My Duties as a Teacher."

Brother Case was ninety-three years old, July 13. He enjoys good health, and works in the garden almost every day. He is proud to tell us that he has five sons; four elders, and one a deacon.

Brother Case recently came to Oakdale Branch, having purchased a small farm near the church, where he makes his home.

The Story of Etta Kett

Stretched on the Rack

IT WAS LATE Sunday night. Howard Bell stood with Etta on the front porch of her home. He had pretty well monopolized her time Saturday evening and most of Sunday. Etta was sorry to see that his eyes were alight with a strong emotion; but he did not seem to know that he had failed to kindle in her a response equal to his own. He was too used to having his own way —too self-confident. For a moment Etta was afraid.

Howard put out his hand as if to encircle her waist and take her in his arms. Etta thought desperately for something to do. She must prevent him from doing that. She quickly reached out, grasped his hand firmly, and shook it briskly, meanwhile keeping a distance between them.

"Good-bye, Mr. Bell. I hope you have enjoyed your visit, and that the remainder of your journey will be a successful one." Then she withdrew her hand and turned to the door. Disappointed, he stood there looking after her as she went into the house.

A little less confident, his pride mildly punctured, but not seriously, he went. Etta watched the tail light of his car as it roared away.

Next day Etta was talking to her mother about the incident.

"It's awfully hard to deflate some people. They are like corks—kept afloat on a sea of pride by a million little separate cells of vanity."

"Poor things," said Mother Kett, "they ruin their chances by trying to take advantage of them too soon."

Etta said aloud, as if to herself: "I do like to see some modesty in a man."

WEEKS WERE PASSING—dreary weeks of steady work at the office, Sundays spent in church work, and evenings at home. There was no break.

She saw Bill at church, often. He was courteous, but quiet. He could have gone with any number of other girls, but he chose not to. He was pretty strictly minding his own business.

Strange to say, Etta did not find the satisfaction she expected in her plan for punishing Bill. It seemed as if she, too, were being kept on probation—under punishment.

She had expected Bill to protest, to try to see her; but he didn't. She had expected, at least, an occasional telephone call. But the phone rang in the evenings only for Kathryn. Etta felt like a small child, sitting by a Christmas tree, watching some older person extinguish the lights on the candles, one by one, too early in the evening.

If he would only weaken, only show some tiny rift in the hard armor of coolness in which he had encased himself. Etta wavered, felt sick of herself at times, but she could not make the first step towards breaking their armed truce. She would have taken the slightest chance or gesture from Bill as an excuse, but he wouldn't give it to her. He seemed determined to humble her. She who had planned to punish him was herself stretched on a rack of loneliness and misery. He was inhuman!

It was quite by accident that she learned, one day, that Bill was planning to leave Elmwood to handle a business agency in another city.

"He never told me!" Etta felt stunned.

The same evening she found a letter from Wayne Roland.

"And he's coming to town to hunt work!" Etta was reading it in her room. "And now I'll have to go through the same thing with him as I did with Howard!"

Suddenly her head swam and her ankles felt weak—something seemed to collapse under her, and she found herself sitting down in the middle of the floor, crying, and the tears falling unashamed on an empty envelope that meant nothing to her.

Seeing Our Faults

You need two mirrors to see a thing so close as the back of your own neck. How much harder it is to see your own invisible faults! Yet they may be as plain to others as the color of your overcoat.

For every minute that you spend contemplating the faults of others, you should spend at least two searching for your own. If you can do this humbly and unobtrusively, without parading the fact to the world, you may develop a truly noble character and win many friends.

The Heart of Education

In this economic crisis modern education is fighting to hold the gains it has made over the years. Its troubles, the dangers with which it is beset, the hardships it is undergoing, will be explained and analyzed by its foremost authorities.

We hope that in all the complicated maze of difficulties to be dwelt on, one fact is kept to the forefront; the fact that the teacher, the private in the ranks, is the keystone of the whole educational structure, and that in any forced economics the teacher should be last and least affected.

A good teacher, proud of her calling, enjoying the respect and admiration of the community, free of unnecessary financial worries, is the heart of education.—Editorial in The Minneapolis Star.

The Matter of Age

Age is a quality of mind;
If you have left your dreams behind,
If hope is cold,
If you no longer look ahead,
If your ambition's fires are dead—
Then you are old.

But, if from life you take the best,
And if in life you keep the zest,
If love you hold;
No matter how the years go by,
No matter how the birthdays fly—
You are not old.

The Stewardship of Women

By Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley

STEWARDSHIP! What varied pictures are immediately brought to mind by the connotation of that word. Altogether too many of our people think at once of land, or business, or money, in fact, nothing beyond temporal affairs is considered in their thought of stewardship. But in my study and contemplation of the word, I have found no definition that is quite so satisfying to me, or so far-reaching in its application as that given by our own church bishop: "Stewardship is what the Lord has invested in us."

Then whatever we have within us as talent, or whatever may come into our possession as temporal or material worth, or, whether it is the proper use of our time, the right exercise of our influence, or the regard in which we hold the privilege or opportunity for our own development, these are, whether considered individually or collectively, stewardships.

TALENT

Some may have but one talent, possibly the ability to make money. I know of one woman of whom it was said by one of the local bishops, that if she were a man he'd want to have her for a counselor because of her clear foresight, her mental balance, and her devotion to the church. Another may be "a natural born cook," and possibly since that seems to be about all she's good for (to use her own words) she loses sight of the fact that that is one of the important things in life, and does not endeavor to enlarge and perfect her talent, and make it the best possible. Others may have a number of talents within themselves, and their possibilities are thereby amplified. But whether she may have one talent, or five or more; and whether it may be the capacity for money-making, or cooking, or teaching, whatever she has been endowed with, she should cultivate and make the most of what naturally is hers. "Be the best of whatever you are," for our service to God can be rendered only through serving his creatures. Then

"If I have strength, I owe the service of the strong;
If a melody I have, I owe the world a song;
. . . . . .
And if my torch can light the dark of any night,
Then, I must pay the debt I owe with living light."
—Epworth Herald.

Whether a woman's work is in the home, than which there is nothing more important, or whatever her stewardship is in the way of talent, that is her gift from God, or investment, and though this talent may have come down to her through generations and possibly has been developed through years and years gone by, it is for her to make the most of what is hers either in temporal affairs, or personal qualifications and be able to bring back to the Lord an acceptable accounting. It has been said that "the Church is God's way of saving the world," and our best service to him will be by "working together with God," and since he lends to us our talents, the development and use of them is our part of the "working together."

IN THE HOME

Woman's stewardship in the home covers various phases, and the task of helping to build a home on the stewardship basis is not a trivial matter. It must, if successful, be a cooperative affair. Not all houses in which people live are homes in the true sense of the word. In this day of hustle and bustle, of questionable entertainment, of jazz, of keep-all-you-have-and-get-all-you-can-no-matter-how, some homes are transformed in parking stations where part of the family stay while the rest of the family are using the car. We may look at a pile of wheels, piston rods, gears, etc., but no one would think of calling such a conglomeration an automobile unless the parts were properly assembled; nor can we call any kind of mixture containing flour, eggs and sugar an angel food cake, unless it is combined in proper proportion by a proper method. A real home, then, is much more than four walls and a roof; and no matter how elaborately it may be furnished, it cannot be a home in the true sense of the word unless it is established on love and fellowship and service with preparation for a background.

PREPARATION

Preparation? To be sure. What wide-awake parents would think of sending their child to a teacher who they believe is not prepared to teach what they want the child to know? What up-to-date manager of a prosperous business concern would employ for keeping his books a man with no knowledge of bookkeeping? Then why should we be content with the task of home-building being committed to those ignorant of the requirements for successful home-building, and to those who may be careless and indifferent in the development of characters under their care in which integrity and purity of heart and purpose must be basic, if that character would reach a high point of perfection that is possible when given the proper heritage and environment?

As women of the church, why should we sit passively by and allow our girls to enter marriage without being prepared to solve at least a part of the thousand and one perplexing problems they will have to meet, and to make adjustments under difficult circumstances without so many heartaches as some are obliged to undergo in the effort? Possibly we lose sight of the fact that we and our children after us are building for eternity, rather than just preparing for living this life. Do we as mothers in Israel help the young home-makers to look forward to, prepare for, and take delight in the care and development of immortal souls that may be given into their keeping? and that are to be formed into characters fit for an acceptable offering when they render an account unto God for their stewardship? "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." We see, then, in this quotation that each child has the potential power to become a son of God; but whose responsibility is it to see that he is properly taught, that he has a fitting environment that will enhance that teaching, and that the parental influence and example are of a character that will strengthen the teaching and the atmosphere of the environment, so the child may desire to make of himself a son of God? Such desire is the first step in the development of a Godlike character. We are told that "Every child has the right to be well born." And it is an acknowledged fact that no one can do his best unless he is physically fit. Then, another phase of the stewardship of women in the development of a well-balanced character deals with the physical in the life of the child.

Physical Nurture

In the nurture of the physical child, the stewardship of women should reach out until she understands the different elements of food, as well as having some knowledge of the make-up of the physical body and what is required in the food to build up and keep in repair the tissues and provide heat and energy for the entire body. A child should have wholesome nourishing food at regular intervals in adequate quantities. His habits of when and what and how he eats should be formed in the early months of his life. It should be a part of his education to want to do the things that will be for his highest development physically, which also includes the use of his leisure time, his exercise and work periods. Each child should have his part in the work of the home, something to make him feel an individual interest there. I know one mother who allows her boys to take their turns getting the Sunday evening lunch. She knows nothing of what they have planned; and they thoroughly enjoy making surprises for their mother and daddy. Think you not that the memory of these evenings will live in the hearts of these boys? and help them in building future Zionic homes?

Not only should children have work to do, but regular play as well. Organized and supervised play helps the child to give expression to his inward urges, and aids in making a more thoroughly social creature of him by teaching him teamwork, stimulating in him self-control, and helping him in the give-and-take part of the game such as he will have to meet in future life.

Spiritual Nurture

The stewardship of women should look after the spiritual life of the growing child also. Teach a child religion? Yes, I like this thought much better than "getting religion," as if it were something a child can "get" by being exposed to measles or whooping cough. But how could you teach a child religion? and when should such education begin? It should begin by the parents making use of every opportunity for the development of their own characters, building up the desirable qualities and overcoming those not desirable; living pure, upright, conscientious, Godlike lives themselves. The child's religious education should begin the first days of his life by being taught good habits, regularity in eating and sleeping. He should have lessons in self-control, teaching him to know that he cannot get something just because he cries for it. As he grows older and gets understanding, teach him to cooperate with the family group, and help him to eliminate selfishness by sharing with the group—"Each for all and all for each."

But how can this be done? First, by example. Prayer should be one of the fixed activities in the home. The little hands folded and the quiet during that period will help to form the habit long before he knows the meaning of the words. Then as he learns to say his own prayer, he will learn to take his own troubles to the Lord—for a child's troubles are as real to him as grown people's troubles are to them. If the parents set the example of praying over their affairs, the child will also learn to seek relief in prayer, for help in the time of trouble. As soon as possible the child should be helped to a God-consciousness. He should realize that there is a God, that he hears us when we pray, and that he will answer us. Then if the child is taught right habits, if he cooperates in doing his part in the group, if he is a regular attendant at church, where he may get a different slant in his religious teaching, and if through precept and example his interest has been awakenend (Continued on page 1104)

The Play's the Thing

A Modern Drama for Churches

By Marcus L. Bach

THE PLAY'S THE THING combines a Biblical drama with a modern play. It has certain features which make it adaptable to every church dramatic group.

Whether your equipment is up-to-date or antiquated, whether your group is large or small, rich or poor; whether you have an elaborate wardrobe or none at all—this production is ideally suited to your needs. It lends itself to the church chancel or the little theatre stage.

The use of costumes and make-up is optional. Notes in the manuscript serve as references in this matter.

Pilgrims, Children, and Others

Scene. A room in the home of Norman Webb. It is a large, imposing place, tastily furnished with expensive lamps, chairs, a sofa, a small table, and other pieces.

There are entrances at right and left, communicating with other portions of the house.

It is Sunday afternoon. Mr. Webb, a middle-aged, grim-faced capitalist, is comfortably seated in a large chair, reading a Sunday edition. He wears a lounging-jacket over a gray suit; an expensive but not gaudy tie, and house-slippers.

After a moment Mrs. Webb enters. She is younger than her husband; a pleasant, soft-spoken, and unassuming person. Her attire consists of a sport dress suitable for golfing. She carries her hat in her hand.

Mrs. Webb. Hello, dear.

Webb. (in a matter-of-fact, but not unkindly tone) You're back early.

Mrs. Webb. (coming to his chair) Yes, earlier than I had intended.

Webb. (referring to the paper) I see where Price & Wheeler went to the wall.

Mrs. Webb. Price & Wheeler?

Webb. Seem to be wiped out for good the way it looks. (with a shrug) Well, bigger firms than theirs have taken the rap.

Mrs. Webb. (with some hesitancy) Norman. . . .

Webb. (without looking up) Well?

Mrs. Webb. I didn't go to the club this afternoon.

Webb. (as before) What's the idea? It's a fine day for golf, isn't it?

Mrs. Webb. (quietly) There's nothing wrong with the day—no.

Webb. (returning again to the news account) I could have told old man Wheeler this was coming. They've been altogether too lenient with their houses. Hm-m—— I wonder what he'll do now. He must be near seventy.

Mrs. Webb. Norman, I met Mrs. Fletcher as I was driving down Parkwood.

Webb. You mean Bob Fletcher's wife?

Mrs. Webb. Yes.

Webb. (glancing up) Oh. (after a pause during which he resumes his reading) What did she have to say? You spoke to her, I suppose?

Mrs. Webb. Yes, I spoke to her. (after a moment) Norman, why can't you give Mr. Fletcher more time on that note he owes you?

Webb. (evenly) Oh, she told you about that, eh?

Mrs. Webb. Yes.

Webb. That's a fine "how-do-you-do," isn't it? I've got one of my old competitors at the breaking point and he begins to use his wife as a go-between.

Mrs. Webb. (quickly) No, really, Norman. I just happened to run into her and—Webb. (getting up) I expected it. I expected him to try just about any scheme he could think of. That's pretty good stuff, isn't it? Dragging his wife into it!

Mrs. Webb. You don't understand, Norman.

Webb. Don't understand what?

Mrs. Webb. He hasn't been well—his business has been bad. He can't pay you without—

Webb. Whose business hasn't been bad? That's no excuse.

Mrs. Webb. He can't pay you without sacrificing his home, so Mrs. Fletcher told me. She thought if you really knew the conditions—

Webb. Now see here, Ellen, this is a business proposition between Robert Fletcher and Norman Webb, nobody else. I've given him one extension and that's more than anybody'd do for me. He knew that he'd have to pay. There's no sentiment connected with it, and no friendship either. I suppose she thought because you used to belong to the same clubs she could get some sympathy.

Mrs. Webb. I'm sure that's not it. Don't you see, Norman, maybe our helping them would—

Webb. Now, that'll do, Ellen! (He tempers this rather sharp rebuke with a friendly advance.) Just leave this to me. Fletcher's been fighting me for years. He'd have broken me long ago if he'd had the chance. Oh, he's not vicious exactly. But, then, I've been pretty easy on him.

Mrs. Webb. They used to be our friends, Norman.

Webb. He's after the money just like the rest of us.

Mrs. Webb. If you could have heard her, you'd have realized that there is more to life than just money, and notes, and things.

Webb. (smiling) Now, now, Ellen, just because it's Sunday doesn't give you any license to preach, you know.

Mrs. Webb. (earnestly) But it's true, dear. We've got to live and let live. Sometimes things like this turn up to give us a chance to help poeple—even if they do seem to be our competitors.

Webb. (evenly) Those aren't the principles that made it possible for us to get this home, Ellen, nor your clothes, nor the comforts we've got. You're not in business and you can't understand. Fletcher used to talk like that, too. He used to preach to me years ago. Well, his religion doesn't help him pay his bills, that's sure.

Mrs. Webb. Mrs. Fletcher told me lots of things this afternoon.

Webb. (curtly) I imagine she did.

Mrs. Webb. They've had sickness, trouble—lots of it.

Webb. (with rising exasperation) I don't want to hear any more about it, Ellen. This is simply business, that's all. He owes me the money and I'm going to get it—principal, interest, everything.

Mrs. Webb. Even if—

Webb. Even if it seems sort of cold-blooded, yes. Money still talks, and plenty loud these days.

Mrs. Webb. (involuntarily) Money —! It isn't everything in the world, Norman. We've seen how quickly it can be swept away. You just mentioned Price & Wheeler; once their concern was considered the strongest in the city.

Webb. Well, that proves what I'm saying, doesn't it? We'd better learn our lesson and begin clamping down on some of the folks who've been using us. I'm after the money, and I don't make any excuses for it either.

Mrs. Webb. I wish you wouldn't say that, Norman.

Webb. (greedily) It's the truth! I like the feel of it! I like the way it looks—everything about it!

Jim. (entering at this point. He is a fellow of twenty; handsome, congenial, alert.) Hello, mother. I thought you were at the club, I— (He looks at them questioningly.) What's the matter?

Mrs. Webb. Nothing, Jim.

Jim. Weren't you going to play golf this afternoon?

Mrs. Webb. I decided not to. (She removes her coat and lays it aside.)

Webb. Where've you been, Jim?

Jim. Practising, out in the garage.

Webb. Practising?

Jim. Sure, you know, for the play.

Webb. Oh. (He returns to his chair and takes up the paper.)

Mrs. Webb. How is the play coming, Jim?

Jim. Great. You should see the gang out there. We've hardly enough room. (He looks at his father.) You know, I thought maybe you'd like to see it.

Webb. See—what?

Jim. Why, the play.

Mrs. Webb. We'd better wait, Jim, until we're more prepared.

Jim. You might criticize it for us, and give us some pointers on it.

Webb. Your mother is tired, Jim.

Mrs. Webb. No, it isn't that. Maybe we're not in the mood for it just now.

Jim. Gee, Dad, I thought you'd be interested. I was going to bring the cast in here and put it on for you. You wouldn't have to move a bit. (enthusiastic cheerfulness) You'd have the best seats in the house.

Mrs. Webb. (smiling) A regular guest performance, is that it?

Jim. This room'd be just the thing.

Webb. (from his paper) What's the matter with the garage, isn't that all right?

Jim. Sure. I just wanted you to see it, was all. I'd be glad to have you come out there, if you want to.

Webb. We'll see it sometime. (then casually, without looking up from his paper) I suppose you play the lead, eh?

Jim. Oh, not exactly. Cleve Fletcher's got as much of a part as I. You ought to see him, Mother.

Mrs. Webb. Cleve Fletcher?

Jim. Yes. You know him. His dad used to have a place over on Superior.

Webb. How'd he get into your group?

Jim. He belongs to our crowd.

Webb. What's he been saying to you?

Jim. Saying to me? What do you mean?

Mrs. Webb. Nothing, Jim.

Webb. (to himself) I suppose he's put him up to it too.

Jim. (abruptly) Say, what's the matter anyway?

Webb. Nothing. Go on back to your rehearsal.

Jim. What's all the mystery about?

Mrs. Webb. (coming up to him) Nothing at all. There's no mystery. Have you everything you need out there? There are some costumes upstairs.

Jim. We're all set. (He move reluctantly toward the door.) Well, I'm sorry I butted in. I only thought you might be interested in what we're trying to do.

Mrs. Webb. Of course we're interested. (smiling) You know how it is, Jim, Sunday afternoons a person often feels groggy and out-of-sorts.

Jim. Well, what did Dad mean when he asked about Cleve?

Webb. (grumblingly) Nothing at all.

Mrs. Webb. I'm glad he's in your group. You get along together, don't you?

Jim. Why, of course. Who said we didn't?

Webb. Oh, run along now, Jim.

Jim. (self-contained) All right. (he goes to the door) I'm sorry. (he exits)

Mrs. Webb. (after a period of silence) Norman, I—

Webb. (intolerantly) I know just what you're going to say. You want to remind me that my son and Bob Fletcher's son are friends—in the same show together. Well, it's ridiculous. That doesn't cut any ice with me—not in the least.

Mrs. Webb. I wasn't going to talk about that at all, dear. I was only going to suggest that—perhaps we should have let Jim bring the group in here.

Webb. Ridiculous. (He settles himself securely.)

Mrs. Webb. You know, Norman, Jim's been anxious to have you see what he's been doing with these plays. That's why he came up today, thinking because I was gone, he could get your attention, don't you see? Oh, I know it sounds foolish for me to say it, but he wants you for a pal, Norman. He likes you.

Webb. (rising) Now, now, Ellen. Let's not get sentimental about it. I can't be any different than I am. (temporizing) I wasn't rude to him, was I?

Mrs. Webb. (gently) You're all right, dear. (She comes close to him.) We just don't understand each other at times, do we? We don't always see things in the same light.

Webb. I don't know what you mean, but if you think I offended Jim, I'm sorry. I don't mind seeing their play.

Mrs. Webb. I wish you'd have told him that.

Webb. It's only that I supposed it'd be something trivial, like a lot of those plays you've dragged me out to see.

Mrs. Webb. Listen, dear, why can't we still tell him to bring the group up here. It'd put us all in a different frame of mind.

Webb. And invite Fletcher's kid into our home?

Mrs. Webb. Now, Norman, let's not be like that. Why, I really think it would be a splendid idea.

Webb. Oh, I don't suppose it would do any harm.

Mrs. Webb. Thank you, dear. After all, Sunday is a good time to do something out of the ordinary. Jim would appreciate it, I know.

Webb. Well, all right. I'll go down and tell them to come in.

Mrs. Webb. (with enthusiasm) And meanwhile, I'll clean up things. This will be loads of fun, Norman.

Webb. (demurring quietly) It won't hurt us this once, I suppose. (He exits. Mrs. Webb gathers up the papers and puts her coat and hat away. Then she draws the chairs aside, making room for playing space. She sets two chairs at a point down right, facing back, which they may occupy to view the act. After a prolonged moment, Mr. Webb returns.)

Mrs. Webb. (still busying herself) Were they pleased about it?

Webb. Pleased? They almost mobbed me.

Mrs. Webb. (laughing) Here, let's set this aside. (she indicates a small table, which they move out of the way.)

Webb. (meanwhile) *They're all made-up. Jim was sticking a beard on his face. Everything is in a costume of some sort. I thought I had suddenly landed in Jerusalem. They certainly have a crowd out there. [*Omit or include as the production dictates.]

Mrs. Webb. Surprising, isn't it, how much interest there always is in plays.

Webb. Jim said we should take our places and they'd be right up.

Mrs. Webb. I thought we could sit here. (She indicates the chairs.) The best seats in the house!

Webb. Orchestra row, eh? That reminds me, Jim wanted a chair up here, too. (He places a chair at back center.) It's supposed to represent a stone or something. (There are voices and whispered commotion offstage.)

Mrs. Webb. There they come. It does sound like quite a troupe.

Webb. All right. Let me usher you to our seats. (They go to their chairs.)

Jim. (from off stage) Are you ready, Dad?

Webb. Yes, we're all set.

Jim. All right. On with the show. The curtain's going up. (The Narrator steps into the scene and reads from a scroll.)

Narrator. It is early morning on a highway near Nazareth. Pilgrims are making their way to the dwelling of a lowly Carpenter. Among them are cripples and children. Abdon, a lame man, is assisted by the arms of a friend and the support of a gnarled staff. (Pilgrims and Abdon enter and cross the scene.) Here, too, blind Malchius is wont to seat himself and lift his hands and voice for alms. (Malchius and Nathan enter.)

Nathan. (as he helps Malchius to seat himself) There, Malchius.

Malchius. Again this faithful stone becomes my altar, from which I seek the blessings of the gods.

Nathan. And may the gods look down upon thee tenderly. I have a blanket in my pack which I shall give thee ere I go to Nazareth.

Malchius. Thou art kind, Nathan. (Nathan kneels to open his pack. Pilgrims enter and proceed across the stage. To them Malchius directs an occasional cry of, "Alms! Alms, ye blessed of the Lord!" (Nathan places a blanket about the shoulders of his friend. The pilgrims travel in groups, affording intervals for the conversation of the two.) Well, Nathan, still they come like the tread of a great army on their way to see this wonderful healer. Ha-ha-ha! The miracle-working Carpenter!

Nathan. (tolerantly) Yea, Malchius.

Malchius. 'Tis said his wondrous cures have stirred the country throughout all Esdraelon.

Nathan. (with quiet incredulity) Thou art a strange, unseemly creature, Malchius. While multitudes go daily unto Nazareth to be made whole, thou still remainest at thy begging-post, thy blinded eyes fixed on thy lust for alms.

Malchius. (self-pityingly) Yes, I am blind.

Nathan. Let not thy sightless eyes forbid thy soul to see the light that gleams in Galilee. Come, I will lead thee to the Carpenter.

Malchius. (raising a deprecating hand) Ah, do not weary me.

Nathan. I cannot understand thee, Malchius. Dost thou no longer hope to have thy sight returned?

Malchius. Yes, I still hope. (as though to assure himself) Yea, Nathan, I call the gods to witness that I long to see. It were blasphemy to think otherwise. I was not blind from birth, thou must recall. I, too, once walked without a staff or guide. I, too, once looked upon the glory of the world and bartered in the market-place for wares. Yea, I—

Nathan. Why dost thou not come with me then unto the Carpenter?

Malchius. Believest thou this man hath worked the miracles to which the wagging tongues of strangers testify?

Nathan. One cannot well deny the wonders one hath seen, my friend. (There are excited cries and exclamations of praise off left. The strains of a song of praise are heard in the distance.)

Malchius. What is the turmoil? Alms! Alms!

Nathan. (crossing and looking off left) A man is praising God—he holds a staff and leaps for joy—(The voices are heard close at hand.)

Abdon. (appearing) Great is Jehovah! Aye, great and merciful is the Lord! Praise to the Son of God!

Pilgrims. (appearing with him)

1. Glory to Jehovah!
2. Praise to our God!
3. Blessed be the Nazarene!

Nathan. What is it, my friend?

Abdon. I was lame from birth. I dragged my way unto the Carpenter of Nazareth! He called upon Jehovah and I was healed! (He proceeds right followed by the crowd.)

Nathan. Say on!

Abdon. I cannot speak of it for joy! Go from me, staff! (he casts his staff to the ground amid the murmurs of the throng.) I have a surer stay to guide my steps than thou! Glory be to God! (With upraised hands he exits right followed by the people.)

Malchius. Alms! Alms! Give heed ye blessed! Alms! (sorrowfully) See'st thou, Nathan? (Nathan, absorbed in the departing throng does not reply.) Nathan! Nathan!

Nathan. Yes, Malchius. I am here.

Malchius. Behold how men forget me when they have wherewith to praise. These miracles are evil to my trade!

Nathan. Thou must come unto Nazareth! There is no further doubt that thou can'st have thine eyes made whole! Come, Malchius!

Malchius. (doggedly) I first must think on it. When I was younger I was taken everywhere—yea, wherever rumors of a miracle were heard—and all for naught.

Nathan. But, Malchius, one must still hope! One must still trust!

Malchius. I am quite well-contented with the dark. I love to hear the shekels fall into my cup. I love to touch and handle them and guess their worth! There is delight in it thou can'st not know! Ha-ha-ha!

Nathan. (astounded) Is't possible that there are blind who do not wish to see!

Malchius. (in defense) I tell thee truthfully, friend Nathan, it seemeth strange to me that this young Nazarene should seek to minister unto the rabble as 'tis said. It is not like a man to seek another's welfare than his own.

Nathan. But He delights in serving them. Therefore He came into the world.

Malchius. Yea, I have heard that He hath said He is a servant unto men.

Nathan. And it is true. He holds that love and sacrifice and service unto humankind doth constitute the beautiful in life.

Malchius. Therefore I doubt. It is not possible that such a man should rise in Galilee.

Nathan. Hast thou not heard how He did rout those from the temple who sold and traded there? "My Father's house," he said, "shall not be made a den of thieves." Hast thou not heard how on the sea of Galilee—

Malchius. It is too strange; too out of keeping with the ways of priests and kings . . . far too unreal, good Nathan, for the common man. When thou hast lived as long as I, then thou shalt see these bold reformers hold their passing moment in the play of life and then pass on. There is one way for them—yea, one, my friend, a long and rugged way that leads unto a prison or a cross.

Nathan. Thou wilt not come to Nazareth?

Malchius. Nay. I'll sit upon this faithful stone and wait until the gods pass by with alms.

Nathan. Malchius, Malchius; and would'st thou sit in darkness evermore?

Malchius. Pray let me think on it.

Nathan. Ah, Malchius—how my heart grieves to think One waits for thee in Nazareth! (Pilgrims, soldiers and children enter from right.)

Malchius. Alms! Alms! Hear, ye blessed of the Lord! Alms! (when there is a break in the crowd, a man drops a coin into the beggar's cup) Jehovah bless thee! Jehovah prosper thee, stranger! (Malchius fingers the coin greedily and touches it lightly against his cheek) Alms! Alms! (More pilgrims enter and Nathan and Malchius exit with the rest.)

Narrator. Let not thy blinded eyes forbid thy soul to see the Light that gleams in Galilee. But Malchius went his selfish way, following his cry for alms wherever it might lead. (The Narrator then exits. Jim returns. If make-up has been used he has removed it.)

IS CHRIST HISTORICAL?

Part Two

By H. O. Smith

CHRIST FORETOLD

Most people will take the Bible as authentic history, and studying its pages we find wonderful predictions of a personage that was to come into the world, and very early in God's dealings with mankind we are impressed with the thought that he was making an extraordinary effort to impress upon the minds of the hearers or readers the importance of this personage, and the relationship that should prevail between him and humankind. The first reference to this personage, so far as the Authorized Version of the Scripture is concerned, is found in Genesis 49: 10, and reads as follows:

"The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."

One of the peculiar features of the Bible is its terseness, and the power of the writers thereof to impart much information in few words. And I think this passage is a prize sample, if it is possible to select a prize sample from so many evidences of this peculiarity. History is full of incidents of devotion and loyalty to a reigning house or family. Men have cheerfully gone to their death in support of what is sometimes called the "divine right of kings." And here God appeals to this loyalty. This prediction was made before the establishment of the Kingdom of Israel, and it is predicted that Judah should rule over that kingdom when it was established for a period, how long the period was to be is not stated, but subsequent history shows that this rule extended over several hundred years. The children of Israel being convinced that Judah and his house being divinely appointed to rule over them, naturally their devotion and loyalty to this reigning house would be intense, and would increase, perhaps, in intensity as the centuries passed. But there was to come a time when all this accumulated devotion and loyalty was to be instantly transferred to this personage called Shiloh. What could God have said that would more effectually impress upon the mind of his people the importance of this personage, and their allegiance to him.

We next find Moses endeavoring to impress the minds of the children of Israel with the importance of their acceptance and obedience to a certain prophet that was to come. In Deuteronomy 18: 18, 19, we find him writing as follows:

"I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him."

Another brief, terse statement, yet full of meaning. Three distinct reasons or motives are given here why they should accept this prophet that was to come. First, Moses was an acknowledged lawgiver to Israel. And he has become not only a lawgiver to Israel, but he is acknowledged as the greatest lawgiver known to man, up to that time, and all national law is based upon the precepts he has left to the world. And this prophet was to be like him, a great lawgiver.

Second, God impresses upon the mind of the reader or hearer that he would speak to this other prophet just as he had spoken to Moses. Men instinctively look to God for salvation, not to man. They know that man can raise them no higher than man, hence any plan of salvation must come from God. If I should go before any congregation and tell them that my message of salvation came from my own mind and brain, they would laugh me to scorn. They would tell me that I did not understand even the simple instincts of the human heart and mind. Hence God, in speaking of this prophet that was to come would not speak of himself, but would speak as the inspiration of the Almighty gave him understanding.

Third: Again he appealed to an instinct born within man, and prevailing alike with the learned and the unlearned, civilized or uncivilized, that we must finally give an account to some higher tribune for our acts here on earth. Hence the statement, "whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him," emphasizes the importance of the message he will bring, and how careful we should be to follow his counsels.

The book of Job, critics agree, cannot have been written later than the fourth century before Christ, and some of them place its composition as early as the seventh century. The author is uncertain, but whoever wrote is made to exclaim:

"For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."—Job 19: 25.

This would indicate a familiarity with the idea of an expected Messiah, and this idea seems to run like a golden thread through all the sacred writings, and grows brighter and brighter as the centuries pass, and the time of his appearance nears, and the writings of Isaiah are full of predictions of his coming, and sometimes his descriptions of this coming prophet are so vivid as to challenge one's admiration, as they form a prehistoric tale of the activities of the Christ, the manner of his birth, his lowly

career, his sufferings and death. His birth is predicted by Isaiah in the following manner:

"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel."—Isaiah 7: 14.

Here is a prediction, not impossible, but improbable of fulfillment, yet, if we believe the New Testament narrative concerning the birth of Christ, it was fulfilled. It is safe to presume that this prediction is divine. No man would presume to make such a prediction as that, knowing that it was contrary to all human experience. This prediction and its recorded fulfillment has been the stumblingblock over which many a man's faith has been wrecked, and yet scientific men have acknowledged that it is not an impossibility. But this incident is not unique as a stumblingblock; all of the miracles attributed to Christ are equally criticized, and pronounced impossible by some.

The next prediction to which I wish to call attention is found in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and furnishes a wonderful example of the clearness of vision that inspiration gives to the prophet. The chapter may well stand as a history of the Christ while he was here on earth. The predictions of the Christ take two forms. One describes his earthly life, the other his final triumph, and the final effects of a belief and practice of his precepts. The one I now quote is a description of his earthly career, and his reception by men. I will quote the whole chapter:

"Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore I will divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."

It would be difficult to tell the story of the Christ, as this prophet tells it, even with all of the facts of his life and work before us, and make it more complete. Perhaps the fact that, as the prediction presents it, he was "despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him: he was despised and we esteemed him not," will account for the attitude of the contemporary historians toward him. Certain it is that this prediction uttered, according to the chronology generally accepted, over seven hundred years prior to Christ's advent on earth, was literally fulfilled in the story of his life as we have it today.

The next prediction I shall cite presents a different picture, depicting his glorious triumph, when men will be forced, because of the beauty of his life and precepts, to acknowledge him as supreme in the ranks of men of sublime genius, unsurpassed and unsurpassable. This prediction is found in the writings of this same prophet from which I have already quoted the description of his earthly life. I quote now from his ninth chapter, sixth and seventh verses:

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

"His name shall be called Wonderful." How true is the prediction. Men honor the name of Christ today to an extent hardly conceivable, when one contemplates the small stir he made while here on earth. Yet if you or I take the pen to write a letter or date a document, the first thing we do is to pay tribute to the name of Christ by writing at the head of that letter or document, "the year of our Lord 1933." However it is not only by the writing of the date line that men have declared the wonderfulness of his name, but eulogies have been forced from the lips and pens of men who did not believe in his divinity, and eulogies have gladly come from those who have been impressed with his divinity, because they experienced the value of his teachings and example in transforming their lives and characters. I will not quote from this latter class, but content myself with giving a few testimonies from the unbelievers. The first I shall present is from Mr. Keable himself.

and his desire to cooperate enlisted, what more is religion, except the individual communion of the Spirit, which he will involuntarily recognize as he grows older?

Surely, all this takes time, and many busy mothers feel that when they have provided for the physical needs of the child, they can afford to let the Sunday school teacher and the pastor do the training along spiritual lines, while she is sure that the school teacher is quite capable of molding the embryo man into the condition where he will develop into the social individual that she wants him to become. But the woman who is wide awake to the possibility of her stewardship and the responsibility of developing it will feel that there is nothing more important than the wielding of her influence, and the exercising of her powers towards the bringing into fruitage, the God-given potentialities in the immortal soul of her child. True, she may have to give up many times some individual entertainment, or the opportunity to enjoy some long-wished-for lecture that would give her passing satisfaction. But one of the factors in character-building is the power to make right choices. And the true mother who regards her stewardship of motherhood as a sacred trust will not only think of the entertainment of the hour, but will try to look into the future of the child; and if the sacrificing of an entertainment or a lecture, or the time spent in reading a popular book and the devoting of that time to the child will result in helping him to develop some trait of character that will aid him in the future, or assist him in overcoming some weakness that might hinder him in the future, can she not rightfully feel that she is making the most of her stewardship?

I have heard a mother say, "Oh, it's such a little thing; he didn't notice; it won't amount to anything." But too many mothers in this "hastening time" are busy doing nothing to really know what their children really do understand. One mother was very much surprised when in a conversation within their home it was discovered that a five-year-old child had no idea of what color meant. Too many mothers do not know their children. Too many card parties, picture shows, cheap cars and cheap gas. I myself enjoy a good picture show; but I do not think it is wisdom to go every week, even; and many people go much oftener, which is a needless extravagance of money and a waste of time that might be spent with their children to a better advantage.

TEACHING

Another phase of a mother's stewardship is that of teaching; and certain rules must be observed if results are to be obtained. Since the teacher must know what she would teach, many children are not taught as they should be in the home, simply because of the ignorance of the mothers. The child's interest is not awakened because the mother has no interest herself. In the development of the child's character an effort should be made to strengthen the right impulses and tendencies and to eliminate wrong impulses and tendencies by "satisfiers and annoyers." Wise is the mother that realizes the danger of making a wrong application of reward and punishment! For example; to stimulate a disposition to whine by giving a child what he cries for. To get the proper development, the reward or punishment should be connected with the action, in the mind of the child.

Habit! We are all creatures of habit. Possibly the child has no idea that he is being punished when he hears the first "no, no," but it is quite probable that he will associate the look on his mother's face and the tone of her voice, though it may not be unnecessarily harsh, with that particular action. In the beginning of our education we learn fundamentals. Early school days teach us what figures mean. We must learn to write them, to read them, then to add, subtract, multiply (and, oh, that multiplication table), then divide. No matter how high we may go in mathematics, we never lay aside those fundamental principles. So, in the direction of character-building, which we hope to make Godlike, we must lay a foundation with the principles of good habits, proper attitudes toward life, right conduct and reverence for things divine.

"From every one according to his ability; to every one according to his necessity," is an expression that has been very common among Latter Day Saints during the last few years. Then has not the child the right to expect to receive from his parents according to his necessity, physically, mentally, socially and spiritually, in order that when he comes to the age of accountability he may go on and make his contribution to society and the church according to his ability, gathering and making use of "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little," as he goes on to perfection?

SHAPING OF DISPOSITIONS

The home life should be so thoroughly permeated with the idea of stewardships that the development of the character of the child may be developed so that he will grow gradually from control by external restraint into adulthood with self-restraint. At birth the parents, mostly the mother, has the entire control over the child, but gradually the external or parental control diminishes, and the inner control takes its place; then the motivation of the child's life begins to make itself manifest. If the child's life has been properly motivated, his better self awakened, his interest in spiritual things made alive, he may be able to carry on over "fools' hill" without the usual upheaval in his life that many times causes him the loss of years in working in the Master's vineyard.

Who shall decide, then, in the development of a child's character whether he is to be a happy adaptable being, one that will cooperate in the home, one that is courteous to home folk as well as to those not of the home, or whether he will be of sullen moods, tempestuous temper, and unhappy disposition that will handicap him through life, because of his unhappy habit formation? "From every one according to his ability; to every one according to his necessity," and if it be needful for Johnny to have his temper disciplined, or if he seems to have a good healthy crop of selfishness developing, whose first duty is it to take care of those unwholesome tendencies? It is a part of the mother's stewardship to acquire the ability, if it is not hers naturally, to apply the proper remedies to eliminate undesirable tendencies, or better still, to prevent their development. Proper respect for law in the home stimulates a like-consideration for the civil law. And the child that has been properly controlled in the home is much more likely to make a good citizen in the community.

TEMPORAL AFFAIRS

Woman's stewardship in the home should make the use of money one of the first considerations. It is taken for granted when a man asks a woman's hand in marriage that he will provide her with a living. But it cannot always be taken for granted that the woman is able to spend the money to the best advantage in the maintenance of that home. So, one of her requisites should be a thorough understanding of the budget system. A budget is a plan for the expenditure of any commodity for a specific time.

The woman who is wise in her stewardship will cultivate a real appreciation of the value of money. She will study food values and learn to spend thoughtfully and wisely for the benefit of the entire family rather than selecting food simply for its pleasing appearance, its satisfaction to the appetite, or for the fact that it is easily and quickly cooked. She should budget her time also, and learn to make wise choices in the planning of her work, doing first things first.

She must work for cooperation in the family and know whether the living expenses are in proportion to the salary, whether the amount spent for groceries, clothes, amusements, etc., are in proper proportion, being sure that there is something for local and general church contributions after the tithing is paid. Paying tithing is not a contribution nor an offering; it is the paying of a debt. So that should be figured in the legitimate expense of the household, as also should there be a certain portion for individual development through the medium of good magazines, books, etc. But I hear some say, "Well, who is to decide just how much should be spent for certain things?" This is where we see the beauty of cooperation in the home.

The children, when they have reached the age of understanding, should be taken into the family council at times and be made to understand that they are to be provided with a certain amount. They should also be encouraged to keep a budget and required to make an accounting of what they spend. When it is placed in a real account, it appears so much worse, if spent foolishly; and on the other hand, it stimulates his self-confidence, when he has made wise expenditures, besides giving him a knowledge of keeping accounts, cultivating the ability of making the best use of what he has to spend, and helps to form the habit of living within his means.

The Gathering

The gathering is another factor in the zionic movement that may be made more effective by the stewardship of women. Zion is a condition, the pure in heart, as well as a place, which place has been designated as Jackson County, Missouri, as well as the regions round about. This condition must begin within the individual, for the homes of the Saints cannot rise higher in spiritual efficiency that the individuals making up the homes. Hence, the woman must not only be pure in heart, but she must seek to add to her influence and teaching in the home, her influence over those with whom she comes in contact in the church and the community in which she lives. Her stewardship should include the companions of her children. We can never estimate the good we may do by the influence of our lives over children that come into our homes. We cannot have a zionic community unless we have zionic homes, which homes, of course, must be composed of the "pure in heart."

In this day of specialists we admire and applaud and return thanks for the surgeon that can save the life of a loved one by the skillful manipulation of the knife; and we think and talk of how wonderful the efficiency expert that goes into a vast business concern, and alters the operation of the business in such a way that thousands of dollars in needless expense may be saved to the concern. And how our heart goes out in gratitude to the social worker that reclaims and turns towards reform delinquent boys and girls, who goes into broken homes and heals the marriage tie that is all but severed, who reconciles two hearts that have been almost crushed, and helps to restore confidence well-nigh destroyed. But oh, how much better would be a situation where measures for social evils might be made preventive instead of curative! If we could, figuratively speaking, build a wall of prevention around the cliff of social evils, and save the youth from the plunge over the precipice, instead of locating a hospital at the bottom of the cliff for the cure of their ills after the damage is done! Would not that be a fair step in the direction of establishing our earthly Zion? Could we establish such a community, each one interested in the welfare of his neighbor as well as himself, it could not fail to attract the notice of the world as a light set upon a hill, as well as to be a means of safety and protection to our youth. If we could have such a place, and it is possible in the gathering, where purity of life, integrity of purpose, and cooperation brought about through the spirit of altruism, and could have among the homes making up such a community these things, the idea of the gathering would not be simply a Eutopian ideal, but a real demonstrable part of our zionic movement.

The Leisure Hours

Our days of twenty-four hours are quite well divided, eight hours to work, and the same length of time to sleep, and another period of the same length for leisure. So our time for work and sleep is quite well established; but what about our leisure? Fortunate is the family that has for a mother one that will utilize at least a part of the leisure hours for the children. There are innumerable ways in which the thoughtful and consecrated mother may spend the leisure hours in teaching her children beautiful truths that will linger in their minds, and may perchance, in after-years come to mind in just the psychological moment to prevent their stepping aside, that will bind them to her by the chain of love and strengthen their confidence in her, which is a most-desired and much-prized condition. The song in the twilight hour that tells of the goodness of God to his children, or the story of some of our wonderful church characters that were real people may appeal to the youthful mind with such inspiration, that it may result in a life being consecrated and dedicated to the work of the Master and to the uplift of his fellow man.

Precept and Example

Our stewardship is more than just bringing children into the world. While it is true that an essential part of woman's stewardship is primarily giving birth to children, it goes out and on in the development of the character of their own children; and her influence through them extends to their associates on and on as the waves from the pebble dropped in the water go on and on. There is not much use to say "do this," or "don't do that," if our example is not in harmony with our teaching. We do not teach a child sanitation when we want him to be clean; we simply live it with him until it gets to be a part of his very being. If we want our children to be religious, then we must live religion and make it a part of our lives every day. No sham or make-believe—that does not appeal to any but "tiny tots." And though the women can never hope to hold the priesthood in the church, yet "there is not a member of the priesthood who is not some woman's stewardship," working together with God.

Jim. How did you like it, Dad?

Webb. Who wrote that, Jim?

Jim. Oh, we sort of wrote it together. I know it could be improved and it will be, too, as we go along.

Mrs. Webb. It is splendid Jim, just the way it is.

Webb. There is something true and challenging about it. (quietly) Where did you pick up the idea?

Jim. Maybe it was too big a subject for us to handle. But we thought we might bring out the fact that just as Malchius was physically blind so lots of folks are spiritually blind. Just as Malchius cared only for the thrill and touch of shekels, so there are people today who get a thrill out of nothing but money.

Mrs. Webb. (smiling) You'll get there Jim, keep it up.

Jim. (looking at his father) What's the matter, Dad? Didn't you like it?

Webb. (thoughtfully) Yes, very much. Too much perhaps. I said there was something challenging about it. There are men in life today, beggars, business men, executives who have blinded themselves against principles of the Carpenter of Galilee. And I suppose until we change, until we are willing to have Him open our eyes we must remain blind. (after a moment of silence) Jim, I wonder if you'd ask Cleve to bring his folks over here tonight?

Jim. Sure. They'll be glad to come.

Mrs. Webb. Norman, I—

Webb. And when they're here we'll talk over lots of things. Maybe we'll see if we can't get some costumes and properties for your group.

Jim. You're all right, do you know that, Dad?

Webb. You're not such a bad old beggar yourself. Run along now and get cleaned up.

Jim. I'll be ready in a minute. You haven't any idea how good it feels to have one's eyes open again. It's no fun being blind—even in a play! (He exits. As Webb turns to his wife the curtain falls.)

If you are sighing for a lofty work,
If great ambitions dominate your mind,
Just watch yourself and see you do not shirk
The common little ways of being kind.

THE FORUM

The Fall of Man

Was It Necessary? Was It for Good or Evil?

"Whether the fall, so called, was the result of design on the part of the Creator, or whether it was only a matter foreknown as a thing that would occur, ought not really to be the subject of speculation: it is far safer to take what did occur and accept it with its sequence, and leave speculation out of it." (Editorial, Saints' Herald, July 30, 1898, page 454.)

The question quoted and used as a heading for this article is a vital one affecting our concept of God, whom to know is life eternal. Upon the answer to this hinges the answer to another query, "Is sin ever a necessity?" or, "Is it ever excusable for man to do evil that good may come?" Paul declared this to be inexcusable, bringing a just damnation upon those who so reason. (See Romans 3: 7, 8.)

If sin was planned by the great Creator—if the fall was foreordained, where was, (and is,) the agency of man, and where the possibility of obedience to the command of the Master, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect"?

The Character of God

Habakkuk says, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity," (chapter 1: 13) and the prophet of the Restoration agrees with this when he brings us the word of the Lord, "I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.)

If Christ Jesus could be perfected through suffering, yet without sin, (see Hebrews 2: 17, 18 and 4: 15, 16,) then he was justified in laying upon man the injunction, "Break not my commandments for to save your lives," and the way of salvation, or the road to perfection is never the detour of sin or transgression, even though an All-wise Creator has provided a means of rescue or redemption broad enough and so inclusive that it will eventually help the repentant sinner back to the highway of righteousness.

No, God did not send the Devil on a mission to "Deceive and blind men and to lead them captive at his will—those who would not hearken to his, (God's) voice." What he did do was to permit Lucifer to exercise his own agency, and in his choice of evil to pay the penalty of sin—to be cast out of the presence of God—cast down to the earth, even as, at a later date Adam paid the same penalty, and by this choice Lucifer became the Devil and the father of lies, losing his place as "A Bright and Morning Star," and in this new role he became "The prince and power of the air"—the sovereign of those who list to obey evil, as Paul puts it.

Yes, we also, believe that "God . . . could destroy evil if he wished," and more than this, that he does wish to do so, and will accomplish the destruction desired, but in his own time and way, (see 1 Corinthians 15: 22-26,) and while we may not understand perfectly the why of all His ways we are assured that, "As for God his way is perfect." (2 Samuel 22: 31 and Psalm 18: 30,) and never can necessitate sin, for "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Just here seems an excellent place to conclude this article, if our editors will republish the editorial quoted from at the beginning of our essay. I will only say in conclusion that this question with the affirmative answer, was one of the first stumbling-blocks, doctrinally, that I met at the beginning of my ministry, and only after long fasting and prayer was it answered to me by the revelation of the Holy Spirit. I was tempted to write this solution as given to me, that it might be published in the Saints' Herald, but refrained from doing so, saying to myself, "You're only a priest, better let some one else answer it," and to my joy and comfort, before the year was out this editorial appeared confirming the message of the Spirit to me.

Sad, indeed, is the lot of the Saint who concludes, with some that we meet today, "I'm only mortal, I cannot live without violating God's law."

A. M. Chase.

Salt Lake City, Utah, October 10, 1931.

There are many well-intentioned people today who will tell you that the conflict between science and religion is over. It is not so. What has been rather loosely called the conflict between science and religion is just reaching its acute phase. Up to the present the fighting has been an affair of outposts; the incidents of Galileo and Darwin were but skirmishes. The real conflict is to come: it concerns the very conception of Deity. . . .

At the present moment, organized religion happens to be arrayed, on the whole, against organized science. But the real conflicts are between bad, limited or distorted religion and pure and high religion; and between limited and grudging science and science full and unafraid.—Julian S. Huxley.

Prayer and Testimony

Trust in the Lord

By Carrie Smith

Recent experiences in my family have taught me that if you put your trust in the Lord and pray without ceasing, he will provide.

My husband who is seventy-four years old, had been sick for fifteen months, very ill. One doctor diagnosed his case as one thing, and then a specialist after examination, X-rays and telescope pictures, said he had an internal cancer. Three other doctors concurred with him in the opinion that he could not possibly live over a month or two. They advised him if he had papers to make out or business to attend to, to do it at once. His condition was very serious. He had lost weight until he weighed only one hundred and four pounds, and could scarcely walk.

For fifteen months I prayed that God would spare his life, and that he might turn to the Lord and serve him. I prayed that he might not only be healed in body but in soul also. My prayers seemed to receive no answer, and I was sorely grieved. I called upon our pastor's wife and told her that I thought the Lord had forsaken me, that my prayers seemed unavailing.

A short time after I was blessed with a spiritual experience in which I was given to know that my prayers had been answered and that my husband would get well.

Two days later, we began to see a difference in him, and since that time he has been getting better. He has gained in weight and appetite. Took a fishing trip of one hundred miles which did not seem to trouble him. The doctors say his recovery is miraculous—they cannot understand it.

I trust this testimony will help some brother or sister who is going through a similar experience. Saints, let us trust implicitly in the Lord.

Testifies of Helps and Healings

By Mrs. Dan C. Bobbitt

It has been five years since I joined the church. I have borne my testimony at services but as yet have never done so for the Herald.

I want to assure those belonging to this church, that they are in the true church. I wish to say also to those having church privileges that they have a golden opportunity, and should not fail to take advantage of it.

I have been isolated most of the time. At present, we live thirty-five miles from a branch, and only occasionally are we able to attend services.

I have been administered to several times and have received healing each time. Just lately I was administered to by Brother D. T. Williams. I had been seriously ill, but immediately following the administration I was able to go to the kitchen and take charge of the cooking for my thirteen fishermen. I am now doing all of my own housework.

I have two boys, one twelve years old and the other almost a year old. I hope I may continue in health and strength for their sakes. I hope also, to live a better life, doing my daily tasks more cheerfully.

I ask an interest in your prayers in behalf of my family, and also that my husband will embrace the gospel.

GRAYLING, MICHIGAN.

Vision Is Fulfilled

About two years ago Brother William Hardy, of Niles, Michigan, and a member of South Bend-Mishawaka Branch, was given a spiritual experience in which he was assured that his branch was in a healthy condition and was doing well. He was also told that if the Saints were prayerful and careful to do what is right, the branch would continue to grow.

Since that time the branch has gained seventeen members by baptism and ten by transfer, and has lost eleven by transfer and two by death. This leaves a net gain of fourteen members.

The Duty of Isolated Parents

By Edna F. Henry

Dear isolated Saints who have children, do not think it necessary to wait until you move into a branch to teach your children the gospel. It is the duty of parents to plant the gospel seed in the hearts of their children from babyhood up, and this we can do in our own homes while we long for the joy and blessings that come to us through the association of our own people.

I can testify that if we are faithful in this, even though there be opposition, the Lord will open up the way for our children to be baptized.

My boys when babies loved the pictures and stories of The Gospel Story, by Frances, Hurlbut's Story of the Bible, and later material from the standard church books. It is through reading the latter, the Herald, and singing the songs of Zion that I, too, am able to enjoy the blessed Spirit of the Master.

May we never think that we can endure the trials of life in our own strength, but may we be found often in communion with our heavenly Father through prayer, that we may come through the furnace, through the heat, fit material to be used in the building of God's kingdom here on earth.

Attended Spiritually Helpful Services

By Rosie Ayers

I am thankful to the Lord for what he has done for me, and I trust him for future blessings. I know that he has blessed me, and desire the prayers of all that my faith may be strengthened.

I have two sisters who married out of the church, but one has joined the church since, and I pray that the other will also join. I have three brothers all of whom have obeyed the gospel message.

We arrived home a short time ago from a three-day conference at Edmonton. Four were baptized, some children blessed, and two young men were ordained to the office of elder. This gathering was blessed with wonderfully spiritual meetings. Everyone was happy to welcome Apostle J. F. Curtis once more, and we are looking forward to his meeting with us here at Millet.

QUESTION TIME

Harmonize Ezekiel 37:16, Alma 8:3, and Doctrine and Covenants 26:2.

Ezekiel refers to writings for Joseph, Ephraim, and the house of Israel his companions. Alma states that Lehi was a descendant of Manasseh, son of Joseph. The Doctrine and Covenants states that the keys of the record of the stick of Ephraim was committed to Moroni. I presume the supposed difficulty is in the fact that Lehi was not of Ephraim, yet the Book of Mormon came by those of his lineage, to a great extent at least. But I do not think this is so vital as might be supposed, for while Ezekiel states the record was to be written for Joseph, Ephraim, and the house of Israel, he does not state who should produce it.

The Book of Mormon is usually recognized as the predicted "stick" of Ephraim, but this means that its message is largely directed to Ephraim, I think, and not that it was to be sent from Ephraim. This might or might not be the case, so far as these prophecies are concerned. Futhermore it should be noted that it was to be written "for Joseph" and for the "house of Israel his companions." If those to whom the latter day restoration was committed are sent with this message to Israel, Ephraim, and others, it seems to me this would fulfill the intent of the prophecy. So far as the American Indians may be considered of Ephraim, which some hold, it should be remembered that others besides Lehi were their ancestors, and we are not informed whether or not some may have been of Ephraim's descendants.

Should tithes be paid on the whole income, or on the net income?

The principle of tithing is a tenth of what one possesses. The gross income is not usually the actual property of the one who receives it, in a moral sense, except as he discharges the obligations incurred in obtaining it. The wholesaler may trust his grocer or other merchant with goods of much value, with the understanding that from the sale of the goods the wholesale price is to be paid. Morally, then, the merchant owns only what profit he makes. In recognition of this principle, tithing should be paid on what the owner has, less any indebtedness he may owe. Each year, or at less periods if more convenient, the individual should ascertain how much he has actually increased in net worth, and should then pay his tithe on the amount of the increase, having previously paid tithes on that which he had acquired hitherto.

Should I spend for luxuries before paying tithing owed?

The Scriptures tell us that the tithe belongs to God, and Malachi states that ancient Israel "robbed God" when they withheld the tithe from him. If Israel of old robbed God by not paying tithes, it seems to me that modern Israel robs him when they do likewise. God should surely be more highly esteemed than luxuries bought with money that belongs to him. It is proper and right to use our net resources to supply the necessities of life—the actual living expenses that are reasonably needed. But I know of no justification, divine or human, for taking the tithe that belongs to God (which is used to carry on his work and establish his kingdom) and spending it for selfish purposes, or in any way not approved of him. To do so is to cause God's work to be delayed or to suffer, and those who have been called to carry on his work also must suffer for want of needful things.

Is the location of the kingdom and tower of Babel known?

The word Babel is identical with the word Babylon, the city of which was probably the "beginning" of the kingdom referred to (Genesis 10:10). The plain of Shinar, in which the city and tower were begun, is a great alluvial plain in Babylonia. It is without stone or metals, therefore the builders used "brick for stone, and slime for mortar" (Genesis 11:3), before they were confounded.

The name Shinar itself is said to be equivalent to the old Babylonian name Shumer, found in the cuneiform inscriptions. The Sumerians, who preceded the Babylonians, knew Babylon by the name of Din-tir, a word meaning "seat of life." The Septuagint in Isaiah 11:11 renders the word Shinar "country of Babylon," which indicates its ancient meaning. The Sumerian name is probably the most ancient thus far known.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The observance of the Sunday was at first supplemental to that of the Sabbath, but in proportion as the gulf between the church and the synagogue widened, the Sabbath became less and less important, and ended at length in being entirely neglected. (Duchesne, Christian Worship, page 47.) We find the first day of the week called the Lord's day by Saint Paul (Acts 20:7; 1 Corinthians 16:2), and Saint John (Apocrypha 1:10.) . . . The Catholic church requires her children to keep the Sunday holy by hearing Mass, and by resting from servile work. (Question Box, page 409, 410, the 1929 edition.)

The above shows by two Catholic authorities that Sunday was being kept over two hundred years before the council of Laodicea was held. They positively claim that the apostles made the change.

I am convinced that the claim that the Catholic church (or the Pope) changed the Sabbath at the council of Laodicea is purely a presumption on the ignorance of the people. It is not considered by Catholics a general or ecumenical council. Notice the following: "By a general ecumenical council is understood a council to which the bishops of the whole world are lawfully summoned for the settling of some important matter, though it is not necessary for the validity of the council that all should attend. A council in order to be ecumenical must be convoked by the Pope, or at least with his consent, and be presided over by him, or by his legates. The decrees of a council must also have his approval. A general council headed by the Pope, by reason of its representing the whole church, has the privilege of doctrinal infallibility and supreme authority. It is evident that the largest assembly of bishops without the pope would be a body without a head, and could not represent the whole church." (Catholic Belief, pages 148, 149.)

Unless the council of Laodicea was a general or ecumenical council and convoked by the Pope, and presided over by either him or his legate, the whole church would not be bound by its decisions. We give the General Councils of the Catholic church, from a Catholic authority, covering the various dates in which different writers claim for the council of Laodicea. 1. The first council of Nice . . . 325, under Pope Sylvester, 318 bishops attending. 2. The first council of Constantinople, 381, confirmed by Pope Damasus I, 150 bishops present. 3. The council of Ephesus, Pope Celestine I, 431 A. D., about 200 bishops present. 4. The council of Chalcedon, Pope Leo the great, 451 A. D., 600 bishops present. From the above it will be seen that the council of Laodicea was not a general council of the Catholic church. As to its place among church councils we will examine it, from both Catholic and Protestant authorities. As to size, it was composed of 32 bishops from different provinces in Greece. (The Americana, volume 16, page 739. Also The New International Encyclopeadia, volume 13, page 556.) While the smallest general or ecumenical council of the century in which the council of Laodicea was held, viz. The council of Constantinople, 381 A. D., was composed of 150 bishops, or more than four times as many as the council of Laodicea. Then as to the history of this council, see "Laodicea, Council of." "A council was held during the fourth century, but whether towards the beginning or middle, or end has been earnestly debated without being determined. It consisted of 32 bishops from different provinces of Asia, and embodied its decisions in 60 canons, relating to matters of ritual, church order, dignity, precedence, discipline, morals, faith and heresy. The most important of them is the last, giving a list of the books of the Scriptures received at that time as canonical, which does not contain the Apocrypha or Revelation." (The New International Encyclopaedia, volume 13, page 556.)

"Laodicea, Council of.—Council held at Laodicea Ad Lyceum in Phrygia in the fourth century. The exact time of this council is disputed, Hefele placing it between 343 and 381, while Baronias maintains 314 as the correct date, and other years as late as 399 are considered by other authorities. The council was composed of thirty-two bishops from provinces of Asia and the results of its rulings are produced in sixty canons which are pronounced as binding on the Christian creeds through the world by the council of Chalcedon in 451. The canons are disciplinary in the main and make a privileged class of the clergy, but regulate strictly ritual, precedents, heresy, baptism, fasts, angel worship, and other matters of form and faith. From the canonical books of notable omissions are those of the Apocrypha and the Revelation."—The Americana, volume 16, page 739.

Refer to History of the Church, by Reverend J. A. Park-Hauser (Catholic) Professor of church history in the Provencal Seminary of Saint Francis De Sales, near Milwaukee, Wisconsin. In giving a history of Twenty Catholic Councils, from 181 to 668 A. D., the author gives no record of the Council of Laodicea. A history of the Christian Church, by Winston Walker, (Protestant) in listing Twenty Councils does not mention the council of Laodicea.

Refer to the Catholic Encyclopeadia. "There are extant, in Greek, sixty canons of a council of Laodicea. That this assembly was actually held, we have the testimony of Theodoret (Colose II, 18, P. P. LXXII, 619). There has been much discussion as to the date: Some have even thought that the council must have preceded that of Nicea (325), or at least that of Constantinople (381). It seems safer to consider it as subsequent to the latter. The canons are, undoubtedly, only a resume of an older text, and indeed appear to be derived from two distinct collections. They are of great importance in the history of discipline and liturgy. Protestants often, but quite without reason, invoked one of them in opposition to the veneration of angels."—Catholic Encyclopaedia, volume 8, page 794.

Now what does the above show?

The council of Laodicea was not a general or ecumenical council of the Catholic church. There were only thirty-two bishops present and they were from provinces in Asia. Therefore the Pope was not present. If it had been convoked by the Pope there would have been a date of the time of its convening kept, therefore the date of or at least the year would have been known.

It rejected the books of the Revelation and the Apocrypha which the Catholics accept, so all its canons are not considered binding. The Catholics tell us that its canons were merely a resume of an older text, therefore no primary change was made there. So to claim that that council was the place where the Pope changed the Sabbath is monumental nonsense.

But Adventists say that the Catholics claim that they changed the Sabbath, and that there is no Bible authority for the keeping of the first day. Well, we may reply by asking them to furnish a single text showing where any of the representatives of the church in the days of the apostles commanded or taught any of their converts to keep the seventh day. Where were any of the Gentile converts who were not acquainted with the Jewish methods of counting time instructed as to the importance of keeping the seventh day? They only have some opinions that are far from conclusive, based upon certain texts from which, according to their peculiar and sometimes strained interpretation, they support their claim. Until they can find some plain "Thus saith the Lord from the Bible, given directly to the Christian age" I see no occasion for their shouting that there is no Scriptural proof that the first day should be kept. We will examine later their texts by which they try to support their contention and their fallacy.

They flaunt a challenge by a Catholic priest, T. Enright, that he offers one thousand dollars to any one who will find one text from the Bible proving that the first day of the week should be kept as the Sabbath.

I have before me proof that Doctor Walter Gamble accepted of his challenge and offered either to submit the evidence he had to judges and let them decide, or meet him in public debate and let the audience vote whether or not he could prove that the Bible did prove that the first day was the Sabbath. I have before me the affidavit of two men who examined the correspondence between Doctor Gamble and Priest Enright saying that Mr. Enright absolutely refused to meet Mr. Gamble. So that challenge is of no value.

It is true that the Catholics do claim that they changed the Sabbath. But they are just as good witnesses as to the time of the change of the Sabbath as to the fact that they did change it. Now we have shown from incontestable evidence that the Catholics claim that the apostles made the change. Now when the Adventists accept the claim of the Catholics that they changed the Sabbath, by what right do they deny the time the Catholics testify the change was made?

The only proof the Catholics offer for their responsibility for the change of the Sabbath is based on Apostolic succession. So if Saint Peter was not the first Pope (which claim, all protestants deny) and the Roman Catholic church of today is not the true apostolic church in succession, the Catholics according to their own claim did not change the Sabbath.

Nor does the fact that they keep the first day as the apostles and early Christians did, make the day wrong, not that any other good thing the apostles did would be wrong because the Catholics still observe it. That the first day of the week was kept in the first century, Mosheim says: "All Christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week, on which the triumphant Savior arose from the dead, for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the church at Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the apostles, who consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose, and it was observed universally throughout the Christian churches, as appears from the united testimonies of the most credible writers. The seventh day of the week was also observed as a festival, not by the Christians in general, but by such churches only as were principally composed of Jewish converts."—Moshiem's Ecclesiastical History, part 2, chapter 4, verse 4. (Quoted from Compendium, by H. A. Stebbins and M. Walker.)

Justin Martyr, of the same century, wrote:

"On the day called Sunday, all Christians who live in cities or in the country meet together and the writings of the apostles and prophets are read. Then the president makes an oration to the assembly, exhorting them to imitate and do the things that they have heard. Then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament." (From Justin's First Apology, chapter 67, as rendered by Whitby, in Jenks Commentary on 1 Corinthians 16: 2.)

The following from the Ante-Nicene Fathers, Ignatius, a companion of the apostles, says of himself, and of the church in general: "They are no longer observing the Sabbath, but living in the observance of the Lord's day. . . . Let every friend of Christ keep the Lord's day as a festival, the resurrection day, the queen and chief of all days." (Epistle to the Magnesians, chapter 9.)

The above testimony shows that Sunday or the first day of the week, was observed in the time of the apostles, and that the legislation made in the time of Constantine and later did not change the Sabbath, but was enacted for the purpose of enforcing a practice instituted in the days of the apostles. The right or wrong of the day kept could no more be affected by the laws made to enforce it than in regard to any other law or sacrament.

We have noted that Sunday keeping was practiced in apostolic times, and shown that the standard Catholic authorities agree that it is true. Also we have brought to the claim such authorities as Justin Martyr, Ignatius, and Mosheim, all agreeing that the practice was by apostolic appointment, and that the efforts to establish the claim made by Adventists that the Pope changed the Sabbath cannot be sustained either by Scripture or history.

We will now present some direct Bible evidence. "And on the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) The Adventists try to explain away this text by claiming that the people met on the Sabbath and remained together until after sunset which according to Jewish reckoning would make it the first day of the week. This is merely a presumption on the ignorance of the people. The place Troas was a Roman and not a Jewish city. The writer, Luke, was not a Jew. Theophilus, judging by the title, "most excellent," must have had official prominence in Rome, or have been connected with the Roman government. See Smith's Bible Dictionary, on the name "Theophilus." The Bible Dictionary, by Philip Schaff, says, "Luke (Greek Lucas. Colossians 4: 14; 2 Timothy 4: 14; Philemon 1: 24) is probably an abbreviation of Lucanus, possibly Lucilius, but Lucius (Acts 13: 1; Romans 16: 21) the evangelist was not a Jew, as is evident from Colossians 4: 14, where the beloved physician is distinguished from the circumcision." Therefore, since neither the writer nor the one being written to were Jews, and the place where the letter was written being a Roman city, and since, according to Smith's Bible Dictionary (article "Day"), we find that the Romans counted time from midnight to midnight, it is unreasonable to claim that the time was counted according to the Jewish system. Reason would say that time there would be counted by the Roman rule.

Again according to Acts 20: 7, "They came together on the first day of the week, to break bread." Apparently a sacramental service. They came together for that purpose: and to try to show that they had been together and stayed until the beginning of the first day would be to change a plain statement of the Bible. The Douay (or Catholic) version says in a footnote, "And on the first day of the week," here Saint Chrysostom and many other interpreters of the Scriptures explain that the Christians even at this time must have changed the Sabbath to the first day of the week (the Lord's day) as all Christians keep it. Acts 20: 7, in the Emphatic Diaglott, reads, "And on the first day of the week we having assembled to break bread, Paul intending to depart the next day. . . ." So in spite of the statement of the Adventists, and of some Catholics, the highest Catholic authorities, even their Bible as their leading men interpret it, support the fact that in Paul's day the first day was being kept. To this agree the Catholic Encyclopaedia, and Conway's Question Box previously referred to. In both works (referred to above) reference is also made to 1 Corinthians 16:2 to show that it was understood at that time that they were to meet on the first day of the week.

According to John 20, Jesus appeared to his deciples in the room where they were assembled the day of his resurrection and gave them instruction regarding their mission. Then in eight days (the second first day) he appeared to them again. (See John 20: 19-31.)

Pentecost, at which time the disciples received the Holy Ghost, was the first day of the week, (see Smith's Bible Dictionary, article "Lord's day") John the Revelator was in the Spirit on the Lord's day when the great vision was shown him on the Isle of Patmos. All Bible students, except Adventists and a few believers in the old Jewist sabbaths, admit that the name (Lord's day) as used in the Bible, and by the early Christians, was the first day of the week: and nowhere do we find it used for the Jewish sabbaths.

Protestants do not believe that the Pope was established as "the universal father" in the first century. Various dates are assigned ranging from 475 to 663, and one writer gives the time as 1073 when the papacy came into power.

Adventists give the time of the establishing of the Pope as 538. It might be interesting if they could explain how the Pope changed the Sabbath in 364 as they claim and at the council of Laodicea when according to their own teachings he was not established until 538.

Northwestern Reunion a Blessed Experience

Many Encamped for Entire Time

The reunion at Silver Lake, Washington, August 4-13, from a standpoint of numbers, preaching and teaching, working harmony, the light of revelation from God, and in short, a demonstration of the spirit and power of Zionic living, was an experience never to be forgotten. This was the joint reunion of the Seattle-British Columbia, Portland and Spokane Districts.

Of the general appointees there were present Elders M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer of the Twelve; D. B. Sorden, pastor at Los Angeles, California, and of the Seventies, Elder A. C. Martin and the writer. These, with district presidents Monte Lasater, J. L. Verhei, and Stanley Fout, comprised the reunion committee.

As early as the first evening of the reunion, there were about three hundred present for preaching service, and thereafter the numbers increased until from four hundred to four hundred and thirty-five were present each evening.

Attendance at adult classes conducted by Apostles McConley and Gleazer and Elder Sorden, averaged one hundred and forty-five, and at the adult prayer meetings, from one hundred and fifty, to two hundred each morning except Sundays, when three hundred and fifty and four hundred were present. The young people's prayer meeting ranged from one hundred and fifty-one to one hundred and seventy-nine, while senior young people's classes averaged ninety, with junior church averaging seventy-four, while other age groups were functioning regularly at the same hour.

One hundred tents and thirty-four cabins were occupied by the campers, while visitors poured in nightly from the neighboring vicinities. The reputation of the commissariat for food varieties and scientific preparation under the direction of Sister Holman was faithfully maintained. Permanent improvements on the grounds added to the comforts of all, and the missionaries and families were favored by tents having walls, floors, and equipment donated by the women who had made this one of their projects during recent years. In fact, on every hand were evidences of thoughtful kindness and Christ-like deeds of sacrifice for the happiness and comfort of the group.

Dutiful consecration of the many young people on the grounds was delightful. No wonder the Lord saw fit to reveal his will so powerfully through preaching, teaching, and the gifts. Throughout Elder Sorden's class studies and at other meetings it was emphasized that effective religious education must stir the emotions as well as convert the intellect. How true this is. Beyond doubt, the hundreds who participated in this reunion were so filled with love and appreciation of the Zionic experiences had, that they are determined to prepare for Zion as never before, to work for the permanency of that which we all enjoyed for ten days. Through the Spirit the Lord told his people that the gathering is on; that the time for gathering is now; that through what they had just been experiencing they could now see how Zion is to be redeemed.

This desire to hasten the Zionic preparation was enhanced, too, by most emphatic statements of the corrupt social and political conditions which are fast overwhelming the world, and the imminently dangerous conditions of the near future in the way of calamities predicted by the prophecies. Time after time, accompanied by spiritual power, warnings were given by Apostles McConley and Gleazer to the effect that the depression of the past will yet be looked back upon as times of peace and prosperity as compared with that which is to come; that a return of temporary prosperity with shorter hours and higher wages, will but hasten the destruction of the wicked, for the Lord has in definite terms told us what to expect. Babylon, with her international and national perplexities—selfishness, greed, fear, supicion, and distrust—is doomed; while the God-given and only solution lies in the application of the gospel of Jesus Christ to industrial, economic, and social conditions, leading to the establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth as foreshown by the prophets.

Our hearts were thrilled as Brother McConley pointed upon his map to those parts of the world where the gospel has been planted, and our souls were stirred with the hope that other peoples of the world may soon be reached. We sensed again the depth of love our brother has for people of other nations, and his desire for their salvation. We all should feel that way, and help to make their salvation possible.

From Brother Gleazer's utterances we understand that the spiritual light and liberty of this reunion were the best in his experience. New light came to him and to us as he preached daily, and as he treated in class upon the character and purposes of the gospel ordinances. One of the high points of his teaching was, that the ordinances were intended not only to establish relationships between the candidates and God, but to renew spiritual memories and relationships between the general church members and God, and to effect covenant relationships between them and the candidates receiving the ordinances. Therefore, all members should, as often as possible, make it their duty with prayerful preparation, to be present where the gospel ordinances are performed, helping to make them veritable sacraments through which God might reveal himself to them from time to time for their profit and salvation.

Our brother carried these thoughts very effectively into the ordinance of marriage, the young people being present also upon this occasion. Without equivocation he pleaded for the sanctity of the ordinance of marriage, which by its very nature and purpose should be performed in public, concerning as it does, God, the church, and the parties, and in the order named. The marriage covenant should be established not only between the parties, but between God, each other, and society. All possible, both married and unmarried, should be present to take part in that covenant relationship that it may indeed be a sacrament.

Great power accompanied our brother's last sermon as he made spiritual application to our reunion experiences of the text, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

Eight were baptized and confirmed the last Sunday of the reunion, a fine spirit attending.

Time and space forbid the relating of the good that came to us through the Spirit as we listened to the beautiful music and song appropriately rendered by consecrated talent; by hearing from our devoted young men and women from Graceland; and by the many prayers, testimonies, and associations of friends whose sacrificial devotion throughout the years has caused mutual endearment.

Happiness radiated alike from those who erected tents, served at the store, worked at the kitchen, at building our plumbing, who cleaned up the grounds, sold books at the Herald Office tent, swam or played, worshiped or studied in class. It was all just wonderful. But what a contrast to have to go back into the environs of the world for a time! May it not be long until the peace and beauty of Zion is our permanent experience.

HAROLD I. VELT.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Seven Certificates Earned in Class Work

July 9, an all-day meeting was held at the church in Colorado Springs. Prayer meeting at eight-thirty was the beginning of the services for the day. After church school, Brother J. D. Curtis delivered the morning sermon. Dinner was served in the lower auditorium of the church. The afternoon services were in charge of the church school. J. D. Curtis sang a solo, after which Ray Ebling and Harold Schneebeck each told of their trip to the Youth's Conference. Sisters Conway and Engstrom sang a duet, accompanied by Thelma Gardner. Floyd Engstrom presented seven people with certificates which they had earned in class work.

Out of town guests who have occupied the stand recently have been Elder Glaud A. Smith, of Denver; Brother Richard Salyards, junior, of Denver; Brother Conley, of Kansas City, and Apostle Roy S. Budd, of Independence, Missouri.

Sacrament service for the month of August was an outstanding one. From the opening hymn to the closing prayer, the service was beautiful and effective.

The young people's class drove to Canon City, and joined the young people there for a swimming party, after which ice cream and cake were served.

Manchester, England

Beresford Road Church Rededicated

July 15 marked the tenth anniversary of the dedication of the Beresford Road church, by the late J. W. Taylor, of Manchester. Special services were arranged to celebrate the occasion on Sunday, July 16.

Invitations were sent around to all of the local branches, and although the weather did not look very promising, a fair number was in attendance.

The afternoon meeting was opened by Elder James Baty. Music was furnished by the choir, under the direction of Elder Abel Hall. Immediately following the prayer, the Scripture lesson from John 14: 1-5 was read by Ruth Walker, a granddaughter of the late James Baty, Patriarch of the British Isles. Elder James Schofield, of Clayton, Manchester, was the afternoon speaker.

A program was presented immediately following the service, and the following numbers were rendered: A duet, by William Hall and Bobbie King, and also one by Ivy Stevenson and Blanche Tyrer. Solos were given by William Hall and Eric King. Miss Ivy Stevenson and Bobbie King each gave a recitation.

The evening service commenced at six-thirty. Elder W. R. Armstrong was in charge of the service. Brother Armstrong is the veteran pastor of the branch, and has spent over fifty years of his life in the church work. This year he will have completed fifty years of service as a minister.

District President Elder W. H. Chandler was the evening speaker. He gave great encouragement to all present. Music for the evening service was furnished by the choir, and Soloist William Hall. Recitations were given by Eric King and Ivy Stevenson.

After the benediction, the congregation remained standing while the choir sang, "We Are Thine." A fitting close for this memorable day were these words which were reverently sung:

"Low in the west the sunset glories linger,
Purple below and lucid pearl above;
There to our souls God writes with radiant finger,
Paints in the rose and gold the story of His love.
Love that came and sought us, counting not the cost,
Love that thou hast brought us, Savior of the lost!
Shelter'd from all evil in that love divine,
We are Thine, O Savior dear, living or dying Thine."

Joyfield, Michigan

Meetings Resumed Once Again

After six years of idleness, the little church at Joyfield has been opened up again, and meetings have been held since the first Sunday in May. With the assistance of Traverse City and Freesoil Saints, this small branch desires to go forward.

The efforts of different elders who have stopped to preach and administer to the sick, have been greatly appreciated.

An all-day meeting was held July 30, and Saints from Cadillac, Freesoil, South Boardman, Summit City, Bendon, and Traverse City were present. Prayer service was held at nine o'clock, and preaching followed immediately after. Four children of Brother and Sister E. J. Oligney were baptized and confirmed during the afternoon. Brother H. A. Doty, senior, presented an illustrated lecture in the evening on the subject, "A Walk Around the Walls of Old Jerusalem."

Brother George Baty, a life-long resident of Joyfield, passed away, July 28, after several years of failing health. A sunset funeral service was held in the Joyfield church, July 30. Brother B. H. Doty preached the sermon.

Hutchinson, Kansas

Young People Active

Coming through many discouragements, caused by apparent lack of interest in the gospel message, Saints of Hutchinson Branch were joyfully permitted with the assistance of Elder A. E. Stoft, of Wichita, to bring into the church two young people.

Three small children of Earl and Goldie Tyson were recently blessed.

The Young People's Department, as well as the children are active, and their work is much appreciated.

Elder T. Comer Turpin, pastor of Hutchinson Branch, is confined in the Santa Fe Hospital at Topeka, where he has been since July.

Traverse City, Michigan

Couple Celebrate Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

Brother and Sister C. B. Doty celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary, July 27. An enjoyable evening was spent in the church dining room with many relatives and friends, where supper was served

Many of the Saints of Traverse City, spent a short time at the Park of the Pines reunion. They reported it to be the best reunion ever held in Michigan. The sermons of President F. M. Smith were especially enjoyed.

Brother B. H. Doty, after several months' stay at home, has returned to Canada to visit and preach in the different places where he used to labor as missionary.

Sister Cora Wildy and family, accompanied by Sister E. J. Brackenbury and grandson, Leroy Dick, have returned to Des Moines, Iowa, after spending their vacation in Michigan.

Brother H. A. Doty is visiting in the Central and Eastern Michigan Districts, and giving illustrated lectures of the Holy Lands.

Apostle J. F. Curtis Visits Ribstone and Edmonton, Alberta

Apostle J. F. Curtis recently visited a three-day meeting at Ribstone, Alberta. Two young people were baptized, and two young men were ordained to the office of elder.

Brother Curtis reports that a fine feeling was evidenced among the people, and that the young people are engaged in active work.

The conference at Edmonton was well attended, and a fine feeling was present. Four people were baptized and two young men were ordained to the office of elder.

Nebo, Illinois

Evangelist Richard Baldwin Conducts a Series of Meetings

Evangelist Richard Baldwin conducted a series of meetings at Nebo, Illinois, beginning August 3. Here is what he has to say of it:

"Every service was well attended, with many nonmembers present. On the second Sunday a home-coming was planned, and the Saints from Alton were invited to come and camp on Brother and Sister Johnson's beautiful lawn, with a cold spring running close at hand. On Saturday night an entertainment around the camp fire was held, and a wiener roast engaged in. About forty of the Saints from Alton were there, as well as many other visitors and neighbors.

"Sunday was a big day. We started out with an inspiring prayer service at eight o'clock, and those who took part made the meeting a decided success. Our theme for the day was 'God Speaks to Us Through His Beautiful World.' Church school followed our prayer meeting, and the building was too small. Sister Remington, the district supervisor of the children's division was present, and she took about thirty juniors to a shady spot outside the church, and instructed them throughout the class period. The Kindergarten children, numbering about twenty, were taken care of by the local supervisor of the children, Sister Bernida De Lany. The rest of the group, young people and adults, were taught by the writer.

"At eleven o'clock, the district president, Roy Remington, brought a message to the people. A basket dinner was served at noon by the local Saints to the visitors.

"The ordinance of baptism was administered at two-thirty. During the next week the attendance increased, and again another baptismal service was held. During the series of meetings, nine were baptized.

"Sister Baldwin spoke prior to the preaching each night. For one week she used as the theme, 'The Materials of Worship,' the rest of the evenings she spent telling stories to the children, and relating experiences abroad that interested all. An art class was conducted in the afternoon by Sister Baldwin for the women and children. They are planning a bazaar for the near future, and some of the articles which they made will be used for that purpose.

"The Saints of that branch had not been holding meetings prior to our visit there last year, and since we were there they have roofed the church house, plastered and repapered the inside, and put on a new ceiling.

"We believe that we can truthfully say, as one of the sisters from Alton bore testimony in her home branch last week, 'We went there to help and inspire the Saints, but we came away ourselves with greater inspiration than we ever had before.' May God continue to bless the Saints at Nebo is our prayer."

Woodbine Reunion a Great Success

Prayer Services Especially Outstanding

The Woodbine Reunion which was held August 11-20, was a great success. A census was taken of the camp which showed fifty-eight tents occupied on the grounds, with two hundred and two people representing nineteen different towns. These, with the many who attended each day, and especially the large number each Sunday, made the reunion a success from the standpoint of attendance.

Apostle John Garver presided over the prayer services which were of a high type of spirituality. The service, August 13, was especially outstanding when the Lord delivered two messages to his Saints, through Brothers Gunsolley and Garver.

The sermons of Elder E. Y. Hunker, who was the evening speaker throughout the reunion, and Elder Ray Whiting, were especially helpful.

President F. M. McDowell conducted class work each morning on the subject, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Revelation," and in the afternoon, "The Call of the Church for Youth." The youth's prayer services were in charge of Brothers McDowell and Marvin Fry.

Recreational activities were arranged by Edgar Salts, of Logan, Iowa, and such games as kitten ball and volley ball were enjoyed. Group singing was popular with everyone at the camping grounds. Each evening before retiring, a half hour of singing was enjoyed by all.

The Woodbine young people entertained the visiting young people on the church lawn with a party before their departure.

Sister Mary Larson, of Omaha, had charge of the junior work. As a recreational feature they enjoyed a treasure hunt one evening.

The young people, eighty-four in number, held an early morning prayer service about one and a half miles from camp. A breakfast of bacon and eggs was enjoyed before returning.

About thirty-five Graceland students, assisted by former students, sponsored an informal program Friday night, immediately following a sermon by E. Y. Hunker. The program was greatly enjoyed.

The power of God's Spirit was made manifest Sunday afternoon in President McDowell's message. The tent was overflowing with Saints.

Many favorable comments were heard in regard to the reunion, and without doubt it will be recorded in the minds of many, as one of the best.

Modesto, California

Church Soon to Be Dedicated

The Saints of Modesto Branch are active in their work. The beginner's class, under the supervision of Sister J. C. Howe, gave an ice cream social. About one hundred people attended to make this social a success. The money collected was used for the Christmas offering.

Due to the intense heat, there was no evening service, Sunday, August 20.

Mr. and Mrs. K. G. Stark, of Patterson, served a buffet supper on their lawn in honor of their son, Verne, who will leave soon for Kansas City, Missouri, where he will take up the study of dentistry. An enjoyable evening was spent.

The annual branch business meeting was held August 21. Brother A. E. Frazier, who has been the branch president for the past seven years, refused to serve in the office again because of ill health. Brother John C. Howe was elected to succeed him. Plans for paying the debt of the church, which is soon to be dedicated, were discussed.

Fargo, North Dakota

Missionary P. T. Anderson Present

Sunday, August 6, was an eventful day for Saints in Fargo. Missionary P. T. Anderson was present, and assisted throughout the day. Following church school, Mrs. Ethel Stewart, of Straubville, was baptized, Elder P. T. Anderson officiating. The confirmation preceded the sacrament by Elders P. T. Anderson and H. E. Ratcliffe. Throughout the meeting the spirit of testimony prevailed. The gift of prophecy was given, words of commendation and exhortation to the group. Several isolated Saints were present from La Moure, Straubville, Valley City, Leonard, North Dakota; and Lake Park, Minnesota.

A picnic dinner was enjoyed at Oak Grove Park. Elder P. T. Anderson preached the evening sermon, and held a series of meetings the folowing week.

The young people of Fargo are active. The children's division enjoyed a picnic at Island Park. The young people gave a farewell party at Oak Grove Park for Brother and Sister Jerome Stowell, who have left for Long Beach, California.

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe and family spent Sunday in Minneapolis and the day's services were in charge of Courtney Rotzien.

Pastor Ratcliffe's recent themes for preaching were, "The Voice of Warning," "Apostacy and Restoration," and "Projects of the Church."

The church flower garden has been a source of joy, not only in its bouquets for the sick and old, but also for church decorations.

Recent visitors to the Fargo Branch have been, Sisters E. Baughman, of Atherton, Missouri; Caroline McElwaine, of

Wray, Colorado

"The Ongoing Purpose of God"

The three-day meetings, held August 18-20, at Wray, Colorado, were well attended by large numbers of Saints from various parts of the surrounding country—Yuma, Otis, Brush, Holyoke, and Vernon, also Lamar, Max, and Haigler, Nebraska, and Goodland, Kansas. Over two hundred attended the Sunday morning services, with more coming during the day.

The members of Wray Branch entertained the visitors at their homes for the three nights. Lunch was prepared and served to the guests each day in the new basement of the church.

The theme of the meetings, "The Ongoing Purpose of God," was well carried out during the services.

District President Glaude A. Smith and Apostle Roy S. Budd were in charge of the classes which were held both in the morning and the afternoon. Spiritual blessings were received from the early morning prayer meetings and from the sermons given by Apostle Budd each evening.

"Epitome of Faith," was the subject of Brother Budd's sermon Saturday evening. He presented an analysis of this with great clearness and force.

Idaho District Reunion

Eight Graceland Students Present Program

The day previous to the date set for the opening of the reunion at Hagerman, Idaho, cars began to arrive from Wyoming, Utah, and various points in Idaho.

The opening sermon was preached by Elder Frank Veenstra, of Ogden, Utah. Apostle McConley, assisted by the district presidency, was chosen to preside over the reunion.

The daily program began with young people's prayer meeting at eight o'clock. A class period was conducted by Apostle McConley for the young people on the subject, "The Problems of Youth." Elder Joseph Sandidge, district missionary, delivered a series of lectures at the same hour on "Zion Building" for the adults. At eleven o'clock each morning Elder A. M. Chase lectured on the "Church History."

The afternoons were given over to recreation, with the exception of two meetings, arranged by Brother Baker. Leon Ulticon and Jack Memeron were in charge of the recreation. Volley ball, baseball, pitching horseshoes, and swimming were the most popular forms of amusement.

Saturday evening, following the sermon, the Camp Cricket, which was the camp paper, was read and enjoyed by all.

Each evening the tent was filled to overflowing at the preaching services. These meetings were preceded by short literary and musical programs arranged by the various branches of the district. One evening eight Gracelanders who were in attendance were given the chance to boost for the college, which they did in an enthusiastic manner with songs, speeches, and pictures.

From one hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five persons were served at the community kitchen which was in charge of Sister Viola Condit.

Six persons were baptized during the reunion. A splendid spirit of fellowship prevailed, and much interest was manifest in the theme of the reunion, "Zion Building."

Kansas City Stake

The ministry of the stake, with Stake President C. E. Wight in charge, met at the Central Church to continue the study of "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." The discussion was lively on this, the third lesson. The mass meeting at the close, met in quorum groups. The elders were addressed by former stake president, G. E. Harrington, on "Priesthood Organization," using his chart outline to illustrate his lecture.

Argentine Church

The Argentine Church O. B. K.'s were hosts to the O. B. K.'s from the other stake churches on Wednesday night, some eighty-four responding to the call for prayer. Due to the rain, the service was held in the church instead of on the lawn. It was a very enjoyable meeting with resultant spiritual uplift hard to estimate.

The sermon at 7.45 was preached by Elder Winegar.

The church school sermonette was by Stake Missionary J. Charles May. Arrangements are being made for a season of house to house visiting and cottage meetings, to be followed by a two weeks' missionary effort, commencing on September 5, and continuing for two weeks.

Quindaro Church

Sunday, July 2, the morning worship hour was given over to the installation service. The following officers were placed in their respective offices: Elder H. A. Higgins, pastor; Brother A. H. Halliar, associate pastor; Sister Edith Higgins, director of religious education; Sister Becky Greene, director of woman's department; Berwyn Lungwitz, director of young people; Thelma Carmichael, director of children's division; Charles Graham, O. B. K. councilor.

July 4 was celebrated by a picnic at Swope Park. It was well attended and all had an enjoyable time.

Brother and Sister Frank Wadhams are visiting here from San Francisco. They formerly worshiped at Quindaro.

On Sunday, July 13, Quindaro O. B. K.'s were hosts to the young people of Liberty Street Church, of Independence. A basket lunch was enjoyed in the lower auditorium of the church. The evening service was conducted by the visiting young people. Brother Cecil Walker was the speaker.

Ava, Missouri

Eight Members Baptized

During the past few months the Saints of Ava Branch have been trying to let their light shine for the gospel. They have derived strength from the prayer meetings and other services.

A pie supper was held in the early spring at the home of the pastor, Brother James Dobson. The most of the pies were made and donated by Mr. Walter Homan. The supper was sponsored by the department of recreation and expression.

Ava Branch has been fortunate so far to be able to buy quarterlies. Teachers in the church school take their work seriously, and by study and prayer, have been able to accomplish results worth while. Brother Elliott, church school director, and his assistant, Grant Dobson, have called upon various members to give short talks on subjects of special interest to the church school. The talks have been brief, well prepared and pleasingly presented. Those who have taken part in this activity so far are, Brother Dobson, J. E. Morris, Eldon Morris, Grant Dobson, Gomer Maitland, Brother Haden, Sister Maitland, Ruby Dobson, and Sister Morris. The intermission between church school and the preaching service, has been filled by the music department, which furnished a delightful program. There is no formal dismissal of the Sunday school, but it is turned over to the pastor. This is being done to try to harmonize the Sunday school with others over the church. All departments of this branch are working together to make the activities conform to the wishes of the leaders.

A truck load of people from Tigris Branch joined the Ava Saints in a Fourth of July picnic which was held at the home of J. E. Morris. Many nonmembers were impressed with the inspiring talks given by Brothers Simmons and Freeman, who cleverly connected their patriotic expressions with Latter Day Saint ideals. A good program was presented by the combined efforts of people from Tigris and Ava.

LeRoy Maitland was baptized not long ago by F. V. Elliott, and Sunday, August 20, seven more people united with the church. They were Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wells and five children. Brother Dobson was the morning speaker, who presented a fine sermon on the first principles of the gospel and the restoration movement.

Guests for the afternoon and evening

of August 20, were Saints from Four Corners Mission. After lunch and a social period, the congregation came to order and listened to a sermon by F. V. Elliott.

Brother S. Spease has been greatly missed by both old and young. He is now employed near Independence, Missouri.

Independence

On the evening of August 21, a meeting was called for the pastors of Zion, the mothers of Girl Scouts, Girl Scout leaders and committee women, and the girls themselves to decide whether to keep the Girl Scout organization or to change to Orioles. It was announced by Pastor John F. Sheehy, that both the Girl Scout and Oriole movements would be indorsed and the girls may choose either or both. Sister Alice Burgess talked on the Oriole movement, discussing its advantages, and showed the uniforms, books and honor seals.

The Graceland Alumni Chapter of Independence entertained with a picnic supper at Hill Park, August 21. Guests of honor were the Graceland nurses, who are in training at the Independence Sanitarium, and the 1933 graduates of William Chrisman High School.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour at the church. His discourse was based on the statement, "If it were not so, I would have told you." The Stone Church Choir furnished the music. Mrs. Nina Smith sang a solo, "Jesus Only." Earl Hoisington presided over the service.

Due to the rain, the Sunday evening service was held at the Stone Church instead of the Campus. President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker.

The Stone Church Choir is practicing regularly on the Harvest Festival chorus. One hundred singers were in attendance last Thursday evening at the rehearsal.

Sister Annettie Olinger Heiszler passed away at her home, August 25. She has been a resident of Independence for twenty years. She leaves to mourn her husband, Henry Heizler; three sons, Albert P. Langdon, James W. Langdon, both of Independence, and Roger Langdon, of Kansas City; two daughters, Miss Isabelle Langdon of the home, and Mrs. Laura Langdon Freie, of Los Angeles, California. The funeral was held at the Stone Church Sunday. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

The Sunday morning service was in charge of Pastor A. K. Dillee and Elder John Miller. Elder George Jenkins was the speaker and used as his theme, "Possessing the Love of God." The choir, directed by Earl Audet, furnished the music for the service.

Sister Agnes Edmunds was in charge of the junior service. A musical prelude opened the meeting. Elder B. C. Sarratt was the speaker, his subject being, "Jesus' Choice." Betty and Evelyn Roberts, of Spring Branch, gave a vocal duet. A piano duet was played by Helen and Evelyn Willoughby. Sister Virgie Fulk gave an illustrated story.

Elders John F. Sheehy and J. E. Vanderwood have been holding a series of meetings on the lawn of Brother and Sister Butler during the past week. There will be a continuation of these preaching services this week.

Liberty Street Church

The fact that it was raining Wednesday evening did not prevent the gathering of a large group of young people to attend the prayer service. The program preceding the prayer service was furnished by Lois Bridges, Inez Davis, Mrs. Ann Crick, and Harold Buseth. Immediately following the program, the young people attended the prayer service at the home of Brother J. N. Sherwin, being guests of group 25.

Joseph Frick was entertained with a surprise birthday party by the members of the choir, August 25.

Pastor John R. Lentell was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour. Special music was furnished by the choir and the male quartet.

About twenty members of the Liberty Street congregation went on the missionary trip to Atherton, Missouri. Their contribution to the program consisted of a story told by Sister John Lentell, and songs by a chorus.

Mrs. V. A. Barham recently had the pleasure of seeing all ten of her children assembled under her roof at the same time. This is the first time that they have all met together. Her oldest child is sixty-three and her youngest is thirty-nine. A picnic was enjoyed at Horseshoe Lake Sunday, August 27, the family attending.

Walnut Park Church

Following the church school class work Sunday morning, Sister Mansel Williams, speaking for the Dorcas Circle, of which she is leader, announced that the two kindergarten rooms are now in use instead of one as in the past, and that the chairs and tables furnished in the second room were the work of the girls of the Dorcas Club. The orchestra contributed a special number as a part of the program period.

At the eleven o'clock hour, Elder S. S. Smith was the speaker in the upper auditorium, and Elder Delbert Whiting talked to the juniors.

At the session of the Religio Sunday evening, Elder J. W. A. Bailey lectured to the young people's class on Book of Mormon archaeology from charts. While attendance has fallen off somewhat during the summer months due to the conflicting activities, the Religio, under the leadership of President Vernon Sackman, is still carrying on and doing good work.

About thirty Walnut Park members, mostly young people, went on a missionary trip to Lees Summit Sunday night. Numbers for the program were furnished by Thelma Moorman, clarinetist; Margaret Chapman, pianist, and Margaret Gard Bullard, of Chicago, a former worker at Walnut Park, who is visiting her parents. Gomer Stowell was in charge of the program, Violet Campbell Chase led the music, and Drexel Mollison was accompanist.

Enoch Hill Church

Tuesday, August 22, group thirty-two enjoyed a social evening at the home of Brother and Sister C. E. Crandall. Plans concerning the fall program were discussed, after which ice cream and cake were served.

Bishop J. Stanley Kelley was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, August 27. William Worth sang a solo, "Count Your Many Blessings." Arlon Chapman, Alfred Waters, and Forest Miles played a clarinet trio.

Word was received from Miltonvale, Kansas, of the death of Brother Cloise Brown, formerly a member of this congregation.

A number of the young people from Enoch Hill spent a very profitable day at the Stewartsville Reunion.

Brother H. E. Winegar, director of the young people, preached for the evening service at Bates City. He accompanied the young people on their missionary trip.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday was a big day at Spring Branch. The early morning prayer service, attended by a large congregation, was a fitting start for the day. "Sharing With Others," was the subject of a talk given during the class period by Sister J. Nelson. Several former members of Spring Branch were visitors at the Sunday school.

The eleven o'clock preaching service was in charge of G. F. Weston. Alma Dixon sang, "Just as I Am," with other music furnished by the choir. Robert Fish was the speaker, choosing his text from Matthew 7: 20, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

Sunday evening, thirty-three young people visited the church in Bates City along with others from Enoch Hill.

Saints of Spring Branch will miss William Bath and his family who are moving back to town. Their help has been greatly appreciated.

West Pullman, Illinois

New Activities Being Organized

A small but spiritual branch, under the direction of Elder E. O. Byrn and Brother Clem Evans, has been doing its best to carry on the work of the church.

A choir was organized under the direction of Dick Kier, assisted by Mrs. Kier, August 18, with a beginning of nineteen members present.

A social was enjoyed, August 22, at which the Central Chicago and Hammond Branches participated. A social gathering is being planned once each month.

Akron, Ohio

Good Report From Kirtland Reunion

Church work in Akron is progressing quite rapidly. A larger number of the Saints are attending the Wednesday evening prayer services and take part in them. The young people are also active in the prayer meetings.

Several Saints from Akron attended the reunion at Kirtland, and all report a wonderful time. A number of the Saints from the Southern Ohio District were there.

Brother A. R. Manchester is much improved in his health, and was able to attend services August 6. Prayers are asked in his behalf in order that he might attend the meetings regularly.

Boyne City, Michigan

Park of the Pines Reunion

Last week we published President Smith's letter about the Park of the Pines reunion. This week we have the official correspondent's report which brings us added information about the services and activities.

The Park of the Pines Reunion, held August 4-14, was well attended. This year marked the thirteenth annual reunion for this district, one of the largest and best that has ever been held.

A prayer meeting, August 4, opened the reunion, after which a business session was held. Apostle D. T. Williams was given charge of the reunion program, assisted by the reunion committee. The reception committee consisted of Grace Schreur, Dirk Schreur, Brother Bender, Ed. Carter, Hector McKinnin, Byron Doty, Sister Doty, Etta Willsen, and Brother O'Dell. The dining hall was in charge of Sister Grace Schreur and Sister Smith, assisted by four group leaders, Etta Willsen, Ada Alldread, Burel Scott, and Helen Bennett. Elder Ed. Carter acted as police of the grounds and Ila Schreur, editor of the camp paper. John Willey was chairman of the decorating committee. The present reunion committee was sustained. Sister Ada Alldread, secretary and Allen Schreur, treasurer.

Class work was conducted each day for the adults by Apostle Williams, and Elder Case. Brother Farrow was the teacher of the young people's class, with good attendance and interest. Sister Farrow acted as junior supervisor.

During the ten days of the reunion the musicians made outstanding contributions to the services, directed by Sister Evans, of Grand Rapids, and Elder Doty, of Traverse City.

President Smith's presence at the reunion was greatly appreciated. His sermons were enjoyed by all.

Apostle Williams closed the series of meetings with a fine sermon. Saints of Boyne City were glad to have Apostle Williams and Elder Case during the ten days.

Present Want and Worries Reflected in Children

Information gathered from reliable sources and summarized by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor discloses that one-fifth of the preschool children in the United States are showing the effect of poor nutrition, inadequate housing and lack of medical care.

In its estimate the Bureau states: "In some regions, without question, the proportion of below-par children is far greater than this, reaching truly appalling figures; in others, where conditions have been more favorable or where the effects of unemployment have been more satisfactorily mitigated through relief measures, the proportion is possibly lower."

On the other hand, marked results of the education of mothers in caring for and feeding their infants is noted. This process has been carried on by the Federal Government and other agencies for some years. No objection to its being done by the Federal Government has been made on the grounds that it interferes with the states' rights doctrine. The information is gathered and disseminated by the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department to mothers and welfare organizations just as educational matter would be gathered by a Department of Education and distributed to those who should have it.

With respect to the effect of educating mothers in caring for and feeding their infants, the Bureau report states:

"So far in the present depression, severe malnutrition among infants, commonly known as marasmus, and the much-dreaded gastrointestinal disorders that accompany it have been rather conspicuous by their absence." (From the Scottish Rite News Bureau.)

A Few Interesting Old Bibles

A collection of about forty Bibles has been gathered by Charles S. Plumb, of Columbus, Ohio, historian of the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., of that state, with the thought of a study of the Great Light of the Craft as shown in Masonic application. One in Latin script, bound in heavy vellum over boards 8½ x 11½ inches, was printed in Venice by Leonardus Wild in 1478. It is in perfect condition, on heavy linen paper, and contains hundreds of hand painted capitals ranging in size from a small pea to the entire side of the page.

A New Testament in Latin, bound in modern Morocco, while in perfect condition, like other old Bibles contains no information as to when printed and by whom. The New York Public Library, that possesses one of the great Bible collections of America, has had this submitted for study, and Mr. Eames, a bibliographer of international repute, assigns this book to Winters of Cologne, and "not printed after 1477." As obtained from England, this book was listed as printed by Ulric Zell about 1470.

A third fifteenth century Bible is Volume I, of a four-volume edition printed in 1487 by Anthony Koberger, of Nuremberg, Germany. This volume, which is 12 inches long, 8 wide and 3½ thick is bound in heavy boards, while over the back and half the sides, is fastened a vellum cover that has had very fine hand tooling of saints, etc., and which has "1556" pressed in the leather as evidence as to when bound. This volume is known as the Pentatuch of Nicholas DeLyra, a Bible scholar of that day. This is a perfect volume, and contains a few crude pictures and many small hand colored capitals.

The oldest Bible in English in this collection was printed in London by John Day in 1551. This is the interpretation of Tavener and has been nicknamed the "Bug Bible." (Psalm XCI, 5) "So that thou shalt not nede to be afraid for any Bugges by Nighte, nor for the arrow that flyeth by day." It is a book 10½ x 7½ inches in size, and in rarely good condition for an old English Bible.

The first Bible printed in America, was translation of the New Testament into the Indian language, by John Elliot, a missionary, in 1661, at Cambridge, Massachusetts. This book is extremely rare and valuable. The first Bible published in this country in a European language was in German, and printed at Germantown, Pennsylvania, in 1743. A second edition appeared in 1763, and the third and last one in 1776. One of the 1776 is in the Plumb collection. Three thousand of these were just completed when the British captured Germantown, and destroyed most of these as unbound, using them for bedding for horses. (From the Scottish Rite News Bureau.)

The Eternal Three

By Merl B. Grover

"A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." —John 13: 34.

THERE IS A MODERN TERM very much like our theme but it conveys a vastly different meaning. The eternal triangle to which we allude refers to a man, his brother, and his God. Christ taught that a man can only love his God in the measure that he loves his fellow man, and that he is of service to his God only as he is of service to his brother. "Even as ye do unto one of these the least of my brethren, even so do ye unto me."

The book of Genesis relates the story of a group of foreigners who sat in the Egyptian court with a brother absent. Famishing, they would see the prince and secure bread. "Go back," said the prince, "and bring your brother. Ye shall not see my face except your brother be with you." Hungering, we, too, would see our prince. With empty bags we look for heaven's bread. If we come alone, the Prince denies us. "Where is your brother? You must bring your brother." And when we bring our brother or brothers into heaven's court, which is the inner sanctuary of our affections, faith increases, hope brightens, the Prince appears to both of us, and our hearts are filled.

We are told that this prince was a carpenter—doubtless a superb carpenter. But no beam that he fitted, not even a humble dwelling that he built, can be pointed out. Yet all of the buildings of the world, if they could be merged into one, could not rival the wonderful house of Love which he has raised among men. And although the most massive and majestic and complete of structures, his building is, strangely, still in the making. Under his planning and supervision his friends still labor for him, but they cannot labor alone—they must be "laborers together for God."

There is an old tale of two brothers who lived on adjoining farms in the ancient province of Judea many centuries before Christ's time. One, the younger, lived by himself and was very lonely, while the other had a large family and had difficulty in providing the necessities of life for those he loved. One evening after the harvest had been gathered and the grain lay in sheaves in the field, the younger brother went forth from his house and said to himself, "My brother is poor and distraught and weary; this night I will carry many of the sheaves from my field into his field, and he will believe that he had a bountiful harvest." That same night the older of the two likewise said to himself, "My brother is lonely and sad; this night I will go forth upon my land and carry many sheaves into his field, and he will believe that his soil has yielded well; his heart will be lifted up, and he will be made happy." And so for two successive nights these brothers carried their sheaves into the field of the other, but on the third night the moon came suddenly out from behind a cloud, and the two met face to face.

Tradition says that it was on this very spot that Jerusalem was builded, for there the earth most nearly approached heaven. The world has always approached very near to heaven where there was real love between two friends. And when men by their acts and attitudes most nearly approach heaven, they likewise most nearly approach God. Ella Wheeler Wilcox has beautifully expressed this thought in a little poem which says:

"No man could tell me where my soul might be,
I searched for God and He alluded me,
I sought my brother out and found all three."

List of old Subscribers Continues to Grow

"Our children have grown to manhood and womanhood," says Mrs. Jennie M. Condit, of Bliss, Idaho, "and all are readers of the church paper." Mrs. Condit does not recall the exact date when she first subscribed to the Saints' Herald, but she was taking it at the time of her baptism in May, 1892. She was married in December of that year, and for over forty years she and her husband have received the Herald.

J. C. Chrestensen, of Ava, Missouri, (Tigris Branch) started taking the Herald in 1870. He has a file of the Herald back to the year 1865, also a complete file of Ensign and Autumn Leaves. In addition to these he took the Messenger, by Briggs, and all the Saints' Advocates. Brother Chrestensen will be eighty-three, October 10, 1933.

John J. Phare, also eighty-three, of New Port Richey, Florida, attended the organization meeting of the Zion's Ensign Publishing Company in Independence. He was at that time a member and later a trustee of a Methodist church in Independence, but he became a steady reader of the publication. In 1901, he was baptized a member of the First Kansas City Branch and is still a firm believer in the restored gospel.

"I don't know when we first subscribed for the Herald," writes Elder George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco, California. "I know that my mother had it in 1870. When her subscription ended, mine began. We have never been without the Herald. I think I can claim sixty-three years as a subscriber."

E. W. Lloyd, of Kansas City, Missouri, has read the Herald since 1870.

Mary H. Rowland, Bevier, Missouri, has Heralds in her possession dated as far back as 1868. Her father, Ephriam Rowland, treasured the church literature; it was sacred to him.

"Take Up Thy Bed and Walk"

By Anna Burhart

A STORY IS TOLD of one who, permitting the gold in the treasury to trinkle through his fingers exclaimed boastingly, "We cannot say with Peter, 'Silver and gold have I none.' "

"Neither can we say 'Take up thy bed and walk,' " answered another, humbly.

History witnesses that the highest peaks of spirituality have been reached during times of material hardships. It is then men catch that glimpse of the Divine, which lights the inner man.

Earthly power is measured by material demonstration. The importance of a project is weighed by the temporal power it yields, the sense of security it brings.

Spirituality is manifest by inner potency—that marvelous power which rises higher in the face of adversity than the difficulties encountered; that influence which permits men to rise above the stumblingblocks of sin.

Peter had something at his disposal infinitely more powerful than monetary values, and following the command of the Master, "Freely thou hast received, freely give," he raised this man from a bed of affliction to a state of health.

This powerful testimony handed down to men, because of the faith of God's people centuries ago, is vital today. The Spirit is adequate to meet every deficit encountered by men. God's people can take up their bed of affliction if they will walk with Christ.

No time is wasted that is used in getting ready.—"Pith and Point," in Church Management.

True religion affords government its surest support.—Church Management.

"Where two or three are gathered together"—no, Jesus was not offering a consolation-prize to ministers confronting empty pews. "Where two or three are gathered together," or two or three hundred, there is the spiritual electricity of common worship, there is the contagion of a good courage, there is the mutual pleading that flows from presence to presence (spirit in flesh). "For where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst."—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

The Secret

I met God in the morning,
When my day was at its best;
And His Presence came like sunrise
With a glory in my breast.

All day long the Presence lingered,
All day long He stayed with me;
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them,
Brought to us both peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I, too, had loosed the moorings,
With the Presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret,
Learned from many a troubled way;
You must seek Him in the morning,
If you want Him through the day.
—Ralph Cushman, Church Management.

The Pigeonhole

A Beautiful Building

Visitors to Independence will be pleased and surprised to see the beautiful courthouse that occupies the center of the square. New units were added to the old building, and an entire new outside covering was provided. The building now appears in the best tradition of colonial architecture. Not an exceedingly large building, but it is perfect of its kind. A style of architecture that has proved itself to the taste of discriminating people for two hundred years will not be regarded as "queer" by future generations. Independence and Jackson County can always be proud of this splendid building.

A Church for the Cows

The Pigeon fluttered around the window early this morning trying to get in. He had a bulky note around his neck.

"When did you become a carrier pigeon?" we asked.

"I was visiting last Sunday at a church some distance from here, and a person who is a regular attendant there sent a contribution to your 'Things We Could Do Without' list."

Well, here it is:

Once upon a time there was a man who awoke on Sunday morning with a New Idea:

"Today I will go to church," he said, "for I have a Strange Feeling within me of Yearning after God."

And when he arose and dressed, he remembered hearing that there were good people in the church that was just Around the Corner.

When he went in the church and Sat Down, he had the Uncomfortable sensation of sitting on Something he ought not to. He arose hastily, and felt of the Place on his Trousers. And behold, it was a piece of Gum.

He decided to move. And, in a new location, he reached under the seat for a place wherein to put his Hat. Lo, once more his hand encountered a piece of Gum. Nettled, he closed his eyes to pray for the anger to be removed from his heart.

"O Lord," he said, "This is a Device of Satan to make me dislike this Church. Deliver me from Temptation, and frustrate his Foul Work."

And when he opened his eyes to watch the Choir go to their places, he observed a look both Placid and Vacant upon their faces. Their Jaws moved sideways in a swinging, regular Rhythm. He had seen the Cows in his Pasture perform in the same Manner.

"These Young Women belong to the Order of Contented Cows, I think," he said. Then he looked around and saw some Young People in the congregation engaged likewise in chewing Gum. And what was his astonishment to see even the young man who arose to make an Announcement quietly push his Cud back to one side of his mouth before he Spoke.

The Man seized his Hat, arose, and walked out of the Church, never to return.

"This is no place for Me," he said. "I will send my Cows here. They will find the company Congenial."

3.—Allocating the Expanding Income

Arranging the Schedule President Briggs used to tell the students at Graceland College, whenever he wanted them to undertake a new activity, "Now you should arrange your schedule to include this important piece of work." The students, poor things, thought that they were already overloaded. They knew that no amount of rearranging would increase the twenty-four hours in a day. But the presidential insistence would always show them how they could subtract from the amount of time spent with friends and add to the period spent in the study. A dismal solution—but the only way to get more work done was to arrange less time for pleasure and more for labor.

Distributing the Salary When salaries and incomes were steadily diminishing, fathers and mothers were continuously facing the necessity of rearranging and reallotting family income. This entailed cruel self-denial for families as well as severely limited contributions to charity and the church. The necessities of life had to be assured first, for families that could afford them, and some families could not even afford them.

Rising Wages and Church Contributions Salaries have not really begun to rise yet. Incomes are still in the depths of the depression, and may be there for some months. But when incomes do begin to meet more than the necessities of life, wage-earners will find many, many places in which all that will be gained can be absorbed. We may even be able to go into debt again. (It is a strange thing that we can and do go deepest into debt when we have money. We pull out when we have little.)

When income increases, two important things should not be neglected in the allocation of expenditure of income: one is, the savings account. The other is the Church. There is no need to argue here and now for the savings account—for the accumulation of a strong protective reserve of resources of some kind, whether in safe investments, land, or money.

The Church Demands a Place in the Budget In its quest for financial support, the church, unfortunately, is thrown into direct competition with a thousand other things that make tempting raids on the family pocketbook. They have the advantage of an extensive and colorful advertising. They have the advantage of sensory appeal, or of a provocative attack on the appetite. It is the easiest thing in the world for people to spend all of the income, and then discover, each week, to their dismay, that there is nothing left for the church.

The church needs a place in the family budget. And the amount to be set aside for the church should be determined by a careful analysis of the income and expenses of the family. That amount should not be left to chance.

A Contribution Every Week If the family income is received every week, it is best to set aside a stated amount of that income every week for the church. To leave to the future the payment of a lump sum is to face the probability of not being able to meet it. Many little unnecessary items are purchased by every family that rob the church of its fair share of support. If the contribution is set aside or paid each week before other purchases are made, the share of the church is secure.

Be Fair to Your Church Be fair to your church. Its officers have served you, the elders have visited you and administered to you in times of sickness and distress. If you reflect upon it, you will discover many services the church has performed for you and your community that have made life better for you and your family.

Now is the time to lay your plans for the future to be fair, to do the right thing by the church. You might adopt this slogan: "Be square with God."

Out of Bounds

The crumbling walls of legal restrictions against the sale of alcoholic liquors have not brought any of the promised moral reform among the liquor interests. They are habitual offenders, chronic lawbreakers. Permitted to sell "nonintoxicating" beer, they are certainly distributing more powerful beverages.

Even though the public memory may be so short as to forget the old horrors of the open saloon, public taste is already revolting against the sight of drunkards on the streets. And the consequent change in attitude from "personal liberty" in favor of public protection, is already frightening the Wets into a clamor for regulation that will prevent the excesses which may bring on another country-wide campaign against them.

Utah Mormon Polygamy

Its Origin and Present Status

Publication in the Deseret News, June 17, 1933, of an article signed by the three members of the Utah Mormon Church Presidency, which article sets forth from their viewpoint the past history of the doctrine and practice of polygamy in the church, opens de novo the entire question. The article defends the institution of plural marriage as of divine origin, its present practice being prevented by human legislation and the pledge given when Utah was admitted as a State.

We had refrained from any extended discussion of this subject for many years past, trusting that it might fade into oblivion and be forgotten, but it seems not to fade. In these articles we refrain from challenging the good faith of the authorities of the Utah church as at present constituted; and we endeavor to write courteously and with due restraint, striking not at persons but at principles.

Our position on the questions involved has not changed in the slightest. Calvin Coolidge attended church one Sunday, and upon his return Mrs. Coolidge said: "What did the preacher talk about, Calvin?" With characteristic loquacity Calvin replied, "Sin." Mrs. Coolidge persisted, "What did he say about sin?" "Oh, he is against it." We are for marriage—but we are against too much of it.

Brigham Young first introduced polygamy publicly in Salt Lake City at a conference in 1852, and it was openly taught and practiced thereafter until the prosecutions of the Federal Government became so relentless that the then president of the church, Wilford Woodruff, issued a "Manifesto" September 24, 1890, advising that the practice be discontinued. (This "manifesto" was first published as a part of their Doctrine and Covenants in 1908.) It was put forth as "advice" amounting to an order issuing from the office of the First Presidency of the church and subsequently approved by vote of their conference.

Present Attitude of the Church in Utah

There was no renunciation of the doctrine of polygamy. To the contrary the ministry of the church defends the doctrine of "plural marriage" as of divine origin. Witness the Deseret News article.

The church continues in its editions of the Doctrine and Covenants the so-called "revelation," which not only sanctions the doctrine, but severely condemns all who may refuse to accept it. Introductory paragraphs of the "revelation" say:

> "All those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same; for behold, I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant, and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory."—Verses 3 and 4.

Individual members persistently continue the practice. So recently as June 17, 1933, their president, Heber J. Grant, found it necessary to issue warning to recalcitrant members to cease contracting plural marriages. The warning (published in the Deseret News of that date) was not against the doctrine itself but against its practice under what was termed "a pretended and false polygamous or plural marriage ceremony."

Not a "Dead Issue"

At least six times since 1900 (dates given in a former article) they have found it necessary to issue similar warnings. Sporadic and isolated cases few in number could be dealt with quietly and locally. The practice must be rather frequent and in various localities and over a period of years to require such warnings to be so publicly given and to be so generally distributed by letter to stake officers. The matter seems by no means to be a dead issue.

Time has modified the intense feeling that of old was stirred by a discussion of this subject. We should now be able to discuss it on its merits without incurring resentment. Admitting then the sincerity of the protestations of the Mormon authorities that they do not now sanction new polygamous marriages (even that they discipline rebellious members who enter into them) there remain these points to remember:

1. They have not renounced the doctrine. It is still an integral part of their belief; fundamental to their faith. It tends to break forth in practice.

2. From our standpoint they have never repented of the doctrine and its former practice though repeatedly admonished to do so by the late President Joseph Smith under prophetic unction; and in more recent years by President Frederick Madison Smith, who in 1905 in his "Message From the Seed of Joseph the Seer," said:

> "Obeying the mandates of the Spirit, I call upon the Mormon people, leaders and all, to repent. . . . The call is to forsake the errors which unauthorized men have introduced and which they still seek to maintain."

3. The issue between them and us remains still vital and fundamental from the standpoint of belief, also from the standpoint of their possible future practice of this doctrine.

Origin of the Doctrine

Coming back now to the question of the origin of the doctrine and practice of polygamy. Though Brigham Young first promulgated the doctrine publicly in Salt Lake City in 1852, he asserted that it was predicated on a revelation given to Joseph Smith July 12, 1843. He claimed to have kept this document secretly after the death of Joseph Smith until he chose to make it public. He said:

"This revelation has been in my possession many years, and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not."—Supplement to Millennial Star, Volume 15, page 31.

Unable to produce the original document, he declared that Emma Smith had burned it. (Millennial Star Supplement, volume 15, page 30.) To this, Emma Smith replied that she had never seen such a document, and added concerning the story that she had destroyed the original:

"It is false in all its parts, made out of whole cloth, without any foundation in truth."—Church History, volume 3, page 352. (The student will do well to read her entire testimony.)

Touching a question of veracity such as this, we accept the testimony of Emma Smith on the strength of her record and her character.

Character of the Revelation

The so-called revelation is too lengthy to reproduce here. It is section 132 of the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants and may be studied in detail by those interested. It is to be noted that this document purports to put the stamp of divine approval not alone upon marriage for eternity, but also upon plural marriage up to at least ten wives (though its devotees did not limit themselves to ten).

It makes this new system of marriage a vehicle of salvation and exaltation in this language:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder wherein they shed innocent blood, yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation; but they shall be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God." (Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 26.)

Verse 19 stipulates that on condition that they "commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood," they "shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things."

It is to be remembered, too, that this so-called revelation, along with sealing for eternity and plural marriage, carries "concubinage" with equal authority and force and divine approval—that custom of keeping women for personal use not under ordinary sanction of marriage or with legal status as wives in which the ancients indulged themselves in their households. (See verses 37, 38 of the "revelation.") The real attitude of the Lord on that matter will be considered in the next number.

We have never known one to rise in Utah to defend the institution of "Concubinage" (in fact the term is resented) yet the two go together in the "Revelation" as they did in the lives of the patriarchs and kings whose example is cited in defense of polygamy. Why accept the one and spurn the other?

In the opening verse the Prophet is represented as having asked the Lord how he "justified" Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David, and Solomon in "having many wives and concubines." This despite the fact that Isaac had only one wife and Joseph well knew that the Lord had said in the Book of Mormon that the example of David and Solomon was "abominable in his sight."

In order that we may maintain the moderate tone of this discussion we do not attempt to set forth our opinion of this so-called "revelation" sanctioning polygamy and concubinage; it is difficult to express our opinion moderately.

Its Authenticity

Utah Mormons as we have seen claim this revelation was given to Joseph Smith in 1843 and was privately kept by Brigham Young under lock in his own desk until he saw fit to introduce the doctrine in Utah in 1852. Reorganized Church representatives have vigorously denied this allegation and have maintained that Joseph Smith neither taught nor practiced the doctrine. These six several points (and others, not here listed) have been set up by them in the controversy:

1. That no word from the pen or voice of Joseph Smith favorable to polygamy is found in any publication representing the church prior to his death.

2. That, to the contrary, the teachings of the standard books of the church all enjoin monogamy. These books include the Book of Mormon, translated by Joseph Smith; the Doctrine and Covenants, containing revelations given through him; and the Inspired Version of the Bible, as corrected by him. These he left to the church as its constitutional law, presumably representing his own mind and will as well as the mind and will of God. Furthermore, the official organ of the church, the Times and Seasons, contained his signed denunciation of polygamy and notice of expulsion from the church of one who had advocated it. (Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 423; see also volume 5, page 474; volume 5, pages 490, 491.)

3. That his wife, Emma, of outstanding reputation for veracity, in her dying testimony denied that her husband ever had any other wife or ever sanctioned polygamy. She testified: "No such thing as polygamy, or spiritual wifery, was taught, publicly or privately, before my husband's death, that I have now, or ever had any knowledge of . . . He had no other wife but me; nor did he to my knowledge ever have." (Church History, volume 3, page 355, 356.) Under the terms of the so-called revelation Joseph could not have taken another wife without Emma's knowledge. His son, Joseph, President of the Reorganization for fifty-three years, and personally known to thousands of us, joined in the testimony that his father had but one wife.

4. That there was never any progeny born to Joseph Smith excepting by his one wife, Emma. Judge John F. Philips of the Circuit Court of the United States in his Temple Lot decision (1894) commented on that fact: "No such marriage ever occurred under the rules of the church, and no offspring came from the imputed illicit intercourse, although Joseph Smith was in the full vigor of young manhood, and his wife, Emma, was giving birth to healthy children in regular order." (Decision of Judge Philips in the Temple Lot Case, pages 20-26.) During July, 1933, Inez Davis, of our Church Historical Department, prepared for me a list of the direct posterity of Joseph and Emma Smith. At that time there were 159 living and 31 dead, making a total of 190 descendants born to Joseph Smith through the line of his one wife Emma Hale Smith, and to date no posterity ever in evidence credited to him from any of the numerous alleged plural wives. 190 to 0 is a heavy score against a system allegedly set up to produce posterity.

5. Testimony of women who claimed that they were his wives shows evidence of fraud and collusion and does not "stand up in court." Two of them, thought to have clearer case than others, actually did appear in person in the Temple Lot Suit and Judge Philips discredited their testimony in his decision. (See Decision, pages 20-26.)

6. That the motive for deception on the part of Brigham Young and his immediate associates is found in the fact that on the 29th day of August, 1852, when they first brought the alleged "revelation" to light they were deeply involved in polygamy and desired to claim the sanction of heaven for their marital ventures. No one of them was a prophet. Brigham said publicly that he was neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. Consequently they invoked the name and the memory of Joseph Smith who was revered by the church as a prophet; and at one stroke secured the prestige of his name and themselves came from under the onus of introducing the system which was destined to bring so much of grief.

(It is expected that in the near future the question of Joseph Smith's personal record in the matter will be discussed in detail in these columns by Bishop I. A. Smith, grandson of the Prophet, and an attorney by training and practice qualified to analyze evidences.)

A Still More Vital Question

However, the question of the connection of Joseph Smith with the doctrine is not the most fundamental question. On that point we quote President Joseph Smith from The Origin of American Polygamy, page 4.

"The chief contention of the sons of the Prophet Joseph Smith, however, is not that their father was not a polygamist, but is, that whether he was or not, the dogma and practice are contrary to Scripture, ancient and modern, and are wrong, being contrary to the laws of both God and the United States. That being contrary to the fundamental and organic laws of the church, neither the dogma nor the practice could in any sense become legitimately the faith and practice of the church. No matter who the human author of the doctrine may have been, it was unlawful in every sense of the word, and is yet."

Whatever individuals may think concerning the personal record of Joseph Smith, one thing should be evident to all: Polygamy was never at any time a part of the church doctrine and practice under his presidency and prior to his death in 1844. On that point Judge Philips ruled in the Temple Lot Case: "Certainly it was never promulgated, taught, nor recognized as a doctrine of the church prior to the assumption of Brigham Young." And further: "Its first appearance as a dogma of the church was in the Utah Church in 1852."—Temple Lot Decision, pages 20-26.

Brigham Young and the Civil Courts Agree

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ during all its history has been in exact accord in this matter with the original church under Joseph Smith; while Brigham Young himself in a sermon, September 11, 1853, said of the church in Utah in his day:

"If I have any knowledge touching the condition of this people at the present time, and the way they are taught, led, counseled, and dictated by those who go before them to open up the way, it is directly opposite of that we saw in the days of Joseph the Prophet."—Journal of Discourses, volume 1, page 78.

Such considerations moved Judge Sherman in the Kirtland Temple Suit, 1880, and Judge Philips in the Temple Lot Suit, 1894, to recognize the Reorganized Church as the true church in succession.

On that point Judge Sherman ruled:

"That the church in Utah, the Defendant of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"And the Court do further find that the Plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the True and Lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

(This article will be followed by one devoted to the law on Polygamy vs. Monogamy as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.)

The Herald Ballots Pour In

Testimonies Lead in Popularity

In the numbers of ballots that have continued to flood the editorial desk, one thing is apparent: that is the unquestioned popularity of the Prayer and Testimony department. While other departments rank high in favor, this one takes the lead in more ballots than any other.

Despite the popularity of the department, not enough letters have come in in recent weeks to fill the two pages that we have made available. There were more than enough letters for the purpose until the summer vacations were upon us, when the writers also took a vacation. We suggest that if the many who like the department so well will write letters, there will be a plentiful supply.

Notes and letters that accompanied the ballots were filled with interest. Many of them will be shared with our readers. They represent all shades of viewpoint on all departments of our publication. Next week we shall have some of them. L. L.

Needlecraft Exhibits for Harvest Festival

The Needlecraft exhibit for the Harvest Festival, October 3 to 8, will be handled by the Women's Department of Independence. It is desired that the materials for a fine exhibit may be on hand. Send all exhibit materials to the Harvest Festival Committee, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Religion is not as mystical as some would have us believe. It is extremely practical. Religious development is subject to well defined laws. Increased power comes through repeated tests of available power. Spiritual power which is now ours would be lost if temptations did not come which taxed it. Testing times which tax to the breaking point create new power.—Fletcher Nelson, in "The Way of a Good Man," Church Management.

We are observing this as Book of Mormon month. Let us recall the days of the restoration. Let us pray that the spirit of the restoration be with us during our prayer sessions. Scripture lessons are from the statements made by Moroni to Joseph Smith. The Story of Etta Kett

Question and Answer

For the second time that Sunday afternoon, Etta felt a sort of sagging at the right rear wheel of her car, then a weaving motion, and finally the familiar "Clup, clup" of a flat tire on the concrete slab. She pulled off to the grassy shoulder of the road and got out.

It is fairly easy to change a wheel and put on a good spare. But when your spare is gone and you have to repair the tire—that's different. And Etta was alone. Cars whizzed heartlessly by; occasionally a sympathetic face looked out of a window; but nobody stopped. Etta surveyed her nice white silk dress, her white shoes and stockings. They would be ruined. Once again she missed Bill, who had taken care of all things like this. Why had she ever been mean to him? She couldn't think of any reasons at all, standing there looking disconsolately at those two flat tires.

There was another car approaching along the road at a high rate of speed, but Etta didn't even look at it. Suddenly there was a screeching of brakes as it flashed past, and it hurtled over on the shoulder and stopped. It was a new car, but a familiar head was poked out from the driver's seat. Etta looked up, astonished.

"Bill!" she cried.

Bill came forward, smiling.

"Trouble?" he asked, looking things over.

"I'd say, trouble," said Etta. "Plenty of it. Two flats and no spare."

"Mind if I help?" he queried, looking at her quizzically.

"I don't deserve it, Bill," she said, with a choke in her throat. "It's awfully good of you!"

Bill was already taking off his coat. During the business of fixing the tire, Etta stood by in a state of thankful exaltation. She would have been willing, under the circumstances, for all of the tires to go flat.

When Bill finished putting on the repaired tire and pumping it up, he straightened up.

"I think I could repair the other one better at home."

"I think so, too, Bill. Anyway you come over to the house for some lunch. I've got something good for you!" said Etta.

Bill laughed.

"My kid brother is up there in my car. I'd like to send him home with it. You may have another puncture on the way back!"

On the return trip Etta was too happy to talk about anything. She just listened to Bill, who didn't have so very much to say. But it seemed that peace and reconciliation had entered their estranged hearts without the exchange of words. Somehow both felt that everything was all right. It was almost too good to talk about.

After the lunch was over, Etta's car was safely in the garage and they were once more out riding, this time in Bill's new car. And they talked of many things which are only the private business of two people who have recovered a great happiness out of what looked like a wrecked friendship.

It was on the front porch that it happened, late that evening. Bill had faltered out a rather difficult and momentous question. But Etta did not falter when she said, "Yes, Bill."

And when Etta got upstairs to her own room she was so happy that she buried her face in a pillow on the bed and cried.

The Next Year

This next year, beginning with the fall months, will be a critical period in the lives of many young people. Educational opportunities, through the school, have been cut off. Business opportunities have not yet begun.

They face a period of enforced idleness. Unless they have something to do, they run a danger of doing something that may be harmful to them, and a disappointment to their families and to the church.

Upon a good program of studies and activities at the church, the moral and spiritual salvation of many a young person will depend. Let us see that we provide something constructive to do.

Christianity in its origin in the teaching of Jesus and by the terms of its charter in the New Testament is committed to the principle that human life is of incalculable worth and that personality outweighs all other values. In its very beginnings Christianity was bound up with the spiritual aspirations and the destiny of the common man.—From an editorial, "Why Christianity Is Concerned With Economic Problems," in the Federal Council Bulletin, September, 1932.

Fellowship Meetings for Young People

The fellowship meeting is an old idea, and has been a part of the young people's work in some of our churches for many years. But only recently has this type of meeting come into general popularity. Wherever tried it is doing good, providing it is well handled by the right kind of leaders.

Three things should be remembered in planning fellowship meetings:

1. Every program should have some good wholesome entertainment features; at least until the meetings are well established, and the young people are really ready for an occasional program of exclusively serious features.

2. Every program should have some purposeful, serious, or religious features. No crowd of young people can be held by programs that are all frothy or fun making.

3. Each succeeding program should be different from the last, and should introduce some new and unexpected features.

Much depends upon organization and leadership. A kindly, interested older person is needed who can give the right help, but keep himself in the background. The young people themselves should assist in developing the plans until they can take care of them independently. They should do most of the platform work.

On this page we shall devote space in future issues to helpful items on the fellowship meetings. You should plan at least one a month during the coming year, along with other activities.

God is present to us by his knowledge. He knows everything. And as a consequence, being infinitely perfect, and living in one eternal now, he knows us more intimately than we know ourselves. . . . There is another way, too, in which God knows us better than we know ourselves. He is the author of human nature. He knows its capacities in all directions, both good and bad. . . . Then, too, God is present to us not only by his knowledge, so that we cannot hide from his all-seeing eye—to speak figuratively—but he is also present to us by his power.—J Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

FAITH

A Sermon
By John Zimmermann, Jr.

(Reported by Mrs. J. V. Hiller.)

"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God.

"Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she has received of the Lord's hands double for all her sins.

"The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.

"Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain;

"And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

"The voice said, Cry, and he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field;

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever.

"O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God."—Isaiah 40: 1-9.

I HAVE CHOSEN my theme not only because it is one of the most important principles of the gospel, but because of the times in which we live, when all about us there is confusion, doubt, turmoil, and distress.

One of the poets once said:

Hast thou heard the story,
Loving lips once told
"I will never leave thee,"
Words of purest gold?
Nor will I forsake thee,
While the ages roll,
Faith can conquer fearing,
Hearken, O my soul.

I will never leave thee
Nor will I forsake.
What can harm or grieve thee
Till the morning break.
Waiting, watching, hoping,
Look to Him above.
He will never leave thee
And His Word is Love.

Christ has told us, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," and upon him we can depend when all others forsake us, when all others turn from us and desert and leave us alone. So we find the Psalmist David, in the 121st chapter, using these words:

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; he that keepeth thee will not slumber. Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; he shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and forever more."

Why was it the Psalmist David was able to pen these words? Was it not because of his own personal experience? Was it not because he himself had felt the redemption of Christ working in his own soul? I believe it was. I believe we, too, are entitled to this direction of the Spirit of Almighty God, that we, too, may be able to say, "The Lord is my Shepherd," and that we are being led by Him.

Faith—faith in God, in Christ, in the Holy Spirit—what a wonderful, beautiful principle it is. The Apostle Paul has said that the greatest of the Christian virtues is charity. He also mentions hope as one of these great virtues, but we find, too, that faith is very, very necessary if we are successfully to continue the onward journey of life. "Now abideth faith, hope, and charity." These are all necessary, charity being the first principle, of course, and hope being our guiding star through life, but Paul has said, "Without faith it is impossible to please God, for he that cometh unto the Father must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of those who diligently serve Him." Let us turn to the 11th chapter of Hebrews, and read what he has to say about it:

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, for by it the elders obtained a good report. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. By faith, Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it, he being dead, yet speaketh."

So on down through the chapter, Paul relates the wonderful experiences of history, of these men of old, who had faith in God, and in His word which He gave them. And moving out, under the influence of this faith, they were able to confound the world, and do mighty things by the power of God, trusting in him that he would guide and direct them and see them through the various times in which they lived. So we, in these times, need this great principle of faith. We need to ask ourselves this question:

"Where wilt thou put thy trust?
In a frail form of clay,
That to its element of dust
Must soon resolve away?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Where wilt thou cast thy care?
Upon an erring heart,
Which hath its own sore ills to bear,
And shrinks from sorrow's dart?

"No! place thy trust above
This shadowed realm of night
In Him whose boundless power and love
Thy confidence invite.

"His mercies will endure
When skies and stars grow dim;
His changeless promise standeth sure,
Go, cast thy care on Him.

That is the blessed invitation. "Come unto me," says Jesus, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take no thought for the morrow, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink or wherewithal ye shall be clothed." This is the glorious principle of faith, enunciated by all the prophets of old, preached by Christ when He was here upon earth, to live and die for us, that by faith we may grow, develop and find our mission here upon earth, and, having found our mission, we might fill it and follow the pattern of Christ in our lives.

We find this principle of faith exhibited by all the great men of the world, by religionists and great men of history both ecclesiastical and profane. We find it a very necessary principle, one without which these men could not have done the things which they did. We find it in the lives of Columbus, Lord Nelson, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and many others we could name.

What was the great driving force—what was the great power behind Columbus when he moved out to discover the new continent? Something within him told him that the reports and stories which had been circulated concerning the great ocean that lies beyond the Strait of Gibraltar—something had told him these stories were false, that out there beyond the setting sun there was a new land, and that if he sailed westward, he would find it. So, moved by this dream and impulse that would not let him rest, he gathered together a band of faithful followers to set out upon that great deep. Many were the thoughts in their hearts as they set out upon this experience, and day after day their hopes sank, and their faith failed, and many of the sailors wanted to turn back so that they pleaded with their captain that he would turn his ship about and sail for home, but Columbus, true to the spirit that was within him said, "No, no, we will sail onward." That night he wrote in the log of the ship, "This day we sail westward, which is our course." Again, on the following days, the sailors came to him, warning him that the food was low, and the provisions would soon give out. Finally they said to him, "What shall we do when hope is gone?" It was then and there that Columbus made that laconic reply, "Sail on, sail on."

So for years afterward, Columbus became the hero of story and lore, of faith and fame. It was of him that Victor Herbert wrote in one of his well-known operas: "The spirit that directed thee, great Captain, safe to shore, is Guardian of our liberty, whose name we all adore." It is the spirit of faith, the spirit of God, that can and does and will move upon the hearts and minds of men—upon you and upon me. "Without faith, it is impossible to please Him, for he that cometh unto the Father, must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

It was faith that impelled Washington, the founder of our country. He had a meager army of struggling, naked Americans at Valley Forge, in that dreadful winter of 1777. Their food was almost exhausted. Their clothes were in rags. What does history show? We find Washington kneeling in prayer in the woods, praying that his faith might be strengthened, praying for guidance and direction in this critical hour of the Revolution. Even those who should have been loyal to him in the government of the colonies were about to turn from him and leave him, but Washington knew there was One who would not desert him, and it was to Him he went and knelt in prayer, asking that he might be directed and helped in his endeavors to deliver the Colonies from the yoke of British domination.

It was by faith that Lincoln moved. When he was a young man, he stood in the slave market in the South, and saw human flesh and blood put up and sold and bartered as chattels. The spirit came to him and he said to himself, "If I ever get a chance, I will hit this thing and hit it hard." That spirit moved Lincoln in afteryears until he became President of the United States, and signed the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing all the slaves.

We find this principle moving all through the life of Christ. When he was tired and weary in his teaching, when they who should have followed him turned away from him, and did not understand him —when they were confounded and confused by those teachings which he gave—he fasted and prayed that He might have strength to go on with His mission. It was a thorny pathway He trod, full of rough and stony places. Christ moved forward by this power of faith. It was faith that took Him through Gethsemane. When his suffering was so great, he turned to his disciples, who had fallen asleep, and said, "Can you not wait with me one hour?" It was faith that stayed with Him when all the disciples forsook him and fled, and it was faith that took him through the cross of Calvary, when he even cried in his anguish, (Continued on page 1137)

White Walls

By Gussie Ross Jobe

"I'VE GROWN to hate the very sight of them—those high white walls! The house of pain, I call it; they oppress me with their immaculate grimness—those terrible, cold white walls."

Bee's voice faltered and then went on: "The tragedies that are enacted behind them—the sorrow and pain—I dread going to work. I want to turn and run from them."

"Why Bee darling!" her mother's voice was gently distressed. "Do you feel well? You never spoke like this before. You need a vacation."

"Vacation?" Bee laughed mirthlessly. "That word is obsolete these days, especially at Saint Matthew's Hospital. What with every girl doubling for some one they can let go and doing that for almost nothing. It's been six months since we have been paid full salary—half pay indeed! We have paid the landlord and the grocer half of what we owe them as long as we can. We will just have to find cheaper quarters—take two rooms in some dump!"

"Perhaps that would be wise, darling."

"But think of poor Grandmother—make her give up the comforts she has here; furnace heat in winter, her sun porch and garden, the view, the breeze from the lake—oh, I couldn't think of moving her. She won't be with us so very much longer and I'd put up with anything to make her last days comfortable and cheerful."

"Hush, darling. You have been so brave and good to the two helpless old women dependent upon you. I feel sure that a way will open. Have you prayed about it?"

Bee's pretty young face twisted wryly. "Motherkin, the days of answered prayers are over—if they ever existed. No, I've never had the temerity to call upon the Almighty for assistance when I see so much greater suffering that needs His attention within those great white walls."

"But think how much more suffering there would be without them. Prayer—"

"You do it, dearest, pray for us all, especially poor Grandmother Glenn."

"I do pray for her, Bee, and I bear in mind that she has always prayed for me—for us—"

"And are her prayers always answered?" Bee sat still a long time waiting for her mother to answer.

"It is strange, dear, that you should speak of white walls . . ."

. . . . . .

FROM HER HUGE WINGED CHAIR upon the sun porch, little withered Grandmother Glenn stirred restlessly among the bright Navajo rugs that encased her like a mummy. Her sight was dim and her memory wandered but her hearing was still faultless and as the conversation drifted to her ears she drew her dreaming spirit from the happy golden past and tried to concentrate upon what they were saying. She heard talk of answered prayers and the words "White Walls."

What was this nonsense Bee was speaking? God did not answer prayers? She pressed her tiny gnarled fingers to her white hair and tried to think what this awakened in her memory, for she was apt to confuse the past with the present. She wavered between the two in a pleasant haze. White walls? Ah, yes, now she remembered . . . she laid her white head back against the cushions, her eyes closed. The glittering jade of the distant lake faded from her memory and in its place arose a small farmhouse . . . Grandmother drifted back on the wings of dreams. . . .

IT WAS SUCH A TINY FARM and had taken every cent of big Zeke's savings to buy it for a wedding present for pretty Kitty Spaulding. Five dollars an acre and uncultivated, but rich sandy bottom land. They had cleared it and built a two-room frame house. It had been wonderful those first few years, even though they were fraught with hardship. Wonderful, because these hardships had been wrestled with and overcome, and permeated by an enduring determination to establish a home that would shelter them through the years of rearing the two babies that eventually made their appearance—sturdy little Chappy and sweet baby Sue.

After a few years of searing summer heat and the cold of long winters the little place took on a homelike aspect. The acres were fertile and the house, under Kitty's skillful hands, looked homey and lovely.

The children were so sweet and unspoiled. There was every incentive to carry on when—the war broke out. Poor Zeke was torn between home and duty and Kitty wanted him to be uninfluenced by her opinion. After weighing the matter pro and con Zeke finally volunteered and was rejected because of a lame foot, injured when the house was built.

Kitty could not help being overjoyed and Zeke was relieved that the matter had been taken from his hands. A great contentment pervaded the little home. They were going to be cozy and happy that winter and they went about the business of preparing for it with peace in their hearts.

TODAY Kitty sang as she worked. It was a tricky day in midwinter—the sun was pale and watery, hiding sometimes behind dun clouds to pop out now and again to a half-hearted attempt to shine. A restlessness of the wind foretold a weather change—a regular "weather breeder" of a day.

Inside the little house all was bustle and cheer. Before the fireplace, in which burned fragrant applewood, stood an iron crane with a three-legged black pot suspended upon it. The corn meal pudding within it simmered and erupted tiny volcanoes of steam fragrant with bits of sage and pork "cracklings."

On the floor near the wood box little Chappy was building a pigpen of white corncobs. The pigs corraled inside were represented by glossy brown buckeyes. In the corner of the kitchen was a bed, moved here for greater convenience and warmth during the extreme weather. On this bed sat little Sue crooning over a dollie made of winter squash. True, the dollie's neck was extremely swanlike and her face—fashioned by Zeke's penknife—was rather flat, but was she not wrapped around with mother's bright Paisley shawl? Certainly. To Sue she was the loveliest doll in the whole world.

Kitty thumped the dasher of the churn up and down—up and down. Small clots of golden butter began to appear and cling to the dasher; the butter was coming early today and Kitty was glad. There would be time to cool the pudding, mold and slice it, and fry it in butter with some of Zeke's smooth sorghum syrup and the new buttermilk. What a feast! So Kitty sang because she was happy and because it amused the children. She sang, stopping now and again to give them exaggerated gestures:

"Pompeii was dead and he laid in his grave—
Laid in his grave—laid in his grave—"

She ended each line with a long drawn out "O-o-h" into which the children joined with many giggles.

The fire snapped and popped foretelling snow. Kitty moved her treasured geranium, brought all the way from her home in Missouri. If it should freeze tonight—but she'd remember to cover it.

Getting out the yellow bowl she swirled the mass of butter until it gathered and brought it dripping into the bowl where she wielded a wooden paddle until every bit of milk was worked out. Then she pressed the mass into a wooden mold and set it covered just outside the door. In a few moments it could be pressed out into the milk-glass butter dish and upon its golden surface would be molded a lovely maple leaf. They always ate around the leaf as long as possible. Zeke vowed it was much too "purty" to eat.

Kitty saw Zeke come limping into the barnyard. He was tying a rope from the barn door meaning to attach it to the back door of the house. Kitty knew by this that he anticipated a heavy snowfall. He often took this measure in order to find the barn after a blizzard.

"There grew an old apple tree

sang Kitty, dropping the butter-molding long enough to hold her hands high over her head to show the children where the apple tree should grow. "O-o-h," chortled baby Sue. This shocked Chappy very much because it wasn't time to join in—not yet.

Kitty started to set the table; Zeke would be starved.

"Muthy, has you any slop fer m'pigs? Just listen to 'em grunt—oinky! oinky! oinky!" Chappy pushed buckeyes around the enclosure and they grunted vicariously. Baby Sue's eyes grew round with interest and she held her squash dollie to the edge of the bed to view the grunting pigs.

Kitty's heart swelled within her—what darlings they were! And poor crippled, faithful Zeke—what a good father he was, out there puttering about the barn, anxiously preparing every protection for the comfort of the animals through the threatened storm.

At length he entered bringing with him a whiff and tang of the outdoors frosty smell.

"Big snow due mama—sma-ah!" he sniffed appreciatively at the fragrant supper. "Fee, fie, fo, fum, I smell goodies for my tum-tum," improvised Zeke as he gave the roller towel a twirl.

Chappy began to jump up and down in a sort of war dance: "Guess what we got for supper!"

Zeke glanced at the mush browning in the spider upon the coals: "Shucks! It's just cawn meal with little bugs in it."

Chappy's face fell in disappointment: "Aw, Daddy, them's not bugs, them's sage and cracklin's." Whereupon Daddy caught him up and tossed him high overhead while Sue shrieked in sympathy.

THE EARLY WINTER DUSK made it necessary to eat by lamplight. Kitty set the glass lamp with its red flannel wick tinting the oil, in the center of the table and by and by the first flakes of the threatened snow began to pat soft feathery dabs upon the windowpane. The rising wind "whoo-ed" down the fireplace sucking the flame upward, now outward. A sense of well-being possessed Zeke and Kitty. What if a storm roared without? There was plenty of wood, an abundance of homely fare, and they had their health and were together.

After the meal was dispatched and Julia Ann's gourd face bedaubed with sorghum in Sue's attempt to feed her, Kitty rose and cleared the table. Now came the most wonderful part of the day. Kitty went to the highboy in the corner and brought out the huge silver-clasped Bible. It had been their most treasured possession—a wedding gift, and truly impressive. The deeply embossed covers, the beautiful Dore illustrations—Zeke read a chapter every night and tonight Chappy knelt upon a rush-bottomed chair and Zeke gathered Sue and the ubiquitous Julia Ann into his lap and turned the pages marked by the fringed ribbon that Kitty had embroidered in lilies.

First the children must see the colored pages that preceded the "Word," the marriages, the births, and deaths. Here were the births, gilt embossed—Sue's fat little finger pointed to the lettering that she knew by hearsay was her own. "Wead," she commanded, and Zeke read: "Elizabeth Susan Glenn, born June 6, 18— Now I wonder who on earth that could be?" Zeke seemed puzzled, Sue's cheeks were ruddy with excitement as she shrieked: "Me, me, that's me!" and Zeke asked earnestly, "Is that a fact? Well, then, this here name above it is maybe Chappy's. Yessir, if tain't: Chapman Edward Glenn. Well, bless my soul and body!"

"Turn to you and Muthy, Daddy, quick, cause Muthy's almost done with the dishes."

He turned to the ornately colored page besprinkled with doves, roses and cupids, and within a golden wedding ring stood a picture of Dad and Muthy. True, the slim black-coated groom didn't look much like poor lame Zeke, nor did the be-veiled girl look at all like Kitty, but 'twas—for right there it said plain as anything: Ezekiel W. Glenn to Katherine B. Spaulding.

Kitty had cleaned the three-legged pot and set it to dry before the fire so Chappy knew that the time was growing short. He clamored for just one look at some of his "most favorite pitchures" before the chapter began. Zeke turned to a picture of the deluge and Chappy's face grew sober as he looked at the huge tiger upon the water surrounded knoll. He wondered if the mama tiger was hurting her little puppy as she held it in her mouth away from the swirling waters.

Then there was the picture of a little boy carrying a bundle of sticks with which his father was to make a sacrificial fire for him. Gee—to cook your own little boy!

Muthy came with her basket of darning and the fun was over. Chappy's attention wandered back to his pigpen. Zeke cleared his throat and shifted the drowsy Sue to his left knee and solemnly began reading.

OUTSIDE the snow was now coming down in a thick white blanket; the wind blew about the little shelter, shaking the windows and sifting powdery ridges just inside the rudely built sills. Suddenly from without there came a long drawn-out "Hello-oo!" and then: "Zeke, Ze-ke!"

Zeke passed the baby to her mother and went to the door; peering out he beheld the form of a man on a mule. He had reined his mount to the side of the unporched doorway and Zeke could see that it was old Mr. Witherspoon from across the bluff.

"Howdy, Mr. Witherspoon, light and come in."

"Zeke, Zeke! Bundle up your folks and try to make the Fort! Price's raiders are behind and on their way here! They're raiding, and burning and murdering—they're crazy with hunger and suffering and they'll stop at nothing. Haste ye, Zeke—I'm on my way down the valley to warn the rest," and the old man spurred his mule through the storm, an old and travestied Paul Revere.

Zeke closed the door and turned to meet Kitty's terror stricken eyes above the sleeping child's head. Little Chappy was playing unconcernedly at his pigpen. Zeke's heart contracted in an agony of fear—he knew they could never make it to the Fort; his horse was slow and the way was full of perils in such a storm. He could never find the trail and they might wander about only to die from exposure. To stay meant to be murdered—burned alive—

Kitty's eyes were anxiously looking to him for a solution—his children were his to protect, to save. What, oh, what must he do? His distracted gaze fell upon the open Bible . . . "He who dwelleth in the secret places of the most high . . ." Zeke read it subconsciously, with his ears tuned to the high shrieking of the wind.

"Put the babies to bed, Mama, and cover them with everything in the house. I am going to put out the fire. Hurry, darling."

Kitty's face was drawn and colorless, but there was a look of perfect trust as she set about obeying.

Removing only the shoes of the children, she put them beneath the covers of the fat feather bed, gathering rugs, shawls and coats to add to this.

"Why ain't you skinning me of my shirty and dawweys, Muthy?" Chappy was wide awake and curious about this strange procedure.

"Promise Muthy, darling boy, that you will be very, very quiet and try to sleep."

"Mustn't I even cough?"

"Try not to, Chappy."

"What if I sneeze?"

"Sh-hh!" tucking him in tightly.

Zeke was at the fireplace pouring salt from a stone jar upon the flames. He drew the blinds of both windows to the sills, motioned Kitty to wrap herself in a blanket, and then put out the lamp.

He took Kitty's hand and drew her

By H. O. Smith

EULOGIES OF THE CHRIST

Mr. Keable says:

"Christ himself was not annihilated, whatever happened on the third day after the crucifixion. His life has not merely been continuous—it has been ever-increasing. His thoughts, his message, his spirit, are enormously more alive today than ever they were when he lived on earth. When he died a few thousands only had ever heard of him; today as many millions think of him as a living personality. That he is a living personality, I do not doubt. One need not be a spiritualist for that. It is literally that that insignificant change which we call death has had no dominion over him. It will have no dominion over any of us, and less still has it had dominion over the finest of the sons of men."—Atlantic Monthly, March, 1929, page 409.

"The point at issue is that in all the centuries we have need of him, and that we never needed him more than today. Our civilization cannot do without him. Without him our civilization will wreck itself in some unimaginable bloody war, or in some hideously materialistic phase of machinery and vulgarity in which life will not be worth living. In him and around him there has been concentrated for so long all that is noble and generous, all that goes to make up the best in man, to such a degree, that in losing him we lose it." —Ibid., November, 1928, page 586.

"He will make us finer, nobler men and women and there is none other who can do so as he can."—Ibid., page 587.

To this, which is the latest prominent eulogy of the Christ, might be added a symposium on the subject from the prominent writings of men of the past. But first I wish to call attention to one observation which Mr. Keable makes. The Prophet Isaiah says: "Of the increase of his government there shall be no end," and Mr. Keable says: "His life has not merely been continuous—it has been ever-increasing." Unconsciously, perhaps, this writer, having the life of Christ before him, confirmed the statement of the prophet who wrote with a vision of the future before him, and with that prescience alone which scans the will and the ways of mortals, the actions of future nations and individuals, foresaw a glorious personage coming upon the stage of action to redeem mankind from evil.

A SYMPOSIUM OF EULOGIES AND OPINIONS OF THE CHRIST

"The human mind, no matter how much it may advance in intellectual culture and in the extent and depth of the knowledge of nature, will never transcend the height and moral culture of Christianity as it shines and glows in the person of Jesus Christ."—Goethe.

"I confess that the purity of the gospel has its influence on my heart. Is it possible that a book at once so simple and sublime should be merely the work of man? Is it possible that the sacred personage whose history it contains should be himself a mere man? What sweetness, what purity, in his manners! What an affecting gracefulness in his delivery! What sublimity in his maxims! What presence of mind in his replies! How great the command over his passions! Where is the man, where the philosopher, who could so live and so die without weakness and without ostentation? If the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage, the life and death of Jesus were those of a God."—Rousseau.

"Jesus represents within the sphere of religion the culmination point, beyond which posterity can never go, yea, which it cannot even equal. He remains the highest model of religion within the reach of our thoughts."—Strauss.

"He is the purest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the pure."—Jean Paul Richter.

We have already seen what John Stuart Mill has to say of him, and it is not necessary to repeat it here. The crowning tribute, I think, however, remains for Ernest Renan. It is difficult to believe that Renan was not a believer in the divinity of Christ, especially after reading these eulogies. Renan himself seems to realize this, and that his apparent love for the Master may be interpreted as a sure indication of this belief, so he argues that, "love is possible without faith." After recording the scenes of the crucifixion, and the death of the Master, he says:

"Rest now in thy glory, noble initiator. Thy work is completed; thy divinity is established. Fear no more to see the edifice of thy efforts crumble through a flaw. Henceforth, beyond the reach of frailty, thou shalt be present, from the height of thy divine peace, in the infinite consequences of thy acts. At the price of a few hours of suffering, which have not even touched thy great soul, thou has purchased the most complete immortality. For thousands of years the world will extol thee. Banner of our contradictions, thou wilt be the sign around which will be fought the fiercest battles. A thousand times more living, a thousand times more loved since thy death than during the days of thy pilgrimage here below, thou wilt become to such a degree the cornerstone of humanity, that to tear thy name from this world would be to shake it to its foundations. Between thee and God, men will no longer distinguish. Complete conqueror of death, take possession of thy kingdom, whither by the royal road thou hast traced, ages of adorers will follow thee."—Life of Jesus, pages 368, 369.

"But whatever may be the unexpected phenomena of the future, Jesus will not be surpassed. His worship will constantly renew its youth, the tale of his life will cause ceaseless tears, his sufferings will soften the best hearts; all the ages will proclaim that, among the sons of men there is none born who is greater than Jesus."—Ibid., page 393.

It is difficult to select from the writings of Renan the most sublime eulogies he utters, as such expressions as the following are constantly recurring: "Let us place, then, the person of Jesus at the highest summit of human greatness." "This sublime person, who each day still presides over the destiny of the world, we may call divine, not in the sense that Jesus has absorbed all the divine, or has been adequate to it (to employ an expression of the school men), but in the sense that Jesus is the one who has caused his fellow men to make the greatest step toward the divine."

It was in this sense only that Renan called Jesus

divine; it was in this sense only that he made the statement, "Thou hast purchased the most complete immortality." And, perhaps, Renan was right in his conception of what is the most complete immortality. If I live for individual immortality, obeying the laws of righteousness because I want to be permitted to come up in the first resurrection, and be crowned with a crown of righteousness, I am laboring from a selfish motive. But if I labor for others, regardless of its effects upon myself, or with no thought of self, I am establishing an immortality that can never be effaced, even though oblivion is my portion individually. In other words I am living in the lives of my fellow men, and the effect that my life has had upon my fellow men will show throughout eternity. I believe the following eulogy of the Christ, uttered by a believer in his divine mission, is the true interpretation of his greatness. I do not know who this man is. But I believe that his description of the Christ and his motive for doing what he did is the secret of his success, and why, as Renan says, "To tear his name from this world would be to shake it to its foundation." This man says, in speaking of the victory of Christ:

"Now how do we account for this victory, this wonderful victory, emerging out of a defeat apparently so absolute and so pathetic? The reason, I think, is to be found in this truth of which I have been speaking to you, that Christ lived in and for the permanent, lived in and for the eternal. He did not try to command the mood of the moment, he did not seek immediate success.

"If he had done so he never would have been crucified. If he had sought immediate success he would have attained immediate success, he would never have been crowned with the crown of thorns. He would have been crowned with the crown that is perishable, the temporary crown we all so much seek, the crown of the world's applause.

"But building as he did for the eternities, he missed the immediate victory to gain the enduring victory. He built not for the day or for the generation or for the century, but for all the centuries, and for the eternities that are yet to be, and hence his victory enlarges with the 'process of the suns' and his empire extends with the increase of the years. He laid his foundation upon the rock—the permanent rock of his Father's will—and hence times demonstration of the truth of his saying, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.'

"And if you and I wish to live the Christ life we also must learn to live less and less in the opinions, the moods, the tastes, the passions, that are so mutable and transient, and more and more in the truths, the laws, the forces, the principles, that are permanent with the mind and purpose of the eternal. So only shall we attain the poise that is always the characteristic of the great soul, and the victory we all desire."

So it is. No matter to whom we turn, whether to the man who does not believe in the personal divinity of the Christ, or to the one who worships at his shrine, believing him to be the Son of God, all confirm the picture presented by the prophet, when he exclaimed "his name shall be called Wonderful."

If Christ had lived for the present, it is probable that his name would have been blazoned on the pages of history, but from a human standpoint he was a failure, went down to defeat at the hands of his enemies, and no doubt the historian thought that his name would soon be forgotten. But long years before, speaking under the inspiration of Almighty God, the prophet had said that "his name shall be called Wonderful," and subsequent history has proved that the prophet was right, for so it is, and when the prophet said there should be no end to his dominion, but his kingdom should ever increase, he uttered a truth that recorders of events confirm.

But this is not all. The prophet said his name should be called "Counselor," and this is no less true than the other. To whom do we go today for counsel on all things spiritual and moral? There is no higher authority than Jesus Christ. All men pay him tribute in this regard as much as in the matter of his wonderfulness in other respects. In fact his wonderfulness has all been brought about by his ability as a Counselor and advisor. Again Isaiah says of him:

"Behold I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people."—Isaiah 55: 4.

A commander must first learn to obey. This Christ did while here on earth. And hence this last eulogy I have quoted says: "He laid his foundation upon the rock—the permanent rock of his Father's will," and his own statement was, "I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things. And he that sent me is with me: The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him."—John 8: 28, 29.

Not only is he known by the terms, or names presented here, but because of the matchless purity and value of his teaching he is known everywhere as the "Prince of Peace," and because of his oneness with God, his Father, as Renan says, between him and God "men no longer distinguish."

The Ultimate Results of His Work

Not only is the history of Christ, and his wonderfulness portrayed in prophecy, but the ultimate results of his mission on earth, and the final triumph of his teachings is clearly outlined by this same man. I am presenting now the first nine verses of Isaiah, chapter eleven:

"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall (Continued on page 1137.)

Specific Guidance

By George A. Njeim

IT HAS BEEN very interesting to us, having the divine direction that we need for our guidance, to stand by and watch others struggle with the problems of life. This is a selfish, deplorable attitude, condemned by our Savior; yet has found a tenacious lodging in our easy-going, insipid lives. Refuge from the pressure of the unchristian forces that are at work in the world today and threaten the ruin of our civilization could have been prepared had we been faithful to our mission and applied the divine wisdom which has been so long at our disposal. It is also interesting to note that we, who always rise in indignation when the authority of this church is questioned by others, are nevertheless daring enough to put our "hand to the plow" and then look backward.

The numerous difficulties which have invaded our environment are awakening the careless; and outstanding crooked furrows are influencing us to be more cautious. People in the church are regretting their indifference to the divine instructions which have been given them, while those of other societies are trying to use their best available manborn wisdom.

To meet the present crisis and ameliorate suffering, the United Church of Canada convened to consider the cause of the present maladjustment. They make a strong declaration against capitalism and its attending evils. Their stand is to be admired by all, who are trying to do their heavenly Father's will, even though they have failed to outline a beneficent plan of life along with their criticism of the prevailing system. The report as appeared in the Toronto Globe is as follows:

"We think the time has come for decisive declaration. There should be no more vague pronouncements that make the church seem timid and overcautious, and earn for her the derision of outside people.

"First of all, it is our belief that the application of the principles of Jesus to economic conditions would mean the end of the capitalistic system. (By the capitalistic system we mean that order of things under which capital, which is a vital factor in the economic field and represents the part of the economic product used as a means to further production, is owned and administered by individuals and special groups with a view to their own profit. Our contention is that capital, especially in those large-scale forms that are essential to the life of the whole people, should be owned and operated instead, not for private gain, but in the service of the general good.)

"We hold the capitalistic system to be unchristian on the following grounds:

"It is organized about and continually incites to action and motives that Jesus condemned.

"It destroys the initiative, freedom and security of vast multitudes of people.

"It falsifies the Christian scale of values, putting the money interest above the human interest.

"It is unjust and inhuman in its distribution of the burdens and benefits of economic effort.

"It continually frustrates the will of individuals to practice and put into effect what Jesus taught.

"For these reasons we believe that the social realization of kingdom of God is not compatible with continuance of the capitalistic system, and we think the church should now uncover fearlessly the antisocial and unchristian basis of that system and declare unremitting war upon it.

"But besides rejecting capitalism, the church is called upon to advocate positively a Christian economic order.

"Whereas the method of capitalism has been competition and private acquisition, the essential law of a Christian system will be cooperation.

"And, whereas under capitalism, control, being in private hands, is directed to private profit and aggrandizement, control in the Christian social order will be exercised for the general welfare, and production will be for the common need. The establishment of this control will call for the socialization of banks, and other services, and industries in so far as their operation under private ownership places undue power, over the subsistence of the people, in the hands of special groups.

"We recognize that, although the church must inspire the will to these ends, she cannot fully accomplish them herself, and on this account we welcome the appearance of other movements, which are seeking to establish cooperation by political and educational means. We regard these as an expression of a wide and profound aspiration on the part of the Canadian people for just and orderly social change, an aspiration which the church, in her own sphere, must guide and fulfill.

"We would reaffirm also, the demand approved by the Toronto Conference two years ago, and last year by the General Council, that the Government of Canada call together a thoroughly competent body to examine into the prevailing economic disorders and plan for definite and adequate revision of our economic life."

As Latter Day Saints, it ought to give us a great deal of comfort to know that a change of mind is taking place among others, and the things for which we were once presecuted are being recognized by others as instruments for true happiness. But a change of mind is not the only thing that is needed according to the views of L. P. Jacks, of Oxford, whose article appeared in the Hibbert Journal, and was condensed in the Magazine Digest. It reads as follows:

"That our social planners are alive to the importance of this question is shown by their urgent appeals for a change of mind, heart or spirit, as an essential condition for the success of the plans they severally recommend." . . . "How is the needed change of mind to be brought about? Neither nations nor individuals change their minds merely on the strength of appeals made them, not even when threatened by the direst consequences. We may be fully convinced of our need to change our minds and willing to do so, but yet unable to make the change and ignorant how it is to be made."

"Here is the point at which our guides are apt to desert us, not perceiving that this is the place where specific guidance would be most valuable. The eminent thinkers and preachers who exhort us on the necessity of changing our mind, heart and spirit, fail to show us how it is to be done."

"Specific Guidance" is what this poor distorted and tormented world is crying for, and could there be anything more "specific" and accurate than the things which God reveals "to his servants the prophets?" It is to be regretted that the declaration lacks sorely that feature of specification and the methods suggested have been tried by many governments of the world and have been found "wanting," and the results are very obvious and appalling. A more careful reading of section 42 in the Doctrine and Covenants and its comparison with the declaration of the United Church of Canada will reveal the weakness of the latter and the preciseness of the former.

Let it be hoped from this that our appreciation of God's word may increase in profoundness and be manifested through our earnest endeavor to do his will, and let us also pray, that the step taken by our friends of the United Church may be followed by others and the steady advance bring them within a hearing distance of God's mighty voice.

A congregation hears only partly what the preacher says, the larger part of what they "hear" is what they think he means!—Robert E. Keighton, in "An Experiment in Preaching," Church Management.

gently to the side of the bed. Together they knelt and Zeke whispered an earnest prayer for protection. He called upon the Lord for fulfillment of the precious promises in which he so devotely believed. "I shall look up unto the hills from whence cometh my help. The Lord is my help which hath made heaven and earth."

Kitty smothered her sobs in the bedcovers while Zeke's earnest voice pleaded on: "He shall not suffer thy foot to be removed . . . He that keepeth Thee shall not slumber."

FAR, FAR down the road there rose a clamor; hoarse shouts could be heard and Kitty drew to Zeke's side, trembling violently. His strong arm crept about her but he prayed on without faltering.

At a slit of the drawn blind there seeped a rosy flare; it flickered and flared, growing brighter and then dimming. Zeke swallowed hard . . . that would be old man Witherspoon's home. Gone . . . ashes now. Poor old soul had wasted precious moments to warn Zeke. Zeke sent up a soundless prayer for this good neighbor.

Now they could hear the sound of horses hoofs slashing through the snow, their bodies bumping against one another in the snow and darkness. Shouts of crazed men as they goaded their mounts, rang out. They must be as close as the west meadow—soon they would come into view of the house.

Baby Sue murmured in her sleep. Her little fat arms drew from beneath the covers . . . "Julia Anne—eat lasses," she murmured. Kitty captured the restless hand in the darkness and restored it to the warmth of the quilts. A haze of stark, acute anxiety gripped at her heart. It wouldn't be so terrible to die—herself—but the children. Incapable of praying herself she strained her ears for Zeke's whispered words which did not falter.

"He who smiteth the rock for water in the desert, he who parteth a path in the midst of the sea—surely thou can raise a wall to protect and save these thy children who trust in Thee." Then reverently Zeke thanked God that he had heard his prayer, thanked him with the faith that he knew he had been heard while closer and closer to the little house came the maddened raiders. Firebrands glancing here and there, hoarse shouts and exultant cries ringing out. Now and again snatches of war song parodies were heard—the rattle of a trace chain—the torches seemed to penetrate the room, creep beneath the very lids of Kitty's closed eyes. But no, it was only her fevered imagination—the flickering of a chimera.

Time seemed to halt in its tracks. Had they seen the house? Were they even now coming up the lane? Were they creeping up to break in or fire the roof? It seemed to the gentle parents kneeling in prayer by their babies that eons had passed since they had first knelt there. A stupor seemed to beset Kitty—in a daze she felt Zeke's hand tighten on hers. Now it had come—But no, Zeke wouldn't like her to think this—"Oh, thou of little faith—" she chided her numb brain.

Hours seemed to have passed and then Zeke leaned over and whispered in her ear: "Darling, I believe they have passed. Listen—doesn't it seem like the sound is growing faint?"

A long time they listened, scarcely daring to breathe, hardly daring to hope. Fainter and fainter grew the shouts, the ribald songs, the rattle of chains, and still Zeke kept to his knees praying and praising and thanking God for fulfillment.

Worn out with emotion Kitty drowsed. The room grew bitter cold. The rose geranium touched by the chill curled its scalloped fragrant leaves and died. A frosty vapor rose from Zeke's still moving lips. Tired Kitty slept with her head upon the warm breathing bodies of her babies.

AFTER A TIME Zeke slept only to start awake by a slit of gray light that showed beneath the drawn blinds. Why! 'Twas daylight. Zeye strained his ears—a perfect silence pervaded. No sound save the gnawing of a hungry mouse in the rafters. He ventured from his stiff posture, gained his feet and crept cautiously to the window; day was breaking fast. Behind clouds a fickle sun was making ready to shine upon a world so lately wracked with wind and snow. The bitter force of the wind had died to a sibilant whisper. All seemed calm and serene and there was no mark on the placid scene that told of last night's savage raiding. Nature had sifted a cleansing covering over the ravage of fire.

Zeke cautiously lifted a portion of the blind and the dazzle of the snow hurt his eyes. He stood shivering and blinking—somehow it seemed an alien scene. His sleep numbed brain suddenly functioned and he now saw through the frosted pane, something that thrilled his heart with a reverential awe. He ran the blind to the top of the window. Regardless of the sleeping babies, his voice rang out clarion clear with exultation: "Kitty! Kitty! Mama, come—awake darling! and see the wonderous miracle that God hath wrought!"

Kitty stumbled from her cramped posture and staggered to Zeke's side. He caught her in his arms and his trembling forefinger pointed through the little window that faced the roadway—and there Kitty's wide, awed eyes beheld a wall of glistening snow, blown by the wind into a drift higher than their house—a wall that hid their abode from the eyes of the raiders and from their searching torches as they had passed last night!

Once more Kitty and Zeke dropped to their knees and bowed their heads in thanksgiving: "He shall cover thee with his feathers and beneath his wings shall thou trust."

GRANDMOTHER GLENN stirred and sat erect. Where was Zeke now? The room was so cold, the fire must be rekindled before she could dress Chappy and Sue. Her rose geranium had frozen—she had forgotten to cover it after all. What happiness though, that they were safe! Had all their other good neighbors been wiped out? Where was Zeke? Why didn't he come and help her with the babies?

Grandmother's eyes fell upon her gnarled veiny hands. With a shock she came back to the present. Zeke was dead! Gone on and left her. Well, no matter, it wouldn't be long now—she was old. These hands—hands that had been so soft and plump—Voices floated to her from the living room, Sue's voice . . . Sue was a grown woman . . . Why, Zeke, our little Sue has a child of her own, little Bee, but no, even Bee wasn't little any more. My, but it seemed such a short time ago that Sue had played with Julia Ann, the squash dollie . . . she listened to Sue's words:

"—and that Bee, is the story of white walls that father has told us so many times."

Why—why after all Grandmother hadn't been dreaming or reminiscing, she had been listening to Sue tell the well-known tale to Bee.

The insistent ring of the phone broke a throbbing silence and Grandmother heard Bee's voice answering it, and then a rush of steps as Bee threw her arms around her mother's shoulders, half laughing, half crying.

"Mother, mother! I feel like a dog—I don't deserve it! But listen, you'll never guess—prayers are answered! I mean your prayers for worthless me. Grandfather's miracle has repeated itself. Now listen carefully darling, that was the Ohio Board of hospitals and they said that on the recommendation of the Saint Matthew's faculty heads I have been chosen to broadcast their health talks—little home facts about everyday precautions that everyone should know and so few do. It will mean a big fat contract at a salary that will floor you! And now Grandmother Glenn will have all her comforts and any more that you can think of. Mother, I feel so unworthy—do you know, I'm going to ask to be announced as THE VOICE."

"The voice, darling?"

"Yes!" exultantly, "The voice from the white walls!"

IS CHRIST HISTORICAL?

smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the young child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

This ideal condition is still in the future, but none will deny the possibility. One thing gives us hope. We have seen the gradual development of the fulfillment of the prophecy so far, why should we doubt its ultimate fulfillment. More and more thinking men of this world are seeing the potency of the gospel of Jesus Christ to relieve the ills of men. Gradually men, here and there, are trying out the doctrines he taught, and wherever they are put into operation, not as abstract beliefs, but as working principles, they are found to do all that is claimed for them. It is conceded that if such principles as the "Golden Rule," the precept laid down by the Master, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you," were put into active operation, the world would be transformed. We have long been praying, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," but fail to put into operation those principles that will inevitably bring it about. We hold in our hands the solution of our troubles. Will we apply the remedy?

CHRIST THE GREATEST HISTORICAL FIGURE OF THE AGES

My contention is that Christ is the greatest historical figure of the past. What he lacks so far as contemporary history is concerned is more than made up in prehistorical matter concerning him. Almost every phase of his history is anticipated in prophecy. His character and attributes are presented clearly, with the final triumph of his kingdom. In fact his whole history could be told from these prehistoric statements. This cannot be said of any other man that has ever lived upon this earth. No wonder Ernest Renan made the statement, "We render him a truer worship in showing that all history is incomprehensible without him."

"My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" That is the faith of Calvary, a faith that was able to look out upon the world from the cross, able to look out upon those people who had crucified Him, able to say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," a faith that was able to say at the consummation of his great mission here upon earth, "It is finished, Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit."

It was faith that led the founders of our own church, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. It was faith that led Joseph Smith to retire into the woods when he was perplexed, confounded and confused by the many teachings and propaganda that were being advanced in his time, as they are today. It was faith in God and trust in His words that, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." So Joseph Smith trusted in these words, and in his Maker, and asked for guidance and direction that he might know in which way he should move. He was rewarded, as were all who had this faith, and an open vision was shown to him. Christ himself came and told him he was to join none of these faiths, that they were all wrong, their beliefs were an abomination in His sight. There was only one true Church, the Church of Jesus Christ, which because of the mind and will of man was taken from the earth, and was then about to be restored. It was further revealed to him that it was his mission to bring this work back upon the earth, that the work might continue and eventually be brought to a victorious consummation. It was a great task, a great mission which the founders of our faith were asked to undertake. They did so gladly and willingly, knowing there was One who would be with them, and would lead, guide and direct them in the way which they should go.

We all have problems, difficulties and perplexities which are pressing upon us for solution—for answer. To whom shall we go? Upon whom can we rely? "The arm of flesh will fail you, you dare not trust your own." There are times when the human mind and heart must and will speak to One and only One, and that One is God. He will never forsake us. He will never leave us. He has promised to be with us and go with us all the way. He is One upon whom we can rely, and in whom we can trust, One who will show us the way in which we should go.

He that will have no books but those that are scarce, evinces about as correct a taste in literature as he would do in friendship, who would have no friends but those whom all the rest of the world have sent to Coventry.—Colton.

WAR

(From an article by Bruce Barton, "Let's Advertise This Hell!" in the American Magazine for May, 1932.)

"War is not glorious. War is silly. Nobody can win."

"So the Lusitania went down.

"Well, what of it?

"What of it?" you cry. "The whole world was shocked. For days the newspapers talked of nothing else."

Well, but what of it? After all it was a little thing.

How many Lusitanias would have to go down to carry all the dead and missing soldiers of the great World War?

One Lusitania a day.

For a year.

For ten years.

For 25 years.

For 50 years.

One Lusitania a day for 70 years, or one a week, beginning nearly a century before the discovery of America by Columbus and continuing to the present hour.

That is the number of Lusitanias that would be required to carry the dead. The dead of all nations who died in the war.

They said He was "impractical."

He preached a gospel which men called too idealistic.

He said: "Love your enemies."

Practical men have scoffed at His teaching. They have said: "In a competitive world you must be armed to fight your enemies. That is the safe way, the inexpensive way." Practical men made and ran the World War.

Do you know how much the World War cost? Its total cost to all participants was equivalent to $20,000 for every hour since Jesus of Nazareth was born. The next war will be far most costly. It will probably result in the wreck of civilization.

Practical men have had their way for many generations. It would be worth while to try His way. It couldn't be more expensive.

A hospital would save his life—

But he will have to die!

"Too bad, little fellow, but you will have to die."

"Some of the hospitals are full, others are running part time or not at all, because of the lack of money.

"It takes a lot of money to run America's hospitals, Oh, yes, a lot of money, a billion dollars a year.

Worship Suggestions for October, 1933

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "BE CHILDREN OF GOD."

FIRST SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1933
Theme: "Come Unto Me."

Instrumental Prelude: "Come Unto Me," N. S. H., 329.

Call to Worship: John 6: 35, 37, and 3 Nephi 4: 51, 52. ". . . I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." . . . "All that the Father hath given me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." . . . "Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for such is the kingdom of God. Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again; therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved."

(S) Prayer: A petition for forgiveness; and expression of penitence.

(S) Hymn: "Pass Me Not," N. S. H., 324.

Scripture Reading: 3 Nephi 5: 50-63.

Hymn: "I heard the voice of Jesus say," N. S. H., 331, verses 1 and 2.

Talk: The invitation extended by Christ that we go to him is offered freely out of his great love for us. But while many are eager to go to him in response to his call they are not willing to pay the price. "Come unto me," is spoken for those who are anxious to go and willing to leave all lesser things behind, giving God first place in their lives. Christ is more than a balm for trouble. He eliminates the cause of trouble by giving his followers power to live righteously. He is a divine offering only to those who give him first place. No one can be received into fellowship with the Master unless he makes an effort to be pure. "Repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved." The invitation is conditional, the appeal is eternal, the result is sure.

Hymn: "I heard the voice of Jesus say," N. S. H., 331, verse 3.

Benediction.

Picture: "Come Unto Me," Bloch.

SECOND SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1933
Theme: "Overcome the World."

Instrumental Prelude: "Father, whate'er of earthly bliss," N. S. H., 274.

Call to Worship: Revelation 22: 17 and 2: 26. ". . . The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely. And to him who overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, will I give power over many kingdoms."

Response: 1 Nephi 1: 13. ". . . Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty! . . . and because thou are merciful, thou wilt not suffer those who come unto thee that they shall perish!"

(S) Hymn: "Lord, may our hearts," N. S. H., 45; S. H., 69.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 5: 23-26.

Hymn: "Take time to be holy," N. S. H., 322, verse 1.

Leader reads Matthew 5: 32-34.

Hymn: "Take time to be holy," N. S. H., 322, verse 2.

Leader reads Matthew 5: 45-50.

(S) Hymn: "Take time to be holy," N. S. H., 322, verses 3 and 4.

(S) Commission: Alma 18: 13-17. ". . . I would that ye would be diligent and temperate in all things. See that ye are not lifted up unto pride: yea, see that ye do not boast in your own wisdom, nor of your much strength; use boldness, but not overbearance; And also see that ye bridle all your passions, that ye may be filled with love; see that ye refrain from idleness; . . . Do not say, O God, I thank thee that we are better than our brethren; but rather say, O Lord, forgive my unworthiness, and remember my brethren in mercy; yea acknowledge your unworthiness before God at all times."

THIRD SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1933
Theme: "Walk in the Light."

Instrumental Prelude: "Faith of Our Fathers," N. S. H., 291.

Call to Worship: 1 John 1: 5-7. "This . . . is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

"If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth;

"But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

(S) Hymn of Petition: "Come, Holy Spirit, Come," N. S. H., 197; S. H., 77.

Scriptural Meditation: 1 John 2: 1-12.

Hymn: "Come Holy Ghost," N. S. H., 193; S. H., 105, verses 1 and 2.

Prayer by Leader: A petition for light.

Hymn: "Expand thy wings," N. S. H., 193, verses 3 and 4.

Period of meditation and prayer by the congregation.

(S) Hymn: "'Tis a glorious thing to be," N. S. H., 410; S. H., 182.

(S) Commission: 1 John 2:15 and 4: 7, 8. "Love not the world, neither the things that are of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. "Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love."

(S) Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1933
Theme: "Forgive One Another."

Instrumental Prelude: "Dear Lord and Father," N. S. H., 243.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1; 64: 2. "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins, who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice, and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer." ". . . I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, Let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds."

(S) Hymn Response: "Our Blest Redeemer," N. S. H., 195.

Scriptural Meditation: Matthew 18: 21-34.

Hymn: "O Jesus Thou Art Standing," N. S. H., 333, verse 1.

Story Meditation: Tell the story of Peter's betrayal of Christ and with that the part of the resurrection story wherein the first message as given through the angel is "Go your way and tell his disciples and Peter." It was his promise of forgiveness. Mark 14: 59-82; 16: 5.

Hymn: "O Jesus thou art knocking," N. S. H., 333, verse 2.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Picture Meditation: Use any good picture of Christ on the cross. With it read Luke 23: 34, 35. As followers of Christ can we do any less than to forgive those whom we feel have injured us?
Hymn: "O Jesus thou are pleading," N. S. H., 333, verse 3.
Period of Prayer: There may be several voluntary prayers. Conclude with the Lord's prayer in which all may join.
Commission: Moroni 7: 52, 53.
(S) Hymn: "Teach us, O Lord, true brotherhood," N. S. H., 341, verses 1, 4, 5.
Benediction.

FIFTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1933
Theme: "Be Ye One."

Instrumental Prelude: "Teach us, O Lord, true brotherhood," N. S. H., 314.
Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 34: 1.
(S) Hymn Response: "Great God as followers of thy Son," N. S. H., 64.
(S) Prayer: A petition for unity.
Scripture Reading: John 17: 1-6, 15-26.
(S) Hymn: "Joyful, joyful, we adore thee," N. S. H., 8.
Talk: It is impossible for anyone to dwell in the presence of God and be unconcerned about other people. Followers of Christ must go to God in company with each other. Bound together by the spirit of fraternity, the church of Christ is more than an organization of individual believers. It is a body, the members of which are parts of each other, a living organism controlled by the Holy Spirit. In company with Jesus Christ people are bound to each other with spiritual ties that are stronger than any natural earthly affection they can feel. Each loses something of himself as he willingly unites with his brethren in the task of building the kingdom, and gains in return the richer, larger group tie which is stronger than death. "Be ye one," is therefore a challenge to us to put away from ourselves attitudes which hinder us from uniting with each other in the cause of Christ. Contention, strife, suspicion, are attitudes of the will which are the instruments of the devil. Love, joy, peace, etc., are the fruits of the Spirit given to those who love God and their fellows.
(S) Hymn: "Blest be the tie that binds," N. S. H., 343; S. H., 52.
(S) Commission and Benediction: 2 Corinthians 13: 11, 14.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Fern Weedmark and Mildred Goodfellow

FIRST SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1933

Sacrament service for adults and children together.

SECOND SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1933

Theme: "God Will Forgive Those Who Repent."

Prelude: "Penitence," new Saints Hymnal, 249. (Before this is played, explain to the children that it is a prayer.)
Call to Worship: "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will show forth all thy marvelous works." (Psalm 9: 1.)
Response: "I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou Most High." (Psalm 9: 2.)
Hymn: "Sing of His Mighty Love," Zion's Praises, 110; new Saints' Hymnal, 123.
Prayer.
Scripture: Psalm 86: 5; Isaiah 55: 7; 1 John 1: 9.
Hymn: "Heavenly Father, We Adore Thee," new Saints' Hymnal, 65, first two verses. (If you do not use the new Saints' Hymnal in the junior service, we suggest that you write the words of this song on a blackboard or type sufficient copies of it for the children's use.)
Sermon Talk: Text: ". . . I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven; . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.) We should be very thankful to our heavenly Father for this promise. If we truly repent, God will forgive us for whatever wrong we have done. There is one thing we must remember, and that is, God knows whether we are truly sorry for anything we have done that is wrong. If we tell our friends we are sorry for something we have done, they will have to take our word for it, but when we tell God we are sorry, he can look into our hearts, and will know if we are speaking the truth. We cannot deceive God. (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2; Mosiah 11: 138, 139.)
Story: "The Forgiving Father," Luke 15: 11-24, page 63, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw.

Closing Hymn: "Heavenly Father, Grant Thy Blessing," new Saints' Hymnal, 86, first and third verses.
Benediction: 1 Kings 8: 39.

THIRD SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1933

Theme: "If Thy Brother Repent, Forgive Him." (Luke 17:3.)
Prelude: "Melody in F," by A. Rubinstein.
Call to Worship: "Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely." (Psalm 147: 1.)
Hymn: "Praise Ye the Lord," Zion's Praises, 87, new Saints' Hymnal, 27.
Prayer.
Scripture: Luke 17: 3; Matthew 6: 12; Matthew 18: 21, 22.
Hymn: "Have a Blessing Ready," Zion's Praises, 126.
Sermon Talk: ". . . Of you it is required to forgive all men: . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2.) A larger boy accidentally hurt a small boy. In telling about it, the little fellow said, "He said he didn't mean to, so I forgived him." That is what we must do—forgive each other. If some one hurts our feelings and then repents and asks us to forgive him, God requires us to do so. We must not hold hard feelings against those who injure us, or talk about what they did to us; we must put it out of our minds and forgive them in the true sense of the word.
Story: "Joseph Forgives His Brothers," Genesis, chapters 37, 42, 43, 44 and 45; "Joseph Returns Good for Evil," page 27, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw.

Closing Hymn: "Tenderly Lead Thou Me On," Zion's Praises, 5; new Saints' Hymnal, 267.
Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1933.

Theme: "Forgive Us Our Trespasses, As We Forgive Those Who Trespass Against Us." (Matthew 6: 13, Inspired Translation.)
Prelude: "Consecration," new Saints' Hymnal, 293.
Call to Worship: "Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power." (Psalm 150: 1.)
Response: "Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness." (Psalm 150: 2.)
Hymn: "Praise Him! Praise Him!" Zion's Praises, 144, new Saints' Hymnal, 10.
Prayer: The Lord's prayer. (Unison.)
Scripture: Matthew 6: 14, 15; Mark 11: 25, 26; Luke 6: 37.
Hymn: "Consecration," new Saints' Hymnal, 293.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Sunday we learned that if our brother repents, we shall forgive him. In the verses just read, we learn that if we forgive those who wrong us, our heavenly Father will forgive us, and if we do not forgive those who wrong us, our heavenly Father will not forgive us. This is another application of the Golden Rule—doing to others as we wish to be done by. Of course, we want people to forgive us when we wrong them, and we, all of us, do things that we wish our heavenly Father to forgive us for. So let us forgive those who do things which hurt our feelings, so we will be in a position to ask God to forgive us. It is important for boys and girls to learn this now, so it will not be so hard for us when we are grown. God will help us to do this if we ask him.

Story: "The Unforgiving Servant," Matthew 18: 23-34.

Special musical number, violin or piano solo, by a junior boy or girl.

Benediction: Psalm 51: 1.

FIFTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1933

Theme: "Be Ye King One to Another, Tenderhearted, Forgiving One Another, . . ." (Ephesians 4: 32.)

Prelude: "Whispering Hope," by Alice Hawthorne.

Call to Worship: "O Praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people. For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord." (Psalm 117: 1, 2.)

Hymn: "Have a Heart of Kindness," Zion's Praises, 118.

Prayer.

Scripture: Ephesians 4: 32. (Memorized by juniors.)

Hymn: "Loving Each Other," Zion's Praises, 83.

Sermon Talk: Our theme this morning is, "Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another." We not only should forgive people, but we should treat them kindly. (Proverbs 25: 21, 22. Explain. Matthew 5: 44; Luke 6: 27, 35.) Tell of personal experiences treating people kindly, and the result. If a person does not treat you as you would like them to, and you are kind to them, it will make them sorry for the way they have treated you; you will be much happier, and our heavenly Father will be pleased.

Closing Hymn: "A Parting Blessing," Zion's Praises, 90, new Saints' Hymnal, 95.

Benediction.

Faith

A hasty glance through the New Testament will convince one that faith is a matter of cardinal importance to anybody who would be a Christian. Jesus began his ministry by urging men to believe, and in the upper chamber on the last night of his earthly life we find that the greatest word upon his lips is still that word "believe." He is pleading with them to believe in him. "You believe in God," he said, "believe also in me." "These things have I said that you may believe." He was always looking for faith. There was no question which he asked with such earnestness as the question, Do you believe? And wherever he found it he was delighted. There was nothing delighted him so much. "O woman, great is thy faith!" The words came from his lips like a shout of triumph.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Weekly Health Letter

Sleeping Sickness

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Recently the papers have chronicled a lot about the epidemic encephalitis (sleeping sickness). It is not a new disease, being known to mankind as early as 1712, when it was first described during a severe epidemic.

It is thought the germs enter the system through the nose and throat and, like infantile paralysis, has an especial affinity for the central nervous system. The mortality is very high, and great efforts have been made to find the cause of the specific germ. Thus far it has eluded detection.

According to reports, it occurs mainly in the winter season. Rosenow succeeded in isolating the peculiar pus germ (Streptococcus) which he obtained from infected tonsils, teeth, nose, and throat. He examined the brain of many of those unfortunates, and found the same germ in the brain after death. While not conclusive according to scientific deductions, he believed that he might have discovered the bacteria that caused this, which is one of the most dreadful and dangerous maladies.

When attacked, the victim complains of an increasing drowsiness, which may come on suddenly or gradually, and may follow some severe mental strain, or muscular exertion, and be mistaken for a slight "head cold." The infection may cause the sense of seeing double, accompanied by a slight fever. Contrary to what the name implies, the patient may lie awake for days after the eyelids are closed, which may be followed by the complete relaxation of the whole body, and loss of consciousness and stupor for several days, or weeks. The spells usually last from six to eight weeks. Some time ago I noticed a case reported in the newspapers that a child had slept for more than a year, but I doubt the authenticity of this report.

All cases should have the spinal fluid examined, which is obtained by passing a long needle into the lower end of the spinal cord. It may be done in a manner that will not cause any pain or discomfort by injecting novocane before the needle is inserted. After the spinal fluid is obtained, a careful search with a microscope is made to find if there is any blood in the fluid. If it is found, it indicates some form of intercranial hemorrhage. A search is also made for globulin and sugar in the blood, which is also found in increased amount in sleeping sickness.

Scientists are hard at work trying to find a positive cure for this disease, but unfortunately at this date they have not been successful.

Prayer and Testimony

A Supplication

By Amy K. Guerin

God help me through this night;
Grant tomorrow I may see,
Just a bit of heaven's blue,
Shining through for me.

Tears dim my tired eyes;
Let dawn wipe them away;
May I have grace to see
Beauty in the coming day.

Give me courage to smile again
At a child's laughing face,
Strength of body, Lord, to step
Back into life's swift race.

And though I may not run as fast
As I have done before,
Grant that I may not stop
Far from heaven's door.

God Has Helped Her Through Trials

By Mrs. Lorraine Fuller

After reading the wonderful blessings of others in the Herald, I feel that I must bear my testimony to the goodness of God.

I joined the church in 1920. A year following my baptism found me seated in a Wednesday evening prayer service. Brother H. H. Davenport, under the influence of the Spirit, spoke to me, telling me of the severe trials ahead. He warned me that I should remain faithful, or I would faint beside the way. That same week my trials began, and for three months I seemed to be walking through a Gethsemane, but God was with me and I was strengthened.

Some time later I received my patriarchal blessing from Brother Ammon White, who was holding a series of meetings at Dallas, Texas. After passing through a very spiritual experience at that time, I was made to know that God was inspiring and directing Brother White in his work, and I no longer wondered whether patriarchal blessings were of God.

I like the new Herald much better, and especially enjoy the prayers and testimonies of the Saints.

My prayers are for the Saints, that God may bless them and keep them from sin.

Grateful for Many Blessings

Mrs. Lewis Ayers

I am truly thankful to the Lord, and want to testify to his wonderful goodness to me.

When my children were sick, I called the elders to administer to them. They were healed. I, also, have been healed many times, and I have seen an old lady receive her eyesight.

I have been reading the angel's message, and think it is beautiful.

I know this work to be true. Pray for me that I may do my part in helping to redeem Zion.

Blessings Enjoyed in Wells Branch

By A. M. Boomer

As pastor of Wells Branch I try to keep our meetings interesting. To be interesting to the Saints, I find that they must be of spiritual order, and it is necessary occasionally to suggest a change in the program.

We suggested a period of prayer to take place at a certain hour for seven days, and then to report our experiences. The object of these periods of prayer was to petition the Lord in behalf of the sick and the wayward. We also prayed that our district reunion would prove even a greater success than ever before.

The first special blessing, during this period, came to Sister Alix Walker, a member of the White Dale Branch. Sister Walker was taken to the local hospital for treatment. At the request of her husband, we called at the hospital. Her doctor said that she could not get well. We entered her room and found her in an unconscious condition. We prayed that she might become conscious and know us. A few minutes later she looked up at us, and after asking her if she knew us, she replied that she did. We administered to her, and she has now returned to her home.

Encouraging results are coming from the Saints who are discouraged and wayward.

Brother Jesse Denio, branch deacon, had the privilege of attending the Park of the Pines reunion. The spirit of the reunion that he has brought back has given new life to us all.

Elder Hubert Case has recently made a visit at our branch. His visit brought much good to the few members of the congregation.

Adversity Teaches Law of Tithing

By Mrs. Lellia McLees

I have been reading the Herald for some time, and would be lost without it. My husband and I are trying to do our best to help the church.

When the depression first came we were making good wages and a good time was our biggest thing in life. During our eight months out of work, the Lord was good to us, and just as we were down to our last five dollars, my husband found a job. We were so happy that we vowed that hereafter, we would pay our tithing regularly. To show you how the Lord blesses us in paying our tithing, my husband did not receive the ten per cent cut that was recently put into effect at his place of employment.

We sometimes think we cannot afford to pay a tenth of our income, but we then think of the time when we had no salary, and know that we are complying with God's law.

Request Prayers

Barney Sharp, of Winthrop, Arkansas, requests prayers for his infant son, who is wasting away and near death. Physicians have been unable to diagnose the disease, or to do anything for the sufferer.

Mrs. Fred R. Peterson, of Neola, Iowa, requests prayers in her own behalf, and also for her daughter, Marian, that she may be healed of her weakness.

QUESTION TIME

Should an elder give away cigars and solicit votes for a political candidate?

The use of tobacco is condemned in at least two of the revelations given to the church. It would be contrary to the purpose of the word of the Lord, therefore, for a minister or a member of the church to encourage its use in violation of teachings which he is presumed to accept and represent. High spiritual and moral ideals are not maintained by intentional disregard of rules designed to uplift and encourage to better things. Our influence is either for righteousness, or it will inevitably cause others to disregard and even turn away from the ways of God. But whether our influence is exerted in a political campaign or elsewhere does not change the nature of the act and the results likely to follow.

The question of soliciting votes for a political candidate should be considered apart from the things which may or may not be done at such times. A political candidate should be opposed if his character and his principles are bad, but may with entire propriety be supported if his character, ability, and principles are good. In this respect an elder is under the same obligation to support good and wise men for office as are all other people. We are commanded by revelation to do so, and those who discourage others from active support of proper candidates seem not to know that the laws of the church require us to take part in political affairs to the extent stated. A revelation given as early as 1833 commands:

"I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.

The fact that honest and wise men should be sought for diligently and should be upheld by the Saints, it is clearly our duty to work for the election of such men. In doing this we need not descend to any act inconsistent with the high ideals which have been committed to us, and should never compromise with error at any time.

What was the generation specified in which the temple at Independence was to be built?

The revelation containing this provision was given September 22, 1833. It stated that the city should be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at the place of the temple, or the Temple Lot, and added:

"Which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2.

What constitutes a generation as meant by these words is doubtless indicated in the language itself that "this generation shall not all pass away" until the house referred to should be built. The word generation itself means something generated, and in this sentence appears to refer to the people who had been generated at the time the word was given. Hence it would be equivalent to saying that not all people who at that time had been generated would pass away (die) until the temple of the Lord should be built. The use of the term "not all" seems to imply that nearly all might pass away before the event should occur, though it is not specifically stated that such will be the case.

When did the "former" and the "latter" rains fall in Palestine?

The "former rain," so called in the Scriptures, usually began near the end of the month Bul or early in the month of Chisleu, which would correspond with our November. But more rain fell in January than in any other month, and rains continued more or less intermittently from December to April. The "latter rain" came in Abib and Zif, which would correspond with April, during which the rains generally ceased. Following the "latter rain" is a long dry season during which the smaller streams are dry, though there are numerous springs in some parts of the country.

The rainfall of Palestine has varied greatly, but aside from the extremes, the usual amount is from twenty to about thirty inches in a year. There have been years, however, in which it greatly exceeded even the greater amount mentioned.

A favorite text used by Adventists in support of their sabbath contention, is, "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the Saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." (Daniel 7: 25.) Another: "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days." (Revelation 12: 6.) The Adventists claim that the great evil power represented in the above texts is the Papacy; that the time, times, and the dividing of time—the thousand two hundred and three score days—and the forty and two months of Revelation 13:5, all represent twelve hundred and sixty years when the "beast" will be in power. They set the time of the establishing of the Pope as 538 A. D., when the decree of Emperor Justinian appointed the bishop of Rome "head of all the churches," the end marked by the exile of Pope Pius, and the breaking up of the temporal power of the Papacy by General Berthisi in France in 1798. But we have shown that they have been claiming that the Pope had changed the Sabbath in 321 and 364 A. D. That is 217 and 174 years respectively before, according to their testimony, he came into "power," or was established. We will notice this more fully when we analyze their favorite proof texts on the Sabbath.

THE SIXTH PROPOSITION

"That the Sabbath commandment is the greatest commandment, that it is the seal of God, God's memorial."

"The Pope has changed the day of rest from the seventh to the first day. He has thought to change the very commandment that was given to cause man to remember his creator. He has thought to change the greatest commandment in the decalogue." (Early Writings, page 65.)

"The enemies of God's law, from the ministers down, have a new conception of truth and duty. Too late they see that the Sabbath of the fourth commandment is the seal of the living God." —Great Controversy, page 457.

If it is true that the Sabbath commandment is the greatest commandment it would mean that it would be worse to work on the Sabbath day, than to worship idols, or take the name of God in vain. One could commit murder, adultery, bear false witness against a neighbor, and steal and not be as great a sinner, as one who would labor on the Sabbath day.

If the importance of a sin should be determined by the way they are denounced in the Scriptures, all of these sins mentioned are vastly greater than Sabbath breaking. And no one can deny that they are vastly more injurious to our fellow man. Regarding the claim that it is the "Seal of God." In Bible Readings for the Home Circle, pages 446 to 450, are devoted to an effort to prove that the fourth commandment is the seal of the Decalogue covenant. But that is no more reasonable than to assume that some statute of civil law would be the seal of our national laws. In the above book it is asserted that a seal must show three things. 1. The name of the Lawgiver. 2. His official position, title, or authority, and his right to rule. 3. His kingdom or the extent of his dominion or jurisdiction. Considerable space is given in an effort to prove that because reference is made to the creation in the fourth commandment and in no other therefore it is the only commandment indicating the extent of God's dominions. But this is taken from Exodus 20: 11. But in the Ten Commandments as they are recorded in Deuteronomy 5: 12-15, where according to the twenty-second verse we have the commandments as they are on the tables of stone, no reference whatever is made to the creation of the heaven and the earth. So according to their own rule it would not answer as the seal. But both in Exodus 20: 2 and Deuteronomy 5: 6 we have, "I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." (Exodus 20: 2.) "I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage." (Deuteronomy 5: 6.) Here God himself declares who brought them out of Egypt and out of the house of bondage. Here we have what would answer for a seal preceding both copies of the Ten Commandments and both are substantially the same.

In trying to make it appear that the Sabbath is the seal of God, reference is made to Revelation 7: 1-4, and it is claimed that the keeping of the Sabbath is the mark or seal that is placed in the foreheads of the "One hundred and forty and four thousand" who were to be sealed before the great plagues were poured out. But in Revelation 14: 1 we have what is evidently the same hundred forty and four thousand having their Father's name written in their foreheads. It is hard to believe that any one would go to such length to emphasize the Sabbath that they would use it in the place of the name of our heavenly Father; but this is what they have virtually done.

"God's memorial." In support of this claim they use, "Thy name, O Lord, endureth forever! and thy memorial throughout all generations." Argument is made from the above that God's memorial is the Sabbath. But there is no Scripture even used by the Adventists that definitely commands any nation other than Israel to keep the Sabbath; and the memorial referred to above was to or throughout all nations, therefore the Sabbath could not be that memorial. But God himself settles the question as to what his memorial is in Exodus 3: 15 as follows: "And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: This is my name forever, and this is my memorial unto all generations." Here the Sabbath is used instead of the name of the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob. When one creates such a veneration for a day, and uses it instead of the name of God, he has violated the first commandment: having another God before him, and thus becomes the worshiper of an idol. That the Sabbath was a sign between God and the children of Israel is admitted, also that the death penalty attached to disobedience to it, and nowhere do I find that so far as Israel is concerned has it been abrogated by a plain "Thus saith the Lord."

Nowhere in the New Testament did either Christ or the apostles teach Gentile converts to keep the seventh day, and to assume that it was so well understood that it was not necessary, is too unreasonable to be believed. All through the prophets Israel was taught the importance of keeping that part of their law, but in all the writings of the apostles not once is there a definite command to observe the seventh day. There is, however, some quite definite statements that indicate that it was of little importance. As follows: "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." (Galatians 4: 10, 11.) "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." (Galatians 5: 4.) "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days." (Colossians 2: 16.) The Douay version renders it "or the Sabbaths." Also the Emphatic Diaglot renders the text, "Let no one therefore rule you in food, or in drink, or in respect of a festival, or of a new moon, or of Sabbaths."

Adventists try quibbling over the words "Sabbath days" and assume that it refers to special festivals and Sabbaths, but since the word "days" in the King James version is in italics showing that it was supplied by the translators and to this one other two translations agree, the attempt is merely judging of words.

That the keeping of the seventh day was not looked upon with such exaggerated importance as the Adventists claim is evident from the council where the apostles met to decide regarding what should be required of Gentile converts, as recorded in Acts 15, where after there had been much disputing (see verse seven) Peter told of his experience with the Gentiles; James gives a judgment to which they all agree. A letter is sent to them embodying what the apostles and elders at that time thought was necessary for them to obey regarding the Jewish law, as follows:

"The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia: Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law; to whom we gave no such commandment: It seemed good to us, being assembled in one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul. Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well."

In the above we have a message to Gentile converts, given because some very zealous Jews had been insisting that they should be circumcised, and KEEP THE LAW; Adventists tell us that the law is the Ten Commandments, and that the most important one is the keeping of the Sabbath. Now in this circumcision is mentioned, and also the law. We may reasonable conclude that the Gentile converts were not keeping either: hence the contention. Now in the instruction given they were given no instruction whatever about the Sabbath, and if it was so important, why not? It seems that the apostles and elders at this time considered the things referred to as more important than the things not mentioned. They plainly said referring to the law: "It seemed to the Holy Ghost and us to lay upon you no greater burden." It seems to us that this is the best opportunity the apostles had to go on record as to their attitude on the Sabbath question if it was a principal issue; but from what they did we can safely conclude that it was not.

In order to support the claim that the Decalogue is God's moral law and in force for all eternity, and that all other laws and commandments are the ceremonial law it is contended that God wrote the Decalogue with his finger, but that Moses wrote the other portions which were to be done away and that the fourth commandment is the only one that causes men to commemorate creation, etc. We will examine these claims. Note carefully the following:

"And God spake all these words saying." (Exodus 20.) The Ten Commandments follow. God "spake" them. Various other instructions were given in the next three chapters for which the record says that God spake. Then in the twenty-fourth chapter we find how and by whom that God "spake" was written. "And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel." (Exodus 24: 4.) "And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." (Exodus 24: 7.)

Now notice! God spake all the words. Moses wrote all the word of the Lord, God spake the Ten Commandments; therefore Moses wrote them with all the other words of the Lord that the people promised to obey. In the twelfth verse of the same chapter, God promises to give Moses the plates of stone later. Verse thirteen tells us that Moses went up into the mount of God again, and received various other instructions for forty days and forty nights. The record continues giving the things the Lord said to Moses until we come to the last verse of Exodus 31, which reads: "And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."

Please notice! Previous to this God had spoken the Ten Commandments. (Exodus 20.) Moses had written them and read them to the people. (Exodus 24: 4-7.) Moses returned to the mount. (24: 13.) He remained there forty days and forty nights. (24: 18.) Afterward the tables were given to him. (31: 18.)

Adventists claim that the part of the law that Moses wrote was the ceremonial law and what was written on the tables of stone with the finger of God was the moral law, and would always continue. But the things that Moses wrote were to be put in the side of the ark, while the tables were placed in the ark.

"And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites, which bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee." In Deuteronomy 5: 7-21, we have the Ten Commandments as written on the tables of stone, as shown by the following: "These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them to me." (Exodus 5: 22.)

Here Moses says that we have the Ten Commandments as God wrote them on the tables of stone. The Sabbath commandment here is different than in Exodus 20, especially in the reason for keeping it. Please read the following carefully: Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work; But the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." (Deuteronomy 5: 12-15.)

In this no reference is made to creation as the reason for keeping the Sabbath; and the above is as they were on the tables of stone: therefore here alone would be God's moral law; and to be consistent the Adventists would quote from this exclusively; but it does not support their hobby that the fourth commandment is the "very commandment that was given to cause man to remember his creator." (Early Writings, page 65.) So they inconsistently draw from what according to their own rule would be the moral law, and apparently try to make their followers believe that no one could remember the Creator unless he kept the seventh day Sabbath. Thus the claim of the moral and ceremonial law lose all their force in the light of plain Scripture evidence; and the sixth proposition cannot be sustained.

Texts Used to Support Observance of the Seventh Day

We will now notice the principal texts used by Adventists to prove that the seventh day should be kept.

"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." (Genesis 2: 3.) This tells us that the day was blessed after God had rested, not before therefore it could not have been previously kept. There is no command whatever connected with it showing that man at that time was instructed to continue keeping it. Indeed it is not mentioned again until in Exodus 16, where is recorded the first command to the children of Israel to keep it. And nowhere was it given to any other nation. "Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, statutes, and my laws." (Genesis 26: 5.)

An Outstanding Reunion for Far West Stake

Every Department Organized and Active

Far West Stake held one of its most outstanding reunions at Stewartsville from August 17 to 27 in spite of unfavorable weather conditions. Attendance and interest were unusually good and the services were all of a very high quality. The reunion opened with a sacrament service held Thursday night with several hundred people participating. In this service the theme and purpose of the reunion were set out as "Making Religion Practical" and much of the class work and sermons worked to this end.

The regular daily schedule swung into action early Friday morning with exceptionally good interest. Each morning at eight o'clock the young people gathered to their tent for their prayer service. These services were highly inspirational with an attendance of from eighty-five to one hundred and twenty-five each morning. Elder Ward A. Hougas took charge of the meetings, calling young men to assist him on the various mornings. The meetings were a source of great strength and inspiration to all and the Spirit spoke to the young people early in the week.

On Wednesday morning a sunrise prayer service and breakfast were held at the Maple Grove Church, about four miles from the reunion grounds. About ninety young people arose early and participated in this service.

One service of outstanding value to young and old alike was the joint prayer service on Friday morning. Everyone was requested to come fasting and praying to this service which was held with the adults in the big tent. The young people met for a short service of prayer before moving into the general service. Special prayer was offered in behalf of the afflicted ones and the Lord spoke through Apostle J. F. Garver commending the manner in which they had come to Him and warning and exhorting the Saints.

Each morning at the hour immediately following the young people's meeting, a general prayer service was held. Elder F. L. Hinderks, member of the stake presidency, was in charge of these services, assisted by various brethren. A goodly portion of the Spirit was enjoyed with the gift of prophecy twice, once on Friday and again on the last Sunday morning.

Accredited class work was provided in two periods during the forenoon. At the first hour, three classes were conducted; namely, a young people's class taught by Elder Ward A. Hougas; a women's class taught by Mrs. Mayme Ruoff and a men's class conducted by Elder F. L. Hinderks and Apostle J. F. Garver. A general class was taught by Elder R. E. Davey on the timely theme of "What Do Latter Day Saints Believe?" Brother Davey handled his subject in a masterly fashion and gave much good instruction.

All classes were well attended even on the days when rain threatened to ruin the attendance. A great interest was shown in learning more about the various subjects by a large number.

Children's work was carried on as usual in the forenoons under the direction of Preston Hinderks, stake director of religious education, and Mrs. G. Scott Daniel, assisted by an efficient corps of workers. Class work, devotionals and handwork were provided. Boy Scout work was provided for the older boys including some hikes and handwork.

The afternoons were mostly spent in supervised recreation under the leadership of Elder Archie B. Constance. Volley ball was the favorite sport while some indulged in horseshoes.

On Wednesday afternoon a stake conference business meeting was held at which time a recommendation from the Joint Council of the stake was approved, calling for the ordination of the following men to the offices named: Garland C. Snapp, of King City, to the office of priest; Wayne Simmons, of Cameron, to the office of priest; Herman Johnson, of Saint Joseph, to the office of deacon; Ernest Sherman, of Cameron, to the office of deacon; W. L. Butler, of Cameron, to the office of teacher.

On Friday afternoon the Cameron women presented a three-act comedy-drama, "A Southern Cinderella," for the entertainment of the camp.

An attractive evening program was presented this year with Elder R. E. Davey, of Aurora, Illinois, as the speaker. Preceding the sermon each night at 7:30 a song service and special music was enjoyed for half an hour. Elder Davey gave some forceful sermons on the subject, "The Gospel Message Applied to the Needs of 1933." At nine o'clock the young people's programs were presented by various branches including Stewartsville, Kingston, Oakdale, Guilford, Saint Joseph, Cameron and Maple Grove. The programs were high quality dramatic and musical productions, mostly religious in character. On Sunday evenings, the programs became preludes to the services.

Friday night was camp fire night and the entire camp enjoyed some stunts including a Ripley's "Believe It or Not" show. Then a pleasant time was spent in singing group songs around the camp fire.

The Sunday programs were well attended although a hard rain hindered the services somewhat on both Sundays. President Elbert A. Smith delivered a good sermon the morning of August 20 and Apostle J. F. Garver spoke twice. In the evening the Ul-Lik-Us Players gave the dramatic prelude, "For He Had Great Possessions"

The second Sunday brought Apostle F. Henry Edwards as the visiting speaker in the morning and afternoon. Apostle Garver lectured in the morning also. Rain hindered the services so the evening service was held earlier than planned. At the vesper service which closed the reunion the Fourth Saint Joseph young people gave a musical prelude to Brother Davey's final sermon of his series.

The music on Sundays was furnished by the choirs from First Saint Joseph, Cameron, Stewartsville, Second and Fourth Saint Joseph churches. The music throughout the entire reunion added much to the value of the services for which credit is due the Stake Music Committee.

All workers in the various departments are to be congratulated on their loyal support and efforts. A dining hall and refreshment stand were maintained on the ground and also a Herald Publishing House Booth. A Harvest Festival exhibit was on display at the Stewartsville church during the week and drew many visitors. This exhibit will be part of the exhibit to be placed at Independence in October. Many hundreds of quarts of fruit and vegetables are already canned and ready.

The reunion has been an outstanding one in many respects this year with an increased interest in the work of the church. All participants this year look forward to the gathering again next year and believe that it is not too early to begin to plan for an even bigger and better reunion.

Annual District Conference of Southern England and Wales

Priesthood Well Organized

The Southern England and Wales District Conference, held August 5-7, at Enfield was voted by all to be the finest ever held in the district. From the opening to the close the Spirit was present in power.

At six o'clock Saturday evening the conference was opened, High Priest John A. Judd being in charge, supported by Apostle John W. Rushton and Bishop A. T. Trapp. The business was carried through with all officers of the district being sustained in their various positions. Following an interval for refreshments, Brother Rushton addressed the Saints.

At ten-fifteen Sunday morning, the Saints assembled for prayer service. Several prayers were offered, and all felt the calm, sweet influence of the Spirit which was present. This service was followed at eleven o'clock by preaching, at which time three speakers occupied the hour, Elder Joseph Holmes, Missionary Fred Davies, and Bishop A. T. Trapp, in the order named. All stressed the need of concentrated effort to assist the church in its work. Refreshments were served at one o'clock.

At three o'clock the church school met under the supervision of Sister E. E. Judd and enjoyed a splendid program which included an interesting talk by Sister J. Holmes and a beautifully rendered solo by Sister Gertrude Allen.

At the same time, the priesthood met and listened attentively to Brother Rushton's talk on the program of the church. General discussion took place following the talk.

Under the direction of W. T. Goullee, the Saints reassembled for congregational singing and joined heartily in the singing of some hymns until the preaching service commenced. Over one hundred were in attendance when Apostle John W. Rushton gave his address, and a splendid discourse was enjoyed by all present. Immediately following the preaching, a sacrament service was held. The emblems were solemnly administered by four priests, and the Spirit of God was indeed present. A short fellowship service concluded the day's activities.

On Bank Holiday Monday, the Saints again assembled at the New Church to witness the baptism of a candidate by Apostle Rushton. The service was most impressive and included the confirmation at which Brother Rushton was assisted by Bishop A. T. Trapp and Elder John A. Judd. Lunch at noon, was followed by a period of recreation at Hilly Fields Park in charge of Brother Frank Judd. Almost three hours were enjoyed by the Saints amid delightful scenery. Tea was partaken of in the church gardens and then an excellent evening's entertainment was held.

Saints of this district were glad to welcome the following guests at their annual conference: Apostle J. W. Rushton, Missionary Fred Davies, Elder J. Holmes and family, Brother and Sister Edwards, Sister Allen, senior, Brother and Sister Allen and baby, Brother E. Maloney, and Sister Dorrie Foster.

Altogether the conference was a real spiritual feast to all who attended.

Edmonton, Alberta

Apostle J. F. Curtis a Welcome Guest

At the annual meeting in June, Elder William Osler was again elected branch pastor, with Elder A. B. Seaman as his assistant.

There has been considerable illness in this branch during the past few months, but the Saints are much improved now.

In the early spring the Wednesday evening prayer services were resumed. They are well attended, and are proving much help.

Attendance at the services was increased during the summer months due to the Bon Accord Saints, who were former members of the branch until a branch was organized in Bon Accord.

In the month of June, Elder Osler led two candidates into the waters of baptism. They were confirmed by Elders Seaman and Osler at the following Wednesday evening prayer service.

The young people's class has organized a baseball team and enthusiastic practices are reported.

The Edmonton Saints were glad to welcome the visitors to the district conference which was held August 4-6. Apostle J. F. Curtis was present and baptized four people.

The day following the conference, the annual church school picnic was held, with Apostle Curtis and Bon Accord Saints as guests of honor. An enjoyable day was spent.

Hagerman Reunion

Largest Attendance in History

Apostle M. A. McConley recently attended the reunion at Hagerman, Idaho, and reports as follows:

"The experience at Silver Lake in having the largest attendance in history was repeated at Hagerman. We never had so many people there before, nor did they come from such a wide scope of territory. The four Idaho branches, Boise, Filer, Rupert, and Hagerman were well represented.

"At this season, Idaho weather is pretty dependable. It treated us fine this year. Considering everything, the weather was ideal and enjoyed by all.

"The program, while not so elaborately planned, was educational and uplifting.

"Youth were provided for with a morning prayer meeting and a class taught by the writer for five mornings. The attendance started the first morning with fifty-five people, and grew until seventy-five were present the last morning.

"An adult class was taught effectively by J. L. Sandidge. At my request, Elder A. M. Chase prepared five lectures on church history for presentation at this reunion.

"Sunday afternoon we held a baptismal service—five young people joining the church. The confirmation service followed and then a round table.

"The recreational features were well cared for—baseball, volley ball, lawn games of various kinds, and swimming. Old and young participated."

Spokane, Washington

Young People Active in Work

A great deal has taken place since hearing from Saints of this branch in May. A spirit of work seems to be prevalent at Spokane, as they have engaged in very little recreation. A May Day party was held May 20, at the home of Brother and Sister Gunter. The entire branch was present. The program was well arranged.

The young people, under the leadership of Margaret Kenny, presented a play May 26, entitled "The Wife of Judas." The money collected from this production was used for branch expenses. The young people have been moving forward with increasing attendance. A divisional prayer service has been conducted regularly the fourth Sunday of each month at eight-thirty in the morning. The Tenth Legion, which has raised the goal for many young people, claims ten members of Spokane Branch. A special exercise was held June 4, at which time they were presented their membership cards, and their pastor accepted them for service in the branch.

A special sunrise prayer service was held for the three delegates who were chosen to represent Spokane at the Young People's Convention in Lamoni. The three young people, Catherine Porter, Margaret Kenny and Jack Eneroth, accompanied by Thelma Chapman, of Walla Walla, left June 9. They returned home July 3, with inspiring news of the convention.

The annual business meeting was held July 28, with Apostle M. A. McConley presiding. The following officers were elected: A. J. Weeks, pastor; Alma Andrews and James Sage, counselors; Orpha Coleman, branch clerk; Lloyd Whiting, treasurer; Catherine Porter, historian; Merle Chiles, publicity agent; Velva Kinne, musical director; Joyce Kinney, librarian; Alma Andrews, church school director; Catherine Porter, church school secretary; Earl Jordan, adult leader; Goldie Sage, women's leader; Margaret Kenny, director of the young people; Orpha Coleman, children's leader. A very impressive program was arranged for the installation of officers Sunday, August 20.

August 4-13 the joint reunion of the Northwest was held at Silver Lake near Seattle, Washington. Many delegates from Spokane were privileged to attend.

The children's division in the church school has grown under the leadership of Orpha Coleman. Sister Coleman is also leader of the junior church, assisted by the priesthood.

The women's group and the adult division have done much towards the building program.

The church school is planning for a picnic for the entire branch, to take place September 4.

Apostle C. F. Ellis Writes of Arrival in Society Islands

Prepares for Mission Conference

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, now at work in the interests of the church in the Society Islands Mission, writes in a letter to the First Presidency of his arrival in the islands:

"On the evening of July 14, we saw land for the first time since July 5. It was the leeward side of the Island of Tikehau, where we have a fine branch and church. Of course we did not land there, but continued on our course, reaching Tahiti early the next morning.

"Words are inadequate to describe the beauty of lovely Tahiti as it is approached in the early morning hours. I was the first on deck to see the dark outline of the mountains, the lighthouse light, the valleys, the ridges, and finally the shoreline with its stalwart coconut palms nodding in the early morning breezes from the mountains. How majestically the mountains reached heavenward, their peaks piercing the clouds which hung lazily about them! In a short time we had entered the lagoon through Papeete's splendid pass, and were soon presenting passports and letters of recommendation to the port police for admission to these French colonies. I passed all inspections and was among the first to be ready to go ashore.

"We had on board a distinguished gentleman and statesman, Mr. Lionel de Tastes, newly-elected delegate for Tahiti and member of the Chamber of Deputies in Paris. All Tahiti and near-by islands were out with all display of pageantry possible for these native folk, to welcome the delegate to their shores. After he had disembarked, made his speech from a stand erected on the wharf for that purpose, and other formalities had been indulged in, the passengers were permitted to go ashore. Before I could find my way down the gangplank, a group of Saints, including Brother J. H. Yager, came on board to greet me. I had no difficulty in passing through the customs and was soon in Tarona, the name of our Pepeete mission property, which, when translated, means 'Sharon.' Here I found a welcome in the mission house with Elder and Sister Yager and their lovely little daughter, Nadine."

At various times since 1914, Brother Ellis has lived in Tarona, and as he returned this time, it was with mingled feelings. "No more beautiful place can be found in this part of the Island," he writes. "From our missionary house and office we can see the great Pacific as she stretches out from our shores. Even as I write I can look out and see the sea as it rolls and breaks upon the reef hardly one mile away, and hear the roar as it comes in on the evening air softly blowing from the ocean."

Tarona has been the mission headquarters since the reorganization of the church in the islands in the days of Apostle T. W. Smith. The tidal wave of 1906, destroyed everything the church had—chapel, missionary house, printing press, books, etc. Since that year, each succeeding missionary to the islands has done something in the rebuilding of the place until today it is one of the most beautiful spots in Papeete. In and around Tarona many of the Saints live who make up Tarona Branch. Several families from the Tuamotuan Archipelago are living there at present, so they can send their children to the city schools, as they have no schools in their home islands.

Apostle Ellis leaves his family in the United States while he labors in the islands. Sister Ellis, two little daughters, and an infant son make their home in Independence, Missouri. Of their farewell to him at the Kansas City Union Station the evening of July 1, Brother Ellis has to say: "A faithful companion, in the midst of added responsibility, quietly standing and consenting to the call of the church, a sleeping son in the parked automobile, and two little girls standing on the station platform with hands waving, wondering what it was all about, bring home to me today as I sit here in the missionary house of this distant mission, thoughts that are too rich to be compared to temporal values. They challenge me to duty and to faithful service. May God protect and care for them in my absence!"

In a short time Brother Ellis will be leaving Tahiti for the lower islands, where they will have the mission conference, an event looked forward to from year to year by the native Saints. This location of the conference will be convenient, as most of the members live in that group of islands and can come in their own little boats thereby saving considerable money. Apostle Ellis finds numerous changes have taken place in the eight years since he has been gone from this mission—many have died, children have grown up, and several new members appear at the services.

To the Saints at home in America and in all lands Brother Ellis sends this message: "I trust the Saints in the homeland and in all lands, are pressing ever forward in the great conflict, for the time is short in which to accomplish the important work required of our hands. I extend greetings to the church in every clime, and pray for the speedy accomplishment of the purposes of Him who has called us to serve."

Des Moines District Conference and Reunion

An Important Spiritual Experience Shared by All

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was in attendance at this gathering August 13-20. He preached ten sermons, taught a class each week day, and addressed the priesthood, officers, and teachers.

The reunion services began under the spirit of light and understanding. The spirit of unity among all the district officers was enjoyed and felt by the Saints who were in attendance. Homes were thrown open to visitors, while some of the sisters served meals at the church for a small sum, receiving donations until the final accounting showed a small balance for the district treasury.

There were many spiritual prayers and testimonies given at the meetings, and from the start there was a gradual increase in the desire of the Saints for divine recognition. As a result of this desire for better things, and the special preparation on the part of the brethren in charge, two spiritual communications were received through the gifts of revelation and prophecy. On Tuesday morning, Brother F. T. Mussel spoke under the spirit to some individuals and to the group. On the last Sunday, Brother Edwards spoke to the members of the district. The communications from the Lord through his servants were joyfully received as a gift from him because of their need.

Not a discordant note sounded during the reunion, and the unity that prevailed throughout was a result of thinking together with Brother Edwards and being obedient to the direction of those in charge.

A youth's prayer service was held Saturday morning in Pioneer Park, which overlooks the Capitol and the city. Sixty young people were present, with a large number of them taking part in the service. Pastor V. L. Deskin was in charge.

Classes for the boys and girls of the elementary grades were taught by John Edward Williams, Vivian Castings, and Marie Nelson. These classes were arranged by District Superintendent Ernest Kirlin in collaboration with Brother C. Wayne Wolf, local church school director. Much good was done throughout the classes. Brother Kirlin, who was not able to attend the morning classes in the week, drove his car seventy miles every night, bringing a load of Newton Saints with him.

District Chorister Eva Cook directed the singing in an effective way, making use of the musical talent of the Saints, and leading the congregational singing. She was assisted by Lloyd Mussel and Vivian Castings.

Richard Ackleson, eight years old, of Newton, was baptized at the closing service of the reunion by Elder Clyde McDonald. Richard is the great-grandson of W. C. Nirk, who for many years was president of the Des Moines District.

The Brooksville, Maine, Reunion

Fine Attendance and Good Meetings Enjoyed

The reunion at Brooksville, Maine, for both the Eastern and Western Maine districts, began officially with a short business session Saturday, August 12. Elder Pearl F. Billings with his "Zion Builder Boys," from Stonington, and Elder Archie Begg, from Vinalhaven, spent three days in preparatory work on the grounds.

At the first meeting organization was effected by electing Apostle Paul M. Hanson with the two district presidents and Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley to preside; Newman M. Wilson to act as secretary; Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley as chorister; Mrs. N. M. Wilson as organist; Mrs. E. F. Robertson as reporter for the Herald.

A committee was chosen to draft a letter to Bishop E. L. Traver, expressing the sympathy of the Saints in the accident which has held him for so long a time confined to his bed, and their sincere regret that he and Sister Traver were unable to attend the reunion.

As the custom has been for a number of years, Elder E. F. Robertson had oversight of the spiritual work, seeing that the daily program was carried out, and attending to the many matters that constantly demand attention. Elder Newman M. Wilson had charge of the work in the kitchen, which he accomplished with his usual skill and efficiency, being assisted by Elder Pearl F. Billings. Elder Archie Begg attended to the rooms and tents, and the securing of beds for the campers. Elder W. E. Rogers held his familiar place in charge of the ice cream and candy store. Elder Begg was assisted in policing the grounds by Brother A. D. Hawthorn.

Week-day attendance averaged above one hundred, of whom about two thirds were young people. One of the most impressive features of the reunion was the marshalling of the young people in the morning in front of the commissary building where songs were sung. The ceremony of flag-raising was taken care of at this time.

Each week-day morning, the prayer meetings were followed by two class periods, Apostle Paul M. Hanson being in charge from ten to ten forty-five, and Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley from eleven to eleven forty-five. At the same time, the children under twelve years met in their own tent under the leadership of Sister Gunsolley. These classes were all well attended. No meetings were held in the afternoons, the time being reserved for recreation.

Philip Billings acted as host to about ninety Saints, inviting them to spend a day on board his schooner. This was an enjoyable feature of the reunion.

Brothers M. C. and Sanford Fisher, of Boston, were present during the last days of the reunion, and each made a valuable contribution by way of testimony and sermon. Other preachers were Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley, and Elder Newman M. Wilson and E. F. Robertson. Sister Hanson accompanied her husband, meeting the Saints of Maine for the first time.

Eight persons were baptized by Elders Robertson and Wilson, which alone would justify the reunion.

Toronto District Reunion

The annual district reunion was held on the Latter Day Saints reunion grounds at Lowbanks, Ontario, situated on Lake Erie beach, July 29 to August 14.

For a few days previous to the opening of the reunion, members of the committee, together with other faithful workers, were busy erecting tents, preparing the dining hall, repairing the lights, and cleaning the water system, to have everything ready for the organization meeting Saturday evening.

Elder D. T. Williams was elected to act with the reunion committee in presiding over the activities.

The first Sunday's attendance was good. Prayer meeting, in charge of Brother Williams, lasted from nine until ten-thirty o'clock. Classes were taught by D. T. Williams, B. H. Hewitt, S. G. Clark, Marjory Clark, and Zella Hewitt.

Three baptisms took place after dinner was served, and the confirmation occurred during the afternoon meetings.

A song service in charge of S. G. Clark, musical director, called the campers and visitors together to hear Elder D. T. Williams preach in his usual interesting way.

The daily program for the first week commenced at six o'clock in the morning; family worship at seven, in charge of Elder W. I. Fligg, who came from the New York district to assist in the reunion. Breakfast, seven-fifteen; prayer meeting, nine; class work from ten-ten till noon.

Elder D. T. Williams taught a class for the first four days on "Corner Stones of the Reorganization"; B. H. Hewitt taught "Stewardship" during the last two days; James Pycock taught "What Did Jesus Christ Teach?" The children were cared for by Marion McDonald, and Zella Hewitt taught the boys and girls. All classes were well attended.

The afternoons were given over to recreation, under the supervision of B. H. Hewitt.

Preaching services every evening were occupied by D. T. Williams, W. I. Fligg and George Njeim during the first week.

A concert was enjoyed Saturday evening instead of the regular preaching service. As a result of a musical contest between the men and women of the camp, the women were the winners.

President Frederick M. Smith arrived Saturday to spend a busy week-end. The entire Sunday morning was given over to him to use as he thought best. At nine o'clock, the preaching tent was full of worshipers from New York, London, Owen Sound, Chatham and Detroit districts, as well as the Toronto district.

President Smith spoke on the origin, significance, meaning, and importance of the sacrament. At the close of his address, the sacrament was administered, in keeping with his remarks. President Smith's subject for the afternoon sermon was "Zion."

In the evening, Elder John Martin, who had stopped in for a couple of days on his way north, preached one of his pleasing sermons.

During the day, Elder John Shields baptized an aged man with whom he became acquainted many years ago at the beginning of his long ministry. Brother Shields was the first missionary of the Reorganization to preach in the Lowbanks vicinity.

The second Monday prayer meeting was in charge of President Smith, after which he conducted a priesthood meeting.

The second week classes were taught by W. I. Fligg, B. H. Hewitt, James Pycock, Zella Hewitt, and Marion McDonald.

Preaching services during the second week were in charge of Elders John Shields, St. John, Hewitt, Fligg, and Njeim.

A camp paper was conducted by Elder Fligg, assisted by several others. A number of editions were published.

The last Sunday was occupied by a prayer meeting at nine o'clock; Sunday school; preaching in the afternoon by Elder Pycock, and in the evening, George Njeim.

Spring River District Reunion

The reunion of Spring River district, held in the American Legion Park, of Columbus, Kansas, August 4-13, was one long to be remembered by Saints attending. The comforting influence of the Spirit of the heavenly Father seemed to bind the group together in unity and love from early morning until late at night, when gathered around Brother Sheehy, taps was sung before retiring.

The leaders contributing largely to the success of the reunion were Apostle F. H. Edwards, and Elders John F. Sheehy and Amos T. Higdon. Sermons were delivered at ten-forty-five in the morning and at eight o'clock in the evening, by either Brother Sheehy or Edwards. These attracted special attention not only by the Saints in attendance, but also by outsiders who came for many miles around to hear them.

Brother Sheehy's early morning class on "The Material and Use of the Quarterlies," was highly beneficial to the church school workers. Perplexing questions concerning the church school and its membership were studied in this class.

The prayer meetings with the district president, Brother Higdon, in charge, brought the Saints in close communion with their heavenly Father. A prophecy was given Friday morning by Brother Higdon through the power of the Holy Spirit, which sank deep into the hearts of the young people. He told them of the great blessings in store for them if they would but have faith and bear their testimony. Cecil Cook was called to the office of priest at the last Sunday morning prayer service.

Preceding the afternoon class, the short questionaires on church history, given by Brother Edwards, were invigorating to the memories of the old-timers in church service, and served as a stimulant for the younger members to study the background of the great movement of which they are now a part.

Everyone enjoyed the recreational period in the afternoon. With Brother Edwards as referee and Brother Sheehy on the court, some closely matched volley ball games were played. Tournament matches between Joplin, Pittsburg, and Fairland young people, resulted in Pittsburg taking first place.

Following the night preaching services, games and songs entertained the large crowds until the lights were extinguished at ten-thirty.

The last day of the reunion was one filled with activities. The early morning prayer meeting was followed by church school, at which Elder Draper, of San Bernardino, California, gave a talk. Brother Sheehy preached at eleven o'clock in the morning, followed by another sermon by J. Charles May at two o'clock. A sacred concert directed by Brother Victor L. Krucker, of Miami, Oklahoma, gave a chance for many of the district church members to express their talents. The large reunion choir made an excellent showing with the rendition of "All Hail Immanuel," "The Awakening Chorus," and "The Lord My Shepherd Is."

As the day neared an end, many felt a tinge of sorrow and regret. They had been awakened to the fact that there were certain elements in the gospel of Christ which had been lying dormant in their lives. The reunion was officially closed after Brother Sheehy's sermon Sunday night.

Holden Stake

J. A. Gillen Delivers Fine Messages

August is not a good time for a missionary meeting, if held in a hot church. Old timers will recall the successful "camp meetings" of years gone by, and the many outdoor reunions held every year. Recently Stake President W. S. Macrae secured the services of Apostle J. A. Gillen for an interesting series of meetings at Holden. The meetings were held in a tent set up on the church lawn, with a loyal band of young people furnishing the music. Those who have heard Brother Gillen on such topics as, "And God Hath Set," "The Ministry of Service," "God's Way Is the Best Way," "Cast Your Net on the Right Side," know what a spiritual impression has been left on all his hearers who open their hearts to it.

For various reasons quite a percentage of the members of this district did not, or could not avail themselves of the opportunity to be built up spiritually. Brother Gillen struck fearlessly at indifference and lack of faith in church members, giving the Saints a challenge to better and more effective living. At times there were evidences of the prophetic phase of his apostolic calling which left a profound impression on the Saints. His last sermon, Sunday night, was delivered while rain was falling on the tent, his voice giving evidence of a much needed rest after strenuous efforts at Omaha, Council Bluffs, and in this series.

At present every group in this stake is anticipating a worthwhile time at a three-day institute, sponsored by the young people's council of the stake, at Holden, September 8-10, and also the regular business session of the stake conference on Saturday morning, August 9, at nine forty-five.

Elder A. M. Baker held a series of meetings at Caraway, August 1-13. Brother A. E. Zeigenhorn preached two evenings.

Sunday, August 6, several Saints from Needham were guests at Caraway. Immediately following the sacrament service, Elder Zeigenhorn preached.

On the following Sunday, three people entered the church through the waters of baptism. At the evening service Brother Baker preached to a crowd of four or five hundred people on "The Two Covenants." Large crowds were present nearly every night of the meetings and good order prevailed. Brother Baker won his way to many hearts during his stay at Caraway by administer-

Our Departed Ones

HEAVILAND.—Miss Marguerite Elizabeth Heaviland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Heaviland, was born December 20, 1914, and died April 25, at her home in Detroit. She was baptized into the church in December, 1922. Marguerite graduated from the Cooley High School in the class of 1932. For many months Marguerite suffered with tuberculosis, but was always patient and hopeful. When those caring for her became discouraged, she would encourage them by her pleasant smile and kind words. Her father, mother, seven brothers, and one sister, did everything they possibly could do for her comfort and recovery, but God saw fit to call this dear one home. The funeral service was held at the First Church in Detroit, with Elders H. Booth and David E. Dowker in charge. Interment was in Parkview Memorial Cemetery.

FRIEND.—Jacob Friend was born July 29, 1853, in Indiana County, Pennsylvania. He left there while still a young man, going to the state of Michigan. He was married July 3, 1873, to Miss Margaret L. Hartley. To this union were born seven children. Brother Friend was baptized in 1892 by Elder Robert Davis. Later he moved to Independence. He died August 24. He leaves to mourn his departure his widow, Margaret L.; one brother, Frank Friend, of Indiana, Pennsylvania; three sons, Harry J., Charles J., and Fred H.; four daughters, Mrs. Bert Peterson, Mrs. H. B. Roberts, Mrs. J. C. Smith, and Mrs. G. R. Farrow. Funeral services were held August 26, the sermon preached by Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

Public Defender

The Pigeon ruffled his feathers, as he withdrew from the inkpot, making smudgy tracks across a clean sheet of paper. He ignored the Editor's look of disgust. Evidently he was preparing to be in an oratorical mood.

"I am something of a public benefactor," he said, in his politician's tone. "People are coming to depend on me to criticize all sorts of human folly, which they have not the opportunity of exposing themselves. They love their friends and value their friendships; and so they hesitate to say the things that need to be said to good people who make foolish mistakes. So, they tell it to me. And I tell it to the world, hoping that it will reach the ears of the offending parties."

"And do the offending parties read your criticisms?" we asked. "Like that one on chewing gum, for example.

Pigeon unbent and became confidential.

"I am really afraid that the offending parties do not read. If they do, they rarely apply what they read to themselves."

"What remedy would you suggest?"

Pigeon thought a moment.

"I would suggest that those who do read the criticisms may cut them out, place them in an envelope, and mail them to the offending parties!"

"But listen!" said the Editor. "Why, that's ——" But the Pigeon expected a storm of disapproval at the idea, and had already flown out the window.

But don't expect people to take your criticisms seriously. They could criticize, too.

The Mark of the Beast

A strange fear is paralyzing what H. L. Mencken calls "The Bible Belt." Newspapers report that the hill billy students of Scripture have been referring to the thirteenth chapter of Revelation in an effort to identify the NRA emblem as "the beast" mentioned in that chapter.

It should be enough to point out that the NRA eagle does not fit the description of "the beast." The eagle haunts mountains and high crags; it is not an undersea traveler. It does not have the "seven heads and ten horns," but only plain feathers. These matters should be clear enough to those who take an interest in "the interpretation of Scripture." One suspects that a good many who are calling the NRA eagle "the mark of the beast" have not read the chapter carefully.

It is well to be informed before you become panic-stricken about anything. If you run heedlessly with a mob, you will soon find yourself surrounded by folly.

The Man Behind the Painted Window

The Editor's window is close to the sidewalk. Curious persons, going by, often stare at him. They should be embarrassed to do it, but the Editor seemed to have all the embarrassment. His privacy was no more than that of a gold fish in a glass bowl.

Recently he had the lower part of the window glass painted black, and has since enjoyed an almost cloistered security. But just recently his friends hung a sign on his desk reading: "I'm just a bird in a gilded cage."

Recovery

4.—Reserves and Security

Rich Man, Poor Man It has been a natural consequence of the moral and spiritual emphasis of religion, that religious people should protest against the tyranny of money, and this protest has been extended to a dislike for those who make money in any considerable quantities. A man who makes money becomes a target for both criticism and graft in proportion as his wealth grows. Even the churches are inclined to play a dual role in soliciting contributions from him, and in loudly denouncing him, for his conduct in the management of his affairs.

This has developed the idea, among many people, that it is sinful to be wealthy, and that there is some inherent righteousness in poverty; that those who are to inherit the kingdom of heaven inherit nothing on earth; and that it is a prerequisite to be poor if one wants to be good.

Nomads are Poor The American people have not been willing to "stay put," and have generally wandered around the country at will. It is the exception, rather than the rule, to find a whole family in one place. They go where opportunity calls. But the nomad always leaves property behind. Every move makes him sacrifice something. A nation of rolling stones tends to wear itself down. Moving in order to see new places tends to keep people poor—whether it has any effect on their righteousness or not. If poverty could make people better, our roving American population would present unparalleled examples of virtue. But the facts do not perfectly fit the theory.

Credit and Debts The attitude toward wealth and money has made people lenient, even loose, in their attitude towards debt. Many people are not only poor—they are in debt. Debt is merely credit that has been overused. Encouraged by merchants who want to increase sales, people plunge into debt when there is neither need nor reason for it. And debt has proved to be a form of slavery. The first step towards financial security is to be free of debt.

Supporters of the Church The spiritual kingdom of God can be populated with poor people. "Zion is the pure in heart," we are often reminded. But in an economic way a poor people are at the mercy of the world around them. An economic and industrial Zion will require money and property to be built. It takes money to erect buildings, to buy land, to operate industries. The spiritual work of the church must never cease, or all else is in vain. But economics is a matter for property and wealth, and a people who neglect them cannot hope to make themselves secure.

Building the Reserve People must learn to use wisely what they have. Reserves and security depend not so much upon an increased income as they do upon the prudent handling of the income and property already possessed. Extravagance can dissipate the largest income that could ever be. Wisdom can save something out of even the slenderest resources.

Righteousness and Money Whatever a man's character may be, his property gives him additional power to be that thing more effectively. There is no reason why the balance of power should be in the hands of the unreligious. An ordinary program of sermonizing and religious education, promoted by most churches, can proceed from year to year, financed by gifts, pledges, and bequests with no thought of the future. There is no economic obligation. But a church that wishes to plan for the economic security of its people must have something to build that security with. It is not the part of wisdom to despise the property with which the ends are to be achieved.

Utah Mormon Polygamy

One Wife or Many?

A REVIEW OF THE "THREE BOOKS" ON THE SUBJECT

In years gone by a series of three remarkable brochures was published by three of the sons of Joseph Smith: One Wife or Many, by President Joseph Smith; Polygamy: Was It an Original Tenet of the Church? by Apostle Alexander H. Smith, and The Bible vs. Polygamy, by President David H. Smith.

President Joseph Smith emphasized three outstanding facts from Book of Mormon and Biblical history: that when God moved directly and personally to people or repeople the earth or a large portion of it, he three times began the work with one wife and not several for each man involved.

"This secures a three-fold cord of evidence. First; the creation, one man, one woman in marriage. Second; the repeopling of the earth by Noah and his sons, each with one wife only. Third; the settling of a new land by Lehi and his family, each man with one wife."—One Wife or Many, page 3.

Brigham Young said that when Adam came to this earth he brought one of his wives with him. Why he brought only one for such a great undertaking was not explained. Nor yet why Brigham should need twenty-four or more wives to help people Utah while Adam needed but one with which to people the whole earth.

THE BIBLE

David H. Smith in his analysis (remarkable for its clarity) also cites first the historic precedent of Adam:

"The earth was all before this people and needed cultivation, filling up with a goodly seed, and God chose through the one-wife system to bring it about."—The Bible vs. Polygamy, page 2.

The prophet Malachi commenting on that historic precedent says:

"And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a goodly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."—Malachi 2: 15.

A departure from this plan later at a time when the need for a plurality of wives would be much less (if it ever existed) would of necessity be regarded as a departure indeed from the divine plan. Such departure apparently occurred first in the case of one Lamech. (Genesis 4: 19-24.) The Inspired Version of the Bible is very explicit concerning this man and his works:

"And Lamech took unto himself two wives . . . And Lamech said unto his wives . . . I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt . . . Wherefore the Lord cursed Lamech and his house, and all they that had covenanted with Satan, for they kept not the commandments of God . . . And their works were abominations, and began to spread among the sons of men."—Genesis 5: 30-39, Inspired Version.

Even as the Book of Mormon condemns the polygamy of David and Solomon as being "abominable"; so does the Bible (Inspired Version) condemn the works of Lamech.

The favorite defense of apologists for polygamy is found in the Old Testament history of the patriarchs and kings of Israel. The defense is not found in specific commandment from the Lord, but rather in precedent set by Biblical characters. However, these examples when analyzed reveal that the value of the precedent is superficial. A few examples will illustrate:

Abraham was a polygamist. Why? Abraham's wife, Sarai, grew old without children, and to remedy the situation she persuaded Abraham to take a servant, Hagar, to wife. (Genesis 16: 1, 2.) Afterward, when the bondwoman, Hagar, had borne a child (Ishmael) Sarai became jealous and admonished her spouse to put the second wife away: "Cast out this bondwoman and her son." (Genesis 21: 10.) Now for the first time in this whole matter God speaks, and he admonishes Abraham to do as his wife has told him to do (Genesis 21: 12). God did not command Abraham to go into polygamy; he commanded him to come out of polygamy. The precedent has value only to those who should heed it and abandon both the doctrine and the practice.

The case of Jacob is cited as a classical precedent. In this case Jacob loved Rachael and served seven years for her and evidently married her. (Genesis 29: 21, 22.) But her father, Laban, on the marriage night, under cover of darkness, imposed upon him the older sister, Leah. Thus came Jacob into polygamy by the duplicity of a Godless but crafty father-in-law. Afterward, in jealous controversy, these two sisters each gave him another woman to wife. God appears nowhere in the whole entourage.

The examples of David and Solomon are cited. Of them the Book of Mormon says: "David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines; which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord." (Jacob 2: 27.) To believers in the Book of Mormon that pronouncement robs the precedent of virtue.

As a matter of fact, David and Solomon and other kings of like type were in violation not alone of the historic precedent set by the Lord in the case of Adam and Noah; they were in violation of the written law governing the kings and priests of Israel. The law for the king was:

"Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold."—Deuteronomy 17: 17.

Wives he was not to multiply at all. David and Solomon were lawbreakers in this regard and their

example of no force to those who respect the law. Solomon had one thousand wives and mistresses. He was very wise in some things; but he made a fool of himself with women nine hundred and ninety-nine times, and his example in that regard establishes no precedent excepting one to be avoided.

Some shadow of endorsement for David's polygamy is sought in such passages as the following:

"And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul; And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom. . . ."—2 Samuel 12: 7, 8.

Here it is claimed is a clear case of the Lord giving plural wives. But in what sense? Was it his will and for David's good? or was it permitted because of perversity and as something to result in evil? (Even as it was against his advice that Israel should have had David or any other man for king.) Note the sequel from the very same chapter where the word "give" again appears:

"Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun."—2 Samuel 12: 11.

Here he "gives" these same wives to another and for evil. It seems not to have been a sacred "giving" in either case, and the term "give" meant not as it did when God gave Eve to Adam.

A number of passages from the King James Version of the Bible seem to throw the mantle of divine approval over David as a very perfect man; and such passages have been used to support him in his polygamy. In numerous places in the Inspired Version, prepared by Joseph Smith, these passages read differently and conform to the Book of Mormon statement that David's conduct in that matter was "abominable" in the sight of the Lord. Comparisons from one passage will illustrate our point:

"For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father."—1 Kings 11: 4, King James Version.

"For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, and it became as the heart of David his father. . . . And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord, as David his father, and went not fully after the Lord."—1 Kings 11: 4-6, Inspired Version.

The fact that the twelve tribes of Israel (from one of whom came Christ) sprang from a lineage in which polygamy was involved is used as an argument for the institution. In a compendium of doctrines issuing from the Deseret News Press, some years ago, and prepared by their Apostle Franklin D. Richards and Elder James A. Little, this statement was made:

"If plural marriage be unlawful, then is the whole plan of salvation, through the house of Israel, a failure and the entire fabric of Christianity without foundation."

This is a familiar argument. But if we are to rush to the defense of all the practices of the patriarchs and kings of Israel in order to salvage Christianity we shall have to defend some strange customs; and the institution of "Concubinage" is one of them, intertwined in Biblical history always with polygamy. They cannot be separated. As a matter of fact the Lord carried down his work through generations in spite of their vagaries and lawbreaking and chose to bless the twelve tribes whenever worthy of blessing despite the waywardness of ancestors.

One must bear in mind the primitive times in which those men lived and that the Lord used such material as he could find; further, some obscure passages, as the example just cited that seemed to commit him to their questionable liaisons must be understood in the light of the written law that he himself laid down and the precedent he had himself set for them in the cases of Adam and Noah. They were a wayward and "stiff-necked people" under a "school master" designed to bring them to a higher order under Christ.

In the New Testament, under the Christian regime, there is no shadow of dubiety in the teaching concerning marriage. Nowhere are dubious precedents found to hide behind. The law is clear:

"And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh?"—Matthew 19: 4, 5.

"Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband."—1 Corinthians 7: 2.

This accords fully with the later revelation of modern times from which we shall quote. The three books are in agreement: They "two" shall be "one flesh."

The Book of Mormon

The teachings of the Book of Mormon are definite and clear. The book of Jacob contains this instruction as given to the Nephites:

"For behold, thus saith the Lord, this people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Jacob 2: 32-36.

Play is made upon the statement in the quotation from the Book of Mormon:

"For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things."—Jacob 2: 39.

It is argued that room was left here for a later revelation sanctioning polygamy. However, the denunciations of polygamy as "abominable" were so unmistakable that this argument is not tenable. A better interpretation must be sought. At that very time the Lord said he was trying to "raise up a righteous branch" (verse 34), and his rule laid down to ensure such result was: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none." This was a perpetual injunction against polygamy and all forms of extra marital indulgences. Clearly the meaning of the verse quoted is that when the Lord is raising up a righteous people he "commands them," i. e., he reveals himself to them. At all times they "shall hearken to these things" already written in the law.

The Doctrine and Covenants

Coming now to our own times and the law as given in the Doctrine and Covenants. Certainly in the beginning of the church in these later times the Lord sought "to raise up a righteous people." In fact he gave to them this instruction:

"And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio: and there I will give unto you my law; . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7; Utah edition, 38: 31, 32.

This was given January, 1831. They were to go to the Ohio and there the Lord would give the law that should enable them to raise up a righteous people, without spot and blameless. This was in accord with the Book of Mormon statement: "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." (Jacob 2: 39.)

They gathered to Ohio, as commanded, and there the revelation of February, 1831, was given, and on the marriage question it said:

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7; Utah edition, 42: 22, 23.

The law, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," is not capable of successful misrepresentation. It was very well understood. And with it in mind the church in 1835 drafted and adopted the marriage covenant which requires this pledge to be taken: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?"—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2. (In Utah editions until 1876.)

This same document, approved by the General Assembly of 1835, made a further declaration:

"We declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4.

This section remained in the Utah editions of the Doctrine and Covenants until 1876. It continues its place in our Doctrine and Covenants as representing the law of the church from its beginning until now.

Still further instruction is found in the following:

"And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3; Utah edition, 49: 15-17.

Conclusion

Clearly and fairly and dispassionately we have set forth the law from the three books. The preponderance of evidence is all in favor of one wife rather than many. No dubious precedents from the Old Testament can overthrow the clear-cut law that runs through the three books from the beginning: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." (Genesis 2: 24.) Or as Christ put it to even further clarify its meaning: "They twain [they two] shall be one flesh." No modern revelation of dubious origin and clandestine introduction to the Saints should stand for a moment against the clear and clean law of the Lord as supported by the three books of the church.

With malice toward none and with charity for all we close with an invitation to all believers in the great restoration movement to renounce (not only in practice but in belief as well) any and every theory of marriage that conflicts with the divine law: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none." (Jacob 2.) Let every other philosophy of marriage, whether it be polygamy, or "companionate" or "trial marriage," and every sort of extra marital indulgence be renounced, that Latter Day Saints may shine forth a righteous people without spot and blameless.

The Story of Etta Kett

Moonlight and Roses

It was the Sunday after Etta had entertained a group of her friends at an "announcement party." The people of Elmwood branch were fairly standing on their ears at the rapidity with which Bill and Etta had made up, acquired a diamond engagement ring, and started on their plans for their new home. Theirs was not to be one of those torture devices known as the long engagement.

Bill and Etta had just arrived at the church and were coming up the steps. There were friendly greetings from all sides. Everybody was elevated, for the time, on the crest of their high surge of happiness.

"Etta works fast when she gets started," said Art Blanchard, laughing. Lillian rallied to a quick defense.

"That's a dirty dig. And you know it was Bill who did the fast work. I can't think what lucky accident gave him a new break, but he certainly has done some quick stepping." They were never to know about the two flat tires.

There was a strange face at the edge of the crowd on the church steps. Who—? Why, it was Wayne Roland! Etta felt a warmth creeping up her spine. Could it be possible that she was going to be embarrassed? But no—Bill's presence beside her made her feel calm and secure. What a comfort a man could be!

In a few brief glances Etta saw how Wayne was taking in the situation—and the changes in his mind. His eyes were aflame when he first saw Etta. He started to step forward—his lips were opened to speak. Then he saw Bill, and the fires in his eyes died down, smoldering darkly. A stray sunbeam, caught in Etta's diamond, was reflected towards him with intensified, stabbing brilliance. Almost immediately his face reflected pain and disappointment. He seemed to wilt. Something he had come for was now unattainable. Etta was filled with pity—but his disappointment was not her fault.

However, she could not be held down long. Bill was beside her. Nothing else mattered. She felt safe—and supremely happy. The days of doubt and indecision were like memories of a nightmare out of a dark and forbidding past, now happily dispersed in the brave sunshine of reality. From the security of her present happiness everything else sank away into a dull and eventless background.

Quick and cordial words of greeting were exchanged between Wayne, Etta, and Bill. No word was spoken of the engagement. Wayne was completely under control now—but Etta knew that he understood perfectly.

That evening Bill and Etta were out driving. A full moon flooded the landscape before them. At one side of the road, near a deserted house, a stone wall enclosed a bit of yard. Over its gray boulders a rambler rose held its rich red offering up in the moonlight. Bill slowed the car.

"I'd like some of them, Bill."

He stepped through the tall grass to reach them. He came back with a large bunch, but he had one thumb in his mouth.

"I had forgotten that roses have thorns," he said.

Etta reached for them happily.

"And those who get stuck by thorns," she said, "do not always receive the roses!"

Religious experience is not discovered at the end of an argument, or at the end of a series of lessons on abstract ideals and virtues. It is gained, when it is gained, by happy contacts with other religious people, by solving problems that involve deep human needs, by quiet meditation on some of the underlying meanings and values of the on-going stream of life, by thrilling enjoyment of the beauties and wonders revealed in human nature and the physical world.—Ernest J. Chave, in International Journal of Religious Education.

One Thing Certain

One thing is certain: that the young people need something to do in a social way. It is a part of their life—their normal development. In early years friendships are formed, habits of speech are adopted, ease and poise in contacts with people are developed.

The question is: shall this function be performed by or under the kindly supervision of the church, or shall it be performed by the dance hall, the drug store, and the basement pool room?

Our young people can do much for themselves. They often have the finest leadership material within their own ranks. Agreeable with their pastor, they can go ahead with plans for social and religious activities.

Scrapbook Contest

An interesting suggestion comes to us for a branch contest among the young people. A limited period, say a month, is set in which to make an entirely new scrapbook. A small entry fee may be charged for each contestant, and the money used to award prizes at the end of the contest.

Departments in the scrapbook should concern the future plans and hopes of the young people. Suggestions for departments are as follows: "My House," "My Living Room" "My Kitchen," "My Workshop," "My Rock Garden," "My Retreat," "My Summer Cottage," and others. Pictures may be cut from current magazines and newspapers. Write-ups to be by the maker of the scrapbook. The idea is lots of fun without a contest.

On a set day the books are fastened to the wall, or otherwise displayed for inspection. You may either have a committee of judges, or have the visitors vote as for a popularity contest. Prizes can be real, or funny. Winners should make speeches, also the losers.

Know Your Man

If you want to know a man's real character, play a game of tennis with him. One set of competitive tennis will display more true habits of any individual than could otherwise be discovered in a month.

Does the player give his opponent the better side of the court without flipping a coin for it? Does he rally politely, or is the ball batted from one end of the court to the other? Is the receiver always ready before a ball is served? Does the player savagely kick a stone off the court, glare at his racquet, or make some other excuse for missing a shot; or does he shout "Beautiful" to his opponent as every muscle is stretched to the limit in an attempt to return a perfectly placed drive?

Most important of all, does he play the game with every last ounce of skill and energy he can command, until his clothes are wet with perspiration and stinging sweat runs down his brow and into his eyes? Then, does he still play the game as enthusiastically as when he started?—The San Francisco Zion Builder.

The Latter Day Saint Concept of the Holy Spirit

By C. B. Hartshorn

The Church has not declared itself officially to be in favor of any particular view on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. We are glad to present this article which represents the author's own concept of the doctrine held by our people and supported by our books.—Editors.

OCCASIONALLY, some of our speakers and writers present concepts of the Holy Spirit which differ so radically that I wonder—is there such a thing as "the Latter Day Saint concept of the Holy Spirit"?

For the purpose of furthering our study of a great fundamental of the Christian religion, let us indulge the assumption that Latter Day Saints do hold a very definite concept of the Holy Spirit. The present writer readily concedes that the church has not been dogmatic on this point. Unless and until God speaks, our discussions should be considered as interpretative only, even though categorically expressed.

In an article which appeared in these columns recently, we read this statement: "The Scriptures clearly indicate that the Holy Spirit is a divine intelligence and one of the Godhead. He is therefore much more than an abstract term used to denote an effect. He is also a cause, just as fully so, it appears, as Jesus was a cause in promoting his mission."

This concept makes the Holy Spirit coordinate with Jesus. Hence, we have "God in three persons, blessed Trinity," as an old hymn has expressed it. If this correctly represents our doctrine, then Latter Day Saints have no distinctive concept on this subject. This is Trinitarianism. That concept was presented in the writings of the church fathers as early as the third or fourth century of Christianity. In the eighteenth century it was boldly challenged by a few American ministers. The schism crystallized in 1785 and the Unitarian church emerged. Since that day, the trend seems to be toward the belief that God is one person, not three.

TWO OTHER CONCEPTS of the Holy Spirit are frequently found. The more popular of these is that the Godhead is spiritual and not personal. The other is that God and Jesus, the Father and Son, are both persons, while the Holy Spirit is the power or influence by which they work. There are many reasons to believe that the latter is more truly representative of the Latter Day Saint concept of the Holy Spirit.

The argument most frequently encountered to substantiate the viewpoint that the Holy Spirit is a person, is the one used in the Herald article previously mentioned, which is: "the spirit is personified in the sacred text." Illustrative of this view the following passage is cited: "Howbeit when he the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. . . ." (John 16: 13.) Even if this point be granted, it only makes more significant the fact it is rarely if ever personified in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. I have just examined every citation in the indexes of these latter day records and find that in every case the Holy Spirit or Holy Ghost is referred to impersonally by neuter gender pronouns. For example, "having denied the Holy Spirit after having received it. . . ." In the same paragraph, when referring to Jesus, the personal pronoun is used; e. g., "who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. See also Alma 19: 8 and Moroni 2: 2.)

In seven instances in the revelations, the Holy Spirit or the Holy Ghost is the antecedent of the pronoun which. (See Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4, 5; 17: 5; 22: 17; 36: 1; 76: 8; 85: 1.) This pronoun is properly used only when its antecedent is impersonal. To illustrate this point, consider the Lord's prayer. The King James version reads: "Our Father which art in heaven . . ." The Inspired Version corrects this to read: "Our Father who art in heaven . . ." This correction was accepted also in the American Revised version, published in 1881.

AS WE VIEW THIS EVIDENCE, we become more convinced that Trinitarianism is not a Latter Day Saint doctrine. Instead, we have a distinct concept in which the Holy Spirit is subordinated to an impersonal rank. "But," some will answer, "just so much the worse for Latter Day Saints, for in this instance, they are out of harmony with the Bible." Before we concede any ground on this point, let us turn our investigation to the Bible.

Reverting to the passage previously quoted from John (16: 13), let us examine the text closely. When a comparison of this version is made with the text as originally written by John in the Greek language (see Westcott and Hort's The New Testament in Greek) no justification can be found for the personification. "tò pneûma" (the spirit) is a neuter gender noun. If it were masculine gender, it would be "hò pneûma." The next phrase, "he shall lead you" is a translation of two Greek words, hodàgàsei hùmas. The first of these is the verb which is inflected for the third person, singular, of the future tense. The Greek verb implies its subject but not the gender. Therefore it may mean he, she, or it shall lead. Obviously, the pronoun which should have been selected here, with a neuter antecedent, is it. The only way I can account for the personification is doctrinal bias.

Perhaps another instance will suffice. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things . . ." (John 14: 16.) Turning again to the source language text to which went the translators of the King James version just quoted, a more literal translation is as follows: "but the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, which the Father shall send in my name, that shall teach you all things." The Trinitarian viewpoint of the translators is thrust in again for doctrinal reasons. This Greek word, "tò pneùma" is variously translated as "the spirit" (John 16: 13); "ghost" (John 14: 26); "breath" (2 Thessalonians 2: 8); and "wind" (John 3: 8). The meaning of the word ghost has become so tainted in modern use that the word spirit is preferred and so translated in the Revised Version.

ANOTHER LINE of Biblical evidence sheds light on our problem. The logical analysis of texts referring to the Holy Spirit will be presented briefly to see with which concept they best conform. As you read the following extracts from sacred literature, ask yourself, "how could these expressions and synonyms have any meaning if the Holy Spirit is a person?"

1. ". . . the Holy Ghost did fall upon them." (Nephi 9: 2.)

2. "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost . . ." (Acts 2: 4.)

3. "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them . . ." (Acts 19: 6.)

4. "I will impart unto you of my spirit which shall enlighten your mind . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 7.)

5. "If the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you it will be because of unbelief." (Moroni 10: 2.)

6. "The Holy Ghost shall be shed forth in bearing record unto all things whatsoever ye shall say." (Doctrine and Covenants 97: 2.)

7. The Holy Spirit is made synonymous with power, (Luke 24: 48; and Acts 2: 4); with fire, (Nephi 5: 9); and with truth, (John 14: 17).

In treating "The Nature of the Holy Spirit," Roy A. Cheville, in Quarterly 532, page 27, presents this: "A few years ago, Elbert A. Smith wrote a hymn for young people's meetings, entitled, "Come Up Higher," that was a helpful comparison. One stanza begins with a phrase that describes the nature of the Holy Spirit far better than most sermons and essays:

'I have often felt a spirit o'er our congregation bend
Like the strong electric presence of a dearly loved friend.'

Anyone who has ever experienced the warmth and glow of the Holy Spirit would find it difficult to work out a better description of the presence he has felt."

FROM THE EVIDENCE we have noted, it seems quite clear that the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants are in harmony and that the Latter Day Saints have interpreted the nature of the Holy Spirit correctly. This concept is distinctive in that it departs from the Trinitarianism of Rome, Calvin and Wesley. It is peculiarly ours in that it has refused to follow the modern trend which makes of God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit a single, inseparable, entity, commonly amalgamated under the one term, the Spirit.

Involved in any adequate discussion of this subject is our concept of God. This was very well set forth in an article in the Herald of June 27, by Arthur Oakman. Undoubtedly, much remains to be learned by the unfolding revelation, which is promised according to our worthiness, as to the real nature of the Godhead. No man can present this with finality. The present writing was motivated by a desire to determine whether there were any unanimity of opinion as revealed in the statements of inspired writers both ancient and modern. Our conclusion is that the preponderance of these describe the Holy Spirit as a power rather than a person. It is the gift of God which He shares with man upon the terms of the gospel.

As an outside observer, I should say that the art of selling has got rather dangerously ahead of the art of buying in America. The highly trained "scientific salesman"—said to be three-quarters of a million in number and rapidly increasing—who go from door to door with their tempting offers, are more than a match for the unscientific buyer. To make the thing safe the conditions should at least be equalized, and if the system is to be extended I would suggest that instruction in the art of buying wisely and choosing the things that are likely to add to wealth should be a regular part of the education of youth.—J. A. Spender, in the New York Herald-Tribune.

Emma Smith and the New York Sun

By S. A. Burgess

In the Saints' Herald for March 23, 1932, pages 277-279, appears a book review which contains a number of errors. Immediate correction was offered, but probably on account of the approaching General Conference the corrections were crowded out.

An important one is in regard to Emma Smith and a letter reputed to be from her in the New York Sun, December 9, 1845. This purported letter was dated November 20, 1845, and the beginning of the third paragraph reads:

"I must now say that I never for a moment believed in what my husband called his apparitions and revelations, as I thought him laboring under a diseased mind."

Much has been made of this alleged statement. It was quoted in full by Thomas Gregg in The Prophet of Palmyra. But Mr. Gregg showed bad faith, because Joseph Smith, our late President, wrote him before the publication of his book, and sent him a copy of Emma Smith's letter denouncing this alleged letter as a falsehood.

Transportation was slow at that time which accounts for the time which elapsed before her denial of the letter. Her denial, in fact, was made immediately on receipt of the Sun, and is as follows:

"To the Editor of the New York Sun:

"Sir: I wish to inform you, and the public through your paper, that the letter published Tuesday morning, December 9, is a forgery, the whole of it, and I hope that this notice will put a stop to all such communications. Emma Smith."

Now it does not yet appear that this letter was published in the New York Sun, but it was published in Times and Seasons, January 15, 1846 (the earliest possible date), and in that same issue appears the strong testimony from John Taylor quoted with attention to this correction, from which we make the following brief extract:

"Suppose we say a word concerning the 'prophet's wife,' Mrs. Emma Smith; she honored her husband while living, and she will never knowingly dishonor his good name while his martyred blood mingles with mother earth! Mrs. Smith is an honorable woman, and if we are not deceived, is as far from the corrupt insinuations in the ninety-ninth expose of Mormonism, as a fixed star is from a gambler's lamp at midnight. The very idea that so valuable and beloved a lady could be coaxed into a fame of disgrace like the above, is as cruel and bloody as the assassination of her husband at Carthage."

The above is discussed at some length in the Saints, Herald, volume 49, pages 1194-1196. Yet later President F. M. Smith while in the East, made a search for the New York Sun which he found in the Congressional Library at Washington. This included a letter from James Arlington Bennett published December 19. Mr. Bennett was also referred to by name in the alleged letter from Emma Smith. While the letter of denial that she sent to the Sun it seems was not published, President Smith did find in the Sun for January 25, 1846, the following:

"Arlington House, State of Long Island,
February 16, 1845 [1846—F. M. S.]

"Mr. Editor: The following letter is offered for publication in strict justice to Mrs. Emma Smith, of Nauvoo, who appears to have no knowledge of the author of the letter published by you some time since in her name, censuring the publication of letters sent by me from the West, in relation to the Mormon leaders. From this letter I am fully persuaded that the lady is incapable of betraying any confidence reposed in her.—She must look for its author among some of the seceders from the Mormon Church.

"Respectfully your humble servant,
"James Arlington Bennett."

"Nauvoo, December 20, 1845.

"General Bennett, Sir:—The apology I have to offer for addressing you this time is the unexpected appearance of a letter published in the New York Sun of Tuesday morning, December 9, I never was more confounded with misrepresentation than I am with that letter; and I am greatly perplexed that you should entertain the impression, that the document should be a genuine production of mine. How could you believe me capable of such treachery, as to violate the confidence reposed in me, and bring your name before the public in the manner that letter represents. If you thought I had committed such a breach of trust, you certainly valued my integrity much less than I did yours. Should you be now satisfied that I am not unworthy of your confidence you will please to give me your opinion, if any you have formed, as to what quarter I am to look for the author of that forgery. By so doing you will greatly increase my obligations.

"Yours with great respect,
"Emma Smith."

The above does not strictly concern the Herald of March 23, last year, because the only error that appears with regard to this matter was that the year given was 1895 and 1896, instead of 1845 and 1846. But this denial and testimony is worth repetition.

At the foot of the first column, page 278, of the Herald of March 23, 1932, the statement should be: "It may interest some of our readers to learn such fantastic tales as the following: . . . also that a proof of the origin of the Book of Mormon is that one of the characters was named Omandagus." Now any reader of the Book of Mormon well knows that no such name appears in that book from cover to cover. This is only an instance of the quite common inaccuracy of those who attempt to discredit the work of Joseph Smith, junior. There appeared after his death a statement that a skeleton was found and this name appeared in that account which

The Diabetic Child

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Unfortunately diabetes is a disease that is frequently overlooked in childhood. Without qualification the word indicates "diabetes mellitus" or sugar in the urine. It is common to adults as well as children.

Diabetes is due to an excessive accumulation of sugar in the system brought about by the afflicted child being unable to digest properly the sugars and starches in the diet. Fortunately medical science in recent years has greatly improved in the treatment and care of these unfortunates. In former years it was almost always fatal.

Thanks to the discovery of insulin, an active principal of the circulation of the isletes of Leangrhn's in the pancreas, and a careful diet, a child suffering from this disease may grow to a normal adult life.

Any child should be suspected of a diabetic condition if he drinks an unusual amount of water and passes an excessive amount of urine. This is very characteristic of children especially if it is accompanied by an excessive appetite, and they are losing flesh at the same time.

Unfortunately parents have been careless in detecting this disease in children because of an old-time belief that it was not a childhood disease. Any child presenting these symptoms should be taken to a competent physician and a test be made for sugar. The diet should be carefully supervised by the family doctor, and if the sugar does not clear up in a reasonable length of time, insulin should be used.

Nearly all children have more intelligence than we give them credit for, and if the case is carefully explained to them, they readily understand the necessity of a strict diet and the treatment. Of course the same kind of food is required for the child as that of the adult. When insulin is given, those in charge should see that the child is sufficiently rested after it is given, before eating.

Teaching the child to eat slowly and chew his food well cannot be too strongly emphasized. Habit and routine should be taught the diabetic child. This helps to arrange a definite schedule and relieves many of the handicaps attendant upon the treatment and life of the child.

Great benefit is derived from insulin when properly administered, and all diabetics require it. It is only applicable to those, however, where sugar persists in spite of the diet.

The physician is the only one that should have the responsibility of seeing when insulin should be or should not be used. In many cases after the improvement has been well begun the amount of insulin can be reduced to the minimum.

There is what is commonly called an "insulin reaction" brought about by the sudden droppage of sugar in the system, and in order to prevent this so-called "insulin reaction" it should always be followed by food.

Parents should not become unduly alarmed when informed that their child has diabetes for under proper care and treatment the diabetic child may live to a ripe old age and may not be considered diseased.

It should not be forgotten that the diabetic child cannot eat like other more fortunate children, but the growth, development, and activities may not necessarily be placed so far as other children are concerned, at a disadvantage.

was published not only after the Book of Mormon was completed, but even after the death of Joseph Smith.

There are other minor, clerical errors in the book review which somehow arise even with the exercise of care. There are some other points on which we may comment later in giving some additional historical facts, but the matter of greatest interest at present is this regarding the facts concerning Emma Smith. There does not exist the slightest particle of real evidence that she ever at any time denied or called in question the work of her husband. Those who knew her are all agreed that she was a woman of strong character and that she was true to her ideals throughout her life. Her experiences caused her to know that the work of President of the church was not a pleasant task, and only the conviction of its righteousness would have caused her to go with her son as she did to the Amboy Conference to unite with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. His life was no bed of roses. He gained no worldly wealth from his labors. But he devoted himself to years of service. He tried for many years to do what was right in the face of man and of his heavenly Father.

Land of Beyond

Thank God! there is always a Land of Beyond
For us who are true to the trail;
A vision to seek, a beckoning peak,
A farness that never will fail;
A pride in our soul that mocks at a goal,
A manhood that irks at a bond,
And try how we will, unattainable still,
Behold it, our Land of Beyond!

Our Children

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

TO SOME the youth of today appear to be a failure —hopeless. What can we do to save them for the church?

I cannot believe as so many do that the young people have failed. It is the older people who have miserably failed. Have we not been too engrossed in carrying out our ideals? Have we not been too much absorbed in our own problems, and in greater world events? Have we shown that we care, that we have their interest at heart?

I had the experience of dealing with a boy seventeen years of age who seemed to be shiftless and good-for-nothing. He did not belong to the church. The opportunity was mine to be associated with him for several weeks and in that time I was able to learn his desires and ambitions, his ideals of life. One day he said, "Aunt May, you are the only one who has shown that they care for me. It seemed to me that no one cared what became of me." It made me think. Have we shown that we care? Or have we allowed young people to grope about alone for a way out of the difficulties that they are meeting in this changing world?

We older ones are baffled at times with the situations that arise out of the chaos in the world. Some burdens seem more than we can bear and many fall beneath the weight. Yet have we not left inexperienced youth to find a way out, to solve their many problems, to force a way through the barrier before them? And they need our consideration, our help so badly. They need us now. They need to be shown that we do care, that we are interested in their welfare.

Our failure did not begin when these young people reached the high school age. It began years before. Were we able to stimulate their interest in the church work? Or did our maternal duty go only so far as to see that their necks and ears were clean and that they were presentably seated in their class at Sunday school, and remained there for another tiresome hour or more of preaching? Did we create a desire to attend those services, or were they made to go because we went and there was nothing for them to do but accompany us?

A young married woman of my acquaintance moved into a new locality. Away from old associates—away from her home people. It was noticed that she did not attend the services of our church in that town. Upon being asked to take part in the work there she said, "I'll tell you why I don't go. When I was a child I was churched to death. And now whenever I am near mother I have to go. But now I am away and I intend to take a vacation." And she did. The pleasures of this world were more interesting than serving the Master with the wonderful talent she possessed.

Where had that mother failed? I later met that mother, and know that her one desire was to see her children in the work, for she loved it with her whole heart and soul. Yet she had failed.

The children today need the same consideration that these young people did when they were growing up. We must create a desire to attend the services—to serve the Lord. We must approach them from the right angle to create this desire. This requires a thorough study of each individual child to best understand his nature and then work with him accordingly. Who can do this better than a mother?

It takes a good salesman to create a desire in his customer. We may be able to present the gospel to adults outside of the church with great success, but how are we presenting it to the children?

Let us make every day a Children's Day. Let us create in them a love of serving, a better understanding of the work, so that when they reach the age of youth they will have no desire for a vacation —that their problems will be met fearlessly and courageously.

List of Old Subscribers Continues to Grow

Mr. L. P. Larsen, of Arizona, seventy-three years old, states that he began taking the Herald in 1890, while living in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He hopes to continue taking the Herald just as long as he can.

Mrs. Robert Kemp started taking the Herald in 1897 and has been taking it ever since. She informs us that her mother, Mrs. Sarah Greene, was a subscriber to the Herald from its beginning.

"I have been a constant reader of the Herald since 1885," writes Mrs. Joseph Elliott, of Aldrich, Minnesota, "and the Autumn Leaves, as long as it was printed."

Mr. A. W. Davis, of Stratford, writes that he has been a subscriber of the Herald for fifty years. During that period, he took it before he was a member of the church.

Elder J. F. Mintun, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, began reading the Herald when it was a monthly publication, and remembers when it was issued every two weeks and then every week. He had all of the issues until the Herald Publishing House burned at Lamoni when he sent all but the first four volumes to the publishing house. He was baptized in 1877, and since that time has taken the Herald either by paid subscription or as a missionary.

Julia A. Crocker, of Loomis, California, was baptized, August 31, 1902, and immediately began taking the Herald, Ensign and Autumn Leaves. She still takes the Herald and enjoys it greatly.

Nancy E. Thomas, of Galena, Kansas, has taken the Herald about thirty-one years with a lapse of two or three years.

ATTITUDES

By OLIVE HEYWOOD

I HAVE RECENTLY changed my employment and as a consequence have had to adjust myself to a new routine. Probably that is the reason why I have been thinking so much lately of my attitude towards others. At the firm where I was previously employed they all knew to which church I belong, and except for an occasional "dig" about "Mormonism" did not refer to it unless there was a discussion on religion and then of course I had to have my say. But now that is all changed, and I am wondering if my previous attitude was the correct one, or if more was expected of me. When I meet any of my late fellow employees there still exists that pleasant camaraderie which existed while I worked with them.

Already the question of religion has cropped up in my present position and they know I belong to this church. I am the only member of the church here—is it not a fact then that whatever I do reflects either favorably or the reverse upon the church? To these people I am not just a unit of the church, but I am actually the church itself and what I do affects their impression of it. What then is expected of me?

THE GENERAL OPINION of anyone who is professing to live in accordance with the teachings of Christ, or as it is usually termed—"being religious"—is to be narrow-minded, bigoted, dull and disinclined to be sociable. I am afraid my idea of the correct attitude is entirely the opposite, but is mine the right idea, the right attitude?

It seems to me that to be "witnessing for Him" is a great and glorious task, but one that cannot be taken lightly. We are human, but I think that often we think too much of our human limitations, we think too much of self. We are too "Self" conscious. We do not make a big enough effort to rise above the smallnesses of our own petty human weaknesses. We were created for a specific purpose just as He was. He came down to earth from heaven—so also did we. He came with a definite mission to set up a standard to which you and I should climb. He was the "Way" which you and I should follow. It was not sufficient for Him to tell us the way; He showed us so that we know it is possible to follow. He came in human form with a divine purpose in view. We also are in human form and our mission should also be divine. He came to bring the more abundant life, to open unto us the way, and to give us a realization of the truth. If our hearts are full of love, our whole bodies shall be filled with light. He, in human form, accomplished a wonderful work and He gave the commission to those who were His disciples, His Followers—"and if ye have desires to serve ye are called"—He gave unto them, unto all who have desires to serve, the command to "Go and do likewise." He showed how it was possible to unify the material and the spiritual and the two inseparably joined together resulted in perfection. That is what we teach is our goal, is what we as a church are aiming at, and the only way we can attain Perfection is to do as He said and "Follow" Him.

WHEN I WAS A CHILD we played a game called "Follow the Leader" and wherever the leader went, or whatever the leader did we had to follow, however inconvenient or precarious. We must follow or drop out of the game. We have, as individuals, promised to follow our Leader through the sunshine and the happiness, where love abounds and blessings are pouring in on us—but also in the dark, lonely, bitter times when, although we try to do our part to help the work, to live rightly and do the right, evil is present and is doing everything possible insidiously or openly to thwart all our efforts. Even then we have promised to follow right to the end of our lives, if He will stand by us. But why if, because He has promised that He will never leave us nor forsake us. If then my task is to follow in His steps I must find out how He lived, and what was the attitude He adopted, and this is what I find:

IN EVERYTHING He was a gentleman, courteous, considerate, gallant and dignified. Everywhere He was acknowledged to be on a higher plane. Even among those who were against Him He commanded respect. He thought of others before Himself, but above all He was fair. He was always willing to judge justly, and hear the other side of the question, and if appearances were against anyone He looked for that which had motivated the action, and even when sin had been committed He did not turn away in sanctimonious horror and disgust. He was not easily shocked nor did He pretend with the Pharisees that He was better than they. No, rather He was sorry that such a lack of control was in evidence, and instead of condemning He said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," but, "Go and sin no more." He was sociable, He visited His friends. Did He not go to the marriage supper at Cana? He wept with those who mourned, but rejoiced with those who were happy.

If I am following my Leader I must do as He did. In the words of the Good Book I must "Be of good courage." As the hymn says:

"We want no cowards in our ranks
Who will our colors fly;
We call for valiant hearted men
Who're not afraid to die."

"and of a cheerful countenance" or as the Scouts' motto is "Smile under all difficulties." Not a doleful, long-faced kind of religion. I must "play the game" as He did. He listened to both sides of the question, "He had not come to condemn." He was charitably disposed towards all men. Did He not say we should love one another, and not only those who reciprocated our affection, but the command was "Love your enemies, Bless them that curse you. Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely" for His sake. The vindictive "getting one's own back" attitude had no place in His scheme of things.

He did not adopt a sanctimonious attitude. He was the friend of sinners. He had come to save the lost and bring sinners to repentance. Why then should we condemn anyone, whatever they may have done. We are none of us in a fit condition ourselves to throw stones. You know the old rhyme:

"There's so much good in the worst of us
And so much bad in the best of us
That it ill behooves any of us
To find fault with the rest of us."

Or, as John Wesley said one time when he saw a poor drunken fellow, "There go I, but for the grace of God." Do we realize that we are not the respectable and respected citizens we are, altogether through our own efforts? I will admit that we can either improve or mar our own positions, but we were first placed in a position of respectability, and comfort, and those of our brethren and sisters who are not in such fortunate circumstances are not altogether responsible.

Do we realize how blessed we are, and how thankful we ought to be that we have been permitted to enjoy the blessings and see the Light of the Gospel? We may have been outside the fold, and not had the opportunity. Paul—even with the wonderful experiences which he enjoyed, with the work he had done, realized his utter dependency on the Giver of all things, and his own humanity when he said, "I fear lest I might become a castaway."

I HAVE DEALT with my attitude towards those who do not profess to serve God, and those who do but are not of like faith with myself, but what of those whose ideals are similar to my own, whose lives are molded on the same pattern, whose endeavors to reach the same goal are identical with mine—what must be my attitude here? Is it possible that they meet with the same rebuffs, the same disappointments, the same obstacles? It seems logical to suppose so. If we are one in purpose, we must be one in experience, we must be making the same efforts to progress. What do the hymns say:

"We are not divided, all one body we,
One in hope and doctrine, one in charity."

What should my attitude be? Seeing that we share mutual woes and burdens, is it unnecessary to bother about anyone else; or must I just take care of myself? Have I some responsibility to them? Do I owe them any loyalty? I find the answer to my questions repeating itself as I write—"Bear ye one another's burdens"—Why?—"And so fulfill the law of Christ." He is the One we are following, it is His Law which should govern our actions. It is not sufficient for me to care just for my own soul and wrap that up in cotton wool to preserve it from harm and danger, to keep it from becoming damaged through exposure to the cold winds and stormy blasts of unkindness. I must help others: "Do all bravely, bear all cheerfully." He did not come to help Himself. There is not one occasion in the whole of His life where He made any effort to help Himself, or save Himself any suffering. When He did put forth efforts in this direction it was to save and help others. His was a life of self-sacrifice. The only times He remonstrated with His persecutors were when His Father was not correctly represented. He came to do the will of the Father—not His own will. Therefore we should have no time to bother about caring for our own soul's salvation, but rather about doing the will of the Father. Our own selfish desires are small and mean compared with the wonderful pathway the Savior trod. If we do those things which please the Father, we need have no fear for ourselves, because the promise is "The Father which seeth in secret, Himself shall reward thee openly." It is not intended that we should hold ourselves aloof. If we are to be the salt of the earth; we must be prepared to be used. Salt, if left in the cupboard loses its usefulness, but if mixed with the other ingredients adds that little necessary filip which causes the dish to become tasty. We must do our part. If we hold ourselves aloof, we become insipid, narrow-minded and useless:

"To improve thy talents take due care
'Gainst the great day thyself prepare."

With those of our own faith we are enjoined to learn how to live to- (Continued on page 1169.)

Our Wandering Youth and Graceland College

In the August 1 issue of the Herald, in President Smith's column, "Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief," occurs the following:

Brother E. R. Davis, writing from Clinton, Iowa, presents a problem which is facing a great many of the young people today. He says:

"Nearly everywhere I go I find one or more young people who would like to attend Graceland, but cannot do so for lack of funds. It makes my heart sad to think of it, and to see these young people wandering around aimlessly, picking up an odd job now and then, and taking up with companions outside of the church because they can't find suitable companionship of their age among the branches where they live. How much good could be done for the future happiness and success of our young people and for the benefit of the church if all who have an ambition could attend Graceland. I hope the time will come when the church will have a larger fund from which our worthy young people can draw to help them to attend our own church college. In most cases it would be a good investment."

For the reasons suggested by Brother Davis as well as for many others which we might list, we suggest that as the years proceed each year will see an increased number of our young people attending Graceland College for the good that will come to them directly and come to the church both directly and indirectly.

Brother Davis suggests a number of things which it will be well for our young people to be seriously considering.—F. M. S.

An investigation carried on by the United States Government and reported recently indicates that there are thousands of both young men and women wandering aimlessly over the country because of the present industrial situation. No one knows how many of these are members of the church, but undoubtedly there are some. There probably has never been a time in the history of the church when young people were in greater need of the opportunities which Graceland College affords. From correspondence with large numbers of them this summer and from an acquaintance with their parents, we are convinced that all the young people want is an opportunity. They do not ask for gifts, but merely for a chance to make the preparation necessary to fill their places in the church and in the world.

Attendance at Graceland College will assist them in that preparation. Many times the determining factor in their attendance is an opportunity for a scholarship loan which enables them to meet the tuition charges for the year and return the fund after graduation for the use of someone else. The College Board of Trustees has anticipated this situation and made provision for the friends of youth and of the college to assist in this critical time in making possible the attendance of the youth. In the United States the college memorial and honor scholarship fund has been taken advantage of by thousands of friends of education, culture, and Christianity. In every section of the country there are names that will live forever because they have accepted the opportunity offered by a college scholarship fund. Graceland College offers to public-spirited Christian men and women an opportunity to invest in the youth of the future. Graceland is destined to continue to have an ever-increasing part in influencing the lives of large numbers of the youth of the church. Her possibilities are limited only by her resources.

A gift of $125 to the Graceland Scholarship Fund will pay a student's tuition for one year; $62.50 is half a scholarship. The amount is repaid on the installment plan following graduation and becomes a revolving fund available to other worthy students. The gift has a threefold result: One, it is a wise investment; two, it is an honor to the person making the gift; three, it links the present and the past with the future for all time in a living, vital service to humanity.

There has never been a time in the history of the college when so many young people were applying for an opportunity to make preparation. If there are friends desirous of helping the youth and the college in this critical time, it will enable the college administration this September to accept a larger number of students who would otherwise be unoccupied and who might join that group of wandering, aimless youth now so prevalent, forming bad habits, and associating many times with bad companions with the result that both they and the church are greatly injured.

As Brother Davis and President Smith both indicate, the funds would be a wise investment and much good would come to the students directly and to the church both directly and indirectly. This fall is the time to be of the maximum service. By acting now those who are desirous of establishing either an honor or memorial scholarship can render the greatest good. The college treasurer will be glad to correspond with any friends who would like to take advantage this fall of the very fine opportunity which the Board of Trustees has made possible.

People in all of the churches may be equally honest, but honest intent does not make an error right, and sincerity in division does not take the place of harmony with God. There is only "ONE Lord, ONE faith, ONE baptism." When we are in harmony with that "one faith" then we are in favor with God. —Elder T. W. Williams, in "The Latter Day Saints; Who Are They?"

A Meditation

"The Great Deliverance"

By I. A. Smith

IN AN HOUR OF RELEASE from worldly cares, a moment of relaxation, I turned to the immortal utterances of the "sweet singer of Israel." My eyes scanning the one hundredth and sixteenth Psalm, I soon found a sparkling gem and was lost to immediate surroundings in reflection. As a threefold cord that cannot be broken, came this illuminating passage to my consciousness:

"Thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling."

These my reflections:

The agnostic has raised the issue, boldly asserted by such men as Ingersoll, that no place in Holy Writ elsewhere than in the New Testament, is to be found the doctrine of the immortality of the soul of man. But here is a reference to the soul which to me could mean nothing less than a belief on the part of David that there was an inmost part of man that was not to be annihilated. Certainly David could not have in mind his mortal body—he was a living man when he gave utterance to his testimony, his gratitude for a deliverance which through the eye of faith had been assured to him. David in this respect was no different from many millions of men who have been born, lived and died since mankind was placed on this sphere.

His soul by operation of God's goodness was not subject to death. He knew it was not. Such knowledge was in harmony with his natural desire never to die. Could he have given much stronger evidence of such a desire than to bear this testimony that the Lord had delivered—freed—his soul from death? I think not.

David's expression is very strengthening and assuring to me. I am grateful for it. I will hereafter be more firm in my faith that "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," as found in 1 Corinthians 15: 22.

"Mine eyes from tears."

Tears mean sorrow, and sorrow comes to men in many ways and from many causes. A man may be so hardened that he does not feel sorrow, but the ordinary man has many things which cause him to experience grief—the loss of relatives and friends, false friends, ill-treatment, the sufferings of others—all these may cause grief and tears.

David, I expect, was a man who was subjected to the ordinary experiences of mankind. Did he then have never a tear in his eye? Hardly likely. What then did he mean?

He must have meant that the Lord had by his comforting Spirit raised him up from sorrow, wiped away his tears. It is said that "Time is the great healer," but the "peace that passeth understanding" is a greater.

There is no sorrow so great by far as that which comes to men who see loved ones slip from their arms into eternity and who have no hope of and no faith in a future state. Gone forever!

Surely, as Paul so well said it, "If Christ be not risen from the dead, then of all men I am most miserable." Life a sham—tinsel—a fitful dream, and all we have known and loved here to be destroyed, never to see them again. Their bright spirits destroyed and we never to commune with them again? Wife, loving and loved, your own father and a tender mother who gave you existence—all as naught! The mind revolts. The very thought is shriveling to your soul.

Inborn in the mind as possibly the greatest human desire, could even an insensate creator of things have played such a trick upon man? I say no.

So David, through a great faith in God, knowing his providences and knowing he would live again in another sphere, recognized no human sorrow so great that God will not comfort his true child and dry his tears.

How comforting the thought and David put it well into simple words, "Mine eyes from tears!"

"My feet from falling."

Our feet are what carries us about physically. There are many ways men travel. Some paths, like the "old, old path," which are so sweetly sung about by the Saints, are smooth and safe. But many ways are devious and dangerous.

To observe mankind even casually is to be assured that most men have traveled over wrong roads. Their feet have fallen and carried their owners with them.

All metaphorical, of course.

No doubt, as I reflect, David was grateful that he had been following safe ways—had been saved from evil ways—had not sinned—at least to his thinking.

But I am wondering if David was not thinking about false doctrines and theories of men. In fact, I wonder if he was not grateful that he had not fallen into the impure and gross religious theories and practices of many men and peoples of his time? I believe he was. Striking a stone with your foot and even a sudden fall, is not so serious.

Yes, David must have been thinking about sin.

We, too, are grateful that, frail as we are and even sinful as we are, we have been saved by His power from being worse—much worse, if the pulling power of his church had not been at work with us. For this we here, now, and in the presence of the Lord's people give praise to Almighty God, just as David did.

Quite a remarkable prayer of thanks this was, is our final thought. We lay the Book aside for the moment and attend to necessary but much less satisfying things.

Prayer

In the silence of my chamber
I may with my Savior share
All my worries and my troubles,
As I talk with him in prayer.
When I kneel before my Master,
I can feel his presence there,
And the load of care and sorrow
Seems much easier to bear.
In the silence of my chamber.
I find peace, and lose despair,
For the glory of the Savior
Comes to me by way of prayer;
I can feel sweet peace descending
Like a shower from above,
And my heart grows calm and tender
In the blessing of his love.

We need more effective organization and promotion of adult class work. But a greater need is to have something happen to those already in attendance which will make them different and growing persons. The problem of developing a disposition to learn is a more vital problem than that of increasing attendance.—Harry C. Munro, in *"Do Adults Want to Learn?" gether, work together, play together and worship together. But to those who do not belong to this wonderful family circle must be taken the knowledge attained by this assimilation of ideas, and show them the "better way," the higher life. The gifts and blessings are ours if we will only fit ourselves to receive them, the world is looking for what we profess to have. Our attitude either redeems or revokes the truth of our religion. They do not take the trouble to look beneath the surface of our human limitations and shortcomings, all they see is the result—success or failure. If the church is to reveal "all truth" as its creed, then we must live it in our lives. We must radiate truth and righteousness, loyalty, honor, integrity and fair play in our attitude towards those with whom we come in contact.

Seeking the Lord

By Arthur H. DuRose

"This is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God."—John 17: 3.

IT SHOULD NOT BE NECESSARY to discuss the desirability of knowing God. It is a foregone conclusion, to know God is life. It is serious business not to know God.

The actual process for knowing is seeking. The knowledge of any worth-while subject does not come accidentally; it comes only through a definite application to the thing in hand, a definite going after a desired result. If I desire to have knowledge, an understanding in the field of mathematics, I apply myself to the subject through the medium of books, and I might even place myself under the tutelage of a teacher expert in the subject. May I emphasize the point that no matter how complete the books might be or how proficient a teacher I may have, the only way for me to acquire knowledge is to seek.

The Lord understood that this seeking process was necessary, even for him, as is evidenced in the following scriptures: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found," "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," "Seek and ye shall find," "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."

There is a difference between the act of conversion and the process of seeking the Lord, the one may be the work of a moment while the other is the task of a lifetime.

In conversion we come to a decision upon the desirability of walking in the ways of the Lord after which we go through the process of seeking those ways and walking therein, that is, we do, unless we quit just when we ought to begin.

But I must go further. My text says that eternal life is dependent upon a knowledge of God. It is possible to know about an individual by reading a history or biography of his life, noting his actions and reactions but by far the most efficient way of knowing a person is to be personally acquainted with him. When the minister conducted us through the waters of baptism and laid his hands upon us for the reception of the Holy Ghost, he gave us a personal introduction to God.

Have we cultivated that acquaintance and kept on speaking terms with Him or have we promptly gone our way and forgotten that we had ever been introduced? As we said before, it is very desirable to have a complete knowledge of the things written in the books, but after all, that is second hand information to us and cannot take the place of a real personal communion of our spirit with God. Knowing God is a long process and is not to be underestimated but is a task worthy of our best efforts.

Now may I cite your attention to a statement found in section 68 of the Doctrine and Covenants, part of paragraph 4: "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; . . . and they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

May I call to your attention the fact that the emphasis in this paragraph is not upon the statement that the children shall be baptized when eight years old but rather upon the part which says that the sin be upon the head of the parents if they teach them not to understand the thing which would normally cause the children to ask for baptism at the appointed time.

But this raises another question. How shall we teach unless we know? How shall we teach our children repentance, faith in God, the gift of the Holy Ghost, if these things have not been a vital part of our own lives, for years perhaps? Is it possible that we can teach something that we do not know?

Why has this church not held its own children as a natural increase?

It seems that the answer is that we do not know the things that we ought to teach, we do not know God.

Again, I say, "It is serious business not to know God."

We spend thousands of dollars to convert grown people and neglect the effort necessary to fit ourselves to convert our own children and oftentimes thereby a number of their friends.

Much as we dislike to part with our money, too many of us would rather do that and send out a missionary to convert the heathen, than to exert ourselves in preparation to train our children in the ways of the Lord. Are we willing to pay the penalty, not only for failure to teach our children but also because we do not know him "the only true God." These words are not to be trifled with. They are the word of the Lord. We either pay attention or we come under condemnation.

"They shall also teach their children to pray." Again we are compelled to ask, can we teach something with which we ourselves are unacquainted?

It is no small matter to qualify oneself to bring up children so that they shall know the Lord, but it is a God-appointed task, and this Church of Jesus Christ has a right to expect that we shall not only seek and know the Lord, but that we shall teach others to find the way of life. "This is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God."

Prayer and Testimony

A Testimony of the Financial Law

By Mr. and Mrs. William B. Cramer

We enjoy reading the Herald from beginning to end. The testimonies of the Saints are always read and enjoyed by us. We thought the issue for July 25 was the best one for some time. Brother Greene's experience brought the tears to our eyes and the letters across the desk of the Editor in Chief were of great worth.

We wish to write to the Saints concerning our testimony of the financial law. If we could only impress the necessity of regarding this law, the added happiness, peace, and God's blessings would well repay us for our effort.

We believe whole-heartedly in giving one tenth of all we receive to the Lord. We started to pay tithing in 1929, but not wholly one tenth. We wavered back and forth, giving when we had an increase and not giving when we did not have one.

In 1931, our battle was won, knowing by then the greatest blessings come to those who freely give. Saints, waken up to the need of the church for your tithes and offerings, and God will do the rest for you.

We drive thirty miles each Sunday to church. Once in a while we return home the same evening, but most of the time the Saints make room for us to remain over night.

Pray for us that we may go forward in this marvelous work. Our prayers are always for the Saints in the advancement of the gospel.

God Will Give Us Blessings

By LaVern Butler

I know that God is willing to give us the blessings of which we stand in need when we serve him and obey his commandments. We should think of God always and not just when we need him. Otherwise we are unworthy of the many blessings he gives us.

I am glad that I am a member of Christ's church. I was baptized August 19, 1928. There are many, many things in the church that I enjoy—reading the Herald, especially the Prayer and Testimony page, going to Sunday school, singing and taking part in any way I can, and attending the midweek prayer services. I feel that the prayers and testimonies of others help me to overcome many of my difficulties. Will the Saints pray for me, that I may be a better worker for Christ?

Beginning the Work in a New Place

By Emory D. Hartman

We enjoy reading the new Herald each week, but always turn to the testimonies first. We receive much spiritual strength from them.

Since my wife wrote to the Herald last winter, we have had the privilege of meeting with the Saints at Bloomsburg a number of times.

Brother Walter Lewis visited us early in the summer and preached for us a few times, but we could not get the people out to hear at that time. I kept trying, however, to get a few people interested in the gospel, and now several are reading our literature.

Brother William Hyde and family and Clark Pealer, of Bloomsburg, accompanied by a group of Saints, visited us over the week-end. Brother Hyde preached a fine sermon for us on Sunday, August 20, to an audience of twenty. One brother, who was present, could hardly wait until Monday to tell his fellow-workers about the gospel. After doing so, his employer told him if he joined this church, he would have to look for another job. Saints, pray for him so that he may be able to find work.

We must be up and doing, for this work cannot stand still. I was baptized ten years ago by Elder A. M. Chase, and now with the help of God, I am trying to make up for lost time. Pray for us that we may remain faithful.

Isolated Member Rejoices in Truth

By Mrs. Raymond Auld

I know the latter-day work is true. Though I may fall by the wayside and not reach the goal for which I am striving, the cause of Christ will not suffer, but I shall suffer because of my inability to keep always in the straight and narrow way.

Forty-two years ago I first learned of the latter-day church. I was forbidden to join then, but the Lord opened up a way that I might. Then I married a Latter Day Saint, and together we started on life's pathway. Always I have been isolated from Saints. I believe my life would have been very different if I might have had the association of fellow members of the faith.

Once I was very ill with diphtheria. My throat was coated inside like white velvet, and there was not space as large as a lead pencil for me to breathe. An elder was coming to hold meetings five miles away at a schoolhouse—my husband had made the appointment for him—but he was a day late in arriving. My husband went to meet him at the station. While he was gone my throat had to be swabbed frequently so that I might breathe. When the elder came, I was administered to, and at once my throat cleared. My head stopped aching. I felt much better. I arose and prepared supper for them.

I have been blessed with comforting and helpful spiritual gifts. I have also endured many trials and have been down in the dark valley when it seemed as though God had forsaken me and I would never again enjoy the blessings of his Spirit; but I can say today that the still small voice is telling me to keep on and not to lose faith in our Savior.

I am alone now. My husband passed away three years ago, and I am still isolated. I am a practical nurse and take care of an invalid woman. My children are all doing for themselves. They all belong to the church and one is in the priesthood. I thank God for bringing them into the fold.

The Father has shown me in many ways that the Saints' church is the only true church and that Christ is at the head. Pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Request Prayers

Sister Mildred E. Holmes, of Armada, Michigan, who has been in poor health for nearly a year, entered the University Hospital at Ann Arbor, Michigan, September 1, where she expects to be for some time. Will the Saints pray that her recovery may be sure and steady? She was an inmate of the Oakland County Sanatorium at Pontiac, for some time.

Leonard S. Rhodes, of Mancos, Colorado, again requests the Saints to pray that the Post Office Department may transfer him to an office where there is a branch of the church suitable for his children, aged sixteen and four, and where he and his family may be blessed spiritually, physically and financially. He also requests prayers in behalf of his wife whose health has been quite poorly since a nervous break-down more than a year ago.

QUESTION TIME

Explain Matthew 8: 12, which says the children of the kingdom shall be cast out.

Considerable controversy has arisen concerning the correct rendering of this passage. The Authorized Version translates the text as follows:

"Many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

By some this has been held to mean that the children of the kingdom were the Jews, but that their rejection of Jesus would cause them to be cast out. Probably this view would not be widely criticized if the text had qualified its statement to include only some of the children of the kingdom. But such qualification does not seem to be indicated. The Revised Version uses the term "sons of the kingdom," which perhaps permits of a slightly different construction to be made of the text. But the Weymouth Version uses the term, "natural heirs of the kingdom." A very different rendering, however, is found in the Inspired Version, which says:

"But the children of the wicked one shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

It will be noted that the occasion for this statement of Jesus was the great faith of the Roman centurion, of whom the Savior declared:

"Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."—Verse 10.

Then follows the language first quoted above. Professor Barnes thinks that Jesus used the words to show that the Jews who thought themselves to be the special favorites of God and rightful heirs of the kingdom had no prior claim upon it. In any event, it seems logical to assume that only the upright shall be admitted to the divine kingdom, and this is the inference of the Inspired Version rendering.

Why did Jesus say: "Let the dead bury their dead"?

This statement, found in Matthew 8: 22, is clearly a paradox designed to impress the person addressed with the superior importance of the mission of Jesus, and also perhaps to test his real devotion. He had expressed willingness to follow Jesus after he should have buried his father, which seems a reasonable attitude. But it is possible to read a broader meaning into this text, for the Greek word here used for "bury" was often used to mean "celebrate funeral rites." In fact, Professor Strong says that is the meaning of the word. Therefore it appears that the duty of physical burial was not so much meant as the performance of certain ceremonies that had become matters of form or custom.

Professional mourners were commonly employed, and periods of formal mourning were observed, followed by a feast for the dead, and spices were sometimes burned to celebrate the occasion. Offerings of food and drink were also placed upon the grave of the departed one, and sackcloth and ashes were often used to show deep mourning. The mission of the Master was too important to be set aside for these human devices which were but substitutes for true sorrow, and such nonessentials could well be attended to by those who were dead to the great message of salvation. Jesus had no time for sham or show, for his message offered to all eternal life.

What was the purpose of the Kirtland Temple?

In those days the church did not have adequate facilities for education, and it was to provide them to some extent that rooms were designed in the temple where classes should be held. Teachers were hired for the purpose, and many subjects were taught there, including several languages. It was anticipated that this would help the ministry in their work among the nations. The "School of the Prophets" was organized and used the temple for its work. This included literature, science, geography, religion, and theology, as well as other studies.

The languages taught included Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. But the promise of an endowment of spiritual power was probably a stronger inducement to the building of the temple than any other one thing, and also the desire to have a place where religious devotions could be observed under favorable conditions. All of these purposes were to be realized there.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Here Adventists tell us that Abraham kept the Sabbath because it was one of God's commandments and one of his laws. But we have previously shown that the Ten Commandments were not given nor that covenant for four hundred and thirty years after the covenant was made with Abraham. (See Deuteronomy 5: 3.) The preceding verse reads: "And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." (Genesis 26: 4.)

"Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." (Galatians 3: 16.) "And I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul that it should make the promise of none effect." (Galatians 3: 17.)

Abraham was commanded to leave his father's house, his kindred, and go to a land that God should show him, with the promise that his seed should become a great nation. Abraham obeyed. (See Genesis 12: 1-5.) He was commanded to circumcise all his male children at the age of eight days. (Genesis 17: 9-14.) Again he was obedient. He was commanded to cast out Hagar his concubine with his son by her. (Genesis 21: 1-14.) This he obeyed. He was tried by being required to offer Isaac his only son as a sacrifice. (Genesis 22: 1-14.) Here he was also faithful. So it is evident that Abraham did keep the commandments and laws and statutes that God gave him: but to apply the text of the Genesis 26: 5 to the Ten Commandments is unjustifiable presumption against the plain statement of the Bible. The covenant of the Ten Commandments was made with the children of Israel at Horeb and not with their fathers. (Deuteronomy 5: 3.)

"These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, . . . a sacrifice, and drink offering, every thing upon his day: beside the Sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the Lord." (Leviticus 23: 37, 38.)

The above is used to prove the Sabbath should be kept beside the ceremonial law. But in this text the Sabbath is not emphasized any more than their gifts, freewill offerings and vows. The whole context shows that the instruction applies directly to the Israelite nation; and it would be as reasonable to apply the whole text to our day as the clause referring to the Sabbath.

THE DECALOGUE NOT THE SUPREME LAW

That the efforts to make the Ten Commandments of such paramount importance are not justified, let us notice the attitude of Christ:

"Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind, this is the first and great command. And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The above is not in the Ten Commandments. The command to love God is quoted from Deuteronomy 6: 5, to love one's neighbor from Leviticus 19: 18-34. Both are taken from the book that Moses put in the side of the ark of the covenant (or as Adventist would say the ceremonial law), but according to Jesus, it was the great commandment, and upon it and the one that followed, neither of which are a part of the Decalogue, hung "all the law and the prophets."

Thus Jesus says that the greatest commandment was not in the Decalogue: But the Adventists differ with him by claiming, that the "Sabbath commandment" is the greatest commandment of the law. Which is right?

When Jesus was tempted by the Devil (as recorded in Matthew 4), he answered each temptation by quoting from the law; but not one answer from the Ten Commandments.

1. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matthew 4: 4, see also Deuteronomy 8: 3.)

2. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (Matthew 4: 7. See Deuteronomy 6: 16.)

3. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (Matthew 4: 10. See Deuteronomy 6: 16.)

Here again if Jesus makes any distinction at all between the so-called moral and ceremonial law, he gives the preference to the latter. Adventists quote the following:

"Be ye mindful of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac; and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance." (1 Chronicles 16: 15-18.)

They claim this refers to the Decalogue, but the language plainly shows that it has reference to their inheriting the land covenanted to Abraham and his seed. Deuteronomy 5: 3 plainly shows that the covenant of the Decalogue was not made with their fathers. So this fails. They tell us also that this proves that the Decalogue covenant was to a thousand generations. Well, if we were to count the average generation at thirty-five years, according to Bible chronology the world has stood, or been inhabited by man less than two hundred generations. Now if that law must govern for eight hundred more generations, it would be difficult for Adventists to explain their claim that we are just about at the end of the world. Truth is harmonious, but this claim is too conflicting to be considered seriously. No! No! This is only another missapplication of the Scriptures.

"Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: And madest known unto them thy holy Sabbaths, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant." (Nehemiah 9: 13, 14.)

The above was read from the book of the law of the Lord. (Nehemiah 9: 3.) Hence it was to Israel only; and since God made known his Sabbaths to them, evidently previous to that they had not known them. Therefore they could not be keeping a law they did not know. (Again harmonizing with Deuteronomy 5: 3.) "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple." (Psalm 19: 7.)

Here again they assert, that the Law of the Lord is the Decalogue. But what reason for it? We have cited texts that show that "By the works of the law no flesh could be justified in his sight; The law made nothing perfect; was to be done away," etc., and in the face of all the evidence shown, to assume that Psalm 19: 7 refers to the Decalogue is a mistake. In the margin the word law is rendered doctrine and the text could only refer to the law or doctrine of Christ that saves the soul.

The same blunder is also made in regard to Psalm 49: 8; 89: 27-33, and 119.

"He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." (Proverbs 28: 9.) This, it is claimed, refers to the Decalogue. But the word Me as used here would be in the generic sense and refer to mankind or the whole race. The law therefore would have to be age wide. People had prayers answered and were saved for over twenty-five hundred years before the Decalogue was given, so it could not be the law referred to.

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." (Ecclesiastes 12: 13, 14.) It is assumed that the word commandments here refer to the Ten Commandments, but it is purely an assumption. Where is there a commandment in the Decalogue that required baptism? or repentance of sins? But Jesus positively taught both. Where is there one of the Ten Commandments that requires us to love our enemies, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us? Jesus commanded all these as being necessary if one should become a child of God. The Ten Commandments taken alone do not require any service to God, further than that they shall have no other Gods before him. One might be ever so impure, but if he does not actually commit a crime outside of covetousness, he has not violated the Ten Commandments. The Ten Commandments only provide condemnation for real acts of violation, but the law that Jesus Christ gave requires pure motives out of which only can be built pure lives. Now who could believe that the whole duty of man consisted in keeping so imperfect a law as the Decalogue, merely a national law? To be a Christian requires much more.

A favorite text with the Adventists is, "The Lord is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honorable." Again it is assumed that the Decalogue is referred to. But why? Hear what the Lord says of the two covenants:

". . . Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; . . . In that he saith, A new covenant he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Hebrew 8: 8, 9, 13.) In the light of the above, it is evident that the old covenant made with the children of Israel when they came out of Egypt that was to wax old and vanish away, could not be the law that was to be magnified and made honorable. "Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice; for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil." "The sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant, Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer." (Isaiah 56: 1, 2, 6, 7.) I have quoted the above from The Great Controversy, page 283. Mrs. White then says, "These words apply to the Christian age as is shown by the context." . . . She quoted only a part of the text and placed a period at the close of the text, where in the Bible is a colon, and made no mark to show that the sentence is unfinished. She then makes her claim that it applies to the Christian age "as shown by the context," when the remainder of the sentence she partly quotes says, "Their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people."

The above plainly shows that the texts referred to applied when burnt offerings and sacrifices were being offered on the Jewish altars. Therefore the strangers that join themselves to the Lord would be Jewish and not Christian proselytes.

Isaiah 58: 12, is also used, but the context plainly shows that it is the seed of Jacob or Israel that is being referred to as a nation so further notice of them is unnecessary. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." (Isaiah 66: 22, 23.)

Here we are told that the Sabbath will be kept on the new earth, so all the saved will keep it there. Well it can reasonably be questioned as to whether the reference to the Sabbath and new moon is in any sense connected with the new earth. It is asserted in the twenty-second verse that "as the new heavens and the earth shall remain so shall your seed and your name remain." A period closes that sentence. From the tenth verse of the chapter to the twenty-second are promises regarding the restoration of Israel, and the certainty of God's protection that will be extended to them. And as a climax as the new heavens and the new earth would remain so would their seed and name remain. Following is the promise of the restoration of the Jews to their homeland and institutions also referred to in Zechariah 14: 16-19. But if it is insisted that the Sabbaths will be kept on the new earth because of this text it would also prove that the new moons would also be kept, and Adventists should be keeping them also. Let us look at the question from another viewpoint. We will notice some of the Bible references to the new earth and see how their theory will apply. Since the Adventists claim that the Sabbaths will be kept on the new earth, and insist that the poetic statements referred to prove it, we have a few others we would like to have them harmonize with their theory. John says speaking of the new earth:

"And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign forever and ever." (Revelation 22: 5.) "And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, And swear by him that liveth forever and ever, who created heaven and the things that therein are, and the earth and the things that therein are, and the sea and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer." (Revelation 10: 5, 6.) "The sun shall no be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." (Isaiah 60: 19, 20.)

Adventists tell us that the Sabbath begins at sunset Friday evening; but how can they count from sunset to sunset when "thy sun shall no more go down." How can they keep the new moons when "the moon will no more withdraw itself"? This is on a par with counting the first three days of creation from sunset to sunset before there was any sun to set. (See Genesis 1: 16-19.)

Again, how will they count and keep the Sabbaths when there shall be time no longer? In Leviticus we are told how Israel counted their Sabbaths "from even to even." (Leviticus 23: 32.) Now it might be argued that the statements quoted above are poetic figures and not to be taken literally; but if this is admitted it would destroy their argument regarding the Sabbath on the new earth. But it would be impossible to even use that argument against the statement of Revelation 22: 5, "And there shall be no night there." The statement here is definite and positive, and it could not be called a flight of poetic fancy. He is certainly speaking of the new earth, and he positively says, "And there shall be no night there." If there is no night there would be no evenings, so their contention contradicts this text.

"Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my Sabbaths. . . . Her priests have violated my law, and profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths, and I am profaned among them." (Ezekiel 22: 8, 26.)

This, as usual, is separated from its connections and applied to our time. That the above applies to the Jews and Jerusalem, no further evidence is necessary than to read the following from the same chapter: "Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Now, thou son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? Yea, thou shalt show her all her abominations. . . . Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the dross of silver. Therefore Thus saith the Lord God, Because ye are all become dross, behold therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem." (Ezekiel 22: 1, 2, 18, 19.) There can be no doubt that this applies to the Jews and Jerusalem, and in no sense to the Christian world.

A New Church for Sutton-in-Ashfield Saints

Apostle J. W. Rushton Participates in English Ceremony

Saints of Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, laid the foundation stones for a new church, which they are building on land adjoining their present church on Fern Street, August 12, and Apostle John W. Rushton calls the attention of Herald readers to a full-column story of the event printed by The Free Press.

"The new church is being built by voluntary labor," declares The Free Press, "the cost of the material being met by subscriptions from members and neighbors, and, when completed, the new church will seat approximately one hundred and sixty persons. The members of the church first worshiped in Priestsic Rodad, but moved to Fern Street in 1920, and built a church which holds approximately one hundred persons. It was felt there was a need for a bigger building and when the new church is completed the old building will be used as a Sunday school."

Brother Rushton was present for the stone laying ceremony, and others present were Elder G. V. Willis, who is superintending the erection of the church, G. Rallings, secretary, and Alfred Shaw, treasurer. A number of bricks have been inscribed with the names of the subscribers, and will be used in the building of the church porch. No fewer than one hundred and nineteen of these bricks have been presented by friends.

Then the press story goes on to tell that Elder J. T. Holmes presided at the service.

Elder Robert Rallings was the first president of the branch which was established in 1905. For some time the Saints were without a meeting place, and worshiped in their homes.

The stone laid by Apostle Rushton bore this inscription: "This stone was laid by Elder J. W. Rushton, August 12, 1933, as the representative of the church," and a second stone, laid by Elder and Mrs. Holmes read: "This stone was laid by Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, August 12, 1933."

The principal address of the occasion was delivered by Brother Rushton. Following this service the women served tea, and then the company enjoyed a concert.

Western Montana Reunion

Western Montana Reunion at Race Track, August 17-27, convened Friday. Apostle J. F. Curtis, District President N. P. Coleman and counselors were in charge.

The order of meetings were as follows: eight-thirty, prayer meeting; nine-forty-five, lecture; eleven o'clock, preaching; two o'clock, lecture; eight o'clock, preaching.

The evening lectures were by Brother H. I. Velt, illustrated by lantern slides. Apostle J. F. Curtis lectured on priesthood. Other speakers were L. O. Wildermuth and Elder George Thorburn, the latter also officiating in his office as patriarch, giving blessings to a number of Saints.

The committee, headed by District President N. P. Coleman, had perfected arrangements for the comfort of the group. The prayer services were of a high order.

The women's division occupied one service in the evening, conducted ably and efficiently by the district superintendent of religious education, Sister George Thorburn. The various numbers on the program were inspirational, entertaining and educational. Sister Thorburn had charge also of the daily programs for the children, which were highly spoken of. Three fine plays were presented by the young people, and others of Anaconda and Deer Lodge Branches. The titles included, "The Prodigal Son," and "The Telegram." A number of special reading and musical numbers were rendered by the talented young people.

Sister Fred Kendall, musical director, promptly and efficiently did her part.

The Race Track Reunion grounds are located in the midst of a beautiful grove of trees by a mountain brook, in the Deer Lodge Valley. The last year, a fine improvement has been made on the reunion auditorium building by the faithful workers and Saints of Anaconda, Deer Lodge, and Race Track. Much improvement has been made on the grounds also.

Entertainment and recreations, in charge of Kenneth Eliason, were joined in by both young and old.

A large attendance was had from all parts of the district. The weather the first two days was very warm and summerlike, then on Sunday a heavy rain fell followed by several inches of snow Monday morning. Nevertheless, the Saints and friends cheerfully endured the inclement weather, which continued cool and rainy during the rest of the week.

Eastern Colorado Three-day Meetings

Apostle R. S. Budd conducted three three-day meetings in Eastern Colorado District during August, assisted by the president of the district, G. A. Smith. The services were very well attended, the classes and sermons proved interesting and edifying to the Saints, and through all of the worship, discussion, and study, God blessed abundantly with his Holy Spirit's presence, encouraging and strengthening his people for the tasks that lie before them.

La Junta Meeting, August 11 to 13

At La Junta, for the services held there on August 11 to 13, with the fine preparation made by Brother Elliston M. Stevens and his helpers, all was in readiness for the meetings when the visitors began to arrive. The American Legion Hall was rented, and provided a fine place in which to meet, also a large kitchen. This made it possible for the women of La Junta, under the leadership of Sister Nora Berry, assisted by others, to serve good meals at reasonable prices. The church building in north La Junta was partitioned and used as sleeping quarters for Saints from out of town.

On Friday afternoon, August 11, a school-busload of folks came from Utleyville, an eighty mile journey. From Utleyville, Pueblo, Lamar, Trinidad, and other points in the southern part of the district members came to join La Junta Saints in good fellowship, worship, and study. On Friday evening at seven-thirty, a short season of prayer, inviting God's presence, was followed by a splendid musical program provided by the choir of Lamar, Colorado, Branch. A fine variety of musical numbers gave a good prelude to the opening address by Brother R. S. Budd.

In the prayer service on Saturday morning at eight-thirty, and in the communion service at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, the Spirit of God made the members feel deeply the urge to go forward, with God's help, in working for Zion. In the classes taught by Brothers

R. S. Budd, Ralph E. Vincent, and G. A. Smith, and in the ever helpful and encouraging sermons of Brother R. S. Budd, on Friday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday morning and evening, the Saints showed a keen interest and were ready with their questions when the opportunity was offered for them at the round table on Sunday afternoon. The sermons and classes of Brother Budd were full of food for thought, especially to those interested in the cause of Zion, and the Saints who gathered at La Junta went home strengthened and encouraged to devote themselves more whole-heartedly to God's work.

Wray, Colorado, Meeting, August 18 to 20

The meetings at Wray, taxed to its limit the seating capacity of Wray Church. The remodeling of their church, recently done by Wray Saints, proved a blessing during this three days. The seating capacity for services is much greater now than it was before the remodeling was done, and all the extra space was needed on this occasion. Then, too, the new basement provided a fine place for the serving of the good basket dinners which the Saints united in providing each day. From the groups at Brush and Yuma, Colorado, and from the branches at Lamar, Nebraska, and Goodland, Kansas, as well as from many other points in Colorado and Nebraska, the Saints came. Wray members were happy hosts and did well their part in making the visitors welcome in their homes for the three nights. Eighty worshipers joined in the prayer and testimony service at ten Friday morning, and by Sunday morning there were over two hundred crowded into the church to hear Brother Budd's sermon at eleven o'clock.

The theme, "The Ongoing Purpose of God," was followed closely by Brother R. S. Budd and G. A. Smith in their classes on Friday and Saturday, and also by Brother Budd in the four sermons which he delivered. With God's enlightening Spirit helping, the greatness of his work was made clear to the mind, as was also the importance of the acts of each child of God in relation to God's great purpose. In the minds and hearts of the Saints who assembled at Wray was born a new appreciation of the marvelous work of God in these last days, and also a greater appreciation of the opportunities offered to his children to work together and with him in his great cause, the building of Zion.

Denver Meetings August 25 to 27

In Denver, August 25 to 27, at the third of the three-day meetings, the continuing interest of the Saints was manifested by the presence at the first service, on Friday evening, of a number of those who had already attended the meetings held at either Wray or La Junta. Denver Saints provided accommodations in their homes for the visitors for the three nights. The women of Denver Branch served meals in the basement of the church at reasonable prices. The Denver choir, directed by Sister Alice Milligan, and assisted by visiting musicians, gave fine support to Sister Inez Schrunk in providing good anthems and other music for all services. Apostle R. S. Budd bore all of the burden of handling classes and preaching, during this three days, and he continued to show clearly and effectively the place the members assume in God's great plan as the work goes forward.

On Friday, plans were made to have Apostle Myron A. McConley teach some of the classes which would have lessened Brother Budd's tasks considerably; but early Saturday morning a telegram came, calling Brother McConley to the bedside of his father, in Sterling, who was seriously ill. From last reports received, Brother McConley's father was much better, and it is hoped that he continues to improve.

On Saturday morning at the prayer service and again at the class at 10.30 a. m., some very interesting contributions were made by Brother R. S. Salyards, sr., and also by Brother A. H. Christensen.

On Saturday evening at seven o'clock a musical program was presented, composed of vocal and instrumental numbers, prepared by musicians from all parts of the district.

At the business session at 2 p. m. Saturday, the following officers were elected: District president, Glaude A. Smith; associates, J. D. Curtis and E. J. Williams; secretary, C. D. Liggett; treasurer, Ralph E. Vincent; director of religious education, Floyd H. Engstrom; chorister, Inez Schrunk; librarian, Sister R. C. Harrison; historian, E. F. Shupe; auditors, Paul Diefendorf and R. S. Salyards, jr.; budget committee, Paul Diefendorf and E. J. Williams; member of board of trustees of reunion grounds, I. N. DeLong.

At the Sunday school hour on Sunday morning, Bishop's Agent Ralph E. Vincent presented the needs of the church financially, being supported in his presentation by Apostle R. S. Budd and District President G. A. Smith, and urged the adoption of the envelope system by the branches and groups of the district as a great aid to establishing the habit of systematic giving among the Saints.

A resolution was passed without a dissenting vote expressing the hope that a definite economic program would soon be initiated and presented to General Conference for approval, and assuring the President of the church of this district's cooperation and support in the carrying into effect of such a program.

The conference also voted to hold a reunion in Eastern Colorado in 1934, and chose the district presidency to act as a committee to formulate plans to that end.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Successful Young People's Institute

Young people in the Clinton District are doing things. The district presidency are mindful of the need the church has of its youth, and also the need youth has of the church. Young people share generously in the work of the district.

Early in the present year a young people's institute was scheduled for late July to be sponsored by a district committee of young folks. Since it was to be held in Rich Hill, the local branch young people undertook to finance the project. By the sale of doughnuts and two ice cream socials a fund of $24 was raised.

The institute was held July 29 and 30. Good advertising resulted in attendance from every branch of the district, over 300 being in attendance on Sunday. This was the largest gathering of young people ever held in the district and afforded a wonderful experience in which they learned to enjoy church friendships under most happy and inspiring conditions.

Elder Leonard and Sister June Lea, of Independence, were happy and inspiring in their work as instructors. Sister Lea gave practical suggestions for the use of religious drama in church services and on Sunday brought a splendid message in her readings. Brother Lea was both profound and entertaining in his lectures and forum discussions. He brought much of the spirit and message of the recent Youth Conference at Lamoni, adding the appeal and conviction of his own masterful discourses. The young people were deeply impressed with the messages of their teachers. A fine spirit of cooperation and good fellowship was manifest.

Clinton District young people are very grateful for the opportunities of this institute. They look forward to many more occasions of this kind in coming years.

Janesville, Wisconsin

An Experience in Daily Vacation Bible School Work

Miss Ethelyn Hield, Janesville, Wisconsin, reports an interesting experience as an instructor in a Union Bible School held in her city. Sister Hield describes the excellent organization of the school and the spirit of its work. She was chosen to work with twenty-three third-grade children. Their special project was the study and mounting of a series of colored Bible pictures to be sent to some foreign missionary. At the close of the school these were sent to Elder and Mrs. V. D. Ruch in Norway.

Miss Hield writes: "The experience has meant much to me. Each child not only learned Bible stories and memory verses, but how each can be a helper in family, church and community, but above all to self and to God. As a project in religious education this is, in my estimation, a fine place to start."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Kansas City Stake

The O. B. K. Labor Day picnic was an occasion to be remembered. Five hundred Saints, young and old, from the various local churches brought baskets filled with food, and in groups, large and small, under the shade of the great trees, of Swope Park, ate to their heart's content.

This same crowd after the open-air banquet, disported themselves, according to the game they liked best, the most popular of which were tennis, volley ball, baseball, horseshoes, and children's races. Some visited the zoo.

One of the leading events was an oration by Lyman Fields, the effort being favorably commented upon. Mr. Fields spoke on the "National Youth Movement."

The finals in tennis were not finished, but volley ball, between Missouri and Kansas, was won by Kansas, and baseball, by Missouri. The weather was ideal, grounds in perfect condition, the spirits of the people, gladsome, so the annual outing was beneficial to all.

The Stake Leadership School will be held at Central Church, September 18 to 29. Workers are being urged to avail themselves of this opportunity to prepare for continued service in the future —to grow—to give their time to the things most worth while. Training classes, taught by skilled workers, will be offered in many phases of church endeavor.

North East Church

The meetings are feasts of heavenly blessings. Elder Thomas Newton has been with the Saints of this church for several Sunday nights. His efforts are very uplifting.

Brother Rose, who has been quite ill in the Saint Mary's hospital, is able to attend services again.

The meetings, which have recently been held on the river side, were interrupted by rain for two Sundays, and the congregation forced to go indoors.

Recent speakers at North East Church have included Elder Harry Sevy, and Stake President C. E. Wight.

Brother Howard Bailey, who has been away for reforestration, is visiting his home.

The young people are doing their part to help by furnishing music for different services.

Argentine Church

The special services conducted by Elder J. Charles May are well attended, some nonmembers being present. Each meeting is preceded by a stereopticon lecture on the Society Islands Mission. Brother May expects to continue his meetings another week.

Elder Evan Fry was the speaker Sunday evening, September 3, basing his excellent talk on "The Power of God."

Holden Stake

Atherton, Missouri

The local young people had charge of the services morning and evening August 20. The eleven o'clock service began with a prelude by Fern Lily. Sister Florence Bogue Hughes sang a solo, "A Little Prayer," and then talked on the topic, "Many People Are Living But Not Alive." Brother Clifford Long stated in his talk that the young people realize they have a part in the work of the church and must prepare to live and work together. That evening Brother J. A. Thomas, young people's leader, preached.

Otho Clark preached the morning sermon August 27, emphasizing the lesson, "Ye Must Be Born Again."

That evening young people from Gudgell Park, Liberty Street and Stone Church congregations, Independence, had charge of the meeting and furnished the program. Sister J. R. Lentell, wife of Liberty Street's pastor, told a story pertaining to the city of Zion, and this was folowed by a sermon by President F. M. McDowell.

On September 3, preceding the class work of the church school, the congregation enjoyed a cornet solo by David Allen, of Independence.

A good spirit prevailed at the sacrament service. James A. Thomas preached the evening sermon. At this service the congregation was favored by a solo by Sister Amos Allen, accompanied by her son, Edmund. Sister Allen and children visited at Atherton over that week-end, and the Saints took advantage of their musical talent.

Sister George Beebe, who recently underwent an operation, is reported much improved.

Blue Springs, Missouri

The Wednesday evening prayer services are well attended. Following the meeting the young people have choir practice, Alma Campbell directing and Louise Sarratt at the piano.

The young people's orchestra has rendered some fine music during the Sunday school periods.

August 17, the young people of Blue Springs were the guests of Enoch Hill young people, where they played volley ball.

Sunday speakers during the month of August have included Brothers Fred Immer, C. A. Joice, and Fred McWithy. Their subjects have been, "Get Your Heart Right With God," "The Light of the World," and "The Last Forty Minutes Before the Coming of Christ."

Brother C. A. Joice visited South Boardman Branch in western Michigan, where he was born, also a convention at Grand Rapids. From there he went to the World's Fair. Sister Bessie Joice and Brother Alma Campbell also attended the Fair on their vacations.

Mikado, Michigan

Work Progressing Rapidly

September 3, marked an all-day meeting with Saints of this branch. Events which made the meeting especially outstanding were the baptism and confirmation services of three candidates, a young man, eighteen years of age, and twin girls, ten.

Other meetings of the day were the prayer and sacrament services, which convened at nine-thirty; preaching, ten-thirty by Brother M. J. McGuire; church school; dinner at noon; baptism, two o'clock by Brother McGuire; preaching, three o'clock, Brother McGuire; confirmation, Brothers McGuire and Richard Stewart officiating; preaching, eight o'clock by Richard Stewart. Brother McGuire is young in years, and his talks sank deep into the hearts of the young people.

Forty-two people attended the meetings in the forenoon, with more throughout the day. Visitors included Brother and Sister Elmer Stewart and family, and Sister Rhinebolt and children, of Oscoda, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Slater and son, and Mr. and Mrs. Glendon Newton and daughter, of Flint, Michigan.

Brother Grant Stewart was privileged to spend a couple of days at home. He is employed with a reforestration crew in Upper Michigan.

Sister Helen Randolph is very low with tuberculosis. Her two small children had to be taken from her home and placed under other care. Prayers are requested for her that she may improve in health.

Sister LaTlure, who suffered a stroke several months ago, is able to walk to church again.

Brother Clayton Harmon has been called to the office of deacon.

Bay City, Michigan

Women's Department Loses Leader

For a branch of its size, Bay City has a large and active women's department. On March 16, of this year, eighteen women met at the home of Mrs. Edna Strack, and since the day was clear and beautiful, they decided to have their picture taken.

The president of the department, Sister White, passed away August 1, and the women miss her bright cheery voice and presence. She had served the church faithfully, and patterning after her, her friends are endeavoring to carry on the work where she laid it down.

Bay City Branch feels a distinct loss in the death of Sister White, and now that her companion is soon to close up the old home and go away, the Saints feel very much like sheep without a shepherd. For years the White home was the home of missionaries, and members of the church from all parts of the country found a welcome there. The influence of the lives of Brother and Sister White inspires Bay City workers to press forward. They wish to be true to the ideals of the church so that they may have a place in Zion.

Glenwood, Iowa

Move to Obey Financial Law

As a result of Bishop W. T. Wellman's visit to this branch, June 18, several members, both old and young, have shown their willingness to comply with the financial law of the church by filing inventories and financial statements.

This branch has progressed for sometime without a deacon, but on June 11, Brother C. D. Hunt was ordained to that office. He was also appointed bishop's agent and branch financial clerk. Through his efforts they have been able to start a local storehouse for the benefit of needy members during the coming winter. The third Sunday of each month has been set aside as financial day. On these occasions a dedication service is held and the members make a special effort to give tithes and offerings to the church and contributions to the storehouse. A report of them is made by Brother Hunt.

Prayer meeting is held every Wednesday night, a service which this branch has been deprived of for several years, due to the fact that they have had no available member of the priesthood to take charge of them.

Their missionary worker, Verla Hunt, has been distributing church literature and making new friends for the church. She also assists the pastor by securing names of nonmembers who attend services.

Wayne Sandell, leader of the young people, is active in his work. He, with his council, provide all programs and activities for the branch.

June 27, an ice cream social was held, and in spite of the bad weather, it was successful. The proceeds were applied on the piano purchased for the branch.

A play was presented by the young people, July 30, the plot being taken from an incident in Joseph Smith's life.

Two volley ball teams of young men and women have been organized to compete with teams of other surrounding branches.

Brother Duke Booton, of Council Bluffs, recently presented the church at Glenwood with a large American flag.

August 27, the young people from Shenandoah, Carson, and Tabor, Iowa, came to Glenwood for an all-day meeting. Brother O. A. Currie, district supervisor of religious education, spoke at the eleven o'clock hour and also conducted a round table discussion at two-thirty in the afternoon. The evening session began with a short class period at six-thirty, followed by a mixed program by the several branches and a debate by young people of Shenandoah and Glenwood.

Independence

Several thousand Saints worshiped in sacrament services in Independence, September 3. Each congregation held its own service, presided over by the local pastor and ministry. At the Stone Church a large crowd was present to participate in the communion service, and a new movement was initiated by Pastor J. F. Sheehy. Two services were held, one in the main auditorium upstairs, the second, an overflow meeting, downstairs. It is Brother Sheehy's intention during the coming winter to promote a worship-together sacrament service for children and parents, and for that reason the separate sacrament meeting of the juniors downstairs has been discontinued, the children meeting with the adults.

Five thousand children returned to their school desks September 5, in Independence, and numbers of Latter Day Saint young people who have spent vacation days here are now entering such institutions of learning and training as Graceland College, Kansas City Junior College, the University of Kansas, and the University of Missouri. Others have resumed their work of teaching school in this and neighboring States.

During the past week Independence has been the scene of much celebration. On Thursday, September 7, thousands were present at the dedication of the new two hundred thousand dollar courthouse, when Governor Guy B. Park, of Missouri, was the principal speaker. The entire day was turned over to entertainment. There were athletic events, a pretentious parade, contests of many kinds, and in the evening a pageant at Memorial Hall recalled historical scenes of Independence and reminded the citizens of the progress the city has made in the past century.

After several years residence in Independence, President F. M. McDowell and family have returned to their former home, Lamoni, Iowa, where this year the eldest daughter, Miss Wilda Lee, is a freshman at Graceland. Before their departure for Lamoni, September 1, several farewell entertainments were held in their honor. The White Masque Players entertained with their annual party in the lower hall of the Auditorium the evening of August 28, the McDowell family being honor guests, and on the following Thursday evening the Tuesday Club gave them a farewell party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Burgess. Mrs. McDowell has been a loyal worker in both the White Masque Players and the Tuesday Club.

The last Tuesday evening in August, the Auditorium office force, with their families, held their annual picnic. Because of unfavorable weather, the picnic supper was served in the basement of the Auditorium. Several of the large tables, used by the Laurel Club for banquets, General Conference meals and other special occasions, were placed end to end to form one long table, and about this the big "family" gathered. President F. M. McDowell and his family were the special guests of honor, the picnic being held a few weeks earlier than usual, so that they could meet with the group before moving to Lamoni. Elder J. E. Vanderwood was also a special guest of honor, it being his birthday. After supper, a net was stretched up on the volley ball court and the more ambitious picnickers enjoyed a work-out at several games of volley ball.

About forty young people went from Independence to Holden to attend the sessions of the stake conference last Sunday. This visit was sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council, and was the last of a series of Sunday missionary visits to neighboring congregations.

President Elbert A. Smith concluded his summer series of Sunday evening Campus sermons last Sunday night with a most profitable discussion of "The Three Books." The open-air Campus meetings began in June, practically all of the congregations of the church uniting, and Brother Smith was the speaker every Sunday evening with the exception of two when he was attending the Lamoni reunion. Next Sunday the several congregations will hold separate evening services in their own church homes. The Saints have enjoyed the union services of the warm weather months, and are grateful to Brother Smith for his inspiring and instructive sermons.

Stone Church

Every Sunday a large number of Saints enjoy the general afternoon prayer service held in the lower auditorium of the church. This meeting is designed to meet the worship needs of members from all congregations.

Among those of this congregation who have lately passed away were George Washington Head, ninety-eight years old, who died Sunday, September 3, at his home. For many years Brother Head has been a unique and friendly character in Independence.

Ambrose E. Elliott died early September 8, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was sixty-five years of age, and was born in Kentucky. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Rose Elliott; three daughters, Miss Gladys Elliott, Miss Wilma Elliott, and Mrs. R. L. Archibald; three sons, W. R. Elliott, Everett E. Elliott, and Paul Elliott; a sister, Mrs. Belle Moore; a brother, R. M. Elliott, and three grandchildren.

Ninety people representing six States, attended the Lambert family reunion at the Campus Sunday, September 3. This was the annual reunion of the descendants of Richard and Jane Lambert. Mrs. Harriet L. Redfield, of Independence, one of the three living children of Mr. and Mrs. Lambert, celebrated her seventy-fourth birthday at the reunion, and was especially honored. The reunion next year will be held at the old family homestead near Nauvoo, Illinois.

Miss Lucille Friend, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Friend, and Vaughan Mann, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Mann, of Osawatomie, Kansas, were married Saturday evening, September 2. They left immediately for a visit with relatives at Osawatomie, but will return to Independence to make their home.

The Stone Church congregation listened to a helpful sermon by Apostle J. F. Curtis last Sunday morning. Brother Curtis spent the summer laboring in the mission field in Canada and in the Northwest, and it had been a number of months since he had spoken in the Stone Church pulpit.

Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by George Anway, and the Midwesterners Male Quartet.

Second Church

Miss Sybil Pryor and Charles Masterson were married, September 2, at eight o'clock in the evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Pryor, Elder W. N. Inman officiating.

A pretty church wedding was witnessed by many relatives and friends when Miss Florence Dorman and Carl Hall were married by Pastor William Inman Sunday evening, September 3.

Bishop J. S. Kelley was the speaker the morning of September 10, and his theme was "Character Building Through Adversities." Pastor William Inman presided over the service, and the choir sang "Soul of Mine."

Walnut Park Church

Communion service on Sunday, September 3, was in charge of the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and F. W. Lanpher. The church was well filled and a very inspiring service was experienced. Pastor McDonald made the opening remarks, stressing the importance of the sacrament in the life of a Saint. Following the serving of the emblems, Elder Robert Jones was introduced to the congregation as a former missionary and was requested to make a short talk for the benefit of the congregation. He responded with an inspiring and helpful five-minute talk.

With the end of the month of September, the church school will close a successful year under the supervision of Albert Chapman, superintendent, and C. G. Closson, assistant. Although Brother Chapman had served as assistant superintendent at Walnut Park for a number of years, this has been his first year as superintendent. Attendance Sunday morning, September 10, was 386, ninety-three of them being visitors. Following the class session, Brother Vernon Sackman, president of the Religio, made an appeal to the membership of the school for assistance in the teaching department of the Religio. While the young people are supporting the Religio sessions on Sunday evenings, some trouble has been experienced with teachers being absent. Four people responded to his appeal, and said they would be willing to accept teaching responsibility in this department of the work.

Junior service Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, was furnished by Brother and Sister Arthur Koehler. At the same hour Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker for the congregation in the main auditorium. Bishop C. J. Hunt occupied the pulpit Sunday evening.

On Thursday evening, August 31, the Swastika Class had a wiener roast at Adair Park. Thirty-one members and friends of this class of young people attended this social event.

Liberty Street Church

Mary Arterburn, Ruth and Mayble Tignor, and Hubert Mills gave the program at the young people's meeting Wednesday evening. Most of the group then went in a body to the home of Brother Stobaugh, to join group thirty in the midweek prayer service. The rest went to other group meetings.

Various activities in this congregation were disrupted last week due to the fact that a number of the young people were working on the pageant given by the city in celebration of the dedication of the new Independence courthouse. Several were in the pageant proper while others were concerned with stage-work and lighting effects.

Harry Blake, church school superintendent, and Mrs. Ruth Thomas, both employees of the Herald Publishing House, were united in marriage Saturday noon, September 9, by Elder William Ecclestone. The bridal couple left shortly after for a week's trip in the Ozarks.

Brother F. C. Smith, the Sunday morning speaker, used as his text, "Come, let us reason together." At this hour also Joseph Frick played a piano solo.

At the junior service in the basement Brother M. A. Smith gave an educational talk on "The Three Glories."

Several members from this congregation went on the missionary trip to Holden Sunday. Those from the Liberty Street Choir joined in the two-hour practice session of songs to be sung by the Harvest Festival Chorus, October 8.

Enoch Hill Church

The women's department and their families accepted the invitation of Brother and Sister E. D. Briggs, of Lake Lotawana, August 3, and spent the day with them, meeting the women's department of Lees Summit.

Sunday morning, September 3, preceding the sacrament service, Barbara Jean, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Fred Ballinger, was blessed by her grandfather, Elder Charles S. Warren and Elder H. L. Barto.

Sunday afternoon Elder Joseph Martin and Priest John Jones went to Sibley to serve the sacrament to Saints there.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the speaker last Sunday morning. Brother and Sister Millard Pace sang a duet.

Several Enoch Hill members attended the Holden Stake Conference held last Sunday.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday school last Sunday in this congregation was not so large as usual because a number of the Saints went to Holden for the young people's meeting.

Elder H. V. Minton was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, and the pastor was in charge of the service. The junior choir sang two numbers, and Geraldine, daughter of Brother and Sister Noel Rodgers, was blessed.

Tomorrow night, Wednesday, the branch will meet for its general election of officers.

Attendance at recent services has been smaller than usual due to the fact that a number have been away on vacation trips. However, with the opening of the public schools, people are returning home and to church.

Gudgell Park Church

The Gudgell Park Church History Class has been organized for fifteen weeks, and has an average attendance that exceeds the number on the roll. Numbers are interested in the study subject. The young men and women are beginning to realize that a study of church history goes far in strengthening their faith. They were happy to have Elder R. V. Hopkins on a recent Monday evening, to talk to them. The class meets at 1515 South Dodgeon, the home of Brother W. L. Chapman. Everyone is invited.

Tacoma, Washington

After returning from the wonderful reunion enjoyed at Silver Lake, the Tacoma Saints have pledged their services anew to the work of the church.

Saints of Tacoma are happy to know that the Bronson family have reached their destination in Missouri and are happy and pleased with their home.

will stop in Kansas City to visit friends and relatives, and also in Independence to visit point of interest there.

Beardstown, Illinois

Branch Members Assist in District Work

The Beardstown branch will have an election of officers soon and start anew on their fiscal year.

Mr. E. E. Thomas, district bishop's agent and church school director, has been visiting many of the branches in the Central Illinois District. In many of the cities visited by Brother Thomas he has been assisted by members of Beardstown priesthood and musical department.

Mr. Harry Jones recently returned from a trip to Chicago and the Kirtland Reunion. He states that he had a very pleasant trip and especially enjoyed his stay at Kirtland.

Ogle Thomas and Earl Denton will soon leave for Graceland College where they are to be enrolled as students.

Madison, Wisconsin

Institute Work Accomplishes Much Good

The week of August 7 to 13 was chosen by the young people of Madison and Southern Wisconson for an intensive training institute. They found ready encouragement on the part of district and local officers. Elder C. B. Woodstock, of the general office, was secured as guest instructor.

Local plans called for two class hours each afternoon and two each evening during the week. Sundays were occupied with usual services, the closing day being in the nature of an all-day meeting, with a basket dinner at the church.

Brother Woodstock was assisted in class work by Elder Lee Root, local church school director. The teaching work of the church, essentials of leadership, and discussions on organization and program filled the class hours. A series of evening sermons during the week presented the message and mission of the Book of Mormon.

On Saturday evening the young people presented a play, "The More Abundant Life," with its splendid lesson enhanced by its setting in a well-balanced program.

Sermons on Sunday were C. B. Woodstock and Harry Wasson, the latter being district director of religious education. The institute closed at 4 p. m. with a brief vesper service.

Madison has an alert and active group of young people including a number who are in attendance at the State University. They gave splendid support to the institute, as did also the older people of the branch. The group is well organized for intensive work during the year.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The Women's Department met August 10, for their usual potluck dinner. Sister Cora McNeal read an article, "Eternal Judgment."

Thirty members of the Second Columbus Church were able to attend the Kirtland Reunion, and report it a spiritual success. They returned with a determination to put into practice the things they learned.

The Book of Mormon study classes are meeting the second and fourth Monday evenings of each month. Good interest has been shown in the class work.

Recent speakers of this congregation have included Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Elders C. W. Clark, G. H. Kirkendall, R. E. Madden, A. E. Anderton and Priest Harry J. Hoffman.

Brother and Sister Samuel Wigton and daughter of Roseville, Ohio, and Brother and Sister T. R. Burke, of Gallipolis, Ohio, were welcome visitors at this branch.

Third Church, Columbus Tabernacle

The month of August was an encouraging one for the Saints of this congregation, with spiritual blessings given in the midweek prayer services and at the sacrament meeting.

Elder W. P. Vickroy and family make a helpful addition to this branch. They moved a short distance from the tabernacle.

Summer activities have included socials, lawn fetes, vacations, and a number in this branch were privileged to attend the Kirtland reunion. The young people have been active in the work of assisting with music at church services.

During the absence of the pastor, who attended the Kirtland reunion, Elder Vickroy took charge of the local activities.

Alberta District Conference

Three Baptized by Apostle J. F. Curtis

The Alberta District Conference was held at Edmonton, Alberta, August 4 to 6, at the Saints' church, with fine weather conditions.

Saints assembled from the different branches of Alberta, with Apostle J. F. Curtis and District President Ira I. Benham in charge.

Two women and two boys were baptized in the Saskatchewan River by Apostle Curtis during the conference, and seven babies were blessed.

Albert White and George Miller, of Ribstone, Alberta, were ordained to the office of elder under the hands of Apostle Curtis and Elder Benham.

The following officers were sustained in office for another year: Ira I. Benham, district president; William McLeod, first counselor; Albert White, second counselor; J. P. Benham, district secretary; Lee Roy Allen, district treasurer and bishop agent; W. A. Cooper, district auditor; Ruth Osler, chorister; Norman Allish, librarian.

Saints of Edmonton furnished beds and breakfasts to the visitors during the reunion.

Decatur, Illinois

Enjoy Visit of Branch Organizer, E. L. Ulrich

Considerable progress has been made in local work since the last report from Decatur Branch.

As a result of a four-week meeting, held the latter part of February and early part of March, under the direction of Elders O. C. Johnson and R. L. Fulk, attendance has increased, and some are investigating the gospel.

Elder and Sister E. L. Ulrich, of Dayton, Ohio, visited Decatur in June as they were on their way to Quincy, Illinois, Brother Ulrich labored as a missionary here seven years ago, and has not been forgotten by the Saints, who, with his help, organized the branch. With the assistance of seventeen members, Brother Ulrich first organized a Sunday school, and after a period of a year during which he conducted several weeks of meetings, he was able to baptize twenty-six into the church in October, 1926. He also assisted in erecting a new church building.

An all-day meeting was held at Decatur August 27. Saints from Beardstown were guests and furnished the music for the day. The church school at nine-thirty was in charge of C. G. Cross; Pastor O. C. Johnson delivered the sermonet. Elder E. E. Thomas preached the eleven o'clock sermon. Brothers Frank Cochran and E. E. Thomas, both of Beardstown, occupied the stand during the afternoon and evening services.

Dayton, Ohio

Check on Summer's Progress

Saints of Dayton are still talking about the wonderful meetings enjoyed at Kirtland reunion. A large group of young people attended for eight days and then toward the end of the reunion many more of the members made their appearance. In all about thirty Saints were there from Dayton.

As the summer months are about ended the workers look back to see what progress they have made and their hearts rejoice on finding many new members added to the list, the priesthood more active, and members coming into a fuller realization of the gigantic task before them and with a determination to overcome all obstacles.

In the near future the priesthood are planning on establishing several missions in this city. E. L. Ulrich, a member of the seventy, is anxious to get started on a series of meetings. Several social activities are being planned that funds may be raised to entertain the fall conference of Southern Ohio, to be held in Dayton on September 30 and October 1.

In all the scene seems to be laid for the fulfillment of a recent prophecy which stated that in the near future many more would hear the angel message and be added to the fold.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Baptism—Blessings—Activity in Every Department

The blessing of Georgia Ann and Norma Jean, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Briggs, and Nancy Caroline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Clerici, took place at the early morning prayer service, Sunday morning, July 30. Elders Charles A. Cramer, William L. Goudy, and John D. Carlisle officiated.

Preceding the midweek prayer service Wednesday evening, August 16, Mrs. Leroy Harper was led into the waters of baptism by Elder Charles A. Cramer, and later was confirmed by Elders Carlisle and Cramer.

The August sacrament service was one long to be remembered. A prophecy was given to the branch and to Sister Ruth Helmick, of Monroe, Michigan.

The Sunday school class of young women, taught by Sister Anna Cramer, has organized a Book of Mormon class. Meetings are held each Friday night for study and discussion. Officers are elected each month, and are in charge of the meetings. Every girl takes her turn in offering the closing prayer. Sister Nettie Bigler is the assistant teacher. In the near future the class expects to dramatize, "Other Sheep Have I," by Mabel Williams Crayne, a story taken from the Book of Mormon.

Recent social activities of the young people's department have been a swimming party and a steak fry held at the home of Elder John Carlisle, at Goshen. An added feature of the occasion was a ball game between the boys and girls.

Sunday, August 27, found Patriarch George W. Robley, in company with Elder James E. Bishop of Steubenville, Ohio, visiting this branch. Brother Robley occupied the pulpit at the two services of the day.

Elder John D. Carlisle officiated at a funeral service for John McMillen, aged seventy-six, July 22, from the home of his nephew, Harry McMillen. Interment was in East Avenue Cemetery. The deceased has been a member of Wheeling, West Virginia Branch for many years.

A small group of Saints from this branch were privileged to attend the Kirtland reunion. They reported an enjoyable and profitable time spent with other Saints.

The September sacrament service was well attended and was in charge of Elders William Goudy and John Carlisle. In the afternoon a baptism service was held. Ira B. Fergueson, of Monroe, Michigan, was baptized by Elder William L. Goudy and confirmed by Elder John D. Carlisle. The infant son, David Lee, of Brother and Sister Fergueson, was blessed by Elder Goudy.

Institute Meetings at Artland Branch

Special Missionary Efforts

Institute meetings were held at the Artland Branch July 16-23, under the direction of Brother and Sister Ward L. Christie. Three meetings were held each day, morning, afternoon, and evening. Class work and handcraft composed the morning work for the younger children, while the afternoon was given to class work for everyone. Special missionary efforts were put forth during the evening services.

A combined picnic was enjoyed Thursday by the Artland and Michigan branches, sponsored by the two church schools.

Saturday morning, July 22, a young people's prayer meeting was held in place of the usual lesson. A prayer meeting was held the following Sunday morning in place of the church school program.

A basket dinner was enjoyed Saturday and Sunday, with every one remaining from the morning services until the afternoon meetings were over.

Several people from the Ribstone Branch, Alberta, were in attendance besides the many nonmembers.

Sunday, August 6, Elder G. A. Jordan and family, of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, visited Artland Branch, staying only for the morning sacrament service and the prayer meeting.

Saints of this branch are busy with the annual harvest.

They feel that in spite of the dry weather, they have much for which to be thankful.

Dahinda, Illinois

Home-coming Day a Memorable Occasion

Home-coming day, August 20, closed a two-week series of meetings conducted by Elder L. G. Holloway at Dahinda Church. During this series Brother Holloway endeared himself to the people of Dahinda, especially the young, in whom he took a deep interest. On the closing week-end he was joined by District President E. R. Davis. The closing day proved a memorable occasion, the Saints who had gathered being blessed with the gospel gifts and given a greater vision of their work and responsibilities of the future.

Sister Audrey West was married to Edward Sommers some months ago. The young couple are making their home at Long View, Washington.

Mary Virginia Dawson and Theda West, of this branch, are attending Graceland College this year.

Others of the young people have left Dahinda in recent weeks and are greatly missed in the activities here.

Chicago, Illinois

First Church

The work of the Master is moving on in Chicago. This is evidenced by the fact that several new members have been added to their list since their last report to the Herald.

The Century of Progress Exposition has called hundreds of thousands of visitors into Chicago this summer. Among these has been a number of Saints. Members of First Church have attempted to provide proper housing for them. Sister Cora LaBrant and a corps of helpers have handled this work in a fine shape. Among the visitors have been several members of the priesthood, some of whom have occupied First Church pulpit. Patriarch F. A. Smith, Apostle R. S. Budd, Elder A. C. Barmore, and Elder C. B. Woodstock have been recent guests at First Church. Elder Barmore delivered a series of lectures on the life of Christ and his own experiences as a missionary in Australia. C. B. Woodstock occupied the stand in the morning of August 20, and conducted a church school round table at Central Chicago Church in the afternoon.

The women and young people have been working hard to raise money to beautify the church both the interior and the grounds. The women sponsored a concert given by two colored radio artists and an ice cream social. Perhaps the most successful project, both from the financial and entertainment standpoint, was the County Fair given in the basement of the church by the young people.

Deacon L. W. Ballinger, custodian of the building and grounds, has labored unceasingly to make the church attractive. The terrific storm of July 2, which played havoc with the greater part of his array of shrubs and flowering plants gave Brother Ballinger quite a jolt, but it did not stop his efforts to make and keep First Church attractive.

Like many other congregations, First Church has for some time been carrying on its rolls a large number of names, the owners of which cannot be located. Every effort is being made to establish a list of known dependable workers.

Apostle J. F. Curtis Conducts Series of Meetings

At the close of a three-day conference in the city of Edmonton, Apostle J. F. Curtis motored to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Everitt, of Bon Accord, and held a three-day series of meetings. A large attendance and splendid meetings marked the services of Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings.

Tuesday morning the Saints of Bon Accord motored to the Sturgeon River where two were baptized, a young boy and a man over eighty years of age.

A fitting ceremony brought the series of meetings to a close, Apostle Curtis baptizing two women, Mrs. Gordon Jenkins and her sister, Miss Elizabeth Kenzig.

Missionary Activities in Wisconsin

Good Reunion—Baptisms—All-day Services

The Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota districts' reunion convened at Chetek, Wisconsin, July 1 to 4, with good meetings. Attendance at this reunion was much larger than that of last year.

Apostle J. F. Garver and President F. M. McDowell, of the general ministry, were present, besides several of the brethren of the local ministry from Northern and Southern Wisconsin and Minnesota districts.

The preaching services, class work, and prayer meetings were very interesting. At the sacrament service, July 2, Brother Garver, speaking under the influence of the Holy Spirit, delivered a fine message, admonishing the Saints concerning the events to come.

Several young people were baptized during the reunion. The confirmation service conducted Sunday afternoon by Brother McDowell, was impressive.

Apostle J. F. Garver, assisted by Elder Leonard Houghton, held an all-day meeting at Sparta, June 25, with fine attendance and interest. Immediately after this meeting, like visits were made to Black River Falls and, through the kindness of Frank Sherwood, to Porcupine Valley.

Elder L. G. Holloway held a series of meetings at Porcupine Valley the latter part of May, assisted by the local ministry.

Brother Manley Shedd and family, from Missouri, motored to Porcupine Valley in December. The Saints were pleased to have them return to Wisconsin, their former home.

The work is moving forward rapidly in Northern Wisconsin in spite of the trying times.

The district conference will be held at Porcupine Branch, October 7 and 8, and those in charge are expecting a pleasant time and good attendance.

Inman, Nebraska

Elder Levi Gamet Visits Hometown

Special meetings were held by the Inman Branch, August 27. Sunday school convened at ten-thirty, and preaching at eleven o'clock was by Brother Francis Schrunk.

A picnic dinner was held on the church lawn.

At two-thirty two children, Lois Schrunk and Donald Jacox were baptized in the Elkhorn River by Francis Schrunk. They were confirmed by Elders Levi Gamet and M. A. Peterson. Two babies were blessed during the afternoon, Shirley Lajune Roth and Robert Edward Boles.

At four o'clock a sermon was delivered by Elder Levi Gamet, of Kansas City, Kansas. Brother Gamet formerly made his home at Inman.

Saints from several towns around were in attendance, and enjoyed the meetings.

Brother John Schrunk's family met at Inman for the services. It is the first time the whole family has been together in six years.

Lancaster, Ohio

Members Cooperate to Meet Obligation

Being confronted with the urgent necessity of meeting an obligation of long standing, Lancaster Branch found the Saints willing and eager to do their part. The ladies' aid, through bake sales, church dinners, and quilting, were able to contribute fifteen dollars. The young people gave ten dollars, the net profit of an ice cream social. Such opportunities to do their part in church work are appreciated by the members.

The theme for the month of August was, "Live Your Religion." With this subject carried out during the meetings and blended into the sermons, a profitable month was enjoyed.

Speakers during August were Elder S. E. Dickson, pastor of the branch, and Priest E. K. Caldwell.

Elders Vickroy and Mikesell, and their families have moved from Lancaster to Columbus. They are greatly missed here.

Three Baptized at Western Montana Reunion

Good Sermons by Missionary Helpers

Three were baptized at the Western Montana reunion, held August 18 to 27, at Race Track, Montana. One candidate was a young married man, another a young girl whose parents do not belong to the church, and the third a young woman. Apostle J. F. Curtis officiated.

The sermons and lectures delivered at this reunion by Apostle Curtis and Elder H. I. Velt were of a high order. Programs and services were fine.

Both the eleven o'clock and night services may sometimes be educational lectures. Branch presidents are reminded that their quarterly reports are due October 1. Please state in particular what you are doing for the young people. My report to the First Presidency involves the question: "Has the branch a Sunday school and Religio?" Since our special purpose just now is to revive the work of youth we are much concerned about the latter part of this question.—A. C. Barmore, district president.

The Pigeonhole

Hitch-hikers

The world is now filled with the hitch-hiker's philosophy. "If you can beg a ride, you won't have to pay your fare," they say. They want to be fed as well as carried. They want you to go out of your way to take them where they want to go. They expect you to entertain them with conversation. And when you have done all this for them, out of gratitude, some of them will put the nose of a gun into your ribs and tell you to step out of your own car. Modern pirates. Their philosophy is reaching into other walks of life. You find them in business, on street cars, everywhere. They always take advantage. They know no gratitude. Are you a hitch-hiker?

Wherever you go, it is a good thing to pay your own way, either in money or in service rendered. There is a punishment for being a parasite: you soon come to look and act like one, and everybody despises you.

L. D. S.

Just recently we were in a strange town. It was dinner time, and we looked up and down the street for the best place to eat. Most of the restaurants had large signs advertising the popular brands of beer. Incidentally, we supposed, they served food. One place looked cleaner than the rest—and smelled better. There were no beer signs. We went in. There were many patrons, eating quietly. The food was good, and freshly cooked. During a conversation between the proprietors and a visitor a single audible phrase, out of the undertone of talk, reached our ears. It was "Latter Day Saint." Was it a coincidence?

Wherever you are you can live your religion, and you will be blessed in doing it. Honor leads a man to do right, whether he is being watched or not. Remember, God is looking all the time.

More Things We Could Do Without—

Two of them this time—both elderly women who should know better. They sat in church and talked during the entire service. Sotto voce during the prayer; andante during the announcements; crescendo during the hymn; fortissimo during the anthem—continuously and heedlessly they talked, and they never listened to the service. What were they talking about? Some woman they knew—they were literally stripping her of her reputation. Suddenly they dropped the name of the party they were maligning. A woman in front, who had been annoyed by their talk, turned around quickly. Friends of hers! Friends of the woman they were talking about, too! Or were they just hypocrites?

More damage is done by idle talk, inside the church and out, than by any other one thing.

Enough Sleep at Last

"One advantage in this sleeping sickness," says Pigeonette, "is that a lot of people will get caught up on the sleep they have lost while worrying about the depression!"

"It's decidedly interesting," cooed the pigeon, "what a host of peculiar ideas of life are grouped by peculiar people under the term, 'religion.'"

Editorial

Leisure Time

In the editorial columns of one of the great United States newspapers I recently saw a discussion of the social significance of the use of leisure time. The question seems to have been brought to the fore by the stipulation of the number of working hours per week in the various N. R. A. codes.

There are a hundred and sixty-eight hours in a week, and the codes have set the hours of labor at from thirty-five to forty-eight per week, which means that only about twenty-five per cent of the laborer's time will be spent at his vocation, so that outside of what time is spent in sleep and rest there will be more time for leisure occupations than ever before. The question, therefore, of how the masses of laborers will spend this extra leisure time has become one of social import, and is really a serious one; for as the students of history and society readily and accurately point out, the progress or decadence of nations has been determined in the past by the manner in which the leisure hours of the masses have been spent.

Progress or Decadence?

In America there has always been a leisure class, the rich or affluent who because of assured income do not need to work. And many of them have chosen not to work at gainful labor or that which contributed to the group welfare. This because of the comparatively small numbers of the leisure class has not been a threat upon our social welfare. That this leisure class has chosen to spend its time and energies (and even money) wisely no one will say, except in rare cases. In far too many instances the rule has been one of profligacy and conduct which is detrimental to social tendencies of the right sort.

Leisure for Laborers

It therefore becomes of great social importance to determine how the leisure time of the laboring classes will be spent, and to see how far or to what extent the vicious habits of the idle rich will be aped by the masses. Of course when there is a large amount of leisure among the laboring classes because of unemployment the problem though equally serious is of an entirely different character. Men and women without money and proper food, where these conditions spring from enforced idleness, are likely to develop ugliness of spirit, despondency, resentment, and rebelliousness. These constitute social dangers.

Social students and those interested in social trends may well raise the question of how leisure time shall be spent. If those with leisure time on their hands and money in their pockets seek out those activities which are selfish and furnish fugacious though vicious pleasures, then the nation will deteriorate at a speed proportionate with the universality or generality of this abuse of leisure time.

But will the masses of laborers with leisure time seek such occupation or will they select avocational activities which will at once be individually and socially beneficial and helpful? The choice depends upon a large number of factors, chief among which in my opinion are education, family life, and religion.

Education and Religion as Guides

If the education of the individual has been such as properly to evaluate altruism as contradistinguished from self-serving interests, then he will seek avocational activities tending towards mass good, though he may not even stop to analyze the social significance of his leisure time occupation. If his family life training has developed the consciousness that the happiness of others is in a measure in his hands and that a chief duty is to contribute so far as possible to social weal and happiness, then he is sure to avoid the vicious use of leisure time even if the idle rich have set a bad example. And if one's religious training has been such as to augment the finer instincts and subjugate passions and appetites to the control of wisdom, foresight and a consciousness that our powers, energies, possessions are God-given and for the exercise and use of which we are to be held to a divine accounting, then there will be no question but that the selection of leisure time activities will be socially sound and safe.

Stewardship of Time

How about Latter Day Saints and leisure time? Are we safe from the harmful effects of wrongful use of it? A chief tenet with us has always been that we are stewards over our possessions and capabilities or talents. This view sees each person as a contributor to the common weal. His work is the measure of his contribution. His happiness is closely wrapped up with that contribution. Hence with him there is always present the question, How can I better qualify for larger service? The answer to this will involve the use of leisure time. Is it spent in a way which augments usefulness? Is it spent in a way to improve talents? Will it conserve energy which must be spent creatively? Is service to Divinity enhanced?

I would say, then, that with Latter Day Saints, especially those who keep in mind the goals of the church, the question of leisure-time utilization will be safely answered. We will be anxious to follow those avocational occupations which will build up the body and its reserves of energy, improve our hands in skill, store our minds with useful knowledge; bring comfort to those who need it; find happiness for ourselves in promoting the happiness of others. Vocations as "jobs," frequently afford no opportunity for the cultivation of such aptitudes. Hence, the selection of such avocations as will be the wise thing. It will be seeking opportunity to apply "one's heart to perfecting one's work."

Some have taught to divide the hours of the day by three; eight for sleep and rest, eight for labor, and eight in which to serve God and be helpful to neighbor.

What to do with our leisure time is not a new question or problem with us; for Latter Day Saints have always been concerned about finding time from the labors of vocation in which to engage in the service of devotion, both in ceremony and every-day activities. But for all our training and teaching we must ever be alert against permitting the examples of the idle or purely worldly to deflect us from our purposes. "Let us keep our spirits pure" in the rightful use of leisure time. F. M. S.

Biographies Wanted

The Editors are in need of brief biographies of many ministers and other prominent people in the church. These are wanted not only for publication but also for permanent records.

Many of the men whose records are wanted are too modest to commit to paper an account of their lives and accomplishments. We have been unable to persuade them to give us the material. Sometimes it is because they are too busy.

A man's wife, sister, or mother, can help us in this work by furnishing us with a good write-up. We solicit their aid. However, every biography should be approved by the subject before it is sent to us.

We do not especially want a bare statistical record, though the statistics, accurately stated, should be included. These biographies need not be long. One thousand to three thousand words will serve for many. Some few may need as much as five to ten thousand words, though we would rather communicate with writers before longer biographies are undertaken.

We shall be glad to furnish instructions for the preparation of the manuscript for all who are interested.

It is planned to keep these biographies in a special file so that they may be available for church reference purposes.

The church has been a loser in many cases because prominent men have died without leaving any record of their testimonies, and their missionary and other church experiences. We wish to begin now to prevent further losses. L. L.

Under the Code

As early as adjustments could be made, the Herald Publishing House signed an agreement to the N. R. A. code for the printing industry. We wish to do our part in the effort to support the President and the government in the plan to restore industry and employment to normal conditions. We believe that the code will be productive of good if all will unite to make it effective. We have complied with the conditions so far laid down, and expect to do our part when any further provisions are made known.

Results of the Popularity Contest

The Herald departmental popularity contest is practically over, and all of the ballots seem to have been sent in to the Editors. In this contest readers were asked to indicate their preference for various departments of the magazine.

The Prayer and Testimony pages led in popularity by a substantial margin. The Editors have been surprised at this, for if all the people who say they like it would contribute letters, we could fill two pages all the time. At the present time there is a shortage.

Crowding close to the top in popularity were the editorials and the articles. Pigeonhole, Youth's Forum, and the story feature came next. But every department have large numbers of advocates and friends.

Many wrote to say that they like all the departments, and they would be unwilling to see any eliminated. Others said that they found it very hard to choose.

In answer to the question, "Shall we have another story?" the response lacked very little of being unanimously in favor of it. Less than a dozen voted against the story, and only a few were indifferent. Several wrote, "It depends on the story!" which we take to be a warning.

All together, the contest was most enlightening. It was like a personal visit with the readers. We thank all who voted for taking their time to write and for furnishing their own postage. We think that the vote was representative, for the ballots came from people who ranged from eleven to eighty years of age. We especially thank these who took the trouble to write letters. We cannot answer them individually, but we appreciate them. Many of the letters contained statements which are so good that we hope to share them with our readers, and we are sure that the writers will not mind. Thank you, everybody! L. L.

The Importance of Deacons

Sometimes men become obsessed with the notion that there is a gradation in the official ranks of the church, and that men are promoted from one office to another. In a very real sense this idea has done harm. It has led some to think that the offices of the deacon, the teacher, and even the priest are not very important. Nothing could be farther from the truth. These offices are important. But sometimes the men who get into them do not make themselves very important. And one who is not important as a deacon will not be very important as an elder. The man should be as important as his office. And by importance we do not mean pomposity or arrogance. We mean spirituality and usefulness.

Some editorial paragraphs in the Christian Standard of September 9 appealed to us as very fine in pointing out the real importance of the office of deacon. Here are some of them:

The word "deacon" has a very interesting origin. It is, of course, not a translation. Like "baptism," it is only a transliteration of the Greek word. The Greek root appears very frequently in the New Testament, and in most of these appearances the word is really translated into such English words as "servant," "minister," "service" or "ministry." The word "deacon" could, therefore, be supplanted by the word "servant," or "minister."

It is a common word in the Greek. Its etymology not only enforces its meaning, but gives a touch of humor. Its two parts create the meaning "stir up the dust," "make the dirt fly," "get busy." One can imagine the origin. He can picture a master using the expression to prod his servants, and that so frequently that it would come to be the name for the servant himself. At any rate, there it is. A servant is one who makes the dust fly, who gets busy about it. And a deacon is that sort of servant. Of course, the word "deason" may have been so old in New Testament times that the sharpness of its forceful, early significance had been somewhat dulled, but that does not deprive us of its cutting power.

The deacons, then, are those who are to get busy to get things done, to make the dust fly. They are the chief actors in church affairs. They are the workmen par excellence in its work.

And what an amount of work they need to do just now! What a lethargy has been settling down upon the church! With what carelessness we have let half the membership slip away from us! With what indifference we have allowed the brethren to escape from any part in church financing and evangelism and indoctrination! With what carelessness we have been drifting into the disposition to get along without preaching! It is high time somebody made the dust fly. Of course, the elders are the overseers, but they cannot do it all. They must have such workers as the deacons to get busy.

The atmosphere of busy-ness must permeate the whole church, but it will not do it until the leaders stir up the dust. We have been drifting too long. We have too often excused inaction because of the depression. Those were not particularly prosperous conditions in which the New Testament church went to work. They set the cities aflame. They turned the world upside down. They stirred up the dust. They made their campaign so hot they could afford to shake the dust off their feet at some communities.

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

For the New Member

For the newly baptized adult member, it is a good thing to have something to give that will commemorate the event of joining the church and serve as a treasured keepsake for the rest of one's days.

A splendid type of book has been made by Brother J. O. Worden, pastor of Fourth Kansas City Church. The cover is made of a pretty blue fibre composition in ripple finish. The outside front cover is neatly lettered with the member's name. Inside is a good photo of the church building. The title-page contains the date and the name of the place, together with the name of the subject. On the next page is a brief biographical record of the subject.

Further inside the book the order of service is described. The instrumental music, the words of the hymns sung, the exact words of the pastoral and other prayers, the words of the confirmation, or any words of admonition that may be offered.

Following this is a list of those present. Attached to the inside back cover is the certificate of baptism. The whole book is bound neatly together with a metal device that may be obtained inexpensively at any stationery store.

A Problem of the Congregation

There is bound to be some noise in any congregation where a free and friendly social atmosphere is developed. Yet pastors are confronted with the necessity of trying to reduce noise before, after, and during services without offending the people. This is a problem in other churches than our own.

Some churches have a service so austere and formal that people come to it and leave it without audible greetings for their neighbors. Social life there has nothing in common with worship. For most Christian churches that is going too far. Other churches have an atmosphere so friendly and informal that the spirit of reverence and worship in the church is often broken.

The good will and cooperation of the congregation are necessary in any effort to improve conditions. Their pride in achievement can be appealed to effectively. Mere scolding is futile and will undermine the influence of the officer who does it. Much more can be accomplished with persuasion.

City Officially Welcomes Western-Central Oklahoma Reunion

The mayor of Canton, Oklahoma, welcomed the Saints of Western and Central Oklahoma districts, to their reunion which was held in the Canton City Park last month. Every courtesy, including an invitation to return next year, was extended the visitors by city officials and business men. The park in which shade trees, grass, water, electric lights, and playground equipment added to the comfort and convenience of all, was loaned by the city for the reunion.

Alabama Woman Is 104 Years Old

Sister Amanda Clark, a member of the Pleasant Hill Branch, Alabama, is probably the oldest member in the church. She was born June 11, 1829, according to the records of pension and court, and has been a member of the church since her baptism by George Chute, November 7, 1875.

First Reunion in Four Years for Southern California

A hundred white tents crowded in the eucalyptus grove at Laguna Beach. . . . Inspirational worship services and study classes. . . . A taste of Zionic living and association. . . . The help of general and district workers—Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Elders Arthur Oakman, D. B. Sorden, W. A. Teagarden, L. L. Sutherland, and Bishop David Carmichael. . . . Pleasant recreational features. . . . Such was the reunion of Southern California District, the first in four years, held August 26 to September 3.

Missionaries Continue to Convert and Baptize

Elder P. T. Anderson baptized nine at Audubon, Minnesota, after a series of meetings which ended September 3.

Elder A. M. Baker, missionary to Arkansas and Louisiana, baptized seven a few days ago after conducting a series of services at Brush Arbor, near Dunn, Louisiana.

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe baptized fifteen candidates at the reunion of Western-Central Oklahoma districts.

In less than a year Apostle J. F. Curtis has baptized twenty at Clitherall, Minnesota. He inducted twelve into the kingdom last October, and eight last June. The pastor, Lester Whiting, also baptized four new members at Richville.

World's Fair Increases Number of Visitors at Nauvoo

The quota of Nauvoo's summer visitors has been added to considerably by the Century of Progress at Chicago. Many travelers on their way to or from the Fair, have stopped off to see the city which once was Nauvoo the Beautiful. Elder and Sister James C. Page, caretakers of the church property there, have found it an arduous though very pleasant task to welcome these hundreds of visitors and to show them about. Numerous among these visitors have been members of the Utah Church.

Dixfield Branch to the Fore

The branch at Dixfield, Maine, may lay claim to place in the first ranks of branches which were well represented at the district reunions of the season just closed. Of the forty Dixfield members twenty-three attended the reunion of Eastern and Western Maine at Brooksville, August 12 to 19.

Northern Saskatchewan Saints Surmount Obstacles to Attend Conference

Saints living in the drouth-stricken area of Northern Saskatchewan, are rejoicing at the success of their late annual conference. Though drouth and depredations of grasshoppers have contributed to very poor crop prospects, a considerable number of people were able to sacrifice some of life's necessities in order that they might attend the conference. One truck load drove two hundred and fifty miles after securing permission of the government to make the trip without a car license.

Sixteenth Harvest Home Festival Soon to Open

The sixteenth annual Harvest Home Festival in Independence will open its doors two weeks from today, October 3. The lower room of the Auditorium will be the scene of harvest beauty and abundance. Thousands of jars of canned fruits and vegetables will be on display, not to mention the bushels of raw field and garden products. All these gifts, given by a generous people, promise food to the needy during cold winter months.

A Page of Thought and Discussion for the Young People of the Church

"I Will Be True!"

The other night I heard a young woman say in a prayer meeting: "I like the song, 'I Would Be True.' Each time I sing it I resolve in my soul—'I will be true!' And then I begin to wonder if I really realize the bigness of such a promise." Her voice trembled into silence.

Nor is she alone in her wondering. Every thinking young person wonders with her.

The business of being true must have appealed strongly to Howard Arnold Walter, author of the hymn, "I Would Be True." He begins with

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me."

To be true is one of the biggest challenges life holds out to young people. It is a quality of character to be prayed for and worked for, not to be laughed at or overlooked.

True to what? Before we can hope to be true to our friends, or to a cause be it ever so great and worthy, we must be true to ourselves, as true as the needle to its pole.

Jesus was true to himself and to his purpose. He is indeed our great pattern of truth. Nor was he true without a struggle. Don't you remember the scene that night in Gethsemane while his disciples slept? If you have forgotten, then read Luke 22: 39-45. Jesus was true to himself, to God his Father, and to you and me, but it took him to Calvary.

"Aw, what does it matter if I have a little whiff or two from a coffin nail down at the corner drugstore?" demands sixteen-year-old Phil, "the folks don't know it." And "Who'll it hurt if I sneak out and have my dates?" puts in gray-eyed Marybelle. Of course these two are thoughtlessly cheating their homefolks, but, first of all, they're cheating themselves. They are paying a very high price from their treasure of self-respect. They are not true to themselves.

If one would be true to himself, to his God, to his training, to his friends, he must have courage, a great deal of courage. He must have the courage to be honest, to be patient, to exercise great faith, to be determined. He must cling to ideals which will prevent his being a hypocrite, a faultfinder, a gossip, a trouble-maker, a cynic.

"Whatsoever things are true, . . . think on these things," said Paul, the great disciple of Christianity. That helps—thinking about true things—about the hundreds of people who have been true, the many about us today who, in spite of great odds, are true. Let us consider very seriously the possibilities of being true in our own lives. Let us resolve with the girl who spoke in prayer meeting, to make the big promise—"I will be true!"

"Let me be true, let truth impregnable abound
And be the fortress of my life each hour, each day."

> We sow a thought, we reap a deed;
> We sow a deed, we reap an action;
> We sow an action, we reap a habit;
> We sow a habit; we reap a character;
> We sow a character, we reap a destiny.

The Story of Etta Kett

Au Revoir!

Bill pulled the car up beside the road for the second time. He and Etta were ten miles east of Elmwood.

"Where are those cans? I thought I took 'em all off the last time!"

"And I still have some rice down the back of my neck." Etta got out to shake herself once more.

Bill opened the hood. There, nestled in beside the engine, were a few fruit cans that he had missed. Throwing them out, he made another inspection around the car, and pulled off another "Just Married" sign that he had not found before.

"I thought I had the car hid where they wouldn't find it. But I certainly blocked them up in that alley. They would have been trailing us yet if we hadn't tied them up there!" Bill chuckled triumphantly.

"And the way that taxi driver simply looked dumb when they told him to get out of the way!" laughed Etta. "I wanted to scream."

"Oh, well, they had a lot of fun out of it," Bill added.

"Let's go, or they may catch us yet," said Etta, looking back on the road to Elmwood.

"Not with what we're riding in!"

And soon they were rolling eastward again, mile after mile, with the cradle-like sway that a car makes on concrete slab at high speed.

"Bill, I'm so glad we had a church wedding. It will always give us something to remember."

"I didn't like all the fuss. But now it's over, I'm glad too."

"Seems so selfish—keeping a wedding all to themselves, the way some people do—and sort of like they were ashamed of it."

Bill looked serious.

"I always remember what my father said when he was alive. 'A wedding is not a private affair,' he once told me. 'It is a social contract and an obligation assumed forever in the presence of all society. And it should be performed in a public way, so that all may see and witness it. That makes it more binding, and more sacred.' Dad was old-fashioned, of course, but he was sincere, and I believe what he said is true."

Etta said nothing, but put her arm in his, and slid back against the deep, comfortable cushion of the seat. The level fields slid by like a moving picture. There were houses and trees that, at a distance, looked like pretty toys in a Christmas shop. The clouds in the sky seemed to race with them as they sped along. Bill glanced at the speedometer. The needle stood at fifty-eight.

"If we keep this up, we'll reach Uncle Jim's place before dark!"

(The end.)

Always, as long as I can remember, there has been a dispute and invidious comparisons between the old and the young. The young find the old prey upon and restrain them and the old find the young, shallow, disappointing and aimless in vivid contrast to their own revised memories of their own early days. The present time is one in which these perennial accusations flower with exceptional vigor. But there does seem to be some truth in the statement that the facilities to live frivolously are greater now than they have ever been for old and young alike. In the great communities that emerge from Christendom, there is a widespread disposition to regard Sunday as merely a holiday. But that was certainly not the original intention of Sunday. In times when religion was taken seriously, it was a day dedicated to the greater issues of life. Now great multitudes of people do not even pretend to set aside any time at all to the greater issues of life. The churches at the present time are neglected, and nothing of a unifying or exalting sort takes their place.—From H. G. Wells's The Open Conspiracy, by permission of Victor Gollancz, Ltd.

Often the greatest tests of life are in the necessary adjustments to the everyday upsets of plans.—Ernest J. Chave, in International Journal of Religious Education.

"Something to Do"

A Page of Helps

Young People at Work and Play in Eastern Colorado

By Goldie R. Bell

(The following is taken from a letter written by Miss Bell in response to a request from a neighboring state for helpful suggestions. The ideas are based on actual experience and may well be used in other branches and districts. Who wouldn't like to live in Eastern Colorado?)

PERHAPS THE BEST WAY I can give you any suggestions is to tell you what the young people of Denver are doing and what we hope to accomplish in the future, and you may find that you could use some of the same methods and carry on some similar activities with your groups of young people.

ORGANIZATION

In Denver, we have only one group of about forty young people, ranging in age from fourteen to about thirty. This, of course, is a great variation of ages to be in one group, but we have found after trying to work out different age groups, that in our particular case the one large group is best. As far as our organization is concerned we have a young people's leader, an assistant, a secretary-treasurer, and a young people's council. All our young people's officers are members of the young people's group. Our council consists of four members elected by the group, plus the young people's officers who are permanent members of the council. One council member is elected each month, and holds office for four months, thus giving us a rotating membership in the council. Our method is to elect a new member each month, (not reelect an old member) thus ultimately giving each member of the young people's group an opportunity to serve on this council. We do this because we want each and every member of our group to share in the responsibility as well as in the activity of the group. Our branch president and our church school director of religious education also are ex officio members of the council. They meet with us, discuss our problems and projects with us, and advise us, but do not vote. In this way we are always sure that we are keeping our activities in complete harmony with the branch program, and this is very necessary.

Our council has regular meetings (in addition to any special meetings called by the leader) in which we plan our schedule of activities several months in advance, formulate programs and means and methods of carrying forward these programs. Various projects are discussed and their adaptability to the needs and capacity of our group carefully considered before we attempt to undertake them.

What Do YOU Do?

Here is what the young people are doing in just one place. We recommend the activities listed here to those who are looking for suggestions.

Perhaps you have found some other good things to do. Why not write them up and tell others about them?

We shall be glad to hear from you.

STUDY

At present we have organized two teacher training credit classes which we have been conducting for some time: one class is studying Doctrine and Covenants with our pastor as teacher. This class meets during the church school study hour. The other class is studying the Book of Mormon. We meet each Sunday evening at six-thirty. Our young people are much interested in these classes and some excellent work is being done through which they are obtaining not only a greater knowledge of these two books and related subjects, but a much deeper appreciation of the Restoration and what it means to the world, and the part the young people of today are taking in that great movement.

DRAMATICS

Another of our most interesting projects is our work in dramatics. All of our young people belong to our dramatic club which comes under the jurisdiction of the council, but which also has some special officers for the carrying out of its program. We give several short religious plays each year. These are usually given on Sunday evenings in conjunction with a short sermon by the pastor in which he leads up to the message to be presented in the play. Our music department is very helpful in furnishing appropriate music for any play we give. Our religious plays have thus far been very successful and are much appreciated by the congregation. In connection with our work in religious drama, each year for the past three years we have entered a play in the tournament of religious drama which is sponsored by the Denver and Colorado Councils of Religious Education, and which is held each spring in Denver. Churches from all over the state as well as within the city of Denver enter plays in this tournament and we have had some very fine plays given. We also have been very well pleased with the showing made by our group each year and feel that we derive much benefit from our participation in this annual event. We have found pageants very effective also, sometimes more appropriate than plays and usually much easier to prepare.

Also, we give about three three-act comedy-dramas each year, for which we charge admission and use the money thus derived for some church purpose.

You may be interested to know that we have given some of our religious plays as many as four times, taking them to Colorado Springs, Fort Collins, and other nearby towns, as well as to other churches in our own city. We think this is a splendid thing to do whenever feasible as it not only stimulates interest in dramatics, but promotes good fellowship and understanding between branches and churches.

SOCIAL PROGRAM

In our social program we have a young people's get-together meeting once each month, usually on the Tuesday following the third Sunday of the month. These meetings are always luncheon-business meetings, frequently held in the lower auditorium of the church, or, as often as possible, we go to the mountains or to one of our city parks. We have a brief business session immediately after the luncheon and then proceed with whatever form of recreation has been planned. The evening meetings are parties of some kind and our business session immediately precedes the evening's entertainment. We find that this does not interfere with our enjoyment of the social side of our get-togethers, and it does away with straight business meetings which, for some reason, do not seem to appeal to young people, and yet gives us the opportunity of having most of our young people present to discuss our problems and projects. One feature of these regular business sessions is the election of a member to the council.

For other social activities we have plenty of outings in the mountains, steak frys, weiner roasts, swimming parties, hiking parties, and about anything you can think of. We have had some splendid social meetings with our nearby branches, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Fort Collins, Cheyenne, and others.

During the winter season we have a boys' basket ball team which is entered in the Church League of Denver. Our boys have played some good basket ball and we have derived much benefit as well as much pleasure from our participation in this all-city league.

Foundation Principles of the Gospel

By A. B. Phillips

THE GOSPEL is not only the good news of God to mankind, which the word itself indicates, but it is the only message perfectly adapted to man's spiritual, moral, social, and material needs. This may seem to be a strong statement, but it is one which is supported by human experience today, as well as in the centuries of the past. Wherever and whenever it has been fairly tested it has never failed of its intended purpose, so far as we have any record of its application to man's need and endeavor.

It is true that some have pointed in derision to professed Christians whose lives did not accord with the teachings of Christ, and have claimed that such instances proved Christianity to be a failure. But it hardly need be said that such individuals had not put it to the test, and they therefore did not demonstrate the failure of Christianity but simply their failure to apply it, which is vastly different.

A simple illustration will make this fact clear. A man was taken sick and sent for a physician who, after a careful examination, prescribed a certain tonic to be taken three times a day for an extended period. The patient took only a portion of the first dose, and finding it somewhat bitter to his taste, declared it was not what he wanted and the doctor should have known better than to prescribe such stuff. It would be unfair to say that the prescription was a failure, for it had not been tried.

An essential teaching of Christianity is that men should repent of their sins and turn from them. The process of repenting and reforming the life may taste somewhat bitter at first, but until it is done the prescription of Christ has not been fairly tried.

FUNDAMENTALS OF THE GOSPEL

In order that the gospel may produce the results intended by its divine author we must apply in our lives the principles by which it operates. Everyone can understand that the science of arithmetic is applied by the use of its fundamental principles, notation, numeration, addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division. If we use these simple principles correctly we shall obtain the desired results, but if we do not we cannot say that arithmetic is a failure. The teachings of Christ are also founded on definite principles, each of which is designed to accomplish a particular result.

Perhaps it is a coincidence that Paul declares there are six principles of the doctrine of Christ, for there are also six principles of arithmetic, none of which can be discarded. In the Hebrew letter the six gospel principles named are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. The purpose of each of these principles is set forth in the Scriptures, its nature and importance being clearly unfolded.

As we note these principles separately we shall learn why they are fundamental to the divine message which Christ and his disciples taught. We shall also learn how they apply to man in the great process of his regeneration and development, by which he may be fitted for service here and the celestial life hereafter, and by which the highest ideals of men of all ages may be both realized and surpassed.

THE POWER OF FAITH

It does not require long reflection to recognize the importance of faith. We know by our own experience that every purposeful act is prompted by faith that we could do it. Faith is the moving power of life toward accomplishment. It is the underlying force which makes realities out of possibilities. It is the divine dynamic of all human endeavor without which progress would be impossible and accomplishment would be only a dream or a name. It is the eternal telescope through which we see things both terrestrial and celestial, and the power that surmounts obstacles and enables man to reach the things within his view. It is not strange, then, that God should establish faith as an essential of revealed religion, of which the writer of Hebrews declares:

"Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6.

This principle is entirely consistent with all that we have achieved in life, and because we are familiar with its operation in daily experience we are enabled to apply it in spiritual as well as temporal affairs. But the question has been asked: Are we to understand that blind faith is the foundation of religion? To this we reply that neither a blind nor a dead faith is or can be the foundation of religion, for a faith that yields the desired results is a living and far-seeing faith. Its security lies in the assurance and evidence on which it is based, for man is not asked to have faith blindly. The Hebrew letter states:

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. . . . By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts."—Hebrews 11: 1, 4.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Faith is therefore the means by which man may receive the divine witness after he has manifested his faith by his works. This wonderful truth is presented by Jesus when he declares:

"My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7: 16, 17.

No Salvation Without Repentance

By this promise Jesus challenges everyone to test the divinity of his teachings, for he promises that the divine witness shall come to him who does his will. Everyone therefore who sincerely desires to know the truth of Christ's religion can put it to the test by living it, and thus receive the witness for himself.

But no man who remains in sin and with sinful purposes is fit to receive the Holy Spirit of God which witnesses of heavenly things. Therefore God has established the principle of repentance as another fundamental of his doctrine. This principle was taught by all of the sacred writers, and Christ commanded that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." In obedience to the Lord the Apostle Peter proclaimed this principle in the following command:

"Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."—Acts 3: 19.

From this language it may be seen that repentance means a conversion,—a change of life and purpose, a reformation of character, a choosing and doing of good instead of evil.

The Washing of Regeneration

It has been said that "the road to hell is paved with good intentions." In religion it is not what a man approves or disapproves in another that determines his own standing before God. He may be able to point out many imperfections in others, but unless he acts upon his own knowledge of what God requires by complying with the divine will, he will be condemned for having failed to regard it. By obedience to God man may receive forgiveness of past errors, therefore God has established the doctrine of baptism in water as a principle of obedience to be observed. By doing the divine will faith is put in action and the earnest desire to serve God is manifested.

This beautiful sacrament, besides manifesting obedience to God, symbolizes the death of the old man of sin and the birth of the new man in Christ. It also represents a cleansing from sin, and its remission through repentance and the divine condescension. This figure of cleansing indicates the preparation of the soul for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which God has promised to those who obey him. Probably no doctrine of the New Testament is more clearly taught than that of baptism. It is found in many places, from which the following solemn command of Jesus is selected as recorded in John:

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

It was held to be of such importance that even after he rose from the dead Christ commanded his disciples to teach and practice it. This fact is recorded by Matthew, who declares that Christ said to them:

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 18-20.

Laying on of Hands

It will be observed that Christ conferred authority upon his disciples to go forth and teach the things that he had commanded them. As an outward manifestation of divine authority and of spiritual blessing from on high, the sacrament of laying on of hands was instituted as a principle of the doctrine of Christ.

This sacred ordinance was observed in Old Testament times as well as in the Christian era. It has always been a well recognized principle that God calls and sends whom he will to teach his message to the world. And one so-called is to be ordained by the laying on of hands of one who has authority from on high. By similar authority those who have received the gospel and have been baptized in water are to receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. This is clearly taught in the Scriptures and was practiced by the apostles of Christ, an instance of which says:

"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost."—Acts 8: 14-17.

By this solemn act the believer is consecrated or set apart to the service of God, having entered into a sacred covenant to live in accordance with the gospel of Christ and to use his powers, spiritual and temporal, for the blessing of others rather than for selfish ends. By such devotion he grows in grace and in righteousness, the reward of which is eternal life.

Walled In

By Evan A. Fry

THE STORY GOES that in the good old days before prohibition, a certain gentleman imbibed much too freely of the flowing bowl, and after being forcibly ejected from the hitherto friendly saloon where he had spent his money, he started on his unsteady journey towards home. As the last few drinks took effect, his steps became less and less sure, until eventually he staggered against a convenient telephone pole, while the whole world reeled about him.

For some moments he clung to the pole trying to clear his brain; then he tried to resume his journey. No use; the pole was in the way. He moved around the pole a little way, and tried again to begin his travels homeward. Still no luck; once more the pole was in the way. Slowly and carefully he made the entire circuit of the pole, and time and again he struggled to free himself from it and start off in the direction of his home. The pole simply would not get out of the way; wherever he turned, there was solid wood to bar his progress. Finally in sheer weary befuddled desperation he sank down beside the pole, and a puzzled look came over his face. As he sank into a drunken sleep, he muttered to himself, "Well, well; walled in, by gosh!"

FOOLISH, you say? Perhaps; but the fact remains that the subject of this little story was walled in just as effectually and just as thoroughly by one innocent telegraph pole as he could have been by a solid concrete wall six feet thick. And unfortunately, the fact also remains that many of us poor mortals who pride ourselves on keeping sober at all costs could probably find ourselves in much the same situation as was the hero of our story. This man was not physically bound, as he supposed he was; he was perfectly free to back away from the pole and go about his business, but he could not, and it was his own fault that he could not. He had built the wall about himself when he imbibed so freely that his senses were numbed and his brain paralyzed so that he could see nothing and feel nothing but a very solid and a very apparent wooden pole. He had lost all power of locomotion; he could not back away from the pole and view it in its proper relationship with the surrounding neighborhood. His bodily incapacity made it impossible for him to do more than lean against the pole with his eyes glued so fixedly to it that he could see nothing else. Naturally, if a man sees nothing but solid wood all around him, he takes it for granted that he must be walled in; but in this case all that was needed was a change in the point of view.

I WAS WONDERING last night whether many of us are not just as foolish as this drunken man in our attitude towards several things in life—sin for instance. We may have some habit which we know should be eradicated, but which seems to be too strong for us, or which we have just not taken the trouble to try to overcome. We are so obsessed and so intoxicated by the pleasures of our sin that we can see nothing else. We vainly wish that we might be free from it, yet with our eyes fixed upon it and our noses turned always in that direction, we go 'round and 'round, looking in vain for a means of escape, only to sink down discouraged at last with the assertion that we are walled in. Usually, all in the world that we have to do is to step a pace or two back from the pole—or in other words, to forsake the sin completely and start off on a little different tangent, and the wall miraculously disappears. Or, if we find that we are too weak to step aside, or to back up from the harmless pole which holds us prisoner, we can always lift our heads and see that after all it is only a pole; that it does end only a few feet above; and we can realize that help from God may be found if we will only lift up our eyes.

I wonder whether we are not equally foolish sometimes in our attitude towards the hard things—the trials and tribulations of life. We have perhaps been going merrily on our way, unhampered by any cares or worries or troubles, when all at once, dead ahead, there appears a difficulty in the form of a very solid and very substantial telegraph pole. Like the drunk man of my story, we fall feebly against the pole; we get our eyes so close to it that we see nothing else; we press our noses against it in a vain attempt to find a way through; we go 'round and 'round looking in vain for an exit, and then at last sink down to moan and curse our fate and blame the world or God or any other available candidate for our being hopelessly walled in. All we need to do to cause the walls to melt away is to take a step backwards—to take our eyes and our nose away from the pole long enough and far enough so that we can see that after all, it is only a pole, and not a wall. You know that a thing so small as a dime may appear large enough to shut out the world if you hold it close enough to your eye.

Then, too, there are still other people who have blundered blindly against the telegraph pole of worldly pleasure. Their eyes are fixed intently upon it; their noses are glued to it, and they also go 'round and 'round in a sort of giddy whirl, often not even looking for a means of escape. The small bulk of the pole has again blotted out the whole world, and they are walled in by their ceaseless round of activity in the interests of pure pleasure. They often delude themselves into thinking—that because the pole is prettily gilded, they are having a wonderful time; it never occurs to them to take a step backwards and to survey the world and the pole in their true relationships.

Whatever may be the pole against which you and I have staggered in the homeward journey of our souls, let us take the few steps backward which will place us in a position to see that after all the pole is only a pole—an easily avoided pole from which we can easily escape if we will but try. Whether the pole be sinful habit, or brooding trouble, or worldly pleasure, or any one of a dozen other things, if we can only take the single step backwards or sideways, we shall then see that God has provided for us a means of escape; that after all, the obstacle in our path is only a pole—not a wall. With the help of God, any wall can become only a pole.

The Christian religion claims the entire man for God. No faculty or power of his nature is neglected or overlooked. This is made clear in Jesus' definition of the first and great commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Every province of the kingdom of man's nature is taken in. . . . Paul follows the Master very closely in this teaching. He, too, says that the entire man has been redeemed and belongs to God. When he wished great things for his churches it was his habit to link three words together—spirit, soul, and body. Both the visible and invisible parts of a man come within the scope of redemption. — Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

To the end of time mankind will be seeking to discover the living significance of religion. And, as now, a thousand roads will be tramped over in the quest. Men approach the issues of life and destiny along different roads. It is important that men who have walked these roads shall tell why they chose them and what they found on their way. And it is important that we listen to the tale of their travels. If the telling and the hearing are to bring light and leadership to perplexed and hungry generation, two things are necessary. Those who speak must be free alike from the sins of flippancy and fanaticism. And those who listen must be free alike from the prejudgments of blind credulity and blind cynicism.—Glenn Frank.

New Quarterlies for October

By C. B. Woodstock

THE FIRST SUNDAY in October marks the beginning of our new church school year. This is true in all churches. It permits of a new organization of classes following promotion made the last Sunday of September, the introduction of new subject matter, the selection of new teachers and the making of new plans for intensive class work. It is highly important that we recognize these periods of reorganization, that new officers and teachers be chosen, or the old ones retained, with due regard to the highest possible functioning power of the school, and that the same care should be given the selection of subject matter for the various classes.

THE CURRICULUM

Over a period of years our courses of study have been under preparation, use and revision. Those whose duty it is to select and arrange study material have prepared our gospel quarterly series. These have been the product of the best minds available for this task in the church. The work has been done earnestly, prayerfully, studiously, in an effort to provide for each age the information for which they are ready and of which they have need, and to supply the inspiration and urge necessary to carry timely instruction into character building attitudes and activities, and to build loyalties to the purposes and ideals of the church.

The church school curriculum furnishes some thirty years of study and training, beginning with the nursery and continuing far into maturity. These courses have a fairly definite sequence. They are grouped into cycles, usually of three years each, one only of each cycle being printed each year as the current quarterly for the department. Over a period of three years each of the courses is brought to the fore in turn, its material revised as may be necessary and reprinted for current study. This gives us each year seven freshly printed full year series. While effort is made to keep a supply of the twelve quarters of each cycle on hand for those schools in which it is desired to have different subject matter for each of two or more classes in a department, in many cases it will be found more satisfactory to make choices so that the various classes use current quarterlies.

IN THE CHILDREN'S DIVISION

For the nursery we have standard material in "A Year of Lessons for the Nursery Child." This should be used invariably for a nursery group, or for children below four years of age.

This is the second year of the kindergarten series, "Leading Childhood to God" (No. 121). The quarterly should be provided for every teacher.

"Helpers in God's World," (No. 211), the first year of the primary course, is being provided with new teacher's helps by a new editor, Mrs. Mildred Goodfellow, who brings to her task the result of years of training and experience.

The first year of the junior series, "Stories From the Old Testament," (No. 311), is being newly prepared by Miss Hallie Gould. This will make a full year of junior Bible study prepared by an able editor. The stories are not only well selected and well told, but each lesson contains a present-day incident as well, impressing the fact that God's power is with his people today.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S DIVISION

Following the three years of Bible study in the junior years, a full year is spent with "Stories From the Book of Mormon" (No. 411); outstanding incidents, events and teachings of the Nephite record. This is the first year of the intermediate series.

The first year senior provides a study of life as it must be met by our high school young people in the light of gospel ideals. Miss Vida Watson, an instructor in the University of Kansas, is preparing most vital lessons on "Youth and Life" (No. 511), for the first two quarters. The second two quarters are being written by Miss Gladys Elliott, teacher of a class of young women at the Stone Church in Independence.

"The Message and Witness of the Restoration," (No. 641), is the subject for study among older young people for the coming year. It will gather up in an organized way the faith and belief of the church as contained in the standard books, and will emphasize the witness of the truth of the Restoration. The lessons are prepared by Elder Arthur Oakman and Miss Elva Sturges.

THE ADULT DIVISION

A standard series of five adult studies is contemplated, of which two are already in use and are now available, "The Message of the Book of Mormon" and "A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants." These have been produced in the two years just passed. This year we shall have the third, "A Study of the Financial Law." Two others are in preparation for succeeding years, covering a study of our church history and the Bible.

The current adult quarterly, urged as the material specially prepared for adult classes in all the church for the coming year, is "A Study of the Financial Law," (No. 721). This is being written by men of the Order of Bishops, under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. A most earnest effort is being made to gather from all sources the best information that can be assembled to make clear and plain the will of God as taught in the books concerning our responsibility for the finances of the church. Without question, the work of the church is sadly handicapped and the membership suffer untold loss because as a people we have failed to understand and to heed the instruction which has been given. This is our year to study the financial law.

Use the Quarterlies

1. Current quarterlies are timely.
2. They have been produced by experienced teachers.
3. They provide study helps for your class.
4. They cover in sequence the important gospel informations.
5. They carry the urge and inspiration of immediate needs and developments in the church.
6. Keep in step with church progress.

Today Christianity faces the task of introducing fellowship and vindicating brotherhood in a world where conflict and competition between individuals and groups continually deny the Christian testimony. And the greatest of conflicts is the battle for bread, the struggle for economic security. The Christian way of life stands or falls on the proposition that men may carry on all the essential functions of society without a perpetual clash of interests. Our economic life is basic to every human interest. Christianity proposes to spiritualize it by making it a sphere for fellowship.—Federal Council Bulletin, September, 1932.

Preaching is grounded in that awareness of Another. Isaiah's impassioned plea for righteousness sprang from his sense of an eternal rectitude: his only hope of success was that his hearers had that same sense though beclouded while his was bright. Preaching is rooted in the sense of Another. Christian preaching is rooted in the persuasive faith and piercing conviction that in Christ that Other has made known His love and will for mankind.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

The Book of Mormon Confirmed by Tradition

By Ruth Minkler

AT THE TIME of the discovery of America by Columbus, there was living in Peru, Mexico, and Central America, a race of strange people who, hitherto, had been unknown to the civilized world. It was soon after the discovery that the Spaniards, eager for wealth, explored these regions. Here they found that the people had obtained a state of semi-civilization. The people of Mexico were known as Aztecs; those of Peru, Incas; and those of Central America, Mayas. It is with the religion of the Mayas that this article is concerned.

Tradition cannot be wholly depended upon, but when we learn that the inhabitants of the three above mentioned countries handed down, from generation to generation, the same or similar ideas concerning a lost religion, we are led to believe there must be some truth in the statements made by them.

Upon the traditions of the Mayas of Central America, we must mainly depend for our knowledge of their religion. Their traditions are embodied in a book, known as the Papal Vuh, which was written in the native language, and translated into modern language by European scholars, shortly after the conquest. This book records the history of the race from the beginning, and also endeavors to give an account of the human race, which is analagous to that found in Genesis.

STORY OF THE CREATION AS FOUND IN "PAPAL VUH"

Translations of the traditions contain the story of the creation, as follows: "A time when all was silent and there was yet no earth, and no living thing, only the immobility and silence of a boundless sea, on the surface of which floated the Creator and his companion deities. . . . including Gucumatz, the 'plumed serpent.' Then, the light appeared, and the earth with its vegetation was created by Gucumatz. Life was distributed as guardians of the forests and mountains, and called upon to speak and praise the name of those who had made them." Finally, men "became very numerous on the face of the earth, but the gods were wroth, and sent upon them a flood."

STORY OF THE TOWER OF BABEL AS FOUND IN "PAPAL VUH"

Some of the traditions have reference to Babel, when the scattering took place. They tell how the people undertook to build a tower to the sky. The "Lord of Heaven" became "enraged and said to the inhabitants of the sky, 'Have you observed how they of earth have built a high and haughty tower, to mount hither, being enamored of the light of the sun and its beauty? Come! and confound them, because it is not right that they of the earth, living in the flesh, should mingle with us.' Immediately, at that very instant, the inhabitants of the sky sallied forth like flashes of lightning. They destroyed the edifice, and divided and scattered its builders to all parts of the earth."

Professor Baldwin says that in the old Central American books there is a constant tradition of an immense catastrophe lasting for several days, during which time the people were in darkness, seeing neither sun nor moon. The land was shaken by frightful earthquakes, and the waves of the sea combined with volcanic fires, to overwhelm and engulf it.

"QUETZALCOATL," OR THE "CULTURE-HERO"

There was a wonderful personage who made a very deep impression in the history of the ancient Americans. He is called by different names among the various tribes, but since his description by them has such a great degree of similarity, historians agree that they must have reference to the same individual. Hence, he is called by all historians, the "Culture-Hero." The "Culture-Hero" is universally described as a white, bearded man, dressed in a long robe, who appeared suddenly and mysteriously upon the scenes of their labors. They claim he set about improving the people by giving them laws, and exhorting them to practice brotherly love and other Christian virtues, and introducing a milder and better form of religion. After accomplishing his mission, he disappeared as mysteriously as he came.

We are further informed that this great personage came by divine command, and that he came from the east, from the old world. He was venerable, just, holy, and taught by precept and example, the ways of virtue. This being, Quetzalcoatl, as he was called by the Mexicans and Central Americans, was born of a virgin, in the land of Tula, in the distant Orient. Says Charnay, "He was endowed with every virtue and deified."

Prescott says a popular tradition respecting Quetzalcoatl was that he promised, on his departure, to return at some future day with his posterity, and resume the possession of his empire. This is why the people yielded so easily to the invasion of the white man. They thought the long looked for Quetzalcoatl had arrived to take possession of his Empire and, therefore, little resistance was made.

ORIGIN OF ABOVE TRADITIONS

In the light of Book of Mormon history, we find that many of these traditions are substantiated. We learn that in the year 600 B. C., a prophet from Jerusalem, by the name of Lehi, was caused by divine direction to lead a colony to this continent. Before leaving, God directed him to obtain some brass plates from Laban, in Jerusalem, which he did. These plates contained a record of the five books of the law, as found in the Bible, the prophecies of Joseph, while in Egypt, and those of Isaiah and Jeremiah, besides the genealogy of Lehi's forefathers, which showed him to be a descendant of Joseph, through Manasseh.

This record was brought to America, where it was handed down from one generation to another, and finally buried with other plates, by the prophet Mormon, A. D. 384. As we know, the five books of the law contain the account of the creation, the flood, the dispersion of the people from the Tower of Babel, and the law of Moses.

The Book of Mormon teaches that Lehi's descendants became numerous on this continent. Because of disobedience, they became divided into a righteous and an unrighteous people. The righteous were called Nephites, and the wicked, Lamanites. Because of their disobedience, the Lamanites had a curse placed upon them as the result of which they became a dark, loathsome people, delighting in raw meats, and wandering about, living in tents, rather than establishing fixed dwelling places, as did the Nephites. Believers in the Book of Mormon claim that the American Indian is the descendant of these Lamanites.

The brass plates were handed down through the Nephite people. Thus the knowledge of the Scriptures became lost to the Lamanites, leaving them in spiritual darkness, while the Nephites, being conversant with the word of God, observed the law of Moses, as recorded on the plates. They built beautiful temples, became skilled in workmanship, and built fine cities. They were greatly blessed as long as they lived righteously. Prophets were found among them. The Book of Mormon tells us that these prophets foretold the coming of a Savior, who would be born of a virgin, in the land from whence they came. They also foretold the appearance of a new star in the sky, and three continuous days of light, when the babe should be born. These prophecies were fulfilled.

It was also prophesied that Christ would be crucified, and that at the time of this event there would be three continuous days of darkness. The book tells us that on the fourth day of the month, A. D. 34, there arose a great storm, such as had never before been known in all the land. The earth quaked, and great and notable cities were sunk and burned. Terrible things occurred for the space of three hours. Then, darkness so great that the people could feel its vapors, covered the face of the land. "There was not any light seen, neither fire nor glimmer, neither the sun, the moon, nor the stars, for so great were the mists of darkness which were upon the face of the land. And it came to pass that it did last for the space of three days that there was no light seen, and there was great mourning and howling and weeping among all the people continually."

Shortly after this, in fulfillment of prophecy, Christ appeared in person to the people of Nephi. The Book of Mormon says that they heard a voice in the heavens which said, "Behold my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear him." Then, they beheld a man descending out of heaven. "He was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them. And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand and spake unto the people saying, 'Behold I am Jesus Christ of whom the prophets testified should come into the world.'" The record tells us that he invited the people to come unto him and thrust their hands into his side and feel the prints of the nails in his hands.

During his short stay here, he established his church, and fulfilled the law of Moses which the Nephites had punctiliously observed, as the means of pointing their minds forward to the true lamb of God, who should be slain in the meridian of time. After ministering to the needs of the people, and preaching the gospel, he ascended into heaven, stating that, as he went, so in like manner would he come again.

But how did these facts become tradition among the Mayas and other contemporaneous tribes, and what relationship did the Mayas bear to the Lamanites and Nephites of Book of Mormon history? is the question which the thoughtful reader will ask. To answer this question, we must reexamine the Book of Mormon and, doing so, we find that many of the Nephites dissented and went over to the side of the Lamanites. A. D. 384, a great battle occurred between the two nations, and because the Nephites had become corrupt and ripe in iniquity, the Lord permitted them to be utterly destroyed. Therefore, the Nephite nation became extinct A. D. 384, but the Lord promised that those Nephites whose blood was mixed with the Lamanites, would never become extinct.

It is evident that the Mayas are the descendants of these Nephites who became mixed with the Lamanites, for various reasons. They possess characteristics common to both of these Book of Mormon peoples. They have some of the customs of the Lamanites and, on the other hand, they have inherited a certain amount of Nephite civilization.

It is only natural, therefore, that the Mayas should be in possession of a tradition which points back to the time when their ancestors, the Nephites, possessed a full knowledge of Jesus Christ, and the way of salvation.

In connection with our class study on Sunday evenings we have a twenty to thirty minute service immediately preceding. This may be in the form of a program for entertainment, it may be something of a serious nature, it may be a real worship service, a debate, a short play, a round-table discussion, or any one of several other forms of service. It is varied to meet the needs and wishes of those attending and participating. This service is sponsored by the young people, but is for the entire membership of the branch, and is followed immediately by class work. We now have three classes organized for Sunday evening study and expect to organize more this winter.

In addition to our young people's activities, the members of our group loyally support the choir and our regular church services. In all of our young people's work we stress the fact that we can help most where we can serve best by cooperating to the best of our ability with all other departments of the church.

We have had some splendid reports come in during the past two weeks from other branches in our district regarding the activities of other groups of young people and it is one of our projects for our coming district conference to complete our district organization and to harmonize and coordinate the activities of the various branches throughout the district in a unified, forward-looking program, for all the young people.

VISITING

Our latest young people's project, which is going over wonderfully well, is a definite program of young people's visiting. So far, we have gone in a group of eight (we expect to go in smaller groups from now on and thus cover more territory) and have been royally welcomed everywhere we have visited. We make two visits an evening, the first visit to some of our older members or to some one who is sick, and the visit later in the evening to some of our younger folks. The value of visiting cannot be overestimated and we hope to continue in this phase of our work and to expand as well.

PRAYER SERVICE

One of our most important activities I have left until the last. That is our First-Sunday-in-the-Month young people's prayer service. We have been having these services for many months and have found them to be the "power house" of the church for us. Interest is steadily increasing and our attendance at these services is steadily increasing also. We make of these prayer meetings real, well-planned worship services, and my suggestion would be, if you do not now have some kind of a young people's prayer service, that you try these early Sunday morning meetings at least once a month.

If you attended the Youth Conference and Leadership Convention at Lamoni this summer you undoubtedly gained much that will help you in work of leading the young people of your branch in their work. We had eight members there from Denver and a total of twenty-three from Eastern Colorado District. I cannot tell you how much it meant to all of us to attend that conference. I hope you were there also. It was one of the most wonderful experiences of my life and far exceeded my greatest expectations. It gave us more of encouragement, assurance, inspiration and determination to go forward with the youth of the church than anything else could have done. Many of our young people are already looking forward to the next Youth Conference and I am sure our representation will be doubled at the next one.

We shall be glad to hear from you at any time and to be of assistance in any way we can. And when you have any grand, good ideas for young people's work, let us hear about them and maybe we can put them into effect here in Denver and Eastern Colorado District, too.

The door of a church ought to be built high enough so that worshipers shall not need to leave their heads outside. Why should the preacher hesitate to assume the best scientific knowledge of his day? David accepted the astronomy of his time; why should not we accept the best astronomy and the best anthropology of our time? It shall still be true for David and for us—whether the earth is round or flat, made in a week or in unimagined millennia—that "the Lord is my shepherd." Our plea is this: only a rigorously truth-seeking pulpit can hope to move a scientific age. —George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

Zionic Unity

By L. S. Wight

Only by keeping open minds and by determining to make personal desires subservient to group needs can we hope to develop the unity of feeling for which we as Latter Day Saints should strive.

I vividly recall the impression one of Brother Elbert A. Smith's "Blue Pencil Notes" made on my mind some years ago when he said something about the feeling of nearness to God that comes to a man who can pick up some dirt on his own property, and let it sift through his fingers. He feels that this earth is his to work with, to use, and from it to grow the food for his family. Such a privilege gives a man a feeling of safety and security that nothing else can. And if there ever was a time that we can appreciate the value of that feeling of security it is now when so many are losing their land because of prevailing conditions. Also if there is any one objective in Zion building that should stand out, it is that Zion will give to each one the chance to experience this feeling pictured by Brother Elbert.

It is obviously impossible for each man or woman living in Zion to experience this privilege in the same way, as we cannot all be farmers. But that we should develop some sound, systematic method by which every individual member of the church may experience safety and security is an objective for which all should work. This can be accomplished only by developing a unity of purpose in our Zionic thinking. This does not mean that we shall all express that unity in the same way. Differences in individuality need not affect the principle of a purpose. Sometimes I wonder if we are not too much concerned with differences of incidental details when two people who seem to be in disagreement may actually be expressing the same principle in different ways. Basically they may be in agreement.

We must recognize that the gathering together of people from all walks of life and all nationalities will present a unique problem fraught with many difficulties. These problems must be recognized in order to solve them satisfactorily. If we are to create a situation which will give security to each individual, we must develop a plan which will agree with divine instructions, which will be practical, and which can be easily understood by the various types of people who will want to participate in the plan.

While one of the outstanding ideals of every Zion builder should be the hope of owning his own home, there are and will continue to be many cases where people will not be able to own their own homes even with the means to do so. This group will undoubtedly be limited in number, and I suggest it merely to bring out the thought that any plan of operation must take into account all the conditions which must be met in solving our community problems. For instance, we have some men in the missionary arm of church work whose families are grown and whose companions are living with them as they move from place to place, giving immeasurable aid in pastoral work. What a life of service! I feel that no couple could have a greater ambition than to give the declining years of their lives after their own family is grown, in working together, moving among the church members where their abilities are most needed. It is obvious that they should not be burdened with the ownership of a home, yet provision should be made that they might depend on having one when the need arises. This is just one illustration of various situations to which any general rule must apply if it is to have practical application in developing Zionic security.

To further emphasize the need of recognizing all kinds of conditions I suggest a reading of the sixth verse of Section 128 in Doctrine and Covenants. It reads as follows: "The great variety of callings, avocations, and professions will present difficulties precluding the practicability of all settling and living in near proximity to each other. It is therefore within the province of those upon whom the burden of organization may rest to provide for other organizations or associations than those simply pastoral or agricultural. Under this head there may be placed industrial associations of such sorts as the varied qualifications existing among workmen may demand."

Among workmen of various types there is a constant fluctuation of work. This is an unsatisfactory situation but one we must recognize and deal with constantly. Nature has a way of constantly bringing changes even in production of crops so that it is not possible always to anticipate every contingency. In almost every line of human endeavor we have periods of "feast and famine." These are natural phenomena which we cannot change. Even as far back as the days of Joseph's captivity in Egypt we have the record of seven years of plenty followed by the seven years of famine. Did God try to control this for the protection of his children? No, he did not. But he voiced a warning so that those who took heed and prepared for it were able to keep a balance in their lives in spite of the condition. That must be our attitude in Zionic communities. We must expect periodic upsetting conditions, and plan for them.

There is a godly purpose in thus putting on each one of us the responsibility of learning how to meet conditions and make the best of them. It is when these upsetting conditions come on us without the means to defend ourselves that we suffer. The depression which we still feel is a good example, one that will be remembered for years to come. Without doubt it will figure conspicuously in future Zionic discussions as a sample of that for which we should prepare. I do not believe that God brought this on us, but I do feel that he has permitted it to come after warning us time and time again that it would come. Those who listened to his advice have been able not only to meet the situation but to take advantage of it.

How are we going to create a condition that will give every loyal member of the church a hope of job insurance through Zionic unity? My answer to this question may not be satisfactory to each one who reads this and some may think it harsh, but it is simply this: By giving each man a chance to work out his own salvation. That of course merely answers the question by creating another one, which is, How are we going to arrange it so that every man will have a chance to work out his own salvation?

Before answering this further I want to record here an impressive incident which I saw recently. In Danville, Illinois, the community funds for help to the jobless during this winter were far too inadequate. Faced with a serious situation which might easily breed discontent or even revolution the various relief agencies worked out the following solution: The American Legion arranged to take charge of a project to put men to work digging coal in a strip mine not far from the city and which could be leased very reasonably. With voluntary labor and donated materials they built a cook shack on this field where the men at work are fed, and where the work of supervision is taken care of. They arranged work in shifts of nearly two hundred men each, one day for each shift so that approximately one thousand men are given the privilege of working one day a week. For this day's work they are given tickets for a week's supply of food for the family, and this food is paid for from the receipts for the coal which is sold at two dollars per ton, all consumed locally. In addition much of the coal is given to needy families who cannot pay for fuel. This gives the men not only the feeling of being self-sustaining by earning their own food, but of being a help to the needy, who are furnished with fuel for which they cannot pay. Meals are prepared and eaten in the cook shack, the sale of coal buying most of the food. Flour is furnished by the Red Cross and jobless bakers do the work of preparing the food.

Some cases of discontent appeared but these were quickly segregated and the men invited to go on their way. At one time a group of agitators appeared, thinking this would be fertile territory. The men who were benefiting from this community project resented the assumption that they could be influenced by propaganda, and the reception accorded the agitators was backed up with a liberal use of clubs. These men feel that the community has done all possible to give them a chance to work out their own salvation, and they are responding as most men will. They are a loyal group of citizens who will prove their worth as times become normal. Unity of purpose has made this project a success. My purpose in using it as an illustration is merely to show what unity can do if given a chance. Also to show how men will respond when given an opportunity to work out their own salvation.

When we develop a unity of purpose we spiritualize motives. And when we do that, we shall see men voluntarily using the tools of business such as profits, competition, etc., for the good of the group. It will not be necessary to pass restrictive rules to do away with such tools, and community laws will be necessary only to define those things on which natural differences of opinion might creep in. Natural laws will permit fullest development of community spirit, and no man will need to feel that he is unduly restricted in what he can do. Each will want to do all he can in order that his greater development will give him a better set of tools with which to help in the furtherance of Zion building.

My answers to these questions so far have been general. But I want now to give a specific answer to this question of how to develop Zionic unity, so necessary before we can create those conditions which will give every man assurance of a job. The answer is file your inventory. To me that is the starting point. It is emphatically a part of divine instruction. When every member of the church files an inventory and then an annual statement, it will mean that we have unity of thought.

My purpose in emphasizing the one simple thing of filing the inventory is to show that it is not so necessary to be concerned about building the machinery for control of Zionic activity as it is to spur the development of motives. We do not want a machinery of control which is complicated. The divine plan as expressed through bishopric organization is sufficient to meet the needs of any kind of community development.

To create a hypothetical example, suppose church members continue to (Continued on page 1202)

A Junior Stewardship Club

A Letter From Ko Tsuji

(A supply of junior stewardship record books were ordered from Hilo, Hawaii, early in the year. The following account shows a splendid work being done in the Island Mission. The Presiding Bishopric recommended junior stewardship as a project among the young in all the branches of the church. We appreciate the work being done by Brother Tsuji. The suggestion will be helpful where an activity program is desired for boys and girls. The record books are furnished for project use at 10 cents each.—C. B. W.)

Dear Brother Woodstock:

I'm sure you will be interested to know how our junior stewardship movement is coming along. The junior stewards here have organized themselves into a club, The Junior Stewardship Club. The constitution that was adopted provides, among other things:

(1) That any member of the branch between the ages of 8 to 17 may join the club.

(2) That the purpose and aim of the club is to develop the junior stewards physically, mentally, spiritually, and in service.

(3) That each junior steward must keep a record of his finances in the regular junior stewardship record book, and do his share in helping the church financially as well as in other ways.

The officers of the club, besides the sponsor, are the president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer. These officers are elected for a term of six months.

The regular meetings are held twice a month. Up to the present time we have had four meetings—we have met every other Saturday from 4 to 8 p. m. From four to six the juniors engage in out-of-door games; "kaukau" or something to eat at six; business meeting, discussions, etc., in the evening.

The stewards have adopted as their motto, "ever-ready."

The club colors are "Red and White."

At each gathering they sing their "Club-song" and also their "Motto-song."

Fourteen junior stewards are members of the junior stewardship club. These are a few of the things that the stewards are doing:

(1) Practically every member is paying tithes and making other offerings.

(2) They take charge of the care and cleaning of the church yard and lot.

(3) They are ready to help any member who is not able to take his turn in cleaning and decorating the church. They cleaned the church and gathered the greens, etc., for Easter Sunday.

(4) They assist in the services by singing as a group in the junior choir.

(5) They are taking charge of the books as the regular librarian is away at the present time.

(6) They take active parts in junior services and also in the programs conducted by the department of recreation and expression.

(7) They are striving to be always present and on time at Sunday school.

The Junior Stewardship Club is planning to put on a junior stewardship fair and exhibition at the Mission House this summer. The stewards are centering their efforts toward this junior stewardship project. I will write you more regarding this project in the near future.

I feel that a very favorable beginning has been made; the junior stewards are realizing that they are a very vital part of the church and its program—they want to take an active part and help with the rest of the members. I am happy that the parents and other older members are also sensing the importance of this phase of our church work—they see the great need of developing in our branch a devoted and loyal group of young folks who will be willing to consecrate their services to the Lord's cause.

I am enjoying my work with the junior stewards, and I hope that I shall continue to find joy in my efforts to serve the Lord by helping to direct these young lives along the pathway that leads toward Zion.

die," points to the fact that life here is intended as a preparation for life hereafter. The fifth principle of the doctrine of Christ assures us that if a man die he shall live again. Christ, who conquered death, hell, and the grave, promises immortality and celestial glory with God as the supreme attainment and goal of the human soul. Through him death loses its sting, for sin and mortality shall be overcome forever.

This divine hope is to be realized in accordance with and to the degree of our faithfulness and devotion to God and righteousness. Therefore the first and most glorious resurrection will be enjoyed by those who choose and love the things of God above the things that lead away from him. The marvels of supernal bliss shall be theirs, for they can be safely entrusted with all the riches of the divine life.

Eternal Judgment

The principle upon which is based the decision of God concerning those who shall be received into his glory is called the doctrine of eternal judgment. It tells us that God is no respecter of persons, but will judge every man according to his works, whether he be saint or sinner. There will be no favoritism in that great judgment day, for the record tells us that all, both small and great, shall stand before him and shall receive the things done in the body whether good or bad. Every reward shall be according to the degree of good that has been done, and every condemnation shall be proportionate to the wrongs that have been committed, except those that by repentance have been forgiven.

There are many more features of the gospel of most absorbing interest, but even this brief survey of its foundation principles clearly shows that the needs of man both in this life and the life to come are provided for in a wonderful manner. The gospel of Christ is the perfect plan of God to change us from the human into the divine nature. It touches us at every point of our experience here, and points the way to immortality.

The creative power of youth and the capacity of childhood to achieve ideals will be largely lost if they have to grow up in a world which is dominated by adults who have ceased to grow. The strain between youth and adulthood in many a church and home is due far more to the stagnation of complacent adulthood than to the radicalism of flaming youth. The fruitage of Christian education depends very largely upon the degree to which the adulthood of the church generally can be persuaded to enter into and share in those same learning experiences through which young life is being enriched and guided. —Harry C. Munro, in "Do Adults Want to Learn?" International Journal of Religious Education.

Instead of asking, as some men do, whether the church is needed any longer, I should propound the question, When has the church been more needed? In an age like this, when the problems are crowding thick and fast upon us, problems so complicated and so immense that the human mind in their presence staggers and draws back, when mental bewilderments are so numerous and so awful, is there not need of a strong immovable institution, which shall bear calm witness to a few great facts and principles upon which the hopes of our humanity depend?—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

We cannot take a breath, or think a thought without the same intimate cooperation of God's power that was necessary to bring us into existence.—J. Elliott Ross, in Truths to Live by.

locate in a given community until all business activity as well as all agricultural activity within a trading radius is controlled by Latter Day Saints. This will give us an ideal opportunity for the test of our plans. If the Bishop has in his hands an inventory of the material worth of every church member, he knows what to count on as community assets. Since everyone has filed his inventory, there is unity of purpose in that each one has gone on record as being willing for his material wealth to be used for the best interest of the community. The Bishop will know the plans of the members and in council with them can determine whether or not the carrying out of those plans will be best for all concerned. Decision to act in accordance with the suggestions of the Bishop will be voluntary.

Each farm or each business will have certain plans for its own development which must be carried out as far as possible. In simple terms this, of course, is the business activity of the community. This is what gives jobs to those who are dependent on jobs for a living. But how will this insure jobs, or give the security we are talking about? There are and always will be community development projects which can be put through at any time, and these can be arranged to take up slack in private business since those slack periods can be anticipated. This will mean that the Bishop in each community must regulate the flow of activity. Then regardless of fluctuations in the business world which, I repeat, we will always have, the community will not be seriously affected.

Zionic job insurance then will come from citizenship in such a community, where because of unity of purpose security will be built on faith in each other. Ups and downs will be shared voluntarily. Can greater security be accomplished in any other way?

Instead of setting up a complicated system of regulatory control this idea merely emphasizes what has already been given to us. It is divine in principle, it is practical, and it is simple. Practical because if anyone thinks he can get away with something under such a situation, let him feel free to try it. In a community where there is such voluntary unity of purpose it does not take long to discover if any individual is out of step. The reaction of others toward such a one will be a natural human reaction. It will not take him long to see that it does not pay to be out of step. That will be far more effective as a cure than all the regulatory rules which could be created. As to simplicity, is it hard for us to understand that the financial

Our Goals

A Few Quotation Marks—Statements From a Sermon by President Elbert A. Smith

We realize that it is necessary for a people to have certain definite goals even as individuals have goals. We must set our stakes to do a certain thing. When a farmer is about to plow a field, he sets a stake, or perhaps two of them, on the far side of the field, and plows his furrow by them. Young people must set certain stakes. Sometimes we are compelled to shift our stakes a bit because of circumstances. So it is with a group of people.

Any organization that intends to get anywhere has in mind certain goals toward which it is pressing. These goals ought to be clearly visioned.

What are the goals of the church? Two have been set up—(1) The evangelizing of the world, and (2) The Zionizing of the church.

The first is comprehended in the words of the Savior: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel. . . ." And: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

Our preaching has affected religious belief in the world in the last one hundred years beyond your comprehension unless you have studied the subject. Zion, the second coming of Christ, tithing, and stewardships were not heard at all a century ago, but they have now been taken up by other churches.

The church has always believed in evangelization. It was not yet a year old when it launched its first mission, sending forth four young men, Oliver Cowdery, Parley Pratt, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson.

In 1831, missionaries came to Missouri which was designated as the Land of Zion, and so the church has continued to consider it.

We believe in the gathering. We believe that these are last days—the end of the world in its present condition and the entering of the world into higher and better conditions. Because of this belief, we call ourselves Latter Day Saints. We believe Christ is coming to earth again. He made a definite promise: "I go away, and come again unto you."

We believe that in the last day of confusion and distress God's people must have Zion as a place to which they can flee from disaster. . . . Back of our philosophy of the gathering is the desire for self-preservation. Zion is to be a place of safety and peace.

The natural physical laws of cohesion and affinity carry over into spiritual relationships, and we speak of the gregariousness of man and of his social inclinations.

Without question religious ideals are among the strongest ideals there are to draw people together. We sing the old hymn:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

The elect are those who will respond to the doctrine of righteousness and truth, and those who will not respond are the nonelect. The Lord said: "Righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.)

I feel in my soul the strong conviction that there are young men in this audience who will have to go on missions, and there are young women who will be missionaries' wives. There are young men and women who will build homes for the church, who will carry on the business affairs of Zion; young people who will give their lives to the establishment of Zion. . . . The Presidency of the church trusts you young people. We expect you to rise and shine, to be more consecrated, more devoted, more loyal, than those around you in the world.

I believe the vision of Zion appeals to our young people. We vision it as a community of people gathered together in the unity of Christ, living in righteousness, in peace, and in equality.

I have always admired the spirit of the man who will not give up.

The church has for one hundred years committed itself without reservation to building Zion. Shall we admit even for a moment that we are ready to quit?

The basal fact in the present world situation is that individual and national greed, nakedly pagan, has been ruling the world, and as an order of life it is collapsing in failure.—Editor of The Christian World, London.

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.—Romans 13: 1.

The habit of looking on the bright side of things is worth more than a thousand pounds a year.—Samuel Johnson.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs Speaks to Indians

On July 7, John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressed a body of Navajo Indian students who had returned to their tribe from schools in which they had received training in higher education.

Consistent with his program for the development of the American Indian, Mr. Collier said, among other things, that the Navajo Indians have it within their power to determine the future of their people because they have been brought into intimate relationship with that knowledge which is the casual social force of the modern world.

After stating that he had listened with interest to a tribal discussion of their problems; how the Navajo Tribe can win a future for itself on its land through the application of technical knowledge and other learning its students have brought to it, he continued:

"You are members of one of the great branches of the human race. Your people, your ancestors, those whose blood flows in your brains and limbs, whose language you still speak and whose souls live on in you; this Indian race for ten thousand years, perhaps twenty thousand years, has lived on this western continent; has maintained a struggle with all of the elements of nature, has loved this land, and has built up through these ages of time great institutions, great loyalties, great creeds and splendors of life. Your Indian race is one of the world races alongside the other races that have made history and that are yet to make history. You are young people born of that race."

He reminded his audience with encouraging words that it has been only a few hundred years since the so-called White race began to acquire knowledge through systematic investigation, called the scientific approach to problems of life. But in looking back into the ages that have passed the speaker told them that nearly everything that makes the White Man interesting, implants in him nobility of mind and gives him that background for every lofty thought he possesses, came to him from that prescientific era. "All of our grander ideals," said he, "came out of that earlier time when we were as your parents are; all of our religion came out of that remote past; everything that makes us good or beautiful, everything really dear to us, came out of that remote past of our own.

"It is the same way with you. Your past has made whatever part of you that has a present value; and your future can only be your unforgotten, native past living on—living on, and achieving victory in the future world. And you are going to find as you grow older that the things of your own people that have come down out of the ages into the Navajo or Indian life will become more dear to you in the measure that you become conscious of what you really and significantly are. And furthermore, you who may go out in the wide world, and who may read the modern books, and who may place yourselves within the modern world current, and who may come into contact with the ideas that are shaking the world today—you are going to find that the most enlightened of the white people you meet are exactly the ones most appreciative of the background and the breadth and depth and spiritual greatness of your Indian ancestors—of the Indian who lives in you."

Then, addressing the Navajo Indians as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and not as an individual, Mr. Collier said that the government policy toward Indian life and education—so far as he is entitled to state it—looks in two directions: Education conducted in the English language and "in terms of the point of view and the standards and hopes of the great American nation—to every Indian who can be reached." Along with education the purpose is to bring within the reach of the Indian the modern conveniences to the end that he "may successfully live his own life at home amid his own people."

Dwelling upon the material and spiritual problems of Indian life, the Commissioner declared: "Even as you young people can influence the material future of your people, so you can—indeed, you must and will—influence the spiritual future. The soul in peoples is deep, quiet and old—quiet and old like the earth to which it is the blood brother. Yet in this soul there is that which gropes and leaps always toward the new, the unknown, the future hope.

"Your problem—the problem of each one of you Navajo boys and girls—is the same in kind as that of every white person . . . who is trying to truly live. Your spiritual perplexity, your inner conflict, your problem, is the world's problem. You and your Navajo race are not alone.

"Both goals you can achieve and must achieve," said he. But, "should you turn away in scorn or shame from your Indian heritage, the effect will be a lowering of the level of life of your own people—a throwing away of that which alone can make you as individuals powerful or interesting—and a canceling out from the future American civilization of great elements which the Indian—the Navajo—has to contribute to that future civilization.

"You must—you can—as Indians take to yourselves the heritage of universal man—the gift of the modern world. You must—you can—use that new heritage to save your own native hope. Even as the white man must be faithful to his own, so you must be." (From the Scottish Rite News Bureau.) law of the church already provides a spiritual control of material things through the Bishopric? And is it not easy to see how unanimous recognition of the law of tithing, by starting with the filing of the inventory will effectively pool the material wealth of each community? This is something that can be done by each one of us now.

Let me emphasize that last thought. It can be done now. It can be done by each one. Therefore the plan for the solution of this problem is in our hands right now. We can look forward to job insurance in Zion by first solving as many of our own problems at home as we can. When those who realize fully that the security they are looking for rests in their own hands, gather to Zion, it will be a success for the simple reason that the dominating thought of each one will be "What can I do, what can I put in, how can I help, etc?" We recognize, of course, that there are certain ones designated in divine law to take the first steps. Those who have the ability to do most are expected to take the lead, but after all is said and done, the solution of Zionic problems rests in individual attitude. If enough of us will do all that we can, will show by our action in obeying the law that we want to help, I have no doubt but that God will influence enough leaders to take active steps forward.

Therefore in any discussion of Zionic job insurance I can't help but feel that we must recognize first principles first, and each one of us must be willing to put the responsibility where it belongs, on self. That is the starting point. If we do our part, God will give the increase.

President Wilson spoke of "making the world safe for democracy," and Mr. Baldwin speaks of "making democracy safe for the world." Highly desirable objects, both of them beyond doubt. But there is a third which is equally important and at the moment even more urgent. This is to make statesmen safe for both the world and democracy.

Democracy is getting it in the neck all the time, if so vulgar an expression may be permitted. Every statesman all over Europe who has made a mess of anything says that democracy is to blame. Every dictator, white or red, flings a jibe at democracy. And yet, after all, what has democracy been doing in these last years except to suffer patiently and helplessly the blundering experiments of men who pride themselves on being statesmen?—J. A. Spender, distinguished British publicist, in the London Daily News and Westminster Gazette.

Prayer and Testimony

The Testimony of David

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried in the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."—Psalm 46: 1-3.

The Privilege of Prayer

By a Shut-in

I often think of it—whether we be in health and strength, in illness and weakness, whether we be rich or poor in temporal things, whether we be at work or at leisure, whether we be abroad or at home, we always have the rare privilege of talking with our heavenly Father through prayer.

Experience has taught me that prayer is more than a seeking for God in time of stress and great need. It can be made a constant and beautiful means of communication with Him who loves us, who is merciful and all-helpful.

Prayer has wrought wonderful things for mankind. Scarcely one of us but can relate one or more incidents of blessing through prayer. The good books teach us to pray. It is a consolation in time of trouble, a blessing in time of loneliness, a privilege alway. Prayer is the means through which we in our earthliness may reach up and partake of the divine, the infinite.

Jesus prayed and he taught his disciples to pray. We have his glorious promise: "I will pray the Father for you." He also taught that we must have faith, belief and forgiveness when we pray. He said upon one occasion: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses." (Read Mark 11: 22-26.)

There are numerous passages on prayer in the Bible and the Book of Mormon which are most instructive and of much comfort to the reader. Sometimes, because we cannot see the immediate answer to our prayers, we are disappointed, and allow ourselves to grow bitter and cynical, but we must remember that many times we ask amiss, ask for the things which the Father knows we should not have. He knows what is best for his children, just as an earthly parent knows what is good for his little child.

The privilege of prayer is extended to us at all times. Our Savior told his disciples: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. Was it not so with those who followed him? Is it not so with us today? Should we not learn to pray—and do it often?

Here is a prayer poem which I love. It was written by the poet, James Whitcomb Riley, and has been set to music:

"Prayer Perfect

"Dear Lord! Kind Lord!
Gracious Lord, I pray,
Thou wilt look on all I love,
Tenderly today!
Weed their hearts of weariness,
Scatter every care
Down a wake of angel-wings
Winnowing the air.

"Bring unto the sorrowing
All release from pain;
Let the lips of laughter
Overflow again;
And with all the needy
O divide, I pray,
This vast treasure of content
That is mine today!"

List of Old Subscribers Continues to Grow

Mrs. R. C. Nuckles, of Edmonton, Canada, has been a member of the church fifty-six years during which period she has missed only a few years taking the Herald.

Mrs. Anna Crosley, of Springfield, South Dakota, has been a Herald subscriber since 1903, and has not missed a single copy.

N. E. Auston, of Condon, Oregon, was baptized in 1897, and began taking the Herald soon thereafter. He has been a constant reader of this and other church publications—Autumn Leaves, Ensign, the Sunday school papers, and numerous church books and tracts.

Mrs. Eveline Burgess, of Saint Louis, Missouri, has had the Herald in her home constantly since 1868. She also took Zion's Ensign and Autumn Leaves during the years they were published, and is a reader of the Sunday school papers.

Mrs. Maude L. Wood, of Somerville, Massachusetts, has taken the Herald for more than forty years. She was a subscriber before her marriage. She also took Ensign and Autumn Leaves until they merged with the Herald. "I like the new Herald very much indeed," she declares. "Mother and I read it together and follow with interest the letters from different branches, and rejoice at the good news contained therein."

Ask Prayers

Edna M. McLean, of Freeland, Michigan, seeks the prayers of the church in behalf of her uncle, James Barr, a member of Whittemore Branch, who three years ago suffered a stroke and has been unable to work. His left arm is helpless, but his niece believes that he will be blessed and helped through the fasting and prayers of the Saints. She also asks prayers for her own family.

Sister David Day, of Middletown, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Saints for her granddaughter, Patti Ann Brent, of Fort Bragg, North Carolina. She has had an affliction of one leg since three months old. She is now six years old. She was blessed when a baby by the elders; also administered to while visiting Middletown two years ago. At that time she received a wonderful blessing from the Lord, making her physical condition normal except her leg. Every specialist that has examined her has said that the correction of this member would require a serious operation and would not promise satisfactory results. Her people feel confident that the Lord will hear the prayers of the faithful Saints and will heal her.

Mrs. Emma Palmer, of Athens, Ohio, desires the prayers of the Saints for her mother, Mrs. Lottie Wade, that her eyesight may be improved so that she may read the Herald.

"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." Here it is said, in a prophecy that the Pope will change the Sabbath, but it is only an assertion that the Sabbath is referred to. We have previously shown that the Sunday observance began before the Pope was recognized as "the head of the churches." The Adventists themselves claim that the papacy was not established until 538 A. D., and at another time have contended that the act of Constantine in 321, and the action of the council of Loadicea, 364 A. D., were occasions when the Pope was responsible for changing the Sabbath. The claim that the Sabbath or whatever times he was to change was given into his hand from 538 until 1798, making the twelve hundred and sixty days, or years as they interpret "time, times, and the dividing of time."

If they were given into his hand, and the Sabbath is the principal thing referred to they should be able to show that when the time ended in 1798, they were taken out of his hand; but no such evidence is extant. The Adventists did not raise their protest until 1844. Unless they can show that an authoritative power took the Sabbath out of his hand at the end of their time limit (1798) their argument is worthless; and since the authority of the Catholic church regarding the Sabbath continued (as much as ever) over the world for years after that time, their argument is worthless, and the position is untenable. Was the Sabbath the only change in times and laws made by the Catholic church? In the Historic Notebook, by the Reverend E. C. Brewer, (Copied from A Marvelous Work and a Wonder.) we have the following with dates given more accurately than any date claimed for the change of the Sabbath.

A. D. 200, Prayers for the dead began.

A. D. 251, Paul the first hermit.

A. D. 325, Celibacy of the clergy recommended.

A. D. 360, Adoration of Saints, Martyrs, and Angels.

A. D. 375, Christmas day appointed as a religious festival.

A. D. 390, Bells used in churches.

A. D. 431, Mary called the Mother of God.

A. D. 487, Sprinkling of ashes in Lent. (Felix III.)

A. D. 500, Priests began to wear distinctive dress.

A. D. 596, Stone altars enjoined.

A. D. 525, Extreme unction introduced by Felix IV.

A. D. 547, Lenten fast extended to forty days (Council of Orleans) Historic Notebook, Philadelphia, 1901. Here we have changes made in times and laws that would fulfill the prophecy of Daniel 7: 25 more fully than to the alleged change of the Sabbath. As to the changes made in times and laws referring to the Decalogue, it was never given to the Roman nation as a law; but the law of the gospel of Jesus Christ being given to all the world would include Rome; therefore it would be the law that the "beast" would change. The dominant church did change the order of church organization, claimed infallibility for its decisions, introduced images, worship of angels and Saints, established holy and feast days, changed the form of baptism, for all of which no authority can be found in either the old or new testaments.

Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." (John 18: 36.) When the Lombards overran Rome and destroyed the last remnant of the Empire (568-570 A. D.), the Pope began to assume civil power, which made it possible for him to "wear out the saints." About 570 and afterwards the Pope, being invested with the power to use the civil arm of the nation, began to use it as a means of persecution. It was no longer the kingdom of Jesus Christ; but sought and obtained protection from the civil authorities and persecuted to death all that opposed it. From that time on the Roman church began to assume worldly power entirely at variance with the teachings of Jesus Christ. An age of darkness followed, the extent of which is partially shown by the action of the council of Toulouse, 1229 A. D. (See Smith's Ecclesiastical History, volume 1, page 622.)

"An ecclesiastical council met at Toulouse to devise a more subtle and permanent machinery for the extirpation of the heresy which was still unsubdued. It enacted forty-five canons for the extinction of heresy and the establishing of peace, in the sense of the ruling powers. The laity were, for the first time, forbidden to possess the books of the old and new testaments (except perchance the psalter and passages contained in books of devotion), with most stringent prohibition of their possession in a vernacular translation, and this was soon made a presumptive test of heresy. No heretic or person suspected of heresy . . . was to practice as a physician nor to approach the sick or dying; and all wills were to be made in the presence of a priest. . . . Whosoever was convicted of harboring a heretic forfeited his land to his lord and was reduced to personal slavery."

These were not changes of the Decalogue, but were changes of the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles, as recorded in the New Testament. The tendency to observe days and times was censured by the Apostle Paul as follows: "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." (Galatians 4: 10, 11.) "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days." (Colossians 2: 16.) From the above it is seen that the Apostle Paul criticised the Galatians for doing just what the Catholic church has done, and what the Adventists are doing now. And his advice to the Colossians would not permit either Jews, Catholics, or Adventists to sit in judgment over others in these things.

In spite of the above the Adventists do judge all who keep the first day of the week, believing that it was adopted in the day of the apostles. They insist that the part of the national law given to Israel "regarding the sabbath" is binding, without a single definite text to show that Jesus Christ or any of his apostles ever required any Gentile converts to observe it. There is not a plain "thus saith the Lord" from Genesis 1 to Exodus 16 to prove that any of those patriarchs who were so close to God kept the seventh day; but they assert that it was kept by them, in spite of the fact that Moses says that "God did not make that covenant with them."

Another favorite text from the old testament is: "Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." (Exodus 31: 16, 17.)

That this refers exclusively to the children of Israel is apparent from the fact that they are definitely mentioned twice in the text. But they tell us that it was a perpetual covenant, therefore would always be in force. Well if that is true the previous verse which positively commands that if . . . "Whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death," coming from the same authority and in the same chapter would also still be in force. If it is argued that the word "perpetual" would make it a law for all time to all people, it would prove entirely too much. Here, for example:

"And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them: and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute." (Exodus 29: 9.) Now if the word perpetual in one instance would bind people in all time to come to follow the instruction given. So why do not the Adventists secure the sons of Aaron and put girdles and bonnets on them and have them serve as priests, because this is a perpetual statute? From the same viewpoint notice the following: "And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it, a perpetual incense before the Lord throughout your generations." (Exodus 30: 8.) This is the offering of Aaron and his sons, which they shall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed, the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night. . . ." (Leviticus 6: 20.) "And it shall be Aaron's and his son's; and they shall eat it in the holy place, for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire by a perpetual statute." (Leviticus 24: 9.)

These texts are as much directed to the Christians as Exodus 31: 16, 17. It states "The children of Israel" shall keep the sabbath . . . throughout their (children of Israel's) generations . . . a sign between me and the children of Israel" (not Christians). Now if because this is spoken of as being a perpetual covenant, it must be everlasting, the word perpetual in the other texts would be the same and all Christians would have to believe that the burning of incense, meat offerings, and offerings made by fire would be equally binding because they too were perpetual. Again no law is of any more force than the prescribed punishment for its violation. Therefore since Exodus 31: 14, 15 commands the death penalty to anyone who does "any work" on the Sabbath day "he shall surely be put to death," the God who gave the law, also specified the punishment, and we challenge anyone to show from the Bible a plain "thus saith the Lord" abrogating it.

We have previously quoted from the latest edition of The Question Box, by Conway, an accepted Catholic authority, which says, page 410: "The apostles . . . mitigated in great measure the severity of the Jewish law, abolishing for example, the death penalty, Exodus 31: 15, and certain prohibitions, Exodus 35: 3." In Numbers 15: 32-35 we are told that God commanded that the man who was found gathering sticks on the Sabbath day should be put to death. Nowhere has God abrogated that penalty to the Israelite nation, so if the law is in force to us today, so also would be the penalty. "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulcher." (Matthew 28: 1.) This only proves that the Sabbath was kept up to the time of the resurrection of Christ, which it is unnecessary for us to deny, as it has no bearing on the question. "And he said unto them the sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath." (Mark 2: 27.) This contradicts the teaching of Mrs. E. G. White where speaking of the Decalogue she says: "In this bold plan Satan strikes directly against the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth." (Early Writings, page 215.) "The sabbath was instituted in Eden before the fall, and was observed by Adam and Eve, and all the heavenly host. God rested on the seventh day, and blessed and hallowed it, I saw that the sabbath never will be done away; but that the redeemed saints, and all the angelic host, will observe it in honor of the Great Creator to all eternity." (Ibid., page 217.) So, she claims that what Jesus said, was made for man, was the foundation of God's government in heaven, as well as on earth, and that the angelic host will keep the day throughout eternity. Out of this idea grows the idea that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, and that the host of heaven are keeping it; that if we keep any other day we are profaning the Sabbath that is being kept in heaven. But there are difficulties in applying this theory. Let us notice some of them. It is absolutely impossible for all to keep the same Sabbath and all beginning at sunset, on a round earth. The sun sets in Australia eighteen hours before it does here on the Pacific coast. If the heavenly host begin their Sabbath with the Australians we here violate it for three fourths of the day. Which of us is keeping the Sabbath of the Lord? Evidently all cannot. The Jews counted time from even to even in Palestine, but since then by international agreement the world counts time from one hundred and sixty degrees west of Greenwich, England. By the change of that line the day has been changed in all countries west of Palestine and east of the line from where the day is counted. If the hosts of heaven are keeping the Sabbath beginning at even in Palestine we here would be working while they are resting. On one side of the line from where the days are counted what would be Saturday would be Sunday on the other, or if on the other side it would be Friday. To be sure that the Sabbath of the seventh day of creation is being kept it would be necessary to prove the following:

1. To locate where Eden was, which is unknown.
2. To prove positively that dates have been correctly kept ever since.

From Hurlbut's Teachers Training Lessons, page 16, 17, I read: "The chronology of the Bible is not a matter of divine revelation, and scholars are not agreed with respect to dates of early Scripture history, the system of chronology commonly found in reference Bibles is that of Archbishop Usher, who lived 1580-1656, long before the modern period of investigation in Bible lands. Usher's dates of events earlier than the captivity in Babylon, B. C. 587, are now mostly discarded by scholars. . . . It is now believed that from Adam to Christ was much longer than four thousand years."

Adventists tell us that God set the right time when he gave the law to Israel, but leading scholars do not agree that time was kept correctly before the Babylonian captivity, 587 B. C.

Adventists tell us that all true Christians being Christ's are of Israel: therefore the Sabbath given to Israel would be binding on them. Well if this is true why not require circumcision, as that was a law to Israel? O! but they answer: Paul says, "For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love." (Galatians 5: 6.) "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." (Galatians 6: 15.) Very well, let us see what the same writer says about the Sabbath: "And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it: Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days." (Colossians 2: 15, 16.)

That the Sabbath is referred to notice he mentions specifically, in meat, in drink, respecting an holy day, new moons, and the Sabbath days. The word "days" is in italics showing that it was not in the original, but was supplied by the translators. Therefore, the original would read or the Sabbath. The Douay translation reads "Or the Sabbaths." The Emphatic Diaglott renders the text: "Let no one therefore rule you in food, or in drink, or in respect of a festival, or of a new moon, or of sabbaths." (Colossians 2: 16.)

The evidence is overwhelming that the Sabbaths here refer to the Sabbath of the Jews; and it is listed with other ordinances which according to verse 14, same chapter, Christ took out of the way.

It is argued that because the Sabbath was given to the Israelites before the other Ten Commandments were given, proves that it had been in force from the beginning; but it proves nothing of the kind. Adventists quote from Exodus as follows:

"Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no. And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily." (Exodus 16: 4, 5.) "And it came to pass that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: . . . And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, Tomorrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord." (Exodus 16: 22, 23.)

In a footnote in Bible Readings I read: "Thus we see that the sabbath commandment was a part of God's law before the Law was spoken from Sinai; for this incident occurred in the wilderness of sin before the children of Israel came to Sinai, where the law was given. Both the sabbath and the law existed from creation."

QUESTION TIME

If one restored to life remembers nothing of his death state, does it disprove immortality?

To recall nothing of one's state in death would no more disprove consciousness after death than it would to remember nothing of one's state while in sleep, which is often the case. Memory is dependent upon the coordination of certain physical functions with the intellect. Both in sound sleep and in death these physical functions are likely to completely cease, hence no memory of them is possible from any natural cause. Physically they did not exist in such cases, and when one is returned to a physical world of activity his powers are limited by physical laws again. In the dream state the physical functions do not completely cease, and the result is memory of certain things, more or less distorted by imperfect functioning.

These observations concern only the normal operation of natural law as we observe its operation? We actually know very little of the meaning or scope of life, or of the laws that may exist to govern life experiences. How Jesus and various other Bible characters were able to see angels, hear messages, perform miracles, and become at times apparently immune from the ordinary operation of physical laws, is not known to us scientifically, hence we ascribe such things to the power of God. This is equivalent to saying that God knows laws and powers that may be brought into operation which are outside of our knowledge. The veil that lies between the spiritual forces and the physical world has never been lifted by human knowledge, so far as we have ever learned.

What is the difference between a stake and a district?

A stake possesses a more complete organization than a district, and therefore should be able to accomplish more through work or more advanced work among those concerned. Districts are not all equally well organized, as some lack a bishopric and other officials that an organized stake has. A stake high council functions in each of the stakes, but not in a district. Some districts also do not have a complete presidency, which is required in a fully organized stake. Due in part to its organized relationship, and in part to its location near the center place, a stake is designed to supplement the building up of the Zionic program more directly than is practicable among districts, though all may have the same ideals and ultimate objectives.

With more complete organization, the stake is in a position to function better in dealing with internal problems, and provision is made in the church law for official decisions on relevant matters which may be referred to its high council. Such decisions have a recognized authority, as compared with other councils, which is specifically limited by the laws governing.

Why does 1 Samuel 16: 15 say an evil spirit from the Lord troubled Saul?

Saul had transgressed the commands of God and had permitted envy and jealousy against David to dominate him. Thus he became unfit to retain the Spirit of the Lord, which departed from him. It would appear from the Inspired Version that the phrase referred to by the questioner is not correct. As given in that translation it reads as follows:

"But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit which was not of the Lord troubled him."—1 Samuel 16: 14.

What does Revelation 13: 17 mean concerning the mark of the beast?

Translations differ somewhat in rendering this passage. The majority appear to show that the mark is the name of the beast, and this is the rendering of the Revised Version. The most commonly received Protestant version of the language used is, that the first beast was the Roman power, which was destroyed, and that the second beast was the papal power, which arose over the Roman downfall and exercised secular power as well as spiritual. Some claim that the number 666 is made up of the Greek name Lateinos, supposed founder of Rome, each letter standing for numerals and having the same value in Rumiit, Hebrew name of Rome.

Review Spring and Summer Events

When spring came this year Oshoto Branch was rather discouraged and small. Brother Horace Hartshorn seldom missed a Sunday during the winter, and kept the local going. When school was out several of the local young people returned home, and attendance became normal.

The Easter program was the first event of spring. It was largely a musical entertainment with a pantomime, "The Easter Lily," by the little children; a dialogue, "The Two Crosses"; a violin prelude, and several solos and duets. Attendance was the largest of the early spring.

On Mother's Day the program consisted of musical numbers, a sermonet, "Mother Love," and a poem, "My Mother," written by Mrs. Ida McKim and read by her son, Franklin.

The Temple Builders were in charge of the Children's Day program, which took the form of a radio playlet. This was written by one of the girls. The entertainment was short a few numbers since Nadine Redding, a Temple Builder, had undergone an appendicitis operation the day before. She is now fully recovered and attending church again.

Mrs. Tom Grey had the misfortune to break her right arm early in the spring and was greatly missed from services. She is supervisor of the children's department.

The speakers of the summer have been Horace Hartshorn and Fayette Cole.

Sunday, August 13, the young people's class conducted a round-table service, the topic for discussion being a problem presented in the last lesson of the young people's quarterly for this quarter, "How Can We Evaluate Ourselves in the Light of the Call of the Church?" In the near future the adult class will conduct a like service.

One Sunday later the Sunday school, led by Brother Horace Hartshorn, enjoyed a picnic and services as the guests of the New Haven Baptist Rally Day services. The Reverend Charlton, Baptist pastor at Hulett, Wyoming, gave the address. Following the dinner a program was given by the combined Sunday schools.

A few Sundays ago the Saints were pleased to have present Elder Fred Cousins' family and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Cousins and their infant son. Mrs. Cousins before her marriage was Miss Thelma Louise Dillon. Other visitors also have been present at church services during the summer.

Southern California Reunion an Outstanding Experience

Season of Zionic Living—Inspiration —Growth

The Southern California district reunion, held at Laguna Beach, August 26 to September 3, was an outstanding experience in the lives of each one who stepped on the grounds. It was the first for four years in this district. Many expressed fears that the Saints here could not "afford" one this year, but the reunion was self-supporting. No one was taxed financially, and the gathering has again shown the Saints that spiritual riches come to those who earnestly seek and prepare for them.

Into the quiet little eucalyptus grove were squeezed more than one hundred tents and cabins, in addition to the general assembly tents. The overflow of visitors was housed as near by as the members could locate. The Saints had a real opportunity to live close together in brotherly love. They had a foretaste of what a Zionic community might be like.

The committee in active charge was composed of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Arthur Oakman, missionary to Northern California, and D. B. Sorden, pastor of the Los Angeles Branch, general church appointees, together with District President W. A. Teagarden, L. L. Sutherland, district superintendent of religious education, and District Bishop Dave Carmichael.

The first day of the reunion marked the advent of many Saints and on Sunday, there were more than five hundred present. This meant a lot of work for Brother Carmichael in getting accommodations, but he and his crew managed to get everyone established.

Brother Oakman preached the opening sermon, which set a high mark for the following days. In his classes Brother Oakman took up an analysis of the doctrines of the church and their place in the lives of our youth as well as older members. He met with an enthusiastic response from the splendid group of young people. And in the adult classes on worship, which he conducted, many times the group were so thoroughly imbued with the desire for a more perfect form of worship, that they enjoyed a season of worship in the class.

Brother Sorden's adult class was specially concerned with various phases of the religious education program. The relation of evangelism, stewardship and worship to the church program was considered on succeeding days. Brother Sorden pointed out the need of training and methods in the preparing of a teacher. He particularly stressed that the teacher must take to himself the word as found in Ezra 7: 10, "Ezra had prepared his heart to learn the law of the Lord and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." The need of learning and doing and then teaching was the order of importance.

In his young people's class, he strove to increase and stabilize the faith of the young people in the power of God, acting in the lives of modern men and women.

Fine groups attended all classes. More than fifty earned certificates through consistent attendance. The daily average for total class membership was around one hundred.

The teachers and other leaders mentioned many times how much they were lifted up in their work by the eager spirit of learning present, and by the willing spirit of cooperation expressed by all, even to the most humble duties of preparing the tents for classes, bringing extra chairs, etc.

Brother Sutherland was here, there and everywhere in the course of his work as the director of religious education for the district. He also planned the recreational programs as well as the morning hike of the young people which culminated in a spirited prayer meeting on a hilltop. One evening there was a wiener roast down on the beach; several evenings there were general camp fire assemblies; the East Side Los Angeles Church put on a minstrel show. One evening was given over to a Graceland program and a play by the X-L Club of Long Beach, "One of the Nine."

Sisters Sorden and Sutherland directed the work of the children. Each morning at ten o'clock the juniors met for church service and at eleven, they separated into classes for handwork. About forty junior children gathered each morning during the week, and Sister Sutherland took care of fifteen to twenty in her kindergarten work. Brother Arthur Diefendorf took charge of the boys for their handwork. The youngsters experienced the same spirit of friendliness and spiritual kinship that the older members were enjoying in the adult meetings.

In recording the events of that inspired reunion period, the work of many people comes to mind. The district chorister, Sister Stella Hodges, and her devoted group of musicians, contributed a large share to the beauty of the meetings; the Joseph Farley family, of Santa Ana, operated a stand as a stewardship which supplied the Saints with staples and cooked food in quantity; the inspiring presence of the pioneer church member in this district, Brother Frank Van Fleet, and his continued testimony of the truthfulness of the work; the Gleazer family, each one a valuable help; Brother Teagarden's patient attendance to the details of administration. The list would need to include all present, because each one by his cheerful willingness to fit in, made his contribution to the beautiful times they enjoyed.

In an orderly and harmonious session, the annual district business meeting was held on the closing Saturday afternoon. New officers were elected, which in most cases were reelections. Plans were laid for the activity of next year, and a reunion was made a definite part of them.

Apostle Gleazer's series of sermons seemed to set the theme for the reunion. His thoughts were reiterated in both the adult and young people's prayer meetings.

The high point of the reunion was attained at the sacrament service on Sunday morning. The Saints were asked to come fasting, and to gather early and quietly for a period of meditation. The main tent was full and overflow chairs were occupied before the meeting started. Never was such a period of quiet calm enjoyed. Yet the silence was not heavy, rather it seemed that the thoughts of the people ascended in a united plea for a blessing which was so badly needed.

The priesthood, under the direction of Brother Gleazer, entered quietly, and before the serving of the emblems was consummated, the Spirit of God came into their midst. Brother Van Fleet and Sister McDole were called upon to give prayers for the assembly, and when the period of testimony was opened, two or three were on their feet all the time. Each spoke briefly, and pledged his life anew. At length, Brother Gleazer began to speak under the influence of the Spirit. He was led to rebuke, commend and comfort; and everyone was so touched that there was hardly a dry eye.

Since the day after the closing of the reunion was Labor Day, very few broke away until Monday. Even then there was much reluctance to leave the spot that had become holy.

I believe that I can render personally no greater service to the cause of peace than by trying to promote a musical and literare entente between nations.—Edouard Herriot, French Minister of Public Instruction.

Western-Central Oklahoma Reunion

Fifteen Are Baptized as Result of Highly Successful Gathering

The recent reunion of Western and Central Oklahoma districts is reported to have been one of the most successful in the history of that territory. Meetings were held in the city park, the use of which was granted free of charge, at Canton, Oklahoma. The grounds boasted shade trees, grass, water, electric lights, and some equipment for games and amusement.

Drawn by a desire to worship and serve the Lord, the Saints gathered from all parts of the two districts, and were welcomed by the mayor of Canton. During the sessions the members were endowed with spiritual blessings which prepared them to press on in carrying out the program of the church.

The Saints of Canton who labored to provide for the comfort and convenience of their visitors, are to be commended for their hospitality. Good meals were served family style at the dining hall at a regular price of twenty cents.

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, president of Western Oklahoma, was chosen to preside over the reunion, and was assisted by Elders Lee Quick and J. E. Lancaster. The principal speakers of the reunion were Patriarch F. A. Smith, Elders Lee Quick, B. A. Howard, and J. E. Lancaster.

Early each morning the young people of the camp assembled in the grandstand on the ball park for their devotional service, Brother Ernest Crownover, of Hydro, and his able assistants in charge.

At a later hour in the morning the young men and women enjoyed the excellent instruction given them by Brother Lancaster. Elder B. A. Howard's class was found in its place each morning with increasing interest. His lectures were inspiring. Nor were the juniors forgotten. They were ably cared for by Sister Ardis Crownover.

Elder Ed Dillon, president of Central District, was also present and spoke several times to the Saints.

The music department was directed by Miss Edythe Skinner, chorister of Western Oklahoma.

A part of the afternoon was given over to recreational activities, supervised by Howard C. Harpham, of Seiling. Volley ball and baseball were the most popular sports, and tournaments in these proved attractive.

Each evening at the close of the eight o'clock preaching service the campers assembled on the campus for their evening games, social and zionic songs and campus prayer.

The large tent was filled for this night preaching hour, and many listeners sat in cars to hear the sermons by Elder Lee Quick and Patriarch F. A. Smith.

Fifteen baptisms were the immediate result of the reunion, Elder Z. Z. Renfroe officiating.

The Saints received every courtesy from city officials and business men, and were extended the invitation to return to Canton for their next reunion.

Graceland College Begins Thirty-Seventh Year

Freshman Enrollment Thirty-five Per Cent Higher Than Last Year

The doors of Graceland College swung open September 8 for the thirty-seventh consecutive year. John Garver, Graceland alumnus, represented the College Board of Trustees in welcoming the new students. It was his thirty-third attendance at the opening of the institution.

Freshman enrollment increased thirty-five per cent over that of last year. This heavy increase is due to the fact that alert young people everywhere are discovering that Graceland is receiving national recognition for the high standard of instruction it offers and its ability to keep abreast of modern trends in higher education. Students from all sections of the United States and from Canada arrived on Graceland's campus, thus placing Graceland in the unique and enviable position of being one of the most cosmopolitan colleges in the nation.

Mae Clark Warren returns this fall as dean of women and head of the home economics department. She spent the summer doing graduate work at the Iowa State College. Professor A. R. Gilbert, director of student personnel and professor of psychology, has returned to the college hill after spending a year on his doctorate at the University of Columbia, New York City. Dean Gilbert will soon receive the doctor of philosophy degree in education.

Miss Gladys Marie Hays, assumes the position of college librarian and instructor in European history. Miss Hays is a graduate of the Library School of the University of Wisconsin and of Grinnell College where she was a member of the library staff.

Miss Vida E. Butterworth, graduate of the Independence Sanitarium, has received the appointment as college nurse, and has enrolled in special classes preparatory to her enrollment in the Teachers College of the University of Columbia, of New York City, where she plans to receive a degree in nursing.

B. A. May, head of the business administration department, spent his sixth summer as special agent of the United States Department of Labor. This summer his work was in Colorado, Washington, California, Nevada, and Nebraska, where he mobilized local employment for local jobs, and sponsored the adoption of agreements for the hiring of American citizens to prevent the flow of migratory labor from the Mexican border.

The Graceland radio broadcast, which was so popular last spring, will be continued throughout the school year at 5 p. m. on the first Sunday of each month over KMBC. Dean A. R. Gilbert will be the speaker October 1. His subject will be "Parenting the College Student," and a program of music by Graceland students and alumni will complete the half-hour broadcasting period.

Cooperation and Inspiration Mark Kirtland Reunion

Three Leading Church Quorums Represented

The late Kirtland reunion (August 10 to 20), was a great spiritual success. There was a large attendance notwithstanding the widespread economic depression, and it was delightful to see so many young people present. They took an active part in the reunion program. The older people appreciated the young for their cooperation, their conduct, and the interest they showed in class work, prayer meetings, and preaching services. Both the old and the young enjoyed each other's society under the influence of the Holy Spirit. They will not soon forget the spiritual feast they enjoyed in the house of the Lord during the ten days they sojourned in and around the Temple. If that same divine power which was enjoyed during the reunion, continues with the Saints, Zion will soon be a reality.

It is hoped that the young people will come to reunion again next year, for we who are older appreciate their smiling faces and will welcome them. Always remember that the old cannot get along without the young, nor can the young make great headway without the older members. Let us continue to sing the words, "God is calling now to battle both the aged and the youth."

The last few days of the reunion were blessed with the presence of President F. M. Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry. Their sermons were of high order and educational. All the sermons of the reunion were of the same type, seasoned by the divine Spirit.

The reunion committee was kept busy caring for the visitors and looking after the welfare of the entire group. It is a great task to keep everything moving smoothly, and these workers deserve much credit for their faithful help.

The Saints were grateful for the lovely weather, for the protection afforded all who came to the reunion, and, especially, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit which was showered upon them from the first prayer offered until the reunion benediction.

Soon after the adjournment, Sister Elizabeth Squires, of Brooklyn, New York, passed away at her daughter's home at Kirtland. She had been a member of the church almost eighty years; had she lived until December 11, she would have been eighty-eight years of age. Her husband, Joseph Squires, preceded her in death seven years. Sister Squires attended most of the Kirtland reunion and at the sacrament service prior to the convening of the reunion, bore a wonderful testimony to the divinity of the latter-day work. She was granted the desire of her heart; she had prayed earnestly that the Lord would allow her to return to Kirtland to die. She was ill only a few days. Sister Squires was a woman loved by many, a pillar in the branches where she lived. She will be greatly missed by her sons and daughters, Joseph, Ephraim, Mrs. Ellen White, and Mrs. W. A. Hawn.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Many Summer Visitors to Historic City

That Nauvoo, beloved by the Reorganized Church, is also dear to the hearts of the people of Utah, has been evidenced by the hundreds that have visited this historic spot on their way to and from the World's Fair. The monument marking the birthplace of the National Women's Relief Society, has also been a drawing card, and has afforded an opportunity to local Saints to present to them, the true story of the Reorganization. It has been an arduous task for Brother and Sister Page, caretakers of the church property, but joy and satisfaction have come to them as they presented the claims of this people.

The dedication of the monument was a memorable event. A splendid demonstration of hospitality and appreciation of this monument was given by the town, under the direction of the Nauvoo Unity Club. The town band met the delegation from Utah at the ferry landing, where they were welcomed by the mayor, president of the club, and others of the reception committee, and escorted to the grounds by six American Legion boys carrying flags. There a large welcome sign was stretched across the street. A splendid program was provided by the Utah visitors, under the direction of Louise Yates Robison, president of the National Women's Relief Society. A letter was read from Governor Horner expressing his regret that he was unable to be present and paying a fine tribute to the ladies of the Relief Society. The Honorable W. D. Chenery, the governor's representative, was one of the speakers, as was also President F. M. Smith, of Independence. At noon, a chicken dinner was served in the Nauvoo House by the women of the branch and in the afternoon a procession of forty-five cars, provided by the Unity Club, wended its way to Carthage. On their return, supper was served on the lawn of the Nauvoo House, just as the sun was setting. The beautiful scene, overlooking the Mississippi, was one long to be remembered. So enthusiastic were the visitors when they returned to their home in the West, that another excursion was arranged for their friends under the leadership of Mrs. Veda Clossen, of Salt Lake City. They arrived August 27. A chicken dinner was again provided by the women of the branch, also supper in the evening for which the visitors expressed sincere appreciation.

The arrival of the Young People's Camp is always a pleasing event. The first Sunday, previous to the opening, several of the visiting young people provided the evening program, and Brother Page related for their entertainment, several interesting experiences he had had with visitors to the Mansion House. On Monday evening, the young people of the branch gave a reception for all the members of the camp, on the lawn of the Lewis home. Games were played and an amusing stunt called "The Fatal Quest," was put on by the Lewis family and a "mind reading" performance by the Ourth twins, after which cookies and punch were served. The second Sunday, the camp attended church in a body and Roy Cheville was the speaker. In the evening, the camp presented a pageant, "The Story of Nauvoo," at the tourist park, which was enjoyed by a large audience.

Nauvoo reunion was one long to be remembered. It was a great privilege to have here Elder and Sister Richard Baldwin. District President F. T. Mussell, under divine inspiration, urged the Saints to make Nauvoo "A Spiritual Health Resort." Many who have visited this place testify that they feel a spirit here that is found nowhere else, and go away with their spiritual life renewed and strengthened.

There were two baptisms following the Children's Day program on Sunday morning, Bobby Boze and Beulah Fisher and during the reunion Mabel Henderson was baptized. The children made a splendid demonstration of their efficiency when given full charge of the worship service on Children's Day.

Several young people attended the Youth's Conference at Lamoni and returned with broadened visions. They have taken an active part in all the services throughout the summer and have enjoyed several early morning prayer meetings. On the fourth of July, they took an early morning hike and cooked their breakfast in David's Chamber. Last Sunday evening they gave a short play, "The Gift," by Marie A. Foley, under the direction of Roberta Lewis. Now that the summer season is over, Nauvoo young people have scattered far and wide. Irene Layton returned to Independence; Bertram Lewis to New York; Roberta Lewis to Boston; Jack Sanford to Graceland; Mary Lee to the University of Iowa, and Eudora Garrett to Western Illinois State Teachers' College. The branch misses their association and looks forward to their return.

Argentine Church

The special meetings conducted by Missionary J. Charles May continue with good interest.

Clitherall, Minnesota

Union Branch

The past year has been the most profitable one for this branch for some time.

Apostle J. F. Curtis, a visitor last October, baptized twelve people. At his visit last June, he baptized eight more. Pastor Lester Whiting brought in four new members at Richville, partly as the result of a funeral sermon he preached there some months ago.

Attendance at the services is good, and several nonmembers are showing interest.

The women's department was organized last May with Mrs. Herman Stabnow, president; Mrs. Carl Christianson, vice president; Mrs. John Baldwin, secretary; Alta Kimber, treasurer. An ice cream social was held in August, and twenty of the new hymnbooks were purchased with the proceeds. A bazaar is being planned to take place later in the fall.

Among the young people going to school is Elon Tucker, who is attending Graceland. Others are attending the local high school.

Recent speakers at this branch have been Lester Whiting, Frank Tucker and Birch Whiting. The services, both prayer and preaching, have been of high order.

The Mother's Day service was especially impressive. Sister Rose Cooper, who was present, held the highest honor of the day. She was accompanied by her daughter, her grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

The branch has lost by death two faithful members, Roseltha Albertson, who died in May, and Abner Tucker, in June.

Numerous visitors throughout the summer have contributed much to the profit and pleasure of the services.

Dallas, Texas

Elder C. W. Tischer, branch president at Houston and also president of Texas Central District, spent Sunday, September 10, visiting with the Saints in Dallas. He was accompanied by A. V. Arnold, district treasurer, also of Houston.

Brother Tischer spoke of the fine spirit of cooperation existing among the membership at Dallas, and of the splendid spirit of hospitality extended to them by the Saints at that point.

A series of missionary meetings was commenced Sunday by the members of the local priesthood in Dallas which no doubt will be the means of stimulating considerable interest among the membership and also of bringing new members into the fold.

Saginaw, Michigan

Church School Sponsors All-day Meeting

The annual business meeting was held September 11, and the following officers were elected: Branch president, E. S. White; first assistant, Carl Larson; second assistant, John D. Wade; church school director, L. E. Grice; treasurer, Adam Hunter. Pauling Brown was sustained secretary and chosen as publicity agent. Howard Zimmer was designated as janitor because the acting local deacon found it necessary to go away from the city to work.

September 10, the church school held an all-day meeting in which all, who could come from other branches, were invited to participate. The services opened with a prayer and testimony meeting in charge of Elder Hubert Case. Speakers for the day were Lewis E. Grice, of Saginaw; Sam Ash, of Midland; G. W. Burt, of Beaverton, and Sister Winnie Holburt, of Bently. Sister Mary Martin and Blanche Northrup gave a teaching demonstration. Apostle D. T. Williams, of Detroit, spoke in the evening on "Christianity and the Social Revolution."

At six-thirty in the evening the Saints again took up the study of the Book of Mormon, Brother Grice teaching the class. This study group had not met for three months, having been dismissed because of warm weather and Brother Grice's health.

Dixfield, Maine

Small Branch Well Represented at District Reunion

Dixfield is one of several branches in Western Maine District. It has a membership of about forty, a number of whom live several miles apart. Four new members have joined their ranks this year, completing one family circle.

Elder E. F. Robertson, of Stonington, held a series of meetings there the latter part of June. About two weeks ago Apostle Paul M. Hanson was there for two nights in succession, and the members were much encouraged by his short visit.

Dixfield Branch was well represented at the reunion at Brooksville, Maine, August 12 to 19. Twenty-three members and two nonmembers attended.

Two local young people have set their faces toward the West. Alice Merrill has entered the Independence Sanitarium, and Ralph Merrill Graceland College.

This branch hopes to do its part in the Harvest Home Festival at Independence to be held early in October.

Little Current All-day Meeting

Saints Gather From All Parts of Manitoulin Island

This branch was fortunate in having Elder D. B. Perkins, of Wiarton, Ontario, Canada, attend the all-day meeting September 3. Fairly good attendance came from the different branches on the island, also two carloads of Saints from Sault Sainte Marie, and a profitable day was spent.

Sunday school opened at 9 a. m. Sacrament service at ten-fifteen was in charge of H. A. Dayton, district president, and M. K. Brown.

Brother Perkins and Brother Bill Bushilla, from Sault Sainte Marie, were the speakers at the two afternoon services. The former spoke again in the evening.

Most of the young people made a splendid contribution to the day's activities by singing at the services. For one meeting the choir sang a special number, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning." Sister Mildred Miller, from the Soo, acted as pianist for the day, accompanied by four violinists from the island. At the evening service they played "The Old Rugged Cross."

After the evening service the young people spent a few hours of social get-together down at the beach, a fine spirit of fellowship prevailing.

Independence

Plans for the Harvest Home Festival, which will open two weeks from today, are being carried rapidly forward by all local departments and organizations. Among those especially interested in this event and busy in making preparation for it is the women's department, headed by Sister C. C. Koehler. Space allotments for the booths are being made to congregations and clubs in Independence as well as to districts, branches, and stakes outside of the center place.

Several hundred singers of the Harvest Festival Choir met for combined rehearsal at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, being directed by Paul N. Craig and accompanied by the Auditorium Orchestra. They came from all congregations in Independence and many surrounding points. Intensive work is being given to preparing for the concert to be given the closing day of the Harvest Festival, October 8.

The girl movements of the church in Independence are now backed by the women's department. A committee of women consisting of Mrs. C. C. Koehler, Mrs. E. G. Haberlein, Mrs. Fred O. Wilkinson, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, and Mrs. M. R. Taylor, is to supervise the girl organizations. This committee has appointed Mrs. S. A. Burgess to have general charge of the Oriole organizations, and Miss Leta B. Moriarty the Girl Scout troops. Prospects bid fair for a winter of growth in girl work in the ten Independence congregations.

Choirs and clubs are taking up their fall and winter program. Among these is the Wahdemna Choral Club which begins its eighth season with a practice tonight. This organization is a group of sixty young singers, directed by Paul N. Craig.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy addressed the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning. He spoke words of advice concerning our spiritual condition. Elder Harry L. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder A. M. Chase.

Apostle J. F. Curtis lectured on "Restoration," at the opening Sunday evening service of the Stone Church for the fall and winter. During the summer this congregation has met with other Latter Day Saint congregations at the Campus on Sunday evening.

Brother Curtis used a large chart to illustrate his different points. The Clematis Chorus, directed by Mrs. John R. Lentell, furnished the musical program, Miss Frances May Knisley singing the solos.

Some excellent prayer services have been enjoyed by the young people of the Stone Church during the past few weeks. The attendance now averages more than one hundred and includes a number of nurses in training at the Sanitarium. A good response is given to the ten-minute song service led by Brother Evan Fry which precedes the worship hour. Pastor John F. Sheehy gave the theme talk on a recent Wednesday. At another service Lynn Smith was the speaker, and twice of late Elder T. A. Beck, who is in charge of these young people's meetings, has spoken. Last Wednesday night Brother Fry took charge of the hour and talked on "Prayer." All young people of the district are invited to attend these meetings and share in the benefits to be found there.

Among those who have passed away as a result of encephalitis was Sister Amy J. Gurwell, seventy years old and wife of C. A. Gurwell, who died September 11. She is survived by her husband; a son, Frank Smith and a daughter, Mrs. Alice L. Joerndt, both by a former marriage, two grandchildren, and many friends. Private funeral services were held for her by Elder James W. Davis, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

the world, and the effect that they are having and will have on the carrying out of the church program. Preceding the sermon the choir, under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang, "Seek Ye the Lord," and the baby daughter of Brother and Sister C. G. Closson, Janet Clarice, was blessed by Pastor McDonald and Elder Howard Andersen.

Sunday evening Elder J. W. A. Bailey spoke to the Saints, and held their undivided attention through a sermon filled with missionary experiences, generously mixed with an exposition of the principles of the Latter Day Saint gospel. The choir, directed by Brother Erwin Moorman, sang "Savior, Now the Day Is Ended."

Walnut Park's representatives in the Independence Young People's Council for the coming year will be Odess Athey, Vernon Sackman, Violet Chase, and Gomer Stowell. Two of these are new to the council, Otis Athey and Vernon Sackman. They take the places of Kenneth Morford and Ruth Bryant, who have served the council during the past year as vice president and secretary respectively. These changes were made necessary by the taking over of new duties by the outgoing members.

At eight o'clock Saturday evening, September 16, Sister Ella Mae Hart and Brother Roy F. Ursenbach were married at the home of the bride's brother, Jesse M. Hart, Elder Benjamin Bean officiating. The newly married couple will make their home in the Walnut Park district.

Spring Branch Church

Last Wednesday night's service was a business meeting for this congregation, Elders W. Earl Page and J. Andes in charge.

The morning speaker on Sunday was Bishop R. T. Cooper. Appropriate music for the hour was rendered by local singers.

In the evening the first six-thirty church school session since June 1 was held, and a good crowd was present. Everyone seemed happy to resume evening class study.

Elder Leonard Lea delivered the evening's discourse.

Enoch Hill Church

Brother C. D. Smith passed away September 12. He leaves five sons: S. E. Smith, Ray V. Smith, Charles H. Smith, Don C. Smith, and Jesse E. Smith; a daughter, Mrs. Laura Lloyd, and fourteen grandchildren. Private funeral services were held for him, H. L. Barto in charge, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

At the annual election held last Wednesday evening Elder E. A. Thomas was chosen as the new pastor. Elder H. L. Barto who has acted as pastor for the past year has been chosen to work as one of the assistant pastors in Zion. J. C. Alexander was reelected as bishop's agent, and Brother Russell Waterman as church custodian.

During the church school service Sunday morning a splendid program on friendship was rendered. Miss Cleo Frederick sang a solo.

Elder Arthur Koehler was the eleven o'clock speaker and his subject was "Sacrifice." The choir sang "Burst Ye Emerald Gates and Sing."

Elder E. A. Thomas was the evening speaker. A trio composed of Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Miss Ruby Johnson and Mrs. May Worth, sang "Now the Day Is Over."

Gudgell Park Church

On September 10, the Saints of this district held an all-day meeting on the lawn of the P. A. Sherman home. The day began with an eight o'clock prayer service in charge of Elder Charles Pooler. The theme was, "True Friendship." Sunday school followed, the classes gathering in groups under the trees.

Bishop Mark H. Siegfried occupied the eleven o'clock hour, speaking on the Word of Wisdom. President Elbert A. Smith and wife were there, and Brother Smith gave a brief talk at the close of the service. About seventy-five enjoyed the basket dinner at noon, and at 2.30 p. m. Elder Frank McDonald talked on church objectives. After this service the orchestra, directed by Fred Mollison, gave a short program. That evening Apostle J. F. Curtis preached a stirring missionary sermon.

The annual business meeting was held Wednesday evening, Elder A. K. Dillee in charge. Elder Walter L. Chapman, pastor, was reelected for another year of service, and chose as his assistants, Elders P. A. Sherman and Charles Pooler; Roy Sherman was made bishop's agent; Paul Gerber, Religio superintendent, and Clarence Martin was sustained as superintendent of Sunday school. Fred Mollison was elected musical director, and Mrs. Nina Tucker was reelected women's leader. She chose Mrs. Roy Sherman for her assistant.

On the following evening the new officers met at the home of their pastor for a consecration service.

East Independence Church

Two aged members of this district have recently passed into the beyond. Brother Jacob Friend held the office of teacher, and was eighty years old, and Sister Rozetta Ahrens was seventy. Both had been members of this congregation for many years. Sister Ahren's husband preceded her in death, but Sister Friend survives her husband.

September 10, Patriarch U. W. Greene occupied the morning hour at which time he blessed Janet Catherine, infant daughter of Brother and Sister L. L. Butler, assisted by Pastor Frank Minton and Elder Harry Friend. Earl Phillip, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Butler, was also blessed.

On the following evening a surprise farewell party was given in honor of Brother and Sister Cornelius Edgerton and Brother and Sister Bert Thatcher, who are expecting to leave this community. A program and refreshments were enjoyed by a large gathering.

After a summer of evening services in union with the other congregations of Independence at the Campus, the Saints are again holding their own Sunday evening meeting at the home church.

Audubon, Minnesota

New Growth Results From Missionary Meetings

Elder P. T. Anderson preached a series of meetings near Audubon, Minnesota, commencing August 15, and closing on the evening of September 3. A keen interest was shown by the increasing crowds, and on some evenings the schoolhouse in which services were held, seemed rather small to accommodate all who came to listen.

September 3, Brother Anderson baptized nine into the kingdom, five of the candidates being children and four adults. Quite a number of others are interested, and they will probably be baptized later on.

The Saints rejoice that the work at Audubon has taken on new life, and trust that they shall be able to do much good in the future.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Reunion a Spiritual Success

With President F. M. Smith as a guest, Saints of Lowbanks enjoyed their annual reunion at the regular reunion grounds. Although it is now a thing of the past, the reunion will long be remembered by the many people who attended.

August 27, a baptismal ceremony was conducted. The following people were the new candidates: Mrs. Elmer Cook, Mrs. Lee Barrick, Miss Winnie Carter, and her little sister, Hazel Carter: An ideal day, the lake without a ripple, the blue sky and the white clouds furnished an excellent setting for the ceremony in which Elder D. Chatworthy officiated. The confirmation occurred at the church, a most impressive service. Elder George Shafer, of Buffalo, giving a short talk. Elders Chatworthy and Shafer officiated in the confirmation ceremony.

Mrs. Harry Davidson, and son, Herbert, of Montreal, have been recent guests at Lowbanks, Ontario.

The Pigeonhole

Short Cut

A friend was taking a trip. Two routes were open: the regular concrete slab, and an older graveled road. But he liked "short cuts," and took the graveled road.

On actual measurement, the "short cut" was just as long as the regular route. Add to that the handicap of gravel and dust. A part of it was freshly oiled, sticky and slippery. Then there was an unexpected detour. There was a rusty nail in the dirt road, and several minutes were spent changing a tire. With everything added together, the friend arrived at his destination about an hour later than he would have by the regular way, tired, perspiring, and dusty in addition.

Short cuts are expensive luxuries. They seldom give a real advantage. In education, in business, in religion, and in life, beware of short cuts. Scientific efficiency, based on knowledge, is quite different from the short cut, based on little more than a desire to be different.

The Quick and the Dead

The Independence Sanitarium stands at the top of a hill where the highway narrows from a four-lane traffic way to two. Van Horn Road, which becomes the Fifteenth Street of Kansas City, is used illegally as a speedway by drivers who suffer from a heavy right foot. They often figure in the accident news.

As a result the Sanitarium people have many jobs of straightening broken legs and arms, pulling steering wheels out of crushed chests and collar bones, taking fragments of glass out of faces and eyes, and mopping up considerable blood, both guilty and innocent.

This situation reminds us of a poem of some years ago; it was written as an epitaph of a dead driver:

Here lies the body of Richard Day;
He died maintaining his right of way;
He was right, dead right, as he sped along;
But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong.

The Good Old Days

The custom of speaking regretfully of the passing of the "good old days" must have started with Adam, speaking about the Garden of Eden. His descendants, nearing the close of life, have been speaking about them ever since.

One of the news letters this week contains a most interesting sentence. Referring to a sister who has enjoyed many years of experience in the gospel work, the writer very aptly says: "The 'good old days' do not rob her of the joys of present blessings." What a lot that one sentence reveals! A character that can take the best of past experience and still be ready for the best of new experiences.

If the truth be told, the "good old days" were not so good as the people who remember them think. They forget the disadvantages, the faults, the hardships. They turn their backs to the future.

At the Turn of the Year

And Work Ahead of Us

An epistle from the First Presidency, to be read from the pulpit in all local churches, at the Communion service, Sunday, October 1.

AUTUMN comes in now with its changes. Coincident with the change of the year comes a change in church activities. The season of reunions and other out-of-door activities draws to a close. The summer has been a profitable one in church work, judging by reports from many fields. The reunions have been above the average. From some of them come reports of spiritual experiences shared by the Saints in their prayer and sacramental services Pentecostal in character. The gifts were bestowed in abundance and in power. The preaching dealt with old-time fundamentals of the Latter Day Saint religion; and it was with a fervor and a power very marked. From Southern California, Seattle, Lamoni, Woodbine, and numerous other points come reports of experiences that will long be remembered.

Those meetings are over, leaving behind their incentive to a quickened activity. Those who have been so fortunate as to be able to take vacations in the mountains or at the beach are returned to their home branches. A season of activities of a different sort now opens. There is work ahead of us.

PASTORAL WORK

The church school everywhere will line up its forces for the winter's work. There is work for the leaders and teachers of youth. We are thinking especially of the priesthood, to whom workers in all departments look for an example. This is an excellent time for the visiting officers in branches to organize and line themselves up for work. In too many localities they have either partially or utterly failed to give the Saints the sort of spiritual help in their homes that is contemplated under the law. The need for such help is greater now than at most times in our history. Local ordained men, men of wisdom, courage, and faith should be visiting in the homes of the Saints, bringing encouragement, cheer, admonition, and counsel as needed. To neglect this task is to invite and merit rebuke. To move out and do the work is to insure growth and blessing. There is work ahead of our visiting officers.

MISSIONARY WORK

Missionary opportunities open up during the fall and winter months. The reduction in our forces of men under appointment throws a burden of responsibility upon those local ordained men whose time is not fully taken up in pastoral work. The commandment is to "prosecute the missionary work so far and so widely as we may." Some few men have kept that commandment to the limit of their ability and opportunity. Many others have not. Charles Lake, warned that he had not long to live, asked us to permit him to return to the Island Mission that he might work a little longer and die in the field. He kept the commandment to the limit. But while he was doing so there were many ordained men sitting by lifting neither voice nor hand to help in the task. Some of them even hindered. The season changes and there is work ahead—missionary work. Local men who are free to do so may well organize, and with the cooperation of local and mission authorities press out into the territory right at their doors and establish missions. One who can do this and will not, risks divine censure; one who can and will give himself wisely and diligently in sustained effort to such a task will make growth within himself and be a blessing to others. Some one brought you the gospel. Have you taken it to others?

FINANCIAL NEEDS

Coincident with our spiritual activities come the financial needs of the church pressing urgently for our attention. For a long time (comparatively) we have refrained from writing about finances. Some people resent frequent mention of the monetary needs of the church. Some, though by no means all, who feel thus are the very ones who have not done their duty and in the plea for help feel a sting of personal reproof that was not intended when the plea was made. Others, men who have given liberally, say to us, "Keep us informed as to the needs of the church. We cannot know unless you tell us. If the need is great we will try to do even more than in the past." Our duty to such and in fact to all requires us to set forth from time to time the fact that the need of the church financially continues extreme.

Many feel that they do not owe any tithing. They have made no increase—in fact they have suffered loss. However, the law also includes free will offerings, and those who by sacrifice can still make an offering, though not actually owing a tenth, may still come to the aid of the church. There are others who in the days of their prosperity, when they had an abundance and did owe an amount of tithing, chose to defer payment. They kept their money on interest or invested it in business ventures or in speculation. Now it is lost, or at best tied up in "frozen assets" that cannot be realized upon. Did the depression that took from them the Lord's money that they held beyond the day of its righteous payment in any sense absolve them from the debt? Think it over and make answer.

From week to week now in the near future the bishops will set forth the needs of the church financially. They have scaled down church expenditures to the limit of possible retrenchment. They must now maintain the level of our income or disaster threatens. There is work ahead for us in coming to their relief and support along the lines that they shall suggest.

Religious Consolation and Service

Down all the ages of the past when men were in poverty and in pain, and under oppression, and this life held nothing for them they turned to religion for comfort and hope—they had no other hope. They could only look for something better in the beyond. With the coming of affluence and widespread plenty this life became all engrossing and monopolized the thoughts of men and women. But now the heavy hand of adversity has snatched wealth from many, daily bread from thousands, and even threatens destitution to the whole race, and again reminded men that riches are fleeting. Even if wealth be not actually lost, life is short and the power to enjoy it brief. If there is no hope beyond this life there is no hope here and now. Religion remains after all the one thing of promise and hope. Latter Day Saints should have had opportunity by now to clear their minds and to again see straight and sharp the path of duty—for a religion that does not seek and find expression in service gives only a false hope and dooms one to disappointment. As the year turns and the fields of opportunity open up during the fall and winter months, let us move in and occupy. There is work ahead for us.

"I do not wish to see any departments done away with. I care for the news least, as there is too much personality and not enough about the real constructive work done. I enjoy the short, concise articles best."—M. B. W., Ava, Missouri.

"All features are too good to make a choice either easy or really accurate."—E. J. H., Benton Harbor, Michigan.

"I liked Riches Untold," says E. T. of Independence, Missouri. And when she rated the features in order of preference she marked stories "the number before one." That's dealing with superlatives.

"Perhaps," laconically answers A. C. C. of Pleasanton, Iowa, to the question, "Do you want another story?" And he adds a note: "Another serial story is all right, but if a more educational or spiritual article could be published, it is needed."

"I usually start with the Pigeonhole and read straight through. Grouping of departments is well balanced."—L. S. W., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

"Too sarcastic at times," says L. R., of Mancos, Colorado, of the Pigeonhole.

"I haven't any preference. I read it from cover to cover and enjoy every word of it."—Mrs. I. W., Wheatland, Missouri.

"I am interested in the entire Herald with one exception. I read news items of branches in familiar locations. Each one of them is interesting to certain individuals. The Herald is very much improved."—N. E., Independence, Missouri.

Final Rehearsal for Harvest Festival Concert

Next Sunday, October 1, at 3:00 p. m., in the Auditorium, occurs the last and most important rehearsal for the Harvest Festival Concert. All members from the nearly thirty choirs from Independence and the surrounding stakes are asked to be present for this last absolutely necessary practice. A great effort will be made at this time to give the performance the finish that it needs for final presentation.

A Distinguished Record

Independence, Missouri.

Editors Herald:

I have been interested in reading the items in the Herald telling of the many years that paper has been taken and read by the Saints in different parts of the country, and thought that, perhaps, the following might be of interest.

I was born, December 15, 1855, in the State of Texas, and a few years after my birth my family moved to Gallands Grove, Iowa. My father and mother were members of the original church, but joined the Reorganization by baptism at the hands of William H. Kelley at a conference held in Gallands Grove in October, 1862, I being at that time in my seventh year.

From that time my father was a continuous subscriber to the church papers, and the Herald was in our home from that day on. From the time the Zion's Hope began to be published, it also was a regular visitor in our home, and read eagerly by the children. And before me lies a Voice of Warning with this inscription on the flyleaf.

HYRUM O. SMITH

Presented to him by the Publishing House of Church of J. C. of L. D. Saints, for having answered the greatest number of puzzles and enigmas in Zion's Hope for publication during the half year ending June 30th, 1870.

Signed Mark H. Forscutt,
For Office.

This shows that I was a persistent reader of the church papers from my earliest youth.

I was married June 4, 1876, and at once began to take the church papers in my own home, and there has been no year when they have been absent from my reading table, and my wife and I have been married over fifty-seven years.

I have a full set of the Autumn Leaves, and Journal of History in my library, all bound in half leather. Also all of the Saints' Herald from volume 6 to the present all bound except the last three or four volumes.

I do not know whether this is a record or not, but I thought it might be interesting to the readers of the Herald.

Yours,
H. O. SMITH.

OFFICIAL

The Financial Quarterly

From records available in the office of the Presiding Bishopric it is obvious that due emphasis is not being given the teaching and observance of the financial law. Reports being received from many districts indicate that this may be due to the fact that up to the present there has been a lack of material for study. In the hope of supplying this need the Presiding Bishopric has arranged for the publication of a quarterly which is available for the year commencing October 1, entitled "A Study of the Financial Law."

It is our opinion that the future progress of the church will be determined to a large extent by the willingness of the membership to study and obey this phase of the church law. We therefore recommend the course to every branch, group, and individual member throughout the church. It is particularly desirable for adult study in the church school.

Graceland College Day

And Home-coming

Sunday, October 22, will be College Day in all the churches. At that time it is customary to take up collections for the aid of Graceland and her students.

This year the need of the college is as great as ever. Young people have found it hard to get employment to save the necessary funds for tuition and books. Many who should be at Graceland this year are not there because of hard times, and some who are there are only present on the expectation that help may come for them. It is not a case of appealing to the generosity of the people; it is a case of presenting the needs of the young people of the church for help in getting necessary training for life and for service in the church.

Home-coming is set for October 20, 21, and 22. Old friends and alumni will return to the College to celebrate the beginning of another school year. The program is announced elsewhere in this issue.

Build new domes of thought in your mind, and presently you will find that instead of your finding the eternal life, the eternal life has found you.—Jenkin Lloyd Jones.

NEWS BRIEFS

Graceland Home-coming October 20-22

Graceland College's home-coming this year will occur October 20, 21, and 22. On Friday evening home-comers and other visitors will see the play, "David Garrick," at the Coliseum, and Saturday's program is crowded with home-coming events. The football game in the afternoon will be between Graceland and Washington Junior College. Former Gracelanders from far and near are expected to be in Lamoni over this week-end.

Anniversary Observances

West Virginia District held its forty-second annual conference at Clarksburg Branch, August 26 and 27. Five people were baptized on Sunday afternoon.

Flint, Michigan, Branch celebrated its thirty-fourth anniversary August 27, when Elder David E. Dowker, an early pastor, was the principal speaker. An attractive feature of the service was a sketch of the organization and growth of the branch since 1899, under the title "High-lights Through the Years." This was given by the present pastor, Elder A. H. DuRose.

Never before had so many young people taken part in a Holden stake conference as did September 8, 9, and 10, when the stake held its forty-sixth conference and the young people's council sponsored its second program, the services of the two being united. Five hundred people visited Holden on Sunday. Important among the services of that week-end was the ceremony in which the portrait of Elder D. J. Krahl, first president of the stake, was unveiled by Sister Krahl and appropriate tribute was paid to the memory of an ardent gospel worker. The portrait is a gift to the stake, and will hang in Holden Church.

Final Prayer Service in Holden Home Chapel

Saints of Holden Branch, Missouri, young and old, met with the inmates of Holden's Home for the Aged, in the Home chapel, September 13, for the final prayer service before the departure of the old people to take up residence in the church home at Lamoni, Iowa. Holden Home was opened in 1917, but considerations of economy on the part of the general church prompted this removal to Lamoni.

Ontario Young People to Hold Oratorical Contest

If plans now being formulated work out the young people of Ontario will hold their first annual Ontario Oratorical Competition before 1933 is gone, contestants coming from Chatham, London, Owen Sound and Toronto Districts.

J. L. Prentice, pastor of Toronto Branch, has been hard at work on the idea for a number of months. Two loving cups (one for the young men orators and one for the young women) will be awarded each year, to be held by the winning district until the next contest. A silver medal as first prize and a bronze medal as second may also go to the winners.

West Pullman Choir Lends Loyal Aid

The choir of West Pullman congregation, Chicago, Illinois, can do more than sing "Do, re, mi, fa sol." Its members are all-around workers in the interests of their church. Organized a few weeks ago, the choir furnishes music for Sunday services, but it is also engrossed with week-day activities. Each Saturday choir members hold a bake sale to help the congregation meet some pressing obligations, and last week the singers finished redecorating the interior of church building in time for their rally day, September 24.

Proton, One of the Oldest Branches in Ontario

Proton Branch is one of the oldest in Ontario. It was organized fifty years ago, being established on the gospel foundation builded by such missionaries as J. A. McIntosh, T. A. Phillips, Willard Smith, and R. C. Evans. In those early days the little group of Saints was acquainted with prejudice, opposition, and mobs, but now the Proton church stands in a beautiful, peaceful valley, and the Saints of the community are highly respected. Elder James McLean, charter member of the branch, has acted as its pastor almost continuously since its organization.

Proton held an all-day meeting August 20, which in many respects resembled a home-coming. It brought together Saints from various parts of the district.

Charlie's Goals

CHARLIE WENDELL is just a red-headed Kansas farmer boy—he's seventeen—but he's a real organizer. Life stretches out before him, and he plans to make a great deal out of the opportunities which come his way.

"Ever since I was knee high to a grasshopper (and Kansans, you will remember, know considerable about grasshoppers)," says Charlie, "I've been saving my money to go to Graceland. That's one of my goals. Dad and Mother didn't get that far in school, but they're anxious to see me get there."

One more year and Charlie will finish high school, and then how the old-home community will miss him when he has entered the Old West Door at Graceland College!

Since his sixth year Charlie has raised and sold several runt pigs each season, the money from their sale going into his savings after it has been tithed. And before he was as tall as a hoe handle is high, he knew how to use that common farm implement—he had his corner of the big family garden. For many summers now he has sweated in the creek bottoms raising bushels and bushels of carrots, onions, beets, parsnips and other vegetables to market in behalf of his "Graceland fund." He has worked almost countless hours sawing wood in the woodlot near the creek, and the sale of that wood has kept him in school books for three years besides adding to those bank savings. He has helped his mother dispose of eggs, milk, cheese, and other produce, a certain per cent of the sale price for his own. One summer when drouth made farming unprofitable, he secured work at a country filling station. Yes, Charlie knows many things about hard work in the field, garden, dairy, and woodlot; but all the time he has been dreaming of Goal No. 1—Graceland, and the climb hasn't seemed so stiff.

"Low prices for farm stuff, hot weather, drouth, and the hoppers haven't helped my savings grow very fast; but it won't be long now before I go even if I have to walk every step of the way to Lamoni!" and a full-moon grin lights up the tan face beneath the thatch of red.

Other goals? Why, of course. Didn't I say Charlie is an organizer? He knows that life—if one would realize it at its fullest—is a series of goals, and he has other goals beyond Graceland. After Graceland, he plans to enter medical training at a State university, later he will serve an internship. He wants to begin his practice as a physician just as soon as he can. To be able to relieve suffering is a big goal, isn't it? To banish pain, to do research in the interests of medicine, and to go on and on.

Then, too, (and this is still a secret!) there is a little dark-eyed girl in Kansas who is mightily interested in Charlie's progress from goal to goal, for, you see, she shares some of them with him—a home, a family, a happy, happy life.

If you could know Charlie Wendell, you would like and admire him. He knows how to work and doesn't stint. He has ambition, determination, and a generous sense of humor. More than that—he has a future. Think of his goals, and compare them to your own. Worthy goals are as important to hold your life straight and true, as strong, well-set posts are to a wire fence. Charlie learned that out in Kansas.

What You Work For

When you work for a man you do not work for wages. If your eye is only on your pay, you are a second-class worker. You will certainly slight your work, and your employer will get rid of you as soon as he can.

You have something better than wages to work for always; it is your Self, for your Future. You owe it to your best Self to be loyal, to give the best that is in you.—Dr. Frank Crane.

He Cheated Himself

A striking story is told of a rich man who wanted to help a poor carpenter and his family.

He hired the carpenter to build a house on a hillside and went away on a long journey. The carpenter said to himself, "My boss is away and I can use shoddy materials and neglect the supporting work that doesn't show, the house will be weak, but nobody will know it." So he built a ramshackle house.

When the rich man returned the carpenter said, "Here is your house." "Thank you," said the rich man, "here is the deed and the key."

And the carpenter grieved that he had robbed himself of a good house.

We reap what we sow, we have to live in the house of life we build. If we do shoddy work, if we "soldier" on the boss, we pinch ourselves, shrivel up and lose our ability to discern between right and wrong. We have to live in such a house without character. We have to live with ourselves.

It is a tremendous fact that each one of us is building today the house we must live in tomorrow. We can build a palace or a hovel, a mansion or a jail or a pigpen but we must live in it.—Oldsmobile Shop News.

Autumn Activities

A cool breeze levels across the prairies from the northwest, and drives the hot weather back to the southland. We put away the straw hat, the fan, and the tropical worsted suits. We can stop perspiring now and enjoy ourselves. There is a tang in the air, and we feel the surge of a renewed energy. It is autumn again!

There is the glory of the fall colors soon to come to the woods, the snap of dry twigs, the crackle of the camp fire, and the smell of wieners and marshmallows roasted in the embers. And here's an idea—try toasting your buns, too. We found some long wire forks that are much better than sticks for holding them.

Get your crowd out. Make it a hiking party, or whatever you like. Don't miss nature in her most beautiful mood of the year.

And, incidentally, there's a chance to plan for your indoor entertainments. How would you like to give a Hallowe'en party, in the basement of your church, with real leaves? Then gather them when they first fall, while the colors are brightest. Be sure to get them before a rain can reach them. Store them in a dry place. And you can use them for party decorations long after the snow has laid a deep covering in the woods.

Are you enthusiastic? Well, you better be. Call up your crowd now. Get out your sweater, or that leather jacket you found so comfy last year. Shake out!

The Mask

When I complained of April's day,
Her silent birds, her absent Sun;
And how her mist but added tears
Unto the dew's, that had not gone—
Young April heard and, suddenly,
Came leaping from her strange disguise;
Off came her dark-November mask,
And showed the world her laughing eyes.

Youth and Sacrifice

By S. A. Burgess

IT HAS ALWAYS BEEN somewhat of a puzzle why the idea of suffering is so greatly stressed when the word sacrifice is used. At the late Youth Conference we noticed some who were unwilling to take the pledge offered at the end. The reason given was, "I do not know whether I am ready yet to give up everything that I like and do only disagreeable things." The idea and desire was one of complete devotion to the church, a service which would take twenty years or more of preparation, a very deep desire to contribute the whole of life through study and work to the advancement of the cause of God. But that the young people seemed to think did not really involve sacrifice because it might be enjoyable. It would involve going into the hard places of the earth whereas one girl said, "What they want us to do is to marry a missionary and scrub floors in Zion."

It is perhaps unfortunate that such ideas should be had, but is it not also unfortunate that some of our teaching has so strongly stressed on one hand the pleasure, the happiness, the joy, of wrongdoing, and on the other hand pictured a hard path of righteousness, one of suffering and of doing always the things that are least agreeable? We have heard addresses to the young people which have made it seem a terrible thing to assume to live a Christian life.

We are thankful that our early ideas were differently formed.

Should not sacrifice rather hold something of its original meaning? Sacraficio—to make sacred; like consecration, to place with holy things, to dedicate to God.

Why should we overlook such passages as "Be joyful in your warfare"? Why should we give the idea that righteousness should have a long face and look as ugly as possible? Such is not the path of truth and righteousness, for that path is rather one of complete living: "I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly."

Would God have given those faculties and then prohibited their use? Rather it is that there is no rightful enjoyment divinely disfavored, but only the abuse of time and talent comes under condemnation.

THE COST

To take up another aspect of this matter. Recently there was announced an article about the high cost of immortality. Doubtless this was intended to be the high cost of eternal life as it is not only immortality we seek. Great stress again was placed on the sacrifice necessary, the great giving up—how much it will cost.

But when we were very young we saw this theme presented in quite a different way, and though years have multiplied, we still believe it to be the way of truth. A recent editorial by President Frederick M. Smith on purchasing Zion and its benefits brings this early story to mind, though not verbally clear in all its details. The thought presented was and is that we must spend our time. The only question is —What shall we buy?

We all have time enough to be holy or for anything else, for we have all the time there is. The only question is how shall that time be used? What shall we try to secure in return?

In youth with its preparation we hope all the time and life there is, is yet before us. There are many paths in which we may enter, but we cannot go on all of them. There are many choices before us that we may buy, but we cannot buy them all. We must each choose; be a high liver, or a glutton, or take the pursuit of pleasure and narcotics. We may choose the glitter or that which endures. We may choose to be a great student, a thinker, a Saint of God—a flirt, bon-vivant, or idler. The choices before us are innumerable, but we must choose. The high liver and the Saint of God cannot live in the same tabernacle of clay. Self-indulgence of the physical cannot long go with the great student and scholar.

What shall we choose? The world is before us. It is not a question of art—we have a life to spend and must spend it. But what are we going to get for it.

We may say that in dancing, smoking, drinking, and light living there is pleasure. There is a seeming, passing pleasure. But we need only to look around us to discover how very soon those who pursue this course become weary, blasé; the world seems to hold nothing more for them. We have seen old men in their early twenties, because these things do not give lasting pleasure, nor real happiness.

We note a recent question asked of Doctor Wiggan: Has not vice been a cause of race degeneracy? In his reply he says no, that fools perish by their own folly; "the wages of sin are death"; "the children of the wicked shall be cut off." This is not simply Bible, it is not simply poetry, but it is hard truth. The way of (Continued on page 1233)

Labor and Rest in Christ

Radio address by R. S. Salyards, Sr.

IN MATTHEW'S gospel, chapter 11, verses 28-30, we read these words of Jesus: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

For an ordinary man or a group of men, however capable, to address such language to a multitude of people would be to them a manifestation of egotism that would cause resentment and opposition. For any group of men, however eminent in statesmanship, science, or religion to address a gathering of people and extend to them an invitation to come to him or to them for rest from their burdens, surcease of sorrow, solution of their problems, would be regarded with rejection and scorn. Today, with the world entire involved in difficulties so serious as to cause the race to fear the outcome—such a message from anyone, however eminent, would cause contempt and ridicule.

BUT JESUS was not and is not an ordinary man. He is both the Son of God and the Son of Man. He was God manifest in flesh, anointed to be the Redeemer of the world; to reveal God as Creator and Father of the race; to represent the interests of man by being the mediator between God and man. He was thus commissioned to accomplish the great redemptive work of presenting to man the "eternal purpose" of God, and of making intercession with God in the behalf of man. He was and is thus able to comprehend the mind and will of God toward man, and the nature and condition of man in his helpless, sinful state; to open to man's comprehension the plan of salvation as prepared from the beginning for his redemption.

We read of Jesus these significant statements: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath appointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. . . . And all bear him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." (Luke 4: 18, 19, 22.)

"But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil: and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Hebrews 2: 9, 14, 15, 18.

Jesus, therefore, addressed the people as the mediator to restore man to knowledge of God, and through that knowledge to solve man's problems and bring him into harmony with God. He addressed the invitation to come unto him to a people who had the revelations of God through Moses and their prophets. Those inspired men, without exception, had declared his coming as the Messiah of Israel. His language was not directed to a people ignorant of the oracles and declarations of God concerning the salvation of the race. They were not unaware of the Jewish teaching and tradition concerning the expected Messiah. His statement to them was therefore not contrary to what they had been taught to expect, but strictly according to what their prophets had been inspired to reveal for their salvation.

THE JEWISH people were then weary and heavy laden and in need of rest. Because of rejecting the divine counsel they had repeatedly been brought into bondage—to the Babylonians, to the Greeks, and were then in subjection to the iron power of Rome. A Roman garrison occupied the fortress adjacent to their holy temple, the symbol of their religion and their state; and other officials of the Roman power maintained authority and enforced their rule throughout their homeland of Palestine. Under such conditions the Jews were subject to heavy taxation, impoverished, brought under a bondage in many ways odious and galling to their national spirit and obnoxious to their temper. They were in subjection to a people whom they hated and despised, but from whom it was impossible to free themselves. Such conditions entailed much friction and suffering, not only in their physical life, but also in their general condition of mind. They chafed and fretted and thus suffered much affliction and existed under circumstances that reacted to their disadvantage. When a people have been free in their own land, in control of their political life, and permitted to exist under their own laws and institutions, their reaction to the rule of a power imposed contrary to their will and in contrast to their religious and social ideas, is strong and amounts to hatred and exasperation. Ruled by the hated Herod Antipas, of mixed, heathen blood, a tool of the Romans, a politician who sacrificed their interests to sustain himself in royal state, they were indeed in bondage, in unrest difficult to endure. The masses were in poverty, the nation brought down to abject despair.

It was while in this condition, and separated from spiritual favor with God, and at the supreme crisis of their national life, that Jesus called them to come unto him and find rest. The call of Jesus was in all respects appropriate and timely. It came from the great heart of Him of whom we read that "he had compassion on the multitude." We read that he was "filled with compassion" toward the poor and downtrodden. Their suffering and distress touched him deeply. He sympathized with the common people in their unfortunate lives of toil and oppression. His word was always so manifestly sympathetic that it is written that "the common people heard him gladly" and "followed him."

HIS STATEMENTS were always significant and far-reaching. In his prayer, taught to his disciples, he addressed God as "Our Father, who art in heaven." In this as in all his references to God he presented him as a Father moved by love for his creatures, and toward whom there should be a deep sense of reverence. When he said of the Father, "Thy kingdom come," he signified that, in behalf of all, God ultimately would rule and administer for the universal good of all, in contrast to their then condition. When he declared that men were better than sparrows none of whom fell without the Father's notice, and to his disciples that "the very hairs of your heads are numbered," he imparted knowledge of the abiding concern, the divine solicitude for man, the interest in all that concerned his welfare. And it may be said that the revelation of God as Father has been an illuminating, comprehending inspiration that has caused men under the stimulus of that inspiring fact, to move forward in the struggle for civil, religious, social, and economic liberty; that it has been the determining, underlying force that has moved all races to live and labor and die to attain their right to life and its opportunities.

But underlying all this, and comprehending the removal of all wrong and suffering, men were to be redeemed from their sinful condition, from the dominion of darkness, ignorance, enmity to God and antagonism to one another, through him and by him who is the light and life of the world. His mission and ministry was to bring man to God; to normalize and perfect him by teaching and empowering him to obey the truth.

JESUS CAME into the world in the time of its greatest need: The Jewish religion had become inert, perverted, unable to give to the world spiritual leadership as in past times. The hard and fast tradition of the elders had rendered it null and void. The law of Moses, a system of tuition designed to bring the Hebrew to greater knowledge of God through Christ—that system of preparatory teaching was to be fulfilled and done away by institution of the new covenant, the perfect law of liberty in Christ. This the Scriptures had declared; but the people of Israel because of rigid devotion to the decadent formalism of the Rabbis, were blinded and controlled to the extent that they rejected the Messiah sent to them in the person of Christ. They refused the means provided for their salvation and brought upon themselves inevitable dissolution of their nation.

With the invitation to come unto him and find rest, Jesus said: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." The yoke he presented was not designed to bring them under bondage nor under a system that would restrict and restrain them from liberty. Jesus taught by illustrations from the common life of the people; he used the well-known practice of yoking the animal to his work.

What is a yoke? It is not used to inflict punishment upon the animal, but is an instrument by which the strength of the beast may be used to accomplish a useful task. It cannot work without the yoke. The ox feeds from its owner; he should contribute to the productiveness of the land; he was made for that purpose.

God has yoked up the stupendous forces and powers of the universe; this is true in the fields of astronomy, physics, mechanics, etc. Man has powers for good—intelligence, physical strength, and moral and spiritual endowment. He also has powers for evil; he is potentially an angel, if using his powers according to divine direction; he also can descend to the nature of a devil, if he comes under the dominion of darkness and evil. Man needs a yoke, that his powers may be harnessed to right uses, to the intent that the forces of mind and body be rightly employed to the welfare of himself and his fellows, above all to the glory of God in obedience to truth. Jesus Christ came into the world to be the light and life of the world. The One by whom all things were created, he understood the nature of man, in comprehensive discernment of his possibilities. From the beginning of time man has struggled upward toward the light in the face of conditions that have restricted, restrained, and corrupted him. Confronted with good and evil, darkness and light, contending against powers (Continued on page 1231)

Education for Women

By Ella Brackenbury Lambkin

NOT LONG AGO I read a travel sketch of a woman who, while visiting friends in France admired the splendid library in the home. Of the daughter of the house she asked, "Have you read many of these books?" And the daughter replied very modestly, "No, I have not read any of Father's books. It may be that my husband would not like to have me know so much." Yet her husband was at the time an unknown quantity, her parents not yet having arranged a marriage with any of the young men of the country. But that was in France.

A father of my acquaintance, an American father, said to his daughter, "If you will promise not to marry until you are twenty-five I will send you to school. But there is no use paying out my money to send you to school if you are going to get married right away and never be able to use your education." It is common chatter in magazines and newspapers that men are afraid of clever girls, that a girl who lets people guess how clever she really is stands little chance of marrying. Perhaps the trouble is that the girl is not clever enough instead of being too clever.

The final straw was laid on not long ago when a group of high school young people were discussing high school and college courses. One of the boys said of the girls, "Oh, they will marry pretty soon and won't need an education." That statement from a youth would mean little, perhaps, only for the fact that it represents a popular opinion which seems to be gaining ground during the depression when there must frequently be a choice as to who shall go to college. Other things being equal the boy should go, we say.

But, why? The answer comes back and seems to be so generally accepted that there seems to be no question about it, "The boy must earn a living. If he goes to college he will be able to earn a better living for his family. The girl will marry soon and would not be able to use an education if she had one."

"Of course if the girl decides upon a career she should be educated. She must be educated if she is to become a stenographer or a teacher or many other occupations she might decide to take up. You just have to train for these jobs. No, they cannot be done by instinct. But this girl does not need an education, she could not use it if she had one, she is engaged to be married."

We do not stop to think just what we are saying in those few careless words—She is engaged to be married. She is to take charge of the training of a little child, perhaps half a dozen of them. She is to see that they develop properly physically—doctors spend months studying the problems connected with this phase of her work. Their mental training, the forming of the thought and work habits which will follow them through life, are left almost entirely to her. This forms one of the most entrancing problems of modern scientific study; educated men are spending weeks and months and years studying the best methods of training the child's mental attitudes.

IN THE GREAT TASK of the spiritual development of the child the young mother is given a little more help during those early, habit-forming years. But the pastor, the priest, and the church school teacher cannot be on hand just when a little directing of habits and thoughts is needed most and therefore is most effective. In this task of making the child into a Zion builder, although all these others help very much, still the tedious, everyday little things which count for so much are left very largely to the mother.

The responsibility for all of this: the physical, mental, moral and spiritual development of the child during the early years—this is the responsibility of the girl who is soon to be married, this girl who does not need an education because she would have no chance to use it if she had it. If she were to keep our books she would need an education. If she were to type our letters she would need some training. But we think she can train our boys and girls simply by instinct!

We are told that to value things over people is pagan, but to value people over things is Christian. Are we Christian in our education?

Do not think that I am opposing education for boys. Ask any of my boys. Neither am I trying to say that if there is a question of either a boy or girl going to college it should always be the girl. I am saying, however, that in our decision we should not allow ourselves to be guided always by the money value in an education. That is not a Christian standard. It may be that the girl is not the type that can make use of the higher education, she may require a more practical type of preparation. But it may be possible that the boy is one who would make more use of a prac- (Continued on page 1232)

The Way of the Cross

By Gladys Mae Smith

"I must needs go home by the way of the cross,
There's no other way but this;
I shall ne'er get sight of the Gates of Light,
If the way of the cross I miss."

IN THE CHURCHILL white and green kitchenet, the breakfast table lay spread for three, dainty and appetizing with its green bordered linen and plain china. On the tiny gas range the tea kettle bubbled, and Karen stood on tiptoe to disconnect the shining electric toaster. Flecks of butter flattened out in golden pools upon the hot toast at her elbow.

"The way of the cross leads home,
The way of the cross leads home."

Musingly, she hummed beneath her breath to the accompaniment of radio music.

"For Pete's sake shut it off," a voice bellowed, "How do you expect a man to sleep with that thing turned on full blast?"

Karen padded on ridiculous, feather-trimmed mules through the living room and obediently snapped a button.

"Cross indeed!" she muttered resentfully, "That's mine—two ways."

"Bart," she urged from the bedroom door, "Get up. Breakfast is ready."

BENEATH THE WHITE SHEET, a grotesque bulk uncurled, straightened and a tousled head emerged.

"Throw that window to the top, will you, Karen? This stuffy apartment is the worst one yet." Bart lay with closed lids, a deep frown creasing his high forehead.

"I was dreaming of home," he said and the scowl on his face lifted as at a pleasant memory, "I had gone to look for the calves along Silver Creek. The crocuses were out. . . . They soon will be, Karen."

Karen nodded cheerfully. "And the mud will be ankle deep in the front dooryard, and the wind will blow like nobody's business for days." Bart's temper flared.

"This," with a scornful glance, "is no way for self-respecting people to live. Miserable little two by four hole in the wall. It isn't living; it's hanging on."

"I'm sorry my earning capacity does not meet the demands of your exquisite taste," she retorted and was instantly contrite. Sarcasm, bitter, despicable sarcasm. Why oh, why must she resort to that?

Two lavender striped pajama clad arms pawed the air. There was a violent flutter of bedding, and Bart's bare feet hit the floor with a thud.

"Yeah. Go ahead, rub it in. It's my fault that seven thousand, nine hundred and ninety-nine men beside myself are out of work, my fault that I've worn my soles thin scuttling around after a job. If you'd go back to the farm. . . ."

On the average of twice a day, seven days a week, week after week Karen was compelled to listen to a similar tirade. It was an old story to her and distasteful. She picked a raveling from the edge of the cheap voile curtain and turned away.

"Oh, please," wearily, "Let's not go into that. . . ."

On a divan bed in the living room, nine-year-old Junior was sleepily showing signs of returning consciousness. Karen arranged his fresh clothing for his convenience and gently talked him into wakefulness and good humor.

"Hurry up, Sleepy Head, your toasty-toast will be cold. Here's your blue shirt and the new tie Aunt Grace sent you. Won't you be the spiffy boy in school today? Mother'll skip now and make your cocoa. Bet a cookie it'll be ready before you are."

She could feel Bart's accusing glance but she carefully avoided his eyes as she went kitchenward. Twelve years of marital experience had taught her what his reaction to their little tiff would be.

LATELY, she had come to dread his sulks as one might a plague. Bart's sensitiveness was growing into a disease from which they all suffered periodically. It had become as something from which she longed to escape. When Bart went into a long silent gloom, Karen in self-pity compared herself to a trapped bird beating wings of hope to shreds against the iron bars of his perverse disposition.

Presently, he came in and took his place at the table without comment. One glimpse of his handsome, brooding face confirmed her worse fears.

"Bart," she pleaded, "Try to see my side of this farm question. I don't want to be selfish. It's something inside of me—call it temperment—that will not become adjusted to rural conditions no matter how hard I try. The loneliness, the hardness does things to me. . . . I . . ."

Silence around the breakfast table. In the next room, Junior struggled with his tie and whistled tunelessly, Karen tried again.

"I'm sorry for that nasty remark a moment ago, Bart. I don't mind bringing in the bacon when you are down on your luck, really I don't. I want to help. Besides I like my work, it's interesting."

Bart looked up then. There was a strange expression in his blue eyes, and his mouth twisted cynically.

"If I was a professional man like Dr. Philip Renfer instead of a common dirt farmer," he said deliberately, "I might expect you to find me interesting. If I could make life easy and pleasant for you as he does by surrounding you with the best of working conditions. . . ."

"Bart," she implored. Her fingers gripped the table edge until the knuckles were white. "Bart!"

Under her stern, scandalized stare the slow red crept upward to his temples, but he was unrelenting.

"It's true, Karen. You won't admit it, perhaps you do not realize it. That's immaterial. The galling truth is that as far as you're concerned, I'm a failure. The only vocation I have or care about is farming, and you are not tempermentally adapted to that."

"Bart," she whispered, agonized, Bart."

"Can't you see, Karen," he went on as though she had not spoken, "that we are running into a mess?"

Karen could. Dimly, she had sensed it for a long time. She was baffled, hurt, unable to place the blame, helpless to right the situation. Across the table she studied the man who had been her husband for twelve years. A wave of pity for him swept over her, and she hated herself for it. No woman wants to pity her man; she wants to be proud of him.

"It drives me crazy to think of you sharing his confidences even though they are strictly business. . . ." Karen shook her head warningly at Junior's approach, and Bart's voice trailed off into silence.

The little green enamel clock on the corner shelf reminded them of the passing of time.

"I've got to fly," Karen said, trying hard to stifle her relief. She kept up a rapid-fire chatter of directions as her nimble fingers righted the apartment.

"You may go to Sammy's party directly from school, Junior. Mother'll put his gift right here with the dime for your hot lunch. Remember to wear your rubbers, honey; the walks will be slushy by evening. Don't fuss with the dishes, Bart, they won't take a jiffy when I get home."

Powdering her nose before the mirror, she became conscious that her feet were fairly itching to be on the way. She straightened her curving lips primly, feeling secretly ashamed of the sparkle in her brown eyes and the glow of anticipation that radiated around her small dynamic being.

"Oh, well . . . one just can't carry personal problems into the work-a-day

world," she defended herself mentally. What she really meant was: What a haven of refuge Doctor Renfer's office affords! But Karen refused to admit, even to herself, the increasing delight she derived from her professional association with the man for whom she worked.

"How wonderful it must be," she mused as the car turned slowly into Dace Street, "to be able to relieve suffering, so necessary to humanity's happiness, so important to God's plan." And again as in times past, she experienced a feeling of elation that the knowledge of nursing acquired before her marriage enabled her to understand and assist from a doctor's point of view.

SHE HEARD HIS VOICE, low, distinct, composed, as she came through the luxurious waiting room. From the monosyllabic conversation, she guessed that he was speaking through the telephone. In imagination, prompted by memories of constant repetitions of the scene, she could see him there at his desk, his fine blond head wagging sympathetically as he talked.

"What a man!" she murmured, adjusting her cuff, "How lucky some woman will some day be when he makes up his mind to marry." And for no reason at all a tightness gripped her throat like grasping fingers.

From a position before an instrument case, he turned with a smile as she came into the room. Karen had learned during her six months' employment there that Dr. Renfer was never too busy or tired for a cheery greeting, but this morning his eyes were grave.

"Karen," he said without preamble, "I've a case out towards Ralston. A child swallowed a jack—you know, one of those sprawly, little six-legged iron things. An older sister was playing with them on the floor. It's lodged in the throat . . . the child can't be moved. An anesthetic may be necessary. I want you to go with me. . . ."

An operation. A child, perhaps no more than a baby. In spite of her training, Karen flinched.

"Why not take Miss Kelzer?" she faltered, "Her experience in the baby ward at the clinic . . ."

He was wrapping shining instruments, selecting them carefully with long, sensitive fingers. He raised his head and looked at her directly with a keen grey glance.

"I need you, Karen," he insisted quietly, and their eyes clung. Under his revealing gaze, Karen trembled.

SUDDENLY THEN, Karen knew. Knew why her feet had seemed to be wings; knew why it was possible to leave her domestic dismays locked away in the apartment she called home. In a sense, Bart was right; in another he was wrong. It was not the luxury of the environment alone that fascinated her. She felt the strength, the personal magnetism of the man drawing her and every fiber of her being responding.

Yet it did not occur to her to analyze the joy that the knowledge brought. She merely snuggled down in the wide car seat, content to be riding, working at his side.

The world, a maze of springtime beauty, lurched past them as they left the city behind. The speed of travel rendered conversation difficult for which Karen was grateful. She was vaguely conscious of the miles that flew by, acutely conscious of the near presence of Doctor Renfer, his hand as steady on the wheel as it was on the knife when the occasion demanded. What a man! And he needed her. . . .

Then the humble farm dwelling . . . the little sufferer . . . the tearful mother, and awkward, anxious father. Childish faces, a half dozen of them, peering like frightened rabbits around corners. Philip Renfer, confidence-inspiring, assured . . . probing fingers so strong yet as gentle and as soothing as a mother's kiss. Then it was over, and the child slept the natural sleep of exhaustion.

The afternoon shadows lengthened into evening as they drove the homeward way. Few words were spoken, and those few were commonplace enough. Enchantment hovered over them like a glittering net.

FROM ABOVE THE RIM OF THE BLUFF, the sun dipped drunkenly toward the west. With an application of the brakes, the big car slid to a stop. The man spoke.

"See that hill yonder, Karen?" He smiled into her eyes. "One can get a wonderful view of the sunset from there." She nodded assent, and together they climbed to the crest.

Karen looked out over the vast expanse around and below them, and there was awe in her gaze.

"How infinite, how fathomless is nature," she said wonderingly, "and how small are we in comparison." The wind whipped strands of soft hair about her face and, below the hem of her coat, fanned her slender ankles. She felt very young as she stood there, very young and somehow afraid.

"Mere specks," he agreed, "yet unto man is promised the supreme gift—the gift of eternal life."

As they started back down the hill, Karen's heel caught in a gopher mound. She put out her hand to break the fall, felt her equilibrium restored by a warm, firm grip upon her fingers. A blaze of fiery glory blending to amethyst reflected around their bare heads like a crown. Thus, they went toward the sunset.

"Karen," he said huskily, "I wish that you and I might go down into the sunset of life hand in hand."

And then presently, Karen stood alone before her apartment watching, watching until Doctor Renfer's big black car was swallowed up in an increasing line of evening traffic. Mechanically she turned to draw a letter from the box on the porch and fumbled for her key. The exultation of the day had vanished. She felt oppressed, let down.

The familiar, intimate nature of the interior seemed to reproach her. She frowned at Junior's boyish possessions scattered carelessly about and shut the closet door sharply upon Bart's frayed and faded old bathrobe. Resentment gave way to defiance as she moved restlessly about the silent rooms.

"Why this spasm of conscience?" she demanded of herself defensively, "I've done no wrong. Nothing."

AFTER A TIME, she opened the letter that the mail had brought. It was from Bart's widowed mother, pleasantly written and containing the tidbits of gossip that pertained to her little world.

". . . with springtime in the air, I am restless to get out of doors. The tulips on the south side of the house will be blooming by Easter. I had the front yard seeded again last fall and it shows promise of really making a stand this time.

"I wish you and Bart would make up your minds to come back, I'm lonely here. Hired men are hard to keep, good ones harder to get. . . ."

Oh, bother! Karen tossed the letter from her with an exclamation of disgust. Were all the fates in league to force her into submission to a life that she despised?

"I can't go back. I won't go back," she spoke aloud in defiance, but defiance gave her no relief.

At five Mrs. Owens phoned to ask if Junior might stay to dinner with Sammy. After that she would take them to a show if Mrs. Churchill did not object. Karen gave her consent readily. For reasons she did not attempt to explain, she shrank from the thought of Junior's candid, childish eyes.

"Oh, what is the matter with me," she shook her shoulders impatiently, "Can I be developing nerves?"

Bart did not come home to dinner. Karen knew that their words of the morning were responsible for his failure to appear. She knew he had hiked to the country, perhaps roamed the surrounding hills for hours. The soil was his solace; he turned instinctively to the breast of mother nature to bind up his hurt, to ease his despair.

Karen dabbled at her food and tried hard not to think of him, tight-lipped, wounded by the stroke of life, groping through the fog of his disappointed hopes. She pushed her plate violently from her. Surely it was not her fault that they were tempermentally mismated. Others were like that, too, she supposed. But what did they do about

V.—Empty Disciples

By Blair Jensen

THE PARABLE as a means of instruction was borrowed from the Orient. Jesus used it as a means to impart power to the truths of his gospel. His parables never became old or worn out.

One of them which has an especial appeal to youth can well serve as a background for our discussion of "Empty Disciples."

In the day of Jesus, it was customary for the friends of the bride, with lighted lamps, to escort the bridal couple to the home prepared by the bridegroom, after the customary visit to the home of the bride's parents.

The evening described in the parable of the ten virgins brought forth a number of peculiar happenings of intense interest. The wedding party was delayed. It arrived at the late hour of midnight. Only five lamps remained lighted, and these were held in the hands of those foresighted virgins who had provided extra oil.

Each of the foolish virgins whose lamps at that hour were not burning must have realized that there was not sufficient capacity for oil in their lamps to provide for a delay in the arrival of the bridal company. Individually, each may have thought that if her lamp went out she could borrow oil from one of the others, or that it would not matter if one lamp was not burning, never for a moment dreaming that half the number might not be prepared.

One of these foolish virgins may have felt that the lamp and not the light was the thing that really counted. For after all it was the lamps that were the emblems of learning, that graced the altars of religion and adorned the walls of kings' palaces and were carried with honor in all processions which marched through the streets of the city.

If perchance she should be without a lighted lamp, the fault would not be hers. If delayed, the fault would undoubtedly be laid at the feet of the bride who had paused too long and shed too many tears at her ancestral home. Likewise the bridegroom could be brought in for a portion of the blame, for he should have hurried his bride towards her new home.

Another of these virgins may have looked upon the lamp only as a thing of beauty, and beauty was the thing alone which counted. It would not matter whether it was glowing or not. One could take it just as it was. To bother to refill it would be an untidy business at best, and one would certainly not care to, neither be expected to perform an act of drudgery at a wedding feast or reception.

To a third virgin the thought of extra oil would appear as poor economy. It would scarcely be right and certainly one could not rightly be expected to expend more money for a container and extra oil when in all probabilities it would not be needed or used, and then, too, an accident might occur and the oil be spilled, thus entailing a loss of money and of time.

A fourth one of this group could not possibly conceive of a delay of sufficient duration to give rise to need of more oil. Such a delay had never occurred in any such procession that she had been in and there was certainly no reason to feel that there would be one this time.

The final member of these five so-called foolish ones perhaps rather carelessly cast aside the thought of the need of extra oil by consoling herself with the idea that it very probably would not make so much difference if she should run out of oil, for undoubtedly her host and hostess would be understanding, would be considerate, smile the whole matter off, bid her welcome, and allow her to enter into the home and participate in affairs of the evening.

Whatever their opinions may have been, and, in spite of all their rationalizations, these following facts stand out as occurrences that did happen that evening. The crucial moment arrived, a delay did occur, and when the wedding party arrived at midnight some lamps were empty—five of them—the foolish ones could not borrow oil, neither could they purchase it, and finally when they were able to rightly present themselves the doors were permanently closed against them. For them, at least, in spite of their hours of anticipation and watching, the evening was a failure, the reception party nonexistent—all because of emptiness.

SOME WOULD-BE DISCIPLES today are empty. To them, the acclamation of discipleship and not a knowledge and understanding of the meaning of discipleship is the thing. It takes too much of drudgery really to attain and accomplish something; and then, too, the price is too great to pay for what one will get—a false economy. They are unprepared, when that does occur which they have told themselves never will, and finally their disappointment and sorrow becomes complete when others fail to give them the expected, yet unearned, consideration.

We are indebted to Brother T. S. Williams for the thought that after all tin cans are all right when used for something—when filled with fruit or flowers and plants and such (Continued on page 1232) it, what could she do? She realized that she was pacing the floor in agitation. With a sob, she threw herself face down among the divan pillows.

WHEN THE STORM OF WEEPING had passed, she saw clearly that she had come to a fork in the bend of the road. Two ways lay open to her; one was the way of the masses, the other—the way of the cross.

The broad way beckoned as she gazed longingly upon it. Through luxurious ease it would lead her, through hand-in-hand companionship into gleaming sunsets. . . . A quiver passed through her emotion-tortured body in retrospect. "Karen, I wish that you and I might go down into the sunset of life hand in hand." A few years of loveliness and after that—what?

The other way—the way of the cross—was rough and uninviting and hills of discouragement shut off the view. Where, oh, where did it lead? As in answer to the little prayer that leaped into her aching heart, the words of the song she had heard that morning came to her:

"The way of the cross leads home,
The way of the cross leads home,
It is sweet to know as I onward go,
That the way of the cross leads home."

The way of the cross had led to Calvary when the Savior of men had chosen the way. To Calvary and beyond to the resurrection, to life.

"If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." The way of the cross lead to self-denial. Didn't the way of her cross lead then to the giving back of Bart's self-respect, to the farm? After all, could a few years of ease, of delightful companionship compare with the resurrection, the gift of eternal life?

Prone there, with her head buried childishly in her arms, Karen made her decision. And strangely enough after it was made, her vision cleared. It was not the loneliness, the inconveniences of the picture that she saw. They were there, always had been, always would be for her. But now the eye of her soul would be looking for tulips blooming by the kitchen door, green grass conquering mud. . . .

Bart's step in the hall brought her to her feet. Tear-stained, disheveled, she stood before him and thrilled to see that once again his great love for her had triumphed over his own desires.

"Bart," she said breathlessly, sweet and eager in her hour of submission, "There's a letter from your mother. . . . She needs us. We're going home."

The light that broke over his face was instantly clouded by concern for her wishes. He raised her chin in his palm and looked deep into her eyes.

"But Karen, the loneliness, the wind, the mud. . . ."

Karen laughed softly, and in his happiness he did not notice that the fingers she laid across his lips trembled slightly.

"I won't be seeing them, Bart you old dear. I'll be listening for the singing of the birds at dawn, looking for the peeping crocuses along Silver Creek. . . ."

LABOR AND REST IN CHRIST

within himself and without, he needs direction, understanding, power, inclination to rule his spirit, to live his life in uprightness—to obey the law of his being and of society in general. In the work of attainment and development he struggles and has attained to whatever of good he sees and knows, against forces of ignorance and evil by which his progress has been disputed and retarted.

MAN HAS BEEN and is a dependent creature. He is not self-existent, but self-dependent, subject to physical, moral, and general conditions into which he is born, and which, despite himself, under which he must die. God is his Creator, and his Creator's power sustains him. He can find no other cause of life and being. Existing in a world of light and darkness, of good and evil, subject to influences greater than himself, he must acknowledge and confess obligation to the Author of life for a philosophy of life, for unfoldment of the meaning and purpose of his creation. He does not and cannot live only by physical action and law; he must yield to those principles that experience and history reveal as necessary to the happiness of himself and fellow beings. Law, order, purpose, are manifest in the cosmic order of the universe. Behind the reign of law exists the Lawgiver, the Divine Ruler. Obedience to law preserves the obedient. Quoting from what the speaker believes to be of divine origin he presents what to him is self-evident truth: "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore they must remain filthy still." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.)

JESUS UNDERSTOOD both the purpose of God and the nature and need of man. He asked men to take his yoke upon them that thereby they might be aligned with God, and be brought into harmony with themselves. The yoke of Christ is the gospel, which Jesus both taught and obeyed as an example to his fellow beings. Taking upon himself the nature of man, Jesus from the beginning of his career yielded loyal obedience to God. He could not have done otherwise and succeeded. Upon the occasion of his first visit to Jerusalem, when on returning his parents missed him and found him teaching in the temple, he said, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" From the beginning of his early life he devoted himself to the great work of keeping himself subject to the divine will; he thought always of the Father; he sought constantly to be in communion that he might be in harmony with him. His life and teaching illustrated always to man consciousness and need of God. His entire career is an example of adherence to the principles of truth. The life of Jesus was not a mere formal routine of religious tradition; it was a life of rational conformity to truth in all phases of being. It was such that it lifted those who comprehended it to exalted conception of life's meaning. Lived by the multitude, it would establish a reign of peace on earth and good will toward men.

THE YOKE OF JESUS will train men to live in harmony with Him whose purpose is the ultimate unity and harmony of the universe. The gospel yoke means conformity, subjection, obedience to God; that every man so determining shall yield his powers of soul and body to truth and righteousness; that he shall obey the law of the kingdom and thus be "born again," as Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." His teaching and that of his apostles, proclaims the gospel to be "the perfect law of liberty"; "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." By obedience to that law, by putting on the yoke of Christ, men become "new" creatures in Christ. They "put off the old man and his deeds," and put on "the new man, which is renewed in knowledge."

Saint Paul interpreted the new life because he actually experienced it. He wrote to the Ephesian church, "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

Jesus in the text invited men to learn of him, because he is meek and lowly in heart. He declared that so doing men would find rest to their souls. Facing his great responsibility to God, conscious of the sacred obligations laid upon him, he came in humility and meekness, thus manifesting before men the true greatness of devotion to God and service for man. He found peace and satisfaction in that devotion and service. Man cannot find rest unto his soul apart from God in loyal devotion to truth. "The truth as it is in Christ Jesus," is the only basis for happiness. Ignored, disobeyed, the obligation remains; and though disregarded, put aside, as Shakespeare wrote, "Conscience makes cowards of us all." Man instinctively knows that he should serve God and be upright. He is inwardly aware that he has duty toward God and to fellow beings; that he cannot live his life with profit to himself and to society unless he obeys the dictates of conscience and renders obedience to his God. He cannot put such conviction aside and be true to the highest concepts of his nature. Conformity to the divine will causes every man to become a laborer together with God, to the ultimate establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth; the doing of the will of God on earth as the angels do that will in heaven. God has accomplished the establishment of that condition in heaven. He wills also to establish that will upon earth. Man cannot bring about such condition; God only can accomplish such desirable and necessary rule and reign. Man's stewardship has revealed his impotency to establish peace and good will upon earth. He has been permitted to demonstrate his need of a higher will and a higher power—the power of God.

tical training while the girl could use the culture of college training.

SOME MAY THINK that because the girl does not learn to cook or sew or bathe the baby in the course she elects that it will not be useful to her. She does need some specialized training but I cannot imagine any sort of knowledge that could not be used at some time in the daily wear and tear of bringing up a family.

Outside all this there is the difference in the general atmosphere of culture or of ignorance in a home. No matter how much or how little culture the father may have, the children often adopt as their standards the standards the mother has built into the home. Then, I ask you, in this task of building a beautiful Zion, is a girl's preparation for home building important?

Churches and temples, farms and factories will be a part of Zion, but the basis of the whole plan, the part without which Zion cannot exist, is people—the right kind of people. It seems to me that the right kind of people cannot be produced by instinct. If we were going to build a fine building would we permit the foundation to be built by instinct without training. Then would we spend time and money for well trained workmen to build a structure upon this shaky foundation.

In all this work the father has a part. I have emphasized the work of the mother because it is so often belittled. I can assure you that the father's expert knowledge of ship building or car repairing will never compensate for the mother's lack of knowledge of her child. Don't be afraid that the girl engaged to be married will get too much education. It is all grist for her mill. The task of child training is so varied that—well, you can't know too much.

Let me assure you that I am speaking from my own great need, not from superior knowledge.

things. It is the empty ones, unused and rusty, lying around in back yards, garbage heaps and city dumps, not fulfilling any useful purpose, that become things to be despised and eradicated. Disciples are all right, they are fine, worth while and necessary, but the empty disciples are like those aforementioned empty tin cans. They are unhealthy, cluttered, unsightly, and fulfilling no purpose. Even as one can find beauty in a neat and well displayed array of cans on the shelf of a well-kept store, so likewise one always finds beauty among the alert, aggressive and wholesome followers of a great and worth-while cause.

EMPTY DISCIPLES are thankless. Of the ten lepers who were graced by the healing powers of Jesus and made physically whole again, one was filled with sufficient rejoicing and thankfulness to return to the Master and express his appreciation. There are those within the church today sufficiently empty that neither by word nor by act do they express their appreciation of the value of the church to them.

Empty disciples do not adjust themselves to progressive conditions. Their failure to adjust is indicative of their emptiness. They can only live in the memory of the good old days and in contrast to its golden memories, bemoan conditions of today. I called upon a young unordained man to offer an invocation at an evening preaching service. He responded very willingly and ably. That service was scarcely concluded until a certain sister who felt rather edified by the number of years that had elapsed since her immersion took me rather harshly to task for having had that young man offer a prayer at such a service. Many times I had listened to her testimonies of the good old days and her agonizings regarding the present, prayerless, gone-to-the-Devil generation. I yet smile to myself as I recall the incident. The service was, to her, all wrong and out of order because a young unordained man offered a prayer in the house of God. An empty disciple indeed. Quite in contrast with this was an experience in the same community when an aged brother asked me to assist in consecrating a bottle of olive oil and remarked that as this bottle would have to be carried quite a distance we would not uncork it, further stating that this would be satisfactory to those for whom it was intended and then quietly and pointedly added, "You know, Brother Jensen, it is easy for me to believe that the God whom we ask to purify and bless this oil can do so with the cork in the container as well as out of it, but I always do it according to the way the person feels about it." He is a disciple, indeed, who is not empty, but one that is able to make adjustments from the past to the present. Sometimes we have wondered if not too often much of our legislation or attempted legislation in branch, district and general church assemblies is not the result of opinionated individuals seeking thus to bring the assembly in conformation to their idea rather than seeking to bring about an adjustment within themselves.

Empty disciples seek to put across and sell themselves and not the organization in which they hold membership. A message in a street car that I sometimes rode from Minneapolis to Saint Paul read, "The purpose of advertising is to sell the product advertised and not the advertising." Paraphased, "the purpose of discipleship is to sell the gospel and not the disciple." The disciple of a great cause should ever seek to promote its message, its ideals and its eternal verities. Constantly it should be before you that the important thing is not where you serve or who knows you are serving, but how you serve and who are benefited by your service.

A cloak of discipleship that covers only a void makes at best but a weak veneer. Such a disciple is unable to resist any presence of adversity or difficulty that comes his way. Even as an empty tin can yields to the least pressure, so collapses the empty disciple when things do not go as anticipated. I discovered a few years ago that the base used in some veneered furniture is of an inferior kind of soft and knotty wood that of itself cannot take a good finish or give much strength, but has the faculty of taking glue. A piece of furniture made from such material can never live up to the seeming appearance of strength that a thin strip of wood veneer gives to it. Likewise, empty disciples.

It sometimes happens that at public meetings and prominent gatherings some individuals display their weaknesses by their continuous attempts to talk much and draw the eyes of the public upon them. We were amused and yet given much food for contemplation a few days ago at a Dry workers convention at Des Moines, Iowa. An individual had become rather tiresome by his repeated attempts to bring himself to the attention of the audience. He probably little suspected the extent to which he was exposing and revealing his ignorance and emptiness. An unknown seatmate, to the amusement of many around us gave voice to the comment, "An empty head sure rattles the loudest." How true indeed. After all it is not empty words, but acts that really count. It is not the constant and loud talker in any group that develops the solution or reaches the conclusion.

Empty disciples are prone to fly the track. One time I was walking up the grade of a railroad track in Northern Ontario. Twice within twelve hours it had been necessary for the snowplows to clear the rails. Just as I approached a sharp curve I met a long freight train, for the most part consisting of empty gondolas and flat cars going north for lumber and pulp and two or three box cars loaded with supplies. Rather thoughtlessly I stepped down into the deep snow at the outside of the curve. For the next few moments I was just certain that every car that took that curve with its trucks jumping, bouncing and screeching was surely going to fly the track. Right then and there I promised myself that if i ever survived that freight train, I would always be passing them on the inside. As I went on home giving considerable thought to that happening, I recalled that the trucks of those two or three loaded cars next to the caboose were not bouncing and jumping up and down on the rails like those of the empty ones. Within the church we have experienced the fact that empty disciples fly the track. If conditions ever were as bad as some have stated them to be, then all the more reason for disciples to stay with and in the church in order that they may be in such a place and condition as to help adjust conditions and matters. One cannot do this by flying from the church to some other organization as empty disciples have done. To help the church one must be in it and of it.

Empty disciples are emptied of their emptiness, not by tasting and sipping, but by drinking deeply and filling to capacity. An empty glass can easily have its emptiness overcome by supplanting that emptiness with some liquid or substance.

Emptiness never gives one satisfaction. I heard a story of a Negro who caught an opossum, dressed him, prepared and cleaned some sweet potatoes, and while they were in the oven to bake he lay down to get rested from his exertions. While he was asleep one of his colored contemporaries evidently with an enormous gastronomical capacity, happened along, yielded to the presented opportunity, and completely devoured opossum and sweet potatoes and as an afterthought dipped his forefinger in the remaining grease and rubbed it lightly over the protruding lips of his friend. When the sleeper awoke and gazed upon the empty dish, smacking his yet tasteful lips he remarked, "Sho tastes mighty good in my mouf, but do'n seem like nuffin happened to my insides." Likewise with empty disciples. In spite of outer appearances nothing much has happened within them—no spiritual power or warmth resides within them.

From our study of the five foolish virgins and our discussion we have learned the need of being prepared; that we must give ourselves unreservedly to the cause we have espoused and furthermore that we must shoulder our own responsibilities.

In the language of our themes: Be not distant, straddling, alibi, trifling nor empty disciples, but rather be immediate, decisive, frank, alert and full measure disciples. Remember, it is not by acclamation, but by doing, not by concern as to where serving, but by concern as to how well one serves, that one becomes a disciple worth while.

May the cloak of your discipleship become real and vital, radiating from you the spirit, the message, and the life of him who is our Master.

worldliness is not easy, but hard.

But the student who learns how to use all the powers and faculties that God has given him, does not find life growing dull after a few years, unweary he reaches out for new and expanding experiences. As long as life shall last he has new discoveries before him. While to the Saint of God opens up both time and eternity and an increasing joy, for "his ways are the ways of pleasantness."

Righteous living is the only way of lasting happiness. We may take upon us the yoke of Jesus. We may find in the hour of temptation that it seems hard to turn to the right. But if we do turn, we soon will find the yoke light and the way easy to follow.

The cost of eternal life is but a trifle, a dot, in comparison to the returns received. It is as if we could pay ten cents for the greatest diamond in the world. The cost of walking with Jesus we have learned from the testimonies of many who have walked with him, is little for that which we receive. It is indeed the "pearl of great price," the treasure hid in a field which if a man find, he sells all he has to buy it.

"I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly."

Nothing of worth or weight can be achieved with a half mind, with a faint heart, and with a lame endeavor.—Barrow.

If I Had a Boy

If I had a boy, I would say to him, Son,
Be fair and be square in the race you must run,
Be brave if you lose and be meek if you win,
Be better and nobler than I've ever been,
Be honest and fearless in all that you do
And honor the name I have given to you.

If I had a boy, I would want him to know
We reap in this life just about as we sow,
And we get what we earn, be it little or great,
Regardless of luck and regardless of fate,
I would teach him and show him the best that I could,
That it pays to be honest and upright and good.

I would make him a pal and a partner of mine,
And show him the things in this world that are fine.
I would show him the things that are wicked and bad,
For I figure this knowledge should come from his Dad.
I would walk with him, talk with him, play with him, too.
And to all of my promises strive to be true.

We would grow up together and I'd be a boy
And share in his troubles and share in his joy.
We would work out problems together, and then
We would lay out our plans when we both would be men.
And oh, what a wonderful joy it would be.
No pleasure in life could be greater to me.

ANON.

I question whether the man who lies to a judge and jury runs a greater risk than the man who falls into the habit of lying to himself. The latter's risk is a different sort of risk; that is all. The second man is certainly not more dishonest than the first. One is a secret sinner who can never be convicted. The other is a public sinner who stands a chance of conviction. Both are guilty of damaging society, and they are equally guilty; for it is just as naughty to do harm to one individual as to another—even if the other individual happens to be yourself.—Arnold Bennett, in the Sunday Pictorial.

Prayer and Testimony

The Testimony of John the Baptist

He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for he was before me. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. . . .

I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias. . . I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.—John 1: 15-27.

The Lord Endows His Servants With Power and Wisdom

By O. A. Rexroad

Two months after I was baptized (July 10, 1921), I attended a sacrament service at Highland Branch, Southern Ohio District. The district president, A. E. Anderton was present and through him a gift of prophecy was given. Part of the message was as follows: "I, the Lord, will raise up the ignorant and the unlearned and will endow them with such power that they shall be able to confound those with great learning."

That same week a man hired me to help roof a schoolhouse. His brother, a school-teacher and minister of a nearby neighborhood, was also helping on the roof. We had only been working a few minutes when he inquired if I was not of some religious faith. I replied that I was and told him the church I represented. When he thought I represented the Utah Church, it became necessary for me to explain the difference between the two churches. He seemed half inclined not to believe my explanation, but was unable to show much objection. Then he began to tell me of his faith, and the comparison which followed showed that we differed widely.

Our discussion was a long one, but through it all I was able to withstand him on every point. Revelations were the last point we discussed. In this I contended that he could not say that Jesus was the Christ without a revelation. He declared that he could, saying that God did not speak today except through his written word. Then he attempted to make an illustration. Pointing to the school bell, he said, "Suppose I had never seen a bell like that. Then suppose by chance I happened to see it for the first time. I would say, 'That's a bell,' wouldn't I?" "No," I replied, "you would say, 'What is that thing?' "

The minister seemed greatly surprised throughout our talk, and at last asked where I had received my schooling. He seemed unable to believe it when I told him that I had not passed the fifth grade, and asked me twice if I had not had some schooling since uniting with the church. "No sir," I answered, "I have belonged to the church only two months." He was speaking of ministerial training, but I supposed that he was referring to common school.

The next day as I was working in the field and thinking of our talk, I asked myself how I had been able to talk with him as I did, so naturally and with no difficulty. It was then that the words of the message given at the sacrament service, returned to me.

About two weeks after I was ordained a teacher, I was invited by a friend to come to his home one evening and give a talk on the kingdom of God. I accepted the invitation and took with me my wife and brother, Luther Crabtree, who was also a teacher. There were several present that night, neighbors and friends having been invited in, and among these were two prominent religious men, preachers I believe. In my talk I endeavored to show of what the kingdom consists, its officers, laws, and blessings. I stressed the laying on of hands, and when I was through I asked if anyone would like to ask a question.

One of the prominent listeners asked if Cornelius received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. I replied that he did not, explaining that this was the beginning of the gospel of Christ among the Gentiles and a special testimony to them and to the Jews that the Gentiles were to have part in the gospel as well as the Jews; that this was the only example to be found in which the Holy Ghost was given other than by the laying on of hands after the Day of Pentecost. Moreover, I declared, that the laying on of hands was placed on an equal basis with the other principles of the doctrine of Christ, and must not be rejected.

The questioner had thought the question too big for me. He smiled as he asked it, but as I replied, the smile faded. Nevertheless he asked a second question: "Did Saul receive the laying on of hands for the Holy Ghost?" I answered that he did, and this my questioner disputed, saying that it was through prayer Saul received it. I returned that he did pray and fast for three days and nights, but that was not all according to the Bible account: "And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 9: 17.)

One of my nearest neighbors became interested in the gospel and invited me to speak in his home each Saturday night. This I did for several weeks. The first night the room was full, and a man who was eighty years old was there. He had been a preacher for forty years. I chose for my subject, "Prophets, Ancient and Modern," endeavoring to show that all ancient prophets were at one time modern prophets. While it is easy for each generation to believe the words of prophets of hundreds of years ago, they are slow to believe the words of modern prophets that come among them. The Jews claimed to believe Moses and other prophets without a doubt, but they crucified Jesus the Son of God and greatest prophet of all. I spoke also of modern Pharisees, telling them that the leaders of the mob that murdered Joseph and Hyrum Smith were preachers who claimed to believe the words of Jesus and the ancient prophets. I wondered if we today would prove to be Pharisees if put to the test.

At the close of the evening I asked the aged preacher to dismiss the congregation. This he did and then requested all to take their seats again, stating that he had something to say. I knew this man's reputation as a bold disputer along religious lines, and guessed correctly at what was going to follow. Nevertheless, I took my seat along with the rest without any objections. First he complimented me on my discourse. Then he charged me with misrepresenting the truth, and attacked my reasoning by quoting the statement of Jesus, "it is impossible for a prophet to die outside of Jerusalem." He also quoted the statement: "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away," to prove that the idea of modern prophets was a deception.

When he had ceased to speak, I arose and addressed the audience once more. I understood that his objections had been made to cripple the claim that Joseph Smith was a prophet since he did not die at Jerusalem. "Now," I said, "if I could show that prophets have died outside of Jerusalem, my claim concerning Joseph Smith still would be sustained. Do you remember what Paul said about a thorn in the flesh, 'Lest I become exalted above measure because of the many revelations I have received?' Paul received many revelations and therefore was a prophet. Paul died in Rome."

Here the aged preacher spoke up: "Yes, but he was a long time after Christ's day." "Well, so was Joseph Smith," I replied.

Then I proceeded to explain the Scripture he quoted as to prophecy, tongues, and knowledge, and when I came to knowledge I asked the gentleman if he wanted to say that knowledge was done away now. "One kind has been," said he. "Which kind?" I queried, "supernatural knowledge?" "Yes, sir." "All right," I returned, "I am going to ask you to state to this audience how you received your call to preach the gospel."

"I got my call from that book," he declared, pointing to the Bible, but when I asked him to give us chapter and verse, he appeared not to hear me. I turned to Mark 16, and waited until he had ceased speaking. Then I said: "I have found a verse here that does seem to indicate a calling to preach. This might be the very thing you were referring to. Let me read it to you and see, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.' Is that your calling, brother?" "Yes sir," he answered. "All right, then let us read the next verse: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.' Is that included in your calling, brother?" "Yes sir," "Well, then the next verse: 'And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.' Is that included in your calling, also, brother?" "No sir, that's passed," he hotly declared. "Well, perhaps your calling is passed also," was my answer.

This ended the discussion. We parted that night in a friendly manner, although I could tell that my aged friend felt somewhat shaken and hurt.

Gospel Message Brings Joy

By Etelka White

July 24, I was one year old in the gospel of our Lord and Savior, and I am happy that he saw fit for me to hear this glorious message. Some time prior to my introduction to the latter-day work, I was led by very definite experiences to know that God speaks to his children today, and that he would speak to me and lead me providing I would give him the opportunity.

I had been attending a young people's prayer service on the opposite side of the city from my home. There I discovered that while I was interested in the work of the church, I was not living a prayerful life. I was out of employment at the time and while attending the executive board meeting of the Council of Churches of which I was the city-wide young people's representative, I was divinely directed to call a certain number and told that there was work for me there. I called this place, and went over to the conference with my present employer. Here I found a member of the church who led me to the fullness of the gospel.

My own church had not given me the spiritual food for which I longed, and I had gone from one church to another. Finally Brother Jacob Halb came to my friend's church, and I decided to hear his message. Perhaps it would satisfy me. His words rang true, and the gospel was an open book to me. At the close of the series I requested baptism. In a way this was a difficult thing for me to do, for I was at the time teaching a college group of young people, was treasurer of the Queen Esther, institute secretary of the Toledo District Epworth Leagues, and president of the Christian Service Volunteers (I am still the last named as the group has refused to accept my resignation as their leader.) But while laboring in these capacities I realized that I was not being spiritually fed, and I felt that I could not lose my soul's salvation. Some of my friends are now investigating the gospel, and I am trusting that in due time they will accept the truth.

God Does Not Forsake His Children

By Y. H. Rockwood

Though it has been my lot to pass through many trials, I have often been blessed with evidences of God's loving care, and I have been given the assurance that the latter-day work is true.

Let me assure you that God will never forsake his children. We may be tried, and our burdens may be heavy, but he is our heavenly Father and friend. Let us strive, therefore, to let our lights shine, that others may learn the way of truth and righteousness.

My eyes are rather weak and my hearing dull, and I ask the prayers of God's people everywhere, that I may be made whole and that I may have the wisdom to use every blessing to the honor and glory of God.

Ask Prayers

Mrs. E. J. Goedkin, of Willapa, Washington, desires the Saints to continue to pray for her daughter, Evelyn Goedkin. Evelyn has been greatly blessed through the prayers of the church, and is now able to walk alone.

E. M. Roberts, of Evansville, Indiana, has been out of the hospital only a short time, and asks the prayers of all, that his health may be restored and that he may be able to work. He wishes also to be a faithful Saint. He has been isolated from the church twenty-seven years.

Mrs. J. A. Welch, of Troy, Missouri, voices the request of her son, Howard Welch, for the prayers of the Saints, that he may be healed. The young man was baptized at Saint Louis a short time ago, and has a wife and three little children whom he wishes to bring into the fold.

QUESTION TIME

Is unfermented grape juice for the sacrament properly called wine?

The word wine was used in the Old Testament to translate two terms, one of which meant effervescent or fermented wine, while the other meant must, fresh grape juice, or new sweet wine. Both terms are used in Genesis 27, in verses 25 and 28, in the days of Jacob. The words translated wine in the New Testament have practically this same distinction, which is also maintained in modern usage. Hence it is proper to refer either to fresh grape juice or to fermented grape juice as wine.

Wine is not directly referred to by either of the terms used for it in the New Testament, so far as the sacramental cup is concerned. Jesus took "the cup," a word which signifies a drinking vessel, and directed his disciples to partake of it. The translators do not agree as to what Jesus said at this time. The King James Version in Matthew 26: 27 has it: "Drink ye all of it." But the Twentieth Century and the Weymouth versions say: "Drink from it, all of you," while the Moffatt Version says: "Drink of it, all of you," and the Syriac Version reads: "Drink of this all of you." The Emphatic Diaglott is of similar import, saying: "Drink all of you out of it."

The phrase which indicates wine for the sacramental cup is the language of Jesus as recorded in Matthew 26: 28, 29:

"For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."

The true significance of this sacrament is not in the ferment of the grape juice, but in the fruit of the vine, the drinking of which indicates that the partaker is of the vine, Christ. It was after instituting this sacred rite that Jesus explained its significance to the eleven apostles, as recorded in John 15: 1-8. By abiding in the vine, the branches should bear "much fruit." The Doctrine and Covenants (26: 1) commands: "ye shall partake of none, except it is made new among you"; and again: "this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make" (86: 1).

Current Opinion informs us (volume 69, page 450) that the Rabbinical Assembly of the Jewish Theological Seminary, of New York City, decided unanimously that unfermented wine may be used for all religious purposes. In 1913 the Reorganized Church at its General Conference adopted a resolution (No. 702) that: "we are of the opinion that fermented wine should not be used, but that either unfermented wine or water should be used, and so be in harmony with the spirit of the revelations."

May an unordained person break the bread and pour the wine when the sacrament is being administered?

The only instructions given by revelation to the church provide that the sacrament shall be administered by the elder or priest (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22). This does not specify anything as to the preparation of the bread and wine, but on May 1, 1870, President Joseph Smith stated: "The elder or priest should break the bread. . . . He should then pour the wine," and he also declared:

"The administration of the sacrament comprehends the breaking the bread, pouring the wine, blessing the bread, blessing the wine, passing or presenting the emblems, and the partaking thereof."—Church History, volume 3, pages 580-582.

This agrees with Doctrine and Covenants 119: 5, which provides that the breaking of the bread and pouring of the wine is to be by "the officer" who administers at the sacrament. The Book of Mormon (650: 32) represents Jesus as saying:

"Behold, there shall one be ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, . . ."

The church in general conference resolved (No. 401):

"The act of conveying the emblems to those partaking forms a part of the work of 'administering the sacrament,' and, under the law, neither teachers, deacons, nor laity have right to serve in that capacity."

What is the rule when excess delegates to conference are appointed?

By action of General Conference in 1923 it was provided that they should be certified up to the proper number "in the order of their registrations with the committee" on credentials, unless otherwise instructed. In such cases those first registered with the committee would constitute the delegation of that jurisdiction. A. B. PHILLIPS.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The above is an assumption without any definite proof. And it is reasonable that if the people had known either the Sabbath or the law before, such declaration of it with specific instructions how to keep it, would have been unnecessary. However, some plain Scriptures show them to be wrong in the above assertion. We present them as follows: "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments; and madest known unto them thy holy sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant." (Nehemiah 9: 13, 14.)

In Hebrews, third chapter, Paul is speaking of how God was grieved by the children of Israel whose carcasses fell in the wilderness. (See Hebrews 3: 17.) In the beginning of the next chapter he is still speaking of them as the context plainly shows: Paul says:

"For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works. And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest. Seeing therefore that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief." (Hebrews 4: 4-6.) The above plainly shows that by Moses the Lord ". . . madest known unto them thy holy sabbath." If it was made known to them by Moses it is evident that it was not previously known: and this is made quite plain by the further statment, quoted above, "They to whom it was first preached" the context establishing the fact that reference is being made to the children of Israel while in the wilderness cannot be denied, therefore it was first preached to them; it was not preached before, to others.

That some of the principles embodied in the Decalogue were given through Moses before formulated into the Ten Commandments it is unnecessary for us to deny, because as we have previously shown, the first draft of the Ten Commandments (Exodus 20: 3-17) were written by Moses and read to the children of Israel before Moses spent the forty days and forty nights in the mount with the Lord. And the tables were not given to him until after that. (See Exodus 20: 1-17; 24: 7, 12, 18, and 31: 18.)

That that covenant was not made with their fathers, see Deuteronomy 5: 3: "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."

There was a covenant made with Abraham (Genesis 17: 10) which was confirmed to Isaac and Jacob, but as to whether there was any regular Sabbath kept or not, the record is silent.

The outstanding principles of equity and right living may have been and doubtless were understood and lived up to by the patriarchs: but they believed God and were faithful to the gospel or the law of the spirit of life, so there was no occasion for the law to be added in their day because of transgressions. (See Galatians 3: 19.) Also we read in the same chapter: "And the scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." (Galatians 3: 8.) "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." (Galatians 3: 16.)

From the above it will be seen that the gospel was preached to Abraham that through him all nations were to be blessed; and the seed through whom this blessing came was Christ. There can be no salvation in the future life except through Jesus Christ. Peter says:

"Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Enoch was saved. (Hebrews 11: 5.) Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were saved. (See Matthew 8: 11.) These men and others were saved and since the covenant of the Decalogue was not made with them, and there is none other name under heaven or given among men by whom one be saved. The fact of their being saved proves that they were saved through Jesus Christ. Again: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Romans 1: 16.) The gospel had been preached to the children of Israel as well as to the people in Paul's day: "For unto us was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."

So the gospel was preached unto the children of Israel as well as to the people in Paul's day but it didn't profit them because of unbelief; therefore the law was added to them because of transgression. The patriarchs Enoch, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob having the gospel preached to them and not transgressing it had no need of being put under the law that Paul says (Hebrews 7: 19) "made nothing perfect."

Now that the gospel of Christ is being preached again in which is the power of God unto salvation, those who believe the message and are obedient to it are not under the schoolmaster (the law) that was only in force until faith is come. (Galatians 3: 24.)

Had not the Jews failed to live up to the higher law, there would have been no occasion for the law given on Sinai, but when they fell from the heights they might have attained they were like the people Paul refers to in Galatians.

"Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. (Galatians 5: 4.)

The Adventists claim that the Decalogue was a religious as well as a civil law, therefore it could not be done away because of God's unchangeableness. The first four tell us our duty to God, and the other six our duty to man. We do not deny that there were religious features connected with the law, but when we consider the necessity of keeping Israel from the worship of the gods of the surrounding nations, for purely moral reasons we can see the wisdom of God in placing the restrictions around them contained in the Decalogue. The idol worship and also that of the heavenly bodies, prevalent among the nations around them at that time, permitted and enjoined some of the most horrible crimes; such as human sacrifice and some of the most disgusting forms of prostitution. Hence the necessity of the drastic requirements of the law. Now that Christ has come and the law has been fulfilled the new or gospel covenant has superseded the old one and it is ready to vanish away.

Adventists quote: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures." (Acts 17: 2.)

Here it is argued that Paul's manner or custom was to observe the Sabbath. This was true while he was working principally with the Jews, and the reason was apparent: that was the time when they met together. But it is of interest to note the following: "And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." (Acts 18: 6.)

After this we have found no instance of Paul especially observing the seventh day.

"Soul Sleeping"

We will now notice the theory advocated by Seventh Day Adventists regarding what is usually referred to as "soul sleeping." They claim that at death all consciousness ceases, that there is no individual spirit that dwells in the body and lives in a conscious state between death and the resurrection. I will present their belief in their own words. I will give their principal questions and answers from Bible Readings.

"13. Do others besides man have the breath of life?"

"And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: All in whose nostrils was the breath of life." (Genesis 7: 21, 22.)

"14. Is their breath the same as man's?"

"As the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity." (Ecclesiastes 3: 19.)

"Note: That is, here men, as well as beasts, die. This present life, with them,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

as with the rest of the animal creation, is dependent on their breath. When this is gone, they, the same as beasts die. In this respect they have no preeminence over beasts. But men have a future unending life held out before them, and may, if they will, die in hope of eternal life, which is a very great preeminence over the rest of the animal creation."

"15. What does Job call that which God breathed into man's nostrils?"

"All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my nostrils." (Job 27: 3.)

"16. When a man gives up this spirit, what becomes of it?"

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Ecclesiastes 12: 7.)

"Note: That is the spirit of life by which man lives, and which is only lent him of God, at death goes back to the great Author of life. Having come from him it belongs to God, and man can have it eternally only as a gift from God, through Jesus Christ. (Romans 6: 23.) When the spirit goes back to God, the dust from which man was made a 'living soul' in the beginning, goes back as it was to the earth, and the individual no longer exists as a living conscious thinking being, except as he exists in the mind, plan, and purpose of God through Christ and the resurrection. In this sense 'all live unto him,' (Luke 20: 38) for all are to be raised from the dead." (See John 5: 28, 29; Acts 25: 15; Bible Readings, pages 506, 507.)

"1. By what figure does the Bible represent death?"

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." (1 Thessalonians 4: 13; 1 Corinthians 15: 18-20; John 11: 11-14.)

"2. Where do the dead sleep?"

"And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." (Daniel 12: 2; Ecclesiastes 3: 20; 9: 10.)

"3. How long will they sleep there?"

"So man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." (Job 14: 12.)

"4. For what did Job say he would wait after death?"

"If a man die shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." (Job 14: 14.)

"5. Where did he say he would wait?"

"If I wait, the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness." (Job 17: 13.)

"6. While in this condition, how much does one know about those he has left behind?"

"His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." (Job 14: 21.)

"7. What becomes of a man's thoughts at death?"

"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Psalm 146: 4.)

"8. Do the dead know anything?"

"For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." (Ecclesiastes 9: 5.)

"9. Do they take any part in earthly things?"

"Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." (Ecclesiastes 9: 6.)

"10. What does the Psalmist say about the dead praising God?"

"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Psalm 115: 17.)

"11. How much does one know of God when dead?"

"For in death there is no remembrance of thee." (Psalm 6: 5; Bible Readings, page 511, 512.)

We take no issue with the fact that man dies physically as the beast dies when he ceases to breathe, that when considering the physical only, in this respect he has "no preeminence." Nor do we deny that all life, human and animal, comes from God. But nowhere does the Bible say that the beasts were made in "the image and after the likeness of God."

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." (Genesis 1: 26, 27.) If man is merely a being composed of the chemical elements of this earth, to which God lends spiritual life while the body lives, and is taken back to God at death; if this spirit is not individual, nor a personality, man can have no agency. He would be only certain material and chemical elements, operated upon for a time by the portion of spiritual life that God has lent to him: therefore if he should sin, the spirit of life that God lent to him would be responsible, and man would be no more to blame for his deeds than other animals, if all have the same spirit.

The Bible in many places speaks of the Spirit of God, all the way from Genesis 1: 2 through it. Now, "man was made in the image and after the likeness of God"; therefore man must also have a spirit. God's Spirit was not merely loaned to him by a higher power, but was his spirit. Therefore man to be in the image and likeness of God, must also have his individual spirit; otherwise he would not be "in the image and after the likeness of God."

It may be said of the beasts that the spirit of life they possess is loaned to them as they are not called into judgment for what they do in this life, but are made as Peter says, "To be taken and destroyed," (2 Peter 2: 12) or rather made for the use of man.

I have given the main proof texts used by Adventists to prove their theory, "That there is no consciousness between death and the resurrection. Now I will give other texts that they cannot harmonize with their theory. I shall assume that the spirit of man existed before the body was created, which, if true, will establish the existence of individual spirits that occupy the bodies of men. But first I want to put Mrs. E. G. White on record as teaching this truth, or the foundation of it, although she denies it in regard to the human race.

"Another dangerous heresy is the doctrine that denies the divinity of Christ. Men who have no experimental knowledge of Jesus, will yet assume an appearance of great wisdom, as though their judgment were beyond question, and boldly declare that the Son of God had no existence prior to his first advent to this world. This position directly contradicts the plainest statements of the Savior concerning himself; yet it is received with favor by a large class who claim to believe the Scriptures." (Great Controversy, page 347.)

For once we fully agree with Mrs. White. But the above statement is fatal to her claim as to there not being an individual spirit in men. With the above in mind, hear what Paul says, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." (Hebrews 2: 14.) The above agrees with the Emphatic Diaglott in its literal translation. Now let us notice—the children partake of flesh and blood. Christ likewise partook of the same. Christ existed before the world was, because "the worlds were made by him." He partook of flesh and blood like the other children. He preexisted in order to do this; so also they must have also preexisted. For how could one partake of anything unless they first existed? Instead of flesh and blood being primarily the individual man, the man that preexisted took on flesh and blood as Christ did, is the individual.

We shall notice instances where it is shown that men did preexist.

Eastern Michigan District Reunion

Comprehensive Program Makes Meetings Outstanding

Eastern Michigan District held one of its most outstanding reunions at Cash, from August 20 to 27. The weather conditions were ideal. The gathering was held in a beautiful grove of elm and maple trees, a few rods from the Cash church.

As several campers were on the grounds Saturday evening, a service was held, made up of singing, and talks and addresses by several of the ministry on the theme, "Our Goals." The reunion opened officially on Sunday morning with a prayer service that was participated in by one hundred or more people. This service was of a high spiritual order as were all of the prayer services during the reunion.

The regular daily schedule swung into action on Monday morning with good interest. The daily program was as follows: 9 a. m., prayer service; 11 a. m., lectures and class work; 2 p. m., preaching; 3 p. m., recreation, and 7.30, community singing and preaching. Four young people's prayer services were held in the church near by at 8 a. m.

During the class period F. A. Smith taught the adults; John Rogers taught a class in teacher training; Sister Scrivener taught the Book of Mormon to a fine class of young women; Lewis Bender and Hubert Case taught the boys and young men, and Sister Whitford and others taught the children of primary age. Good interest was manifested in all of the classes.

During the recreational hour volley ball, indoor baseball, and horseshoe pitching were enjoyed by old and young alike. This was by no means a sideline, but was a definite part of the daily program, and the spirit of good sportsmanship was prevalent throughout all of the games.

The following men occupied the pulpit during the preaching hours, and all enjoyed the spirit of preaching: President F. M. Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, Patriarch F. A. Smith, Hubert Case, John Grice, E. S. White, William Grice, and B. E. Brown.

Thursday night was camp fire night. About two hundred and fifty people formed a large circle around the fire and enjoyed themselves singing songs and hymns. Several special numbers, songs, readings, stories, and jokes were rendered. When the fire was well burned down, a wiener roast was enjoyed.

District conference was held on Saturday and Sunday under the leadership of President Smith, Apostle Williams, and the district presidency. William Grice was elected district president, and chose as his counselors, Myron Carr and Henry Scheffer. A reunion committee was elected to arrange for next year's reunion, and a special committee was elected to select permanent reunion grounds.

Glenwood, Iowa

Young People Hold All-day Meeting

The young people of Tabor, Carson, Glenwood, and Shenandoah, Iowa, report an all-day meeting at Glenwood Sunday, August 27.

An eight-thirty worship period was the first event on the day's program, followed by church school classes. Elder O. A. Currie, of Council Bluffs, was the speaker for the eleven o'clock hour. His message was uplifting and full of inspiration for all those who were privileged to attend.

Basket dinner was served at noon and everyone had a wonderful opportunity to get acquainted in a friendly and informal gathering.

Round table discussion was conducted at two-thirty by O. A. Currie, which was the only meeting in the afternoon. Three young girls from Carson, Iowa, gave two entertaining features preceding the discussion which presented some practical suggestions for group activity.

Class period at six-thirty and a program at seven o'clock were the features of the evening in which a number of readings, vocal duets, a piano solo, and an amusing debate were presented.

These several branches have planned an organization under the supervision of A. M. Taylor, who is young people's leader in Shenandoah. A. M. Taylor is supervisor, assisted by a young people's council, consisting of the young people's leaders from each of the branches participating. The purpose of this organization is to so arrange their activities that they will become better acquainted in this part of the district. An all-day meeting at one of these branches is planned to be held once every three months.

All are looking forward to that time when the entire district will be organized in this manner.

Northern Saskatchewan Conference

Attendance From Drouth-stricken Area Larger Than Was Expected

The annual conference of Northern Saskatchewan District has gone into history. Attendance was not quite so large as that of last year, but, considering the hopeless crop prospects and the depredations of grasshoppers and drouth, the number who sacrificed to come was greater than was expected. One truckload drove two hundred and fifty miles over rough roads, through burning heat, after securing government permission to use the truck without license for the trip. An earnest and consecrated attitude was manifested by old and young during the meetings.

A prayer service began the conference Apostle J. F. Curtis and District President E. L. Bowerman in charge. The organization meeting was held at ten-thirty, Brother Curtis, associated with the district presidency and Elder Ward L. Christy, being chosen to preside. Brother Christy acted as chorister, Brother G. A. Jordan, auditor, and Sisters Beckman, Diggle and Brother Bowerman as press committee.

At eleven o'clock Brother Curtis preached and at two-thirty Brother and Sister Christy conducted class work. The evening meeting was preceded by a fifteen-minute song service and Brother Curtis was again the speaker.

Brothers Christy and Elgyn Clark were in charge of Friday's prayer service, and at 10:45 a. m. Brother Bowerman preached. Brothers Gendron, Christy, and Jordan conducted interesting classes that afternoon, and that evening Brother Curtis discoursed on "I Will Build My Church" to a capacity audience.

Saturday's services opened with a prayer service, and the business session followed at ten-thirty. Brother Bowerman's presidential report was optimistic, stressing the growing spirituality of the Saints in spite of their increased financial difficulties. Brother Christy reported on the institutes held in July at Shellbrook and Artland. In his report of the work in the far North Brother Gen-

dron spoke of the Saints' driving thirty miles in wagons to attend services, and told of holding a debate for eight nights with a Bible student.

Brother Bowerman was sustained as president and Sister Beckman as secretary. C. E. Diggle and W. J. Cornish were chosen counselors and Brother Diggle as bishop's agent. A. J. Cornish was recommended as director of Religious Education and Sister Pearl Mogenson was elected chorister. A new office, that of district press convenor, was created. Brother Jordan was elected, and his duty will be to collect news from branches, outlying districts, and isolated Saints and report to the Herald. The following were elected as delegates to General Conference: Mr. and Mrs. Day, Mr. and Mrs. Christy, Mr. and Mrs. Diggle, Mr. and Mrs. Bowerman, and J. A. Jordan.

At 4 p. m. recreation was enjoyed, a rousing game of soft ball being played. In the evening a short sketch, "The Message of the Flowers," was presented by a group of juniors directed by Sister Ethel Piedt. Pearl Mogenson played an accordion solo and Mrs. Boland sang, "If I Have Wounded Any Soul Today," and "Thanks Be to God." Brother Curtis preached on "Baptism."

The Saints came together Sunday morning fasting and in prayer, and a spiritual feast was enjoyed. Brother Gendron and Brother Frank Piedt were spoken to by the Spirit, commended for their efforts, and encouraged to press on. Brother Henry Piedt was ordained an elder by Brothers Curtis and Bowerman.

Church school was held at ten o'clock, Sister Christy in charge. The overflow repaired to the home of Brother and Sister Diggle. Brother Jordan spoke to the young people and Brother Bowerman followed with a stirring appeal for workers in the Lord's vineyard.

At the following service Clyde Ellis, the infant son of Brother and Sister Duckworth, was blessed. Brother Christy followed with a powerful sermon on "The Redemption of Zion."

Brother Bowerman chose "The Organization of the Church" as the subject of his sermon early in the afternoon, following which little Earl Cheeseman was blessed. At 3.45 Brother Curtis was the speaker, and again in the evening. Musical numbers during the afternoon were given by singers of the district. In the evening the young people's choir sang "Rock of Ages."

On Friday and Saturday Sister Mogenson made and sold ice cream, realizing a goodly sum for the benefit of the radio fund. Meals were served to visiting members in the church basement, Sister Christy in charge. Those who labored early and late to provide these meals are to be commended for their help. The local women's auxiliary had a fine exhibit of patchwork quilts, hooked rugs, and other pieces of handwork.

A two-day institute for the young people preceded the conference, Brother Curtis preaching five times during the two days. Brother and Sister Christy assisted with class work at the institute. A sunrise prayer service was held on the river bank by the young people followed by outdoor breakfast. On Wednesday afternoon the picnic was preceded by a swim. During the institute the junior choir provided several musical numbers.

Historic Canadian Branch Holds All-day Services

Saints Come Together From Many Points

Proton Branch held all-day services Sunday, August 20. This is one of the oldest branches in Ontario, having been organized about fifty years ago. The early missionary work was done by J. A. McIntosh, T. A. Phillips, Willard Smith, and R. C. Evans. James McLean was among the members at the organization, and has been president almost continuously since that time. He is still their pastor.

The litle frame church is situated in a beautiful grove between two hills. A couple of hundred yards south a spring of clear, sparkling, cold water flows out of the hillside. Around the church building stand large maple trees, and on the west side of the edifice is the only Latter Day Saint cemetery in this part of Canada. Proton Branch occupies one of the most beautiful church sites anywhere.

In the early days the missionaries had to contend with mobs and bitter opposition, but today the Saints are highly respected in that district.

Services at the all-day meeting were well attended. The church was full and a number sat on benches in the porch and on seats erected outside in front of the open door. The grove was full of parked cars. The weather was ideal for the occasion, and a splendid spirit prevailed. Saints were present from Holstein, Elora, Creemore, Redickville, Grand Valley, Guelph, and Toronto.

A. F. McLean, of Toronto, and brother of Proton's pastor, felt it a treat indeed to visit the branch of his boyhood days and meet again the McMurdos, Campbells, Goheens, Jacks, Batchelors, Daveys, Blacks, Wales, McLeans, and the Taylors from Grand Valley. One of the oldest Saints present was Sister Agnes McMurdo, eighty-two years old. It was in her house on the farm on which the cemetery is located that the first Latter Day Saint sermons were preached. Sister McMurdo enjoyed the day immensely; the "good old days" do not rob her of the joys of present blessings.

Services were as follows: Prayer meeting, 9.30 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m., by A. F. McLean, 2 p. m., by Elder John H. Taylor, and 7 p. m., by Elder George Njeim.

Through all the storm and strife of late years this branch has stood firm and loyal to the church. Unmoved by rumors and tales the Saints have carried on. There are some fine young people at Proton who, no doubt, will make good in the future.

Wimer Mission, Oklahoma

Mission Organization Is Effected

Brother J. L. Creviston, of Mulberry, Kansas, closed his series of meetings at Hudson Sunday night, September 10.

A sacrament service was held at the home of Brother George Stepps Sunday afternoon at two-thirty, the emblems being served to about twenty-five members.

A short business meeting followed the communion service, Brother Creviston being appointed temporary mission president; Sister A. R. Hays, mission secretary. Sister Henry Dunn was recommended as solicitor. Brother Henry Dunn was designated by the Spirit for ordination to the office of priest. Brother Boone Woodall was also told to prepare, for the Lord has a work for him to do.

The group unanimously approved the call of Brother Dunn to the office of priest, and the ordination will no doubt be cared for at the November conference at Nowata.

District President Amos T. Higdon was among those from out of town on that Sunday. He officiated in the services, and spoke to a large group at the morning hour on "The Signs of the Times."

Local Saints hope that the church members everywhere will pray for them in their endeavors to build up the mission at Wimer.

Lennox Mission, California

Hope for More District Get-togethers

This mission served dinner from seven to eight-thirty in the evening a short time ago after which a minstrel show was given by five men.

The event had been well advertised, and Lennox members were happy to have with them about a score of people from each of the Los Angeles churches. Almost one hundred, a record crowd for the mission, were present. Altogether they feel that this was a success financially and socially, and are hoping it is only the beginning of many such occasions when the different groups of this territory gather together.

Sacrament service, August 6, will be remembered here by all as one of the finest worship and communion hours ever enjoyed in the mission.

Lennox Saints have been abundantly blessed as a result of attending the Southern California district reunion held at Laguna Beach, August 26 to September 3. They have returned home with greater zeal to do the work the Father requires of them.

A junior church movement, recently started, is working out most successfully.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Flint, Michigan

Observes Thirty-fourth Branch Anniversary

July and August were quiet months for the Flint congregation. The annual vacation season allowed many members to search out cooler places. A number of the people from this branch were privileged to attend Park of the Pines Reunion.

Arthur DuRose, who has been in charge of the recreation during the summer months, will be missed this year, while attending college. Swimming parties, wiener roasts, and corn roasts have been popular forms of amusement.

July 14, the piano pupils of Ruth Wallace gave a recital at the church.

The last Sunday evening service of July was contributed by the young people. Margaret Woolston played a violin solo. A young men's quartet sang, "Jerusalem." Dorothea Phillips read, "Winning the Youth," by Edgar Guest. Talks were presented on the following subjects, "Boys' Problems," "Problems of Youth," and "Girls' Problems."

An outstanding event of last month was an anniversary service on the morning of August 27. Elder David E. Dowker, an early pastor, was the principal speaker. Other numbers and speakers were, a violin solo, Arlene Burt; "Reminiscences," Myrtle Holden; two quartet selections, L. E. Flowers, DeVere McNamara, Allen Pohly, and Arthur DuRose; a solo, Ruth Yager; a reading, Zola McNamara; a solo, Allen Pohly; "High-lights Through the Years," by Pastor A. H. DuRose.

This branch of the church was organized in Flint thirty-four years ago. In 1894, there were but four members, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leverton and Mr. and Mrs. William Collins. It was in the home of Mr. Leverton that Elder Levi Phelps preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon in the city. Elders E. DeLong and E. J. Goodenough were active in the early days. During the summer of 1898, Elder William Davis and Elder John A. Grant erected the Eastern Michigan district gospel tent on South Saginaw Street. About this time the conference of the Eastern Michigan District was held in the Grand Army of the Republic hall with Elder John J. Cornish, the father of Latter Day Saintism in Michigan, in charge.

August 30, 1899, Flint Branch was organized by Apostle E. C. Briggs, of Lamoni, Iowa, with twenty charter members of whom eight are still living. Elder O. J. Hawn was the first pastor. He was succeeded by Elder William Collins. In 1909, Elder David Dowker was chosen pastor, and it was during his pastorate that the brick veneer church on Newall Street was completed. During the administration of Elder Ralph A. Harder, two missions were begun. These missions were later organized into branches and in 1921, during the pastorate of W. E. Alldread the three branches were amalgamated.

The present pastor, Elder A. H. DuRose, was chosen to succeed Elder Alldread and continued to preside until 1926 when Elder O. A. McDowell, a General Conference appointee, became the presiding officer. In 1929, he was succeeded by Elder Thomas L. Clarke, who resigned in November of last year, and Elder A. H. DuRose was again chosen to preside. The branch has made steady growth throughout the years, and now numbers about eight hundred members.

Toronto, Canada

Summer Activities Merge With Fall and Winter Undertakings

Fall and winter activities are under way in this branch. The young people, led by Bertrum Gozzard, enjoyed a corn roast at Armour Heights the other evening, and there was friendly rivalry in soft ball between the single and married men. On a recent Saturday they had another game at High Park.

The average attendance of the Wednesday evening prayer services during the summer, has been about seventy-five, and the meetings have been interesting. Workers hope now to see the attendance grow.

This branch has Religio on Friday evenings, class study and a short program. There are classes on the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and other subjects.

At the prayer meeting the first Sunday of September several men were called and designated to officiate in different offices of the priesthood. Gerald Parfitt and William Archer were called to the office of priest; George McKay and Leonard Castle, teacher, and Harry Harding, Richard Clift, jr., Milton Broadfoot, and John Rohlig, deacon. These names were presented to and approved at the branch business meeting.

The annual business meeting conveyed on a recent Monday, and encouraging reports were given by departments and officers. This was also the time of election of officers for another year. Pastor J. L. Prentice was unanimously elected for his eleventh year, and his counselors are W. J. Bavington and S. J. Bell. B. H. Hewitt was elected superintendent of Sunday school; Charles A. McLean was chosen to superintend the Religio, and Mrs. Mary Wilson is again the choice as leader of the women's department.

Special mention should be made of the woman's department. They not only undertook to pay the annual interest on the mortgage of about two thousand dollars, but succeeded in collecting this amount in addition to their other work. The branch has also paid five hundred dollars of the principal this year.

Recent speakers have been Bishop A. F. McLean, Elders James A. Wilson, J. L. Prentice, Dougald Cameron, James Pycock, and Charles A. McLean, and Brothers Frederick LeFeuvre, Eldon Oliver, James Whiteman, Ernest Newton, James Bavington, and others. Toronto has a fine group of good speakers.

Brother Prentice has been busy for the past four months trying to work out an annual Ontario Oratorical Competition among the young people of Chatham, London, Owen Sound and Toronto districts. This is being carried out by the district presidents and is meeting the favor of all concerned. There are two loving cups, one for the young men and another for the young women, to be held by the winning district for the year. It is suggested also that a silver medal be given for first prize and a bronze medal for second prize in each case. The first contest will probably be held late this year.

Weekly cottage meetings are opening again in Toronto and suburbs. Philip Crump has taken over the northeastern group; James Whiteman the eastern group; James Kirkpatrick the western group, and Elder W. J. Bavington may have charge of the northern meeting. This is a good way of getting out among strangers and a wonderful help to the priesthood.

The Saints look forward to the harvest home services to be held the first Sunday in October and also to the Toronto district conference which will convene here October 7 and 8.

A. M. Baker Organizes Mission

Seven Are Baptized—Sunday School Is Established

Missionary A. M. Baker has just closed a splendid series of meetings at Brush Arbor, near Dunn, Louisiana, where he baptized seven into the church, five of whom were adults. Large crowds of interested people heard his sermons. Brother Baker also organized a Sunday school there. On one evening a truckload of Saints and friends came from Eros.

Hutchinson, Kansas

C. and Plum Streets

A growing interest is apparent among the young people. They are taking part in social gatherings as well as attending the church school sessions.

Sacrament service, September 3, was well attended.

An ice cream social sponsored by the "Daughters of Zion," brought in a sum of more than six dollars. A watermelon feast was enjoyed by a number of young people recently.

A special program for promotoin day is being planned.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Holden Stake

Young People's Rally and Stake Conference

Holden, Missouri, was the scene of a large gathering of Saints September 8, 9, and 10, when the young people's council of the stake sponsored their second program, and the forty-sixth conference of the stake combined sessions. Never before have so many young people voted in business session in this stake.

The church was filled with young and old, and the meetings were enjoyed by everyone. The first session at the church on Friday night, was recreational and social, the main object being for the people to get acquainted. Gladys Carr was in charge, assisted by Holden young people.

A prayer meeting in the morning opened Saturday's activities. Then came the conference business session in charge of Apostle F. Henry Edwards and the stake presidency. (See conference minutes in The Bulletin Board, this issue.)

The young people formed the nucleus of a large class taught by Apostle F. Henry Edwards early Saturday afternoon. Their subject was "Recreation." Then the rest of the afternoon was given over to volley ball. Eight boys' teams and five girls' teams vied for the court championship. There was also a game between the "preachers" and a boys' team, and the final play-off was held that night after the program at the church. Sedalia boys won.

The principal feature of the evening's program, backed by the young people's council, was a play given by the Lees Summit Dramatic Club, which portrayed the home of Lazarus after his resurrection from the dead at the call of the Master. This was a creditable offering.

The Sunday morning prayer service was well attended. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the eleven o'clock speaker, choosing as the foundation of his sermon, Acts 2: 17, 18. Five hundred people heard his discourse.

The women of the catering committee served two hundred at dinner Sunday, and the grounds of Holden Home were dotted with a number of family dinner parties.

Early in the afternoon, the stake was presented, through its presidency, an enlarged picture of Elder D. J. Krahl, first stake president, commemorating his labors in this territory. This picture, which was done by the Graphic Arts studio, will hang in Holden Church. Sister Kraul was on the platform and made appropriate remarks as she unveiled the portrait. Tributes to Brother Krahl were offered by his first counselor, F. A. McWethy and Apostle Edwards. This ceremony revived the memory of a good and faithful man.

The conference adjourned shortly after the ordination service that afternoon at which time the men whose names had been approved by the conference, were set apart to perform the duties of their respective offices.

Then singers who are to participate in the Harvest Home Festival Chorus were coached in a two-hour rehearsal by Paul N. Craig, director of the chorus.

Beginning September 13, the stake president and G. R. Wells of the stake council, launched a visiting campaign. They plan to visit every branch of the stake, to be present at annual business meetings.

On the evening of September 13, adults and young people met in the Holden Home chapel for a final prayer service with members of the Home family before their departure for Lamoni, to take up residence in the Saints' Home building there. Considerations of economy prompted this move of the old people from the Holden Home which was opened in 1917.

A call to the presidency from Lawrence, Kansas, for elders to administer was issued by Brother Gilson and Sister Blanche Christensen Norris a short time ago and answered by Gomer Wells and G. F. Baker.

Brother and Sister W. H. Eliason and family who spent the last year at Columbia, Missouri, where Brother Eliason attended the State university, made a brief visit at Holden on their way to Davis City, Iowa, where Brother Eliason has a position in the school. The Saints regret to lose this excellent family from the stake.

Myrtle and Gladys Carr have enrolled for the year in the State Teachers College at Warrensburg. Four Holden young people are teaching in Johnson County schools this year, Misses Bernice Hampton and Lucille Burroughs in Holden High School; Miss Mary Beebe and Robert Thistlewaite in rural schools.

Chicago, Illinois

West Pullman Church, 11926 Parnell Avenue

Being confronted with the urgent necessity of meeting an obligation of long standing, this congregation found its members willing and eager to do their part.

The choir, organized a short time ago, is rendering excellent music each Sunday. The singers are helping in a financial as well as in a spiritual way. They give a bake sale each Saturday. Such opportunities to do their part in church work are appreciated by the members.

Choir members also have been redecorating the church building, and the companionship they enjoyed while working together is an inspiration to all. They completed the work in time for the all-day meeting, September 24.

This was rally day for the congregation, and Brother Frank Almond, who had not been in their midst for some time was the morning speaker; Evangelist F. G. Pitt delivered the evening sermon. A basket dinner was enjoyed at noon.

A special prayer service for Sister Irene Scribner, who has been ill for some time, will be held September 27. The congregation asks all Saints to join them in prayer in this sister's behalf, that she may be restored to health. The manner in which she strives to serve her Master is an inspiration to those who know her.

Omaha, Nebraska

Thirty-sixth and Burt Streets

At the annual business meeting held September 11, the following officers were chosen: Ray Whiting is to continue as pastor, having as his associates Elders R. W. Scott and Guy Riley; Cecil Starks is director of the church school; Sister Tabor has charge of the adult women's group; Doris Gamet, the young people; and Lottie Hodges, the children's division. Dorothy Stoft will continue as the choir director. The names of Guy Riley to be ordained to an elder, and Arthur Albright to a priest, were approved.

The social side of the branch was greatly stimulated by the Sunday school picnic held September 9, in one of Omaha's beautiful parks. About two hundred and fifty gathered to participate in friendly chats, races, games, contests, some exciting volley ball games, and lastly, plenty of good food.

Brother Al Merchant is doing very fine work as teacher of the young people's class. Just recently the class organized, choosing Henry Anderson as president; Arthur Albright, vice president, and Margaret Watkins, secretary. They adopted the name of O. T. Z., meaning "Onward to Zion." The first large undertaking of the class will be an indoor carnival held at the church the evening of September 29. The proceeds are to help out with branch expenses and buy quarterlies for the coming year.

Sunday evening, of October 1, the dramatics group, under the direction of George Gates, will present a play, "The Wife of Judas." Much hard work has been put in this play, and the congregation is anticipating a real treat.

The women's department, during the past year, has been divided into a number of groups and the last Friday of each month, one group put on a supper. As a result they have turned into the church treasury $276.62. From the missionary envelopes they took in $95.09. Thursday September 21, they met at the home of Sister Anderson to reorganize and formulate plans for the coming year. Right now they are busy canning fruits and vegetables, which have been donated for the poor this winter. Over two hundred quarts have been canned already.

The spiritual side of the latter-day message is taking new hold in the hearts of many. Weekly prayer meetings, held each Wednesday night, are very successful. The Saints look forward to this hour with God in the atmosphere of peace and reverence, when the heavy burdens of the day are laid aside and new hope and courage are found. God has seen fit to be there in power and a few weeks ago spoke to the worshipers through his servant, Pastor Ray Whiting. The result of this is spiritual growth throughout the branch.

Sunday services are held as follows: Family worship hour and church school nine-forty-five to eleven. Immediately following is a preaching service, and the evening service is at seven-thirty. A priesthood meeting is held the afternoon of the first Sunday of each month.

Auditorium a Missionary Center

Three Thousand Visitors There in Ninety Days

The missionary efforts on the part of the guides at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, deepen in interest as is evidenced by over three thousand tourists and visitors who have registered in the past ninety days. Also several hundred who visited the building did not register.

It is not unusual, according to Brother C. J. Hunt who acts as one of the reception committee and guides, for groups of visitors to spend from one-half to two hours asking questions and listening to answers from those who show them about. This means the preaching of many sermonets each week. At times three experienced elders are explaining the gospel to people in different parts of the great building. They are trying in this way to sow the precious gospel seed in humility, faith, hope, and charity.

A larger per cent of Utah church members visit the Auditorium than people of other denominations. Most of these are friendly and deeply interested in the teachings and practices of the Reorganized Church.

The burden of the Auditorium guide work continues to rest largely on Elders J. W. A. Bailey, Stephen S. Smith, and C. J. Hunt. In conjunction with their guiding and speaking, these men sell church books and tracts.

The Auditorium, as a building, is proving a greater drawing card for the church each year, and when it is finished, will be much more attractive than it is at present and of use to thousands of people. At present it is a missionary center.

Next week the annual church Harvest Home Festival will be held in the lower room of this building. The daily papers estimated that fifty thousands people viewed the exhibits of the festival a year ago, and an even larger attendance is expected this year.

Independence

The women's department made a festive occasion of their regular meeting Monday, September 18, celebrating with a birthday offering party for the benefit of their local fund sacrifice campaign, Mrs. C. C. Koehler in charge. Each woman was asked to put into her offering envelope as many pennies as she was years old. Several of advanced age contributed to the amount raised on that day (more than one hundred and thirty dollars). A loyal sister, ninety-one years old, was present and gave her offering. Pastor J. F. Sheehy and Bishop J. S. Kelley were also there. Entertainment of the hour was furnished by Mrs. S. A. Burgess, vocal soloist; Mrs. Nell Brocaw who read an original poem, and a group of Walnut Park women who presented an original playlet.

The women hope to conclude their local fund campaign within a period of six weeks.

Saints in many parts of the church were much interested in a wedding recently solemnized at Independence, that of Sister Joanna Mae Turpen, of Independence, and Elder William B. Farley, or Durango, Colorado. On August 27, the marriage ceremony occurred at the bride's home, Elder J. W. A. Bailey officiating. Sister Farley was the widow of Mark M. Turpen, former missionary of the church. She is a well-known worker in Independence. Brother and Sister Farley left Independence last week to make their home in Colorado.

There will be a full rehearsal of the Harvest Festival Chorus next Sunday at three o'clock, at the Auditorium, Paul N. Craig directing. All singers who are to sing in the concert the following Sunday should be present. The orchestra will be present to assist.

The lower room of the Auditorium is now the scene of much activity as stakes, districts, clubs and congregations make ready their exhibits for the Harvest Home Festival which will open its doors next Tuesday, October 3.

Stone Church

Church school officers for the new year have been chosen, and will be at their posts of duty October 1: Superintendent, W. Earl Page; assistant superintendents, Evan A. Fry and J. Adelbert Withee, and the following department heads: Beginner, Mrs. C. R. Smith; primary, Miss Ruby Williamson; junior, Mr. and Mrs. James Moses; intermediate, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jennings; young people, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Beck, and adult department, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Kelsey. Accordingly, the Stone Church School executive council will have several new members—the superintendent and his two assistants, Mr. and Mrs. Moses, Mr. and Mrs. Jennings, and Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey. Many new plans have been formulated for the school, and will be launched at once under the leadership of this corps of officers and helpers.

A sermon full of timely advice was given to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning, by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who chose as his text, Exodus 2: 4, "What is that in thy hand?" The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul Craig delivered special music, with Mrs. Nina Smith and Mrs. Alice Burgess singing the solos.

Elder J. W. Davis delivered the evening address, and was introduced to the congregation by Elder T. A. Beck. Brother Beck was assisted by Almer Sheehy, who offered the invocation. Brother Colin Ferrit led the congregational singing. The congregation was favored with two selections from the Cantanina Chorus.

The young people's department of the Stone Church School, directed by Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Beck, held a Harvest Home Festival offering service Sunday morning, all members of the department having been invited to bring an offering of canned goods for this department's exhibit at the festival. The service was conducted in the regular meeting room of the young people at the Auditorium, and at the same hour officers of the department made welcome more than fifty new members promoted from the intermediate department of the church school.

Second Church

Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the speaker Sunday morning and his theme was "The Constructive Periods of Latter Day Saintism." Music was furnished by the choir.

Downstairs the juniors were entertained by a story told by Mrs. Leonard Lea; readings by Helen Robinson and Maidie Fern Murdock; a piano solo by Billy McPherson, and a talk by Brother Murdock.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood discoursed on the theme, "Priesthood Through Lineage," in the evening.

Mrs. A. J. Myers, eighty-one years old, has put up thirty-two quarts of tomatoes from her own garden for the Harvest Home Festival.

Second Church was the place of meeting for all church school superintendents, assistants, and supervisors, last Wednesday evening at eight o'clock. This was an organization and worship service in charge of the general director of Religious Education, W. Earl Page.

Liberty Street Church

At the church school Sunday morning a quartet composed of the Misses Mabel and Ruth Tignor, Joseph Frick, and Lucien Amos, sang "Come Close to the Savior."

The beautiful hymn-anthem, "Burst, Ye Emerald Gates," opened the eleven o'clock service. The choir sang "Alas, and Did My Savior Bleed?" and "Babylon." Brother Cecil Walker, recently ordained to the priesthood, preached a splendid sermon on "In Your Patience Possess Ye Your Souls." This was his second sermon, the first being delivered at Quindaro Church, Kansas City Stake, in August.

At the same hour Raymond Wrigley talked to the juniors on "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint."

Sunday night Elder J. W. A. Bailey began a series of three lecture-sermons both educational and interesting.

Walnut Park Church

Promotion Day in the church school was observed Sunday morning. At this time also the new officers of the school took their places and began the work of the new school year. Following the class period, the orchestra, under the direction of Brother Orlando Nace, played a special number.

The Swastika Class elected new officers Sunday morning, those who will serve this class being: President, Gomer Stowell; vice president, George Stowell; and secretary, Vivian Sackman.

Doctor Charles F. Grabske was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, and Patriarch F. A. Smith preached in the evening.

Twenty-five members of the Swastika Class of the church school spent a happy evening last week playing games and pulling taffy. Kenneth Morford, teacher, who is leaving to become assistant superintendent of the church school, was presented an ornamental lamp in appreciation of his work of the last two years. Paul Anderson, class president, made the presentation.

Enoch Hill Church

Last Wednesday evening the Saints assembled at the church for business meeting. Elder E. A. Thomas, the new pastor, was there and named as his associates Elders J. E. Martin and C. E. Beal. The congregation decided to pay the taxes on six of the lots south of the church in order to reserve them as playground for the young people.

Those who attend the early morning prayer service on Sunday morning are well repaid for their efforts.

The splendid church school worship program arranged by Miss Nellie Mae Kramer, Sunday morning was much appreciated. "As Ye Do It Unto the Least of These," was the theme.

Kenneth Lee, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Harter, was blessed at the eleven o'clock service. Mrs. Harter was formerly Miss Dorothy Kipp. Elder H. E. Winegar was the speaker at this hour. Sister Henrietta Allen sang, "Bring All Your Tithes Into the Storehouse," and the choir sang, "I Saw Another Angel Fly."

Elder H. L. Barto preached his farewell sermon to the congregation Sunday evening. At the close of the service Sister Allen had the choir and congregation sing, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." Brother Barto has made a capable pastor and the Saints are sorry to see him go, nevertheless they feel that they will enjoy the association of the new pastor, Brother Thomas.

Englewood Church

At the business meeting, September 13, the general officers were sustained for another year; R. W. Howery, pastor; A. G. Hougas, assistant pastor and director of church school; Arthur Welch, assistant pastor and director of young people's activities.

On Friday night of the same week the young people had a party at the home of Marie Wyatt. They had their first regular Religio meeting the Sunday evening following. They have not decided definitely what the program will be for the coming season, but are going to do something worth while. Englewood has a splendid group of young people, and under the direction of Brother Welch will have an enjoyable and profitable time. At the class period September 17, they listened to a talk by Apostle J. F. Curtis.

September 17, the speaker at eleven o'clock was Apostle J. F. Curtis. At seven-thirty Patriarch Ammon White occupied the stand. The choir assisted at both services. The choir, under the direction of Brother Albert Brackenberry, is hard at work on the music for the Harvest Home Festival.

The Harvest Home Festival work at Englewood is under the efficient direction of Mrs. Earl Moore. She will be ably assisted by Gladys Welch, Eva Willis, Rachel Vaughn, Grace McIntosh, and Edna Long. Englewood has always ranked high in the festival.

The Z. O. A. Class is just finishing a year of study of the Doctrine and Covenants, having used the quarterlies written by Brother F. Henry Edwards. They have decided to study the Book of Mormon for the coming year. A teacher has not yet been decided upon. They took a trip to Bates City, September 24. All took a basket dinner and left immediately after preaching service, driving to the home of Brother Perry Hiles for the picnic dinner. Brother Hiles is a former pastor of Englewood.

Mrs. A. G. Hougas has just returned from a short visit to Lamoni and Carson, Iowa. She was called to Lamoni by the death of a sister-in-law.

Spring Branch Church

Much comfort and inspiration come to the Saints of this congregation through their Wednesday evening and Sunday morning prayer services. The local priesthood are faithful in taking charge.

At the close of the Sunday school hour Sunday morning Bishop C. J. Hunt talked to the children. He was also the eleven o'clock speaker, and used the hour to relate many of his gospel experiences. The choir sang, "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly."

Sunday afternoon the funeral of Sister Maude Trumble who lived in this district, was held at Liberty Street Church. Elder Joseph Luff read her patriarchal blessing instead of preaching a sermon, this being her request. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Trumble is survived by a son, Maynard; a brother, George E. Robertson; three sisters, Mrs. Addie Hazard, Mrs. Anna Belle Myers, and Mrs. Jennie Gibson, and four grandchildren.

The church school opened its evening session as usual, and an entertaining program concluded the hour.

Elder Leonard White was the evening speaker, and Francis Tankard sang "This Holy Hour."

Central Michigan District

Young People Hold Special Meeting

The regular get together of Central Michigan young people was held at Bentley, Thursday, September 7. A large crowd was in attendance and an impromptu program was thoroughly enjoyed. Apostle D. T. Williams, the guest speaker, gave an interesting talk on the progress of the young people and the possible results to be obtained from such gatherings. Brother Hector McKinnon, of Gaylord, Michigan, was also present and entertained the audience with his clever songs and a brief talk. Refreshments were served after which many "pep" songs were sung and the meeting dismissed.

The next get together of Central Michigan young people will be held at Saginaw, Michigan. Plans are being completed to have all-day services the second Sunday in November, and special speakers will be present. Later announcements will be made as to the schedule of meetings and place of gathering.

An invitation is extended to all surrounding districts to attend this get together, and all others who are interested in the progress of the young people are asked to be present.

Conference Minutes

HOLDEN STAKE.—The forty-sixth conference of this stake occurred September 8, 9, and 10, in conjunction with a program sponsored by the stake young people's council, at Holden, Missouri. Never before have so many young people voted in a business session. Saturday morning's exercises opened with a prayer meeting at eight-thirty, following which was the business session of the conference in charge of Apostle F. Henry Edwards, assisted by the stake presidency, W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy. Brother Edwards urged the many young people present to participate in this conference as part of the church personnel rather than a separate division of the church. Secretary for the conference, Gladys Beebe, the stake secretary; press committee, Gomer R. Wells. From the report of the stake presidency the following is taken: "The Holden Stake comprises fourteen branches and one mission in twelve counties: Jackson (outside of Independence and greater Kansas City), Cass, Lafayette, Johnson, Pettis, Saline, Moniteau, Cooper, and Cole, in Missouri; Johnson, Miami, and Wyandotte, in Kansas. Branches are located at Atherton, Blue Springs, Buckner, Grandview, and Lees Summit in Jackson County; Bates City and Lexington in Lafayette; Holden, Knobnoster, Post Oak and Warrensburg in Johnson County (also Strasburg Mission); Marshall in Saline County; Sedalia in Pettis and Jefferson City in Cole. The following counties have no organization: Johnson, Wyandotte and Miami in Kansas; Cass, Cooper, and Moniteau, in Missouri. In these counties there is a nonresident list of over two hundred and no doubt a number who are unknown to our stake records. Thus it appears that the widely scattered condition in a rather far-flung territory for a stake makes the work of administrative officers difficult, especially in the last three years. (There seems also opportunity in this territory for more missionary work to be done). The pastors of all the branches except one are struggling against the effects of the depression, giving their time to branch work under a great handicap. Atherton shows the largest increase in members due mostly to transfers, present enrollment being over two hundred. Buckner, with no place of meeting, has temporarily discontinued branch services. The stake has a number of promising young men, and a host of young people who share their interests in the church. This encourages us as to the work of the future. At last conference the young people's council was organized under the direction of President F. M. McDowell. This council sponsoring a young people's meeting at this time, has brought together the largest percentage of this part of the stake membership we have ever had, nearly every branch being represented. As always, Zion is still our objective, the main factors being, gathering and stewardship with the stake bishopric and stake council taking leading part. We are glad to report that the bishopric and council recently took steps toward outlining and putting into effect such definite preparation as shall, we hope, bring us nearer to the cherished goal. The stake council now numbers only nine members, due to the death of Brother C. V. Hopkins and the removal of Brother W. H. Eliason to Lamoni Stake. The presidency recommends that you consider the feasibility of holding a reunion some time in 1934. Responding to your request of last conference, letters have been sent to all pastors in the stake calling attention to the Harvest Home Festival. Space has been secured for an exhibit and a committee appointed to arrange same." Stake Bishop J. A. Koehler reported: "There have been no changes in the building and operating funds since last report except that Atherton contributed $2 to the former and $4 to the latter. The Sedalia dining hall has been abandoned, the building wrecked, and materials used for church purposes in the stake with the exception of a small quantity for which no money returns have been made. When accounts for this material are settled, due credits will be given the building fund, and the status of the account reported to the stake conference. The stewardship project at Atherton is at a standstill because of the financial circumstances of the general church and the need of a decision by the general church officers on a long-time economic set-up for such projects. The following is a statement of tithes and offerings by branches, from September 1, 1932, to September 1, 1933: Atherton, $442.06; Bates City, $281.02; Blue Springs, $189.60; Buckner (no meetings) $13.74; Grandview, $106.92; Holden, $915.20; Jefferson City, $308.68; Knobnoster, $54.91; Lees Summit, $423.15; Lexington, $134.20; Marshall, $208.34; Post Oak, $54.05; Sedalia, $199.47; Warrensburg, $114.42; scattered members, $689.90. Total, $4,135.66." (Chairman Edwards, having used his pencil and simple arithmetic, remarked that the average per member contributed in the stake, was $1.93.) The statistical report by the stake recorded: "Number at last report, September 30, 1932, 2,045. Gain by transfer, 161; by baptism, 63; total gain, September, July 31, 1933, 224. Loss (during same period) by transfer, 113; by death, 14; total loss, 127. Net gain, 97. Total enrollment, July 1, 1933, 2,142." The report of the stake quorum of elders, G. F. Baker, secretary for eleven months, showed from nine elders: Sermons, 124; total services attended, 860; baptized, 11; confirmed, 14; children blessed, 4; administrations to sick, 261; marriages, 5; administered sacrament, 30 times; house-to-house calls, 320; books sold, 4; Herald subscriptions, 2." The following report was submitted by Gladys Beebe, president of the young people's council: "Since the organization of Holden Stake young people last October, we have tried, as council members, to visit each group in the stake, helping with local problems wherever we could. Have held one institute; made provision for group attendance at the Lamoni Youth Conference, and carried on an inventory campaign in the stake. At present one outstanding need is for more definite contacts with local young people's leaders. As our organization is now getting better under way, we plan to find means of doing this at the present conference." Since the director of church schools, W. H. Eliason, moved from the stake last fall, the matter of filling the vacancy fell on the stake presidency who last spring made interim appointment of G. R. Wells. Brother Wells reported that physical disability and the moving of his family from Lamoni to Independence had permitted him to do but little. The following were recommended for ordination by the stake high council: To the office of elder (concurred in by First Presidency): Gerald G. Phillips and Charles Joice, both of Blue Springs Branch. Priest, Charles Benjamin Kramer, of Knobnoster; Wendell M. VanTuyl and Clifford J. Long, of Atherton; Ervin Floyd Mengel, of Lees Summit; Fred Immer, of Buckner; Lawrence Edward Martin and Earl Delmer Grubb, of Blue Springs; Ammon Andes, of Warrensburg. Teacher: Christopher Kearns, of Lees Summit. Deacon, Fred Wilson, of Blue Springs. After a unanimous vote to approve, voting on each name separately, these brethren were ordained on Sunday afternoon with the exception of Brother Gerald Phillips who was ordained at Blue Springs the following Sunday. Acting upon the suggestion of the stake presidency, the conference referred the matter of next year's reunion to the stake high council, requesting that it report to the present conference. The council's recommendation was that the matter be referred to the next stake conference for decision after certain surveys have been made. Stake officers were unanimously sustained as follows: Presidency, W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy; stake bishopric, J. A. Koehler, Amos Allen, and C. F. Scarcliff; the high council (with nine members); elders' quorum; musical director, Mrs. A. F. Haus; director of Religious Education, G. R. Wells; recorder, Myrtle Carr, and secretary, Gladys Beebe.

WEST VIRGINIA.—The forty-second annual conference of this district was held with Clarksburg Branch August 26 and 27. Business meeting convened at 2 p. m., District President A. C. Silvers in charge, assisted by G. W. Lawson, vice president, and Bishop H. E. French, of Columbus, Ohio. Harry B. Smith was selected to act as secretary pro tem. Bishop French stated in a short talk that this was his first visit to a conference of West Virginia District, and commended the Clarksburg Branch on the good condition of its church building. L. D. Ullom, of Bellaire, Ohio, also spoke briefly. Reports of officers, branches and ministry were next in order though few ministerial reports were made. A detailed report from the bishop's agent was read and posted where all might study it. The question of consolidating West Virginia and Wheeling districts was raised, but after some discussion was dropped for the present. Brother French presented the Kirtland reunion question, advising the Saints of this district to take a more active part in the reunion, thereby receiving the spiritual benefits of this important gathering. He also gave a report on the debt on the dining hall, requesting this district to help pay. A. C. Silvers was reelected district president and retained as his helpers, Otis Forester and G. W. Lawson. Other district officers were sustained. The question of a historian was raised, but no action was taken. It was decided to have special conference in the spring at which time the delegates to General Conference will be elected. Bishop French preached a fine sermon on stewardships at seven-forty-five Saturday night. The priesthood met at 8 a. m. Sunday, Brothers A. C. Silvers and H. E. French giving fine instruction. A short time was devoted to answering questions. Sunday school was at nine-thirty, district and branch officers in charge. More than one hundred were present. Frank L. Shinn, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, but formerly of Clarksburg, was the speaker in the morning and his theme was "The Price of Eternal Life." Five were baptized at one-thirty, Romeo M. Calhoun and his three children, Lucille, Laverna, and Roberta, and Madalene Williams. All were confirmed at the two o'clock prayer service. A good number were present at the conference on Sunday. Old friendships were renewed and new ones were made. A vote of thanks was given Clarksburg Saints for their hospitality during the conference. The meetings adjourned to gather at such time and place as the district presidency select.

Our Departed Ones

GURWELL.—Amy T. Gurwell was born October 16, 1862, at Bloomington, Illinois. She died September 11, 1933, at the Independence Sanitarium of sleeping sickness and double pneumonia. For more than thirty-eight years, she was a loyal member of the Reorganized Church, and supporter of the gospel of Christ as she was taught it by the preaching of Elder T. W. Chatburn who baptized her at Kingston, Missouri, in 1895. In 1909, she was married to C. A. Gurwell, and moved from Saint Louis to Independence, where they had charge of the United Order of Enoch House, from 1911 to 1916. She leaves her husband, two children by a former marriage, two granddaughters, and a brother, in Colorado. Her funeral was conducted by Elder James W. Davis, former missionary to Australia, whom she cared for through a severe illness in her home in Saint Louis. He preached a most comforting and appropriate sermon from the words of David, "For so He giveth his beloved sleep." (Psalm 127: 2.) The poor of her community will miss her.

SMITH.—John T. Smith was born at Quincy, Illinois, August 28, 1856, and died June 3, 1933, near Tulare, California. He was brought across the plains and mountains to California when but three years of age. Married Amanda Damron in 1879, and to them nine children were born. All of these, with his wife, nine grandchildren, and two sisters survive him. The children are: Loyd, Arthur, Cora and Nannie at home; J. T. Smith, jr., of Lees Summit, Missouri; Mrs. O. L. Best and Charley Smith, of Mae, Oklahoma, and Mrs. Lucy Spuhler, of Strathmore, California. Mr. Smith lived in several western localities where he and his family farmed successfully and made a wide circle of friends. He united with the church in 1891, and with the help of his faithful wife reared his children to become loyal Latter Day Saints. Interment was in Tulare Cemetery, the funeral services being conducted by Elder A. S. Votaw, of Fresno, California.

LUKENBILL — Charles Ernest Lukenbill passed away at his home in Appleton City, Missouri, August 28, 1933, and was laid to rest on the thirty-fifth anniversary of his birth, in the Appleton City cemetery. He was baptized a member of the church, July 18, 1903. A few years later was ordained to the office of teacher, wherein he occupied faithfully. Siegfried, of Independence, Missouri, preached the funeral sermon.

JENSEN.—Henry Christian Jensen died at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 12, 1933, after an illness of more than a year. He was born in Denmark, January 14, 1864, and came to Iowa when about four years of age; grew to manhood in Council Bluffs, Iowa. His life work was that of farming. He retired from his work because of physical decline. He was married to Miss Ida May Smith, December 8, 1897. To this union were born two children, a son, John, and a daughter, Mrs. Grace Fouts, both of Lovelend, Iowa. He was baptized by Elder E. Y. Hunker, April 1, 1933, at Council Bluffs, after several years of careful examination of the faith of Saints. He endured his many months of illness patiently and uncompiainingly, although he had a great desire to live for the good he thought to do. At his request the funeral sermon was preached by Elder D. R. Chambers, of Magnolia, Iowa. The services was in charge of Elder J. F. Mintun, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 14, 1933, attended by a large group of his many friends.

She spent her early life at Missouri Valley, graduating from the high school in that city. She was baptized a member of the church, June 17, 1914, by Elder Hayden. She was a devoted and true follower of the Christ. She was married to August Herman, June 14, 1919, and to them were born two children, a daughter, Norma Jean, age eight, and a son, Fredrick Hale, age five. With her husband and children she moved to Independence in 1929, where she has since resided. Her father, Ed Gill, preceded her in death about ten months ago. There remain to mourn her passing, besides the husband and two children of the home, her mother, Mrs. Ed Gill; one brother, Harry Gill, of Missouri Valley, Iowa; one sister, Mrs. Frank C. Lightell, of Omaha, Nebraska; other relatives and a host of friends. Funeral services were held September 20, in the Walnut Park Church, of which she was a member, in charge of the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elder George Jenkins. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery in Independence.

The Pigeonhole

Potatoes

His Dignity was walking down the street from the church. A poorly dressed boy was walking ahead of him. He attempted to pass, but the little fellow kept up with him. Thinking the boy wished to keep ahead, H. D. fell behind. The boy fell back too. This seemed odd, for not a word was spoken. Turning the corner towards home, H. D. was surprised to see that the boy followed too, trying to stretch his young legs to keep up.

Then H. D. unfroze. He spoke to the boy.

"Are you trying to walk with me?"

"Yes. But you walk pretty fast!" H. D. slowed down. He felt flattered that he had been honored by the boy's confidence.

In the conversation that followed, it came out that the boy was ten, and that he was carrying home some potatoes for Sunday dinner. Just potatoes. (Papa was out of work.) The little fellow had found a ring—"a big ruby with a diamond right in the center. Wouldn't I be lucky if it was real?" The ruby was his birthstone. Somebody had given him a penny, and he had bought a bit of candy in a brightly colored wrapper for his sister—his "big sister" he called her—she was "fifteen or sixteen." Potatoes for Sunday dinner were no tragedy—just an incident to be forgotten. He shifted them without resentment to the other arm as he walked. H. D. halted at his own door. "Good-bye," he said, and saluted. A good soldier, no matter how small, deserves respect. And the boy tipped his hat. "Potatoes for Sunday dinner! Nothing else!" And the prayer of thanks that H. D. offered over his own dinner was very humble, and more than usually fervent.

The Pigeon fluttered a wing over the editorial Bible to dust it. We took the rebuke silently. "I am not much in sympathy with people who try to make out that Jesus was just another super-salesman," he said. "If He was, he threw away a lot of wealthy prospects!"

This was a good chance for Pigeonette. "You men often like to pretend that whatever you are is the best thing in the world to be. And to prove it, you go about pretending that Jesus was the Great Teacher, the Great Physician, the Great Salesman, and other things. Why can't you be satisfied with Him as the Savior?"

N. R. A.

The Pigeon fluttered in from the shop. "The Big Boss says that the NRA emblem isn't the 'mark of the beast' of Revelation 13 at all," he informed us. "He says that it fits 'the land shadowing with wings' of Isaiah 18 much better!" And the Pigeon gave three throaty coos in succession.

At a recent prayer meeting the Saints of Central Church, Chicago, were admonished to "honor the past, consecrate the present, and have faith in the future." They consider it a worthy slogan for a congregation of Saints.

Editorial

"Keep the Law"

Last week's Herald contained a communication from the First Presidency dealing with the present necessities, the problems, and the future responsibilities of the church and its people, and calling the people forward to a further effort to meet the challenge of the times.

A request comes from the Presiding Bishopric that the days from November 12 to December 3, inclusive, be set aside as a period of education and solicitation for a "Keep the Law" program for the church.

In consonance with this request, the First Presidency has set aside the period designated above for that purpose. And they call upon all the members of the church, and especially the priesthood, to lend every aid possible for the successful prosecution of the period of education, in order that all may be instructed as to the duties of the membership under the divine law of the church.

Some members do not keep the law because they do not understand it; others do not keep it because they have not been asked. During this "Keep the Law" period we earnestly hope that no member will henceforth have either of these excuses for noncompliance.

Material has been prepared, and will shortly be placed in the hand of bishops, bishops' agents, solicitors, and pastors, for the teaching of the law. Let us make our plans now, in branches, in districts, and in the unorganized territories, to disseminate this information concerning the law, so that all shall be informed and be given an opportunity to comply.

In our hands is now placed a great opportunity. May God guide us so that it may not be unfulfilled. If all will unite in this purpose we are certain of the reward of spiritual blessings. F. M. S.

Another striking proof that brain power depends not upon size but upon quality has just been provided at the Academy of Medicine. The brain of the late Anatole France has been found to weigh only 1.017 grammes, against an average of 1.360 grammes for adult males.

It will be recalled that the brain of Gambetta, despite the leonine appearance of his head, weighed less than that of a dressmaker, and that that of the "godlike" Daniel Webster exactly balanced that of the notorious Indian chief, Geronimo.—Paris dispatch to the New York Herald-Tribune.

Victories for Justice

There is a nation-wide rejoicing at the success of federal agents in apprehending and prosecuting to conviction a number of notorious kidnapers and extortioners in recent weeks. It is encouraging to know that these things can be stopped.

There is a new hardiness in juries in dealing with these criminals. No longer are the sentimental and emotional pleas of defense lawyers taken so seriously as they used to be. There will probably be fewer miscarriages of justice in releasing dangerous criminals to prey upon the public.

The records of some of these criminals are amazing. Time after time they have been committed to prison for terms that should have protected the public from their depredations, only to be released through some unexplained official action. It is as certain that released murderers will kill again, according to these records, as that they have been released.

Why all the public sympathy should go to the criminal, as it has many times in the past, and none to the victims, is hard to understand. "He is loyal to his friends," the defending attorney says, and applies his handkerchief to his eyes. The jury weeps, too. "He was always good to his mother," and there is another acquittal. "His mother will not believe that he committed the crimes attributed to him," was a newspaper story concerning a machine gunner lately convicted. Fortunately, juries are not so much influenced by that sort of thing now as formerly.

The American people seem to be regaining some of their former common sense regarding these things. It is a wholesome sign. Perhaps simple righteousness and honesty will become popular again. L. L.

Prices Soon to Advance

On all church books and printing supplies, prices are due to advance before long. The costs of paper, ink, and other supplies have increased recently and may go higher. The wage scale has been raised.

Patrons are urged to take advantage of present very low prices while they last. Low priced stocks will soon be exhausted in many lines. Take advantage of some of the lowest prices in history. Catalogs will be sent free on request.

Hitch-Hikers

"Stay at Home!" Says the Government

Last week we received a letter of protest about a note in the "Pigeonhole" on the hitch-hikers. The note contained a warning against the dangers to motorists in picking up this type of traveler. The signers of the letter feel that the note was unfair, and they demand an apology. An extract of the letter, too long to quote in full, follows:

"On reading the Herald of September 19, I was shocked to see the article on "Hitch-hikers." I cannot conceive the reason why the Editors allowed such an insult to those who are obliged to seek a ride to see their loved ones, to be printed in such a sacred paper. I happen to be a modern hitch-hiker, and a member of the gospel and I can tell you very frankly that I am far from being a parasite. Several other members of the church have voiced their disapproval of this item in your paper, and I sincerely think you owe us an apology."

The Editors are willing to print a fair protest. But they feel that further warning, rather than apology, is called for in this case.

When one knows people who have been attacked, robbed, and slugged by hitch-hikers, he does not apologize for a warning. And when he reads of many cases in the newspapers, he feels even less inclined to apologize.

The note in question warned the drivers of cars. This note will serve to extend the warning to the hitch-hikers.

Morris Lewis, director of transient activities in the federal emergency relief administration, estimates that there are between 1¼ and 1½ million transient unemployed persons in the United States. Quoted in an article in the Kansas City Star, he says: "What these transients can't see is that all the breaks are against them when they leave home. When jobs are open preference is almost always given to local people. That's why we're urging them to head for home."

Transient unemployed people quickly lose the right to relief in some states which residence in one place will give them.

One of the first steps towards the helping of the roving unemployed will be a nation-wide drive against hitch-hiking, according to the article in the Star.

According to reports from social workers, the best thing in the world for transients is to stay home. The hitch-hiker who is thumbing his way to the next state will be worse off there than he was at home. Even if he is honest—and you have no way of telling—you do him little good to give him a lift. Once he understands that he cannot have free rides around the country he may stay at home where civic, state, and federal authorities can deal with his problems.

Long before this President Smith has had occasion to decry what he calls the nomadism of some of our people. The roving worker who has to live upon charity as he goes always has been a problem. He is mostly unwelcome. Strong forces are exerted against him for his moral and spiritual breakdown. Undernourished and exposed, he is a prey to disease. Without sanitary protection, he is subject to infection. The diseases he has he scatters around the country.

The hitch-hiker is generally a higher type and much cleaner than the tramp. He is in most cases a more recent recruit to the ranks of the wanderers. But he is sadly in danger of making a tramp out of himself.

The government will attempt to get more than 1¼ million people to return home and stay there. Hitch-hiking is not in harmony with that policy.

L. L.

"The Royal Road"

A New Story for the Young People

In this issue a new story for young people, The Royal Road, by Florence Tracey, begins.

The story takes young people as they are today, and not some mythical set of ideal persons who wander through an unrealistically good world. It deals with their thoughts and doubts, their hopes and their fears, and their problems. The young people are confronted with some of the old problems: the problem of marriage, the problem of profession, the problem of church work and affiliation, the problem of recreation, and others.

The modern world offers greater opportunity to young people for experience than ever before. But it also exerts greater pressure on their moral stamina, and does more to break down their resistance.

A story that tries to point the way through the maze of things is bound to rub against some of the seamy sides of life. Some readers may find these features distasteful. But any method that attempts to help the young people through a solution of their problems can scarcely ignore these features.

The Editors hope that you will like The Royal Road, and that younger readers will profit by it. If some of it is bitter, it will be wholesome in the end.

If we see rightly and mean rightly, we shall get on, though the hand may stagger a little; but if we mean wrongly, or mean nothing, it does not matter how firm the hand is.—Ruskin.

Prayer Meeting Suggestions for October

"THE LAND OF ZION"

October—the month when Columbus discovered America. America—Joseph's Land—the Land of Promise, the land of the New Jerusalem—the City of Zion. Read Section 97, Doctrine and Covenants. It is a very interesting revelation. It was given in the month of October just one hundred years ago. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were on a missionary journey as far north as Canada. While at Perrysburg, New York, this revelation was given. Read especially the last paragraph, "Zion shall be redeemed, although she is chastened for a little season."

"Keep the Law" Period

November 12—December 3

November 12 to December 3 is hereby designated as a period to be specially devoted to the education and solicitation of the membership of the church in a "Keep the Law" program. The members of the priesthood are asked to cooperate in this effort in order that the law of the church may be more fully kept by the membership, and the church provided with the necessary financial support for carrying on its work.

Further details of information and instruction are now in preparation and will be placed in the hands of officers to assist them in their part of the work.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. M. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 30, 1933.

Acting is an art, not merely an exhibition of emotions. An actor doesn't lose himself on the stage. If he did there would be nothing to prevent his walking off the stage in his transports of emotion and finishing his big scene in the public square. But his emotion need be no less sincere because it is harnessed: it may be just as true. In real life we have to exercise control. When we are in the greatest distress we are generally conscious that we must not make an exhibition of ourselves, but we do not feel grief any the less poignantly. And so in feeling on the stage, the fact that we are conscious of our audience and of the mechanical limitations of the theater should not prevent the trained actor from deep feeling.

My opinion is that the practiced actor is at his best when he feels the emotion that he is attempting to convey to his audience.—George Arliss, in the Christian Science Monitor.

NEWS BRIEFS

Harvest Home Festival Opens at Independence

The 1933 Harvest Home Festival of the church opens today in the lower hall of the Auditorium at Independence. Thousands of quarts of canned goods and bushels of raw fruits and vegetables are attractively displayed in exhibits from many States in the Union and Canada. Tonight the first large crowd of visitors will swarm into the hall to admire and exclaim over the beauty of festival gifts and their arrangement.

Important among the exhibits this year is a large map of the United States, conspicuously placed in the room. On this map ribbons extend from Independence, the center place, to each city or district represented in the festival this year.

Program features this year include a "school of economy," in which will be given practical demonstrations in cooking and baking with whole wheat flour; a flower show; a bake goods exhibit; a baby show; music each evening by the Auditorium Band and Orchestra; demonstrations by Orioles and Girl Scouts, and as a climax, the concert given Sunday afternoon by the Harvest Festival Chorus of six hundred voices.

Missionary Arthur Oakman Pastor of Two California Branches

Elder Arthur Oakman, missionary to Northern California District, is now acting as pastor of the branch at San Francisco and of East Bay Branch, Berkeley. He was elected to these positions of responsibility in recent business meetings. Since his appointment to that district, Brother Oakman has done a splendid work and contributed much to the advancement of the church there.

Branch at Wells, Michigan, Extends Its Reach

Wells Branch is growing and is extending its influence to near-by communities. Through the activities of Wells priesthood members two neighboring groups are now interested in the gospel. Sunday schools have been organized, people invited to investigate the gospel teachings, and some have been baptized. The priesthood are working out a winter's program which will make it possible to lend their aid when opportunity offers.

Five Added to Wellsburg, West Virginia, Priesthood

Five young men were added to the corps of priesthood now actively at work in Wellsburg Branch, when the Wheeling district conference, held early in September, approved their names for ordination, and the ordination service was held on Sunday. Two are priests, one a teacher, and two deacons.

Chicago Central Has Sunday Evening Club

Central Church, Chicago, boasts something new in the way of an organization, a Sunday Evening Club. This club is now making a large contribution to branch activities; it has taken charge of the Sunday evening services for the fall and winter.

Iroquois Chieftain Speaks to the East Bay Congregation

Chief Clear Sky of the Iroquois Tribe of Indians, was guest speaker at East Bay Church, Berkeley, California, a short time ago. He made comparisons between the life, habits, and activities of the Indians at the time the early colonists settled in America and those of the Indians today, according to the account in The Zion Builder (San Francisco). He cited a legend giving their ancient idea of the Great Spirit and how the different races of people originated.

Chief Clear Sky emphasized the bravery of the Indians and their love, obedience and devotion to their homes.

The Dream That Came True

An Incident in the Life of the Late Apostle C. A. Butterworth

BY HAROLD G. McGURK.

IN A SMALL COTTAGE almost hidden from the road by apple, pear, and apricot trees, a man and his wife were sitting discussing the problem of how to make a penny have the same purchasing power as a pound. The man in answer to a question by his wife had conveyed the sad tidings that he had only one penny left. "A penny," she had echoed, in tones which betrayed her dismay, "only one penny? What will we do?" There seemed to be no solution however much they discussed it, and they both fell silent. The woman's eyes traveled round the room, over the plain deal table and chairs, and the home-made cupboard in the corner. Only the barest of necessities were there. She thought of all the things they needed, and it made her sigh.

The man's attention wandered to the window where he could see, as the bush-scented breeze swayed the curtains, a group of noisy boys playing in the shade of tall pine trees by the fence. In a paddock a little distance off, near a tree stump where a magpie was drowsily nodding in the heat of a typically Australian summer day, cattle were grazing. He thought of his native land, thousands of miles away, and the time when as a boy of twenty-one he left it as a missionary. What years of struggle he had experienced since, often battling on alone among strangers, with no one to turn to for advice, or to press his hand and offer a few words of encouragement. Yet he had managed to gain many friends and converts, among whom was the girl who became his wife. Then one by one the little children had come, whose voices now raised in play, disturbed the silence of the room. His work had meant sacrifice, sacrifice all the time, greater sometimes than even the most intimate friends realized. "I wonder if it is worth it?" he said to himself. Yes, though the years had been hard ones in some ways, they nevertheless had brought happiness, and somehow, too, on looking back it seemed that just when things appeared blackest something always came along to dispel the gloom. With this comforting thought he turned to his wife as she sighed again and said, "Cheer up Annie, don't worry, it will be all right, something will turn up I am sure."

That night, some hours after the family had gone to bed, and were wrapt in slumber, the missionary awoke, sat up and nudged his wife, "Annie," he said when she was awake, "I have just had a dream, I dreamt I was at church and Brother W—— gave me a pound note," then he described all he had seen.

When it came time to leave for church on the morrow, the horse was harnessed to the trap, and all the family set out through the bush for the fishing village, about six miles away, where the place of worship was located.

On reaching their destination they tied the horse to a post and rail fence under the shade of some eucalyptus trees, and entered the building. As the missionary stepped onto the platform the incidents in his dream flashed into his mind. He looked around, everything was the same as he had seen it, even to the people sitting on the seats. After the service was over he walked down the aisle, greeting this one and that one, just as he had done in his dream. Finally he drew near to Brother W——, who was advancing to meet him with outstretched hand. As he gripped it, what feelings of joy filled his heart, for his dream had all come true, and he felt the crisp edges of a pound note.

Within the Income

One of the biggest leaks in the family pocketbook is the pursuit of false pleasure. Somehow the idea seems to have got loose that we can't have a good time without spending money, lots of it. And yet most of us had our happiest times when we were too poor to go anywhere. . . .

What we need is more independence, more discrimination in our pleasures. . . .

Any pleasure that grows out of the creative urge within is lots more fun than something ready-made and easily obtainable. If we truly enjoy making patchwork quilts or puttering around the house or scribbling verses, why not do so? Why the modern idea that the only fun worth having is the kind with a cover charge? Or the kind that depends on flocking around with a crowd?

We are living in splendid times; they are full to overflowing with good things, but the world and the richness thereof does not belong to those who duck their obligations. Once in a while, the obligation may be that of a genius to his sense of beauty, his art, but, to most of us, meeting our obligations means that we are thinking in terms of human beings, in terms of the Golden Rule. And that boiled down to its homely beginning means that we live within our incomes and pay our bills!—Elizabeth Cook, in the "Delineator."

Are We Considering the Church?

DEACON WISEMORE of our branch lives next door to the church and for twenty years has been the custodian. He is a student of human nature and its needs. How do I know? I'll tell you.

I happen to be president of the young people's class, and we are planning to make the branch a gift of a new pulpit carpet. So one evening just recently I dropped in at the church on my way home from work, to measure the pulpit. I stopped at Brother Wisemore's for the church key, but he said that in the daytime he always left the back door of the building open, and offered to go over with me to do the measuring.

Well, we hadn't been inside the building five minutes, and I was just folding up my ruler when we heard someone coming. "Who's tha—" I started to say, but Brother Wisemore shook his head and placing a finger on his lips, quickly led me into the choir room at the right of the rostrum.

Through the door ajar I saw two figures halt beyond the pulpit rail in front of the altar. I knew them both, Sharon Hartley and Calvin Southridge. I couldn't mistake them—I had known them since all of us were children together in grammar school. Sharon is our branch pianist and she lost her mother a short time ago. Calvin, why, everyone likes big, laughing Calvin, and for a year it's been perfectly apparent that he is in love with Sharon.

As we watched them, the girl placed a gloved hand on her escort's arm and looked into his face with the most rapt and glowing expression I have ever seen. She spoke in a low voice: "I wanted to answer you here, Calvin. Most of the really important decisions I have made in my life have been linked with the church. The church means more to me than I can tell, and I try always to think of it when I am deciding the things I should and should not do. This," and she made a little gesture indicating the entire room, "is God's house. There is something about it that I love and revere. And now that mother is gone,"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

her voice trembled, "I seem to find her here more than anywhere else. I—I think she would like to know what I am going to tell you, Calvin."

"Oh, Sharon, how do you know she doesn't?" he spoke huskily and took her two small hands in his large ones. They looked the picture of understanding and love standing there, their faces suffused with the light of the setting sun which streamed in through the western windows. They seemed to be living, breathing mosaics fitting into a picture of peace. I forgot that I was eavesdropping—I was entranced.

Then Deacon Wisemore gently closed the door, and for the first time in my life I had the satisfaction of seeing a deacon use the unconventional exit of a church window. I followed him.

ONCE OUTSIDE he turned and regarded me a little ruefully: "You would get in on that! If I had known that was in the air, I wouldn't have shut you up as they came in."

"As it was, you closed that door plenty soon," I retorted, "but tell me, why all the secrecy." It was no secret that Sharon and Calvin had gone about together for a year. Everyone thought they were engaged and heartily approved the match.

"'Tisn't just an ordinary love affair, not theirs," defended the deacon. "I know for I've watched it bud and bloom —"

"From the choir room I suppose," I cut in.

"Partly," he shamelessly confessed. "Theirs is what we might call a three party consideration."

"A triangle? Oh—"

"No, no," he objected, "I mean that both Sharon and Calvin are thinking of the church in connection with their plans for the future. You might say the church was the third contracting party. They've been coming to the church like this of evenings as they go home from work for several weeks. They're linking it inseparably with their romance.

I was about to say something waggish, but Brother Wisemore's apparent sincerity checked me.

"—Sharon started coming here the day after her mother's funeral. She came as if it were to hold a tryst with her own soul, to make her adjustment. Several times I know she cried, for I usually managed to be at work out in the yard as she came out, and there were tears in her eyes. Then pretty soon Calvin started coming with her. They usually just stand silently for two or three minutes as if they were praying or thinking deeply. Sometimes they talk a little. But the brief period alone seems to do them a world of good. This piece I found the other day made me think of them and of what all of us ought to do," and he hauled a newspaper clipping from his shirt pocket and handed it to me. "Maybe I'll give Sharon a copy of it because I know she must feel that way":

"On Entering a Chapel

"Love built this shrine; these hallowed walls uprose
To give seclusion from the hurrying throng,
From the tumult of the street, complaint and wrong,
From rivalry and strife, from taunt of foes—
If foes thou hast. On silent feet come in,
Bow low in penitence. Whoe'er thou art
Thou, too, hast sinned. Uplift in prayer thy heart.

"Thy Father's blessing waiteth. Read within
This holy place, in pictured light portrayed,
The characters of worthies who, from years
Long past, still speak the message here displayed
In universal language not to fade.
Leave then thy burden, all thy cares and fears Faith, hope, and love are thine, for thou hast prayed."

"The church should be thankful," he concluded ruminatatively, "that it has some young people who take their religion seriously into their plans of the future. I'm glad to know two such upstanding youngsters as Sharon and Calvin. They will, I firmly believe, go a long way as workers and contributors."

On my way home his words seethed in my mind. I was wondering if in the decisions I have made thus far, and those I shall make in the next future years, the church plays an important part. I hope so, but as I write, my own selfishness looms appallingly before me."

Robes for the Junior Choir

By Mrs. Fern Weedmark

Dear Brother Woodstock:

In reply to the third paragraph of your letter of July 19th, we are glad to tell you about our junior choir's robes.

For a long time we had dreamed of having a vested choir in the junior department, but had the feeling that the boys would not appreciate the idea of wearing robes. One Sunday morning, in discussing the junior choir, the subject of robes came up, and one of the girls said, "I wish we could wear robes when we sing." We answered that we liked the idea of robes very much, but supposed the boys would not care about wearing them. Immediately we were informed by the boys, "Well, we can wear robes if the girls can!" We considered that our "cue" and at once began making plans to provide robes for the junior choir.

It was decided that navy blue robes with white collars would be nice. With the help of Sister Ella Smith, who is very much interested in the children, we purchased the material. Enough material for ten robes, the collars and pattern cost a little less than five dollars ($5.00). Sister Eva Ruffcorn, the mother of one of our juniors, kindly offered to oversee the making of the robes and finally made all ten robes. They were beautifully made and looked lovely when finished. Everybody felt proud of our junior choir the first Sunday they sang in the junior service wearing their new robes.

The material used to make the robes is a solid navy blue print costing ten cents (10c) per yard. The print is a nice weight material and has a smooth soft finish. It required approximately four yards of material for each robe. The collars are made of Indian head cloth and are attached to yokes of the same material which fasten down under the yokes of the robes, thus holding the collars firmly in place.

The pattern used was Pictoral Review pattern No. 3559. This is a surplice pattern, but we used it for the robes, cutting it the proper length. We felt a one-piece robe was better for juniors.

There are nine juniors in the choir. We have an extra robe. The tenth robe is our visitor's robe. This robe has the hem basted in, so it may be made any length desired. Several times it has been worn by a visiting junior. Each of the other robes was made to fit a certain child and that child's name is printed on a strip of white tape which is fastened inside the yoke of the robe.

With one exception, the children have worn their robes only in a junior service or when invited to sing at an adult worship service. This exception was when they were invited to sing at a city-wide Leaders' Institute held at one of the large churches. Our junior choir is the only vested boys' and girls' choir in Topeka. They have been invited to participate in a special demonstration at the Kansas State Fair in September. One of the robes was borrowed by a Kansas State Sunday school worker and used at the State Sunday School Convention at Coffeyville as a sample of what may be done at little expense.

Our boys and girls are always happy to sing in their robes. We believe that wearing the robes helps them to sense the feeling of reverence desired in a worship service. That is one reason they have not worn their robes at any sort of entertainment or other meeting.

No true and permanent fame can be founded except in labors which promote the happiness of mankind.—Sumner.

Organic Characteristics of the Church

By A. B. Phillips

NO ONE of mature thought will deny the great importance of the message of Jesus, and its value in social regeneration and development. Though it was presented in terms so simple that a child could understand its meaning, yet it inspires all that is within us toward nobler, higher, and more lasting accomplishment. It touches to the depth those who yearn for a life of truth, righteousness, and equity, and reveals to them the permanent worth of stable character and purity of thought and purpose.

The purpose of Jesus was to transform the world by transforming the lives of those who live in the world; to give them better ideals and stronger incentives toward reaching the ideals of life. His message started with the individual, but its results have been manifested in ever-increasing groups of individuals. Its power to produce this wonderful growth is based upon principles as eternal as are the laws of organic growth in all other realms of human experience and observation. The principle of growth is the principle of cooperation and organization, without which there can be no growth.

Jesus selected this principle as the dynamic power which should eventually produce the unity of man with God, the unity of man with man, and the universal acceptance of his laws in all the activities of life. Such supremely important purposes could not safely be left to the erring judgment or caprice of human desire, and therefore Jesus very strictly provided the means and the manner of organic expression which his people should employ. This organic expression was regulated by rules which he established in the body of people who should follow his instructions, and whom he called his church.

NEED OF CHURCH ORGANIZATION

In order that the church should effectively publish the message of Christ and preserve it free from error, Jesus chose a presiding or supervising council of three apostles to whom a special trust was committed. This provision was similar in principle to the choice of Moses, Aaron, and Hur over ancient Israel. It was after the pattern of the heavenly order of the Trinity. For the divine Trinity of the universe formed the overruling supreme Council of all eternity, of whom Jesus was one, and the chief representative on earth when he came to institute his great mission.

Under this triune Council the work of God was given direction and coordination in the affairs of earthly life. But as Moses was required with his associates to have immediate direction of God's work on earth in his time, under the inspiration and command of the Trinity in heaven, so Christ left at the head of his church on earth Peter, James, and John, three men to whom he committed special authority to bear the chief responsibility of supervising his work in the church and also in the world. To Peter he declared:

"I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matthew 16: 19.

One of the essential reasons for giving the keys of authority to a restricted number in the church, who should have the responsibility to carry out the Savior's purposes, may be seen in the fact that a large and unwieldy body would not sense the means to be taken for this work in so clear a manner as would those who were charged specifically with the supervision of the plans to be executed.

THE OFFICE OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES

In the performance of his divine mission Jesus called to him and appointed twelve men to act as his special representatives in all the world. Because of the nature of the work committed to them, he named them apostles. As a body to whom was committed the work of preaching the gospel in all the world, this council of twelve apostles became a part of the recognized organic structure of the church. The primacy of the apostolic office is well indicated by Paul, who declares that Jesus was their "chief apostle and high priest." The apostolic office itself, including also that of the twelve, was not temporary, but was a permanent station in the church of the living God. Paul declares:

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

The apostolic office was intended not only to promote the missions of the church in all the world, but also to inspire, lead, and teach the children of God in the church. The Scriptures reveal this fact very clearly, and Paul explains the purpose of these offices in his message to the saints at Corinth, to whom he declared:

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 11-13.

From this text, as well as from instances given in the New Testament which show the nature of the charge which had been committed to them, it is clear that the office of apostle was designed to be perpetuated in the church of our Lord until all should come to the unity of the faith and the knowledge of Christ.

While some have supposed that the apostolic office was intended to die out with the death of the original twelve chosen by Jesus, the Scriptures themselves show otherwise. After the transgression of Judas Iscariot, Matthias was chosen as his successor. Of this event we are informed in the first chapter of the book of Acts. At a later time Paul and Barnabas were chosen to the apostolic office by the call of the Holy Spirit, as may be found recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Acts. In this period of the early church the severe persecutions of the time resulted in the death of several of the apostles. Therefore several vacancies occurred in the council of the Twelve within a comparatively few years after the church entered upon its work. To fill these vacancies there were men called of God to occupy in the office of apostle in the church.

The Office of the Seventy

Not long after the twelve apostles were appointed by Christ, other ministers were also chosen and sent out as a supplemental body to that of the Twelve. Luke records this event by informing us that the Lord chose other seventy and sent them out to preach. They also were endowed with the power and gift of the Holy Ghost, and the Spirit of the Lord worked with them in their mission of love and service for humanity.

Thus we learn that the Lord set in his church divinely authorized and commissioned men to share the great responsibility of bearing witness of him in all the world. They were not only witnesses, but they were special witnesses, whose testimony was confirmed by that of the Holy Spirit in many remarkable ways. So striking was this witness, that on one occasion the disciples returned to Christ with the joyful tidings that "even the devils were subject to us in thy name."

There is every scriptural reason, as well as every logical reason, to recognize that this organic structure of the church was the only divinely authorized form of organization ever presented by Christ for his people. It was designed to fill a need which infinite wisdom alone could foresee to its full extent, and which therefore only infinite wisdom could adequately supply. It would clearly follow that a failure to closely observe the divine plan must to that extent jeopardize the solidarity, unity, and successful accomplishment of the mission of the church.

Organic Function of the Priesthood

Jesus did not institute a new system of church policy when he came to earth. That policy had been determined in the councils of heaven before the world was populated by man. The redemption of man from sin and death required a divinely appointed ministry to function in the church of God. This ministry as a whole was designated by the name of priesthood, which name indicated the divine authority through which it was ordained to act. The idea of priesthood did not originate in the time of Moses, though it was in some ways emphasized at that time. Its beginnings were in the days of Adam, and we read of his son Abel offering the sacrifice of the lamb, which indicated his faith in the Lamb of God who should come in the meridian of time as the Redeemer of the world.

In every age the work of God among men functioned through a divinely chosen priesthood. In this priesthood were established a variety of offices which were intended to minister to the various requirements of the people of God. In the time of Christ the same methods were employed, and we therefore read in the sacred word that God gave to the church the offices of apostle, prophet, evangelist, seventy, bishop, elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. Each of these offices had its distinctive functions, thus supplying the spiritual requirements of every department of the church. Each of these offices in the church was designed to function in harmony with every other office, under the direction of the Holy Spirit and in accordance with the Scriptures.

Inasmuch as God established this order in his church, we feel sure that it cannot be improved upon. For human wisdom is certainly inferior to divine wisdom, and cannot understand all that the divine wisdom comprehends. Nor can it see forward into the future of the divine purposes, except in a very limited degree. For these reasons the Reorganized Church believes that the ministry of the divinely instituted and recognized church must of necessity include the offices which Christ established among his people. To honor the law of God is to honor God, and to dishonor his law is to dishonor him.

Significance of the Divine Organization

Our observation of the laws of nature teach us that perfect results can be obtained only by perfect compliance with the laws which govern those results and the processes by which they may be produced. This is equally (Continued on page 1265)

Our Spiritual Rebirth

A sermon delivered Sunday, August 13, 1933, at the Silver Lake Reunion, Washington. . . . . .

By E. J. Gleazer

I SINCERELY TRUST that the portion of the spirit we experienced yesterday morning, and the spirit we experienced this morning will be present that we may be blessed throughout this reunion.

This reunion has been a remarkable one to me. Other reunions have often had some particular service outstanding. In some cases there have been wonderful preaching services; in others marvelous prayer meetings, or excellence in one particular activity. But the outstanding thing about this reunion is that the spirit has been present in every activity on these grounds. There has been liberty in preaching, there has been liberty in teaching, and there has been liberty in prayer meetings. And with that spirit has come the spirit of consecration, which has permeated the entire camp—a spirit of desire and willingness to do the things which God has required at our hands.

We read about the day of Pentecost. Sometimes it takes ages to ripen experiences like that—ages to add a halo of glory. Frequently we seem not to be in a position to appreciate the blessings of the present. But the spirit that has been present in this reunion has touched lives, and they by virtue of that touch will touch other lives. It has been said by some here that the good received has been worth many times the financial investment involved, even though that investment may have been made at great sacrifice. I want to tell you that there is no knowing how those investments made now will be multiplied in financial returns that will come to the church.

The spirit of revelation and enlightenment has been with us; many truths have been revealed in our classes—many great new truths have been revealed under this tent. You know the teachers did not come here with all truth; they did come to present truth. And into our services and our classes came the spirit of revelation, and that spirit revealed new truths that caused us to rejoice that the gospel is indeed being preached to us in the latter days. These principles of eternal truth, these principles of right living that have been given to us; the effects of these principles in the lives of those who have been here will be so great and so far-reaching that they will never cease their operation until they have assisted in the establishment of a part of the material and spiritual Zion.

I have been to many reunions that have been worth while, valuable experiences; but never before have I been able to see as I see now the contribution a reunion can make and will make, not only to the upbuilding of the branches and districts individually, but in the actual establishment of the kingdom of God on earth.

The Lord has been well pleased with the efforts and the sacrifices that have been made. And I want to say to you who have come at great cost, even perhaps almost to your last penny, that you are not leaving these grounds impoverished; you leave them enriched. He who has partaken of the principles of eternal life is rich; and by virtue of the associations we have had here, by virtue of the power of the Spirit of God revealed to his people we have learned here how eternal life is possible now.

I believe that the enlightenment and power of the spirit we have known here will be characteristic of the reunions of the church this year. Verily, God has made bare his arm in righteousness for the salvation of his people.

I WANT to take as my text this morning the words: "One thing I know: that whereas I was blind, now I see." You recall the story of the man born blind, and how he came in contact with Jesus Christ and was healed. You remember that the question was raised by some as to who was responsible for this condition, and that Jesus said that neither of the parents was responsible, but that all had been brought about that God might be revealed.

Frequently we find it hard to understand why some among us have to suffer bereavement, or reverses; but frequently the individual in the case is not the only one considered, but rather the effect which the suffering, the trials, the tribulations of these persons will have upon the church. The offering is blessed in any sacrifice if from that offering the church of Jesus Christ receives a blessing through coming nearer to its God. This is why some have so rejoiced in tribulation.

This blind man was used as an offering. He believed and his eyes were opened. But the Pharisees sought explanations, because they did not want to give God any credit—or rather they did not want to acknowledge the power used by Christ. Another example that signs do not make believers but may and do confirm believers. This miracle did not add one single Pharisee to the church. They tried to explain it away. But the blind man saw. "One thing I know," he said, "whereas I was blind, now I see." The Pharisees tried to give the devil credit for it. They raised the question of the miracle being performed on the Sabbath. You remember how Jesus replied that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

There are some who in much the same way seem to think we are made for the purpose of observing the ordinances and holy days and so forth, instead of appreciating the effect these ordinances will have on our lives when observed. They see no farther than the physical symbols, and are unable to determine the purpose of that which God has given.

The explanations of the Pharisees didn't stand. When they questioned the parents of the blind man they passed the responsibility on to their son. "He is of age," they said. "Let him speak for himself." You know what he said. And when the Pharisees heard his words they said, "Give God the praise"—but they were talking about their own god—the god they had conceived in the imagination of their own hearts.

There are many false gods in the world today. Most of us do not realize what a false god is. God is a particular, definite God, who does particular things. When anyone attempts to attribute actions different from these to God, or denies these definite characteristics in God, he proves that this god, regardless of the name by which he may be called, is a false god. Many of those who claim to be in touch with God are just as much in error today as were the people who were addressed by Paul on Mars Hill.

People deny the power of God as manifest in the church of the living God, and attempt to put in his place a god who is not a god of power and force. But this morning we came in contact with the spirit of the living God, and in power and assurance.

I have known nothing during my experience in this church which compares to that which has been revealed to me during the days of this reunion. Yet there are many others whose eyes have not yet been opened. The spirit of false security in world conditions which still prevails is the spirit of a false god—it is contrary to the testimony of the spirit of God.

No doubt we shall be able to make some adjustment, for the present, to the depression. But I am asking now—was Jesus Christ offered on the cross—was the church of Jesus Christ established and the priesthood restored—merely to save the world from depressions? If we do succeed in getting over this depression, don't think for one moment that that constitutes the salvation of Jesus Christ.

MANY OF US HAVE COME to realize that this depression has indeed been a blessing in disguise, because it has brought us nearer to God in these days than in the days of prosperity.

This prosperity which we look for and hope for will, so far as the world is concerned, only damn men that much sooner. I use the word in its real sense. The very thing we are hoping for, the return of prosperity, will so far as material things are concerned hasten the world in wickedness and bring destruction upon our heads. I am surprised that so many Latter Day Saints are looking in that direction for their relief and for their safety. Can such a people say in the language of the text this morning, "Whereas I was blind, now I see"?

I am wondering how many of us can see why we have had one depression? How many of us realize that before this depression came upon the material world we had even a greater depression—a depression of the spirit? This is why we have had the other—because we have to a great extent forgotten God. This is true of the church as well as of the world. We lacked the Spirit of God.

However, this morning I want to say by way of encouragement—and I know whereof I speak—that this church is stronger spiritually today than it has ever been since the days of the Reorganization. More people today possess the spirit and have an intelligent comprehension as to what God is attempting to do in the lives of men than ever since the day God revealed himself to Joseph Smith.

If you could comprehend what it costs us to say to the men who had devoted practically their entire lives to the ministry of this church, "Brethren, we are going to send you home"; if you had gone down the lists day after day, again and again trying to select them by the process of elimination, because we did not have sufficient finances to enable them to devote their entire time to the church; you would have felt as Peter and James both felt when Christ permitted himself to be taken without resistance—you would have thought all was lost and that God had indeed forsaken us.

But I tell you this morning that I know this to be true—and we have had in the last few days a wonderful testimony of its truthfulness—that instead of the church being in reverse, having lost ground, the people of this church are nearer the establishment of the reality of Zion today than they have ever been; and this without any exceptions.

When we had the task of eliminating men, cutting expenses, we had to say not only that the appointees should be called in, but we had to say, "Developments must cease on this building; this building must stand; all expansion must cease." But the things of God were tied up in our minds with the physical buildings. We had the stone, the mortar, the steel, the concrete in mind. Some thought that when "all expansion" should cease, meant all expansion. But the very fact of the cessation of these material enterprises, even as individuals had to stop expansion in the business world—this very condition brought a wave of spirituality and spiritual insight such as the church had never known. If we were able to see with eyes of divine understanding and to search the hearts of men so far as the membership of this church is concerned, we would find that, far from experiencing a depression, this church is passing through one of the greatest periods of prosperity it has ever known.

And it was not Brother Gleazer who said that. A short while ago I wouldn't have believed that, but I have to believe it this morning because I know it is true; and from today you will see it if you haven't seen it already. What we as a people thought to be a curse that had retarded our movement and stopped the wheels of our progress was the very force, the very power that drove this church to its God. It has helped us to comprehend why God said a hundred years ago to this church that we ought to get ourselves out of Babylon, why he told us that there were calamities coming upon the earth, and why he gave certain commandments and ordinances and required certain things at our hands.

Now man after man of us can arise and testify that we see as never before why God required these certain services and certain things from us. It is being made more and more and more apparent to us that the arm of flesh had failed us, and as a result of that revelation we are turning to God that he may deliver us.

We are approaching the time when we can join in singing, "Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory; cast aside your doubts and fears." Many of us had never had our eyes opened sufficiently to see what it was necessary for us to do before Zion should became a reality.

But before I come to that, I want to say that you would be surprised to know just how few of the people in our church really sense the necessity for such an organization as we have. Some of us joined this church because some preacher convinced us perhaps that the Methodist way of baptism was not right; then when we were convinced that our church was not right we just joined the church of the man who convinced us. But he didn't prove to us that this church was right. If we really believed this church to be the power of God unto salvation we wouldn't go, the first time a little dispute comes up in our branch and we get our feelings hurt, and climb a tree and sit on a limb and wait for someone to apologize before we would go to work.

Some have been convinced of the divinity of our ordinances, of the necessity of baptism as an ordinance, and that the authority of the priesthood is essential, because through the different versions of the Scripture they have heard it proved that this is the kind of organization Jesus Christ had, the kind of doctrine he had, the commandments he taught and the ordinances he observed. Through reading the Bible we may convince ourselves of that. And yet may I suggest that it is possible to do that and yet fail to discern why God authorized these ordinances and commandments and why he instituted such an organization.

But now our eyes are being opened and we are beginning to realize why we must have and observe these ordinances. This is what has been continually impressed upon me, and I present it as God has given it. And while we realize that these things are essential in the lives of men, it is only to the extent that they are utilized that we can hope to produce the divine product of right living or righteousness. "Whereas we were blind," we are commencing to see that God did not merely organize the church to have another church on earth, or because it was prophesied that he should. It was organized with all that it now possesses in the way of organization and doctrine and with the ordinances and sacraments that we may be saved now; that salvation may come to those of us who are willing to take advantage of it.

If we realize this, then our eyes are opened sufficiently—though the eyes of some haven't been yet—to comprehend that this church is the only agency on earth organized and equipped and wonderfully authorized to bring into existence the kingdom of God. I'm not being narrow-minded about this; I'm merely repeating a truth. I am not disputing the fact that light has been given at various times to others not of our faith. Years ago we were told that there are "many forces at work which ye know not of." Nevertheless that does not detract from the statement I have made; and I pray God that that statement may burn into you so much this morning that you may realize that this salvation is the complete purpose of life. God permitted us to come here that we might have the opportunity of saying, and I say to you this morning by virtue of the power vested in me as a servant of Jesus Christ, that this is the one church so organized, so constituted, so equipped to bring into existence this salvation.

What does that say to you if your eyes are opened this morning? It says first that, that being true, I ought to make the saving of my soul the first purpose of life. It means that your pastor won't have to say to you, "Brother, please quit playing golf on Sunday morning and come to church." That is the type of

"No," and a Reason

"NO, GREG, I won't marry you."

It was a simple statement. The few words cut the silence like a fateful sentence falling from the lips of a judge. Larry Verne withdrew herself from the clasp of a tall, red-haired, young man, and avoiding the brown eyes, turned toward Eldred Hampton's fern-filled front window. Her eyes encountered familiar objects, blue drapes with silver designs and a net curtain, all drawn far back from the flowers—nothing more. But after all blue drapes with silver designs, net curtains, and even house plants are rather prosaic things when a young man who has just extended to you the honor of becoming his wife, stands, wordless, wounded, waiting.

The stillness was almost gravelike. A little fretfully Larry wondered why he did not move. Was he playing for her sympathy? Very well, she would show him her brand of courage.

Still he did not speak, just stood looking at her.

"You see," she resumed with a tiny tremor, "I can't. You really don't have to look so melodramatic, Greg," her gesture was eloquent, "There are plenty of girls that will marry you—just give 'em a chance!" Slightly chagrined, she realized that her last remark had been a flippant thing; that it was a trailer, had been hooked on to hide what she honestly did feel.

The young man was in no mood for flippancy. He moved nearer and seated himself on the arm of the divan directly in front of her. Larry remained standing. She preferred to stand when she was not altogether sure of herself; when there was danger of her wavering.

"Why can't you—Larry?" heavily. The brown eyes seemed to burn into her heart, making her feel small, and shading her reasons to insignificance. "Is there something about a career—marriage hindering a career?"

"Foolish!" she laughed softly. It was a relief to laugh. Then because she liked to be near him when she talked, she placed a hand on his arm and sat down beside him on the wide arm of the divan. Had he winced at that touch? For a moment she was startled. Surely this was a peculiar evening—what had started Greg anyway?

"I'm not being foolish," he returned; "I'm just being natural. It's the most natural thing in the world for a fellow to fall in love with you, Larry; you're so beautiful, so sweet—so good!"

"Oh, no, no!" she protested, starting to her feet again, and vigorously shaking her head.

"At least I'm trying not to be foolish," he wistfully amended. "What I'm trying to do is to get down to your reasons for not marrying me. Of course it is conceited of me to ask you to marry me—oh, yes, it is," as she shook her head again, "because I'll have to ask you to wait quite awhile yet, and even when I am established in my profession, I shan't have much influence or money. We're poor, and I have to start from the bottom with all the other poor men's sons. But, Larry," his voice grew suddenly husky, "I love you—and the thought of you waiting for me would—mean—so much!" His eyes spoke volumes more.

"You make it hard, Greg." How callous her voice sounded. "It isn't that. I think you're grand, and it would be—it would mean a lot to be your wife, but I can't marry you—"

"There isn't anyone else?" It was more of an assertion than a question.

"Of course not. I like you more—I care more about you than anyone, Greg, but—well," she was finding it hard to put her reason into words, "You'll think it silly, but—I'm afraid of men!"

"Larry! I can't imagine you afraid of anything!" Hope was returning in the brown eyes, and in her soul Larry groaned. She was bungling. How awkward she was when it was a matter of dealing with a lover.

"But I am. I like them as friends, but as husbands I'm afraid of them, no joking." Her expression was serious.

"But why? We're not wolves about to eat you, my dear."

"No, but so far, my world of men has been divided into two principal classes—those who belong to the church and those who do not. If I marry one who isn't a Latter Day Saint, has no sympathy for my religious beliefs, I know we should both be unhappy. We should quarrel. On the other hand, if I marry someone who does belong to the church, I shall bring upon myself the constant dread of my husband being called to the priesthood!"

"What are you talking about? Whose being foolish now—and I don't know but what a little sacrilegious, too!" He stood up and put an arm about her waist.

"No," she stepped back, "you don't understand. I knew you wouldn't." There was actual pain in her tone, but she went on speaking slowly, distinctly, clipping each word off as if it burned her lips. "I couldn't endure being the wife of a member of the priesthood, Greg. I have no faith in priesthood—I haven't ever mentioned this to you because I was afraid I'd shake your faith, the little you have; but I think priesthood as we have it in our church is nothing but mockery of something divine, just mere form. There's nothing to it. I—"

"Why, Larry, dearest girl!" he did not attempt to conceal his surprise at her outburst; "you sound so bitter! Surely you don't know what you're saying! I know lots of men of the priesthood who are good, honest souls, as consecrated as it is humanly possible to be consecrated. Anyway, darling, what connection does priesthood have with you and me?"

"A lot—oh, don't you see, Greg, I could never marry one of them!" swiftly. He was about to speak but she rushed on, "I couldn't endure living with a hypocrite, and that's what so many of them are! And even if I could finally get used to that, I should loath being a missionary's wife, having to scrimp and scrimp, all the time aware that people were watching how I spent every cent, criticizing, prying into my affairs, gossiping!" His look of wonderment made her lower her tone. "Really, Greg, it's more than just a pet peeve with me. Sometimes I'm afraid it's growing to be a sort of obsession. I've watched and I've seen things both at home and here in Independence. I can't tell you all of my reasons for feeling this way," her voice broke, but after a moment she continued—"at least I can't tell you yet. But added to all the other reasons, I know that I couldn't bear the months and months my husband would be in the field, leaving me at home with maybe a houseful of noisy children."

"But who asked you to marry a missionary, I'd like to know?" Greg demanded. "I asked you to marry me and I'm going to be an electrical engineer."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"I know—I know, but you can't be awfully sure. You're just the kind of a fellow who, if the church called him, would give up a profession and go into the missionary field. You can't help it—your whole family's like that. If I were to marry you and you were called to the priesthood—why, Greg, you might even grow to be like Rowe McCarley!" Tears stood in her gray eyes.

"Now, young lady," and this time Greg did take her in his arms, "I'll bear denial but not insult. Me like Rowe? You do have an imagination! Come over here and let's talk it out." He led her to the divan, planted himself comfortably in a corner and drew her down beside him.

Little did the young fellow realize what stinging memories those words, "Let's talk it out," recalled to the girl beside him.

SOMETHING more than ten years before in Brentville, Indiana, a man whose heavy shoulders slumped as if he were very weary, and in whose eyes lurked the light of despair and loneliness, had taken his twelve-year-old daughter upon his knees and said: "Larry, you're getting to be a big girl now. You're growing fast. You and I might just as well talk this out!"

"But I want Mother, daddy," she had sobbed, twining her arms about his neck, "why doesn't she come back?"

Tonight the grown-up Larry was recalling the feeling of the knotted muscles of her father's hands as he crushed her to him on that desolate evening. But that had been nothing in suffering to the horror of the realization that her mother had left them for someone else; that she loved someone more than she did her husband and little daughter. And this horror had increased with the years that passed over the child's head until it has grown into dislike, distrust, and even bitterness toward the group from which the offender had sprung—the priesthood.

Mr. Harrison, the man who had wooed her mother away from her family, had for three years acted as priest in Brentville Branch. As such he had been trusted by the few families of Saints. He had been considered their friend and adviser. Then suddenly he stood before them as a home breaker, a wife thief—oh, no, he had not stood, he had run away.

How the little girl had mourned for her mother! She had loyally refused to believe that Mrs. Verne had willingly left them. How could she have preferred Mr. Harrison to Daddy? Often the pretty blond face of her mother came to her in dreams, and she would wake herself crying aloud. In the daytime, too, it was as bad, for she found herself constantly on the alert to hear her mother singing, to catch the sound of her footstep in the garden. But there was no more singing, and there were no more light footfalls in the garden. Instead the central figure in the girl's life had been the short, heavy man who held his face up to meet the sunshine. She could never forget that calm face with the eyes that seldom laughed any more. He had been of the old pioneer stock, a man whose self-possession and self-reliance knew few limits, who could be both strong and tender, commanding and gentle. Larry had adored him. He had never burdened his neighbors with his troubles; had never, for that matter, discussed them with his daughter. The only time they had talked about her mother's departure had been when he said, "Larry, you and I might just as well talk this out."

The Royal Road

This is a story of youth at the crossroads—at the time of life when, assailed by doubt and urged by conflicting theories of life, young people find themselves, without the balance and steadiness that comes from experience, under the necessity of making decisions that will affect all their future lives.

Little wonder that they misread the signs along "The Royal Road," little wonder that they sometimes follow false leads, and do not see the True Guide.

There are shocks for the reader in this story, but they are the shocks of present-day life for youth.

Are we courageous enough to face these questions and problems with our young people?

Mr. Verne had been dead five years now, taken suddenly away by heart disease, and his daughter missed him beyond her ability to describe. Sometimes when she was very lonely, his image in her mind's eye comforted her, and proudly she held up her head thinking, "At least, I am a good man's daughter!"

When the girl had finished high school at Brentville, she had gone to business college in Chicago, rooming with a former teacher, and spending all the money her father had left her. Later she had secured a position as a typist in the offices of a department store. There she worked until she had earned enough to bring her to Kansas City and to keep her until she could find a position. She didn't know why she had chosen to come to Kansas City, unless it was the memory of her father's dream of coming to Zion. As for herself, she thought, she cared little for the church any more. Had not Mr. Harrison been a member in good standing until the actual break had come? And yet what sorrow and heartbreak he had brought into her home!

JOBS WERE growing scarcer, she found, than when she graduated from business school, and salaries had lost much of their high-marked glamour. It was several weeks before she stumbled into a temporary place at Shooley & Sons, which later had become permanent. There she had made the acquaintance of Nancy Bart, a young Latter Day Saint girl whose home was in Independence.

Nancy, with her bright eyes and gay spirits was irresistible, and in less than two weeks had brought Larry to Independence, "Where you'll have heaps more fun, my dear—there's always more fun in a little town than a big one you know," and introduced her to Eldred Hampton. That was enough. And now for eleven months Larry had made her home with the Hamptons in their old-fashioned, red brick house on the corner of Public and Dew Street not far from the car line. Eldred was like a mother to her, and Larry had grown to love the tiny room which was her own.

With the coming of the fall, Nancy had resigned at Shooley's, and gone to take her second year at Graceland. The Barts all attended Graceland College. The church school was a family tradition with them. The Bart sons and daughters were determined to win college educations for themselves even though it was necessary to stop a winter or two now and then to earn money to take them on to school. Nancy was the fifth Bart to go to Graceland, and there were two more yet to enter the old West Door, Dallas and Jean.

For four of the months since she had been in Independence Larry had known Gregory Spurgeon, who was taking his first two years of engineering at the Kansas City Junior College. Both were twenty-two and ambitious; they had big dreams of life. Their friendship had begun as one of those spontaneous things which springs up when one understanding soul brushes across the path of another understanding soul. They shared friends, had tastes in common, and were members of the same church school class at the Stone Church where Nancy had introduced Larry.

YOUNG AS SHE WAS, Larry had developed some mature ideas. Hers had been and was still a struggle to find herself in an adult sphere. Perhaps being alone in the world—her closest relative was a second cousin whom she had never seen—made her more serious-minded than her years vouchsafed. Already she had come to some important decisions, and one of these was that in spite of the discrepancies in conduct of some of its members, she loved the church.

From her father she had learned to be self-reliant. When she met a problem,

she endeavored to gather all the facts of the case, and apply herself to the solution. She had only a few people whom she called friends, and she had not given all of these her confidence. To Mrs. Hampton she had talked a great deal about the church, even discussing some of her misgivings concerning her ability to qualify as a member in good standing. Church membership to the girl was a sacred and honorable state. But seeing Mrs. Hampton's faith in the church and having heard something of her long years of experience as a member Larry had refrained from mentioning her ideas and attitude regarding the function and status of priesthood.

There was Rowe McCarley, for instance, an Aaronic priest. Rowe was Nancy's fiance, and they planned to be married after awhile when Nancy had finished school and taught a year or two. Larry did not like Rowe, and yet she felt singularly helpless in deciding why she disliked him. Perhaps her utter distaste for him centered in the weakness about his mouth, or in the perpetual moisture in his large eyes, or in the too soothing quality of his voice. To people who did not like him his voice was just "oily," but among Latter Day Saints this very quality in his voice seemed to help Rowe—it put a pulse and throb into the things he said, and people spoke of him as "that spiritual young Brother McCarley." True he was a fine looking fellow with good build, striking eyes, and a clear complexion. Many admired him. But he was a ladies' man, and sometimes Larry had qualms concerning his fidelity to Nancy. These qualms had grown since Nancy had been away at school. Perhaps she, Larry, was Victorian in her ideas, but even though Nancy and Rowe were more than a hundred and twenty-five miles apart, she could not forget that they were engaged.

As for the priesthood in Independence, Larry had had little opportunity to know any members personally, except Rowe McCarley. But she recalled the case of a neighbor Latter Day Saint in Brentville, a good, active man in the branch, in fact the most active man there, after Mr. Harrison and Mrs. Verne had left the community. This neighbor had never been called to the priesthood because he could not give up the tobacco habit. Of course, Larry knew, the priesthood ought not to use tobacco, but she knew also that several priesthood members in the community who criticized "Uncle John" —that was what she had been taught to call their neighbor—for smoking, blandly did things that were worse and still considered themselves "righteous." Uncle John had never allowed their condescensions or criticisms to check his willing service, but sometimes he had laughed at them, and once she had heard him refer to a certain elder and deacon as "doddering old fussbox."

And now as she watched the priesthood functioning in their office, she sometimes caught herself thinking: "They're really not half so pious as they look, but considering who they are, they ought to be. If there is the saving and transforming power to the gospel of Christ that they claim, it should make them—" and then her thoughts began to carry her around and around. She could not understand it.

The memory of Mr. Harrison made the priesthood repulsive to her. Never had she imagined herself the wife of a priesthood member. Greg would make a splendid husband when he was a little bit more grown-up, but if he was as good a man as she wanted him to be, he certainly would be called to the priesthood. Then what?

Many of these things she tried to tell Greg, but she made no reference to her mother, no mention of Mr. Harrison, said little even of her father. And when she left these three out of the picture of her life, there was little else upon which to ground her arguments. It was not easy to be convincing as she and Greg sat there together, so presently she wriggled out of his arms, and held herself very erect against the back of the divan.

"Don't be obstinate, sweet," he pleaded, "we don't even have to be engaged for awhile; we can just have an understanding, you and I—and later . . . You see I'm not a member of the priesthood—heavens, I never thought of such a thing! I won't ever be—if that's why you won't marry me," softly.

"Then if you were called and didn't accept because I didn't want you to, I'd be to blame for stunting your spiritual growth. No, thank you, Greg, it's too big a thing. I can't do it."

Never before had the young fellow noticed the firm lines of her chin, but what a pretty little chin it was! He was not the kind to admit defeat at the beginning of a long pull. He folded his hands, mustered all his patience, and started over again. "But, Larry, be reasonable. You aren't going to let this crazy idea about priesthood, knock you out of all your happiness? You expect to—to get married sometime, don't you?"

"Maybe," gravely.

"Of course you do. Any normal man or woman does."

"Maybe."

"Do you like me?"

"A little."

"If you'd let me I could make that more than a stingy 'a little,'" he burst out and then blushed. "Come here," and a long arm dragged her toward him, but he stopped abashed at a business-like "Please don't."

"Greg," she began, "don't you want to go on being my friend?"

"I want to be more than that—you know it."

"Yes, but you can't. I won't let you. I doubt if I shall ever let you. Tonight you're ruining the beautiful friendship we have build up, and that has helped me so much the last few weeks. It—has meant a great deal to me, Greg." She wondered if her voice sounded as sorry as she felt. "I doubt if I could explain it to you. But this—tonight—can't go on. If we can't have our friendship as it was before—we'll just have to quit seeing each other."

He was not looking at her now. A hand covered his eyes. "Don't you see, Greg, I haven't found myself yet—you haven't found yourself. We—we don't know anything compared to what there is to know. We can't be sure."

"We can!" he blurted fiercely. "I'm just as sure now as I shall ever be about —about how much I care for you!" For a long moment they faced each other.

Then the girl arose, smiled, and patted his shoulder.

"I'm sorry," he sprang up.

"No need," was her reply. "You meant it. But it's getting late—"

"Please, Larry, don't be mad at me. I don't think I could stand a quarrel and not seeing you any more. May I come again? May I come tomorrow night, and we can go over to Dart Moody's as we planned? I'll try to be as I was before only—oh, Larry, I'm so crazy about you!"

For a restful moment her blond head lay on his shoulder. It was nice to have one person in the world on whose shoulder she could lean her head. Then resolutely she stood back. "I'm sorry if I hurt you tonight, but you—you made me tell you," she murmured.

For several minutes after he had gone, she lingered in the front room. The house was unusually quiet. Eldred Hampton had gone to bed early with a headache, and the others were still out for the evening. Even the Blaines were not home.

There were somber thoughts in Larry's mind as she reseated herself on the divan, drew a bronze-slippered foot up under her skirt, and nestled her shapely head against the cover where a few moments ago Greg's head had rested. She wanted to talk to someone, to present her difficulties, and to wrestle with them aloud. But there was nobody to talk to. That was the way it had been for so long. "Oh, Daddy!" she moaned.

Greg was a dear, promising boy. She did care more for him than anyone else. Like him a little? She laughed silently with the racking kind of laughter that shakes one's soul. His smile and presence warmed her. His voice, now teasing, now serious, was her music. She gloried in his ambition. He had a nice family. He was kind and generous. He was clean. And—most of all—he loved her. Within her heart Hope seemed to rise up and say: "Of course you can, my dear, go ahead and marry him." But Reason frowned: "No, no, it isn't Greg alone—it's all the good men that are

The Oriole Call

By C. B. Woodstock

The revised Oriole program is ready for use! This will be good news to a host of early teen age girls in all the church. We are happy to announce that the two little books which form the basis of the Oriole program are now ready for mailing from the Herald Publishing House.

The Oriole Guide

The Oriole Guide is a thirty-two page booklet in orange and black binding, giving complete directions for organizing and conducting an Oriole Circle. It is an Oriole Girl's companion book, a schedule of activities and the requirements for rank promotion and the awarding of Oriole honors. The Orioles' source book is Our Girls, published in 1930, to which the Oriole Guide is a necessary supplement.

Oriole Uniform

The New Program

As has been previously announced, the former Oriole program has been greatly enlarged and enriched to make its activities attractive, interesting and altogether worthy of a large place in the life of early teen age girls, provided by the church. At present, activities are planned in fifteen fields of endeavor as follows: Nature, campcraft, homecraft, health, recreation, handcraft, literature, citizenship, music, drama, art in daily activities, school activities, religion, business and thrift, and etiquette. Rank requirements will make necessary a fairly wide range of accomplishment, but further honors may be won in chosen fields of endeavor.

Honor Awards

A series of honor awards has been prepared in the form of attractive gummed seals, in colors, each symbolical of the field in which special attainment has been made. Some of the awards are earned as one progresses from rank to rank, but after one has completed the First Rank requirements, she may then enter chosen fields for intensive work.

Special honors are awarded Oriole girls for some unusual act, requiring outstanding judgment, bravery, courage or heroism. High honors are offered to Oriole girls who have completed the ordinary ranks and who wish to train for future leadership.

Oriole Record

For the preservation of honor awards and to provide a complete record for each girl's advancement, a very neat Oriole Record has been prepared with ruled spaces for the affixing of the gummed seals as they are earned. There are other spaces for memoranda, notes, kodak pictures, etc. The Record is bound in orange and black, and is a companion book to the Oriole Guide.

The Uniform

A uniform or costume worn by a group is at once a mark of distinction and a source of much satisfaction. This is especially true if the uniform is neat, attractive, serviceable and appropriate for the use. The new Oriole uniform has been designed especially for Orioles, and will be supplied at cost, either made up to measure, or cut to measure and ready to be sewed up at home. The uniform consists of dress and hat of dark green service material with orange tie and handkerchief. (See cut.) For prices and directions see Oriole Guide.

Training Helps

In any movement requiring leadership much depends upon the leaders and their training. Naturally the best leaders available will be chosen as monitors of Oriole Circles. Beginning in October, a mimeographed bulletin of directions, suggestions and helps will be sent each quarter to the monitor of each registered circle. This will give specific training and program suggestions for the following three-month period.

How to Organize

First, secure a copy of the Oriole Guide and follow the directions given. When the circle committee and the monitor have been selected, application should be made for annual registration of the circle with the Girls' Headquarters' Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, (Continued on page 1266) apt to be called to the priesthood. As for those who are not good, my dear—well, you can't!"

Hot tears trickled into the intricate, maroon-colored pattern of the divan cover and lost themselves. How was Larry to know that a few blocks away Greg, as he tramped homeward, was resolving never to consider a call to the priesthood if that was the only reason Larry had for not marrying him. A girl's crazy idea!

true with the redemption and final perfecting of man, by which he may be fitted for celestial life. It is for this reason, doubtless, that God has revealed the laws which he has ordained to govern his church.

The church of our Lord is a part of the kingdom of God, and will remain a part of that kingdom after man is redeemed. The laws governing the earthly realm or territory of his kingdom must of necessity be in harmony with the laws which govern the celestial realm, though in some respects they may not be so far advanced, as man is not far enough advanced in this life to appreciate or understand the fullness of the celestial life. But the laws of the church on earth are designed to develop man toward a more complete understanding and appreciation of the celestial life and of the laws which govern its environment. They were given for this very purpose, in fact. The Apostle Peter explains it by declaring:

"According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue; Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."—2 Peter 1: 3, 4.

The marvelous works of God are manifested around us daily in the operation of nature's law. Through the developments of science we are learning more and more to appreciate the wonders of his infinite wisdom, and to realize that conformity to his laws will bring us the certainty of beneficent results. But these manifestations of God, wonderful as they are, give us but a faint concept of what is yet to be revealed to those who observe his commandments to do them. For Paul declares:

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them who love him."—1 Corinthians 2: 9.

THE LIFE ETERNAL

The church as an organization is ordained of God to work for the regeneration of man, and to bring together in cooperative effort those who have been born again. Which means those who have been converted from the evil ways of life and converted to the divine way of life, and are whole-heartedly devoted to the moral and spiritual growth of humanity. This spiritual development enables its possessor to enter into actual communion with our Lord through the Holy Spirit. This is the way that leads to life eternal.

To obey God and to love the holiness and perfection of his ways, is to grow into the image of Jesus Christ, and this is the grand purpose of the church of God on earth. When this marvelous work is complete among men, the kingdom of God will come as the ruling power that brings peace and good will to all men, a peace and good will that shall fill every heart and shall be crowned with the glory of immortality. Through a divinely ordained church the ideals for which Jesus gave both his life and his death must be cherished and maintained until the immortal glory of his kingdom comes to hold universal sway in every human heart.

man whose eyes are still blind. No matter how much the pastor may appeal to him, it doesn't register. If he does come to church it won't do him any good—he will be unable to see the purpose of it. There is one way to advance this church—the one means and the only means ordained by God to bring to pass our salvation individually and collectively. And we must permit nothing to interfere with our functioning in the church. This means that those of you who may pout, who may permit misunderstanding and petty enmities to enter into your hearts and destroy your effectiveness, haven't seen the kingdom of God. Suppose you are hurt? and by the way, one reason for some of our troubles is that we are too sensitive. Our feelings aren't something breakable! We ought to be ashamed of ourselves. It's just selfishness; that's what it is. We're so much in love with ourselves that if you hurt us nothing else matters.

We should remember the part that was played by Joseph Smith—how he added to the church right at the time when he was being pursued by his enemies. You see how sensitive a man he was—how much he loved himself—and at a time when he found it necessary to flee for his life from his enemies!

We should think also how sensitive Jesus was. Do you recall that at any time he had his feelings so hurt that he failed to minister? Do you remember any period in his life when he walked out on God or the church? Do you recall a time when reverses in material things brought him to think that God had forsaken him? Can you find one instance where he permitted his feelings to interfere in any way with his ministry?

The reverse is true—with heart brimming, with soul and mind heavily laden, he went forth to minister and to live and to die.

Brother Elbert A. Smith, speaking in one of the finest meetings I have ever been privileged to attend, spoke under inspiration of the Spirit to the priesthood—and remember, some of them had been on foreign missions and had made all the sacrifice that entails—and said to them, "Have any of you ever been asked to drink of the cup as I have had to drink it?"

What would have happened if we had had a "sensitive" Savior?

And Joseph Smith; the thought is this: he did his work though it was necessary for him to leave his home because of his enemies, to flee from county to county and from state to state because though they could prove nothing against him the mob sought to take his life. And he thought that for the sake of the church this was well. Through his afflictions and the presecutions he and his family suffered, he still felt that, though he knew not why this should be, God had ordained him from the foundation of the world to do this work for him. This very fact is what made it possible for him to do his work in spite of everything and to live at the last for Carthage. "I go like a lamb," he said, "to the slaughter."

We need to think about that, and some of us need to repent and be converted. Some of us will be hurt—really hurt—before it is over. We are having some of the trouble we have right now because this church doesn't yet know what suffering really is.

As I sat in the prayer meeting this morning, and as I heard the words of the Saints, I wondered, "What's the matter with us?" Here this morning we have sat in heavenly places; the Spirit of God has been among us, and it has touched some in prophecy; that Spirit has burned in our bosoms and has helped us rise from our seats and testify to the light we are receiving, and we have indeed felt ourselves being lifted by the Spirit of God.

That has been true of all the time we have spent here together. Not only in the activities here in this tent, but in all our experiences here; the manner in which we have lived in our tents; the peace, the harmony, the contentment and safety; the Spirit has been with us in power, and I have thought, "What's the matter with us?" What we have had here we could have to enjoy all the time—and more than this.

I wish you could see what is going on here among us. This is the revitalizing process made possible here in this reunion. Here souls have been refreshed and lifted until it has been a taste of heaven itself. Why—but why—are we satisfied to have a week of this when we could have fifty-two weeks out of every year?

Do you believe we could have it? Some of us need our eyes opened yet—opened until we would rather live in a tent from now until Jesus Christ comes and enjoy what we have enjoyed on these grounds than live in the finest mansion that ever was built. We need to feel as one of old who said, "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

The purpose of this church has been delayed in its accomplishment because we have thought too much of the kind of furniture we have—the equipment—the trappings—we have been too much concerned about these things; and I say to you under the Spirit of God this morning that the material things we have thought essential to life are the very things that have stood in the way and prevented the establishment of Zion. We don't need any more money. What we need to do is spent it differently. We don't need more men. What we need to do is live differently. We have enough of these right now to establish the kingdom of God; what we need is to want to do it so badly that we are willing to be organized and to live in harmony for that purpose.

Instead of that we have permitted the interests of the world to dominate us, and they have kept us so busy, first of all getting more and more material things and then working ourselves to death paying for those things, that we haven't had the money nor the time nor the ability to bring about the kingdom of God.

The world is still doing that; by the radio, by bill posters, by every way possible it is saying, "Buy, buy, buy!" What they really say is, "Give yourselves for these things." On account of the depression there is more pressure than ever before being brought to bear upon the people of this church to give themselves for material things. And while we do that our redemption is delayed—the kingdom of God waits.

Suppose the children of Israel had tarried when they came out of Egypt, and had stopped where they were to build up a material city. Would they have ever entered the Promised Land? Moses their leader, like Abraham long before, was willing to leave comforts and riches and to travel and live in tents; they were looking for a city that had foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

I never saw this so clearly as in the last two days—that the church today is sufficient to establish Zion now if this people would make Zion first. Just so long as we let other things come first we shall have depression after depression; so long as we give ourselves to material things, Zion will not be.

You need to ask God for the things that are best for you, and to take what he is willing to give—what Jesus Christ is willing to give. I appeal to you to do this and see if God's blessing will not be upon you. Whatever we may give up, it is little when we remember what God the Father and God the Son have given for us. We have used our time and our substance and our talent in the accumulation of material things. Would not the structure we builded have stood better if we had accomplished the thing God asked his church to accomplish?

Some have been deprived of their possessions, and many are learning that they do not bring satisfaction. And those who think their homes are secure had better take heed lest they fall. The day is coming and is near at hand when we are going to learn as a people that no home, no people, no family will be secure that is living outside of the Zionic relationship. For your soul's sake, for your children's sake, don't forget that. That means more than you think it means. Even in Independence if the Saints are not living in harmony they are not going to be safe there either.

"Now verily I say unto you let all the churches gather together — let these things be done in their time, but not in haste (remember, this was given one hundred years ago; we seem to have taken advantage of that; we're still not in haste); but have all things prepared before you."

I am wondering how much preparation we have made. I am wondering if the branches have been willing to hearken. You can answer yourselves.

Can we say together this morning, after what we have experienced in this reunion, and after what I have attempted to bring to your minds this morning, "One thing I know; that whereas I was blind, now I see"?

If you can say that you can understand this depression, and the conditions now upon the earth; you can see what God is bringing to pass among the peoples of the earth, and you can understand that what is happening is only what God predicted would come, and that the only way out is through his salvation. If we can see this morning, we will make a covenant within our souls before we leave here that regardless of what anyone else may do or fail to do all that we are or hope to be we will give wholly and unreservedly to the establishment of Zion—of right relationships upon this earth; to making his kingdom a reality. When we do, we shall indeed appreciate the meaning of his promise, that if we shall seek first his kingdom and his righteousness all other things necessary will be added unto you.

No thoroughly occupied man was ever yet very miserable.—Landor.

A Health Talk

(Approved by A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician)

By E. C. Barnes

Scarcely can you turn the pages of a magazine or newspaper, without your eyes being smitten with the details of that loathsome disorder, constipation. It probably is true that retained body poisons are the direct cause of many diseases. This article is to draw your attention to disease prevention, and how to keep well, as taught in the Bible. For scientific bread making no one has ever devised a better recipe than Moses gave to the children of Israel. Here it is: "And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, and beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it; and the taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil." (Numbers 11: 8.) This Bible bread was so healthful "There was not one feeble person among their tribes." (Psalm 105: 37.) When Jesus came he emphasized the day by day plan of bread making by teaching his disciples to pray: "Give us this day, our daily bread." I prayed that prayer many times before it came true in my life. I am glad Joseph Smith said: "All grain is good for the food of man," and again in the same paragraph: "Nevertheless, wheat for man." (Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3.) I experimented with raw wheat that had been soaked in water twenty-four hours, for chicken feed. Now I know that a few spoonfuls of wheat after meals, will cure constipation, purify the blood, and relieve the lungs, kidneys and skin from being overworked. But why chew raw wheat? I do not any more. No, I eat wisdom bread. Daily I grind wheat meal, with a handpower grinder bought from a mail order house, within twenty-four hours it is used for breakfast mush and other food products that are very wholesome and satisfying indeed. And now to sum up in a few words, this is the gist of the grist: From the mill to the dining room within twenty-four hours.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (John 13: 17.)

"Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut; I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron." (Isaiah 45: 1, 2.) The above was given 712 B. C., according to Bible chronology. And Cyrus was the great king of Persia, who with Darius the Great captured Babylon and killed the king, at the time the kingdom was divided between the Medes and Persians (See Daniel 5: 28-30) in 538 B. C. Thus years before the birth of Cyrus, the Lord spoke to him, calling him by name and asserting that his right hand was holden, for this special work. Agreeing with the statement of Paul, "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." (Acts 17: 26.) Thus Cyrus was chosen before he came to this mortal life. God had determined the times before appointed when he should come, and knowing his fitness for the task foretold the work he would do. See Romans, eighth and ninth chapters, showing how God, foreknowing certain individuals, appointed them for specific purposes. (Romans 8: 29; 9: 11-13, 33, etc.)

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." (See Luke 1: 13, 60, 63.) Thus we have a man that God foreknew and therefore predestined that he should do the work he was sent to accomplish. Jeremiah was ordained a prophet before he was born and the Lord said: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." (Jeremiah 1: 5.) "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." (Hebrews 1: 8, 9.) "Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me." (Hebrews 10: 5.)

Here we have indisputable evidence that God knew several of the great characters of history before their bodies were born; and to deny this, would be to deny that Jesus Christ was known before his body was born. He had a body prepared. The children partook of flesh and blood. He partook of the same likewise: therefore as he had a body prepared, so they must have a body prepared also.

With this established as true, other Scriptures if properly understood will agree with it, because truth cannot be contradictory. This agrees with, "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32: 8.) Here it is the spirit in man that receives inspiration. Also the wise man says, "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord, searching all the inward parts of the belly." (Proverbs 20: 27.) Here the spirit of man is the medium by which the Lord gives light to the body.

That the spirit may be separate from the body we note the following, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh this is the fruit of my labor: yet what I shall choose I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." (Philippians 1: 21-24.)

In 2 Corinthians 12: 2, 3, Paul spoke of a man he knew, and of a wonderful experience he had, and says that "whether in the body or out of the body," he could not tell. Such a man was caught up to the third heaven. Now if a man could not be out of the body, and Paul being an authority in spiritual things, having seen the Lord, would have known it to be impossible, and would have doubtless told us that a man could not be out of the body. We have the instance of the rich man and Lazarus. (Luke 16: 19-26.) Adventists tell us that this is a parable; "but the Bible does not." It starts with the statement, "There was a certain rich man." And if it were a parable; Jesus Christ certainly would not even in a parable tell what is untrue. The rich man "died and was buried." So his body was disposed of; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, . . . No question about his being conscious, although his body was buried. The thirst he was suffering would indicate that he was in the pit wherein is no water. (Zechariah 9: 11.) While Lazarus was resting in the place where according to Jewish "figures" was called "Abraham's bosom," he also being conscious, although his body was dead.

"Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth: it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?" (Isaiah 14: 9, 10.) Babylon is here being referred to. Hell is to be moved at her coming. The dead the chief ones and the kings are to rise up from their thrones, and "they shall speak and say unto thee. Art thou become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?" Wherever hell is the king of Babylon was to go there. The others who were there were to speak to him, which could not be if there was no consciousness after the death of the body.

In Ezekiel 32 we have several different nations spoken of that were destroyed in war, and the prophet tells how they went down into the pit. The different names given for the abode of those who are the unrighteous dead, is referred to as the pit, hell, prison, nether parts of the earth, and prison house. In this chapter in most places the word pit is used. In the 26th verse it is said, "her graves are round about her," and in verse 27 it is said, they have gone down into hell. In verses 18 and 24, "They have gone down to the nether parts of the earth." In verse 23, the "graves are set in the sides of the pit." In verses 25 and 26, "the graves are round about him."

The language indicates a difference between the graves and the pit or hell. We once examined a tract by one who had studied the question extensively, who claimed with considerable reason that the pit or hell was in the earth; bottomless because the entire pit would be sides, and no bottom for any direction from there would be up: thus the graves where bodies were confined were according to verses 22, 25, 26, in the sides of the pit, or round about him. One thing is evident that whoever was in the pit was conscious. In the 31st verse we read: "Pharaoh shall see them. . . ." Which would be impossible if he were unconscious. But what is most important is:

"The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword." (Ezekiel 32: 21.) "Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle." (Psalm 24: 8.) Here evidently the one strong and mighty is the Christ. He, with those who help him, is to speak to those who are dead and in hell, which could not be possible unless they were conscious. This harmonizes with what Peter says: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison: Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water." (1 Peter 3: 18-20.) Also, "Who shall give an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." (1 Peter 4: 5, 6.)

Now we have the following plainly before us: 1. Christ and those who helped him were to speak to Egypt who had gone down to the nether parts of the earth, or the pit; where their graves were in the sides of the pit or round about them: showing that Egypt was conscious. 2. After Christ had suffered he went and preached to the spirits in prison who were disobedient in the days of Noah: so they were also conscious. Since the Christ is to judge both the quick and the dead, and millions of people have died without opportunity of hearing it, therefore, the "gospel was preached to them that are dead that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." So that all men who did not have the chance to hear the gospel in this life might have their opportunity.

Jesus had said that, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 14.) The chorus of angels who announced the birth of Christ declared, ". . . Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." (Luke 2: 10.)

Indeed it is good tidings of great joy that all either in this life or in the place where spirits dwell, no matter what nation or people, will have a chance to hear and obey the gospel and enjoy its benefits. The reference made to Lazarus shows that the righteous will rest in a conscious condition, after death. Paul also gives us more light on this, "But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. To the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." (Hebrews 12: 22, 23.)

The above positively contradicts the position set forth by the Adventists as previously quoted, where they say, "When the spirit goes back to God, the dust from which man was made a 'living soul' in the beginning, goes back as it was to the earth, and the individual no longer exists as a living conscious thinking being, except as he exists in the mind, plan, and purpose of God through Christ and the resurrection. In this sense "all live unto him." (Bible Readings, page 507.) But Paul as quoted above classes the spirits of just men as distinctly individual as the angels and others dwelling in the great church above.

With this also agrees the promise made by the Apostle Paul as follows, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thessalonians 4: 14.) So when Jesus returns from heaven, there will come with him the spirits of the just men made perfect; to receive again their bodies.

John says, "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Revelation 6: 9, 10.) The above occurred before the resurrection. The persons referred to were conscious and according to the context, "waiting until others of their brethren should be killed as they had been." These people were not resurrected; but they were conscious, proving that there is consciousness outside the body.

"But," the objector will say, "how about the texts where are such statements as the following?" "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Psalm 146: 4.) The Psalmist here is discussing human relations, and things that have to do with putting trust in (earthly) princes therefore when one leaves this life all these things and thoughts perish. The forces and powers we have to do with here do not exist there.

"For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." (Ecclesiastes 9: 5.) Of course the dead know not anything, but can the Adventists tell us where the Bible speaks of a dead Spirit? Then the next clause cannot be explained so as to harmonize with the Adventist theory of the resurrection, "where both the evil and good are brought forth and rewarded according to their works." The above text says, "Neither have they any more a reward: for the memory of them is forgotten." So this can only apply to the part of man and the associations that will be forgotten; or, in other words, to the physical life. The context plainly shows the above to be true.

"Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." (Ecclesiastes 9: 6.) That the above applies to physical life and associations is too plain to need more notice than to call attention to it. These are forever gone: the loves, hatreds, envies, and even associations such as marriage serve their purpose in this life and therefore perish and have no place under the sun. Jesus says, "For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven." (Mark 12: 25.) Marriage is necessary as a part of the scheme of life under physical conditions, and with it goes the love that binds people together in this life, so that they together may give the care and protection of their offspring, so that children may not only be brought into the world, but be prepared for life; but when these purposes are fulfilled and the physical life ends, their physical love that has place only in this life perishes. The hatred and envy growing out of human competitions and conflicts are forgotten; they perish at death. But this does not refer to the conscious individual who partakes of flesh and blood. The personal ego that lived for a time in the flesh does not cease to exist, and the above Scripture in no sense gives reason to so believe.

"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." (Psalm 115: 17. No occasion to deny it, for it only refers to the dead physical body.

"For in death there is no remembrance of thee." (Psalm 6: 5.) The arguments previously used will also answer this.

We have shown that the children partook of flesh and blood as Christ did; therefore they existed before they came into this life. For reasons known to God we have no memory of the conditions in which we lived before coming here, but as it is revealed that certain ones were sent here for special purposes and that speaking of the race, Paul says, "He (God) hath determined the times before appointed," we can only conclude that God has a special purpose in sending us into this life, that through its experiences we might glorify him. We have opportunity to learn the consequences of sin "that is death" and the suffering that sin brings to us, also the joy and satisfaction that comes from right doing. We have a chance also to know of the love that caused the Christ to assume the punishment due us for our sins, that through his blood we may be redeemed. So if the goodness of God does not lead us to repentance, we must learn by the things we suffer; for God has ordained that all shall be saved sometime and some way, except the sons of perdition, who having been in a saved condition have fallen away. As Paul says, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, And have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." (Hebrews 6: 4-6.)

So far as we can find there is no promise of further redemption for these, but they were once in a saved condition, and as a seed once sprouted and then killed cannot be renewed to life so we know of no promise that the above class can be again renewed to spiritual life.

But we also read: "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the savior of all men, especially of those that believe." (1 Timothy 4: 10:)

QUESTION TIME

Is there any evidence that the N. R. A. eagle is the beast of Revelation 13?

In "Question Time" of the Herald for September 19, aspects concerning the "mark of the beast" are noted. In addition to this it may be said that the description of the beast appears to indicate the Roman power, as viewed by most careful students of the subject. It has been noted that Rome had seven consecutive forms of government, supposed to be figured by the "seven heads," though some think the seven hills on which Rome was built may have been intended. It is believed that Daniel referred to the symbols of the lion, the bear, and the leopard (7: 3-7) to indicate the Babylonian, Persian, and Grecian empires, his fourth beast being the Roman power.

It will be recalled that the Roman power arose out of the others mentioned, and therefore the text in Revelation might well thus refer to them. It states:

"And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion."—Revelation 13: 2.

There are many other details of this subject that present striking parallels to certain features connected with the Roman power. John is believed to have used the symbolism as a means of conveying important truths to the saints, for at that time it would probably have meant death to anyone who boldly used the name of Rome in showing her wickedness and the evil nature of her rulers, but the interpretation of these figures would probably be suggested to those who were familiar with the great persecution then raging against the saints. There seems to be no sufficient reason to ascribe this beast to the N. R. A., which is intended for a helpful purpose, whether or not that purpose succeeds to the extent desired.

Why was it necessary for Christ to die for mankind? Was it to appease God?

The old idea that God agreed to remit the debt of man's sins if Christ would become responsible for them is, I believe, unwarranted. Jesus himself expressed the purpose of his mission in clear terms when he said:

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3: 16, 17.

Even though God foreknows all things, it does not follow that he approves all that is done. It is unthinkable that God desired his Son to be crucified. Yet it was necessary that someone should present the gospel and the redemptive plan, and Christ knew that his mission would result in his crucifixion. He also knew that by the sacrifice this would make necessary many millions of people would be converted to God. I think it was this willingness to make the sacrifice that pleased God, much as we hold in deep love and esteem one who has made a great sacrifice for us. Proof of Christ's love has caused a deep response in human hearts.

The atonement was what the term really indicates, a sacrifice for us that makes honest hearts at one with God. Gratitude is a conspicuous feature of this work, for one who has no gratitude to God will not turn to him and repent. In his sacrifice Christ atoned for sin to those who repent, without which each must pay the penalty of his evil deeds. But it is not solely Christ's death that is important, for Paul declares:

"For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."—Romans 5: 10.

It is the life of Christ that regenerates man, without which salvation would be impossible for man.

Should a Saint attend or teach in Sunday schools or other denominations, if his own is not within reach?

We should do good wherever we can, and if one lives where he cannot reach a church of his own faith, that is no reason for keeping his light "under a bushel." By having contacts with other religious peoples he should be able to exert a good influence among them, and perhaps may help some to a better understanding of his faith. It was largely the clannishness of the Jews that contributed to their persecution in many lands and among many peoples. We cannot exert a good influence in that manner to any very great extent. Jesus and Paul mingled with the people.

Prayer and Testimony

The Testimony of Paul

Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. . . .

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.—2 Corinthians 11:23-28; 2 Timothy 4:7.

Blessed in Keeping the Law

By Francis Schrunk

The church of Jesus Christ means more to me than anything else in the world. I am sorry to say, however, that it has not always meant so much to me as it does now.

I used to have no desire to keep the law of tithing, but my companion and I have found that since we have been complying with the law, the Lord has blessed us. It saddens me to see so many people today hindering the progress of the church by disobeying the Lord's commandments.

Many times blessings have been poured out upon me, convincing me beyond a doubt that this church is true.

Usually when I am called upon to do something new, I am very nervous, and prior to performing my first baptism, I was fearful that I should make some mistake. I prayed earnestly over the matter, and even up to the time the rite was to be carried out I was nervous. I asked God in silent prayer to remove this fear. Upon entering the water, all of my nervousness left me. My prayer was answered, and I received a spiritual thrill while performing the baptism.

My prayer and desire are that we, as a church, shall more fully realize our duty, so that we shall bring about the speedy redemption of Zion.

God's Promises Are Conditional

By Mrs. L. J. Morgan

I wish to add my testimony to those of other Saints. The Herald means everything to me, and is a very welcome guest in our home. For some time my hearing has been defective, and as a result, I hear very little while at church. As soon as the Herald comes, I read it from cover to cover.

I love this work. The knowledge I have of the gospel is dearer to me than anything else in life. In looking back over my life, I know I could not have lived without the help of God, for he has healed me and my family in times of sickness and comforted us with vision and dreams. God will not permit our trials to be greater than we can bear if we trust in him.

A few years ago, I was passing through the greatest trial of my life. I prayed almost constantly. God heard, and comforted me in a dream, which brought peace to my soul. It is still a great source of encouragement to me.

I realize that God's promises to us are conditional. I wish to live so that I may receive the blessings that he has in store for me.

A Letter of Appreciation

San Francisco, August 16, 1933.

Dear Editors:

During the summer cruise of the fleet we have had the opportunity of attending several of the branches up and down the coast, and in every instance were invited out to different homes for dinners and various other kinds of entertainment for which we are most grateful and if you have a little corner in the Herald that could be utilized for such we would appreciate the following note of thanks to those good people being published:

"We wish to express our deep appreciation for the exceedingly warm-hearted hospitalities extended us by the Saints during the visit of the fleet at various ports of the West Coast. It has been our privilege to enjoy the fellowship of many of the Saints and we have found, no matter where we were, that same spirit of welcome which is so characteristic of Latter Day Saints. Again we would thank them and extend to them an invitation to visit us at our home port, Los Angeles Harbor, and our little church home in Long Beach."

Hearing Is Restored

By William Crabtree

I am a member of Pleasant Valley Branch. For thirty-five years I have been deaf in my left ear; no sound had reached me through this afflicted part of my body. On the evening of June 5, 1933, I was annointed under the hands of Elder Francis May, who prayed that God would open my ear. God heard and I was healed.

I can now hear distinctly in both ears, and each day I praise my heavenly Father for the miraculous power he has given to his ministers of the restored church.

Healed Through Administration

By Nellie Culp

Saturday, May 27, 1933, I attended a prayer and testimony service at the Pleasant Valley Church. I was one among several who requested administration for healing. My affliction was chronic appendicitis. Elder Richard Shope anointed me, and Elder Francis May confirmed the anointing, commanding the disease to leave my body. The pain ceased and I was healed.

I thank my heavenly Father for his loving kindness and power to heal all diseases.

Prayer and Testimony

Testimony Is Confirmed

By Mrs. Gertrude Maxwell

In telling our experience we often do more good than we realize. About forty years ago I heard Elder Barr relate an experience in which he administered and prayed for a child who had drunk two ounces of carbolic acid. He said that as he prayed the child received relief and went to sleep.

I received the witness of the Spirit that this incident was true, and from that time I started praying to a kind and heavenly Father.

This summer at our reunion (Eastern Michigan) I met the woman who forty years ago when but a small child, swallowed the poison, and she verified the testimony of Brother Barr.

Glad to Be a Member

By Irene Pearson

My first acquaintance with Latter Day Saints was when a girl who was my best friend, urged me to accompany her to Sunday school. I did so, joined the class, and began also to attend other meetings. Later I saw my friend's mother baptized, and I, too, was eager to join the church. I understood the meaning of baptism. The pastor of the branch visited my parents, but they thought that I was too young to join a church. I was sorely disappointed, but resolved to make the matter the subject of my most earnest prayers.

It was not long until the pastor made my parents a second visit, and they consented to my baptism which took place June 4, 1933. I am glad to be a member of Christ's church, and I want to do all I can to help him.

A Tribute to Evangelist Richard Baldwin

By W. A. Guthrie

In my judgment the future will reveal more and more the great worth of such sterling exponents of gospel facts as Brother Richard Baldwin, who during the past year has baptized sixteen candidates in our town. No longer will any dare charge that his standard of righteousness is too exacting. To him the terms of life and immortality are entirely too dear and priceless to mix with unworthy ideas and practices. No one must guess or argue to know where to find Brother Baldwin, and no spiritual-minded man or woman fails to discern that he is the friend of right and truth.

No thinking person can note current events and not be stirred to the depths of his soul by such thoughts as: What is coming next? What kind of a world will my children help to make, and have to live in?

Today we see about us indifference to things of the soul, people wandering in darkness and ignoring the church, crime, and overtaxation. We cannot but help read the signs of the times, and realize that the need of Zion is not to be overestimated. May the city of beauty and right grow as never before, and may misguided souls be brought within her walls of safety.

How Happy We Can Be!

By Mrs. Emma J. Sterrett

I was reared in the church by true Latter Day Saint parents, who taught me the angel message. It is with pleasure that I look back upon my childhood to our family altar. We enjoyed the traveling missionaries who visited my father's home.

In my own life I have not had outstanding spiritual experiences, but the still small voice has often spoken peace to my soul and guided me in the right direction.

My older son was instantly healed of tonsilitis through administration when he was but three years old. Among the many experiences in my life was one when I stood beside the casket of a loved one. I thought at the time, that I could never pass through the trial, but God was with me, and immediately a sweet, peaceful, comforting feeling came to me.

I know this is God's work and that he answers prayer. I praise his name every day of my life.

Just a month ago, my younger son's little boy was very sick and we were worried about his condition. One day I kept singing over and over in my mind the following words:

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear;
What a privilege to carry
Everything to God in prayer!"

After singing the song, I knelt and prayed for the child. Again that wonderful peace came to me. He was administered to that evening and was healed.

How happy we can be in this work if we only serve God and keep his commandments. Pray for me that I may be faithful.

Use Your Church Privileges

By Mrs. Charles Holmes

I enjoy reading the testimonies of my brothers and sisters in the church. God has helped me in my many trials, and I hope that he will continue to bless me.

Our family is isolated, but God helps us by his Holy Spirit. To those who have church privileges, I would say, do not neglect to use them, for they are strengthening to the Saints.

Wheeling District Conference

O. J. Tary Again District President—Five Ordained

The conference of Wheeling District, held at Wellsburg, West Virginia, September 2 and 3, may be summed up as an important milepost in the onward march of the latter-day work in this region.

All branches were represented and sent reports. Missionary A. C. Silvers was not able to be present owing to the needs of the work in West Virginia District, also a part of his field, but he sent his report. Patriarch J. F. Martin was absent from the district at this time on account of his health.

Among the visitors present were Bishop H. E. French, Patriarch G. W. Robley, and Elder James E. Bishop, the latter the president of Kirtland District though a resident of the Wheeling area. These three men did the preaching during the conference, delivering sermons full of useful instruction.

An important item of business was the decision to pay thirty dollars annually on the Kirtland auditorium debt, the money to be raised by contributions from the branches. Election of delegates to General Conference and the changing of the fixed date for the fall business conferences were set as an order of business for the spring conference, to be held not later than the first Sunday in March. A resolution extending a vote of thanks to Elder William Richards for his services during the past seven years as district president, was unanimously passed.

High Priest O. J. Tary was elected district president. He has already served over nine years in this capacity, starting with the organization of the district in 1917, and has since served as counselor to Brother Richards. Other officers elected were Elders Louis A. Serig and W. A. Schoenian, counselors, the latter to serve as director of church schools; Samuel A. Martin, secretary-treasurer, and Anna L. Schoenian, superintendent of music.

Five young men of Wellsburg Branch were approved for ordination, two as priests, one as teacher, and two to the office of deacon. They give promise of continuing active and with others already serving, of making that branch a splendid corps of officers. The ordinations took place in two of the Sunday meetings of the conference, the charge being delivered by Patriarch Robley at the communion and testimony service.

This service was well attended and lasted over two hours, and the testimonies and prayers were of a high order.

The bishop's agent's report was made at the Sunday evening meeting and showed receipts for the twelve months' conference period of $1,377.84.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

Three very busy summer months have gone since Central Church news appeared in the Herald. During that period Saints from different States have worshiped with this congregation. Among the early comers were the David Dowker family who were happily welcomed. They bore faithful testimonies to the truth of the gospel. Branch President E. Lowe enjoyed an inspiring visit with Brother George Harrington, of Independence, Missouri.

Four young children of this congregation were baptized June 18, Helen Fay Hurst, Shirley May Swanson, Edward G. Keir, and Gordon Sherman who is the sixth generation of the church on his father's side of the family.

The Sunday Evening Club has taken over the Sunday evening services for fall and winter. During July and August the Sunday evening services were dismissed.

During the early summer Brothers Kier, Hurst and Jacques furnished the speaking. The younger men of the branch have ably assisted, and are to be encouraged. Brother Floyd McNickle and the choir have furnished the music, Arthur Sherman directing.

July 2, marked the conclusion of twenty-four years since the Saints came to worship in South Side Church. At the service commemorating this anniversary Brother Olliver recounted the blessings God has bestowed on his people in this place. Many of the early membership have passed on. Brother Larry Dennis gave an interesting account of his trip to the Youth Conference. This was an inspiring service.

Weekly prayer services have been held as usual, and the Saints have been admonished to honor the past, consecrate the present, and have faith in the future.

Elder A. C. Barmore spoke on "The Progress of Revelation," July 23. He also gave three illustrated lectures, one on Australia and two on the life of Christ.

The Saints of this congregation were saddened by the sudden death of Grace Margaret Keir, only child of William and Marie Keir, August 1. Brother Frank Almond conducted the funeral service. The sympathy of all is extended to the bereaved parents.

Of late several babies have been blessed, Patsy Dawn, daughter of Sister Pansy Myers and Sharon Lynne, daughter of Brother and Sister Earl Blakeman. Brothers Keir and J. J. Olliver blessed Donald Arthur and Darl Ellison, the twin babies of Robert and Gladys Bockall.

The Saints came to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, September 3, fasting and praying for the good of local work, and God saw fit to answer their prayers. Brother George Kerr was re-called to the work of deacon, and brothers Ray Hurst and Roy Healy to the eldership.

Brothers Keir, Hurst, Healy and Edstrom have recently occupied the pulpit.

During the summer the men have been busy preparing a room in the basement of the church for the new heating plant, now installed. Soon the members will enjoy the enlarged upper room and the more convenient kitchen. The united effort of young and old has effected these changes. The lawn, trees, shrubs and flowers have beautified the exterior of the church home.

The branch business meeting was held September 25, and a chicken supper, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the purchase of the new heating plant.

Sister Grace Keir who recently underwent a major operation at Passavant Hospital was gaining steadily at last report. She has been greatly blessed through administration.

West Pullman Church, 11926 Parnell Avenue

For some time members of this congregation have been earnestly engaged in building up interest and attendance, and good has been accomplished.

According to the new ruling of this district, the semiannual business meeting was held in September for the election of officers for the ensuing year. Clem Evans was elected pastor; E. O. Byrn and E. D. Tripp, counselors; Charles Scribner, secretary; Richard Keir, financial secretary; Stephen Lester, jr., superintendent of church school; Richard Keir, director of choir.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

On rally day, September 24, a joyous time of worship and services was experienced by all. Church school convened at 10 a. m.; preaching at eleven, H. P. W. Keir, the speaker; basket lunch at twelve-thirty; preaching at 2 p. m. by Brother Roy Smith, of Hammond, Indiana; vesper services, 4 p. m.; Frank Almond followed the theme of this service with love as the basis of his sermon. The choir furnished music for each service of the day.

A great effort is being put forth to raise the remaining amount of money owing on the church and to clear this congregation of debt, so that the church building may be dedicated December 3. Workers are sure this can be done for already a goodly amount has been pledged and bake sales and socials are planned to help.

Visitors are always welcome at 11926 Parnell Avenue.

Independence, Kansas

All-day Meeting for District Young People

The young people of the district held an all-day meeting here September 17. About one hundred and fifty-five were present at the Sunday school, and many others came later. Frank Shank, of Carthage, Missouri, had charge of the eleven o'clock service.

At noon a bountiful basket dinner was served at the riverside park, and the afternoon was spent in recreation until a musical program began at three o'clock.

A play was presented by Independence young people at seven in the evening, and District President Amos T. Higdon was the eight o'clock speaker.

The annual business meeting of Independence Saints was held September 24, and officers were elected for the coming year. G. G. Cadwell was sustained as branch president; Betty Anderson, secretary, and Anna Miller, treasurer. J. P. Miller was chosen church school director. These Saints look to the future with a determination to strive onward.

Thune, Nebraska

Two Weeks' Meetings Enjoyed

Elders W. A. Smith and T. E. Fitzwater conducted a two weeks' series of meetings at Thune, with good interest among the local Saints. Throughout the meetings, Elders Smith and Fitzwater took turns preaching. This has been the first time in four years that an elder has visited Thune, and the presence of two was much appreciated.

During the series there was one baptism, that of Marlis Engelbrecht. Brother Charles Engelbrecht, the child's father, officiated.

Independence

Today the 1933 Harvest Home Festival of the church opens in the lower room of the Auditorium, and during the next five days it is estimated by those in charge, that more than fifty thousand visitors will pass through the hall to see the exhibits.

People living in Independence, in neighboring stakes, and in more distant parts of the country have sent their gifts of fruit and vegetables, raw and canned, and the hall is aglow with all the colors of harvest-time. Booth decorators have been hard put to it this year to excel the exhibits of former years, but in many instances they have succeeded. A great many beautiful and novel schemes have been worked out for the effective displaying of the thousands of quarts of food which have been donated to the festival for the use of the needy during the coming winter season.

Many organizations are represented in these exhibits—States, districts, stakes, branches, congregations, clubs, and departments. Booths line the walls of the great hall, and cover the steps descending into the "pit" area of the room.

Harvest Festival workers have sent out invitations not only to the schools of Independence, but to all those of the suburban district, to bring their classes to visit the festival. The doors are open from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. each day.

Program features of the festival this year include a "school of economy," in which practical demonstrations in cooking with whole wheat flour are given; a flower show; bake exhibit; baby show; music every evening by the Auditorium Band and Orchestra; demonstrations by Oriole and Girl Scout organizations and others.

As a climax to festival activities, the Harvest Festival Chorus of six hundred voices will give its annual concert in the main room of the Auditorium at 3.30 p. m. Sunday, October 8. This chorus is composed of singers from thirty choirs in Holden, Far West and Kansas City stakes and in Independence. Paul N. Craig will direct it. Assisting artists will be Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano; Colin Ferrett, bass; Elizabeth Smith, harpist, the Cantanina Chorus, and the Auditorium Orchestra led by Orlando Nace.

Representatives of Graceland College gave their first Sunday vesper service broadcast of the winter at the Stone Church studio Sunday, 6 to 6.30 p. m., Dean A. R. Gilbert the speaker. Mrs. Linna T. Hunt, instructor of voice, was the vocal soloist; Charles Ballentyne, jr., violinist, and Mrs. Burnham Silsby, pianist. Colin Ferrett announced. This is the first of a one-a-month college broadcasts for the winter.

Saturday night's show at the Campus officially closed the summer's Campus activities. Since the last week in May picture shows have been enjoyed by the public at the rate of two each week.

On last Thursday night the Independence chapter of Graceland College Alumni sponsored a Campus show for the benefit of the Graceland scholarship the chapter is endeavoring to raise.

Stone Church

The double sacrament service plan is working out well at the Stone Church, children worshiping with their parents. Sunday morning an impressive service was in charge of Pastor John F. Sheehy, President Elbert A. Smith, Bishops G. L. DeLapp and R. T. Cooper, and Elders H. G. Barto, C. Ed. Miller, and H. L. Barto.

President Elbert A. Smith read the official communication of the Presidency, published in last week's Herald, "At the Turn of the Year," and Elder C. Ed. Miller offered a special prayer for the church and especially for the workers upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility of leadership.

At the same hour an overflow meeting was held in the lower auditorium of the church, Elder T. A. Beck in charge. More than two hundred were there.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp, the evening speaker, received an attentive hearing from the Stone Church congregation. Music for this service was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, Mark Anway, the soloist; Paul N. Craig directed and Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was at the organ. A cello solo was played by Milford Nace, accompanied at the piano by his sister, Miss Maurine Nace.

Mrs. Adelene Thompson and Mr. Aubra Collins were married September 23, at the home of the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Ethel McBride. Elder C. E. Blodgett performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate families.

Second Church

Pastor William Inman was in charge of the large communion service conducted Sunday morning for this congregation, and the principal talk was by Elder A. K. Dillee. A special prayer was offered by Elder F. L. Freeman. Peace and the spirit of worship dominated the service.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the evening speaker, and his theme was "The Way of Salvation." The choir furnished the musical program, and Elder R. A. Whiting offered the invocation and benediction.

Liberty Street Church

A surprise party was given Pastor John R. Lentell last Tuesday night at the church. This was the congregation's way of showing its appreciation for the services rendered by Brother Lentell during the past year. A young women's chorus sang, "You Can Smile." A play of six acts, written by Mrs. Lentell, was given, depicting the work of the women's department. During the performance the cast sang a song, "I Have Resolved," written by Cecil Walker. Gertrude Davis read a poem, "The Friendly Visitor," written by John F. Sheehy after he had seen the play presented at an earlier date. Several games then preceded a watermelon feast.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Lucien Amos, twenty years old, was baptized Sunday afternoon by Elder E. A. Thomas. The ordinance was administered in the Walnut Park font. The confirmation took place at the evening service, Liberty Street Church, Elders J. E. Vanderwood, John Soderstadt and Pastor John R. Lentell officiating.

Music for the evening hour was furnished by the choir. Elder Vanderwood delivered the sermonet in the place of Elder J. W. A. Bailey, who was scheduled to speak. Brother Bailey had been called out of town to preach a funeral sermon.

Walnut Park Church

Exceptionally large audiences were had at both the church school and communion service Sunday morning. The sacrament service was in charge of Pastor Frank McDonald, assisted by Elder M. T. Williams. Opening remarks were by Apostle E. J. Gleazer. Preceding the taking of the oblation Brother John Reynolds talked about the importance of this offering. Two children, who were baptized following the eight o'clock prayer service, were confirmed during the communion service. They were: Priscilla Bonnie Bean, daughter of Elder and Mrs. Benjamin Bean, and Robert Warren Holman, son of Sister Joseph Dobson. Elder C. K. Green officiated at both baptisms and Pastor McDonald assisted him in the confirmations.

Evangelist U. W. Greene was the speaker Sunday evening. He told of personal experiences which led him to become a member of the church, and drew a lesson from them for the benefit of his hearers. The choir, directed by Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought."

The intermediate department of the church school met Sunday afternoon and elected officers for the church year. Those chosen were: President, Jack Green; vice president, George Harrington; secretary, Wilma Smelser; program chairman, Emil Cross, jr., and refreshment chairman, Frances Bullard.

William Kapnick, eighty-four years old, father of Sister R. D. Weaver, died Tuesday, September 26, at the Sanitarium. Mr. Kapnick made his home with Brother and Sister Weaver. He is survived by two sons and one daughter. Funeral services were held Friday, September 29, at the home, in charge of the Reverend H. Dierks of the Lutheran Church.

The Crusaders' Class, taught by Brother Odess Athey, had a wiener roast at Hill Memorial Park Friday night, September 29, and in the course of the evening initiated the new members recently promoted into the class. An attendance of about forty was reported.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people of Enoch Hill were active in church work and associations during the summer months. A considerable number took part in the missionary trips made to nearby branches. The last trip was made to Bates City, twenty-six miles east of Independence. The young people of Spring Branch congregation went also and assisted with program numbers. Elder H. E. Winegar, young people's leader on Enoch Hill, was the speaker.

Now the fall and winter activities are beginning and promise good times for the young in work and play. Their regular meeting every other Wednesday evening is well attended and many fine and helpful thoughts are brought out.

Brothers William Shakespeare and G. E. Whitehead are back after several months' absence. They assisted Elder Joseph Martin in the early morning prayer service Sunday.

Before the sacrament service Sunday Brother William Shakespeare and daughter, Mrs. Millard Pace, Brother George Snively, and daughter, of Lamoni, Iowa, sang "Take Time to Be Holy."

Elder Amos E. Allen was the evening speaker and his text was, "Let us make man in our own image." The choir sang, "Cast Thy Burden on the Lord," and Richard Maloney sang, "Have Thine Own Way Lord."

Spring Branch Church

The new corps of officers began active service with the first Sunday in October. They are: Pastor, M. C. Jacobsen; assistant pastor, Jesse Smith; church school superintendent, Alma Tankard; bishop's agent, Robert Fish; women's leader, Bertha Miller; director of music, Sister J. Nelson; church school secretary, Ada Tankard; young people's leader, Irene Roberts; primary superintendent, Grace Smith; junior superintendent, Sister C. J. Dixon; cradle roll, Ethel Peer; publicity agent, Ethel Peer, and librarian, Francis Tankard.

The Sunday morning prayer service in charge of Robert Fish and W. A. McClain, was a fit beginning for sacrament Sunday, and the communion service at eleven o'clock was in charge of the new pastor, assisted by Jesse Smith, J. Andes, and Robert Fish.

The night program was a promotion service in charge of church school officers. This was most impressive. All departments took part. Elder D. S. McNamara gave a short talk.

There was never a time when there were so many politicians in the wrong party.—David Lloyd George.

Fresno, California

Begin New Season With Zeal

Vacation time is over and Fresno Branch is beginning the year with new zeal. Some have moved away during the summer. Brothers Robert Nephew and Laurence MacDonald have gone to Sacramento. Ethan Godfrey is attending Graceland College.

A big rally and home-coming day is planned for September 24. There will be a picnic dinner in Roeding Park.

Sister Partin and children, of Sanger, are expected soon from Kansas where they have been visiting relatives. Lillie Jennings and Maxine Godfrey returned September 1, after attending the Youth Conference in June, visiting Independence, Nauvoo, Kirtland, World's Fair, Grand Canyon, Black Hills, and Yellowstone National Park.

Painesville, Ohio, Mission Becomes a Branch

Advancement in This Part of Kirtland District

Painesville, Ohio, Mission was organized as a branch September 17. A thriving mission has been carrying on there for several years and the membership has grown from one to forty-nine.

The first to be baptized was Andrew McAdams. He had no rest until his friend, Thomas H. Freeman, was baptized. Several remarkable healings took place and others united with the church. They called a formal meeting April 11, 1926, sixteen being present. With little interruption meetings were continued. Elder Albert Wautters served the group long and faithfully. Eventually Thomas H. Freeman was ordained a priest and made pastor of the group. Andrew McAdams was ordained a teacher, also Roy Plont, of Geneva. Brother Davis was ordained a deacon. They continued their meetings and built a fine Sunday school.

On the day of branch organization over forty signatures were placed on the motion to organize. Brother Thomas Freeman was elected president of the branch, and other officers were sustained in their priesthood. Harry T. Freeman was elected secretary, and Brother David treasurer and bishop's solicitor. Brother Carol Fenner was elected superintendent of church school and provision was made for the department of women.

A fine spirit prevailed throughout the meeting and when the officers were elected they were called forward and a prayer of consecration was offered by the district president, James E. Bishop. Elder Eben Curry assisted in the organization.

The prospects are good for the development and continuation of that new branch in Kirtland District. All general officers passing that way are invited to stop and visit and preach.

On the evening of the same day, Leon G. Burdick was reordained to the office of elder. In the past Brother Burdick has done much work as a missionary. The missionary spirit still burns in his soul and no doubt many more precious souls will be brought into the kingdom of God under his ministry.

South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

902 Reddick Street, Mishawaka, Indiana

The annual home-coming and rally day of Mishawaka Branch is now a matter of history. Attendance was good. At the opening service, Saturday, September 16, the time was occupied by the district president and missionary, A. C. Barmore, whose subject was, "How I Became a Latter Day Saint," and Elder Whitehead, who spoke on "Why I am a Latter Day Saint."

The prayer and testimony meeting, Sunday, opened the day's services, with an attendance of eighty, a group of thirty-five driving from Wabash, Indiana, in a school bus.

A short time was spent welcoming the late guests, after which Elder A. C. Barmore occupied the stand at the eleven o'clock hour, lecturing on "The Veneer of Civilization Today and the Need of Conversion to God." He spoke to a congregation of more than two hundred.

A short musical program was followed by the afternoon sermon, Elder Whitehead, the speaker. His subject was, "The Birth and Death of Christ." Immediately following the sermon, the service was turned over to the district young people's workers, Brothers Smith, Barmore, McKnight and Whitehead speaking.

The last service of the day was a Religio program, after which Elder J. W. McKnight delivered the closing sermon. Elders McKnight and Farrow were the two missionaries who came into the locality of this branch in 1926, and started the organization that soon grew into South Bend-Mishawaka Branch.

The services of the visiting ministry are welcomed. Sunday, September 24, Elder Mark Gross, pastor of Buchanan Branch, was the guest speaker. Others who have occupied the stand have been, Elders Coonefare, Hoxie, Hayden, Myers, Hardy, and Taylor.

Two candidates were led into the waters of baptism in June, Sister Elizabeth Moore and Gail Torrence, by Elder Myers.

Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker, Sunday, September 3. His subject was "Christianity, and the Social Revolution."

Saints of this branch were saddened by the death of Clement Junior Ellis, August 23, at the home of his parents, Benzonia, Michigan. Junior was baptized into the church in 1932, and had just recently gone with his parents to their new home in Michigan.

Wells, Michigan

Priesthood Seize Opportunity to Serve Near-by Groups

Though they have felt the efforts of the economic depression, workers of Wells Branch have tried to avoid a spiritual depression. They are faithfully taking the latter-day message to the world.

Brother A. M. Boomer has had the privilege of baptizing four this month, blessing three children, and responding to a number of sick calls, administering to the suffering.

A new opening was recently made and a Sunday school was organized, and one candidate baptized. In this group are two members of the church who will help in the conduction of the Sunday school. Others there are interested, and arrangements have been made to keep in touch with them to help as opportunity permits.

Some attention is being given to another group of interested people out in the country. This has resulted in others coming into the church. Sunday school and other services are being held there. A teacher lives in that group.

These two new groups are under the supervision of Wells Branch, and extend the influence of the branch quite a distance into the country. Wells priesthood have practically three organizations of members and friends to serve, and they are enjoying these opportunities to be of help.

In addition to local work Brother Boomer has helped some in Munising, where he baptized four new members, and at Grand Marais.

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The Spirit of God was felt to a marked degree at the sacrament meeting, September 5. All were encouraged to press forward to accomplish their work.

The young people's class has finished their study of the Young People's Church History and are planning to begin the "Outline Study of the Book of Mormon."

The women's department met September 14, at the church. Vassie Sheets read a paper on "Latter Day Saints, Who Are They?" and Mayme Morgan, on "Education." Verna Grice gave a short talk stressing the high points of her experience at the Kirtland reunion.

Recent speakers occuping the stand of this congregation have been Elders A. H. Nieman, R. E. Madden, G. H. Kirkendall, C. W. Clark, William Mickesell, and Priest Harry J. Hoffman. Their themes were, "Divine Authority," "Real Life," "Saving the Vine," "Home Training," "What of Today," "The Holy Spirit," and "Choosing Rightly."

Brother William Mickesell and family have moved to Columbus from Lancaster, Ohio.

Four young people from Second Church are attending the Ohio State University this fall, Robert S. Jackson, Lea May Morgan, Ruth Wheeler, and Clara May Wheeler.

The special gospel meetings conducted by Missionary J. Charles May, assisted by Elder G. E. Harrington, were brought to a close Sunday, September 17, owing to the leadership school at Central Church from September 18 to 29.

Elders May and Harrington will continue their visits and cottage meetings for some time.

Sunday, September 24, Elder J. Charles May delivered the morning sermonet, and in the evening, Elder G. E. Harrington favored the congregation with a chart lecture. Four candidates were baptized in the afternoon, Paul Foster, Eleanor Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Richter. The confirmation service was taken care of at the prayer meeting at six-thirty.

Saints of this congregation are happy and thankful for the recovery of their pastor, G. W. Leggott and of others who have been ill. The Lord has been mindful of his little band of people here, and several are again active in local endeavor.

Outstanding among the observances of the branch was that of Mother's Day. The children's choir opened the 10.45 a. m. service with the hymn, "Wonderful Words of Life." All who were engaged in the day's programs were mothers with the exception of the presiding minister. Tributes were paid the mothers who had passed on and those who were present when the congregation was asked to stand in silence for one minute. At the morning service talks were given by two mothers, Sisters Tapping and Barrington. The Scripture reading was given by Sister Sloane, and Sister A. Ghent sang a hymn as a solo.

At the afternoon service Brother Barrington paid tribute to the mothers and Sister Lizzie Leggott sang, "Come Learn of the Meek and Lowly." Sister Beatrice Tapping read from Ephesians 6, and Sister Harriet Barrington sang, "Precious Boon." Sister Lily Baguley then spoke on the duties of mothers.

That evening Pastor Leggott directed the service in the following order—call to worship, one verse of "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," by the choir; hymn, "Lord God of Hosts," by the congregation, and invocation by Brother H. Barrington. The choir then sang, "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," and Sister Minnie Brien sang a solo. Sister Stella Bancroft gave the Bible reading, 1 Corinthians 13. Sister Noble talked on "A Mother's Thoughts." After Sister Hayward sang a solo, Sister Lena Wilson talked on the theme of the day.

This was a day of wonderful worship, everyone enjoying himself in the Master's service.

Dayton, Ohio

Young People Organize C. S. M. Club

One year ago Thursday, September 14, a group of fifteen active young people of Dayton, banded themselves together and organized a club known as the C. S. M. Club. Russell Rockwell was elected president. During the ensuing six months many happy evenings were spent. The club visited Middletown, Ohio, attending church and Sunday school. Later they gave a supper to help in the purchase of new Saints' Hymnals for the branch.

At the second election of officers Theo Boeckman was elected president. During this season the club gave several ice cream socials on the church lawn, and the proceeds helped to defray the expenses of the group on their visit to Kirtland reunion, August 12 to 20.

September 7, the third club election resulted in the choice of Albert Griffin, president. A week later they held their first anniversary banquet.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Recent Visitors Give Good Help

Grand Rapids Branch has been enjoying a good attendance at all of the services throughout the summer months.

The young people's department sent six members to the Youth's Conference, at Lamoni, Iowa, in June. Upon their return they each gave a report on the various subjects studied while there.

August 27, Apostle D. T. Williams was a visitor at this branch. After preaching the evening sermon, he united Miss Elvira Champion and Vern Brown in marriage. Miss Champion was attended by Miss Betty Howell, and Mr. Brown by Clyde Shotwell.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith recently visited Grand Rapids Branch, and twelve members of the congregation received their patriarchal blessings.

Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, visited Grand Rapids not long ago, and gave a stereopticon lecture on his travels in the Holy Land.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held recently. Some new officers were elected. Grand Rapids Branch hopes to make the coming year one that will be remembered.

Los Angeles, California

East Church

Sunday, September 24, was promotion day. A fine demonstration of class work was given by the children, and diplomas and Bibles were presented to those promoted.

Pastor L. L. Sutherland is again home after his summer vacation. He has presented a series of Sunday morning sermons, which have been inspiring.

Members of East Church attended the district reunion at Laguna Beach nearly one hundred per cent. They came back with new inspiration for their work. Plans are being made for the dedication of this church in the near future.

The program of the last night of the reunion was in charge of the choir of East Church. A colored minstrel was presented.

During the summer months two carnivals were sponsored by the adult division to help liquidate the debt on the annex. Their slogan is, "Clean the debt in October."

This branch is proud to send one of its promising young men, J. C. Stuart, to Graceland College.

Children's day was celebrated with a beautiful pageant by the children's department under the supervision of Sister Alta Stuart and this followed by baptism of six children.

Genoa, Colorado

Saints of Widely-scattered Branch Profit From Summer Contacts

Last spring Pastor J. R. Sutton moved his family from Flat Top, about twenty-five miles north of Genoa, to a farm near this city. And during the summer the Saints of Genoa profited from this closer contact.

Elder Sutton's son, Charles has charge of the group at Flat Top. There is also a group of this branch at Seibert which meets regularly for Sunday school and enjoys preaching by J. R. Sutton and sacrament once each month.

The Saints of Genoa Branch are so widely scattered that it is very difficult for many of them to attend services regularly.

At the close of the Youth Conference at Lamoni, District President Glaude A. Smith made a tour of the district, giving the Saints his impressions of the conference. His talk at Genoa was encouraging.

The Saints here as those elsewhere, have their eyes turned Zionward and desire to locate there when wisdom leads them to move. This past summer three men from Genoa, Brother Page J. Bruch, Brother E. A. Elefson, and Mr. Everett Fulcher, drove to Missouri and visited different localities.

Brothers J. D. Curtis and Floyd Engstrom, of Colorado, Springs, visited here and held all-day services the last Sunday in July.

Elbert Lee Elefson entered the church by baptism August 6.

Genoa Branch will hold an all-day rally in the school auditorium at Genoa October 1. Services will begin at 10 a. m. On Sunday, October 8, rally day will be in the schoolhouse eight miles north of Seibert, Colorado. Workers hope that all Saints and friends may be able to attend.

Hibbard, Indiana

Cooperate to Pay Church Note

Elder Whitehead, of Muskegon, Michigan, conducted a series of meetings at Hibbard Branch, which came to a close October 1. Great interest was shown by several nonmembers.

Sunday, September 17, a group of Saints from Hibbard were privileged to attend the home-coming of South Bend-Mishawaka Branch.

The women's department is meeting every Thursday. An all-day gathering is enjoyed, at which time articles are made and sold. The proceeds are turned over to the blind community box. The box is being passed around among the members who wish to help raise funds to pay off the church note of one hundred and twenty-five dollars. A special effort is being made to pay off the note so that the necessary repair work on the church building may be done.

The functions of the monthly young people's class have been well attended throughout the summer months. They are also planning an active program for the winter.

The young people's class recently sponsored a supper, served in the basement of the church, to raise money to pay on the church note. Approximately forty families were served, at twenty-five cents a family. Five gallons of home-made ice cream were served. Another supper is being planned for the near future.

Pisgah, Iowa

E. Y. Hunker Holds Meetings

Saints of Pisgah Branch feel that they have good reason to rejoice as a result of a series of ten-day meetings held by Elder E. Y. Hunker. Attendance at the meetings was very encouraging.

September 3, Elders Hunker and J. W. Lane conducted another series of meetings at Little Sioux, Iowa. Three candidates were baptized. Music during the meetings was furnished by Sister Field Jones and her coworkers.

What an Education Means to Me

By Gladys L. Hegwood

THE LAST CLASS of the day was over. I came slowly down the stairs on my way to my locker in the basement. The recitations had been well worth while and some interesting points had been brought out that seemed to me to be worth remembering.

"Good afternoon, Miss H—," said a pleasant voice at my elbow and the principal was beside me. We walked on together into the dean of women's office. After a few moments pleasant chat, he turned to me and said seriously:

"Well, you have had three months of the work; does it appeal to you as much as you thought it would?"

Suddenly, as I looked out of the windows at the beautiful campus stretching out before me, my soul was fired with an inspiration coming from the Source of All Good. The question repeated itself in my heart. I felt again the disappointment and the heartbreak of it all. My very soul was flooded with the question, What does an education mean to me? To me who had struggled along alone—who had been denied so long the privilege of an "education!" Thus I answered my friend.

I think that I may have a different idea of real education from the ideas of many people. To me, true culture is not a smattering of knowledge gained in a few months to be as soon forgotten. It is not a veneer of high-sounding phrases, or polished manners alone—education is a thing of the soul. It means a lifetime of preparation.

Sacrifice, hard work, loneliness, struggle, are often the portion of those who would feed soul, mind, and spirit, at the fountain of life. True education is the broadening of the mind—the deepening of the spiritual life. It is growth and development. The more we know, the greater is our capacity to know and suffer. The truly great person is many times very simple in tastes, and manner; humble because he realizes that life is not long enough in which to learn perfectly all of the difficult lessons set for humanity to learn.

Education rightly used is a joy. We forget the hours of discouragement when we have an opportunity to hear the prominent educators, the leaders of men speak. What joy is ours over the little that we have been able to learn, if we can but feel that our souls are attuned to theirs—that we are able to understand their language!

It seems to me that the real values in this world—the things most worth while, are set by comparison. The objects hardest to reach, that take the most effort, are those most appreciated. So, if we set our ideals high climbing slowly, painfully onward toward the mountain top of our best ambitions—ever onward toward the heights of learning, we may walk each day more alone as our fellow travelers drop by the wayside too weary to continue to the end of the journey. But our souls will be athrill with the joy of achievement if we faint not.

Education is the magic key that unlocks to man the hidden secrets of the earth. It is easy enough to pluck a sunflower, but if you would pick the rose, queen of the garden, you must reach carefully beneath the leaves and then your hands may be scratched and torn in the effort.

This is what education means to me. I am deeply grateful for the opportunity vouchsafed me to walk a little farther adown the road of knowledge where the way is often narrow and hard, and the wind blows chill from the snow-clad peaks in the distance. My hands and feet are often bruised, and torn, but as I climb higher, nearer to the far distant mountain peak of success, I shall meet weary comrades of the road—some sad, some glad, but each of them will have a lesson of courage and wisdom to impart.

I hope to be given strength and the courage to keep on climbing until I reach the peak of perfect education and the master of life, the greatest of all instructors, adjudges me worthy to graduate from the best and truest of institutions of learning, the college of life.

The greatest men have been those who have cut their way to success through difficulties.—Robertson.

Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.—Jesus.

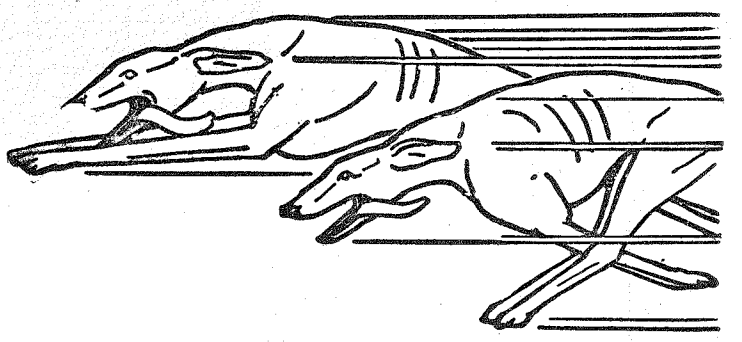
AHEAD of the HOUNDS



These are days of increasing costs—costs which must eventually be reflected in increased prices. The past year has been a year of new low prices. Church books have been sold at the lowest prices in history. Periodicals have been enlarged and consolidated and still sold at the same low price. Now the situation is changing rapidly—paper costs have increased by leaps and bounds, labor costs are mounting and—taken all in all—selling costs must follow. Advantageous purchases will enable us to meet this situation for a short time but eventually we must join the rapidly increasing group who are advancing selling prices.

The Pigeonhole

Nothing Like an Education

The Pigeon was roosting pompously on the typewriter desk this morning when we came in. He bowed stiffly.

"I understand you're getting out a special Graceland edition of the Herald this week," he said. "I happen to be an old Gracelander myself. I was born in the college tower. My family for generations back were Graceland pigeons. I have seen a good many of the present day celebrities of the church in their youth at the college. Father and grandfather have told me about earlier people. It was my great-great-great-grandfather who built a nest in the eaves above the very room where President Frederick M. Smith studied. He was the first graduate you know. So my ancestry goes much farther back at Graceland than any of your human ancestry. The rest of you are mere upstarts." And how he strutted!

"Why did you ever leave?" we asked maliciously. "Did you graduate?"

"I was graduated," he corrected us, with a flourish of grammatical exactitude. And flew away exultantly. He would catch us in a slip like that!

A John Sheehy Story

When the passenger vessel, the Titanic, was built more than a score of years ago, one word was thought to describe it—unsinkable. A mammoth ship having the most up-to-date scientific equipment and luxurious accommodations, people declared that nothing could sink it; the Titanic would always ride the waves.

But on her maiden voyage when the steamer was carrying thousands of passengers, the Titanic went down.

What impressed me most when I read the newspaper accounts of this event which horrified the whole world, was the testimony of the second wireless operator of the vessel before the Senate's committee of investigations. In his story he told how at five o'clock on Sunday afternoon, he picked up a wireless message sent from a sister ship, the California, to another vessel, the Baltic. The message said: "Watch out for big icebergs in this vicinity." The operator on the Titanic forgot the warning until half an hour later the California wired another message regarding the icebergs. Then the Titanic's operator wrote down the message on a piece of paper intending to hand it to Captain Smith.

At eleven o'clock on Sunday night the Titanic had taken her last plunge, carrying down men, women and children into waters two miles deep. Imagine if you can the horror, the din, the confusion that prevailed in those almost midnight hours on every deck of the stricken vessel.

But the Titanic had been warned of danger, only her operator, thinking he rode an unsinkable ship, paid no heed to the warning.

Three Girls—

Went from the Cantaloupe Belt to the Youth Conference. Before they left a party of friends gave them a handkerchief shower.

"Hay fever?" asked the Pigeon.

"No," said Pigeonette. "Prayer Meetings!"

Graceland

Explanation, Not Apology This week sees the Herald devoted to the annual Graceland College special number. A few readers may wonder why. The reason is simple: our young people are worth this much and more to us. And because we are interested in them we are also interested in the institution which the church of nearly forty years ago went to so much trouble and expense to establish. The same needs for the young people still exist. And the church still has the same acute need of the young people.

Investment, Not Gifts Investments are things on which adequate returns are realized. Gifts are something on which one does not expect returns. Graceland yields returns. Not the usual money returns, of course. But returns in man power, returns in womanly worth, returns in character and soul. These are profits in the values which are above the "price of gold and of rubies." Money put in Graceland is an investment.

Only One Graceland There are many universities, many colleges. Quantitatively, Graceland would not be needed as an addition to the great numbers of educational institutions of the country. But qualitatively, there is a tremendous need for the church college. It is the only place in the world where we can be sure that our young people will get the kind of education, from the church viewpoint, that they ought to have.

A Similarity, and a Difference There are differences in colleges, differences in atmosphere, attitude, morale, and character. Within recent months visits to two institutions brought out the contrast. In one place the student body were alert, busy, clean and vigorous in appearance. There was a wholesomeness in their attitude which gave one confidence in them and in the institution. One would have been happy to send young people there. On another campus there was another kind of atmosphere. Students were indifferent looking, some of them shifty eyed. Young women were bold, unrestrained. One heard ugly rumors of this and that, and came away feeling that he would rather not educate young people than to send them there. There is a difference in colleges.

Graceland Day We believe that Graceland merits the fullest respect and confidence of the people of the church. We believe that it is fully qualified as an educational institution. And we know that it has the capacity to develop in young men and women that which is of far more value in life than degrees and diplomas: character and worth. On Graceland Day it will be well to remember the College and make an investment in the future of the church, left in trust with Graceland.

The World Outlook

The NRA A short time ago it was reported that certain eminent Englishmen were watching the NRA experiment with interest. That provided a thrill that we have not had since the beginning of the depression. But it is no comfort to the business men who think they see the NRA gradually slipping, to reflect that other people are watching us fail, even slightly. It touches a sore spot in our national vanity already wounded and raw from other humiliations obtained in the depression.

Moral Leadership of the World Our present position in international affairs is remote from the grandeur of the "moral leadership of the world" that we assumed during the Wilson administration. We still had it during the Coolidge and Hoover administrations, but we were recovering. Now, under Roosevelt, we are definitely cured. We are just one of the nations of the world. The role of moral leader was an expensive and fruitless one. Openly, other nations encouraged us, to obtain loans, concessions, or whatever they wanted. But when we tumbled in the ruin of the depression they smiled, and some jeered. We shouldn't be angry. We deserved it. It is comforting to know that our delusions of grandeur are now over. A contribution for which we should be heartily thankful to the Roosevelt regime.

Front porches and back yards At the same time we were trying to teach the world a new morality in international affairs, a deplorable condition of graft, corruption, and moral breakdown was developing at home. Finally it became so bad that we could no longer keep up a good front. The neighbors had left the rocking chairs on our veranda to go around and look over our back fence. Now that we have been humiliated, we may try to clean up. The successful trials of the kidnapers are a beginning. Many hope that we will have the energy to complete a good job, but they are not too optimistic.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Lesson The lesson, if we need one, is this: That we cannot be moral leaders in international affairs, if that is what we want to be, unless we are morally clean at home. Graft, scandal, and corruption such as our newspapers are reporting all the time are not consistent with moral leadership of any kind. Let us see that we are righteous at home, and then we may teach righteousness to the rest of the world.

Needed: A New National Conscience As a nation we have been too willing to drive through the red traffic light when the policeman wasn't looking, to violate the numerous laws that we wanted made for the regulation of other people's conduct, to cry for honesty in politics and to indulge in private graft there and in business.

A new national conscience is needed, a new concern for the right because it is right and not because it makes money. A Dr. Jekyl-Mr. Hyde existence is impossible to maintain; it will cause the exposure of the guilty eventually, and possibly their destruction. National honesty and righteousness are the only possible foundations of internal security and peace.

As True Today as Yesterday

Of all that Pythagoras wrought and taught much has perished, out-moded, but much remains. We can still learn of him:

(1) That the supreme and only finally valid end of human thought is to come into harmony, in mind and heart and will, with the Eternal God; (2) That as he exiled himself in foreign lands to gain wisdom, so we must welcome light whatever its source; (3) That in the practice of human brotherhood man becomes at once most truly God-like and most truly human.

Life, Pythagoras once told his disciple Laon, is like the assemblage at the Olympic games. There are three classes of visitors. The lowest class are those who come to buy and sell. Next above them are those who come to strive and compete. The highest class are the philosophic on-lookers. Men still divide into those whose end and aim is gain, or honor, or wisdom. Of that Wisdom a higher than Pythagoras has said:

"Whoso findeth me findeth life—
But he that sinneth against me, wrongeth his own soul."

Patience is the art of calmly enduring hardships along the course toward attainment. Tolerance means being considerate of the rights, opinions and feelings of others. Be patient and be tolerant.

An Early Worker on the Herald

A short time ago the Editor had a pleasant visit with Brother W. H. Deam, who was employed for some years as a worker on the Herald. His reminiscences proved most interesting and he kindly wrote a short article about them. His comment refers to the new seal of the Herald Publishing House, recently printed in these columns. With reference to the press in the picture on the seal, we may add that it was drawn by the artist to represent a hand press used much earlier by many years than the author could have known. He added that he went to Lamoni in 1881, and worked for the Herald until 1894, in which year he founded the Lamoni Chronicle, which is still an important publication in that community. He was with the Chronicle four and a half years, when he went to Chicago. Brother Deam now lives in Independence. His contribution follows:

The Herald Office trade mark brings to mind some reminiscenses of my early connection with the Herald Office. I went to work in the Herald Office March 18, 1872, over sixty-one years ago. The hand press shown in the trade mark is not like the one the Herald had, nor is it just like any I have ever seen, and I have seen a good many. The one the Herald had, the tympan was supported by a single leg, and the tympan was nearly as large as the rest of the press. The trade mark shows a tiny little tympan. The cross beam was curved for strength, required in making an impression.

The press that the Herald Office had was part of a second-hand outfit, which had been used to print a paper, then defunct. Some time before I went to work for the Herald Office a Taylor cylinder press was obtained for the Herald, tracts, etc., and it was run by a pretty little engine manufactured especially for the Herald by Brother Cyril E. Brown, an expert machinist, I think of Fall River, Massachusetts.

I went to work as office boy, or "printer's devil." I remember one humorous incident. David H. Smith was assistant to Brother Joseph. Sister Cramer came into the office to do some cleaning in the editorial room. She said, "David, where can I get some water?" "Go to the devil," he said in a gruff voice, meaning me. Not abashed, she came upstairs where I was, and inquired for the devil, saying David told her to go to him. In a year and a half I was promoted to pressman and job hand.

But some more about the Washington hand press. It is yet, or was when I quit the business a few years ago, used in large job printing establishments for taking proofs of certain forms to show defects that no other press will show, and is also used by engravers to take proofs of halftone cuts for the same reason. So the Herald then was printed on a press that is yet used for technical purposes. I printed many posters on it. Two hundred and fifty an hour was considered good time. With the Taylor press we used to make one thousand to twelve hundred an hour.

W. H. DEAM.

Herald Circulation

Readers have queried a recent advertisement which stated that the Herald has a circulation of 10,000. It is a fact, doubts to the contrary, that that many Heralds are printed and distributed each week. Of course, the number fluctuates with the cutting off of expired subscriptions and with renewals and new subscriptions. Most of this circulation is through subscription, but large numbers are also sold in the branch bundles. An estimate of 50,000 readers is conservative. Large publications of national circulation estimate, for advertising purposes, that there are seven readers for every copy. The Herald estimates only five, to be safe.

A Program of Girls' Activities

Recent announcement has been made of the new revision of the Oriole Girls' program. It has newly published materials with a wealth of activities especially selected and organized for the use of growing girls of the church. The distinctive materials and ideals of the church are frankly recognized and given due emphasis. The whole program is planned to bring into the lives of the girls not only the usual informations, skills, and joys which characterize the popular national girls' organizations, but to lend encouragement to participation in the work of the church and to emphasize achievement in the direction of the objectives of the church. It is designed as a definite part of the church program for girls of the early teen ages.

However, the present emphasis upon the distinctive features of the Oriole program should in no way reflect disparagingly on the participation of our girls in Girl Scout, Camp Fire or other national programs, where carefully organized under good Christian leadership. For years many of our girls and leaders have shared in these programs with much happiness and benefit. In any of these organizations the chief factor is the type of leadership provided and the spirit in which the work is undertaken. Our girls must be encouraged to develop and maintain fine loyalties to the highest and best in life, wherever found.

Our chief ambition is to provide the finest experiences possible for the girls of the church. A general Girls' Headquarters Committee has been named by the First Presidency to assist in the organization and development of this part of the general church program.

We have not struck the balance-sheet of the Great War yet. The world was thrown suddenly out of joint, and many of the dislocations are still not remedied. I am no pessimist and I do not look to the future with alarm, but it would be idle to pretend that there are not many features in the present that provoke great disquiet. . . .

Fundamentally what the world is suffering from is loss of faith in the things it once believed in. A characteristic symptom is the decay of parliamentary government in many countries. Men no longer trust themselves to order their own affairs. Democracy for the moment is in eclipse. . . .—Viscount Cecil, in "American Responsibilities for Peace."

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle J. A. Gillen Busy in Alabama

Apostle J. A. Gillen had just closed a very helpful series of meetings at McKenzie, Alabama, when he visited Alaflora Branch October 1. He preached three times Saturday and Sunday to large congregations.

Saint Joseph Young People Conduct Visiting Campaign

First Church young people, Saint Joseph, Missouri, Far West Stake, made final arrangements for the opening of their fall visiting campaign September 10. The campaign was made the subject of their early morning prayer service on that date, and in the afternoon the young visitors-to-be met for final instructions from their pastor, Ward A. Hougas.

It is intended that every home included in First Church congregation shall be called upon by young people, and to date reports indicate that the young people themselves are gaining as much as those who are visited. They devote one night each week to visiting. Later the organized priesthood of the congregation will follow up the young people's visits.

New Experiences for Lansing, Michigan, Members

Lansing Saints are encountering opposition to the preaching of the gospel. Evidence of this took the form of incendiarism when their gospel tent, purchased early last summer by the branch, was burned to the ground.

For a number of weeks missionary meetings had been conducted in the tent with a good response on the part of members and friends. The tent had been moved to a new location in the city, and plans were to open another series of meetings September 17. Two hours before the service was to open the tent blew down. It is thought someone tampered with the stakes. And the following night, after workers had reerected the canvas tabernacle, someone set fire to it.

Gospel Work Is Being Established in Ireland

Three have been baptized in Ireland by Apostle John W. Rushton and Elder Thomas Taylor. Not long ago, Mr. W. Murry, of Belfast, was baptized by Elder Taylor, and through his missionary endeavor, two other young men gave their names for baptism, according to a news item in the Southern England and Wales District Herald.

The missionary spirit is taking hold of many of the Saints in England, and they believe that soon the gospel work will be well established in the Emerald Isle.

Pittsburgh Will Celebrate Two Anniversaries

Pittsburgh Branch, Pennsylvania, will celebrate the seventy-third anniversary of the branch organization and the sixty-eighth anniversary of the Sunday school October 22. The observance of these historic occasions will take the form of a big get-together and home-coming. Elder E. B. Hull is the present branch president.

Illinois Coal Dealer Gives Warm Thanks

A coal dealer of Marseilles, Illinois, wishing to repay Brother I. E. Turner, president of Mission Branch, for many kindnesses rendered, donated three tons of one of the best grades of coal to the branch. The congregation is grateful for this very practical gift.

Nine New Members for Morgantown Branch

Nine young people were baptized in a mountain stream not long ago by Elder George Powell, pastor of Morgantown Branch, West Virginia. The candidates ranged in age from eight to twenty-two years, and are welcome additions to Morgantown congregation. They were confirmed at a special afternoon service by George Powell, Harry Joseph, and Hobart M. Rogers.

Church Hymn Writer Dies

Henry R. Mills, long-time resident of Independence, Missouri, passed away on his eighty-ninth birthday October 8, at his home. Throughout his long life Brother Mills faithfully served the church. He held the office of high priest and was a stanch minister. His hymns are a rich gift to generations to come. He wrote the music to "God Is Marshaling His Army," "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," "As Musing I Sat All Alone," and others.

A Page of Thought and Discussion for the Young People of the Church

To Be Popular

Love charms were sold by magicians and sorcerers until well into the seventeenth century, and isolated cases of their use have persisted until very recent times. The newspapers tell of charms of various sorts being sold now, even in our own country.

Today we laugh at the people who bought such charms. We know that charms, if they exist at all, are qualities of character and personality.

"How can I make friends?"

"How can I be popular?"

"How can I make him like me?"

These are old, old questions to which the modern age is finding more sensible and effective answers.

Don't let people laugh at you for being interested in your social life: it is one of the most important things of your existence, taken in its broadest aspects. It can make or break you. But be careful in choosing the people with whom you discuss your problems.

Here are a few suggestions from those who have "been through the mill." Their experience should be helpful to younger people.

There is no magic with which you can "make" people like you. Liking cannot be compelled. There must be some reasons in you that will win friends or admirers.

Be real. Be genuine. A pretense is hard to maintain, and you will be exposed or betrayed.

Be your best. A hundred kinds of selves are resident in your personality. Choose the finest qualities in your character, and live up to them.

Be kind to everybody. Don't choose a narrow circle of favorites and snub the rest. There is enough hardship in the world. Don't add to it. There is too little real happiness. You can be one of the world's best givers by increasing it. And you will be loved and admired too.

Be cheerful. Don't criticize everything, even to create the impression that you have superior taste. If you have superior taste, people will know it. If you can do it without gushing, be jolly. You don't have to laugh all the time to do that. A smile that flashes out on the right occasion is better than a meaningless "permanent" grin.

It is good to be conversational. But don't go to extremes. Don't talk all the time; give others a chance. On the other hand, don't be a stick. Contribute your part to the conversation.

And here's a secret that usually works. If you want somebody to like you, don't spend all the time being a wonderful person yourself. Most people resent too much cleverness. Give the other person a chance to shine. If you want the young man to like you, let him display his qualities, and admire them. Human vanity is such that people would rather be admired than admire. This does not mean that you have to shout, "Oh, you wonderful man," every other minute; nor does it mean that a young man has to say "I think you're beautiful" all the time.

Decide above all to be honest with everybody, loyal to your family and friends, and true to your best ideals. If you are really some good in the world you will not lack friends. You will be popular.

Be willing to do more than your "share" of the work: Stay and help when there are dishes to wash. But don't be anybody's slavey. People will like you better if you let them work for you, too. If necessary create jobs for them. They always feel more interest in somebody they have helped. It is just another caress for the ever-present ego.

Contrast

No sin looks so sinful as the sin of a saint, no blot so black as a blot on beauty. You never notice the blight on a nettle, you do that on a rose; you never notice a flaw in a flagstone, you do that in a stone of glory out of which a statue is to spring; you never notice a spider when she dangles from the rafter of a barn, you do when "she taketh hold with her hands in kings' palaces." So it comes to pass that a Christian in the world is a man under a microscope; fierce is the light that beats upon him, and all his faults are magnified.—Selected.

Time

Time is money—we have no right to waste it.

Time is power—we have no right to dissipate it.

Time is influence—we have no right to throw it away.

Time is life—we must value it greatly.

Time is God's—he gives it to us for a purpose.

Time is a sacred trust—we must answer for every moment.

Time is wisdom—we have no right to be ignorant.

Time is preparation for eternity—we must redeem it.

Young People's Activities

A friend came into the office the other day with a worried expression.

"I have been appointed to help the young people with their winter program in our branch," he said, "and I need some help. There are about forty of them, all ages."

"Have you been reading the 'Youths' Forum' page, and the 'News' in the Herald," we asked. "They have had some suggestions during the past few weeks."

"I've just subscribed for the Herald," he answered.

"Then I'll put something in the next issue for you."

And here the list is—for him and for others who may be looking for help.

Activities for the Winter's Program for Young People

For October. A young people's rally, with a special speaker, a choir every evening, and prayer services. All-day meetings one Sunday. Or an institute for the district. A local institute may be planned with good effect.

Wiener and marshmallow roasts in the autumn woods. Hikes. And other outdoor activities. Or gather your crowd to clean up the church grounds for the winter. Parties going out in the woods to gather nuts can have very good times.

For November. Begin your Sunday afternoon fellowship services. These meetings were described in a recent issue of the Herald. They are made up of music, readings, and other entertainment features, with a principal talk of about twenty minutes at the end, and then refreshments are served. Once or twice a month should be often enough. You won't want the idea to get old.

Before the middle of November you should decide on your Christmas play or cantata, and prepare to begin practices. You should plan at least six good rehearsals for either of these if you want a first-class product.

A Few Things You Can Do Instead of Marking Time

By Cormaya

EUNICE WYNN is feeling sorry for herself. We do not wonder at it. Many months away from home, effort honestly made to perfect herself in her course, and five hundred dollars put into the venture by her parents, brought Eunice to the place where she was ready for a job. But there was no job waiting for her.

That is not the worst of it. There are thousands of Eunice Wynns in this big country of ours.

A course at a normal school and a teacher's certificate in her hand found Florence Beaver hunting for a school to teach. But she didn't find any school.

There are thousands of Florence Beavers in this big country of ours.

There are thousands of other young people all ready for a job, and no job that will open a door and let them walk in. However, there are some jobs that would have opened the door a wee bit at their persistent knock. Then they could have put their foot in and gradually shoved it open to their full admittance, with a little better preparation.

Take the situation of Eunice Wynn. If she had had a working knowledge of the German language, she finally could have had a job as clerk in a store on full time instead of on Saturday. Her parents are German but seldom speak the language in the home. Had they taught it to their children as they were growing up, Eunice would have been prepared. True enough, it would not have been perfect academic German, but it would have been as good, probably better, for her purpose. It would have been the language of many of the people she was serving most of the time. The language and gracious manners would have made her valuable to her firm. That with her business training as well, would have made her an expert to them instead of a mere clerk.

ANOTHER GIRL with a business training lives in a very small town. She has had less than a week's work in the two years since she finished her course. I am not positively certain, but I think she could have apprenticed herself for a few hours a day to the local publisher who puts out one of the best small town papers in the state, and who is well and favorably known over a large territory. By the time things have swung upward enough, she would have had training in two lines instead of one, and would have been that much more valuable.

There are unemployed business girls living in localities where there are foreign workmen. For instance, there are often Mexican workers in the sugar beet territories. A high school and college knowledge of Spanish would be valuable, but a working knowledge of this Mexican dialect would make one useful in a firm dealing with these people, or capable in a business of her own. There are always the better educated among these people. Probably, arrangements could be made to learn from them their language just as they speak it.

A young person with enough pluck could even develop a business as a public stenographer or shopper or business agent for these people. They usually work for cash and could pay it for these services. Thus, a boy or girl out of work would have become an unusual business manager.

Many girls, prepared for teaching, secured no schools because they refused the lowered wages. An ex-county superintendent of schools felt that any girl who would not take a school even at these wages, for the experience it would give her for a better position later on, was acting unwisely, to say the least.

Last year, one girl taught a rural school, her only cash wages being the state and county apportionment amounting, probably, to not more than fifteen dollars per pupil per term. This helped on clothes and incidentals. She boarded around among the parents as teachers did years ago. By this method she supported herself and gained experience.

Even nurses find themselves out of work. In rural communities, many farm families would be glad to exchange produce for services during sickness. During the period of much winter sickness nearly any trained nurse can earn and get her board and often quite a bit more if she is willing to go into the smaller places.

A FEW YEARS AGO a girl fitted herself to teach domestic science. The study was later taken out of the curriculum in the schools, and she was left without a position. After waiting some time she took a course in hospital dietetics. A few months later she obtained a position which has now brought an advance with good wages and many privileges.

So it is with the many young people who have trained themselves for the several different positions and have not found them. We have been told that there is always room at the top. Really, that is about the only place there is room now-a-days, and that room is so crowded that only the few can occupy.

Only the person among the unemployed or near unemployed who can do the unusual, or create a job for himself which is unique, or by some other flexible method adapt himself to present conditions, is going to stand out from the milling crowd.

The urge used to be—go west. Today the west is conquered in almost as full a measure as the east. In the present conditions it would seem that the south Mexico, Central America or South America offer, for the near future, the best opportunities for any with a desire for adventure and usefulness.

If you can make the opportunity, learn another language that would help you in any such a place. This is important. Even in your old home town look around you and notice the fact that the person who can talk English and some other commonly used language—all other things being equal, is the person who draws the most trade and holds his position the longer.

If you have in mind a locality or country to which you think you would like to go, study as thoroughly as possible the history and geography of the country, the types and skills and conditions of its peoples. Learn the principles of nursing if only through some cheap second-hand course.

By-the-way, how many of you ever invested the possibilities of learning from these courses? If not, you will be surprised. There are several companies dealing in them. Learn the science of foods which is especially applicable to your chosen future country. Then, when conditions open up you can go there if you want to, or if positions are available here, you can fit in somewhere better for your added knowledge. Your brain will be keen from recent study, and this period of marking time will have produced good fruit instead of withered leaves.

Faith and Miracles

Vital faith removes mountains, Jesus told us. You have had hard things to meet in your past, you will have mountains ahead, but you have and you will conquer every obstacle. That is faith.

There stood the Alps. A man conceived the idea of digging a hole straight through them. That was faith—the idea and the toil, and now we ride through the Simplon Tunnel from the lovely lake in Switzerland to the sunny towns of Italy.

Cyrus West Field heard some engineers talking about laying wires under a bay. His big mind at once jumped to the idea of laying a cable under the Atlantic. Few stories in the world have cheered us like his. What the spider did for the Scotchman, Field has done for some of us. Again and again he tried only to fail. Bankrupt, he begged money to try once more; then, while celebrating success, the cable snapped again. The Great Eastern now took a heavier cable out to sea; six hundred miles from shore the line broke, but not the heart of the dauntless Field. Then on July 27, 1866, he tied his cable safely to the shore of Newfoundland and his dream came true. That is faith.

It is such faith that is able to remove mountains and even oceans.—John Ray Ewers, in "Faith and the Daily Task," The Christian Century.

Thirty-eight Years of Progress

By Dr. G. N. Briggs, President, Graceland College

Graceland Is Modern

A graduate of a small college in the middle west who later also graduated at one of the large universities of the country said "One dollar expended at a a small college gives as much culture as five at a large university. As a graduate of both types of institutions I can truly make this statement."

We are living in a changing world, modern in the fullest sense of that term. Youth of the future to succeed must have his development in a modern civilization and a modern educational society adapting itself to the ever-changing demands. Graceland, in an exceptional manner, meets these exacting standards.

The standardizing and accrediting associations of the country recognize that the basis on which institutions have heretofore been classified will not meet altered conditions. As one of our leading religious thinkers in an address at one of our great state universities last week said, "The present era is the most tragic in all history. Youth has an appointment with destiny or doom."

Graceland meets the most exacting standards of the accrediting agencies in this modern age and as those standards change with the rapidly developing civilization Graceland, with her alert faculty having their training in the leading universities of the country from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, will ever continue to train her students to have their part in this modern world.

Graceland Is Adequate

What was expected of a college thirty-eight years ago with Greek and Latin as the foundation courses no longer meets the needs of our youth. Today Graceland's curricula, Liberal Arts, Teachers', Public School Music, Home Economics, Engineering, Business Administration, Pre-Nursing, Pre-Law, Pre-Dental, Pre-Medical, Secretarial and Religious, are fully adequate to enable the youth of the church to make that preparation so essential for occupying the exacting positions expected of them in the very near future.

With one of the very finest libraries of any college of its size in the middle west, with laboratories in Physics, Biology, Chemistry, and Home Economics adequate for the courses offered in those subjects, with one of the best equipped girls' dormitories and a most adequate gymnasium and recreational center, with assembly halls and class rooms for every need, a beautiful and healthful campus and environment, the youth of the church from many of the states of the Union and several foreign countries are to be congratulated on their opportunities at Graceland.

> "If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal souls, if we imbue them with principle, with a just fear of God and a love of our fellow men, we engrave upon those tablets something that will brighten all eternity."—Webster.

Graceland Is Christian

The great universities with their present-day enrollments of five thousand to twenty-five thousand are like factories, turning out graduates supplied with specific facts on certain subjects, but lacking the advantages of intimate contacts between teachers and students and the congenial community life which develop character and fosters culture and Christianity. "There is a social threat which is more dangerous in huge crowds than in small companies. It is the danger of bolshevism and atheism. It is an easy matter in their crowded educational centers to couple disbelief in God with disbelief in government." Thus speaks one of our leading editorial writers. The safety of the future, the purity of learning and the efficiency of teaching are all intimately bound up with the small Christian educational unit.

Graceland is Christian in its purpose, in its organization, in the personnel of its faculty and in its environment.

As I conversed recently with a father and mother of one of this year's students whose brothers and sisters had preceded him, the father said, "Graceland has been worth a million dollars to us, if the worth of a Christian character can be measured in dollars and cents." (Continued on page 1297)

"How Much Should I Give?" They Ask

Here's an Answer That Looks Fair to Everyone

"How much should I give?" is a question always bobbing up among the Graceland alumni. One young women settled it without much argument and with littler perplexity of heart. "I decided I could give one half of one percent," she wrote, and after totalling her income, wrote a check for that amount of it in favor of Graceland College.

This answer is not suggested for the other friends of Graceland. The alumni naturally owe a greater debt to Graceland, and feel that they can afford to give more. One half of one percent looks fair to the giver, fair to the college, fair to one's other obligations, and fair to the young people who are dependent upon this gift for their chance to get an education.

One half of one percent! Have you considered what it will mean? To the College? To the Church? To the students?

What It Will Mean to the College

These have been lean years for all educational institutions that have not the advantage of enormous endowments. Even the great ones have had to restrict expenditures, and have seen a practical cessation of the normal flow of gifts. The smaller colleges have suffered more severely, and many of them have had to close their doors.

Only through the loyalty of the officers and instructors of the College, and the sacrifices of its friends, have the doors of Graceland remained open.

If every alumnus of Graceland would give one half of one percent of his or her income, it would mean the assurance of a steady source of income for the College to devote to the financing of worthy students who need help to make their way through school. These funds are repaid and made available for the use of succeeding students many times over. It would mean a larger student body for Graceland, a thing very much needed at the present time.

½ of 1%

The idea is this: one half of one percent of your income given to help Graceland provide enough educations to go around some of the younger crowd who can't have educations otherwise.

Thus, if you make $2,000 a year, the sum you would give to Graceland would be $10. Easy! If you remember your decimals you can figure it out yourself.

It isn't easy to "work their way through like I did" these days. There aren't any jobs. Those that remain pay too little.

You've had your start in life. Now give some of these boys and girls a chance.

What It Will Mean to the Church

There are never enough able and trained young people to do the work that could be done by them in the branches. Graceland fits young people not only for a better chance in life, but also as church workers. Larger numbers of our young people at Graceland would mean larger numbers of loyal church workers everywhere.

It means something to the church people to have a place to send the young people where they can be given training in our ideals and work. No control can be exercised by parents over the type of training, environment and associations at other institutions. But at Graceland they have some assurances. They know the character of the instructors, and the direction in which their teaching leads.

One half of one percent will mean that Graceland will have added financial support to accomplish the ends for which it was founded, and for which it has carried on these thirty-eight years.

What It Will Mean to the Young People

It would be a revelation to talk to the many young people of the church who want to go to Graceland and cannot for lack of funds. It would be even more moving if the readers could see the many letters that come from some who want to attend, but cannot. Each one of these cases means a denial of opportunity, and something of a tragedy in blighted hopes and thwarted ambitions.

The young people who have to seek positions in the world today are made to realize more than ever before that training is the indispensable prerequisite of success in life. And by far the best part of the training of young people is done in the schools. A person without college training is automatically barred from partici- (Continued on page 1298)

WHAT COLLEGE DAY MEANS TO ME

College Day brings memories of the finest experiences I have had in my life. These have been found in prayer services, social entertainments, football games, and in making friends. At Graceland one finds a constructive challenge in the endeavor to attain such skills as will enable him to live life to the fullest extent and to make a contribution in forwarding the work of the Church and Zion.

Pearl McElwain
Lansford, North Dakota.

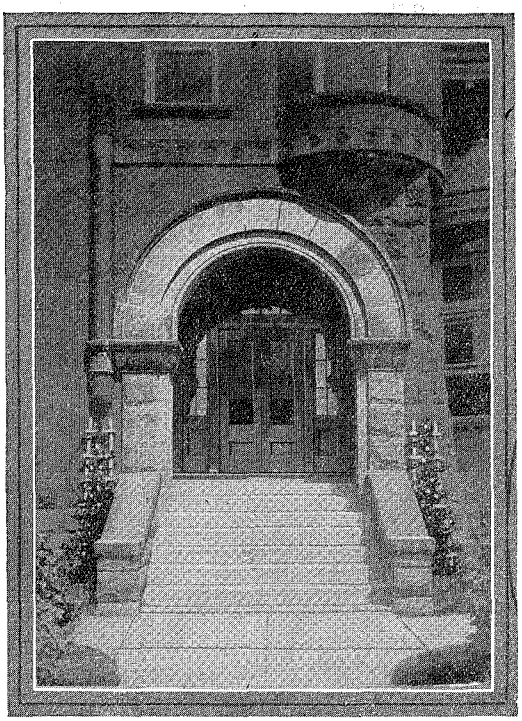
I look upon College Day as a time when earnest Latter Day Saints may avail themselves of the opportunities to serve ambitious young people of the church. They can do this by donating funds so that these young people may be able to prepare themselves for service in the church and the advancement of the Zionic movement. This is a great opportunity for true Latter Day Saints to render great service to the youth of the church.

Clifford Wood
New Westminster
British Columbia, Canada.

In my earliest memories College Day was a time when I gave my extra pennies for something I did not quite understand.

Now I am at Graceland; and I am finding students here only because of that College Day, who are obtaining through Graceland the mental and spiritual inspiration which is transforming them into men and women of tremendous value to this nation and to this church. Now I understand College Day.

Carl Mesle
Syracuse, New York.



Graceland's Old West Door welcomes students to the thirty-ninth year of academic work at the College.

Your contribution to the scholarship fund has made it possible for me to attain a position in life whereby my latent talents can be used for the betterment of mankind and the Church. There are many young people who are longing for such assistance; without it their service is handicapped. I appreciate this help sincerely.

Gladys Swenson
Centralia, Washington.

A successful College Day means I shall be allowed to continue my school work and qualify for a Teacher's Certificate next spring. Because I have found many worth-while things here, I, as well as many others, shall be happy to remain at Graceland.

Nettie M. Pifer
Xenia, Illinois.

"What is the purpose of College Day?"

To me, it is a day set apart for a church-wide program. This program is to secure means whereby more young men and women might be able to continue their studies at Graceland. It is a challenge to the membership of the church to give their youth an opportunity to make the best of the future. The success of this College Day will determine what opportunity there will be for my education at Graceland along with many more.

What is going to be the response of the members of the church towards the needs of its ambitious youth?

Clarence E. Dreadin
Huxford, Alabama.

To me, College Day is the day of opportunity for the church membership to make an investment in the unlimited possibilities of some of its worthiest youth, who in return shall pledge themselves to make similar investments in the lives of others who shall follow them.

WHY GRACELAND?

To a boy or girl going away to college is a great and exciting adventure. To the parents, it is a mark of achievement, but with this feeling of having attained one of the successes for which the home is established, there comes a tinge of sadness, even sorrow, in the realization that in the future, in all probability, their children will be only visitors at the fireside of the home. In our present day social life, this breaking of the family circle is necessary. The rapidly changing conditions and keen competition of the world demand that young men and women study and prepare. Knowledge of past and present conditions forms the basis of anticipation for the problems and needs of tomorrow.

To send a boy or girl out in the cold materialistic world to gain a life's philosophy, friends and companions, truly is a serious leave-taking. Our church forefathers, in their prophetic vision, saw this great problem and established Graceland College—an institution where the young people of the church may study, and yet not forget God.

Graceland is located in the only city in the world where Latter Day Saints predominate and city and civic affairs are in the hands of our church people. The city is large enough to encourage educational activities but small enough to discourage those things which do not make a good, wholesome collegiate environment.

The college serves a cosmopolitan student body, coming from many parts of the world. A recent survey of the graduates of the past five years who are in educational professions, shows that they are teaching in sixteen states, and others are attending colleges and universities in fourteen different states. Our church college is accredited by the highest accrediting associations in the educational world.

The cosmopolitan spirit of Graceland College is further illustrated by the fact that there is no distinction between those who have to work or depend on extended credit from the scholarship fund, and those who have money to take care of their expenses. Large amounts of money do not have to be spent for clothing and miscellaneous items. It is not necessary to be a spender in order to have a good time or to accomplish the thing for which the institution was established.

The physical plant at Graceland is in the best condition in the history of the college—class rooms, laboratories, dormitories, the library—every part of the educational plant is ready to receive students and give them optimum study and living conditions.

The well-trained faculty of Graceland College take a personal interest in every student. Hours are spent outside of the class room in an effort to help every individual solve his problems and meet the adjustments and decisions of life wisely and well. The student—his spiritual, educational, physical and moral development — comes first.

Recently two friends were traveling, both college-trained people, one having attended Graceland, the other, a near-by State College. In the course of their travels they stopped at many cities and always looked up our church people. Invariably the Graceland student found in the branch former friends and acquaintances and at once was at home and made welcome. You and I are travelers—whether we choose the high road or low road we meet people, make friends, select associates and build a life's philosophy—we plow, we pray, we sing, we sweat. God has planted the beginning of a high road; let us help our boys and girls find it.

Sioux Falls, S. Dakota,

N. Ray Carmichael,
Graceland College,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Bro. Carmichael:

I am enclosing a nine dollar money order for the College. Graceland has meant so much to me that I feel that I can never repay the institution for the wonderful opportunities it offered me. Later on I hope to be able to make a still larger contribution. I shall always remain a strong supporter of Graceland, the College where so many opportunities await an ambitious young man or woman.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Archie Walker.

The Royal Road

The Glorious Madhouse

THEY WERE LATE, Larry and Greg, as they sped toward Kansas City the next evening, and Fifteenth Street seemed like a live thing as it sank first into a valley and then topped the hill beyond. It throbbed with sound and motion. Behind Larry and Greg and in front of them moved a constant stream of cars, each one bent on covering just as much space in as short a time as all the others would permit. Those with daring enough to get ahead were envied; those who lagged were cursed for their slowness. Cars of every make and age and condition swarmed and mingled on this highway. There were great trucks with construction materials, mail, household goods, and livestock. There were coaches and coupes and sedans with shiny trimmings, and delivery cars and motorcycles. Mud-spattered Austins darted in and out. All of them were surging on, pressing those ahead to speed and hurry.

To Larry there was something terrible yet fascinating about this street at this time in the evening. The drum of many motors, the flash of wheels, dust in the air—all these were expressive of the haste of men and women, their insatiate craving to "go places and see things."

At that moment they reached the summit of one of the hills between Independence and Kansas City. Briefly she looked before them into the valley, an endless lane of red tail-lights ahead of them, and on the other side coming east, an equally endless lane of car lights, twin beacons, glaring at them like the eyes of angry cats in the ominous dark.

STRANGE TO THINK that each one of these hundreds of cars represented a home with its members and their problems. Strange to be so small and insignificant a part of this moving mass of motors and humanity as she and Greg were at this moment. Where were they all going? What were they thinking? She knew that thousands of tastes, inclinations, ambitions, dollars, and emotions were on Fifteenth Street at that moment; yet there was likeness of purpose, too, at least of present purpose. Every car was trying to go somewhere, to keep the car ahead moving, and to set a pace for the cars following.

"We weren't the only ones who had the idea of going to the city, were we?" she inquired with a little effort.

"Guess we weren't!" Greg's tone was disgusted. He was waiting his chance to pass the car just ahead. "Only wish we'd started a little earlier. I promised Ben we'd pick him up at seven-thirty and here it is ten minutes to eight, and we have to get Dora Lou before we go out to Dart's. Such luck!"

"That'll put us out at Dart's at Swope Park about nine o'clock if Dora Lou is ready," Larry calculated aloud; "and if she's slow as usual, we'll make it before ten. But cheer up, you've waited on Ben and Dora Lou before. It's their turn to wait on us tonight. You couldn't help it because your father had to have the car until late. Lucky you got it at all."

"I can't seem to make this trip in less than twenty minutes when the traffic is so heavy," fumed the young man. "It makes me tired, everyone pokes along so!"

> There is a madness which afflicts people who gather anywhere in great numbers, especially those who are all striving for the same things—money, speed, and power. It is a madness which makes us blind to facts, blind to consequences, blind to destiny, blind to truth.
> Is there any retreat for the young people of our modern world, where they may retire to heal the injuries to the soul that they receive in life? When do they have a chance to think, to take their bearings? When do they reach out, to touch the hands of—God?

To Larry they seemed to be doing anything but poking along.

"Well I'd hate for you to try it much faster," she retorted; "you might speed yourself on the way to heaven." But the last part of her teasing remark was lost in the roar of a passing truck.

SOMEWHERE A TRAIN whistled. A searchlight fanned the western sky.

"Bet there are thousands of people on this highway tonight," she observed. "It's rather tremendous, isn't it?" She did not like to have Greg driving like that. Why couldn't he take it easier? It was as if he were fighting to make his way through the crowd; and with all this struggling, he wouldn't get there much sooner than the others.

"Rather," he found time to return. And then: "Not so nice riding here as it is up on Blue Ridge, is it?"

"No, up there on Blue Ridge, one can see the lights of—of Zion; really they lie across the country so quietly and peacefully you do think of Zion. And all the lights of the city here, well, from Blue Ridge they're quiet, too, but down here they don't seem so pretty. They're like —" she held her breath, as they shaved past the car in front, and fitted into the space ahead of it by a margin of four inches.

"How does all this impress you?" Greg was nonchalant.

"One minute it tickles my fancy. The next it scares me to death," she half laughed.

"I love it—the motion, the getting places, even the noise and dust." His tone was more animated. Evidently he had forgotten that they were late. Larry was glad of that.

"I'm not surprised that you do," the girl spoke after a moment's thought. "I presume most city-bred people love hustle, bustle, and noise. They're born keyed to a certain pitch, and they appreciate all this; but sometimes I wonder if they really do. You walk down the street of any city at noon and look at the scarred, marred, wrinkled faces, the hollow eyes—such things don't show so plainly under the glow of electric lights, but sunlight is pitilessly revealing. They look old and worried and harried. Now take us who have lived in small places or in the country, and who come to the city. At first it thrills us. We like the crowds and the hurry, but many of us grow tired—we would like to go back home where there is calm and peace. We miss the unity of things, the harmony, that you find in places where the sky, earth, streams, and trees are more apparent and man and his works are less apparent."

"But what more harmony and unity than this could you ask for?" demanded the young fellow at the wheel. "See those cars moving along together? True we pass each other up; but we're all parts of the great whole of traffic. Right here is harmony of ideas. Here's unity of action."

"Oh, I don't think so. This is just temporary agreement so that each may attain his own purpose—go his own way. It is largely compulsion that makes even this degree of agreement possible—that's what traffic regulations are for. But I'm talking about harmony, the quality you find in beautiful music, in fine paintings. I doubt if I can give you my idea about it, and it may sound funny, but to me this—all this before us and behind us and each side of us is just one big madhouse. Fifteenth Street impresses me as a ten-mile-long madhouse. Kansas City is a vast madhouse, a madhouse that encroaches upon and overshadows Independence, as all big cities do the little towns about them. Sometimes I love it, and at other times I'm afraid of it. There's something so hard and so ruthless about it and all its parts. Everybody's rushing here or there, and if you don't get out of their way, they'll rush right over you. They don't give a hoot who you are or what you are doing, or where you are going, so long as you don't get in their way. Their faces look as hard as the pavement over which we are driving; and sometimes when I look at them I doubt if they are human. There's something about the city that makes machines of us. I first began noticing that in Chicago—of course it's much worse than Kansas City. In the same block will be the deepest sorrow and the most sublime joy. Nobody seems to notice the next fellow—people are just like a pack of hungry animals, each after his own bone to chew."

"Now that's a long, long speech for a sweet, funny girl," teased Greg, squeezing her hand, then more seriously: "but this is life, Larry. We mustn't forget no matter how idealistic we are, that life is going on all around us right now. See that train going yonder. That's life, too. I revel in all this. It shows man's ingenuity, his accomplishments, his power to organize, invent, build, push ahead. Don't you see it?"

"Yes, each one fighting to get ahead, away ahead of the next fellow," returned the girl drawing her collar about her throat "still my glorious madhouse, Greg. Everyone for himself and nobody for the next fellow."

"Pessimist, we're all getting somewhere. True we move slowly, but people are less selfish than you think, Larry."

"Oh, I don't think all this around us is hopeless," Larry defended her view: "I just called it ruthless, and I think one of the most ruthless things about it—I mean city life in general—is its reception of young people who are trying to fit into our economic crazy quilt. Too bad all this can't rush them into jobs and put food in their stomachs and clothes on their backs and hope in their hearts."

"That would be great," admitted Greg, stopping for a traffic light.

"Have you ever tried to imagine how this—all this before us—will fit into Zion?" queried the girl.

"It's very different from our traditional idea of Zion where peace and love will reign and all we'll have to do is to walk over the golden streets from temple to temple, waving—what is it we're supposed to wave?—palms, and praising—"

"Don't be sacrilegious, Greg," she rebuked.

"I didn't mean to be, Larry, but honest, some of this talk about Zion gets me. Have you ever noticed how every man who has failed in his own business has such firm convictions and beliefs about just how Zion is going to be established? I look upon Zion as being ultimately a place where man's ingeniousness and adaptability combined with the Divine Mind shall produce the highest type of social, economic, political, and religious living. And I believe it's going to require not only a willing but an efficient people to make Zion."

"I frequently find myself wondering about Zion. Surely it will be wonderful, but since I've been in Independence I have heard some mighty funny things about i—"

"You will," agreed Greg, "you'll hear everything from the rankest communism to the most far-fetched theocratic idealism—how do you like that phrase? I'm not sure that I understand all I know about it."

Larry did not answer. Dear Greg, he was so earnestly sincere and yet so shortsighted! And she was not much better. Were all young people as limited in their understanding? Perhaps she lacked vision and the adaptability Greg had mentioned, but she could not place this big, beautiful madhouse in Zion. There were so many forces within it working against Zionic conditions, drawing not only the young but many middle-aged people away from higher and finer ideals — unemployment, indebtedness, selfishness, over-worked sex consciousness, moral irresponsibility, and dozens of others. But she was going too deep; she wouldn't be understanding her own thinking soon. Then she laughed:

"My glorious madhouse, Greg. If there is harmony, and unity here, it's the kind that's taking us to the Devil as fast as we'll go. What do we do? We lie to each other, cheat each other. We laugh at—" but she did not finish the sentence.

SHE WAS not sure how it happened, but the steady drumming of traffic was broken by a crashing of glass, the savage scraping of tin and steel, and one swift scream. From out of the darkness of a side street a truck had lunged into a passing car, and then careened towards a curb and come to a stop under a bent lamppost. Greg shoved in the brake.

The body of a woman hurtled through the air from the sedan which had been struck, and fell in the middle of the street. She did not move, but lay there very still between the street car tracks.

Instantly cars stopped, people stepped out and ran to the scene of the accident. Two policemen, who seemed to appear from nowhere, took charge. Women were crying nervously, and someone was cursing loudly.

Just another accident, a thing common to city streets, but Larry was so shaken that she could scarcely articulate, "Oh, I wonder if she's ki—I wonder if she's badly hurt!"

"Is the woman dead?" demanded Greg of someone in the street.

"Yep, passed in her tickets this time."

Then they were taking someone else from the demolished car.

Though the collision had occurred not three minutes ago, the screech of a siren was heard, that sound which causes the average pedestrian to remark: "Now I wonder whose hurt!" It was the ambulance.

"Drunk truck driver," a man nodded at them as he returned to his car.

The police whistle sounded. Traffic had been held up long enough. Car drivers too far back to know what had happened, and in too much of a hurry to care, were tooting their horns impatiently. Street cars were clanging their bells. The traffic cop motioned for Greg to move on. Slowly he put his car into gear.

"I—it seems awful to drive away like this, Greg," protested Larry. "If only we could do something!"

"Nothing more for us to do," he soberly retorted, "but look at the morning paper to see who it was and the extent of the damages."

"I hate to see things like that!" shuddered the young woman. "They leave awful pictures in my mind—such awful ways of dying!"

"Just have to get used to it," was the hushed reply, and then, "Why, Larry, you're shivering!"

A little farther down the street electric lights of a theater blazed at them the information: "This Is Hotsy-Totsy Jazz Time," and people were waiting in line for tickets. A scrubby boy was calling the evening paper. A pathetic cripple begged not two doors away from the theater. Cars breezed up and down the street.

"We're all in it," thought Larry, "this glorious madhouse!"

Squash or Oak?

James A. Garfield, the twentieth President of the United States, knew the value of an education as only those know who have worked their way through school and college. The years went by and at last the man who had labored with such patience for an education, was himself the president of a college. To him there came a very rich man with his young son.

"Mr. Garfield," said the rich man pompously, "I wish to push my son through your college as fast as I can. All I wish is for him to possess a diploma, and for this I am willing to pay you a big price." The man who was to be the head of our Nation stood up and motioned the rich man toward the door.

"Sir," he said, "we cannot take your son as a student. It requires only a few weeks to raise a squash, but it takes centuries for an oak to grow. In this college we do not raise squashes. We start oaks."—Selected.

The Good Shepherd

By L. B. M.

"The Lord is my shepherd," begins one of our most loved and familiar Psalms. And there would be more faith, love, trust, and confidence one man for another if we realized the true and grand meaning of this simple statement—"The Lord is my shepherd."

A good shepherd cares for his sheep. He tends them faithfully, carefully. In the daytime he herds them over the hills where the tenderest and greenest grasses grow. At night he brings them into the sheepfold where they are safe from lurking wolves and other enemies. He spends days, weeks, and sometimes months alone with his sheep and he learns to know them. He rescues them from all danger. When they are sick, he nurses them back to health. He carries the little, new lambs in his bosom. Shepherds have been known to give their lives for their sheep.

Many times during his life on earth the Savior likened himself to a shepherd, his followers to the sheep, and the kingdom of God to a sheepfold. This was most fitting when we recall that he was talking to shepherds, he was talking to them in terms they understood. Here are some of his very words: "I am the good shepherd, and I know my sheep," and again, "I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." And Paul the Apostle in his epistle to the Hebrews speaks of Jesus as "that great shepherd of the sheep."

"The Lord is my shepherd." It has always been very easy for me to believe that statement, and very natural. Before I can remember my mother taught me the beautiful little prayer which begins:

"Jesus, tender shepherd, hear me,
Hear thy little lamb tonight,
In the darkness, be thou near me,
Keep me safe till morning light."

The conception of Jesus as the Good Shepherd, created by himself, has lived throughout the ages. Masters of art have committed it to canvas. Poets have written innumerable verses about it, and hymn writers have set many of these to music. A beautiful conception, is it not?

In teaching his disciples Jesus propounded these questions: "How think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray." And today we sing the hymn, "The Ninety and Nine."

When the Lord appeared to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias, after his crucifixion and resurrection, and found them fishing, he prepared a meal for them, and after they had dined, he spoke three times to Simon Peter, charging him with his new responsibilities. Once he said, "Feed (Continued on page 1298.)

Signs of Discipleship

By Marion F. Cooper

"Now Peter sat without in the palace; and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee. But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth. And again he denied with an oath. I do not know the man. And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech betrayeth thee."—Matthew 26: 69-73.

CAUSES of all kinds, demand from their followers some type of discipleship. Some causes demand from their followers more than others and it will be found true, that the cause which exacts the most from its disciples is the cause which is the most worth while.

When we consider the cause of the Master of Men, we find that it exacts from those who would become the disciples of him the most that is within them to give. We discover that in the days of the early Christians the cause of Christ demanded of a great number of them their lives. Thousands died as martyrs. They gave unreservedly that Christendom might grow and develop into a higher plane of existence. The very future of Christendom, in the days of the early martyrs, was greatly dependent upon their willingness to express their discipleship with the Christ, even though it meant in many cases, the giving up of their mortal existence.

So it is with those today that have taken upon themselves the name of the Master and have entered into a covenant with him. The future of Christianity is very much dependent upon whether or not the people espousing this cause are able to adapt their lives for a greater indwelling of the spirit of the Master; whether or not they will have the courage, the determination and the fortitude to accept the challenge of Christ's way.

In our scripture lesson, we note impetuous Peter, a disciple that so dearly loved the Lord, yet, when he was put to the test of his discipleship with this man from Nazareth, attempted to deny any knowledge of him. But Peter could not cover the fact that he was a disciple of the Master, for he had been associated with Christ long enough that he spoke as one that was a follower of the lowly Nazarene. His speech betrayed him. Thus we find an example in Peter—a case in which the human elements, found within his being, attempted to push aside the spiritual knowledge which had been revealed to him by the heavenly Father.

A sign of discipleship with the Master is a manifest endeavor to obey the precepts and illustrate fully the spirit of our Lord and Master in our daily life. The consciousness of such a desire and purpose is one of the things which reveal to us that we are disciples of the Master. But after all there must be something more than a mere consciousness of it. There must be an absolute outward manifestation. And this outward manifestation will inevitably be present wherever the deep and genuine desire exists in the heart of the individual. Above everything and anything, we must have reality in religion. Never more than at the present time have men and women been so impatient and disdainful of pretense, yet never has there been a time in history, when this same type of men and women have been so prompt to honor that which is genuine and true. Why shouldn't men and women be impatient with the individual whose life is based upon pretense? We discover that during the time of Christ's personal ministry, he very severely rebuked the Pharisee for his hypocritical acts. The life of the Pharisee was based upon religious pretense. On the other hand we discover Jesus commending the publican for his essence of faith. "For everyone that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 18: 14.)

Jesus comes to the heart of every individual seeking very earnestly for entrance; and if perchance he is able to gain entrance into the hearts of men and women, he reveals to them that if they bear his name, they must exercise that same pure unselfish love toward one another, that he exercised toward all men. We must love on that same high level, that he loved, else we cannot claim discipleship with him.

The great purpose of Christ's human life was to reveal God to us for our salvation. Because our understanding is so human, it is extremely limited. We are therefore incapable of understanding any presentation of God that is not expressed in terms of human experiences. It seemed to be the great concern of the Master to show us how we might most successfully meet the problems in our earthly experiences and this success is expressed in three very challenging words, "Discipleship with Christ."

Another sign of discipleship with the Master is an eagerness to work for him. Possibly because we have been living in a period of great turmoil and stress in the past few years, we find a very sharp and severe line of demarcation drawn between those two groups of individuals; the disciples of Christ and those that by (Continued on page 1297)

Seattle and British Columbia Young People

IN A RECENT LETTER to President F. M. McDowell, Dwight W. Davis, president of the district young people's council, reports recent achievements and outlines the plans made by the young people of the northwest for the coming year. The information is suggestive of what may be done in other districts.

We quote from his letter:

"In retrospect I believe it can be said that the young people in this district have made progress this last year. I believe them to be more closely welded together in the bonds of 'fraternal cooperation in service to man and devoted consecration to God and his work' at this time than ever before in this district.

"We have had our difficulties to face, it's true; but I would not have had it otherwise, for invariably problematical situations, if approached humbly and prayerfully, result in growth. There is but one justification for mistakes: that we profit by them. As an organization we have made a few errors; but I am glad to be able to say that they have not been serious and that we are learning by experience.

"I am aware the progress is achieved only insofar as we realize that it depends upon certain increments or additions to our heritage. I recognize that we owe a debt to the past—for the rich cultural and spiritual content it has given us—and that if we are to learn economically we must utilize to the fullest our capacity for vicarious experience. . . .

"Much real strength and encouragement was derived from a meeting of young people at our first Council meeting held in Seattle, September 3. It was here that the various branch leaders of the young people presented their material for the coming year. The results of this meeting you can read for yourself in the minutes I am enclosing.

"It was particularly pleasing, at this meeting, to learn that the respective supervisors were unanimous in the thought that we should do more to give our young people a working knowledge of the history of this church, its organization, and its beliefs and principles, consecrated to that with which we are not familiar. . . .

"You can expect much of the Youth in this district this coming year. Our prayer is that each and everyone shall put his trust 'in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously' for this is the Spirit of God; and it will be under this Spirit that Zion shall be redeemed."

As noted, the district young people have adopted fully the young people's council plan recommended by President McDowell in his Herald article of July 18. In the year just past a number of projects have been successfully carried out. In a contest for one hundred per cent attendance of the young people of the branch at Sunday evening services, five branches ranked according to percentage.

Centralia	92.11%
Bellingham	76.21%
Seattle	72.28%
Tacoma	64.14%
Everett	61.00%

In a Saints' Herald reading contest branches ranked as follows—average score made in Herald test:

Puyallup	73%
Seattle	66%
Vancouver	47%
Everett	36%

Besides these the following successful projects are reported:

Educational stewardship.

Reunion grounds improvement.

Good will tours.

Youth's conventions in Seattle and Vancouver.

The essay contest.

The monthly district bulletin.

The newly organized young people's council worked out and adopted tentative objectives to be achieved in local and district-wide activities, in harmony with which the following definite projects were decided upon for the coming year:

1. An attendance contest.
2. An inter-branch debate.
3. An essay contest.
4. The district news bulletin.
5. An exchange of publications with other districts.
6. Young people's convention in February.
7. Good-will tours between branches.
8. Dramatics.
9. An extemporaneous speaking contest.
10. A short story contest.
11. Class study.
12. Compliance with the financial law.

WHAT COLLEGE DAY MEANS TO ME

This year, as never before, the students of Graceland College are depending upon the results of College Day. To one who has never attended Graceland it may be hard to realize just what College Day means. Many students at Graceland are dependent upon College Day collections to sustain them this year. We are depending on you.

Marian Rogerson
47 Cambridge Street,
Fall River, Massachusetts.

Only those people who have attended Graceland can realize the true value of College Day. As the money derived from College Day collections is a perpetual fund, it will send young men and women to Graceland for years to come, giving them a deeper meaning of God and his Church.

If it were not for College Day, no doubt I would have missed the wonderful experiences which Graceland has afforded me.

J. C. Stuart,
606 Hillview Avenue,
Los Angeles, California.

College Day is going to mean very much to me this year. My continuance in school this year and graduation in the spring is dependent upon the amount of money given by you and others on this College Day. I, with many other Graceland Students, am dependent on the results of College Day.

SIGNS OF DISCIPLESHIP

their conduct show that they do not desire to follow the way of the meek and lowly Nazarene. Those who do show signs of discipleship with the Master, not only do the things which they believe to be their duty, but they do all that is within their power for the onward movement of the great cause of Christ. A disciple's reaction to certain life experiences are automatically Christian.

May each of us, more fully, accept the challenge, show signs that we have accepted discipleship with the Master. Faith leads to love, love leads to service, and service to a richer and fuller discipleship with the Master of men.

THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS OF PROGRESS

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE YOUTH OF THE CHURCH

Graceland opens this fall in a year of unprecedented importance. Already not only our own country, but the world has embarked upon an adventure of unexampled significance.

We are living in exceptional times with most unusual developments taking place with such rapidity that only the keenest mind can follow.

Civilization is changing so rapidly that the men and women who succeed in making the largest contribution to future society and to their own happiness and development will be the ones best able to adjust themselves to this altered world. This can be done only by those seeking their preparation and guidance in an environment dominated by change.

Graceland offers this opportunity at a time when college education probably never had such a challenge to prepare its graduates to enter, one, two, or three years hence, into the new civilization which will be found to exist.

Young people, as never before, recognize that they will be completing their college courses at a time when their services will be in greater demand and when they may expect to fit into the world situation with the highest degree of satisfaction.

Our entering students this fall are asking only for a chance for the opportunity to prepare. They need the loans which the scholarship fund makes available. They will be ready when the time comes to repay it for the use of their successors. October 22 is the day you can "do your part" to help the youth of the church and society will call upon them for their part.

They have entered upon the year's work with unequaled enthusiasm and with the hope that the College Day collection will enable them to remain for the year to realize their life's goal.

With every anticipation of a most happy and successful college year.

G. N. BRIGGS,
President.

pating in the best and most profitable as well as useful professions.

To the young people of the church—the young people who have not means of their own—one half of one percent means a great opportunity—a chance in life.

There are many of them at Graceland now, awaiting their chance. Can you make an investment in the future in the institution that helped you? That will help your children? That will help all the young people of the church so far as it is given the means to do so?

my sheep." The story of this charge is beautifully told in the last chapter of the gospel of Saint John.

But what of the people in the Western Hemisphere? Did they know of the Good Shepherd? We have reason to believe that they did. Early in the first record of Nephi, the chosen servant of the Lord, the angel assures, "For there is one God and one Shepherd over all the earth." The people whose story is told in the Book of Mormon, knew, too, and looked for the coming of the Good Shepherd.

This is not merely poetry, it is not merely Scripture— it is truth, deeply-stirring, vital truth if we will but hear it:

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Ancient American Prayers

By Geraldine Wyatt

LITTLE OF THE BELIEFS AND LITERATURE of the ancient inhabitants of America, has survived the death-dealing hands of the Spanish priests. That little was so like the religion they taught, that it was correlated and handed back to the natives as a means of "converting" them.

There are a few beautiful, groping supplications, that have been recorded. They come down to us, presenting the picture of a people that have wandered, and that have in turn longed passionately for the light of truth.

One is reminded of the Psalms of David when he reads the following translation of a prayer:

Viracocha, Lord of the Universe!
Whether male or female,
at any rate commander of heat and reproduction, being one who,
even with His spittle, can work sorcery.
Where art Thou?
Would that Thou wert not hidden from this son of Thine!
He may be above;
He may be below;
or, perchance, abroad in space.
Where is His mighty judgment-seat?
Hear me!
He may be spread abroad among the upper waters;
or, among the lower waters and their sands;
He may be dwelling.
Creator of the world,
Creator of man,
great among my ancestors, before Thee
my eyes fail me,
though I long to see Thee;
for, seeing Thee,
knowing thee,
learning from Thee,
understanding Thee,
I shall be seen by Thee,
and Thou wilt know me.
The Sun—the Moon;
the Day—the Night;
Summer—Winter;
not in vain,
in orderly succession,
do they march to their destined place, to their goal.
They arrive wherever Thy royal staff
Thou bearest.
Oh! Harken to me,
listen to me,
let it not befall
that I grow weary and die.

The lore embodied in this supplication taken from the Empire of the Incas, determines for one the belief of these Lamanites of a God, and of a knowledge that they have not let Him be as great among them, as "Great among my ancestors."

Yet, some historians would have us believe that sun-worship was the true religion of these people. As a matter of fact, sun-worship was instituted in the latter days of the Peruvian or sometimes called by the misnomer Inca, Empire. It is a recorded, historical truth that an over-zealous mother of high birth, named Siyu-Yacu, aided her son in overthrowing the then present dynasty by clothing this son in a long robe, covered with little disks of gold. At opportune times, when the people were assembled for the spectacle, she had her son come out of a cave on a hillside, where the sun's rays would cause his brilliant robe to glisten. In this golden array he was declared the adopted son of the sun. From that time forth sun-worship was the established religion of the Peruvian Empire. Most historians place the beginning of this empire at about the tenth century after Christ.

The English of another orison is:

O conquering Viracocha!
Ever-present Viracocha!
Thou who art without equal upon the earth!
Thou who art from the beginnings of the world until its end!
Thou gavest life and valour to men, saying,
"Let this be a man."
And to a woman, saying,
"Let this be a woman."
Thou madest them and gavest them being.
Watch over them, that they may live in health and in peace.
Thou who art in the highest heavens, and among the clouds of the tempest,
grant them long life,
and accept this our sacrifice,
O Creator.

Different tribes had different names for God. The following is addressed to Pachacamac. But I think the prayer needs no explanation:

O Pachacamac!
Thou who hast existed from the beginning,
Thou who shalt exist until the end,
powerful but merciful,
Who didst create man by saying,
"Let man be,"
Who defendest us from evil,
and preservest our life and our health, art Thou in the sky or upon the earth?
in the clouds or in the deeps?
Hear the voice of him who implores Thee,
and grant him his petitions.
Give us life everlasting, preserve us, and accept this our sacrifice.

This, I believe, is conclusive that all men shall be saved, but the previous text shows that some after they have reached a saved condition have repudiated it; nevertheless they had known the saving power of Christ. But that all men are to be saved, and a special salvation to those who believe, would show that there are different degrees of salvation as indicated in 2 Corinthians 12: 2 which speaks of the third heaven, so there must be the first and second, and in 1 Corinthians 15: 23 we are told, "But every man in his own order:" and in the 29th to the 42nd verses we are told that "there are glories, as of the sun, the moon and the stars and" . . . "For as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead." Also the wicked are to be punished according to their works." (See Revelation 20: 12; Matthew 16: 27; Jeremiah 17: 10.)

The above shows that God proposes to save all men with the degree of reward they will be worthy of, and punish them according to infinite justice for their guilt; that provision is made that either in body or in the spirit state all shall know of the way of salvation and be judged by the law of the gospel; and that even the prison where those who have neglected their opportunities in this life shall be opened, and the prisoners brought forth. Observe further: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days they shall be visited." (Isaiah 24: 21, 22.) "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." (Isaiah 61:1.) "The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword." (Ezekiel 32: 21.) "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: By which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing." (1 Peter 3: 18-20.)

The above shows that God has not forgotten even those who were unrighteous, but will sometimes reach all and that in some degree of salvation all will be saved.

Christ is to reign until he subdues all enemies under his feet . . . even death then he and the world and all things he has subjected to himself will become subjected to the Father.

We do not believe that the Scriptures teach that there are just two conditions in the future state, but that, as God has all eternity to accomplish his purposes. the message and mission of Christ will indeed be eventually good tidings of great joy to all people; that the living God will save all men, and those who believe will receive a special salvation; that they will be "Kings and priests unto God and that they shall reign on the earth." (Revelation 5: 10.) That the "kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." (Daniel 7: 27.)

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." (Matthew 5: 5, also read Psalm 27: 3, 9, 29.) We believe that the purpose of punishment is to reform, and that sometime in the great eternity that all things will be brought subject to Christ.

Compare this with the hope of the Adventists. I will quote Mrs. E. G. White, as follows:

"Then Jesus and all the retinue of holy angels, and all the redeemed saints, left the city. The angels surrounded their commander, and escorted him on his way, and the train of redeemed saints followed. Then, in terrible, fearful majesty, Jesus called forth the wicked dead; and they came up with the same feeble, sickly bodies that went into the grave. What a spectacle! what a scene! At the first resurrection all came forth in immortal bloom; but at the second the marks of the curse are visible on all. The kings and noblemen of the earth, the mean and low, the learned and unlearned, came forth together. All behold the Son of Man; and those very men who despised and mocked him, who put the crown of thorns upon his sacred brow, and smote him with the reed, behold him in all his kingly majesty. Those who spit upon him in the hour of his trial now turn from his piercing gaze, and from the glory of his countenance. . . . And they knew that he is the very one whom they crucified and derided in his expiring agony. And then there arises one long, protracted wail of agony, as they flee to hide from the presence of the King of kings and Lord of lords. All are seeking to hide in the rocks, to shield themselves from the terrible glory of him whom they once despised. And, overwhelmed and pained with his majesty and exceeding glory, they with one accord raised their voices, and with terrible distinctness exclaim, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!'

"Then Jesus and the holy angels, accompanied by all the saints, again go to the city, and the bitter lamentations and wailings of the doomed wicked filled the air. Then I saw that Satan again commenced his work. He passed around among his subjects, and made the weak and feeble strong, and told them that he and his angels were powerful. He pointed to the countless millions who had been raised. There were mighty warriors and kings who were well skilled in battle, and who had conquered kingdoms. And there were mighty giants and valiant men who had never lost a battle. There was the proud ambitious Napoleon, whose approach had caused kingdoms to tremble. There stood men of lofty stature and dignified bearing, who had fallen in battle while thirsting to conquer. As they came forth from their graves, they resume the current of their thoughts where it ceased at death. They possess the same desire to conquer which ruled when they fell. Satan consults with his angels, and then with those kings and conquerors and mighty men. Then he looks over the vast army, and tells them that the company in the city is small and feeble, and that they can go up and take it, and cast out its inhabitants, and possess its riches and glory themselves. . . .

"Jesus and all the angelic host and all the saints, with glittering crowns on their heads, ascend to the top of the wall of the city. Jesus speaks with majesty, saying, Behold, ye sinners, the reward of the just! And behold, my redeemed, the reward of the wicked!" The vast multitude behold the glorious company on the walls of the city. And as they witness the splendor of their glittering crowns, and see their faces radiant with glory, reflecting the image of Jesus, and then behold the unsurpassed glory and majesty of the King of kings and Lord of lords, their courage fails. A sense of the treasure and glory which they have lost rushes upon them, and they realize that the wages of sin is death. They see the holy, happy company whom they have despised, clothed with glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life, while they are outside the city with every mean and abominable thing.

"THE SECOND DEATH

"Satan rushes into the midst of his followers, and tries to stir up the multitude to action. But fire from God out of heaven is rained upon them, and the great men, and mighty men, the noble, the poor and miserable, are all consumed together. I saw that some were quickly destroyed, while others suffered longer. They were punished according to the deeds done in the body. Some were many days consuming, and just as long as there was a portion of them unconsumed, all sense of suffering remained. Said the Angel, 'The worm of life shall not die; their fire shall not be quenched as long as there is the least particle for it to prey upon.'

"Satan and his angels suffered long. Satan bore not only the weight and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

punishment of his own sins, but also the sins of the redeemed host, which had been placed upon him; and he must also suffer for the ruin of souls which he has caused. Then I saw that Satan and all the wicked host were consumed, and the justice of God was satisfied; and all the angelic host, and all the redeemed saints, with a loud voice said, 'Amen.'" (Early Writings, pages 292-295.)

I will notice some things in the above that do not agree with the Bible.

1. In the Book of Revelation where the events she attempts to describe occurred, the destruction by fire was before and not after the resurrection of the wicked dead. I read: "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them. . . . And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

All this occurred before the holy city came down from God out of heaven, and in the 21st chapter we read: "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." (Revelation 21: 8.)

Thus the wicked were punished according to their works outside the holy city in the lake of fire and brimstone; but that they were not annihilated is shown by the following text: In the 21st chapter, verse 2, John saw the holy city coming down from God out of heaven. Verse 24 says that, "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it:" . . . and various things are mentioned descriptive of the city and its appointments in the 21st and 22nd chapters and again the wicked are referred to as follows: "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." (Revelation 22: 15.)

If they had been annihilated they would not still be outside the city. They must have their part of the punishment and even after that will be barred from the holy city, and how long and severe their punishment is not fully revealed, but I can only conceive of God punishing men with the purpose of reforming them. I cannot believe that the greatest majority of men will be annihilated, but rather that after they have suffered until they have learned the lesson that it is foolish to do evil that all except the sons of perdition previously referred to will be saved in whatever degree of salvation they will be qualified to enjoy. Thus we read: "Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth and things under the earth; And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Philippians 2: 9.)

It does not appeal to us that the largest part of the human race that God made in his own image are to be burnt up and annihilated, nor that the Devil will thus succeed in leading the vast majority of the human race to such an awful doom; that it would be to the glory of God to have them acknowledge him as the most powerful, and then be burnt up while the angels and saints are looking on with vindictive enjoyment. Jesus came to save sinners, and while they cannot be saved only as they forsake their sins, I can only believe that in the eternities yet to come Jesus Christ will ultimately succeed in his mission, and I can only think that the spirit that leads Adventists to look forward to the time of their triumph when they hope to look with satisfaction on the tortures of the largest portion of the human race and shout "amen" with the idea that the Christ has failed to save the major part of the human race, is foreign to the spirit of Christ.

2. The claim that "Satan bore not only the weight and punishment of his own sins, but also of the sins of the redeemed host." (Early Writings, pages 294, 295.) This statement is so out of harmony with the whole plan of salvation that when we first read it we could hardly believe that anyone would make such a statement. To believe that Satan is to assume our suffering and be annihilated in punishment for our sins would cause us to pity him and feel that he was indeed a benefactor. We find nothing of the kind in the Bible. But we do read:

"Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." (Isaiah 53: 4, 5.) "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." (1 Peter 2: 24.) These prophesies unquestionably refer to Jesus Christ, who bore our sins and suffered in our stead; and when Mrs. White makes the above statement she virtually gets the Devil in the place of Christ. We do not object to the Devil getting his just dues, nor suffering for the evil he has caused, but the above statement puts the whole plan of salvation in a false light; so we can only reject any claim made for it as being inspiration from God.

Man is to blame for yielding to Satan; because he has intelligence sufficient to know right and wrong. Because of this, and his agency giving him the right to choose his course (thus differing from the beast), he is responsible for the choice he makes. When man chose to sin, and placed himself subject to death; the Devil being party to the wrong was subject to suffering for his own deeds. The only way man could be redeemed from his own acts would be for someone who was not under the same condemnation to suffer as his substitute. This Jesus Christ did, and we honor and revere his name above every other name because of his vicarious suffering for us; and believe that sometime in future ages all will be brought to realize this, and that Christ will triumph over all things, and bring all to the knowledge of God and to the degree of salvation that they have qualified for. Then when sin, death, the grave, and hell are destroyed, Jesus having completed his work and subdued all things, he himself will be "subject to him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all."

QUESTION TIME

Do the Saints believe the Holy Spirit has a conscious existence?

They not only hold that He possesses conscious existence, but as a part of the Godhead praise, glory, and dominion are ascribed to Him. The prophet Joseph Smith expressed this concept, saying:

"Let the honor and the praise, the dominion and the glory be ascribed to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit forever and ever."—Church History, volume 1, page 86.

The three witnesses testified by command, closing with these similar words:

"The honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen."—Book of Mormon preface.

This unity of the Godhead is also declared by revelation to the church, stating:

"The Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father, and of the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5.

The Book of Mormon conveys a similar doctrine:

"The Holy Ghost will bear record unto him (the believer) of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost, are one."—634: 38.

Praise, honor, glory, and dominion could not be due that which has no conscious existence, for glory and dominion are held and exercised by one possessing them. The form of this existence is not clearly indicated, but essential characteristics and attributes of the Spirit prove consciousness, power, and volition. He is a teacher (John 14: 26), knows wisdom (1 Corinthians 2: 11, 13), speaks to man (Acts 8: 29), gives gifts (1 Corinthians 12: 8), communes with man (2 Corinthians 13: 14), commands him (Acts 13: 2), and strives with him (Genesis 6: 3; Moroni 8: 33). He possesses a will (2 Nephi 1: 123); his mind may be known (Romans 8: 27). He may be known personally (John 14: 17), may be vexed (Isaiah 63: 10), grieved (Ephesians 4: 30), sinned against (Luke 12: 10), or lied to (Acts 5: 3). He conceived Jesus (Luke 1: 35), and believers must be born of Him to enter the divine kingdom (John 3: 5).

The Inspired Version uses the personal pronoun of the Spirit twenty-four or more times, and Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5 says: "The Comforter knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and of the Son."

What is the oldest source of history of any biblical nation?

The most ancient known at the present time is that of Babylonian and Assyrian literature. However, the Babylonian was itself indebted to the yet older nation of the Sumerians, whose literature was translated and absorbed into the national and social life of Babylonia. Their culture was quite advanced, and both men and women learned reading and writing as a part of educational requirements. Some of the Sumerian texts are found written or copied into the Babylonian documents, and include stories of the Creation and the Deluge. These are considerably older than the time of Moses, and contain various similarities with his history in Genesis.

The science of astronomy was well developed in Babylonian times long before the Babylonian era known to the Israelites, and meteorology and allied studies in natural phenomena were also extensively cultivated by them. Many large libraries had been built up, in some of which were many thousands of volumes or records, the writings being on clay tablets. The inscriptions reveal that the more ancient Babylonians were acquainted with northern Semitic peoples approximately 3300 B. C., or a thousand years before the city of Ur became prominent in history of that era.

The so-called Code of Hammurabi was produced about 2250 B. C. by a ruler of the first dynasty, being a summary and systemization of the more ancient laws. This code bears many points of resemblance to the Mosaic Code in respect to the Ten Commands, marriage, slave, divorce, and priesthood laws; also on tithes, interest payments, fines, and other regulations respecting moral and secular matters.

Is it right to serve tea and coffee at public suppers of the Saints?

This question appears to be based upon the Word of Wisdom which advises us not to use hot drinks or strong drinks, which some believe particularly refer to tea, coffee, and alcoholic liquors. Without attempting to pass upon the wisdom of doing so, it should be noted that the revelation (86) is "not by commandment or constraint" and therefore leaves those concerned to decide whether or not they value the "promise" more than the allurements of the drink.

God Fulfills His Promises

One experience of mine, above all others, convinced me that God fulfills his promises when we are faithful. Some time back I was confined to jail to pay off an old grudge one of my neighbors had against me. Remembering the Lord's words, "Vengeance is mine," I did not worry over the matter, but taking my Bible and Instructor with me and with a prayer in my heart that the Lord would help me, I entered the place.

At first during my confinement I was persecuted by those about me for my religious faith. I could not accustom myself to the rough and abusive language I heard, but I knew the Lord would care for me. Then I was taken to another part of the building where all was quiet and peaceful, and soon I was allowed to go out of doors. Out of five days I spent there I was only one day in confinement, and I felt that the Lord had been with me from the time I left home until I returned. I am thankful to know that I have one Friend upon whom I can depend at any time.

I have heard the remark several times that it does not make any difference what church one belongs to; all of us will be saved. But I know there is only one true church of Christ, and I know this not by the power of teachings of man, but by the power of God. I hope to be able to remain steadfast in the faith of Christ.

I heard only one sermon preached by a Latter Day Saint elder before I was baptized, and I can remember only a few words of that; but God by his Holy Spirit led me to study and pray that I might become a true servant of his; he gave me light on the gospel. The elder who baptized me commented on how well I seemed to understand the Scriptures when I answered the questions he put to me. I heard him say, "The Spirit giveth utterance."

The Scriptures tell us that the Lord will bless those who believe in his Spirit and bare witness with their spirits and he has promised to bless such with signs proving them to be his children.

I want to be an instrument for the accomplishing of much good in the hands of the Lord. I want to be humble and full of love, a servant worthy to assist in the Master's works. Please pray for me.

Appreciates Letters and Articles

Being an isolated Saint, I had great reason to rejoice when the opportunity was opened for me to attend the first Sunday of the Des Moines reunion. It seemed that the windows of heaven were opened, and the blessings received have been a source of strength and comfort to cheer and help me in my home and daily tasks.

I appreciate the church paper. The letters are read with interest, as well as all the other articles. I receive much courage to press on from reading the testimonies and articles of those of the true faith. I know this is the true faith, for I have received evidence many times. I am thankful, that I have the privilege of helping in this great work.

The article by Evan Fry in the Herald of September 26, contained some good thoughts, and I hope all who read it, will profit by them.

I pray for each Saint, that we may look well into our own lives and rid ourselves of the besetting sins that hinder our progress. I also pray for each officer and leader. They have a great responsibility and we must strive and pray unitedly that this great work will be carried on till we reach our goal.

Obedience to Law Brings Blessings

Sixteen months ago I was blessed with the privilege of uniting with the Church of the First Born. Prior to my coming in contact with this message, I was a partaker of worldly things. I was a heavy user of tobacco, and I also knew the taste of liquor; but through the grace of God and the prayers of the faithful, I have been able to yield myself to the divine principles of the gospel, and change my habits. For these blessings I am grateful. Indeed I seem never to tire of thanking God for his goodness to me and to my loved ones.

Very often I believe I can feel as David felt when he wrote, "My cup runneth over." This has been my experience since embracing the gospel. I know that the blessings I have been given are the joys promised us by the Master when he said he would send us another Comforter. I have been greatly helped through study and prayer and through trying to make the gospel a living thing in my life.

I have had many spiritual evidences with regard to the truthfulness and divinity of this message. During my short period in the church I have witnessed the gift of prophecy, and on one occasion I was spoken to through that gift. Just recently while meditating upon the more abundant life, I was given a remarkable experience. These evidences prove to be a source of encouragement to me.

We have also been blessed through the filing of our inventory and complying with the financial law of the church. In the midst of all these good things and in the newness of life, I plead for the prayers of the Saints, that I may be more humble and that I may make my life a living testimony for Christ's sake.

The Lord Increases Our Understanding

A thorough knowledge of this work has come to me through a period of many years. I have thought many times that I was blessed more when I first entered the church than in the years that followed; but later experiences have been more constructive. I have undergone trials, and I know that there are yet trials ahead; nevertheless I pray that I may be strong so that at last I shall have a place in God's kingdom.

When I think of the sacrifice Jesus made, I ask of myself, Should I not as well make a sacrifice for his work? I think so.

My gospel experiences began in 1888. I have taken the Herald for about forty-one years. At first I did not understand that which I read in it, but after a time I began to learn and understand the great truths of life. My schooling was meager, but I thank the Lord that he increased my understanding and most of all, that he has given us who live in latter days his gospel.

I have followed the church through many years, and appreciate the experiences and blessings which have been mine. I feel sure that I should not have lived to see my seventy-fifth birthday if it had not been for the gospel of Jesus.

Prays for Mothers in the Church

I am eighty years old and the gospel work gets brighter and brighter as time passes. I love to meditate upon it and to serve the Lord. He has been with me in every trial, and has blessed me. I have learned to say to him, "Thy will be done."

Today my three sons and three daughters all belong to the church, and I am thankful that he has given to our family and our friends the rich legacy of the gospel. I know that if we do his will and keep his commandments, he will be with us to the end. It is not only our duty as Saints but our privilege to walk closer to him. We should accept the blessed invitation:

"Come close to the Savior,
Thy loving Redeemer,
Oh, sorrowing heart oppressed;
Life's journey is dreary,
Thy spirit is weary,
Oh, come unto him and rest.
Come close to the Savior.
Oh, why doest thou linger?
He knoweth thy heart oppressed;
His promise believing,
His message receiving,
Oh, come unto him and rest."

When I look about and see the earth with its beauty and sunshine, I often find myself wishing that all of us would study and learn to serve the Lord. In so doing our loneliness and discontent will vanish. May he help and bless us in improving our talents and letting our lights shine. May he especially help all the mothers in the church, giving us a deep love for our homes and our little ones. May he give us of his wonderful charity, for charity covers a multitude of sins.

Little Daughter Teaches Lesson of Patience

"Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience."—James 1: 3.

I was quite young in the gospel when I was married, and started out on life's journey light-hearted and carefree. Soon there came a little daughter into our home, and I became very anxious that she should be led in the ways of the gospel. I suppose this it not a new story, but in my anxiety for her spiritual and physical welfare, I sought the Lord often in prayer. Even though I pleaded earnestly with God at all times, there grew up a strong opposition which I was forced to meet, and when no results were apparent from my seeking God, I became impatient. Later I realized that this impatience was a strong hindrance to my own spirituality.

This condition continued for thirteen years, and then a second baby girl came to us. She was as fair as the first, but when a year old she developed a skin disorder, first on her hands and then on her face. The doctor seemed unable to understand it or to cope with it. It became so bad that the child's hands had to be covered, and if she went out a veil was needed for her face.

Because of the many perplexing and disappointing things I had passed through with the first child, I had grown impatient, and in my heart I complained to God that the things I would have liked had been withheld. I was not manifesting the faith and confidence in God that I should have.

When this second baby began to talk we found that she was of a sweet, loving, and very patient disposition. She was remarkable. And hearing her every day, I could see that I was lacking in those characteristics, and I marveled at her wonderful patience and fortitude in her affliction. This weighed heavily on my heart for a number of weeks until I confessed to God that I could see my own failure and shortcomings, and promised to have faith and trust him for all.

The following summer in order that the little sufferer might enjoy herself, for she was a great lover of nature, the flowers, birds, trees and fields, I often took her in her go-cart miles into the country, and there removed her veil. How her little heart swelled with gratitude at the sight of God's gift of nature to man. Following these days her face and hands began to clear up. Our hopes were high—she became fair and beautiful. But later she developed bronchitis following the whooping cough, and at five and one-half years she was called to rest.

I hardly know how I survived the trial of losing her, but she had taught me the lesson of patience, love, and fortitude, and I am grateful to God for that lesson. I see now its great need, and how often we must suffer to learn such things. I have pleaded with God that he would forgive me and that I might labor on to a better understanding. Let all of us put our trust in the Lord.

"What Lack I Yet?"

Sunday, September 23, Elder and Sister Leverton with a few Saints from Bothwell, pleasantly surprised us with their presence. The elder read a chapter from the Old Testament and chose his text from Matthew. His was a fine sermon, and I shall always remember that text: "What lack I yet?" Only four words, but if each one of us realized what we lack yet and set about making it up, what a busy band of Saints we would all become. And wouldn't God give the increase?

Request Prayers

Chester W. Brown, of Peculiar, Missouri, wishes the Saints to remember him in their prayers, that he may be healed of his affliction of diabetes and a nervous disorder, and may be strong and able to work. Mr. Brown is a young man who is not a member of the church, but he has faith in the latter-day work. He believes the Lord will help him to health through the prayers of the Saints.

Sister Hulda Maria Edstrom, of Oak Park, Illinois, desires the members of the church to fast and pray for her. She is in need of a blessing and knowing God's goodness to his children, asks prayer in her behalf.

The Saints are asked to fast and pray for Mrs. E. E. Lloyde, of Brunelda, Montana, who is sorely afflicted. She is not a member of the church, but trusts in the mercy and healing power of God.

Thought Provokers

By Alta Vedder Blend

HAS IT EVER OCCURRED to you what poor advertisements for the cause of Christ many of us are? We hear much of denying ourselves and picking up our burden and following Christ; of abstaining from the pleasures of this world, that we may earn happiness in the world to come.

What is this much talked of burden that His people are supposed to carry? and of what do we deny ourselves? Would we exchange the responsibilities that following Christ entails upon us for anything the world can offer us? Christ says, "My yoke is easy, my burden is light." Let us stop a moment and thoughtfully consider the benefits of the two paths. All about us we see people in pursuit of what they think will bring happiness.

SOME DECIDE that money and the power it gives are what they want. They toil unceasingly for it. The pursuit of money is a hard taskmaster. They have no time to cultivate the mind or to enjoy the finer things of life. The more they get the more fierce competition becomes. What if they do have to use an unfair advantage to get ahead of a competitor? He would do the same, they think, if he had a chance. What if many smaller men are crushed in the mad scramble? It cannot be helped. It is a necessary evil. At last as old age creeps on some of them realize they have built up powerful organizations for making money, but that it requires unceasing vigilance to keep them functioning. It is doubtful if their sons have the ability to keep them going, so the whole structure is likely to fall when their guiding mind is removed. Others watch their organization topple when a rival sees an opportunity to step in ahead of them, or some financial crisis sends them crashing.

No, happiness is not found in the pursuit of money or power.

But fame? Surely it would be pleasant to be famous?

Many a famous person will tell us that fame is empty indeed and a poor recompense for the effort expended unless that work is the thing one would rather do than anything else in the world; then it is pleasure. But it is the doing of the work that brings the pleasure, not the fame. And this is not denied His followers unless he calls them to a higher work.

HOW ABOUT position in social life, title, etc.? It requires but a short investigation of the futile strivings, heart burnings, jealousies, envyings, and insincerities of this class to see that happiness is not found here.

But there is leisure and gayety? Pleasure with a capital P. Surely there is happiness here for youth, especially.

When one has nothing to do but to seek gayety and pleasure, the latter eludes one tantalizingly. Everything soon clogs the jaded appetite. Look at the youth of this class, seeking constantly for new thrills, and it is very evident they are not happy—far from it.

As for all forms of dissipation, anyone knows they bring only regret, shattered health, and sorrow.

On the other hand with the followers of Christ, there is strife with all forms of evil, glorious strife that brings out the best that is in them. Its victories are so satisfying while its defeats, if they have done their best, are no discredit to them.

There are sacrifices especially among the missionaries, but they who sacrifice the most are not the ones we hear talking of sacrifice. They talk of the blessings that have come to them in their work.

True there is sacrifice of some of one's ease while he is about his Master's business, but everything is bought with a price. And where could an equal amount of effort be expended that would bring the satisfaction and pleasure that knowing he has had a hand in advancing even a little the cause of his Master, will give one?

As for the pleasures of this life, no legitimate pleasure in moderation is withheld from his followers. The other so-called pleasures bring only suffering, sorrow, and sin.

When one is interested in a good cause, it adds zest to life, helps one enjoy all things more.

Then when we see the hectic confusion, strife, and sin in the world, the doubts, uncertainties and fears that beset people, who would exchange the Christian's calm faith that the Lord is at the helm and that "All things work for good to those who love the Lord," for anything the world can offer? When calamity follows disaster in the world and "Men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming upon them," even though some of these troubles come to them, too, Christ's followers are told that prophecy is being fulfilled; that it denotes the near approach of our Savior, and they are advised to redouble their efforts to help in the work to be done.

His followers' burdens? The satisfaction of being engaged in the worth-while cause of helping others out of darkness into light instead of pursuing will-o-the-wisps that ever elude one.

His followers' denials? The denial of harmful things that bring only troubles and sorrow for happiness that endures.

His followers' sacrifices? The sacrifice of things that are temporary for things that are eternal.

Then let us not discourage anyone, youth especially, by talking about the burden and sacrifices of his followers. Rather let us speak of the happiness legitimate pleasures bring, the satisfaction of worth-while work and, amid the sea of confusion and fear in the world, the joy and the peace the steadfast anchor of our faith in the promises of our Lord brings us.

Ancient American Prayers

The capitals starting the names relating to God, were used by Philip Ainsworth Means, from whose book, Ancient Civilization of the Andes, all three prayers are taken.

There has been some controversy concerning whether or not these were not written after the Conquest. Mr. Means, in regard to this argument says: "It is true, as I have hinted above, that they do have something of the freshness and fervor which pervade the most moving parts of the Old Testament. A study of the writings of the many Catholic missionaries who flocked to Peru after the Conquest will convince any reasonable person, however, that these missionaries found evidences of exalted spirituality already existing in the people, duly honoring it and utilizing it in their own labors for the conversion of the people to Christianity."

How long had these prayers been handed down from generation to generation? How great was the belief of these people in them, that they still remembered them after the edict to worship the sun had been issued? The answer to the last question can be answered by stating: These people had no system of writing, although they could record numbers and such by a complicated string and knot method, their literature, and history, was instrusted to learned men from generation to generation. These in turn, upon command could from their memory store, impart veritable books of information. But, only the most important material was considered worthy of such treatment.

The Jewish question exists wherever Jews live in perceptible numbers. Where it does not exist it is carried by Jews in the course of their migrations. We naturally move to those places where we are not persecuted, and there our presence produces persecutions. This is the case in every country, and will remain so, even in those highly civilized, France itself being no exception, till the Jewish question finds a solution on a political basis. The unfortunate Jews are now (1896) carrying anti-Semitism into England; they have already introduced it into America.—Theodor Herzl.

Strength is like gunpowder; to be effective it needs concentration and aim. —Mathews.

The Fifteenth Harvest Home Festival

Thousands of Visitors

Never does the Auditorium seem a more friendly place than at harvest-time when the festival is open to all without charge. Then the doors of the building are opened, and the foyer, halls, and ramps are crowded with people eager to see the beauties of harvest home. October annually brings to the great building thousands of visitors, men, women and children, to visit another Harvest Home Festival of the church.

A beautiful sight the lower hall this year with its many booths, its soft lights, its decorations of asparagus fern, leaves, cornstalks, potted plants, cacti, colorful crepe paper, cotton, Spanish moss, and other materials. The pleasing odor of fresh fruits and grains was everywhere, and even more pleasing were the odors which emanated from the Laurel Club counter where lunches were served all who wished to remain in the building and "look some more."

This year visitors came from far and wide. Some had never seen a Harvest Festival before, others had seen it every year for fourteen years. From ten o'clock in the morning until ten at night, they tramped about the large room, admiring, exclaiming, and discussing. The largest crowds came in the evenings, there being an average of between seven and eight thousand there nightly. School children came in classes to view the exhibit, and many others. From the opening of the festival, October 3, until its close Sunday night, October 8, it is thought that about sixty thousand visitors passed through the hall.

Popular Festival Features

One of the most popular displays on the floor (people were always crowded about its counters) was the needlework booth, where handwork of women from Oregon to Maine and from the South to Canada were offered for sale. There were balsam pillows from Maine which sold like hot cakes and little agates from Oregon, and handwork from many, many places. Forty lovely quilts were donated. The proceeds from the sale of these articles went into the Harvest Festival fund to care for the needy.

Next door to this booth was another of special interest. For the first time the young people's department of the Stone Church, headed by Elder T. A. Beck, had an exhibit. "Youth Presents," was the name of this striking exhibit, and in the lighted background stood a life-sized figure of the friend of young people, the Christ.

Toward the latter part of the festival Brother C. C. Koehler, one of the festival officers, was hard put to it to crowd any more ribbons on the big ten by twelve foot map of the United States. A green or a white ribbon was stretched to Independence from each point sending a gift to the festival. Gifts continued to come throughout the festival, and more ribbons had to be added until there were considerably more than one hundred towns and cities marked.

Rather than send harvest products, Minneapolis Branch, Minnesota, sent a poster, the letters of which were made up of money—118 dimes, three dollar bills, three quarters, and one nickel.

In the center of the hall stood the Independence Chamber of Commerce booth. This was the first time the Chamber of Commerce had accepted Harvest Festival assignment. "Made in Independence" was the motto there, and space was given local manufacturer-members of the Chamber of Commerce. Exhibits ranged from butter in cartons to corn-shellers and quilts.

Kansas City Stake is growing accustomed to holding a high place in the festival. This year her exhibit was a "Century of Progress in Jackson County." Here past and present mingled—a painting of "The Scout," a monument which stands in Penn Valley Park, Kansas City, contrasted with the picture of a modern dirigible. In the foreground of the exhibit a rockgarden took the form of the Missouri River showing historic Westport Landing. Back of this and effectively wrought in cardboard was the present Kansas City skyline with its towering skyscrapers. A soap replica of the Kansas City Liberty Memorial monument, made by the Ladies Opportunity Class of Central Church, was a part of the exhibit. This display required nine hundred bars of soap donated by Kansas City soapmakers. "I think it's pretty good for amateurs," modestly observed one of the class members in explaining the features of the monument, and looking at the miniature car parked in front of the monument, the little soap wheels of which actually turned, everyone agreed with her.

Unique Booth Displays

One of the most unique booth ideas this year was that presented by Spring Branch Church, Independence—the loading of Noah's ark. The animals (and what odd animals they were, some of vegetables, some of roots, some of cloth, some of rubber) came two by two up the gangplank, and, of course, Father Noah had crammed the ark with provisions (canned fruit) for all of them. All seemed eager to enter the ark, for in the background clouds lowered and the lightning flashed—it was about to storm!

"Our Ship Came In," Englewood's booth informed the visitors, and sure enough, it had. There stood the good ship, Englewood, laden with fruits and other goods, in the midst of a "billowy sea." In the background a lighthouse threw out its helpful rays, and almost over the ocean's rim a pale moon struggled through the clouds.

There were many "ah's" and "oh's" over the Great Northwest Club display which presented the setting and spirit of 1849—a white man's fort, an Indian camp, and in the background towering snowcapped mountains and a pine-clad valley into which was vanishing a westward moving covered-wagon caravan.

Walnut Park's mediæval castle or fortress with its moat and drawbridge was an attractive spot. Snow and ice effects were ingeniously worked out by means of lights, whitewash, light cement, and cellophane. This booth, too, boasted the only neon sign at the festival.

The Home Beautiful Club, of Independence, had as its attraction a miniature home beautiful, made by the women, with tiny rugs, curtains, and furniture all in the best of taste.

A Story Back of Every Exhibit

There is a story back of the Three-I Club, (Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana) miniature cannery. For several years the club has specialized in producing canned goods for the festival. Their dream is a cannery where the needs of all will be cared for. This year they created a scene of industry and cooperation. The cannery stood in the foreground, and back of it were the meadows and fields which produced the fruit and vegetables. A tiny truck carrying newly-canned goods, was about to cross the rustic bridge which spanned a little stream.

Gudgell Park's lovely rock garden exhibit was made almost on the spur of a moment. At nine o'clock Sunday night, October 1, the congregation decided to have a booth at the festival, to open on Tuesday. Workers flew about collecting goods and decorative materials, and they spent not one penny on booth construction or trimmings. Was it worth it? Well, that booth won first place among the exhibits of the churches. But more about prizes later.

And then there is the story of how a few workers down in Holden Stake toiled to gather their Harvest Festival gifts, and get them arranged for the exhibit. They had a hut of cornstalks crowded with good things.

Sugar Creek, Independence, decided to spring something new on the festival this year, and so made a fruit cave, the sides of which were watermelons.

It wasn't necessary this year for the Stone Church booth to have a label. The principal feature of the exhibit was a replica of the front, or south side, of the Stone Church building. This stood beneath a starry sky and was backed from ceiling to floor by shelves of fruit given to the festival. The Y. K. T. Class rock garden exhibit, which occupied the platform, was a part of the Stone Church exhibit.

Some years ago all natives of the South who had gathered to the center place, saw fit to organize themselves into the Sunny South Club. Now the club includes people from Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, and Oklahoma. Their display this year was an old-fashioned southern homestead with doll children playing on the porch.

Independence Second Church, where the Harvest Festival movement was born fifteen years ago, was present again with a bountiful gift of fruit presented in a setting of yellow and orange.

Enoch Hill pleasantly portrayed a small Enoch Hill church with children loitering on the steps. On the church grounds stood rugged trees, and there was even the old path cutting crosslots so familiar to the young folks and children.

Far West Stake spelled its name with quart jars of tomatoes and beets. As background someone had painted a large copy of the famous painting, "The Gleaners," and in the display was a pen containing two European fitches, animals whose homeland is that of "The Gleaners."

There were also exhibits from Liberty Street and East Independence churches; from William Chrisman High School; the Herald Publishing House; Graceland College, and the Laurel Club had a counter and tables where visitors were served lunch. The Oriole Girls had a colorful display of orange and black, where they were introducing their revised program and literature. Original paintings by Paul N. Craig were also shown.

The Girl Scouts had converted their regular meeting rooms, on the lowest floor in the northwest corner of the building, into rest and first aid rooms for the convenience of festival guests. There at 4.15 each afternoon they gave demonstrations informing the visitors concerning scout requirements. On Wednesday, Troop 37 (Stone Church), demonstrated the requirements of the child nurse badge. On Thursday eighteen girls were invested tenderfoot scouts in Troop 37 and Troop 14 (Liberty Street Church) by Miss Margaret Fifield, chief scout executive of Kansas City, and Miss Cornelia Harzfeld, district commissioner. Troop 46 (Stone Church) demonstrated the home nurse badge on Friday, and on Saturday Troop 10 (Walnut Park) gave a first aid demonstration.

Where the Prizes Went

Display prizes were awarded Thursday. The method of judging was different this year. As groups of visitors entered the hall, they were given a card and asked to present their opinion on the various booths. The prizes represented a total of about twenty opinions. Kansas City took the sweepstake prize. Of church exhibits, Gudgell Park took first prize; Stone Church, second, and Walnut Park, third. Among the clubs, the Great Northwest Club took first; Home Beautiful, second, and Three-I, third. Sunny South was given honorable mention. Among the classes, the Stone Church Young People's Department took first, and there was no second place. The Y. K. T. Class was given third.

Free Physical Examinations in Baby Show

This year's Better Baby Show was the third conducted at Harvest Festival time, and the most successful of all, according to Mrs. D. S. McNamara, in charge of this feature. It was not a contest of beauty or physical perfection with its triumphs for a few outstanding babies and its disappointments for the parents of the majorities. There were no announcements of ratings and no cash awards. Instead 140 babies under six years of age, were given free physical examinations by a corps of half a dozen local physicians. "Our idea this year was to be really helpful," said Mrs. McNamara, "and I believe we succeeded."

Other Events and Entertainments

The flower show Saturday added much to the beauty of the festival and attracted large crowds of people. The women especially were interested in the cooking school, demonstrating the use of whole wheat in baking and cooking, and taught by Mrs. D. R. Hughes, of Atherton. Another event of interest to the women was the festival bake show. The nightly concerts by the Auditorium Band, directed by Roy Turner, and the Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, added much to the attractiveness of the festival.

The Contribution of the Harvest Festival Chorus

The climax of interest in the Harvest Home Festival came Sunday afternoon when the Harvest Festival Chorus of approximately five hundred voices, gave its annual concert to a congregation of several thousand listeners. The chorus which was composed of thirty choirs from Independence and surrounding stakes, was directed by Paul N. Craig in the singing of such favorite hymns as, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," "Alas, and Did My Savior Bleed," "Burst Ye Emerald Gates," "Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord," and "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel."

The chorus was assisted by Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano soloist, who sang, "Hear Ye, Israel," from "Elijah"; by Mr. George Anway, tenor, who sang solo parts in two Negro spiritual numbers by the chorus, "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," and "Go Down Moses"; by the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. H. C. Burgess, and by the Auditorium Orchestra, conducted by Orlando Nace. The orchestra is composed of about fifty pieces, and rendered three special numbers in addition to accompanying the chorus.

Other chorus numbers particularly appreciated were two anthems, "Unfold Ye Portals," from "The Redemption," and "God Is Our Refuge," by Buck; "A Love Dream" ("Liebestraum"), by Liszt; a Scotch air, "Comin' Through the Rye," and a concert arrangement of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Appreciation of the high quality work of chorus, orchestra, and soloists was widespreach among the listeners.

Sermon by President F. M. Smith Closes Festival

"I rejoice in the Harvest Festival because it stands as a symbol of what this people can do by cooperating, and even if there were nothing more to it than we have seen demonstrated in the array downstairs and this afternoon in the musical gift of the Harvest Festival Chorus, it is still worth while because we have worked it out together," said President Frederick M. Smith in his Sunday night sermon which brought the Harvest Home Festival of 1933 to an end.

In the stand Brother Smith was assisted by Elder Frank McDonald, pastor of Walnut Park, and Elder William Inman, pastor of Second Church. Music was offered by the Auditorium Orchestra and by singers of the Harvest Festival Chorus. Elder John F. Sheehy led the congregational song service preceding the sermon.

Independence

Now that the Harvest Festival is over and the canned goods are stored away for winter use, the people of Independence are looking ahead to other activities of the fall and winter.

The call to leadership will be sounded by the religious education institute to be conducted October 23 to November 5, at the Stone Church, for all teachers and officers of the church schools in the ten Independence congregations. Classes will be offered those who register in child, youth, and adult leadership. Method courses in leadership will begin the evening of Sunday, November 5, in regular Sunday evening six o'clock classes. These will be conducted at the Stone Church for a period of several weeks.

The young people's council will sponsor its annual city-wide carnival in the lower hall of the Auditorium the night of October 21. The newly-elected council begins to function October 16.

Plans are being made for effective observance of the "Keep the Law" period designated by the First Presidency for the entire church, November 12 to December 3.

Stone Church

The Stone Church's members on the Independence Young People's Council for the coming year are Ammon Davis, who is president of the local Stone Church council, Edmund Gleazer, vice president of the local council, and Miss Alice Woodside, secretary. Officers of the young people's department at the Auditorium are also council members, Superintendent T. A. Beck, and his two assistants, Bill Lee and Miss Opal Williams.

Pastor John F. Sheehy delivered an excellent sermon Sunday morning to the Stone Church congregation. He found the basis for his discourse in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and voiced a plea for the observance of "Keep the Law" period, November 12 to December 3.

Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and Mrs. Ruth Haden, soprano, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, was guest soloist.

No Sunday afternoon prayer service or evening meeting was held at the Stone Church, all Saints gathering at the Auditorium to hear the sermon by President F. M. Smith.

Among those who have lately passed away were two aged and well-known brothers. Charles Martin Mills, who would have been ninety-one years old had he lived until October 16, passed away at the Independence Sanitarium, October 3, of encephalitis. He came to Independence in 1884, and had since made this his home. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. A. D. White and Mrs. W. O. Hands, and three sons, W. H. Mills, C. W. Mills, and C. A. Mills. Private funeral services were conducted at the home, Patriarch F. A. Smith in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Sunday night, October 8, Henry R. Mills, a brother of Charles Martin Mills, passed away at his home in Independence. His death occurred on his birthday. Brother Mills was born in Cuyahoga County, Ohio. October 8, 1844, and joined the church in 1876. He held the office of high priest, and is known to the church for his hymn writing. He wrote the music to such stirring Latter Day Saint hymns as "God Is Marshaling His Army," "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," and others. He is survived by two sons, Arthur H. Mills and Frank W. Mills; a daughter, Mabel Underwood, and other relatives. Brother Mills has been an outstanding figure in the church, and leaves a large circle of friends who appreciate his contributions to the latter-day cause.

Brother Thomas G. Scott, who had lived in Independence only five weeks died October 7, at his home. He was sixty-nine years old. He came here from Kansas, and is survived by a son, Joshua C. Scott, an adopted daughter, Miss Myrtle Scott; three sisters, three brothers, and three grandchildren. The funeral was in charge of Joseph Luff, and interment was in Mound Grove.

Second Church

Elder H. L. Barto was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday, Pastor William Inman in charge. The choir furnished music for the service, and prayer was offered by John Davis.

Tonight at eight o'clock there will be a gathering of the priesthood and their wives in the basement of the church.

A young people's council has been organized during the past week, and officers elected are: President, Kenneth Clow; vice president, Alice Willis; secretary, Berniece Wisemore, and treasurer, Waunita Page. Roy Settles is the young people's sponsor, and Hazel Clow, the social sponsor.

Walnut Park Church

All afternoon and evening services of the Walnut Park congregation were dispensed with Sunday because of the concert and closing events of the Harvest Home Festival at the Auditorium.

The session of the church school was well attended. Special numbers on the program following the class work were by two members of the young people's department at the Stone Church. Virgil Woodside sang "The Living God," and Miss Alice Woodside played "The Palms," as a piano solo.

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker at eleven o'clock.

Miss Inez Hartman, daughter of Brother and Sister Leonard C. Hartman, and Harold Smith, son of Brother and Sister J. N. Sherwin, were married at 11:50 Wednesday night, October 4, at the home of Brother and Sister Sherwin, Brother Sherwin performing the ceremony. The young couple was married on the anniversary of the marriage of the bride's parents. Mrs. Smith is a member of the young people's class of the church school taught by Elder W. T. Gard.

Liberty Street Church

Monday night outdoor recreation for the young people has been discontinued for the remainder of the year. Instead Monday nights will be spent working on programs, plays, etc. At present the Auditorium Festival is claiming most of the attention and efforts of the young people.

The program at the young people's meeting last Wednesday night was furnished by a quartet composed of John Soderstadt, Mayble and Ruth Tignor and Hubert Mills. They sang "The Reapers." After a short talk by Hubert Mills, the young people went to the home of Raymond Wrigley where they were the guests of Group 25.

At the church school Sunday morning, Ethel McClees, Alice and Effie May Zion, and Mary McConnel sang a pleasing number.

"The Glory of God in Nature" was the number sung by the choir at eleven o'clock and Elder E. T. Atwell delivered a stirring sermon.

Gudgell Park Church

Elder T. A. Beck occupied the pulpit the morning of September 17, and that evening Elder W. F. Bolinger, of Mount Washington congregation, spoke on making right choices.

The following Sunday Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the morning speaker, and Elder H. A. Koehler spoke in the evening.

A large number enjoyed the sacrament service October 1. Brother S. S. Smith spoke in the evening from his chart, "The Doctrine of a Clean Heart."

Gudgell Park was made happy last week when its booth received first place and the blue ribbon among the booths of the various congregations at the Harvest Festival.

Patriarch F. A. Smith gave an interesting sermon the morning of October 8. He talked on faith and healing and gave some of his missionary experiences.

The Gudgell Park History Class has found more work to do. They will dramatize plays and help to furnish entertainment for the Religio hour. The class welcomes visitors at its meetings at 1515 South Dodgeon each Monday evening.

"Too many of us have been furnishing ourselves with excuses. We want to be considered Saints in good standing, and yet for some reason or other, we do not want to live up to the financial law of God—we do not want to pay our tithing—and so we furnish ourselves with fine excuses."—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "The Judgment."

Kansas City Stake

The Leadership School

The sixth Kansas City Stake Leadership School, under the direction of George Mesley, director of religious education, was held at Central Church from September 17 to 29.

A notable degree of spiritual enlightenment seemed to be present throughout the entire period and both teacher and pupil commented on the presence of the divine Spirit in the sessions. The attendance averaged 275 an evening and on the last night of the school mounted to 298. The classes began each evening at 7:45.

This year the first hour sessions were planned to school the stake teachers and leaders in the materials and methods for each department of the current quarterly. Tessie Smith, writer of the quarterly "Through Nature to God," taught the kindergarten teachers. Ruby Williamson and Mildred Goodfellow, writers of primary quarterlies taught the stake primary teachers; Hallie Gould, junior quarterly writer, and Mrs. Fred Koehler taught the junior materials and methods. George Mesley discussed the current quarterlies for intermediate, senior and young people and then presented methods that could be used to meet the discovered needs of church young people.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp had the one class of general interest for the first period. He effectively presented the need for a study of the financial law (current adult quarterly) to a large audience who gave their unanimous approval to his sincere and frank presentation of the financial program of the church.

At the second hour three classes of general interest were held. Bishop J. A. Koehler led an enthusiastic group in a study of Bible prophecy in relation to the building of the kingdom and the establishing of godly government. To his class he opened up some interesting avenues of study and thought concerning our Zionic program.

President McDowell led his class of over a hundred in an experience of revelation in the church today. Under his able teaching the whole purpose and horizon of revelation expanded from an occasional General Conference event to a vitalizing and perennial contact with Divinity.

June Whiting Lea expected a group of thirty to meet her for a practical public speaking course. When the class assembled there were over ninety to be taught. She handled them like a veteran and they were enthusiastic about the practical helpfulness of her group. Any speaker in Kansas City is now due for a more discerning audience than hitherto greeted him.

Two offerings were taken to cover the one hundred and thirty dollars expense of the school and over two hundred people will receive credits towards their teacher's certificate.

The class work will continue for two ten-week courses offered once a week beginning Monday, October 9. One will be a teacher training course with C. B. Woodstock instructing in "How to Teach Religion," and the concurrent course will be a continuation of Mrs. Lea's course in public speaking.

The second quarter will begin January 8, and will present specific methods course and one in the preparation and delivery of sermons taught by the stake president, C. E. Wight.

All the stake is greatly encouraged by the spirit of the school and the general spiritual uplift that seems to be pervading the entire church.

North East Church

Missionary meetings near the rive closed, Elder George Mesley preaching the concluding sermon.

With the coming of August and September rains the gardens yielded abundantly, and the sisters of this district by their canning activities, have made it possible for many to have good things to eat this winter. North East Church had a beautiful display recently when seven hundred and thirty-four quarts of fruit were seen on the platform. Th helpfulness and generosity of the women who put up these good things are deeply appreciated.

Sunday night, September 24, Elder Garland Tickmyer preached his first sermon, and his effort was good. Sister Ona Comer gave a beautiful selection on the violin. She received second prize at the Missouri State Fair and has a promising musical future before her.

Sister Mary Zuber underwent sore trial the morning of September 24, when her sixteen-year-old son was killed, her husband badly hurt, and her nephew was sent to the hospital dangerously injured. A car struck the wagon in which they were riding and turned it over.

Elder Harry Sevy preached the evening of October 1.

Quindaro Church

The week of October 1 to 8, was set aside in this congregation as rally week. The usual Sunday school hour was given over to promotion day exercises. Several in the school received promotion to new work and teachers.

Quindaro Saints felt greatly blessed that morning in having with them as their speaker President Frederick M. Smith who brought a wonderful message and a deeper appreciation of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The church was filled to capacity, and borrowed chairs were placed in the aisles to seat everyone. After the morning preaching service a baptismal ceremony was carried out by Pastor H. A. Higgins. Earl Graham was baptized. He is the last member of his family to accept the gospel.

Sacrament service was held in the afternoon from two-thirty to four-thirty. A good degree of the Holy Spirit was present, and the gospel gifts were experienced.

A banquet was held Monday night for the workers of the branch. All officers and teachers were there and Elder nd Sister C. B. Woodstock and Elder and Sister George Mesley were guests.

Tuesday night was junior night, and the junior department furnished the program. Rally week prayer service was held Wednesday night, with good attendance. Thursday night the seniors were in charge and gave the program. Friday was social night.

The work of the Master is growing in this congregation both numerically and spiritually.

Far West Stake

The young people are looking forward to the O. T. Z. rally, to be held at Cameron, October 28 and 29. The quarterly rallies have come to mean much in the lives of the young people of the stake as times when they may gain spiritual strength as well as enjoy the fellowship of each other.

Within the next month President F. M. McDowell expects to spent about six days in the stake in company with Elder Ward A. Hougas. During this time they will cover the entire stake especially stressing priesthood work. However, general meetings will be held at Cameron on October 22, at Maple Grove on October 24, at Guilford, November 3, and at First and Second Saint Joseph churches on November 5.

King City Mission

The few families of Saints living in and near King City are showing signs of progress. Regular meetings are being held on Sunday afternoons and some nonmembers are being interested. Their numbers have also been augmented by a few new members who have recently moved in.

Elder F. L. Hinderks, member of the stake presidency, was with the group on September 10, and preached for them. On the following Sunday afternoon, Elder O. Salisbury began a series of missionary sermons. On the three afternoons that these services have been held, attendance has been good with about eight nonmembers present each week. On October 1, a few Guilford Saints joined them to help in the service. Good reports are being heard from the nonmembers and this faithful little band of Saints hopes to be able to do much good.

Bedison Branch

On September 17, Stake President Ward A. Hougas and Elder J. E. Hovenga visited Bedison Branch. Elder Hovenga was the speaker in the morning and Elder Hougas occupied in the afternoon. The congregation enjoyed a basket dinner at noon as well as the opportunity of visiting together. In the afternoon a few Saints from Guilford came over and brought Bishop Burnett who had been their speaker in the morning.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Guilford Branch

Guilford Saints are looking forward to their annual home-coming celebration which will take place October 15. Each year they celebrate the anniversary of the dedication of their church. They are expecting Patriarch U. W. Greene to be with them on that day as well as for several days preceding. Many are desirous of having their blessings.

Bishop Milo Burnett was a welcome visitor at Guilford on September 17, at which time he spoke to the Saints.

Fortescue Branch

A splendid day was enjoyed at Fortescue on September 24. Bishop Milo Burnett spent the day there and spoke at the morning hour. The Ross Grove Branch joined Fortescue Saints for the day's activities. Following the morning service, Elder I. M. Ross, pastor of both branches, baptized four candidates in Big Lake after which the entire congregation met at a home nearby where the confirmation took place. The Saints then gathered at Brother Easter's home on the east side of the lake for a basket dinner.

Saint Joseph Branch

October 1, was a beautiful Sunday and the Saints from all four churches in the city were in attendance at the quarterly amalgamated sacrament service held at First Church. In addition to the ordinance of the Lord's Supper the beautiful ordinance of the blessing of babies was witnessed by the large congregation. Bishop Milo Burnett and Elder Ward A. Hougas blessed the son of Warren and Mabel Hill and the daughter of Richard and Florence Mason.

A specially called business meeting of the branch was held at First Church in the afternoon for the purpose of considering a recommendation for the ordination of Brother Herman Johnson to the office of deacon. Brother Johnson was called at the young people's convention in June together with two other young men in the stake. They will be ordained at the closing service of the young people's rally at Cameron, October 29.

First Church

The days since the stake reunion have been busy ones at First Church. All fall activities are getting in full swing with prospects for a full and profitable season.

The young people's visiting campaign is under way and has shown some pleasing results. The young people made this campaign the subject of their early morning prayer service on September 10, and met that afternoon for final arrangements. Pastor Ward A. Hougas explained the purpose and gave a few instructions on carrying out the campaign. It is intended that every home in First Church shall be called upon by the young people. The priesthood will follow up these efforts. The work is in its infancy yet, but reports show that the young people themselves as well as those visited are gaining much from their visits. One night each week is devoted to this work.

Promotion Day was observed September 24, with short exercises by the Children's Division and the giving of promotion certificates. The children also had a farewell service in their own room for the class that was promoted into the intermediate department. Teachers were elected in the adult and young people's divisions and supervisors for the year were announced as follows: Adult division, Mrs. John Ruoff; young people's division, Elder H. C. Timm and children's division, Mrs. Emma Beadnell. And so the church school commenced another year in its important work.

The Ul-Lik-Us Players held their annual election September 28, in connection with a wiener roast at Wyeth Park. Mrs. Olive McLean was sustained as director and an efficient group of officers was elected to direct the affairs of the club for the coming year.

Each week the choir has been rehearsing diligently on the harvest festival music as well as rendering its usual service on Sundays. Paul N. Craig conducted a special rehearsal on Friday night, September 29, and intensive work was done. A good number were present in Independence for the general rehearsal Sunday afternoon, October 1.

On Tuesday, October 3, the O. T. Z.'s had a wiener roast at which time officers were elected for the coming year. Lawrence Keck was reelected president; Alma Hale was elected vice president, and June Ruoff, secretary-treasurer.

"A Trip Around the World," was sponsored by the Anti-Can't Class Friday, October 6, for the benefit of local funds. Foreign countries as well as our own land were visited with entertainment and refreshments in each.

Among recent Sunday speakers was Elder David Gamet, of Cameron. Pastor Ward A. Hougas has been the speaker on three Sunday nights and Elder H. C. Timm, associate pastor, has preached several times. The Wednesday evening prayer services continue with good interest. Some splendid themes have been carried out recently. One elder is in charge each week, assisted by a priest or deacon who gives the theme talk.

"The attempt to build a Zion must be made on the basis of selectivity, and that from here and elsewhere throughout the branches of the church, there shall be selected those to build, who will do so regardless of cost to themselves."—G. L. DeLapp, in a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence.

Autumn

A HAZE on the far horizon,
The infinite, tender sky,
The ripe, rich tint of the cornfields,
And the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland
The charm of the goldenrod;
Some of us call it Autumn,
And others call it God.

■ "Too many people," says Brother C. L. Munro, "suffer from prayer meeting lock-jaw and Sunday rheumatism!"

■ Telephone Manners and Voice

In this age when everyone uses a telephone it is not unusual that we hear some remark which, stated in brief, leads to a single thought—Courtesy still pays even over the telephone!

If the young wants-very-much-to-be secretary is as smart as she is pretty, she knows that a surly speech over the telephone gets one nowhere; that slang and repeated "What's" and "Yeah's" make abominably poor impressions upon the caller. She also knows that a pleasant "Good morning," and the use of "Please" and "Thank you," bring business to her firm.

And there's another thing — the telephone voice. Once I remarked to a young man about the pleasant telephone voice he had. "Oh, it's a part of my company's business," he quickly returned, "to see that all of its employees sound friendly and pleasant over the telephone. It's just good business psychology." Would—oh, would, that there were more companies like that!

■ A John Sheehy Story

Once before the United States entered the World War, I visited the British Province of Nova Scotia, Canada, stopping at the town of Amherst. One afternoon while taking a stroll I came to the German Prisoners' Internment Camp.

To this camp had been committed all the German civilians, sea captains, and all others of German blood who could be found in the Dominion of Canada. They were to be kept in confinement until the war was over.

Sometimes I think those were the most fortunate German prisoners during the war, and I think they knew it, too, for not one of them tried to escape.

This was the camp's method of preventing their escape. The entire camp, a big area, was surrounded by a high board fence along which were stationed at close intervals, in a tower, soldier sentinels. These soldiers were instructed to shoot anyone who tried to get over the fence. The sentries were changed frequently and were alert fellows. Just inside the fence was a barbwire entanglement through which I know the camp authorities never intended a man to pass. It was a barbwire entanglement. I don't believe even a small bird could have gotten through without losing some of its feathers. The entanglement was about six feet wide.

Inside this a white line was painted on the ground, "the Death Line." Anyone who put his foot on that line the soldiers had been instructed to shoot and to shoot to kill. It was more than a danger line—it was a death line. All the prisoners knew that if they wanted to die, all they had to do was to put their foot on the line and a soldier would help them. But no one stepped on the line.

Keep this line in mind. When you find that you are interested in everything on earth but your church, you are walking a little too close to this death line of spiritual life.

The World Outlook

The Christian View Those who look to the world to work out some practical application of the principles of Christ as a solution of its problems are subjected to a dismal feeling that progress, if there is such a thing, is very slow. Humanity appears unwilling to learn, even by the things that it suffers.

Armament and World Peace For one thing there is the question of armament. Nations arm upon the theory that the worst of all possible threats is the danger of invasion. Another and possibly greater danger now faces them in the nearness of bankruptcy which may result from the race for supremacy in arms. They are groaning and staggering under their loads. Though all have a surfeit of platitudes for conferences and banquets, no nation is willing to drop out of the race as long as there is credit enough to keep it in.

False Security No doubt the demand for security which is the primary reason for arming is a legitimate one. But long ago it was written, "He who lives by the sword shall die by the sword." Nations, too, have perished for using the sword too freely, if only to rattle it. Armaments have put the world in greater jeopardy than ever before. There are too many guns; we are in danger of getting shot. Something else is needed to protect us. Weapons are not enough. They cost more than any of us can afford to pay. Armaments do not make security, necessarily. The munition maker takes as great a tribute as the invader.

Dangers As long as there is danger, there will be a demand for armament. France was criticized for continuing to arm against a prostrate Germany. She was accused of making the demand for security a cloak for her expanding militarism. Perhaps there was some justice in the criticisms, but France saw farther than her critics, probably as far as the advent of the belligerent Herr Hitler. The critics, for the time, are silenced. The reiterated demands of France for security are now echoed by other nations.

New Security Needed What the world needs now is new strength to Geneva and the Hague, treaties that will not be scorned as "scraps of paper," agreements that will be respected. Law and order are as necessary in international relations as in national government. Brute force, the tyranny of gun and club, will never give us real and lasting security.

Meeting the Test

Declarations of Faith We have all heard people, in moments of religious exaltation, rise in prayer meetings to make affirmations of faith in the strongest possible language. Typical statements were: "This work means more to me than anything else in the world," and "I would rather die than prove untrue to the gospel." But later, in a huff over some trivial incident, these very people would leave the church taking their families with them. It shows the difference between faith and works. The most spectacular testimonies do not always go with the greatest devotion.

The Test of Works The church has experienced a revival of spiritual blessings within the last year that has been more than sufficient to bear it up through many trials and hardships. Everywhere, marked gratitude for these blessings has been expressed. At the same time, when the church must meet its financial obligations, there has been a falling off in the volume of contributions. Undoubtedly this is only a reflection of the financial straits through which the membership are passing. But we are facing the practical test of our faith. Do we love the gospel and the church enough to support them? Does our faith reach as deep as our pocketbooks?

"Keep the Law" The officers of the church believe that all financial problems will be on the way to a solution if the membership will observe the slogan, "Keep the Law." If our tithing were paid as it ought to be, the church could be out of debt, and sending large numbers of missionaries all over the world. It is the unpaid debts to the Lord that bind the hands of His servants. Upon the people within the church rests the responsibility of retarding the gospel.

Looking to the Future "If I had only paid my tithing when I had the money," some say. "But now my money is lost." And money that should have gone to the church was lost while wrongly withheld. Now the church suffers.

But let us not spend time in vain regret. Let us determine rather that in the future we shall "Keep the Law" and pay our just debts to the church and to the Lord.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

Brother C. A. Edstrom was recently elected president of the Northeastern Illinois District. Vice President Roscoe Davey on August 1, wrote saying that he had nothing in particular to report, but thinking we might like to hear from him, proceeded to tell us some interesting things. We are always glad to hear from our district presidents, whether they have "particulars to report" or otherwise. We like to know what their personal and official attitude is, and the "human interest" factors entering into colaboration may be brought to the fore in profitable as well as interesting ways. Here, for example, is a comment on how Brother Edstrom feels about the matter of keeping busy. Those acquainted with him know him to be continuously active. He says:

"I have tried to be busy with the work of the church since my return to Chicago. One thing I learned early in my church experience is this. If I hope to remain in the church and enjoy a measure of God's Spirit, I must work. To work is to live and grow spiritually; to stop working is to die spiritually and eventually turn away from the church. I have no intention of so doing—a very good reason for keeping everlastingly at the job of working in the church."

That he has learned by experience others have gathered, and may easily do so at any time, by observation. His comment on the need for and wisdom of keeping busy is but a variation of the old-time comment about idle brains and hands being likely to connect with mischief. So we are glad he is still determined to keep everlastingly at work. Let others take note.

In regard to the work he has in mind for the district, he lays down a rather broad yet logical program when he says:

"Since the district selected me to act as district president in the stead of Brother Davey, I have been thinking about our problems day and night. One thing I am conscious of is that a great deal of work needs to be done in the ranks of both priesthood and membership. I propose to begin with the priesthood, and follow this effort into the membership of the district. What I propose to do will be covered by my report to the district conference which convenes this fall. A copy of this report will reach you within the next two weeks. I hope that what my report reveals to you may encourage you."

We sincerely hope the members of the priesthood of the district will all follow his lead. The priests (all grades) once awake and active, we may confidently expect to see the membership growing in grace and good works.

We shall await receipt of copy of the report with interest.

Brother Edstrom has been working in connection with relief work. Of this and his experiences he makes comment which indicates that he has seen what most social workers have; and doubtless he sees now more clearly than ever the beauties of our own social philosophy and program which looks towards the great goal of making every member of our order a happy workman not only supporting himself and family but earnestly expecting to be cheerful and ever contribute to the common weal. But here is what he says:

"My experiences with the relief service here in Chicago has been interesting in many ways though at times it has made me sick at heart. I have seen men from all walks of life who have been touched by this demon 'Selfishness.' Some have risen to new heights of appreciation, others have sunk to lower levels of selfishness and greed. Some have found God, others have lost what faith and hope they did have. After having passed through this experience, I can appreciate more fully what the gospel should mean to us. It is indeed an anchor in a stormy sea. The things which are worth while and lasting are of God; the things which today are and tomorrow are not, are material and soon vanish."

At the close of his letter Brother Edstrom expresses a wish and a prayer in which I heartily join him. He says:

"May God bless you with great wisdom and spiritual vision to lead this people out of the wilderness of vanishing things into the green meadows of God's goodness, is my prayer." F. M. S.

The Biographer

You cannot write about a great man in the cool, dispassionate manner of the average scholar. You have got to have a love affair, not just a marriage, with the person you are describing. You have got to be with him constantly; you must have him in your thoughts all the time. Without a little passionate, furious made relationship to your subject you will not be able to make him live in your writings.

The professors dislike me because of my method. They cannot excuse my habit of beginning with a vision of my man and then getting my sources and historical details. And people do not seem to understand that I cannot pick any name and write a life without feeling some deep, profound interest in the subject.—Emil Ludwig.

The Fruits of Keeping the Law

During the present year, when conditions have been more severe than heretofore, we have at times gained new heart by studying the results for the year 1932. Considering the circumstances of that year, the church may well be happy at the favorable outcome, which at once indicate both the reward for sacrifices made, and the fruit of law keeping. Here are the facts:

1. During 1932 the total debt of the church was reduced $113,273.92
2. Expenses were kept lower than income by 7,712.32
3. Actual expenses were less than budget appropriations by 11,834.38

Since income exceeded expenses by only $7,712.32, how were $113,273.92 of debts paid? This was done by trading properties owned for notes payable, bonds, or other obligations owed by the church; in some instances properties were surrendered to mortgagors in exchange for a full satisfaction of the mortgage. These transactions were just as significant as if made with real money, inasmuch as the debts are definitely behind us, and an annual interest saving of approximately $6,700 has been effected.

Keeping the expenses below income in the amount of $7,712.32, and actual expenses below budget appropriations by $11,834.38, in considerable degree were made possible by the willing cooperation of executives and ministry. They not only helped to save, but also to place the needs of the church before the people. When one realizes the restrictions these workers face in the performance of their tasks, because of the shortage of funds, the results are all the more appreciated.

When we write that for the first eight months of 1933 income was less than expenses by approximately $18,000, it will be understood why we turn to 1932 for comfort.

Strangely enough, if we speak strongly about the deficit, some draw the entirely unwarranted conclusion that "the bishops think the church is going on the rocks." If we fail to speak plainly, others say they would have helped had they been aware of the need. So we are speaking plainly, as we have tried to do hitherto.

It is because we believe the church is going on to the successful completion of the tasks before us that we have set aside the period November 12 to December 3 for the teaching of the temporal law. If we thought failure impended we could neither take the time to teach the law nor have the temerity to ask you to obey it.

There is a large debt still to be paid, and to avoid adding to it, we must absorb the existing deficit. It seems impossible to reduce our expenses much further, hence the solution lies in the fruit of general obedience to the law. If each of us will keep the law, there will be no deficit.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By L. F. P. CURRY.

The Christmas Offering

By C. B. Woodstock

What will be the amount of our Christmas Offering in 1933? Last year, in a hard year of depression, it was well over twenty-three thousand dollars —$23,102.81, to be exact. That was a splendid sum to present to our Master as a gift of love.

It is true that money has been scarce during the present year, but we are all learning a very much needed lesson. We are learning to live more frugally, to spend what money we have with far more care and consideration. Many members of the church are realizing their need of keeping a more careful record of their income and their expenditures. If they are to be managers in their partnership with God they must do a better job of accounting.

We are just entering upon a period designated by the authorities of the church as a "Keep the Law" period. In addition to a faithful keeping of the law which prescribes one tenth of one's increase it is urged that each one make such special offerings as may be consistent with his love and his power to give.

The Christmas Offering is distinctly a love offering. Our love of God, our appreciation of the Savior, and our desire for the progress of the cause of righteousness is perennial. It lasts throughout the year. Our "Christmas Offering" is brought weekly or monthly as a continual expression of our love and appreciation.

Notwithstanding the fact that the financial depression is still with us, the final total of our Christmas Offering in 1933 may easily equal or exceed the offering of last year. The needs of the Lord's work are even more crucial, and surely our love and our zeal have not lessened.

In the three months before us let us each make such offerings as are possible in the spirit in which the Christ came to earth. We shall rejoice in the gift, we shall attain spiritual growth and the Cause of Christ shall be advanced.

On Freedom From Debts

THE REFRAIN of our national anthem reads:

"Oh, say, does that Star-spangled banner yet wave, O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave?"

If I were to attempt to answer that question—now don't be too surprised—I should utter a loud NO. We aren't free. We're (too many of us) anything but free—from DEBT.

Two boys left our town recently to seek their fortunes in greener pastures. Both were well liked, popular, and friendly. Both were sons of good, honest families. But what a different feeling they left behind them.

Bob Crandall drove his asthmatic old Ford out upon the highway, leaving the coast clear behind him. He owed not a cent in the world. The hometown people hope to see him back soon. Bob will make a reliable, dependable citizen.

But when Harold Webster's almost brand-new car followed Bob's a day or two later, even his best friends did not know how many people had extended credit to him, how many debts he owed. The car itself was not nearly paid for (he had traded his old one in on it, the second trade of this kind in three years). At almost every filling station he owed for gasoline, oil, and minor repairs. He was in debt for the clothes he wore. His board and room bill had not been paid for months. He had borrowed from almost everyone who knew him, promising to pay "next week." Needless to add, all his creditors would like to see him, but not for the same reason the people of Harrisville want to see Bob Crandall.

Once upon a time not so very long ago, a speaker who was addressing a boys' school in the East, laid down some rules to guide not only students in preparatory schools, but young people in getting ready for life. And guess what the first, the very first, rule was. Oh, couldn't you? Then let me quote—

"1. Pay your bills. Live within your allowance, and when you begin to earn money, live within your income. Perhaps it is easy for many of you young men to get credit, but don't do it. Go without until you pay."

Debts, whether they are paid or unpaid, are not little things. Christ thought them important enough to mention in the prayer he taught his disciples. If you are interested in what he has to say about them, read Matthew 6: 12.

All of us are familiar with such advertising slogans and propaganda as, "Pay as you go," and, "Cash and carry." The only trouble is that we haven't. The only one who has done any carrying is the grocer who frowns over his yellow book—he knows there hasn't been much cash connected with it.

"Isn't it odd?" muses a secretary who knows, "how so many times the people you least expect to pay their debts, do it, and how on the other hand, people of position and reputation, don't. Why more often than not, they don't make any attempt to explain why they don't pay their debts—and yet they wear better clothes, they have nicer homes, they drive newer cars than I can."

And the young wife of a business man in our town (both Latter Day Saints) spoke to me along the same line. We were sitting in a large group of people (they also were Latter Day Saints), when she turned to me, her eyes flashing: "I don't enjoy being here. I can't help thinking as I look at these people how many of them owe us money and how badly we need it. Look at their smug, long-faced piety! It just makes me boil!"

The land of the free? You answer the question.

As for me, perhaps I'm old-fashioned, but I dislike debts. I don't like to wear clothes that fray out at the cuffs before they are paid for. I should question my business methods if I had to dodge around the block to miss anyone to whom I owed money. To me debts are blots on the landscape of my reputation; they humiliate and enslave me. Whenever it is humanly possible I hope always to pay my debts, be they debts to the Lord, to society, to the grocer and milkman, or even to myself. I want to be free.

The Servant of Things

A Man wanted a House. He could not pay Cash for it, so he mortgaged his Future, and agreed to pay for it with Money he did not yet possess. So he became the Servant of the House.

Then he wanted a Radio. The Money for it was not convenient, and he agreed to buy it with Easy Payments. And so he became the Servant of the Radio.

One day his pants wore out. His funds were low, and on the purchase of a new Suit he obtained Dignified Credit.

Thus with many other Things. One day, figuring idly with a Pencil, he computed that if he paid all his Installments, he would have barely enough left to live on Bread and Water. The shades of his many Purchases rose up to haunt him. He perceived that they were his Masters, and that he was a poor groveling Servant of Things. He was so unhappy he committed Suicide.

A beggar, going by, saw him dying.

"Better to have nothing, and own it," he said, "than to possess everything, and owe for it."

Just Singing

By Alma M. Coombs

I've tried a hundred different ways,
To ward off care and sorrow;
And oft so many things affright,
I care not for the morrow.
But now, at last, from out the past,
I've learned to send cares winging;
I've found a way, an easy way,
Just singing, singing, singing.

Where is the man who cannot sing?
Where is the wretched mortal?
He's surely doomed to lower realms,
Far from the shining portal.
For men must sing, as well as eat,
And while to life they're clinging;
They'll live, who learn to kill dull care,
By singing, singing, singing.

Sing of the deeds of warriors bold,
Sing of your lady charming;
Sing of the oceans mighty roar,
And thunder so alarming.
Just sing a song, sing all day long,
And with the echos ringing;
This sad old earth will find its mirth,
Through singing, singing, singing.

A Prayer

By Frank Carter

O God, help me to be strong
As the rocks, and faithful;
Faithful as the trees
That guarded my Master
On Gethsemane's lonely hill.
And sound as the oak;
And like the poplar may I be proud
To lift my arms
To show nothing is hidden.
May my patience be the patience
Of the hills, and like the hills
May I rest.
I would be happy as the laughing brook,
And kind like the breeze
That ruffles the summer lake.
Grant this in the name
Of Him in Whom alone
I find solace.

The Urn in the City Beautiful

A Service to Culminate Our "Keep the Law" Period

By C. G. MESLEY

ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SERVICES conducted by the O. B. K.'s of Kansas City is their annual inventory-offering service. As a direct result of the month's effort that preceded each of these carefully planned services, over two hundred young people have filed their inventories.

The majority of those who participated in these services are continuing to keep the law by paying the tithing due and by making an offering. In addition to the regular service printed in the Herald, this one may be used. It gains the same spiritual result by having all the people come up to the altar with their gift of inventory, tithe or offering, but it uses a different story setting which is especially effective.

Prelude

THE STORY
(To be read)

ONCE, so an old story goes, there was a city called Beautiful. It was the master city of the world. Through it flowed a river—a life-giving river, named the river of Love. It watered the fertile valley and bore ships with cargoes from other lands. By its sweet water the city was cleansed and the inhabitants refreshed. It furnished fountains around which the children played. Youths and maidens wooed and age rested. Its banks were alternations of grassy slope with many colored flowers and verdant trees and busy markets with ships and wharves and stores. Its placid spots reflected the blue sky and brown hills far away.

Early in the morning when the sun kissed the hills and glittered from the towers and minarets, the men went out to work in the valley, and when shadows were long they returned bearing the fruit of their toil. At the gate through which all passed, for it was a walled city, stood an urn with the inscription: "FROM EACH ACCORDING TO HIS ABILITY, UNTO EACH ACCORDING TO HIS NEED." Into this every man deposited liberally of his earnings, sayings, "This I do for the common good," and the river of Love flowed through the city, the master city of the world.

Then change came, silent and unobserved. The river flowed as before, reflecting the blue sky and the brown hills. The children played no less happily, the youths and maidens courted with uncooled ardor and the peaceful rest of age was undisturbed. The fields yielded their accustomed fruits. But, when the men returned from their labors each walked on that side of the gate opposite the urn and with averted eyes, hugging his earnings to his bosom and saying, "This is mine, with my own hands I earned it—this is mine."

Gradually the fountains became clogged. The river ran murky and black. Death lurked in its water. The happy laugh of the children was gone. Youths and maidens no longer lingered at the fountain and age paused not at its vacant seats. Man looked at his neighbor with a suspicious eye and there were those who cried out against the doings of the Almighty.

Today the city is forgotten. Its altars are broken. Its temples have fallen in ruins. Its homes have crumbled to dust. The valley is a desert of restless sand, inhabited by the serpent, the jackal, the owl. The river has long ago disappeared but the place where it once was is called "The Valley of the Shriveled Hearts."

The offering: All the congregation file by the urn to deposit their gifts of inventories, tithes and offerings, each according to his ability, unto each according to his need.

An urn for this service may be borrowed from some local florist or from a friend's garden. If possible it should be large and beautiful. Mount it on a special dais near the platform so that the people can pass by to deposit their gifts. Where a porcelain urn is not available one of concrete may be used.

The setting for the service may be beautified with ferns and indoor plants borrowed for the occasion.

BOOK REVIEW

For Every Boy

GROWING INTO MANHOOD, by Roy E. Dickerson. Association Press, New York, 1933. Cloth, 100 pages, $1.00.

A good, constructive and informative book, wholesome all the way through; it contains just such information as the growing boy needs to help him establish a philosophy of social life that will protect him from many dangers and temptations.

The boy of twelve to sixteen years is exposed to all sorts of misinformation from youthful companions, and the inciting suggestiveness of the movies. This book will tend to counteract all that by giving reliable information with the right implications and emphasis.

A great advantage in this book is the fact that it does not make lurid capital of vice, nor arouse horrors unnecessarily about disease; it rather lays out a constructively wholesome program of clean living, activities, and habits, and makes an attractive picture of the possibilities of the better life. It is not, however, a series of sermons thrown at the boys; it is something written from their viewpoint, in language they can understand. It can be put in their hands safely.

The mark of the Association Press gives additional assurance as to the merit and quality of this work, if any assurance is needed. The name of the author is guaranty enough.

NEWS BRIEFS

Sacred Ordinance Takes Prominent Place in Caseville Meeting

The ordinance of laying on of hands was used for four different purposes at a special afternoon service, October 1, at Caseville, Michigan. Two women were confirmed members of the church by the laying on of hands, a baby was blessed, several persons were administered to, and a man was ordained to the office of elder.

This service marked the high point of experience for Saints of that district who were enjoying an old-fashioned two-day meeting at Caseville.

Sister Edith Lewis to Supervise Women of Australia

Sister Edith Lewis, wife of Apostle G. G. Lewis, has been officially appointed supervisor of women's group activities in the Australasian Mission, according to The Gospel Standard (Rozelle, New South Wales). Before her departure for Australia in August, 1932, Sister Lewis was in charge of the women's work in Independence, Missouri, and she takes to the women of Australia first-hand knowledge of the women's activities in America.

Washington, D. C., Members Are Meeting Regularly

Forty members of the church now live in or near Washington, D. C., and meet regularly each Sunday in a lodge hall. With a view to growth and progress they are adding equipment to their church school for nursery and kindergarten work. The young people are organized for the winter under the leadership of Ralph Hardy. To Elder and Mrs. William Froyd, of Arlington, Virginia, goes much of the credit for the growing interest of the Saints at our nation's capital.

First Pastor Is Speaker at Fresno Home-coming

Fresno, California, Branch held rally day and home-coming services September 24, and Elder J. B. Carmichael, first pastor of the branch, was the speaker. Fifteen Baptized in Deer Grove Community

Elder E. R. Davis closed a two-week series of missionary meetings in the vicinity of Deer Grove, Illinois, October 8, baptizing four. This makes a total of fifteen baptized in that community since the opening of the work there in June, 1931. All meetings have been held in the homes of the people, most of them in the large farmhouse of Brother and Sister L. E. Burgess. As many as eighty-five have attended Sunday services, and the average attendance for the fifteen meetings just held, was thirty-eight.

Since the opening of the latter-day work at Deer Grove, C. A. Beil, president of Clinton Branch, Iowa, has helped by holding one meeting a month. He baptized six there last summer. Last September Brother Davis held two weeks of meetings and baptized five.

The Stewardship of Wealth

By L. S. Wight

DURING THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN of 1932 I heard a young Chicago attorney, candidate for one of the lesser state offices in Illinois, tell a very interesting story. He had been invited to address a group of leading business men in an exclusive club. On that day he had been held in court until so late that it was necessary for him to go immediately from work to the dinner. Arriving by taxi dressed only in his business suit, he ran into trouble getting admittance, even though he was the speaker. He had to get identification from inside before he did get in. At the dinner he was the only one not in a dress suit and he felt somewhat out of place, talking to those czars of industry, not only because of his suit but because he told them directly and frankly that too much of their supposed wealth had been built on an unsound speculative basis.

During the time which had elapsed between this event and the evening on which he told the story many changes had taken place. Many of these men had been stripped of their power. At least three of them had dropped or conveniently fallen from high windows. One was a fugitive from justice. Their crumbling financial empires had shown them up after all as only ordinary men. He told this story to show that men in high places are subject to natural laws the same as the rest of us. He also emphasized that the only safe basis on which to build our temporal work is the old-fashioned one of thrift and economy which does not countenance unwise speculation. The tragic point of this story has been demonstrated in many communities since the financial crash of 1929. We are all more or less familiar with instances of the same kind. Many men have failed in their stewardship of wealth. These events have consistently proved that the wrong attitude toward wealth of material possessions brings disaster eventually.

TO LATTER DAY SAINTS these events should serve as guides to help us see and appreciate the beauty of the plan given to us so long ago. It is a plan of Zion building which will give us real security; a plan which gives each individual, no matter what his work, a chance to enjoy the "fullness" of life; a plan which recognizes that material things have but one purpose, that is that they be used as the means of developing spirituality not only in the possessor of the wealth but in those with whom he comes in contact.

What then should be our attitude as Latter Day Saints toward material wealth? To determine this is extremely important in the life of each individual. This attitude will directly control the stewardship of our material wealth. If we are to make the most of our stewardship of the things we possess it is necessary to have a clear understanding of how to use them. If we can develop the correct attitude in the minds of enough people we can build our Zionic communities. Therefore, it behooves us to develop a full understanding of how best to use our wealth of material things.

As naturally as a child in trouble turns to his mother we can look to Christ to show us just what our attitude should be. We should not forget that when He was on earth He met the same type of problem that is ours today. The details may have been different and if there was any difference in the problems it was in degree. In fact, the problems of the people to whom he ministered were even more severe than are ours today. He saw people whose faces showed deep lines of worry; people who were forced to pay the Roman tax gatherers a tribute that left too little for their own needs; people whose political situation was such that each individual for self protection, was forced to hold on to what he could accumulate; people who were dominated by a fear much deeper than we need have.

It was under such conditions as these that he found ways to illustrate the basic truths of life. He talked their own language. His parables were always based on events and situations with which they were familiar. Two such incidents will serve very well, I believe, to give us a clear picture of what Christ said should be our attitude toward material wealth. I refer to the story in Matthew 19 of the young man who said that he wanted eternal life, and to the parable of the talents as found in Matthew 25.

IN ANSWER to the rich young man's question, "What shall I do to be saved?" Christ said, "Sell that thou hast and give to the poor. Come follow me." This was too much for the young man whose thoughts were all based on keeping his great possessions. It was too big a price to pay for promise of an unknown future life. He went away sorrowful that he could not afford to pay the high priced "dues" for something he wanted. He preferred to keep what he already had. Christ's answer to this rich young man has often been used to prove that possession of wealth is a sin. But before accepting that basis let us turn to the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew and see what he said about wealth under different circumstances.

In this instance he says plainly that the kingdom of heaven is like the case of the master who gave talents to his three servants. To one he gave five, to the second two, and to the third only one. This is hardly a satisfactory reference for the man who would define equality as each having an equal amount of any given thing. The next step was the use of these talents. The servants were instructed to put them to work, and what happened? The first two followed instructions with the result that at the time of accounting they each had twice as much as when the master had given out the talents. The third servant failed to do as he was told. His excuse was that he was afraid to take any risk with his talent so he hid it. However, his alibi didn't work. The master informed him that he had been unfaithful, therefore he must turn over his unused talent to the first servant who by this time had ten talents.

The score in talents when the three servants started to work was 5-2-1. The score after the accounting was 11-4-0. Yet Christ says such is the kingdom of heaven. At the same time we see he said that the possession of wealth as in the case of the rich young man would make it almost impossible for such an one to get into the kingdom of heaven. The young inquiring mind would probably say, "That doesn't make sense. I want an answer that I can understand." And unless we know what Christ had in mind these answers do not make sense. Then what did Christ mean? Was he inconsistent with himself? Let's analyze these situations and see if we can get a basis for sound, rational thinking on the problem of attitude toward material wealth.

IN THE CASE of the rich young man let us see what his life experience had been. We may safely assume that he was a good citizen. He had been well trained in the standards of his day. When he first approached Christ he apparently came with clean hands and a record of having done all those things which he had been taught were necessary to maintain these standards. Jesus brought this information out of him when he first said, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." To this general statement the young man asked, "Which?" Jesus answered by repeating some of the "Thou shalt not" rules which were the accepted rules of behavior at that time. They were the rules of the Mosaic law still in force but without the additional rules of life which Christ was then trying to put into the minds of the people. He was not trying to destroy these rules. He was simply showing what should be added to them, in order to insure a full understanding of the way to enjoy a "fullness" of life development during our life on this earth.

As Christ repeated these accepted rules, the young man was able to say he had recognized them already. As Jesus reminded him that he should not kill, commit adultery, steal nor bear false witness, also that he should honor his father and mother, as well as to love his neighbor as himself he simply answered by saying that he had kept all these rules from his youth up. Evidently he had concluded that if Christ was actually the Messiah, he (Christ) had some additional rules to give to the people. When he asked Jesus, "What lack I yet?" he was simply asking for those other rules. He was in no way prepared for the answer which came when Jesus plainly said, "If thou will be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come follow me." The shock of this suggestion was too much. He could not see why he should need to give up the things which he had either inherited or created. The keeping of these things was the dominating thought of his life. His whole life had been spent with the thought in mind of adding to his possessions. To him they were the measure of his power and he found it impossible to suddenly give up that with which he was familiar for something that was only a promise. He concluded that the price was too high. Therefore he did not want what Christ promised sufficiently to pay such a price.

Jesus did give him a hard problem to answer. And the same problem even today would probably get the same answer in many instances. Human nature basically is still the same as it was when Christ talked to this rich young man. But did he mean that the mere having or possession of material wealth would make it impossible for the owner to enjoy eternal life? Before deciding on the answer let us review the story of the talents. Perhaps we can put the two together and discover that Christ meant exactly the same thing in each instance.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS treats with a different type of man than the young rich one. Christ says the kingdom of heaven is like the story of the master who going to a far country left certain instructions with three servants. We can safely assume, I believe, that these servants were like most of us today who must work for our bread and butter. They accepted instructions from the Master as an opportunity to (Continued on page 1329)

The Royal Road

John Hampton Finds the Royal Road

THE HOME of Eldred Hampton stands only a short distrance from the Kansas City-Independence street car line, on the corner of Public and Dew Streets, a corner that hundreds of people pass daily. It is not far from William Chrisman High School.

The house itself is a three-story, red brick structure patterned after the style of architecture which immediately followed the Civil War. Every city of any pretense in the Middle West boasts at least half a dozen such houses. Its tall, perpendicular walls are topped by a sharply-gabled roof of weathered slate, and on the south and east sides are almost hidden by a wealth of climbing ivy. Rounded corners, cupolas, ornamental posts and railings tend to relieve the old building of its angularity.

Sixty years ago this house was built by an ambitious merchant for his large family, but grandchildren lacking in family sentiment and timid about holding the property because of the increasing age of the edifice, gratefully sold the place to Eldred Hampton when John, her only child, was scarcely ten years of age.

It has been a bargain. Everyone said that, because the corner on which the house stood would one day be an ideal business property corner. And so Eldred, shortly after the death of her husband, invested every cent of his insurance money in the house and lot. Here she and John established their home, made increasingly comfortable and attractive by Eldred's industry. Two three-room apartments brought a neat little income when they were tenanted, and Eldred kept boarders and roomers in the rest of the house.

Here she cooked and cleaned and sewed to provide for herself and her son as he came up through the grades, through junior high school, through William Chrisman, and finally went to Graceland. John was a sober, studious boy who had never been physically well. His mother's constant fear was that he had inherited his father's weakness of the lungs. He had never been able to run and play with boys of his own age, and very early had lost himself in the world of books. During his growing years his mother had encouraged him to take long walks, to ride his bicycle, to romp with his dog. At twenty-three there was a slight sag about his shoulders, but in spite of poor health, he was a cheerful, restful chap, and a good conversationalist. People liked him; they often inquired about him and hoped that soon he would be home. They thought of him as Aunt Annie Brown, Eldred's maid of all works, expressed it: "We need sech level-headed young fellers as John Hampton, to keep the rest of the young folks straight and in hand."

ELDRED HAMPTON was a dumpy, little woman with kindly brown eyes and rapidly graying hair. Once her hair had been as brown as her eyes, but now it more nearly resembled the frost on an early October morning. She was a crafty needlewoman and kept herself tastefully and attractively clothed. It had been one of her laments that she could not make John's clothes, too, so that when the family funds were low—and she could not remember a time when they had not been low—she could present him to the world as well dressed as herself.

The Beginning of the Story

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite frankly refuses to marry Gregory Spurgeon when he asks her. In spite of the fact that she secretly loves him, she feels it is impossible for her to marry him. Among her reasons—and she has several—is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the ministry. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, widow and mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household; and who are destined in strange ways to influence Larry's life.

"Only three and a half yards from a remnant counter and a few hours work," she sometimes replied a little airly to the women who exclaimed: "Another dress, Sister Hampton! My, but you do have more clothes!"

She loved her home with its ancient beams and strong walls, its high chimneys, big attic, and many nooks. What if it did cost considerable to heat the building because of the high ceilings? She had always managed to have enough to buy the coal. She liked the distance the house stood back from the sidewalk as if modestly retiring from the inquisitive eyes of the public. The two giant elm trees and the smaller and more dainty, curly-leafed birch which grew in front of the house were friends of hers. There were spirea bushes, too, and a large bed of white and purple iris, and a trellis covered with crimson-rambler roses close to the west approach of the porch that circled half the south and west sides of the house. In the back, surrounded by a hedge of roses, trumpet vines, and a few grapes, was a garden space, where she grew carrots, turnips, radishes, and other vegetables for use on her table. John liked to work in the garden, and she encouraged him in it, for the sunshine and air were good for him.

She was a good-hearted woman, a thoughtful neighbor, and a kind landlady, sometimes too kind for her own gain. At her table she fed an average of six people each meal, three or four of whom roomed with her.

By dint of much saving from month to month and year to year, Mrs. Hampton, besides putting her son through school, had succeeded in gathering about her a few treasures which she prized highly, a large copy of George Innes's "Summer Showers," some antique brass candlesticks said to have been used in South Carolina during the War of 1812; a collection of literary masterpieces, and a comfortable wicker living room suite. But her pride and joy were in her fine linen pieces which she herself had made. Everywhere in the house her handwork was in evidence. She made beautiful things out of odds and ends that other people threw in their furnaces. She painted lampshades, refurbished pieces of old furniture, and embroidered lovely gifts for her friends.

THIS HOUSE Larry Verne called home. Eldred Hampton she had grown to consider as a friend and advisor. She often talked with her, knowing that her problems would go no further. Eldred Hampton was a woman who kept her own counsel. She despised anything that savored of gossip.

Two mornings after Larry had sent Greg home resolving never to accept a call to the priesthood if that was the wish of the girl he loved, Eldred Hampton was sitting unusually still in the big chair near the dining room window. She peered thoughtfully into the street through the geranium pots that lined the window seat. In her work-roughened hand she gripped with a tenseness which indicated the depth of her emotions, a letter finely written in ink. Tears trickled slowly down her face.

Larry had risen very early, hoping to be the first one downstairs, and, if providence smiled upon her, to wrest Mrs. Hampton away from breakfast preparations and Aunt Annie Brown's bustling presence in the kitchen. She wanted to tell her about Greg and herself, to ask her to consider the problem, to plead for a suggestion. Perhaps they could get together that evening for a good talk. She must talk to someone.

But—why—she couldn't talk about it this morning! Mrs. Hampton was crying! Something of fearful consequence must have happened to make the tears flow like that! Two impulses seized the girl, one to go forward and comfort the woman; the other to turn back, not allowing her to know that her grief had had a witness. Now was not the time to ask her about Greg and the priesthood. She would wait.

AS SHE HESITATED the age of the floor on which she stood, gave Larry away. The plank under her feet creaked dismally.

Mrs. Hampton jerked herself about. "Oh, come right on in, dear. I hope you won't mind an old woman when she weeps just a little from sheer joy."

"Joy! I was afraid it wasn't—joy! I thought something dreadful had happened; didn't know exactly what to do," Larry stammered.

"No, no. It's a letter from John. A letter I've been expecting ever since he went to Graceland, and oh, longer than that." She looked lovingly at the paper in her hand. "Yes, much longer than that," gently.

"John! Why—what does he say? Something nice?"

"That's right. Of course you'll want to know," the other seemed to snatch herself out of her own reverie. "Here I am a selfish mother just gloating away by myself. He says here he's written to Carmen about it. Just sit down and read while I see what Aunt Annie is doing with that breakfast ham I told her to put on."

Larry needed no second invitation. Eagerly she dropped down upon the window seat. Often Mrs. Hampton let her read John's letters. He was an interesting writer, but was very busy in school and seldom found time to write anyone but his mother and his sweetheart, Carmen Blaine. Larry admired John intensely, and often wished for the day when he would be home again. The girl had never had a brother of her own.

The letter in her hand began with the single word, "Dearest," and plunged right into the boy's thoughts:

"Do you remember our conversation just before I left for school this fall, and your telling me of your dream? How well I remember what you said, mother dear, and the expression on your face! Not many fellows are blessed with as wonderful and spiritual a background as you have given me in our home, and I'm just now beginning to realize the value of such a background. Our talks together have always buoyed me up; you have always kept in close touch with the flow of my thoughts.

"Many times this winter I have read that section in Doctrine and Covenants which you have always held before me, section 119 and paragraph 8. Let me quote part of it, for it leads up wonderfully well to what I have to tell you: 'All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.'

"Somehow, maybe it's because I've never been as husky as other fellows, I've been inclined to think that 'all' did not include me. I have wondered what God-given gift I had, how I could do anything to help him or anyone. Now I believe that attitude has made me slow in accepting my responsibilities.

"But, mother, I am a man. My call has come, a call to take my place in the priesthood, the thing toward which you have looked and longed and prayed. Not long ago I received a letter from Brother Cranford, the stake president, telling me that I was called to the office of Aaronic priest, and inviting me to call on him and discuss the matter. We talked for two hours. There was something so quiet, so confident about the way he spoke of my work, that, added to what you had already said, I was profoundly stirred. Then just tonight the conference of the stake voted on my name and approved it. If present plans are carried through, Brother Cranford plans for the ordination service next Sunday afternoon. How I wish you could come up, mother! Couldn't you? Couldn't you turn things over to Larry and Doc and Aunt Annie, and bring Carmen—I'm writing her tonight, too. I'd love it more than anything else in the world. Do."

John called to the priesthood!—"The thing toward which you have looked and longed and prayed!" His words beat upon Larry's consciousness like live things. He had accepted the call. He was confident and happy and humble about it! Yes, John would no doubt make a good preacher; he was studious and thoughtful of others and prayerful. But what would Carmen say? Would she be happy? One question after another rushed into the girl's mind. The rest of the letter lay unread in her lap. She wanted to laugh—she wanted to cry. Oh, the whole world was so queer! . . . Dimly as from a long way off came the sound of footsteps; they were the footsteps of Eldred Hampton and Aunt Annie as they moved about in the kitchen. The odor of cocoa and frying ham filled the house.

But quick!—she must finish the letter before any of the others came down! She gripped the sheets almost in a frenzy and read on:

"Tonight, mother, I am happy, happy in the faith of two good women in me, at the confidence the church has expressed in me, at the goodness of God. Tonight has been like a revelation to me; it explains the course of my life to this point. I am discovering new things every day. Truly life is a Royal Road, a road that I have just begun to travel, a road that promises great richness if I am able to stay on it.

"I have been reading the Doctrine and Covenants a lot recently. It is marvelous how many times the Lord tells us to labor diligently, to be up and doing, to obey him. Jim, the young Canadian fellow I told you about, knows his church history forwards and backwards. He has given me much help by supplying the historic background for the giving of the revelations I have been reading.

"And now, mother, I must write to Carmen. I wish I could be with you tonight so that we could talk. Written words sometimes fail to express just how we feel, but I know that you can guess how I feel tonight, how humble, how almost fearful of the responsibilities that are to be mine, but hopeful that I can do something to serve the Lord through the church he has restored in lat—"

"Look at the early bird!"

THE JOVIAL VOICE of Joe Dockerly fairly boomed through the quiet house. "Doc" he was to everyone who knew him. A middle-aged bachelor and business man, he had boarded with the Hamptons for so long that he seemed almost a member of the family—and some people were whispering that that was just what he wanted to be. He was a likable, adaptable sort of fellow, good at doing odd jobs about the house, and more than willing to help. With his hammer he was to be found puttering about almost every evening, adjusting a shelf, mending a screen door, or pounding nails in the attic. He was a tall, slender man whose face was singularly wrinkleless for his years, but whose hair was as white as the sunlight on a clean sidewalk at midday. He was a Latter Day Saint of long standing, but he seldom mentioned his religion. Among the several boarders that were constantly changing, Doc remained a considerable figure in the household. He was a great favorite of Aunt Annie's who frequently found occasion to observe: "Doc is the sort of a man who don't have to say nothin' about his religion, because he's always livin' it." He fitted into the life of the Hampton household like a piece into a rich old mosaic. People could not resist his cheerful, whimsical personality. Indeed they did not try.

"Where's the worm?" he demanded.

"Oh, hello, Doc. The worm? Oh—well, it's too early for the worm yet unless you know something about it." Larry felt that her come back had been a lame one.

For a moment he stood looking quizzically down at her, his hands thrust in his pockets. "Worried, eh?" he observed half to himself.

"Please, Doc—"

"Larry," Eldred's voice called from the kitchen, "if you're through with that

The Life of H. N. Hansen

The first missionary to go to Denmark from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Compiled from his own writings and other sources.

By Poul S. Nielsen

HANS NELS HANSEN was born near Storhedinge, Sjaelland, (Zealand) Denmark, as the son of Hemming Hansen and his wife Maren, the twenty-eighth of April, 1850. Like almost all of the population of that country he was baptized as a child into the Lutheran Church. While he was a lad, some of the elders from the Utah faction visited the community where he lived with his parents and they among others permitted the missionaries to hold meetings in their home. The results of these meetings were that his mother, with the consent of her husband, was baptized when he was seven years of age. Although she was baptized with her husband's consent it seemed to stir up trouble in their home and she was forbidden by him to attend any more Mormon meetings, mostly on account of all the evil stories that Hemming Hansen heard about this people. His father would not permit any devotional services or Scripture readings in his home any more and then his mother taught him in secret to pray and call upon the Lord. He had rather trying times in the public school because his mother had joined the Mormoner as they were called, but he soon learned not to pay any attention to the taunts of his fellow pupils; and, as he was a bright lad that knew his lessons well, they soon respected him for what he was. In later years he looked upon this time as a trial for the best as he learned to bear insults for the gospel's sake—a thing that helped him many a time in later life when he had to stand in the defense of the Reorganized Church. These early trials he bore in secret as he thought that his mother had enough grief to carry already.

But as time went on a change took place and even though his mother had not attended meetings for six or seven years, yet she had retained her faith in the gospel as she believed it. In 1863 another missionary from Utah, S. O. Waddell, by some means gained the good will of Hemming Hansen and was treated kindly by him. He commenced to visit at their home and sometimes stayed over night. Later on more missionaries came from Utah for this church had many men in that field at that time and meetings were once more held in their home and then the news spread in a hurry that the Hansen family were all going to America, which trip at that time was looked upon as something terrible. Strange as it may appear it was not long after this that his father was baptized and made up his mind to follow the people of God for such he believed them to be with all his mind. The mother was happy to see this happen and not less was H. N. Hansen who was strangely drawn towards this new religion. The scorn and ridicule which he had had to meet had not caused him to be turned against this faith. He said later in life when someone said that a child could not believe, that from the time he was seven he believed in the principles of the gospel with all sincerity as far as he was taught them. "Of course," he said, "my faith was childlike but I have no doubt that God recognized it."

A short time after the baptism of his father he and his sister were also baptized. His father then sold his small farmstead of about three acres of poor land, getting ready to follow the people of God to their home in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains. Needless to say, Brother Hansen was happy to have to go to the future home of the people of God but also in the thought of seeing new countries of which he had studied in school. This he considered to be a real treat. At this time there were very few railroads in Denmark and he had never seen any, so we can easily imagine how he felt at the thought of traveling to the great country of America over the mighty ocean. Especially did he think that the ocean voyage was going to be a treat. He was looking at the bright side of all questions and little did he consider the many hardships that he would have to go through together with his parents and sister and two brothers before they should find their place in the world. Little did he think of the hardships and trials that the Mormon emigrants would have to endure on their more than six thousand miles distance travel.

Brother Hansen at one time wrote that even though the mission work in Denmark at that time was under the leadership of Brigham Young the main principles of the gospel were taught and as far as polygamy was concerned it was not mentioned by the elders only if it was brought up by others when they of course had to defend it. If anyone declared that they could not believe in it they were told not to trouble themselves about it, as it was a holy principle and if they could not see into it now they should only wait until they got to "Zion" and then all would come out all right. In this hope thousands of emigrants left their homes and all that was dear to them only to meet disappointment and regret after the sacrifice had been made, many of them to lose faith in God altogether on account of this deception.

IT WAS on the tenth day of April that they left their native land, that they left all their friends and relatives, all that was dear to them, perhaps never to see them any more. But perhaps they did not feel so sorry after all, for they had become strangers in their native land because they had embraced Mormonism; for much scorn and abuse was their lot and those who were a little more merciful were inclined to look upon them with pity.

They first traveled by team from Storhedinge to Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, from whence in a few days they were to go by steamship to Hull, England. Brother Hansen was fourteen years old by that time and his sister Anna was nine and the two brothers respectively five and two and a half years. The emigrants soon found out that this trip of theirs was not going to be all pleasure for the ship was crowded with many passengers all going to "Zion." The Øresund, or sound, between Denmark and Sweden was rough and the captain out of pity for his passengers decided to drop anchor and not venture out into Kattegat before daylight. The next day many of them saw the old castle Kronborg (Crown Castle) disappear, the last they saw of Denmark, and for many the last time ever to see it. It took them three days to get to Hull and as several hundred were together in one small room below the deck there condition can easily be imagined, especially when almost all of them became seasick. Before arriving at their destination Brother Hansen's estimation of a sea voyage had dropped sharply. One consolation they had was that the crew treated them as well as possible under the circumstances, as the ship was not in shape for carrying so many passengers.

When they landed in England they soon found out that they were in a new country whose language they could not understand. Many of them had their first railroad experience when they were going across England to Liverpool. They were sheltered for a few days in some huge sheds by the harbor. There was plenty of room and as they had obtained their own bedding (which all had to bring) they got a much needed rest before attempting to cross the mighty Atlantic.

H. N. Hansen tried in vain to understand the language, but all to no avail; and it was a real pleasure to him when he heard an English rooster crow almost like a Danish one for then he came to the conclusion that although men's languages differ, rooster language evidently was the same everywhere. By this time they had already learned that all were not as saintlike as they pretended to be; but they were going to "Zion" so everything would eventually "come out all right." Although the accommodations were very poor indeed none of the emigrants expected to "go to Zion on flowery beds of ease." Most of them thought that all these tribulations were sent upon them to purify them for the crown of glory that would be theirs if they would only be faithful. Here it may be well to say that the emigration was all in charge of the priesthood, who chartered the ships and looked after the railroad tickets; in fact, looked after everything for a fixed price. The people trusted them and handed over their money without murmuring, accepting what was offered them. If any complained they were looked upon as apostates.

It was on the twenty-sixth of April, 1864, that they all went aboard the proud sailing vessel, Monarch of the Sea. This ship must have been of considerable size for its day, as it carried one thousand emigrants besides its crew. On this ship they were not quite so crowded as they were across the North Sea, but still when we remember that it was going to be their home for several weeks, it was nothing luxurious. They soon found out that they were in rough company as far as the crew was concerned, for they treated the passengers worse than if they had been animals instead of human beings. If any of them happened to be in their way while on deck they would push them aside, even women and children. One great trouble on this ship was that it was entirely inadequate to cook for so many, so some had to cook one day and others the next. This led to quite a bit of trouble as some who were strong would push aside the weaker passengers and at other times the inexperienced cooks, who worked their way across would burn the foodstuff and then no more could be gotten before next time it was handed out. The provisions —potatoes, beans, and oatmeal—were good; but the meat and salt pork was terrible; a barrel could be smelled from one end of the ship to the other when first opened. But even Saints will rebel if they have to eat raw potatoes and oatmeal; and it led to quite a bit of trouble for those who had sickness in their families as it was especially trying for them not to be able to get anything that would tempt a sick person. The ship had not been out of Liverpool many days before sickness started to travel with them. Hemming Hansen's family did not escape, and the second oldest son took sick and was followed by his little brother in another week to the land where sorrow is no more. About sixty children died on this voyage. It was indeed a trying trip for parents and relatives of the little ones, for no sooner was life extinct than the bodies were put into rough sacks with a piece of iron tied to it, and then dumped overboard without any service whatsoever. Having two brothers thus buried in the ocean it was a great consolation for Brother Hansen to read in the Bible the Scripture wherein it says: "The sea shall again give up the dead which are in it."

IN LATER YEARS the statement was made that God had wonderfully blessed the emigrants bound for Zion in their travels. But those who had to travel on one of these trips could not help remembering those days as times of hardship and sorrow; and it is really to be wondered at that as many as did survived, crowded together in close quarters, many of them filthy as they were of the lower classes of people. When we read that they were on the ocean for thirty-five days it is not to be wondered at that they were in a sorry plight for on the ship there was not much chance to wash clothing, especially bedclothes. They were soon infested with what we now call cooties or plain body lice.

It has been mentioned that the crew was a rough one and especially did they treat the people intrusted to their care in a rough manner in regards to the washing of bedclothes. When the two small brothers of H. N. Hansen died as before mentioned their father took their bedclothes on deck to wash them a little, but one of the mates took them and was going to throw them through a spillway in the deck so they would fall in the water. He succeeded in taking them away but as he left Hemming Hansen grabbed them and saved them. Many stormy days did they spend on the ocean, many of them seasick and suffering from other ailments brought on by the fare they were getting. But finally, on the first of June, they beheld the shores of the land for which they had left home and loved ones for which they had sacrificed almost everything. One thing several of them had already learned to their sorrow was that many of the church officers in their company were nothing but rascals. About the third of June they stepped ashore on Castle Garden where so many thousand of the sons and daughters of Europe in years gone by first stepped ashore to what to them was the promised land, in which they almost all without exception hoped to better their financial condition. That, however, was not the main reason why the people of this particular party had come. They had come to be enriched spiritually; they thought they were going to a place appointed by almighty God to be under the voice of inspiration that they might more fully learn to worship their creator in righteousness and know his ways better.

AT CASTLE GARDEN all was a hustle and a bustle and as near as brother Hansen remembered they stayed here until the next day when they boarded a river steamer that carried them up the Hudson to Albany and there again they had to wait. If we look back to those days with their waiting and stopping we cannot help but think what a commotion it would create if present-day travelers had to wait as those emigrants had to, sometimes waiting for days to get connections. But they all took it as a matter of course; for had God not said that he wanted a "tried people"? From this town they left for the far west in a train equipped with coaches. This was something of which these poor emigrants had never even dared to dream and although it was full to capacity they all liked it immensely. After a time they had to change trains again and there was a new surprise in store for them as they were put into a train of box cars fitted up with board seats. Their leaders claimed that the railroad company was to blame. Perhaps they were for we must remember that this was in the days of the Civil War and many trains were needed for the transportation of troops. It took them about a week to get to Saint Joseph, Missouri. Saint Joseph was not much of a place at that time and they were all put off down by the river on a sandbar. Brother Hansen said later in life that at the time in Chicago when they had to use box cars they all refused to travel any farther and went out in the woods to sleep that night without any bedclothing, but it was the most comfortable night he had spent since he left Denmark. The railroad company furnished regular cars the next day.

AT SAINT JOSEPH they boarded a river steamer that slowly paddled them north on the Missouri River to a place called Wyoming about seven miles above Nebraska City. The Mormon authorities had decided to abandon Florence, Nebraska, as the starting point for the western trip across the plains by this time. The reason was that so many were dissatisfied with the conditions in Utah and traveled back and told the emigrants who were coming in a steady stream that it was not all sunshine in the "city of God." At this time the means of Hemming Hansen like many another emigrant were exhausted and he and his family were obliged to travel with wagons sent east to meet them. But as these wagons had to haul provisions back to Salt Lake City merchants and were not quite ready for their return journey they had to camp out for about six weeks and there they had some experience with what rainfall is like in America. They had never seen rain come down as fast and as long as they did there. It was totally unlike a rain in their native Denmark and the result was that every time it rained they got drenched. To add to the misery a terrible disease broke out in their camp. This time it was not alone the few children that the disease on the ship had spared but grown-up persons as well.

Call to Worship: Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

". . . my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

Response by Congregation: The Lord's Prayer, repeated in unison.

(S) Hymn: "Redeemer of Israel," N. S. H., 190; S. H., 158.

Meditation:

God is unchangeable, hence it would be folly for us to offer up our prayers in the expectation that through their earnestness he would be caused to change his mind and will toward us. He now loves us, and desires that we shall have those things which are for our best good. Prayer should be our means of finding out the will of God, and putting it into operation in our lives. It is the channel of Divine revelation, and a means of creating in us an attitude of responsiveness to the love of God. Prayer is a means of changing us, not a means of changing God.

"Seek ye the will of God," is advice that should apply in all our prayers, for the will of God is supreme in the world, and those who welcome it, find peace.

Prayer.

(S) Hymn: "Father whate'er of earthly bliss," N. S. H., 274; S. H., 208.

Benediction.

Hymn Response: "Jesus calls us," N. S. H., 337.

Scripture Reading: John 15: 1-17.

Prayer.

(S) Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," N. S. H., 291; verses one and two.

Talk:

It is the will of God that not only we, but all men shall be saved. This means that willing consent to the ways of God must be given, and that we must give ourselves to persuade men that God's way is the best way. It challenges us to follow men with a ceaseless ministry of love and creative friendship, despite what they do to us in return. Only those who have been in the presence of God know how he feels about humanity, and realize the love which moved the sacrifice of Christ that men might be saved.

Consciousness that we have been sent of God to labor under the guidance of his Spirit, is the only impulse that will make us win others. To direct our energies, our time, and our talents God-ward will make them available as channels through which God can redeem humanity.

(S) Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," N. S. H., 291, verses three and four.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3.

". . . Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; for, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him on conditions of repentance. And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth. Wherefore ye are called to cry repentance unto this people. And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!"

(S) Benediction: Numbers 6: 24-26.

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom; pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set on the earth; wherefore. . . ."

Congregation Join With the Leader: ". . . may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, forever and ever. Amen."

GRATITUDE

For sunlit hours and visions clear,
For all remembered faces dear,
For comrades of a single day,
Who sent us stronger on our way,
For friends who shared the year's long road,
And bore with us the common load,
For hours that levied heavy tolls,
But brought us nearer to our goals,
For insights won through toil and tears,
We thank the Keeper of our years.

FIRST SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 5

SACRAMENT SERVICE

SECOND SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 12

Theme: "A citizen of God's Kingdom must be 'humble and full of love.'" (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.)

Prelude: "Loving Each Other," Zion's Praises, 83.
Call to Worship: "O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people." (Psalm 105: 1.)
Hymn: "Sing of His Mighty Love," Zion's Praises, 110, new Saints' Hymnal, 123.
Prayer.
Scripture: Mark 12: 29-31. (It would be good to have each child look up and memorize a verse about "Love.")
Hymn: "Loving Each Other," Zion's Praises, 83.
Sermon Talk: Text: Micah 6: 8. In the Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4, the Lord tells us "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love." We should love our heavenly Father and obey his commandments. We should also love each other. If we do, we will do everything we can to help each other. Jesus said we should love our enemies. This means we will not try to harm them, and, if possible, we will do them good. Jesus spent his life helping people, because he loves all people. If we desire to help in Christ's work we must do our part with love in our hearts for God and each other. We should also be humble. (Explain.) When a person's heart is full of love for God's children, wherever they may be, he is willing to make sacrifices to help them. Our missionaries are willing to make great sacrifices to carry the gospel to people who have not heard it. (Give one or two examples of sacrifices made by people for the sake of the gospel.)
Story: "What Is Success? A Parable of Two Kings." Saints' Herald, January 22, 1930, page 82.
Hymn: "We would see Jesus," new Saints' Hymnal, 155, by junior choir. (Pictures may be used with this hymn as suggested by Professor H. Augustine Smith in his book, Worship in the Church School Through Music, Pageantry and Pictures, page 75. Price 50c.)
Story: "Where Love Is, There God Is Also," page 157, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw; page 156, Ethics for Children, by Ella Lyman Cabot, or "The Road of the Loving Heart," found in The Little Colonel's House Party, by Annie Fellows Johnston; Pilgrim Elementary Teacher, May, 1930, page 237.
Closing Hymn: "Have a Heart of Kindness," Zion's Praises, 118.
Benediction.

(Note: As a preparation for the next service, ask the boys and girls to look up verses telling what the Bible says about strong drink. They may use a concordance. For the roll call suggested in the next service, let each child select a verse from his or her list.)

THIRD SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19

Theme: "A citizen of God's kingdom must keep himself pure." (1 Timothy 5: 22.)

Prelude: "I Would Be True," new Saints' Hymnal, 294.
Call to Worship: "O come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation." (Psalm 95: 1.)
Response: "Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms." (Psalm 95: 2.)
Hymn: "I Will Sing a Song," Zion's Praises, 162.
Prayer.
Scripture: Roll call, "What the Bible says about strong drink."
Hymn: "Dare to Do Right," Zion's Praises, 79.
Sermon Talk: Texts: 1 Timothy 5: 22, Philippians 4: 8. There is nothing "pure," or "lovely," or "of good report" in a bottle or glass of strong drink or the condition that results from drinking it. If we desire to be workers for God, we must keep our bodies and minds clean and pure. This means we must not take into our bodies anything that will harm our bodies or dull our brains. See article, "Wise Ben Franklin," Stepping Stones, June 25, 1933. Tell what the Doctrine and Covenants says about strong drink. (86: 1, 119: 3.) See "Blue Pencil Notes," Saints' Herald, March 29, 1933. Let us remember that we are God's workmanship (Ephesians 2: 10), and he will send us his Holy Spirit if we keep ourselves worthy of it. (1 Corinthians 3: 16, 6: 19.) Explain the difference between the pure sweet grape juice used in our sacrament services (Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1) and wine which is intoxicating.
Story: "Daniel in a strange land." (Daniel, chapter 1.)
Song: "Dare to be a Daniel," by junior choir. (No. 6, A Junior Hymnal, compiled by J. E. Sturgis and W. S. Martin.)
Story: "The Story of the Rechabites," (Jeremiah 35: 2-19) or "Be a Real Daniel," Zion's Hope, October 9, 1932.
Closing Hymn: "I Would Be True," new Saints' Hymnal, 294.
Benediction: Junior boys and girls.

Set a watch before my mouth,
Dear Lord, I pray,
And of my lips keep thou the door
Night and day.

Incline my heart to serve thee,
That I may do and say
Only the things that please thee,
And follow in thy way. Amen.
(See Psalm 141: 3, 4.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 26

Theme: "A citizen of God's kingdom will remember to 'give thanks unto the Lord.'" (Psalm 118: 1.)

Prelude: "Come, ye thankful people come," new Saints' Hymnal, 428.
Call to Worship: "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: because his mercy endureth forever." (Psalm 118: 1.)

Hymn: "Giving Thanks," Zion's Praises, 53.

Prayer.

Scripture: Psalm 100. (Memorized.)

Hymn: "What Is Your Song?" Zion's Praises, 121. (Substitute the words "Thank God" at the beginning of the last line of each verse.)

Sermon Talk: Text: Psalm 106: 1. See pages 10 and 11, junior quarterly, Jesus and His Teachings, by Hallie M. Gould, April, May, June, 1932. Tell of the gratitude of the one leper, when Jesus healed ten. (Luke 17: 12-19.) It is a good thing to stop and think about the blessing we have, and thank God for them. If we take time to make a list of our blessings, we will be surprised to find what a long list we have. Then, too, we should remember to thank our mothers and fathers and friends for the nice things they do for us.

prove their ability. The master recognized a difference in their ability so he gave instructions to each one in accordance with his capacity to respond. He gave one five talents, another two and the third only one. Each one then had a full chance to use his skill, and intelligence. What was the result?

When the master returned he found that the first two servants had been on the job and doubled their holdings, the first one now having ten talents as a result of his efforts and the second one now having four. But the third servant in his accounting of his stewardship showed that he had been afraid to take any risk and in order to be sure to keep the one talent for the master he had hidden it. He wanted to be sure to have it to give back when the master should return. He expected commendation for his care, but instead he got condemnation for his lack of effort. The master took the one talent from him because he had proved incapable of handling responsibility. Then the master gave this one talent to the first servant who already had the largest accumulation. After the test the score in talents was 11-4-0 instead of 5-2-1 as at the start. Why? What is the real reason for Christ commending this act of the master in taking from him who had the least and giving to him who already had the most?

Without an analysis of the reason, we may be led to believe that Christ was inconsistent in saying that the rich man can hardly enter the kingdom of heaven and at the same time commending the master who added to the riches of the servant who had already accumulated the most. But was he? Was it the material wealth that he was concerned about? Hardly. Christ was thinking only of men. He didn't say it was wrong for the rich young man to have the wealth. What he did say in effect was that because this young man had this wealth he couldn't put his mind on the worth-while things of life. Therefore the only way in which this young man could overcome such lack would be to get rid of the thing standing in his way. The object of this young man's thought was the wealth. The object of his thought should have been life. Material wealth of itself dies. Life is growth. And the young man said he wanted eternal life. In the case of the servants and talents the object of the first two was to fulfill obligations; to do their work; to live up to responsibility. The talents were a means to the end. The object of the third servant was the talent itself, not the use or development of it. Therefore he was accounted unworthy for exactly the same reason as the rich young man. The extremely rich and extremely poor man failed because they were exactly alike in attitude. The first two servants, moderately well off, both succeeded because they had a balanced attitude toward the talents or tools which had been put in their hands.

IT IS VERY EVIDENT then that Christ did not condemn wealth, but he did condemn the attitude toward it. If the rich young man could have looked at his wealth as a tool, as a means to an end, if he had asked Jesus how he could use that wealth for the benefit of his neighbors, he probably would not have been told to go sell and give to the poor. Christ would probably have commended him for being able to think of worthwhile life objectives in spite of his wealth. Why did God create the material things of this earth if he did not want his children to develop, build and use them? The answer is obvious. He does want us to use our ingenuity, our minds and abilities to create as much material wealth as possible. But he also wants us to have the right attitude toward such things. That is the secret of the successful handling of the stewardship of material things. I am happy to see this problem getting the sane, rational attention it should have. I was particularly glad to read President Frederick M. Smith's charge to the young people of the church at their convention in Lamoni, to seek material wealth, but to look at it as a Zion building tool, rather than as a goal in itself.

Rational thinking on these problems is absolutely essential if we are to develop a Zion building generation of young people. We should not be afraid to attack such problems with the idea of getting at the truth, no matter if some of our pet theories must be thrown overboard in discovering that truth. One of the hardest working and result getting missionaries of the Reorganized Church, long since gone to his reward, believed that no man could honestly become a millionaire. That it is impossible most of us know. But that it is proof of dishonesty is not a reasonable conclusion. The basis of this missionary's reasoning was that the only honest way to accumulate wealth was to save a portion of daily earnings, and that since no man could live long enough to save up enough dollars to make a million, therefore, no man could become a millionaire honestly. Of course if his premise had been correct his conclusion might have been sound. But he failed to see that his was a limited view of the problem.

Man's ingenuity has often created some new thing for the world, the value of which grows rapidly enough to make the owner worth a million. This has been done so many times that there should be no question as to the possibility of its being done honestly. What the owner of such wealth does with it after it is created is the problem with which we should be concerned. It becomes his stewardship and our concern should be limited to the question of developing right attitudes toward such stewardships. Christ didn't even intimate that it was wrong for the rich young man to have his wealth. He merely emphasized the point that this particular young man could not get a balanced view of life without getting rid of the wealth. That was because of his training. As far as rights are concerned the young man still had his agency. He had the right to keep his wealth and to go to hell with it if that were his choice. The same principle is true today. God never changes.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

His principles are the same today as always.

DURING THE YEARS following the close of the world war we saw a growth of industry in this country unparalleled in the world's history. It lasted until the financial crash in 1929. Many men pushed themselves into places of supposed power. Many used their positions to "get" all they could. Many corporation executives so far forgot their responsibility to stockholders that they used their powers to take the lion's share of earnings for themselves. This was usually done under the guise of "bonuses." In many instances they created and pyramided one organization on top of another in order to hide, in a maize of complicated accounting, the fact that they were legally robbing those whom they were employed to protect. They failed in their stewardship of wealth. Many restrictive laws have been suggested and enacted to prevent a recurrence of such practices. However, we are already learning again that it is impossible to legislate correct attitudes into those who would misuse their powers. We see also that such laws too often destroy the tools instead of the power of the unwise owner or user of the tools. In our zeal to pass such laws we also fail to recognize the fact that in many instances they are not needed. Most men who misuse their stewardship lose their power or accumulated wealth without the aid of man made laws.

In an honest rational consideration of the stewardship of wealth we should not even think of restrictive laws to prevent such wealth. We must recognize man's agency. We must also learn that the recognition of the law of tithing will automatically take care of any inequalities as they appear. We should think only of teaching our youngsters that wealth is a tool, a good tool to use in building Zion. That when they forget to keep the right attitude toward wealth, their wealth may destroy them. But as long as they keep it under control, and keep it working as a tool or servant, they need not worry. In this way, and this only, can they use the material wealth of this world to bring about a situation which can be heaven on earth, the goal we long for, Zion.

letter, let Doc read it before the rest come down. He'll be interested."

Quickly the girl handed him the letter. "It's from John. Better read it fast—before the rest get down," hurriedly.

She bent over a glowing fuchia for an instant, and then walked slowly out into the hall. In front of her another window opened into the garden, bare now, swept clean by January's winds and Doc's rake. Yes, he insisted when John was not at home on doing the big part of the gardening. "It's good for me, Eldred," he argued, "keeps my muscles in trim like an athelete's."

PERHAPS IT WAS five minutes that Larry stood at that window and gazed meditatively into the clearing. Wasn't life a peculiar thing? It was peculiar to her. But John called it the Royal Road. Maybe it was a Royal Road to him and to Carmen—she did wonder how Carmen felt about this priesthood matter—but it had never been anything but a little winding path to her, a winding path which seemed to take her nowhere. Someone had called life a merry-go-round. That's all it seemed to be for some people—just a merry-go-round with little pink tea parties and club meetings and dances and stuffy, selfish homes, and golf representing the funny, painted horses, lions and giraffes that carried you always in a circle, always nowhere. Oh, for a way out—a way of breaking out of the merry-go-round bounds and getting into the Royal Road!

Then she heard Doc. Evidently he was standing in the kitchen door talking to his landlady : "So! My, but we're proud of the boy, aren't we, Eldred? I know he'll do well at it. I'm glad for him and for you." His voice was full of the sincerity so characteristic of him.

Doc glad too! Larry leaned an aching head against the window pane. Everything was in a muddle. She felt like a kitten that had invaded a workbasket and became entangled with the great variety of threads, tapes, ribbons, and needles. The getting out of this dilemma, she somehow sensed, was going to hurt.

H. N. HANSEN

Some thought it was the cholera, but no matter what it was it took a terrible toll. Sister Hemming Hansen was the first one in their family to get sick and they had a hard time caring for her as they had nothing but a brushshelter that the rain would drench every day until one day an elder, later a presiding patriarch of the Utah church, happened to come along. He gave them a tent, but it did not help very much for inexperienced as Brother Hansen and his father were they had quite a hard time in making the tent stay up when the heavy winds started to blow.

By and by they learned and then they fared fairly well. Sister Hansen recovered so much that she was able to travel with them when they finally got ready for their trip across the plains. But before they could go along those who did not have the cash money had to sign a paper, really a promissory note. None of them could read English so they had to take the words of their leaders, in whom they had such an unbounded faith that they all signed. The paper stated that they should pay sixty dollars for their trip to Utah a person said paper to draw ten per cent compound interest. All who were able to walk had to do it, only the sick were hauled in the packwagons. Brother Hansen and his father had been sick but were recovered so far that they could walk, but his sister was still sick and had to be in a covered wagon. The wagons were drawn by eight oxen and such streams as the Platte River were forded by all and as the total length from this small place called Wyoming to Salt Lake City was about a thousand miles it was no small trip for this travel-worn people. Preaching services had been held at Wyoming and brother H. N. Hansen could plainly remember one sermon preached by Joseph Young in which he told them that they should be submissive like the oxen under the yoke, likewise the Saints should be submissive to the priesthood and do what they were told. The preaching was done in English and then translated into Danish.

Traveling across the plains was a dreary undertaking for most of them were worn and tired and as it was a common occurence to have some die, it was next to impossible to get any to dig anything but a very shallow grave. This year the Indians had been on the warpath and our travelers saw signs of their depredations all along their route. Homes were burned, and settlers' bones scattered with those of the livestock were lying on the plains to dry.

To the other misfortunes of the little family of which we are speaking was now added another one, more serious than some of the others they had passed through. As Sister Hemming Hansen one day stepped up on the wagon tongue to see her sick daughter she made a misstep and fell down in such a way that she happened to fall in front of a wagon wheel and the heavy loaded wagon went over her hurting her in such a way that room had to be made in the wagon for her alongside of her sick daughter.

When we of today look backward and reflect upon what those early pioneer Saints had to go through, of which these pages are only touching a few things, we cannot help wondering that so many could endure the hardships and trials; and it is no wonder that when at last they drove through the last canyon and saw before them the city of which they had dreamed so many beautiful dreams, of which they had talked to one another, and of which they had sung, they were somewhat disappointed.

THE PARTY reached Salt Lake City the fifth of October, 1864, and their first camping ground was in a field outside the city, but the next day they drove in and unloaded their goods in the yard of Brigham Young, where they stayed for a few days. This city was not as fine as it is now. Fall conference was in full swing. Both Brother H. N. Hansen and his father had their hands full in caring for the two sick members of their family. After about ten days went by Hemming Hansen got work by a Swede by the name of Larson and the subject of our sketch went to herd sheep for a Bishop Byron. He was to receive fifty dollars for herding one thousand sheep from November to April. He was not alone as another boy was with him. It was the agreement that his pay should be given him in the form of a good cow. But it so happened that many cows died that winter and while the war amongst the states was raging, the money fell in value so much that it took two paper dollars for one silver dollar. Then when time for settlement came the good bishop found that it was most to his advantage to pay him in paper money instead of giving him a cow as agreed upon. No matter what they tried to do about it the bishop stood by his decision and Brother Hansen was forced to take the paper or nothing. His family together with many others were disillusioned when they came to "Zion" and found out that polygamy and tithing for which no account was ever given were everywhere practiced. One time when they asked one of the missionaries about it they were told not to bother about it, but only to keep quiet, and be careful not to say anything to anybody about it. But the more they saw of "Zion," of its condition and its secrecy, the more downhearted they became. They were all rebaptized when they arrived in Utah as that was a rule observed towards all emigrants and they also started to pay their tithes. After a time the mother and daughter became well and as times were good in the territory at that time they fared well.

AFTER THEY HAD BEEN in Utah a couple of years strange rumors started to reach their ears about a certain reorganized church called "Josephites." If those rumors did not do any more at that time when they first started, they at least made many people think a little and look up in the Bible and Book of Mormon as well as Doctrine and Covenants to see if polygamy was really approved by the Lord. They not only found out that it was not approved, but they also found the promise to the seed of Joseph Smith, the Seer. At this time they had moved ten miles north of Brigham City to where now Bear River City is. Brother H. N. Hansen was seventeen years old, and together with his father he visited a home wherein the "Josephites" held meetings. They had to walk ten miles to the home of this man, whose name was David Powell. At this meeting our brother experienced what he never had before, how the joy of the gospel can make a person forget everything else and fill a person with unspeakable joy. The meeting had lasted for about two hours but he was wishing for it to continue. Someone talked in a language he did not understand, but as there were some people present from Wales he thought they were talking in their own language. He was later told that what he had heard was the gift of tongues and it filled him with wonder because he could now understand that the power of God had been present. In March of 1867, he, together with others of the neighborhood, were baptized into the Reorganized Church. They had left their homeland to be near their brethren in Christ, but when they found out the evils of the Utah church and joined this other church they soon were made to feel that their presense was not wanted very much in Utah. They therefore decided to return east. Before they left, however, they had to pay back their transportation money that with interest now amounted to more than three hundred dollars and it took nearly all they could scrape together to pay it back. While in Utah, Brother Hansen twice had the privilege of hearing the leading men of that church speak. The first time was in the summer of 1865. At that time Brigham Young with a great following came to Tooele City. He had a guard around him as he drove into the city in a carriage drawn by four fiery horses. As our brother did not understand the language so very well he did not profit very much by his discourse. The next time was the summer after, when Brigham Young came to Brigham City and this time he could understand English a little better. Brigham was not feeling so very well that day but he got up to relate a dream he had had the previous night. The main points as remembered by Brother Hansen were as follows:

Independence Baby Show Movement

By Bea McNamara

The third annual Baby Show was conducted in connection with the Harvest Home Festival, October 4. Perhaps I should not call this year's event a "show"; it was more in the nature of a large-scale free health examination.

This project as a feature of the Harvest Home Festival was started in 1931. Pastor John F. Sheehy wrote asking me to work up a Baby Show. That first year we had a Beauty Show for all babies under two years of age, and we must have had at least two hundred babies entered. All of them were sweet, of course; but we could not give prizes to them all, and, naturally, the majority of the parents were disappointed.

The Health Show for youngsters from two to six years of age was a "howling success" if howls count for anything. I never dreamed that we would have such a response to our call for entries. We were swamped. Our room was small and our help limited. The following doctors helped us that year—Doctor Frank Criley, Doctor Stanley Green, Doctor Charles Keown, and Doctor Charles Grabske. The first show was held in the young people's room at the Auditorium. We examined about seventy-five youngsters during the afternoon.

Last year we profited by the previous year's experience and had more help. We used the choir room south of the main auditorium and had booths made out of the primary department partitions. The following physicians helped us then: Doctor Frank Criley, Doctor J. L. Benson, Doctor Brickhouse Wilson, Doctor C. Stewart Gilmore, Doctor Russell Etzenhouser, Doctor Charles Allen, Doctor George M. Polk, Doctor R. F. Huckett and Doctor Charles Grabske. We examined approximately one hundred children.

The first two years we used the state score card and graded the youngsters and gave prizes to the ones receiving the highest scores. This wasn't satisfactory because the doctors checked everything from pug noses to pigeon toes, and these counted off on scores. I think a pug nose is perfectly adorable, but it is not considered a perfect nose from the doctor's viewpoint.

This year we tried to give as much actual help as possible to as many babies and their parents as we could in the limited time we had. We made no announcements of ratings and gave no prizes, but we did endeavor to give every child that came a thorough physical examination. Doctor A. L. Murphy, jr., and Doctor J. L. Benson examined the teeth. Doctor Stewart and Doctor Stanley Green were the eye, ear, nose, and throat specialists. Doctor Brickhouse Wilson, Doctor S. Stewart Gilmore, Doctor Russell Etzenhouser, Doctor Charles Allen, Doctor Comboy, Doctor George M. Polk, Doctor Fred W. Hink, Doctor R. F. Huckett, Doctor Charles E. Nickson, jr., Doctor Shumaker, and Doctor Charles Grabske gave the general examinations. The following nurses under the direction of Marjorie Grover gave the doctors splendid assistance—Evelyn Ault, Sara King, Iva Oliver, Mittie Rodgers, Florence Phillips, and Olive Vanderwood. Besides a nurse each doctor had a clerk to check the inspection sheet. These sheets were furnished by Doctor Brennan.

We examined 140 children this year, and as you see our attendance has practically doubled in two years. If it increases at this rate next year, we shall need a full day for examining. The doctors were splendid about offering their services. If only we could get the mothers to educate their children not to be afraid of doctors and nurses, it would help very much. When one youngster starts screaming, it makes the others nervous and the first thing we know we have the whole group frightened and crying.

"Seek Ye the Lord"

In August of 1926, a very wonderful message came to me. I had moved into my present neighborhood some six months prior to that time. Making the usual friends and acquaintances was quite the ordinary routine, and then a friend telephoned me asking if I would deliver a message to a neighbor down the street. This I gladly agreed to do. During the course of my casual call, our conversation turned to the kind acts of life, and of course, to God from whom come all good things. I expressed my desire for the better things of life, and my neighbor who discerned the fertile soil of my mind began to drop seeds of the gospel truth. My visit refreshed me, and I needed no errand to induce me to call again. Always our conversations were on our mutual understanding of spiritual things.

I was born and reared a member of a popular church and always was desirous of knowing God. I had had several spiritual experiences, too. My first I can remember was when I was a child about eleven years old. I had gone to the altar, as we were taught in that church, seeking Jesus. I had a great desire to know him and live a better life. I remember that dear old hymn, "Lord, Plant My Feet on Higher Ground." That night as I lay on my bed I sang the song through and the Spirit of the Lord came to me and I experienced great exaltation. I shall never forget that visiting influence.

Years passed and I grew to young womanhood. Often I was conscious of the nearness of my friend, Jesus Christ, and many times I tried to find him.

I was married in 1920, and nearly three years later was the mother of a little daughter, but she was taken from us on the day of her birth. In this hour of loss and trial I earnestly sought my heavenly Friend and Comforter. During the months that followed I felt the need to seek Jesus for strength to pass through the ordeals of life. Night after night I read my Bible; I prayed, too, and knew that I was coming closer to the Master.

And then on the night our son was born I was given a spiritual experience that meant much to me. From that time on I sought Jesus who was my friend and who had spoken to me.

August, 1926, found me a mother for two years and six months. We rejoiced over our son. My neighbor (Sister Lydia Pealer) and I reasoned over the Scriptures. She invited me to her church, which was less than a block away from my home.

I first attended the preaching services and could feel the presence of truth there. My first prayer meeting was a wonderful experience, and I desired to be baptized. During this time I was reading books of the church, Brother Roth's sermons, Brother Luff's autobiography, tracts, and the last handed me was the Book of Mormon.

It would be impossible to describe my joy for at last my hungry heart had found that which I had desired, this Jesus who spoke to his people, his Father God, and the power of the Holy Spirit. I was eager to obey, but my relatives and friends began to be amazed at my zeal. My companion was agreeable to my newly-found faith and allowed me to choose as I desired. My mother was as pleased to hear the gospel as I, and was baptized with me.

I was ready to be baptized September 8, 1926. I had a testimony that this was the Church of Christ, and I had been given a wonderful spiritual experience. I had earnestly sought the Lord. On my way to the river (we had no baptismal font), my feelings were mingled. I pondered over my spiritual gains and considered my loss of personal friends and neighbors. As I walked silently a portion of the scriptures came to my mind, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." I was seeking the kingdom, and I took courage at the thought.

My testimony today, seven years later, is that my life has been made rich in every way for my confidence in the gospel. My home life has been enriched, our material possessions enlarged, our health improved, and above all, I have the daily privilege of talking with any one of the Godhead if I am humble and full of love.

May God give the necessary strength to those who are seeking his kingdom. He is a God of power. Let those who seek, move out in wisdom, and he will bless them in all things.

I desire to be remembered in your prayers, for at present I am isolated from church privileges. My former branch was in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, Elder Lewis and Elder Cunningham in charge, and I found them true servants of God. May he bless them and all the priesthood. I remember his church daily. I continue to be encouraged from time to time, and know this is God's work.

Recently Learned of the Gospel

God works in a mysterious way, for he has gradually lifted me from sin, that binds the spiritual side of a person's life, and finally brought me into his true church. It has taken several years to do it, and at the time, I did not realize there was such a church in the world. I learned of this gospel, just a short time ago, by reading the Book of Mormon.

After moving into a large house, Mrs. Brooks and son rented the upstairs part. After several days, I offered them tracts which I had received from the Free Tract Society in Los Angeles. Mrs. Brooks seemed satisfied with her own church papers, and said she did not care to read them. Her son brought me their Book of Mormon to read, and after starting to read it, I did not want to stop until I had finished it. I knew then that I had found the church I was looking for.

I had noticed that Sister Brooks, always had such a happy and contented look on her face, and I never could realize why, but after attending church with her, I found out why. On my first visit to Shenandoah I noticed right away that the Saints were very friendly with everyone. I continued to go to church, until, on Lincoln's birthday, 1933, I was baptized.

I was a Methodist before becoming a Latter Day Saint. My husband is a Methodist now, but not active. I know the church is as much for him as it is for me, and I hope that he will be converted to the gospel if it is God's will.

I have been blessed several times since entering the church, and my oldest daughter has also been helped. I have not been in the church long, but have a desire to live a good life, even in the midst of trials.

Now of One Mind and Belief

I began taking the Herald the year Brother Paul M. Hanson went through the Holy Land on his way back to America from the islands, about 1907, I believe, and I have been taking it ever since either in my name or in that of my son, Albert W. Leighton Floyd. Sometimes it has come to me here, and sometimes to him in Montana, United States of America. Now we are all together over here, so only the one paper comes. I have taken other church papers, too.

Apostle Hanson was the first to tell me about the church and the difference between the Reorganized and the Utah churches. After talking with him an hour or so, I felt that I had learned more than I had in all my life before meeting him.

Since that time I have been in Independence, and my son's wife and three children have joined the church. Now we are of one mind and spirit in the most important thing, our belief.

The work of the church in Jerusalem came to a sudden standstill some time ago, but I trust it will revive again before the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I have had much to prove to me that this is the right church. Some of these experiences I have related in meetings at Independence, and I may write them down and send them to the Herald one day.

The church papers have been a great comfort and blessing to me. I have tried to pass them on to open the eyes of understanding.

Family Has Read Herald Since First Issue

I have been reading in the Herald the list of old subscribers, and thought I would tell you how long we, as a family, have taken the paper. The name of my grandmother, Lydia Minear Curtis, was mentioned as having received a copy of the first Herald published. At the time she was living at Medina, Texas. She subscribed for it immediately. My father and mother, Robert Ballantyne and Marinda Minear, were married January 2, 1860. After reading several copies which belonged to my grandmother, they subscribed for it in 1860, and both read it until the time of their death. Father died February 19, 1911, and mother, March 7, 1923.

My brother and I, are still taking the Herald. It has been read by our parents and us since the first Herald was published in 1860.

Blessed During Sojourn at Hospital

I have recently returned home from the hospital at Everett, Washington, after a serious operation, and feel that I can bare a true testimony of God's blessings.

For several years my health has been failing. I was administered to last fall by Brothers Harold I. Velt and J. A. Gillen at the Everett reunion. I was strengthened, but in spite of praying and living as close to God as I could, I grew worse. I was administered to last spring at the church in Everett, after partaking of sacrament.

I gained health enough to do all of my house work. I canned over three hundred quarts of fruit and vegetables. I thought my heavenly Father was helping me, but I did not do my part, and began to grow worse.

After consulting God in prayer, I visited a physician, who said it was necessary for an operation. Due to financial circumstances, I knew this was impossible, but I prayed constantly, knowing that God had helped me in other trying times.

This being my third time to go to the hospital, I naturally dreaded the ordeal, but when I entered the building, my fear left me. I knew that the Saints of the Everett Branch were offering special prayers in my behalf. A feeling of peace seemed to be with me throughout the three weeks of my stay there.

As the nurses were performing their daily tasks in the ward I was in, I told them of the church and of the wonderful work that was going on among the Saints.

I want always be found striving to do God's will during the remainder of my life.

Thankful for Blessings

I wish to thank all the Saints for their prayers in my behalf. You will never know how much I have been helped as a result of them. I have been lifted up by the spirit of renewed faith and strength that has come to me.

I would ask you to continue to pray for me, that I may have the ability to do my daily tasks, and bring up my children as they should be. My three-year-old son recently had his ear lanced and as a result, has lost his sense of balance. I wish you would pray for him that he might be healed. Also pray for my older son and daughter that they might obey the gospel.

Request Prayers

Elder R. T. Whorlow, of Wayne, Nebraska, who is very ill with heart trouble, desires the prayers of the Saints, that if it be the Lord's will, he may be healed. The doctors have said that he can live only a short time.

Mrs. Bert Wolfe, of Mount Vernon, Illinois, desires the prayers of the church that she may be healed.

Wilma C. Bray, fifteen years old, of Independence, Missouri, has been bedfast for seven months. She seeks the prayers of her brothers and sisters to the end that she may soon sit up and be able to get about.

George Elson, of Norfolk, Nebraska, requests the Saints to pray in faith for his mental health. He believes himself much improved, and is grateful for God's blessings.

Ontario, California, Saints request prayers for John Blair, who is very ill and greatly needs divine aid.

Mrs. James Vamneer, of Burks Falls, Ontario, solicits the prayers of all, that she may be relieved of rheumatism. She suffers intensely.

Mrs. George Gordon, of Fisher, Arkansas, requests prayers in behalf of Sister Olive Wampler.

QUESTION TIME

When did a tenth of the net income first become the law of tithing?

The law of tithing has doubtless been expressed in various terms during past ages, but the principle appears always to have been the same. It is this: that all one acquires in this life is increase, as we came into the world with nothing, and God is the true owner of the earth and all that it contains. But he provides these things for the use of man, and requires that a tenth shall be returned to him in acknowledgment of this use. The nine tenths remaining in one's possession is not, of course, tithed again by him, but a tenth of all further increase is to be tithed, after allowing for the cost of acquiring it.

By the term increase is meant "net income," which is one's actual income. The reason for this is, that gross income does not all belong to the one who receives it, if he owes a part of it as an incidental means of acquiring it. The grocer buys goods on time and sells them again, but his real income is not the amount for which he sells the goods, for the cost of the goods and expenses of selling must first be set aside from the amount received, hence he pays a tithe of his actual or net income, which is all he really owns free of debt, or above the amount of his debt, as the case may be.

The Mosaic law, which is the earliest law giving much details on the subject, applied to a people to whom God had given lands for an inheritance. The increase on these lands was to be tithed by the possessor. This tithe was determined at harvest time, and did not reckon what the individual consumed in the process of tilling his soil and pasturing his flocks and herds, but the produce reaped and the increase of his stock was tithed. Thus the tithe was actually a tenth of his net income. If nothing was expended in acquiring the increase, the tithe would of course be accordingly a tenth of gross income, but not otherwise.

Does the church permit one who obtains a divorce for adultery to remarry?

The church by resolution has declared that the innocent party who obtains a divorce against a companion for adultery may marry another person. Of course this should not be taken to imply that the guilty person is entitled to marry another, for the church has not so declared. The interlinear Greek text of Matthew 19: 9, as given in the Emphatic Diaglott, contains the significant words: "and he her being released marrying, commits adultery." The Doctrine and Covenants (42: 20) states that one who has left a companion "for the sake of adultery" shall be cast out if the companion is living, and that none such shall be received in the church if married.

Should a district president's wife expect to share in unfinished plans being considered for missionary work?

The answer to this question must be decided by the officer having responsibility in the matter, and no wife should insist upon disclosures being made to her that the official feels should be for a time withheld. The official has administrative responsibility that cannot be taken from him while in the exercise of his office, and there may be reasons known to him why publicity in such matters should be delayed. Until plans are completed and ready for the people, he may prefer to discuss them only with such officials as have official interest in them. He may be unnecessarily secretive at times, but naturally must decide the point himself.

Explain the term "shall not cleave one to another," in Daniel 2: 43.

This concerns the forces of the kingdom of "iron mixed with miry clay." The word cleave used here is a translation of the Chaldee term debaq, which means "stick to" or "abide fast" or "adhere." The term appears to mean that they will not cling together, or perhaps that they will have no real affiliation or common interests or binding ties. Whether this lack of cohesion is due to policies, or to the character of those involved, is not easy to determine. Possibly it may involve a degree of both, hence the tendency to fall apart or divide into adverse elements, of which the text states: "the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken." The Roman power is commonly believed to represent the kingdom of iron, becoming weakened by the mixture there mentioned.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

This branch is moving forward. The priesthood are very active in their several duties and as a result, the congregation is gaining spiritually. Three new members have been added by baptism. The baptism of Mureen Root completes another family circle. Sister Root formerly belonged to the Utah church. She came to Madison to attend the university and became acquainted with the church people. She began to investigate the teachings of the Reorganized church and was convinced that the Reorganization is the original church. Sister Mureen is a great help to the branch. The other candidates were children of Latter Day Saint parents.

Missionary sermons have been preached each Sunday evening by Lee Root and Paul Utenhemer. These young men have handled the principles of the gospel very well.

The young people have organized and have chosen as their leaders Paul Utenhemer and Ormand Kimball. The meetings so far have been mostly social gatherings, but on September 26, they assembled to adopt by-laws, and had an impressive initiation service. They pinned their badge on the branch president and his wife, making them honorary members. The young men and women have big plans for the future.

The son of Lee and Winifred Root was blessed by Brother Leonard Houghton and given the name, David Lee.

The daughter of Orville and Ruby Dahlen was blessed and named Phyllis. Brother Woodstock, branch and district president, has been busy on Sundays visiting other branches in the district and helping in their annual business meeting.

A number from here attended the all-day meeting at Lancaster. Lee Root taught two classes on financial law.

On Sunday evening, preceding the preaching service, Brother Robert Brigham teaches a credit class on Doctrine and Covenants.

Sister Leda Colbert attended the reunion at Kirtland and worshiped with Saints at Hammond, Indiana, and at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She met with the women at Evansville, telling them some of the things heard at Kirtland which are of benefit to all.

September 29, the branch business meeting was held. Officers elected are: President, Henry Woodstock; associates, Lee Root and Floyd Griswold; director of religious education, Lee Root; adult supervisor, Leah Miller; young people, Paul Utenhemer; children's supervisor, Leda Colbert; clerk, Mary Woodstock; financial agent, Orville Dahlem; superintendent of music, Irene Walker; librarian, Jeanette Wirth; publicity agent and Herald Office representative, Leda Colbert.

Preparations are now being made for the district conference to be held at Madison, October 14 and 15.

Caseville, Michigan

Members Are Blessed in Two-day Service

An old-fashioned two-day meeting was held here with great success. Early Saturday morning, September 30, Saints began to gather from far and near until at nine o'clock the Caseville church was full. The prayer service at that hour was in charge of the pastor, assisted by Elder Benjamin McGeachy, of Detroit. The good Spirit was present, giving promise of that which was to come.

Elder William Grice, the district president, gave the Saints a powerful sermon at eleven o'clock. At this hour also Raymond Gardner was confirmed a member of the church, he having been baptized the preceding Sunday.

Myron Carr was the speaker at two o'clock in the afternoon, bringing a message to the people which seemed the very thing they needed, and Elder Grice was again the speaker at eight o'clock, addressing a full house.

It had been some time since this district had held a two-day meeting, but the Saints had often felt the need of such a gathering, and this Saturday's services proved that the people of the Lord can have as good meetings now as have ever been enjoyed. The Lord is near and ready to bless his children now as in the past.

By nine o'clock Sunday morning the church was filled. Sacrament was served, and the members were wonderfully blessed by the Spirit. So calm and gentle an influence reigned, that it was good to be there. Elder Myron Carr spoke at eleven o'clock.

At one-fifteen they met at the water's side, and although Lake Huron was rather tempestuous, a place of quiet water was found and two more were baptized.

Half an hour later these candidates, two sisters, were confirmed, a baby was blessed, several people received administration, and Brother Floyd Horton was ordained an elder. Then Elder Grice preached a helpful sermon, and the hour to part had arrived. Many had a long way to go for some had come from Detroit, others from Pontiac, Flint, and other distant points.

The prayers of the Saints were answered in these services, and everyone felt blessed. The speakers were endowed with power from on high, and all will remember the services.

When the pastor spoke in the evening he was agreeably surprised to see the church nearly filled again.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Street

Rally day and home-coming Sunday was observed September 24. Elder J. B. Carmichael, now of Oakland, the first pastor of Fresno Branch who served faithfully and well for several years, was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service. Saints were in attendance from Hanford, Tulare, Sanger, Dinuba, and Madera.

A duet was sung by Brother David Williams and his daughter, Lenore. The installation service preceded the preaching hour. The Spirit of the Master was manifested during the day.

The annual business meeting and election of officers, took place, Wednesday evening, September 20, Elder Arthur Oakman presiding. The following officers were sustained: T. F. Enix, pastor; A. S. Votaw and L. W. Roberts, counselors; Mrs. A. S. Votaw, clerk; W. F. Crane, treasurer; Mrs. L. W. Roberts, church school director; Mrs. J. R. Buchanan, historian; Mrs. William Godfrey, librarian. Mrs. Altha Roberts Richardson was elected superintendent of music; L. W. Roberts, publicity agent. Brother John Lightowler and Sister Lillie Jennings were sustained as adult and children's department supervisors of the young people. Sister William Enix remains the leader of the women, with Letha Roberts Carlton, as her assistant.

Sister Ethel Godfrey has accepted a position in Oakland, and will be greatly missed by her many Fresno friends.

Brother Laurence McDonald, formerly of Fresno, and now of Sacramento, and his sister, Edna Burdick, were week-end visitors at the home of their mother, Sister A. S. Votaw. Miss Duncan, also of Sacramento, accompanied them.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Saints of the Dinuba Mission are busily engaged in the Lord's work. They have recently organized a girls and young women's club under the supervision of Sister A. B. Heinrichs. The boys and young men's club is supervised by Brother Heinrichs, who is the young people's supervisor. Sister Robert Hurley has charge of the children's division, and Brother Hurley, the adults.

Sister Powell, who has been ill for some time, is much improved.

Mission Branch

Marseilles, Illinois

Mission Branch held its annual business session September 28, there being large attendance. Officers elected are: President, I. E. The women's department, directed by Mrs. A. C. Godwin, met for an all-day quilting party and aid meeting September 28. Dinner was served at noon. While some of the workers quilted, others cleaned the basement kitchen, raked the lawn and transplanted shrubbery. Plans were made for a chicken supper at the church October 11.

Blanch E. Anderson, daughter of Brother and Sister Elmer Anderson, was recently united in marriage to Siguard Eike. They will make their home at Sheridan, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. Gunsolley, of Wedron, left for their new home in Kentucky last week. Mrs. Gunsolley was formerly Mrs. Charles Claus, a member of this branch.

Earl Hayer, who underwent an operation for appendicitis, is improving, and returned home from the hospital early in October.

Maribeth Martin, of Marseilles, recently left for Kewanee, where she will complete her senior year of high school and later study dramatics at Knox College at Galesburg. She was formerly the pianist of this branch and will be missed by the orchestra which she ably directed.

Miss Hartshorn and Mrs. Hayer are taking up instruction of the singers. They began choir rehearsal October 1.

There was an attendance of seventy-six, October 1, at Sunday school, which was in charge of the newly-elected officers. The Sunday evening services were in charge of Loyd Erickson, assisted by the program committee.

Elder R. E. Davey was the speaker October 8, morning and evening.

A coal dealer wishing to repay Brother Turner for many deeds of kindness toward him in his daily work, donated to the church three tons of one of the best grades of coal. This is much appreciated by the members.

Hibbard, Indiana

Seven Baptized After Missionary Series

Elder Archibald Whitehead, of Muskegon, Michigan, held a two-week series of meetings at Hibbard Branch. Each evening attendance was good. At the close of the series, Elder Whitehead baptized and confirmed seven candidates.

Sunday, October 1, Elder Whitehead preached a sermon at the County Infirmary, two miles east of Plymouth, Indiana. He was accompanied by twenty-six Saints from Hibbard Branch.

Otter Lake, Michigan

Brother Lornie Jones, superintendent of the Sunday school, gave the Sunday school hour over for a preaching service, at which time Brother Smith occupied the stand. A potluck dinner was served at noon.

Brother Green occupied the stand during the afternoon service. Fifty-five Saints were in attendance.

Birmingham, England

The Year Is Filled With Helpful Experiences

The vacation season has come to an end and has closed a wonderful summer. From early Easter to the present, this part of England has been literally bathed in sunshine. Fruit and vegetables have been abundant, and there has been a wonderful display of flowers. The summer of 1933 will not soon be forgotten. It has been altogether beautiful.

The Saints were told in prophecy that this year would be remarkable in many ways and that the blessings which should come would be numerous. The experiences of the sick and of prayers offered and answered would fill a book. Many times have the sick been restored, and the Saints are a glad and thankful people.

The young people's prayer service has been very successful. They have decided to have doctrinal discussions on alternate meetings. On several occasions the pastor has taken these young people to the homes of elderly Saints, and they have held their prayer meetings. Such visits have been rich in blessings.

On Sunday, September 24, a reunion was held at Nuneaton, a small town thirty miles from Birmingham. Elder F. Davis has conducted missionary services there. A hall was hired for the occasion and the Saints of the district assembled. Two brothers traveled from Enfield. Birmingham was well represented, some traveling by road and a number by train.

Apostle John W. Rushton delivered a fine sermon morning and evening. He advised the Saints to leave the petty things of life and grow big, to reach for the Higher Power, to grasp the hand of the heavenly Father and never let it go, to become impregnated with prayer.

The prayer service in the afternoon was of a high order, very peaceful, comforting, and sustaining.

Under the auspices of Brother and Sister J. Coggan, the material needs of the Saints were well supplied, a bountiful lunch and tea being provided. The soloist of the evening was Sister Gertrude Allen.

Apostle Rushton looks fine and well. Birmingham Saints are looking ahead to his final visit here in November.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

Vitally Interested in Church Program

It is gratifying to be able to report a fine spiritual growth and development, an increased desire to be of service, and a spirit of unity and oneness in Bloomsburg. These characteristics are indispensable to Saints and have a wholesome influence on those not of the faith who associate with them. Bloomsburg members are vitally interested in the program of the church. They look forward to a successful winter season, and pray for the ability to uphold standards that will aid the congregation in its upward climb to God.

A goodly number of Saints from this branch attended the district conference held at Scranton, September 16 and 17, and were strengthened. Brother William Hyde, highly esteemed here, was ordained a priest.

An invitation is extended Saints living in nearby branches, to visit Bloomsburg.

Patriarch A. D. Angus will again teach the Book of Mormon Class, and the pastor, Walter H. Lewis, will teach the Doctrine and Covenants Class.

Sunday services are well attended, and in contrast to some branches which find it necessary to stimulate attendance by diverse means, Bloomsburg has a fine Sunday evening attendance. The good old Jerusalem gospel is the only allurement.

The women of the branch have reorganized under the leadership of Martha Hyde and in view of the past service rendered, their future activities will be motivated by implicit faith in church leaders.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Morgantown, West Virginia

Nine Young People Baptized

The name Morgantown will bring back memories to many Saints. Those who are members of this branch look to and build for the future, profiting from their past experiences.

George Powell presides over the branch at present, and is a man whom the Saints are proud to have as their leader. He has labored hard in the interests of the gospel.

The branch is growing spiritually as well as in numbers, and the Saints hope to see present interest continue to the accomplishment of greater things.

September 24, Brother Powell led nine promising young people into the waters of baptism. The candidates ranged in age from seven to twenty-two years. This was a beautiful ceremony. The day was ideal, and the place was a beautiful mountain stream. The ordinance was administered without interruption or hindrance, the candidates coming out of the water with smiles of happiness on their faces, and assured of a victory in Christ. The Spirit was felt by all who witnessed the ceremony.

Early in the afternoon a special service was held for the confirmations, and under the hands of Brothers George Powell, Harry Joseph and Hobart M. Rogers, the ordinance was administered, and was followed by a short social service.

The Saints are endeavoring out of the trying times that have been experienced at Morgantown, to develop a faithful, devoted and consecrated band of people.

Kirtland, Ohio

Happy Over Another Successful Reunion

Too much cannot be said about the spirituality and the large attendance of the 1933 Kirtland reunion. President F. M. Smith, Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry and Apostle D. T. Williams were present for the latter part of the gathering, and many others too numerous to mention, helped to make the reunion a success.

Classes during the reunion received large attendance. Elder John R. Grice taught, "Life's Values"; Bishop H. E. French, "Budgeting"; Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, "Priesthood," and Miss Amy Glassford, "Music Appreciation."

The joint prayer meetings were splendidly attended by young and old.

Much credit goes to Sister Annie Householder for her good work in directing the reunion choir. Sister Householder is the Temple chorister. The choir numbered about thirty-five members.

Mr. Clarence Darrow, eminent criminal lawyer, of Chicago, visited Pastor John L. Cooper this summer. He spoke at the county fair at Kinsman, Ohio.

Sister Elizabeth Squires, of Brooklyn, New York, passed away at Kirtland following the reunion, and was buried in Kirtland Cemetery. She was a saintly mother, and will be missed by her two sons, two daughters, other relatives, and many friends. She had been a member of the church almost eighty years. Her devout testimony of the divinity of the gospel, which she bore August 6, in the Temple just prior to the reunion, will be remembered by the many who heard her.

Several from Kirtland found it possible this summer to attend the Century of Progress at Chicago.

Sister Mildred Williamson and her husband, Claude Williamson, are the parents of a daughter, Nola Charlene, born September 8. Sister Beulah Wakeman and her companion, Herbert Wakeman, also have a daughter, Marguerite Ann.

Once more Patriarch and Sister G. T. Griffiths are living in their home at Kirtland.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Howard and Ontario Streets

Fall and winter activities are under way in Philadelphia Branch. The Saints, returning from their vacations, are once more assuming their activities in the various vocations. Many spent the entire summer camping in Deer Park.

August 15, Brother Carl Heinrichs and his wife, Gertrude, and daughter, Ellen, moved to Independence, Missouri. Brother and Sister Heinrichs were faithful workers in the branch here.

At the annual election of officers on September 18, the following officers were chosen for the coming year: Henry L. Livingston, branch president; David Wiesen, director of religious education; Samuel Worrell, counselor; Russell Bacon, treasurer; Eleanor Lewis, secretary; Clara Thumn, director of music; Ethen Wilson, building custodian; Charles Langjahr, publicity agent, and Ethel Feldmeth and Elizabeth Teal, branch auditors.

Sunday evening, September 24, an ordination service was held when Brothers Louie Kuhn and Charles Langjahr were ordained to the office of priest. The ordinations were conducted by Samuel Worrell and David Wiesen, Harley Butler and John Cumming assisting. Brother Livingston gave the charges. The service was beautiful and inspiring to all.

The Laurel Club through the courtesy of the Philadelphia Electric Company, gave a motion picture on the life of George Washington Wednesday evening, September 27. The proceeds will be turned over to the branch.

The spirit among the young people is very encouraging. They feel that much will be accomplished this winter.

Columbus, Ohio

The Tabernacle

The month of September opened for this congregation with pleasing activity. A lawn fete was well attended, a supper by the ladies, also a box social by the Religio. Following these, two were baptized, Eilene Cash and Betty Strayer, and were confirmed by Elders Welsh and Vickroy. William Charles Thurston, a baby, was blessed by Elder Welsh. A solo by five-year-old Ruth Helm, and a sermon by the pastor concluded the day's activities.

The women held a jitney supper which proved to be the greatest success they have experienced. Attendance was large and there was special instrumental music.

The Sunday school continues with a high mark of attendance. The Religio also presents a good record of attendance and interest. It's variety of programs is attractive.

The tabernacle debt is diminishing, and with a few more efforts similar to those put forth, the local congregation will free itself of this financial burden.

The Wednesday evening prayer services have been quite spiritual, the gifts of the gospel being given to the Saints. The last prayer meeting of the month proved to be a pentecostal shower. It lasted two hours and fifteen minutes.

Lansing, Michigan

Missionary Activities Encounter Opposition

Branch activities were not so numerous during the latter part of the summer, but the priesthood were busy during the forepart of the season, preaching in private homes, and this resulted in several baptisms.

There were added to the local ministry two elders, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon at the district conference last June.

Acting on the statements of President Frederick M. Smith, brought to their minds by the branch presidency, to the end that missionary efforts should now be more firmly established, the priesthood drew up a resolution which was passed on to the branch, advising that a gospel tent be purchased. The branch approved the suggestion, and the tent was bought at a cost of one hundred dollars.

The district president willingly offered his services and preached about ten days. Elder S. W. L. Scott then spent a week at Lansing, and local priesthood assisted. Elder Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan, answered the call from local Saints, "Come over to Lansing and help us."

Services were to begin at 3 p. m. September 17, the tent having been moved to another location. Whether or not the stakes were tampered with is a matter of conjecture, but at 1 p. m. the tent blew over, and two long rents were made in the top. Workers replaced the tent Tuesday evening at 8 p. m., and at 10.45 someone stole in and using a substance which ignited quickly, burned it to the ground in a few moments.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Saints felt as did Paul when he said, "The Lord reward him." Since they had not yet held services in that community, they suspected no one.

From this incident Elder S. A. Barss, of that branch, concludes: "We do not know who could do such a thing, but we believe that if we endeavor to work, we shall find opposition. I once heard one of our neighbors say, 'If I could kill Karnish (Cornish) I believe I would be doing the Lord's will.' Some of you remember the incident of Brother T. C. Kelley's being tarred and feathered, and the tent ropes being cut, endangering the lives of women and children. But these were the times when God wondrously blessed the ministry of such men. We feel determined that at the opening of spring, we shall again renew this effort. There are in the radius of twenty miles, twelve or fourteen towns to reach, and like Paul we want to be ready to preach the gospel to them also. If we have been over-zealous, we want to be set right. The harvest is white and the laborers few, so let us hasten."

South Boardman, Michigan

One-day Meeting a Memorable Occasion

September 24, is a date that will be remembered by Western Michigan Saints who took part in the one-day meeting at South Boardman.

For several days preceding the gathering South Boardman Saints had made it a subject of special prayer, that they might have good weather, a good crowd and good meetings. Surely these prayers were answered. The day was perfect, attendance large, and they enjoyed a spiritual feast. Nearly everyone took part in the testimony service, and a wonderful gift was given. This meeting was followed by three others—preaching by Buell Shelley, R. D. Davis, and Wayne Evans. Dinner was served potluck cafeteria style from a large table at the back of the church. All services were in charge of District President Buell Shelley and Pastor A. R. Ellis.

For over thirty-nine years South Boardman has been a place where Michigan Saints have loved to come. During years of prosperity when work was plentiful there, many came and heard the gospel in its fullness for the first time. To them this branch will always be home.

From the members of South Boardman, God has chosen many to go forth and represent him. Some have gone to foreign lands. Present-day Saints revere the memory of Elders John Hanson, Frederick S. Brackenbury, and Wellington D. Ellis who labored faithfully. They still have with them Elders James Davis, R. D. Davis, and A. R. Ellis, while Clyde F. Ellis, B. H. Doty, and others, are assisting in other places.

Holden Stake

Grandview, Missouri

The church year closed with a prayer meeting held the evening of September 27, with good attendance.

On the preceding Sunday a business meeting was conducted in the afternoon, Brother McWethy taking charge, assisted by Elders Gomer Wells and Amos E. Allen. Officers for the new year are as follows: Pastor, Charles Martin; church school director, L. L. Bogue. The various department leaders were also chosen to start to work October 1.

The year just ending has been one of encouragement to the members. Attendance has increased, and interest in classes has grown. The special days of the year were well observed with services and programs.

On the afternoon of Children's Day the church was the scene of devotion when all were assembled to witness a baptismal ceremony. The Lees Summit members met also in song service, and all gathered round the font in the basement. Elder J. W. A. Bailey gave an instructive talk. Then as the children were led one by one into the waters of baptism, the worshipers were reminded of the words, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Brother Coleman, of Buckner, was present to baptize his two grandchildren, Lucille and Alfred Miller. Brother Smith, of Lees Summit, baptized those of his group and Brother Martin baptized Kathrine Norman of the Grandview group. Then nearly all assembled in the main auditorium for the confirmation service. Lees Summit young people, however, returned home for their confirmation ceremony.

Grandview congregation has enjoyed visits from other groups. East Independence young people brought a play under the direction of Brother and Sister C. Edgerton. Others also came with programs, Walnut Park, Gudgell Park, Liberty Street, Englewood, Second Church, and Sugar Creek, all from Independence.

Grandview was represented at the stake conference September 10.

Blue Springs, Missouri

During the month of September some of the speakers and their subjects were: Elders Benjamin Bean who talked on, "Faithful Unto Death"; R. J. Stark, "Repentance,"; Gerald G. Phillips who chose his text from James 1: 2; O. W. Sarratt, "The Unguarded Moment"; Amos E. Allen, "God's Divine Purpose"; Priest Earl Grub, "Family Prayer."

September 17, the branch observed Promotion Day, the program being in charge of Sister Roy Martin.

On that day, too, Earl Grub was ordained to the office of priest, and Gerald G. Phillips to that of Elder.

On Friday, September 8, Robert Stark, jr., was badly burned in a gas explosion. He was taken to the Independance Sanitarium where he is at present. Don Stark arrived home from California September 26.

A baby daughter was born to Sister A. Campbell, September 15.

Brother Roy Martin and family have left Blue Springs to make their home at Independence. They are greatly missed by this congregation. Ed Chappelow and family have moved to Bates City.

Brother and Sister A. Chapman, of Walnut Park district, Independence, have moved to a farm near Blue Springs.

Atherton, Missouri

Two Atherton young men were ordained to the office of priest at the late stake conference, Wendell Van Tuyl and Clifford Long. Brother Van Tuyl occupied the stand the morning of September 24, and in the evening Elder L. W. Koehler was the speaker.

At the annual business meeting Brother J. A. Thomas was elected pastor, and on the evening of October 1, preached his first pastoral sermon. George W. Beebe, retiring pastor, faithfully served in that office two years.

A number of the young people went to Grandview, October 8, and after attending the morning services, went home with Brother L. L. Bogue and family for lunch. The occasion was Brother Bogue's fiftieth birthday.

Brother D. R. Hughes was the speaker at Atherton that morning, and Brother Myron Holman gave the evening sermon.

Atherton young people have closed their volley ball season. During the warm weather they enjoyed the sport both at home and with neighboring branches.

Knobnoster, Missouri

The recent business meeting of the branch resulted in the election of the following officers: Pastor, John T. Nutt; director of church school, Ben Kramer; superintendent of adult department, E. E. Petre; young people, Harriet Enfield; primary, Nellie Burgess; music, Blanche Norman; branch treasurer, Allen Bugbee. The meeting was in charge of Stake President W. S. Macrae and G. R. Wells.

The newly-elected officers are taking up their work with energy and enthusiasm which bid fair for a successful year's work.

The October sacrament service was spiritually uplifting and encouraging.

A two-day meeting is planned for the near future.

Independence

In a city where more than six thousand Latter Day Saints worship in ten congregations considerable attention must be given to the machinery of government. Such attention was given Monday, October 9, by a small but representative quarterly conference crowd at the Stone Church. With President Elbert A. Smith in charge, business was quickly and harmoniously cared for. Pastors, custodians and bishop's agents of the various congregations were approved. Pastors for the year ahead are as follows: Second Church, William Inman; Walnut Park, Frank McDonald; Liberty Street, John R. Lentell; Enoch Hill, E. A. Thomas; Englewood, Roy W. Howery; Spring Branch, Morris Jacobsen; Gudgell Park, Walter Chapman; East Independence, Frank Minton, and Sugar Creek Mission, Ira G. Clutter. John F. Sheehy will continue to represent the First Presidency as pastor of the Stone Church.

Elder H. G. Barto had resigned as assistant pastor in Zion because of ill health, and his place was taken by his brother, H. L. Barto. This action was approved by the conference. D. S. McNamara also had resigned as assistant pastor of Zion, having been asked to take charge of boys and Boy Scouts and to assist with the young people's council. G. W. Eastwood was approved as his successor. The reappointment of W. Earl Page as superintendent of religious education for the city, was approved, also his choices of assistants, Earl Higdon and Almer Sheehy.

Business having been completed by eight-thirty, President Elbert A. Smith, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Missionary Amos T. Higdon, and Elder W. Earl Page made short talks and announcements.

The junior orchestra movement in Independence has taken on new growth this fall, and on Friday evening of the Harvest Home Festival, October 6, the Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, and all its junior units—ninety-two players in all—gave the concert to the large festival crowd. The junior orchestra movement is for children and young people who are interested in instruction and training in playing musical instruments. It is nonsectarian in character, members of all churches being invited to take part in orchestral activities. Brother Leon Snow, of the Stone Church, is training a group of thirty junior players, and Brother Fred Mollison directs young players of Second Church and Gudgell Park. There are also other units of the orchestra in the vicinity of Independence.

Since next Saturday and Sunday are Graceland Home-coming, and the program events and associations draw many Independence alumni and friends to Lamoni, the congregations here observed College Day with appropriate programs and speeches October 15, a week early. Collections morning and evening were applied to the college scholarship loan fund.

Well over one hundred officers and teachers of the church schools in Independence met at two-thirty at the Liberty Street Church Sunday afternoon for a consecration service. All congregations were represented. Mrs. T. A. Beck played a piano prelude, and Elder D. S. McNamara led the congregation in the hymn "Higher Ground"; invocation, Elder C. B. Woodstock. Virgil Woodside sang "Friend of Mine." Pastor John F. Sheehy urged the workers to be ever pushing forward using the slogan Columbus gave to his crew on an October day centuries ago: "Sail on, sail on. Never turn back." In October of 1536, William Tyndale was burned at the stake for trying to place the Bible in the hands of even the humblest plowman. His last words were a prayer to God, "Open the eyes of the King of England!" Brother Sheehy pleaded with the workers and teachers to open the eyes of the youth of the church, never to discourage them, or lessen their faith. His message was —Zion shall be redeemed. After the hymn, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," Elder A. K. Dillee gave a short consecration talk; "Consecration" was sung by the congregation, and Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith offered the benediction.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy preached a fine sermon Sunday morning leading up to thoughts of Graceland College, its establishment and purpose. Then Bishop J. S. Kelley spoke briefly on College Day. Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, and LeRoy Smith was the soloist.

A special Graceland College program was given Sunday night, James Moses in charge. Colin Ferrett, directed the congregational singing, also a chorus which sang several college songs. Then the following talks were given, "The Past of Graceland College," by Almer Sheehy; "The Present of Graceland College," by Edith Rosevear, and "Looking Into the Future of Graceland College," James Moses. A poem written by Mildred Walker who attended the college in 1932, was read by Mrs. Olive Moses.

Sister Louella Green, seventy-six years old and for fifty years a resident of Independence, passed away, October 6, at her home. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Green was one of the charter members of the congregation which met in the little brick church on East Lexington Street, also a charter member of the Stone Church, and an active Laurel Club member. Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Thomas Crick and Mrs. Arthur M. Daniels; four sons: Fred R., Carl V., Roy, and George W. Green, jr., one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Moody, eleven grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Sister Green was the widow of George W. Green who died eleven years ago.

Second Church

Patriarch W. A. McDowell was the morning speaker Sunday, and for a text he chose: "Ye shall bring forth a son and his name shall be called Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." The choir sang the anthem, "Love Divine."

"Forgiving Others," was the theme of Brother Roy Conyers' talk to the juniors. Mrs. B. C. Sarratt told the story, "Joseph Returns Good for Evil"; Grace Dillee gave a reading and Alberta Queen sang a solo. The invocation was by Martin Hershey.

Pastor William Inman took charge of the evening service, and Ivan Dillee, former Graceland student, spoke on "Our Loyalty to Graceland." The ladies' quartet sang two numbers, and the girls' trio also sang.

Greater interest is being shown in the early Sunday morning prayer meetings.

The gathering of the priesthood and their wives last Tuesday evening was large, and the hour was much enjoyed. Light refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

Enoch Hill Church

Saints of this district held a social, which was twofold in purpose, last Tuesday evening. They met to say farewell to former pastor, Elder H. L. Barto, and to welcome Pastor E. A. Thomas to his new office. A program of musical numbers, readings, and an original play directed by Sister Iva Chrestensen, was much enjoyed.

Early the next evening the young people, led by the local young people's council, met at the church to transact business needing attention. At eight o'clock they met with Group 33 South in prayer service. This winter the young men and women will follow out the plan of assembling with different groups in this district for prayer hour.

The women's department gathered at the home of Sister Jack Jeffers on Thursday and quilted. Each worker brought a covered dish for the luncheon. A period during the day was set aside for study of the Doctrine and Covenants, Elder William Shakespeare the teacher.

The young people had as their guests on Friday young people from East Independence and Stone Church congregations.

A son was born to Brother and Sister Alan Blankenship Wednesday, October 11.

In spite of rainy weather good attendance was enjoyed at the Sunday morning church school. During this service the congregation was presented a gold and black basket, a gift from Sister H. L. Barto, wife of the former pastor. Appropriate musical numbers concluded the ceremony.

The College Day theme was closely followed at the morning service. A mixed quartet of Richard Maloney, Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Miss Ruby Johnson and E. A. Thomas sang, "O Come, Ye Sons of Graceland." What Graceland means to the young of the church was ably presented by Mr. and Mrs. James Moses.

Elder E. A. Thomas was the evening speaker.

Lake Orion, Michigan

The annual business meeting of Lake Orion Branch was recently held, at which time the following officers were elected: Branch president, Elder Frank Davis; counselors, Vincent A. Schaar and Simeon B. Gonyou; secretary, Julia Hammond; treasurer, John L. Hall; chorister, Harriett M. Schaar; librarian, Jesse I. Dunlap.

The following officers were appointed by the branch president: church school supervisor, Simeon Bruce Gonyou; adult supervisor, Sister Edna Gonyou; young people's supervisor, Jessie I. Dunlap; children's supervisor, Ardyce Leona Schiek.

Alaflora Branch

Near Brewton, Alabama

Workers of this branch believe they are doing well considering the fact that they have been without a local pastor since Brother Earl Higdon left for Kansas City some time ago. They greatly miss Brother and Sister Hidgon.

The church school is going forward with E. N. McCall as leader.

The women's department holds regular meetings and occasionally an ice cream social for the benefit of the branch treasury.

In August the district leader, A. D. McCall, conducted a class for a week, the theme of study being, "The Financial Law of the Church." Ben Jernigan assisted in these meetings. The order of services each evening was: Song service for thirty minutes conducted by Ben Jernigan; class work, thirty minutes by Brother McCall, and preaching for thirty minutes by some of the local ministry. Elders C. J. Clark and C. T. West, of Cold Water Branch, took their turn with E. N. McCall, Charles Barnes, and Ben Jernigan, of Alaflora, and on Friday evening Amos Berve, of Mobile, began week-end services. On Sunday he preached twice to a well-filled house. Those meetings carried on under the supervision of young Brother McCall were worthy of commendation and enjoyed by all.

Apostle James A. Gillen who has just closed a series of meetings at McKenzie, Alabama, was here Saturday night and Sunday, September 30 and October 1, and preached three times to large congregations. Sunday a program for all day was carried out. At 10 a. m. a good sacrament service took place, there being many branches of the district represented. Preaching at eleven o'clock was by Brother Gillen and at noon a bountiful lunch was served by the women. A. D. McCall spoke at two o'clock in the afternoon.

North Platte, Nebraska

1123 West Sixth Street

Elder W. A. Smith held a series of meetings here during August which proved most inspiring, and he promised to return if possible. The Saints will give him or any other missionary a glad welcome.

Apostle R. S. Budd, accompanied by Elder G. A. Smith, of Denver, was here two days. During that time both ministers preached. Their visit meant much to the Saints of this small group.

Elder J. F. Payne, of North Platte, has preached in a country schoolhouse near here, arousing considerable interest. He plans to continue this effort for a time. Brother Payne also preaches here frequently.

The Saints meet at 1123 West Sixth Street for all services with the exception of recreation meeting which is held at the park. Their Wednesday evening prayer services are a source of strength to all.

Miss Faye Payne was married to Jesse Crosier July 31, by Elder W. A. Smith at the home of her parents. The bridal pair have left North Platte, and are much missed.

Sister Cassie Sivits, two sons, Glen and La Vern, and daughter, Ilene, and niece, Edith Sivits, returned to Lamoni, September 1, where the young people entered Graceland College.

Kennett, Missouri

Young People Carry Forward Many Activities

The young people of this group met recently and elected new officers in the Z. O. G. Club for the next three months. Leon Wiggins was unanimously reelected president. The club members meet each Wednesday evening for a study of the Book of Mormon with Sister Larche as teacher. They surprised Pastor H. H. Wiggins with a birthday dinner not long ago. The young men and women appreciate his friendship and help.

E. C. Larche was elected church school director at the business meeting September 24, and was given a good supporting corps of officers.

The young people have resolved, at the end of two weeks, to be one hundred percent tithe payers. All are praying and working for the good cause.

Honolulu, Hawaii

Priesthood Organized for Study and Work

July 2, Elder G. J. Waller, owing to his recent ordination as patriarch, resigned the position of branch president of the main Hawaiian Branch located in Honolulu. For many years Brother Waller has served as president of the Hawaiian Branch, working persistently and faithfully for the welfare and interests of the church and its members. He also resigned as pastor of the Chinese and Japanese branches, but still assists in the work of the branches over which he exercises supervision.

Samual A. Lee, priest, has charge of the Chinese Branch, and David Kumata, also a priest, has charge of the Japanese Branch.

Brother Waller was succeeded to the position of branch president by Elder V. B. Etzenhouser. Brother Etzenhouser has worked with Brother Waller for some time in the furtherance of this mission. He chose as his counselors, Elders Charles A. Lee, Henry Mahi, and Thomas Kelii.

The priesthood have been holding regular class meetings every Monday evening. The subject of their study is, "The Vital Difference Between Our Church and the Utah Church." They are aided in their study by a pamphlet written by Elder A. M. Chase, who spent a number of years working in Hawaii, and is now president of the Reorganized branch in Salt Lake City, Utah. When the priesthood complete their study of this subject, they will take up the study of "Stewardship." The class is conducted by Brother Etzenhouser, and has a membership of fifteen.

The beginning of the month brought four candidates for baptism, and the prospects for the future are encouraging.

The spirit of unity prevails, and much good work is being done in addition to regular church service.

Wray, Colorado

Determined to Go Forward

The new church school year at Wray, began the first Sunday in October, with the regular church school, sacrament, basket dinner at noon, priesthood meeting at two o'clock, and the evening sermon. The discussion during the priesthood meeting was composed of the different problems of the branch. The new officers are now working to better conditions, Elder H. A. Tabor, branch president; Elder Paul Diefendorf, church school superintendent; Sister Florence Rounds, young people department; Sister Wilma Truman, chorister; Sister Bertha Hesse, adult department.

Immediately following the promotion exercises, September 24, Saints of Wray went to Yuma, to meet with the members there for an all-day meeting. Elder R. S. Salyards was the speaker.

Friday evening, September 8, Saints from Lamar, Nebraska, visited Wray, presenting a three-act play, "The Blue Bag."

Brother and Sister A. E. Tabor are making a six weeks' visit with relatives at Bates City, Missouri. Sister Elsie Diefendorf is also making a visit to Independence, Missouri.

Benton Harbor, Michigan

692 Pearl Street

Early last spring, a few isolated Saints living at Benton Harbor, Hartford, Lawrence, Decatur, and Bangor, Michigan, having learned of each other through the Herald, and feeling the need of church fellowship, began meeting for sacrament services in the home of Elder F. J. D. Earl, at Hartford. And as might have been expected, they had not met more than two or three times, before plans for increased activity began to develop.

On May 28, Priest E. J. Hayden, who was then living at Bangor, went to Benton Harbor, and began a series of meetings in the home of Elder V. L. Coonfare, who, because of his hours of employment, found it impossible to carry on the work as he would have wished.

These meetings continued with a fair degree of interest under the blessed influence of the Spirit until the district conference, at which time Apostle D. T. Williams and District President A. C. Barmore advised Brother Hayden to return to Benton Harbor and endeavor to build up a branch there.

In harmony with this advice Brother Hayden went down on Sundays, until he could arrange to move, and has been working with Elders V. L. Coonfare and R. V. Hunt, in the spreading of the truth in that place. While their numbers are not large, they feel much encouraged in the addition of one through baptism and in the locating of a number of members who believed themselves entirely isolated. The sacrament and prayer services are spiritual feasts.

They have informally organized themselves into a group for greater efficiency in service, Brother Hayden presiding. The church school is beginning to grow under the leadership of Brother Coonfare. And the Saints are making use of the local press each week, announcing their services, which they are holding in the V. F. W. hall, located in a good residence district, at 692 Pearl Street, Benton Harbor.

The Saints feel assured that the Lord has a work to be done at Benton Harbor, and will not allow them to be restricted over much if they are faithful in the performance of their duty.

For the convenience of any Latter Day Saints who may be passing through Benton Harbor, the correspondent gives the addresses of Brother Coonfare, 369 Cedar Street, and of Brother Hayden, 288 Summit Street.

Kansas City Stake

Bennington Heights

Sister Mary Helm attended church Sunday morning, October 1, after being confined to her home the past few weeks with sleeping sickness. Sister Helm is happy to be present again, and the members are anxious to have her resume her place as chorister.

The leadership school which began September 18, lasting until September 29, at Central Church, was, in the opinion of the pupils, quite a success. Bennington Heights was well represented each night.

Those of the priesthood presiding over the sacrament service, October 1, were: Brother O. G. Helm, pastor; Brother Gould, former pastor; Don Stafford, E. H. Agin, S. D. Hastings, and Edward Larson.

Elder J. Charles May began a series of meetings Sunday, October 15, to be continued until October 27. Special instrumental and vocal music was rendered by visiting musicians.

The O. B. K.'s of Bennington had a sunrise breakfast September 17. The group met at four o'clock Sunday morning then went to Swope Park. After breakfast was cooked and served, the group assembled on a large rock, and had Sunday school under the leadership of Edward Larson.

The O. B. K.'s are planning to enter the Kansas City Stake play contest to be held November 6, 7, and 8.

Brother and Sister Joseph Wright, of Cameron, Missouri, attended Bennington, October 1. Joe Wright was a member of Bennington before moving to Cameron last spring.

The O. B. K. counselor and vice-counselor of Bennington attended the counselors' meeting at Central Church, October 3.

Mary Agin, Aileene Schwartz, and Margaret Clark recently visited Fourth Church in Kansas City, and rendered a special musical number for the group.

Fort Madison, Iowa

Service of Baptism Made Significant

An impressive baptismal service was held in the Fort Madison church the evening of September 29. The building was appropriately decorated for the occasion with grass rugs, flowers and decorative stones and shells in front of the font. The lighting was arranged to make an evening scene.

District President F. T. Mussell, who was conducting a week's services at that place, arranged the following program: Opening hymn, "There's an Old, Old, Path"; invocation; Scripture reading, Revelations 3: 20, John 10: 1, 5, 7, 11; sermonet; charge to the candidates by Elder Mussell and their response; acceptance of the challenge by the congregation quartet selection, "A Ruler Once Came to Jesus by Night"; baptism of five candidates by Pastor W. H. Gunn; interlude, congregation singing, "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," "Hail to the Brightness of Zion's Glad Morning," and "Let Us Shake Off the Coals From Our Garments." Then came the confirmation, opened by the singing of "Come, Holy Spirit, Come." Elders Mussell and Gunn officiated. After the hand of fellowship was extended the new members, the meeting was closed by singing, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and the benediction.

The Holy Spirit was present to a marked degree throughout the entire service. Many commented on the beauty and significance of this service. A program of similar character was carried out last Children's Day when seven candidates were baptized.

Washington, District of Columbia

Organize for Winter's Activities

Although the Saints of this district are not organized, they meet regularly for Sunday services. On the first Sunday of each month, in addition to Sunday school, they hold sacrament service. Forty members compose this district, and the meetings are held in a lodge hall which serves the purpose of a church.

Brother William Froyd, of Arlington, Virginia, has recently been ordained to the office of elder. He and his wife deserve much credit for the advancement of the Saints here.

Brother C. W. Clark, of Columbus, Ohio, was a welcome guest in this district, Sunday, September 24. He delivered two encouraging sermons on the nights of September 24 and 26.

The young people's class, which has been discontinued for the summer months, met October 1, at the home of Brother and Sister Ralph Hardy. The afternoon hike was followed by a supper, served at the Hardy home. The remainder of the evening was spent in a business session. It was decided that the Book of Mormon should be studied, Elder Froyd as teacher. Committees were appointed to care for the activities of the winter.

Brother Ralph Hardy, who is the superintendent of the Sunday school was also chosen as leader for the young people.

Plans are being made for the improvement of the Sunday school. Some equipment for the nursery and kindergarten is to be added to help care for the children.

To this union were born four children; one son and one daughter are dead. She is survived by two children, Edgar, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Beulah Simpson, of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania; one sister, Mrs. Alice Murray, of Blackhawk Township, Pennsylvania. She united with the church November 20, 1887. The funeral was held at her late residence in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, the sermon by Elder E. B. Hull. Interment was in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, Cemetery.

LENTZ.—Charles E. Lentz was born May 15, 1867, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died at his home at Atchison, Kansas, September 28, 1933. He had been engaged in the dry cleaning business at Atchison for twenty-six years and was highly esteemed by his business associates as a straight-forward, industrious, and considerate business man. He and his family were pillars in the support of the church work in his home town. His marriage to Miss Litha Mowery was at Prairie City, Iowa, September 27, 1893. Mrs. Lentz survives as do four children, Mrs. A. B. Kinney, Rich Hill, Missouri; D. M. Lentz, Atchison; and Miss Anna and Frank Lentz, both at home. The funeral was from the home: prayer by Frank G. Hedrick, sermon by J. W. A. Bailey. Burial in Mount Vernon Cemetery; prayer at the grave by Will F. Bolinger.

He united with the church in 1883, and for half a century was a loyal member. Honest in his life, hospitable in his home and kindly disposed to all, his friends were many both in and out of the church. The funeral service was by O. J. Tary, assisted by W. A. Schoenian, and was held in the chapel close to his home. A large gathering of people to pay their last respects, attested the high esteem in which he was held. He was laid to rest in the cemetery adjoining the chapel.

fifty-nine years; he retired when eighty-three. He married Barbara Emmett Hicks, of Pittsfield, February 25, 1869, who was his constant companion for sixty-five years and is left to mourn his departure. To them were born three children: Arthur Hicks Mills and Frank Westle Mills, of Independence, and Mrs. Mabel Underwood, of Pittsfield. In 1884 Mr. Mills brought his family to Independence. He heard the gospel message through Mark H. Forscutt at Pittsfield, and embraced the faith of his father April 16, 1876, being baptized by Jackson Goodale. Was ordained an elder September 6, 1884, and was made pastor of the Pittsfield congregation. Was ordained a high priest April 24, 1901, and at the same time was made a member of the first Standing High Council of the newly-organized Independence Stake. Brother Mills' life was marked by a never-ceasing devotion and loyalty to the faith he had espoused, and in Independence he served it in many ways, particularly in the capacities of superintendent of the Stone Church Sunday school, director of the Stone Church Choir, and member of the board of publication of the church. Only four days before his death, he attended the funeral of his brother, Charles Martin Mills. Besides his immediate family he leaves other relatives and many friends. Sunday, October 8, he celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday, being the recipient of many congratulatory calls and gifts. At bedtime he retired seemingly in the best of spirits and condition. He passed away in his sleep. The funeral service was at the Stone Church, Joseph Luff preaching the sermon, assisted by F. A. Smith. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KAIN.—Bessie Ruth Durbin Kain, daughter of L. Herndon Durbin and Armanelly Durbin, was born at Sandwich, Illinois, November 20, 1883; died at Nauvoo, Illinois, September 20, 1933, while on a motor trip planned to include historic spots in the history of the church. A full and accurate account of her untimely passing appeared in the Nauvoo Independent for September 21, 1933. Sister Kain was the second child in a family of seven brothers and sisters, six of whom, with her father and mother, survive to mourn her. In 1905, she was married to Maurice F. Kain, who died in May, 1920. In her affiliation with the church and in her years of service in public life she made a wide circle of friends who will miss her encouraging smile and her valiant testimony. In the position which she occupied in one of the city's largest hospitals she was able to enact the role of ministering angel on more than one occasion. The closing hours of Sister Kain's life were spent amid surroundings which for years she had cherished the hope of visiting. She reveled in the atmosphere of church lore she found at Nauvoo.

The Pigeonhole

The Pigeon—

Alighted on the window sill of our new office, his beady eyes agleam.

"You've moved, I see," he said. "Now I wonder where you're going to put me?"

"We've been thinking seriously of putting you in the waste basket," we answered, but he ignored our sarcasm.

A Bird's-eye View

"I circled around our peaceful village last evening, and looked in a few windows to see what was there," he informed us. We were shocked.

"That is a low level, even for you. We hadn't quite expected you to become a peeping-tom!" But he remained unruffled.

"I call it by another name. It's according to the motive. A peeping-tom looks from idle and mischievous curiosity. But if you have a good purpose, you call it social service! Scientific, and that sort of thing, you know."

The Lights of the City

"I saw the thousands of lights," he continued, "and they fascinated me. Each light represents a home, I thought. A home where there is love and peace, and happiness. A home that provides a refuge from the bruises and injuries suffered in contact with the world's coldness and brutality."

Then he lapsed into a glum silence.

"Didn't you find what you expected to?"

His look of scorn was more eloquent than words.

Home, Sweet Home

"There were homes, of course, where ideal conditions prevailed; and it made me happy to see them. But there were others. And those others are enough to make you heartsick.

"People can endure a great deal from the world if they can only have peace and happiness at home. But it is the unnecessary cruelties, the great overproduction of misery that is appalling. People nagging and scolding each other, people thwarting each other, plotting against each other, nursing grudges, punishing and hurting each other. Sometimes the children are the victims, sometimes the parents. They can't get away from each other, so they must stay and suffer! It's terrible!"

We could say nothing. We knew the picture to be a true one.

"And they claim they are building Zion!" he said, and flew away.

Promises are like priceless, fragile chinaware, valueless when broken.

The Church Today

"Keep the Law" The church today waits on one thing: the time when the people will decide to observe the spiritual and financial laws which have been given for leading them to a new condition of security, welfare, and happiness. Oddly, the notion is somehow abroad that the spiritual benefits of the gospel can be purchased on credit, and the installments indefinitely delayed. The time has come when we shall either have to pay for Zion, or give it up. "Keep the Law" is the watchword of today. It is the one means of extrication from our present difficulties.

November 12 to December 3 This period has been designated by the First Presidency as a time for the church to devote its energies to the teaching of the financial law. The Presiding Bishopric have done everything in their power to make it possible for the people to be informed on the subject. The adult quarterly for October-December, entitled A Study of the Financial Law (Number 721), has been prepared under their direction for general use. They have also prepared a shorter pamphlet entitled, Handbook of the Financial Law, which is worthy to be a part of the permanent literature of the church. During this period of preparation we can all learn our duty, so that when the time comes we shall be ready to act wisely, devotedly, and considerately, according to our best abilities and convictions.

Tithes and Offerings Many people have spent time worrying about the subject of stewardships when they have neglected the first steps of tithes and offerings. It is a mistake for individuals to think that the great ideals of stewardship can be realized before they have been through the training school of compliance to the law of tithing. That is our next duty.

An Emergency for the Church Even now, in the difficulties we are encountering, the church could be slowly and surely relieved of its burden and freed to send out missionaries in greater numbers, if people would make an effort to obey the financial law. What could be accomplished in better times is difficult to imagine. In this emergency the church officers call on the people to make such efforts as they can, trusting that faith, and loyalty and devotion to the cause will prompt them to do what is within their power to help forward the cause so dear to all.

The World Outlook

Russia Back in the Fold Long laggards, we have at last "recognized" the government of Soviet Russia. But Russia has been winning recognition, both favorable and otherwise, in spite of an unwilling, suspicious, and apprehensive world. And it is fortunate for that world that Russia was too large to invade or attack successfully at the beginning of her experiment, or we would have had the woe and misery of another treaty of Versailles. But Russia, invulnerable to military conquest, is gradually being whipped into line by the relentless operation of the law of economics.

Russians and Christianity Notable improvements have been made in that remarkable country, according to observers. The people have taken to machinery, safety razors, and bath tubs with avidity, though they have yet much to do. Proclaiming themselves "godless" they have despised religion. When one realizes the kind of religion they had, he can hardly blame them. We do not hope that they will rejoin the rest of the nations in the genteel hypocrisy of pretending to be Christians. They have a large gift for sincerity, and it is possible that they will mean it when they decide to go to church again. Revolutionary thinking and singing are poor as foundations for a religion, and lose point when the revolution is accomplished. People revert to the old temptations and sins, and have the same need of rescue from themselves which religion calls salvation, and the same need of consecration to the larger ideals of humanity. The genuineness and beauty of Jesus, His significance, His leadership, may some day burst upon them as a revelation.

Taming the Furies The gradual trend of Russia towards a conventional national existence is a path that has been followed by others. Mussolini is slowly being tamed, and Italy with him. France of the revolution was like nothing that has happened since, yet look at her today. Herr Hitler thinks he is quite something to astonish the world, and he is; but time, diplomacy, and economics—those three master tricksters—will teach him the stately "goose step" that is the pace of civilization.

Revenge Is Futile Germany will now free herself from the chains of her punishment by force when she could not do so by conference. How sad that the world lost so fine an opportunity to be gracious, and drop the whole effort to collect reparations and punish Germany. We weren't big enough to punish her; and we weren't big enough to forgive her at a time when it would have done some good. But the chance is lost. World peace and security are retarded, international relationships strained to the breaking point. Conferences and treaties as substitutes for war are practically paralyzed. The economic conference failed, and the conference on armaments is practically a dead and hopeless issue. We will muddle on another fifty years before we regain the lost ground. We are a long time learning that revenge is utterly futile.

The Hope of Christianity Yet in it all, and despite our sickest discouragements, we see the teachings of Jesus as the only hope for the world. Our every violation of His commandments brings its inevitable train of misery and suffering. All other ideals that we have tried—individualism, imperialism, and the rest—have but led us astray. There is no weakness in our faith in God. That is unshakeable. It is our faith in men that falters. Yet we have hope that men can and will learn, even if "by the things that they suffer." Suffering and learning will eventually force the world to some recognition and practice, however limited, of the principles of Christ.

Plays and Program Materials

Church plays have appeared at various times in our publications, Departments' Journal and Vision. Although these are mostly out of print, we can furnish copies to those who desire them, reproduced either in mimeograph or otherwise, at cost. A request, with a three-cent stamp for reply, from those who are interested, will bring a list and the details of this offer.

We have recently had submitted for our use carefully selected lists of plays and program materials for Hallowe'en, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas. The materials have been tested for production and are such as may well be chosen for church use. A large selection of nonroyalty materials are available at reasonable prices.

Write us your needs, specifying number of characters deserved, space available for production, time limit, etc. A dramatic specialist will recommend selections.

What Would Jesus Say to Us?

"Friend, go up higher." Those are the words of Jesus, spoken in a parable to the guests of a certain chief of the Pharisees. (The story is told in Luke 14.)

It seems that these guests were proudly vying with one another for the best places in the home of their host. According to the Hebrew custom more distinguished guests were given places of honor importance. And Jesus, seeing each man eager to exalt himself in this manner, must have been saddened by their false pride, for he warned them: "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." He advised them to start humbly in order that they might be candidates for promotion, for exaltation.

Sometimes I frankly wonder what the Master would say to us if he were among us in the flesh as he was two thousand years ago. In revelation he has spoken to us, inviting us to follow him and to live his law and not to be intolerant, stiff-necked, socially ambitious, aggressive in our gain of power and position. What would the Galilean who uttered such words as "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven," say about the way we are living? He was the One who came to give us the life more abundant, and yet he made it plain that we must be worthy of this gift; he said, "if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." In support of these divine teachings James wrote: "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up."

And what of humility? I think all of us need a closer acquaintance with this virtue. Webster describes and defines it as the "state or quality of being humble in spirit; freedom from pride and arrogance." One who is truly and sincerely humble has a modest estimate of his own worth. To be humble a man must be large of soul, broad in comprehension and understanding, forgiving, honest with himself and others. He must have in his heart a deep and lasting love of God and his laws.

If Jesus were to come among us today, at this very hour, what do you think he would say to us? Would he find us working humbly and harmoniously together? Would he be able to say with the light of approval in his eyes, "Friend, go up higher"?

A "KEEP THE LAW" SERVICE

By C. G. Mesley

(An offering service based on the idea of a righteous king of Israel.)

ONE OF THE MAJOR PROBLEMS in the teaching of our financial law seems to be centered in the difficulties that our people have in actually making out and handing in their inventories. One girl said, "Here, I've carried this inventory around for three months. If I don't give it to you now it will be worn out." Another said, "I guess the church is needing some money, I must pay some tithing soon." Some tithing soon! Still others say, "Someday I want to file my inventory to find out how my account with God stands." Someday! Only a meager few are not converted to the truth of the divine law but thousands say "soon," "someday," "yes, I must take care of this."

Because of this attitude towards God's law our people have suffered a loss of spiritual blessings and life. The Lord says, "Until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, . . . the church cannot enjoy the blessings which have been looked for. . . . Hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration . . . conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and pure in heart." (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.) We today come under the condemnation of "Zion might have been redeemed even now"—if—we need to make that "someday" today.

The following suggestive service may be used at the conclusion of the "Keep the Law" period. During this effort it is presumed that through teaching, visiting, preaching and personal solicitation, a large number of the branch will have made ready to comply with the law.

December 3 may be set aside as the day in which all the people may gather and as a united group pledge themselves to keep the law. At this service it would be appropriate for them to bring their inventory, tithes and offerings, to the Lord and then not only those who have complied with the law but those who did not would feel the spiritual blessing that would come as a united body of Saints moved forward in their determination to keep God's holy law.

Such a service would not be a display of giving. It would rather be a public acknowledgment of our individual determination to cease delaying the cause of Zion. In many ways it would parallel the sacrament service or the public baptism service and its total effect is very inspiring.

JOASH' CHEST OFFERING SERVICE

4. Prayer.
5. Prayer Response: "The Lord's Prayer," Hymnal, 315.
6. Hymn, "Take My Life and Let It Be," Hymnal, 307.
7. Scripture—The Story of the chest of Joash.

In the seventh year of Jehu, Joash began to reign and he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all his days.

And it came to pass that Joash was minded to repair the house of the Lord and he gathered together the priests and the Levites.

And at the king's command they made a chest of juniper wood and overlaid it with brass. All the outside covered they with brass.

And they set it beside the altar on the right side as one cometh into the house of the Lord.

And they made a proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the Lord the offering that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness, even the tithe for the work of the Lord's house.

And all the princes and the people rejoiced and brought in and cast into the chest until they had made an end.

Now it came to pass that the chest was filled and they brought it into the king's office by the hand of the Levites. And the king's scribe and the high priest came up and told the offering that was found in the house of the Lord.

Thus they did day by day for all the people gave of their means.

And they gave the money being told into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the Lord.

Moreover they reckoned not with the men into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed upon the workmen that wrought upon the house of the Lord, for they dealt faithfully.

So the workmen wrought and the work was perfected by them and they set the house of God in his state and strengthened it.

And when they had finished it the princes and the people rejoiced together and they went up to the house of the Lord rejoicing.

Scriptures selected from 2 Kings 12; 2 Chronicles 24.

8. Talk, "The Offerings We May Bring." A fifteen-minute talk that would take the Joash story and clearly and explicitly tell of the gifts that each member may bring to the altar. Include in these the gift of our obedience to the laws of God.
9. The presenting of our gifts. Here the congregation, row by row as directed by the ushers, file by the chest of Joash and deposit their inventories, tithes and offerings.
10. The prayer of dedication.
11. Hymn, "I Would Be True," Hymnal, 294.
12. Organ Postlude.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE SERVICE

If the service is planned at the same hour in which the sacrament is served, a large old chest may be conveniently placed near the altar table. If possible the chest should look like one of ancient Israel. These were generally covered with beaten metal or tooled leather. The chest should be partially filled with some convenient material so that after the service it gives the appearance of being full to overflowing with the offerings of the people.

The service may then begin with the hymn, "Take My Life and Let It Be," and the talk or sermonette carry over the theme of the offerings that Christ made for us, followed by the idea of the offerings that we bring.

However, if a more elaborate service is desired at a time other than the sacrament service, an ancient Hebrew altar may be improvised—possibly from a raised table covered with a sheet and on it a seven-branched candlestick be placed. Then at the appropriate time two men dressed as high priests of Israel may come down the aisle carrying the chest on their shoulders. While the gifts are brought they may stand on either side of the altar and at the conclusion of the service they can ceremoniously carry out the chest. A tall candle to represent the spirit of the law may be placed on a small altar table in front of the large altar, but on the same floor level as the congregation.

Place a supply of long tapers on this table and as each person deposits their offering in the chest and passes by the table he can light his taper from the large candle and carry it back to his seat. If the lights are dimmed the whole room presently becomes illumined by the little lights of many tapers (which if held upright may be kept alight until the end of the service) a symbol of the truth that many people obeying the law can bring the great light of the gospel to others.

To give uniformity to the offering of the gifts, special legal size envelopes may be prepared. They may be printed thus:

MY ACCOUNT WITH GOD

——filed in recognition of His law
——deposited to acknowledge His bounty
——for the building of His Kingdom

Do We Believe In Education?

By Dorothy Pinkerton

JOHN RUSKIN once wrote: "Education does not mean teaching people what they do not know. It means teaching them to behave as they do not behave. It is not teaching the youth the shape of letters and the tricks of numbers, and then leaving them to turn their arithmetic to roguery and their literature to lust. It means, on the contrary, training them into the perfect exercise and kingly continence of their bodies and souls. It is a painful, continual and difficult work to be done by kindness, by watching, by warning, by precept, and by praise, but above all—by example." It is evident that the responsibility is not entirely on the student.

One does not need to be a college professor or have a master's degree to be well educated. "There is quite as much education and true learning in the analysis of an ear of corn as the analysis of a complex sentence; ability to analyze clover and alfalfa roots savors of quite as much culture as does the study of the Latin and Greek roots." (Benson.)

Earnest Thompson Seton tells us that the first aim of education is manhood. If this aim meets the approval of the student and his teacher everything is pleasant. Wu-Ting-Fang, the Chinese diplomat, believes, "The more a man is educated, the more it is necessary for the welfare of the state to instruct him how to make proper use of his talents. Education is like a double-edged sword. It may be turned to dangerous usages if it is not properly handled." If one does use his education to disadvantage, where does the blame rest? On God? On education?

However, Huxley writes that Nature is the teacher. "It is important to remember, that in strictness, there is no such thing as an uneducated man. Nature would begin to teach him, through the eye, the ear, the touch, the properties of objects. Pain and pleasure would be at his elbow telling him to do this and avoid that; and by slow degrees the man would receive an education, which if narrow, would be thorough, real, and adequate to his circumstances, though there would be no extras and very few accomplishments."

The Lord placed education in high standing—through his servants it was delivered thus: "Happy is the man who findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding, for the gaining of it is better than the gaining of silver, and the profit thereof than fine gold." (Proverbs 3:13, 14.) Again in Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." The Doctrine and Covenants defines truth as, "the knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." Again, "The glory of God is intelligence."

STRANGE TO SAY, some people believe that God can use uneducated men to better advantage than the educated ones. If that is true, then God can use even more ignorant men until it is not at all preposterous to believe that the Lord's appointed would so decline until the ministers of this church would be morons and imbeciles! The Bible also replies to those who are disciples of ignorance. "He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and the strife of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings." (Timothy.)

Some would have us think that education is not necessary to the priesthood. This is what Hosea says, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge, I will reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me." Again in Proverbs: "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; yea with thy getting get understanding."

God approves of applying ourselves to learning, or why would we have the following revelation, "And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my Scriptures and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God, and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion." Would you have me believe Zion could be redeemed without this? Even when the church was first organized, the leaders recognized the need for education in the priesthood. In the Millennial Star, Brother Joseph wrote, "We are making preparation for the school of the elders, wherein they might be more perfectly instructed in the great things of God." Later, "Our school for the elders was well attended. The lectures on theology absorbed everything of temporal nature." In this school, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin were taught, as well as classes in grammar, history and geography. We find recorded in the Church History, "Tues. 19TH—Spent the day at school. The Lord blessed us in our studies. This day we commenced reading in our Hebrew Bibles with much success. It seems as though the Lord opens our minds in a marvelous manner to understand his work in the original language; and it is my prayer that God will speedily endue us with a knowledge of all languages and tongues, that his servants may go forth for the last time to bind up the law and seal up the testimony."

Frequently we hear someone say, "But God will make it manifest what to do and say." We will grant that God can do this—but God isn't going to tell us what to do and say when we have an opportunity to learn of ourselves.

Educated members, either priesthood or lay members, have an advantage over the uneducated ones. "For wisdom is defense" Ecclesiastes states, "but the excellency of knowledge is that wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it." This preservation deals with physical as well as spiritual life. "A wise man is strong, yea, a man of knowledge increaseth strength."

All the leaders of the church saw the need of educating our young people in our church program. Reprinted in the Saints' Herald were the following paragraphs, "Etiquette is not found in the camp; neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by the schools of the Gentiles; church property contributes to the stability of the work, and we need a school wherein to educate our own young men. As discipline detracts not from the courage of the soldier, neither would a proper ministerial education detract from the piety and earnestness of the ambassadors of truth. But on the contrary would give confidence, couple wisdom with their knowledge, and judgment with their zeal."

It behooves us as Latter Day Saints, to try so to educate ourselves that we will understand all things that will aid the forwarding of God's work. If we are in such a state we will be recognized more quickly by the interested as professed believers of Jesus Christ; followers who understand things temporal, physical and spiritual.

The late President Joseph Smith in his article, "The Situation," wrote: "If a people would be free, they must be intelligent, and intelligence other than the Spirit must be cultivated, and cultivation must be had in the schools; and these schools to be effective for the people must be of and by the people."

What Is Man Without Education?

Education is a companion which no misfortune can suppress,
No enemy alienate, no power destroy.
At home a friend; abroad an introduction.
In society an ornament; in solitude a solace.
It lessens vice; it guards virtue.
It gives at once a grace and a government to genius.
Without it—what is man?
A splendid slave, a reasoning savage, vacillating between the dignity and intelligence derived from God and the degradations of brutal passions.

Twenty Baptized at Council Bluffs

Elder E. Y. Hunker closed a highly successful series of missionary meetings at Council Bluffs, Iowa, a short time ago during which twenty candidates were baptized. Attendance and interest were splendid, and a number of nonmembers are now investigating the gospel teachings.

Priesthood of Seven Nationalities

Seven nationalities were represented in the priesthood which administered the sacrament to Honolulu, Hawaii, Saints at their rally day services early in August. THE NRA AND THE CHURCH

A Communication From the Presiding Bishopric

By L. F. P. Curry

CONSIDERABLE CURIOSITY not unmixed with anxiety is being felt as to the effect of the national industrial recovery program upon the church. In connection with the plans for intensive teaching of the law, November 12 to December 3, it is timely to comment upon this subject. The NRA is laying its hand upon almost every business in this country, and its requirements must be met whether they bring good or ill. Churches have adopted no "code of fair competition," yet the codes under which proceed the activities of their members, must have a far-reaching effect upon religious organizations, our own not excepted.

It is unnecessary to study the situation from any other standpoint than that of our own church, and for us the first point to consider is the status of unemployment under the NRA. The principal object of the recovery program is to put men back to work, and the country is virtually united in believing the objective to be a very essential one if more severe suffering—and, some even think, disorder—is to be avoided this fall and coming winter. General Hugh S. Johnson has issued various statements about reemployment, and readers are doubtless familiar with them. Very recently, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, made the claim, based upon reports from affiliated organizations, that unemployment had been reduced 20% from its peak last March, with 2,800,000 persons returned to work, including 815,000 reemployed in August. He contends that 11,000,000 are still jobless.

SUCH FIGURES are inconclusive because no truly reliable statistics concerning labor are available in this country. Taking Mr. Green's figure as a general picture, however, one must admit that a very large army remains idle. Taking poor and good years together, it is estimated that at least 1,500,000 are constantly idle; even in 1917-18, when everyone was supposed to be employed, an estimate appeared that 1,000,000 were out of work. If the ordinary number of unemployed is deducted from Mr. Green's 11,000,000, the excess unemployment at this time, at a guess, may be 9,500.000.

The unemployment situation is aggravated by an unusually large number of strikes or walkouts in the industrial centers. To mention only a few examples, as of a recent date there was a 100% tie-up of automotive tool and die shops in Detroit; The Ford Motor Company assembly plant at Chester, Pennsylvania, was closed; 1,000 men were out at the Bayonne, New Jersey, plant of the American Radiator Company; 5,000 men were out at the Weirton Steel Company plant, Weirton, West Virginia, and steel mills in the near-by Pittsburgh district were being picketed; the bituminous coal industry was greatly disturbed, leading to intervention on the part of President Roosevelt. No statistics exist as to the total number affected by these struggles, but it is undoubtedly large. For the present, at least, there is grave reason to fear that "capital" and "labor" have been driven further apart by the NRA.

NOT SUFFICIENT TIME has elapsed to permit tracing fully the recovery which may have occurred under the NRA. A fair question exists, also, as to whether recovery in certain lines may not be traceable to other causes, it being clear that in some instances an upward swing had begun as far back as 1932. But some recovery, whatever the explanation, is visible, and few would pause to quarrel over the causes. Readers are familiar with the rise in prices in varied fields which has taken place. In fact, it is feared that the rise in the general price level has outstripped wage advances. Greater volumes of material are moving. The American Railway Association reports that the loading of revenue freight for the week ended September 30, was 661,827 cars, an increase over the preceding week of 9,158 cars, and an increase over the corresponding week in 1932 of 40,169 cars. Miscellaneous freight, grain, grain products, and ore were the only classes declining below the level of the previous week. More industries have been brought under the codes, with presumed resultant stabilization of employment. Walter C. Teagle, member of the Industrial Advisory Board, stated October 7 that 48 codes have been adopted, affecting 4,500,000 men, one fifth of the workers in the country. Twenty-one million are to come under codes, and there are said to be nearly 1,000 codes awaiting Washington's approval. Pay rolls have increased. To mention one example only, cotton textiles, the September pay roll for the industry was $27,000,000, in March $12,800,000.

The serious aspect of the movement is the extent to which American industry can support the load of increased costs before (Continued on page 1362)

The Work of Adults in the Church . . . . . .

By C. B. Woodstock

MUCH EMPHASIS has been given in recent months to the work of young people in the church. It is a matter of much congratulation that almost without exception young people's groups, local, district and stake, have responded splendidly. Not long ago young people were saying, "Why doesn't the church do something for us?" Now they are saying, "We are ready to work, what can we do for the church?" And this is one of the most hopeful signs of the present day. Under that spirit, with wise, sympathetic leadership and cooperation, the church may go forward in its program.

But this does not reduce adult responsibility! Attention is now turning to the adult division. What may be done to clarify our vision, to increase our efficiency in the work of the church? What tasks may we assume with new vigor and carry forward with new enthusiasm? How may we secure the training and make the mental and spiritual development necessary to qualify us to help build effectively the Zion of today and tomorrow? What are the immediate goals toward which we should be daily striving if we are to give the youth of our day the inspiration and leadership they need and deserve? How may we make our homes more truly Zionic, and our economic production more worthy of divine blessing? How may we render a more true accounting of our stewardship and make a substantial contribution to the redemption of Zion? These and similar questions command attention.

Present Emphases in the Adult Program

1. Study current materials.
   Keep up with the church.
2. Recognize financial obligations.
   Pay tithes consistently and regularly.
3. Active, efficient women's groups.
   In local welfare work.
   In family stewardship responsibility.
   In girl leadership.
4. Branch service and duty.
   To supply efficient teachers and leaders as needed, and to lend constant support to the constructive work of the church.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL is planned to provide the opportunities for learning and for growth anticipated in the gospel plan. It is essentially a place for personal activity; in study, in discussion, in worship and in rich experience under guidance as the principles of gospel truth are put into actual practice. The idea embraces all those studies and group activities provided by the branch to assist in the total educational task of the church. We must look upon classes and working groups of the church school as units of the total effort, all closely related and integrated, each under responsible leadership, but all more or less directly responsible to the pastor.

In any discussion of an adult program we must place first in importance the training and work of the priesthood. While there are other essential factors which also condition the development and work of a righteous people we must look for instruction, inspiration and blessing to a divinely authorized priesthood, in touch with God, trained, consecrated, and active in service. Naturally this part of the adult program is being provided and directed by the administrative quorums of the church. While the church school has no jurisdiction here, its plan should include the fullest possible cooperation with the pastor to provide classes suited to the needs of the priesthood.

Under the church school plan we may recognize four main provisions for adults in the church school. The first, or study groups, would include regular class work on Sunday and that provided during the week for adults. Generous provision for information and inspiration is made in the adult materials of the church school, some five or six recently prepared quarterlies, in full-year series, in addition to several pamphlet series. Special stress and urge must be placed upon the use of current materials. They are fresh, vigorous, timely. They represent the best thought and effort of the present hour. They are designed to help meet the immediate needs of the church and its members.

THE FINANCIAL LAW. The adult quarterly is in its third year of a five-year series. The Message of the Book of Mormon and A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants have appeared and have been generously studied in the past two years. This year we have, A Study of the Financial Law. In the two years to follow provision is now made for a year's study each in Our Church History and Bible Study.

Especially on Sunday morning should adult

classes be seriously engaged in a study of these most vital materials. On other class periods through the week studies may be chosen from the range of electives, but this hour should be reserved in all the church for the use of the current quarterly. This is the year when, under the direction of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, we give major emphasis in our study to The Financial Law.

NEXT FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY. As never before in the history of the church are we becoming aware of the necessity for consistent observance of the financial law. Never has there been more need for frugal living, for wise and careful expenditure, for the blessing of heaven upon a consecrated nine tenths after the Lord's share has been paid. Never has the financial need of the church been more acute. Unfortunately, the work of the Lord must often wait until our desire to spend what we have in hand is satisfied. We render obedience in baptism, we desire membership in the church and claim all the blessings of a covenant people, but few have learned to comply fully with the conditions of the covenant that makes us "builders together with God." We cannot rob God by withholding our tithes and offerings and expect the windows of heaven to be opened to us in either material or spiritual blessing.

If we would prove God "herewith" we will studiously, prayerfully seek to understand the law, and enter at once upon a consistent observance. We will render a just and full accounting, we will live frugally, we will consistently pay the tithe of our income above our actual necessities, and we will pay it weekly or monthly, as the "first fruits" of our increase. Adults must lead the way.

ANOTHER DIVISION comprises the work of the women. In every branch of the church there are interests which can best be served by women's groups and women leaders. Women are homemakers, and have given into their charge the sacred mission of home building and home welfare work. Continually leaders must be ever-better qualified and the women of the church trained through their own endeavor in the knowledges, skills and arts which shall make "Zion the Beautiful" an ever-nearing reality.

The welfare of the church and its people depends much upon the skilled service that can be rendered by its women. By action of the General Conference of 1930 provision was made for the organization of women's groups in every branch of the church to work under the general direction of the pastor. Recognizing the field of women's activities as being a very important part of the total adult program of the branch, it was advised in the Church School Handbook, that a women's group leader be chosen to supervise women's activities throughout the week. Such a leader may also be the adult supervisor in a small branch or she may be chosen for this specific work as an associate with the adult supervisor.

Thus the work of women is provided for by the branch authorities in the same manner as would be any other phase of branch activity. It is customary and logical for the women's group leader to be chosen by the branch as are supervisors of the church school. In most cases she is nominated by the pastor and church school director, the choice being approved by the branch or the women's group. Or, with approval of the pastor, the women's group leader may be chosen directly by the women of the group. In any event the work of the group should be developed in harmony with all other phases of church school and branch activity.

WE ARE MORE CONCERNED at this point, however, with the nature and scope of women's group work. Women leaders are asking for more specific assignment, or the adoption of certain church-wide projects into which they may throw their energies. From our correspondence, from personal conferences, and from the experience of women's groups in Zion, we are privileged to suggest and urge the following:

A. LOCAL WELFARE WORK. This includes the sewing and aid of former years, providing for the poor and needy. But it may be vastly extended to supply needed aid and comfort of any form under the direction of the pastor and deacon, or at the suggestion of a "friendly visitor" appointed by the pastor. It may also include the raising of funds by suitable methods for local and general church expenses.

B. FAMILY STEWARDSHIP. This is an almost limitless field into which few have entered. It may include classes or groups in the study and observance of the financial law, groups to study and apply efficient methods of food preparation, clothing the family, beautifying the home, family budgeting and expense record keeping, child health and welfare, religious education in the home, family worship and similar undertakings which lend themselves to actual participation by the women in carrying into effect the principles necessary for the building of Zion. We learn most rapidly and effectively through doing the thing which we find should be done. In all of the above, husbands and fathers must share in the development, but in most cases we may depend upon wives and mothers to lead the way.

Heard In Prayer Meeting

By F. M. S.

We are at times inclined to think that in the average prayer meeting there is a monotonous repetition of expression and when we think that in testimony there are likely to be some distinctly fundamental ideas it is quite certain that there will be common features to most, if not all, of the "testimonies." But despite this fact, if one will look for distinctive features of these expressions of thankfulness and aspiration, it will be discovered that there is a pleasing variation.

As a visitor to and participant in the work of several reunions this summer, it has been my lot to be present in many prayer meetings, Park of the Pines, Kirtland, Cash, Michigan, etc. In one of the testimonies I was struck by an almost unique expression. I made note of it, and put on the alert, I listened more attentively for others, and I discovered that very many if not all the testimonies had these distinctive features. So I kept on making notes. Now I am passing on to those who choose to follow my writings and notes:

"I thank God for the blessings of the past, but more especially for the promises of the future."

That has a forward looking spirit which caught my fancy, and I later used it for a text in speaking of the unfinished tasks of the church. It is well that we shall appreciate and give thanks to Deity for what he has done for us; but we should, at the same time, keep our eyes on our goals; for those goals have been pointed out to us in language containing the contingent promises of blessing to follow the achievement of our objectives. From an individual viewpoint to foregoing reminds me of what I heard some years ago in a prayer meeting: "The sacrifices and sufferings of the past are as naught; he who endureth to the end shall be saved."

So let us in gratitude for past blessings keep our eyes in the future, and be spurred on by the promises which hold the hope of the future.

The good which may be derived from prayer and testimony meetings is reflected in this tersely put sentence: "My soul has been fed." The chief purpose of prayer meetings is to feed on food divine, and that is what sustains the soul.

Appreciating how many "hurdles" there are to take in the life of a Christian and particularly a people with tasks as great as ours, one tersely yet adequately expresses a right desire when he exclaims:

"I want to be an overcomer."

"I have been slothful in my duties."

If we were frank, how many must share in this confession. We know what we should do but find excuse of some frail kind or another to procrastinate. And to procrastinate means to be slothful.

"I want to have faith equal to my task."

To accomplish our task in the church in a spiritual way, requires especially faith. "We walk by faith, not by sight," says Paul. So to desire faith according to our tasks parallels the promise made of old, that "as our day so shall our faith be."

To save ourselves from this untoward generation expresses our group objective, but there is the individual aspect of each saving his own soul by divine grace and the power of the gospel. One speaker humbly expressed the desire to have a soul worth saving. He said:

"I want so to live that my soul may be worth saving."

There is the expressed hope and determination to work out one's own salvation. A good thought that.

One speaker put his finger on the point of our greatest weakness when he said:

"We fail to heed the counsels of God."

One speaker with a lipsus lingua quaintly turned a phrase which one might say is part of the "vernacular of the redeemed." To be kept in the hollow of God's hand is a desire lying close to the heart of all Christians. In the testimony of one I heard the expressed desire to be kept in "the hollow hand of God."

"Do we properly appreciate our blessings?" asks another. At times, no! Some, yes. But we ought not only to cultivate the faculty of "properly appreciating our blessings," but expressing to Deity our thanks and gratitude both in private as well as in public.

"I am truly thankful," says another. Note the qualifying word, truly. To be thankful is one thing, to be truly so is another.

"May I take this spirit home with me."

This expresses what many of us, perhaps all, feel at times in prayer meeting.

"I want to continue to trust God."

Trust in God is (Continued on page 1362)

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Influenza

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

I lately received a letter from Brother Rushton enclosing a clipping from the Manchester Evening News in which a sensational statement is made that a lady had thrown herself from a bedroom window because of the after effects of influenza. Her husband, a poultry farmer, corroborated the findings of Mr. R. Rowland, an East Lanchashire coroner, that she came to her death as a result of the after effects of this disease which left her with a nervous complaint. The jury's verdict was that the deceased committed suicide while of unsound mind due to this complication. The coroner, after receiving this verdict, remarked that according to the latest medical publication influenza was a contagious epidemic with great prostration and that it brought in its train depression sufficient to unbalance the mind and said furthermore, "I offer the pious hope to the medical profession that they will direct their talent to the discovery of some means of curing influenza in such a manner as to prevent these troublesome after effects." The cases of mental instability after influenza are definitely on the increase. Perhaps it is beyond the medical profession, but one would think that research may produce some results. If one life can be saved as a result, it would be well worth any effort expended.

The request of the coroner could be more easily complied with if the physicians had more cooperation from the public. Many such cases as described by the newspaper clipping are brought about by disobedience to the physicians' instructions. Many patients discontinue treatment too soon after an attack and resort to intoxicating liquor, hoping to overcome the prostration, which only makes it worse; and this together with some patent medicine fraud, night club life, errors in diet, etc., produces disastrous results. It is no wonder that some of these cases have an unbalanced mind and jump from the top of a high building, shoot themselves, or take poison.

According to the best available reports I have, among those who comply with the health authorities and attending physicians, the mortality and complications are extremely low. In order that the Herald readers may understand this disease I wish to say that influenza is an acute, highly communicable disease, distinguished by its epidemics. It has been traced back with certainty into the sixteenth century. Although years, and often decades have passed without any special attention being called to the disease, suddenly cases of it will appear in nearly all parts of the world at the same time. In 1830 and 1833 it traversed almost all of Asia and Europe. Then it almost disappeared for a time with the exception of a few small epidemics and became almost unknown until it made its widespread appearance in the winter of 1889-90. The onset is very sudden, the fever lasting only about three days, and if prolonged some complications should be suspected, especially bronchitis or pneumonia. It usually attacks the mucous membranes of the nose and other parts of the respiratory tract, and is accompanied by chilly sensations, dry cough, watery eyes, pains in the head, sneezing, hoarseness, and deafness. The prostration is out of all proportion to the fever and lesions. The disease itself is not so dangerous, but the complications are often fatal. These include inflammation of the brain, heart complications, tuberculosis, insanity, melancholia, neuritis, etc. Various complications may be more severe and variable after some epidemics. It is no respecter of persons, attacking all ages and both sexes. The epidemic during 1918-19 seemed to have a predilection for strong, sturdy, robust young men. It attacks the rich and poor alike, the dirty, the weak, and the clean; therefore, sanitation and hygiene have practically no effect in controlling this disease. In this respect it is like measles and smallpox. It is a spray borne disease, the afflicted person often projecting infected particles into the air by not taking care to cover the nose with a handkerchief or cloth while sneezing or coughing, and noninfected persons who necessarily come in contact with influenza patients, such as nurses or attendants, should take great care to avoid breathing air which has been infected through coughing or sneezing by the patient. It is most likely to attack persons whose resistance is low. One of the best protections against influenza is to maintain as high resistance by regular use of food rich in vitamins such as spinach, lettuce, greens, and other fresh fruits and vegetables. Lowered resistance may be the result of lack of sleep, overwork, underfeeding, worry, or any other depressing influence. Artificial sunlight or natural sunlight will help, and those who spend as much time as possible out of doors and who keep their skins tanned a dark brown need have no fear of this disease that is so destructive. All cases afflicted with influenza would do well to drink an abundance of water and fruit juices. Orange juice is especially good. The drinking of an abundance of water aids the kidneys in eliminating the poison, which is a great aid in keeping up the resistance. In some cases oxygen has been (Continued on page 1364)

The Royal Road

Mrs. Blaine Has Her Own Ideas

LARRY had hoped to spend an hour alone with Eldred Hampton that evening, but when she returned to the living room after the dinner hour, she found Mrs. Blaine, who lived in one of Eldred's apartments, ensconced in the most comfortable chair in the room, her long white hands folded in her lap. But her tongue was by no means idle; indeed Mrs. Blaine bid fair to see the evening through just where she was. She was talking steadily to Mrs. Hampton, who sat sewing, and frequently she paused to demand Doc's attention from his evening paper.

"Well, if it isn't Larry!" She gave her voice a rising inflection which always made the girl nervous. "Now, now, young lady," and she playfully shook a finger in Larry's direction, "I've been learning things about you. Something was going on between you and your young man night before last, now, wasn't there!"

There was the same inquisitive ring in her tone that one hears in the voice of a tea leaf reader when she says: "Now you're in love, ain'tcha, dearie?" Larry resented it, but she smiled what Nancy called her "bafflingest." "Why?" she parried.

"Well, I'm not an old woman, but I wasn't born yesterday, and I know young fellows don't bolt home at the rate of speed Gregory Spurgeon did that night without a cause. The girls and I had been to see the show at the Picture Palace—by the way it was "Love in the Raw" with Kenneth Keats, and he was wonderful!—and Greg almost passed without seeing us at all. Acted as if he was studying the air, or something, and made a pass at his hat when he was clear past us. 'Now,' I said to the girls, 'see there; somethin's happened up in Mrs. Hampton's parlor. I wonder if that Larry girl ain't treatin' her young man nice.'"

DOC was not reading his paper. His blue eyes glimmered at Larry just above the top of the sheet. Not even his glasses could hide that teasing light. Larry could have pinched Mrs. Blaine.

"We'd been talking," she hoped she sounded as noncommital as she wanted to.

"Talking?" Mrs. Blaine wagged her head doubtfully.

"Well, now you know, Mrs. Blaine, a girl like Larry could say more in one sentence to stir a young fellow up than you or I could in a whole chapter," Doc contributed to the conversation.

People who did not like Mrs. Blaine, and there were several of them, declared that one reason she spent so much time in Eldred Hampton's living room was not the charm of Eldred's own personality, but that of her boarder, Joe Dockerly. Whether Doc or Eldred had heard this piece of gossip Larry had no idea.

"All of which hasn't told me a thing," dryly returned Mrs. Blaine, "but I have my own ideas, I do. Gregory didn't look exactly happy if I may say it. I declare, Larry, you're as bad as my Carmen; she won't tell me a thing about her love affair!"

"Good reason," grimly thought Larry as she ransacked the contents of the magazine rack, "if she did, the whole neighborhood would know it before nightfall!" Doc had returned to his paper. It was almost time for Greg to telephone. She hoped Mrs. Blaine would conclude her call before that time; it was quite likely, however, that she would not. The telephone was in the front hall, but Mrs. Blaine had sharp ears, and she would undoubtedly hear everything that was said.

Then the two older women launched themselves into a discussion of bargains offered by the stores, the cost of cabbage, school news, and church.

MRS. BLAINE'S TWO DAUGHTERS were pretty girls. Carmen, the older of the two, was a clerk in a store on the city square, and Sallie Ruth was a junior in high school. Carmen was a quiet girl-woman with unfathomable, blue eyes, dark hair, and a lovely mouth. She was the family wage earner, and she and John Hampton were engaged to be married. She was extremely loyal to her family and never, to Larry's knowledge, discussed her selfish and eccentric mother with anyone, but smiled beguilingly at the world through those blue eyes. If one did not know her, and few people did, he caught himself wondering about the thoughts of the owner of those eyes.

Sometimes John spoke of his fiancee as a mystic. Eldred Hampton said that she had the power of concentration to a much greater degree than other people; Doc pronounced her a "great girl," and Larry liked her from afar. Though they lived in the same house, they seldom saw each other; they were barely acquainted. But once when the two had been alone on the circular front porch in the late fall, Carmen had paused long enough in the reading of a book to give Larry a dazzling smile and observe: "I notice Gregory Spurgeon is calling on you these days, Larry. He's a good boy. I've known him since grade school days, and he's the real thing through and through." Carmen had a way of speaking simply, of using trite phrases, but they never sounded dull or depressing.

This was a sedate speech for a girl when she looked as though she would like to discuss ribbons and laces, and the newest rouge, and sheer silk hose. Larry sometimes felt strange about her, as if she were a sort of a prophetess, and would one day tell and do great things. But she admired Carmen even though she was compelled to accept most of her impressions of her second-handed, from Eldred or John or Doc.

Eldred Hampton and Carmen had one principal interest in common, and that was John. Doc sometimes took the girl riding "just to get her away from that old hen of a mother," he would disrespectfully observe, and declare that it was hard on her with John gone off to school.

SALLIE RUTH, on the other hand, though she looked very much like Carmen, seemed utterly different in disposition. She was her mother's favorite, and all her life had had pretties and parties showered on her because she was a "sickly" child. The only time Larry had ever known of her being honestly ill was once when she ate the most of a three-pound box of chocolates John had given Carmen for her birthday, all in one evening. Then the doctor had been frantically summoned, and Mrs. Blaine had wrung her white hands sobbing, "She's going to die! She's going to die! My baby's going to die—I just know she is!" The entire Hampton household had spent a miserable night, kept awake by Sallie Ruth's lusty groans and her mother's wailings. She was a spoiled, giddy little thing, given to whining and grumbling.

"I'm thinking about getting Sallie Ruth a new dress," Mrs. Blaine was saying.

"A new dress?" repeated Eldred Hampton; "but hasn't she had two or three already this year?"

"Two, but you see she was almost out of something to wear."

"Didn't you get her a suit and some blouses new in the fall and that good leather coat?"

"School things—they were only school things," sniffed the other.

"But even school things if they are well kept, should last longer than that.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It seems to me, Mrs. Blaine, a girl shouldn't have too many clothes when she goes to school. Sometimes too many pretty dresses give her funny ideas."

"Oh, I don't think so. I like my girls to be neat and well dressed. They're only young once, and you see, after all, Mrs. Hampton, you didn't send a girl to school—yours was a boy." The smile which accompanied this speech was smugly superior.

LARRY, having found her magazine, settled herself in the corner of the divan, and thought a trifle hostilely that, judging from appearances, Carmen was the one who deserved the new clothes in the Blaine family. It was all right that she wore a three-year-old suit and homemade blouses—Eldred Hampton said she did—and dresses picked from bargain racks.

But no one liked the blue-eyed girl the less for her old wardrobe. Larry felt as though somehow Carmen Blaine were especially endowed by fate. She was not jealous of Carmen, just bewildered by her quiet, apparently contented yet utterly baffling demeanor.

Reflectively watching Mrs. Blaine, the girl turned a page of her magazine. She could not have told a word on that page, but it was fun sometimes just to let her thoughts run afield like so many frolicsome puppies; that is it was fun until the puppies tore someone's silk stockings. Then snap!—she was back in the present.

It was time for Greg to call!

Mrs. Blaine was airing her views about the women's sacrifice campaign, a movement given weekly attention by the women's department. "I just don't think it's right to expect so much of us!" she pettishly declared. "After all, you can sacrifice and sacrifice all your life for the church, and then when you get old and need help, does the church give it back to you? It does not—it can't afford it—it's too poor! Why I could tell you of many an instance where people who have paid and paid and worked hour upon hour, were embarrassed in their years of infirmities by some inquisitive church official."

Larry wished the woman would not get excited when she talked, for her voice took on an almost-about-to crack edge that was nerve racking.

"On the other hand, I could remind you of instance after instance, where such people have been helped and helped far beyond the means of the church," Eldred Hampton replied with spirit. "Of course, I believe the Bible where it says it is better to be obedient than it is to sacrifice. If we are obedient, if we had been obedient all these years to the financial and spiritual law, we should not have the call and the need of sacrifice now. But we've broken or disregarded the law; we've been willful; we've been proud of our own opinions, our own business abilities. Now we must pay through sacrifice; we must dig down into our pockets and give all we can—more than we can."

"When they start ordaining women, Eldred," Doc's tone was hearty, "I'll recommend you right off the bat."

"Oh, no," she protested laughingly, "preaching's a splendid thing, but it's for the men. Let them keep it. We women have enough to do." Then she turned to her caller, "Doc brought us two new fish for John's aquarium today, Mrs. Blaine. They're gold fantails with the queerest little markings. You must see them."

DOC AND LARRY put down their papers and grinned sympathetically at each other. Larry was rejoicing. Eldred Hampton was a woman of wonderful tact and diplomacy—there she was leading her guest farther and farther from the telephone.

"Come on, Larry," softly implored Doc, "play me something. I always feel the need of a soul washing after that woman's been around." He steered her toward the piano.

"What shall it be?"

"U-um, 'Just a Song at Twilight,' and 'Juanita'—oh, you know the ones I like."

She did. Often she played for him. And tonight as she waited for Greg to call, she ran through half a dozen of his favorite melodies, her fingers putting expression into the notes that her voice could not no matter how hard she tried. He dropped into an easy chair close beside her, bowed his white head on his hand and listened, motionless. Sometimes when she played for him like that, the girl felt as though her hearer were far away; that he was in the past, that perhaps he was listening to another woman, one who had been dear to him, play like that. Doc was a man about whom one could spin an infinite number of romances. He was good company. courteous, considerate of one's moods, not too talkative. Often she wondered what he was thinking about as he sat in Eldred Hampton's front room; where he had come from, and what he planned to do with the rest of his life. He was not old, not over fifty—there should be many things in store for him yet. Doc seldom talked about himself, and people respected his reserve. To his friends he was just a man of the present; the past and the future were not mentioned.

Tonight while he rested in the big wicker chair, listening, Larry's hands moved through the chords of "Do They Think of Me at Home?" "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," and ended with his musical amen, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

Then the telephone wrenched them from their "moods" as Eldred Hampton had once laughingly described it. A reminiscent light still in his eyes as if he were reluctant to part from memories these tunes called up, Doc, nevertheless, winked at her as she started from the bench. "Better go talk to him."

Trembling, Larry touched the instrument. A moment later Greg's voice over the wire, sure and confident, sent a warm flush to her face. "Been thinking about me?" he demanded with no prelude.

"Of course," Larry smiled at his seeming conceit.

"Really?"

"Silly, you know I have," indulgently. She had been thinking of him, but it was much nicer to talk with him.

"Well, I have you, too. I've thought about you all day."

"Yes? What will happen to your studies if that gets to be a habit?" she teased.

"It's been a habit for weeks. Just thinking of you stimulates me until I get—"

"Don't be funny," she cut in reprovingly.

"I'm not; I'm just being truthful. . . . Whatcha doing?"

"Talking to you."

"Aw, I meant before I called."

"I was playing to Doc."

"Oh, well, what are you going to do?"

"I don't—I haven't decided yet."

"Are you going riding with me? I can get the car again tonight."

"Well—"

"Deep subject, be careful not to throw yourself in," and he chuckled at his own threadbare joke. "But honest, will you?"

"Do you think I ought to, Greg?" she lowered her voice.

"Well, why shouldn't you?" That was a good question. Why shouldn't she go riding with him if she wanted to?

"But if I do—" she had thought she would not see him tonight, and here she was capitulating—"I'll have to be in early. I'm tired and you ought to study."

"O. K. We'll get in early then, say about three a. m.—"

"Now—"

"Honest, we'll not go far, but I have a new road I want to show you."

"Is that possible! I thought you'd shown me all the roads around here two times each."

"Woman, you don't know this place. Show you all the roads in four months' time—good joke! Have you any idea how many roads there are around here? Well, neither have I. Maybe you'd better start counting tonight. There are lots more than we've seen. . . ."

"This road that you want to show me tonight couldn't by any chance be the Royal Road, could it?" the girl asked.

"What?" his tone was puzzled. "Don't believe I get you, Larry. What do you mean?"

"Oh, it doesn't matter," she returned. That had been a useless question, but she couldn't help asking it.

A pause.

. . . "Well, how soon'll I come over?"

Worship in the Junior Church

I—The Occasion for Worship

By Harley A. Morris

OUR EXPERIENCES IN WORSHIP are treasured up as some of the most precious memories of our church life. They are the things that have built up our faith, courage and enthusiasm. At nearly every midweek prayer service someone bears testimony to the importance of these experiences. So valuable are they that our entire religious lives hinge upon the frequency and solemnity with which we enter into them.

Worship, if it is essential for the adult, is doubly necessary for the child. No greater heritage can be left him than an appreciation of the spirit of worship. No more important lesson can be taught him than to cultivate its acquaintance. Let the theology of the child be as faulty as you will, if he possesses the true spirit of worship, he has at hand the index to whatever truth he needs. Joseph Smith, in the confusion of conflicting doctrines, possessed the spirit of worship and it brought him to God. To the person, young or old, who stands perplexed before the diverse inducements of life, worship points the sure path. Guy Allen Towney struck a true note when he said: "Worship . . . is so important that one finds oneself sometimes wondering how any of us can afford to do anything but educate ourselves to this act."

Worship, then, is one of the really important attitudes that we shall want in the church of the future—the junior church of today. But is it possible for children to cultivate the spirit of worship? Yes, for worship, with all its complexity of purpose, is simple with the simplicity of nature. Man is divinely endued. In him is the potency of son-ship. He may, therefore, turn to Deity with the same natural freedom that a child possesses in turning to the father. The thing that has tended to rob man of this inner urge is his pride. He wants to feel self-sufficient. Looking around him at his barns overfull, he says, "Soul, thou hast much goods, take thine ease." So his soul becomes calloused toward God—and too frequently remains so until dire calamity humbles him.

The saying that "man's extremity is God's opportunity" is true. Man turns to God in the hour of need—be that need of whatever nature it may. And the more pressing the need, the more seriously man seeks a higher power. What has this to do with junior worship? Just this: Man needs God always —every day. The fact that this need is spiritual rather than physical affects the issue only that man is more loath to see the spiritual need, be it ever so much greater. It, therefore, becomes necessary at times, to bring to human consciousness a recognition of the need, that stimulation may be given to seek God.

Children, especially, do not worship without cause. And the trial of many junior leaders is that children will not pretend to worship when their interests are directed elsewhere. The task of the teachers, and perhaps their greatest task, is to bring their pupils to a realization of the need of God in their lives. In the junior church this duty is paramount. Here the opportunity is present not only to teach the need of worship, but to teach the way of worship and to demonstrate its results.

Some years ago I attended a presentation of one of the versions of the Passion Play. The dramatic work was splendid; the stage setting more realistic than I had thought possible; but somehow I was sadly disappointed. Through nearly half the performance I sat, trying to determine what it was that was lacking, what made it seem so empty. Then it came to me. There was an absence of the Spirit of God. The warmth, the comforting, uplifting presence I sought was lacking. The lesson impressed me and I have thought frequently of it since: that to feel the presence of God in our services has become such a common experience that we have come to take it as a matter of course. Perhaps we have grown less appreciative of it than we should be—but what a wonderful heritage it is to pass on to our children: to teach them to seek God; to bring them to the house of God; to help them become accustomed to finding the Spirit of God there to greet them. It is a tie that will bind them to the right way when many another fails. And the place to forge this bond is the junior church.

The feminine influence in American culture is quite a new thing in the world, so it seems to me, and a thing of extraordinary interest. The truth is that the timbre of masculine activities in this vast country is still attuned to the pioneer note; so that through all their politics and business and camaraderie there is that rough, untidy, adventurous casualness which men naturally assume when left to themselves. . . .

The tougher "he-men," as they call them, are content to leave culture pretty much in the hands of their "women-folks." The result of this seems to be that all over this country the feminine attitude to life has invaded fiction and poetry and the decorative arts to an extent unparalleled in human history.—John Cowper Powys.

Religious Nostrums

By Edward Ingham

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1: 8.

"The only reality of sin is the awful fact that it seems real to human belief, until God strips off its disguise."—Mary Baker Eddy.

IN ALL SCRIPTURAL STATEMENTS concerning sin, it is presupposed as a fact that cannot be either successfully controverted or denied. It is true that some reasoners, (notably the one above quoted,) through false philosophy, or science, falsely so called, refuse to admit the existence of sin; but these very efforts to explain it in a way are in themselves sufficient testimony that sin is no figment of the imagination but a concrete fact of human experience. In fact, one cannot hold a scriptural view of God and the plan of salvation without having a scriptural view of sin; and no man can proclaim a true theory of society unless he sees the heinousness of sin and its relation to all social ills and disorders.

Nor can anyone hold a consistent view of ethics unless he has a keen sense of sin's seductive nature. It may be true that a certain class of people, by simply declining to think about sin, may come in course of time to conclude that it is a "mental infirmity," and does not stand in any relation to them or in any wise concern them; in which case they are merely deceiving themselves. A story is told about a colored man, who, in passing through a cemetery observed an epitaph upon one of the tombstones which read "not dead but sleeping." After gazing at it for a few moments he passed on with the remark, "You ain't fooling anybody but yourself, brother!" And this remark can be fitly applied to those who regard sin as merely the imaginary creation of abnormal minds. Most men know that sin is in themselves a fact of consciousness they cannot deny, and in others a fact of observation they cannot overlook.

The purpose of the doctrine of Christ and of his personal mission to the world was to show to men their true condition, as under the dominion of sin and death, and to accomplish eternal redemption for all who believe the good tidings and accept the terms of salvation.

Pantheism, which has flourished for thousands of years as the philosophical religious cult of India has taken root on American and European soil and is rapidly becoming the regnant philosophy of our day. What is known as "monism" is that variety of pantheism which is most in favor at the present day. Monism asserts that there is but one entity. God has no existence apart from the universe, and never had. The latter is, therefore, eternal and there has been no creation. Monism wholly excludes the idea that man is a sinner, and hence it puts redemption outside the pale of discussion. Under the influence of this doctrine man would never discover his sinful nature and his need of salvation, and hence, if not delivered from it, he would die in his sins. This is the situation when the teachings of Christ are discarded for the irrational philosophy of Hindooism or monistic pantheism.

It is a remarkable and highly significant fact that the basic principle of this philosophy is also the basic principle of Eddyism, commonly called "Christian Science." While it is true that Mrs. Eddy, during her lifetime, disclaimed this, it is nevertheless true that an analysis of her teachings clearly proves it.

Her basic propositions are four in number and are thus expressed in her own words: "First, God is all in all. Second, God is good, good in mind. Third, Spirit, being all, nothing is matter. Fourth, Life, God, omnipotent good, deny death, evil, sin, disease. Disease, sin, evil, death, deny good, omnipotent God, Life." (Science and Health, page 113.)

Regarding God, she teaches that he is not a person: he is "principle"; and of the same impersonal character as "the principle of mathematics."

God, moreover, is the only principle. She tells us that God is the only "Ego." Pantheism, she tells us, is "a belief in the intelligence of matter." But inasmuch as Eddyism teaches that "there is no matter," and "mind is everything," and "there is no mind but God," no rational being could offend this logical sense by concluding otherwise than that. Mrs. Eddy taught the creed of pantheism. The God of Eddyism is hopelessly entangled in the meshes of His own Creation.

There is no room within the confines of such doctrine for the exercise of prayer. If God is only "principle," one might just as well pray to "the principle of mathematics." There is no place for prayer because we are distinctly told that "principle does not pardon."

And so this scheme undertakes to save the sinner by convincing him that he is not a sinner—unless he believes himself to be! If our reason be God's reason, our intelligence, God's intelligence, our activity, God's activity, of course we cannot sin. If God is mind, and man is "the full expression of mind" there is noth- (Continued on page 1364)

The Life of H. N. Hansen

The first missionary to go to Denmark from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Compiled from his own writings and other sources.

By Poul S. Nielsen

IT APPEARED in Brigham's dream that the house of the prophet Joseph was torn down and that it was going to be rebuilt again. Brigham visited him several times. The first time the roof was torn down; next time the walls and so forth; but the last time the prophet was at work with a wheelbarrow and shovel cleaning out for the foundation so as to be able to build again. Brigham offered to come and dwell with him until his new house was finished, but Joseph declined his offer.

Many of the people who heard him thought that it was a rather peculiar dream and several saw in this dream a sign that perhaps after all the Josephites were right. It did seem peculiar that he would relate it. While in Utah Brother Hansen learned that Brigham Young and others of the leading men were very rich in this world's goods, but did not think very much about it at that time; but later on he thought that it was no wonder they were rich as they never gave any account of the money the Saints contributed as tithing and otherwise, and he could not help thinking that it was in Utah as in the time of King Noah of which he read in the Book of Mosiah in the Book of Mormon: "And he laid a tax of one fifth part of all they possessed; a fifth part of their gold and of their silver, and a fifth part of their ziff, and of their copper, and of their brass and of their iron; and a fifth part of their fatlings; and also, a fifth part of all their grain. And all this did he take, to support himself, and his wives and his concubines, and also his priests, and their wives, and their concubines." Mosiah 7: 6, 7.)

ABOUT April, 1867, they together with about sixty other families left Utah for their eastward trek with sixty wagons drawn by oxen. Travel by oxen was always slow and it was especially so then as much snow had fallen in the mountains. When it thawed out in the spring there were some bad trails and they had trouble aplenty when they had to cross the rivers and creeks. At Platte River they had to wait two weeks to get across while the ferry was moved to another location. It was about this time that the word of the Lord to Joseph Smith was fulfilled, for the Indians were on the warpath and many signs did the travelers see of their war work along the trail. But all the trouble they encountered on their journey across was when they caught two Indians, and disarmed them, but they turned them loose the next morning after giving them their weapons back, telling them that they were peaceful travelers and would harm no one as long as they were left alone.

When they were almost at the end of their trip the company divided as one part of it went towards the State of Missouri and another part went towards Omaha, at that time in its infancy. It was the intentions of this latter company to settle in Iowa. Many of them did not care where they went as long as they could get a home of their own for their beautiful dreams of a peaceful Zion had been rudely shattered, but it must be said to their credit that many of them still had the hope that God would lead them. When reading in the old papers of Brother Hansen it is easy to see that they studied their holy books and looked for the land of Missouri to be the central part of the latter-day gathering.

THE HANSEN FAMILY were in that part that went towards Omaha where they made a home as well as they could about seven miles north of this town. While living there his mother and sister were baptized into the Reorganized church, all of them joining a branch that was organized in Omaha. In 1868, while they were still living there the church had its fall conference in or rather near Council Bluffs, Iowa, across the river from Omaha. Brother Hansen and his father visited this conference in order to get better acquainted with the teachings of their church. It was at this meeting that he first saw and heard Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet. In his memoirs Brother Hansen states that there was nothing in him that would indicate that he thought he was any greater than his fellow men. Needless to say that when he compared Joseph with Brigham Young the latter fell in his estimation.

In the fall of 1868 they moved once more, this time across the river into the State of Iowa and took up their abode north of Council Bluffs near a small hamlet by the name of Crescent and there they joined the Crescent Branch. It was in this branch that Brother H. N. Hansen was ordained a teacher, the first office he ever held in the church. Awhile later on he was ordained to the office of priest and then commenced another chapter in his life, given as it was from then on to the service of the church he believed to be the only true church of God. He was about twenty-three years old and rather bashful so it was not easy for him to get up in meetings and preach.

Just about this time a small thing happened that helped him very much. A Seventh Day Adventist came to Crescent to preach in Danish to the Danish settlers of that community; but his sermon was mostly a tearing down of the Latter Day Saints and their beliefs, and holding forth his church's teaching on the immortality of the soul requesting all to accept it; for, said he, then can neither the Latter Day Saints nor the Spiritualists win any adherents. Brother Hansen was the only church officer present who could understand Danish and preach in that language.

He did not like very much to stand up in defense of the church outside of their own building as he had never spoken elsewhere, but his love for the work made him arise and announce that he would speak in defense of its belief and prove that what the other preacher had said was untrue. This announcement by our young brother made quite a stir and when the time for the meeting came the schoolhouse was packed full by all the Danish settlers of the neighborhood. When he first started to talk he was rather timid and afraid of this his undertaking; but he relates that a wonderful feeling came over him and that he was sure that almighty God had helped him. This was his first attempt to stand forth in the defense of his church in public, but it was far from being his last.

IN THE FALL OF 1874 a conference was held in Council Bluffs, and he, together with Magnus Fyrando, were appointed to go to Scandinavia to open up the work for the Reorganized church in those countries. Brother Hansen was very glad to go, especially as he was going to have as a fellow laborer an experienced man like Brother Fyrando, who was a fluent speaker. Next spring the yearly conference of the church was held in Plano, Illinois. This he attended and also met with Brother Fyrando and many of the brethren, early defenders of the Reorganization of which he had heard so much. At this conference he was ordained an elder under the hands of Joseph Smith and John H. Lane. Brother Hansen had about one hundred dollars saved up to go to conference and to Denmark with, as they had to pay their own way. About the twentieth of April they left Plano in order to go to their mission in Scandinavia. In Chicago they bought their tickets for Copenhagen paying fifty dollars apiece. About the twenty-fifth they went aboard the Steamer Illinois in Philadelphia to travel to Liverpool, England. It was with rather peculiar feelings that he started back to the land where he was born, the land he had left almost an outcast. What would the future bring? After a very good trip across the Atlantic to England, and from there to Hamburg, Germany, they finally arrived in Denmark about the middle of May and it was as he had expected. For he was a stranger in his own country. For although his relations and friends greeted him with gladness, they soon changed their tune when they found out what this mission was, and after a short stay in his home province he left for Copenhagen where he met with Brother Fyrando who in the meantime had been in Sweden. Both of them thought that they had better get some tracts printed, but as neither one of them at that time were very good at spelling in the Danish language they decided to hire a man by name of Lorentzen to do that part of it. But they soon found out that he was not the man for the work and the result was as Fyrando again went to Sweden the work of getting tracts printed fell on the shoulders of H. N. Hansen. As he had gone to this mission with the understanding as before told to pay his own expenses it is no wonder to read that he was soon at the bottom of his purse. His people in Iowa could not help him for they had but recently bought a farm, going in debt for the entire amount. In this dilemma he sought and got work at the harbor of Copenhagen. There was plenty of work but pay was low—only two crowns a day—about a little more than fifty cents a day. As he had to pay one crown a day for his board and room he had six crowns a week for his other expenses. The other workers that he had to be together with were not of such a very desirable kind, as they were mostly working to get some money wherewith to buy beer and brandy. There were a few exceptions but they were few indeed. As he did not drink he was looked on with suspicion, but his superiors trusted him and he had work most of the time even in the winter time when work otherwise was slack. He tried to talk to his fellow workers, but they had only ridicule for him.

One day as they were working an old man came to the place where they were working. Most of the time some women would come and sell fruits and sandwiches and such small things, so it was rather unusual to see this old man with a basket selling peaches. The men made fun of him and told jokes at his expense, but when he saw H. N. Hansen he smiled at him and took out two peaches from his basket. In giving them to him he said: "I know you well." Brother Hansen took them and then the thought came to him, "Where does he know you from, I have never to my knowledge seen him before." Immediately as this thought came into his mind he turned around to speak to him, but he was no place to be seen and he never saw him since. Naturally the thought came to him, I wonder if he was a messenger from the Lord to comfort me? Afterwards in relating this small incident he said that the coming of this old man and his gift to him as well as his word filled him with more comfort and joy than anyone can realize.

Once in a while Brother Fyrando would come to visit him from his homeland and they would then have meetings together, but most of the time he was alone. Many times he would visit the meetings of other religious denominations amongst others his old friends (?) the Utah people. Of these latter ones he bought a Book of Mormon and also a Pagtens Bog as Doctrine and Covenants is called in Danish. His idea was that if he could only show them out of their own books wherein they erred they would see the light. But he was sadly mistaken. If he requested permission to speak at their meetings it was denied him so all he could do was to give them some of his tracts. All the while the Utah missionaries would warn them not to have anything to do with this apostate missionary. In the winter of 1876 a brother from Council Bluffs, Frank Petersen by name, visited him in Copenhagen and together they went to Möen, another Danish island, the birthplace of Brother Petersen. He stayed here for some time, but not accomplishing very much, at least that was what he thought, for the prejudice against anything that had anything to do with "Mormonism," was great in many places of Denmark. Yet the seed was sown and in later years quite a number came from this island, amongst others can be mentioned Peter Andersen who later went to Denmark as a missionary and also served the church as an apostle.

BROTHER HANSEN finally decided to go back to Copenhagen. On this trip back he had to cross a small sound to reach the island of Zealand, and as there was much ice drifting in this sound the ferrymen did not venture out for some time, but at last they started only to get fast in the ice that was rapidly drifting towards the Baltic Sea. The ferrymen had to get out and chop the ice to pieces in order to get across, which they at last succeeded in doing. By that time it was snowing so heavily that the train could not make its run. Brother Hansen who did not have very much cash decided to walk towards Copenhagen. At night he slept in the poorest of inns. It was no pleasure trip as the road was sloppy. Four days it took him to make his trip. When he was about a mile from his destination the train came along, but he thought that since he had walked so far he might as well walk the rest of the way. About two years from the time he visited this island he had the great pleasure of leading two of his hearers into the waters of baptism.

He was once more without money, but had no difficulty in getting work at his former place, all the while holding meetings in his own rooms. From his home in Iowa he received a letter asking him to go to the country around the town of Aalborg in northern Jylland or Jutland as we call it. In the spring he left for this place, meanwhile leaving the work in Copenhagen in the care of Magnus Fyrando.

His stay in the country was short as no interest was shown to warrant the spending his time there so he accordingly went to Aalborg. One evening while in this town he went to the meeting of the Utah faction. They all noticed that he was a stranger, and great was their surprise when he joined them in the singing without the use of a songbook. They accidently happened to sing a song with which he was familiar. After the meeting he asked for permission to say a few words. It was readily given him, but great was their surprise and anger when he started to show them from their own books what terrible mistakes they had made in having Brigham Young for a leader and for other things contrary to the words of the Lord. After this he never got permission to speak at their meetings, but he baptized the man who presided at this meeting. He did not prove very steadfast for when the Utah people promised to help him to their Zion he followed them once more. At another meeting his presence so angered the presiding elder that he ordered him to be cast out from the meeting, but Brother Hansen went out himself unharmed. One result of all this was that quite a stir was made amongst the people so he rented a hall. At that time the Utah people were preaching polygamy in this town and he advertised that he would speak on this subject in public. At this meeting one of the Utah missionaries by name of Larsen took a little more courage than those people generally had shown when polygamy was talked about. The crowd did not want to hear him. Brother Hansen had won not a few friends by his fearless attack on this evil and was requested to come and hold some meetings south of Aalborg. He then wrote for Brother Fyrando to come and help him. He came as soon as he could and the results of their efforts were that three were baptized by him and later on more were baptized by Fyrando. Thus the Reorganized church had its beginning in Denmark. Once more their pockets were empty, so Fyrando got work as a tailor, and Hansen as a gardener. Through letters from his people he learned that he was needed at home so he decided to leave Denmark for America in June.

Here we may as well say a few words about Peter N. Brix, who was born in Mariager, Denmark, the eighth of April, 1836. He came to America as a young man and was received into the church in Montana being ordained an elder shortly after he had joined the church. Brother Brix arrived in Denmark as a missionary a short time after Brother Hansen had left so these two colaborers in the Master's cause did not work together. At first he labored with Fyrando around Aalborg, but later on he was alone for about nine years. He visited America at least once in this time, however. It was at this time that he and Brother Hansen met. He was never married and it seemed like his place in life was to bring the work of the Lord forward in his native land. Many did he bring to the true light while in that country. Peter N. Brix had earned some money while in Montana but he did not count it for anything in comparison with working for his church in which he spent his time and money. The last half year of his life he was suffering from rheumatism. The Saints of that place helped with all they could until his death the first of March, 1886. There were no Latter Day Saints at his funeral to speak a few words at his grave, but it was said that the Lutheran preacher who preached his funeral sermon amongst other things, said that our brother was honest in his seeking after what he thought was true, but it was not for him to say whether he had found it or not. He was buried in a cemetery in Aalborg where one of his fellow Saints bought a lot and a small stone was placed on his grave. On the one side is written, "Missionary Peter N. Brix, born the eighth of April, 1836, Died the first of March, 1886, Beloved and missed." On the opposite side is written: "We have placed him to rest until the first resurrection morning when he will arise and rule with the blessed." The above inscription is translated from the Danish language.

AFTER AN ABSENCE of about sixteen months, Brother Hansen arrived to his home again where he now stayed in order to help his parents with their farming, but as he was elected president of Crescent Branch his work for the Master's cause went on and a little while later on he was elected president of the district. On the fourth of November he was joined in marriage to Miss Agnes Kirkwood, of Crescent, with whom he shared the joys and sorrows such as are common to married life. Then he had to prepare a home and although it was a humble one for a start, God saw fit to bless him in his efforts, so he and his companion became prosperous as the years went by.

In 1882, the General Conference of the church saw fit to send him as a missionary to Utah. Later on he went on the same errand to Nebraska and Minnesota as well as to Oklahoma and Arkansas, and then again to his native land.

Just now we will take up his work in Utah, where he found a people who called themselves Saints yet who would participate in dancing, card playing, theater going, and other worldly things. When he first went there he thought that it would be easy to convince at least some of them of their errors. He soon found out that he was mistaken, for if a Scripture did not suit them they had no use for it. Not that alone, but their authorities would warn the people not to go to his meetings. In Denmark he had been told by their own missionaries that their meeting places in Utah were open for everybody to use who wanted the privilege.

His experiences as a boy and young man in Utah, his thorough acquaintance of all their doctrine now came in handy, and made it an easy matter for him to defend the Reorganization. Nothing seemed to give him greater pleasure than to have the opportunity of meeting representatives of the dominant church and discussing issues with them. He has expressed himself as enjoying missionary work in Utah.

It was very seldom that their meeting houses were opened for him; on the contrary, many of the leading men would not even stand back for telling things untrue about him. At this time the United States were taking hard hold of polygamy, and many there were in Utah who had to go to prison, so it is not to be wondered at that when Brother Hansen would come to some small town where he was not known the people would imagine that he was one of the United States secret agents, some of them even going into hiding when he came. He tells in his memoirs how at one time without thinking of hurting anyone's feelings he started to talk about polygamy to an old lady. She proceeded to weep at once, and well she might, for her husband had pushed her aside for a younger wife. At another time he was at the deathbed of an old man, who had two wives. On his deathbed he confessed that he could see that he had done wrong, but in his younger days he tried to do what the church officers told him to do.

THE NRA AND THE CHURCH

they are warranted by increased returns. The small business is most affected, usually lacking abundant capital and unable to provide it by borrowing. Large enterprises, perhaps better provided with means, may tide over the period before increased sales volumes appear, but they too are scanning the future anxiously. We as a country are not yet "out of the woods," although there is a spirit of hopefulness in the endeavor being made to reach the open spaces.

The effect upon the church of the changes above described may be put in only general terms. Numerous members reside in strike areas, or where unemployment is still extensive. This will continue to depress our income. Others, reemployed, or having wage revisions upward, may offset the unfavorable aspect just mentioned; it is too soon to tell. On the other hand, the advancing prices of necessities of life definitely press upon those receiving church allowances, and thus upon the church. Operating costs of our institutions are beginning to mount, and various requirements of the church will have to be purchased at higher price levels. Since the upturn in income may not quickly reach us, the effect of the NRA upon the church, for the time being, will very probably be to increase our burdens.

Looking to the future, we may expect a period of prosperity to return, but another depression should also be anticipated. Prophetic utterances during the past summer have borne witness to this view. When the right moment appears we expect to seize the opportunity to discharge the church debt, and take steps to firmly establish Zion. Not only church finances, but personal affairs also should then be put in order, so that we shall be prepared to withstand the next financial storm.

Meantime, the best preparation any may make both for present needs and future exigencies, is to keep the law. To that end, the law relating to temporalities should be studied anew as it is taught form November 12 to December 3. From the fruit of obedience to this law we most earnestly hope to close this year without a deficit. If each of us will keep the law, there will be no deficit.

HEARD IN PRAYER MEETING

basic to the religious life. And here is expressed appreciation of this fact but mixed with the fear that faith might be overcome, and perhaps faltering feet be deflected into paths of doubt. A goodly desire that, to "continue to trust God."

"I feel my weakness," is an expression far from unique in prayer meetings, but is a wholesome one. To know one's weakness is a factor of safety, especially when it is recognized that it is an indication of what to avoid.

"It is good to be a Saint of God even if we have trials through which we must pass."

That is a recognition of the old saying: "No cross, no crown!" To have the tried people Deity has said He would have, means we must pass the ordeals of trial. Yet it is good to be a Saint of God, worth while.

"I am happy because my soul is resting."

Comfort in that thought. Rest! What a desideratum. Yet we know that we rest for the purpose of gaining strength for greater efforts for the cause. In rest we store the spiritual energy we need for our spiritual battles and work. And prayer meeting is one of our resting spots.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Sublimation of our dreams into the reality of achievement is ever essential if we would avoid stagnation. Our deeper feelings must pass over into work. And one speaker in prayer meeting was heard to exclaim somewhat vigorously:

"The tears of emotion must be transmuted into the sweat of preparation and endeavor for the establishment of Zion."

"The mass testimony of the people of this church must convince the world that this is the church of God."

Group preachment by work accomplished towards the objectives of the church is one of the finest ways in which to "preach the word." Would that we were more effectively bearing our group testimony.

I was a bit encouraged by hearing a prayer meeting speaker say:

"I am happy because I have confidence in the leaders of this church."

I have noticed that lack of such confidence produces not a little unhappiness. Food for some thinking.

ent time 100 families are entering upon a three months' project to keep a carefully itemized account of family receipts and expenditures, with consistent payment of the tithe on all uses of the income except on "necessary" expenses determined on a reasonably frugal basis. They plan to make tithe payment each week or month from the "first fruits of their increase." Then they are sure the Lord is not robbed of his share.

There are many other group activities available to adults. The above are those specially to be urged at this time. Many other worthy projects will be discovered within a branch. We will be glad to see published in the Herald plans which are applicable for church-wide use.

C. GIRL LEADERSHIP. The women of the church owe much to the developing girls of a succeeding generation who rapidly are growing into women's estate. Adolescent years are potential of vast reaches of good or ill. Wise direction, sympathetic encouragement and a program of well-balanced activities under the leadership of an earnest, capable Christian woman will help to lead the forces of life into wholesome, happy, profitable development. Fortunate indeed are the girls of the church when such leadership is offered by a woman whose life has been made rich and sweet by gospel experiences, who has learned the arts of womanly grace, who has trained herself in varied accomplishments and who is willing to share her time and effort to render service as a leader of girls.

The new Oriole program, as well as other similar girls' programs, offers exceptional opportunity for the leadership of girls, the enrichment of their lives and the building of loyalties and character which will be an asset to the church. Few lines of service are open to our women which offer greater compensation. We can well afford to serve as monitors, leaders and committee women. It is a service to which we are called.

ANOTHER DIVISION of the adult program, which applies to both men and women, may be termed branch service and duty. In every branch of the church we must look to the adults to supply important leadership in the major lines of activity. This is logical since they have had valuable years of training and experience, and, if they have really grown in vision, in understanding, in wisdom and spiritual power, they have a most sacred charge in passing on their spiritual heritage. Adults should feel this responsibility and seek earnestly to qualify as efficient teachers and leaders in the church school. Here the training program of the church offers opportunity for local credit classes or for correspondence courses.

Adults, too, must supply the larger group of responsible workers in the branch, at least until younger people are ready to serve in larger numbers. Those who can sing are found in the choir and musicians in the orchestra. They feel also the need of lending full support through attendance and participation at the regular services of the church. Often their voices are heard in prayer and in valiant testimony.

Usually adults are the principal wage earners in a branch and upon them must rest the chief responsibility for the financial upkeep of the branch and in the general support of the church. But in this and in other ways encouragement must be given to young people to share more and more fully in the task of building the kingdom of God among men.

found useful. Diathermacy is also a good remedy, one electrode applied to the chest, one electrode on either side, which will cause a strong current of electric energy to pass through the lungs. With good nursing and proper feeding, and the following out of the instructions of the attending physician, there is little to fear from an attack of influenza.

ing in us which is not God. Eddyism, therefore, like Pantheism, necessarily excludes the possibility of sin.

If there is no personal or objective God, there can be no sin. If man is God, there can be no guilt; and if there was no fall, there is, of course, no need for redemption; and if there is no need for redemption, there could, of course, be no Redeemer. If the wages of sin is not death, what merit is there in the death of Christ for sin and sinners?

The two religious poverties of the day, a lost sense of sin, and a lost sense of God, are simply the result of teaching this devitalized gospel: this theology which accepts or rejects according to its caprice such sections of Scripture as it pleases, and substitutes its own vagaries for the scriptural conceptions of sin, of guilt, of death and the idea of punishment; and finally reaches its climax in the repudiation of Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world. But Paul was convinced from his own experience and his observation of society, illumined and led as he was by the Spirit of God, that, the sin principle in men was not "a mental infirmity" or "a figment of the imperfectly enlightened, or theologically perverted, imagination," but a grim reality; and that in spite of philosophy, culture and ethics to train men intellectually, socially, and morally, still they sank deeper and deeper in the mire of depravity and licentiousness as they forgot God and followed out the trend of their own thoughts and desires. Being fearful lest some who had been converted to Christ might be victimized through the sophistry of some current philosophy, the astute apostle lifts to them his warning voice, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily; and ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power." (Colossians 2: 8-10.) Paul here makes a striking contrast between vain and empty deceit and the fullness of the Godhead which dwells in Christ; also the rudiments or basic elements of the world system (described in Galatians 4: 9, as "weak and beggarly") with the completeness which they enjoyed in Christ. These rudiments of the world, therefore, could not strengthen and enrich, but rather weaken and impoverish those who had resorted to them. Additional emphasis is given to the warning by the use of the work "spoil" which signifies literally "to make a prey of." Paul evidently knew that the main purpose of these factitious reasoners was the spoliation or exploitation of those who were caught by their blandishments. Paul in the same epistle admonishes these saints at Colossus as follows:

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." (Colossians 3: 16.) This was their greatest safeguard against the invasion of their faith by any specious means.

The word of Christ is a Living Word. It is living in the sense that, like other living substance, it has the property of furnishing nutrition, and thereby, sustaining life. It is a life-sustaining word. Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Unlike physical food, however, which comes up out of the earth (Psalm 104: 14), this spiritual food comes down out of heaven. (John 6: 50.) The power of discernment is also attributed to the word of God. It lays bare the deepest secrets of the heart, and brings to the surface of consciousness, out of the unfathomable depths and inexplorable recesses of man's being, "thoughts and intents" the existence of which was unsuspected. It reveals man to himself in a way difficult to describe, and absolutely peculiar to itself. It is a faithful mirror which reflects us exactly as we are. It detects our motives, discerns our needs; and having faithfully discovered to us our true selves, it counsels, reproves, exhorts, guides, strengthens, and illuminates. (Hebrews 4: 12.)

When we take the word of God as a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path, then that path is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

THE ROYAL ROAD

He was to arrive in half an hour. As Larry was replacing the receiver Doc strolled into the hall. "Your young man coming over?" he frankly asked.

"Greg's going to call. But don't Doc," as he picked his hat off the rack and moved towards the door; "don't go out just to give us the house. We're going riding, and won't be in—even if we were to step into the front room for just a minute—I'd rather someone would be around." Having confessed this much, she rushed upstairs.

Larry's room was just large enough for a bed, a dressing table, a small bookcase, desk, reading lamp, and one chair. As she closed the hall door, she flung a look at herself in the mirror, and then stopped stock still. Her reflection arrested her attention, sparkling gray eyes, blonde hair waving about her forehead, dimples in her cheeks, and was it the rose blouse she wore that heightened her color so? She knew it was not, for her heart was singing: "Greg is coming! Greg is coming! Put on your prettiest dress for Greg is coming!"

Zion

By B. H. Thomas

THE EXPERIENCE of the present depression should cause us to feel the need of Zion; and the condition of the world today, with its unrest, should increase our faith. God wants to bless his people. The delay has been due to our lack of faith. God has promised to redeem Zion when we are in a condition to receive that blessing. Had we been in the condition, Zion would be as a light to the world today. Zion will be committed only to an obedient and worthy people. If it were established before we attained that spiritual condition, we, no doubt, would have the same experience as did the Saints of Nauvoo. God is wise. He doesn't want to see us make mistakes; and once Zion is established, it will endure. It would be possible to establish Zion within the next few years, if the people of the church would reach a condition of unity; but we must first permit our imagination and faith to stir our ability into action, and develop to a condition where we can receive more spiritual blessings. When we reach that development, we won't need to pray for the establishment of Zion, it will be with us. Faith is power, but without its application, it's worthless.

Not until after the woman had touched the hem of Jesus' robe, did the Lord commend her faith and heal her. If we had greater faith, we would be in a condition to receive many more blessings that probably we haven't heard of yet. Our faith should lead us on to our goal, Zion. A plane without controls would spin downward. An auto without a steering wheel would get nowhere. A ship at sea, without a rudder, would be lost so far as destination is concerned. A goldfish swims a thousand miles and gets no farther than its starting point. The reason is, the goldfish is confined to a bowl, but we are not. God is anxiously waiting for us to get into the right condition in which we can be trusted with great spiritual blessings. If we had more faith, we would have greater works; and the application of our faith in the right direction would bring a spiritual condition and the recognition of God who would guide us to our goal. Enoch and his city were taken up because they attained a condition in which they were of one heart and one mind, or a state of unity and love that was pleasing to the Lord. We should strive for that condition. If we shared a brother's burden, there would be less sorrow. Experiences have taught us the better our condition and the more obedient we are to God's law, the greater are our blessings. We have the means with which to attain that condition, but we lack the faith. It is too bad we are so fondly attached to the things that perish to heed the command, "Get ye up to higher mountains," and so demonstrate that we are not ready for Zion. If we were to establish Zion without the right spiritual condition, we would have nothing more than a business enterprize that would rise and fall with the world; and when the hard years come, we would fail.

Adam in the garden of Eden had the same opportunity, and we know what happened. The establishment of Zion is the opportunity for us to grow spiritually and develop for the millenium; and our reign with Christ should mean a further development. The substance of every commandment is, "Come up higher." Surely we cannot be satisfied with the unrest and present status of the world. Hence, the need of Zion.

We are an intelligent people. If we can talk to one another a thousand miles away, if we can imitate a fish and travel under water; if we can fly like the birds; if we can tunnel under the rivers and can harness the waterfalls to produce electricity, then why can't we come up higher? The optimists have always led the procession.

Time is fleeting. How much history have you made? Take the open road and dare the peaks; if not, be satisfied with the low places. Each new day brings to us a new opportunity, a new chance. Soon we'll hear the drums of the warriors marching on to victory and the land of Zion. Our spiritual condition will either permit us to fall in line, or be left in the rear. The victory will not be shared among those who lack faith. The high places are for those who dare. The establishment of Zion means an efficient direction and unity of a chosen obedient people.

Tough on Our Civilization

For many years Colonel Wellington Furlong, of Toronto, Canada, has been exploring out-of-the-way corners of the globe where no white man has ever been seen before. He has lived with strange, shy pigmies of the Ituri forest of the Belgian Congo, and with the Ona Indians on Tierre del Fuego at the southern tip of South America, who live farther south than any other human beings, have no chiefs, no form of worship and in times of famine have turned to cannibalism. He also has been among the wild natives of the Australian bush, far out of reach of the white man's civilization. Asked recently where he had discovered the lowest order of human beings, he said they were neither in Africa, Australia or the wilds of South America, but in our own large cities where he found more depravity, more kinds of iniquity, and more that is to be despised in the human race than any savage ever thought of.

QUESTION TIME

Was the prophecy in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23 ever fulfilled?

The matter referred to is a revelation in which Bishop Whitney was directed to present the gospel to the cities of New York, Albany, and Boston, and it was declared that "if they do reject these things, the hour of their judgment is nigh, and their house shall be left unto them desolate." This revelation was given in 1832, and soon afterward Bishop Whitney, accompanied by Joseph Smith, made a "hurried journey" to those cities. It appears that only about twenty-four days after being in New York they were back in Kirtland, Ohio, and the entire journey occupied about a month or a bit more. Considering the slow means of travel in those days, they could not have spent more than a few days in all three cities.

From these facts it is evident that very few of the people were reached by the visit of Bishop Whitney, hence it is not probable that any who may have rejected the message numbered more than an inconsequential portion of them. Of what the threatened judgment was to consist, or in what manner it might have been applied, is not stated. In any event it could only involve those who rejected the message. It might have been the cholera scourge that broke out in that area some time afterward, or it might have consisted of several kinds of scourges. But if so, we have no record that would show how many rejected the message, or whether or not they were the ones who suffered the judgment which came to pass.

Do patriarchal blessings come true if one is not faithful?

It is quite clearly the purpose of such blessings to encourage and direct the individual toward righteousness and active efforts for good. If the divine will is disregarded or the instructions are negligently considered, it is possible that added condemnation may fall upon the one concerned, and what might have come as a blessing may fail because he did not perform his part. While it may not be specifically stated in all blessings, yet every blessing is conditional so far as promises involving God's favor are concerned. It could not in justice be otherwise.

It is a mistake for a member to consider patriarchal blessings as a sort of magic wand or fetich to charm away evil or accident or calamity. He who so considers them is in ignorance of their true intent and value. They cannot be expected to set aside the law of God, which promises blessings to the obedient, and condemnation and retribution to the disobedient. Therefore any promise they contain must be understood to be subject to the provisions of the word of God as already made known in his law. To understand that law and obey it is, as Solomon declared, "the whole duty of man." If cherished, blessings should inspire to these ends.

Does the church approve of dancing, card parties, and shows?

It should be remembered that the church commonly expresses its views through the action of General Conference, by which means even the revelations must be adopted and become binding upon the membership. On matters not thus adopted the members often hold different views as to their wisdom or rightness. When any habit or act is clearly evil, the church may condemn it for that reason. This would doubtless be the real basis of action designed to prohibit or warn against them. In 1893 the church specifically declared:

"That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."—Resolution 377.

Just what was meant by card playing is not further specified. Probably it had reference to the practice then prevalent, involving gambling and other evils that were then associated with such practices. Some might think it included Authors and other games using cards, while others would reject this idea. It was of course aimed at something which had proved to be evil, which had become a "practice." The only action I now recall in regard to shows refers to church motion pictures. It states:

"Be it resolved that we place ourselves on record as favoring the use of such mediums of education insofar as they conduce to the proper education of humanity and the glory of God."—Resolution 813.

The Readers Say---

God Answers Our Prayers

Many times God hears and answers my prayers. I thank him three times a day for the food we have to eat, whatever it may be, and we thank him morning and night for his blessings and his watchful care over us. He has been very good to us, removing our afflictions. He has given us spiritual experiences which have enriched our lives and caused us to resolve more than ever to serve him.

On the third of September we had an all-day meeting. I, not knowing if there was anyone to be baptized, prayed to God that our services would be the means of bringing precious souls into the kingdom. He heard my prayer and answered. Three candidates were baptized, two little girls and a young man, their brother. May God bless them, that they may be faithful and help the church.

I know that this is the true church of God and that God has set up his kingdom on earth for the last time and that it will not be overthrown. And so, dear brothers and sisters, let us all strive to earn a place in his kingdom be it ever so small. Let us be faithful and truthful and let our light shine so that we shall be helpful to all our associates. Let us control our tempers and tongues so that we may not say or do anything that will mar God's plan or bring reproach on his church.

Hopes Children Will Carry On Ideals

Having been superintendent of the Sunday school here in South Boardman most of the time for the past fifteen years, I have been gratified to note the response of many of the young people to the call of the church. But I have been grieved at the attitude of some who have great talent yet allow themselves to become entangled with the world to the extent that they apparently forget the church.

I rejoice that I have two sons holding the priesthood and three daughters who are willing church workers. Through them I trust that my ideals shall live on.

As a family we are grateful for the returning health of my companion, also for the preservation of our lives in the automobile accident we experienced a year ago. We trust that we may be spared to do many things for Christ before we lay the armor down.

We send greetings to all the Saints, especially those with whom we are acquainted and have worked. May we all serve faithfully to the end.

Would Like to Meet Members Living Near

I hope in the future to do more for the Lord and his people than I ever have in the past. My family and I are living at Marysville, California, in the northern part of the State. We would be glad to meet with the Saints if there are any who can possibly visit us.

I am willing to do anything I can for this work. My two little girls both belong to the church. If there are Saints living near enough, we would like to start a Sunday school.

Longs to Meet With Members of the Church

I am thankful to the Lord and wish to testify of his goodness and blessings to me.

It is nine years ago this month that I was baptized into the church. How thankful I am that I heard and obeyed the true gospel.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be steadfast and faithful until the end and that I may be worthy of the little boys God has intrusted to my care, that I may be able to shield and protect them from the sins of the world.

My earnest desire is that some day soon I may again meet with the Saints and that my husband, who is not a member of the church yet, will obey the gospel.

The Sick Are Blessed With Healing

Birmingham Saints were told in prophecy that this year would be remarkable in many ways and that the blessings which should come would be numerous.

The experiences of the sick, of the prayers offered and answered, would fill a book. Many times have our sick been restored in wonderful healings.

An outstanding case is that of a young sister, Grace Eldridge. She was taken with severe pains which the doctor diagnosed as appendicitis. She, being a young woman of great faith, refused to go to the hospital until she had received administration. Pastor P. S. Whalley and Elder W. Bailey were summoned. It was midnight and the power of God came mightily to the relief of the suffering. A quiet peace possessed the soul of our sister, and after admittance to the hospital where she was directed to go by expert advice, two doctors examined her and found an immediate operation necessary. A few hours later when the surgeon gave a final examination, the trouble had gone, and Grace returned home rejoicing in the power of God who is able to save those who put their trust in him.

We are a glad and thankful people, and realize that the value of prayer cannot be overestimated.

Young People Help to Prepare Church for Dedication

The annual election of branch officers was held September 17. Members of the priesthood were unanimously retained in their respective offices, namely: B. H. Van Eaton as president of the branch; Van E. Nutley and Paul A. Anderson as branch priests and George Allen as branch deacon. Lorena Nutley was retained in the office of director of religious education, Vivian Malcolm, branch secretary, and Claire Van Eaton, branch treasurer and chorister. Paul Anderson was elected branch librarian, and Antoinette Van Eaton, branch correspondent.

The Sunday evening service starts at 7.45 with a twenty-minute song service followed by a fifteen-minute illustrated talk on Old Testament history. This talk is given by a different person each evening and is followed by a criticism which is designed to help develop each individual's speaking ability. The remainder of the time is spent in the study of the Book of Mormon with Claire Van Eaton acting as teacher for the next three months. The evening service, as well as the church school service, is being used to develop the individual.

Promotion day exercises were held September 24. Several classes were promoted and two new classes were organized.

During the past year the young people's class has been helping to improve the church property. They have moved a two-room building and annexed it to the church. The larger room serves as a class room and the smaller room is to be equipped for a kitchen.

In July the young people's class sponsored an ice cream social which was very successful. The class held a box social, October 6, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Nutley to raise funds to help complete the new part of the church. It is the desire of the young people of Yakima to help prepare the church for dedication.

The class has not spent all of its time working, but has had some delightful recreation. July 2 to 4 was spent in the mountains at Bumping Lake. Mr. and Mrs. Nutley and about twelve members of the class camped and enjoyed outdoor activities. September 3 and 4, Mr. and Mrs. Nutley, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and several members of the class camped at Lake Tipso and Sunrise Park and visited Emmons Glacier and other scenic spots of Mount Rainier. Several outdoor parties, swimming parties and wiener roasts, have taken place during the summer. The class also has a weekly meeting to outline activities and prepares a program for one Sunday each month.

One member of the young people's class, Paul Anderson, attended reunion at Silver Lake and returned with renewed enthusiasm for the advancement of the church. Several other members of the branch were able to attend the reunion and brought home the report that they "truly walked in holy places."

Jack Nutley, seventeen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Nutley, returned, September 8, from a two months' tour of Europe. Jack is an Eagle Scout and attended the Boy Scouts' World Jamboree at Godollo, Hungary. The scouts visited places of interest in Canada, Europe and the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore W. Parsons have a young son, Theodore W., jr., born August 30. Mrs. Parsons was formerly Miss Leone Bronson, of Portland, Oregon.

Ontario, California

Though at times the efforts of the Saints in this congregation seem small, the members are encouraged and keep striving for the goal that Christ has given his followers.

Samuel Kemple was baptized into the church by Brother F. J. Lacey a short time ago.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Church was blessed by his grandfather, F. B. Van Fleet and G. H. Givens.

Once more the women's department has started its meetings. The members are working on a new quilt.

The election of officers for the church school was held at the business meeting recently in order that Ontario group may fall in line with the program of the church. They are: School director, George H. Givens; adult superintendent, J. L. Swain; young people, Clyde C. Roberts; secretary, Frank Swain; pianist, Fern Roberts; chorister, Charles C. Swain and Sister Bates was sustained women's leader. Branch officers will be elected the first of the year.

A special missionary effort is to be carried on during the winter months by local men. The Saints are praying that God will bless their efforts.

Hamilton, Ontario

Young People Hold Rally

Toronto young people were guests of Hamilton Saints, September 23, at which time the young people of that branch held a rally. The visitors presented a play for their contribution to the evening's enjoyment. Saints of Hamilton accommodated the visitors from Toronto and elsewhere in their homes.

Nine-thirty prayer meeting convened Sunday morning with a large group of young people in attendance. The service was in charge of District President Wilson, assisted by E. M. Kennedy, of Hamilton, and S. Crump, of Toronto. The meeting was later turned over to Apostle D. T. Williams. A marked degree of the Holy Spirit was present.

Apostle D. T. Williams delivered a sermon at the eleven o'clock hour on the position of the church in the world. Many favorable comments were heard during the day in regard to the effort Apostle Williams put forth in order to make the meetings successful.

Brother Wilson, assisted by A. W. Kennedy, conducetd a round table, at two-thirty.

At seven o'clock Brother S. Crump, of Toronto, voiced an earnest appeal to the young people to prepare to do their part in the redemption of Zion.

The young people served meals in the basement of the church, and give much of the credit for their success to the women's department, for their willing donations and service.

At the closing meeting, the district president pledged himself to do all he could to make possible another young people's rally.

Sault Saint Marie, Ontario

New Officers Take Charge

Branch officers, elected at the business meeting early in September, took office October 1. W. A. Bushila is the pastor, and G. A. Edwards his associate, while Frederick Miller is director of the church school. A corps of willing workers was elected to assist them in the work of the branch and church school.

Brother Bushila was ordained an elder July 8, 1933, and Frederick Miller a teacher August 20. These two brothers have been called to places of responsibility, and the Saints pledge their support.

Brother and Sister Ferguson, of Port Huron, were called to Sault Saint Marie

www.LatterDayTruth.org

by the serious illness of Sister Ferguson's brother, Harry G. Campbell. During their stay Brother Ferguson presided at the Sunday morning prayer service, also the evening meeting. The Saints have been strengthened and edified by his good advice.

Harry Campbell, a deacon, who underwent a serious operation a few weeks ago, is gradually improving. The members pray for his speedy recovery, and ask the prayer of all in his behalf.

Harvest festival services were enjoyed Sunday, October 8, and the church was neatly and cheerfully decorated. G. A. Edwards had the lesson for the prayer service. A short program followed in the Sunday school worship period. Then in the evening W. A. Bushila preached. The collection of fruits and vegetables constituting the thanksgiving offering was distributed among needy Saints.

London District Conference

Stirring Sermon—Uplifting Services

A good representation from all the branches in London District, Canada, went to Saint Thomas to attend their conference September 30 and October 1. The business session opened Saturday at 2.30 p. m. with District President James Winegarden in charge, assisted by his counselors, Bishop J. C. Dent and J. E. MacGregor. Elder John Shields was also associated with them.

At this hour the following district officers were elected: President, James Winegarden, of London; counselors, J. E. MacGregor and J. C. Dent, of London; supervisor of church school, Robert Atkinson, Saint Marys; assistant supervisor, Miss Grace Perry, London; district missionary, Elder Percy Farrow; secretary, Miss Clara Schlotzhauer, Stratford; music director, David Withrow, Stratford; bishop's agent and treasurer, Clarence Weeks, Delhi.

A musical program on Saturday evening was much enjoyed by everyone. There were piano duet and trio numbers by young women of Corinth and Stratford, piano solos by a member from London; vocal selections by singers from London and Saint Thomas, violin contributions, and readings.

On Sunday the prayer service was well attended. Sacrament was served and the time was occupied with prayer, testimony, and song.

At eleven o'clock Elder Percy Farrow as the speaker, delivered a message of grave importance to the church. For a text he chose to read Matthew 5: 20 and associated with it John 3: 3.

Apostle D. T. Williams gave a singularly uplifting and helpful discourse in the afternoon.

In the evening Elder Farrow was again the speaker, concluding the conference with a sermon which set forth our responsibilities toward the present generation and Zion.

Independence

Teachers' and Leaders' Institute Begins

It was with the spirit of hope, helpfulness and prayer that the teachers' and leaders' institute opened its two-week session at the Stone Church last night, sounding abroad the call to leadership and service for Christ. In most of the group prayer services October 18, special prayers were offered for the success of the school.

Sunday's services at the Stone Church led up to the thought and theme of the institute. In the morning, Elder W. Earl Page, director of Religious Education, used as the theme of his talk, "The Call to Service," reading Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21 and 4: 2. The two-thirty prayer meeting in the afternoon was for all teachers and leaders in Independence, and an hour of earnest, worshipful communion was enjoyed under the leadership of Elder Richard Bullard.

President Frederick M. Smith was scheduled to deliver the opening message of the institute Sunday night, but was detained at his home in Kansas City by a cold.

Pastor John F. Sheehy took his place in the stand and delivered an earnest and forceful sermon on the testimony of Paul: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation." (Romans 1: 16.) He pleaded for an awakening of the Saints, a deeper consecration to the cause of Christ and a more complete and perfect keeping of the law. A large congregation gave attentive audience to his discourse.

The Stone Church Choir sang two hymns, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," and "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me." The congregation joined the choir in singing such stirring songs as "Let Us Shake Off the Coals," "We're Marching to Zion," and "I Love to Tell the Story."

"Leadership Work in the Church" was the theme of President F. M. McDowell last night at the opening inspirational service from seven-thirty till eight-twenty-five. Each evening an inspirational service will precede an hour class period. Speakers this week are Pastor John F. Sheehy tonight and tomorrow night whose topic is "The Prophetic Message of the Restoration," and Bishop J. A. Koehler Thursday and Friday on "The Prophetic Message of the Bible." Next week Apostle F. Henry Edwards will preach two nights on "Enduring Convictions," and Elder C. Ed. Miller on "Service of Love." All students will participate in a dedication service to conclude the school November 3, Friday.

This week teachers' classes are held from eight-thirty until nine-twenty-five, departmental workers being instructed as follows: Beginners, Mrs. Tessie Smith; primaries, Miss Ruby Williamson; juniors, Mrs. H. A. Higgins, of Kansas City; intermediate, Mrs. Nellie Blackmore; young people, Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, and adults, Elder C. B. Woodstock.

Leaders' classes will be held at this hour four nights next week. Women's leadership will be taught by Mrs. Alice M. Edwards; girls' leadership, Miss Leta Moriarty, Mrs. Blanche Mesley, and Miss Margaret Fifield; boys' leadership, H. Roe Bartle, Joseph Scanlan and Ernest Modlin; priesthood, Elder Cyril Wight, and administration, Elder C. B. Woodstock.

New Young People's Council in Action

The newly-elected young people's council swung into action last week, holding its annual city-wide carnival Saturday night, October 21, in the lower hall of the Auditorium. The place was the scene of merrymaking and festivity. Most popular among the entertainment features were Madame X and her fortune telling and the archery contests conducted by the To-Ko-Lon Class. Money made by the various stands will be applied to the expense of young people's activities this winter.

This year the council is composed of thirty members representing the ten congregations in Independence. Young people representatives come as follows: From the Stone Church, 6; Walnut Park, 5; Liberty Street, 3; Second Church, 3; Spring Branch, 3; Englewood, 2; Enoch Hill, 2; Gudgell Park, 2; Sugar Creek, 2, and East Independence, 2. Cecil Walker, of Liberty Street, is the new council president, and Roy Settles, of Second Church, is vice president; T. A. Beck, of Stone Church, is treasurer, and Mrs. Leonard Roberts, of Spring Branch, is secretary.

Liberty Street Church

There will be no young people's weekday activities at Liberty Street during the teachers' and leaders' institute now being conducted at the Stone Church.

Last Wednesday evening after their preliminary program, the young people joined the older members of all groups for regular prayer service, and engaged in an hour of testimony and prayer. Many of the young people took active part.

A "Walking Marathon" was the contribution of Liberty Street's young people to the carnival held Saturday night in the lower room of the Auditorium.

Harold Buseth played a piano prelude at the church school Sunday morning. Gertrude La Grece and Ethel McClees sang "Fight the Good Fight."

"Thy Holy Day Returning" was the opening hymns of the eleven o'clock service, and the choir sang "The Woods and Every Sweet-smelling Tree." Elder W. N. Inman, pastor of Second Church, delivered the sermon.

The old Religio is being revived at Liberty Street, and meets every Sunday evening from six to seven-thirty. Part of the period is taken up by study courses, lectures, etc., and the remainder is given over to varied programs. Harry Blake is in charge, Lucien Amos, vice president, and Stafford Holsworth, secretary. The programs are arranged by Pastor Lentell and Mayble Tignor, chorister; Ruth Tignor is pianist.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey delivered his Sunday night sermon on the text, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." This was the last of a series of three sermons.

Hubert Mills played a trombone solo, "A Night in June." Elder E. T. Atwell sang, "The Heart That Was Broken for Me."

Walnut Park Church

The church school is growing. Sunday morning four hundred and fifty-nine were present, of which number one hundred and one were recorded as visitors. Following the class period a quartet composed of four members of the Butterworth family, Lois, Velva, Robert and Eddie Butterworth, sang "Fairest Lord Jesus," accompanied at the piano by Drexel Mollison.

Brother and Sister Fred Horn were elected as teacher and assistant, respectively, of the Swastika Class, Sunday morning.

At eleven o'clock Elder D. S. McNamara was the speaker, his text being, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." The choir, directed by Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "Burst Ye Emerald Gates," as an anthem. A soprano solo, "More Love to Thee, O Christ," was sung by Mrs. Ruth Bean Gold. Preceding the sermon, Thomas Ellsworth Masterson, son of Brother and Sister Thomas Masterson, was blessed by Elders Frank McDonald and C. K. Green. Brother Green is the baby's grandfather. Elder Hubert Case was the speaker Sunday evening.

Two daughters of Brother and Sister Charles Hamm have been married recently. On September 30, Martha Hamm was married to Byron Hedeen. On October 21, Marie A. Hamm and Frank R. Sadler were married. Both ceremonies were performed by Elder Ira G. Clutter at his home.

Enoch Hill Church

The Saints on Enoch Hill are pressing on with a new determination to keep the law in every respect. Midweek prayer services are being held in the homes of the members. Last Wednesday the young people met with group thirty-two. Forty were present.

The women's department held an all-day meeting at the home of Sister W. J. Brewer Thursday.

Early Sunday morning prayer services are being held with good attendance. The Saints are expressing their desire to live worthy the blessings they receive.

The junior church school, under a corps of faithful and efficient workers, is doing well.

Elder A. K. Dillee was the morning speaker Sunday, and in the evening Evangelist U. W. Greene. At the latter service Sister Willis Young sang "Grateful, O Lord, Am I."

At the morning hour the choir sang "The Creation," and Brothers William Shakespeare and Millard Pace sang "Close to Thee."

Several from this district are attending the teachers' and leaders' institute which is now in session at the Stone Church.

Spring Branch Church

The Wednesday night and Sunday morning prayer services continue to be a source of strength and help to the Saints of this district.

Bernard A. Fitzpatrick and Miss Helen May Davison, of Kansas, were united in marriage by J. S. Andes Sunday, October 8. Brother Fitzpatrick was formerly a teacher of the boys' class at Spring Branch. The young couple have the congratulations of the Saints.

From the list of new officers for the year, printed several weeks ago, the name of J. S. Andes, assistant Sunday school superintendent, was omitted. Brother Andes plans to give all the help he can to Alma Tankard, the superintendent.

Spring Branch observed College Day, October 15, having as the morning speakers T. A. Beck and Almer Sheehy. Appropriate music was furnished by two Graceland College girls.

Elder George Jenkins, the evening speaker, used a two-way chart in presenting his theme.

Elder Robert Fish was the morning speaker last Sunday and Patriarch Ammon White occupied the evening hour. At 6.30 p. m. the church school program was given by Brother Jacobsen's class.

Saints of this district were glad to have with them their former pastor, G. W. Eastwood, now one of the assistant pastors in Zion, and Sister Eastwood, also Brother and Sister F. A. Cool, who recently moved into this community.

The women's department will hold their first meeting of the season tomorrow at the church.

The priesthood meeting was held at two-thirty Sunday, the Spirit's presence being felt by the good number present. Plans for visiting in the district and other endeavors were discussed.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The home-coming of the Plus Ultra Class of Central Church Sunday, October 15, will be remembered as a happy event. Thanks to the splendid response of the past members, a fine feeling of fellowship prevailed.

Beautiful musical numbers were provided during the day by past and present members: Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, Mrs. Clayton J. Wolfe, Mrs. Everett Bowser, Miss Lucille Sandy, Mrs. Alfred D. Hitchcock, George Anway, Clayton J. Wolfe, Frank White and Central Choir directed by Eugene Christy. The large choir at the evening service was made up of Plus Ultra people only.

Pastor Cyril E. Wight delivered the morning sermon. Elder John F. Sheehy was the evening speaker.

One hundred and seven remained for the one o'clock dinner served by Central Women's Club, assisted by the girls of the Anti-Can't Class. Roy A. Thrutchley was toastmaster and introduced Miss Nena Young, class president.

The class officers joined with the home-coming committee in extending thanks to all in attendance and in looking forward to an even more complete and happy gathering next year.

Chicago, Illinois

First Church

With the opening of the school year and the close of the vacation season First Chicago Church activities are taking on a new flavor of life and vitality. The Sunday evening services have been restored to the local program, the choir is again making its contribution, and there is talk of the orchestra being recruited to greater strength than last year's endeavor in that direction. During the past few months additional musical talent has appeared and there is every intention of putting it to work.

At the annual business session, September 27, Brother H. T. McCaig was reelected branch president. His counselors this year will be Elders A. O. Skinner and J. A. Jacques. The latter was elected director of religious education. His staff has not yet been announced.

At a recent meeting the young people's group chose Bert Hayden and Nina Campbell as their leaders. A well-planned campaign of activities for this group is in prospect for the months ahead. One of the responsibilities assumed by the young people's group is the sponsoring of the Sunday evening service the first Sunday of each month. October 1, was the first of these endeavors.

The Saints of this congregation were deeply moved by the unexpected death of Sister Bessie Kain, who collapsed at the wheel of her car while on a motor trip with her father and mother to points of church interest. Just as they were leaving Nauvoo, after having spent an enjoyable visit there, she crumpled up at the wheel and passed on without uttering a word. Only divine interposition saved the car from being wrecked and its occupants from being killed or injured.

The date for First Chicago annual home-coming dinner has not yet been set, but some preliminary work has already been done in preparing for this event. Word will be sent out in ample time for all former members and all present friends of the branch to make their arrangements for meeting here in a grand reunion.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Grand Boulevard and Carter Avenue

Improvements in this neighborhood such as the widening of Grand Boulevard to one hundred feet, have fostered unsettled conditions here. Nevertheless for some time the branch has enjoyed splendid services. Sunday morning attendance and interest were splendid during the summer months. The Wednesday evening social services have taken on new interest and concern to the many dependable members. Regular Scripture reading and discussion have evoked considerable interest and comment which have been good for the membership.

The pastor has been busy supervising the work and visiting the sick. Many have been blessed and other suffering ones are improving.

The women's department has resumed regular meetings at the church each Thursday at 10.30 a. m. A number of special meetings held in the homes of the members during the summer were largely attended and social features were attractive.

Recently Elder Charles S. Warren was the morning speaker. His kindly manner, spiritual influence and deep reverence for God and the gospel make his ministry of great benefit.

At another of the morning services Apostle J. A. Gillen ministered to the Saints. He was especially careful to advise prayerful and devout lives on the part of the members.

At this service the infant son of Howard and Ruth Ann Elliott was blessed by Apostle Gillen and T. J. Elliott, and given the name Thomas Howard Gray. He was born last fourth of July.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the church September 12, that of Miss Dorothy Pauline Elliott and Edward Merrill Joy, of Providence, Rhode Island. Jane Lloyd sang two songs. The bride's brother, Howard Elliott, gave her away, and she was attended by her sister, Evelyn Elliott, Mrs. Howard Elliott, and Miss Sybilia Dorothea Lloyd. The double ring ceremony was read by Pastor T. J. Elliott, the bride's father. After a trip to South America the newly-married couple are at home to their friends at 740 Broad Street, Providence, Rhode Island.

The pastor's sermon on a recent Sunday, "What We Believe and Why We Believe It," was favorably commented on by many.

The young people's Players' Guild is again active. They are planning their fall and winter's work and have some phases well under way.

There is a rumor that a Three-C's Club is to be organized. This indicates important educational work for the members who desire to study and progress under the direction of those who teach in this Community Culture Club.

A new effort receiving attention is the inaugural of a young people's Sunday morning prayer meeting.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Twenty Baptized During Missionary Series

Elder E. Y. Hunker has just concluded a successful series of meetings here during which twenty were baptized. This was the best attended series held in Council Bluffs for a number of years. With the exception of a few nights attendance ranged from 175 to 250. Brother Hunker preached very forceful and convincing sermons and the audiences were largely made up of nonmembers.

Each evening the sermon was preceded by song service. At the close of the series interest was high and many hoped that Brother Hunker would come again soon. His closing sermon was preceded by a one-act play given by Omaha players.

Apostle J. A. Gillen attended the sacrament service in August, giving the opening admonition to the Saints. The church was crowded. That evening Brother Gillen spoke to a large congregation. He requested the song, "Higher Ground" be used as the opening hymn. W. T. Spanswick and Sister J. S. Garner sang "Blessed Savior, Thee I Love." Brother Gillen preached Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings also.

Many Council Bluffs members took advantage of the opportunity to attend the reunion at Woodbine August 11 to 20, consequently local attendance for two Sundays was small. On the morning of August 20, a number of the young people met at the church at 5.45 a. m., and motored to Woodbine for the early morning prayer service.

Council Bluffs has lost a well loved member, Sister Katie Rasmussen, who passed away August 24. Elder Ray Whiting preached the sermon. Sister Katie will be greatly missed here. She was a friend to all, always ready to give a helping hand wherever she was needed.

Sunday, September 16, district conference was opened here with a devotional service at 9.45 a. m. Elder E. Y. Hunker gave his personal testimony as the opening talk of the meeting. The service was one of spiritual depth and significance, so much so that two women who are not members of the church, testified that they felt the presence of the Spirit there.

Bishop W. T. Wellman, of Omaha, spoke at the eleven o'clock hour, using as his theme the last two principles of the gospel. The choir sang "Praise the Lord," by Wooler. In the evening Brother Hunker preached the first of his series of sermons previously mentioned.

The young people met for breakfast and early prayer service at the church October 8.

Elder O. Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, spoke that Sunday morning, and was greeted by a large audience. He was pastor here for a number of years and his visit was welcome.

The women's department is preparing to serve meals at the church on Thursdays. They have sponsored this activity in former years.

The priesthood are organized for an intensive campaign of visiting this fall and winter. With new members comes added responsibility and more need of teaching and instructing the membership.

Apostle R. S. Budd in Central Texas

Visits Houston, Marlin, New Baden, and Hearne

Saints of Central Texas District were recently made very happy when Apostle R. S. Budd visited and encouraged them with his sermons and counsel.

Brother Budd spent Sunday, October 1, at Houston, preaching morning and evening to large numbers of Saints and their friends. On the following day he and District President C. W. Tischer drove to Marlin, where he spoke in the evening to a good crowd. The Spirit was abundantly present. The two brothers spent the night with Brother J. R. Allen and on Tuesday drove to New Baden where they visited Brother J. M. Clevenger, Brother James and Sister McDonald. There the apostle preached in a schoolhouse to a goodly number. On Wednesday they drove to Hearne visiting Brothers Leonard and Adam Nunley and their families. Brother Budd preached in the evening and left that night for his home in Missouri.

Columbus, Ohio

Third Anniversary of Tabernacle Congregation

On the evening of October 14, this congregation opened its third anniversary exercises with an entertainment and refreshments. President A. E. Anderton gave a short history of Third Church, and was followed by Patriarch J. E. Matthews. There were also readings, instrumental numbers and vocal solos by members of the congregation. Then a mock trial was presented by C. W. Clark, A. E. Anderton, and C. Schafenberg.

Flowers from Sisters Sensabaugh, Sidwell, and Bennington as well as from First Church beautified the church for the services.

On Sunday the church school period preceded Brother E. L. Ulrich's morning sermon, "Your Part." A trio composed of Sister Ulrich and her two sons sang "Speed Away," and Brother and Sister Ulrich sang "Sweet Peace."

Then the women spread a bountiful dinner free to everyone. They also served the evening meal.

A. E. Anderton was in charge of the 2.30 p. m. meeting and Brother Rockwell was the speaker. His theme was "Our Goal." Patriarch J. E. Matthews also spoke briefly.

The evening speaker was Brother Matthews and he discussed "Our Destiny." A duet selection was sung by Ted Dougherty and Earl Welsh. There were also anthems by the young people's choir at all services of the day.

The services of this day made a definite impression on the hearts of all the worshipers. A calm and helpful influence prevailed at the meetings, in songs, prayers, and sermons.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Fifth and Queen Avenue, North

The church, decorated with gold-tinted autumn leaves, was the scene of a happy social affair the evening of October 6, when friends and relatives met to honor Brother and Sister Charles Lundeen on their golden wedding anniversary.

At eight o'clock in the evening to the strains of Lohengrin's "Wedding March," Brother Lundeen, attended by two grandsons, Kenneth Wolfe and Robert Prouse, waited for the bride as she came down the aisle attended by her bridesmaid granddaughters, Margaret Wolfe and Helen Prouse. Pastor C. H. Johnson told of the vows taken fifty years ago before the pastor of the Lutheran Church in Minneapolis and how these vows during their wedded life had been holy and sacred. Following a blessing on the bride and bridegroom of half a century, all were seated to enjoy a program of vocal solos, instrumental numbers, and readings. Letters of congratulations from President F. M. Smith, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and Elders Blair Jensen and L. S. Wight were read. Then a golden gift, two five dollar gold pieces, was presented, and the company passed to the basement where congratulations were given Brother and Sister Lundeen.

Guests were seated at long tables decorated in gold and white, and old friends gave talks, read original poems, and told anecdotes while light refreshments were served. To these the honor guests made response.

Brother and Sister Lundeen have lived at 427 Knox Avenue, North, for forty-seven years. Missionaries and their many friends have found welcome at their home. Brother Lundeen was pastor at Minneapolis for nine years. Both are stanch supporters of the church. They have visited and ministered to those in trouble and sorrow. They have reared to manhood and womanhood two sons and three daughters, and have ten grandchildren, and one great-grandson.

Minneapolis Branch is rich to have such a father and mother in its midst, and the Saints hope Brother and Sister Lundeen may be spared for many years of service and cheer.

Events in Southwestern Texas

District Day in August—Semiannual Conference in September

San Antonio.—The semiannual conference of Southwestern Texas District met with First San Antonio Church, September 24, opening with an eight-thirty prayer meeting in charge of pastors of First and Second churches, R. W. Jett and Guy Rentfroe. Sunday school at 9.45 was directed by Floyd Jett and Rouss Eastham. Apostle R. S. Budd preached in the morning at eleven o'clock, and was endowed with a marked degree of the Spirit.

Lunch was served on the church lawn at noon cafeteria style. People were there from Bandera, Medina City, Beeville, Pipe Creek, Austin and both San Antonio churches. Just as the women were beginning to clear up the lunch, rain made its appearance and everyone helped to get chairs, dishes and other equipment under shelter.

Though the rain continued at intervals throughout the day, the spirits of the people were not dampened. District President J. A. Robinson and Apostle R. S. Budd had charge of the 2 p. m. business meeting and the spirit of peace and harmony prevailed. The following officers were chosen for the year to come: District president, G. R. Kuykendall; counselors, J. A. Robinson and T. J. Jett, jr. Tedd Dorow was sustained secretary-treasurer of the district and Madelyn Galbraith was chosen supervisor of religious education. Emma Jackson was selected musical director. A rising vote of thanks was given Brother and Sister J. A. Robinson for their splendid work in the district as president and musical director.

As a theme for his evening service, Brother Budd chose to discuss, "The Tongue, the Unruly Member." Following this sermon Brother Fred Sherrill was ordained a deacon.

Splendid music was contributed to the conference by the choir in charge of Sister Emma Jackson.

Southwestern Texas members regret the loss of Brother and Sister Hiles and their daughter, Mary, who have moved to Independence to join their daughter, Flossie Waite.

August 27, was set apart as District Day, and Saints from First and Second San Antonio churches, from Bandera, Medina City, Pipe Creek, and Tuff, met at the church at Bandera. There they enjoyed Sunday school in the morning and preaching by young Harry Robinson who was assisted by his father, J. A. Robinson. Harry's mother directed the music and sang the solo, "Jesus, Savior Pilot Me." At noon the Saints went to the banks of the Medina River, where lunch was spread. A musical concert by First San Antonio musicians, directed by Sister Emma Jackson, entertained the gathering at two o'clock. Then came short speeches from R. W. Jett, pastor of First Church, San Antonio, Guy Rentfroe, pastor of Second Church, and W. H. Mannering.

Pleasant Valley Branch

Near Lucasville, Ohio

The Sunday school has increased in power and effectiveness during the last three months. Attendance has increased fifty per cent. Preaching services are of high order. Pastor Francis May preaches on Sunday nights and Priests W. L. Altman, Orville Altman, and Teachers Norman Pollock and Charles Altman assist.

This branch had its first home-coming services September 24, and more than forty Saints and friends came from Nauvoo, Ohio, and McDermott branches. The program included a sermon by Elder Rexroad, of Nauvoo, whose subject was "Zion." Elder J. E. Wiget, of McDermott, spoke on "The Gathering," and Elder Richard Shope on "The Necessity of Consecration." Luther Crabtree and Walter Culp recalled the time of their former services here. Besides the speakers mentioned the congregation enjoyed "helps" in speeches and songs by the Rexroad family and Marie and Margery Copas.

October 8, under the hands of the pastor, Orville Altman was ordained a priest, Charles Altman a teacher, and William Crabtree a deacon. For the first time in many years this branch has a full quorum of officers, and the Saints are looking forward to a nearer approach to Zionic ideals.

Saints Gather for a Sunday of Services

An enjoyable time was had at Webb, Saskatchewan, Sunday, October 8, when a truckload of Saints motored from Bracken and a few from Maple Creek, and joined the local members in a day of gospel services and visiting.

At three o'clock in the afternoon a prayer and sacrament meeting was held after which Elder J. H. Miller spoke on the subject of faith, basing his talk on Hebrews 10: 28, 29; 11: 4.

The company gathered at a near-by schoolhouse to listen to the evening sermon, "The Gospel of Christ," by Elder Anson A. Miller. Several nonmembers were present and made favorable comment.

Visitors returned home on the following day.

Lansing, Michigan

Missionary Spirit Carries Branch Forward

At the business meeting and election of officers of Lansing Branch September 25, Elder S. A. Barss, who has faithfully served as branch president for several years, requested that he be relieved of this work. Other officers of the branch were chosen and Elder Clarence Dudley was elected church school director with Maurice Baker as assistant. Supervisors of the departments are: Adult, Elder S. A. The business meeting of the women's department came the next day, Sister Ercell Trescott being retained as president with Sister Baker as secretary and treasurer. This department has ably done its share of branch work.

Elder Leonard Dudley and Sister Dudley visited their daughter, Sister Jesse Tischer, here recently. Elder Dudley gave some good sermons to Lansing congregation.

Brother and Sister Marshall Wharton and daughter, Beatrice, moved back to Lansing a short time ago, and were made very welcome. Sister Wharton is a good helper in the women's work; she has also been chosen friendly visitor.

Sister Martha Luce has so far improved in health that she is able to be at home. She spent many long months at the Ingham Tuberculosis Sanatorium. She is now assisting Sister Wanda Ferguson in the music department.

Sister Myrtle Yates is still at the sanatorium and by her saintly life and patience in affliction, is doing her bit to spread the gospel light. She needs the prayers of the Saints.

Brother and Sister David Main and family, of Ava, Missouri, moved to Lansing recently and are welcome additions to the branch. Brother Main has been in very poor health, but is now improving.

Apostle D. T. Williams has visited this city and given several helpful lectures during the past year.

The Saints of Lansing are not discouraged by the loss of their gospel tent by fire, as related in a recent Lansing letter, but are determined that the gospel shall be preached in this city. Elder S. A. Barss has been selected to head the missionary forces for the winter, and all are hoping much good can be accomplished.

A few Lansing members have visited the World's Fair in Chicago. Many of them were privileged also to attend the Park of the Pines reunion and to see and hear President F. M. Smith.

Married Margaret Dodson at Port Elgin, Ontario, in December, 1886, and to them five children were born. All of these died in infancy except a son, Joshua C. Scott, of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Scott died July 15, 1926, and Mr. Scott has since that time made his home with his son and family. He was baptized into the church June 18, 1905, and July 16, following, was ordained a deacon; was ordained a priest January 27, 1915. After a year's suffering with cancer he died October 7, 1933, at Independence. Besides his son and family there survive an adopted daughter, Myrtle Scott, and many friends. The funeral sermon was by Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MAYNE.—Arthur Mayne was born May 4, 1873, at Salford, England. When a boy he roamed the streets of his native town selling newspapers, but he grew to be a man who succeeded in founding several businesses. He served his apprenticeship as an upholsterer and was married at the age of twenty-one. Shortly afterward he started in business as a furniture repairer in his own home and gradually became proprietor of the business as a household furnisher in Ashton New-road, Beswick. He was baptized into the church, March 19, 1896, and for about forty years was a member of the congregation at Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford. He was a stanch and loyal member of the church, and held several official positions in his branch. He died September 17, 1933, at his home in Droylsden. The funeral took place Wednesday at Droylsden Cemetery, a service having been held at James Street Gospel Hall, by G. W. Leggott, who also took charge of the committal service at the cemetery.
