CHAPMAN.—John Chapman was born September 20, 1845, at West Lavington, Willshire, England, and came to America when fifteen years old. He enlisted in the United States Army, October 20, 1862, serving until the close of the Civil War, and receiving an honorable discharge. After 1870, he spent his life in Iowa, except when visiting his children. Married Miss Martha I. Wilson, March 5, 1868, who died in 1920. He was the father of eight children, five of whom survive him: a son, Frank, of Gurley, Nebraska; and four daughters, Amelia J. Kilmer, of Winnebago, Nebraska; Alice E. Graybill, of Persia, Iowa; Kate L. Gatrost, of Long Beach, California, and Gertrude M. Gatrost, of Walthill, Nebraska. Besides these he leaves nineteen grandchildren and twenty-two great-grandchildren. He passed away October 15, 1933, at Winnebago, Nebraska, at the home of a daughter. He was baptized into the church in July, 1874, and served in the priesthood a number of years. The funeral services were conducted and the sermon preached by Elder J. F. Mintun, at Persia, Iowa, in the residence of a grandson. Interment was beside his wife in the cemetery near Persia.

ACKER.—Mary Almeda Shippy was born at Roundo, Ontario, Canada, September 27, 1857. She was the youngest daughter of Joseph W. and Julia Shippy. At the age of nineteen years she moved with her parents to Hersey, Michigan. Was united in marriage to William H. Acker, September 29, 1880, at Evart, Michigan. To them five children were born, one dying in infancy. She became a member of the church when twelve years old and remained a faithful Saint throughout her life. Died at her home in Rapid River, Michigan, August 9, 1933, leaving to mourn, her husband and four children: Erma B. Howe, of Horton, Michigan; J. Irene Johnson, Bellingham, Washington; Warner L. Acker, Rapid River, Michigan, and William V., of Marquette, Michigan; one sister, Alice M. Skinner, Killarney Lake, Alberta; six brothers: Charles H. Shippy, Lynden, Washington; Hiram E., Killarney Lake; J. Ambrose, Rapid River; Andrew T., Lake, Michigan; George E., Jordan River, Saskatchewan, and Melvin E., Palo Alto, California; seven grandchildren, and many other relatives. The funeral was conducted at the home by Allan Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan, August 11, assisted by Missionary J. J. Ledsworth. Interment was in Rapid River Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

The Place of Honor

(A John Sheehy Story)

A short time ago I went to Graceland College and stood at the desk talking to the manager. A young fellow came in. I don't know what state he had come from, but he had come to sign up. Evidently he had been sent to see the room assigned him, and was just returning from the inspection: "I don't want that room," he declared. "Why not?" asked the young woman at the desk. "I just don't want it." "You'll have to see the manager," said the young woman. "There will be no changes," stated the manager. "But there will have to be," argued the youth. "Very well, if there are any changes, you suggest who is to have that room which is not good enough for you!" This suggestion took the young man's breath. "Oh," he stammered and reddened, "I just couldn't do that!" "I thought so," smiled the business manager.

In this church there are some places not so attractive as others, some not so much in the public eye and favor. But all places must be filled by those who are eager to magnify their calling. When we as Latter Day Saints learn to accept our place and work, whatever the task is, and consider it God-given, we shall redeem Zion.

Dame Rumor Errs

"The Chief" and the Managing Editor enjoyed a great big chuckle the other day over the latest awkward blunder of the gossipers. It seems that the Independence Chapter of the Amalgamated Grapevine went into a sizzle of whispering to the effect that the Editor in Chief had submitted the article on Poe for publication in the Herald, and that the M. E. had refused it. The report was greeted with grins by those who know better.

The facts are that the M. E. read it and asked for permission to publish it. He hopes you will enjoy it as much as he did. It's in this issue. And the M. E. would be happy if there were a greater interest among church people in this type of literary criticism.

Shop Notes

The Press Room Proletarian says: "The trouble with us radicals is that if people disagree with us we think something is wrong with them. But if they agree we are so surprised that we wonder what is wrong with us!"

Betty came romping in after lunch the other day, a smudge of chocolate on her cheek.

"Been eating candy?" we asked.

"No," she answered, "I've been helping Roosevelt in the 'Buy Now' campaign to break the depression."

The Perennial Lover was in a state of glum. "Unless some new girls move to town," he said, "I'm going to be dateless. I've gone with everybody here, and they're tired of me!"

"Young man," the Grouch admonished him, "courting a girl is like practicing a religion—You can be faithful to only one at a time. Remember the Scripture, 'No man can serve two masters.' But you have tried to serve many."

The Test of Faith

"It Is Your Life" It is recorded in the Holy Scripture that when Moses had made a long exposition of the law to the children of Israel, he sang a song of exhortation before the assembled hosts. Then he made this significant statement:

"Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life: and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land."

Keep the Law The financial law of the church is not a vain thing. It is the life of the church in more than one sense. Not only does it provide for the necessary material support, but it also measures the loyalty and devotion of the people. A loyal people will obey the law. "Keep the Law," say the church leaders, because they know that the life and strength of the church are dependent upon it. We must keep the law ourselves, and we must teach our children to keep it if the gospel is to be preached to all the world, and the mission of the church be carried on.

The Long, Steady Pull Some time ago the Presiding Bishopric issued words to this effect, "We have met the crisis; now for the long, steady pull." There have been occasions and necessities for sacrifice drives and special offerings. Now we are ready for the "long, steady pull" of keeping the financial law. We hope that the time will come when there shall never be a necessity again for sacrifice drives. Intermittent periods of generosity are often followed, if not preceded too, by long periods of neglect. The flourish of satisfaction that people get from making a gift in a public way does not last long. But in keeping the law we have the enduring satisfaction that we are engaged in building Zion, which is our great task.

Material for Action Recent issues of the Herald have contained helpful materials for the use of church officers in teaching the law to the people. This issue contains more of the same kind. Other publications are advertised that explain the whole law in detail. There is now no excuse for anyone to say that he does not know or understand. The church is doing all in its power to make the whole matter clear. At this point we reach the test of our faith and devotion to our ideals. Can we—will we "Keep the Law"?

Dangerous Playthings

Crowding Populations Surplus populations in Europe are a sore spot of danger. They are the breeding grounds of many a discontent, and the natural playthings of revolutionists. Unemployed, discouraged, sometimes despairing—their lot cannot be made worse, no matter what happens. Their nations need more land, more resources to provide for them and keep them busy, but these things are not available, unless they can be wrested from other nations. These surplus populations create a dangerous pressure. They are easy recruits for Europe's many armies.

Armies According to observers, Europe is bristling with uniforms, shaking with the steps of marching men, who are forever stepping up to frontiers and looking ominously over them. Then there is some brutal border "incident" in which a patrol of soldiers on one side kills a lone sentry on the other, and the trouble is on.

National Honor And as a result we see, as we have seen in the past, the spectacle of Japanese soldiers defending the honor of their country on Chinese soil, a German army protecting the Fatherland in Belgium, and an Allied army stomping up and down the Rhine to keep a prostrate Germany in her place. Actually, behind all these pretenses of national honor, are other and more mercenary motives: the desire for land, trade, resources, or commercial rights.

The Race of Armaments It is all right for little boys to want the largest dogs, the best jack-knives, the fastest bicycles, and the loudest cap pistols. The trouble is that the nations are acting like those little boys. The largest army, a "navy second to none," the fastest aircraft—these are the objectives in a costly race that is threatening to bankrupt the world. It is now impossible to pay the cost of the kind of warfare that the technicians have invented.

Population Control The earth can be made to support many more people than it does at present. But we will some day reach a limit. There is only so much space, and it will only support so many. To breed more people is to develop a situation where the surplus population can only be taken care of by war, famine, or pestilence. We have beheld the effects of all these things, and they are horrible. Nations must some day learn to produce fewer and better people, and to take better care of them. A Christian future for the world demands it.

Men You Ought to Know

President Frederick M. Smith

He became President of the Church May 5, 1915. His father, "Young Joseph," had been President from 1860 to 1914, and his grandfather was the founder of the church. He is not so old but that there are many people still living who knew him when he was "just a boy." He is still young at heart, and has many interests, one of which is represented in his article in this issue.

Can You Answer These?

Is there a promise of blessings provided we obey the financial law?

Who should pay tithing?

Is it correct to receipt as "tithing" sums received from nonmembers?

Should a person pay tithing on gifts received?

These and many other questions are answered in the new Handbook of the Financial Law, a recent publication put out for the Presiding Bishopric.

Every serious student of the church will want a copy of this important little book. It will figure in all discussions of the basic financial law of the church during the coming year. It is the best statement of the principle of tithing so far published for the church.

The Financial Law

The church is the chosen instrument by which God purposes to preach the gospel in all the world, to nurture his people in the ways of righteousness, and to establish Zion, "the pure in heart." In order to accomplish this great work, a certain amount of financial means is necessary to provide for the work of the church and to carry forward its missionary and Zionic program. To supply this need God has commanded his people to contribute of their temporal possessions in proportion to their ability and according to his law. This is called the financial law of the church.

There are three fundamental reasons why we are under financial obligations to God and his church.

(1) We are the creatures of God, and receive from him all the material things of life to be used as his law directs. To refuse compliance with his will in the use of the material things intrusted to our care is ingratitude and rebellion.

(2) The happiness and salvation of mankind is a matter of responsibility which must in justice be shared by all. We are a part of the social fabric, and the brotherhood of man is co-extensive with the Fatherhood of God. Therefore we owe both God and man a share in our material resources.

(3) As members of the body of Christ—his church—we have covenanted to love God and man, to whom we have pledged our devotion and service.

The first observance of the financial law is incumbent on us as soon as we become conscious of our responsibility to obey the gospel of Christ. It may, and probably should, precede our obedience in baptism. If not before, it should certainly follow immediately after. It is an earnest of our repentance and desire to obey the whole law of Christ. If we have long had our names on the records of the church and yet we have not consistently rendered an accounting and done what we can to pay our tithing, we have not fully obeyed the gospel. Unless we make earnest effort to understand the law and to comply with it, the Lord's work also must suffer and we must necessarily stand condemned.

Parents should teach their children, both by precept and example to observe all the commandments. For their failure to teach these things they are answerable to Him who gave the law (Doctrine and Covenants 68:4). Children, however, become answerable for their own deeds when they arrive at years of understanding.

God could have accomplished his major purposes in some other way, but he chose to permit men to share the responsibility with him; and in sharing, to attain for themselves the spiritual development anticipated in the gospel.

On the new "Handbook of the Financial Law" and the "Keep the Law" Program

Omaha, Nebraska, 115 South Thirty-fifth Street.
October 21, 1933.

PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
Dear Sirs:

This will acknowledge receipt of your Handbook of the Financial Law. I am thoroughly delighted with the contents and wish to congratulate the Presiding Bishopric on this publication.

I really feel now that we should get somewhere in the teaching and keeping of the law and trust there will be no let up, even after December 3.

I would like to see this Hand Book placed in the hands of every member of the priesthood from one end of the earth to the other, with instructions that they study and teach it as presented. I am sure that this action would bring profitable results as well as eradicate many misleading statements going out from our priesthood which causes confusion and misunderstandings among the members.

I have written each solicitor of Northeast Nebraska and Southwestern Iowa Districts, concerning the "Keep the Law" period from November 12, to December 3, 1933, and we will do everything we can to make this a success. Our program includes the reading of the law as contained in the Handbook to the congregation of each branch. This is in line with the ancient Jewish custom of reading the law at their special services following the Day of Atonement. As a church, it is high time we were reading the law to the congregation and seeking forgiveness from our heavenly Father for not having kept the law during the past.

Very sincerely yours,
W. T. WELLMAN.

October 16, 1933.

BISHOP G. L. DELAPP,
Dear Brother DeLapp:

Received the pamphlet on the law of tithing in which the questions and answers covering practically every phase of the experience of this Latter Day Saint people have been treated upon and I believe it is one of the finest things I have ever seen. I think that I have answered every question that is printed therein at different times and under different circumstances but to have the whole matter in pamphlet form is, I believe, the best thing that has come from the Bishop's office in many a day. I would like to see one of these pamphlets in every home. I think it would be valuable to have it there.

I have for several weeks been preaching on keeping of the law and I am most pleased to see the church taking this stand and I trust that as soon as opportunity is given to contact the membership (which we are endeavoring to do in Far West Stake in order that everyone may be fully posted as to what the law is) that the church will make the keeping of the financial law along with some other things a test of fellowship. I cannot see why we should go limping along as we have done for so long a time. If this be the church of the Living God, let us keep her laws, and if it isn't, let's cast it aside and go our own way. Maybe you think I am a little drastic but, Brother DeLapp, I believe the time has come when we should determine whether we are going to stand for this church or against it and you know and I know that those who will not keep the law are against us. They are idlers in the kingdom and the law specifically states that there is no place for the idler here.

I want you to know that I am arranging for a most strenuous campaign during this period of time and not only during that period but following it. I have been driving hard already and expect to keep at it.

With very best regards,

Yours truly,
MILO BURNETT,
Bishop, Far West Stake.

Herrin, Illinois.
October 15, 1933.

MR. G. L. DELAPP,
Dear Sir and Brother:

Received your letter of October 7 on Keep the Law Program. Will say that we will make every effort to cooperate with you in this matter. Brother Allen, our pastor, and myself are trying to make our branch a 100 percent on paying tithing before the end of this year, if it is only a few cents. Just to get them started on this point of keeping the law. We have very little work down here, but we can at least make an effort.

Sincerely yours,
F. E. BUCKLAW.

520 South Thirteenth Street.

Excerpt from letter of Ray Whiting, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"We are all mighty pleased with the way you fellows are putting on the drive to "Keep the Law." I was just talking with Gerald Gunsolley a few minutes ago and he, too, is happy the way you are going after it. It sounds much better than a sacrifice drive and I am sure it is better. We will be glad to do all we can to push this in these two branches."

Excerpt from letter of Steven Robinson.

We are making special plans for the general church financial program, "Keep the Law," November 12 to December 3.

In Des Moines all classes of the church school will teach from the quarterly edited by the Presiding Bishopric and all sermons will be on the subject, special work by the priesthood and special workers. The sermon topics are as follows:

Divinity of the Financial Law
Plan of the Law
Divine Social Order
Salt of the Earth (Keep the Whole Law)
What Consistent Paying of Tithing Will Do
Obedience to Heavenly Vision

I am giving special attention to the various branches and groups of the district that the program of the general church will be emphasized.

The Herald has come this morning, and we note the "Keep the Law" program that is contemplated. We have been interested in this phase of the work for many years. We have taught the adult class here for the last three Sundays, and preached in the mornings, and this has been the trend of our teaching and preaching. We also visit each day at noon in the homes of the Saints, and we have been talking this "Keep the Law" strongly to them. As a result one married couple came this morning with a check for $50.00 and asked us to send it to the Bishop for them, and they are filing their inventory. Many others will do so. We notice that special material is being sent out to the officers, and we wish that you would have this material sent to us, also, as we wish to help in this movement, and to be thoroughly informed, so that we can present the matter in accordance with the program you are outlining.

Sincerely yours,
RICHARD BALDWIN.

A Page of Thought and Discussion for the Young People of the Church

"Thanks for Everything!"

With these words, written in wavering penciling, Rutherford B. Hayes, once President of the United States, ended his last note to his friend of many years, Edward Bok, the famous journalist. Their friendship, begun when Bok was a struggling young newspaper man and Hayes was president, was a thing very precious to them. Is it not fitting that these words, "Thanks, thanks for everything!" should be the last message from one great friend to another?

"Thank you!" Only two short words, but what a help they can be if spoken sincerely. Some wise and thoughtful person has observed that one should never be too busy to be courteous. I should like to add to this that one should never be too sure of a friendship or of institutional favoritism to omit the "Thank you" when a privilege is granted or favor received. Someone else has compared courtesy in daily living to the oil which causes great machines to run without friction or noise.

"Be courteous. Young people often think it is smart to be rude. This is a mistake. All great men are kind and courteous," said a lecturer on the topic, "Ten Good Rules." This was his second rule. To it he added as his seventh rule: "Cultivate good manners. When you get into college, and later, when you get out into the world, you will find that you are often judged by the way you act in the presence of others."

Doctor Frank Crayne writing on, "The Boy and His Job," for the Houston (Texas) Post, says: "BE POLITE (I hope the printer will set that in capital letters). There is no one little trick that will help you make good more than getting the habit of being polite."

A courteous "Thank you" is the commonly conventional way of expressing gratitude, and everyone of us has many reasons for being grateful. Indeed so great and numerous are the blessings of life for us who are young people that we should feel little hesitation in showing our thankfulness in word and deed. The Scriptures teach us to be thankful for all things. Life without gratitude is very barren. Happy is the person who early learns to be grateful and to express his gratitude sincerely.

I have friends who say "Thank you," and I have friends who forget to either because they are careless or because they are not thankful. But as time passes I think I have a deeper appreciation of my friends who exercise the royal prerogative of being kind and courteous. It is a kindly thing to be considerate and grateful. Jesus gave thanks.

As for myself—why, when I think of life and friends and sunshine and work that challenges my best, I just can't help but want to say a big and resounding "THANK YOU" for every one of my blessings. I want to be great in the important matters of consideration, courtesy, and gratitude. I want to say as did Mr. Hayes—"Thanks for everything!"

> A smile, a cheery "Good morning," a bit of kindly, thoughtful courtesy to a friend or stranger—they're not little things, not any of them.
> Really, there aren't any littles in this complicated, complex life we live. They're all greats! Therefore, let's keep our eyes open and our hearts warm, lest we carelessly let one pass unheeded.—Lora E. Clement, in The Youth's Instructor.

Carnival Ideas

Do your young people like to do things? Do they give hearty approval and support to big events involving the interest and help of everyone? Are they looking for something "different" this fall and early winter? Then why not try a carnival? It is one of the most surprising, laughable and varied of endeavors you could undertake. In a carnival, programs, jollity and refreshments are combined in a mammoth, noisy entertainment.

Here are some of the ideas gleaned from a city-wide carnival sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council, October 21, in the lower room of the Auditorium. These young revelers are happy to pass their ideas on.

In one corner let Professor Soapstone, "the illustrious magician," and No-Talk-Ray, the clown, give their performance at intervals. The professor should have some really good magic tricks, and if the clown is a good never-succeed-at-my-trick mimic, the act will be splendid entertainment. In front of the tent or booth, ballyhooers and banjo players should attract the crowd to see "the show."

Men, women, boys, and girls may in another part of the room be invited to "ring-a-peg," using jar rubbers and clothes hooks. Prizes for good shots are tiny China dolls, and booby prizes of small mirrors bring a laugh from everyone.

Right now a "walking marathon" is popular. Each performance should include from three to five minutes of walking by eight or ten couples and a short program. The drama, "Oh!" has proved very effective as the program feature. Nothing but the word "oh" is said, but it is uttered with a great variety of expressions. A mock wedding will add romantic flavor to this booth, too.

And don't forget balloons, those of the dirigible-like proportions and the colorful, noisy squawkers. A carnival crowd isn't a carnival crowd without noise and plenty of it. Balloons always sell well.

Madame X, the fortune teller, is always popular. Tuck her away in an isolated booth and see how long that booth is isolated.

One of the most original things you can do is to have a Penny Arcade. Prepare several pasteboard boxes with peepholes, interior lighting and huge signs. Call these the "Eleven Wonders of the World." Here are starter ideas for your boxes: "What Holds Our Loving Home Together," inside can be seen two or three large nails; "For Women Only," a powder puff, lipstick and rouge; "The Largest Petrified Elephant in Existence," a very small china elephant. Carnival crowds like jokes even on themselves.

Prince Ali Bendo may supplement the efforts of Madame X and "Read the past" and "Know the future." See him.

Of course a carnival is not a carnival without its clown band, its Negro minstrel, and its refreshment stands where everything from chili to cookies may be bought.

Washington and British Columbia Young People Will Exchange Publications

The young people of Seattle and British Columbia District get out mimeographed copies of a monthly Bulletin. At present it consists of seven typed pages. They are anxious to exchange their paper with other districts or stakes. Address Averil Sprague, Route 2, Lyndden, Washington.

Our attention is also called to an error in typing which occurred when excerpts were made from the letter of Dwight W. Davis on page 1297, the issue of October 10. An entire line was omitted. We reproduce the corrected paragraph:

"It was particularly pleasing, at this meeting, to learn that the respective supervisors were unanimous in the thought that we should do more to give our young people a working knowledge of the history of this church, its organization, and its beliefs and principles than has heretofore been true. We cannot be intelligently consecrated to that with which we are not familiar."

NEWS BRIEFS

Fall Activities Review

Throughout the church the fall and opening winter activities have been many and varied, and all have been attended by the spirit of love and service. The time of the Saints has been more than crowded with branch home-comings and observances of special days and anniversaries, district institutes, conferences, young people's conventions, missionary campaigns, organization of classes and departments for a full program of winter's work, and preparations for the "Keep the Law" period (November 12 to December 3).

In addition to these came the programs and festivals characteristic of harvest-time. The big, church-wide Harvest Home Festival at Independence early in October, had its smaller counterparts in such branches as those in Manchester, England, San Bernardino, California, Sault Saint Marie, Canada, and many others.

Missionaries Visit Wales

Missionary Fred Davies completed his stay in Wales a short time ago. Most of his time was spent visiting the scattered Saints, according to the Southern England and Wales District Herald. The work at Llanelly is moving forward rapidly, and the members are meeting together under the influence of God's Spirit.

Apostle John W. Rushton paid a second visit to Wales not long ago and reports good interest shown.

New Officers in Utah District

When Elder A. M. Chase resigned as pastor of the Reorganized Church in Salt Lake City, in August, the congregation elected Elder R. R. Robertson to take charge. Elder Frank Veenstra, until a few months ago missionary to Holland but now appointed to Utah, succeeds Brother Chase as district president, and is also pastor of Ogden Branch. He and Sister Veenstra, an energetic missionary pair, are now hard at work in the district.

After two years of untiring service in Utah District and particularly in Salt Lake City, Elder and Sister A. M. Chase have left the State for a much-needed vacation and rest. It was with regret that Utah Saints saw them go.

Denver Branch Hears Visiting Speakers

Denver, Colorado, Saints have lately profited by sermons from President Elbert A. Smith, who was present at their rally day services October 15, from Elder R. S. Salyards, sr., and from Apostle M. A. McConley.

All departments of the local are active, and the priesthood, under the direction of Pastor Glaude A. Smith, are just concluding an intensive visiting campaign.

Joys to Sing for Church

"Singing for the church is my greatest joy," recently said Sister Gertrude Allen, soloist at the Midland district conference held at Nuneaton, England, September 23 and 24. Sister Allen won the Leamington Eisteddfod a short time ago, also several gold medals.

President F. M. McDowell Devotes Time to Priesthood Interests

President F. M. McDowell is giving his time to the interests of the priesthood. With Elder Blair Jensen he visited nearly all of the branches in Lamoni Stake, addressing congregations and making personal contacts with the priesthood. Then a short time ago he spent several days in Far West Stake in company with Ward A. Hougas, stake president, interviewing priesthood members. Last week-end Brother McDowell and Apostle R. S. Budd visited Oklahoma City Branch. Next week-end he will again be helping in Far West Stake, leaving shortly thereafter for a six weeks' visiting campaign on the western coast including California, Oregon and Washington.

In these priesthood visits the needs of the church are stressed and the ministry are urged to give their loyal support to help supply these needs. General officers realize that local men are now carrying the burden of branch responsibilities in many cities, and that frequently they need encouragement, instruction, and inspiration. A large majority of the priesthood are pledging their loyal support and sincerely consecrating themselves to their tasks.

Your Friends Who Serve You

By L. F. P. Curry
Of the Presiding Bishopric

IN THE CHURCH is a group upon whose willingness to serve in priesthood, teaching, or other capacity, complete reliance may be placed, in fair weather or in foul. They care for the meeting place, kindling the fires in winter, and opening to the breezes of summer; they receive your tithes and offerings for local or general use; they visit your homes to counsel or encourage; they preach and teach, as their calling may be, happy in the opportunity to serve.

Often their presence is taken as a matter of course; infrequently are they thanked for what they are at pains to give. Really, they must have the heart to serve, chiefly because they feel themselves to be part of the extended arm of Christ who said (John 20: 21), "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you"; and who addressed those sent with these kindly words: "Henceforth I call you not servants; . . . but I have called you friends." Called to friendship with Christ, they seek in friendliness to serve their brothers.

Included in this group of friendly helpers are the bishops, bishops' agents, solicitors, and their respective assistants. It is of them and their work that we wish to write. For some months we have been endeavoring to multiply their numbers. Several reasons for this exist. First, almost all of them perform their church work in the time remaining after daily duties of their occupation are over; thus the burden upon their scanty margin of time is often heavy. With more to help, the physical and spiritual strain upon each will be decreased, and effectiveness increased. Second, a sufficient number will be able to visit the members personally, in some cases teaching the temporal law, in others answering questions, or in a friendly way inviting to obedience. And this visiting is not a matter of a brief period, like that of November 12 to December 3, but the weekly routine through each year. Third, when the time arrives to put forth a strong effort to pay the church debt, we expect to have a sufficient number in this group, trained, dependable, and experienced, to contact, smoothly and quickly, the entire membership for this purpose. Fourth, the expansion of our Zionic movement positively requires sufficient workers in this group who know what is to be done, how to do it, and how to enlist and train others in the enterprise.

To increase the value of these workers, instruction through the written word and personal contact is needed. Of course, many have already reached a development in their ministry which may leave nothing for us to offer, but almost everyone may profit from obtaining a clearer conception of the plans and activities being developed at headquarters for the attainment of our objectives as a church. Hitherto, various leaflets of instruction and formal articles in our church paper have appeared. As an aid to the work of teaching the law in the period above referred to, we have now issued a Handbook of the Financial Law, placing a copy in the hands of each bishop, agent and solicitor, and district and branch presidents. The publication will be made generally available very quickly. Official articles will continue to appear from time to time, and we hope these workers, particularly, will have the time to study them carefully. As a further means of development, we desire to arrange for visits of the bishops to the center place, where specific projects may be studied, and specific methods of execution worked out and understood. From such visits these men would return to their local communities much better able to carry on their work, and officials at headquarters will have received the benefit of their counsel and experience. Furthermore, at times the members of the Presiding Bishopric will proceed to convenient points of assembly throughout the country, to which will have been gathered for a brief but very concentrated period of study, the local bishops, agents, solicitors, and their assistants. Thus, on the ground, by means of this personal contact, understanding may be more fully established. If all workers know their duty, and faithfully instruct the members as to theirs, keeping the law will not be a difficult matter, as long as the will to obey is present. Unfortunately, some of this interchange of counsel and instruc- (Continued on page 1393)

The Building of the Kingdom—

The work of the church cannot be carried on without organization and means. Faith, good will, devotion are indispensable; but they are not all-sufficient. Works are also necessary.

In this article Bishop Curry gives us the first sketch of that kind of organization and work which is necessary to start the foundation of the material kingdom of God.

The Need of Church Organization

By C. E. Wight

THE CHURCH has for too long a time been considered a thing apart from the ordinary affairs of life. It has been conceived of as a fellowship whose purpose is primarily a preparation of the individual for a dim and more or less misty future.

This attitude has developed a state of mind reflected in a recent meeting composed of a group of men who came together to discuss certain economic phases of our religious experience. The meeting was being addressed by an economic expert. In the course of his talk he said, "Of course, I realize that religion and business are two separate and distinct things."

He was immediately challenged by one of the group, who replied, "We do not accept that. We believe that religion should be carried right into our business, that it should become the basis of business."

It is the attitude of this man of the world, an attitude held to by the vast majority of people, which makes difficult the consideration of a religious organization on the same basis that we would consider any other organization.

THE DIVINE INTENTION

It is true that there is a vital religious experience that must come to the devotee of religion, an experience that cannot be discussed in terms of dollars, pounds, or bushels. But this experience is only the impelling force, or motivation, leading the individual to the doing of religious acts.

If every individual were to respond to his religious drive, executing his religious acts without relation to the religious acts of his fellow men, religion would be valueless in the matter of accomplishment of certain ends.

There is a scriptural statement to the effect that "one shall chase a thousand and two shall put ten thousand to flight." In other words, the strength of the individual increases in geometric ratio when he joins with his fellow men for the accomplishment of his purposes.

Was it the intention of the Creator that the religious impulses with which he endowed all men should be lost because of the failure to organize them? That they should be ineffective because of the puny effort of each to work alone and unaided?

GOD'S ORGANIZATION IN NATURE

Every created thing bears mute testimony to God's use of organization in the working out of his divine plan. Pick up the tiniest flower that blooms by the side of the pathway. Study it under the microscope and note the perfection of its organism. Many functions to be performed for the development of the flower, and adequate provision made for the carrying out of each function.

An interesting story appeared in a recent issue of a leading magazine, indicating the placing of an instinctive plan of organization in the make-up of one of the tiniest insects, the ant. According to this author, a careful study of ant life within a colony shows each individual member bent earnestly upon the accomplishment of a given task.

Certain ones go out for the gathering of food; others have domestic duties within the hill; others do sentinel and guard duty. At the close of the day a large pebble is rolled into each entrance, and if a straggler comes attempting to gain admission after closing time, his efforts are resisted most strenuously by the porter within.

The strangest part of the whole story is found in that the minutest study fails to reveal any apparent leadership or direction. Apparently the tiny fellows are working in harmony with their instincts. And yet, following out these God-given instincts a perfect organization is manifested.

THE NEED OF ORGANIZATION AMONG MEN

With man, of course, it is different, in that he is not a creature of his instincts. His powers of thinking and willing set him apart from the lower forms of life. He is godlike in potentiality, in that he has the possibility of bringing himself to a place where he can not only fill one small niche in an organization of his fellow men, but can prepare himself for other and higher places in either the human or divine types of organization.

We have rather assumed in the preceding statement that man would fall into some kind of organization. Is this necessary? It is true we have shown that God uses organization in the building of a flower, or an ant hill, but is it necessary that man, his highest creation, shall also be bound to an organized group?

Look at the matter first from the purely selfish standpoint of the individual. Can he better himself more in an organized group? or by working alone?

Suppose that a group in a certain state decides on the latter basis. They immediately set to work to make possible the fullest expression for the individual by the destruction of all organizations.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

First, the laws of the state must go. No longer is the individual to be restricted by any "thou shalt not." He is to be free to go and do as he pleases.

No property rights are to be recognized. If I have a beautiful home and my neighbor has a poor one, if he is a stronger man than I am, he may by force eject me and take possession. I have no recourse, for the law has been done away.

There is now no money, for with the destruction of the law, and without the weight of public opinion and organized society behind it, there can be no such thing as legal tender.

With the destruction of the laws of the land, and to give the individual absolute freedom, the laws of the church are next discarded.

Henceforth there are no laws of marriage. The strongest man becomes possessed of the woman of his fancy, by "stone age" methods.

Such a condition of "freedom" from organization and restraint would not be tolerated for long by its most ardent advocates. Presently, two or three of the weaker ones would combine for protection against one of the stronger. Then the stronger would bring others to his aid, and soon we would find a number of organized groups fighting among themselves.

A strong organization gives to every individual a finer and bigger freedom than does the dissolution of organization. In the leading thought of the world it is recognized that the fighting and bickering of the world can never cease until the entire world is brought into some semblance of organization, based on the high ideals that prompted the organizing into one central government of all the thirteen colonies of the New World.

It is seen, that even from the standpoint of the selfish individual, the organization of society is good. But it is infinitely more necessary if each individual is to be given the opportunity of releasing his higher powers. Without organized society it would be well-nigh impossible for the individual to express himself through the avenues of love and service.

The world, if it is to be truly free, needs more and not less organization. The manifestation of organization is admitted in the physical world. Its need in the business and political worlds is undisputed. But in the religious world, what? Time was when the recognition of a need for definite organization for spiritual things was lacking. But today the emphasis is being changed. Men everywhere are becoming aroused to the necessity of making a practical test of religion here, recognizing that if the present is cared for the morrow will take care of itself. And this practical religion is only possible if we have well organized religious life and work.

The Organic Form of the Church

We have already suggested that all nature gives evidence of God's use of organization in his building of the universe. Let us return again to an examination of the flower.

What is it that gives value to the flower? Is it the substance—the matter making possible its existence? Separate these corporeal elements into their constituent parts and it will be seen that these of themselves have not made the flower appeal to you.

You enjoy the flower for two things: its beauty and its fragrance. These are both spiritual and not material entities. But how are these spiritual entities given to the flower?

Pluck a few of the petals and immediately is the beauty of the flower destroyed. Extract the aromatic substances and its fragrance is gone. Henceforth this flower does not appeal to you as a thing to be desired.

But note: While it was the loss of beauty and fragrance that made the flower undesirable, yet these spiritual entities were lost through the destruction of its physical perfection.

If this analogy is to be held good in our consideration of the organization of the Church of Christ, it immediately suggests to us this thought:

While the message of our Master is the important consideration, yet it cannot come to us in all of its power and beauty if the bodily structure through which it is to work be destroyed.

Paul had some such thought as this in mind when he used the body of man as an illustration of the Church of Christ. It will be recalled that he speaks of the many and diverse parts of the body, each being necessary for the performance of the many and diverse tasks of seeing, hearing, walking, etc. Remove the eyes from the body, and the function of sight has been destroyed. Henceforth is the body crippled. In like manner, if there is taken from the organic structure of the church any part necessary to the full expression of the message of Jesus, then is that message made less complete. Its beauty or power is destroyed.

Three Tasks of the Church

Now the church exists in order that the life-giving purpose of the message of Christ may be fulfilled. In a more detailed sense, we must see that there is within the structure:

1. The possibility of keeping constantly in touch with God, in order that the message may be fully and intelligently presented.

2. Such officers as will permit the testimony of the Christ to be taken to the nations of the earth.

3. Those who have (Continued on page 1393)

"The Raven"---A Spiritual Interpretation . . .

By President Frederick M. Smith

(Edgar Allan Poe's famous composition is given a novel interpretation in this new type of critique. It was first presented over the radio as part of a Graceland College program. This presentation aroused much discussion, and brought many letters of appreciation to the author. He was finally persuaded to offer it to the Managing Editor, to whose discretion he left the decision as to its suitability for Herald readers. We are glad to present it here as a criticism of life, philosophy, and letters.—L. L.)

SOME MONTHS AGO I was with two writers of verse, one at least nationally, and the other more than locally known for their compositions. We were discussing various phases of literature, and in the course of our conversation I casually spoke of "The Raven" as being a great poem. The lesser of the two literary lights mentioned, seemed surprised and said, "Why, you do not hold 'The Raven' to be a great poem, do you?"

"Yes," I said. "One of the finest written in our language."

He then turned to the other writer with the question, "Do you think 'The Raven' is a great poem?"

The literateur thus addressed happened to be a life-long student of Poe, and in his own name has acquired not a little fame as a writer of verse; and so his answer pleased me much when he said quietly, pensively, and after a short meditative delay:

"Yes, I would rather have been the author of 'The Raven' than of any poem in the English language."

This answer may have indicated ambition as much as it did appreciation of Poe's poetic masterpiece. I am sure, however, that it revealed an intimate knowledge of the poem and a sense of its hidden meaning.

OPINIONS DIFFER WIDELY on the merit of "The Raven," even among literary critics and students, and some hold Poe to have been a mere rhymster who built his jingles like a toy-maker would construct his wares. On the other hand there are some who have sensed that behind and beneath the perfectly constructed metrical compositions of Poe lie meanings deep and soul-stirring. In foreign countries, France, Italy, Spain, Germany, and Great Britain, Poe has always been highly praised. In our own country in more recent years there has been developed a better understanding and appreciation of him as poet and scholar. Perhaps we have been slow in grasping the depths of mind and the extent to which it made excursions into the philosophies, histories and literature of oriental and western peoples and brought back to us words, thoughts and traditions which he meaningfully and in his matchless manner wove into his compositions and verse. As a prose writer of mystery he long ago won a first rank place; but as poet and depictor of the things that stirs the soul we have been tardy in giving him his due rank.

IN "The Raven," Poe has given us one of his best literary productions; and yet it is likely that on none of his verses do opinions differ more widely, though from its first appearance it was hailed as the work of a genius. It is possible that even yet its real greatness is not generally recognized. Held by some to be a tinkling trifle with a catchy refrain, I believe it to be the outpouring of his very soul as he contemplated its ruins. It was forged white hot from those ruins, and depicts the deep despair of an ambitious man viewing his wrecked and hopeless life.

I fancy I hear someone say, Why raise the question of how "The Raven" came to be written? Has not Poe himself, in great detail and much refinement, told us how and why he came to issue it? A pertinent question surely.

In that so termed explanation Poe gave an excellent description of how a poem might be constructed mechanically perfect. But we know, as did he, that poems that live beyond the current issue of the paper or magazine in which they are published are not made in such fashion. To have their verse perfect ought to be the desire of every writer, but the form alone though perfect in detail cannot make an abiding poem. It must breathe a message that lives in the experiences and aspirations of men, a song of exaltation, or the murmurings of despair. Poems must carry feeling. No one today takes Poe's explanation of the writing of "The Raven" seriously. The literateur smiles when it is mentioned, the editor sneers. Poe's explanation may be termed a brilliant satire on poem building.

And there was probably a reason for the writing of the explanation. Poe had a high regard for the ability of the American reading public to intuitively recognize what is great in composition, either prose or verse, but he also believed that this intuition was not always accompanied by ability to understand fully. But the reading public felt what was behind the story of "The Raven," and pity for the man, whose soul cry of agony it was, showed itself in some quarters. And Poe proudly repulsing pity, tried to escape it by telling the public how he came to write the poem. But it is an explanation which does not explain. I doubt not that not only did Poe shrink at the thought of pity from the public, but he also shuddered at the thought that perhaps he too completely laid bare his own soul in his masterpiece.

Speaking of the poem itself, all will agree that in rhythmic construction it approaches perfection. To his chosen measure he clings with fidelity. In coloring, it is outstanding in beauty. It is rich in figures of speech which require a breadth of learning even to understand, and reveals the wide scope of his reading. The selection of words with respect to delicate shade of meaning is exquisite in its accuracy, while the fanciful setting of the reclining and lucubrating student reflects a touch of luxury almost oriental. Add to this his almost perfect rhyming, the masterful use of alliteration, and the unique refrain, and we have a poem charming and attractive in its mechanical and literary perfection.

BUT THIS IS NOT ENOUGH for a great poem. That "The Raven" has that something else essential to greatness is attested by the grip it takes upon all who read it. Charmed by its smooth literary beauty though we may be, as the closing refrain reverberates through our minds, as it will, it leaves us feeling for the meaning of it all. We are hushed by a sense of having stood in holy places and having caught a glimpse of what is not often revealed to man. And so it is. We have seen the great soul of a despairing genius laid bare, though the full significance or meaning of it all may be only partially grasped.

If there be a hell, it will be filled with remorse. To be filled with remorse is hellish. What brings greater or deeper regrets than consciousness of having failed to do the right thing? The saddest words, you know are, "It might have been." If now, these pangful thoughts torture us at the memory of some misdeed, wrong words spoken, or failure to do or say what should have been done or said, how much greater, deeper, and more prolonged will be the agony of remorse which comes at the first movements of consciousness that because of innate weakness, inherent or acquired, unrelieved by lack of proper use of talent, or created by vicious habits or attitudes, one can never more rise to the heights of ideal. To live momentarily below one's ideals will bring remorse which may be assuaged by the thought or determination to do better next time. But when there comes the conviction that never can one reach his ideals, and especially when that prohibition is a creature of his own making, when one becomes aware that always must one, because of sinning away his day of grace, continue to function and live on a plane below that which might have been possible, remorse is multiplied a hundredfold, and one is sure to be plunged by the thought into the nadir of despair. Infidelity to vows, infidelity to trust, infidelity to friendship, infidelity to morals are all grief producing; but catch these all up into infidelity to higher ideals, and realize that this infidelity has become so fixed that never can one get rid of it or rise above it and one can then sense the deepest feelings of remorse and despair which man can experience.

Such is the remorse depicted in "The Raven."

WITH RARE SELECTION Poe chose for the symbol of his ideals a beautiful maiden. What can more appropriately symbolize lofty but insordid ambition, sincerity of purpose, fidelity in the broadest sense of being true to ideals, the finer instincts, and the refinements of true culture? What can stand as a finer symbol of those ideals which have for their expression racial progress and uplift? It was not a fortuitous movement of the pen that caused Poe to write the name Lenore, as the rare and radiant maiden whom, when lost to him, "the angels name Lenore," though because snatched from him she was "nameless here forever more." From the effects of the blow which takes away a sweetheart, one may duly recover, and to some extent find another to take her place; such a departed lover we can hold in sweet memory; and loss of her need not cause continuous remorse. But conscious that fidelity to the loftier ideals was forever beyond his reach, that never more, even in a future Aidenn would he be able to clasp this "rare and radiant maiden," filled the poet with the despair which enabled him so effectively to breathe the spirit and genius of "The Raven,"—infidelity.

Again, it was not mere caprice which caused Poe to select the raven as symbol of infidelity. And well may we believe that the poem was not intended merely to relate adventures of a sodden crow seeking the shelter of a room lighted by the lamps of a student reading late to find surcease from sorrow over the death of a lover. The wet and ungainly fowl, were he fowl only, and not symbol, would doubtless have flown on the morrow. But the croaking crow was well selected by Poe to become symbolic of the fact that into the soul had come the consciousness never again would the raven of infidelity leave him. How apt the symbol, how ominous the bird, how terrible the thought!

The longing in his heart to be able to rise above his own weakness and despite them reach his ideals is depicted when he addresses the bird:

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!—
prophet still, if bird or devil!
By that Heaven that bends above us—
by that God we both adore,
Tell this soul with sorrow laden if,
within the distant Aidenn,
It shall clasp a sainted maiden whom the angels name Lenore—
Clasp a rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Leonore."
Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

Nevermore!

THUS was declared to his soul the fact that his birthright was gone.

And in the agony of his soul he cries out, pleading to be relieved of the incubus of infidelity, and he orders the bird to leave. How meaningful does the stanza become where he cried:

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or fiend!" I shrieked, upstarting—Get thee back into the tempest and the night's Plutonian shore!
Leave no black plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken!
Leave my loneliness unbroken!—quit
the bust above my door!
Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!"
Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore!"

"Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door," is not the language of a mere rhymster. It is the cry of agony wrung from a great soul in ruins.

To emphasize the position I take that the whole poem is allegorical and symbolic, note this. It begins like this:

"Once upon a midnight dreary," indicating the past, long ago—or at least not the present.

"Ah, distinctly I remember, it was in the bleak December."

Doubtless he remembered the very hour when this consciousness of infidelity, irremedial infidelity, was first borne in upon him, when he pleaded for the ebon bird to remove from his heart the ruthless beak. But the Raven said, "Nevermore!"

Now note the change in time. It was "in the bleak December," "once upon a midnight dreary." But now in the less sthenic moments of despair he dejectedly says:

"And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting,
On the pallid bust of Pallas just above
my chamber door;
And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming;
And the lamplight o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor;
And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor,
Shall be lifted—Nevermore."

And so the great soul-stirring poem closes with the gloomy thought that out from the shadow of the ominous bird of infidelity would nevermore rise the soul of the poet.

Is it a poem of despair? Yes, to men who fail to rise above the evils confronting them and who yield at last irretrievably to the temptations of infidelity.

As an allegory with potent symbolic meaning "The Raven," is a poem of tremendous power as well as almost transcendant poetic beauty, and is in the fore of poetic compositions, not only of America, but the world.

Freedom in the Church

WE HAVE EVER HELD that there was freedom in the church for the expansion of the intellect and the affections, for the increase of that which tends to make men wiser and better, for the attainment unto every higher, holier good to which men may legitimately aspire; that there was a right to think, to speak, to act, subject only to the general rules of ecclesiastical government under which church unity is secured unto us, and the specific commandments of God unto the church.

"Neither be ye called master," is in the same strong spirit as, "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant"; "for one is your master, even he whom your heavenly Father sent, which is Christ."

We cannot rejoice in scism, nor in the arraying of brethren in spiritual controversy, one against another; but having understood that the gospel was for the elevation of man, for the opposing and suppression of evil and falsehood; for the upbuilding of right and true principles, which honorable men, seeking for life eternal, may advocate, sustain, and abide by; and to which the outcast and depraved may seek for deliverance from their depravity and alienation from God, we can but hail with gladness the evidences daily accruing of an early return to right ways of thinking, when men will, in their desires for the advancement of the cause of God, dare to counsel together freely and fairly, without fear of censure or hate, or the exercise upon them of arbitrary power, wielded by their fellow men.—Church History, volume 3, page 554.

Fundamental for the Moment

A LIGHT STEP in the hallway, a gentle knock on the door. Without removing her face from the pillows, Larry Verne reached a tear-wet hand for her wrapper. "I'm such a baby!" she gulped half aloud as she sat up and poked her arms into the sleeves of the garment, "I'm such a baby, and somebody would have to catch me like this!" She wondered who it was. Eldred Hampton was the only one who had ever knocked at her door. When Nancy was in town she just bounced right in. It must be Mrs. Hampton.

Half an hour before Larry had succumbed to a storm of self-pity. She seldom cried over herself, but for hours she had wrestled alone with her problems concerning Greg. She had not talked with Mrs. Hampton as she had originally planned to do. Somehow, since John's letter had arrived, she did not have the heart to approach his mother with her doubts concerning priesthood. Eldred Hampton seemed utterly happy over her son's call to service. True, Greg was living up to his promise to be just as he had been before the night he had asked her to be his wife; but the young woman knew that the matter could not go on long as it was; that circumstances would force an issue before many days. She had decided that it would be best for both of them not to see each other again, and for thirty-six hours she had been trying to steel herself to tell him about it, and to refute his arguments. She would ask him not to come to see her any more. But it was a hard struggle, horribly hard; she felt as though she were tearing her heart out. How could she bear never to see him except as they passed on the street or met by chance at the church? Life ahead without Greg would be a vast gray stretch of nothings—but, she would finally get over feeling this way; she would go on, and she would show the world that she could be happy! Tonight she had resolved to remain in her room, to come to an ultimate decision concerning Greg, and perhaps to write to Nancy.

The knock sounded for the third time. It suggested finality.

"Come in," called Larry imagining with something akin to despair how uninviting she must look sitting in the middle of her bed, clad only in her green-print pajamas and orange-trimmed, nile-green wrapper; her eyes red, hair tousled, and nose shiny! "Come in," she called a little louder.

The door knob turned, and on the threshold stood Carmen Blaine. "Why! Why!—" she gasped, "I'm—am I intruding?"

"Of course you are!" savagely thought Larry, wishing that it were possible to snatch up and hide the traces of her sorrow from the well-bred surprise of this immaculate young woman. "And I don't think I'll ever forgive you for butting in on my privacy like this!" but in her heart she knew she would.

"I'll not stay if you'd rather I didn't—if I'll be in the way—" the visitor offered, and started to turn away.

This would never do, to let her go away without a shred of explanation! "Oh, no, don't go!" Larry was astonished at the eagerness in her own tone. She scrambled to her feet and held out a trembling hand: "Please don't go—I—I'd like to talk to you. You just happened to catch me feeling a little blue. I'm sorry. Truly, I'm not so much of a baby all the time! Won't you stay?"

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household, and who are destined in strange ways to influence Larry's life.

A HURRIED APPLICATION of powder and a stroke of the hairbrush worked wonders in restoring her appearance and composure. Her guest, seated in the only chair in the room, a comfortable, cretonne-covered piece of furniture beside the lamp, watched her in tongue-tied silence. "She's shocked at finding me this way," thought Larry. "I wonder if she never cries?"

In the meantime she chattered on: "I've wished so often you'd come up to see me, but you seem awfully busy. I've been over to your apartment twice. Once you were just going out, don't you remember? The other time you weren't there at all."

"My working hours are rather irregular," the explanation was half apologetic, "and then I have my Sunday school class, and a study class, and a club; so I'm not at home very much." That was the longest speech Larry had ever heard Carmen make.

"You are doing a lot of church work, aren't you?"

"Not a lot, but some."

"John used to hint this and that about your activities, when I first came here. I have wondered how you managed time for all of them. It must be nice to be, oh—sort of settled." Thank goodness, her eyes were not so red now! She strolled to the bed, dropped down upon it, and smilingly punched a pillow. "You see I have the college girl's habit of lounging in my bedroom and wrecking everything. I got that when I went to school in Chicago. Don't you like just to lounge?"

"I've never done it," the other confessed; "I've never been to college."

"Well, neither have I; I just went to business school, but there were several of us girls who roomed together, and it was great fun." Of course Carmen had never found lounging tempting with that mother and that little sister around!

"But—I'd almost forgotten why I came up to see you," Carmen laughed a little nervously. "I came to invite you to do something. I suppose Mother Eldred has told you about John?"

Larry nodded.

"Well, Doc wants to take some of us up Sunday, and Mother Eldred is going to turn her boarders over to the mercies of Aunt Annie for the day. We wondered if you and Greg would like to go; you see there'll be just Doc, and Mother Eldred and myself. Have you ever been to Lamoni?"

"No, I haven't. Oh, I should love to go. I've heard so much of Graceland and wanted to see it for just ages! Nancy has urged me to come up several times, but Greg isn't awfully lucky getting the use of their car for a whole day." For the moment she forgot she was talking to Carmen Blaine, the girl who had impressed her as being "different"; she was thinking out loud. "It would be great fun, and you're very nice to invite me. Have you heard definitely that the ordination is going to take place Sunday?"

"Yes, I got another letter from him today. It will be at the Coliseum in the afternoon. John will be happy to have so many of us come up. At such times as that in one's life, it's a wonderful thing to have friends." The simplicity of this statement appealed to her hearer.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Surely Carmen knew something about what she was saying. She numbered her friends by the score, and seemed to know and like everyone. At that moment Larry who was comparatively new in Independence, felt almost friendless.

"What time do you plan to start?"

"Well, fortunately I have an early shift this Saturday, but at that I presume I shall be working the latest of any in the crowd. Doc said four o'clock would be convenient for him. Do you think Greg—"

"I know he'll be happy to go. When he calls tomorrow I'll tell him about it."

"Then I'll tell Doc to count on the two of you," and the visitor started to rise.

"Must you go so soon? You've only just come." Larry started up, too. "I'd love to have you stay. Won't you? We can talk. You see I've heard so much about you from John and his mother and Doc that I feel as if I ought to know you." She did not add how very lonely she had been since Nancy's departure for school last fall, and how she had longed for the friendship of a girl her own age.

"I've heard a lot about you, too," politely returned Carmen. "Mother Eldred fairly dotes on you, and Doc—well, he just can't think of things nice enough to say about Larry Verne."

"I'm glad they do like me. They're wonderful people, and I hope some of my radical ideas—or at least I'm beginning to think they're radical among all you faithful ones here in Independence—won't shock you so that you never come again."

"Aren't all of us radical at some time or other?" was the visitor's question.

EXACTLY TWO HOURS, twelve chocolates, and a handful of peanuts later, Larry huddled against the head of her bed. She was looking at Carmen who, sometime before in the enthusiasm of their tete-a-tete on mutual interests and difficulties, had removed her shoes and dress and now lay prone on her stomach across the bed. Her small feet had a way of jerking upward with a little kicking movement to emphasize her words. Her chin was propped on her hands. As she spoke she looked meditatively at the wall on the other side of the bed. "Our training has been different, Larry, and our environment, too, but it's funny how our attitudes are so alike. I blame myself a lot," impulsively she turned and laid a hand on Larry's arm, "for some of the lonely and miserable experiences you have been through this winter. I've thought of you lots of times and wondered how you were making your adjustments to Zionic"—was there a little irony in the use of that word?—"conditions. But I promise it won't happen again. We girls must stick together."

"It's been grand to talk to you!" choked Larry, pausing to trace a pattern on her knee and to steady her voice. "I've been afraid to talk to Mrs. Hampton for fear she'd be shocked at my apparent lack of faith. So many older people are astonished at the seeming heretical ideas of us younger folks."

"You're no heretic," laughed Carmen. "And don't be afraid to talk to Eldred about anything. She's absolutely shock proof; I've tried her out. She's always a big help and comfort, and she never talks to other people about your problems."

"But isn't she awfully fundamental?"

"Do you mean a Latter Day Saint with deep and sincere convictions? Yes, she's that, but she's sensible, and she's not a bigot."

"Well—"

"Talk to her all you please. I have. My goodness, if John Hampton knew all the things I've discussed with his mother, he'd hold his breath for a week!" Carmen had a delightful laugh, a small gush of sound that fell on the ear like a shower of dew on a path.

"I'm afraid I've been awfully selfish tonight," apologized Larry; "we've talked mostly about me. Can't we appoint a session to discuss you soon?"

"Let's wait until after Sunday. I'm so glad you can go with us, Larry, truly I am." The glow in her eyes held the warmth of friendship. "Somehow I feel tonight that I've found you out and that we're going to be great friends—almost sisters maybe," she finished a little shyly, "because John really does regard you as his sister."

Larry's gray eyes brightened with gratitude. With Carmen's counsel and friendship, life would be much pleasanter, and then she recalled that she had not mentioned John's comment on the Royal Road. She wanted to know what Carmen thought of that.

"And about this priesthood complex of yours," her guest went on as she sat up and thrust her toes into black pumps, "I wouldn't worry. We're alike in that—we don't understand all we know about it. There are lots of young people in the same boat, and—take it from me—lots of older ones, too. We mustn't be too critical because men who accept the priesthood are just as human as the rest of us; but we must study and pray over it. John and I have talked about priesthood considerably, and he has read me some very good passages on the subject from the Doctrine and Covenants. What do you say about our getting together and reading and studying some of those sections? It would be a big help to me to be straight on the matter before John comes home this spring."

"I'd love to!" enthusiastically declared Larry. "I'll remember to read the eighty-third section as you told me."

AND SO IT WAS that after her guest had tripped down the stairs, Larry brought her recently-purchased copy of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants from her desk, and began to read. But the words seemed not undesirable. The sentences flowed on almost without end. It was something about the priesthood God had given to Moses and Aaron and people who had preceded them and followed them. It mentioned two priesthoods, one that was "after the holiest order of God" and a "lesser" priesthood that was given to Aaron. Indeed all of it was very confusing. It meant nothing to her, and surely it meant nothing to Gregory.

For fifteen minutes she persisted in her reading. Then she closed the book utterly discouraged. Would it ever mean anything to her? Was she always to go on not knowing, not understanding, not conscious of the beautiful things in the church? Somewhere from off memory's shelves, as if in answer to her questions, there fell into her consciousness the words of a Sunday school text, words from the past: "Ask and it shall be given you." Those were the words of Jesus, and he was the Savior who had come to save men from their troubles, sins, and misunderstanding. He had promised that. Wouldn't it be wise to take him at his word?

Quickly she dropped to her knees beside the bed: "O Lord," she prayed, "I'm ashamed that I don't know more about thee, and I don't want to bother you with my little problems; but thou hast promised us that when we ask we shall receive. Help me with understanding and strength—I am so weak! Please help me. If these are thy words," her hand lay on the cover of the book, "let me understand them. Amen." For another moment she lingered on her knees, and when she arose, a new buoyancy seemed to flood her soul.

Again the girl picked up the book and turned to the eighty-third section. Words, simple, understandable words, seemed to start out of the page at her. These words assured her that priesthood was holy, that it was God-ordained, and that all who received the priesthood, received the heavenly Father and his kingdom. There was a warning to the priesthood to heed the words of eternal life and to live according to God's commandments. Yes, the warning was plain. It seemed as though God recognized some of the difficulties which would face his servants and was helping them in advance by telling them to obey him and live by his words.

The next paragraph was a rebuke: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all."

Her head drooped. Indeed she felt the most condemned of them all. Both vanity and unbelief had played their parts in her thinking. She had lightly considered some of the ordinances and orders

The Life of H. N. Hansen

The first missionary to go to Denmark from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Compiled from his own writings and other sources.

By Poul S. Nielsen

BROTHER HANSEN had the surprise of his life when a man named Lund, who was attached to their tithe office came to him and asked him to have a public discussion, Hansen to affirm that Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet, was the rightful leader. The speaker on their side was to be a Mr. W— who was to affirm that polygamy was according to the Bible. It was Brother Hansen's turn to speak the first night, and if he had not gone out into the open, there to pour out his prayers for help to God, it is hard to tell if he would have had the courage to meet Mr. W—, for he heard that gentleman was supposed to know all about those subjects. Our brother presented his side of the question in such a manner that the other man decided not to present his side, but announced that there would be no meeting the next evening, as had been agreed. This the chairman who did not want to take sides, refused to allow and he announced that the meeting would be next evening as previously arranged.

When next evening came the Utah faction felt disturbed and Mr. W— did not want to open the meeting, but after some whispered conversation between some of their elders he finally got up and said that he had made two mistakes in that he had promised to defend polygamy and to debate with an apostate. For this latter name he was called to order by the chairman whereupon he lost all confidence in himself and proceeded to misquote Scriptures from the Bible. For this he was called to task by Brother Hansen. This angered him and things did not get any better when the chairman suggested that he look up the Scriptures before quoting them. He could not find his Scripture and finally two of his brethren were going to help him find what he wanted. This made things still worse, for they happened to find readings with which he either was not acquainted or had no use for just at that particular time. The result was that the meeting ended without Mr. W— using his allotted time.

At another time in West Jordan he hired a hall belonging to one of their bishops. His subject was that young Joseph was the rightful leader. The next evening the bishop thought that he had better have some who knew their subject to answer him. He accordingly sent for A— J—, then church historian. But A— J— had not heard the talk of Brother Hansen the previous evening, except by what others told him. He did not exactly know what to say and flew wide of the mark, finally closing by saying, "My God, what have we done that we should be cast out?" He repeated this question and then answered himself by saying, "We have done no worse than Israel of Old." Brother Hansen thought that they had done plenty and was anxious to give a reply. But although the bishop would rent his hall out for worldly things, he would not let him have it even though he offered to take it any evening when it was not occupied.

FOR SOME TIME he had been working about twelve miles south of Salt Lake City, but now he went farther south towards the town of Lehi. He was somewhat discouraged. In his home were his wife and child ready to welcome him and here he was amongst strangers. The temper did all he could to discourage him and get him to quit. Even though he tried to pray to his Creator it seemed like he could not find the words that he wanted to use. Those were his feelings when he arrived at Lehi where he was kindly received by Brother and Sister Clark who always had a helping hand for messengers of the gospel. He told them about his troubles but not about his temptations. When he retired that night the Tempter tried to overpower him more than ever. But he thought of the promise of God that if we will trust him he will help us. Once more he tried to pray but it seemed to him that his prayer did not reach any farther than the ceiling. He was awake for a long time but at last his weary eyes closed and he rested. How long he slept he did not know but found himself awake, a bright light flooding his room and heard a sound like a door and window were opened. A voice was speaking to him as plain as he ever heard anyone talking. It was no dream. He was awake and arose on his bed to look around but did not see anyone. He did not know if the vioce that he heard was such a one as others would have heard if they had been present. He did not know if he heard it with his bodily ears or perhaps it was the inward man that heard and understood. But to him it was as clear and plain as one man speaking to another. The words were the well known words in the Book of Mormon, "There shall no man amongst you have more save one wife, and of concubines he shall have none."

He was not afraid and not surprised, but felt a hallowed peace take possession of his soul. It was to him a sign of the goodness of God and of his mercy. It was not so much what he heard or seen, but it was that peaceful influence it brought unto him that made him happy. He felt that the chains of darkness were torn asunder and that the Lord had delivered him. The Spirit of God rested upon him; he was no longer bowed down and sad, but free and happy. Tears were rolling down his cheeks; but they were not the tears of sorrow but of gladness. For now he understood that his lot was the best that could be had as he was found worthy and acknowledged of God. Later on he thought that the Lord gave him this sign to strengthen him and show him that he was with him.

He had other experiences later on in life, but the darkness that surrounded him at this time and the power that was trying to overcome him just then made him more downhearted than anything he ever experienced. While in Utah he met with several who claimed that they were married to the prophet. He was careful to get their statements of time and places in writing and then later on it was easy for him to prove by old newspapers and marriage records that they were, in plain language, lying.

HIS ADVERSARIES, if we can use such an expression about people who claimed to be children of God, would stop for almost nothing in order to hurt him. One time in Coalville some classes of people became so threathening that his friends without his knowledge had the night marshal called out of bed to be ready to protect him.

Two men, one a missionary who had recently returned from Minnesota, and a fluent speaker, together with school teacher, Aaron Hardy, with whom our brother had held a discussion, were so very much wrought up by the work done by him that they would not even greet him on the street. They all three prophesied that dire things would happen to him. So did a man named Larsen in Sanpete County, who arose in a public meeting and stated that if he did not reform a terrible punishment from the Lord would come over him.

Ten years later when Brother Hansen again visited this community he was expecting to meet these old friends (?) of his. In ten years nothing had happened to himself, so who could describe his feelings when he was informed that two of them were dead, one of them being striken while preaching in the temple, and the third one, the school teacher, was imprisoned for the second time for polygamy. Brother Hansen felt sorry about this, for he could not help but think about all they had done to him.

Some years later he happened to meet the school teacher again, but he was then a changed man, for he came across the room to speak to him.

At another time at West Jordan a man did not like what Brother Hansen had been preaching, so he started to prophesy that unless he (Hansen) would repent and quit his preaching against their teachings his days would be cut short. Brother Hansen never did quit and still he lived to be seventy-two years old. So you who read this can draw your own conclusions about their prophesying on that subject. But in spite of all Brother Hansen met many fine people both in the church and outside.

One year while in the Utah mission he was associated with Elder T. W. Chatburn and together they were attending a district conference in Salt Lake City. During this conference a prayer and testimony meeting was held in which H. N. Hansen had an unusual experience. Brother Chatburn quite frequently delivered a message by the Spirit. On this occasion he was directed to speak to the Saints assembled and as he began doing so the adversary caused Brother Hansen to doubt and the thought entered his mind: This is all of man. But instantly the same words that were being spoken by Brother Chatburn were given to him. Instead of doubting he was able to confirm the message. There was erected a strong attachment for the men with whom he came in contact in Utah as well as elsewhere and he often spoke of different ones with whom he had labored as having enjoyed many experiences together.

BROTHER HANSEN labored in other states besides Utah but he thought of his experiences in these states as more or less common to all missionaries. It seemed that his main fields of preaching were to be in Utah and in Denmark, for after an absence of more than thirty years we again find him in his homeland where he arrived in Aalborg the thirteenth of September, 1907, where Brother P. T. Andersen, another one from Hazel Dell, had gone to preach to his countrymen. For many years Brother Hansen and his father and mother had lived north of Weston, Iowa, on their farms. His father was a deacon in this branch and he himself had given the lot on which the first Hazel-Dell church building was standing.

At the time when we find our two brethren in Denmark, a preacher of the Danish state church (that is, Lutheran), together with a bishop Moeller from Aalborg were going to speak against Mormonism. The preacher's name was also Moeller, but he was from Aarhus, another town in Jutland. Brother Hansen was present. It was easy for one who was informed to see that they were mostly speaking against the Utah faction, but at that they were quoting things not exactly true. Evidently both church men thought that they were fighting the Utah church for our men did not say who they were. The preacher from the town of Aalborg together with many preachers from the country side came to listen to a meeting that our missionaries had announced and as they figured on that they might need some help with these "bad Mormons." They had to send for Bishop Moeller again. Although our brethren had rented a big hall, so many came there to listen to the defeat of the "Mormons" that it was necessary to get the biggest hall in town for the meeting. Brother Hansen showed from the Church History and from an old edition of Doctrine and Covenants that polygamy was a teaching of the Utah church. Later on they talked about children's baptisms, but when the Lutheran preacher commenced talking about the Utah church and quoted from The Pearl of Great Price he was corrected by the chairman, whereupon he declared that if he had known this was a Josephite meeting he would not have come. Although there were several of the Utah people present they did not have nerve enough to come forward in defense of their beliefs.

Another time when the preacher who was going to talk about "those bad Mormons" came into the hall where Brother Hansen and other friends were seated he saw him sit by the wall. When he saw him he said, "I want to tell you that that man is a Mormon. That man with the whiskers." Brother Hansen had large whiskers. The preacher spoke against the Mormons using usual attacks and concluded by recommending all to read a tract: Luk Dören for Mormonerne (Close the Door for the Mormons).

When Brother Hansen saw this he went the next day from door to door and delivered his tracts and all but one received them. Later on it was necessary to ask for police protection as several young rowdies tried their best to disturb their meetings. Evidently they had learned from the preachers that nothing was too bad to do to a "Mormon." After a time Brother Hansen went to Copenhagen where he wanted to put in some advertisements in Aftenposten (The Evening Mail). He had several put in but one day as he wanted to have another one put in he was informed by the office girl that it was against their rule to print advertisements for the Mormons. He explained what church he represented to her and told her that he was not a Mormon the way they took it to be. She asked him several questions and finally told him that she would take his advertisement, but that she doubted very much if it would be printed. But if it did not he could get his money back, if the editor would not permit it to be printed. Someone, without a doubt, had been telling the editor some stories without any foundation of truth for the next day the advertisement was in the paper and he had no further trouble in getting into the paper what he wanted.

While on this mission he again visited the place of his birth, but did not know very many as he had been away for thirty-three years, many of the companions of his youth having gone to their Maker, many moved away, and a second generation were now holding sway, to whom he gave tracts, but held no meetings. He also visited in Norway and Sweden where a few fellow Saints bid him welcome to their homes.

After arriving to America he once more went to his old battleground, Utah, where conditions had greatly changed. Salt Lake City was now as fine a city as any in the United States, but the priesthood had changed somewhat, as polygamy was not practiced, but still their were plenty of evils that he preached against.

After returning from this mission, he rested, then again went to the land of his birth, but not alone, for his wife was with him. Brother Hansen, without a doubt, liked to go to Denmark, but to his wife it must have been a great trial unacquainted as she was with the customs of the country as well as the language. True to the signs of the last days their efforts did not prove as profitable as they could wish for in the great city of Copenhagen, as all other world metropolises, many forces of the evil one are at work in our days to hinder the work of bringing salvation to mankind. And why should anyone spend his time on listening to one of those foolish "Mormons"? For some cause or other it seems hard for the people of Europe to distinguish between the Utah faction and the Reorganized church. At this time there were being printed in the organ of the first named faction some articles about their beliefs for the benefits of their Danish members. Brother Hansen tried to show them wherein they were erring from their own standard books. Later on he wrote to the one of that church who was in charge of their work in Denmark, and advised him that he was going to lecture about "The Secrets of Mormonism Laid Bare." This man was Andrew Jensen who came to the meeting and delivered the usual line of talk, but he was reproved by our brother who proved to the assembly from Andrew Jensen's own writings that he was contradicting himself. The work of Brother Hansen bore some fruits this time for he had the opportunity to baptize several persons in the blue waters of Oresund. He and Sister Hansen visited both Norway and Sweden as he was made overseer over this Scandinavian mission, where at that time there were seven men from our church working in proclaiming the gospel.

the right and qualification to feed with spiritual food those brought into the organic fold through the effort of the messenger of righteousness.

Keeping in mind these three tasks, note the words of Paul as expressed in Ephesians 2: 19, 20:

"Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

And again in Ephesians 4: 11, 12:

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."

The Prophetic Function of the Church

It will be noticed at once that the greatest stress is placed by Paul on the prophetic and apostolic functions. In fact, they are indicated as being at the very foundation of the building of the temple of the Lord.

The sacredness of the prophetic office in olden times is clearly established. Its importance in the apostolic church is by Paul reaffirmed. Jesus is not without testimony, for he told his disciples that the Holy Spirit which was to be sent after his departure would "show them things to come."

The Holy Spirit could not reveal things in the future except to such as rested under the prophetic gift.

We find, then, that the carrying forward of the divine purpose was made possible in the first regard, that is, that there was maintained the possibility of the receiving of the will of God through divinely appointed officers of the kingdom.

The Proselytizing Function

There is perhaps no work of the Master more clear than that having to do with the second phase of the purpose of church organization: namely, the carrying of the gospel message to the world.

Christ chose twelve men who were to be special witnesses to the world of his life, his death, and resurrection. His parting message to these men was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Paul, in the period of time following that of our Master, indicates that the apostolic office was of such importance as to deserve mention as one of the foundation stones of the structure known as the kingdom of God.

It would be folly to think of building up a church without missionaries to carry on this work. No church of the present day would think of so doing. It is interesting to note, however, that in the present day missionaries are thought in some quarters necessary for the carrying of the gospel to the heathen only. In the days of apostles, these men seemed to find it necessary with the assistance of the seventy, to do missionary work not only among the heathen, but also among those who apparently felt that they were already of the household of God.

Feeding the Flock

What provision, if any, was made for the carrying forward of the work of the local congregation, after it had been established by those sent as special witnesses for Christ?

It must be remembered that at first the task of caring for the local membership was not at all arduous. But as the converts began to come into the kingdom by hundreds and by thousands, it was discovered that if the apostles were to be free for the full discharge of their missionary function, they must appoint others who could look after the task of caring for the local needs.

So they chose seven men who were to care for this work, leaving the apostles free to give themselves "continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word."

By the time of Paul's writing to the Philippian saints, the bishops and deacons had evidently become established as leaders of the local flock, for this letter is addressed to the saints, "with the bishops and deacons." The exact function of these offices is not clearly pointed out, but it is generally understood that they had to do largely with temporal matters, the deacons acting as assistants to the bishops. It is also evident that the bishops had considerable to do with the spiritual aspects of the work.

Another group of church officers is mentioned in Acts 20. Here we are told that Paul called together the elders of the Ephesian church, and gave them definite instruction as to the carrying on of the work after his departure. His language would indicate that these men were to be left in charge of the local work:

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."

In certain places, the terms bishop and elder are used interchangeably, but it would appear that the former is rather a specific, and the latter a general term.

The Church of Today

We find, then, that in the apostolic church full provision was made for:

1. The receiving of the will of God.
2. The carrying of the message of Christ to the world.
3. The effective building of the local work.

We come now to consider the church of our present day. Paul tells us that the apostolic and prophetic functions were not merely temporary features of the church activity. On the other hand, they were to remain until "we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Believing as we do that the world has not yet even begun to come to a perfected condition, we hold with Paul that we must yet have in the structure of the church those able to carry out the various tasks assigned.

We hold that God can and will speak to his people today. The world has need to hear his voice, that its perplexities may be cleared away. This voice cannot be heard without those to catch the message.

We hold that with countless millions of the world's inhabitants yet unconverted to even a nominal obedience to the message of Jesus, we have increased need of the apostolic function.

None will deny the local needs. But with men to care for these and these alone, how can it be claimed that we have a completed structure? As a church we believe in following the divine pattern in our building. We believe that we "are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

tion must wait until our finances permit the broadening of our activities. This must not be forgotten.

After all, the keeping of the law relating to temporalities is a spiritual adventure. We may interpret the law in such detail that it becomes merely a set of rules as obstructive as those of the scribes. On the other hand, if when interpreting it, we remain fully conscious of the fact that the nearer we keep to principles the more effective the law will be, we shall be able to apply it so that life will be more kindly, secure and just. The purpose of the law is not to compel human beings to conform to a rigid pattern, but to transform mankind into free and upright souls, conscious of their dependence upon each other, and of living, moving and having their being in God. To some, the defeats of recent years may mask the light ahead, but the light is indeed before us, and, if we will unitedly push forward, may soon be clearly seen.

of God's church. Suddenly she felt crushed by her lack of understanding. Oh, for the faith and conviction of Eldred Hampton! For the trust and sympathy of Carmen Blaine! For the helpful spirit of Joe Dockerly!

Abruptly she laid the book on her desk. That feeling of buoyancy of a few minutes before was gone. She stared at the post of her bed, laughed uncertainly to herself, and as she snapped off the light thought: "You've gone fundamental for the moment, Larry, my dear."

Ode to My Lord

By Eleanor Johnstone

When gentle breath of Love Divine
Was breathed upon this clay of mine,
I instantly became a living soul
With immortality my destined goal
Of endless ecstasy
Or deathless misery.
Through flesh and spirit one but twain,
The flesh ascendancy would gain,
And future were too dread to contemplate,
Had Jesus not transcended man's estate.

No words could ever call to mind
The love he has for humankind,
That he, who spoke and forth came heav'n and earth,
Deemed man of such inestimable worth,
He lived a man's own life
Yet conquered fleshly strife,
To demonstrate what could be done,
If man's determination won,
Then gave himself that man have right to be Participator of eternity.

He proved that human flesh and worldly sense can be subdued,
That everlasting peace would recompense for lusts eschewed.
Could man but see the light
To get his bearings right,
He would acknowledge Christ both Lord and King.
He then would understand
The good of Christ's command
And to those precepts he would cling,
Endeavoring to pattern after One
Whose earthly birth made him the Father's Son.

Thought Provokers

Progress for the Church

By Dwight D. W. Davis

INVARIABLY problematical situations, if approached humbly and prayerfully, result in growth. In their solution errors will be made; however, there is but one justification for mistakes: that we profit by them.

I AM AWARE that spiritual progress is achieved only insofar as we realize that it depends upon certain increments or additions to our heritage. We must recognize that we owe a debt to the past (for the rich cultural and spiritual content it has given us), and that if we are to learn economically in the present we must utilize to the fullest our capacity for vicarious experience.

SO LONG as we fail to obey the commandments we have no blessing—this is spiritual Babylon. But so long as we obey the commandments of God and fail not, we shall receive those blessings of promise that will enable His people to become "of one heart and mind"—this is Zion.

A PROPER PERSPECTIVE of the cultural and spiritual heritage transmitted to us by our forefathers of the restoration and reorganization will so influence the thoughts and the actions of our people that they will unitedly rise up and declare: "Zion must be redeemed." This thought must become a functioning part of the lives of our people; and to the end that it shall, we should plan all our activities to inculcate this basic Latter Day Saint belief into their lives.

BEFORE Zion can be established, we must rid ourselves of the placid languor of contemplative indifference.

THERE IS NOTHING fugacious nor ephemeral about the work of this church; for "the works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." It is requisite, therefore, that each of us allign himself with those spiritual forces that create within the desire to spend and be spent in service for the Master.

THE GREAT ECONOMY of God has made provision for the establishment of but one unified program of religious activities that will provide for the spiritual, temporal, educational, and social, needs of all.

ONE IMPERATIVE NEED of the hour is that we, who are the teachers and leaders of the church school, should renew our every effort in an endeavor to impart a working knowledge of the history of this church, its organization, and its beliefs and principles, to every member and nonmember; for we cannot be intelligently consecrated to that with which we are not familiar.

I BELIEVE the great call of this church is still missionary in its outlook. This means personal evangelism, implying that the membership have first a working knowledge of the gospel before presenting the message to their friends, as well as formalized effort through preaching and teaching.

NOT UNTIL we get our priesthood to glimpse the beauty of service can we expect the membership to follow. Without the ordinances the people perish; without a functioning priesthood the ordinances cannot be administered. The path of duty should be plain to all.

Religious Routine

By C. J. Lant

Isn't it strange, that we never miss the well until the water is all gone? Some times as we are sitting surrounded with everything that life could afford for our happiness and comfort here on earth, yet fail to see it, and then sometimes when we stand back and view it from afar off we are brought face to face with the facts in the case and can see more clearly.

For this reason we are inclined to believe that the outlying districts are really the best training field for the work and hungering and thirsting as we do sometimes for the real gathered condition makes us search the Scriptures more thoroughly; and yet perhaps learn to appreciate and love the work more than those sometimes who have it with them daily and take it as matter of fact.

And I find this condition generally amongst those who have been reared in the church and, presumably, cradled in its teachings. Not that they do not understand and know the gospel, but it has become a routine affair rather than a spirited message, one that should carry weight and force greater with each sermon and each prayer and testimony.

A soldier is accustomed to routine, following the different calls from early morning until late at night, with dogged, servile, automatic, unquestioning attitude; how many times do we in the church answer the calls in the same way, church school, morning worship, evening services, the midweek prayer service, with testimonies that the ancients used and scarcely if ever a genuine offering of thanks; usually only petitions.

The Readers Say---

Let Us Keep the Law

I enjoyed the sermon, "Our Spiritual Rebirth," by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, printed in the Herald a few weeks ago. "As I was blind, now I see." Day by day I see and understand more God's purpose in us in these latter days, and I feel sure that we will obey and keep all his commandments including that of the financial law. I know Zion will be redeemed.

I love the gospel and believe all Latter Day Saints have the work at heart, but some have not waked up yet, and I believe also that at this period of the year when "Keep the Law" is being heard on every side and when the bishop's agents and other officers are visiting and talking with the people, many are going to be made conscious of their responsibilities. If each financial solicitor would ask each member to file his inventory and make a payment on his tithes, no matter how small that payment, and then return at a stated time each month for another payment on the debt of tithing, I think the members would meet their responsibilities to the Lord.

I have faith in God and his promises, and he has said that if we will do as he has told us, he will bless us more than we are able to receive.

All of us should be humble and prayerful as we go about our work. We should cooperate. We should exercise faith in God and in each other. We should sacrifice. We know that we love that for which we have sacrificed whether it be for our children for new furniture for our homes, for a new car, or for the church. Let us sacrifice for the cause of Christ this winter. The church fills a place in our lives that nothing else can fill.

My desire is to do my part, to help others to see their way clear to cooperate. If we will do our heavenly Parent's commandments, he will smile upon us and lead us to Zion.

Nickels Pay Her Tithing

It is only during the last two years that I have been paying tithing, and I wonder if my experience will help another member who thinks he does not have enough income to pay tithing.

Until the last year or more, I felt my tithing was so little that when I had a dollar I could give, I put it in the oblation or gave it in other offerings, and the church records did not show that I had given anything. One day an elder said to me: "Your tithes are a debt you owe just as much as any other debt, and you are under obligation to pay."

After that I began to pay tithes. This year I believe we have had less money than any previous year I can remember, yet I was able to pay more tithing than ever before, also to give a small oblation offering.

This is how I managed it. Every time I shopped, when I came home, I looked over my change, and every nickel I had, I put into a can. This I did from sacrifice week last year until sacrifice week this year, and it was surprising how those nickels grew. I did not realize how fast they made dollars when they were put away and added to from time to time.

Her Faith Justified

I wish to add my testimony that the Saints may know of God and his goodness to me. Recently I had an infection in my foot that was getting quite serious. I asked daily if it was God's will that I might be healed. To satisfy my family I went to the doctor, but all the time I knew if it were healed, that it would be through God's goodness. My rapid recovery was remarkable.

The Herald means a great deal to me. I attended the district conference at Fort Madison in June. Brother McDowell was there and gave many inspiring talks, admonishing the Saints to be up and doing.

Saints, I always remember the sick and afflicted, and those at the head of the church. Pray for me that I may ever be faithful.

An Instance of Divine Blessing

Just four months prior to the birth of our daughter, and two months before our son Marvin's second birthday, I was visiting my parents who lived on a farm in the northern bush country. The little son wandered down to the barn.

It was fly time and a band of wild prairie colts had sought shelter in the barn from the torture of winged pests. The family at dinner in the house, heard a wild scream, and on rushing to the barn, discovered the little fellow on his knees, bruised and bleeding.

The horses were kicking and fighting in a wild melee, but over the child, with her nose on his head, stood the old Arabian family pet so wise as to be almost human. Her ears laid back, she kept the frenzied horses at bay until help arrived. Had it not been for her loyalty, Marvin would without doubt have been trampled to pulp.

Pale and only half conscious, the little one was carried to the house where it was discovered he had a fracture at the base of the skull beside minor injuries. The doctor declared an operation to be the only chance as fragments of bone were pressing on the brain. As we bade good-by to the family, they were stricken with grief, but I smiled and said, "Don't worry, he will be all right," for I felt that God was with us and would bless the child.

When he was taken from my arms and carried into the operating room, I knelt in prayer, and at once the Spirit rested upon me and a voice said, "Fear not, for mine angel will guide the doctor's hand."

In four days the boy was running around the hospital, and from the time of his operation he slept and ate as usual.

This is only one of the many blessings which our Lord has granted me, and I desire to show my gratitude by giving him whole-hearted service.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

"Tooth Neuralgia"

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

Mouth infections are peculiar to man and domesticated animals. Wild animals are not subject to caries or dental decay. Unsound teeth may affect the nerves, eyes, nose and throat or any part of the body. In order to be healthy one should always keep the teeth, tonsils and sinuses in a healthy condition. It seems from the standpoint of efficiency that modern conditions are out of adjustment because of our environment and habits of eating and drinking. Unfortunately the mucous membranes of the mouth do not have a protecting power which is so manifest in other parts of the body. Mouth cleanliness is very important as it contains many bacteria that flourish within its portals. It is a very common practice among physicians before starting medical or surgical treatment to have the dentist give the mouth a careful inspection as the teeth may be the cause of trouble. The uncompromising warfare that the dentist maintains on diseased teeth is certainly commendable. The pain in the tooth is an indication of an altered structure or disordered function and is a warning that the function of a nerve has been disturbed. And if this warning is left unheeded may degenerate in various complex systemic symptoms with or without neuralgia in various parts of the body, with their accompanied disordered functions. Sometimes there may be a distinct pain in the ear although this organ may be perfectly sound and without disease. Very often the cause is found to be from an unerupted third molar.

Sometimes such an unerupted tooth may be the cause of an unstable nervous condition giving arise to various emotional state melancholia or hysteria, yet the pain may not be manifest as a toothache and no relief is obtained until the tooth comes to a normal position or is surgically removed. Neuralgic pains may be brought about by pulp stones which are small calcified bodies within the teeth which shut off the normal blood supply interfering with the proper function of the nerve. This may not be easy to control as it may be the result of some constitutional defect. If it is due to fillings being placed too near the pulp it can be remedied. Sometimes these symptoms are caused by dissimilar metal fillings being placed so as to come in contact producing slight electrical charges with resultant slight shock or pain. Tumors or cysts are sometimes found pressing on a nerve causing considerable pain and annoyance. These tooth neuralgias are often very difficult to locate and require the utmost skill upon the part of the physician and dentist. The x-ray photograph is often of very great value especially in those individuals who are toothless and still have wandering pains sometimes resembling toothache. In this class of cases the teeth have been extracted necessarily in a manner to cause destruction of the supporting bony structure which serves to hold the teeth in their sockets. As age advances a certain amount of the jaw bone is absorbed leaving the principle nerve of the jaw in a dense calcified bone and whatever remaining nerve may exist beyond the jaw is shocked with its nerve impulses until the sufferer, dentist, and physician are all unable to tell what part of the face is involved. The eye surgeon is always interested in having the teeth inspected, as a diseased tooth may be the means of toxins reaching the eyes, because of the teeth being intimately connected with the lymphatic and blood circulation. In all cases when the patient has glaucoma or cataract all diseases of the teeth, tonsils and sinuses should be attended to. There is a very common disease called iritis which is an inflammation of the iris that is often caused by an abscessed tooth. Many cases fail to improve until a dentist is consulted. At some other time I will have something to say about the teeth and their relation to the nose and throat. Before closing, however, I wish to say that malposition of the teeth, diseased tonsils and adenoids may interfere with the growth of the face causing deformity.

Miracles are neither a violation of the laws of nature, nor a suspension of them, nor a modification of them. Every miracle known to the New Testament was undoubtedly done in accordance with the laws of nature. When we talk about the laws of nature, we refer simply to the laws of nature which we ourselves have some knowledge of; but what are these laws? Name them. How many have you? Have you named them all? Would you dare say that you have them all? Until you are sure that you know all the laws of nature, you cannot say that a miracle is a violation of natural law. Many laws of nature have been discovered only recently. It was yesterday that Marconi got hold of a law by means of which he has been able to perform what seems to me the most wonderful miracle wrought within the last hundred years. . . . If we could see the universe as it is, we should undoubtedly see that everything which Jesus did was done according to law.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Worship in the Junior Church

II.—The Spirit of Worship

By Harley A. Morris

WORSHIP is an attitude of mind that is formed, (1) at the stimulation of a conscious need; (2) with the knowledge of a source of supply; and (3) with the knowledge of a method by which we may tap that source and make it potent for our cause. If the divine nature in man has not been strangled, he turns to God, and his turning is his worship. If the individual has lost his consciousness of a divine relationship, or if he be misguided, he may turn to gold or other idols and render to them his devotions. The task of the junior church, then, is threefold: (1) to give the child a concept of an ever-present God; (2) to awaken in him a recognition of his own need of divine help; (3) to direct the spirit and process of worship along lines that will produce appreciable results.

Certain environment and mental stimuli favor worship, and the purpose of the junior leader is to embody as many of them as possible in his program. One notices that in the programs published in the Herald a prelude of quiet music opens the service. There is a good reason for this. Children respond to music, and if the leader suggests a period of meditation or silent prayer while the prelude is being played, a hush will settle over the group, so that, whether their thoughts follow the trend requested or not, their minds will at least be more receptive to that which is to follow.

One of the best methods I have ever seen of impressing the children with the solemnity of this period of quiet music was that employed by a certain leader and his wife. At the first chord they stood quietly with bowed heads, and remained so until the music ceased. The children caught the spirit exemplified in their leader. One of the worst methods for anyone to use is to make of this period an opportunity for last-minute consultations with the musical director or assistant, or for a hasty survey of the Scripture or what not. However important it may be to make such consultations or surveys, one needs to remember that a last long look at the marble, top, or real live cricket is just as important to Willie Jones. The leader who successfully used this spirit to woo the spirit of worship will not know how the congregation employs it because his own eyes will be closed.

Mahatma Gandhi says: "Worshiping God is singing the praise of God." To an extent he is right. Certainly praise has a definite and valuable part to play in the worship program. Bishop Ken, when he was chaplain of a boy's college, thought it not amiss to praise God thrice daily. When, therefore, he had written the three hymns that came to be known as "Morning," "Evening," and "Midnight" hymns, it was found that each one concluded with the words of the "Doxology": "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," etc. Children love to sing praise-hymns because of the vigor in words and tune that they possess. Experiment with the "Doxology" has shown that its use each Sunday immediately following the prelude is not too frequent. Have the children stand; a single chord on the organ gives the pitch and the voices blend in this beautiful call to worship. In an incredibly short time all will have learned the words and the short hymn will be sung with a fervor and enjoyment that amply justifies its inclusion in the program. Few hymns have the legendary wealth of this simple number. Occasional brief stories of how others found in the singing of the "Doxology" expression for their praise and thanksgiving, all help the children remember that it is a praise-hymn.

Prayer hymns are also valuable in producing an attitude of worship. Ofttimes, if the words of the hymn are read by a leader before the singing of it, the children will grasp its spirit better. Often, too, a prayer hymn sung as a solo, with the congregation kneeling, may be very effective.

All of these features have as their one purpose the fostering of those thoughts and that environment that will make the opening prayer, when it is offered, the natural expression of all. And scripture readings, calls to worship or stories, if they precede the prayer, need to be selected and presented with this purpose in mind. Of these three, stories are of especial value in fostering the prayer spirit. They should, however, be short and to the point without being preachy. Their situations need to be simple and not too uncommon; and the climax should show how the characters found through prayer a natural solution to their problem. The telling should be done in a quiet manner with few if any gestures. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Church History teem with stories suitable for this part of the program.

The church is the school of religion. We join it to get instruction, inspiration, fellowship and help in living the good life. Surrender to Christ, worship of God, Christian life, fellowship and service, these are emphasized in the church because they concern that life.—Henry H. Barstow, in "A Teaching Church," Church Management.

QUESTION TIME

Can one obtain forgiveness of sins by partaking of the sacrament?

The eucharistic sacrament is in the nature of a memorial and a renewal of covenant relationship with the Lord. Forgiveness of sins is not conditioned upon this rite, but upon true repentance and confession of sins. In the book of the Beloved Disciple we are informed:

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1: 9.

The word confess, as used here, is a translation of the Greek term homologeo, which is compounded from the base of two other Greek words, and together have the significance of acknowledgment and a covenant. The meaning appears to be full confession and a covenanting to reform. It is only after one has repented that he is worthy to take the sacrament, hence we are told that:

"Whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord."—1 Corinthians 11: 27.

While it might be true in some instance that one would repent, confess, and covenant with God and take the sacrament, and be forgiven, it would not be the act of receiving the rite which would cause forgiveness, for the forgiveness of his sins should be obtained prior to partaking, by which one may worthily come to the table of our Lord. It is clearly stated that remission of sins is through the blood of Christ, of which the Inspired Version says in connection with the institution and purpose of the sacramental wine:

"For this is in remembrance of my blood of the new testament, which is shed for as many as shall believe in my name, for the remission of their sins."—Matthew 26: 24.

From these and other passages it becomes clear that it is the blood of Christ which was shed for remission of sins, and the sacrament was instituted as a memorial of that great sacrifice and the covenant which was made with his people. By partaking one indicates his desire to remain in that covenant.

What does the word Mormon mean, and was it known outside of the Book of Mormon?

The meaning of the word would depend upon the manner in which it is used, as it has been applied to various uses in the past. In the Book of Mormon it means the name of a celebrated general and religious leader of the Nephites, and also of a place located in the borders of a land "infested, by times, or at seasons, by wild beasts," though Mormon itself was termed a place of beauty.

The most ancient use of the word that I have discovered was among the Greeks. It had several forms, some of which depended upon its case ending. Standing alone, its common form was mormo, but when the word following began with a vowel, it was mormon, the last letter being added to avoid a repetition of vowel sounds in succession. For instance, we have mormon, onos, e; but the other form would be mormo, genitive oos. The Greeks used it to mean "hideous she monster" or "bugbear," being employed thus in stories. Tracing it back to about 280 B. C., Aetolus used the root word mormos, and Hesychius (uncertain date) spelled it myrmos, there being two forms of spelling, it appears.

In natural history mormon is the name of a kind of African baboon known as the mandrill. The puffin, an Arctic sea bird of the auk variety, is also called the mormon. There is a similar word found which was the name of a man. The Ulster County Gazette of January 4, 1800, contains a Paris news item date October 14, in which the name of General Mormons is found. I possess a copy of this paper, in which is this language:

"Buonaparte and Berthier have not arrived alone from the banks of the Nile. They were accompanied by Generals Lasles, Mormons, Murat, Andicoffie, and citizens Mons and Bertholet."

Is fish included as meat in the Word of Wisdom?

The text (86: 2) specifies "flesh" of beasts and fowls, and evidently does not apply to fish. I believe the word meat does not occur in the revelation, though of course the animals and fowls mentioned would be meat.

Conference for Southern Wisconsin

District President Speaks Recommendations

Southern Wisconsin District met in conference at Madison October 14 and 15, beginning with a prayer service Saturday morning. In the afternoon reports were heard and there were talks by Apostle J. F. Garver, Elder R. E. Davey, and Elder H. W. Woodstock. The business meeting convened at seven o'clock. The bishop's agent reported tithes and offerings for the year, $1,705.30.

The district president, in his report, gave recommendations touching on various phases of district activities as follows:

That the priesthood continue in their preparations to be of service in their respective branches.

That more of the members should prepare themselves for effective teaching in the church school, and that if possible or feasible, the branches should have teachers' training classes.

That a greater effort be made to cultivate the gift of music for branch services.

That the young people be more diligent in their study and in their preparation for work, for on them the church is depending for vigor and strength.

Officers elected for the district were: President, H. W. Woodstock; associates, Harry Wasson and George Noble; district clerk, Leda Colbert; treasurer, Charles Hoague; director of religious education, Harry Wasson; superintendent of music, Irene Walker; delegates to General Conference: Leda Colbert, Robert Brigham, Harry Wasson, Mary Woodstock, R. E. Davey, and Paul Utenhemer.

A communication came from Lancaster Branch asking for the ordination of V. E. Edwards to the office of elder and Conan Edwards to that of teacher.

The conference voted to ask for licenses of such members of the priesthood as continually refuse to function even when labored with, until the time when they are qualified for service.

Action on a joint reunion with Northeastern Illinois was deferred until a later conference.

At eight-thirty a young people's service was directed by the young people's organization of Madison.

Sunday began with an early morning prayer hour. During the church school service the junior choir sang hymns.

Apostle Garver preached at eleven o'clock, and the Madison choir sang "Largo." Dinner was served by local women in the church basement.

At the one-thirty ordination service the two brothers from Lancaster were set apart for their respective offices. In the Edwards family the priesthood ran from father to son and grandson. The grandfather helped to ordain his grandson. Following the ordinations Brother Garver spoke to the general assembly on the beauty of priesthood.

R. E. Davey preached on "Victorious Achievements" at the mid-afternoon service.

This was the largest conference crowd ever had by the church at Madison. The seven branch presidents of the district were there as well as other members from every branch.

At four-thirty a benediction service was held by Madison Branch, there being songs by the congregation and a short talk and benediction by Apostle Garver.

Mikado, Michigan

Working and Studying Together

Branch members are going forward with new zeal. Eighteen Saints of this branch attended the district conference at Coleman.

A novel way of raising money was employed on a recent Friday evening when the women had a pancake supper at the home of Sister Slater. The money raised is to be applied to the purchase of new hymn books.

Mikado members are looking forward to a visit and lecture from Apostle D. T. Williams, to be given in the near future.

The young people of the branch plan to give a chicken supper November 15. This is to help with branch expenses and to add to the purchase of hymn books.

The church school bought twelve of the new quarterlies on financial law, and students are finding them exceedingly interesting. The young people in their Friday night meetings are studying the life of Paul.

Brother M. A. Summerfield has promised a week or more of his services here, also Brother Matthew Umphrey, of Bentley, is going to help, and G. W. Burt, of Beaverton. The Saints look with hope to their assistance.

Honolulu, Hawaii

Saints of the Islands Enjoy Rally Day

Rally days are quite the usual thing with branches on the mainland of the United States, but with Honolulu Saints they are rare. Indeed native Saints did not know just what a rally day was until August 6, of this year. Through the prayers and house-to-house visits of the priesthood and the whole-hearted response of the membership of all branches the city-wide effort of rally day was a spiritual, educational, and social success.

The priesthood desired to conduct the program just as the programs of rally days on the mainland are conducted, so the following services were carried out.

At 8.30 a. m., after a most beautiful and earnest prayer by Patriarch G. J. Waller, seeking divine aid and invoking a special blessing upon all the meetings of the day, about one hundred and fifty Saints, under the leadership of Priests Elias Kaawakao, Jacob Kiefer and David Kumata, met in prayer service. This was an inspiring hour and many of the young took part.

The Sunday school program at 9.45 was in charge of the superintendent, Emma Kaeo Kaawakao and her associates. Brother Waller spoke feelingly of his rich experiences in Sunday school work, told how many of the leading members of the church were brought in through the schools held in various parts of Honolulu. David Kumata, one of the promising young ministers in the Japanese Branch, told some of his experiences in Sunday school work and his conversion to the church. Robert Ching, a faithful and energetic worker in the Chinese Branch, talked interestingly. Sister George DeTray, for years past associated with the Stone Church congregation in Zion and a specialist in primary work, gave a word picture of what has been done in Independence and what can be done in Honolulu. An interesting feature of the program was the singing of the songs of Zion by the children.

The sacrament at eleven o'clock was in charge of the elders of the Hawaiian Branch, Brother Waller giving the address. The priesthood at this meeting represented seven different nationalities. The room was well filled, and this was one of the most spiritual meetings ever held in Honolulu. At no service in the entire church, with perhaps the exception of General Conference, will one find a better portrayal of "God hath made of one blood all nations," than at such a meeting as this. Here met in the bonds of Christian love and fellowship, each heart yearning and praying for Zion's redemption, were Hawaiian, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, German, English, and American Saints. All mingled their prayers, testimonies, and songs in praise to "Our Father who art in heaven." Traditions and practices of centuries past were cast aside for the "Light" of our Elder Brother. Is it any wonder that God's Spirit was felt in power?

The women's department, led by Sister Louisa Kaeo and her loyal workers, served lunch at one o'clock. The fifty gallon punch barrel prepared by Elias Kaawakao, was in charge of the newly-ordained deacons, John Antone and John Ledo. Food was again served at five o'clock.

A round table and problem meeting was in charge of V. B. Etzenhouser at 2.30 p. m., and proved successful as the speakers and voluntary responses were enthusiastic and entered into the spirit of the hour. Elder Henry Mahi and his priesthood chorus sang two fine numbers. The subject, "Preparation," by Joshio Motsumoto, deacon of the Japanese Branch, was well received. "Youth's Part in the Latter-Day Restoration" was given by Lilley Yap, of the Chinese Branch, and brought out very clearly the part which the young people have played in the work of the church and suggested what might be expected from them in the future.

It is interesting to note that all three branches in Honolulu are made up largely of young people which is good assurance of continued growth in the work of the church. Elder Charles Lee, of the Hawaiian Branch presidency, spoke on "Opportunities Presented by the Church." Brother Lee is the oldest elder in the branch in point of experience and service with the exception of Brother Waller. His talk called forth lively discussion.

"Young People in Action," led by Brother Jacob Kiefer, lately ordained a priest, was much enjoyed. This subject is the all-important one right now among the youth. They are very anxious to organize themselves as the youth in the various stakes and districts on the mainland. An outstanding response was given in the discussions by Sister Ella Kekoa, one of the teachers from the Island of Molokai. Being a teacher and a mother, she brought to the attention of the meeting some of the vital problems facing the youth of the islands. Several songs, directed by Presuela Piltz Kramer, musical leader, were pleasingly rendered during the hour.

The program of the Religio was directed at 5.30 p. m. by "Queenie" Piltz and was in the nature of a pageant of nations. Several attractive Hawaiian girls, under the leadership of Sister Molly Antone, rendered native melodies. They presented a pretty picture, their hair decorated with gorgeous hibiscus, the Hawaiian leis draped around their shoulders, as they smilingly strummed their ukuleles and sang. The Japanese girls in their beautiful silk kimonos of brilliant color, sang quaint songs of the Sunrise Kingdom. These young people are learning the songs of Zion, too, and some fine singers are being developed. The Chinese gave a variety of musical numbers using both male and female voices. Their ability to use instruments also was the matter of favorable comment. The Hapai sisters and Alice Dias, of Hilo, rendered piano and vocal numbers. These young people are accomplished musicians and take prominent part in the musical life of their community.

Patriarch G. J. Waller brought the day to a fitting close at seven-thirty, delivering one of his forceful and inspiring sermons. The spirit of love, unity, and earnest devotion filled the day.

Bremerton, Washington

Units of Branch Cooperate to Promote Better Spiritual Condition

About twenty from Bremerton attended the Northwestern reunion at Silver Lake in August. Everyone derived much benefit from this gathering, and many lessons were brought home and taught those who could not go.

On Labor Day the men of the branch met at the church and worked. At noon the women brought lunch baskets and all ate together. When the food was cleared away it was found that so much remained that the company decided to stay until after the evening meal. Accordingly, each person found something to do and a profitable day was spent.

A number of social activities have been enjoyed this fall. Everyone seems eager to be busy, and branch activities are going forward.

The business meeting was held September 25, and those elected to serve for the coming year are: Pastor, A. W. Lundeen; church school director, W. G. Day; clerk, Cora A. Jones; president of women, Mary Mascher; superintendent of adult department, D. W. Brown; young people, Floyd Bouse; children, Eva Lundeen; chorister, Floyd Bouse.

All departments of the church school are functioning properly since more room was given by work on the basement. The junior church, superintended by Eva Lundeen, is well established.

Bremerton Branch is in better spiritual condition now than ever before. The last sacrament meeting was one long to be remembered.

On a recent Friday a social evening was enjoyed at the home of W. G. Day, the occasion being to welcome home Brother and Sister Larson after a year's absence, also Brother Troyer, whose ship is in the Navyyard. Sister Larson is contemplating a visit to Sweden and is planning to leave this month. She will go by way of the Panama Canal. Brother Troyer is a young man who was recently ordained a priest. His ship, the U. S. S. Tennessee, will be in the yards until about the first of the year. Brother Troyer is stepping into the work of the branch and will be much help to the pastor. Bremerton Branch has no priest.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Pool and Fifth Streets, Portsmouth, Ohio

Attendance at Portsmouth Branch has been quite low during the last few weeks due to the Saints' visiting other congregations. September 10, Creola Branch was visited and a spiritual meeting was reported by those who went. Many from this congregation enjoyed the annual home-coming of Pleasant Valley Branch, September 24. Some spent October 1 in Dayton where the district conference was in session. At that time two young men were ordained to higher offices in the priesthood: Charles Monroe to the office of priest, and Harry Culp to that of teacher. Now there are three elders, three priests and two teachers in this branch.

The business meeting was held September 15, and the following officers were chosen: Branch president, O. A. Rexroad; secretary, Nellie Rexroad; treasurer, James Cheffins; solicitor and publicity agent, Martin Crabtree. The church school was reorganized September 17, Elder Walter Culp the superintendent, James Cheffins, assistant superintendent and treasurer, and Blanch Bealor, secretary.

The Bible class was organized September 21, James Cheffins superintendent.

A week later the women's department organized for the coming year. Sister Rexroad was elected leader and Julia Culp her assistant.

Due to the district conference on October 1, sacrament service was held here October 8. The emblems were carried to several members who have been bedfast.

Battle Creek, Michigan

Four Are Baptized

The Saints of Battle Creek, Michigan, love the old, old story of Jesus and his love. This was evidenced by their response to the twelve preaching services lately held there by Elder A. Whitehead.

One Thursday morning they gathered at a picturesque spot in the city and Brother Whitehead led four more men and women who were willing to take on them the name of Jesus, into the waters of baptism.

Battle Creek members pray that these new brothers and sisters will be led by the Spirit of the Master to give their best to his service.

Graceland Home-coming

Graceland's tenth annual home-coming, October 20, 21, and 22, proved one of the most inspiring and enjoyable events in the history of the institution. Graceland alumni, their relatives and friends came from many States to celebrate the three gala days of football, drama, worship, renewing of friendships and acquiring of new ones, and the many other activities that go toward making a Graceland home-coming.

The first assembly was held in the chapel on Friday afternoon, and its witty speeches and enthusiastic singing provided an appropriate beginning for all the home-coming festivities. Home-comers arrived in a steady stream all afternoon, and that evening the College Players presented "David Garrick" to a well-filled Coliseum. The old eighteenth-century play was excellently performed under the direction of Miss Forence Thompson, and was greatly appreciated by the audience judging by the frequent bursts of laughter that filled the building. Immediately after the play, a general get-together was held in the basement of the Coliseum. Under the leadership of Mr. Cheville, the group joined in the singing of pep songs and was led in several college yells by Paul Utenhemer, an old cheer leader of merit.

Saturday a Big Day for Home-comers

Open house was held in Walker Hall Dormitory from eighty-thirty to nine-thirty Saturday morning. A pep program in the chapel followed, E. E. Closson in charge. The orchestra played Graceland songs and marches. Roy Cheville later led the assembly in the singing of "Alma Mater Hymn" and "Oh, Fair Graceland," Wilbur Chandler in the role of soloist. Official announcements were made by Doctor Charles F. Grabske for the Alumni Association, Monroe Carter for the Acacia, and Ross Mortimer for the Tower publication. Interesting talks were given by Mrs. Lena Graham, "Some Personalities Seen at Other Graceland Home-comings"; President F. M. McDowell, "What the Home-comer Had to Come Back to Twenty Years Ago"; Coach A. R. Gilbert, "Some High Points in the History of Football at Graceland," and the usual enthusiastic talk by John Garver, Graceland's alumnus de luxe. At 2 p. m. Graceland's football men met the Washington Junior College team in a hard-fought gridiron battle at North Park.

Alumni Dinner Saturday Evening

The alumni dinner at 5.30 p. m. in the dining room of Walker Hall was presided over by President G. N. Briggs. Two hundred and fifty home-comers and students took their places at the long, tastefully-decorated tables, to partake of an excellent dinner and chat of this and other home-comings and all kinds of experiences of bygone days on the campus and in the classroom. A program of music, toasts and addresses followed, the home-comers being especially appreciative of the vocal numbers rendered by the Graceland Ladies' Quartet and the Octet. The theme of the program was "Returns on Investments." Miss Maurine Greene, of Tabor, Iowa, spoke on "Returns Received"; President F. M. McDowell, "Returns Expected," and Apostle John Garver, "Returns Not Tabulated." These talks gathered up the spirit of the home-coming, and helped one to understand what the occasion meant to those who have become imbued with the spirit of the church college. Miss Doris Nelson read the "Home-coming Tower of 1950," which proved highly entertaining. A social hour was held in the reception room of Walker Hall immediately after the dinner, and various organizations were holding parties until a late hour.

Inspiring Worship Services Sunday

Home-coming would not be complete to the majority of home-comers were they to leave the hill without renewing their acquaintance with a Graceland fellowship service. Space in the chapel was at a premium by 8.45 Sunday morning when the fellowship service opened under the leadership of Roy Cheville, who spoke on the subject, "Eternalities." Home-comers and students spoke from full hearts of the things which they had found to be lasting in their lives. Many of those present were able to tell how an appreciation of the lasting and worthwhile things of life had come to them in the chapel which had become a holy place to them. At the eleven o'clock service at the Coliseum, Bishop G. L. DeLapp spoke on the topic, "The Place of Graceland College in the Church." The address was inspirational and thought-provoking.

Ava, Missouri

Saints of Community Spend Happy Day

Several Saints of Ava Branch are absent at this time, some having gone to Kennett, Missouri, to pick cotton, while others have gone north to find work. This leaves the branch with fewer workers.

Sunday, September 24, Miss Margaret Gettys, a popular member of the young people's class, was baptized by F. V. Elliott. At eleven o'clock, Brother James Dobson conducted the confirmation service. At noon, Miss Margaret Gettys and Russel Carriker were united in marriage. The bride and bridegroom were attended by Miss Mayme Gettys and Grant Dobson. The ceremony was performed by Brother J. E. Morris. Elder F. V. Elliott, who was in charge of the morning service, gave a short talk on the ideals of marriage, the sanctity of the home, and the church doctrine concerning these things. A vocal duet, "I Would Be True," was sung by Lillian Freeman and Winnie Dobson. A basket dinner was served at noon, after which the bridal couple departed for Texas, where Brother Carriker is employed. The Saints from Four Corners were in attendance during the day.

The vacancy in the office of vice president of Religio, left by Mrs. Carriker, was filled by Frederick Elliott, jr. Eldon Morris is now secretary of Sunday school, and Winnie Dobson has replaced Alvin Dobson, who is in Kennett, as branch chorister.

Salt Lake City, Utah

Family Is United by Baptism

J. R. Goodman and his two sons were baptized August 27, Elder A. M. Chase officiating. They were confirmed at the eleven o'clock service, and Brother Goodman's infant son was blessed. A good Spirit was manifested, and the Saints were happy to welcome three more members into the branch.

Following this service a business meeting was held, this being made necessary by Brother and Sister Chase's leaving Utah on a much-needed vacation. Their resignation was accepted by those present, the congregation expressing gratitude and love for the untiring services of this missionary pair during more than two years.

Elder R. R. Robertson was elected to succeed Brother Chase as pastor.

Meetings held in the park during the summer months have been quite successful, and some of the people who first heard the gospel there, are now coming to the chapel.

Elder Frank Veenstra, pastor of Ogden Branch and president of Utah District, held a series of meetings in the Saints' church here last month. Sister Veenstra was also here, and the help of this energetic pair was much appreciated.

Elders Veenstra and Robertson met with Provo Saints, and ordained Albert Philips to the office of deacon. Members of that branch are grateful to have another member of the priesthood. Brother Veenstra remained there to preach a few times to the Saints who are hungry for spiritual food. But Brother Robertson returned to Salt Lake City after the morning service, to conduct a meeting in the park at 5 p. m. and one at the chapel at eight o'clock.

Sister Hauser, from Colorado, who is in Salt Lake City, has been very ill for some time and recently underwent a serious operation. She is with her sister while convalescing. She is very faithful, and has been administered to several times. She and her sister invited the Saints to hold a cottage meeting with them, and this seemed to help and encourage her. Her friends feel it is through her own faith and that of the elders that she is recovering.

Members here know there is much to be done for the cause of Christ. They are enjoying the blessings of the Lord and are trying to express their gratitude by service in his name.

Race Track, Montana

Helped by Visiting Speakers

Apostle M. A. McConley was a guest speaker at Race Track, October 10. Brother McConley has worked with these Saints at different times in western district reunions.

A most interesting and enjoyable gathering was held October 14 and 15. Saints from the different branches in the district met on the reunion grounds. Saturday night a program was presented. Sunday morning, church school convened with Warren Peterson in charge. At eleven o'clock, Brother F. L. Casey, from Polson, Montana, delivered a most instructive sermon, "The Law of the Lord," dealing with the present necessities, the problems, and the future responsibilities of the church and its people, challenging every member to demonstrate his religion.

At noon a bountiful basket dinner was served and the afternoon was spent in renewing acquaintances. At five o'clock the Saints left for their homes.

The Anaconda, Deer Lodge and Race Track locals are planning a halloween party, at which time the ghosts and goblins will make their appearances in weird costumes.

The young people of Race Track have secured the assistance of Mr. William Hoskins in their choir work. Mr. Hoskins is a talented singer and has had considerable work along the line of organizing choirs and glee clubs.

Conference Brings Advancement to New York and Philadelphia District

Representatives Gather at Scranton for Business

The conference of the New York and Philadephia District, held at Scranton, September 16 and 17, may be summed up as an important advancement of the work in this region. All branches were represented and gave reports. The business meeting convened Saturday evening with Elder H. L. Livingston, of Philadelphia, in charge and Elder E. Walter Lewis, of Scranton, acting as secretary pro tem. Reports were received and other items of business were transacted after which the meeting adjourned and Apostle Paul M. Hanson closed with prayer.

At the social hour which followed a play entitled, "Wanted a Correspondent," was presented by Scranton young people. Musical selections were given by Mrs. Maude Hedglin and William Davies, of Scranton and G. F. Quendenfeld, of Philadelphia.

Sunday morning the priesthood met with Apostle Hanson in charge. Then the church school convened. Three young men who had been approved for ordination at the business meeting Saturday were to have been ordained, but due to the absence of two, only Brother William Hyde, of Bloomsburg, was ordained to the office of priest. The ordination took place in the prayer service which followed the church school.

The afternoon session, Apostle Paul Hanson, the speaker, had good attendance and the Saints seemed to be drawn closer to God and to each other at this hour.

In the late afternoon the visitors enjoyed a treat when they were conducted through the plant of a local coal company, and given opportunity to observe how a modern mine is operated.

The spirit of cooperation reigned throughout the conference. The only unfortunate part of the gathering was the inability of Pastor R. J. Hawkins to attend the meetings due to a mine accident in which five men lost their lives.

Midland District (England) Holds Semiannual Reunion

"These Last Days and the Message of the Latter Day Saints"—Theme of Gathering

Midland district members assembled September 23 and 24 in the Queen's Hall, Nuneaton, for their semiannual reunion, it being the first time the church has held public meetings in that town. Two families of Saints live there and requested that the September reunion be held at Nuneaton.

Spiritually, financially, and numerically speaking this was the best reunion held for some time. Three general church appointees, Apostle John W. Rushton, Bishop A. T. Trapp and Missionary F. O. Davies, were present, the last named being the first speaker of the meetings. His talk came on Saturday evening and was followed by speeches by Elder J. Franklin Schofield and Bishop Trapp.

Though some had long distances to travel by road and rail, many Saints were present for the prayer service which opened Sunday's sessions. At ten-thirty in the morning Brother Rushton, the speaker, took for his lesson Matthew 12, and delivered an inspirational sermon.

Lunch was served in the hall at noon, and junior church school opened at 2 p. m. Speakers were Missionary F. Davies and Brother W. Sykes, of London. Then came a program of music.

The good Spirit was present during the afternoon fellowship service.

Tea was served in the hall, then came the closing session of the day. Brother Rushton was again the speaker.

The soloist of the day was Sister Gertrude Allen, of Birmingham, who sang four times.

Though weather conditions were unfavorable, every branch in the district was well represented, and the Saints rejoiced over the reunion. They pray God to bless the members at Nuneaton who are endeavoring to open up the latter-day work in that place.

English Saints Hold Harvest Festival

Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford

At this season of the year the Saints are reminded of the never-failing promise of Jehovah, "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." (Genesis 8: 22).

Members of this branch have enjoyed a wonderful year, and so they came together on a recent Sunday to give thanks and offerings to the Lord for his goodness. Their little church was brightened with an array of fruit and greens.

The choir sang the call to worship, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," at the 10.45 a. m. service. The congregation sang, "O Worship the King," "For the Beauty of the Earth," and "O Thou Whose Perfect Goodness Crowns the Year." Psalm 136 was the Scripture reading, and Miss May Holden sang, "Away to the Harvest Field." Apostle John W. Rushton, the speaker, talked on "Continued Goodness of God," following which Miss Florence Hayward sang, "Arise and Away Ye Reapers."

In the afternoon a young people's service was directed by H. Barrington. Miss May Holden talked on the harvest of the fields; Miss Dorothy Hayward read a short poem, and the congregation sang, "Father Thy Paternal Care." Miss Clark then read from the New Testament the words of Jesus, "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men," and Miss Ada Bailey talked on "The Harvest of the Sea." "Why Should I Crave for Goods and Wealth," was a solo by Miss Edith Noble. James Schofield gave a short talk on the harvest of humanity stressing his text, "Break up the fallow ground," and the Scripture reading, Matthew 7, was by Walter Baguley. Mrs. Chorlton sang "O Reapers of Life's Harvest."

Pastor G. W. Leggott took charge of the evening service, and many rejoiced to see him so restored to health. Brother Rushton was again the speaker and read 1 Corinthians 3. The choir sang, "Work for the Night Is Coming," and "Bringing in the Sheaves." Mrs. Minnie Brian sang, "Send Us, Lord, the Sunshine and the Rain." Then in conclusion Miss Edith Noble sang, "My Task."

Many friends of the Saints joined in the services of this day, and their presence was much appreciated.

Independence

Teachers and officers of Independence are giving loyal support to their leadership institute now in session at the Stone Church. For six nights they have assembled for the seven-thirty inspirational services, listening to splendid discourses by President F. M. McDowell, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Bishop J. A. Koehler, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards. They have appreciated also the help of musicians and readers in these services. The classes for teachers last week from eight-thirty till nine-thirty were given good attendance. The institute this week is stressing leadership work, and will conclude with a dedication service Friday night.

The women's department of Independence will bring to a close a year of sacrifice for general and local church Saturday night with a banquet served by the Laurel Club at the Auditorium. It was a year ago that the women workers were first called together by officers of the general and local church, and, under the leadership of Sister C. C. Koehler, launched their sacrifice drive. This continued until spring and a sum of six thousand dollars was raised for general church use. Then after a short rest, the women began another campaign, working this time for local expenses. Each week they have collected their sacrifice offerings and brought the envelopes to the church on Monday to be counted.

The funeral of Elder A. H. Parsons was held at the Stone Church at ten o'clock this morning. Brother Parsons passed away at Dumont, New Jersey, October 27, leaving to mourn his wife, Mattie Parsons, one daughter, Veneta Parsons Stockwood, and two grandchildren, of the home; a brother, Otto R., of Mansfield, Missouri; three sisters: Mrs. Cora Ogelsbie, of Nevada, Missouri; Mrs. Olive Taylor, of Holden, Missouri, and Mrs. Retta Fender, of Appleton City, Missouri. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Parsons was born February 8, 1857, and has served the church many long years as a minister. He was ordained an elder in 1882.

Stone Church

Apostle F. Henry Edwards delivered an excellent discourse on "The Restoration" Sunday morning, to a large congregation. His effort was well received. The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul Craig, furnished the music for the service and with Mrs. Pauline Arnson, soloist, sang "Jerusalem." Elder H. G. Barto, assisted by Apostle J. F. Curtis, was in charge of the hour.

This being the opening Sunday of annual Girl Scout Week in America, the two troops of the Stone Church, 37 and 46, attended the morning service in a body, and were made welcome by Brother Barto.

One of the most effective and beautiful services ever given at the Stone Church was enjoyed Sunday evening. All parts of the program harmonized to teach the lesson of brotherly love and peace. Following a brief organ recital by Opal Goode Doty and the fifteen-minute song service, directed by Colin Ferritt, George Anway, tenor, sang "The Rosary." Pastor John F. Sheehy then delivered a short talk on "Peace," relating several incidents which happened during the World War and the Civil War, and stressing the horror of armed strife and conflict. He closed with the quotation, "I have nothing to give for war, but everything to give for peace." A short play, "The Lord's Prayer," was presented by members of the White Masque Players, Mrs. Helen Brackenbury directing.

In the junior worship service the short story project of the Stone Church reached its climax Sunday. Eight juniors representing as many classes told Bible stories which they had written. First place went to Imogene Petentler with her story on Samuel. She will represent the Stone Church against the representatives of other congregations in Independence. Helen Louise Resch with "Peter" was second and Jack DeLonge with a story of Joseph was third. Following the stories a playlet showing the love of Ruth for Naomi was presented by the Junior Dramatic Society directed by Mrs. Olive Moses.

Second Church

Elder J. W. A. Bailey will begin a series of illustrated chart lectures on the Book of Mormon November 5, to continue each Sunday evening from six-fifteen to seven o'clock for four months.

Ivan Dillee was in charge of the morning service and Almer Sheehy, the speaker, chose for his text, "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." The choir furnished music.

Downstairs Gordon Cable was in charge and B. C. Sarratt was the speaker. "Forgiving One Another" was his theme, and Mrs. Totty told the story, "A Net Coming Through."

Elder R. L. Fulk was the evening speaker, and his topic was "Are We Being the Good Samaritan Today?" Virgil and Alice Woodside furnished the music.

A good number of local officers and teachers are attending the institute now in session at the Stone Church.

Liberty Street Church

Three representatives have been chosen from this district to have place on the Independence Young People's Council: Cecil Walker, Hubert Mills, and Gertrude LaGrece. All have been active in promoting the youth program of the church, especially in recreational work and the missionary trips taken during the summer. Cecil Walker has been made president of the council.

The eleven o'clock service Sunday was an "information program." Harry Blake, bishop's agent, gave a complete report of the financial status of the local and urged that all cooperate to the fullest extent with the workers of the women's department who have been striving diligently to make collections necessary for the maintenance of the Lord's house. The choir sang, "Father, Thy Children Bow in Adoration."

The Religio which meets at six o'clock each Sunday evening, offered an interesting program to the large number attending. Mary Arterburn told the story, "In Nazareth." Effie May and Alice Zion sang a duet, being accompanied by Inez Davis. Fred Friend gave a humorous reading, "The Clinging Vine and the Sturdy Oak." Sister J. R. Lentell, soprano, sang a solo, accompanied by Gertrude Davis. At the close of a short business meeting Pastor John R. Lentell took up the study of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Elder S. S. Smith was the evening speaker.

Walnut Park Church

Following the class work of the church school Sunday morning, a novelty number was given by the orchestra, under the direction of Brother Orlando Nace. "Consecration" was played by the orchestra, Walter Gibler playing a saw solo as a part of the number. All classes of the school reported excellent attendance. The new officers and teachers are becoming accustomed to their duties, and things are running smoothly.

Speakers Sunday were Evangelist Ammon White at eleven o'clock in the morning, and Elder C. Ed Miller in the evening.

The Swastika Class held a party Saturday evening, October 28, at the home of George and Charles Stowell. It was the first social affair of this young people's class since their new leaders, Brother and Sister Fred Horn, took charge. Twenty-five members of the class were present. The evening was occupied with the playing of games and the serving of refreshments.

Nineteen officers and teachers of the church school are attending the institute which is being held at the Stone Church.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people met with Group 33 North last week. It was difficult for the presiding elder to bring the service to a close because of the desire of those present to participate.

Thursday morning at nine o'clock the women's department met at the church and went to the home of Sister Neal Crandall for an all-day gathering.

Friday evening the young people spent a pleasant evening on the church lawn. The tang of autumn in the air, the rustle of falling, yellow leaves, and the smell of wood smoke added to the evening's enjoyment. They roasted wieners.

The following evening the boys and girls of the intermediate department enjoyed a party at the home of Sister Willis Young.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Early Sunday morning prayer services are increasing in interest and attendance.

Each class in the senior church school has been asked to present a program during that hour. Sunday the Dorcas Class of middle-aged women was first to respond to the invitation. "Friendship" was their theme.

Sister Louise McDonald will have charge of the Oriole movement on Enoch Hill, and also will work with the girls in the church school.

Elder C. Ed Miller was the speaker at eleven o'clock. Dorothy Winegar and Jean Thomas sang.

Elder J. E. Martin was the evening speaker and took his message from the Book of Mormon.

Spring Branch Church

Prayer service Sunday morning was in charge of Robert Fish and Arthur Peer. A splendid spirit was enjoyed.

The speaker at the eleven o'clock hour was Elder Jesse E. Smith. His subject was "Faith." Miss Mildred Bath sang a solo, "Twilight and Dawn." She was accompanied on the piano by Jean Terryberry.

The program at the church school service at six-thirty was in charge of Brother Robert Fish's class.

Elder A. J. Tankard was the evening speaker, and took his text from Luke 15. A quartet selection was sung by Gladys Dixon, Fern Belk, and Otis and Benson Brown.

Brother and Sister Morris Jacobsen gave a halloween party for two of the young people's classes at their home Friday evening.

The contest of the Evens and Odds for attendance is over and the Evens lost. They will entertain the Odds at a halloween party at the church tonight.

The women's department will meet at the home of Sister Jacobsen on Thursday of this week at one o'clock.

Gudgell Park Church

October 15, Pastor Walter Chapman spoke to this congregation, stating plainly those things which hinder individual advancement as well as the advancement of the group.

That evening at six o'clock the district held its first Religio session of the season. The adult class is taking up a study of financial law.

At seven-thirty Elder R. V. Hopkins began a series of meetings. He will occupy four Sunday nights and will try to help his listeners understand why they are here and God's great purpose and plan concerning them.

Elder Charles Pooler was the morning speaker October 22, and his subject was "The Financial Law of the Church."

Last Sunday morning Pastor John F. Sheehy preached on keeping the law. Elder Hopkins continued his subject of the previous evening meetings.

East Independence Church

Election of officers for the year to come was held a short time ago. Elder Frank Minton will serve another year as pastor with Elder Clair Austin as assistant and church school director. T. W. Thatcher is bishop's agent and custodian. Katherine Friend is the chorister, Jennie Butler, pianist, and Iva Edgerton women's supervisor and branch correspondent as long as she remains in the district. James Stowell is the assistant superintendent of the church school, Edith Meador, chorister and Ida Green, pianist. Eugene O'Neil is leader of young people. Superintendents of other departments will be appointed later.

On October 8, the congregation was pleased to have as speaker Elder D. O. Cato who is chief of police in Independence. Civic conditions as problems to be solved by the community and church were brought clearly to the attention of all.

That afternoon a number of East Independence singers took part in the Harvest Festival Chorus. East Independence members also had a booth at the festival which exhibited two hundred and eleven quarts of fruit besides vegetables and grains for the relief of the needy this winter.

A new family has moved into this community, Brother and Sister Earl Cox. They are welcome additions to the group.

Elder Earl Hoisington occupied the pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour October 15, and Elder H. V. Minton in the evening. Special musical numbers added beauty and dignity to the services.

Santa Ana, California

Active in Church Endeavor

Many Santa Ana Saints attended the Southern California district reunion, receiving unmeasured spiritual blessings.

Attendance at church services increased during the summer months.

Friday, September 29, Pastor and Sister A. M. Starkey, treated the choir to a steak bake at Irvine Park. When the young people reached the park, they found not only steak, but salad, vegetables, and desserts prepared for them. After supper, games and visiting were the program of the evening. Sixteen choir members were in attendance, with their leader, Sister Leila Lacey.

A fine feeling of earnest endeavor is being expressed by the young people. Their class, under the direction of the leader, Robert Lacey, met Friday, October 13, at the home of Levine Parks, where a pleasant evening was spent in games. The young people are well organized, meeting twice a month. Rodney Engel is president of the class.

On the same evening, the young married class met for an informal social time at the home of Sister Dorothy Fink.

The ladies' aid meets once a week for an all-day session. At eleven o'clock, a prayer service is held. Those who are unable to join the ladies' aid, meet with them for the regular prayer service.

A number of Santa Ana Saints drove up to San Bernardino to attend the services given in connection with their harvest home festival. The prayer and preaching services were followed by a play, presented in the evening, "Timbers for the Temple," which brought a fitting climax to the day.

Denver, Colorado

Every Department Is Busy

Members of the priesthood, directed by Pastor G. A. Smith, have begun a campaign of visiting among the Saints. It is hoped that all members of the church may be visited by the last of October.

The Columbine group of women met on Thursday, September 14, at the home of Sister Ella Thompson. The meeting was well attended and plans were formulated for the winter's work. Women of the Loyal Workers' Group meet once a week at the church and spend the day quilting.

The Columbine group met with Mrs. Ruth Robertson Thursday afternoon, October 5. A short program, in charge of Mrs. Alice Milligan, was presented, and refreshments were served by the hostess and Mrs. Milligan. It was decided to gather a store of clothing and nonperishable articles of food to be held in charge of a committee and given to those in need during the winter. Plans are under way for a rummage sale and a bazaar. The Loyal Workers are cooperating in all these enterprises.

The young people's group held their regular monthly luncheon and meeting Sunday, September 17, at the church.

Mrs. Harrison B. Coon passed away, September 14, after an illness of several months. Sister Coon has been a faithful member of the branch for many years, and until failing health made it impossible, she spent much of her time and strength visiting and encouraging the sick and helping the needy.

Members of the dramatic club presented the play, "Thanksgiving Ann," at the evening service on Sunday, September 24. The play, the theme of which is stewardship, was directed by Mrs. Bertha Black, with the following cast: Glenn Bruno, Elaine Salyards, Dorothy Wildermuth, and Ammon Christensen.

Sunday, October 15, was the annual rally day with a very good attendance. The Saints had the pleasure of having with them President Elbert A. Smith, who preached morning and evening. A basket lunch was served at noon in the lower auditorium, and a round table meeting was held in the afternoon.

Brother R. S. Salyards, sr., has spent several weeks in Denver with his son, Richard, and daughter, Zaide. The members have greatly enjoyed his kindly presence and helpful sermons. He visited the branches in Colorado Springs and Fort Collins and preached for them.

Apostle M. A. McConley also has been in Denver for two brief visits.

Lynn Coven, who was seriously injured about two months ago, is still in a precarious condition at the Colorado General Hospital. He was helping a fellow workman lift an electric refrigerator from a truck when it slipped from the man's hands and fell upon Lynn's chest, injuring his lung very badly. He is the son of Brother and Sister Louis Coven.

Dramatic Activities

Preparations are well under way for the fourth annual one-act play tournament sponsored by the Kansas City Stake O. B. K.'s, to be held at Central Church on Monday and Tuesday, November 6 and 7.

This year the plays will be entered under three sections—folk or period plays, modern plays, and religious dramas. Seven groups have entered the following plays: "The Bishop's Candlesticks," "Where Love Is," "The Lord's Prayer," "Aunt Martha Pays," "The Man Who Came Back," "Ambition," and "Old Walnut." Garland Tickemyer is serving as production manager.

Fourth Church entered the Missouri Sunday School State Play Tournament presenting "The Bishop's Candlesticks." In the Kansas City section of this tournament they were ranked equal second and highly commended for their appropriate setting. Garland Tickemyer, who played the part of the convict, was warmly praised for his outstanding work.

In February the stake council is planning to sponsor a Greater Kansas City Tournament in which plays from all denominations in Kansas City and Independence will be entered.

Armourdale Church

Rally Day, October 15, was a genuine success. By means of postal cards many old friends and members were notified, and returned for a pleasant, spiritual, and happy day. Worship service from nine-thirty to eleven o'clock in the morning was impressive, and was followed by a spirited sermon by Elder H. A. Higgins, pastor of Quindaro. At twelve-thirty lunch was served in the junior room. The peak of activity and interest during the day came from two-thirty until five in the afternoon prayer service. Elders Julian Gouch, Charles Strader, and Edward Tucker were guests.

After this service all went home for a short period of rest and returned for a musical feature at 7.30 p. m. The orchestra and choir had especially arranged for this service and rendered some beautiful numbers in a unique program entitled "Be Ye Consecrated," directed by James Hawkins.

Armourdale is happy to announce the reorganization of the orchestra. The choir also is reorganized and will be directed by Sister Marie Rushfelt.

Pastor Gough is recuperating from his recent illness and hopes to be back at his post of duty soon. The local church is appreciating the untiring efforts of Brother Edward Baker, temporary pastor. He is visiting, directing, instructing and generally making himself much loved by the congregation.

This congregation was well represented at the Stake Leadership School.

The O. B. K.'s are entering the drama contest and their play is being coached by Eddie Baker.

A successful "workers' banquet" was held October 17, at which discussions for service and improvements were held and local problems were analyzed.

Armourdale is looking forward to a series of stereopticon lectures to be given by Brother Baker in the near future. The orchestra and choir will assist.

Under the leadership of Bishop's Agent Vernon McCann, this group is hoping to give complete cooperation during the "Keep the Law" period.

Argentine Church

The women's club served a chili and Italian spaghetti dinner and supper October 17, at the home of their president, Sister Florence Foster, clearing almost twenty dollars to be presented to the stake bishop for local expenses.

Elder George Mesley, of the stake presidency, was the speaker the evening of October 22, and read Matthew 7, beginning with the twelfth verse.

Gladstone Church

Under the direction of Pastor Harry H. Sevy and the new officers, Gladstone group is showing increased activity and attendance. The church school director is William L. Barham; chorister, Earl Cox; young people's and O. B. K. leader, Lawrence Good; junior church leader, Mrs. Victor V. Smith. All these are constructive workers.

The women's department was organized with Mrs. R. H. Carver as president and workers have started on specific assignments that will greatly benefit the group.

Recent speakers have been Elders E. W. Lloyd, Charles G. Lewis, and Bishop C. A. Skinner. Brother Skinner, who is the stake bishop, is continuing a series of lectures, explaining in plain terms the financial law of the church.

In early October about twenty-five young people and adults had a wiener roast at Budd Park. A Halloween party was another social attraction.

Fourth Church

Two young men of this congregation were ordained to the priesthood in an impressive ceremony conducted by Elders James O. Worden and Marion H. Sneed. The ministerial charge was given by Elder Thomas McCormick. Garland Tickemyer was ordained an elder and Dale Brady a deacon. Both young men are working diligently. Brother Tickemyer presented his first sermon here October 1.

During the week of October 8 to 15, a series of meetings was held presenting the fundamentals of the gospel from the viewpoint of youth. Priest Lloyd Siebert, a young man of this group, was the speaker. Special music was furnished each evening. These services were greatly enjoyed by all who attended. Some young people from other groups were there.

For the past month a forum on "Religion in the Home" has been held at six-thirty each Sunday evening, discussion being led by Eugene Bivens. Some fine points have been brought out.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg, Missouri

At the recent business meeting held by Elder W. S. Macrae and Elder G. R. Wells, Warrensburg's pastor, S. M. Andes, was retained and Brother John A. Bozarth was elected as his assistant. Other officers are: Church school director, Ammon Andes; adult supervisor, Walter Johnson; young people's supervisor, Leamon Johnson; primary supervisor, Lillian C. Johnson; women's leader, Sister S. M. Andes; pianists, Jonnie Raveill and Jewel Banks.

During the past two weeks workers have been repairing and redecorating the church. Edgar Raveill has been in charge and has sacrificed much of his time to work at the church. A splendid spirit of cooperation is being shown by all the members in donating their labor. Those who cannot help in this way are helping financially.

The women's department gave a pie social and had concessions for amusement. The proceeds amounted to sixteen dollars.

The young people's division is planning a hallowe'en party to be held at the S. M. Andes residence.

PHOSFO

Why eat dirty, filthy, diseased hog and lard when it is not necessary? Why don't dogs thrive on this food? If it's meat, get some of the neck meat from a young beef: boil it—best, strongest, and most nourishing in the animal, and the cheapest. But don't overlook eating Phosfo to furnish the elements for the nerves and bones, and the raw mineral salts as well as the vitamines. For kick and pep and energy its PHOSFO; $1 tells the tale.

Pastoral

To Branch Presidents and Members of the Church in Rock Island District, Greetings: In order to comply with the request of the general church officers in the observance of the "Keep the Law" period, and also to be in attendance at the annual business meetings of such of the branches as have requested my presence, I am submitting the following proposed program: Muscatine, November 1 to 3: Business meeting on Friday the third. Cedar Rapids, November 4 to 6: Business meeting on Sunday the fifth. Waterloo, November 7 to 9: Business meeting on Thursday the ninth. Oelwein, November 10 to 13. Anamosa, November 14 to 16. Fulton, November 17 to 20: Business meeting Sunday the nineteenth. Savanna, November 21 to 23: Business meeting Thursday the twenty-third. Rock Island, November 28 and 29. Moline, November 30 and December 1. Kewanee, December 3 to 6: Business meeting Thursday the fifth. Princeville, December 7, cottage meeting. Peoria, December 8, cottage meeting. Pekin, December 9 and 11. Farmington, December 12, cottage meeting. Galesburg, December 13 and 14: Business meeting Thursday the fourteenth. Dahinda, December 15: Business meeting Friday the fifteenth. Joy, December 16 to 18. Millersburg, December 19 and 20. Matherville, December 21 and 22. The majority of the meetings held during this period will be in the interest of teaching the financial law, as requested by the general officers. Some of the branch presidents have requested my presence at their annual business meetings. In such places one meeting will be set apart for that purpose. All branches should organize for the observance of the "Keep the Law" period. During this tour of the district I shall try to avoid holding meetings on Mondays and Saturdays. Please note the dates set for your branch, and try and make all necessary arrangements for the meetings.—E. R. Davis, district president.

Marriage

HILL-CARLSON.—The marriage of Miss Czerna Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Hill, and George Carlson, son of Mr. Eph. Carlson, was solemnized Friday night, October 20, at 8 p. m. at the home of the bride's parents at Chanute, Kansas. Elder Amos T. Higdon, of Independence, Missouri, read the ceremony. Miss Mildred Hill, sister of the bride, and Francis Johnson, of Girard, brother of the bridegroom, were maid of honor and best man. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Preceding the service Mr. Donald Gibbs sang, "O Promise Me," and "I Love You Truly." Miss Martha Baird played a violin solo, "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," and Miss Helen Loy played the bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" as the processional. A reception followed the ceremony, refreshments being served to seventy-five guests. After a short honeymoon, the bridal pair will make their home this winter with Mrs. Carlson's parents, and will locate on a farm next spring.

Our Departed Ones

MILLS.—Charles Martin Mills was born October 16, 1842, at Willoughby, Ohio, and died at Independence, Missouri, October 3, 1933. He was married to Harriett Ann Williamson, September 20, 1866, who preceeded him to the other side five years ago. He leaves to mourn his departure, two daughters and three sons, and nineteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren, besides many other relatives and many friends. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, April 16, 1876, at Pittsfield, Illinois, and was ordained a priest, August 8, 1897, and remained an earnest, faithful worker unto his death. He moved to Independence in 1884, and made it his home ever since; he was in business with his brother, Henry Mills, for a number of years. A citizen of sterling integrity, a soldier of the Civil War, and a faithful true husband and father, he lived a long useful life and earned a glorious rest. The funeral sermon was by Frederick A. Smith, assisted by John F. Weston. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

Who Pays for the War?

(A John Sheehy Story.)

In a far eastern sea coast town came the call of the President for "75,000 volunteers." Young men laid down their fishing nets and joined the colors. In a quiet little fisherman's shack a young husband bade good-bye to his bride of only a few weeks. She followed him to the only road in the town and as he took his place with the little company of fisherman soldiers, she waved good-bye and tried to be brave.

No one thought much of war in the early days of the Civil War. This call from the President truly would end the trouble started by a few rebels in the South. Stop crying! No one will be hurt! The boys will all be back in a few weeks!

But the weeks went on into months and the months into years. Each month more boys left town for the front. Every month a report of someone from the little town killed.

The young bride was growing old in a few months. A baby came to the humble home. With the coming of the baby came a message also from the War Department informing the young mother that her husband was missing.

The strain was too much for the little frail woman of the sea. Something in her brain snapped. Every day she would go down to the road and as someone passed she would ask, "Is that you, Jim?"

The war was over. Jim came home. She never knew him. When he entered the little house she asked, "Is that you, Jim?"

He tried to comfort her. He tried to help her understand he was back, but every day she would ask, "Is that you, Jim?"

Jim lovingly and tenderly cared for her. He grew to be an old man, and when he died they buried him beneath the stars and stripes.

Years after Jim died a stranger visiting at the home would hear an old, old lady ask, "Is that you, Jim?"

Shop Notes

The Editor contemplated the shop in amazement. After the quiet of his own den, it sounded like pandemonium. Machines, ranged in rows, acted like monsters. Linotypes chattered, presses—devouring tons of paper and rivers of ink—roared and thundered, the guillotine crashed spurting a shower of paper trimmings into the air, the stitching machine with an evil clatter bit and chewed the papers, narrowly missing fingers. Piles of paper, books naked of jackets like little corpses, stood ghastly 'round. The Editor retreated to his den, surprised that he and his kind had caused it all.

Busy

"I'm glad to see people busy," the pigeon had ceased to preen himself on my sunny windowsill, "but many times I'm sorry to see what they are busy about."

Many people are only window shopping when they look for religion. Of course, this doesn't make it any easier for the churches that are struggling heroically with the social and personal problems of those same people.

Editorial

"To Obey Is Better Than Sacrifice"

The Coming Week Next Sunday—November 12—the church goes into action for the most intensive period of teaching and instruction concerning the financial law of the church that has been undertaken in recent times. Already a great deal of enthusiasm has been developed among local officers. Responses from the members have been very encouraging. This period of instruction will continue until December 3, when it is expected that many people of the church will have complied with the law by the filing of inventories and the making of arrangements to pay tithing.

The Law Defined We are in better shape than ever before to undertake such an effort of education for compliance with the financial law. It used to be that the interpretation of the financial law was left to the individual, and there was much irregularity, with every member following the dictates of his own conscience. Now the officers of the church have studied and discussed the matter, and after careful consideration they have produced a uniform interpretation for the church. This will result in fairness for everybody who desires to comply. There is no longer any basis for uncertainty or doubt. The whole matter is clearly and plainly set out in the new pamphlet issued by the Presiding Bishopric, entitled the Handbook of the Financial Law. Every officer should have an opportunity to study this important little work.

The Whole Law An elder who was preaching on the subject recently said that if one wishes to operate a motor car he must observe all the laws involved: lubrication, fuel supply, cooling and radiation, inflation of tires, etc. A failure to observe any single law will result in a total failure in operation. They all go together. If not, they all fail together. He quoted, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Nothing is perfect until it is complete. If anything is left out, it is not complete, therefore not perfect. If the whole law is not observed, permanent benefits cannot be obtained from the observation of a part of it.

Have We Failed? If we have failed at any point, it has been in the observation of the financial law of the church. For a hundred years we have preached the "Six Principles" of the gospel, but it is only in recent times that people have seriously considered the financial law of the church. Too many have felt that tithing and stewardship—and especially tithing—were not a part of the gospel plan. To this one thing, if to no other, we can attribute our failure to make the progress we should have made.

What to Do All over the church, pastors, bishops and their agents, and members of the priesthood will be teaching the law. Will your pastor be cooperating in this work? All over the church members will be making an accounting of their affairs to determine what they owe to the Lord in tithes. Will you be among them? They will be studying the inventory blanks preparatory to filling them out and filing them with the bishop. Will you also help?

A Test of Fellowship One brother suggests that the time may come when compliance with the financial law, like compliance with the "Six Principles" of the gospel, will be made a test of fellowship. We are not prepared to say. The observance of one's religious duty, like his entrance into the church, is a voluntary matter. But a true and complete conversion will lead to obedience. Samuel once cried in vexation to the children of Israel, "To obey is better than sacrifice." Obedience is better than sacrifice, as we have found. And a period of instruction for the observance of the law is better than a sacrifice period for the whole church.

L. L.

Good men are the strength of the world. And how does the world know that a man is good? By the degree in which he reveals God. A good man is kind, sympathetic, and cheerful. A good man comforts others. He is unselfish in his concern for others and in the use of his possessions. A good man is generous. He is a leader for righteousness and is aggressive in fighting issues of evil consequence. A good man devotes his time to matters of first importance. He is always found in good company and has a regular place which he fills when institutions to which he belongs are conducting business. A good man loves.—Fletcher Nelson, in "The Way of a Good Man," Church Management.

Great hearts alone understand how much glory there is in being good. To be and keep so is not the gift of a happy nature alone, but it is strength and heroism.—Jules Michelet.

Our Commitment to Peace

"And again, I say unto you, Sue for peace, not only the people that have smitten you, but also to all people; and lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth; and make proposals for peace, unto those who have smitten you, according to the voice of the Spirit which is in you, and all things shall work together for your good."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 11.

The world's incorrigible and irretrievable wickedness has been the theme of a great deal of talk among professing Christians for generations, and a belief in its ultimate destruction has been almost an article of faith by some.

Even now it is the habit of some to abandon the world to its wicked ways, give up all hope of any good or happiness in this life, and prepare solely for the life to come. By people who hold to these sentiments, all persons who believe otherwise are regarded as bordering on heterodoxy.

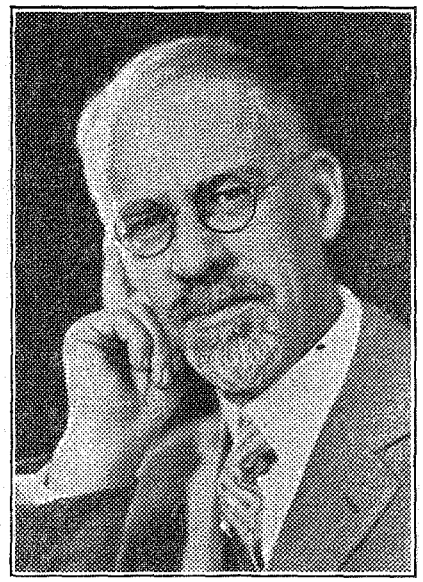
Whatever our doubts and fears may be, whatever feeling of skepticism we may harbor concerning the fate of humanity, we are committed to the support of peace. War may come, but our faith teaches us to work to the extent of our strength for the righteous cause of peace.

To the Unemployed

The Business Manager of the Herald is making a special offer for a limited time to unemployed members. It has already produced results and obtained employment for a number of people. A rate of one cent a word per insertion is offered for people who desire to advertise for positions. This rate is far below the cost of publication, but it is offered in the hope that it may serve as a means of helping get people in touch with jobs. The only reason that any charge is made is to prevent a flood of requests from persons not seriously interested. This special rate applies only to requests for positions.

It is becoming more and more clear that the principles of our religion and the findings of the social sciences point in the same direction. Economists now call attention to the fact that the present distribution of wealth and income which is so unbrotherly in the light of Christian ethics, is also unscientific in that it does not furnish sufficient purchasing power to the masses to balance consumption and production in our machine age. Economists further point out that control of the great economic forces which affect the welfare of all nations cannot be achieved by anyone nation acting alone. World cooperation is becoming more and more a practical necessity. This also is in line with Jesus' teachings of universal brotherhood.—From "Labor Sunday Message, 1932," prepared by the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Men You Ought to Know



ELBERT A. SMITH
Of the First Presidency

"I was born . . . . in the old Mansion House at Nauvoo," wrote "Brother Elbert" some time ago. "The event was of considerable importance to me, but the world took little note and moved on in an indifferent, heartless sort of way." The whimsical humor that touches this statement appears often in his speaking and writings, which have endeared him to many people.

He first worked for the "Herald Office" as a binder. When he resigned after eight years he was foreman of his department, but was not allowed to be free of the publishing interests long, for he was soon asked to join the editorial staff of "Autumn Leaves," of which he was later the principal editor. It was in 1906 that he became an associate editor of the "Herald," thus following in his father's footsteps.

In April 1909 he became a member of the First Presidency, and Counselor to Joseph Smith, President of the church, after whose decease he became a counselor to the incumbent President, Frederick M. Smith. In both pulpit and press he has been making a distinguished contribution to the church for many years.

November 11 for Peace Day

A Proposal to the Civilized World

ARMISTICE DAY—November 11—celebrates the ending of only one war. It ended fifteen years ago this day. It was to have been a "war to end war." The statesman who called it that fortunately did not live to see the present result of his dream. War is not ended by war; but like the ancient dragon of mythology who, having one head cut off, promptly replaced it with two, war has increased and multiplied, and the threats of war have become the terror of the earth.

It is good that the world celebrates the ending of that scourge of blood and hate—the World War—rather than its beginning. Nobody cares to remember the day it began. Its anniversary is not marked with red figures on any calendar we have seen. The greatest heroes of that period of history, even at this day, are not the generals who carried it on, but the mediators who attempted to bring about peace after the catastrophe.

There is little need for Armistice Day on November 11. That war is over. But War lives on. The fighting ceased long ago, the echoes of its bombardments have died away. But the wreckage remains to be cleared up, and other wars threaten the world with disaster. It is hardly enough to devote a day to the memory of a war that is now past. No constructive purpose is served by a holiday so limited. What is really needed is a Peace Day, and November 11 would serve as well for it as any other date on the calendar.

We Suggest—

That November 11 each year be celebrated internationally as Peace Day instead of Armistice Day.

A day for talking peace to our neighbors, teaching peace and its ideals to the children, the occasion for making friendly overtures to other nations, for celebrating the victories of peace.

In spite of the prevalence of the war spirit, the armies of peace have done much good, prevented many wars, and promoted good will. We offer them Peace Day for November 11.

IF ARMISTICE DAY could be changed to Peace Day for all the world—if it could be used in the interest of peace and for the promotion of the ideals of peace, something more real would be accomplished for the welfare of humanity than by all the wars that have ever been fought.

And now, why not a Peace Day? A day when we shall look to the ending of all wars? No possible military victory—as we have seen since the World War—can be as great or important as peace. The council table is more important than the battlefield. The statesman is more important than the soldier. The finest patriots are those who preserve the peace, not those who provoke war. And even after war has done its deadly work, and exacted its horrible toll of life and property and suffering, there always comes the need of the council table to arrange peace.

Peace is the worthiest objective of international relationships. Civilization goes forward in peace, but is pushed backward in war. We could at least devote one important day in the whole year to discussing peace, and teaching the means and methods of peace to our populations.

We should not care to see a Peace Day that would become just another name on the calendar, like "apple week" and many another futile gesture that is begun only to be forgotten. There are too many meaningless celebrations now.

But this day—Peace Day, November 11—should be designated for a campaign for peace, in which every thinking Christian should participate, for which newspapers could publish articles, and for which religious journals could furnish program suggestions and materials helpful to ministers and other speakers who are willing to discuss peace. The movement could be broad enough, eventually, to go very properly to the school children, who would hear about the heroes of peace, the men and women who have given their lives to the promotion of international understanding and the settlement of strife.

PEACE DAY ought to come. It ought to be one of our greatest holidays—an international holiday—not for merrymaking, but for one of the most serious purposes and needs that confront humanity. We don't care who establishes it. We don't care for a bit of credit. Let somebody else have that. If it is ever to be established it will be because denominations with larger followings than ours and publications with larger circulations than ours take it up.

Perhaps the idea of a day devoted to peace lacks glamour and romance—it contains nothing of the flavor of audacity (Continued on page 1237)

The Awfulness and Futility of War

(Notes taken from a topic discussion by Howard K. Williams in "Young People's Leader.")

The war-like spirit is always degenerating to every high and noble impulse. It is for the young people of this twentieth century to pull off the pretty mask of war and see that it is what Sherman said it was—"War is Hell!"

Anybody who pictures war as pretty and noble and of value to progress, is not telling the truth. Perhaps, sometimes we must fight, but be not deceived; everybody loses in warfare, victors and conquered. . . .

War is passion, and passion of any sort leads to passions of other sorts. Every war has been a signal to let loose the passions, and like the opening of Pandora's box, when the lid is once off, then all the passions come crowding out. . . . We have right under our eyes the last war and its sequence.

The stories of immoralities in France are too common and too awful to be recited. Boys who were clean were led into unusual surroundings, herded like cattle, fatigued beyond endurance; taught to hate and not to care, and it is not a marvel that many a clean boy was dirtied for life. Nothing but God could save a life under those conditions, and back came plea after plea—more chaplains! More need for building up morale! And since the war our country has gone crazy morally—an epidemic of racketeering; of shooting; of self-indulgence, until we have the sad, awful spectacle of the building up of morale of the last fifty years, broken, and the dirty saloons coming back—all an aftermath of the undermining influence of the war.

War always gives false ideas of honor. . . . Military show always parades false ideals of heroism. "There will be two classes of people after this war," pompously said a youth as he donned an officer's uniform, "those in the war and those not in the war." He thought he was somebody because he put on a uniform. New clothes never make a man great, not even a military uniform. Let us admit the thrill it gives us to see a well-trained army. Let us admit that people are more or less impressed by show, and the show of gold braid and a flashing sword. It still remains that it is not much more than silly child's play.

The bravery of a soldier on a battlefield, as many will tell you, is a sort of insanity in comparison with the steady courage of the missionary in the face of danger, or of the reformer in some great cause.

And war is such a useless thing. There isn't a single war of history, but might have been avoided, if people had not been such childish fools. Not one! War never settled anything. The World War was proclaimed grandly to be a final fight for world peace. And do we have it? A little patience and a little sense and we might have settled the whole matter of American rights without the Revolution; but a pig-headed king on the English throne blocked the way against the good judgment of the best Englishmen of his day. Common sense to know that the sea was big enough for all the vessels of all the nations would have obviated the need for the War of 1812. A common obedience to the teaching of so small a book as Philemon would have cleared up the whole matter of slavery without having the Civil War. Quietly putting the former Kaiser in an asylum for feeble-minded, along with a few of his advisers, would have paved the way for world peace, more than the great, horrible war has ever done.

War is futile! War is awful! War is immoral! War is vain and silly! The only war that is of value is war against sin and evil, and herein lies opportunity enough for heroism that is real, for courage that never brings sorrow.

To a Nine-inch Gun

Whether your shell hits the target or not,
Your cost is five hundred dollars a shot.
You think of noise and flame and power,
We feed you a hundred barrels of flour
Each time you roar. Your flame is fed
With twenty thousand loaves of bread.
Silence! A million hungry men
Seek bread to fill their mouths again.

What Others Say About War

Great Britain lost 900,000 killed and over 2,000,000 wounded, or about one in twenty of her population killed or wounded. France lost 1,360,000 killed and over 4,000,000 wounded. Practically all of the men in France between the ages of nineteen and fifty were called to the colors. Out of every six, one was killed, and three of the remaining five were wounded.

If you were to stand at the Arc de Triomphe—perhaps in a dream—and see the army of the French dead pass, four abreast, at double quick, four men every second, you would stand there for five days and five nights while four men each second, that army of the dead went by. Think of it! You would stand there another five days and five nights while, more slowly, the army of the permanently maimed, the crippled, and the blind, went by. I do not know how long it would take for the widows and orphans of the war to pass. There are 630,000 war widows and orphaned children in France today.—J. F. B. Mitchell.

It is not possible for the human mind to comprehend the significance of ten million men and boys killed in the war. All of us have stood in line for hours as we watched some huge procession. A parade of ten million soldiers, marching from daylight to dark, ten abreast, with each line only two seconds behind another, would require forty-six days to pass a given point.

As ghastly as these figures appear, they do not tell the whole story. Of the 5,983,600 men listed as "prisoners or missing," a considerable percentage were undoubtedly killed in action. It was officially estimated in England that 60 percent of the missing were probably dead. The estimate in Canada was 56 percent, and in France 40 percent. If, therefore, half those listed as "prisoners or missing" be presumed to be dead, the total death toll is increased by 2,991,800.—Kirby Page.

We have seen them walking footsore, burden-bearing, falling by the wayside. We know of babies born on the way, and the mothers carrying newborn babies for miles. We have seen refugees packed by main force into stifling freight cars and slowly hauled, with many long interruptions, somewhere into the interior, hungry, filthy, weary, depressed. This happened to 1,250,000 people in Belgium, to 2,000,000 in France, to 500,000 people in Italy, to 300,000 in Greece, 300,000 in Serbia, to 2,000,000 Armenians (except that they walked out into the desert and most of them to death), to 400,000 in East Prussia, to huge but unknown numbers in Roumania, Russia, and Austria —all told to some 10,000,000 people.—Doctor Folks.

One of the most serious costs of the war is found in its biological aspects. The 13,000,000 dead soldiers included an extraordinarily high percentage of the best manhood of the nations. The weaklings and degenerates were rejected. The

Are We Heeding the Prince of Peace?

By L. B. M.

HOW WONDERFUL it would be if on this the eve of another Armistice Day, the world would pause to hear again the clarion prophecy of Isaiah, foretelling the coming of our Savior! Would that every man, woman and child might hear and believe that promise! Would that every Latter Day Saint might be stirred by it to sense his responsibility! Listen: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." (Isaiah 9: 6, 7.)

Some call him Jesus the Master of all. To others he is the Great Teacher. Still others like to speak of him as the Great Physician, or the Savior of the World, the Son of God, the Messiah. But particularly at this time of the year when another Armistice ("A temporary suspension of hostilities by agreement."—Webster) Day is close, I like to think of Jesus as the PRINCE OF PEACE.

RECALL with me the words of the angel to the shepherds tending their flocks on the hillsides of Judæa: "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Was this not a message of peace and assurance? And then the angelic host of heaven burst upon them singing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

"Good tidings," "great joy," "all people," "glory to God," "peace," "good will toward men." Those are some of the most beautiful words in the English language. Contrast with them these: "Gun fire," "shot and shell," "horror," "agony," "suffering," "hellish din," "blood," "grim," "mud," and "death."

THE WORLD TODAY must go far to find peace. There are battlements in China freshly stained with human blood. There are struggle, strife and confusion in a dozen countries and states. Fear spreads her wings of gloom over many nations. Everywhere are economic unrest, uncertainty, suffering, idleness, revolution. A winter of want stares us, the whole so-called civilized earth, in the face. Is it not time indeed that we turned to Jesus, the Prince of Peace, the One who came to live among men that we might have the life more abundant? Should we not turn from lesser things and heed him?

How often we have crucified him by our ignorance, our indifference, our mockery, our bigotry! Men have scoffed loudly at the words of Jesus: "Have peace one with another." "It can't be done," they say, "so long as men are men!"

"Have peace one with another." Yes, the Master of men uttered those words. And yet we dare to listen to them, and then raise our hands in prayerful petition: "Oh, Lord, thou Prince of Peace, be on our side in this fight!" We squabble among ourselves, with our families, with our neighbors, in our branches. We ignore modern revelation which says: "Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit." (Read Doctrine and Covenants 117: 13.) And yet we bemoan the fact that the Spirit does not seem to be with us—and we wonder why!

THERE IS A PLACE which I associate closely with the quality of peace. It is a beautiful spot on the Calcasieu River in southern Louisiana. Let us stand on the bank of this river at evening when the pale golden sun is dropping behind the high trees of the western swamp. Like a deep mirror spreads the wide, smooth river at our feet, without a ripple, without a stir on the surface of the waters. In the distance a water bird slowly flaps its way homeward. Lilies and mosses and the heavy breath of the swamp fill the air with sensuous odors. Still. Peaceful. Breathing calm, beauty, assurance. PEACE. Such a scene reminds me of the words of Isaiah to Israel: "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! Then had thy peace been as a river." (48: 18.)

Peace is more than talk. It is something we must live. It should start in our homes as Latter Day Saints and citizens of our country. It is well at this Armistice time that we think seriously of our great need for peace, and that we sing the Sunday school song:

"Heavenly sunlight is flooding my soul,
Jesus my Savior has perfect control;
Heavenly sunlight is flooding my soul,
And Jesus has full control."

Is that sunlight the sunlight of peace? and does Jesus have full control of our lives? Do we have peace of soul? peace with our family? our neighbors? our church? our nation? What do we, you and I, know of peace?

Jesus said: "Have peace one with another."

NEWS BRIEFS

Portland Ministry Into New Territory

In the past year Portland district ministry, according to a report to their recent conference, have given new impetus to outlying branches and missions and carried the gospel into new territory. District officers have visited Tillamook, Silverton, Sherwood, Hood River, Bend, and Condon, Oregon; Vancouver, Camas, and Longview, Washington, and other points. They have called men to the priesthood, helped to inspire efficient local leadership, and kept before the people the immediate church objectives and Zionic ideals.

Hymns in Tahitian Language

About seventy hymns in Zion's Praises have been translated into the Tahitian language by missionaries who have labored in the islands. The native Saints love to sing their hymns of Zion.

Wabash Visit a Busy Time for A. C. Barmore

"I do not remember being busier at any time during the whole course of my ministry," says Elder A. C. Barmore of his recent visit to Wabash, Indiana. He attended and took part in twenty meetings. He began services Monday, October 2, preached thirteen sermons, held one baptismal service and one confirmation and two blessings services. He baptized eight whom he confirmed, blessed seven children, held communion service, and attended Sunday school. While there he lectured for forty-five minutes to the local high school on "Australia," eliciting much interest.

"I am convinced that Wabash is in a fair way to come forward in our work," states Brother Barmore; "there should be a branch there. Forty-one members now live in that city."

Long Trip to See Isolated Few

While on a visit to Parsons, Kansas, a short time ago, Elder Amos T. Higdon, president of Spring River District, in company with Norman Gray, of Parsons, took a six-hundred-mile automobile trip to visit isolated members of the church in that region.

Picture Gallery At Branch Anniversary

One hundred and forty pictures of former and present pastors and members of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Branch, exhibited on the walls of the church, helped to recall memories of pioneer and early church days there at the anniversary and home-coming service, October 22. The branch was celebrating its seventy-second anniversary and the sixty-eighth anniversary of the organization of its Sunday school.

Graceland's Priesthood In Lamoni Service

"Preparation for the Ministry of the Church," was the theme of the last Graceland home-coming service on Sunday evening at the Coliseum. Four Graceland students were speakers, and fourteen young men of the college, all holding the priesthood, took their places on the platform and conducted the service. They represented the following States and countries—California, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Alabama, Maine, Washington, Nebraska, British Columbia, and Australia.

Feminine Entertainment Ideas

They don't forget the food. Never. They know that guests are happy when they eat. In many branches the women are busy promoting activities not only designed to entertain and cheer the membership, but also to make new friends for the church. Here are what a few are doing:

In North Manchester, England, the women had a potato pie supper following a lantern lecture.

At Hibbard, Indiana, their last "family" supper was attended by two hundred. This function was planned to bring about better understanding between Saints and their neighbors.

Beloit, Wisconsin, women experimented and found that a plate supper with a brief program at the church, is approved by everyone.

Parsons, Kansas, Branch took to the out-of-doors for a wiener roast the other night. Their idea was to enlist the interest of nonmembers. Over fifty were there as guests.

First Chicago Church will have a New England dinner, November 10, at their annual home-coming.

Independence, Missouri, women banqueted a crowd of more than five hundred, celebrating the completion of a year's sacrifice drive.

The Law We Are Teaching

By L. F. P. Curry
Of the Presiding Bishopric

WHEN, from November 12 to December 3, we engage in a church-wide project of teaching the temporal law, it will be especially worth while to study the background of the law which has been restored to us, that to which the law applies, and the purpose served by keeping the law. Such a study, incidentally, may be helpful in making clear the divinity of the Latter Day work.

The dramatic revelation of the law, including that governing temporal concerns, was made against a background centuries old. Through Moses on Sinai the law relating to basic elements in human conduct was given to the children of Israel (Exodus 20). Christ reiterated this aspect of the law, his statement being found in Matthew 19. These elements were restated because of their enduring value to the individual and the race. It is therefore of extreme significance that in 1830 before the law applying to temporal things was given, these eternally basic principles (section 42:7), upon which a cohesive society depends, were again put first. With such a background existing, the "first principles" of Hebrews 6 lead naturally into all those parts of the law required to enable mankind to grow towards perfection. Thus, Moses almost fifteen hundred years before Christ, Christ himself in the meridian of time, and the Martyr eighteen hundred and thirty years after Christ, constitute a spiritual sequence whose significance is seen as the underlying nature of their teachings is comprehended.

Life and the Law

The keeping of the law . . . . calls for cooperative individualism in the administration of all those material and spiritual things to which the law applies.

Life is the use of houses and lands, the making, sale and consumption of goods, the education of our minds, the development and application of our abilities—all these and more. The law throws round us a set of guiding principles by which our lives may be made free from poverty, immorality, injustice, lack of opportunity. There are no fetters save those which prevent willful persons from injuring others whose aims are towards peace.—Bishop Curry.

THIS IS A BACKGROUND of eternal principles. There is another background formed by persons. When the church in the year 1830 A. D., was commanded to "go to the Ohio" (section 38:7), where the Lord would reveal the law, no one knew how the stage had been set for this action. In one respect, at least, the preparation for the revealment to come had been started before Joseph Smith, junior, received his first vision in 1815. This refers particularly to the spiritual changes which were taking place in Sidney Rigdon, then a Baptist minister, which culminated in his conversion to the church at Mentor, Ohio, in 1830. In 1812, Rigdon was pastor of the First Baptist Church in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. A student of the Scriptures, eloquent, apparently popular, he became dissatisfied with the creed he was commissioned to uphold, and subsequently withdrew from membership. Without stopping to trace his intermediate steps, we find him, in the summer of 1830, pastor of a small, independent group of worshipers at Mentor, Ohio, who were seeking to follow the Bible completely. Open-minded, convinced that the churches of the day were preaching only part of the gospel, and were not organized in accordance with the Scriptures, Rigdon and his followers were prepared to receive the gospel, for they wanted the mind of God. Then, at Kirtland, three miles distant, in a country covered with oak and chestnut, maple and hemlock, and cut through by a beautiful stream, a people had been living who held "all things common." They, too, were seeking a better way than in their opinion was afforded them in the world. To such groups came the first missionaries of the Restoration; the one, open-minded towards the spiritual elements of the gospel, the other ready for a forward step in the matter of property and income.

Could there have been a more sympathetic atmosphere for the reception of the law which was to restore the gospel in its fullness, setting up an original approach to the holding and use of wealth, entirely new to that century which was already boiling with the ideas of an awakened world? The background of principle fused with the background of personality, to form a perfect scene for the dramatic unfoldment of the first act of a play that was to take for its presentation more than a century.

This unique background of the law enhances the importance of the application of the law to life. The force of this is readily seen when we notice the tendency to departmentalize life, put its various forms into compartments. It may be well enough to split life into segments for purposes of study, but we must remember that however arbitrarily divided, life still remains a unit. For no one can say accurately, Now I am a merchant, now a musician, now a traveler, and think that each activity denotes a different man. Notwithstanding the variety of one's daily experiences, they happen to the whole man, their effect is felt by the one person, who must accept responsibility for his acts. Therefore, the theory underlying the law, whether applying to the temporal or the spiritual, is that life is indivisible; that it is a manifestation of the eternal; that it is responsible; that its status may be improved; and that things put into its hands, whether talents or materials, are to insure "enough for all and to spare," and to develop mankind into acceptable sons of God.

If (and how many things in this troubled world depend upon a supposition), if the entire gospel law were really applied to life and in effect in western civilization, there would be, for example, no European question. France and Germany, England and Italy, Russia, America, and all the other nations would be at peace, each seeking his neighbor's good, rather than his own selfish purpose. But people, even very good people, find it most difficult to efface self-interest from the decisions of their daily life which affect others. Perhaps the explanation of this is that the instinct of self-preservation, from which spring so many human activities, to be socially helpful must be expressed in the light of another instinct, equally strong, which leads us to seek association with our brother. In other words, the keeping of the law, based upon the theory sketched above, calls for cooperative individualism in the administration of all those material and spiritual things to which the law applies.

LIFE is the use of houses and lands, the making, sale and consumption of goods, the education of our minds, the development and application of our abilities—all these and more. The law throws round us a set of guiding principles by which our lives may be made free from poverty, immorality, injustice, lack of opportunity. There are no fetters save those which prevent willful persons from injuring others whose aims are towards peace. Life, indeed, cannot be split into parts, and the law applies to the whole life.

Proceeding upon the assumption that human life is modifiable, we look inward and take note of our racial fears of physical danger, our feeling of economic insecurity, our longing for the realization of happiness. Perceiving in the gospel a social plan for the achievement of these things, we must beware lest in application the social exclude the divine, in that the human desire for improvement sometimes forgets that material progress often shuts out God. It is useful, therefore, to ask anew the purpose of the law.

It is difficult to answer this question without perhaps seeming other worldly, too elusively ideal and impractical. Yet, without arguing that point, may we not say, that the purpose of the law is to enable us to live at peace in a world all too willing to fight; to be decently human without being angelic; useful without being offensive; to build up the things that endure without being slaves to their material supports, knowing that ideas are eternal, but material things decay; to have clean, serviceable government, cultural opportunities for personal improvement and social advancement; to move in an economic order that demands of everyone his best and distributes to everyone his full need; to develop a religious atmosphere broad, free, in touch with the living God; to embody the Christian life in a failing world, cheerfully, fairly, courageously, unafraid.

Turning from the background to the application of the law, fully alive to the purpose the law would accomplish, and thinking again of our present need, may we once more invite all to keep the law, for if everyone will keep the law there will be no deficit.

Fundamental Studies

People often write asking about material for teaching and study that will deal with the history, doctrine, and organization of the church, especially for those who want to begin at the beginning and get a background for further study.

For this purpose we wish to take this opportunity of recommending to these inquirers, and to all others who ought to be inquiring, a work that represents the combined efforts of several of the best writers in the church. The Angel's Message tracts serve a purpose that is served by no other publication.

Every person who is seriously interested in the church can profit by owning these tracts. They are especially helpful for young people who want to be able to tell the story of the church to others. If one could have nothing else besides the three standard books of the church, his first choice of material should be these tracts. They are concise, and they give all of the essential information.

Worship in the Junior Church

III.—Prayer and Its Use

By Harley A. Morris

PRAYER, one has said, is the heart of worship. But not all prayer is worship, nor is worship necessarily prayer as we most commonly think of it. Yet because prayer is both a natural and familiar form of worship, we should carefully foster it in the junior church.

Hypothetically let us suppose that our program has proceeded in a manner to instill into one group the spirit of worship, and the time has arrived for the opening prayer. How shall we present ourselves for this feature? Shall we stand, remain seated with bowed heads, or kneel? Or having thus carefully built up the mental attitude, does it really matter? I presented this question in a simpler form to a group of juniors at one time, and the answer was unanimous—kneel. Afterwards I saw that it could scarcely have been otherwise.

From the time a child first learns to lisp a tiny prayer, he does so at his mother's knee. Later, at the family altar, he kneels with the rest. The stories he hears of praying are those of Daniel kneeling toward Jerusalem, Jesus kneeling in Gethsemane, and others. True, he may hear of the Pharisee standing in the market place, but he hears, too, that something about this prayer did not ring true, and his mind may as likely pick on this as any other feature to explain it. So, from earliest usages, the child thinks of prayer in terms of kneeling.

But there are other reasons, too, that influence the selection. We stand to sing, to read, to speak, for any of a dozen purposes. We sit to listen to the sermon, to rest. Indeed, sitting is, habitually, the very attitude of rest and relaxation. But when one kneels to pray, there comes a conscious break from whatever has been engaged in. The change is distinct from all else. Though there be diverse reasons why one stands or sits, one kneels to pray.

And there is yet another reason. Children, I may say boys, especially, have an inordinate curiosity that impels them to be looking around lest something go on in their vicinity and they miss it. Standing or sitting postures, if they do not positively invite such inattention, certainly do nothing to militate against it. Kneeling does. One does not so readily see the covert playfulness of Johnnie, two seats in the rear, if one is kneeling toward the altar. These suggestions are not mere theory. In actual experience they have demonstrated their applications.

Perhaps one of the reasons kneeling is not more frequently used with juniors is the desire to avoid confusion. This is a problem if children are not instructed properly in the art of kneeling, if one may use the term, or if seats are such that any slight movement causes them to creak. The latter objection needs reference to the deacon, but the former may be handled easily and effectively by the leader. The common practice of turning entirely around in the narrow space between the seats is confusing, unnecessary, and discourteous to the leader, if not actually disrespectful to the altar of God. A simple demonstration to the children of the ease of slipping forward off the seat, dropping to one knee, while the hands find support on the back of the seat ahead, will solve the problem of confusion, especially if a few words of commendation are given when the act is performed with unusual quietness.

It need scarcely be mentioned that this or, indeed, any position may become wearisome through a long and rambling prayer. If there be any place in any service for such a prayer, we do not know it; but assuredly it has no place in the junior program. Children are by nature direct and to the point. Their own prayers are naturally short and conspicuously bare of large and high-sounding words. Let the junior leader learn the beauty of simplicity in his prayer and the spirit of it will more readily awaken a response in the congregation.

Religion should act in us as a chemical analysis of the soul, to see that it is kept as pure and serene as possible. The method of the analysis varies according to race or country.

"Except the Lord Build the House"

An Armistice Day Radio Talk

By Evan A. Fry

I HAVE SELECTED as a text this morning the first verse of the 127th Psalm: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

Today we are to celebrate the anniversary of the day which saw the cessation of the actual hostilities of the most universal and most disastrous martial catastrophe that the world has as yet known. This day, in the year 1919, the war to end war was brought to a close; yet today statesmen and politicians tell us that there are more armed men in Europe than there were in 1914. A recent report stated that five million men were trained and under arms in one country alone. Nations eye each other with wariness and suspicion, and keep increasing their armaments to try to keep pace with their suspected neighbors. Germany is in the throes of an internal disturbance that threatens to break out again at almost any moment in a more or less serious disturbance that might embroil other nations. Russia is still in the midst of a great and boldly startling economic and political experiment. China is embroiled in a destructive civil war which is wreaking havoc on the peace and prosperity of her own citizens and of those foreigners who have lived within her borders and exploited her riches for so many years unmolested. South America erupts periodically with another revolution. India is keeping England on a bed of nettles, where she squirms about and tries to think up what to do next. All over the world are problems of economic stress and unemployment, with a few rich capitalists getting richer while the poor man gets poorer and has the flame of his hatred of the capitalist fanned by suffering and injustice.

It begins to seem that the war to end war was a farce; and I say this with every respect for the memory of those who gave their lives and their youth that America might finish the task she had so gloriously and so conscientiously begun. In 1918 we thought that war was ended for all time; but now some few optimists still cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, while the pessimist looks the world over without finding a place where man is really living in peace and harmony and brotherly love with his neighbor. Even in some of the most civilized portions of America, no man who has more than ten cents in his pocket is safe on the streets without an armored car and an escort of machine guns and sawed-off shotguns. Is this the peace for which the very flower of our nation's manhood gave wealth and health and youth and life itself?

I wish I had time this morning to read nearly all of the sixth chapter of Jeremiah. If you have some spare time on this holiday morning, I wish that you would get out your Bible, blow the dust off the top of it, and read it, and see whether you think some of the things that ailed the people of Jeremiah's time may not also be responsible for some of the lack of peace among the people of the world today. Let me quote just a verse or two from this chapter:

> "From the least of them even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely. . . . Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush; therefore they shall fall among them that fall; at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." (Verses 13-16.)

FROM one end of the world to the other the force of this condemnation should be felt. Selfishness—covetousness—these are the sins that are destroying nations and individuals today just as they were in the time of Jeremiah. Man mechanically mouths over meaningless words about the brotherhood of man, but economically and racially and politically he is always just on the verge of war with his brother. He waits only for an excuse to fly at that brother's throat to wrest from him the thing which has aroused that cupidity and avarice which seem to be inborn and ineradicable in every man. All over the world today men are crying out in despair against the economic systems which allow men to starve to death or at least to go cold and hungry in the midst of plenty, while a favored few heap dollar upon dollar and lustfully cry for more. The warnings of Bible prophecy fall upon deaf ears; the lesson of the French Revolution has been forgotten, and the lesson of modern Russia has not yet been learned by the rest of the world.

I think we are safe in saying that if the nations of the world were living in all respects as God has so often commanded, we should not need to hear continual rumors of (Continued on page 1437)

At the Turn of the Yellow Light

"HI, THERE, you ol' angel!" and Nancy in a new crimson frock, gave Larry a breath-taking hug. "Why—it's the whole family, isn't it?"

Doc's blue Chrysler had just pulled up in front of Walker Hall where Nancy and John were waiting to welcome their week-end guests. Larry and Carmen would spend the night with Nancy at Walker Hall while Mrs. Hampton had accepted an invitation to room with friends downtown. John had made arrangements for Doc and Greg.

"It's simply too gorgeous for words to have you girls here for even so short a time as tonight and tomorrow!" gushed Nancy. "I never dreamed of such good luck! I've simply pleaded with Larry to come up all winter. And now, in honor of the occasion, I broke a regular Saturday night date, so that we could talk like old times."

WALKER HALL was lovely, Larry decided, and she enjoyed the decorous dinner service. The girls were friendly. She found the beauty and luxury of the mammoth reception room inviting, but not half so pleasing as Nancy's own room.

Nancy shared with Eleanor Hart, from Michigan, one of the dormitory's "corner" rooms, and she had arranged everything for the night. Carmen was to sleep with Eleanor, "Because you know, my dear," the hostess explained, "you'll be ready to go to sleep hours before I shall be ready to quit talking, whereas Larry, being used to me, will manage to keep at least one eye open!"

The night began with two hours of lounging and brisk conversation. Carmen told of young people's activities at the Stone Church, the work of the young people's council, the recent play contest, and Nancy chattered about Graceland until Larry almost felt that she, too, was a Gracelander.

"And now," Nancy began after they had put out the lights, "you've told me so many things that I feel as if I'd had an actual visit home, but you haven't said one word about Rowe. Whose his latest now? Tell me—I'm interested, and don't dare spare my feelings—does she have red, purple, or golden hair?" Her laugh was light.

"I don't see Rowe very often," Larry returned.

"Do you Carmen?"

"No—"

"All well and good then. That means that he's running true to form," Nancy's tone was teasing, but Larry understood that tone; "he's into some mischief, and getting himself talked about, I'll bet. We'll have to get to the bottom of this. How often does he come to church, Larry?"

"Oh, I see him nearly every time I'm there."

"But if you're up to your old habits, you don't go often yourself."

"Yes, I do. I go nearly every Sunday morning."

"Tsk, tsk! my dear, Sunday night is the crucial hour for a popular young fellow. What do you and Greg do on Sunday nights now that I'm not there to hector you?"

"Sometimes we go to church, but more often we go riding," was Larry's deliberate reply; "at other times we have dinner out and then—sh, sh, once not long ago we went to a show!"

"My stars, what are the youth of Zion coming to!" ejaculated Nancy in mock astonishment. "And in all your wanderings you don't stumble into Rowe?"

LARRY shook her head.

"And you, Carmen—this is an inquisition—what do you do on Sunday nights now that your beloved is away?"

"I'm pretty busy usually. You see I'm vice president of the W. H. Y. Class that meets at six o'clock in the evening, and I go fairly regularly. Sometimes I stay for church, but other times I drop in to see one of the girls, or a shut-in; a sick person gets so lonely on Sunday evening I've found. Occasionally I have some handcraft work to prepare for club or for my Sunday school class. And the rest of the time I—"

"What rest of the time?" gasped Nancy. "My dear, you're too sweet and thoughtful for words! Be careful or you'll die—the good die young you know! Honestly, Carmen, I admire your type, I'd like to be like you, but I'm just not built that way!"

"Why, is conduct on Sunday evening an index to one's goodness?" laughingly returned the other. "Somehow I always thought it a matter of choosing to suit your taste." She did not intend her remark as a rebuke, but the undertone in it caused Larry's face to burn.

SOME TIME LATER when gentle, even breathing from the other bed told them Carmen was asleep, and before Eleanor came in from her date, Larry rolled over: "Nancy, don't you worry about Rowe," she admonished. "I don't think he's up to anything unusual. When he comes to church, he generally sits alone."

"Oh, I'm not worrying about him," the answer was equally hushed, "not exactly. I'm not any more worried over him than I am over Nancy Bart. Don't you know, dearest, that I don't dare start worrying?"

"You're not playing on anyone's feelings here at school, Nancy?" How nice it was to be able to talk to this gay, restless girl straight out of your heart! Larry felt that no matter what happened, what changes might come into their lives, she would always love Nancy Bart.

"No, I'm not. I remember that lecture you read me before I came away to school. You certainly missed your calling, my dear, in not planning to be a philosophizing school-teacher! At least I'm trying not to play on anyone's feelings. There's a little fellow here from the South whom I've been dating. I haven't told him much about Rowe, and —well, I guess he does like me a little."

"All of which means that he's head over heels in love with you. Oh, Nancy, how can you? Don't you know this game of playing with hearts never pays? It's bound to hurt somebody!"

"Rather sure of that, aren't you, Miss Victorian?" drawled Nancy.

"Yes, I am."

"Why, what makes you speak like that? Has something happened to my child since Nancy was home at Christmas? Come—tell me about it." And two hands seized Larry by the shoulder.

SLEEP was the least of these girls' plans and intentions. During the dark hours, they talked in whispers, telling all the little things that had hap-

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household, and who are destined in strange ways to influence Larry's life.

Carmen Blaine, fiancee of John Hampton, makes an unexpected call on Larry, catching her in tears. This breaks down the wall of reserve between them, and Larry learns that there is another viewpoint on the matter of priesthood.

Parents and Religious Education

By Fern Weedmark

THE CHRISTIAN HOME is the first school of religious education that influences the life of the child. The parents are the first teachers. What is your home doing for your child? The home is a place of shelter, protection, and comfort. And, too, the home is a place wherein people live; sharing and growing together in happy comradeship. The home is a place wherein gentleness, thoughtfulness, honesty, consideration and good manners are practiced by the parents in relation to all members of the family, relatives, friends and associates. We are talking now about the Christian home.

What kind of regard should be manifested by one member for another in the home? What should be the attitude of parents toward children?

There are homes where precept and example conflict. Parents talk about and profess to believe one way and act the opposite. Our children learn more by what they see us do than by what we tell them. Mr. Vieth, in his book, Teaching for Christian Living, says: "Example is so powerful that if it is good, nothing else is necessary." Too often we destroy our own influence for good by violating the rules we set up for our children. Do our children drink coffee? Of course not! Coffee is not good for children. We tell them so. They hear the same thing at school and Sunday school. What then, makes it good for mother and dad? And why is it that mother and dad get along well and remain away from Sunday school and also from church when they are "tired or busy"? They wish the children to go, and send them. And why is it, I wonder, that some parents insist upon the children getting their rest, and yet they can play bridge until the wee hours of the morning. We instruct our children in regular habits such as proper food at proper hours: but what of the example set by adult members of the family? Waffle parties after church; midafternoon teas; heavy refreshments at social gatherings and numerous other unnecessary indulgences. Are parents always consistent?

Are parents always honest? With ourselves and with our children? Do we keep our word as faithfully with our children as we do with our friends? And are we careful about making promises? Do we answer childish questions honestly and sincerely? It does take a great deal of our time. What happens to the child when he hears mother fib just a wee bit about his age on the train? Or when dad jokes about saving a dollar at someone else's expense? Or, perhaps playing "not at home" to agents or collectors?

Are we teaching our children to be courteous? We are if we are courteous to them. We are teaching reverence in our homes when we are reverent. Parents' attitudes toward the church, the priesthood, and all holy things, exercise a large influence on the child's attitudes. Do we worry and fret about everything under the sun and at the same time attempt to teach our children about "God's care"? What do we talk about in our homes? It might be well for us to use as a family motto, "Philippians 4: 8," using the word "talk" in place of "think" in the last phrase.

Are we thinking about the part music and literature play in our children's lives? Better yet than thinking, what are we doing about it? Do we have a place in our time schedule for worship together? Do parents and children play together these days? Just what are we parents doing, not for our children, but with our children? A real home is one in which there is sufficient time for home ideals to be practiced. Real parents are those who are guides and living examples in Christian living. The spirit of the home influences every member of the family. The way the child acts away from home, his views, manners, and prejudices, reflects the home spirit. Mr. Vieth says, quoting from the above mentioned book, "if they misbehave, we owe them an apology. It is likely they are imitating our past performance."

Parents have a right to expect guidance from the church as to effective ways of interpreting religion to their children. The church in turn has a right to expect the cooperation of the home in its work of building character that is Christian. After all, the church has the child for such a short time on Sunday. Can we afford to allow the movies to have him twice as long the day before? We read in the Psalms "children are an heritage of the Lord." However, our responsibility cannot be transferred to the church. The church and the home must go hand in hand.

Good, Christian homes do not just happen. Someone makes them what they are. I wonder, is there a place in "religious education" for "parent education"?

Heard at the O. T. Z. Rally of Far West Stake

By the Rambling Reporter

THE QUARTERLY RALLY of Far West Stake's O. T. Z. ("Onward to Zion") organization of young people was held October 28 and 29, at Cameron, Missouri, and the theme of the gathering was, "What of 1943?" Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, was guest speaker over the week-end. Here are brief excerpts from speeches and testimonies by the young people themselves.

"The next ten years, I hope, will bring the awakening of our faith, the establishment of our works as young people of the church."

"We can expect of the church in the next ten years what we are able to put into it. The church can advance no faster than we advance. Our goals for that period of time should be (1) To pay off the church debt; (2) To evangelize the world, and (3) to Zionize the church."

"To a waiting world Zion's inhabitants must make increasingly effective the fact that the Word has been made flesh."

"One of the goals we should set for ourselves to reach in the next decade is to see that we are fully converted to the gospel of Christ."

"We cannot consider too seriously our obligations individually and collectively to the church. Every young person should make an effort to prepare for service. Desire to prepare alone will not suffice. We must prepare."

"Are we ready to answer the call? Do we realize that many of us will find our place of service in small group endeavors, doing small but important services?"

"I want to use all my life for the church, to eliminate from my thoughts and actions all that will take from the service I can give."

"By working together we go forward."

"I wish to pledge my life to Christ this morning, I realize that the church is a big thing in my life."

"I want to go forward and do all I can for the church even though that 'all' may be small."

"I want to let righteousness rule in my life."

"I am very thankful that I am a Latter Day Saint."

"I want to shed the light of godliness about me, so that all who come in contact with me will be aware of the love of Christ."

"I realize that my foundation which was builded in the church and at Graceland means more to me than anything else in life because when I come in contact with worldly things, I am able to say 'No.' My foundation has been firmly laid."

The Hidden Thing

Two thousand years before Christ, some Egyptian priests who had been paid large sums to embalm the body of a royal princess, put into her splendid mummy-case the body of a common Egyptian, dipped in asphaltum. They laughed over it, I suppose, saying it would make no difference, for it would never be known. But after forty centuries had passed, the case was opened by Gliddon and Agassiz in the Tremont Temple in Boston before a large audience, and the cheat was detected. It may have added a pang to the sufferings of the faithful Roman sentinel who stood at his post before the gate of Pompeii till he was gradually buried in the burning ashes, that no one would ever hear of his fidelity. After fifteen hundred years the city was excavated; and the skeleton of the soldier, in his rusty corselet, was found.

Every hidden thing comes to light at last.—James Freeman Clark.

"Enduring Convictions"

I am more convinced than ever before in my life that this is the Church of God and that it is the instrument divinely appointed to work out the salvation of mankind. Nevertheless, as I read of the New Testament church and compare with it our church today, I find in all too many places and for all too long periods of time some of the characteristics of the Church of Jesus Christ lacking in us. This is our problem, yours and mine. . . .

What is the basic reason that our church is living under par today? Why is it that all too frequently the power which ought to characterize the message of the ministry of the gospel of Christ is lacking?

In my thinking I have been led to consider one or two things. One is that our faith and witness of our Christian enterprise is altogether too individual. I feel that the body of Christ is weak even though some members are strong.

If you will read carefully the New Testament and with equal carefulness the Book of Mormon, if you will study the genesis and coming forth of the Restoration, you will find that the purpose in the mind of God is that the church shall be a fellowship of workers knit together by common love, understanding, and purpose. Always in the Scriptures it is made clear that discipleship is fellowship and that the gifts and blessings of God are given to those who enjoy this fellowship.

As I read the record I find that this healing power, this unquestioned energy of spiritual grace present in the early church, brought the gifts of God to the church, not so specifically to individual members of the church.

One of the convictions which ought to endure among us is that these gifts shall be given us of God when we as a people shall rise in spiritual power and together make possible the benediction of divine grace which God seeks to pour out upon us.

Members of the body not knit together in such fellowship as ought to be characteristic of the body of Christ are the reason for our not enjoying many of the spiritual gifts and blessings. In this body of Christ the "together-ness" ought to be more marked than it is. We should be more concerned with respect to the physical, mental and spiritual well-being of each other. All ought to be conscious of a great reserve of spiritual power on which the ministry can draw.

We as members should be saturated with the conviction of power and blessings of the gospel of Christ, and should raise ourselves together to draw from the storehouse of blessings available to us. . . . When the whole body—ministry and laity—is bound together in a fellowship that will not be denied, when this whole body comes before God in the spirit of true understanding and sharing, then God will bless the ministry with a full portion of his Spirit and power. . . .

I believe with all my heart that this is the church of God. I believe that there are days of spiritual power and new understanding awaiting the body of Christ, but these great days are for the whole body. President Smith, the Council, the Bishopric, the Twelve, the seventies and pastors cannot bring this about by themselves, but when all are drawn together in the bonds of deep and genuine concern, then healing, wisdom, knowledge, power, and the abiding energies and graces of Christ will come to his church.

The Life of H. N. Hansen

The first missionary to go to Denmark from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Compiled from his own writings and other sources.

By Poul S. Nielsen

BOTH Brother Hansen and his wife left again for America on the sixth of March, 1913, in order to get home for General Conference. At this conference he was again appointed to take charge of the Scandinavian mission although he had hoped that the work would go to someone else, and permit him to spend some of his declining years with loved ones at home. But true to the instinct of a genuine missionary, he did not murmur but got ready to leave in September. For a few days before the time of leaving on this trip he was very ill and many of his friends sought to discourage his attempts to leave until he should recover, but he was determined to go and before the journey was ended he was well again.

This time his wife also went with him to Copenhagen where Brother Hansen thought he would try a new way to reach the people. He advertised in the newspapers a subject for his meeting and invited everybody who wanted to talk to come forward and speak on this subject. But no one could speak the second time before everybody who wanted to speak first had a chance. The subject advertised for the first night was: "True Christianity." This meeting was a great success and it was agreed to have for a subject the next night: "Is Baptism by Water Necessary to Gain Eternal Life?" Brother Hansen opened the meeting with a few suitable remarks after which pandemonium broke loose, for there were several Lutheran preachers in the congregation and also a few from other denominations and they answered the question in a personal way and asked him questions, but he soon found out that if an answer did not suit their fancy they had no use for it. The meeting got almost beyond control of the chairman, several leaving the hall before it was closed. But order was restored when two came on the platform and demanded order.

AS THERE WERE SEVERAL members of our faith in Germany, he decided to travel to that country and visit those scattered Saints. He left Copenhagen the seventeenth of February, arriving in Berlin, the capital of Germany, the same evening. The next day he traveled to Wittenberg, so well known in history as the town of Martin Luther and Philip Melanchthon, where the Reformation had its beginning. Here he was bid welcome by Brother Alexander Kippe. They had never seen each other before but the bond of church fellowship was enough to make them feel like friends towards each other. In company with Brother Kippe he visited the Saints in different parts of Germany where he had his first experience in preaching with an interpreter. Five were baptized while he was there by Brother Kippe. Brother Hansen had the privilege of ordaining two brethren to the priesthood. Things like that help a missionary away from loved ones to perform his task when he sees that the work he is giving his life to further goes on.

This summer started what is known in history as the World War. It seemed to our brother that this was the most terrible thing that he had ever had to experience to see nations who professed to be followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene arm themselves and try to destroy each other. While on a second trip to Germany during this mission he had the horrors of war brought forcibly home to his loving heart. He was this time in Hamburg, that great seaport of Germany where he met with Brother Kippe, our only missionary to that country at that time. It was a great wonder to him to have so many come to the meeting to hear his preaching that was translated to them by Brother Kippe, for in his native land where all could understand him the interest for the Lord's cause was at a very low ebb, few caring to come and listen. He records in one of his letters that when he visited the Sunday school at Hanover there were thirty-four children and eleven grown-ups at the meeting. Many of these children came from homes where their parents were not members of the church.

Brother Hansen had to procure a passport from the American legation in order to make this trip, as all foreigners who did not have one would be made prisoners of war. He tells us that of a total membership in Germany of about one hundred, fourteen were called to the colors. After this trip to Germany he went on a trip to Norway and Sweden to look after the work in those countries and upon his return from this trip he received the sad news that his old friend, President Joseph Smith, was dead. It was a hard message for him to receive for he had loved him very much. He and his wife, who was always lonely in this foreign country, left for America in March of 1915, where they stayed, building themselves a home in Underwood a short distance from Weston, Iowa, there to spend their declining years in local work. But Brother Hansen was not idle, for we know that he did much preaching in the neighborhood also being elected president of the Underwood branch. From then on he continued to be in touch with the work in Scandinavia by writing very many articles on different subjects for publication in Sandhedens Banner (The Banner of Truth) a paper he himself helped to get started in the early 'eighties.

HE HAD many sermons on many subjects printed in this paper, and we cannot help thinking that this mission in his native land was uppermost in his mind at all times, and that he tried his best to keep the work going in that corner of the Lord's vineyard. Many other articles did he write in defence of the church he loved, especially against polygamy of which he had seen such evil effects while in Utah as a boy and as a missionary. This was, as before mentioned, in the time of the war, and his heart could not understand that mankind could be so cruel and do such bad things as were blamed on the different parties to this terrible conflict. The political feeling ran rather high in those days and to the surprise of all, himself not excepted, he was nominated for the office of mayor of Underwood. Many of the electors got rather upset at this for they thought that he who was a preacher might cause them very severe inconviences if elected. But he was elected as all who were for law and order—in other words the good element of the town—saw to that. He proved to be so well liked that when the time came for the election he was nominated and elected again. While serving this time he was called from this life.

Brother Hansen was sick for some time before he passed away, February 3, 1922, and while on his sickbed he was administered to by his fellow workers, and on the last afternoon he was strengthened by a visit of Brother Joshua Carlisle, another one of our old time defenders of our faith. Almost his last words were: "I do not regret anything I have done for the church. I only regret that I did not do more." After this he prayed to the Lord that if it was his will he was willing to go but if he could be spared yet a little while it would be all right with him to tarry. After this he passed away peacefully. At the funeral that was held from the Underwood church, Patriarch Frederick A. Smith preached the sermon, assisted by Brother Joshua Carlisle and Peter Muceus, two friends who were dear to him. Brother Muceus had worked with him in his mission in Scandinavia. Brother Hansen served the church as teacher, priest, elder and seventy, but above all as a true missionary, always willing to give the best that he had that the cause of the church might be brought onward, to do what he could to help in the salvation of his fellow man.

Although his life was not full of spectacular happenings, he was like his Master in Galilee—a man who spoke the language of the common people. He lived for them and worked for them to his last day and by that kind of people he was beloved. His memory still lives in the hearts of those across the sea with whom he came in contact and not less in the hearts of us who live on this side of the Atlantic ocean, who became acquainted with him and worked with him.

pened, exchanging ideas, groping into the future, hoping—always hoping.

It was beginning to grow light in the east when Nancy rose on her elbow and regarded her friend in sleep-eyed solemnity: "You're a peculiar girl, Larry Verne. There aren't many of your tribe left. You're so everlastingly conscientious that—that, well I don't know whatever will become of you!"

"Is it peculiar to be considerate of a man's feelings? Oh, Nancy, I wish you could tell me what to do: Shall I keep on going with Greg and plan to marry him and live in uncertainty about his status in the church? If I marry him feeling the way I do about the priesthood and he were called, I am afraid I should learn to hate him."

"Don't be silly. Don't consider the other things—just think how much you love him, and your heart will tell you what to do," returned the hostess with serenity.

"You know that won't work!" hotly declared Larry. "It won't work for you and it won't work for me. That's not the way out, Nancy! That little piece of advice of yours is typical of your happy-days-are-here-again - and - always attitude, my dear, and I do wish you'd snap out of it. Why do you want people to think you are the most light-minded, frivolous, hard-hearted creature in the world?"

For a long moment Nancy did not reply. When she did her answer was a bare whisper: "You know why, Larry."

"Yes, I think I do."

Larry was thinking of that long-night conversation on the way home Sunday evening. She was tired and sleepy, and the others laughed at her.

"You ought to be sleepy," Carmen teasingly reprimanded her; and then to the others, "I do believe she and Nancy stayed awake and talked all night!"

"Did you?" from Greg.

"You'll have to make alowances for Larry and Nancy," remarked Mrs. Hampton. "They used to be together so much before Nancy came away to school that they had to make up for lost time."

"What were you talking about?" softly queried Greg, giving the girl at his side a look which seemed to turn her heart around; "Can't you tell me?"

She leaned heavily against his arm and smiled: "You wouldn't be interested," she fibbed. She was thinking of the afternoon service, of John's ordination, the light in his face, the expression about his mouth, his steady gaze. How proud his mother had been! How proud his sweetheart!

Never had the girl felt more humble and reverent than when the stake president, Brother Cranford, had delivered the charge to the candidates for ordination—there were three of them—and then to the standing congregation. She had wished that they would sing "Holy, Holy, Holy." That was the way she had felt.

And then when the service was over Mrs. Hampton had clung to her son's arm, listening gratefully to the words of Brother Cranford: "John is one of our outstanding boys—we count on him, Sister Hampton. He has a good influence with those of his own age, and a good set of ideas, too. I expect to see him rise in the work of the church."

"By rising, does he mean he'll be a missionary someday?" Larry had demanded of herself.

Not until then had she realized what good background Joe Dockerly made. He had not uttered half a dozen words in the Coliseum, but all of them had been conscious of his sustaining presence. Now as the people came forward to shake hands with John and the two other candidates, Doc stood behind Eldred Hampton and her son as if he were a sheltering shadow. Larry dropped back beside him after she had shaken John's hand. But Greg gripped the hand of his newly-ordained friend, and huskily declared: "It's great, old fellow! I'm glad for you. I'll be boosting you."

And now as they were on their way back to home and routine, she was leaning against Greg and wondering how long he would feel that way about John's call. Would he always? Did she want him to think of it as sacred, holy? Would the happenings of this day be of any significance in the future.

strongest, the keenest, and the most upright lost their lives in appalling numbers. It is too soon to measure the cost of this sacrifice of the best young life of the world.

Let us now gather together in a comprehensive summary the outstanding human costs of the war: 10,000,000 known dead soldiers; 3,000,000 presumed dead soldiers; 13,000,000 dead civilians; 20,000,000 wounded; 3,000,000 prisoners; 9,000,000 war orphans; 5,000,000 war widows; 10,000,000 refugees.

The whole world was shocked and stunned when the Lusitania went down with the loss of a thousand lives. To equal the twenty-six millions dead in war, it would be necessary to sink a Lusitania every day for seventy years, or one every week beginning nearly a century before the discovery of America by Columbus and continuing to the present hour. Or to express it in another way, the average loss of life was 16,585 for each of the 1,567 days the war lasted. This is equivalent to blotting out every breath of life in a city the size of Ithaca, Marshalltown or Billings each day of the war; or destroying every human life in a city like Berkeley, Macon, or Atlantic City every three days during the war.

We can enter into the sorrow of one widow and visualize the loss of one orphan, but millions of widows and orphans are beyond our powers of comprehension. We can suffer with one injured friend, but our sympathies are too narrow to include millions of suffering men. We can measure the human cost of war to one family, but our minds are too feeble to grasp its meaning for the whole of mankind. "The harm done to the white races by the war," says Doctor Folks," is unprecedented, many-sided, deep-seated, incapable of exact measurement, but t r u l y terrifying."—Kirby Page.

What will you do to prevent war?

Honesty

There is an old saying that "honesty pays, in the long run." Honesty pays in a short run, or even in a five minutes' walk, for that matter! To be honest and fair, shouldering your own mistakes will give you flavor and savor with older folk who are keen judges of human nature. What employer of labor would look favorably upon the young fellow who asserted loudly that he never made mistakes? Should the keen-eyed boss speak his mind he would probably say, "We want workers here, not liars."—G. W. T., in "Our Measure of Praise or of Blame," The Challenge.

The Beauty of Following Christ

I love to read of the blessings God gives to his people. My family and I have been wonderfully blessed in times of sickness and trouble. I feel sure that if it had not been for the mercy and kindness of a loving Father, we would not be here today.

It is nice to feel that we are on the way to recovery when under the care of a doctor, but when God heals us, it is quite a different experience. When we are raised up from beds of sickness by the power of the Father, the peace and joy which come to us cannot be described. We are reminded of the Scripture: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11: 13.)

I marvel when I think of the Christ. He, being the Son of man, understands our human qualities, and being also the Son of God, he is in constant touch with heavenly things. He has told us that there is only one way for us to obtain the gifts and blessings which the Father has for us—by doing the will of the Father. To this purpose and cause must we give our atention, consecrate our time.

The testimonies and experiences of the Saints of bygone days should fire us with zeal and undying love for the work whereunto we are called. The same Lord that blessed them will bless us so long as we keep his laws.

My experience in the latter-day work assures me of its truthfulness. Thirty years of my life have been spent in the Reorganized Church. In all that time I have never once heard anything taught or upheld but the pure doctrine of Christ, the gospel as God intended man should teach it. I believe it is the only plan whereby man can hope to reach celestial glory which is the greatest reward the Father and Son can give the faithful. I know that this gospel is the plan whereby God will reinstate man, but man must do his part and his part is to keep the laws and commandments God has given him.

If we do the things required of us, we receive wonderful blessings in this life and celestial glory after death. The Lord requires the heart and a willing mind. It is not hard to understand why he requires these, for they express just what we are. My prayers are for the advancement of God's kingdom on earth.

Success to the Herald!

It is my pleasure to tell you of my knowledge of the Herald. My parents joined the church in 1873. My father at once subscribed for the Herald, and continued to take it until his death in 1896. After that the subscription passed to me. I have continued it ever since though my older brother, Charles, and other members of the family have also taken it.

In addition to this I have had access to bound volumes of the Herald since the first year of its publication; I have read it from its beginning. I have done much research work in church history and biography, and so passed back and forth through all the volumes. At the same time I read and reread the doctrinal articles.

If We Keep His Commandments . . .

I was baptized into the church on my eighth birthday twenty-three years ago this month. During the last ten years I have neglected attending church and did not take much interest until about a year ago. My wife was ill and when she was blessed through administration, and united with the church, I was made fully aware of the rut in which I had been living.

I am afraid a large number of Saints are not aware of the rut of indifference in which they are traveling. But let me assure you that it is as the Lord stated in prophecy to the Saints at the Stewartsville reunion; his hands are overflowing with blessings for us if we will observe his law.

This is a wonderful promise. Ahead of us we have the "Keep the Law" period. If we are obedient to the call of the church, and school ourselves in the law of God, we can expect the blessings he said he would give us. In Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3 we read: "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings (speaking of the Word of Wisdom) . . . shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

These are wonderful promises, but until we show him that we are willing to do our part, can we expect the blessings?

In these trying times it is a comfort to turn to Him who knows our every need for guidance when the world demonstrates that it is not safe to rely upon the arm of flesh.

Brother Birch Whiting's testimony in the Herald a few weeks ago, gave me added faith that the church will not fail, but shall indeed establish Zion, and the time draws shorter with each setting sun.

May God bless each Saint that he or she may be humble and prayerful, and may wisdom and understanding be given the church leaders.

The Testimony of Daily Living

I realize that one of the greatest testimonies we can give is the testimony of a daily life of earnest obedience and righteousness.

We teach the gospel by the way we live. I have been particularly impressed by this truth by the needs of those who are engaged in junior church work. How the little ones are depending on us for good examples! The things we present to them may be the means of their carrying this work to many in future years. One of the children in our junior church does not belong to the church, but she is taking home everything we teach, and her parents say that there is much difference in the child. They also say: "There is something different in your church because our children never before brought home the teachings as they do now."

Not only must we teach for the children's sakes, but sometimes for the parents also. I have heard of instances where little children caused their parents to obey the gospel. How true is the Scripture, "A little child shall lead them."

Thankful for Clearer Understanding of the Scriptures

I am thankful for the gospel and for the great love which God has for his people. I am thankful for the three standard books of the church, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Inspired Version of the Bible. I had set for a goal for the year to read and study these three books, and this goal I hope to reach about December 15.

Never had I understood the full value of the Inspired Version of the Bible until I compared it with the King James Version, studying both. Also in reading the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants I have received a clearer vision of the mind and will of God to provide for his Saints.

I am thankful for my patriarchial blessing which has been a great comfort to me in the past year for I have been called upon to go through much sorrow and trial. But God has been mindful of these times and has told me what to expect.

I desire to move out in the great work of God and do those things which he requires at my hand. I wish to serve him to the best of my ability.

I am thankful for the clearer understanding which is mine of our Scriptures. The Book of Mormon, which is a record of God's dealings with the people of the western hemisphere, particularly appeals to me. Its truth the world cannot deny or defeat. Those who are unwilling to accept the book at its true worth, are robbing themselves of much good and help. The Bible, as we all know, is a record of God's dealings with the people of the eastern hemisphere. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is a record of God's dealings with his people in this dispensation of time.

It is my desire to warn my neighbor as I have been warned and to do good among my fellow men. God has blessed me many times, and I wish to be more worthy of these blessings, an instrument in his hands. To this end I ask your prayers, that I may be faithful and true, always able to make the most of the opportunities that come to me, and bring those who are honest in heart to a full knowledge of the great love of God for his children.

God Answers Our Prayers

God hears and answers our prayers if we go to him in faith and humility. He will guide us and lead us in times of trial if we put our trust in him.

I have had many experiences which proved conclusively to me that the Lord was helping and blessing me and my family. Several years ago we were isolated, and an elder came to our town. He told me that if I could get the use of the schoolhouse he would preach to us. Being new there, I was not acquainted with any of the schoolboard members, but I prayed over the matter, asking God to open up the way for our services. And then one day I chanced to meet one of the board members and we began talking of school matters. This was my opportunity, I asked him for the use of the schoolhouse for preaching services. He readily granted permission.

Some time after that we moved to the country. No elders were near, and I prayed the Lord to send some there. In the summer I heard that an elder was in town holding meetings and so the children and I went to hear him. He was a stranger to me, but in prayer meeting he assured me that my prayers had been heard and that laborers had been sent into the field. Later more elders came to that town and organized a branch.

The Lord has blessed me in many ways, more than I feel worthy to receive. My prayers are for God's people the world over.

Bible Texts for the "Keep the Law" Period

The following texts are recommended for general reading, also as suggested sermon material for ministers who are occupying the pulpits during these days of preparation for the "Keep the Law" movement now under way.

"Give ear, O my people, to my law: incline your ears to the words of my mouth."—Psalm 78: 1.

"The law of the Lord is perfect."—Psalm 19: 7.

"The law is light."—Proverbs 6: 23.

"Keep my commandments, and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye."—Proverbs 7: 2.

"Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law."—Isaiah 51: 7.

"He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination."—Proverbs 28: 9.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he medidate day and night."—Psalm 1: 1, 2.

"Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."—Romans 2: 13.

"I delight in the law of God."—Romans 7: 22.

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 25.

The Church Challenges

The work of God is forward. The greatest sermons of the Christian religion are still to be preached. The greatest hymns remain unwritten. The greatest executive work remains undone. The future is full of promise and possibilities. Zion and the warning of the world are still to be accomplished. The church offers the greatest challenge ever offered mankind. Here is the place for one seeking life.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Syncope

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

SYNCOPE is another name for fainting and every one should know what to do in this emergency. I have been surprised that there are so many people who know so little about reviving a person who has fainted. In this condition the heart has failed to send the normal amount of blood to the brain. The brain is peculiary susceptible to anything that interferes with the circulation of the blood in it. When a person faints the brain is deprived of the proper amount of blood producing an anemic condition resulting in unconsciousness. If you see a person who is likely to faint remember it is a lack of blood in the brain and the first thing to do is to have him lie down or what is better to sit down and bend him forward until his head is below his knees. By doing this you may prevent him from fainting or, if he has fainted, restore him to consciousness.

If the patient has not lost consciousness while you hold his head in a lowered position instruct him to try to bring his head up you resisting his effort and this exertion will bring more blood to the brain. If the patient has lost consciousness and lowering the head below the knees does not bring relief then the next thing to do is to place him on his back with his head lower than his feet and if it is possible for the victim to swallow give him a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia diluted with eight or ten tablespoonfuls of water. If he is unable to swallow place a few drops on a piece of cotton and hold it beneath the nose. Another first thing to do is to loosen the clothing around the neck and chest or any constricting bands of wearing apparel that might interfere with the efforts of the abdominal muscles to restore the respiratory act.

Friends sometimes are the victim's worst enemy by becoming excited and crowding around the patient in such a manner as to shut out the much needed air and interfere with the treatment. Stimulating applications to the skin in severe cases is very beneficial. Bathing the face with cold water, slapping of the hands and face and the application of cold compresses to the head are likewise beneficial. Many serious injuries has been observed by all practicing physicians. The fainting spell usually attacks the victim so suddenly that he is unable to protect himself from a possibly severe or fatal injury. If there is any weakness of the heart it is still more serious. Some people are more susceptible to pain than others and some may faint because of breathing bad air, excessive heat or disgusting odors. Nervous excitement, pain, overfatigue, hunger or shock are frequently contributing causes. Those subject to fainting spells should have a thorough physical examination. All persons should know what to do in such emergencies until the arrival of the physician.

Two Paths to One Goal

Though much has been written foolishly about the antagonism of science and religion, there is indeed no such antagonism. What all world religions declare by inspiration and insight, history as it grows clearer and science as its range extends display, as a reasonable and demonstrable fact, that men form one universal brotherhood, that they spring from one common origin. . . . The psychologist can now stand beside the preacher and assure us that there is no reasoned peace of heart, no balance and no safety in the soul, until a man in losing his life has found it, and has schooled and disciplined his interests and will beyond greeds, rivalries, fears, instincts, and narrow affections. The history of our race and personal religious experience run so closely parallel as to seem to a modern observer almost the same thing; both tell of a being at first scattered and blind and utterly confused, feeling its way slowly to the serenity and salvation of an ordered and coherent purpose. That, in the simplest, is the outline of history; whether one have a religious purpose or disavow a religious purpose altogether, the lines of the outline remain the same.—H. G. Wells; The Outline of History.

Real Worth

When you think of a man you seldom think
Of the knowledge he has of books,
You seldom think of the clothes he wears,
His habits, or faults, or looks.
You seldom think of the car he drives,
Nor the bonds his gold has bought;
When you think of a man you mostly think
Of some kindness he has wrought.

You judge him not by the blocks of stock,
Nor his power of name or pen,
You judge a man by the place he's made
In the hearts of his fellow men.
You judge him more by the fight he's made
By the way he has faced the strife,
And not the amount of the bank account
He's managed to get in life.
You think of the friend he's been to man,
The good that he has done,
And you judge the sort of a man he is
By friends that he has won.

QUESTION TIME

What is the difference between tithing, surplus, offerings, and consecrations?

In its practical application the tithe is a tenth of one's possessions held in ownership, so-called. If one possessed a thousand bushels of wheat on which he had borrowed $300, the amount borrowed would be deducted from the price of the wheat in order to determine the value of what was actually owned. Hence one's net worth is the amount on which the tithe should be paid. From year to year he should then pay a tenth of his increase on the property thus tithed.

Surplus has been defined by the Joint Council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Order of Bishops as follows:

"Surplus is that part of a man's possessions, whether moneys or properties, of which he has no present or immediate need; the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business, and his dependents." —Action of September 25, 1925.

It will be apparent from this definition that one may have a surplus at some time after his tithing has been paid, if he should find himself in possession of more than he needs for his own use and that of his dependents.

An offering consists of a voluntary contribution, either to some specific use or to the church generally, out of one's possessions on which tithing has been paid. In this sense the tithe is not considered as an offering, but is a payment of that which is owed to the Lord. The offering, then, must come out of tithed possessions. However, if one has no increase in any particular year, he may make an offering out of the possessions previously acquired —on which of course his tithing had been paid.

The term consecration applies to that which is consecrated, that is, set apart to the Lord or his work. Therefore it may be in the nature of an offering, or it may be surplus or tithing, as the case may be. If it is set apart and devoted to the Lord and his work, it may properly be called a consecration. It may be a general or a special consecration, according to its intended purpose.

Does Doctrine and Covenants 76:4 teach that the sons of perdition will not be resurrected?

The paragraph referred to deals with the subject of redemption, and shows that the sons of perdition will not be redeemed, though "all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead." This evidently refers to the fact that they will not be included among those who shall be thus brought forth and redeemed "in the due time of the Lord." However, this could hardly be taken to contradict the plain statement of Jesus that:

"All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of dammation."—John 5: 28, 29.

Paul also declares that "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." The same teaching is found in the Book of Mormon (pages 106-108), which clearly states that the resurrection shall be brought to pass "upon all men." Thus, while the sons of perdition will not be again redeemed (having once received the grace of Christ and spurned it), yet they must be resurrected and be brought to the great judgment bar of God.

How many stakes are there now, and where are they?

Aside from the center place, or Zion, which had been designated as a stake in a revelation given in 1901 (Section 125: 10), there are now organized the stakes known as Lamoni Stake, Far West Stake, Kansas City Stake, and Holden Stake. Headquarters of these stakes are respectively at Lamoni, Iowa; Saint Joseph, Missouri; Kansas City, Missouri; and Holden, Missouri. Each stake embraces certain territory surrounding its headquarters in which branches or local congregations exist, but these local congregations form a part of the stake organization, and do not function as separate units independent of the stake itself, though each holds its local meetings much the same as branches in the various districts, but under the supervision of stake officials and regulations.

Parsons, Kansas

All-day Meetings Bring Members Together

Parsons Saints enjoyed a visit from District President Amos T. Higdon recently. During his stay here, he visited some of the families in their homes, and he and Brother Norman Gray made a motor trip of about six hundred miles, visiting isolated members in this part of the district.

On Wednesday evening the Saints met at the home of Pastor Henry Ford, and a good prayer service was held. The night before Brother Higdon's departure, the Saints met at Forest Park, where they enjoyed a watermelon feed.

Officers elected September 10, for the coming year took their respective places October 1. Those elected were Pastor, Henry Ford; church school director, Glenn Bruch; publicity agent, Arthur Laymon; branch treasurer, Norman Gray; secretary, Glenn Bruch; chorister, Norman Gray. Brother Harry Burrows is the new midweek teacher, and was appointed to serve as church school secretary. The teaching staff also has been appointed.

The women's department held election of officers at its last meeting. Mrs. Fern Miller is the president; Mrs. Arthur Laymon, vice president, and Mrs. Eva Burch, secretary-treasurer.

On September 17, the members attended the all-day meeting of the young people of the district at Independence, Kansas. The various activities of the day were enjoyed. The play presented by the Independence group was inspiring and very well presented.

Some of the Saints attended the all-day meeting at Cherryvale, October 1. There were four baptisms, the results of the work of the Saints who meet at Cherryvale in the Sunday school from time to time. One candidate was an adult, Glen Trout, and the others were children, Delma and Freddy Honeywell, and a little boy whose last name is Hart. These were led into the water by Brother Glenn Bruch, of Parsons, and confirmed under the hands of Elders Charley Anderson, of Independence; Norman W. Gray and Daniel Gray, of Parsons, and Brother Pender, of Coffeyville.

Sacrament service came after the confirmation and the following towns were represented, Independence, Liberty, Coffeyville, Toronto, Parsons, and Cherryvale.

On the evening of October 6, the branch had a wiener roast on the creek north of town. The evening was spent in games and general good time. The purpose of this event was to interest nonmembers in the church, and over fifty were in attendance and guests of the branch.

1114 Clay Street

September 17, was the occasion of a visit from District President Dave Little and Apostle R. S. Budd, for the morning services. This was Brother Little's first visit since recovering from his operation. At the eleven o'clock hour, Brother G. G. Cadwell, who has been in charge of the branch for some time, presented his resignation as pastor, and Charles Fry was chosen presiding officer. A vote of thanks was tendered Brother Cadwell for his services in the branch. He will still assist in the priesthood when he is present. Brother Fry was transferred to the district some time ago, and is now located in Topeka. He will be able to give time to the interests of the work. Several plans have already been made and will be carried out during the winter months.

Sunday evening the young people and adult classes will be combined, at which time topics of a practical and doctrinal value will be discussed.

Other branch officers for the year are: Church school director, F. O. Kelley; supervisor of young people, O. E. Weedmark; children's supervisor, Mildred Goodfellow; custodian of funds, F. O. Kelley; chorister, Anna Alfrey; secretary, Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger.

A number of Saints from this branch were privileged to attend the Harvest Festival, at Independence, as well as to make their offering.

A good spirit prevailed at the sacrament served in charge of Pastor Fry. Experiences of the pastor added much to the interest and encouragement of those present.

Elder G. G. Cadwell occupied the stand, October 15, at the eleven o'clock hour.

Prayer meetings are taking on deeper spiritual aspect and are increasing in quality as well as attendance.

Mobile, Alabama

Feel the Missionary Spirit

Saints of Mobile Branch recently had occasion to rejoice as a result of a visit from Apostle James A. Gillen. A series of six sermons was preached, presenting the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and giving counsel, advice, and warning to the members. The Spirit of God was felt to a marked degree during the meetings. Attendance was good, and many nonmembers were present each night. At the following Wednesday evening prayer service, the Saints were blessed and the Spirit was made manifest.

The following new members are welcomed to Mobile Branch: Edna Cochran and Raymond Booker, of Missouri, and James Cooper, of Florida.

Brother Raymond Booker has been chosen assistant church school director and leader of the young people. The young people's class meetings, held each Tuesday evening, are well attended. A program is furnished at each meeting.

The women's department meets each Thursday, and of late they have been busy making several quilts, which have been sold, the proceeds helping out with branch finances.

A teachers' training class is held each Monday evening, and special interest is shown.

October 22, the topic for the eleven o'clock service was "Procrastination," and at the evening service, "Waiting for the Precious Fruits." These subjects were ably presented by the pastor, Amos Berve, leading up to the study of the "Financial Law," which was the subject for the eleven o'clock service, Sunday, October 29.

Mission work at Bayou La Batre, in charge of Elder Oscar Tillman, is progressing rapidly. Sunday school and preaching services are held regularly each week.

Mission work has also been established at Orchard, fourteen miles north of Mobile, where a group of about fifteen Saints live and are unable to attend services in Mobile. This work is in charge of Elder Henry Hough.

Pastor Berve recently spent two weeks at Bayou La Batre, where he went for a much needed rest, being on the verge of a nervous breakdown from overwork. He left Mobile, October 23, for Escatawpa, Mississippi, to hold a week's series of meetings. He returned October 29, to be present at the meeting of the financial solicitors, making final preparations for the campaign designated as "Keep the Law" period.

Mildred Booker was recently elected supervisor of the junior department of the church. The juniors have an enrollment of sixty-three members, and are taught in eight classes. They gave a fruit shower to Aubrey Scarcliff, October 29, at his home where he has been ill for some time. A junior choir has been organized, and furnished special music for the eleven o'clock service, October 7.

Portland District Conference

Encouraged by Spirit of Unity and Achievement

A spirit of unity characterized the Portland district conference, held at Portland church, October 20, 21, 22. Especially was this so at the annual election of district officers on Sunday afternoon, Apostle M. A. McConley occupying the chair. The following officers were elected: Elder J. L. Verhei, district president; Elders A. Livingston, A. V. Nelson and Mark Yeoman, associates; Elder Livingston, director of religious education; Elder Yeoman, business manager; Miss Matie Young, secretary; Lila Livingston, musical director; Fred Hawes, auditor; and Leslie Hunt, publicity agent, this being an appointive office. Every office save that of business manager and musical director was filled by a unanimous vote, and a new office created—district supervisor of junior church, Sister Effie Verhei being elected to the position.

Excellent reports of district work were turned in by the presidency and Missionary Harold I. Velt. In the past year new impetus has been given to outlying branches and missions and the work has been carried into new territory. District officers have visited Tillamook, Silverton, Sherwood, Hood River, Bend, and Condon in Oregon, and Vancouver, Camas and Longview in Washington, and other points. They have called men to the priesthood, and helped to inspire efficient local leadership, always keeping before the people our immediate church objectives and the Zionic ideal.

The numbers arranged by the music department, under the direction of Sister Lila Livingston, assisted by Fay Buchanan, branch director, contributed largely to the success of the conference. The program Friday evening was arranged entirely by this department and included many beautiful selections. Singers were in costume and the stage was decorated in an autumn motif, making the evening a high point of the conference. A Japanese pantomime by Matie Young and Rose Kinney opened the program; Fay Buchanan rendered the aria, "One Fine Day," from "Madame Butterfly"; The "Gypsy Sweetheart," song by Mrs. Simpson, was made colorful by a gay costume and fine interpretation; Freda Young, always a favorite, gave two solos; quartet numbers, "Mighty Like a Rose," and "Kentucky Babe," were sung off stage while a Negro mammy with a bundle in her arms occupied the stage center in an old rocking chair; two Indian songs were sung by Lila Livingston, dressed in the picturesque costume of an Indian maid. There were also a skit by Roland Barker and Lloyd Verhei and a choir number.

The music department furnished special numbers throughout the conference and a beautiful worship program Sunday evening. Soloists were Freda Young, Mrs. Simpson, and Fay Buchanan, sopranos; Lila Livingston, alto; Lloyd Appleman, tenor; and Perry Hunt, organist.

At the district young people's meeting Sunday evening, Floyd Soneson was elected president, Clifford Bryson, vice president (Both these young men have been ordained to the Aaronic priesthood.) and Leslie Hunt, secretary-treasurer. The young people are being stimulated to put more zeal into their work and make their organizations a credit to their respective branches.

The following men were ordained to the priesthood at a special service Sunday afternoon: George Webberly, of Vancouver, priest, and Frank Keiser, of the same town, deacon; Clark Livingston, a Portland priest, who has been in charge of the Sherwood mission, Elder; and Clifford Bryson, of Portland, priest. The conference also voted for a recommendation from the district presidency to provide for Walter Danser, of Myrtle Point, to be ordained to the office of elder, subject to the approval of his home branch.

Conference at South Addison, Maine

Ministry Address Members From Two Districts

What proved to be a very successful conference took place at South Addison, Maine, October 21 and 22. It opened Saturday evening with a business meeting, and continued its services throughout Sunday. Approximately thirty-five people represented Western Maine District along with their district president and a goodly number from Eastern Maine.

Helpful talks were given by Elders E. F. Robertson and Newman Wilson, Pastor Jones and Brother Henry Eaton, of Stonington, and by Brother Rogers, of Jonesport, the oldest member of the priesthood in Eastern Maine. Outstanding in the evening talks was the point, what a blessing to the church the organization of Zion Builders has been.

Sunday's services began with a nine o'clock prayer meeting conducted by Brother Jones, formerly of Scranton, Pennsylvania. Many beautiful testimonies were given.

Sunday school convened at ten o'clock, the men meeting by themselves with Elders Wilson and Robertson in charge, and the women and children with various members of the priesthood presiding.

The morning preaching service was impressive, the sermon being delivered by Brother E. F. Robertson.

In the afternoon Elder N. M. Wilson preached an inspiring sermon on present-day difficulties as signs of the times.

The congregation was instructed on making decisions in a sermon by Brother E. F. Robertson in the evening.

Graceland's Young Priesthood in Service

Stress Ministerial Preparation

Fourteen young men of the student body of Graceland College took their places on the platform of the Coliseum for the evening service of College Day, October 22. Confidently and reverently these young men, each a member of the priesthood, conducted an inspiring service of music and short addresses which proved a fitting climax to the homecoming season.

The meeting opened with the group singing the familiar hymn, "With Thankful Hearts, We Come, O Lord." Ammon Roberson conducted the congregational singing, and Jack Sanford offered the opening prayer. "Preparation for the Ministry of the Church," was the theme of the service, and four short talks were given on the topics, "Sound Character," "Sociality," "Analytical Study," and "Spirituality."

Marion Cooper, the first speaker, emphasized the fact that sound moral character is the prime prerequisite for the young men who would serve the church. Without that priceless attribute the young man is disqualified from service. J. C. Stuart spoke on the type of sociality needed by the minister, for he must love people, and be not only willing, but able to work with them. Walter Johnson urged the necessity of analytical study by the ministry of the church, who must be willing to give not only their hearts, but also their heads to God in order that the church shall move toward its goal. Blaine Williams appropriately closed the series of talks with a short discussion on the subject of spirituality in the lives of young ministers. The minister cannot serve acceptably unless there is the quality of spiritual insight and steadfastness within him. "The young minister," he said, "should be quick to recognize the presence of the Spirit of God, and be ever desirous of developing that presence within his life."

In closing the service, Elder Roy Cheville introduced each of the young men on the platform telling his name, ministerial office, and home location. The following men were found in the semicircle: Ethan Godfrey, California; Jack Sanford, Illinois; Floyd Mengel, Missouri; Walter Johnson, Australia; Ammon Roberson, Illinois; Fisher Carlile, Iowa; Clarence Dreadin, Alabama; Ralph Merrill, Maine; Reed Emslee, Washington; Clifford Wood, British Columbia, Canada; Russell Ralston, California; Blaine Williams, Iowa; J. C. Stuart, California, and Marion Cooper, Nebraska. These men are enrolled in a wide variety of courses at Graceland, where their talents are being developed for more efficient service in the church, the future of which is brighter because of the potentialities resident within this consecrated group.

Oelwein, Iowa

Branch Has Recognized Community Standing

The Saints enjoyed the association, teaching and preaching of Patriarch A. Carmichael during July. District President E. R. Davis ably assisted Brother Carmichael during the three days of special services. Attendance at the classes was small, but the interest was good. Evening and Sunday services were attended considerably better. Saints from Cedar Rapids and Waterloo came on Sunday and enjoyed the services and picnic dinner and supper. A few received patriarchal blessings during Brother Carmichael's stay.

The Blue Bird girls enjoyed several hikes and wiener roasts during the summer. Brother and Sister George McFarlane took the young boys and girls on an overnight hike. The girls have passed the Blue Bird age and discussion is now being given the possibility of an Oriole group. A few of the girls already belong to the Camp Fire Girl organization.

Brother John Hodges, who has lived at the Old Folks' Home, is now here with his son. He is very feeble, but still attends church, walking many times a week the distance of several blocks. Still his spirit is young and his zeal in the work is strong.

The annual election of officers was held in September. Brother George McFarlane was sustained branch president. Brother Charles Shippy is again church school director. He will have as helpers in the various departments the following: Jessie Sims, leader of the adult division; Ruth Smith, young people's leader, and Ruby McFarlane, children's leader.

The Emma Burton Circle will work again this year under the direction of Sister Ruby McFarlane. Classwork is the main feature of each meeting. The course, "Food and the Body," has been completed and a short course on "Color —Its Combinations and Uses," is to be taken up next under the teaching of Sister Bonnie Shippy. The women are trying to learn things that can be applied in everyday life, things that will make them better mothers, wives, homemakers, yes better Latter Day Saints. As an interlude between the bigger courses, the women have been discussing the article, "The Stewardship of Women," by Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley, that appeared in an August issue of the Herald.

Oelwein Saints can happily say that they are recognized in the town as a group. They have been asked to take part in different public activities. Within the past six months the pastor has taken part in at least three important events. He assisted in the baccalaureate services of the high school commencement; participated in the dedication services of the new post office, and was the speaker at one of the nearby cemeteries on Memorial Day. Recently local Saints were selected on a committee of the Welfare League. These events show that a better spirit of fellowship prevails toward this church. The members pray that the barrier will be broken down completely, and feel that much depends on their standing as good Latter Day Saints.

Chicago, Illinois

First Church, 4416 Gladys Avenue

Saints of First Chicago Church have many plans and events ahead of them. They extend an invitation to all former members and friends of the congregation, to attend the annual home-coming and New England dinner to be held at the church November 10. In past years good food and entertainment combined with the companionship of Saints have made these gatherings successful, and they expect this year's event to be no exception to the rule.

November 12, Sunday, will be rally day for this group.

Instead of the regular Thanksgiving service they will have a Thanksgiving eve service at the church, November 29.

Waterloo, Iowa

Branch Enjoys Numerous Social Events

Elder E. R. Davis was a guest at Waterloo during the summer. July 8, he presented some helpful thoughts from the Youth Conference. On the night of the twelfth, he gave a clear and convincing talk on the divinity of the Book of Mormon and fulfilled prophecy.

July 25, the branch met in Cedar River Park for a picnic supper in honor of Sisters Emma Roosa, Emma Talley, Grace Wolff and Ivy Fisher, whose birthdays all occur within the same week.

July 23, the young people gave a party at R. C. McCormick's for Kemman Fisher.

Sunday, July 30, about fifty of the church people surprised Mr. and Mrs. R. C. McCormick, the event being their wedding anniversary.

A surprise party was held for Mr. and Mrs. Ritchie, of Cedar Heights. A set of dishes was presented to them.

Kleta Finley, of Newton, Iowa, who is attending State Teachers College at Cedar Falls, worshiped with this branch several times.

Daisy Black and Marie Barnett, Graceland girls who are teaching near Hampton, worshiped with Waterloo Saints, October 1.

Robert Allen made a short visit to his mother and wife's people, at Lamoni. While there he attended the union prayer meeting.

New Castle, Pennsylvania

Two Candidates Are Baptized

A baptismal ceremony took place at New Castle October 15, Elder W. G. McCune officiating. Brother McCune was assisted by Elder Lamont Ryhal in bringing two adult candidates into the church. The confirmation service was in charge of Elders Ryhal and McCune.

New Castle Branch is looking to the future with high hopes. With their group of spiritual young people, they believe they can realize all their ambitions for the church.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Have Concluded Successful Year

According to the various reports from the officers, Vancouver Branch has concluded another successful year. The financial report showed that the Saints are well aware of the local and general church needs, and have made many generous contributions.

At the business meeting, September 26, the following officers were elected: pastor, George E. Miller; counselors, James E. Johnston, and Isaac McMullin; secretary, Emily McMullin; treasurer, Edwin Spargo; church school superintendent, Norman Morrison; adult supervisor, John Gerrie; young people's supervisor, Nelson Henry; junior supervisor, Bertha Morrison; branch chorister, Percy Quance; organist, Hazel Stanbridge.

Services are still being held at the home of Sister Mary McConnel, Central Park. Brother A. C. Martin recently held a series of services there. As a result of these meetings, Sister Ruth Harrison was led into the waters of baptism, by George E. Miller.

M. H. Cook, veteran missionary, has been holding a series of services at the church, and his sermons have received good audience.

Brother A. A. Lind, who was baptized two years ago in Saskatoon, was in Vancouver recently.

The women's department gave a Thanksgiving dinner, October 9. A good dinner was served, and a program during the evening provided entertainment. For the Thanksgiving service, the ladies decorated the church with autumn leaves, sheaves of corn, fruit and vegetables, which will later be presented to needy families. The women will be led this year by Sister Gerrie. At their request, the branch has made several alterations in the church kitchen, so that meals can be served more easily.

After a season of work, planting, weeding, and caring for the grounds, the lawn around the church makes a splendid appearance.

Beloit, Wisconsin

236 South Lawrence Avenue

The annual business meeting was held October 8, Elder Henry Woodstock, of Madison, in charge. Officers elected for the coming year are: Branch president, Harry A. Wasson; church school director, Wilbur Johnson; secretary, Clara Barton; treasurer, Noah Johnson; librarian and publicity agent, Alma May Brookover; pianist, Shirley Johnson; janitor, James Ferris. Other officers are to be appointed by the branch president and church school director.

During the past year Beloit has been fortunate in having speakers from other branches nearly every Sunday. Among these are Henry Woodstock, Lee Root, Carl Wirth, and Floyd Griswold, of Madison; C. C. Hoague, of Evansville; E. W. Dutton and Cleo Heide, of Janesville.

Through the efforts of Brother Alman West, West Beloit Branch now has a new member in James Ferris.

The children of Sister Clara Barton, Lane and Birdie Lou, and two children of Sister Enolia Stone, Norbert and Rita Mae, have been blessed.

September 22, the women's department, under the leadership of Sister D. E. Martin, sponsored a plate supper at the church. A brief program was given. A large crowd attended and all reported a good time.

The women of Janesville Branch have been meeting with Beloit women during the summer months.

Shirley Johnson is in the hospital at present recovering from an appendicitis operation.

This branch was represented at the recent district conference at Madison by Brother Alman West.

North Manchester, England

Women Meet to Organize

The women of the branch met to organize September 28, and their service was presided over by the branch president, Elder F. Smith. During the evening a lantern lecture was given on "The Life of Christ," by Elder Smith. This was followed by a potato pie supper. Then Priest William Cooper, who is a ventriloquist, gave a few program numbers for the entertainment of all.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Branch Holds Anniversary and Home-coming Day

Recall Persons and Events of Historic Significance

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Branch held its seventy-second anniversary, commemorating the organization of the branch, and the sixty-eighth year of the organization of the Sunday school.

The branch was organized in a shoeshop belonging to Brother James Spratley, in Allegheny City, (now North Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania,) April 7, 1861. High Priest Jesse Price presided. Thirty-five members formed the charter organization. They chose Josiah Ells as their president. The Sunday school was formed in the same city on June 25, 1865.

For some years the Saints met in halls in Pittsburgh until a church building was erected on Miller Street, Pittsburgh, in 1901. This church was sold and another building was erected in the Beechview section of the city and dedicated in 1921, where services are now held, with Elder E. B. Hull as the pastor.

Many prominent men and women of the church received their first impressions and instructions in Pittsburgh Branch. These went from this branch proclaiming the gospel story to various parts of the world.

At the home-coming and anniversary celebration, held in the church on Sunday, October 22, the history of the branch was read; also reminiscences written by relatives and friends of the lives of Josiah Ells, the Hulmes family, Jacob Reese, D. L. Shinn; in addition, verbal accounts were given regarding the branch and its members by Gomer T. Griffiths, and A. K. Booher. Letters with similar information were received and read from C. Ed Miller, Anna M. Reese, M. H. Graeser, Hattie (McDowell) Bartlett, Mary E. George, Joseph B. Rogers and J. A. Jaques.

An entertainment was held during the Sunday school period in which each class of the school participated. The program included songs, readings, violin and piano solos.

An informal banquet was held, following the church services. At the close of the meal Frank L. Shinn, toastmaster, presented the following speakers: E. B. Hull, Gomer T. Griffiths, A. K. Booher, T. A. Dershimer and Anna Shinn. Toastmaster Shinn stated that five generations of the Shinn family have been identified with the religious life of Pittsburgh, beginning in 1822.

The church was gaily decorated with flags of various nations, and the members enjoyed themselves reminiscing among the one hundred and forty pictures of former and present pastors and members, which were on display around the walls of the church.

The celebration was truly delightful and throughout the program there was prevalent a true home-coming spirit among old and young. It was a day long to be remembered and cherished in the hearts of the members of the Pioneer Sunday school and Pittsburgh Branch.

Far West Stake

O. T. Z. Rally

Far West Stake O. T. Z.'s enjoyed another rally October 28 and 29 at Cameron, Missouri. The weather was favorable and a record attendance marked all services. Many drove long distances to be present on Saturday night. Nearly every group in the stake was represented.

The rally opened Saturday night with a local stake talent program. The theme of the rally, "What of 1943?" was worked out in the Saturday night program which consisted of four talks by young people, with musical numbers from the various branches. Wayne Simmons discussed the question "What Will Ten Years Mean to Me?" and Garland C. Snapp talked on "What Will Ten Years of My Life Mean to the Church?" Mona Armstrong answered the question, "What Can I Expect of the Church in Ten Years?" and Alma Hale asked "What Will WE Do in the Next Ten Years?"

Following this, a recreational program was offered with two short skits furnished by the Cameron young people and a reading, "An Airplane Romance," was given by Marybelle Bear. The Cameron Saints entertained the visitors overnight.

Sunday's activities started with a lecture by Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, at the church school hour. He treated the subject, "The Vision of 1943" in a forceful, challenging manner, giving definite places where the young people must occupy in the next ten years.

During a musical interlude directed by L. G. Ehlers, the adults went to a special service provided for them at which time Bishop Milo Burnett present a fine sermon. At this period a male quartet from Cameron gave two special numbers.

Then followed the one service of the rally that is strictly the young people's own service. The fellowship service has come to hold a high place in every young people's gathering in the stake and some wonderful services have been experienced. This one was no exception and during the service Elder Blair Jensen spoke in prophecy to the young people after which Elder Ward A. Hougas also spoke to the young people and then called seven young men to offices in the Aaronic priesthood. All are under thirty years of age and two under twenty. Kenneth Piepergerdes, Norman Hinderks and Emery Benjamin were called to the office of priest while Deyo Edwards, Quentin Marks, Kenneth Wood and Donald Hale were called to the office of deacon.

In the afternoon Elder Jensen gave another lecture on the subject "Unattained Goals." Preceding the lecture a double quartet from First Saint Joseph Church gave a short prelude including a musical reading by Gladys Christiansen.

A council composed of the various supervisors and presidents of the local groups met to elect officers for the coming year and to discuss plans. The next rally date was set for January 27 and 28, at Saint Joseph.

The closing service of the day was held at five o'clock in the form of an installation and ordination service. The officers for the coming year were installed with a few remarks by Leonard G. Ehlers, stake supervisor of activities. Kenneth Piepergerdes is the new president, Garland C. Snapp will act as vice president, and Helen R. Beadnall will serve as secretary-treasurer.

The ordination of five men to offices in the Aaronic priesthood was an effective close for an outstanding rally. Three of the men ordained were called at a previous convention. Elders Blair Jensen, Howard Timm, Frank Hinderks and Ward A. Hougas officiated in the ordinations of Herman Johnson and Ernest Sherman to the office of deacon; Will L. Butler to the office of teacher, and Garland C. Snapp and Wayne Simmons to the office of priest. Music was furnished for this vesper service by a double quartet from Stewartsville. Following the ordinations the congregation sang, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go" as a response. The rally was closed with "I Would Be True."

Guilford Branch

The eighteenth annual home-coming of Guilford Branch was held Sunday, October 15. Although weather conditions hindered a large number from attending, about one hundred and fifty enjoyed the services of the day. Evangelist U. W. Greene, of Independence, was the speaker at the morning and afternoon services. Preceding the afternoon sermon a guest hour was held at which Brother R. M. Jeffries, of Stewartsville, and Raymond and Harry Jensen, of Bedison, spoke of their associations with the Guilford Saints. Music was furnished for all services by the choir and girls' chorus. Because of the weather no service was held at night.

Preceding home-coming day Brother Greene held services Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights at the church. His timely counsel and advice gave the members a deeper appreciation of life and the gospel. Brother Greene gave fourteen patriarchal blessings while at Guilford. Miss Helen Beadnall, of Saint Joseph, was the stenographer.

At the monthly meeting of the O. T. Z. Class held Thursday night, October 12, the officers were elected for the coming year. Leola Torrance was elected president; Lavora Jobe, vice president and Bertha Mildred Nelson, secretary-treasurer.

Sisters Neva Ross and Emma Nelson attended an all-day meeting of the Saint Joseph women's department Thursday, October 26, at which time Sister C. C. Koehler, of Independence, and a corps of her workers met with the women.

Fine Spirit at Northern Wisconsin Conference

Early Work in Porcupine Valley

The Northern Wisconsin district conference convened October 7 and 8, with Frankford Branch, located in Porcupine Valley, ten miles from Durand. We had expected Apostle J. F. Garver to attend, but circumstances were such that he could not be there. So the district president, with local members of the ministry, decided to go on with the conference and make it as successful as possible. In this they sought the aid of the heavenly Father.

The writer had spent the previous week holding several meetings and visiting many homes of the Saints, and when the time of the conference arrived, was pleased to see a large attendance.

Saturday evening a fine program was given by those present, mostly by the young Saints of Porcupine. It was a clean, cheerful, helpful program.

Next morning at eleven o'clock the Saints spent an hour in short speeches, given by workers who were visiting the conference. These were much enjoyed. The other meetings, those of prayer, business, and preaching, were well attended and a fine spirit prevailed throughout the conference. Nearly all the district officers were reelected for the coming year.

At the close of the conference they were pleased to see the Saints starting their homeward journey, happy and encouraged to continue their labors in building up the church.

Nearly forty-five years ago Brother Herb Curtis, a young missionary, came to Porcupine Valley. He met considerable opposition but continued in his work. Since that visit many good people in the valley have obeyed the gospel. Brothers W. A. McDowell, Charles Burr. T. W. Chatburn, and other long-time missionaries have labored successfully there. Brother Manley Shedd and family are quietly assisting in the work there at present.

Some good meetings have been held in recent months at Sparta, Black River Falls and Chetek. At the first-named place we have no church building, but with the help of Brother and Sister Alva Jerome, in whose home meetings have been held for a number of years, a small Sunday school has been maintained and other services conducted. An interesting group of Saints is there, some traveling thirty miles to attend Sunday school.

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

Juniata, Michigan

Host to One-day Meetings

Saints of Juniata acted as hosts to a one-day meeting of Eastern Michigan, October 29. District President William Grice and his counselors, William H. Sheffer and Myron Carr, had charge of the day's events. Although the day broke dark and threatening, the worshipers knew the moment they entered the house of the Lord, that his Spirit was there in abundance.

Elder Grice opened the first service, one of testimony and prayer, at 9.30 a. m. Many told of experiences enjoyed years ago, and although old faces were missed from the group, the same Spirit was there in power. Tears of joy coursed down the cheeks of many as they listened to the prayers, songs, and testimonies. A gift of admonition and encouragement was also given. Those in charge thought it wise to extend the meeting to the noon hour so that all might occupy.

A bounteous potluck dinner was one of the contributions the women made to the success of the day.

The afternoon was divided into three forty-minute sermons given by Elders Carr, Grice, and Sheffer.

The Saints of Otter Lake came in a body and others were present from Saginaw and Shabbona, helping to swell the attendance to seventy.

Juniata Saints are encouraged to press on as a result of this gathering. They want to do all they can to assist the church.

Outstanding Conference for Chatham District

Many Attend—Spirit of Fellowship Is There

The conference of Chatham District, held at Windsor, October 7, and 8, was outstanding not only in the large number present but also in the spirit of fellowship and cooperation which was there.

For several months previous to the conference Windsor Saints had been planning and preparing for this occasion. Their chief objective in this preparation was to remodel the church kitchen. Several of the men worked night and day for a long while in order that everything might be in readiness.

Conference began with a prayer meeting at nine o'clock on Saturday, followed by a short busines session, both services being well attended. At the main business meeting, held during the afternoon, the following officers were sustained for the coming year: District president, Elder D. J. Williams; his counselors, Elders S. E. Mifflin and R. T. Brown;

secretary, Royal Wood; treasurer, Bishop John C. Dent; Director of religious education, S. E. Mifflin; director of music, Sister Edith Moore. Saturday's activities were pleasingly climaxed by a musical program sponsored by the Zion Builders, of Windsor, under the leadership of Sister Pearl Harnden.

Sunday was filled with inspirational services. No doubt the longest to be remembered of these was the morning prayer hour in charge of Apostle D. T. Williams and Elders R. T. Brown and D. J. Williams. The meeting was alive from start to finish with the spirit of testimony, prayer, and song. Two special prayers were offered for several who are sick and in great need of God's blessing. Divine exhortation and counsel to observe more of the gospel law were given the Saints at this service. Associated with this were several wonderful promises, one of these being that those who are sick will be healed if all the members more closely obey the law.

Independence

Women Complete Year of Service

Too much credit cannot be given the women's department for their work of the past year. They have shown what consecration, cooperation, and persistent labor and sacrifice can do for the church. Within a period of twelve months they have, by consistent and vigilant effort and saving, given to the church funds, general and local, a sum of $7,614.72. Their two sacrifice campaigns, led by Mrs. C. C. Koehler, have been the means of bringing greater unity into the feminine forces of the center place, and have shown what real endeavor can do for the church. In the first campaign, begun in October, 1932, and continued until early June, 1933, a sum of $6,052.14 was raised for the general church. Then in the latter part of that month they rallied their forces for a drive in behalf of local funds, and raised $1,562.58 in four months.

They celebrated the completion of a year of arduous endeavor, November 4, with a mammoth banquet at the Auditorium when five hundred guests were served by the Laurel Club. President F. M. Smith talked on the ideals of the women's organization, Bishop G. L. DeLapp discussed the financial law, and Pastor J. F. Sheehy was toastmaster. Songs sung at the banquet were originally written for the women's Monday afternoon programs.

During the coming year the women will direct their efforts to the promotion of better homes in Zion and relief work. They will endeavor to raise the standards of living in the homes by teaching and visiting. Bishop DeLapp asked them in his talk Saturday night, to keep up the teaching of the financial law in the homes and to continue to gather money from the homekeepers for whatever cause it may be designated, tithing, free will or sacrifice offering. They hope before 1934 is gone to have fifty per cent of the church members in Independence giving to church needs, whereas only thirty-five percent are now paying. Weekly meeting and visiting will be had in the forty-six groups in the center place with a monthly meeting of the general women's department.

Six hundred attended the inspirational services of the teachers' and leaders' institute, October 23 to November 3, and three hundred took class work, studying under a corps of fifteen teachers.

Speakers at the inspirational hour during the second week were Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Elder C. E. Miller. At the dedication and consecration service on Friday night, closing the institute, President Elbert A. Smith was in charge, and in the stand with him and assisting on the program were Elders D. S. McNamara, John F. Sheehy, Evan A. Fry, C. Ed. Miller, Earl Higdon, W. Earl Page, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

The work begun by the school will be carried forward by six o'clock Sunday evening services in all the churches in Independence. These services will include a short worship program, class work, music, and preaching.

Stone Church

Sunday evening marked the opening of sessions of the six o'clock continuous service of worship, study, and preaching. Classes for adults were organized in Bible and Book of Mormon appreciation, the financial law, religious drama, worship material, priesthood ("Industrial Zion"), and boy and girl leadership. A young people's class is giving attention to a study of the Inspired Translation of the Bible, another to church history, and a third to a study of the junior department child.

President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at seven-thirty Sunday, and chose for his subject, "Qualities of Leadership." His Scripture reading was from Luke 2. Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by George Anway. Solos were sung by Mrs. Nina G. Smith and Mr. Mark Anway.

A large crowd of people participated in the worship sacrament service Sunday morning at the Stone Church, enjoying the sacredness and peace of the hour. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was assisted in the stand by President Elbert A. Smith, Elder H. G. Barto, Elder D. S. McNamara, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Bishop J. S. Kelley, and Elder Earl F. Hoisington.

Downstairs a second communion service was held for those who could not find seating place in the meeting upstairs. More than a hundred worshipers enjoyed the spirit of solemnity and unity which prevailed. Elder T. A. Beck presided over this service, assisted by Elders H. L. Barto, W. Earl Page, and S. A. Thiel.

Miss Kathleen Snead, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Howard Snead, of this city, was married to Gerald Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Jones, of Lamoni, at Van Nuys, California, October 20. The ceremony was read by J. G. Carmichael in the presence of a group of friends, and the bridal pair will make their home at Wilmington, California. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jones formerly attended Graceland College.

Second Church

Pastor William Inman gave the sacrament talk to the assembled congregation last Sunday morning, and with him in the stand for this service were others of the local ministry. A special prayer was offered by J. H. Robinson, and Sam Inman gave the oblation talk.

A full house was present at six-fifteen Sunday evening for the Book of Mormon class taught by Elder J. W. A. Bailey.

A short song service preceded the evening service which from now on will begin at seven-thirty instead of eight o'clock. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker and talked on the Book of Mormon.

Walnut Park Church

Gloomy and unfavorable weather failed to affect greatly attendance at services Sunday. Four hundred and fifteen were present at the church school, and the church was well filled for the communion service following.

Pastor Frank McDonald presided over the sacrament service, assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and C. K. Green. Preceding taking of the oblation, Brother Robinson of the deacons' quorum talked of the needs of the poor and the purpose of the offering. Opening remarks were by Elder M. T. Williams, and following the serving of the emblems, Pastor Frank McDonald spoke of the importance of the covenant which had just been renewed, and urged the Saints to greater zeal in living up to the ideals of the church.

Elder Amos Chase occupied the pulpit in the evening.

The Dorcas Society, an organization of young women of Walnut Park, at a recent meeting, elected the following officers for the new year: President, Katherine Dobson; vice president, Hazel Sanders Mitchell; secretary, Marybelle Sanders; treasurer, Helen Mann. This group meets once each week to sew for the needy. On Last Friday, November 3, the club met at the home of Violet Chase and sewed during the afternoon. In the evening a steak supper was served, observing the first birthday of the organization.

The Crusaders' Class of the church school, a group of young people taught by Brother Odess Athey, recently elected the following new officers: President, Robert Butterworth; vice president, Jean Dillee; secretary-treasurer, Henry Countryman; chairman of social committee, Bethel Davis.

On Sunday, October 29, a Walnut Park young people's council was formed at a meeting attended by two representatives of each young people's class in the church school, together with the four representatives in the general young people's council of the city of Independence. Ammon Badder was elected president; Frederick Fish, vice president, and Wilma Smelser, secretary-treasurer. The purpose of the organization is stated as: To sponsor worth-while projects for Walnut Park young people in cooperation with the pastor.

Liberty Street Church

Several members of this congregation attended the teachers' and leaders' institute which closed last Friday night at the Stone Church. They feel blessed in having an inspirational and educational program to help fit them for better service.

An appropriate musical program added to the attractiveness of the church school hour Sunday morning. Church school work is being carried forward very efficiently by the new superintendent, Bernard Hurshman. Brother Hurshman took the place of Harry Blake who is devoting his time to the duties of bishop's agent for the congregation.

Gloomy weather prospects had no effect on the small group of Saints which met at eight o'clock Sunday morning for prayer service. The love of God and their fellow men is always very much in evidence in meetings of these members.

The solemnity and peace which befit such an occasion accompanied the sacrament service for November. Thirty minutes were well spent in offering testimonies and prayers.

Following an uplifting program of music at the Religio hour in the evening, Pastor John R. Lentell conducted an interesting discussion on "The Doctrine and Covenants."

"O Worship the King," was the musical prelude sung by the choir at the evening service, and later they sang, "Turn Ye Even to Me," and "Remember Now Thy Creator." Apostle J. F. Curtis gave an interesting sermon to a large and attentive congregation.

Enoch Hill Church

Sunday afternoon, Bernice Barbara, daughter of Brother Russell Waterman, was baptized at Second Church by Elder E. E. Thomas.

Enoch Hill members who took advantage of the teachers' and leaders' institute, conducted for two weeks at the Stone Church, feel greatly repaid for their attendance.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Riddle at their home Tuesday, October 31, and they have named him Bobby Raymond.

The young people met at the home of Brother and Sister H. E. Winegar, their director, for a halloween party. The spirit of friendliness and real fellowship seems to dominate the young people living on Enoch Hill.

The Saints met in union prayer service last week as is their custom each Wednesday preceding the first Sunday of the month.

The priesthood of this congregation are united in their determination to lead the people to higher levels of spirituality. The membership have pledged themselves to follow their leadership.

A pleasant all-day meeting was enjoyed by the women last week at the home of Sister Esther Kramer. A sewing class under the direction of Sister Verla Waters will be held each Thursday as a part of the women's program. Their speciality will be the remodeling of old clothing.

Pastor E. A. Thomas' class presented the program on the theme, "Jesus Needs Us Now," at the church school Sunday morning.

Communion service was given large attendance, Elder Joseph Martin in charge.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the evening speaker Sunday.

Spring Branch Church

The eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning was in charge of M. C. Jacobsen and Jesse E. Smith. A goodly spirit was present and those present felt glad they had the privilege of being present.

Much interest is shown in the class work in the Sunday school, under the direction of Superintendent A. J. Tankard and his assistant, Brother Andes. A talk was given at the close of the class work by Brother F. A. Cool who with his family has moved into this group.

The sacrament service at eleven o'clock was in charge of Pastor Morris Jacobsen who was assisted by Elders Salyards, Fish, and Cool. At the opening of the service a piano duet was played by Gladys Smith and Mrs. Frank Boyse. The talk on oblation was given by Bishop's Agent Robert Fish. A solo, "My Task," was sung by Mrs. Frank Boyse. A short talk on "The Sacrament" was given by Brother Salyards.

The program at the six-thirty church school was in charge of the young people of Brother Jesse Smith's class.

The speaker of the seven-thirty hour was Patriarch U. W. Greene. Brother Greene took as his text the one word, "Saints."

The women's department met at the home of Sister Jacobsen the past week. Thursday, November 9, they will meet at the home of Sister Fish at 2 p. m.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Interest Increases in All Endeavors

Church activities are going forward in Grand Rapids, under the splendid leadership of Pastor Walter F. Ryder and his counselors, A. F. Shotwell and Merill E. Champion. Interest in all departments is growing.

A choir of about sixteen voices has been organized by Gladys Silsby, and adds much attractiveness to the Sunday evening services.

The Sunday school had a contest during June, July and August, to increase attendance, and the contest supper was given October 12, about one hundred attending. The tables were decorated with autumn leaves and flowers and a good program followed the meal.

The women's department meets every two weeks for an all-day session with a study period in the morning, a potluck lunch at noon, and a devotional meeting in the afternoon. They have made their aim for the coming year the attainment of spiritual heights.

The young people, too, have an aim—the accomplishments of things set forth by the Tenth Legion. A party was held at the church October 13, about fifty-four young people being there. Numerous games were played and while refreshments were being enjoyed, a program consisting of musical numbers and readings, was given. The young members attended a prayer meeting Sunday morning, October 22, in charge of Merrill Champion and David Young, of Battle Creek.

Friday night, October 6, many Saints braved the rain and went to the home of Brother and Sister Harper, to bid them farewell before they left next day for their new home in Detroit. They had lived at Grand Rapids twenty-three years and had many friends, both in and out of the church, who regret to see them leave. A gift was presented Sister Harper and one to Brother Harper, from the women's department, by Brother Shotwell, and then the gathering enjoyed a pleasing program of music and readings.

and personal risk involved in war. Perhaps it lacks the elements that appeal to the masses. But we are hoping that civilized peoples are on the way to becoming fed up with the cheaper and more sensational appeals of military glory.

The glory of war is decadent, outmoded. There awaits the world the vastly greater glory and satisfaction of enduring peace—IF the world has the intelligence and soul to aspire to it.

wars and reports of actual bloodshed. A verse from the 119th Psalm says, "Great peace have they which love thy law," and another verse from the 48th chapter of Isaiah gives the antithesis of that: "There is no peace to the wicked." Certainly the world has no peace today, and I believe we do not have to look very far to know the reason. The world is steeped in wickedness and sin.

Perhaps you think I have wandered far afield from my text: "Except the Lord build an house, they labor in vain that built it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Men may preach and practice defensive armament; they may make solemn treaties and sacred alliances, but unless men are obeying the laws of God—the laws of unselfishness and kindness and brotherly love—unless they are building the kingdom of heaven upon earth; and unless God is their helper in that building, they labor in vain. Millions of trained and armed men, millions of huge guns or battleships or airplanes or poison gases or terrible engines of destruction cannot protect a nation which knows no God and refuses to listen to his will. On this Armistice day of sacred memories, we pray that America and the other nations of the world may speedily turn from their sin and begin to build the kingdom of God upon earth; that their building may not be in vain, and that the whole world may have the peace that passeth understanding.

The local minister of one of our prominent churches ended one of his church service advertisements with these two gems of thought:

"Real Christians do not carry their religion like a load; it carries them."

"People seldom lose their religion by a 'blowout.' Usually it is just a slow leak."—Selected.

Conference Notice

The annual conference of Northwestern Iowa District will convene at Dow City, Iowa, November 18 and 19. The theme of the conference will be "Keep the Law." The election of district officers and delegates to the next General Conference will be taken care of at this conference. Apostle J. F. Garver, and Elder E. Y. Hunker, missionary in charge, will be present. We trust every branch will be represented. All branch clerks will please mail statistical reports at once to the district secretary.—Mrs. Ruby Adams, secretary, Logan, Iowa.

Notice to Musicians

Musicians of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: A young people's rally is to be held at Lansing, Michigan, November 18 and 19. It is also to be a rally for all our musicians and everyone is urged to attend and come prepared to help. The adult choirs will sing the following numbers: "Remember Thy Creator," Adams; "New Every Morning Is the Love," Billiard; "Send Out Thy Light," Gounod. All young people between the ages of thirteen and sixteen exclusive, are urged to learn the following numbers which are in The Golden Book of Favorite Songs: "Praise for Peace"; "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton," and "Sweet and Low." We would appreciate it if the soloists would come prepared for special work. Those that play instruments are being depended on to bring their instruments to help in song services. A good and interesting time is promised. Your help is needed. —Louise Evans, district chorister.

vention, which convenes at Lansing, Michigan, Novmeber 17, 18, and 19, will begin at 7.30 p. m. It will be an illustrated lecture given by Al Gainer, of Lansing, a former school teacher and extensive traveler through the western States. Scenic views of the Rocky Mountains and national parks, also pictures of the renowned redwood forests of California will be shown. Many of these views were taken by Mr. Gainer, and he went to considerable trouble in securing the others. Brother Fred Kuhn, of M. A. C., East Lansing, recommends the pictures highly.—Mrs. Tressa Baker, publicity agent.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District conference was held at Lincoln, October 20 to 22. Apostle R. S. Budd was the speaker Friday evening, talking on the text, "The glory of God is intelligence." W. A. Smith was in charge. Following the sermon a reception was held in the basement of the church, Sister Esther Schrunk in charge. Saturday began with a 9.30 a. m. prayer meeting in charge of Apostle R. S. Budd and District President Otis L. D'Arcy. Many expressed themselves as being greatly encouraged by this service. Elder D'Arcy was the eleven o'clock speaker. Brother Budd was chosen to preside at the 2.30 p. m. business meeting. Following the reading of the minutes came reports from the district president and his assistant, B. M. Anderson; a report from Missionary W. A. Smith, and reports from branches and groups. Reports of the district secretary-treasurer and the bishop's agent were also read. Then Brother Budd commended the district for its splendid financial support. Seven delegates to next General Conference were elected: Audentia Anderson, B. M. Anderson, Otis L. D'Arcy, Francis Schrunk, Roy S. Budd, E. J. Lenox and Blanche Farrar. Action was taken empowering the General Conference delegation to cast the full vote of the district and in case of division to cast the majority-minority votes. District officers elected are: President, Otis L. D'Arcy; assistants, W. E. Poague and B. M. Anderson; Mrs. F. W. Black was sustained secretary-treasurer; director of church school, Blanche Farrar; chorister, Audentia Anderson; bishop's agent, E. N. Byergo. Brother Budd then talked briefly with regard to the priesthood making their reports regularly. Then the motion for adjournment to meet again at the call of the district presidency, was made. The remainder of the program of the conference was presented by Brother Budd, who preached in the evening, was in charge of the Sunday 8.30 a. m. prayer service, preached at eleven o'clock, and was in charge of the 2 p. m. round table discussion. Those remaining for the evening service were privileged to hear District Missionary W. A. Smith.

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE.—District conference convened with the Swindle Schoolhouse group September 9 and 10. The first service was a prayer meeting at 10 a. m. Saturday, Elder S. E. Dickson in charge, assisted by Elder O. S. Caldwell. The business meeting convened at 2 p. m. with the district presidency, C. B. Gallimore and D. R. Dortch in charge. Elder P. B. Bowlin was absent. Elders S. E. Dickson was associated with the presidency in charge, by conference action; Sister Flossie Gallimore was chosen secretary, and O. S. Caldwell was selected as chorister. On the reception committee were William Hicks, Cleveland Reynolds and Irvin Alkins. After the reading of minutes, it was suggested that statistical reports be read for approval. Mays Hill, Paris, Farmington, High Hill and Swindle Schoolhouse reports were approved, and ministerial reports came from Elders E. Y. Bumpass, D. R. Dortch, O. S. Caldwell, and C. B. Gallimore; Priests Cleveland Reynolds, L. O. McAlister, and John Lee Byrd; Teachers Mason Caldwell, W. M. Hicks and Porter Reynolds; Deacon Albert Johnson. These reports were approved and adopted, and reports of the bishop's agent and district president were read and adopted. The recommendation from Mays Hill Branch to the conference that Robert Dortch be ordained a priest was read, but due to the fact that Brother Dortch's name has not been transferred to Mays Hill Branch from Southern Missouri District, although he has resided near Mays Hill for a year, action on the ordination was deferred until next conference. Recommendation from Mays Hill Branch that Joseph Gately be ordained to the office of deacon was approved. The district president presented the name of Brother Connie Caldwell, of Hickman, Kentucky, to the assembly to be ordained to the office of priest. This was approved and the ordination provided for. The conference acted to do away with the document passed at the last conference touching on the district presidency's expense, and to make a new one. The new document provided that the funds be collected in the same way but that the district president have the power to dispose of them as he sees fit. Paris, Tennessee, was chosen as the place for the next conference to be held the second Saturday and Sunday in December. Elder S. E. Dickson talked on "Prepare to Meet Thy God, O Israel." In the evening he was again the speaker and "Faith" was his theme. Sunday at 9 a. m. prayer and sacrament meeting convened and proved to be a spiritual helpful service. "Restoration" was the subject of a sermon in the afternoon by S. E. Dickson.

NORTHEASTERN. KANSAS. — The semi-annual conference of this district was postponed July 29 and 30, owing to the serious illness of District President Dave Little. It convened at Atchison, October 14 and 15. The conference was presided over by the district president, associated with Apostle Roy S. Budd and District Missionary Charles Fry. The first service was a prayer meeting at eleven o'clock Saturday morning, in charge of Frank G. Hedrick and Charles Fry. Business session was held at two o'clock. In response to the usual order of reports, Brother Fry made a verbal report of work done since his coming to the district in June. Minutes of the previous conference were read and approved. Statistical reports from Topeka, Atchison, Blue Rapids, and Fanning, together with that of the district were read and accepted. The bishop's agent and district treasurer, O. E. Weedmark, reported a summarized list of contributions to the general church with the percentage contribution which totaled $484.13 during the first six months of the year. Expenditures for the district, $22.66; balance on hand, $1.24. His report as district supervisor of religious education showed an itemized list of points for each group and local, with an increased interest in some of the schools, and two new study groups for the three months ending June 30. A ministerial report was read from Robert Monroe, pastor of Scranton Branch. Brother Budd made a verbal report for the reunion committee, and by vote it was decided to retain the committee, as previous legislation provided, with same powers and privileges, the committee is to report at the next conference. The invitation from Topeka for the next conference was accepted and the date set for the second Saturday and Sunday in January, 1934. By request of the chair, Brother Budd took charge of the election of officers. Brother Charles Fry was unanimously elected president of the district. A vote of thanks was tendered Brother Dave Little for his faithful service in the district. The other officers are as follows: Secretary, Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger; chorister, Mrs. Edna Williams; superintendent of religious education, O. E. Weedmark; treasurer, O. E. Weedmark; member of auditing committee, William Twombly. Dave Little and William Twombly were appointed and approved as counselors to the district president at a subsequent meeting at which time the president called attention to the necessity for the enlargement of the district budget which, under existing conditions was inadequate. The report of the committee on the resolution of condolence to the family of the late Patriarch Samuel Twombly was read and accepted. This committee was appointed by the chair during the interim of conference and was composed of Frank G. Hedrick, Mrs. C. J. Sheets, and Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger. The church school session was in charge of District Director O. E. Weedmark, assisted by Gilbert Hedrick and William Twombly. A picture appreciation, "The Light of the World," was given by Fern Weedmark. An illustrated talk on baptism by Charles Fry was given for the senior young people and adults. The children's department was in charge of Anna Leutz. Preceding the sermon at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, by Apostle R. S. Budd, a violin quintet from the Annis School of Violin rendered a number. The sermon in the afternoon was by Charles Fry, assisted by Evan Fry, of Kansas City. Brother Budd also preached Saturday morning. Music for the conference was in charge of the district chorister, Mrs. E. F. Deller, assisted by local talent at Atchison. A vote of thanks was extended to Atchison Saints for their hospitality to the conference visitors.

Our Departed Ones

SNOW.—Margaret Caldona Snow (nee Rickman), was born January 31, 1855, in Graves County, Kentucky, where she grew up to womanhood. She was married to Charles L. Snow in 1887. To them were born five children. Two died in childhood. Three, Carl and Liburn, of Independence, Missouri, and Ova, of Saint Louis, survive her. Also two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Vincent, and Miss Martha Rickman, of Graves County, Kentucky, together with ten grandchildren, and many other relatives mourn the loss of mother, sister, grandmother, and friend. Her religion was one of good deeds. She passed from earth life October 3, 1933. The funeral was held at the Second Church in charge of Elder S. H. Fields; sermon by T. C. Kelley.

WOLFE.—Bessie Ruth Garrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Omer Garrison, was born in Mount Vernon Township, near East Salem, Illinois, June 23, 1905, and died October 6, 1933. She was united in marriage with Bert E. Wolfe, June 11, 1930. She is survived by her husband and two children, Carl Wayne Casey, age 8, and Madeline Casey, age 10; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Omer Garrison; two brothers, George R., of Opdyke, Illinois, and Burrell Garrison, of Zion, Illinois; two sisters, Mrs. Cecil Cooprider, of Winthrop Harbor, Illinois, and Mrs. Illene Douglas, of Chicago, Illinois, besides other relatives and friends. In her girlhood days she was a member of the Second Baptist Church, of Mount Vernon, Illinois. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder J. M. Henson, January 29, 1933, at a series of meetings held by Elder R. L. Fulk. The funeral was held at East Salem Church, Elder J. M. Henson, presiding. Interment was at the cemetery adjoining the church.

MOORE.—Guy Emmerson Moore was born near Urbana, Ohio, December 2, 1883. Died at his home at Independence, Missouri, October 22, 1933, after a short illness. He married Florence M. Atkins, at Independence, January 5, 1910, and to them one son, Comer Jensen, was born. Mr. Moore was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Independence, Missouri, June 5, 1924, and remained a member until his death. He leaves to mourn, his wife, son, two sisters and four brothers besides other relatives and many friends. The funeral sermon was preached by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, assisted by Elder Roy Howry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WELDAY.—Ralph R. Welday, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Welday, passed away at his home in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, October 12, after a lingering illness. He was born September 15, 1886, at Libertyville, Iowa, and when a young man went to Burlington, where he attended business college and afterward accepted a position with the Leopold Desk Company. About ten years ago he went to Cedar Rapids to accept the position as manager of the Nash-Finch Company which he held until 1931. He went to Davenport then as manager of the Martin-Wood Fruit Company there. During the World War he served his country in connection with the food administration. August 9, 1911, he was united in marriage to Minnie Ortleb, who survives him. He also leaves one daughter, Annalee, and a son, Ralph, jr., at home; his mother, and a brother, James, both of Fairfield, Iowa, and a sister, Jessie Griswold, of Allerton. Mr. Welday united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, February 11, 1917, and remained a faithful member. He was ordained an elder, August 21, 1921, and served the church in that capacity. For some time he held the office of bishop's agent in Eastern Iowa District. Brother Welday was always a conscientious and faithful tithe payer, and wherever he was called upon to serve, he rendered a most efficient service. He loved his family and his home, and through his upright life and kind deeds he made many friends. He was well known and respected in the business world, and was successful in his businses projects. Funeral services were held from the Saints' church at Burlington, Iowa, Sunday afternoon, October 15, sermon by E. R. Davis. Burial was in Aspen Grove Cemetery.

"GOD CREATED WHEAT FOR MAN"

not so particular about the meat; very nice in cold, hunger, or famine. Why eat a barrel of white flour to feed the nerves and bones, when a pound of Phosfo will give 10 times the amount? Why not feed white flour to other animals? Try it, kills a horse in 10 days. Must be something wrong. Don't be foolish, get away from the old acquired unnatural appetite—it's easy. A can of Phosfo or almost two pounds in bulk for just one dollar delivered to any part of the United States will do the work.

The Pigeonhole

Hearts and Minds

"When we are talking about consecration," says the Pigeon, "I am inclined to make the comment that a mind given to the Lord is like a purse given to the church: it is worth only as much as the giver has put into it. An empty purse is no charity to the poor; and an empty mind is a shabby gift to God." And, having delivered himself of this, Pigeon ruffled his feathers. But he was not through speaking.

"And hearts are like checks," he continued. "They are only as good as the integrity of the signatures that guaranty their worth. An insincere intention makes a heart utterly worthless."

"Many a man has given himself to the kingdom of God, which was thereby impoverished by containing one more incompetent who could not pay in service for his spiritual upkeep."

When we come into the church we bring certain assets and liabilities with us. Do we weigh them to see which is the heavier? Can we weigh our kindness in ounces and our bad temper in tons? Or can we measure our willingness to give and do in excess of our natural selfishness?

Seats

"There are two kinds of places to sit," says Pigeonette. "One is on top of the world, and the other is on top of a volcano. And, "she added, with a sweep of her wing at a late autumn fly, "I haven't seen any maps around here lately."

"The normal working force of the human race exists about in the following proportion: out of every thousand in our so-called human race, there are three who work, thirty who criticize, three hundred who merely watch, and six hundred and sixty-seven who aren't even interested in what is going on. That's why it's so hard to get any work done, either in the church or out of it." And we rather suspect that Pigeonette thinks the Pigeon, at his very best, ranks among the critics.

The excuse is frequently offered for some earnest bungler, "Oh, but he's so sincere!" Probably so, but that doesn't make the mistakes of ignorance and tactlessness any the less damaging.

Name and Address, Please!

The Neatest Snub—

Came to the Business Office in the mail the other day. It was from some unidentified correspondent at Casey, Illinois. It was clearly and completely addressed, but on the reverse side there was neither name nor message, nor the address of the sender. Refusing to speak to us like that!

Which reminds us that many times the office cannot fill orders nor answer inquiries nor correct mistakes, nor any of the other hundred and one things patrons want, when they omit full names and addresses. It is not enough to know that your name is Yon Yonson—we must know which one of the thousands of Yon Yonsons you are, and your address will help identify you.

THIS WEEK we begin. Last Sunday was the first day of the "Keep the Law" period. All over the church pastors and members of the ministry are discussing the financial law of the church with their congregations. Questions will be asked, information given, inventories filed, and tithing paid. The church is beginning as a united body to make preparations for obeying the law.

VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS for the support of the church are irregular, undependable, unsystematic, and inequitable. Some undergo hardships by paying too much, and others escape by paying too little. The burden of supporting the church is thus unfairly distributed. The system of voluntary contributions has never been entirely satisfactory, either in the church or out of it.

TITHING provides a system of complete justice and equity. Under it, the poor are not oppressed, nor are the rich unduly taxed. The records show who has done his duty and who has not. And when one has done his duty, he has the satisfaction of knowing it, and he needs not fear that he has not paid as much as conscience and fairness would dictate.

THE CHURCH will take a great step forward when the members are paying tithing. Adequate financial support will be assured. Sacrifice drives will no longer be necessary. There will be a steady source of income on which the Presiding Bishopric can count for the liquidation of debt, and the planning of the budget. Missionaries can be returned to the field and new ones appointed. The work of the districts can be developed, and a foreign missionary program given some real support. At the same time we can carry forward the preparation for a real foundation for stewardships and the building of Zion. These are the possibilities which await us, if we will seriously endeavor to keep the law.

KEEP THE LAW. This is not only our slogan; it is our salvation as a church. If we cannot keep the fundamental, primary law of church citizenship—tithing—we cannot keep the greater laws of stewardship, and Zion will become a lost hope. But we can keep the law. We can if we will. We must determine now, each and every one of us, to do our part, and not wait for others to do theirs first.

Blue Pencil Notes

I SEE," said Deacon Goodentart, "that they are manufacturing a loud speaker with a range of ten miles. That is going to make it easy for the preacher to reach the congregation but awfully hard for us deacons to take up a collection."

BROTHER C. Ed Miller reports that he now weighs more than he ever did before in his life. How much does he weigh? One hundred and twenty-five pounds (when he stands still long enough for the scales to register). He attributes a gain of five pounds to the fact that he has abandoned his habitual onion sandwich at bed time and has switched to tomatoes. The gain is fine—we can never have too much of a man like C. Ed Miller, but how does he gain on tomatoes and perpetual motion?

AMERICANS having repealed prohibition will now proceed (with their usual penchant for extremes) to become the hardest drinking nation on earth. Skillful advertising will popularize the habit with boys and girls and the future fathers and mothers of the nation will be well alcoholized as well as nicotinized. The Devil knows his psychology and his chemistry.

SAYINGS OF CHILDREN often have a spontaniety and freshness that is more than amusing. A small girl of my acquaintance was visiting her uncle and aunt. She was permitted to say grace at the table, a new experience for Barbara, and she seemed to enjoy it and made the most of her right to "self expression." One evening the supper was unusually late, and evidently she grew both impatient and hungry, and when given permission to say grace bowed her head and prayed: "Dear Jesus, here it is almost eight o'clock and we are just setting down to eat our supper!" This was her way of telling the Lord her immediate troubles; it also gave her a chance to express her opinion of the household management. Older people sometimes "get even" in prayer.

THE LITTLE DAUGHTER of Blair Jensen, president of the Lamoni Stake, was brought to the Independence Sanitarium in a serious condition with appendicitis. It was necessary to take a blood test or give a hypodermic, or something of the sort. The nurse warned her: "This may hurt." The little girl replied: "I don't mind—my daddy taught me to be tough." After the operation was all over and she was out from under the effects of the anæsthetic and night had come, she required her nurse to kneel down by the bed and put her head on the pillow while the childish prayer was offered up. "My mamma always does that," was her comment. A girl whose father has taught her to be "tough" —courageous—and whose mother has taught her to pray would seem to have a future before her. Children who have been taught nothing of enduring value by father and mother are unfortunate and the future is not propitious for them.

THE WOMEN of Independence have just completed a task in a way to enthuse all observers. About a year ago the Presidency and Bishopric assigned them the task to raise $6,000 to assist in caring for missionaries' families. The women organized and went at the task systematically. Rain or shine, hot or cold, they canvassed every group in town each week and met en masse at the Stone Church each Monday afternoon. They completed that task in June of this year and were assigned another task to raise certain funds for the local churches; that job has been done, also. The thing that I admire about their work is the sustained effort put forth over a long period of time. That is a lesson our people must learn. So many of us rush at a new task with great enthusiasm and vigor. Soon the enthusiasm wears off and we grow dilatory and slacken our effort or quit entirely. We must learn to coordinate our endeavors and harden our wills to keep at the task with sustained effort until the objective sought is realized. It is the long, steady pull that wins.

THERE IS ANOTHER pleasing report to make. We have constantly urged local people to foster missionary endeavors in their own immediate localities. So we are pleased to note that one of the oldest and most thoroughly established organized classes in Independence, the Y. K. T. Class, is launching a missionary campaign in Liberty, Missouri. A hundred years ago when the Saints were driven from Jackson County they found a hospitable refuge in Liberty. They had trouble in Clay County later but the people of Liberty were not its instigators. Now our young people go back there after this long time with the gospel message. They have been well received and have the free use of a hall on the public square. Elder John Sheehy is to be the speaker during an initial series lasting two weeks. Then we trust the class will settle down to a steady, long sustained endeavor to put the mission over. Here is a hint for others. Where a local group can organize, select a likely opening, and back up such an endeavor with musicians, automobiles, and a sufficient guaranteed attendance of Saints to make a sure audience each Sunday night until the work is well established, where this can be done and the effort is sustained, the chances for success are vastly greater than when we dodge about here and there, more or less at random, endeavoring to get a hearing without proper preparation and support. Men You Ought to Know

FLOYD M. MCDOWELL

He is the youngest member of the First Presidency. How young? you ask. Oh, pretty young yet; but if you want to know exactly you'll have to ask him. It's not our business to let out any secrets.

Here's the record in brief: the son of a missionary and a devoted mother who was determined to see him get an education; a student, then a college instructor, a rapid rise in the ministry, and a call to the office of the Counselor to the President, Frederick M. Smith. Since then a strong advocate of education and a friend of the young people.

He is now devoting much attention to the problems and development of the priesthood.

Evolution--A Guiding Power

By John W. Rushton
Of the Quorum of Twelve

SINCE Charles Darwin's epochal work, The Origin of Species, evolution by some has been regarded as the "causation" of all things; and the destroyer of religious faith, by many. And, according to the action of some state legislatures in America this antagonism still exists. It may be that if we could understand the meaning of evolution as used by men who have studied it we should not be so fearful of it and its implications. At least we may be sure that truth no matter of what classification, will be agreeable and mutually consistent.

Qualified exponents of evolution do not claim for it other than that it is a method or process of "continuous and progressive change according to well-defined laws, determined by the resident forces within." A method or process implies an "Intelligence" working through the process or by the method for the accomplishment of a purposive end.

Students of the New Testament have appreciated this definition of evolution by Joseph LeConte and have found in it peculiar justification of the Christian doctrine of "regeneration." In the conversation of our Lord with Nicodemus when explaining what He meant by a "man being born again," Jesus said, "That which is born of flesh is flesh. That which is born of Spirit is spirit." Involution or the quality of "the resident forces within" an organism determines the possibilities of evolution. Flesh from flesh. Of which, says Saint Paul, entrance into the Kingdom is impossible. So, for the Kingdom of God with which Christ was concerned, no matter how refined and cultured that life of the flesh may be, it was not the quality necessary for citizenship in that Kingdom. Hence the imperative: "Ye must be born again."

The New Birth is concerned with the change of the "resident force within." And then according to the "well-defined law" which while variously designated, is the "gospel of Jesus Christ," the evolution may progress until the end God has in view is attained. This is vaguely hinted at but never concretely described as for instance Saint Paul quoting Isaiah says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." And, Saint John: "Beloved now are we the sons of God and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: But we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

This resident power of "seeing Him" continually and progressively changing will finally reach the "high mark of our calling in Jesus Christ."

In the latest work on Evolution Professor Broom, formerly professor of geology and zoology at Victoria College, Stellenbosch, South Africa, presents some striking suggestions which seem to make evolution compatible with an intelligent faith in a Divinely ordered universe. As to the course of events in which many see nothing but a "succession of fortuitous mutations which, by the selection of the blind forces of nature, have resulted in the evolution of a Shakespeare and a Newton from fish," Professor Broom says: "He can trace intelligence behind it all."

> "The end seems to me to differ too greatly from the beginning to have been the result of chance.
> "Curiously enough, the evolution has apparently not all been the result of one intelligence. We seem to see many agencies at work—some beneficent, some malignant; but amid it all some power has guided the man evolution to man. And man seems to be the end foreseen from the beginning.
> "It almost seems necessary for many physiological processes to call in something of the sort. And in medicine we see many things taking place that are hard to explain unless we assume some controlling agency. We have a host of interesting cures of disease, usually spoken of as mental healing, faith healing, divine healing, Christian Science, which cannot be explained by physical laws. Those who have never seen such cases deny that they occur. A medical man myself, I have no hesitation in stating that I have seen many healings that seemed little less than miraculous."

According to Professor Broom "the evolutionary clock has so completely run down that it is very doubtful if a single new genus has appeared on earth in the last two million years" which seems to drive us to the conclusion that there was no need for further evolution after man appeared, and that the evolution of man must have been deliberately planned by some spiritual power.

Here perhaps is the most interesting and arresting statement by Professor Broom which seems to fit in with the religious concept of man's final destiny. Having traced the evolution of man from fishes and via the large-brained, erect-walking ape, it is submitted "the aim has been, the production of human personalities, and personality is evidently a new spiritual being that will probably survive the death of the body."

"Probably in the very near future, man will begin to realize the important position he occupies on earth; and very (Continued on page 1469)

NEWS BRIEFS

From Independence: "Keep the Law"

All members of the Independence Young People's Council have pledged themselves as individual church members, to keep the law by filing their inventory or making their financial statement, before they engage in the "Keep the Law" activities the council has mapped out for all young people of the center place.

Beginning last Sunday (the opening day of the "Keep the Law" period) young men were sent to each of the church schools to make a four-minute talk on the importance of abiding by the law.

A "Keep the Law" rally will be held November 25 and 26, Independence young men and women meeting at Walnut Park Church.

Young Michiganders to Pay for Reunion Auditorium

It is the aim of the young men and women of Northern and Western Michigan districts to pay for their own auditorium, now standing on the Park of the Pines reunion grounds, before the opening of next year's reunion. Each local is doing its part, raising money by means of a wide variety of social events.

Kansans Sponsor Two-Day Institute

A two-day institute was the big event sponsored by young men and women of the Wichita, Kansas, Branch, October 7 and 8. And to make it particularly worth while and pleasant they invited Apostle R. S. Budd to be there and deliver a series of lectures.

California's Cry— "Zion Builders All!"

"Zion Builders All!" is the slogan of East Bay Branch young people (Berkeley, California). Their organization, sponsored by Miss Elva Sturges, held its second initiation service September 24, taking in twelve new members. They enjoyed their annual banquet a few days later, the theme of both events being "Honoring the Keeper of the Gate." A fascinating program of worship, study, fellowship, and recreation tie these young people together under the presidency of Walter Weldon.

Washington Youth Hub of Sunday Evening Activities

The Sunday evening meeting of the little Pasco Branch in Washington, is a young people's service. They have Book of Mormon study, and one class is now reading the book, The Call at Evening, written by Miss Jessie Ward who also lives in the State of Washington.

Missourians Make New Stage Curtains

Not long ago the O. Y. P. Class of Carthage, Missouri, made new curtains for the stage in their church, adding greatly to the appearance of the room.

When the branch asked the help of all, this autumn, the class of young people united with the women's department in an endeavor to make possible much-needed church repairs. They gave a play, "Mother Mine," to swell the repair fund.

Wyoming Members Discuss Their Problems

Oshoto, Wyoming, young people like to talk over their problems. Lately they have enjoyed two helpful round table meetings at the usual Sunday morning sermon hour.

"Organize Yourselves," Say Youthful Illinois Legislators

That all branches should organize their young people under the new plan of religious education was the recommendation made by youthful members of Rock Island District at the recent district conference. At this gathering the district youth held their own election and transacted other items of business. They are learning early to assume their share of church responsibility. Four young men were ordained to offices in the priesthood.

Devotional Services in North Dakota

Helpful programs characterize the Fargo young people's devotional hour. They meet for a special program of worship every third Sunday evening at seven o'clock.

An Official Communication

IN CONNECTION with the "Keep the Law" campaign, extending from November 12 to December 3, we have presented four brief messages. In the first it was shown that the sacrifice of the church during 1932 had brought results, for $113,273.92 of debts were paid; and we called to the attention of the church the existence of a deficit which could be erased if each of us will keep the law. Our second message dealt with the national recovery program and its effect upon the church. In this, mention was made of the reemployment already effected, diluted by numerous strikes, but the response in income of the church could not yet be noted; on the other hand, rising costs of operation of the church were being felt. The recovery already seen encourages us to look forward to a period of more complete stabilization during which everyone, as well as the church, should "get their house in order." Thirdly, we wrote of the servants of the church, including the priesthood and laity, particularly referring to the effort already made to coordinate the work of the bishops and their assistants, and plans for mutual development to be put into effect. This was bringing to the notice of the church a definite purpose to increase the effectiveness of the financial department so that our effort completely to discharge the debt of the church, when the time comes, as well as to carry forward the building of Zion, would be performed by an experienced band. Lastly, we ventured to point to the deeply interesting background of the restoration of the law; outlined very briefly the application of the law to life; and in general terms stated the divine intent of the law, its purpose in us. Some readers, perhaps, found in all of this some incentive to enlist heartily in the plans of the period before us.

THE AIM of this present message is simple. It is to ask the church to stand as one in keeping the law. Assuming that the teaching of the law goes on unceasingly in church schools and from every pulpit of the church, there is need to urge that we keep the law we know.

The Presiding Bishopric is not interested in gathering money, trying to solve the often disheartening problems of church members, or caring for the varied temporal interests of the church, merely for the sake of those things. They do desire to see emerge out of our trials as a people and as a church, men and women thoroughly informed about the law of God, altogether alive to their responsibilities as disciples of God, and intelligently fervent in the discharge of those responsibilities. In the past two years there has been an undoubted development in these matters, and a more vital spiritual life is evident. If such results continue, our part of the work will be a joy.

We wish to have our people cheerfully and faithfully file their inventories and tithing statements, pay their tithing and give their offerings. Such contributions, eventually, we expect to see discharge the church debt, finance our missionary program, and establish the temporal aspects of Zion. But if in this we as a people fail to develop until the "celestial law" becomes in us second nature, no enduring basis for the spiritual Zion will have been found, and the gathering towards which all of us look will be in vain.

Therefore, present work, and plans for future work have these objects unceasingly in mind. Those who keep the law will be able to participate in reaching our destiny. Law keepers are Zion builders.

Do you not agree that our plans for the period beginning November 12 and ending December 3 are fundamental to the growth of the church? It is our deep belief that no better basis for future development exists than keeping the law, and that as to our present problem, if everyone will keep the law there will be no deficit.

minded this year in your giving. The standard books, church stories, and other items will be greatly appreciated by relatives and friends, and will help in the good work.

In the face of rising markets, this is the year to stock up on church books. It will be many years before prices are so low again as they are now. Paper costs are going skyward, some kinds being more than double what they cost a short time ago. Wage schedules revised by the NRA also boost costs. These raises will ultimately be paid for by the consumer. The answer is to buy now while prices are low.

Speaking of Self-pity—

"My, but I was scared there for a moment!" Mary Lou Garney confided to her chum, Gertrude Laughlin. The Happy Girls club business meeting was over and with much chattering and laughing the members were leaving. "Why, Trudy, for a minute I thought Miss Huntington had it!"

"Oh, I was sure Miss Goodrich would be chosen," replied the other girl, setting her new fall hat at just the proper angle and, from the mirror flashing a smile at her friend.

"But just imagine what it would be like if Miss Huntington—"

"No, don't. Save your imagination," the other cut in sharply. "I'm not going to waste my time or energy thinking of what would have happened to the Happy Girls if Miss Huntington had been chosen leader. Maybe she's all right in other ways—but I can't stand her self-pity!"

"She only makes herself more unhappy by thinking what a tough break life has given her," declared Mary Lou. "I wonder if it has ever occurred to her that other people have their troubles, too. Of course she's lost her mother and she had a disappointing love affair and she didn't get to continue her work on her master's degree as she planned, because of her sister's illness, but, goodness, she has lots of things to be thankful for."

Gertrude laughed. "What a cheery body you are, Mary Lou! When you begin to lecture, you sound exactly like mother."

"I'm not lecturing," protested Mary Lou, "I'm just endeavoring to—"

"Play the Pollyanna, of course, don't I know you?—" teasingly, and then more soberly: "but you know I'm just as happy as you that Miss Goodrich got the majority of the votes. She'll make a splendid leader—and personally, I adore her!"

A moment later the two young women, their arms linked, were walking down the elm-lined avenue. "Funny what makes us so different," Gertrude ruminated aloud. "I like Miss Huntington—sometimes; but I admire Miss Goodrich. I pity a person who is always miserable and moist-eyed over her own difficulties; but I'm crazy about a woman who makes the most of her difficulties the way Miss Goodrich has. If Miss Huntington would only get over the idea that she is a martyr; turn up the corners of her mouth—and her mind, too—and grin! But can you imagine her doing that? No. To her grinning is one of the forbiddens—it's sacrilegious!"

There is nothing so hygienic as friendship; nothing so wholesome and heartening! We are all travelers in the wilderness of this world, traveling to find a few honest friends. . . .

Friendship is a privilege, an opportunity. Through it we express ourselves. For it is only by trying to understand others that we can get our own heart understood. . . .

Friendship is also a responsibility—an investment. The dividends we draw out of the business of friendship are determined only by what we have invested in it.

I used to think that friendship meant happiness; I have learned that it means discipline. Seek how we may, we shall never find a friend without faults, imperfections, traits, and ways that vex, grieve, and annoy us. Strive as we will, we ourselves can never fully fulfill the ideal of us that is in our friends' minds; we inevitably come short of it. . . . There is never a greater education nor development possible than in friendship.—Agnes Lewis Caviness, in The Youth's Instructor.

"You're a pretty good preacher yourself," giggled Mary Lou; "but truly, with Miss Goodrich and her personality and energy, I don't see why the Happy Girls can't be the best club in town this winter, peppy, and cheerful."

"We will," Gertrude's tone was determined. Then her black eyes twinkled with fun, and to express her thoughts she resorted to an old trick of hers, that of paraphrasing the verses of others. This time it was Shakespeare's Othello who suffered:

"A woman who thinks of others first, Mary Lou,
Is the immediate jewel of my soul;
She who pities self; gets no good done;
Lonely, self-centered, slave of her own squeezy conscience;
But she who warmly smiles on others always,
Is a help and a blessing to all.
And makes me glad indeed."

"The more I study Nature, the more I stand amazed at the work of the Creator. I pray while I am engaged in my work in the laboratory."—Pasteur.

Council Bluffs Orioles

On September 8 the first dedication of Orioles was had when fifty-two girls took the Oriole pledge in a beautiful and impressive church service. The number of new girls joining the movement has increased the number of Oriole Circles in Council Bluffs from five to ten. Two of these have fully qualified and are registered with the Girls' Headquarters Committee. These are:

The Waupee Circle (meaning White Hawk, or strength and fearlessness), Neva Emerine, Monitor.

The Oogechee Circle (Coming Daylight), Irene Turpen, Monitor.

Another dedication service is being planned for early in January. The circles are meeting once in two weeks during the school year. Progress is being made in achievements leading to ranks and honor awards. Mothers of the circle committee are lending most valuable assistance in the work of the girls.

Each circle is engaged also in projects designed to earn money to purchase uniforms. An Oriole Bazaar and Mother Goose Carnival are being planned for an early date.

The Seething Mind of Youth

Sit in the snug quiet of an undergraduate's room at midnight in Oxford, or listen to the talk of youth over a Lyons' tea-table in Leadenhall Street. Ask what is in the mind of the hot-headed youth of Delhi or the undergraduates of the flaming renaissance movement that radiates from the University of Peking through China and is transforming the leadership of the most numerous people in the world. Ask what the young Negroes, whose older brothers have come back furious from the war to demand equal rights with the whites, are saying. Look at the daughter and mother in an English home gazing at each other physically across three feet of dining table, but intellectually and spiritually across the deepest and widest chasm that has ever separated two generations. Read Rose Macaulay's Dangerous Ages, J. E. Buckrose's The Privet Hedge, and all the hundred other novels of today that reveal the heart of the new youth. Over all these ranges of life, and in every continent of the world today, you will find the seething mind of youth facing the new problems of the new world in a new way.—Basil Mathews, Zion's Herald, October 18, 1923.

Henry Richard Mills

A Biographical Sketch

By his sons, Arthur H. and Frank W. Mills

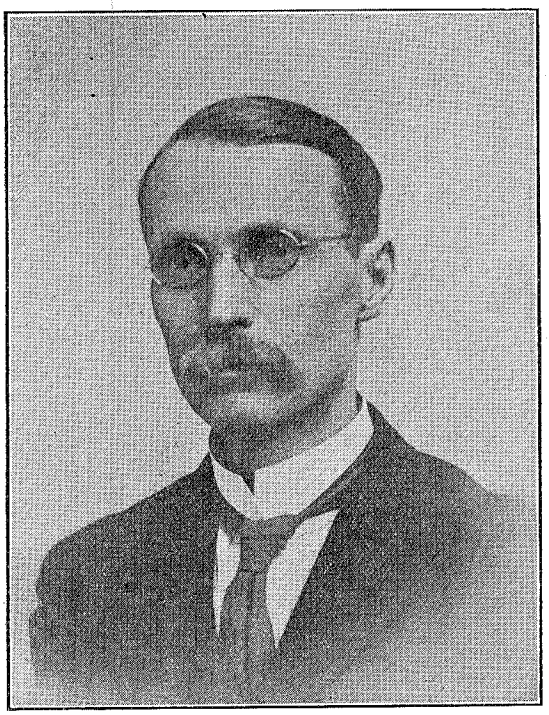
ON October 16, 1812, in the little pioneer settlement of Markham, Ontario, Canada, there was born to sturdy English parents a son, afterwards to be known among men as Cornelius Mills. When manhood's estate was reached he espoused a maiden of like stock named Nancy Barry and they twain assumed the duties of establishing home and family. In due time children came to them and about 1835, yielding to an impulse to seek new fields (or was it the promptings of that "divinity that shapes our ends"?) this little family removed to the United States, finding a haven in the northern part of Ohio, on the shores of Lake Erie, almost directly north of the village of Kirtland. The pioneering spirit that impelled them, also led them to find ample activities in this undeveloped section, that was not to see the advent of the railroad for almost fifteen years.

At that time the village of Kirtland was famed because a young and rapidly growing sect, hated and persecuted, and derisively alluded to as "Mormons," had, in the face of almost insurmountable obstacles, erected a temple, imposing and beautiful, consecrated to the worship of God.

THE RELIGIOUS FERVOR of this sect was naturally at this time glowing ardently. Its disciples were diligently proclaiming their new-found faith and were making converts rapidly. Their message could not fail to reach the ears of Cornelius and Nancy Mills. To them it was "the voice of the Good Shepherd," which they gladly heeded, and they were baptized into the church on New Year's Day of 1837, by Elder John Taylor. On October 29 of that same year Cornelius was ordained an elder and himself began to proclaim to others the doctrines of his faith.

In the midst of this religious zeal and almost under the shadow of the sacred temple, the family of Cornelius Mills grew. Other children came; first Charles, on October 16, 1842; and then on October 8, 1844, the subject of this sketch was born. We feel constrained to briefly include Charles in this article for the reason that he and his brother Henry were boon companions all their lives, associating continuously in many ways. It is believed that they were blessed as children within the hallowed walls of the Kirtland Temple. They both entered the gospel covenant at the same time and both served the church faithfully until the end of their lives. They loved each other like David and Jonathan of old; their lives continually manifested this attachment and "in death they were not divided," Henry following his beloved brother in just five days. Of them, Mr. William Southern, jr., editor of the Independence Examiner, touchingly wrote in his issue of October 11:

"Within the month two men have died in Independence whose lives meant much to their home city and yet they were modest and unassuming and not before the public and never sought or held public office. The men were brothers. Charles M. Mills was 91 years of age and Henry R. Mills was 89. The brothers came to Independence in 1884 and lived, worked and died here. Independence knew H. R. Mills perhaps the better of the two. He was engaged in business here for 41 years. Always a kindly, simple, friendly man, he made friends of all who came in contact with him. Both of these men were fine and useful citizens and their lives were in accordance with their professions."



HENRY RICHARD MILLS
As he appeared at the time of his later activity in the church.

IT WAS the peculiar lot of Cornelius and Nancy Mills, whose souls found happiness in their faith, to pass through a most trying religious experience. They witnessed the church of their ideals grow until it bade fair to fulfill their fondest hopes. Then, at its zenith, in 1844, they were saddened by the martyrdoms of the prophet and the patriarch of the church; a blow, that, unrealized, was to mean the shattering of all their expectations. They were forced to witness the gradual fading of all those precious hopes because of the dissensions that seized the church and the apparent disintegration of their beloved faith. To complete the dark picture they witnessed the devotees of the temple gradually forsake it and the sacred building itself ultimately dishonored and put to base uses.

It is no wonder that they could no longer find pleasure in surroundings that reminded them of buried hopes. Hence, about the year 1852, Cornelius and his family again sought another home and found it at Pittsfield, the seat of Pike County, in western Illinois. Here he established himself in his vocation of carpenter and builder, which he followed until incapacitated by an injury in his seventieth year, which ultimately brought about his death. Here he buried faithful Nancy in 1854 and here in 1863 he again heard "the voice of the Good Shepherd," and again allied himself with the church in the Reorganization. He thereafter "built up the work" in that vicinity, recalling the scattered Saints of that section; and when he died, June 11, 1884, the little chapel which he and his carpenter sons had built was crowded to capacity by his fellow townsmen, of all faiths, who came to do him reverence. Thus we leave him. We have felt he should be honored at such length because his life was so typical of many who passed through "the dark and cloudy day," and it had such great bearing upon the lives of his sons, that its influence should not be ignored.

THE BOYHOOD OF HENRY RICHARD MILLS was not unlike that of many other poor boys in like circumstances, easily recounted in "the short and simple annals of the poor." Bereft of his mother at the age of ten, he had much to do in shifting for himself, although his hard-working father largely supplied the lack of mother to his children and held the little family together until all attained maturity and ultimately occupied stations of honor in society. A short time with his father at the carpenter's bench; a few years at clerkships in various business enterprises; some miscellaneous ventures of his own, bring Henry to the year 1868, when, with the loan of $300 from his future father-in-law, he embarked in the retail business of merchandising such wares as books, stationery, art and fancy goods, home furnishings, etc., which vocation he was to follow persistently until his retirement in 1927. In this business he established a most enviable reputation for dependableness; and at the close of his business life he had the record of over fifty-nine years of honorable dealings, with never an obligation that was not fully met and discharged; and at his retirement he was the oldest business man in Independence.

It is but just at this time not to overlook one very important episode in the life of Henry R. Mills,—the period of the Civil War. Pike County, Illinois, is a part of that territory made illustrious by the activities of Abraham Lincoln, who was several times a visitor in that section, settled by pioneer stock from the East. "Honest Abe" had appeared in speeches at Pittsfield, and later he was here heard in one of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates. Thus the ideals of this great American were impressed upon the minds of this patriotic section. When the breaking out of the Civil War inflamed the nation its challenge was heard by the sons of Cornelius Mills. First Daniel, then John, then Charles, gave their service to the nation that its battles might be fought. Henry sought to do likewise but was forced to remain at home, partly on account of his youth and partly because his father felt that he could not afford to give more than three sons to his adopted country. But the urge of his country's call persisted with Henry and finally his pleadings won a reluctant consent and he enlisted in the army of the Union, in which his brothers were engaged. He was ordered to Camp Butler, at Springfield, Illinois, to which he repaired with many others, to await the ordinance of being "mustered in" the regular army. Sanitary conditions at this camp were very bad and before he could take the oath of soldierhood he was stricken with camp fever which almost finished his earthly career. When able to travel he was invalidated home. After recovery he again prepared to reenlist, when the news of Lee's surrender came and further enlistments were refused by the Government. But it must be remembered that he saw some military service, although in a different way. While his brothers were at the front, a "home guard" had been formed. Pike County was a border county touching Missouri and invasions were both threatened and feared. Because of his skill in playing the flute Henry was drafted as fifer for this little band. Several times he was called upon to use his ability to inspire the footsteps of this home guard, to repel threatened invasion.

In 1852, when Cornelius Mills came to Illinois, the church in its scattered condition existed only as a memory, in many respects an unsavory one. Unlike many of those whose hopes had been shattered, he did not cast his lot with any other church. However, his children were attracted to other churches and in his youth Henry received baptism into the Christian Church, at that time the strongest and most militant sect in that section. Herein he experienced the happiness of a church home until he, too, heard "the voice of the Good Shepherd." He gave to this church both loyalty and service; was chosen to various activities in it and earned for himself the esteem of its membership. In its popular society he formed many pleasant attachments. The chief of these was a young maiden, Barbara Emmett Hicks, the daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Daniel B. Hicks, of hardy Vermont stock, whose ancestors had served in the Revolutionary War, Colonel Hicks himself being an elder in the Christian Church and a banker of integrity and repute. Barbara gave to Henry her hand in marriage on February 25, 1869. For almost sixty-five years this pair lived together in unswerving devotion until death severed the bonds they always esteemed as holy. Of this union three children were born: Arthur Hicks Mills, Frank Westle Mills, and Mabel Mills Underwood, all of whom, with their mother, are surviving.

WE NOW COME to perhaps the most touching period of the life of Henry R. Mills. He was living most happily within a choice circle wherein friends and social privileges had multiplied and attendant pleasures were on every hand. A family of worth and renown had taken him into their hearts; a loving wife and cherished children were at his side; his business had prospered until he had attained a position of honor in the community. His whole future seemed most bright and promising. Into this serenity came unannounced a missionary of his father's faith: Mark H. Forscutt, a man of rare powers and one who has had a most interesting place in the annals of the Reorganization. Preaching services had been arranged for in one of the churches of the town and because these services were of the church of his father, Henry Mills casually went one evening to hear the speaker, who was reported to be unusually interesting. How seldom do we realize what the consequences of a casual action may sometimes be! The sermon of that evening contained a message that reached the consciousness of Henry Mills; which made him think seriously and ultimately investigate. He, too, in his turn, recognized "the voice of the Good Shepherd." Needless to name the results. On the 16th day of April, 1876, he turned his face away from the sweet allurements of social standing and renown, business prospects and promising success, and gave his life to that sect that was "everywhere spoken against," being baptized and confirmed by Elder Jackson Goodale, a faithful pioneer of the gospel in that section.

What were the results of this momentous (to many mistaken) step? To some of his former friends his name became almost anathema; he was summarily ousted from his place and activities in the Christian Church; one evening a mob, inflamed by potations from the local dramshops, gathered in front of his place of business and with vile oaths and epithets taunted him, defying him to come out into the street, boasting what they would do to "that damned Mormon" should he do so. Even the family of his beloved wife almost forsook him, offering to her a haven of refuge should she choose to return to the parental home. But NO! she, too, was made of the fiber of which the strength of the church is composed and refused to leave her place at his side. She herself was in time to hear "the voice of the Good Shepherd" and in eighteen months from then, when another faithful servant of the church, Thomas W. Smith, brought the gospel message to Pittsfield, she also turned her face from the things her husband had sacrificed and was baptized into the church on November 9, 1877, by Elder Smith, confirmed by him and her husband's father.

IT cost something in those days to become a member of this church. Pike County, Illinois, lying along the Mississippi River, is only a short distance south of Nauvoo and Carthage, where the distressing scenes and too often shameful occurrences of the church's "dark and cloudy day" were matters of common knowledge. He who forsook the popular faiths of that day and entered into a church so laden with approbrium voluntarily took upon himself all the disgrace attached to such a disreputable cause. But Henry and Barbara Mills dared all this; and they in time lived to see the name of Saint a thing of credit among men.

Before we pass to a later period it is well to note the influence that Mark H. Forscutt had upon the lives of these devoted Saints. Elder Forscutt was a musician of material attainment. He had even in those days done much for the hymnology of the church and wherever he had labored had stimulated "the service of song in the house of the Lord," giving to the churches where he visited some valuable material, both poetic and musical, for hymns, some of which have become very dear to the church. Henry Mills, himself a musical enthusiast of some considerable culture, was fired by the zeal of "Uncle Mark" and he, too, turned his attention to the creation of some musical settings for some of the church's hymns. Thus there came to be given to the church

Great Expectations

GEE, LARRY, but you look swell! Like the old lady, Martha Washington, herself!" Greg's scrutiny was thoroughly appreciative. "Turn around—I want to see you—"

"No, no, you must kiss my hand, sir. Back in the days of our Colonies, gentlemen never rushed in upon ladies with 'Gee, but you look swell!' Remember your manners," chided the girl.

"Oh, my fair lady, thou lookest wonderful, beautiful, nay even magnificent, most intrepid—"

"Do hush!" and Larry laughed gaily, excitedly, "you sound as if you were talking of the Washington Monument instead of me." Gracefully she pirouetted across Eldred Hampton's living room. Her costume was becoming. No one could blame Greg for all his enthusiasm, least of all Eldred and Doc who watched them with interest. With her silvery wig of real hair, the tightly-basqued, full-skirted dress of delicately figured orchid taffeta, billowy with trimmings of gold cloth and lace, and her mother's pearls at her throat, a necklace she wore only on great occasions—the young woman resembled an old-fashioned cameo.

"Prithee, kind sir—did they use prithee that way in Washington's time?—" she whispered from behind an ivory-handled fan of gold silk, "when do we start?"

"Anon, my dear damsel," and Greg struck so dramatic a pose that Doc chuckled.

"You make something of a figure yourself, Greg," he observed, "where did you get all the riggin'?"

"Rented it—how do you like all the fuss and feathers?"

"It's gorgeous, Greg, makes you look so romantic!" Larry's gray eyes danced; "but I ask you—did the men of that time actually dress like that?"

"Sure they did," from Doc. "The men used to be the veritable cock robins of the species known as homo sapiens."

"I see where they got the sap part," growled Greg as he struggled to adjust a bunch of lace and some ribbons at his throat; "and then they have the nerve to say the world isn't getting better!"

GREG was elaborately clad. The black velvet coat, waistcoat, and knee-length breeches fitted him well. There were silver buckles at his knees, a chain or two on his waistcoat, ribbons and bows galore. A sword dangled from his waist, and the colonial hat with its stiff frame, black cloth, and bit of lace defied description.

"Where did you get it all?" Larry urged Doc's question.

"Rented it. It's costing me four dollars to wear all these trappings." He gestured distastefully. "And if you think I'm comfortable in them, you're funny. Why," there was exasperation in his tone, "I feel as if I would suddenly wake up and find myself bouncing about in my underclothes I warn you, Larry, if I act conspicuously tonight, it will be because I feel that way."

"You look no less conspicuous than General George Washington himself," and smiling, Doc resumed his reading.

"Lookee, what Mother Eldred loaned me to wear!" and the girl displayed a bracelet of curious workmanship. "It's an heirloom. I'm almost afraid to wear it, but she says it's all right. And it does add to my costume, doesn't it?"

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

In spite of her determination not to marry Greg, Larry finds herself unable to resist accepting his invitations to go with him. It is a struggle between her love and what appears to her to be the wisest course.

"It's a beauty," Greg was examining the band on her wrist. Strands of gold of great fineness were braided together to form a design that was barely distinguishable, the head of a lady, a rose or two, all inclosed by diminutive wreaths. The ornament circled Larry's white wrist, and there was something about the glow of the rich metal and the carefully wrought workmanship which suggested antiquity, art, selectiveness.

"My mother's mother brought it from England seventy-five years ago," Mrs. Hampton explained. "It has been in the family, passing from eldest daughter to eldest daughter, for more than two hundred years."

"I—I don't believe I'd better wear it, Mother Eldred." Larry was toying with the beautiful thing, longing in her eyes. "If something were to happen to it, I'd never get over it. It's such a valuable piece. I love it!"

"There, there, child, I thought we had that all settled once. It will be perfectly safe. What could possibly happen to it?"

"I might lose it—that fastener is old—"

"Nonsense, my dear, go ahead and think nothing about it. I've worn it a number of times. It adds so much to your dress, don't you think it does, Greg?"

"It goes with the dress all right."

"Do you think it's safe, Greg?" Larry seriously questioned.

"Well—I don't see what could happen to it. You'd feel it if it were to slip off, wouldn't you?"

"I guess so." She slipped the ornament back into place, and regarded it caressingly.

"Did you bring the coach and four?" Doc was feeling the spirit of the occasion.

"That I did not," rejoined Greg. "They rode horseback in those days. The horses await at the curb."

"Horses!" mocked Larry. "You—"

"Don't you remember reading, my dear, in the historical annals of our delightful country that our first Presidents rode horseback to get inaugurated? Or did I read my history backwards?"

"Of course they did, but that was because Washington—the city, I mean—was nothing in those days but a little out-of-the-way country place surrounded by dirt roads or no roads at all. Ordinarily they rode in carriages in those days; I insist upon it—at least for the ladies."

"Mebbe so, mebbe so. I guess then it is the coach and four that are outside. Got all your bags and baggage?"

Then they were gone calling back gay good-byes.

FROM AN UPSTAIRS WINDOW Sallie Ruth Blaine watched them out of sight, and turned back to her jigsaw puzzle with a sigh of self-pity:

"Some people get all the breaks!" she announced with the air of a martyr being led to the stake. "I never get to go *any*where or see *any*thing or *any*body, because it's, 'You belong to the church and shouldn't do that," and 'Latter Day Saints don't approve of such things,' and all that! They do, mother—I know they do!" The pretty lips were not pretty now; they were pouting. "Someday I'm going to do it too, you watch!"

"I don't like to cross you, Sallie Ruth," Mrs. Blaine's lips tightened as she spoke; "but there are times when I must. Mother knows best. You are altogether too young—"

"Too young!" derided the girl, "too young for what, I'd like to know? Other

www.LatterDayTruth.org

girls my age get to go out to dances and to parties. Their mothers—"

"Sallie Ruth, you're being rude, my dear!" severely, and then wheedlingly: "You know, I promised you a new dress —"

"You bet I know it," the girl laughed unpleasantly: "That's the thing that's keeping me home tonight when Playland is giving a colonial masked ball. Why, Mother, Rex asked me to go weeks ago, and I had to say—I can't, Rex, mother won't let me! It's a jip I call it, but as long as I'm getting a new dress out of the deal—" and she resumed her seat without finishing her sentence and calmly began to hum as she selected another piece and tentatively fitted it into her puzzle.

"You wouldn't dare be so rude if Carmen were home," sighed her mother.

Downstairs Doc wandered to the piano, took up a piece of Larry's music and idly turned the leaves before he spoke: "I really didn't expect Larry to go to that affair tonight."

"She hasn't told me a thing, but judging from their actions I believe there's been a bit of unpleasantness between her and Greg, and I wouldn't be surprised but what she feels a little obligated to go," surmised Eldred. "I believe right at the last, if it hadn't been for the excitement of the new and different and the appeal of that costume, she would rather not have gone, but Larry's only twenty-two, Doc, and she likes parties and fun, and besides I'm sure she promised Greg sometime back that she would go."

"That's odd, I was under the impression that he was the one who wasn't so anxious to go. They don't go to public dances much, do they?"

"I think not. Larry has a pretty well developed Latter Day Saint conscience, but once in awhile when she's feeling independent, she just up and shows 'em—meaning the church. Funny, isn't it, how long it takes us to educate our young people out of saying 'them' when they think of the church?"

"Lots of us old people do the same thing, my dear," and Doc stooped over her chair for a long moment, looking into Eldred's eyes. To him she was beautiful. To her he was handsome, gracious. And now they simply looked at each other with the understanding that is given mature individuals who have suffered much.

"Of course there are," Eldred Hampton was matter of fact, "but somehow I expect more of these youngsters than I do of our generation, Doc."

"Do you think your expectations are justified?" He sank comfortably into his reading chair. "By that question, Eldred, I mean that while we may expect more of our children today because of their superior advantages don't you think we fail to consider the mounting list of disadvantages? Why, I feel sorry for the little city fellow today. He has so little to test his grit. He hasn't anything to do—no wood to chop, no chores, no particular errands. Has to hire himself into a club to play tennis to keep his muscles fit, or go in for athletics in high school, and later on he has to take on the gymnasium and the golf links. He leads a sort of delicatessen existence—everything is done for him, prepared for him, canned for him. He doesn't have the chance nowadays to get his hands down into the earth, to have pets, to learn how to cherish some honest-to-goodness hardship. No, instead, his mother lets him run the streets; he goes to the movies for a thrill, or a prize fight; he drifts. He has no resistance to grow against—and do you know what that does to a tree? It causes the tree to spread its roots out on or near the surface of the ground, and the first little wind that comes along, takes the tree down to the ground. On the other hand if the tree, from its sapling stage up, has to contend against severe winds, it sends its roots down into the earth, and has a sure hold."

"That's all true, Doc, but these young people about us—they're so lovely, so promising—"

"And so pathetic!" he moodily appended.

"Don't say that!—"

"Oh, yes, they are—pathetic. I love them, from the bottom of my heart I love them. I admire their youth and almost envy them their energy and enthusiasm and opportunities. They seem promising now, but in five years, well, five years will tell the story—"

Seeing that he was in no mood for arguing, Mrs. Hampton did not answer. Presently the man continued:

"Dreaming of the moon! chasing rainbows! searching, sear—" his voice broke. After another pause: "They'll never find it, Eldred—nothing but a world of things!" His voice was contemptuous.

"Oh, Doc, dear, you mustn't talk that way," Eldred spoke softly. "You mustn't. They're really not pathetic—it's because you're blue! Why," and she gave a shaky little laugh, "some of them are wonderful—think of John!"

"But, John's one in a thousand. These others aren't like him."

"Give them time, give them time enough to find themselves. They'll surprise you," she counseled.

"I hope you're right. I hope they will." Wearily he dropped his head against the back of his chair, and closed his eyes.

Mrs. Hampton regarded him tenderly for some moments. At last she put aside her magazine, arose, and went to him.

Gently she laid her hand on his forehead, and he put a hand over it: "Tired tonight, dearest?" she queried.

"Oh—the same—old—thing," he answered with an effort. "Some times when I think of it, Eldred, it just gets me—it just get me! I think I can't go on with it in my life. . . . And then I think of you, Eldred, brave, patient, true to your trust, and it makes me see what a coward I really am!"

"Don't talk that way, Doc, don't," she pleaded. "You're the bravest man I know. I'll always admire you for what you've done—are doing. And someday—" she did not finish her sentence, but stooped and kissed his forehead where her hand had rested.

At that, his arms drew her down, and he kissed her lips. "Yes, someday," he repeated, smiling wanely.

Crucifying Christ

The most interesting thing that one saw, or could have seen, at the World's Fair, in Chicago, in 1893, was not the evidence of the world's material advance. It was a simple little painting that I watched man after man, woman after woman, hour after hour during the days of the Exposition, study and ponder over. It was a picture of the crucifixion; only the city was not Jerusalem, it was Paris. Here on one side, on the brow of a hill, standing beyond the smokestacks and the turmoil of a modern city, around the foot of the cross, not in the dress of Palestine, but in the artisan's dress of our present day, stood the disciples while the women took down the body. Over the brow of the hill, with clenched hands, looking down over the city, was Simon Peter, feeling all the horror of pity and wrath and shame at the city that had crucified the Lord. The crucifixion is not only an event of nineteen hundred years ago in a far-off land, in Jerusalem. The cross of Christ is raised everywhere, up and down the streets of our modern cities. We crucify the Son of God afresh today. We do it by denying His claim to be the Son of God. We let ourselves down thus to the very level and ground of the men who actually crucified Him nineteen hundred years ago. "And every spirit that confesseth not Jesus is not of God; and this is the spirit of the antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it cometh; and now it is in the world already" (1 John 4:3). We lend ourselves to that spirit of antichrist when, like Pilate, we wash our hands of Him, saying, "He is of no concern in our lives." Thus we crucify the Son of God anew. We crucify Him by repudiating His Spirit, and we repudiate His Spirit by indifference to truth, by intolerance, by our hardness of heart.

"Peace does not mean the end of all our striving,
Joy does not mean the drying of our tears;
Peace is the power that comes to souls arriving
Up to the light where God himself appears."

How Children Learn to Pray

IV.—Group Participation

By Harley A. Morris

WORSHIP can never be indulged in by proxy. One may partake of the spirit of worship while another acts as mouthpiece, but attention must be given individually to the prayer. Children seldom, if ever lend themselves to the service in this manner, however. For this reason, when the leader habitually does all the praying, prayer becomes a bare ritual rather than an expression of group worship. It becomes, therefore, a major objective of the junior church to teach the child to pray and to afford him ample opportunity to do so.

The average leader finds himself confronted with three general types of children: (1) the forward child, religiously inclined, who enters into the service enthusiastically; (2) the backward child, shy and bashful to the point of giving an impression of stupidity; (3) the impulsive child, who engages in church work and everything else with zeal one moment and irresponsiveness the next—who chafes at inactivity. In working with these three groups, the tendency is to let the forward child take the lead. On him the leader heaps the greater portion of the work because he does everything so gracefully. He becomes the "showbird" of the flock. The idea is implied that the program is adequate to the development of all the youngsters to this level if they were normal.

The results of this method are obvious. The tendency of the forward group is toward pride, self-satisfaction and independence. They lose consciousness of the need of God in their lives. Too frequently they become worthless, or nearly so, in church work because of the formation of this superiority-complex in their character.

The backward group, as they grow older, retire even more deeply behind the protective armor of their reserve. Whatever potentialities they may have possessed are smothered. They become passive members, contributing with their finances and presence at the service, but losing the thrill of personal participation.

The active, impulsive youngster, instead of finding free expression in the work of the church, is driven from it to outside interest. With this group the tendency is away from the church rather than toward it. Yet they are the type that, if they are held, will make a great contribution to the work.

How shall the junior leader organize his program so as to instill into these various minds an appreciation of the spirit of worship? There are methods and means without number.

One of the finest features for the promotion of group participation in worship is the sentence prayer. With the introduction or salutation of the prayer by the leader, it becomes a not too difficult task for each child to contribute one simple sentence to the petition. The children enjoy it, too, and for all it offers an opportunity to branch out occasionally into more difficult forms of prayer. There are, however, certain dangerous tendencies in the use of the sentence prayer that need to be guarded against. The first of these is the rut of repetition. One frequently hears a child repeat the same sentence over and over each Sunday. Similarly one frequently hears adults repeat catch phrases in their prayers. The tendency is the same in either case. When prayer becomes a habit it ceases to be worship.

An effective method of combating repetition is to talk quietly and briefly on the theme just preceding the sentence prayer. Point out the relationship of the theme to our lives and suggest how our prayers may bear a relationship to the theme. For instance, if the theme is faith, we may pray for faith in God, in others, or in ourselves; we may pray for stronger faith, or a living faith—all meaning the same thing, perhaps, but expressed in different language. The result is more thought in their praying, as well as improvement in their powers of expression. Always, every encouragement must be given to the backward and slower-thinking children. A moment's meditation just preceding the prayer will give opportunity to all to prepare to take part. The leader needs frequently to check closely on the responses in the sentence prayer, to be sure that all join with some regularity.

Occasional variations relieve any monotony that may ensue from frequent use of the sentence prayer, and, too, give new prayer experiences to the individual. On one occasion, for instance, ask a junior to begin the prayer and another to conclude it when all have contributed. Again, you may use the sentence, prayer for closing instead of opening the service, explaining before hand the essential difference between an opening and a closing prayer. Another variation is to select three or more juniors to collaborate in the prayer. It may be wise, for the first few times, to suggest before hand the points each one should cover in his portion. So one may begin the prayer and offer thanks for past blessings. The second member continues with a prayer on behalf of the membership, general church, etc., while the third prays for the present service, and closes the prayer. These and other means will suggest themselves to the leader as effective toward a growing junior participation in the worship period.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Constipation

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

THE EXPERIENCE of many physicians and those engaged exclusively in medical research have learned that man suffers from diseases brought about as a "penalty of civilization," not the least and one of the most common is constipation. Unless there is a thorough emptying of the intestinal canal every day, constipation exists. Those who have sedentary habits and an improper diet are most frequently affected. Children on account of their activity are not so prone to have it. Under proper diet the bowels should act several times a day. The beginning of peristalsis starts with the act of chewing and swallowing the food which ends in defecation. The chief causes of constipation is insufficient intake of water, concentrated meat diet and the eating of soft cooked foods and the lack of cellulose or waste material. In all cases special attention should be given to securing sufficient abundance of bulky foods which will stimulate the sluggish intestinal tract. Many of our refined foods provide too little bulk. Primitive man had no such trouble as he consumed foods in their natural state. The consumption of foods rich in vegetable fibers, such as cabbage, lettuce, asparagus, string beans, dried beans, celery, prunes, spinach, raisins, figs, onions and fresh fruits eaten with their skins. Raw vegetables served with olive oil, which has an added laxative effect, are very efficient. Two or three tablespoonfuls of bran added to the daily menu is a safe and effective means of counteracting abnormal elimination. Bran may also be used in the form of muffins, bran bread or crackers. When cereals are used care should be taken that the bran has not been removed such as is found in wheat, rolled or cut oats. Bran is not only excellent for its bulk or fiber but it also contains the vitamin B and iron. Vitamin B aids in normal elimination by its ability to increase intestinal tone. Iron prevents anemia by building up the always needed good red blood and if well tolerated should be added to the diet. Foods having an abundance of vegetable acids, with the exception of blackberries, such as oranges, lemons, tomatoes and other fruits and fruit juices are very valuable. The fruit juices should be taken early in the morning or late at night. Those having a weak or embarrassed heart action should avoid gas forming foods such as onions, cauliflower, spinach, honey and carbonated water should also be included. In such cases fruit juices and bran are preferable to bulky vegetables. Water, especially if taken in the morning on an empty stomach, unless there is an extreme lack of muscular tone, is a valuable aid to digestive function. In addition to increasing the bulk of food, lubrication in some cases is necessary on account of a dryness of the mucous membranes. Mineral oil "purified liquid paraffin" which is not a food, softens the feces, and accelerates the movement of the fecal mass. Some advise one half ounce to an ounce should be taken at each meal. But I have been in the habit of prescribing one or two ounces to be taken upon retiring in order to prevent leakage and continual coating of the bowel which might interfere with nutrition. The oil has no drug effect and is not fattening. Agar-agar—"Japanese sea weed" is a form of cellulose similar to that found in many foods while mineral oil is simply a mechanical lubricant. The Japanese sea weed can be procured in any drug store. The granulated form is preferred. A teaspoonful or two may be taken three times daily and mixed with any kind of food but is usually taken with cereals or milk.

Somewhat recently there has been placed on the market a seed resembling flax seed and is known as plantago-psyllium seeds. They have no drug effect and have been found very beneficial in long standing or obstinate cases of constipation. Their stimulating and mucilaginous qualities are a valuable aid to the lubricating effects of mineral oil, bulky foods and agar-agar. There is nothing disagreeable in this remedy and in mild cases two teaspoonfuls once or twice daily will be all that is required. Some prefer to take them in hot water allowing them to stand for a few minutes until the mucilaginous condition develops to facilitate swallowing. In stubborn cases it may be necessary to take as much as two tablespoonfuls once daily.

The enema should be regarded as an emergency method and not regularly employed. It affords rapid evacuation of the lower bowel. Usually only a small amount of tepid water should be used. The patient being in a reclining position, the hips slightly raised and the water bag elevated about two feet. As a rule it is best to secure the advice of a physician when it is necessary to resort to this method of relief. It is easy to produce an enema habit.

A great deal more might be said concerning this disease, but space forbids. However, I wish to emphasize the proper posture of the body, the avoidance of purgatives on account of their tendency to irritation. Many people bring about this condition by exaggerating their bowel defects and keeping their minds focused on them. It is very important not to worry about bowel sluggishness although it is also important not to be careless about it. Some cases may require surgical or medical attention but it may be said with absolute confidence that in the majority of cases a fair trial of the measures suggested will bring relief.

QUESTION TIME

Why did 1 Timothy 5: 23 advise the use of wine, while Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1 disapproves its use?

Paul's advice to Timothy, cited above, was evidently occasioned by Timothy's "infirmities," which seem to have been concerned with his stomach. It therefore was apparently advised as a remedy, and not as a common beverage. The fact shows that Timothy was not a habitual user of wine. Many things are recommended to individuals when in need of medical care which would not be helpful to those who are in good health.

The advice in the Doctrine and Covenants is preceded by the warning:

"In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, . . . that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together to offer up your sacraments before him."—86: 1.

This warning is against the common beverage use of wine or strong drink, because of the "evils and designs" of evil men. This agrees with section 26: 1, which warns the Saints not to purchase wine or strong drink of their enemies. Commonly the wine sold commercially is intoxicating, and is therefore a strong drink, though not so strong as whiskey, brandy, and some other distilled liquors. Conditions in the "last days" are evidently such as to require this warning, and the efforts of the federal and various state governments to protect the people from adulterated foods, drinks, and drugs, were caused by the evil designs of men, many of whom did not hesitate to use poisons in the goods sold to the public. No one knows how many have died from the effects of such adulterants, but it is certain that it would be many thousands of people.

Could anyone be a "prophet, seer, and revelator" to the church except its president?

While it must be recognized that God will speak through whom he will, yet there is prescribed order in his ways. As early as September 1830 a revelation was given which declared:

"No one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; . . . for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead."—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.

This clearly provides that the president or prophet of the church properly called and installed is God's chosen instrument through whom revelations shall be given to the church, and it also provides for his successor. However, it appears that Hyrum Smith, who had been associated with Joseph as one of the presidency of the church, was at one time appointed to the office of patriarch of the church, and as such he was to be "a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph." (107: 29).

Clearly expressed, as this language is, yet the question is a mooted one as to whether or not this was designed to apply solely in his office as patriarch over the whole church, which provided that:

"He shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people, that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curses shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—107: 29.

It seems to be generally held that the powers conferred upon Hyrum applied specially to the duties of his office as patriarch, perhaps with the further duty of voicing the word of the Lord if required, in case an emergency should arise by the sudden death or other incapacity of the appointed president.

What was the "abomination of desolation" in the holy place, in Matthew 24: 15?

This text refers to the prophecy of Daniel, by Jesus, who warned his people of Judea to "flee into the mountains." It is believed that this was fulfilled at the time Titus with his army beseiged Jerusalem. At this time thousands starved and desolation was prevalent everywhere in Jerusalem, called the "holy city." Luke 21: 20 refers to the same event, and calls Jerusalem by name. Josephus states that the Romans brought idols and sacrificed to them in the temple. It is recorded that the Christians heeded this warning, and fled from Jerusalem, so that not one of them perished there.

Finds Opportunities to Minister

My wife and I miss the regularity of church services enjoyed in our old home branch, Scranton, Pennsylvania, but circumstances being as they were, we accepted the invitation of our son and daughter, given some months ago, to come to Maine.

Certainly this is one of the most striking and inspiringly beautiful parts of God's creation. There is beauty in every part of this broken coastline.

We were cheered by an invitation from Elder E. F. Robertson, president of Western Maine District, to attend the reunion this summer at Brooksville. Then came a kind and encouraging letter from Patriarch U. W. Greene, which made mention of our previous travels in England and Wales during his mission to Europe. He stated that he thought we would be appreciated by the Saints in Maine, and this assurance has proved true. This letter revived old memories of Brooksville, Jonesport, Deer and Little Deer Islands, and Stonington.

Many of the Saints are anxious to have us visit them, offering to fetch us part of the way in their boats and with other means of conveyance. Brother and Sister Linscott, of Ellsworth, took us to South Addison in their car, enabling us to attend the Eastern District conference, October 21 and 22. We were largely among fishermen and farmers and their hospitality made us feel that we were more than welcome.

Attendance was good, the people gathering by means of boats, buses, and other kinds of vehicles. The presidents of these districts, Brothers Newman Wilson and E. F. Robertson, are very good leaders, and an attractive feature of both the reunion and conferences is the brevity of the concise prayers and testimonies offered.

These meetings and get-togethers are made possible through such stanch people as the Eatons, Landers, Billingses, and others. The names Greene and Sheehy are household words in Maine. Everyone seems to hold these brothers in esteem.

We receive the little paper, The Southern England and Wales District Herald, from London, England, and Brother J. W. Rushton's attempts to help the work in England and Wales cheer us; also the progress which is being made in Ireland. We wish Brother Fred Davies success in southern Wales. We are inspired by the loyalty of a few good people there.

We have an intense desire to minister in the name of Jesus, and one brother has said that wherever there is a desire to minister, the opportunity will be given. We wish to be loyal and dutiful.

Though Isolated, Enjoys the Gospel

Dear Saints, I wish to tell you what the gospel means to me. I love it, and also enjoy reading the church publications. I live so far away from any branch, that all I learn of the church is what I read from the Herald or other publications.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be a faithful Saint.

MRS. MARY M. THOMAS.

BELLAIRE, MICHIGAN, R. R. 3.

Finds Progressive Group at Hammond

Present circumstances compel me to be away from my home in Independence and my family, and though I am homesick at times, the good Saints here in Hammond do much to cheer and encourage me. There are a number of Independence Saints here too, many of them endeavoring to build up the branch.

Brother Roy Smith, the pastor, and his wife are a lovely couple. His father and mother helped to organize the branch. There are many other fine church members here.

I miss the Herald if I do not get a copy each week. I subscribe for it to be sent to my home address, and Sister Hazel Smith has it here for sale each Sunday, so I buy the single copies for my personal use. I enjoy reading the sayings of "The Pigeon." The instructions of our President and others of the editors are very helpful as also are the many stories, letters and sermons. All help me to live nearer my Redeemer.

Whenever I have the opportunity to tell the gospel story I do my best to uphold the truth. My prayer is for the church, that we may all grow Zionward.

Long-isolated Member Keeps in Touch With the Church

The Lord has been good to me, blessing me in the many ways which bring joy to those who try to be faithful and put their trust in him.

It is almost sixty years since I was baptized into the church, and I cannot remember the time when we were without the church papers in my father's home, nor in my own home. Not only the Herald, Autumn Leaves, as it was then called, and Ensign, but the quarterlies came, that I might study and teach my children the gospel lessons. Most of my years have been isolated from the church and its privileges, yet it was my desire to keep in touch with the work of God.

The Herald brings much that is inspiring and encouraging to its readers. I enjoy the good articles, especially the testimonies and sermons, the inspired pieces given by the servants of God. These feed my hungry soul, and since I am afflicted with deafness so that I do not get the good out of spoken sermons when it is my privilege to attend church services, I feel that I could not do without the Herald.

My prayer is for the unity of the Saints and the progress of God's work.

MRS. J. L. SCHALL.

Finds the Herald a Comfort

I have taken the Herald about fifty years and I want to read it as long as I can see. It is a great comfort to me. I am past eighty-two years of age.

Notes From Southern Indiana Missionary

The conference at Indianapolis, August 12 and 13, proved a blessing to all who were present. Sister Dutton joined me there and has been with me at the following places, where we have held services or visited. From the conference we went to Derby, Indiana in the car of Brother Leonard Glenn who, with his son, Edson, was present at the conference services.

We spent a week at Gerald school, and another week at the Saints' church south of Derby, then about eight days at Millstone School.

Then came a call from Louisville, Kentucky, for me to preach the funeral sermon of Elder William N. Hanner, a faithful worker, who is greatly missed by Louisville Branch.

Following that we visited a few scattered members at Cannelton, and from there were taken to Sulphur by Mr. Cleatis Lewis. At Sulphur I preached one sermon, and W. G. Maymon took us to Dry Run. There I continued the meetings begun at Sulphur over a week and another Sunday. Services the following week were conducted at a schoolhouse four miles south of Milltown. While staying at the home of Brother and Sister Joseph Maymon, I had the pleasure of baptizing their two daughters, Alma and Bertha.

I opened meetings in the church occupied by the Saints at Marengo, the next week, and the following seven days was at Byrneville, where Sister Lee Byrne was baptized.

Another week of services in the Saints' rented hall at New Albany, and on October 20, I was called to Lancaster, Wisconsin, to the funeral of Sister Lacretia Pennock. Four days later I was again in Louisville. On Monday, October 30, I preached the funeral sermon of the sixteen-months-old baby girl of Brother and Mrs. Joseph Shanks. That night I attended the special business meeting of Louisville Branch, and next day left for Birdseye, Indiana, where we visited Brother and Sister John W. Thrasher. On Wednesday we came to Petersburg, where we had preaching at night in the home of Brother and Sister Solomon Shoaf. Our next stop will be at Washington at the home of J. D. Harbstreit, where we will engage in meetings for a week.

The autumn has gone quickly. I hope that all scattered members as well as those living in branches will remember that November 12 to 26 is time for special instructions as to the law of the church, and from November 26 to December 3, Saints and friends of Southern Indiana District will comply with the financial law of the church, paying tithing, making offerings, and helping in every way. The church is in great need of all that can be done. And as we near the time when we celebrate the birth of the Christ, let us remember him who gave all that we might live.

If present arrangements work out, we hope to leave for our home at Galva, Illinois, the Monday before Thanksgiving. This will be my first time at home since early in May. I have had much to do.

I had the pleasure of meeting Apostle Paul M. Hanson at Louisville, October 20, but because I was suddenly called to Wisconsin, our conference was short. All the Saints who heard him Friday and Sunday were much pleased and edified.

May the good Lord bless the church and especially at this Christmas time, that we may all remember the Great Giver, and serve in his name.

JASPER O. DUTTON.

PETERSBURG, INDIANA.

Prolonging the "Cloudy Days"

Apostle J. F. Garver occupied the pulpit Saturday night at our recent conference (Rock Island District, Illinois,) and also Sunday morning. He described the "night" in which we are now laboring and the hope that "the morning cometh." Never has the church needed our support as now, and if we say, "We will wait until the financial difficulties have been adjusted, and then we will help again," we are helping to prolong the cloudy days. Numbers who can afford to buy the luxuries of the world often insist that they cannot pay one cent to the church. Is it not time that we "Keep the Law"?

MRS. JOHN C. STIEGEL.

MOLINE, ILLINOIS.

Turn to the Future

Think not or dwell longingly upon the wonderful meetings and blessings of the past, but turn to the future. It grows brighter day by day. God lives and is leading his people. Let us follow where he leads. His power is just as great as in the past; his arm is not shortened, and his love is not lessened. Let us, Saints, press forward in the cause of Christ to the redemption of Zion.

S. E. HORTON.

CASEVILLE, MICHIGAN.

The Testimony of Nephi

Hearken unto these words, and believe in Christ. And if ye shall believe in Christ, ye will believe in these words; for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men that they should do good. And if they are not the words of Christ, judge ye: for Christ will show unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar; and ye shall know that I have been commanded of him to write these things, notwithstanding my weakness: and I pray the father in the name of Christ, that many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom, at that great and last day.—2 Nephi 15: 11-15.

Request Prayers

Hazel Gallingesg, of Massena, New York, requests prayers for her mother who has been ill since July 4. The family wishes Saints to pray that she may be relieved of suffering and restored to health and strength. They have faith in the healing power of the Master. The sufferer has sought the help of several physicians but relief has not come to her.

Reynold Billings, now in the Central Maine Sanitorium at Fairfield, Maine, desires the prayers of the Saints throughout the church. He is a Latter Day Saint and his home is Deer Isle, Maine. He wishes all his brothers and sisters to unite their faith with his and pray God that he may have a speedy recovery from the disease which afflicts him.

Worship Suggestions for December

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "BE BORN INTO CHRIST."

FIRST SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3

Theme: "Pray for His Coming."

Prelude: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," N. S. H., 169; S. H., 187.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5; down to . . . "nigh."

(S) Hymn Response: "Redeemer of Israel," N. S. H., 190; S. H., 158.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 108: 7, 8.

Hymn: "Come, O Thou King of Kings," N. S. H., 179; S. H., 251, verses 1 and 2.

Talk:

It has been said that to a Christian the history of the world may be summed up in three phrases: "He is coming!" "He is here!" "He is coming again!" So much does Christ mean to his followers that all experience, and all of history is interpreted in terms of devotion to him. To us who are endeavoring to follow Christ, this is not merely an intellectual definition of fact. It is much more. It is a passionate desire to see him and be with him, that urges us to pray for his coming.

If the desire to be with the Lord is really within us, it will stimulate us to purify our lives, that his companionship can be enjoyable to us; for no one can remain in the presence of Christ and fail to do something about his sins. When we pray for his coming, our prayers should be uttered with the consciousness that we are striving to make his advent possible. Only then is our prayer really answered.

(S) Hymn: "Hosannahs Now Shall Sound," N. S. H., 179, verses 3 and 4.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5. "Behold I say unto you."

(S) Benediction.

SECOND SUNDAY, DECEMBER 10

Theme: "Watch for His Coming."

Instrumental Prelude: "Glory Be to God on High!" N. S. H., 114; S. H., 144.

Call to Worship: Isaiah 11: 1-4.

Response by Congregation: Psalm 119: 81.

Prayer.

(S) Hymn: "Joy to the World," N. S. H., 170; S. H., 141, verses 1, 3, 4.

Scripture Reading: The testimony of Isaiah. Isaiah 53: 1-6.

Hymn: "Love Divine," N. S. H., 131; Z. P., 143, verse 1.

Scripture Reading: The testimony of Alma. Alma 3: 83-89.

Hymn: "Love Divine," verse 2.

Scripture Reading: The testimony of John. Revelation 7: 9-17.

(S) Hymn: "Love Divine," verses 3 and 4.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

(S) Benediction: 2 Thessalonians 2: 16, 17.

THIRD SUNDAY, DECEMBER 17

Theme: "Worship the Son."

(A Gift Service.)

Prelude: "There's a Song in the Air," N. S. H., 138.

Preparation for Worship: Congregation sing one verse, No. 137, N. S. H., "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," Z. P., No. 140.

Leader Reads: Luke 2: 8-14.

(S) Hymn: "O Come All Ye Faithful," N. S. H., 145.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 3: 1-11.

Talk:

Very often we think of Christmas as a time to pay homage to each other by giving and receiving gifts: sometimes giving with the anticipation of receiving at least as much as we give. No motive can be further from the spirit which moved God to give the best he had for us. He gave Christ for our sakes, because we needed enriching. He had no thought of reward.

Christmastide offers an excellent opportunity for us to pay homage to our Lord. To really appreciate the spirit of Christmas we must love those less fortunate than we, and give to them that they may be enriched. Our gifts should be offered to those most in need of help. As we lay them on the altar this morning, let them be given with the affection of our lives, because God loved us first.

(S) Hymn Processional: (While this hymn is sung, the congregation may file up and lay their gifts in an appropriate place.) "As With Gladness Men of Old," N. S. H., 143.

(S) Commission: John 3: 16, and 1 John 3: 16-18.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." "Hereby perceive we the love of Christ, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only; but in deed and in truth."

(S) Benediction.

(Note on carrying out the service:

This service will be more effective if in the background there can be a manger scene, Mary holding the child, Joseph bending over them. It can be revealed just as the service opens or during the reading of Matthew. During the singing of verse one of "As With Gladness Men of Old," three costumed wise men may go forward, offer their gifts, and take their places in the tableau. The people can then follow them, laying their gifts at the feet of the Christ Child and passing on back to their places.

If such an interlude seems unwise the offering may be taken in the usual way without a processional.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24

Theme: "Hear the Testimony Concerning Jesus."

Prelude: "Watchman Tell Us of the Night," N. S. H., 134; S. H., 316. (Can be played as an instrumental prelude, or the first two verses may be sung by an unseen quartet.)

Call to Worship: John 1: 1-5.

(S) Hymn: "Immortal Love, Forever Full," N. S. H., 156, verse 1.

(S) Prayer.

The Testimony of Benjamin: 125 years before Christ. Mosiah 1: 93-103.

Hymn: "We May Not Climb the Heavenly Steeps," N. S. H., 156, verse 2.

The Testimony of Nephi: Nephi 1: 9-15.

Hymn: "Angels, From the Realms of Glory," N. S. H., 135; S. H., 330, verse 1.

The Testimony of Luke: Luke 2: 8-13.

Hymn: "Shepherds, in the Fields Abiding," N. S. H., 135; S. H., 330, verse 2.

The Promise Through Haggai: In the message given through the prophet Haggai God again speaks of the coming of Christ, but this time he is to be the desire of all nations.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Read Haggai 2: 4-7, beginning with "Be strong, all ye people of the land."
Hymn: "Sages, Leave Your Contemplations," N. S. H., 135, verse 3.
The Promise of Christ: Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5, to "There shall be no more sorrow because there is no more death."
(S) Hymn: "Saints Before the Altar Bending," N. S. H., 135, verse 4.
(S) The Lord's Prayer.

FIFTH SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31

Theme: "Overcome in Love."

Prelude: "Love Divine," N. S. H., 131; Z. P., 143.
Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 1, 2.
Hymn: "Watchman, Tell Us," N. S. H., 134, verse 1; S. H., 316.
Leader Reads: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 3.
Hymn: "Watchman," N. S. H., 134, verse 3.
Leader Continues: Isaiah 9: 2-7.
(S) Hymn: "The Doxology," N. S. H., 14; S. H., 214.
(S) Prayer.
Talk:

In a very real way Christ came to the earth nineteen hundred years ago, and was heralded by heavenly portents, and spiritual and physical blessing among men. But this first coming was not the end of his work among men. The same spirit which moved then, is offered to us today. Christ can come again in the measure of our increased obedience to his word. This ministry of love awaits our obedience. What Christ did when he came here first, he desires to continue among men through us today. This incoming of God into human life is the preparation for his personal return to the earth for the second time, in glory.

We yet remain with a tremendous responsibility, which Christ himself awaits a full discharge. As a people we must purify our lives and yield obedience to the law of the kingdom of God, and then the song of Emmanuel, "God with us," will be sung by all the nations of the earth.

(S) Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me," N. S. H., 192.
(S) Benediction.
Note:
(S)—Means that congregation is to stand.
N. S. H.—New Saints' Hymnal.
S. H.—Old Saints' Hymnal.
Z. P.—Zion's Praises.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Fern Weedmark and Mildred Goodfellow

FIRST SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3

Sacrament Service

It is suggested that the boys and girls meet in Sacrament service with the adults. At the close of the class period a few minutes may be spent talking about the purpose of the sacrament. See junior quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," by Myrtle A. Weber, April, May, June, 1931, Lesson Ten, for helpful suggestions.

SECOND SUNDAY, DECEMBER 10

Theme: "The Spirit of Christ in the World."

Prelude: "Joy to the World," new Saints' Hymnal, 170.
Call to Worship: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" (Isaiah 52: 7.)
Hymn: "Joy to the World," new Saints' Hymnal, 170.
Prayer.
Scripture: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." (Matthew 1: 215.)
Hymn: "Glad Tidings," Zion's Praises, 149.
Sermon Talk: Explain briefly and in as simple words as possible why it was necessary for a Savior to come into the world. Tell of the prophets God sent to warn the people to repent, and the promises of a Messiah they gave; also of the persecutions of the Israelites and how they looked forward to the coming of the Messiah. At this time of the year we hear people speak of the "Christmas spirit," and they plan to do kind things for other people, especially those in need. The angels' message was "on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2: 14.) Christ's Spirit prompts people to be kind and loving to each other and help those in need. He is pleased when we do these things.
"What the Prophets said about the Promised Savior," by junior boys.

His nation: Seed of Abraham. Genesis 18: 18, 22: 18. "Star out of Jacob." Numbers 24: 17.
His tribe: Judah. Genesis 49: 10.
His birthplace: Bethlehem. Micah 5: 2.
His family: Jesse. Isaiah 11: 10. David. Jeremiah 23: 5.
His name: Immanuel. Isaiah 7: 14. (See also Isaiah 9: 6.)
(There is a well-written story about Isaiah and his prophecies about the Messiah, in The Pilgrim Elementary Teacher, December, 1932, page 561.)

Hymn: "There's a Song in the Air," Zion's Praises, 180, new Saints' Hymnal, 138. This may be sung by the junior choir or the whole group.
Story: "Fifty Divided by Three," Stepping Stones, December 25, 1932, or "Where Love Is, There God Is," page 157, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw; also page 156, Ethics for Children, by Ella Lyman Cabot, or "Little Jean," page 71, Christmas Stories and Legends, by Phebe A. Curtiss.
Closing Hymn: "Love Divine," Zion's Praises, 143, new Saints' Hymnal, 131.
Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, DECEMBER 17

Theme: "God So Loved the World." (John 3:16.)

Prelude: Medley of Christmas hymns.
Call to Worship: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish; but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.)
Hymn: "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," Zion's Praises, 140, new Saints' Hymnal, 137.
Prayer.
Scripture: Luke 2: 8-14. (Memorized by juniors.)
Hymn: "While Humble Shepherds Watched Their Flocks," new Saints' Hymnal, 139.
Sermon Talk: The shepherds were the first ones to hear the Christmas story. They hurried to Bethlehem to see the Savior who had been born there. When they saw him they were so happy that they told everybody they met what the angels had told them, and they praised and glorified God. It must have been wonderful to see the Christ Child and to worship him that first Christmas. We cannot see him now, but we may worship him and do the things he wishes us to do. If we are faithful, we shall see him some day face to face. (Revelation 7: 15, 22: 4, and other passages.)
Dramatization: "The Message to the Shepherds," as given in Luke 2: 8-14, or "The Road to Bethlehem," Departments' Journal, December, 1928. (If desired, omit reference to the wise men, as that story will be used in next Sunday's worship service.)
Special Christmas music by junior choir or chorus. "The First Noel," new Saints' Hymnal, 146, or "In Little Bethlehem," a song leaflet, 5c, William H. Dietz, Chicago, Illinois.
Story: "The Shepherd Who Didn't Go," found in the book, The City that Never Was Reached, by Jay T. Stocking; also in the book, Christmas Stories and Legends, by Phebe A. Curtiss, or Picture Appreciation: "Arrival of the Shepherds," by Le-rolle. A large copy of this picture may be purchased from David C. Cook Publishing Company. Elgin, Illinois, for 15c. A short printed description accompanies the picture.

Closing Hymn: "Silent Night," new Saints' Hymnal, 147.
Benediction.

Theme: "They presented unto him gifts." (Matthew 2:11.)

Prelude: "We Three Kings of Orient Are," found in Golden Book, Gray Book, and other books containing Christmas carols.

Call to Worship: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." (Matthew 2:2.)

Hymn: "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful," new Saints' Hymnal, 145.

Prayer.

Scripture: Matthew 2: 1-12.

Hymn: "O Little Town of Bethlehem," new Saints' Hymnal, 144.

Sermon Talk: Tell the story of the wise men who came from the east; how happy they were when they found the Christ Child, and the gifts they gave him. Tell of gifts given to the Christ Child now, Christmas baskets, community Christmas parties and Christmas trees for unfortunate people. If your group is carrying out such a project, tell about it. Jesus said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matthew 25: 40.) If our hearts are filled with love for Jesus and we help some of his children who are in need, we are giving a gift unto him. Tell about the Christmas offering, its purpose, etc. When we give to Christ's church, we are giving to him.

Dramatization: "We Three Kings of Orient Are." This should be given by three junior boys, wearing appropriate costumes.

If the boys and girls bring their Christmas offering this morning, or if they bring gifts for a Christmas basket, the offering or gifts may be presented at this time. While the music of "We Three Kings of Orient Are," is played, the boys and girls may take their gifts to the front of the room.

Special Christmas music by junior choir or chorus.

Story: "The Legend of the 'White Gifts,'" or "Her Birthday Dream," found in the book, Christmas Stories and Legends, by Phebe A. Curtiss. Other stories: "The Gift," Departments' Journal, December, 1927; "The Star," Departments' Journal, December, 1927; "The Little Camel that Walked to Bethlehem," Departments' Journal, December, 1928.

Closing Hymn: "Silent Night," new Saints' Hymnal, 147.
Benediction.

FIFTH SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31

Theme: "I will surely give the tenth unto thee." (Genesis 28: 22.)

Prelude: "Consecration," new Saints' Hymnal, 293.

Call to Worship: "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." (Psalm 95: 6.)

Response: "For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand." (Psalm 95: 7.)

Hymn: "Oh, Worship the King," new Saints' Hymnal, 9, or "Holy, Holy, Holy," Zion's Praises, 131, new Saints' Hymnal, 39.

Prayer.

Scripture: Leviticus 27: 30; Proverbs 3: 9; Matthew 10: 8b; 2 Corinthians 8: 7b.

Hymn: "Something to Do," Zion's Praises, 228.

Sermon Talk: Texts: Genesis 28: 22; Malachi 3: 10.

See Sermonette, "Tithing," Stepping Stones, June 12, 1932.

See Church History, volume 1, page 529, covenant of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to pay one tenth. Tomorrow is the first day of the New Year. Let us start it right by making up our minds to pay our tithing during the next year. Explain the Junior Stewardship Record Books. Bring one to show to the boys and girls. Explain why and how inventories are made in stores the first of the year. Then explain "A Junior's First Financial Statement," found on page 3 of the Junior Stewardship Record Book. Explain the principle of tithing by showing ten objects (pennies, apples, or similar articles) and taking the Lord's part, one-tenth, from them. This will illustrate how small a part the Lord asks of us. Tithing is a debt we owe the Lord. He has promised to bless us if we pay this debt. (Malachi 3: 10.)

Story: "Jacob's Promise." Genesis, Chapters 28 and 32. (This story should bring out the fact that when Jacob made the promise in Genesis 28: 22 he had very little property; he used a stone for a pillow, but the Lord blessed and prospered him, so he had large flocks and many servants. Genesis 32: 5.)

Hymn: "Consecration," new Saints' Hymnal, 293, by junior choir.

Maxims Ever Young

Stephen Allen, formerly Mayor of New York, was drowned many years ago and in his pocketbook was found a printed slip with the following maxims. They are as appropriate now as they were in Stephen Allen's day. Principles like these are never old-fashioned or out-of-date.

Keep good company or none. Never be idle.

If your hands cannot be usefully employed, cultivate your mind.

Always speak the truth. Make few promises.

Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets if you have any.

When you speak to a person, look him in the face.

Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.

Good character is above all things else.

Your character cannot be essentially injured except by your own acts.

If one speaks evil of you, live so that none will believe him.

Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors; nor use tobacco in any form.

Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income.

When you retire think over what you have done during the day.

Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper.

Small and steady gains give competency with tranquillity of mind.

Never play at any game of chance.

Avoid temptation. Through fear you may not withstand it.

Earn money before you spend it.

Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out again.

Never borrow, if you can possibly avoid it.

Do not marry until you are able to support a wife.

Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are generous.

Keep yourself innocent if you would be happy.

Save when you are young to spend when you are old.

Read over the above maxims at least once a week.

Great Northwest Continues to Grow

Branch Organized at Willapa, Washington

It is good to belong to a going concern, and to see its growth and development over a period of years gives one renewed faith in its stability. And though sometimes the growth is slow and the waiting long, nevertheless, the work of the church is onward.

We have been made to realize this again as we have participated in the organization of a branch with forty-five charter members at Willapa, Washington, a short time.

The Beginning and Years of Waiting

About forty years ago Samuel Ellsworth and family moved to Willapa, followed a few years later by Roger L. Walden and family. They were true to their faith and eventually, about 1908, Elders George Thornburn and William Johnson visited there and held some meetings. The only public building available was a public dance hall in Old Willapa, and there they preached the old Jerusalem gospel, but with little apparent success.

The years went by with little of progress until 1915, when Mrs. Nina B. Wolfenbarger was baptized. She left Willapa for a time but moved back, and while making a visit there about 1918, Elder Swen Swenson received spiritual direction that eventually a branch would be raised up at Willapa, and that it was Sister Wolfenbarger's duty to stay there, and she would have an important part to play therein.

During the years following, Elder M. H. Cook and, others visited, there occasionally but with little visible results. Meanwhile the little group of Saints, Sister Wolfenbarger and others, tried to live their religion.

The Harvest Begins—Mission Organized

In May and June, 1931, the Reverend Bulgin, a traveling evangelist, held meetings at Willapa, and two of Sister Wolfenbarger's daughters were awakened to a desire to unite with the church, expressing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the church of their choice.

Elder M. H. Cook sensed that there was something happening, and communicated the circumstances to Elder H. I. Velt, then missionary and district president. In July, 1931, Elders Velt and Cook held meetings and Brother Cook baptized four, three of whom were Sister Wolfenbarger's daughters.

Following this, as opportunity permitted, Elder Velt and his good wife virtually "camped on the job" and during October and November, 1931, twenty more were baptized, among them Sister Ralston, the superintendent of the Union Sunday school.

November 29, 1931, Apostle F. Henry Edwards organized the work at Willapa into a mission with a Sunday school and a woman's club. They continued to operate successfully, receiving assistance and encouragement from Brothers Velt and Cook from time to time.

In 1932, President F. M. Smith visited Willapa and ordained Joseph P. Wolfenbarger to the office of priest. This visit did the Saints much good. One more was baptized during the year and the Saints grew in grace and understanding.

But the lack of a church building was keenly felt. For as the work grew, religious prejudice increased and no suitable public meeting place was available. So meetings were held in private homes.

A district day was held in January, 1933, and Bishop D. S. McDole and Elder Monte Lasater, district president, visited there with Elder H. I. Velt and myself. We left them encouraged and looking forward to the time when they would have their own building.

Branch Organization Authorized

By this time, there were forty-two members living in the vicinity of Willapa, and while visiting there Elder Monte Lasater and Elder Velt were directed by the Spirit to select five men for ordination: Joseph P. Wolfenbarger, elder; Joseph F. Hall, priest; Wesley W. Walden and Oliver Ralston, teachers; and Albert Ellsworth, deacon.

At the district conference at Silver Lake in August, 1933, these ordinations and the organization of a branch were authorized.

Branch Organization Effected

Elder H. I. Velt and I went to Willapa on Thursday, October 26, and following the preaching service the next evening, we felt there were others who should be baptized and thus be charter members of the branch which was scheduled for organization on Sunday, the twenty-ninth.

Our hopes were realized the following day It rains often and long at Willapa and Saturday was running true to form. But three fine young people had requested baptism. So we repaired to the river between showers and Brother Velt immersed them, making a total of thirty-five baptized since July, 1931.

Sunday came in cloudy, with intermittent showers, but it did not seem to dampen the ardor of the Saints. They had important work at hand for the Master, and a little rain and mud were not permitted to interfere with their plans.

The Williamuse Dance Hall in East Raymond had been secured for the day's activities. So just twenty-five years after the first meetings were held in a dance hall in old Willapa, a branch was organized about a mile distant from there in the same kind of a building.

Two carloads of Saints came from Seattle, one hundred and seventy-five miles distant. Four carloads came from Centralia about fifty miles away, and local friends joined with the Willapa Saints for the day, making a congregation of over one hundred.

Sister Emma McDole, district director of religious education, had prepared some beautiful souvenir programs for the occasion, suggesting the theme for the day, "Children of God." The ten o'clock hour was profitably used for a worship program and instruction on the work of the church school, under her direction.

At the eleven o'clock hour, a confirmation and ordination service was held. The three young people baptized the day before were confirmed and the five brothers selected as spiritual leaders were set apart to the ministry. Everything was peaceful and orderly and for the time being, the dance hall became to us the house of God, and all the services of the day were graced by his Spirit. Though this meeting lasted until 1 p. m., there was perfect attention, even on the part of the small children.

A basket dinner was served and the spirit of fraternity characteristic of this great latter-day work was manifested. While our physical bodies were fed, our spirits were also refreshed by the associations which the occasion permitted.

At two p. m. we reassembled for the organization meeting. As Brother Lasater read the names of those who were to be charter members, they arose and remained standing until the whole list had been read.

I wish you could have seen the brothers who had been ordained and the fine group of Saints to whom they are to minister. With us, you would have had justifiable pride. We are happy to see such a fine group organized for branch activity.

Other officers having part in the services of the day were: Elder C. E. Wheeler, of the district presidency; Elder Dwight Davis, young people's leader; Austen Earl, director of music; M. H. Cook, superannuated minister; Elder Alma Johnson, pastor at Seattle, (whose father, William Johnson, was one of the first missionaries at Willapa); Elder Cecil Schmid, until recently city missionary in Chicago, but now pastor at Centralia.

The male quartet from Seattle, and Sister Donna Crown, of Centralia, rendered special musical numbers.

Altogether it was a wonderful day. I came to Centralia following the afternoon program, and as the young people in the car sang the songs of Zion, my spirits were refreshed and I felt anew that it was good to be a Saint of latter days.

Thus the work in the Northwest is onward. May God's peace and blessings attend and may success crown the efforts of this new branch.

MYRON A. McCONLEY.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

Rally day was observed here on a recent Sunday. Apostle J. F. Curtis and Elder P. T. Anderson were speakers. Several isolated Saints were able to be present.

"Forgiving One Another," was the theme of the church school which convened at ten o'clock. A short program was given by the children. The choir sang, "Ashamed of Jesus." Apostle Curtis's morning sermon was followed by a community dinner served at the homes of Sisters Rotzien and Wiedling. Elder P. T. Anderson preached at two-thirty and a prayer and testimony service was enjoyed at six-thirty, followed by the preaching hour, Brother Curtis in the stand.

The annual business meeting was held and Elder H. E. Ratcliffe was reelected pastor; Courtney Rotzien, branch clerk; Ferne Shackow, chorister; Elsie Brown, pianist; Courtney Rotzien, church school director; supervisor of adult division, Sister Thomas Hunter; young people's supervisor, Sister J. F. Rotzien. Sister Fred Wiedling was chosen women's leader.

District President W. McElwaine, of Lansford, North Dakota, and Bishop's Agent Charles Young, of La Moure, visited here recently and preached helpful sermons.

The ladies' aid held a pie social and fish pond at Sister R. T. J. Walker's home, the proceeds going to pay the pavement tax of the church.

The young people have devotional service every third Sunday evening at seven o'clock. Halloween parties have lately entertained the young men and women and the children.

Santa Barbara, California

Enjoy All-day Outing

Friday night, October 27, Santa Barbara Branch entertained at the church with a halloween party.

Saints from Santa Barbara, Ventura, Ojai, Santa Paula, and surrounding territory gathered at the home of Brother and Sister G. H. Stuart for an all-day meeting, October 29. The use of the community hall was secured for the services. Special music was furnished by the orchestra and choir of Santa Barbara Branch. L. L. Sutherland delivered an address both morning and evening. Those present were inspired to do their best for the church.

Mission Branch

Marseilles, Illinois

October 8, Elder Roscoe Davey was the speaker at the morning and evening services.

The women held their annual chicken supper October 11, serving more than three hundred people. The event netted the branch ninety dollars.

A variety shower was given a recent bride, Mrs. Signard Eike, in the basement of the church, October 14, one hundred and forty people being present. She received many nice presents, and a dainty lunch was served the company by the hostesses who were cousins of the bride.

Elder H. C. Castings, of Des Moines, Iowa, was the speaker the morning of October 15. He was accompanied to Mission by Joe Knox, of Pleasantville, Iowa. The evening program was prepared by Dorris Fewell, Charlotte Williamson, and Lois Anderson.

Graceland College Day, October 22, Miss Lois Hartshorn talked on Graceland at the eleven o'clock service, explaining most interestingly courses and activities. Elder Turner spoke on education, and the choir sang a Graceland song.

Mrs. Caroline Erickson, one of the oldest members of Mission Branch, died at her home in Miller Township, October 25. She was born near the place of her death eighty-one years ago, November 8, and was the widow of Ole Erickson who preceded her in death six years. They were parents of eight children, four of whom survive: Mrs. Celia Thorson, of Grundy County, Illinois; Miss Alice Erickson, of Chicago; Mrs. Olive Osmunson, who lived with her mother; one son, George, who lives on a farm adjoining the old home. There also survive eleven grandchildren, three great-grandchildren; three sisters, Mrs. Kate Gaulter, of Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Cora Olson, of Kankakee, Illinois, and Mrs. Margaret Olson, of Kempton, Illinois. She became a member of Mission Branch July 18, 1867. The funeral services were conducted at the home October 29, Elder I. E. Turner the speaker.

Walter Anderson and Vernon Hougas attended the recent conference in Chicago.

Carthage, Missouri

819 West Chestnut

Carthage Branch was fortunate in having Missionary J. Charles May, of Independence, conduct a series of meetings, September 28 to October 8. Elder May presented beautiful colored slides of scenes in the South Sea Islands and Hawaii, together with his native songs, with guitar and ocarina accompaniments. Several nonmembers are deeply interested in the church as a result of his sermons.

Elder S. N. Gray, of Joplin, is following up Brother May's series of meetings with chart lectures. Brother Gray visits Carthage every second and fourth Sunday of the month.

District President Amos T. Higdon was a guest at Carthage, October 4 to 9, visiting and strengthening the Saints. He preached a powerful and instructive sermon Sunday morning.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 26, the following officers being elected: Branch president, Elder A. M. Hogan; clerk, Sister Elsie Luider; treasurer and solicitor, Sister Jessie Roads; music supervisor, Harry Shank; librarian, Carl Hobb; historian, Frank Shank; publicity agent, Nellie Hogan; church school director, Frank Shank; adult supervisor, Sister Lena Hobbs; young people's supervisor, Nellie Hogan; children's supervisor, Virginia Green; Christmas offering, Edith Cale.

The women, under the leadership of Sister Hobbs, are piecing and quilting quilts to help raise money for church repairs.

The O. Y. P. Class, taught by Sister Martha Green, is also endeavoring to help with the repair work. This class has made new curtains for the stage which adds much to the appearance. A play was presented, "Mother Mine," to help swell the repair fund.

A splendid Graceland program was presented Sunday, October 22. A special collection was taken.

Brother and Sister J. J. Lender entertained seventy of the Saints and friends at their home at a halloween social, Friday, October 27.

A large number of the young people went to Joplin to attend the district halloween party, October 26. One of the young men is driving a school bus, which provides a good way for traveling with little expense.

Plans are being made for the special Thanksgiving program, and the homecoming day, December 3. This branch is also observing the church-wide "Keep the Law" period, from November 12 to December 3.

Each third Sunday of the month, the eleven o'clock service is given over to the junior church, and the young people have charge of the evening service.

Carthage Branch was invited to join the movement being promoted in Jasper County, to encourage community song services. Each Friday night a special song service is enjoyed.

The one hundred Saints living in this city have a nice little church home and are working harmoniously together, doing much for the church and praying that they may develop individually and collectively into Zion building material.

Fall Conference Unusually Successful

Harmony and Understanding Characterize All Services

The annual fall conference of Rock Island District at Rock Island, Illinois, was greeted with exceptionally fine weather and large attendance for this time of the year. Elders E. R. Davis, L. G. Holloway, J. F. Garver, Thomas Beil, and Monte Carter, of Lamoni, Iowa, motored over on Friday to be present throughout the gathering, each contributing to the spirit of inspiration and friendliness. Apostle Garver is always welcomed in this district, for the members have learned to enjoy his fellowship not only as a superior officer, but as a friend and counselor. Missionary Holloway will probably remain in the district until the holidays. He begins a series of meetings at Clinton, Iowa, this week.

Monte Carter gave a fine talk at the opening program of the conference Friday night. Thomas Beil, president of the young people's organization, entertained with piano selections, and readings were contributed by Lucille Hegwood, Janice Lathine, Barbara Ann McAdams, and Evelyn Eckright. Marion White and Louise Gunlock also gave musical numbers.

Saturday morning was occupied with prayer service and round table, Brother Garver presiding and drawing attention to some of the problems which confront the church in relation to the gathering and to stewardships.

Business session came on Saturday afternoon. The young people were permitted to retire to the lower auditorium to transact their business, where they reelected Elder L. W. Stiegel as sponsor; Thomas Beil, president; Verl Bean, vice president, and Fritz Stiegel, secretary-treasurer. They recommended that every branch should organize its young people under the new plan of religious education.

Delegates for next General Conference were elected as follows: E. R. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Beil, Edward Jones, L. G. Holloway, L. W. Stiegel, Mrs. A. R. Batchellor, Don Chesworth, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Stiegel, Thomas Beil, Elizabeth Beil, Leslie Davis, Marjorie Holmes, Lockwood B. Moore, Bert E. Sartwell, and J. F. Garver.

The bishop's agent's report showed a total of $1,766.25 collected in tithes and offerings for the year 1933. In the district treasury there is a balance on hand of $403.15 including $376.28 in the build- and loan fund.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year: District president, E. R. Davis; first counselor, Edward Jones; second counselor, C. A. Beil; secretary, Winifred Stiegel; treasurer and bishop's agent, John C. Stiegel; superintendent of music, Nola Epperly with Thomas Beil as assistant; nonresident statistician, Marjorie Holmes; auditor, A. J. Gray; superintendent of religious education, John C. Stiegel; historian, Ruth Benson; budget committee, the district presidency, treasurer, and L. A. White.

Apostle Garver was the Saturday night speaker, delivering a stirring discourse. He also preached at eleven o'clock Sunday.

The young people enjoyed an early Sunday morning prayer service under the leadership of L. W. Stiegel and Thomas Beil. The general prayer service at nine thirty was a spiritual occasion. Brothers Garver and Holloway spoke under the heavenly influence with words of admonition, counsel, and encouragement.

The afternoon service Sunday was impressive, four young men being ordained to offices of responsibility. Don Cassidy, of Clinton, Iowa, was ordained an elder; Thomas Beil, now a student at Graceland, a priest; William Fritz Stiegel, of Moline, a priest, and Leonard Hendricks, of Henderson, Illinois, a deacon. Those officiating in this ordinance were Apostle J. F. Garver and Elders E. R. Davis, L. G. Holloway, and F. C. Bevan. In his charge Brother Garver impressed the fact that no ordinations are to be considered as badges of honor and authority, but badges of responsibility and promises to respond to the call of duty and service.

Sunday evening an hour's program was presented by outlying branches, under the supervision of Sister Nola Epperly. Musical numbers displayed unusual talent. Special choir selections were given at the preaching services by the Tri-City Choir which has been meeting regularly at Moline under trained leadership.

Missionary L. G. Holloway gave a very effective sermon Sunday night on the theme, "What Lack I Yet?"

Oshoto, Wyoming

Conduct Preaching, Study, Discussion and Social Services

Branch officers were elected September 24. H. L. Hartshorn is the branch president; F. V. Cole, superintendent of religious education; Audrey Stubbart, secretary and chorister; Sister T. C. Gray, treasurer; Enid Stubbart, organist, and Clifford Cole, branch correspondent.

They have had preaching services nearly every Sunday immediately after Sunday school. October 15, Branch President H. L. Hartshorn delivered a splendid sermon on the financial law.

A discussion meeting was enjoyed October 22, questions being taken up which were brought in by members of the group. Two young people's round table meetings also have taken the place of regular sermons.

The women's Laurel Club, led by Mrs. Gray, is planning an agricultural project to help establish a fund for the club. They have appointed a social committee which is planning a gathering for each month.

Hibbard, Indiana

Confirmation Service a Time of Blessing

The two-week series of meetings conducted here by Elder A. Whitehead, was brought to a close the evening of October 3. These two weeks were highly enjoyed by everyone, for Brother Whitehead delivered some intensely interesting discourses and had the close attention of his audiences.

During the sacrament service in October, while bearing his testimony Brother Whitehead related a spiritual experience promising many blessings to Hibbard members if they are faithful. At present there is only one officer in the group, and the Saints pray for the day to come when they will have a full quorum of officers and an organized branch. This sacrament service was largely attended. A basket dinner was enjoyed at noon by fifty members, and about thirty accompanied Elder Whitehead to the Marshall County Infirmary, where at the invitation of the superintendent and one of the Saints, he gave a talk cheering the inmates.

At four o'clock seven candidates were conducted into the waters of baptism, two adults and five children. The confirmation service in the evening was witnessed by a full house, and the gifts of the gospel were had there. This was a period of unusual blessing.

Reluctantly the members saw Brother Whitehead leave on Monday morning.

The last family supper served by the women's department was attended by over two hundred people, and while not much actual profit in money was made possible by the meal, the Saints feel that such gatherings contribute much to the erasing of contention between them and their neighbors of other faiths. They wish to gain the good will of the people in this community, and ask the interest of the church in prayer, that they may be able to realize the blessings for which they are striving.

Decatur, Illinois

Pastor Divides Time With Bloomington Group

Branch attendance is steadily increasing. Interest is being shown in different departments, and friends are expressing a desire to hear more of the gospel. The Saints look forward to the time when Evangelist Richard Baldwin and wife will be with them for a series of meetings.

The women's department is making a good showing under the leadership of Mrs. C. S. Dennis, and has accumulated nearly seventy-five dollars to apply on assessments on pavement, besides helping in other church work.

A joyous time was had at the Halloween party October 26, when the merrymakers met in the church basement. A number of new friends were there.

Pastor O. C. Johnson has been dividing time with Bloomington Saints, holding meetings in the homes there for the past eight weeks. He baptized seven fine people into the kingdom, and others are much interested. Bloomington offers a rich field of opportunity to someone interested in building up the work of the church. Although the Utah Church has gained a foothold there, it is not difficult for the Reorganized Church to win friends to its cause. As much as opportunity offers, Brother Johnson hopes to follow up the work started there and to carry on between Decatur and Bloomington with the assistance of local priesthood members.

Gaylord, Michigan

Local Grows Spiritually and Numerically

This branch is well started on its way toward another happy and successful year. The annual business meeting was held, September 18, Elder Allen Schreur being chosen pastor and Elder Elmer L. Parkes, church school director.

An impressive promotion service was carried out by the young people with service as the theme.

Included in the activities already recorded for the new year is the supper sponsored by the young people, the proceeds to go toward the debt on the young people's auditorium at the Park of the Pines. The aim of the young people of Northern and Western districts is to free this building of debt before next reunion. Each local is doing its part.

The young people's class with its supervisor, Elder Elmer Widrig, had a halloween dinner for the members and their guests.

Gaylord members regret to see Elder Hector McKinnon moving away. The help and talent of this family will be greatly missed. They are moving to East Jordan.

The district conference was held at Gladstone, and four carloads went from the lower peninsula. They reported a good crowd and splendid time. This is the first conference held in the upper peninsula for several years.

The women's department is working under the leadership of Sister Lucy Parkes, and attendance is the best it has ever been. Time is divided between study and handwork.

Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Henrietta are the proud parents of a son whom they have named Thomas Alan.

Apostle D. T. Williams has visited this branch several times in the past year, and attended the conference.

Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth called on Elder and Sister Allen Schreur recently on their way to Chestoria, where they are holding a series of meetings.

Some fine people have been added to this branch recently. The church school has grown considerably, and workers are endeavoring to continue to push forward in their undertaking.

Young People at East Bay Branch

Take Twelve New Members Into Organization

On September 24, the young people of East Bay Branch (Berkeley, California,) held their second initiation service. At this time twelve additional members joined the organization, which is known by its slogan, "Zion builders all."

The Friday following this service the annual banquet was held. The theme for both events was, "Honoring the Keeper of the Gate." The background was a lattice fence and gate of gold, twined with greenery.

Purple asters added the second of the church colors (purple and gold).

This organization has grown under the supervision of Sister Elva Sturges and much praise is due her for her tireless efforts towards the success of it.

The group had some splendid events during the months that are past. They have held picnics, hikes and parties. A circus in which nearly all of the young people took part, was outstanding because of the feeling of fellowship that existed. They have held vesper services, round table discussions, fellowship services, and sponsored several preaching services. In all of their activities they try to follow the counsel of the Lord. The refreshments and banquet are planned in harmony with the Word of Wisdom, and they end their evenings of fun early.

The following officers were recently elected for the coming year: Walter Weldon, president; Bernice Bonham, vice president; Zelma McKee, secretary, and Robert Hawley, treasurer.

Bradner, Ohio

All Departments Work Together

Recently Bradner Branch held its annual business meeting, and the new officers took their places. The branch is endeavoring to work more fully under the church school plan than it has in the past. Those in charge are: Branch president, Elder William Smith; church school director, Elder Edward Patten, assistant, Cleo Smith; supervisor of adult division, Sister Glada Wirebaugh; young people's supervisor, Walter Wirebaugh; children's leader, Sister Mary Smith. Brother Oria Smith is priest in the branch, Brother John Shultz, teacher, and Brother Brandon Smith is branch treasurer. Sister Edna Shepler is acting as branch clerk, Sister Hazel Smith, music director, and Sister Maude Smith, publicity agent.

A fine spirit prevails in local church endeavors. The Saints have been working by various methods to raise money for a new church roof. This means that a considerable effort is being exerted by some families who have been hard hit by the depression. God has been good to his children here, however, and none have had to go hungry.

The women's department has taken on new life, and the meetings are very helpful. Sister Hazel Smith, the leader, has prepared booklets with outlines of the programs of the weekly meetings for the first quarter of the year. The financial arm of this group has been busy helping to lighten the branch load. A secret traveling box was sent among friends in the town and has been gathering a quantity of nickels, dimes, and other coins.

The young people's class handed out small paper hats to friends from whom they wished a contribution, asking them to measure the inches around their heads and place a penny in the hat for each inch measured.

Even the children have been busy gathering in the change by passing little paper shoes among their friends, that they might place the size of shoe worn in pennies in the little container.

These are but a few of the ways in which all the departments work together to assist the local.

A number enjoyed the halloween party at the country home of Brother and Sister Henry Smith. There lunch was served and the money turned into the church coffers.

Elder W. S. Hettrick, of Philadelphia, spent several days here, visiting his wife and Saints. He was present at the sacrament service November 5.

This branch was well represented by its priesthood members at the communion hour, there being six present beside Brother Hettrick. Bradner is blessed with five elders, one priest, one teacher, and two deacons.

The district conference, held in September at Oak Harbor Branch, was attended by several members from this place, who shared with other conference attendants the fine hospitality of Oak Harbor people. This conference was one of the best held in the district. Patriarch and Sister Gomer T. Griffiths, of Kirtland, were there; Elder Jacob Halb, district missionary, of Middletown; Bishop H. E. French and Brothers Matthews, Anderton, and Gray, of Columbus.

Independence

Independence launched into the "Keep the Law" period Sunday with earnestness and seriousness of purpose. Keeping the law was the day's theme in the center place, for very many Latter Day Saints here are vitally interested in this movement.

On Sunday evening programs and speakers in most of the congregations of Independence were supplied by the O. B. K.'s of Kansas City Stake, and the efforts of these young people were gladly received.

The Standing High Council of the church is meeting regularly on Wednesday night in the office of the First Presidency, each week during this winter, to consider questions concerning the interpretation of church law.

Stone Church

Bishop J. Stanley Kelley was the morning speaker Sunday, choosing for his subject, "Keep the Law." He discussed the different phases of the law, and admonished the Saints that keeping God's law is also keeping man's law.

Music for the morning service was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. The anthem, "Send Out Thy Light," was sung, Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee at the organ. Solos were sung by Mrs. Nell Kelley and Mr. Albert Brackenbury. Mr. Brackenbury was accompanied at the piano by Miss Alice Woodside. Elder H. G. Barto was assisted in the stand by Elder J. E. Vanderwood.

Members of the Stone Church congregation were happy to have as guests of the evening O. B. K. young people of Kansas City Stake. They furnished the program and the speaker, Elder C. G. Mesley, originator of the O. B. K. movement, who presented a dynamic talk. The To-Ko-Lon Class, of the Stone Church, had a line party at this service, sitting in a reserved section. After the service a short reception was held in the dining hall in honor of the Kansas City guests.

The Y. K. T. Class, of the church school, is sponsoring a two-week series of missionary services at Liberty, Missouri, Pastor John F. Sheehy the speaker. The series began Sunday night, and the class invites all who can to help with attendance. An auto caravan leaves the Stone Church each evening at six-thirty with the exception of Friday and Saturday. Next Saturday the class is having a baked goods sale at the Safeway Store on Maple Avenue for the purpose of raising funds to help carry on these services.

Among those who have lately gone to their reward was Sister Alice May Epperly, wife of James A. Epperly, who died November 12. Sister Epperly was born April 27, 1884, at Kewanee, Illinois, and had been a devoted Latter Day Saint since her baptism August 10, 1895, by Alma Whitehouse. She leaves her husband, two daughters, Nora E. Etter, and Mabel I. Epperly, one grandchild, other relatives and numerous friends.

Liberty Street Church

The Doctrine and Covenants Class which for two years has been meeting on Tuesday nights has changed its time of meeting to six o'clock Sunday evening to become a part of the Religio. The teacher at the time the class was formed was Sister Florence Carr. This organization recently purchased four volumes of Church History to be added to the library. Cecil Walker is the president and Pastor John R. Lentell is the teacher.

Midweek prayer services were resumed last week, the last two having been canceled because of the large number attending the institute. The spirit which prevailed at the young people's meeting was deeply felt in a story told by Sister Lentell, "Where Love Is, There God Is Also." This feeling was carried over into the prayer service of Group 25.

A short talk on "The Law of the Church," was given by Albert Nigh at the church school Sunday morning. Pastor Lentell was the eleven o'clock speaker, stressing the topic, "Keep the Law."

Sunday evening Religio was well attended. After the class period came a program of readings and musical numbers.

At the seven-thirty service music and speaker were furnished by the young people of Quindaro Church, Kansas City Stake, Berwyn Lungwitz spoke on the financial law in special connection with the young people. After the service a get-together and fellowship meeting was held in the dining room.

Walnut Park Church

The splendid attendance which has characterized Walnut Park's school was maintained Sunday morning, when 434 were counted in the various classes. Superintendent Closson was again in the stand, following a vacation trip to Wisconsin. Following the class work a violin solo, "Canzonetti," by Tschikowski, was played by Eloise Higgins, accompanied by Dorothy Koehler Waters.

At eleven o'clock Pastor Frank McDonald spoke to the congregation, taking his text from James 1, and concluding his sermon with a resumé of the work of the congregation during the first ten months of the year. He complimented the good work of a number of the departments, and spoke hopefully of the future. The sermon was preceded by a string trio selection, "One Fleeting Hour," by Orlando Nace, Milford Nace, and Maurine Nace; and by an anthem, "God Is Love," by the choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson. Solo parts were by Fred Horn, baritone, and Carletta Norman, contralto.

Sunday night's service was especially interesting because of its unusualness. Members of the O. B. K. Council of Central Church, Kansas City, were guests, and furnished both the program and the speaking. Following the service the visitors were guests of Walnut Park young people at a chili supper in the lower auditorium of the church. The program which the Kansas City young people furnished was as follows: Prelude, Lucille Sandy; trumpet duet, Lorraine Sandy and Royce Stoener; violin solo, Frank White; prayer, Norman Anderson; vocal solo, Genevieve Burgoon; trumpet solo, Edith Munden; talk, Glen Faler; vocal solo, Larry Seigle, and prayer, Doctor E. P. Nelson.

Enoch Hill Church

The Dorcas Class spent a pleasant evening at the home of Mrs. Henry Hartman last Tuesday, electing officers for the coming year. Mrs. Charles Warren was sustained as president and Mrs. D. Street as secretary.

The women's department is enjoying splendid midweek get-together times, and attendance is increasing.

J. L. Wisecup was baptized at Second Church early Sunday morning and confirmed under the hands of Elders Charles Warren and E. E. Thomas at the eight o'clock prayer hour.

Elders W. J. Brewer, E. E. Thomas and Charles Warren are the newly-appointed elders in charge of the groups in this district.

The young people's class, under the supervision of E. H. McKean and Ruth Hays, were in charge of the worship service Sunday morning, and several fine numbers were given. Miss Alma Dixon, representing the young people's council, gave a four-minute talk on "Keeping the Law." The worship theme was "Service." Pauline Alexander talked on "Our Part in the Redemption of Zion."

Elder E. E. Thomas was the eleven o'clock speaker, and the choir sang, "There's Home at the End of the Road." Dick Bullard sang "God's Way Is the Best Way."

Sunday evening after a half hour of song service a splendid program was presented by O. B. K. members of Kansas City Stake, representatives from Fourth Church and Malvern Hill. Marion Snead was the speaker. In this service, too, the theme, "Keep the Law," was stressed. Following the sermon hour, the visiting young people were entertained by Enoch Hill young men and women.

Englewood Church

Officers elected for the year for Englewood congregation are: Pastor, R. W. Howery; assistant pastor and church school superintendent, Elder A. G. Hougas; supervisor of younger people, Arthur Welch; chorister, Albert Brackenbury; bishop's agent, Glen Closson; custodian, Robert Clow; junior superintendent, Mrs. H. E. Waite; primary superintendent, Mrs. Fred Koehler, and kindergarten superintendent, Mrs. R. W. Howery. Mrs. Arthur Welch is church school chorister and Richard Howery, librarian.

Willing workers are making some much needed improvements in the primary room.

The young people have been staging a contest to increase attendance at their Sunday evening six-fifteen service.

Brother and Sister G. M. Hiles and daughter, Mary, parents and sister of Perry Hiles, former pastor of this congregation, have taken up their abode with Brother and Sister Waite and daughter, Frances, and are numbered with this group. Sister Waite was formerly Flossie Hiles.

Elder G. W. Eastwood was the speaker Sunday morning, November 12, and his theme was "Scriptural Obedience to Law." Raymond Bliel, of Kansas City, sang a solo, accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Stella Howery.

At the family worship period of the church school in the morning Brother Guinn Bronson talked to children and grown-ups, emphasizing obedience to law.

In the evening Armourdale O. B. K.'s furnished the program and speaker who was Eddie Baker. Following the program, Kansas City guests were entertained at the home of Pastor R. W. Howery.

East Independence Church

Elder R. L. Fulk and wife recently visited this group on Sunday. He occupied the pulpit morning and evening. The following Sabbath Elder George Jenkins and wife spent the day here, Brother Jenkins speaking twice. These two long-time missionaries preached with power and deep love for the gospel.

Miss Elizabeth Friend, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Friend, of this group, was recently married to Donald Stark, of Blue Springs.

Halloween was celebrated by young and old at the homes of Pastor Frank Minton and Clair Austin.

Twelve women of East Independence attended the banquet sponsored by the women's department of Independence at the Auditorium, Saturday night, November 4. They report a splendid time.

The November sacrament hour was characterized by a peaceful spirit, and the local priesthood were in charge. Brother and Sister A. J. Tankard and family, who lived in this community about eighteen years ago, were present. J. T. Butler preached the evening sermon.

Kansas City Stake

The stake conference will be held next Sunday and Monday. The speaker Sunday morning at Central Church will be Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry. There will be union prayer service at 2.30 p. m., and in the evening President Elbert A. Smith will be the speaker. The stake business meeting will convene Monday evening, November 20, at 7.45.

Fourth Annual O. B. K. Dramatic Tournament

The fourth annual O. B. K. drama tournament was held at Central Church, November 6 and 7. Seven groups participated and the standard of their productions reflected great credit on their directors and casts.

This year the stage was better equipped with overhead lighting facilities, a rheostat, and curtains, and when all the difficulties of these things have been mastered, they will add to the smoothness of the tournament.

The services of the Central and Grandview church orchestras were greatly appreciated for the preludes and intermissions.

This year the plays entered were grouped in two sections, modern and period. The judges, Miss Margaret Sturges, Mrs. Albert Brackenbury, and Frank Jennings, all of Independence, awarded first place in the modern section to Quindaro's production, "Ambition"; and in the period plays to Central's "The Lord's Prayer." This play was also awarded the O. B. K. trophy for first over all. Season ticket holders voted for the most enjoyable play and gave an overwhelming decision to Fourth's play, "The Bishop's Candlesticks."

Special mention was given to Rebecca Dunn for her portrayal of Mademoiselle Rose in "The Lord's Prayer," Garland Tickemyer, for his fine interpretation of the convict in "The Bishop's Candlesticks," and David Ryder as the boy in "Where Love Is."

Armourdale was commended for the adaptation of their set, and every play had some outstanding features that were highly commendable.

Garland Tickemyer was director of the tournament, Ralph Freeman business manager, and Walter Ingoldsby and Dan Reynolds gave freely of their time to make new lighting equipment.

The complete program for the tournament follows: On Monday evening Bennington Players presented "Old Walnut," directed by Pansy Sampson; Armourdale players, "The Man Who Came Back," Eddie Baker directing; Malvern Hill players, "Aunt Martha Pays," Harold Buddemeyer directing, and "Ambition" by Quindaro players, Mrs. Eddie Baker directing.

On Tuesday evening Central players presented "The Lord's Prayer," Wallace Burlington directing; "Where Love Is," by Mount Washington players, Mrs. Mae Price directing, and Fourth players, "The Bishop's Candlesticks," Mrs. J. O. Worden, directing.

In February the council plans to sponsor a Greater Kansas City tournament, open to all denominations.

Central Church

The Women's Club of Central Church reports October club work successful beyond their highest hopes. Attendance was excellent, the result of the work of Mrs. Wickham, the energetic attendance committee chairman.

The program committee gave lovers of Kansas City and Missouri a real treat and new appreciation of city and State. The beautiful word picture of autumn beauty by Mrs. Blanche Mesley and the paintings by Paul N. Craig, gave a new value to the land which the Lord has called Zion. Colonel Ruby D. Garrett also gave a splendid talk. Music was furnished by Mrs. Clayton Wolfe, at the organ, who played as an organ solo the composition by Powell Weaver, a Kansas City organist, entitled "Gothic Cathedral"; and Mrs. Fred Wamsley sang two songs for which Sir Carl Busch, noted Danish composer who has lived in Kansas City for many years, wrote the music. They were "Under the Greenwood Tree" and Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar."

Mrs. Lott Sandy, treasurer, with her band of friendly visitors, is having great success, according to the testimonies at prayer meetings and to the old and new friends at other services. The women's total collection to date is $228.86.

Social events, girls' circle activities, the gathering up of clothing and shoes, visiting, the collecting of money, and the prayer meeting dinner held November 8, are some of the activities which take the women's attention. They have been quilting and sewing, too, and their Scottish teas are proving of great social value and helping to swell the treasury. They are also planning to sponsor a "Gift Chest Opening" and turkey dinner December 8. In addition to these numerous interests Central Women's Club has a chorus, directed by Gene Christy, which meets at the church for rehearsal Wednesday at 11 a. m. All who wish to sing are welcome.

Mount Washington Church

Mount Washington women will shortly begin a house to house canvass of their group in the interests of church finances. Mrs. Walter Zimmerman was chosen leader for this work, and has twelve assistants.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The following speakers occupied Mount Washington pulpit during October: Doctor Charles Grabske, Elders T. C. Lentell, George Winegar, and W. F. Bolinger, Priests F. F. O'Bryan and Ivan Dillee, Bishop C. J. Hunt, and Elder C. G. Mesley, of the stake presidency.

The O. B. K.'s presented their play, "Where Love Is," Sunday evening, November 5, at the church. This play was their feature at the stake dramatic tournament, held at Central Church Nober 6 and 7.

The boys' volley ball team won the Kansas City stake championship this season, and the silver trophy which goes to the team for a year, is now proudly displayed. The team must win this trophy for three consecutive years before it is theirs permanently.

Halloween parties added to autumn festivities during the latter part of October, several being enjoyed by church school classes.

Grandview Church

The October sacrament service was in charge of Pastor C. G. Mesley. Bishop C. A. Skinner made the opening remarks. In the evening he discussed "The A. B. C.'s of Zion Building," and at the close of the service Sister Skinner told a story, "The River of Love" which Brother Skinner illustrated with a chalk drawing.

October 8, during the family worship period Miss Blanche Thornton, of the Jessie Lee Home for Orphan Children, of Seward, Alaska, gave an educational talk, describing the home, climate conditions of the country, and customs of the people. The home is supported by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Church.

Elder C. E. Wight preached a series of Sunday evening sermons in October. His themes were "Revelation and You," "The Church and You," "The Philosophy of Jesus and You," and "Your Response."

The O. B. K.'s and the Gleaners Class had a Halloween party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Faley October 31.

North East Church

Lloyd Seibert, a priest from Fourth Church, is conducting a series of special meetings here which began November 5. He was successful in a series held at Fourth Church, and his meetings here compose his second effort of this kind.

Elder H. R. Higdon was the morning speaker October 29, and was blessed in his effort in giving a helpful message.

The older young people's social at Brother Meisker's home was an enjoyable event. Brother Merlin Strong is the young people's leader.

Bishop C. A. Skinner will be with this congregation three Sundays in November teaching the law.

The sister of Pastor H. F. Davis has been visiting him, and during her stay has been very ill, but is now slowly recovering. Sister Emma Bramwell also has been ill.

Far West Stake

The fall months have been months of activity in this stake with the O. T. Z. rally at Cameron, the home-coming at Guilford and President McDowell's tour of the stake. But, in addition to these more important events, there are the many activities that do not attract much attention but which form the foundation of the work of the stake. Behind every successful stake rally there must be loyal workers in the local branches, and to these local workers and ministry goes much of the credit for the carrying on of the work under the present handicaps. Besides the strictly local workers, there are a number of loyal men who are filling one, two and three appointments every Sunday in the various churches throughout the stake, driving many miles at their own expense. A comprehensive "Keep the Law" program will be carried out during the period set aside.

President F. M. McDowell in Stake

President F. M. McDowell made a complete tour of the branches in this stake, meeting personally about one hundred and forty members of the priesthood. In addition to the personal consultations, seven general meetings were held with good attendance and interest.

Cameron was the first objective where Brothers McDowell and Ward A. Hougas spent October 22. President McDowell preached at the morning service and Elder Hougas at night. In the afternoon and evening they met with twenty-six men of the priesthood from Cameron and Far West branches.

Tuesday morning found them at Richmond where they met the priesthood of that branch after which they drove to Kingston and talked with the men there before noon and then spent the afternoon at Oakdale. A general meeting was held at Maple Grove that night for the branches of Maple Grove and Stewartsville. Wednesday was spent with the priesthood of Maple Grove in the morning and Stewartsville in the afternoon.

Starting in the northern part of the stake on Friday, November 3, they met the priesthood of Bedison, Sweet Home, King City, Ross Grove and Guilford branches. A general meeting was conducted at night at Guilford with several neighboring groups joining with them. Saturday and Sunday were filled with appointments and services in Saint Joseph. The priesthood of all four of these churches met President McDowell and he preached at First and Second churches.

Maple Grove Branch

Bishop Milo Burnett spent October 22 with Saints at Maple Grove. An all-day meeting was held and Stewartsville Branch joined in the activities. Attendance was unusually good at all services. Bishop Burnett spoke very forcibly in the morning and again at the evening service. In the afternoon a prayer service was conducted.

President F. M. McDowell held an evening service at Maple Grove during his recent tour of the stake. A good crowd greeted him and listened to his message. The following morning he held consultations with each member of the priesthood. He was accompanied and assisted by Elder Ward A. Hougas.

Trenton Mission

A renewed interest is being shown in the work at Trenton. More regular services are being held. On November 5, an all-day meeting was held at which time it was hoped that Bishop Burnett could outline the financial law and program. Bishop Burnett and his daughter, Mrs. Letha Timm, who is stake supervisor of women's activities, met with the Saints for their church school and sacrament services but were forced to return to Saint Joseph before the afternoon meeting, due to Sister Burnett's illness. Before leaving, however, Bishop Burnett outlined the work to be covered in the afternoon session which enabled local workers to carry out the program.

Stewartsville Branch

After enjoying another splendid stake reunion, the Saints have returned to their various local activities. Brother A. E. McCord gave a forceful sermon September 3 at 8 p. m., using for his theme text, "Gather my saints together unto me, they that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

September 7, there was enthusiastic interest shown at the semimonthly meeting of the young people. Volley ball was enjoyed after the service. The young people very much appreciate the hearty cooperation of their pastor, Gordon Hidy, in all of their activities.

Sunday, September 10, at 10.45 a. m., Elder Ward A. Hougas, stake president, gave a fitting and impressive sermon.

The church school teachers were chosen for the new year September 24. Sister Anna McCord was chosen to assist in conducting the junior church services. All sense their responsibilities and have an earnest desire to help accomplish the desired goal of helping to build God's kingdom. Promotion Day was observed October 1.

A new and continued interest is being shown in the Wednesday night prayer service, resulting in an increased attendance.

A number of the women from Stewartsville met Thursday, October 26, with Saint Joseph group of women, unaided. And, above all, the opportunity should be given to each one with whatever frequency is possible. The use of the Lord's prayer, both in unison and by an individual is of value, too, in encouraging prayer. Occasional talks on the meaning of the prayer will help to keep in mind the fact of its being a prayer rather than a recitation.

With all the various methods and means at hand, the leader has yet another point to watch if best results are to be realized. He must have about him a spirit of expectancy. When an assignment is given, it must be with the impression that he expects it to be carried out. So, too, in his attitude toward the group, he must let the children realize that he expects the worship period to proceed in an atmosphere of worship. Similarly, and this is paramount, he must actually expect the spirit of worship to be present—he must expect it so much that his expectancy is imparted to others.

Happy, indeed, is the group of juniors who can grow up familiar with the influence of God's Spirit in their church life; who can come to church with the determination to enter into and partake of the service. And to the end that the church of tomorrow may possess the true spirit of worship, the junior church of today needs to rededicate itself.

those of his songs which have become loved in the church, and which remain to this day. They are, "Evening Thought" ("As musing I sat all alone"), "Pittsfield" ("God is marshaling his army"); "Barbara" ("Think gently of the erring") and "The Angel Message" ("I have found the glorious gospel").

Eight years of life among the little band of worshipers at Pittsfield, and then, his faithful father having gone to his reward, Henry Mills was, on September 6, 1884, ordained an elder and pastor of the little flock his father had tenderly nurtured. But ill health had for a long time assailed him and he felt led to seek a more favorable climate. His brother Charles had already removed to Independence and was sending back glowing accounts of the spiritual enjoyment he had found in the church at that place. So, in November of 1884, accompanied by his faithful wife, who thus tore herself from all the happy associations of her former life, he moved all his possessions to the place designated as the future location of the city of Zion.

THE INDEPENDENCE branch at that time numbered about four hundred souls and was being zealously and faithfully shepherded by Elder Frederick G. Pitt, who at the time of this writing still abides with us, honored and loved by many. Compared to the conditions now prevailing, the Saints at Independence were in many ways in a state of undevelopment. But many stanch, devoted Saints were there, among whom the young family of Henry Mills soon found ample association. Church activities soon came to him, first as a leader of singing in the Sunday school. Later, he was chosen as superintendent of the Sunday school, a position which he occupied for a number of years. Directorship of the church choir was also a post he filled for several years. In this manner we come to the period of the church's history when, in the providence of God, the first "stakes" of the church were organized. On the 24th of April, 1901, he was chosen and ordained to the office of high priest and made a member of the Standing High Council of the Independence Stake, under the hands of Elders F. G. Pitt and E. L. Kelley. During this same period he had also been serving the church as a member of the Board of Publication. And during all of this time he had continued his activities as a merchant in Independence, his place of business being for forty-two years the building he had purchased soon after coming to Independence.

ON May 26, 1927, he suffered a stroke of appoplexy which affected his entire left side. It appeared for awhile that his faithful life was drawing to a close but he rallied and in time partially recovered; but his business career had to end. He now entered the period preparatory to his end and gave himself to reading, meditation and the ripening of a character that he had desired should be like the image of his Savior. On October 3, 1933, his beloved brother Charles preceded him to the Great Beyond, at the age of nearly ninety-one, and this loss affected him keenly, ruthlessly severing one more of the very few ties remaining in his life. On the following Sunday, October 8, he quietly celebrated his own birthday, the eighty-ninth anniversary of his life. It was marked by the receipt of a number of cards of congratulation and some gifts from friends and family; and quite a number called in the afternoon to felicitate him upon the event. It was a happy occasion for him, spent in the manner he most desired; and when the time for retirement came he sought his bed in the best of spirits. Sleep came to his tired, feeble body; but from this sleep there came no awakening except that which greeted his gentle spirit when he reached "the other side." The condition of his body gave clear indications that the anniversary that commemorated his entrance into this life also served as his natal day into the Greater Life. Truly, a beautiful ending for a beautiful character.

Of Henry Richard Mills it may be truly said that his life-long struggle to live after the pattern of his Savior resulted in the attainment to a large degree of the image of his Master, whom he truly loved. Had he chosen to do so he could, like Paul, have said of himself, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Author's Note

After an anniversary day pleasantly spent in receiving the greetings of friends and acquaintances; my father retired for his night's rest, evidently feeling very happy.

But when he fell asleep, it was to wake no more on this earthly side; but on that heavenly shore to which he looked forward.

On the following morning, when I realized that my father had departed during his hours of sleep; I wrote a few verses to supplement the poem written on his anniversary, the day previous.

The Landing on the Other Shore

By Frank W. Mills

The boat has landed over there
In that bright realm beyond compare.
Though mortals here must sadly weep
They know God gives his loved ones sleep.

He fell asleep! So we shall say
Until we cross the darkened way
"God giveth his beloved sleep"
And watches while their treasures keep.

Oh! Blessed thought, that we may go
To harvest that was sown below.
And with bright angels we may sing
The harvest festival they bring.

We sing the "Angel Message" true
Its tone ascends beyond the blue
Where angel voices catch the sound
And sing of "glorious gospel found."

And while today our hearts are sad
We welcome message true and glad Celestial glory! Gift most blest!
That comes when God gives gift of rest!

EVOLUTION—A GUIDING POWER

great changes must come about when once he clearly recognizes that, while the evolution of his body is nearly finished, the evolution of his personality is little more than begun, and that it may evolve to heights he cannot even image." So, once again science as the "handmaid of religion" invites "faith" to dare believe that while beginning as a child of "dust," he will be "clothed in immortality" and that our humanity sometime will be "the city of God."

where they had the privilege of hearing a talk by Mrs. Charles Koehler, of Independence, on the successful work which has been done by the women of Independence during the past year. It is hoped to institute the plan here and success is looked for under the consecrated leadership of Sister Frances Mauzey.

The stake young people's rally, held at Cameron October 28 and 29, was largely attended by Stewartsville young people, and as usual they contributed their part to its success. Miss Mona Armstrong gave one of the principal talks Saturday night. The Hinderks and Powell quartets were included in the musical numbers.

The communion services during the recent past months have been largely attended and have been of a high spiritual nature. The sacred gift of prophecy has been experienced.

President F. M. McDowell and Brother Ward A. Hougas held a priesthood meeting here at the church October 25.

An adult halloween party was held in the basement of the church, Monday night, October 30. The decorations of gorgeous autumn leaves, chrysanthemums, jack-o-lanterns, and ghosts added much to the beauty and spirit of the evening.

A party for the young people was given Halloween night at the home of Brother and Sister Hale McCord.

First Saint Joseph Church

First Church had the privilege of hearing the Aeolian Ladies Chorus, of Independence, at the vesper service, October 22. The chorus, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, gave an hour concert, assisted by George Anway, tenor, and Mrs. JoZelma Taylor, reader.

Elder H. C. Timm was the speaker at the morning service. On the previous Sunday, Elder O. Salisbury, pastor of Second Church, was the speaker at the vesper hour. Other speakers for the month were C. N. Jensen, Elders John Ruoff and T. E. Hale.

At the church school hour, October 22, the director presented Mrs. Letha Timm with a gold seal certificate in religious education. Sister Timm is the first to gain this high mark of achievement here and is to be congratulated on the completion of this work.

The women held an all-day meeting Thursday, October 26, at which time Mrs. C. C. Koehler, of Independence, and a corps of her workers met with them. There were representatives from several branches in the stake as well as from the other churches in the city. After luncheon, Mrs. Koehler discussed the activities of the women in Independence during the past year, particularly stressing their financial campaign.

Halloween was the occasion for two parties. The O. T. Z.'s met at the church and then drove to a farm some ten miles away where the evening was spent around a large bonfire and rambling over the surrounding country in a game of follow the leader.

The children's division had a party at the church to which all parents and adults were invited. The lower room was decorated in true halloween style and the entertainment included most of the pastimes so well known around halloween time.

The local choir participated in the Harvest Festival Chorus in Independence and the combined choirs of First and Second Churches are rehearsing the same music, intending to present it at both churches before Thanksgiving.

The Saint Joseph priesthood met individually with President F. M. McDowell Saturday and Sunday, November 4 and 5. Sunday morning President McDowell gave a challenging theme talk in the sacrament service at First Church. At the vesper service he delivered a splendid sermon after which he spoke again at Second Church at seven-thirty.

Pastoral

To the New York and Philadelphia District: A week of meetings are being held in Philadelphia, November 19 to 26. Apostle P. M. Hanson and F. H. Edwards will be with us to conduct classes each night. Over the week-end, the 25th and 26th, all the branches of the district are invited to participate in the services. Particularly we would like to meet the priesthood, to talk over some of our common problems and ideals. The services for the week-end will be as follows: Saturday, 5.30 p. m., supper at church for visitors; 7 to 9 p. m., class work or preaching; Sunday, 8 a. m., priesthood prayer meeting; 9.30 a. m., worship service; 10 and 11, Apostles to speak; lunch; 2.30 p. m., priesthood conference; 2.30, prayer service for visitors; 5 p. m., supper; 6.30, baptismal service and confirmations. Please give this as much publicity in branches as possible, and all plan to meet with us.—Henry L. Livingston, district president.

Conference Notices

Spring River district conference will be held at the Nowata, Oklahoma, church, corner of Hickory and Wettock, November 24 to 26. A program will be rendered Friday evening under the direction of the young people; a prayer meeting Saturday morning at nine o'clock and business session at ten and again at two in the afternoon. There will be preaching at night, and the regular services on Sunday. The branch presidents should see that the contributions for the district budget, together with the other reports are sent to the district secretary and treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Wilson, 1225 Lyon Avenue, Springfield, Missouri. Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry will meet with us if he can.—Amos T. Higdon, district president.

Special Service for Des Moines District

Saints of Des Moines District will have a special service for the filing and receiving of inventories and tithing reports Sunday, December 3, at Des Moines, 717 East Twelfth Street, Bishop G. L. DeLapp the special speaker. We should like Saints of all branches, groups and all scattered members to attend. Services include church school at 9.30 a. m.; special inventory service at 10.30; sacrament, 2.30 p. m.; class work, 6.30, and preaching, 7.30. We should appreciate it if the scattered Saints would write to the undersigned for inventory and tithing blanks.—Stephen Robinson, district bishop's agent, 2212 Thirty-ninth Street, Des Moines.

All-day Meeting

All-day services will be held at Armada, Michigan, November 19, under direction of Detroit district officers. The first service will be held at 9.30 a. m. and others at 11, 2 p. m., and 7.30. Those in charge are trying to secure Elder William Patterson, of Port Huron, as the afternoon speaker. Brother William D. Holmes and family are the only Saints at Armada, and they ask all Saints who can to come and help in their services. The invitation is extended to neighboring districts. Please bring basket lunch. Since the place of meeting is not yet known, visitors are asked to drive to the home of Sister Mildred E. Holmes, 694 East Main Street. Her name will be on the house, also notice of where to go. Members are asked to pray for this service, that if possible a mission may be opened at Armada. There will be special music.—Mildred E. Holmes.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—The one hundred and thirty-fifth conference of this district convened with Indianapolis Branch, August 12 and 13, opening with a 9.30 a. m. prayer meeting, J. O. Dutton in charge. This proved to be a spiritual service, and Floyd Gatrost was instructed to prepare for work in the ministry of the church. The women's department served meals in the basement. Business meeting began at 2 p. m. with J. O. Dutton in the chair. The conference voted that he and associates, Elders H. W. Burwell and A. W. Gage, preside over the conference. Sister Nita R. Ferguson, district secretary, was not present, and Floyd Gatrost was chosen secretary pro tem. Reports were received from Elders J. O. Dutton, J. L. Glenn, A. W. Gage, H. W. Burwell, W. O. Robertson, C. H. Fish, C. N. Maymon, W. N. Hanner, and C. A. Nolan; priests, H. C. Humphrey, E. A. Jaegers, W. E. Kreutzer, James Welch, J. R. Byrn, A. G. Bennett, and W. G. Maymon; teachers, H. B. Thompson and R. Z. Weyler; deacons, Frank Martin, S. M. Stacy, W. H. Martin and Charles Shanks. Branches reporting were Derby, Byrneville, Louisville, and Indianapolis. Marengo failed to report. Reports were received from J. O. Dutton as district chorister and superintendent of religious education. W. O. Robertson reported as district treasurer as follows: Total receipts, $24.92; disbursements, $14.25; on hand $10.67. A resolution from Louisville Branch favoring the ordination of Charles Homer Shelton to the office of deacon, was considered and the ordination provided for. It was provided that the chair appoint one of each branch to receive donations for the Harvest Home Festival. Derby was selected as the place of the next annual conference. Election of officers was as follows: President, J. O. Dutton; he named as his counselors, H. W. Burwell, and A. W. Gage; secretary, Nita R. Ferguson; district treasurer, W. O. Robertson; chorister and director of church school, J. O. Dutton; auditing committee, Sister Katie Gahafer, Sister Hanner and Sister Nita R. Ferguson. It was moved that they sustain the following general church officers: P. M. Hanson, of the Twelve; J. O. Dutton, district missionary, and W. O. Roberston, bishop's agent. The following were elected delegates to General Conference: J. O. Dutton, Mrs. J. O. Dutton, A. W. Gage, Mrs. A. W. Gage, Robert Weyler, James Welch, Mrs. James Welch, and Mrs. Charles A. Nolan. It was moved, seconded and carried that each branch take a collection each month to be sent to the district treasurer. The meeting adjourned at 5.15. H. W. Burwell was the evening speaker, J. O. Dutton in charge of the service. On Sunday A. W. Gage was in charge of the 9 a. m. church school; sacrament service at 10.15, J. O. Dutton, H. W. Burwell and A. W. Gage in charge, assisted by Priests James Welch and H. C. Humphrey. In this meeting the spirit of prophecy was enjoyed, Brother Glenn Tice being called to the office of priest. At 2 p. m., A. W. Gage was in charge of preaching service and called a vote of Indianapolis Branch on the ordination of Glenn Tice, then the conference voted on the matter, and Brother Tice was ordained a priest by J. O. Dutton and A. W. Gage. A vote of thanks was tendered Indianapolis Branch, especially the women's department, for the wonderful care extended throughout the conference. J. O. Dutton was the evening speaker after which the confernece adjourned according to previous resolution.

HEALTH IS WEALTH

Health is not just an accident. Healthy, natural food make a healthy normal natural body. Often diseased unnatural foods will make an Aint out of a Saint. Don't get up with a heavy dark-brown taste in the mouth, a breath that will make life miserable for others and say, "God is not kind to me." God loves all of us, but he can't indorse some of the eating we participate in.

Our Departed Ones

SLOAN.—Thomas Jefferson Sloan was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, December 16, 1863. His boyhood was spent in the State of his birth. In 1883, he moved with his parents to Cameron, Missouri, and was united in marriage to Nancy Ellen Stanfill in 1886. To this union were born three children: Freddie L., Sherman J., and Earl O. Earl preceded his father in death in November, 1922. Mr. Sloan was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, May 4, 1902. Departed this life October 28, 1933, at his home at Cameron. He leaves to mourn, his wife, two children: Mrs. B. C. Elvert, of Kansas City, and S. J. Sloan, of Cameron; five grandchildren, one great-grandchild, three brothers and two sisters. A good man has gone to his reward. He was a kind husband, loving father, and fine neighbor and citizen.

BEEKMAN.—Ruth Ann Coonce, daughter of Mary E. and Henry Coonce, was born December 18, 1892, near Fortescue, Missouri, and passed away at her home near Big Lake, October 5, 1933. She was baptized by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, February 16, 1914. She was united in marriage to Jasper Beekman on October 14, 1914, and to this union seven children were born, the first dying in infancy. She leaves to mourn, her husband and six children, Mary, Rachael, Richard, Amos, Ruth Ann and Joseph, all of the home; her mother and step-father, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Lundy; one brother, Noah Coonce, Rulo, Nebraska; two half-sisters, Mrs. Roy Stone and Mrs. Carl Kent, of Fortescue; one half-brother, Junior Lundy, of Forest City, as well as other relatives and friends. Most of her life was spent near her home except for one year which was spent at Mount Vernon, Missouri, in the State Sanitarium. She was confined to her bed for about two years during which time she received all the help that loving hands could give her. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church, Elder J. L. Bear, of Saint Joseph, officiating. Burial was in the old cemetery near Mound City, Missouri.

PENNOCK.—Lacretia Ann Pennock, daughter of Thornton and Elizabeth Oats, was born February 28, 1874, in Little Grant Township, Grant County, Wisconsin. After an illness of several months, she passed away October 19. She married Joseph Willis Pennock, November 24, 1898, and one daughter was born to them, Elve E., who died in infancy. Besides her husband, Mrs. Pennock leaves to mourn, one sister, Mrs. Bessie Loush, of Little Grant, two nephews, three nieces, many other relatives and friends. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, July 7, 1901, and was a devoted member to the end. The funeral was held at Lancaster, Wisconsin, Elder J. O. Dutton preaching the sermon, assisted by Elder G. E. Noble. Interment was in the cemetery on the road to Bloomington out of Lancaster.

EGEL.—Emma Cornelia Brown was born January 28, 1858, at Champaign, Illinois, and died at the Independence Sanitarium, October 31, 1933. July 9, 1874, she was married to Davilla Manlove and to this union were born five children: Truman C., Clarence O., Ethel C., Edith G., and Verna A. Three years after his death in 1892, she married John Lehman, who lived only six months. To this union one child, Donnie, was born, who died in 1924. She remained a widow for fourteen years then married John Egel, of Stewartsville, where they lived a few years, then moved to Cameron, Missouri. There Mr. Egel died in 1923. She was baptized into the church July 9, 1895. Was a loyal, devoted wife and mother and a true Christian, leading many to see the light of the gospel. She was a charter member of Cameron Branch. Left to mourn are: two sons, three daughters, four sisters, one brother, eleven grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church at Cameron in charge of F. L. Hinderks, and interment was in Graceland Cemetery.

Redeeming Zion

(A John Sheehy Story)

One morning at the conclusion of our early morning radio worship, Paul Craig and I were in the studio. We had been discussing Zion and her benefits and blessings. Paul turned to me and said: "John, let's you and I build Zion." He meant it, and he had hit upon the solution of our Zionic problems—"Let's you and I build Zion."

In the Old Testament Joshua thought serving the Lord a personal matter which began with the perpendicular first person singular pronoun. He said: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

With God helping us, redeeming Zion is a You and I proposition.

Courage

This one happened at the American Royal Show. The editors had been invited with other members of the Missouri Press Association to attend.

There were about twenty riders in the big sawdust ring, putting their mounts through their paces, at this moment riding at a sharp canter.

One thoughtless spectator tossed a large paper into the ring just in front of a lady rider. Her mount jumped and whirled around, throwing her. Luckily, she was not trampled by the other horses. With real courage, she remounted, and rode so well in the rest of the exhibition that she took one of the prizes.

Sometimes we "get thrown for a loss," and it is a real test of courage, whether we accept defeat, or get up, forget our bruises and go on again with what we started to do.

An "Old" Story

"Talk about your inspirational services!" the Pigeon was enthusiastic, "I experienced one the other night. I was privileged—and by that I mean I was privileged, I'm not just airing the old expression—to hear a pastor in the pulpit telling the old, old story with all the earnestness and ardor of his big soul. And when I looked into the faces of the people who sat listening, well, I recalled the words of a song Latter Day Saints like to sing:

'I love to tell the story;
For those who know it best
Seem hungering and thirsting
To hear it, like the rest.'

"Those words are true—I know they are after that service. And I have a deeper appreciation now both of the song and of good pastors and their work."

Pigeonette

"I like to watch some men," says Pigeonette, "they are so funny. They are most humorous when they get to taking themselves seriously. As soon as a man gets to the pompous stage, you know that he has reached the limit of his development."

It is easy to raise a temperature on religious enthusiasm, but it is of little use unless it is reasonable, literate, and effective in changing lives.

Blue Pencil Notes

"DO YOU REALLY THINK there was a Tower of Babel?" asked Sister Goodentart. "Yes," replied Deacon Goodentart, "that was where Solomon kept his seven hundred wives."

THESE ARE TIMES for strict economy and contentions cost too much—the church cannot afford them now. I was with Brother Floyd McDowell when two elders composed personal differences of long standing. Brother McDowell said to them: "I have suspected in the past that you two men took pleasure in your quarrel—you must look for your recreation along some other line from now on." Saints may well forego the expensive luxury of personal quarrels as a part of the sacrifice required in these times.

YEARS AGO Brother Elbert Clarke of Colorado Springs returned from Sunday service, and Sister Clarke said to him, "What did the preacher preach on?" "That is it," replied Brother Clarke, "he preached on and on."

AT A TIME when I was very ill and very despondent a physician who was somewhat skilled in spiritual ministration as well as in materia medica advised me: "When you are feeling so badly, especially at night when you are unable to sleep, try thinking about your blessings. Forget your ills and recount your blessings." I found the course advised very helpful. I remembered that I had the church, with all that it stands for: faith in God—hope of immortality. I had my family, loyal to the last ditch. I had many very fine friends. In these times of trouble, incident to world conditions, the Saints may very well seek comfort recounting the blessings that remain to them; and especially so at Thanksgiving time.

THIS SAME PHYSICIAN also gave me three maxims: "Look up, not down. Look out, not in. Look forward, not backward." Let us look up; not down. That is, let us aspire to a higher plane than some do who seem to think only of eating, drinking, smoking, money getting, and sensual dissipations. Look out, not in. Self-examination and introspection are helpful at intervals, but the man who is habitually introspective becomes morbid and pessimistic. Let not the church spend its time in critical self-analysis, constantly finding flaws within itself and conditions to deplore and condemn and gossip about. There should be enough self searching to discover and correct fundamental errors. But for the most part we should be looking out and about us for opportunities to serve: either in missionary or pastoral capacity. Look forward, not backward. We may seek to correct the mistakes of the past, to brood over them and become embittered and despondent is fatal. We may at times rejoice in the memory of past blessings, to constantly seek to clutch them to our bosoms while bemoaning the spiritual poverty of the present is also fatal. The church generally seems to be getting its head above the troubled waters that have sought to engulf us of recent years. Men are beginning to look forward and to plan for a concerted, organized, consecrated forward surge in missionary endeavor and Zion building, if and when improved economic conditions make such a move possible. Let us look forward and move forward.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

MANY TIMES in the past two years I have been called upon to write letters of condolence to friends who had suffered the loss of loved ones. It seems that the last two years has required more of this than at any time in my experience. In reply to one such letter I received a letter which indicates a depth of feeling not appreciated in some quarters and also indicates that many times we are misunderstood because of our efforts to conceal our feelings. From my own experience I can appreciate the sentiments expressed by the mourning brother who writes:

"Your letter of condolence reached me in due time. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. As you may well appreciate I have been the recipient of literally hundreds of expressions in one form or another. Your letter was just such a letter as I would expect you to write, and yet when I received it I was surprised. It was the most sensible letter of them all and one which has been of great comfort and strength to me. I was prepared to be misunderstood. To be misunderstood has been such a large part of my life that another one would not add much to the load. An outward manifestation of grief is hateful to me. I'd rather choke than let anyone think that anything in life could hurt me. Maybe I have turned the philosophy of the Saints into stoicism, but I try to believe the Lord when he said, 'My burden is light, my yoke is easy, put it on.' I have so schooled myself (of course not completely) and have been very much misunderstood."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

BROTHER ELLIS MINOR, who is occupying some of the church land in Taney County in the Ozarks, writes to me frequently, and I know something of the difficulties through which he has passed and which still confront him, but the fine pioneer spirit with which he has entered upon his work and is carrying on is indicated by the following from a recent letter:

"We are still hanging on and wondering if the tune of the Raven will prevail. It is a hard job to build a ranch, to herd a bunch of sheep, to send children off to school or college, keep the larder full, and shoes on the feet of the children, and at the same time keep up the vision people in and out of the church expect; but it seems as though my life lies along this line, so on we go. We are surely glad to do it and rejoice when we feel that others have an interest in our work. I know our task can be accomplished and when it is painted white, then others will think so, but the living and the doing are hard."

Then remembering the number of times that I have suggested I should like to visit them because of my great interest in that part of the country and in admiration of its beauty, he adds:

"It isn't so beautiful here now, but the same spirit prevails in the Ozarks, so come down and we will get a turkey if possible."

General Conference Oratorio

The oratorio selected for performance at the next General Conference in April, 1934, is the greatest dramatic oratorio ever written, Elijah, composed by Felix Mendelssohn.

We want all singers who are expecting to attend General Conference, who find themselves capable of singing this music, to prepare to sing with the chorus. We especially urge the singers who sang in Brother Gresty's oratorio, The Course of Time, to join us.

We advise that you procure a copy of the oratorio immediately; ask for the SCHIRMER Edition. If not convenient to purchase books where you live, write to Paul N. Craig, care of The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, at once. He will quote you special quantity prices, and mail you copies as soon as you order. Do not delay getting the music, as the time is none too long to allow for the mastery of this great music.

All choruses in Part I of the oratorio will be used except Chorus No. 9. Only Choruses No. 22 and 29 of Part II will be used.

Will the pastors and musical directors please bring this to the attention of those who should know of it.

Watch the Saints' Herald for further information.

General Director of Music.

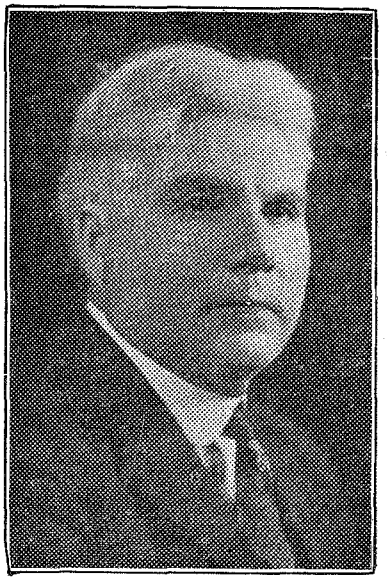
Men You Ought to Know



J. A. GILLEN
President of the Quorum of Twelve

It is probably unnecessary to say that he is one of the best loved men in the church, but we want to say it anyhow.

Brother Gillen completely absorbs himself in his work. He does his best preaching at a temperature of 104°F. Although his hair has become white in the service of the church, he is strong and vigorous, and able to do an amount of preaching that would exhaust younger men.

We Think This Is Important

(And It Is!)

Three weeks notice should be given for a change of address to become effective. If you are moving, allow that amount of time, and send in your order early.

No more back numbers of our weekly periodicals can be furnished. If your Herald subscription expires and you wait three months to send in your subscription, you will be unable to secure the intervening numbers. Present publishing conditions and costs make it impossible for us to maintain a sufficient supply of copies to continue our former service on back numbers.

A Chat for the Parents and Friends of Our Youngest Women—

IS YOUR MARY IN THE CLOUDS?

By Leta B. Moriarty

"I JUST DON'T KNOW what I'm going to do with Mary," says a perplexed mother of four boys and an only daughter. "She goes around the house with her head up in the clouds, seeing little that goes on, hearing even less, and generally thinking only about herself."

Mary is a quiet, usually well-mannered girl of thirteen. You probably wouldn't call her pretty even though she does have a lovely complexion and pretty dimples. Until a few weeks ago, she seemed just as wide awake and alert as any other girl of her class; but now her dreamy "spells" mystify her mother and irritate other members of the family, particularly the boys when Mary fails to do something she has promised or something that is expected of her.

What has happened to Mary? Permit me to generalize.

Up until her twelfth or thirteenth year, the normal girl is a child. She runs and plays. Her hair is tousled by the wind, and she likes it. She does not worry about freckles or smudgy hands or torn dresses. Her imagination runs riot. First she is a fairy princess imprisoned in the ancient castle of the maple tree; next she is a little Negro girl down in Africa swimming for her life from the crocodiles. Then perhaps she is a stunt flyer, or a cow girl riding the western prairies, or a fairy. She is a veritable tomboy.

SUDDENLY the door of womanhood opens, only a little way, but enough that the girl catches a glimpse of a different world. She pauses in her play. She is fascinated, a strange fascination which makes her wish for long skirts, for clean, polished fingernails, for carefully curled hair. She feels within her the stirring of a new self.

She is an adolescent now, we say, and how fast she is growing! It is easy to say these things, but by no means easy to understand the various colorings of and conditions affecting adolescence and approaching womanhood.

This new self that she has found becomes the girl's center of things. All experiences are measured and weighed in their relation to this self. The girl's world takes her to the clouds. She dreams of many things—good schooling, popularity among her schoolmates, a job much above the ordinary, or more probably she will call it a "career," college thrills, travel, and a home someday in which she will preside as the happy wife and mother. Nor is this glamor of dreaming limited to the future. It exists for her in the present. The whole world seems to be her lover. She "adores" it; she uses all the adjectives she knows. She is a profligate user of superlatives.

of girlhood is here discussed by one who is herself a strong friend of young girls. As a friend and worker with them she has had years of experience, in the Sunday school, in other local and church activities, and as an officer in the Girl Scout organization.

Other articles, discussing other intimate problems of girls, are promised for future publication.

WITH THE VISTAS of womanhood opening, widening, inviting, our thirteen or fourteen-year-old finds herself face to face with certain adjustments that must be made in the next few years — physical adjustments, mental, spiritual. She must adapt herself to new conditions at home, at school, in the church. She must choose a vocation. And all the time her mind is crowded with the wonders of this new self, with plans for new clothes, with love of books and music and good friends. Oh, so much to do! and so little time in which to do them!

One authority on this question has said that the reason there is so much misery and unhappiness in home-life today is because the girl in her adolescence is not trained to live. She is not urged to learn the fundamental law of kindness and consideration. Instead she flounders in a world dazzling and attracting beyond her powers to comprehend. She fails to learn in the home many of the things which it is her right to know and which will help her in years to come. Sometimes those who love her most take the attitude: "Oh, she's young yet. There's time enough. Let her stay young and untouched by the knowledge of maturity. In this day of youthful frankness and cynicism, it is nice to see her innocent." Thus the girl is denied useful and practical lessons by those who wish most to provide for her future.

It is well to remind ourselves that in spite of glorious hopes and dreams which our little castle-builder may concoct, most of the girls in our community are destined to live amid the commonplaces of life, very much as you live and I live. Most girls will find their time occupied by the demands of home-making in later life, or the duties of a school-teacher, or whatever profession or trade they choose.

It is the task of those who love girls and call themselves friends of girls to help the girl blend her experiences up in the clouds with the problems of everyday life. This must be done gently, understandingly, wisely. The girl in her teens must be prepared for everyday life, or she may fail to learn that:

"The trivial round, the common task
Will furnish all we ought to ask,
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To bring ourselves daily nearer God."

And what of Mary? There is nothing wrong with her. She has entered this adolescent "up in the clouds" time of her life. With wise mothering and leading, Mary will come down to earth again and learn to adapt herself to the everyday world. How soon she makes the adjustment and the success with which she does it depends to a very great extent on the girl's innate adaptability and on her chumship with her mother.

I Shall Not Worry

The future, like an untrod path
Before me winds away.
I know not what tomorrow holds,
I can but live today.
But though beyond its flame-etched rim
I may not haste nor see,
I shall not worry what it is
The future holds for me.

I will try to greet each new born day
With calm and cheerful mind.
Serene that mete it sun or storm
The strength I need I will find.
For wiser hands than mine have shaped
My life as it should be
I shall not worry what it is
The future holds for me.

With noble heart I will do my best
The tasks that to me fall;
Cast out vain hopes of yesterday
That have gone beyond recall.
When weary then my couch I seek,
Sore tried, but conscience free,
I shall not worry what it is
The future holds for me.

The Necessity of Loyalty if We Would Attain the Goals of the Church

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

LOYALTY is the most desirable of all characteristics, because embodied within it are so many virtues. The Savior stressed the fact that love was the fundamental principle of righteous living, but to be loyal, a Saint must not only be motivated by love for mankind, but he or she must be constant, unswerving in fidelity, devoted and self-sacrificing.

Loyalty is the keynote of friendship, the comfort of parents, an absolute necessity in wedlock, an assurance of success in sport, and the foundation of any organization, be it club, lodge, or church. Disloyalty is a crime, classed in the same category as murder, by all civilized nations, and is justly punished with summary death.

The bitterest drops in the cup which our Savior drank to the very dregs, were his because of the disloyalty of his disciples, who failed him in his hour of need. Unwilling to forego a few hours of sleep, his followers left him alone through all the long night of sweating agony. From the depths of his disappointment he voiced the heart-broken reproach, "Could ye not watch with me one hour?"

AND PETER, warm-hearted, zealous, impulsive, lied and cursed to save his coward's skin. How he must have been cut to the heart when his Lord bent his suffering eyes upon him! To Peter's credit be it said, however, that the terrible lesson learned that day was never forgotten, and from that time henceforth, he remained loyal through persecution, imprisonment, and even unto death.

Are we as Saints deserting the cause of Christ? Are we leaving Him to watch alone? Are we continually wounding Him by our disloyalty, our selfishness in seeking our ease and pleasure; or are we standing by even as John, the beloved, stood on the danger zone at the foot of the Cross? Because he "stood by," Christ intrusted his dear mother to his keeping. Only to those who are today loyally waiting, will be given the great work of God.

How we love to sing that good old hymn, "When the Roll is Called up Yonder, I'll Be There!" But unless we are "Johnny-on-the-spot," when the roll is called down here, unless we are ready to answer the call of service, we might more appropriately sing, "When the roll is called down yonder, I'll be there." (See Revelation 20: 15.)

MOST of us recall the disaster of the Titanic, designated in glaring newspaper headlines as "A super ship," "Unsinkable." It was the acme of luxury having palatial equipment in all its appointments, and the elite of two continents offered small fortunes to be included among the passengers on its maiden voyage; the aristocracy of Great Britain mingled with the multimillionaires of the United States. It was indeed a gay throng which embarked on the mighty vessel.

As they neared the banks of Newfoundland, twice the radio call came, warning of danger from icebergs, but twice the operator disregarded the message, resting in the false security that was to be their undoing. Suddenly there was a mighty crash; the ship had struck an iceberg. There was no confusion. The captain ordered all women and children to the lifeboats. The crew and male passengers stood back, outwardly calm, self-effacing, loyal to duty and their ideals, and all the while the members of the orchestra played unfalteringly. As the colossal ship upended and sank beneath the icy waters of the Atlantic, to the listening ears of the shivering occupants of the lifeboats, floated the strains of "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Verily, "Greater love hath no man than this."

Are we, who call ourselves Saints, going to be less loyal to our church, to Zionic ideals, to the Christ whom we profess to follow? Are we, who claim to be the children of light, willing to allow the luster of their loyalty to outshine our own? Perish the thought! Why are Saints, Saints? Because they hold on when it is easier to let go; because they allow neither calumny, nor backbiting, nor hypocrisy, nor weakness to permit them to lose their grip; because they push on when they feel like standing still; smile when they feel like tears, and keep silent when it would be a relief to hurl vindictive epithets, and last, because they are loyal to the church and all it means to them. The initials L. D. S. might also stand for Loyal Devoted Saints.

A Saint may mourn his inability to preach, or to teach, to sing, or play the piano, but all can help by their prayers and presence. A loyal Saint will not absent himself from services for trivial reasons. What though Sister Jones hurries from house to house carrying tales? She is but a rattling window in the house of God and everyone sees through her. And what matter if Elder Brown surreptitiously thrusts his chew of tobacco in his cheek when he meets a church member? He is but a rotting timber in the church's foundation, which will, without doubt, be replaced by another. And what though Sister

Official Whereabouts and Activities

As Thanksgiving draws near it is interesting to note the world-around locations as well as the services which are being rendered the church by members of the leading quorums.

President Frederick M. Smith has been in Southwestern Texas District the past few days, and is not expected home until the latter part of this week.

President Elbert A. Smith is now at home in Independence. He is devoting considerable time to preaching and writing.

President F. M. McDowell is visiting branches along the western coast of the United States in the interests of the priesthood. He first went to Los Angeles. Last week end he spent in San Francisco.

Apostle James A. Gillen has been giving generously of his efforts to Oklahoma Saints, holding a series of services at Miami.

Being a member of the Graceland College Board of Trustees, Apostle J. F. Garver was in Independence last Thursday for a meeting of that body. He returned to his mission work immediately.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis is laboring in the Society Islands Mission, where he has been since July.

Another Sanitarium experience for Apostle J. F. Curtis. He underwent another operation there about two weeks ago, but is now at his home, recuperating.

Apostle M. A. McConley spent last week-end at Vancouver, British Columbia, and is on his way to Chilliwack.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, is the meeting place of Apostles Paul M. Hanson and F. Henry Edwards. They are working together there, having recently been helpers at the departmental conference of Southern New England District, held with Boston Branch.

Hundreds of Michigan Saints testify to the quality of service Apostle D. T. Williams is giving in sermons, lectures, and counsel.

Apostle John W. Rushton is using these November days to conclude his work in England, where he has been, with the exception of time spent in visiting Scandinavian countries and the Continent, since the last day of July, 1932. He will return to America on the Alantic Transport Company liner, Westernland, landing in New York about December 11. From there he will come direct to Kansas City and thence to his home in Southern California.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer is laboring in the West. His present mailing address is Sacramento, California.

From the typewriter of Apostle George G. Lewis comes report of missionary tours in far-off Australia, of administrative labors, of sermons preached, of organizations effected. Nor does he forget to mention the lovely things of Australia's early summer—the gorgeous flowers, days at the seaside, and the warm-weather church outings. Brother Lewis is working at Sydney until Christmas.

Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry spent a busy week-end in Missouri November 18 and 19. In addition to conferring with general administrative officers, he preached on Sunday in Kansas City Stake.

There is scarcely a busier man in Independence than Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp. He is called out of town to preach almost every week-end, but Sunday he remained at home to meet with Bishop Curry.

G. W. Leggott Pastor for Forty Years

"A record of forty years' devoted service was suitably recognized on Sunday at the Gospel Hall, James-street, Bradford, when Mr. G. W. Leggott, of North-road, Clayton, was presented with an illuminated address," is the opening sentence of the press story printed by the Ashton-Under-Tyne Reporter for October 28.

The gift was presented to Brother Leggott by Thomas Brian, senior, oldest member of the branch, and there were speeches honoring the pastor from a number of members including Apostle John W. Rushton.

Graceland's Board of Trustees Meets

The Graceland College Board of Trustees held a meeting at the Auditorium, Independence, November 16. All trustees were present except F. M. McDowell who is in California. Those who assembled to transact business for the college were Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Audentia Anderson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Doctor Charles F. Grabske, Patriarch Albert Carmichael, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp, of Independence.

Youth's Forum

Marriage—Inside, or Outside?

For obvious reasons, the name of the author of the following letter cannot be given. But readers will thank him for his effort to help others avoid a tragedy that has come within his observation, and touched his own life. Clearly, what he has to say is of the greatest importance to young people.—Editors.

Youth and romance! We all thrill at these words and we want to connect them in our minds with happiness. It is of romance and happiness that I want to write.

In Section 111 of Doctrine and Covenants. we are told that those who marry out of the church will be considered weak in the faith. Those contemplating such a step may not think seriously of this statement, but if there are any such, I wish that I could appeal to them on the question of their own happiness. They are all expecting much happiness.

First we will admit that many who marry outside the church are fortunate enough to bring their companions in, but many more do not. A lack of harmony in one's ideals brings about unhappiness. If a compromise is made we lose some of our own spirituality and we withhold from the church the talents and the service which we might have given. In times of trial or sorrow this realization will bring deep remorse. We may not even be permitted to raise our children in the faith that we have been taught to love. If we do stand stanch in our faith and decide to be active in the church in spite of everything, then friction and unhappiness result.

One of the well known men of our church has told that he was influenced by a sermon preached from the text found in 2 Corinthians, 6: 14, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," to the extent that he broke his engagement with his sweetheart out of the church when, after a talk with her he learned that she would not consent to have him do church work. He later married in the church and was sent on foreign missions and with his companion found happiness in service and a realization of their highest ideals. Who can judge what might have been the loss to the church if this man had married out of the church?

I feel that I even might have made some contribution or could have developed my talents better in the years since I left Graceland, if I had not married out of the church. I see others who have made their choices out of the church and there is in every case something lacking in harmony or happiness. Those who have married in the church, though they may have trials, are in most cases going on in a unity of purpose, which brings happiness.

And so, dear youth of the church, think long and prayerfully before you make your decision, and if you want to be happy, marry in the church.

The Good Time Is Now

There was never a better time than the present for the young people of the world. For starting in business, for establishing a new service, for opening the way with new enterprise, the immediate future offers great opportunity.

The world is in a valley between two mountains. It is just now rubbing the bruises suffered in a fall down the steep mountain back of it; and it is picking itself up preparatory for the ascent of the mountain ahead.

In the recent economic cataclysm, old businesses have failed, old services have discontinued, old leaders have been retired.

It is a time of opportunity for youth. The leaders, the thinkers, the captains of industry for tomorrow are in the schools of the country today.

Shiny Elbows

By Edna Lucille Cox

Why is it that people, in talking or thinking of equality, always look up the scale of man's riches, instead of down to the poor man's shiny elbows and threadbare clothing? Do the rich lead the more perfect life?

It is said of the poor that they are happy because they don't know any better. Is that true, or do the poor more quickly perceive the real values of life because of the lessons taught therein? At least, they are more humble and willing to give, to work, and to sympathize.

Most of the churches are kept up by the poor, anyway; because the poor really realize how much a little can help. So, it would be well, if, in looking for a standard of measurement, the person might look again and see behind threadbare clothes, and remember that material gain is not all that counts. The poor might furnish a better standard for equality than the rich.

The Testimony of a Searcher

I took a day to search for God,
And found Him not. But as I trod
By rocky ledge, through woods unnamed,
Just where one scarlet lily flamed,
I saw His footprint in the sod.

Then suddenly, all unaware,
Far off in the deep shadows, where
A solitary hermit thrush
Sang through the holy twilight hush,
I heard His voice upon the air.

And even as I marveled how God gives us heaven here and now,
In a stir of wind that hardly shook
The poplar leaves beside the brook—
His hand was light upon my brow.

At last with evening as I turned Homeward, and thought what I had learned,
And all that there was still to probe—
I caught the glory of His robe
Where the last fires of sunset burned.

Back to the world with quickening start
I looked and longed for any part
In making saving Beauty be;
And from that kindly ecstasy
I knew God dwelt within my heart.

—Bliss Carman.

It Isn't Easy

To apologize. To begin again. To admit error. To be unselfish. To face a sneer. To be considerate. To endure success. To keep on trying. To profit by mistakes. To give and forget. To think and then act. To keep out of the rut. To make the best of little. To shoulder deserved blame. To subdue an ugly temper. To maintain a high standard. To recognize the silver lining—but it always pays.—Jerome P. Fleishman.

"Democracy in the last resort depends not so much on the machinery of government, as on the spirit of the people, on its unexhausted and growing fund of good will and understanding, on its capacity for social magnanimity and unselfish service. In proportion as this spiritual humanism is diffused throughout all classes of the nation, only in that proportion will the right atmosphere for Democracy exist."—General Smuts.

"The Power of Environment is tremendous, so tremendous that there is only one power greater, and that is the power to alter environment. We know that we can, if we will, say to our environment, 'I will; be thou improved.' And in this power lies the sole hope of human progress."—G. K. Hibbert.

The Origin of Thanksgiving Day in America

By Lynn E. Smith

ANOTHER THANKSGIVING is at hand. The season of harvest has passed and the entire nation pauses to offer its thanks for the bounties of life, and the partial recovery of the American people from the throes of depression. Many have been put back to work and given a chance to earn the necessities of life. We today have just as much cause for giving thanks to our Creator as did the Pilgrims of early colonial times. In our observance of the day let us look back to the origin of the custom.

The real origin of Thanksgiving in America as a day especially set apart for prayer and rejoicing goes back to the fall of 1621 when Governor Bradford of Plymouth Colony set aside by proclamation a day of thanksgiving. Since that time the leaders of the country have set aside certain days for such observances. Since Lincoln's proclamation in 1864, it has become the custom for the President of the United States to issue a proclamation each year calling the nation to prayer on the last Thursday of November.

TO REALIZE FULLY the meaning of the day to the Pilgrim Fathers one must go through the history of the founding of the first colony on the New England shores. There are books other than dry histories which take the reader into the life of the colony, giving him a clearer insight into the characteristics of the men who founded our democracy on the base of religious toleration. A book which does this and which also remains true to historical fact is Standish of Standish by Jane G. Austin.

The Pilgrims left their native land for a dream of religious freedom. For this dream they were driven out of England and into Holland just across the channel. In Holland they found that they had to work doubly hard in order to make a living; their children were drifting from them, and they were gradually being absorbed with the life of Holland and scattered without establishing anything of permanence. Also, having a hope of laying a good foundation for the advancement of "the gospel of the Kingdom of Christ" in the remote parts of the world, they decided to move to the New World and establish a community of their own. The first groups later made the same pilgrimage but it is the Mayflower and the Speedwell. The latter, however, sprung a leak soon after it left port and had to turn back, unable to complete the voyage. So the Mayflower made the perilous crossing alone, taking only a part of the company that had planned to go. Due to storms and deception on the part of the captain of the vessel they were landed on the desolate coast of New England instead of on the shores of Virginia where they had planned to settle. Other groups later made the same pilgrimage but it is the first small band in which our interest lies.

The first chapter of the book Standish of Standish takes up the story on a Monday morning after the Mayflower has reached Cape Cod. The Pilgrim Mothers were in their glory for it was wash day, and the Pilgrim Fathers—well, it suffices to say that they managed to find other tasks of higher import to keep them busy. Yes, the Pilgrims were as human as the men of today. After exploring the coast line they started to build their little colony at Plymouth, knowing not what the next few months had in store for them. Out of one hundred and one who made the crossing only fifty lived to see the coming of spring and the planting of the crops for the next year. In order to keep the Indians from learning of their great loss in numbers during the winter they leveled the graves of their dead and planted wheat where the mounds once were. Thus they were forced to say good-bye even to the graves that they had loved. Stern necessity was their task master.

IN GRATITUDE for the plenteous harvest of 1621, Governor Bradford proclaimed a day of thanksgiving and sent four men in search of game. The men returned struggling under a burden of wild fowl, principally turkeys. Thus early in the history of the observance of thanksgiving does our good friend the turkey make his appearance. At dawn of that first Thanksgiving Day one of the cannon that crowned the hill-top thundered forth a salute which called the Pilgrims together to march to the meeting house where the service of thanksgiving was led by Elder Brewster. After the service followed the dinner to which came ninety friendly red men under King Massasoit, bringing with them an additional supply of venison. Following the dinner Captain Standish led his little army through various manœuvers which frightened the red men so much that they went in search of further game. The feast lasted for three days in which games were played by both the red men and the white men. The Indians also held their ceremonial war dances. The hearty fellowship founded between the Pilgrims (Continued on page 1500)

The Temple Lot and Its History

By S. A. Burgess

It appears that when President Frederick M. Smith was in San Francisco in June, 1933, he was interviewed. The Messenger for August, 1933, makes the following statement:

"In an article written by Sam Ewing in the San Francisco Daily News on page 13 of the issue of June 29, 1933, covering the visit to San Francisco of Frederick M. Smith, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, several false statements concerning our Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints were published. Among such untrue statements as therein attributed to Frederick M. Smith is the following:

" 'We have a legal title for the real church under a decision of the U. S. courts against the Utah hierarchy under the presidency of J. Heber Grant. In a court suit over property in the 1890's we won the title.' "

The Deseret News of Salt Lake City for August 19, 1933, in the Church Section, republishes the article with the following introductory paragraph:

"The Messenger, official organ of the San Francisco stake and published by the stake presidency, in its August issue, carries the following interesting article concerning the ownership of the Jackson County Temple Lot, in answer to a statement made in San Francisco, recently, by President Frederick M. Smith, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

The Zion's Advocate for August, 1933, again republishes all that appeared in the Deseret News with its own introductory paragraph as follows:

"The following article reprinted from the Church Section of the Deseret News, proves that the leaders of the Reorganized Church are still deliberately misrepresenting the true status of the Temple Lot title. We thank our Utah friends for stating the facts so clearly on so timely a question. The only exception we take to the article is the statement that Edward Partridge was the first bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. As a matter of fact, the name of the church from the date of its organization on April 6, 1830, to 1934, was simply 'The Church of Christ.' "

Upon the whole the article published by the Messenger (which is stated to be a Utah publication) is fair in its discussion of the history of the Temple Lot. There are some misleading statements, for example, that Judge John F. Philips went out of his way to attack that church. But we shall not attempt to review that article critically nor to discuss the early name of the church.

We hardly need assure our readers that President Smith made no such statement as is above alleged. His statement only had to do with the decision by Judge Philips that the Reorganization is the true church in succession with like doctrines to those held by the church from 1830-1844. But is it not a little surprising that this statement should have been published and attacked three times, yet not one of the above periodicals took the trouble to ask first if he had been correctly reported.

Our Attitude

We have no desire to criticize Mr. Sam Ewing, the original reporter. It is not surprising that one entirely unfamiliar with the facts should make some inaccurate statements. Nor do we wish to reflect on any of our friends of the various factions of the church. The facts are repeatedly stated inaccurately.

In offering the following review we are not attempting to present a particular viewpoint or write authoritatively for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, nor against any other organization, but only to present the facts as fairly as possible without regard to whom may be affected. It does at least represent our present understanding of the situation.

A Brief History

On August 3, 1831, Joseph Smith with others dedicated a spot about half a mile west of Independence for the erection of a temple. Later, in December of that year, Edward Partridge, the bishop of the church, purchased over sixty-three acres for $130 which, it is generally agreed, included the spot so dedicated. This purchase was not only to secure the Temple Lot, but also lands for other purposes of the church and for the settlement of the Saints.

Thereafter the members of the church were driven out of Jackson County in 1833, and in 1838 from the State of Missouri.

There appears on the records at the court house in Independence a declaration of trust which purports to have been made by Edward Partridge while fleeing for his life, a deed to certain named persons stated to be the children of Oliver Cowdery. This deed was duly acknowledged in March, 1839, but was not recorded until 1870.

After the death of Edward Partridge in May, 1840, the widow and three of the five children of Edward Partridge, in 1848, executed a quitclaim deed to one James Pool. By a succession of deeds thereafter this title purchased by Pool was transferred, so far as affects about two and one-half acres to Granville Hedrick. It is this land which was the basis of the Temple Lot suit in the early 90's.

The Temple Lot Suit

Though this land was purchased, it appears that it was not built upon until the Reorganized Church had erected the Stone Church across the street from it. When a start was made to build upon the lot, notice was served that the Reorganized Church claimed it as the successor of the original church. To try that particular question a suit was filed in the United States Circuit Court. The basis alleged by the Reorganized Church was that Edward Partridge had purchased the land with church funds for the use of the church, that particularly it was his purpose to secure the spot dedicated for the temple. Hence the suit was brought in equity. Now so far as the evidence is concerned, the witnesses of both churches testified to this original purchase and all considered and agreed that this two and one-half acres was at least part of the Temple Lot and was so designated.

There has been some dispute as to the exact spot. Some claim that it was to the east of River Boulevard, but we think the weight of evidence is that a stone was placed somewhere within that two and one-half acres. There has been dispute as to which corner was marked. There is a question as to how large a plat was included in the Temple Lot and how large a temple was to be erected.

If a little common sense is used, we can easily picture the situation when these men went out and stood upon a spot that they did not own and designated in a general way that this would be the place for the erection of the temple. When it is considered in this light, as the most suitable location, it is not difficult to estimate at least with close approximation where they stood.

As to the size of the lot, as was stated by one of counsel for the Church of Christ and repeated, there were no definite bounds of width or depth determined. As to the size of the building there appears no historical record at the time, but in June, 1833, Joseph Smith and his associates in the First Presidency of the church sent a letter to Zion providing for the laying out of blocks in the middle of a plat, 990 feet by 660 feet, with instructions that twelve temples should be built upon that block. Such a block would have been laid out in a practical way on the top of the hill, and might have required the purchase of other lands to the north and west, but they were driven out before this could be done.

Oliver Cowdery Deed

The Oliver Cowdery deed has been called in question because when the genealogy of the Cowdery family was printed such children were not found as belonging to Oliver Cowdery. In fact if they had a son John seven years old, he would have been born before their marriage. Upon that we merely note in passing, first and most important, that this was a declaration of trust and even though names entirely fictitious had been inserted, a court of equity would be ready to appoint proper trustees.

Second, the deed is informal, but the reasons for that are easily apparent from the conditions under which it was executed, as he was fleeing for his life, nor did he ever claim to be an expert attorney.

Third, while Oliver Cowdery did not have a son John, his brother, Dr. Warren A. Cowdery, did have such a son and of the age set forth. Further, while Oliver Cowdery had no son, Joseph Smith Cowdery, he did have a daughter aged one year named Josephine. Further, although he had no daughter named Jane, children are sometimes given nicknames and Marie Louisa would appear to correspond with such a description. It is easy to understand that Edward Partridge might be mistaken with regard to the parenthood of a nine-year-old boy, especially when the family name is the same, also as to the sex of a one-year-old child. But as pointed out in the suit as well as now this deed was presented primarily as a declaration of trust.

Legal Answer of the Church of Christ

Now if the Church of Christ had by their attorneys claimed to be the church in succession, the matter would have been squarely at issue and the outcome might very well have been quite different so far as possession and title is concerned. But without regard to the position taken by the members of that organization their attorneys in the formal plea made quite different assertions. First, they denied twice in their answer that Edward Partridge purchased this land in trust for the church. Since Edward Partridge had moneys of the church and was the financial officer, this is very close to a legal denial that this land was the Temple Lot dedicated by Joseph Smith. Second, they claimed that if there had been such a trust the Utah church was the true church in succession and not the Reorganized Church, because the Utah church taught and practiced polygamy, which, they alleged, was introduced by Joseph Smith.

In the third place they claimed the Temple Lot by adverse possession, but this was only made after what should be stated as their first claim of defense. The denial of the trust was not an affirmative claim. The first affirmative claim was a line of title through James Pool.

In the Abstract of Evidence published by the Reorganized Church in some way a vital part of the answer of the Church of Christ was omitted, and

because it is so important for the right understanding of the case, we herewith insert it:

"Deny—That one faction of the church which plaintiff assumes to represent retired therefrom led by Brigham Young, went from the State of Illinois to Council Bluffs, thence to Salt Lake City; and that said Brigham Young and his followers were a faction or seceding party from said church, and that another faction led by A. T. Strang, and another led by Gladden Bishop, and others led by other men located in different parts of the United States, and taught doctrines and beliefs not in harmony with the teachings, tenets and doctrines of the mother church. And deny that the church which plaintiff assumes to represent had any mother church, or any organization whatever prior to the time of the alleged secessions and divisions in 1846, and deny that it was composed, after said alleged secessions, and divisions, of those who held to the same doctrines and the same system or organization as did the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' as originally constituted. Defendants allege that said Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical with the church that was led by Brigham Young and by him located in Utah Territory, and practicing the same tenets and doctrines as were practiced by the same church at Nauvoo, Illinois, including the doctrines of tithing, baptism for the dead and polygamy.

"Defendants further allege that after the great body of said Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints moved as aforesaid from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Utah territory, a small number thereof remaining behind separated themselves from the church aforesaid, some following J. J. Strang, others W. B. Smith, others Sydney Rigdon and others other factional leaders, and that from dissenters from these the so-called Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was constituted. That in one form or another it has propagated a combination of tenets and doctrines peculiar to its organization by and through a system unknown to the adherents of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from which it claims to have descended as from a mother and from Joseph Smith, Senior, as a father, who inculcated and practiced polygamy, a tenet which said Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at least publicly repudiates.

"Defendants deny that Edward Partridge took the title of said land in trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, or in trust at all, and deny that anyone since that time has held said property in trust for said church, or for any descendant or successor thereof.

"Deny—That plaintiff ever exercised any ownership or control over said property, and deny that it has been recognized by the public authorities as church property and not taxable; but aver that defendant church, by its members and its trustees, has for more than twenty years, held the possession thereof openly, notoriously, actually and adversely to all the world, and paid the taxes thereon." (Abstract of Evidence, page 544.)

Now a court of the land will not consider questions of succession and true or false doctrine unless the title to real estate is involved, but when land is purchased for the use of a church those who teach the same doctrine, whether many or few in number are considered to have the right of possession and title. Hence there have been many cases in which the courts have heard evidence as to the doctrine of a church which first took title and the doctrine of the various factions. For this reason, once the United States Circuit Court found that the land had been purchased for the use of the church (a temple lot) it began an examination to determine which church was alike in doctrine with the church of August, 1831. It will be noted here that the Church of Christ did not claim to be that successor, but offered the church in Utah as successor. Furthermore they gave as a dominant reason for this the practice of polygamy. Once, then, this was found to be the Temple Lot, so purchased, it became necessary to determine this question of successor, and to determine that question it was essential to consider who was responsible for the introduction of polygamy.

It is true that Edward Partridge had taken the title to this land in his own name, but that was because the constitution of Missouri forbade, at that time, a religious corporation, or taking in the name of a church.

How the Church in Utah Came In

When it came to the trial of the case the first evidence of the Defendant, the Church of Christ, appears to have been taken in Salt Lake City and in Provo, Utah. Fourteen witnesses, members of the church in Utah, testified in an attempt to involve Joseph Smith in polygamy. Three women testified that they were married to Joseph Smith. It is interesting to examine their testimony as a whole, when they were under oath and before a responsible court. An important point here is that it is apparent that at least two, if not more, came and testified without a legal subpoena but at the request of leading officers of the church in Utah. Among the witnesses were Wilford Woodruff, president at that time of the church in Utah, and also his immediate successor, Lorenzo Snow. There was other testimony in the case to show the interest of the church in Utah and a voluntary effort to assist, as witnesses there came at the request of officials of the church in Utah.

They have denied at various times that they were parties in the case or that they were particularly interested. But it is clear that it was not the Reorganized Church nor Judge Philips which brought them in, but it was the answer of the Church of Christ, and then the fact of this testimony taken in Utah which was furnished by them. It was first the act of the Church of Christ and, secondly, that of the church in Utah which made it essential that the Judge should consider that organization. Furthermore, in equity it would have been possible to have brought them in as parties. If they chose to assist in this other way, that was of course their privilege, but it is evident that they were at least to that extent involved in giving this testimony.

Behind the Mask

WHAT IS PRETTIER to the city-bred person than the reflection of long rows of lights on shiny, wet streets? The dazzle of hundreds of electric signs through the mist? The flare as of fire against the sky from tall, smoking chimneys?

This was the picture which greeted Larry and Greg, as the Spurgeon family Chevrolet nosed itself into one of the principal traffic arteries between Kansas City and Independence on the way to the Playland.

The night was cold, the air crisp, and Larry tucked her satin-clad feet close to the car heater before she spoke.

"It's beautiful, isn't it, tonight?"

"Very beautiful!" Greg's tone was ardent. He was not looking at the lights, he was looking at her. She started to tease him about that, but a certain little grim line about his mouth caused her to change her mind.

"The sleet makes it even more beautiful, though it is dangerous," she commented, hoping to steer the conversation away from an uncomfortable theme.

"Yes, haven't you noticed that many times the most beautiful things are the most dangerous—a magnificent snowpeak, for instance, or—a beautiful woman?"

"The nerve of you to compare a woman to a snowpeak!"

"I didn't—I just said—"

"Oh, well, don't say it, Greg. Don't be philosophical this evening for goodness sake! Let's have some fun!" She put her hand through his arm and looked up at him provocatively. The car swerved to one side. The driver spoke:

"There, see what you do to me—"

"Are we to meet the rest of the gang there?" she broke in.

"Yes, Ben's bringing them in his car—Dora Lou, Dart and Bernice. And say—you can't guess who I ran into today in the city? Rowe McCarley. Think he's coming out to the dance, too. Said he was coming if he could find a costume."

"Rowe!" distastefully. "Why does he always have to be around?"

Greg was surprised: "Why, my dear girl, he isn't—we haven't bumped into him for ages."

"Well, then I wish we wouldn't bump into him for half a dozen ages!" Larry could not account for her seemingly unreasonable dislike of Nancy's finance. She really did not know him well, but when he was about, she felt uncomfortable, almost unsafe. Tonight that feeling was even stronger than usual. "Greg, I hate to dance with him. If he's there, you do all you can to keep him away, will you?"

"Naturally—do you think I'm going to let anyone else dance with you any more than I have to for common courtesy's sake?"

Her sigh was one of relief: "Then that's settled! Now let's talk about pleasanter things. Do you have a mask?"

"Pleasanter things, did you say? What's so pleasant about masks? Yes, I have mine—got it today, and tried it on at home. Feels as comfortable as if I were wearing a toothbrush on the side of my face."

She giggled. "Mine doesn't feel very wonderful either, but we have to wear 'em—we must have mystery and romance at this affair you know."

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the whithaired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

ELDRED HAMPTON had guessed correctly when she told Doc that Larry and Greg did not often go to public dances. They had gone only once or twice and then it was to a small summer pavilion situated on a chain of lakes known as Crest Lakes, not far from Independence. Crest Lakes was known to the young people of neighboring cities as a "nice floor," "good water" and "passable food." It was not particularly exciting, just a nice little place tucked away among the hills and trees and lakes and frequented by a very youthful clientele. There Larry and Greg had matched their steps to the langorous drone of saxophones on warm autumn evenings.

Larry liked it. There was something about the rhythm, something about the surroundings, but most of all, something about Greg, that made her very happy on such occasions. And yet in the very midst of such happiness, she realized that she must not do this often—she must not habituate herself to such a pastime. Her father had not wanted her to dance back in high school days; he had never explained his reasons, but she still remembered his words: "I'd much rather you didn't, daughter." Her conscience, when she paused to let it speak, told her that she was not setting a helpful example for girls younger than herself, and so she had refused several invitations to go to larger dance halls in Kansas City.

BUT THIS TONIGHT was to be a great affair, honoring the two hundred and first anniversary of the birthday of George Washington. The Playland, one of Kansas City's most popular dance houses, was "throwing" a mammoth masked ball, and dancers from all over the country had been given notice of the event, and invited to come to frolic in costume. There were to be professional numbers in costume, the minuet, and others. The orchestra was the best to be had in Missouri. An exceptionally fine time was promised to everyone. Greg had asked her to go with him a month ago, and after several days of consideration, Larry had accepted. She had never been to anything so grand, and, after all, she knew of no one depending on her for a good example, did she?

. . . Never had she seen anything like it. Hundreds of dancers in gleaming silks and velvets. Myriads of colored lights. Streamers. Confetti everywhere. The great glassy floor. The measured step of many feet in the waltz. The grace of the dancers who gave the special numbers. The ease, the hospitality, the friendliness of the place—it was fun!

The orchestra thumped and wailed as she seemed to float away from it with Greg to the far side of the long room, and back again. How handsome he was tonight! How the touch of his hand thrilled her!

Then—in a moment—Ben or Dart would cut in—and she would see Greg with Dora Lou or Bernice.

It was after one of these intervals, that she was again skimming over the floor with Greg when he grumbled: "This mask—it feels like a feather duster with glue on all the feathers!"

"Half an hour ago it was like a kitchen mop with broom straws stuck through all the strings," the girl laughed, "and before that it was a piece of flypaper. Don't worry, foolish, it won't be long now. All masks come off at midnight."

"But, gosh, another hour!" he puffed.

And how many things can happen in an hour! If Larry or Greg could have known what the next hour held for them,

they would happily have left the floor without unmasking, secured their wraps, and gone home. But they had not an inkling of the things in store for them.

. . . "Have you seen that little creature in the bright red dress with the silver 'swappings' as Ben calls them?" demanded Dora Lou as the two couples paused to rest and watch the dancers. "See, there she is over there with that short fellow? Can she dance! But she's like the rest of these beautiful things—absolutely heartless."

"And might a mere man ask why?" from Greg. "True I can't get much of a look at her through this confounded mask, but judging from the glimpses I have caught, I would say she's presentable."

"Sure you would, being a man," there was hint of grimness in Dora Lou's tone, and her hand rested on Ben's arm as if to keep him from responding to siren glances. "But take it from me, that woman is a go-getter. I don't know who she is, nor who she is apt to be, nor anything about her, except that I've watched her dance—and I know that she gets what she goes after."

"Never let one woman get to talking about another," Ben observed and then with mock meekness. "What say, baby, let's dance?"

Larry began to watch the little dancer in scarlet. Could she dance! She glided. She triple stepped. She followed her partner flawlessly. She had beautiful hair, exquisite hands, and a tantalizing figure. Larry was almost grateful for the masks which kept one's partner from seeing too plainly. And certainly it was no pretense that Greg was not seeing very much from behind that mask, for he had bumped into several couples and apologized: "So sorry, this cock-eyed mask, brother, you understand."

Unwillingly Larry's eyes followed the step of the diminutive red dancer. There was something decidedly familiar about the man with whom she was dancing now. Where had she seen him before—or had she?

AT THAT MOMENT Dart cut in, whispering that he was perishing of thirst and that Bernice had deserted him. They sought refreshments in the balcony.

"Like all this rah-rah, Larry?" demanded the young fellow parting himself for a moment's time from the consumption of a crushed fruit phosphate.

"U-um," Larry did not commit herself, just wiggled her mask experimentally. It was warm and uncomfortable, something like a mild mustard plaster.

"Your get-up's grand," her partner gallantly proffered before attacking a club sandwich. "I like you in that color."

"Thanks. From the feminine point of view tonight," she was looking out over the balcony railing, "the party is a revelation. I never knew there were so many bow-legged men in the world as there are at this moment on that dance floor."

"Then I presume bathing has never been one of your summer sports, or your education would be more complete."

"I confine my bathing chiefly to the bathroom," she flashed back.

"That's a shame."

"Whatsa shame? . . . Pardon the intrusion, but isn't your voice familiar?" A dancer whom Larry had passed often on the floor was standing beside them. He wore the red uniform of a British Colonial soldier. "Why—Dart, old fellow, I thought it was you."

Recognition gripped Larry. Of course she had seen him before, the one who had danced so much with the little creature in crimson. She would know that voice anywhere—Rowe McCarley.

"Who's the girl friend?" the soft voice went on.

"Larry, you know Rowe, don't you?" Dart was brusk.

"Oh, Larry Verne!" The three words were a caress.

Desperately the girl glanced about for Greg. He had promised to rescue her from Rowe McCarley, but at this moment he was dancing with Dora Lou. Then she found herself moving away with Rowe, and Dart was gone to find Bernice.

They danced one dance; they danced two dances. Would Greg never come? Whether it just happened that way, or whether Rowe designed it so, they never passed Greg; they seemed always to be on the opposite side of the room from him. Now he was dancing with Bernice, and where were the rest? Dora Lou was dancing with Dart—and Ben—why, he was leading the scarlet-gowned dancer in this waltz!

THEN she lost sight of Greg in the crowd. She did not want to be rude to Rowe, but she wished awfully to be rid of him and his smooth amenities. His very presence seemed to stifle her. Several times she smiled feebly at his attempts at wit. Surely now at any moment, Greg would appear. He had promised he would.

Suddenly she caught her breath. Rowe, ever attentive, bent even closer, "Did you say something? It's deucedly noisy in here."

"No—no, I didn't say anything," she hoped her voice did not sound as hollow as she felt. There not twenty yards away was Greg leading the little flaming dancer. Evidently his vision through the mask had improved! She could not keep her eyes away from them. And he had promised to cut in if Rowe McCarley danced with her! How skillfully he steered the way through the crowd—how wonderfully his partner followed him! Larry felt suddenly sick and tired.

"Pretty swell dancer isn't she?" Rowe chuckled slyly.

"Who?" Larry pretended innocence.

"The girl dancing with Greg, the one you were watching just now." Larry could have stepped all over his feet with joy.

"Oh, she'll pass," she feigned carelessness.

"She ought to—she's a professional. Has been in vaudeville stunts since she was a kid."

"Who is she?"

"O real little New Yorker, born there, raised there—an' everything—Broadway—"

"Don't they have names in New York?" There was an icy edge to Larry's tone which her partner chose to disregard.

"Sure, they have names, little un, several of 'em. Take your choice—this child is known as the Whoopie Lady, Kitty Wren, and the Baby Kid, but her real name in Dagmar Shelby. Cute kid. Come on over—I'll introduce you."

At that instant Ben's friendly face appeared over Rowe's shoulder, and Larry was free to wonder: How did Greg happen to meet her? What was Miss Shelby doing to keep him away from her so long? Had he forgotten his promise?

THE LAST HALF HOUR before midnight seemed an eternity to Larry. She was avoiding Greg now. The world had gone suddenly very flat and very dull. She wanted to leave. Why had she come anyway? This was nothing but a miserable farce! She had come mostly to please Greg—and now! She could have cried right there on the floor. But after all, there was nothing like the appearance of popularity and fun to keep up one's pride. She danced again with Rowe, and then giggled as he presented a friend, Mr. Johnson, a sleek-haired fellow of perhaps thirty-five whose graces seemed to consist chiefly of affectionate terms, glowing glances, a possessive grasp, and a hop-and-hop dance step. Larry disliked him even more than she did Rowe, but she would not let Greg see how left out she felt, how hurt she was. He didn't love her at all or he couldn't act this way—and especially after he had promised. . . .

There he was dancing with that Dagmar Shelby—wasn't that the name Rowe had called her?—again. Oh, very well, if that was his game. . . . She tossed her head and seemed to give close attention to what Mr. Johnson was murmuring.

Ten minutes till twelve! Gone was the glamour of the evening. The music rattled in her ears. The scraping and gliding of hundreds of feet seemed to be on her very heart. This was torture, and so warm! She reached for her handkerchief which all evening she had tucked under her bracelet. When her fingers failed to meet the silken touch of the material, she glanced down. The handkerchief was not there. It must have slipped out from under the—but—why—what? The bracelet was not there either! Stock still she stood, staring confusedly at a white wrist that was accusingly bare. (To be continued.)

Thought Provokers

Overcoming Difficulties

By B. H. Thomas

ON OUR JOURNEY along life's pathway, we are bound to encounter stumblingblocks. They are hardly noticeable at the start, but as we grow, we are sure to encounter some of the things that have a tendency to hold us back. Those who possess the courage and the power of will, are the ones who surmount these obstacles. Two of these obstacles are gossip and criticism. When you set out to do big things, you are bound to attract attention, but when you are made a target for criticism, its a sign you are getting away from the crowd. The finger of scorn was pointed at Jesus, yet he went on to the end. It was gossip and criticism that cost the life of Joseph the Martyr. When you leave the low places, you can't expect to receive praise. That should prove to you that all men are not equal. Slander can never harm a clean character. Keep going until you are out of reach of the gossipers. Naturally the higher you climb, the harder it is for them to see you.

Only when you stop and fight back, do you show smallness, and when you do that, you are bound to hear, "If I can't get up to where you are, I'll pull you down to my level." People who are sensitive should consider the origin of these two weapons. The wail of the weak comes from the deep, but so long as you know that you're right, dare on.

Rubbing shoulders with the crowd always has attracted attention. You can't expect to be noticed if you stand still. When people talk against you, it proves they can't keep up with you. Swimming against the tide is hard work for the weaklings and your opinion against the world is, the world's opinion against you. In addition to your limitations, you have God on your side and that's stronger than all human voices in existence.

Do your duty as you see it and not the gossipers' way. Pray for wisdom and light to dare on. The power of endurance is measured by your strength of will. You're bound to meet people who have stopped climbing and can't stand to see anyone pass them, but keep going; you'll see less of these people at the top of the hill.

About the cheapest thing in the world is talk. Especially the kind you can't hear. Strong men are too busy to talk about their fellowmen; that's why the weaklings can't succeed. When you know you're right, of what value is the opinion of other people. Leaving the unimportant is bound to bring wails of resentment. Importance of any kind always has gained recognition. In forging ahead, you can expect gossip and criticism. Satan must speak through someone, that's why he chooses the weak for the job, but don't stop, climbing the hill strengthens the will. Sterling characters are won by those who overcome. Strength of will is seldom seen in careless, shiftless personalities. Saint Paul was too strong for gossip and criticism. The Roman empire could not stop him. The dungeons and prisons could not hold him; that's the kind of material that made Saint Paul.

A good way to ward off these satanic weapons, is to smile and be so busily engaged in your good works, that you won't have time to be swayed by the opinion of people who can't rise above their own natural weakness. When gossip or criticism is directed at you, it is a sign you've been looked over and they've decided you're doing something, but don't blame the crowd. People usually shake the tree that bears the most fruit.

Something to Think About

By C. J. Lant

Scene: A lunch counter, on the coast route highway; in southern California.
Place: Near Santa Barbara.
Time: 4 a. m.

THE NIGHT PATROLMAN in this district had gone down to the lunch counter to get a bite to eat. One of the "wildcat" stages had discharged its passengers for lunch on its way to Los Angeles from San Francisco. Two women were seated on the opposite side of the room facing the patrolman; they were having a cup of coffee, one of the children was scarcely more than a nursing baby. Its mother was trying to pour the bitter solution, called coffee, down its throat. The child rebelled and began to cry.

This service station is about the only place open after midnight, between Los Angeles and Santa Barbara and most of the transportation companies have their drivers stop there for the servicing of their trucks; a man walked in and seated himself beside the patrolman facing the two women. He immediately began to gaze toward the same thing that had attracted the attention of the patrolman.

After a few moments, both men turned and looked at each other, full in the eye; some mutual attraction held the gaze, and neither spoke, but looked at the woman again, the baby continued to cry; after the women had finished the coffee, they went out and got into the car, the mother of the smallest baby seated herself at the wheel of the second "wildcat" stage and produced a big black cigar and proceeded to light it up and puff as big as you please.

The patrolman called the attention of the second man to this scene and both began to talk about the feeding of coffee to nursing babies, the second man began to tell the patrolman about his family of children, whose cheeks were red and rosy, and he spoke about the growth and development of his youngest daughter, who was but three years of age, and many people thought that she was six or even older, and some thought that she should be in school.

He continued to extol the virtues of his family and his wife who made whole wheat bread and fed them all, mostly vegetables and good fruit; in fact he was an apple grower from Watsonville, California; and at the time was transporting two trucks loaded with apples to the Los Angeles market.

"In fact," the fruit grower remarked, "we observe the word of wisdom at our house." The patrolman reached into his pocket and produced his certificate of ordination and said: "We do some of it ourselves." The second man reached out his hand and said, "Well, brother, I am a deacon. Let's shake hands." The two parted after an exchange of addresses and both giving an invitation to visit the other. Is the work spreading?

Spiritual Growth

By Anna Burhart

IT IS RECORDED in the Scriptures that even though a man be so zealous of reward that he is willing to give himself to be burned, it profiteth him nothing. On the other hand, if one gives a drink of water to a little child in the Spirit, he shall in no wise lose his reward. Such is the striking difference between growing for the sake of reward and a like act, desiring to serve.

It seems strange one can become so enamored of a cause as to give himself to be burned in its interest, however martyrs are greatly in abundance throughout the pages of history. And yet, there has never dawned an epic of time, where there have been a sufficient amount of people, imbued with that wholesome zeal for service as to eradicate poverty and greed.

Jesus lamented: "The poor ye have with you always." The need is so great and the need is the call to service for those who wish to give in the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

"The gift without the giver is bare." No insult is so great as that which is offered in an adverse spirit. "Freely ye have received, freely give," was the admonition of Him who gave most and best.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Diphtheria

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

DIPHTHERIA is an acute, specific, contagious disease, beginning with an infection of the throat, and characterized by a local exudation, and glandular enlargements, systemic poisoning, and having, and may be followed by, various forms of paralysis. It is one of the most dreaded of all the respiratory diseases on account of its high mortality. It is nearly always present somewhere but most frequently during winter and spring, although epidemics may begin at any time. The disease is less deadly than formerly since the discovery of an antitoxin.

It is closely allied to scarlet fever, and it occurs during the course of measles, small-pox, typhus fever, the membrane developing in the throat during the progress of these diseases. Like all other diseases of the same kind, all conditions of bad hygiene increase its virulence and favor its diffusion. Unquestionably the chief cause of its spread is contagion. Many nurses and physicians have fallen victims to their devotion. If the healthy are not kept apart from the sick, all the children are commonly affected. Such adults as are frequently with them seldom escape some degree of the disease. The more intense the activity of the poison the more severe and dangerous it becomes. It is the experience of physicians and nurses that it is more fatal in poorly ventilated houses and small apartments on account of the poison being denser and more virulent, and conversely, when there is a single case in a large ventilated house or apartment, its virulence is lessened. According to some statistics I have at hand, boys seem to be more susceptible than girls. Children above one year are more apt to take the disease than adults. From the second to the fifth year the greatest mortality is attained.

Any acute or chronic irritation of the throat invites the contagion especially those having diseased tonsils and adenoids. The germ of diphtheria is chiefly communicated in the exudations and secretions of the nose and throat. The exhaled breath and those engaged in swabbing the throat, unless very cautious may become infected by the ejected matter by the patient gagging or coughing. The germ adheres with considerable tenacity to the floors, walls, and articles of furniture. It is more likely to adhere to woolen goods of all kinds, especially to bedding, carpets and curtains.

Healthy persons have been known to spread the disease but the most dangerous carriers are those that have a mild attack of sore throat not considered sufficiently severe to consult a physician. While the disease has been relatively mild during some of the epidemics in recent years, Europeans' experience leads them to believe that it is becoming more virulent. Many cases lose their lives by suffocation from obstruction of the larynx or else by a false membrane forming in the trachea; and others may die from postdiphtheritic paralysis especially if it affects the nerves of the heart or of respiration; other cases may lose their lives by toxin in the blood. Antitoxin if administered in time is a specific cure for most cases. Every well educated physician does not hesitate to use it in all recognized cases but it should not be forgotten that the cured patient may be a carrier. Like typhoid, healthy persons may also be carriers, and for this reason teachers and students should have periodic examination for this disease and other well-known infections. The Schick test, which is very simple and easily performed by any physician, reveals whether or not the person is manufacturing a sufficient amount of antitoxin. Fortunately in recent years means have been provided for inducing the body to manufacture it if it is lacking. If the Schick test shows a lack of antitoxin in the blood it is well to have the person immunized with toxin-antitoxin. Toxoid is a toxin altered by age with a drug, usually formalin, which eliminates most of its irritating characteristics and serum reaction. By this method it is believed by many health workers that this deadly disease may become extinct. Those who have had a large experience with it are enthusiastic with its notable results. Much good has resulted from this procedure and no harm has resulted and it may be cited as one of the most recent triumphs of education in the prevention of diseases.

Everything used by the patient or with which he comes in contact should be reserved for him alone. The room should be stripped of all unnecessary furniture, carpets and draperies. Like all other contagious diseases the patient should be isolated, and tongue depressors, instruments, spoons, etc., should be immersed in carbolic acid solution or thoroughly boiled. All clothing, bed linen, etc., should be sterilized by exposure to super-heated steam or by boiling. After the patient's removal from the room, the room and the contents should be disinfected by formaldehyde gas. Before leaving the room the attendants should wash their hands and immerse them in an antiseptic solution. On entering the room all attend- (Continued on page 1500) far a court of equity should be bound by technical points, or should such a court go to the heart and the realities of the case and consider and decide it according to the facts and the testimony. Judge Philips did take it according to the testimony of both sides, which showed that despite their pleadings the Church of Christ was claiming as the successor. With regard to the Pool deed he found that it was not properly acknowledged. Further, as may be noted, it was only a quitclaim deed. Third, it was not a deed from all of the children of Edward Partridge; and in the fourth place, one of those who signed, the daughter Emily, though the widow of Brigham Young, testified that they made no claim to own this land and that Pool must also have been aware of that fact.

Much evidence was produced to show that this particular tract had been known ever since the thirties continuously as the Temple Lot, plot, plat, or block and the argument was made that no one could buy without notice of such a claim, and this view was also taken by Judge Philips in the United States Circuit Court.

Now, on appeal, Judge Thayer decided the case on the pleadings. Again, he did not consider it on the basis of any possible claim of the Church of Christ being a faction or the successor. It is true that there is a general statement before his decision, but such statements were no part of the findings. The vital part in his decision was that while the Reorganized Church was suing on the claim of an equitable title, the Church of Christ had not made that claim of themselves to be the successor, but had denied the legal title underlying the trust. They denied first that Edward Partridge ever took it in trust for the church. They denied that it was ever so held, but that they had purchased the apparent paper title for their organization. This is a further technical point and Judge Thayer was an able student of the law of equity, an excellent man. It does involve, however, the point above suggested, whether in equity a case should be tried according to the outstanding facts or technically according to the pleadings.

The attorneys for the Church of Christ in their arguments in the Circuit Court and also in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals stressed the fact that they claimed legal title and that they made no claim for the equitable title as the successor of the church of 1831. They did not assert any association on their own part, nor did they attempt to set forth their own doctrines and show any similarity or likeness to the church of 1831. They did deny that the land was bought in trust. We repeat that because it is the vital point in the decision, that they did not claim to hold the land under the alleged equitable title or trust nor to be connected therewith.

The court of appeals did not discuss the question of the accuracy or inaccuracy or legality of the Pool deed. Their decision was based on adverse possession, the continual holding of an apparent title. As Judge Thayer stated the pleadings left them, as claimed by the Reorganized Church, to be mere trespassers upon the premises, who could be removed only by a legal action of trespass. In the decision this point was emphasized.

The Reorganized Church asked that the case be remanded with opportunity to amend pleadings and to assert the legal title, but this was refused on the ground of lapse of time and that it would tend to throw a cloud on the title to other holdings in the sixty-three acres.

Never Tried by the Supreme Court

An attempt was made to take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of certiorari, but this was denied. It has been repeatedly stated by our friends of the Church of Christ that they gained possession through the order of the Supreme Court of the United States. That is not true. The Supreme Court did not try the case at all, but refused to take jurisdiction.

Status Today

It is true that the Church of Christ has both possession and also the legal title today as the result of the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. All the other land in the sixty-three acres including that on which the Auditorium stands is derived from the same title through Pool.

The Court of Appeals did not modify in the slightest particular the decision of Judge John F. Philips that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true successor to the original church, nor did it affect in the slightest degree the fact that Judge Philips, after considering the testimony offered from Utah, acquitted Joseph Smith of the accusation of being guilty of teaching or practicing polygamy. The Court of Appeals did not even attempt to consider, whether the land was originally purchased in trust or as to the legality of the Pool deed, but rested the weight of its decision on the fact of an apparent title, and the actual holding of the land by various parties for a term of years.

The Church of Christ has objected to the use of the word "squatters' right." It will be noted that this came into the case through their own pleadings, that they claimed to hold by adverse possession, and from the decision of Judge Philips, and also from the position taken by the Appellate Court especially in the rehearing. But at the same time we should in fairness note that they did attempt to secure the apparent title as it then existed, and that they take by the same title that is now the basis of all the other titles on the sixty-three acres without regard to previous defects or equities or inequities.

There sometimes arises a bit of humor, and there is such in the statement by some of our critics that the decision of Judge Philips is res judicata. That term means that it is decided and cannot again be called in question. It is a thing that is settled and should remain settled. With this we quite willingly agree and it is particularly true on this question of true succession and of polygamy.

It is in this connection that ministers of the Reorganized Church have from time to time referred to that decision, while many times, if not always, they also inform the inquirer that possession and title is with the Church of Christ.

In the article above published in the Messenger and copied as stated, the statement appears that neither the church in Utah nor the Reorganized Church owns any of the Temple Lot:

"No part of the 'Temple Lot' is owned by the Reorganized Church. Unfortunately neither does our church own any part of it. To this day it is peacefully owned solely by the Church of Christ."

This statement is rather broad. It may be quite true as to themselves, for while they own a number of acres and hold it as a pasture, out of this original sixty-three acres, it is the lowest land in the whole tract. Its nearest point is diagonally to the southeast from the holdings of the Church of Christ, but the declivity is quite rapid. As to the Reorganized Church, it owns the land both contiguous thereto at each of the four cardinal points and we believe also to the northeast, northwest, and southwest. That owned by the church in Utah is to the southeast. But that owned by the Reorganized Church is all of it on much higher ground. Furthermore the Reorganized Church owns the west part of the block known as the Temple Lot. According to the lay of the land, in view of the fact that no stakes were driven to define width and depth, we may concede that the Church of Christ owns part of the Temple Lot, but not that no one else owns any part thereof.

This is offered in the hope that it may settle many questions among our readers as well as others. We are quite open to any further evidence if any exists which could qualify any part of this statement. It should not be a matter of controversy, but only of stating and understanding the facts.

The parasite, sin, is killed by raising the tone of the health of the organism upon which it feeds. These men at Pentecost found their pettinesses killed by the sense of spiritual health.—E. Stanley Jones, in The Christ of Every Road.

Supporting the "Keep the Law" Program

November 8, 1933.

The Editor, Saints' Herald.
Dear Brother:

Attached herewith is an excerpt from a letter of Franklin Steiner who is Bishop's Agent of the Mobile, Alabama, District.

"I wish to go on record as saying that in my opinion the present 'Keep the Law' campaign is one of the most forward looking movements ever undertaken by the church. Without a doubt the results will be far greater and more lasting than could possibly come through those periods known as 'Sacrifice Weeks.'

"We are teaching at two class periods the solicitors of the Mobile Branch, prior to November 12. In the church school every class will be taught during this period by one who is qualified for this work. Each person will be personally contacted and in this way we hope to be able to do our part in this campaign. We are organizing each Branch in a similar way."

The following is an excerpt of a letter from Amos T. Higdon:

"We are pleased to get the report that the Spring River District has contributed more during the first nine months of this year than we did during the same period a year ago. Of course, you know that we now have the Springfield, Missouri, Branch on our records, and I find that the branch there has paid in $237.58 since it was voted into the district. By substracting that sum from what we have paid it shows that the district as it was a year ago lacks $83.29 of having paid in as much as was done last year.

"It is our intention to do what we can to keep up our record, but I am not sure we are going to be able to do it. We are doing what we can to get all the members informed in regard to their duty. The different branch presidents and solicitors are preparing special sermons and classes in order that our people may be fully informed."

Yours sincerely,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP.

Their Terrible Need

I believe that if we could look into our missionaries' homes and see the worry and distress we would be anxious to pay our tithing. About a month ago I was visiting with one of our elders who was a seventy, but had to quit the missionary field because of ill health. He does local work in a Latter Day Saint Church seven miles from his home. He told me their income was one dollar a week, earned by his wife washing. He said he hadn't had a day's work since January and wouldn't have been able to do it if he had have had the work. They live in a building that used to be used as a chicken-house, to save paying rent. He had fifty cents in his pocket, was expected to drive his car fourteen miles in order to preach on Sunday and still live until the next washday. They have no children to help them in their need. He gave his best years to the church and now when they are old and needy the church has to fail them because of no money. I made the remark that if we couldn't support men who had given their lives to the church we'd better shut up shop, and he quickly replied, "We can't do that; we might lose trade."

I think every member of the church should not only be instructed about the financial law, but should be made to realize the importance of obeying it the same as the law of baptism. Hoping we will sometime soon come to the "unity of the faith."

Assurance Brings Happiness

My entering the church of Christ in January, 1932, proved a glorious experience to me. Elder Frank Lacey baptized me. Since that time I have found my love for the doctrines of Christ growing, and I have rejoiced. I have been told that if I cherish the right spirit, the Lord will bless me and give me his peace.

These things give me the assurance that I am in the right church, and I take courage in the cause of Christ. I feel that I have many things for which to thank the heavenly Father. I have come through dangerous places, and I believe that God has watched over and cared for me throughout all my life. I have faith in his love and watchcare. The Spirit rested on Patriarch W. A. McDowell when he gave me my patriarchal blessing.

Through the Herald pages I want to thank Doctor A. W. Teel for his medical advice. I am following it and find myself much improved.

How They Are Keeping the Law

Just a word with regard to our work in the district, I thought you might be interested in knowing what we are doing. I have visited five of the seven branches comprising our district, in the interest of the "Keep the Law" drive which was announced in the Herald. In my first visit to each branch I am taking up the subject, "Why We Should Keep the Financial Law." When I have this completed I expect to make a second visit and discuss the subject, "When and How We Should Keep the Financial Law." The response we have met with so far has been most gratifying, with the exception of one branch. Each of the other branches already has its plans well under way to put this drive on in real earnest. I feel quite sure that we will more than double our present list of tithe payers in the district. Possibly we may not double the amount of tithing in the district, as those we will be taking on will no doubt be mostly poor people who will only have a small amount of tithing to pay. But as I see it, it is not dollars alone that count. If the Saints should all line up and show that their hearts are in the right place, whether their contributions amounted to little or much, the Lord would ask no more and his work would move as never before. May the Lord bless his church and his people is my prayer, and to this end we will work.

The Challenge of Activity in the Church

I find myself becoming very interested in contributing to "The Readers Say" pages and now after perusing a couple of issues and upon the completion of another week of university study, I feel the urge to write.

It seems that this is a testing time for me, testing my zeal and loyalty to the church. Before me there are two alternatives, one to remain in this university town on Sundays where no Latter Day Saint church services are held, or the other, to travel almost forty miles to the nearest organized branch which is located at Muscatine, Iowa. It so happens that my means of travel must be by hitch-hiking, even though we have been warned against it by the Herald.

To me there is only one choice. I must worship with members of our church for in those times I feel I can come closer to the Diety.

In the two months that I have been located to Iowa City I have traveled to Nauvoo, Muscatine, and Rock Island Branches which involves a distance of almost 460 miles in four trips.

The district conference at Rock Island which I attended, was outstanding in my opinion, and the spirit of the conference was of a high order.

My testimony is that the effort of getting to these branches has been offset many times by the experiences which have been mine. It has been a pleasure to hear the gift of prophecy exercised and we have been admonished along certain points, especially to be active in the forwarding of the church. I can appreciate the responsibility that rests upon us and can see as a major point the word "Active" standing out. When one is active and simultaneously prayerful and humble he can accomplish much and be a partaker of the wonderful feeling which we call the Holy Spirit. We cannot overemphasize the spirit of activity in our work.

There came to me at the historic town of Nauvoo a testimony which I have been seeking for a number of years, and it is because of this experience and others not so outstanding that I am anxious to keep myself in line with the church and that is impossible without an effort to keep in close contact. We can fool ourselves into thinking that we can sit idly by and enjoy the blessings of the workers, but I disagree with this conception in its entirety.

The church holds out to us a challenge and it is our privilege to choose whether or not we shall accept it. Often when in doubt as to my action and when in a hesitating frame of mind, I feel burning within me anew the spirit of the restoration, the spirit of the Prophet, the spirit of the martyrdom, the spirit of Nauvoo, the spirit of service, all of which combined I believe to be the Spirit of God. Then there can be no hesitation, for God's way is the right way.

My worthy friend, Dwight Davis, and I once concluded that "if this church means anything to us, it should mean all," and I pass that on to the Herald readers, to the youth of the church, and especially to college students who are isolated from church privileges. In my solitude I often repeat to myself the words of a wonderful poem, which I preserved a number of years ago, and have valued very highly, and now I pass it on. With this thought in mind we cannot but succeed in the tasks before us.

"O God, make me a man!
Give me the strength to stand for the right
When other folks have left the fight.
Give me the courage of a man,
Who knows that if he wills, he can.
Teach me to see in every face
The good, the kind, and not the base,
Make me sincere in word and deed,
Blot out from me all shame and greed.
Clean up my thoughts, my speech, my play,
And keep me pure from day to day.
O God! make me a man.

Dear Brethren:

This is to inform you that your letter, re—"Keep the Law" and the Handbook on the Financial Law, have been received. Thank you. Am glad to receive it, as it will be helpful. Being so plain we will endeavor to teach the law and give every member an opportunity to obey it.

Trusting much good may be done,

Request Prayers

Mrs. Henry Landis, of Chicago, Illinois, a member of the church, desires the prayers of the church that she may be given strength and faith to pass through some unusual and disturbing experiences which are now hers. She would like them to fast and pray that God will be with and help her.

Mrs. Maude Davis, of Glencoe, Oklahoma, desires prayers for a friend, Mrs. Leo Perish, whose husband disappeared from his home at Stillwater, Oklahoma, last Wednesday. They are a young married couple. Relatives and friends were seeking the lost man's whereabouts by radio broadcast every hour Saturday from Ponca City, Oklahoma.

The First Cause

Primitive, unscientific folk might be satisfied with saying that the earth was supported by a gigantic elephant, and the elephant in turn by a tortoise. But we must go farther than that. We must ask what supported the tortoise. And ultimately we come to some first cause responsible for all the others.

A man cannot lift himself by his bootstraps. You cannot throw a chain up into the air and suspend it from nothing. If Archimedes is to move the earth with a lever, then he must have some fulcrum on which to rest it. From what does this series of causes we have traced in the universe start? What is the fulcrum from which the solar system is moved? A series of causes, each of which is dependent for its own being upon the cause just above it, cannot be infinite. We come ultimately to a First Cause, which is itself uncaused and independent. That cause we call God.—J. Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

QUESTION TIME

Should Christians study the Old Testament, or only the New Testament?

A careful examination of the Old Testament will reveal the fact that God made known the underlying principles of the gospel ages before the so-called Christian era. It is true that these principles appear not to have been so clearly understood by most people prior to the advent of Christ, but we find them expressed through the prophets repeatedly. There is a definite connection between the Old and New Testaments in this respect, and one will hardly obtain a comprehensive grasp of the plan of salvation without a knowledge of this connection, which is to be found by a comparative study of the whole volume, the Bible.

It is clear, therefore, that the best equipped Christian is one who thoroughly understands the whole book, and the relationship of the eras in which God revealed himself for the development of mankind. The same is true of a study of the New Testament and latter-day revelations. No age is really complete and independent of prior ages, and some of our most valuable lessons, by which progress is possible, will be obtained by such comparative study.

When oil is being consecrated for religious use, must the container be opened?

The historic background may not be very illuminating to this subject, inasmuch as there does not appear to be any divine instruction concerning the "consecrating" or setting apart of oil to be used for administering to the sick. Under the term "holy anointing oil," etc., the use of oil in the consecrating or "sanctifying" of things and persons devoted to sacred work is mentioned several times in the law of Moses. I know of no direct command that can be identified positively as such to consecrate the oil to be used in this way. But it seems reasonable to infer as much from the language used in Exodus 30: 25; 30: 31, and 37: 29, for the Hebrew word translated "holy" actually means sacred, hallowed, consecrated, or dedicated.

It appears therefore that the "holy anointing oil" was actually dedicated or consecrated, either by act of man or of God, though no record of a ceremony of doing so remains for our examination or information. The custom of setting apart objects to be used for religious purposes has been long established, and if anointing oil were not to be thus set apart, it would appear to constitute an exceptional omission of this ceremony. However, in the absence of definite rules governing the manner of doing so, it would doubtless not invalidate the act of consecration to set the oil apart before the container has been opened. The matter would be optional with the elder who consecrates it, as there might be a reason for his choice, such as when oil is consecrated to be shipped to another place, which has often been done.

Should a wife, beneficiary of a deceased husband, again tithe the insurance she receives at his death?

If a man and wife paid tithes jointly, which is usual, any tithes paid on the premiums paid in would not be tithed again by her. But any amount received in excess of that on which tithes had been paid would be tithable by her when she receives it. The amount of the premiums paid represents an investment, and should be tithed when the investment is made; that is, the amount actually invested is tithable the same as any other investment.

But in case a man and his wife have paid tithes separately, solely on their own property as separate individuals, the beneficiary wife should pay tithes on any insurance received at the husband's death or before, unless she herself had paid the premiums and had paid her tithing on the amount thus invested.

Please explain the meaning of the "seven Spirits of God" in Revelation 4: 5.

Jewish theology recognized the number seven as a perfect number in dealing with sacred things, and in the text it seems to comprehend the perfect whole of the divine graces. Seven lamps of fire before the throne of God were declared to represent these seven Spirits, probably as the seven qualities or aspects of divine illumination, the identity of which is not made known. It may imply his omnipotence, omniscience, justice, love, graciousness, truthfulness, and omnipresence, manifested in his works and creatorship.

Annual Events Help This Branch Along

Saskatoon Branch held its annual chicken dinner in the church basement, October 27. Although the weather was bitterly cold and rather stormy, a fair-sized crowd was present to do justice to the food prepared by the women. Saints of Shellbrook sent a contribution of thirty-two plump chickens, and boxes were also received from Delisle, Vanscoy and Floral. The amount realized from the dinner, added to a legacy received from a brother of Sister Mogenson, in Sweden, will be sufficient to finance the radio services from November 12 until the second Sunday in April. The radio commission has allotted Elder Ward L. Christy the hour from five to six for his broadcast.

Funds were generously contributed for the finishing of the church basement. It was sealed with beaver board, the woodwork painted, the walls kalsomined, and new curtains were put up at the windows and the partition between dining room and kitchen. The bare rooms have been transformed into a cheerful, homelike place of meeting.

An excellent program was arranged to follow the dinner. The radio male quartet consisting of Messers Geldart, Mackie, Hemsworth, and Neufeld sang, "Sleep, My Lady, Sleep," and for an encore "The Scarecrow," song. Mrs. Eric Boland, Sister Lila Smith, Brother Christy and Mr. Neufeld sang three numbers, "Juanita," "Old Black Joe," and "The Church in the Wildwood." Mr. Laban Geldart gave much pleasure with three solos, and Sister Pearl Denton read a Scotch selection. The young people's choir contributed an original sketch around a realistic campfire, and sang songs.

The financial law will be taught to adults and young people in this branch in accordance with the suggestion of the general church, by Elder Ward L. Christy. Sister Christy will instruct the children concerning the fundamentals of the same subject.

The branch is contemplating an entertainment for November 24, to raise funds for the purchase of hymn books.

Brother and Sister Gendron and Sister James motored to Saskatoon from Meadow Lake with Elvin Anderson last week. Elvin is teaching the Makwa school near Brother Gendron's homestead.

Mrs. Chris Piedt and Mrs. Andrew Taylor, members of this branch, passed away recently. Sister Piedt was a faithful and loyal Saint and a most unselfish worker in the church. Two of her sons, Frank and Henry, are elders and are rendering consecrated service. Her husband and four other children survive her. Mrs. Taylor was an invalid for thirteen years. Prior to that time she served as V. A. D. nurse in England during the World War while her husband fought in the ranks. She was a patient sufferer, a woman of high ideals and beloved by all who knew her. The Saints feel deepest sympathy for Brother Taylor and their only child, Mrs. Reid, in their sorrow.

Brother A. J. Cornish, of Senlac Branch, paid Saskatoon a flying visit a few weeks ago on the evening that R. B. Bennett, Premier of Canada, was to speak in the city. He withstood the urgent appeals of his neighbors who had accompanied him, to hear the first man in Canada, and attend the local weekly prayer service.

The annual rally day was held here, October 1, those attending receiving a veritable outpouring of the Spirit in all the services. Following the morning church school session and class work, Brother C. E. Diggle spoke inspiringly at eleven o'clock on "Growth Through Giving"; Henry Piedt delivered a ten-minute address on "The Functions, Duties and Responsibilities of Priesthood"; Frank Piedt described in humorous vein the difficulties of leadership in a rural community, and Brother Christy followed with brief and pointed summary of all the subjects. Music for the hour was furnished by the choir and a quartet and provided a fitting background for the talks.

A bountiful meal was prepared for all in the basement, and when the guests were seated Brother Christy offered thanks. The assembly then sang "Consecration," and Brother Diggle read Isaiah 62: 6, 7. After the lunch, Sister Christy, as mistress of ceremonies, gave an address on "Goals and Guideposts," and Sister Saul told a story. The quartet sang a number and Sister C. E. Diggle spoke on "The Necessity of a Loyal Student Body." Then Sister Irma Denton told a story, "Loyalty." Sister Christy read an excellent paper prepared by Arthur Gendron on "Education in Recreational Activities," and Henry Piedt spoke on "Education in Spiritual Growth." Sister Ethel Piedt followed with "The Place of the Child in Religious Education," and finally Brother Paul Schmidt spoke briefly on "Keeping Alive the Goals of the Church in Rural Communities."

Then the Saints dispersed to meet upstairs for the business session. Brother Christy was sustained branch president, and chose Brothers Beckman and Henry Piedt as counselors. Sister Beckman was reelected secretary, Sister Christy was chosen supervisor of religious education, and Brother Christy chorister.

A spiritual feast was enjoyed at the 2 p. m. sacrament hour. Brother Christy was the evening speaker, and the choir sang, "O, Love That Will Not Let Me Go," and Mr. Mackie sang "Crossing the Bar."

Those who attended the Friday evening church school session October 13, enjoyed scenic movies of the Bermudas, the Saint Lawrence, and the Canadian Rockies.

Wichita, Kansas

Water Street at Osie

Besides the regular Sunday morning and evening classes, Saints are taking advantage of other opportunities for their education. A class taught by Elder J. W. Wooten meets each Tuesday evening, the subject being "Zion." A group of women meet each Wednesday afternoon for the study of English, Mrs. B. B. Root being the teacher. The priesthood take advantage of a class especially for them which meets an hour each week before the midweek prayer meeting.

The choir members are hard at work on their Christmas Cantata, "His Natal Day," which bears promise of a beautiful rendition.

At the meeting for the annual election of branch officers on October 4, the officers chosen for the coming year were: Pastor, Arthur E. Stoft; counselors to pastor, Elders J. W. Wooten and R. Melvin Russell, the latter filling the place made vacant by the death of Elder W. E. Williams early in the spring; secretary, Anita Wilson; music director, Mrs. Paul Nelson; director of religious education, Mrs. Minnie Barraclough; superintendent of adult division, Mrs. K. N. Coplen; superintendent of young people's division, Mrs. Lena Curtis; superintendent of children's division, Margaret Williams.

The young people's division sponsored a two-day institute on October 7 and 8, at which time Apostle R. S. Budd was present and delivered a series of splendid and helpful lectures.

The women of the branch have commenced their fall activities. The first meeting was held at the home of their leader, Mrs. A. A. Buschow, where the book, Miss Bishop, was reviewed by Mrs. E. C. Nelson in an entertaining way. A number of books will be reviewed this winter, one meeting to be held each month in the homes of the members. Mrs. Charles J. Slawson in charge of the reviews.

The young people greatly miss one of their number, Fred Epperson, who left Wichita, October 7, to make his home in Independence.

Several members have been ill in recent weeks. Mrs. Minnie Barraclough and son, Philip, who have been dangerously ill are now much improved. Saints are deeply concerned regarding the illness of Mrs. Ralph Hague, who has suffered greatly for months and is not yet showing improvement.

A sad blow to Mrs. J. L. Crandell was the death of her youngest daughter, Eva, age twenty-five, on October 27. For several years Eva was secretary of Wichita Sunday school. With a sunny disposition, ready wit, and the ability to make friends, Eva won her way into the hearts of all she met, both in business and social circles. She will be greatly missed by her friends, but especially by her sorrowing mother, three sisters and one brother.

The young people's class of the church school, of which Elder I. G. Whipple is teacher, journeyed to Hutchinson, October 29, where they entertained the Saints with a program of music and short talks on various subjects. A basket dinner was served in the park, and the young people returned home late in the afternoon.

Whittemore, Michigan

Rapid Progress in Church Work

Several Saints from this congregation attended the district conference held at Coleman, Michigan. All came back greatly strengthened, and with a desire to work harder for the church.

Two all-day meetings have been held recently, one by district appointment with other branches invited. District President Hubert Case, was present, with the local priesthood. The second, with Brother M. A. Sommerfield, of Tawas City present. This meeting was more locally attended than the first. A fine spirit prevailed throughout both. Elder Sommerfield has devoted much of his time and labor to this district, and is a welcome guest.

October 11, a chicken supper was served in the basement of the church. The proceeds reached almost fifty dollars.

Priesthood meetings are resumed with renewed interest, the men being desirous of visiting the homes of the Saints.

The women's department, under the direction of Sister Martha McNiel, is moving forward, cooperating with branch officers.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The month of October started with a good sacrament service. The Spirit of God was present to a marked degree.

The women's department met October 12, with their usual potluck dinner. The meeting was called to order by singing, "A Steadfast Faith." A paper, "The Latter Day Glory," was read by Sister J. E. Matthews. The purpose of the meeting was for a get-together for the members of the First Aid Society organized in Columbus. The following charter members were present: Sisters H. J. Hovey, L. C. Lewis, Nathan Weate, Ida Ferrell, A. H. Nieman, and J. E. Matthews. Each sister gave a short talk.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, minister in charge of Southern Ohio District, preached Wednesday evening, October 25, telling of his experiences while in Australia. Apostle Hanson was also the guest speaker Sunday morning, October 29, taking for his theme, "The Realization of an Ideal."

Other speakers for the month were Elders R. E. Madden, S. E. Dickson, G. H. Kirkendall, William Mickesell, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Bishop H. E. French, Teacher Chester A. Carey, and Priest Harry J. Hoffman.

A halloween party was enjoyed by the Sunday school, October 26, in the social room of the church. Doughnuts, cider, and apples were served.

The Tabernacle, Third Church

The visit of Apostle Paul M. Hanson was the closing feature of October's activities. He spoke in the afternoon at the tabernacle and the building was filled. Bishop H. E. French and the pastors of the other congregations in the city were present, also District President A. E. Anderton.

The month of October was a beneficial season for this congregation. It opened with a helpful sacrament service, and the pastor was the evening speaker. Music was furnished by local singers.

On the following Sunday C. H. Foster was the morning speaker, and that night the Tabernacle pastor spoke at First Church while Elder Vickroy spoke here. His theme was, "Which Is the True Church?" A number of nonmembers heard the discourse and the anthem sung by the young people's choir.

Brothers Hinkle and Brush continue their building program. Brother Hinkle erected a new vestibule in front of the tabernacle which, with its double doors, will protect the worshipers from winter's cold blast. Brother Brush installed the furnace, also the light for the vestibule. These men have worked well and have added pleasing finishing touches to third church's new building.

The women gave a Swiss steak supper with good success, and the entertainment included a black face act by Don and Jim Bohlen.

The Gleaners Class held its annual wiener roast a short time ago.

Goodland, Kansas

Enjoy All-day Rally Services

Saints of Goodland enjoyed an all-day rally meeting, October 29. Visitors from Seibert, Genoa, and Colorado Springs were present.

After the class session, Brother Floyd Engstrom, superintendent of the Sunday schools of Eastern Colorado district, gave a short talk concerning the work of the different schools in the district. He stressed the desirability of all teachers possessing the gold seal certificate.

Elder J. D. Curtis, of Colorado Springs, delivered the message of the morning. It was through Brother Curtis's missionary efforts twelve years ago that many Saints of this locality first heard the gospel.

During the afternoon, Elder J. R. Sutton, of Genoa, Colorado, and Elder J. D. Curtis were the speakers, their theme being, "The Judgment." Musical numbers were presented by Elder J. D. Curtis, who sang, "Under His Wing," and "Building," by Mrs. J. E. Robinson and her father, Brother McCoskrie.

Rally day concluded a seven-week attendance contest of Goodland Sunday school. Mrs. Pauline Roberts and Mrs. Kenneth Ingram were captains of the sides. The losing side will provide an entertainment for the winners.

All Saints passing through Goodland are cordially invited to stop and visit the branch.

Pasco, Washington

Have Ingenious Ways of Raising Money

Brother Alvin Buckley, minister in charge, is doing all he can to keep the latter-day work growing at Pasco.

About thirty-two are enrolled on the Sunday school records, and the school assembles at ten o'clock on Sunday morning. Brother Buckley preaches at eleven o'clock, and the young people's meeting comes in the evening. They have Book of Mormon study, and one class is studying the book, The Call at Evening. In connection with this evening study period, a short program is enjoyed, and everyone is required to take part.

Sister George is the branch financier, and her responsibility is to provide ways to raise money to meet expenses. She is striving to do her part. She made a large red rose and every second Sunday in the month, the members bring their pennies and drop in the rose. This provides a fund to buy flowers for those who are sick. Another way Sister George invented to raise money was made apparent when she brought to church a little church building of pasteboard. On the third Sunday the members put their sacrifice money into this church. Once a month also, they have a party at one of the homes and each one donates a pie or cake or whatever is asked of him. These are sold at a stated price which lies within the means of all, the money going into church funds. In this way, small though the number of Saints at Pasco is, they are able to provide for their own expenses and help the missionary on his way.

Webb City, Missouri

Oronogo and Second Street

The regular branch business meeting was held September 5, in charge of District President Amos T. Higdon and Pastor Ira O. Waldron. The following officers were elected: Pastor, Ira O. Waldron; church school director, James M. Jones; home visiting pastor, Roy G. Oehring; financial clerk, Frank Stokes; secretary, Mildred E. Fletcher; chorister, Mary M. Hobart; pianist, Clida Spencer; librarian, Frank Brooks; publicity agent, Mildred E. Fletcher; historian, Nelvita Cowen; solicitor, Hettie Sutherland; adult supervisor, Clara Stokes; young people's supervisor, Albert Cobb; children's supervisor, Neva Trumble; church school secretary, Hazel Spooner; chorister, Dorothy Motteb; pianist, Helen Spencer; librarian, Maxine Hood.

Sister Hettie Sutherland's class met recently at the home of Harold Fry, where a potluck supper was enjoyed. Music furnished the evening's entertainment.

Missionary J. Charles May visited this congregation, October 2. His pictures and lecture on the South Sea Islands were instructive.

Webb City Branch was saddened by the death of Felix E. Bouse, an active member of the church. For a period of ten years he served in the office of deacon. Funeral services were held October 16. Pastor Ira O. Waldron preached the sermon.

October 20, the members of the branch met at the church for a potluck supper. The affair was in charge of Clara Stockes, Albert Cobb, and Neva Trumble. Eighty-five members were present. Following the supper, a play was presented by the women, "How the Story Grew."

The Zion Builders' Class recently entertained at the home of Hettie Sutherland, with a bunk party. A waffle breakfast was served.

September 19, a miscellaneous shower was given at the home of Brother and Sister C. H. Hobart, in honor of Hazel Bogner, who before her marriage was Hazel Spencer.

Brother and Sister Hobart have just returned from Chicago. They attended the World Fair while there, and returned by way of Independence, visiting relatives. Huston Hobart, who is a student at Park College, Parksville, Missouri, has been spending a few days visiting his parents.

The November sacrament service was well attended. Pastor Ira O. Waldron spoke words of admonition and advice to several departments as well as different members.

Niagara Falls, Ontario

Enjoy Week-end Rally

A rally was observed by this branch Saturday and Sunday, October 14 and 15. Other congregations were invited to attend. On Saturday evening a concert was presented at the church, local talent taking part. Toronto Branch was present and assisted. Much amusement was caused by the play given by the Toronto Saints, "Ask Me Another."

The Sunday activities opened with a beautiful day. Prayer service commenced at nine o'clock, District President J. A. Wilson in charge. A spiritual feast was enjoyed, and under the influence of God's Spirit several of the members were given divine direction.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Brother Bert Gozzard, of Toronto, assisted by Brother McDonald, of Lowbanks. The speaker, Elder Frank Mesle, gave an interesting talk. The noon meal was served by the women's department.

In the afternoon service, Sister Plato Whitford, the musical director for Port Huron District, gave an interesting talk on "Music." Brothers Ernest Newton and Elder Oliver, of Toronto, were the speakers. They stressed loyalty and faithfulness to the church.

Branch President M. A. Ware presided over the evening service. Elder D. Clatworthy, of Forte Erie, was the speaker.

Weeks were spent in renovating the small church for this and future occasions. It was beautifully decorated with flowers.

Fulton, Iowa

Missionary Meetings Generate New Interest

A two-week series of meetings was held at Fulton recently by Elder L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni. The services were well attended, the hearers showing great interest in these missionary sermons. At one of the services the gift of prophecy was enjoyed.

Each night preceding the preaching, a program of musical numbers was given by the young people. A wiener roast and games provided recreation for all one evening after the church service. Nearly one hundred people participated.

Since Brother Holloway could not be present the last Sunday, Brother Clarence Beal, of Clinton, was there. An all-day gathering was held, the congregation sharing a basket dinner at noon and enjoying the visit together.

A branch contest is causing much interest and friendly rivalry. The object is to increase church attendance. Two sides have been chosen with captains, and points are being given for attendance at service, for visitors brought to church, for lesson preparedness, and for promptness. At the end of the year the winning side will be given a party. Many of the young people who formerly remained only to Sunday school, now stay to church also.

North Platte, Nebraska

Profit From Help of Guest Speakers

Pastor E. R. Sivits was the guest speaker, October 29. His subject was, "The Financial Law." At the same time Elder I. F. Payne held services at a country schoolhouse.

Bishop W. T. Wellman was a welcome visitor, November 5. As he was rushed for time, his talk was brief, but contained much food for thought.

Members of this congregation were invited to attend church at Eustis, November 19, at which time Elder W. A. Smith was holding a series of meetings. Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elder O. L. D'Arcy were present.

Sister Elsie Hale Sutterfield, of Thune, Nebraska, is in the local hospital, seriously ill.

All missionaries passing through North Platte, are cordially invited to stop in and preach.

Houghton Lake, Michigan

Enter Season of Study and Learning

The young people of this branch have organized themselves, and are meeting each week for study. The first and third weeks of each month are devoted to the study of the Bible, Brother Howard Gilliam, teacher. The second and fourth weeks are in charge of Brother Roy McDonald.

Sunday services have been carried on regularly at the church, at South Houghton Heights, with Frances McDonald, pastor.

At present the Religio is studying the Book of Mormon, under the leadership of Roy McDonald and W. D. Ferguson.

The evening of October 19, was enjoyed by this congregation. Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker, on "Christainity and the Social Revolution." Brother Williams proved himself to be an interesting and experienced teacher.

The following Saturday and Sunday, October 20 and 21, were devoted to listening to H. A. Doty, of Traverse City.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brother Doty presented illustrated lectures on "Palestine and the Holy Land."

Financially, this branch has not progressed very rapidly, but their spiritual progress has given them considerable reason to feel encouraged.

Traverse City, Michigan

No Halt Here in March Forward

President Buell Shelley, of Freesoil, Michigan, was a welcome guest at Traverse City, October 27. He delivered an interesting talk on the financial law.

At the annual election of branch officers, Elder H. A. Doty, senior, was elected branch president; Wayne Evans, clerk; Myrtle B. Conklin, treasurer; Harry Doty, music director.

The church program has been changed some of late and is very well liked by all who attend.

October 29, an illustrated lecture was presented by Jay C. Doty, on "The Dead Cities of Yucatan." The pictures showed what has been found in America during the past few years, affirming the truth of the Book of Mormon.

The evening service is in charge of the young people, once each month. Interesting programs are presented.

Saints of Traverse City, were pleased to have as their guests, October 29, Brother and Sister James Davis, of South Boardman, Michigan. This venerable couple, well known to many Saints, have spent practically their entire life among Saints from Canada to Florida, and always find a welcome wherever they go.

Miami, Oklahoma

Missionaries Lend Aid

Elder Amos T. Higdon was here several nights, teaching a class on "The Financial Law." He was also here for sacrament service November 5. A good prayer and testimony meeting followed the passing of the emblems, a portion of the Spirit being enjoyed throughout the hour.

Elder J. Charles May was also here a short time ago, giving a lecture on the South Sea and Hawaiian Islands. His colored stereopticon pictures of scenes of the islands and the natives, their customs, labors and worship, impressed the audience with the realization that the Spirit of the Master of men dwells with those of dark skins as well as those of white.

Miami members are striving harder to do the will of him who is the Giver of all blessings. They are expecting Apostle J. A. Gillen to start a series of meetings soon, and pray that the results will be for the good of everyone. The Saints want to remain faithful to their trust, and hope to see nonmember friends embrace the faith.

Kirtland, Ohio

Temple Is Center of Numerous Activities

The branch business meeting was held during September. Leading officers were: President, Elder John L. Cooper; church school director, Sister Au Vergne Proper; adult superintendent, Robert Flack; women's leader, Sister Maude Mason.

A recent baptism was that of Brother Warner, of Kirtland.

Of late the list of Sunday visitors at the Temple has included the following: Reverend George Albert Smith, apostle of the Salt Lake City, Utah, Church, and wife; Mr. Stoddard, R. F. C. leader of the State of Ohio, and wife, and Brother and Sister Alfred Hulmes, of Detroit.

A fine response was given the services of October 22, when Graceland College Day was observed, William F. Webbe the morning speaker.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths was the speaker at the County Home Infirmary, located at Painesville, Ohio, the afternoon of October 29. The people at the infirmary enjoy talks by representative of this church.

A free will offering supper was given a short time ago by the women's department under the leadership of Sister Maude Mason. Two hundred were served, and net proceeds amounted to eighteen dollars.

Among the recent speakers at the Temple were Pastor John L. Cooper, Elders George Neville, Joseph Biggs, Albert Woutters, and David H. Proper, and Patriarch G. T. Griffiths.

Rally and decision day were observed, October 29, some of the Saints bring visitors with them to the Temple. Psalm 92 was used as a responsive reading, and there were two numbers by the children's choir and an appropriate story by Sister Beatrice Gale. A male chorus sang during the morning worship, and a response and anthem were contributed by the choir, Sister Anna Householder, director; Sisters Irene Flack, pianist, and Adeliene Clough, organist. The sermon was by Pastor John L. Cooper. Basket dinner was served at the auditorium, Sister Maude Mason in charge. At the evening service congregational singing was enjoyed and another good sermon, Elder Albert Woutters, the speaker.

The young people, Arthur Sheppard, leader, enjoyed a halloween pie social, October 20. A community halloween party was held at the school for older folks. Sister John L. Cooper, leader of the children's division, held a masquerade party the Thursday before halloween.

Bishop E. L. Traver and wife from the East were in Kirtland recently. Sister Traver and Sister Joseph Biggs are sisters.

Flint, Michigan

Every Department Is Busy

Elder A. H. DuRose has again been chosen pastor over Flint Branch. G. E. Burt and Theodore I. Bush were chosen associates. G. E. Burt was appointed director of religious education, and Theodore I. Bush placed in charge of priesthood visiting. Mrs. A. H. DuRose was appointed supervisor of the adult division; Mrs. Kate McNamara supervisor of the young people's division, and Mrs. Verna M. Burt, supervisor of the children's division. Mrs. Ruth Wallace was appointed director of music.

The various groups and departments are getting well under way for a successful year. The choir and the children's division are preparing Christmas cantatas. The young people's division sponsored a halloween party for everyone at the church, October 27, and will present a three-act play in the near future. A halloween carnival was held in the church on Monday night, October 30, by the Tuesday Club. The north side group of women sponsored a supper at the Baltimore Boulevard Church on October 19, with satisfying results. The Friday evening recreational activities are being directed by Mr. and Mrs. Leslie E. Flowers.

Recent speakers were L. E. Flowers on the themes, "An Alabaster Box," and "Depressions 33-1833-1933"; Allen C. Pohly, "The Heel of Achilles"; Franklyn S. Weddle, "Worship," and Elders Kenneth Greene and A. B. Smith, of the district presidency. President Frederick M. Smith spoke, October 17, on the theme, "Zion." Apostle D. T. Williams used for his theme on October 28, "Christianity and the Social Revolution."

Saint Clair, Michigan

Home-coming Renews Interest in Branch History

This branch had a rally and homecoming September 10. Elder William Patterson, of Port Huron, was the guest preacher, giving two inspiring sermons to large audiences.

The morning prayer service was presided over by Elder J. N. Muir, of Port Huron, assisted by Elder Robbins, of Kimball, Ontario, and the local pastor, Elder George Skinner. Many former members were present and enjoyed the association of older Saints who were workers with them.

The choir directed by Elder G. Orlow Coburn provided special anthems for the occasion. They were assisted by Brother Albert Heath, of Detroit, who gave two violin solos, and Brother Louis Bender, of Port Huron, with his cornet.

Saint Clair Saints are proud of their little chapel which comfortably seats about one hundred and forty. Last year the trustees, by local subscriptions, secured enough money to reshingle the church with asphalt shingles. This year the women's department purchased carpet to cover the entire floor including rostrum and vestibule. They secured the services of Brother John Wonsey, of Marine City, assisted by themselves and by men of the congregation, to redecorate the walls, seats and pulpit. While this was being done, services and Sunday school were held in the basement.

The branch was organized thirty-four years ago, July 18, 1899, with six charter members. Others were received by letters from their respective branches. Elder and Sister George Skinner were the only charter members present at the rally. The church building was finished and opened May 7, 1911, and dedicated October 21, 1917.

Brother Henry Lively may rightly be called the father of this branch. He moved to Saint Clair from Canada, forty-four years ago last April, bringing with him his wife and two children, Herbert and Mamie. Accompanying them were Brother and Sister Thomas Brown, Sister Lively's father and mother. These constituted the only members in Saint Clair at that time; but soon Brother Lively had elders come to hold meetings in his home, and some were added to the fold as a result of their efforts. The group met at various homes for prayer services and Sunday school. Brother Lively is still living and enjoying the services at the church and visiting among the members.

Portland, Oregon

Birthday Social Begins Winter's Events

The beginning of winter's activities at Portland Branch was a festive birthday social early in October at which each month in the year was appropriately represented. There were the twelve tables, each with its host or hostess who contributed a musical number or a recitation for the evening's entertainment, and each guest contributed a penny for each letter in his name. The total sum came to about eleven dollars which paid for the party and left some over for an offering.

The tables were cleverly arranged, Sister Lila Livingston being in charge. April and August were especially outstanding. Sister Hattie Barker was the hostess for April. The place cards were the three books of the church, and the nut dish was made to represent Kirtland temple; the cake also. Ardath Young was hostess for August. Her guests sat on blankets on the floor, over which sand and sea shells were scattered to represent the beach. A large cake was artistically covered with tiny shells. Refreshments were served from large clam shells and punch in soda-pop bottles.

The hundred or more guests who were present had an unusualy enjoyable time.

October 31, was the occasion of another entertainment in the basement of the church, this time a gay halloween party. Bertha Appleman was chairman of the program committee which sponsored prizes for the prettiest, funniest and best represented character. Here too, the crowd numbered above a hundred, and all wore some kind of masquerade. The kiddies' party was held the preceding evening, Sister Effie Verhei in charge.

Independence

Independence young people will hold a rally next Saturday and Sunday at Walnut Park Church. The opening event will be a banquet Saturday evening at the Auditorium. Sunday will be a busy day—prayer meeting at 7.30 a. m.; church school at nine-thirty, and sermon by President Frederick M. Smith at eleven. A round table for the discussion and consideration of young people's objectives and problems will be held at 2.30 p. m.

The Messiah Choir held its first rehearsal of the season at 4 p. m., Sunday, Stone Church, George Anway directing. Handel's beautiful oratorio The Messiah will be the choir's gift to the community again this year. It will be given as the Christmas Eve vesper program, five-thirty to six-thirty, December 24, with Brother Anway directing. Robert Miller and George Miller will accompany the chorus at organ and piano. This choir is composed of singers from congregations in Independence and Kansas City Stake.

Bishop J. A. Koehler is teaching a class on "Industrial Zion" on Tuesday night of each week at the Stone Church, at the request of the First Presidency. The subject matter which he is presenting has the approval of First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. The course is designed primarily for priesthood members, but other students are welcome.

Stone Church

Second Peter 1: 13 was chosen as one of the texts for the morning sermon. Pastor John F. Sheehy, the speaker, based his sermon on "Keep the Law," emphasizing the fact that if we love God we will keep his commandments, all his commandments.

Music for the service was in charge of the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee played the organ, and Mrs. Pauline Arnson, soprano, was the soloist.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey delivered the evening sermon in the form of an illustrated lecture on the Book of Mormon. A large congregation listened to his discourse. Music was again furnished by the Stone Church Choir.

Second Church

An organ prelude by Mrs. Sam Inman opened the eleven o'clock service Sunday. Elder Sam Inman was the speaker and "Keeping the Law" was his theme. The choir, directed by Earl Audet, sang an anthem, Mrs. Will Inman singing the solo part.

Gordon Cable was in charge of the morning junior service, and Phinus Beebe gave a talk on the effects of strong drink. Mrs. Sarratt and her daughters, Corlyn and Adys, sang "Dare to Be a Daniel," and Mrs. Sarratt's story was "Be a Real Daniel."

Music in the evening was furnished by a girls' chorus directed by Mrs. Sam Inman. Elder Harvey Minton was the speaker, and his topic was "Building on the Foundation of Truth."

Speakers November 12, were Elder William Inman in the morning on the subject, "The Restoration," and R. L. Bishop in the evening on the question, "Do We Know How to Use Life?" Music was furnished for the later service by O. B. K. young people of Mount Washington Church, Kansas City Stake.

Walnut Park Church

Four hundred and fifty-two were reported present at the church school Sunday morning, continuing the splendid attendance of the past several weeks. Preceding the class period, Guinn Bronson, of the Stone Church young people, talked in behalf of the "Keep the Law" movement, and after the class work the school was entertained by a piano and organ duet, Maurine Nace occupying at the piano and Drexel Mollison at the organ.

At eleven o'clock Elder George Jenkins was the speaker. Preceding the sermon the choir, directed by Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "I Heard the Voice of Jesus." At the same hour Almer Sheehy spoke to the junior service in the lower auditorium.

Evangelist U. W. Greene occupied the pulpit in the evening.

One of the pleasant social events which took place recently was a "New England" dinner served for the teachers and officers of the church school and their husbands or wives, in the basement of the church on the night of November 10. Seventy-five were served, the menu consisting of Boston baked beans, Boston brown bread, hot rolls and butter, and baked apples with whipped cream. Entertainment features consisted of numbers by a male quartet composed of R. G. Blackburn, Erwin Moorman, Fred Horn and C. G. Closson; talks by Pastor Frank McDonald and Sister Erwin Moorman, and two soprano solos, "To a Hilltop" and "Thanks Be to God," by Bernice Griffith.

Liberty Street Church

All groups met at the church last Wednesday for prayer service. This was the most active union service in some time, many taking part. Prayer and testimonies extended thirty minutes beyond the usual closing time.

The basement of the church was the setting of a bountiful and well-prepared

banquet Thursday night. A large number of officers and teachers and their guests attended. Pastor John R. Lentell and Elder M. A. Smith gave talks on the tasks and problems of teachers and officers. Music was furnished by an instrumental trio and Las Favorites Chorus. This was the first public appearance of the chorus, a group of young women directed by Mrs. Lentell. Bernard Hurshman, church school superintendent, was master of ceremonies.

Elder D. S. McNamara was the Sunday morning speaker, bringing before the people vital points in connection with the establishing of Zion. This was his first sermon at Liberty Street.

Following the Religio hour Sunday evening Elder J. E. Vanderwood talked on "Keeping the Law of Health." Music was furnished by Las Favorites Chorus.

Saints of this congregation mourn at the loss by death of Sister Hattie Maria Willoughby November 15, at the Sanitarium. Sister Willoughby was the mother of Sister John Zion. The funeral was held from the Liberty Street Church, Elders H. L. Barto and Ammon White in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Willoughby is survived by her husband, Leonard S. Willoughby, six sons, six daughters, a number of grandchildren, four brothers, three sisters, and many friends.

Enoch Hill Church

Last Wednesday evening the young people met with Group 32 at the home of Brother and Sister Fred Lewis. Elder Charles Warren, assisted by Brothers C. E. Beal and Lawrence Martin, was in charge.

The music department of the congregation spent a social evening at the home of Brother and Sister Claud Gouldsmith on Thursday. Brother and Sister Gouldsmith are faithful members who have spent many years assisting with the music of the church. Brother Claud was the first chorister here and Sister Emma was pianist for several years. More than sixty were present.

The worship period of the church school Sunday morning was in charge of Elder H. E. Winegar's class.

Elder Charles Warren was the morning speaker, and music was by a double mixed quartet.

That evening Elder E. T. Atwell spoke on "Evolution." Sisters Charles Warren and Amos Allen sang "A Friend to Man."

Spring Branch Church

Attendance at Sunday school November 12 seemed larger than usual and great interest in class work was shown. A good talk on "Keeping the Law" was given by Brother W. J. Burton of the Y. K. T. Class, Stone Church.

Elder Leonard White was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday and his theme was "Zion."

The evening service at eight o'clock was in charge of the young people of North East and Gladstone congregations, Kansas City Stake. They furnished the program and the speaker, Brother Harry Levy, whose theme was "The Prophetical Approach to Zion." After this service the young people of Spring Branch and East Independence entertained the Kansas City visitors with a get-acquainted meeting, program, and refreshments.

Cottage prayer meetings the past two weeks have been quite well attended. Sunday morning prayer hours are also a source of strength and help to the members.

Sister Nelson gave an interesting talk at the close of the Sunday school November 19.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael was the eleven o'clock speaker and his text was "While you wait, another waits for you."

Bishop J. S. Kelley was the evening preacher and his theme was "Keep the Law."

Englewood Church

Attendance at services is increasing, several new families being present.

Organization for the new year has been completed and all the officers and teachers are working to make the best of their opportunities to service.

Alma Dixon was the four-minute speaker at the church school hour last Sunday morning on the theme "Keep the Law." Each Sunday young speakers are sent out by the Independence council, to remind the Saints that we are in the midst of the "Keep the Law" period.

The evening service Sunday was in charge of the Englewood Religio. A young people's choir of nearly twenty voices furnished the music. Brother Almer Sheehy was the speaker. The Religio has agreed to furnish the service once a month, providing music, speaker, and other entertainment.

Sister Ada Koehler is recovering from an accident some time ago when she suffered a broken arm.

A number of the women of this congregation are acting as friendly visitors, working to assist the priesthood by calling on the Saints.

The women's department is busy. A bake sale is scheduled for the near future.

Alpena, Michigan

Six Are Baptized

The special gospel meetings conducted by Missionary J. J. Ledsworth were very successful. Six candidates were baptized at the close of these meetings. The Spirit of the Lord was felt to a marked degree in these meetings by both members and nonmembers. Brother Ledsworth also used beautifully colored pictures with each sermon and they were inspiring.

Wray, Colorado

Enjoy Visit of Elder G. A. Smith

Wray members have enjoyed a busy time since last report. On October 14, the women's department sponsored a harvest festival and a chicken dinner. Both were enjoyed by many of the townspeople and the teachers of the county who were attending an institute. From a financial standpoint this event was quite a success, nor is the spiritual standpoint to be overlooked. All things were carried out with a wonderful spirit of cooperation.

On the fourth Sunday of October junior church was held under the direction of the new department supervisor, Mrs. A. M. Tafflemeyer. The juniors are always greatly pleased and willing to serve in this part of church worship.

November 4, Saturday, brought other enjoyable service when Elder Glaude A. Smith, district president from Denver, held a meeting. This was followed on Sunday by an all-day meeting with church school and sacrament service in the morning and a sermon by Brother Smith in the afternoon. He brought to local Saints great inspiration to go on. Wray church members ask the prayers of Herald readers that they may live the law more closely.

Seattle, Washington

First Avenue, North West, and North Thirty-sixth Street

With the new church school year well under way, the following officers are to be found in charge of the work for 1933-1934; Pastor, Alma Johnson; first counselor, Carl Crum; second counselor, Dwight D. Davis; director of religious education, Sister Emma McDole; director of music, Sister Charles Wright; heads of departments: adult, Carl Crum; young people, Grace Emslie; children's division, Mary Jane Johnson; women's club, Elba Crum; pastor of the junior church, Charles Powers. These have the cooperation of other officers of the branch and school.

They have their work well outlined and in hand, and are seeking to reach certain goals this year. With enthusiasm they are forging ahead, and it looks very much as if they are going to succeed in attaining these goals. They want to make this one of the best and most profitable years in the history of the branch.

One achievement already counted this year is the Sunday evening study hour for everyone from six-thirty to seven-thirty, during which five classes are in session. The study subjects are chosen by each class.

The sacrament service October 1, was a good example of how the Saints feel toward the church and its mission. The meeting started at 11 a. m. and continued until 12:45, fifteen minutes longer than usual. Time was well occupied by members who testified to the desire that they have to assist in the work. Many more would have spoken but for time.

Graceland College Day was observed October 22, the speaker being Brother Loren McDole, a Graceland alumni, assisted by Eugene A. Davis, also an alumni. His theme was "Graceland College Stewardships." It is the hope of many local young people to attend the church college, and they look forward to the time when they, too, may enter the Old West Door.

Activities for the month of October have included the following: The women's club met at the home of Sister Lasater, October 26. After lunch they studied and discussed some of the church hymns.

The Idola Club had a halloween party October 27, at the home of Sister Pearl Sprague. The young people had their party at the same time in the basement of the church.

October 29, Sunday, a number of local people went to Willapa, to help in the organizing of the branch there.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch, Ohio

Pool and Fifth Streets, Portsmouth, West Side

Under the able management of Elder O. A. Rexroad, branch president, the latter-day work is moving forward here, and the Saints have many things for which to be thankful and happy.

October 22, James Roy Brock, grandson of Brother and Sister Martin L. Crabtree, was blessed under the hands of Elders Rexroad and Walter Culp.

October 28, found the members gathered at the Scioto River where John Lions and wife, Anna, were baptized by Brother Rexroad. This brother had been an elder of another church for some time. The candidates were confirmed October 29, Sunday, at the prayer service. During this hour of prayer the worshipers experienced a high degree of spirituality. The gifts of the gospel were enjoyed, and testimonies were given one hundred percent.

The work of the church school is increasing in attractiveness, under the leadership of Superintendent Culp, the young people are now organized into a club called the Royal Sons and Daughters. On the evening of October 30, the club gave a short program of readings and music. Everyone is proud of this club and thinks it worthy the name. Part of the young people's work will be to visit the homes of Saints and others and sing and pray with them.

The branch is making progress in the payment of tithing, but as labor is very scarce tithes will not be plentiful for a time.

Sister Anna Tacket, who has been absent for some months, was able to attend services November 5.

James Cheffins, superintendent of the Bible school, is teaching the doctrine of Christ, stressing the fundamentals of the gospel.

The women's department is growing under the direction of Sister Nellie Rexroad. Recently they purchased several chairs for the church.

Gladstone, Michigan

Rejoice Over District Conference

How glad members of this branch were to entertain the district conference here a short time ago. This was the first to be held in this city, and the Saints, though few in number, were enthusiastic and did their best to make visiting members comfortable.

E. R. Carter, local priest, is to be commended for the untiring effort he put forth to have the conference here, and all local members are grateful to the district presidency for so graciously acceding to their wishes, and also to all who came a distance to contribute to the success of the gathering. Some came as far as two hundred and fifty miles.

The sermons and talks of Apostle D. T. Williams were truly inspiring. Everyone rejoiced to hear him.

Elder Allen Schreur, president of the Northern Michigan District, also Elder J. J. Ledsworth and Elder Amos Guy brought peace and instruction to the Saints in their sermons. It was a matter of regret to all, however, that Bishop Dirk Schreur and Brother Ernest Burt could not be present. Thanks go to Sister Opal Harper for her musical contribution.

The conference as a whole was successful. The Spirit of the Master prevailed, and all seemed to enjoy that feeling of one-ness which so often characterizes meetings of the Saints. When the visitors departed they left behind them the spirit of unity and love and strong desire to go forward.

Four Corner Mission, Missouri

Spirit of Unity Prevails Here

Every member of this mission a tithe payer by January 1! That is the goal set by the mission leader, and the Saints are working to reach it.

Four Corner Mission is blessed with a group of enthusiastic workers whose aim is to "Keep the Law."

Interesting subjects talked on recently by mission leaders, D. A. Fuller and Walter Bullard, were "Peace," "Do Unto Others as Ye Would That They Should Do Unto You," "Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged," "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" and "Keep the Law."

The annual business meeting was held November 5, and D. A. Fuller was chosen mission leader for another year with the privilege of appointing an assistant. He chose Walter Bullard. Brother Fuller was also chosen as solicitor for the bishop and Walter Bullard is the mission secretary and correspondent. Sister Jennie Hursh is musical director. Brother Ralph Wilt is again the Sunday school superintendent, assisted by Sister Walter Bullard and other officers and teachers.

Brother Fuller teaches a Doctrine and Covenants class on Sunday afternoon. The Saints feel fortunate to have in this class Sister Mary E. Pooler, whose deceased husband was personally acquainted with one of the three witnesses to the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

Some of the members of the mission who live quite a distance from the place of worship, bring box lunches on Sunday. These lunches they put together to serve a meal to all.

For Thanksgiving the group is planning an all-day-visit to Brother Walter Bullard's farm. Each family is to bring lunch and all will eat together.

God has bountifully blessed people in this region with crops this year and the Saints feel that they must now do their share by helping to keep the law.

They extend a hearty invitation to all who pass through that part of the state, to meet with them in services. They hold three meetings each Sunday—Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at eleven except on sacrament Sunday, and Doctrine and Covenants class at 2 p. m. They meet at the home of Brother Clark Hursh, about seven miles south of Ava on Highway Five.

Jonesport, Maine

Review Month's Activities

Intense love of the gospel is a ruling factor in the work and hopes of the people of Jonesport, and they feel that they have many things for which to be thankful.

A review of the activities of the past few months would not be complete were the Easter program omitted. Then the young people of Olive Branch presented the play, "Easter Dawn" on Sunday night to a large crowd. The performance was repeated on the following Sunday night. Sister Jessie York was the director.

Sunday school and other Sunday meetings have been successfully carried forward. A fair crowd participates in the midweek prayer meetings.

In the latter part of May a young people's convention and conference was held here, a good crowd attending. Saturday morning made apparent the youthful spirit to go forward for the Master, when the young men and women assembled for prayer service. Following came class work conducted by E. F. Robertson. Archie Begg was in charge of the afternoon class also. At three o'clock recreation consisted of a ball game for the young people of Jonesport and Kennebec. That evening they gathered in the vestry of the church to listen to talks by E. F. Robertson, Bishop E. L. Traver, Archie Begg and Harland Billings. On Sunday the worshipers enjoyed a prayer service, talks from members of the priesthood, dinner in the vestry of the church, and sermons from E. F. Robertson and Newman Wilson.

Five young people joined the church during the summer, three from Addison and two in Jonesport.

Jonesport young people had a supper in the church vestry to raise money to pay part of the bus fee to the conference at Vinal Haven. A large number attended this conference. Saturday night each branch presented an entertaining number. Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley gave interesting black-board talks on developing character.

Early Sunday afternoon the people of Jonesport and Stonington left for their homes. They went from Vinal Haven to Stonington by boat and the Jonesport crowd came the remainder of the way by bus.

The following Saturday and Sunday, October 21 and 22, Eastern Maine conference was held at South Addison, and a good crowd was present. The bus came from Stonington with about twenty-five members. Elder E. F. Robertson and N. M. Wilson were the conference speakers. The Sunday morning prayer meeting, a spiritual service, was deeply enjoyed. Stonington Saints had to leave shortly after dinner, to make connections between bus and ferry.

Fort Wayne, Indiana

Small Group Organizes to Do Their Part

Saints of Fort Wayne are buckling on the gospel armor, getting ready to do their part in the redemption of Zion. They are taking a collection each Sunday and this amount is to be applied on the church debt. They are tithing on the first day of each week, paying the Lord his share before it is spent and forgotten. A number are making out their inventories.

A women's department has been organized to meet every two weeks. They have a potluck dinner once each month and spend the day together; also sponsor a social night once each month. Prayer meeting is held every Wednesday night.

Eleven years ago Brother Benham, of Sunnybrook, California, met with Sister Stoehr and daughter and started Sunday school. They now have parts of ten families, or twenty-one adults and six children, attending. The best spirit prevails and not one attendant at services has been lost through dissatisfaction. The local motto is, "One for all and all for each." Thus all are encouraged, and striving for the goal.

Elder A. H. Nieman remains over Sunday each time he comes to Fort Wayne, preaching and serving as occasion demands, and all are strengthened by his efforts. If other elders pass through, the Saints would be pleased to communicate with them. Visitors coming to Fort Wayne should get in touch with the Saints through R. C. Crandall, 518 State, S. M. Nichols, 3317 Robinwood, or J. C. Stoehr, 2015 Harrison.

Detroit Conference a High Mark

Young People Take Prominent Part

The Detroit district conference of 1933 held at Pontiac, Michigan, has taken its place in the hall of memories as one of the most helpful and attractive gatherings of its kind in recent years.

Sermons by Elders William Patterson and David Dowker will long remain with the members. The Saints were lifted closer to the latter-day ideals. The Spirit's presence testified of the quality of the effort.

Elder Kenneth Green, of Detroit, was reelected district president. The Detroit Choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Henrietta Davis, furnished the musical background of the conference.

Saturday evening the young people's organization of the district presented a splendidly arranged musical under the direction of Miss Harryette Schaar, of Lake Orion. Each number was well chosen and beautifully rendered to a capacity house. The young of this district are helping older members to keep alive the gladsomeness of youth.

Bates City, Missouri

Church Work Progresses in Small Group

Under the leadership of Elder Walter Curtis, Bates City Saints are progressing rapidly.

The members of this congregation are scattered a distance of from one to eight miles from the church, but when the weather permits, they are always in attendance.

Brother Richard Bullard was a recent speaker at Bates City. His sermon was full of encouraging advice.

Brother Curtis is receiving helpful response from the members of the priesthood. Each member is in charge of a Sunday service, either being the speaker or providing one. Last Sunday, Deacons J. L. Brown and James Ford were in charge of the meeting.

There are five churches in Bates City, and the young people of each church meet together. They have organized a Young People's Union. They take turns in meeting in the different churches.

Doctor Charles F. Grabske has promised to speak at Bates City, on the Sunday the young people meet at the Saints' church.

ants should wear a gown of washable material. After convalescence great care should be taken that the patient should be washed with soap and hot water, followed by some of the well-known antiseptic solutions with which the attending physician is familiar. Especial attention should be paid to the hair. The child should not be allowed to return to school for at least four weeks, and not then until smears from the nose and throat have been bacteriologically examined and found repeatedly negative. The urine should be examined for any complications and should be especially free from albumen. Twelve days should elapse after the last exposure to diphtheria before a child should be allowed to go to school.

and their guests probably did much to preserve peace until they were strong enough to stand "on their own."

Like a snowball rolling down hill getting larger and larger the farther it goes, this little band of exiles has grown and become one of the largest and mightiest nations of the world. The source of their power was in their devotion to what they believed right. If we today could band together with the same spirit which they had, there is no great task which we could not do.

White's sharp tongue cuts deep? She is as a rusted door hinge. Time was when she was bright but the storms of many seasons have beaten upon her. Perhaps a little of the oil of human kindness and the screw nail of priestly admonition may renew her efficiency.

What though we do not like the way the preacher preaches, or the teacher teaches, or the choir screeches. Let us just keep on, keeping on. Let us stand by our church through thick and thin. Though the leaders may waver or fall, our faith is not or should not be pinned to anything so fragile as human endeavor. Let us fasten our grip to the rod of iron, set our teeth, and hold on. As one famous surgeon declared to his friend, who was marveling at his invincible spirit in keeping going when he was well nigh exhausted. "I always remember the advice given by the trainers to our team when I was at Oxford. 'When you feel you cannot pull another stroke, then sit up and row.'" Let us pull "All together in every weather, though the skies be dull or blue."

Let us stand by loyally even as did Job of old, who, when he had suffered every catastrophe that a designing Satan could invent, instead of casting the blame for his afflictions on his heavenly Father, cried stoutly, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

For Your Notebook

(From Christ and Society, by Charles Gore.)

The present condition of our society, our industry and our international relations, though it presents encouraging features yet, on the whole, must inspire in our minds a deep sense of dissatisfaction and alarm, and a demand for so thorough a reformation as to amount to a revolution, though one which the teaching of experience, no less than the teaching of Christ, leads us to believe can only be brought about by gradual and peaceful means.

The evils which we deplore in our present society are not the results of any unalterable laws of nature or any kind of inexorable necessity, but are the fruits of human blindness, willfulness, avarice and selfishness on the widest scale and in the long course of history; and therefore their alteration demands something more than legislative and external changes, necessary as these may be: it demands a fundamental change of the spirit in which we think about and live our common life, and conduct our industry, and maintain our international relations. The cry must be "Repent ye —change your minds," if "the kingdom of heaven" is to come as a welcome gift of God and not as a scathing and destructive judgment.

We should not look for such a change of spirit to come from any simultaneous conversion of men in masses. If we accept the teaching of past experience, we should expect the general alteration to arise from the influence in society of groups of men, inspired probably by prophetic leaders, who have attained to a true vision both of the source of our evils and of the nature of the true remedies; and who have the courage of faith, which can bind them together to act and suffer in the cause of human emancipation, till their vision and their faith come to prevail more or less completely in general mind and will.

Jesus Christ is really the Savior and Redeemer of mankind in its social as well as its individual life in the present world as well as in that which is to come: and there lies on those who believe in him a responsibility which cannot be exaggerated to be true to the principles which he taught, and by all available means to bring them to bear upon the whole life of any society of which they form a part, especially when it professes the Christian name.

The Lord's Prayer

"Christ did not intend that the prayer he gave his disciples as a model should be used in ritualistic repetition—it was to be observed in realistic living," Elder William Patterson, pastor of the Latter Day Saint Church at Port Huron, Michigan, said on a recent Sunday night in his sermon, "Our Father in Heaven."

"When Christian people sense the deep significance of the first phrase of that remarkable prayer, narrow denominationalism will give place to the kingdom of God movement and our national boundaries will become demarkations of social, industrial, and commercial convenience," Brother Patterson is reported to have said in a Port Huron press story. "When Christians realize that Christ pointed to a common fatherhood, there will start a family relationship which shall permeate society until the will of God shall be done on earth as it is in heaven.

"The rich man will no longer consider himself superior because of economic power and security, but will consider the poor man of his church and community, his less fortunate brother, and will use his power and influence to raise his standard of life. Many consider this a fantastic idealism but Christ, whom they profess to follow made it real in his life and bids his disciples blaze the trail with Him."

Brother Patterson is preaching a series of sermons on the Lord's Prayer at the Saints' church on Varney Avenue, Port Huron. The subjects in their sequence are: "Our Father in Heaven," "Thy Kingdom Come," "Our Daily Bread," "Forgive Us as We Forgive," "Does God Lead Into Temptation?" and "The Theocratic Kingdom Forever."

Religion is not merely one thing among many things, or one interest among many interests—business, politics, science, art, education, literature, and the like. It is a way of harmonizing all these in the pursuit of the highest ends. And then it is also a way, or perhaps many ways, of conceiving of those highest ends, and a set of institutions especially devoted to realizing them.—Winfred Ernest Garrison, in The March of Faith.

WHY NOT PROVE

all things? Why continue eating the same old foods day in and day out if you are lacking in pep? Why not wake up. PHOSFO is not new; 17 years of daily use by thousands, dispensed and indorsed by over 3,000 physicians should at least cause you to investigate. Eat it—if you don't feel better, tell me, not the neighbors, and get the money; if you feel better and live cheaper, then you owe it to your neighbors.

Street and Medary Avenue. First service 3 p. m., December 2. The leader in this institute will be Apostle P. M. Hanson, missionary in charge, and it is his wish that every man, from deacon to elder, be present. Conditions as they prevail today make it essential that every man be prepared for the execution of his duties. A program has been arranged that will be beneficial to all. Come and enrich yourself, that you may be a better minister for Christ. Your attendance at this institute will show that your ministry is appreciated and that you want to qualify yourself for work.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Communion Service for Florida Members

Sacrament services will be held at the home of Theodore Smith, 1410 Philadelphia Street, Orlando, Florida, on the first Sunday of the month, beginning December 3, at 2.30 p. m. We hope in this way to give the Saints in surrounding towns the opportunity of partaking of the Lord's supper, and meeting with us during the winter months.—F. G. Pitt.

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.—District conference convened at Gladstone, October 21 and 22. Apostle D. T. Williams preached Friday evening on "What Latter Day Saints Know About God." Saturday morning, 8.30, priesthood meeting; 9.30 prayer service; 11, business session. District President Allen Schreur and Apostle D. T. Williams were chosen to preside over the conference. Brother Alldread was put in charge of administrations; Sister Ada Alldread, secretary. Minutes of the last conference were read and approved. Business was continued at the 2 p. m. meeting, ministerial and branch reports being read. These showed some hard work done in several branches in the district. Allen Schreur was reelected president; Sister Ada Alldread, secretary; Dirk Schreur, treasurer. Allen Schreur retained his counselors, Brother Starks and Brother Dirk Schreur. Brother Hector McKinnon was reelected district superintendent of church school; Sister Opal Harper, musical director. The names of Brother Rowe and Brother Reynolds were voted on and accepted for ordination to the priesthood. This concluded the business session of the conference. Saturday evening local talent staged a play, "The More Abundant Life," following which Apostle Williams gave interesting and appropriate remarks. Sister Gertrude Carter sang a solo, "To a Wild Rose," accompanied by Sister Opal Harper on the flute, and Sister Alma King on the piano. Early Sunday morning, Elders J. J. Ledsworth and Hector McKinnon were in charge of a well attended young people's prayer meeting. Brothers Williams and Allen Schreur were in charge of the nine-thirty general prayer service. "A Spiritual Life," was the theme of the eleven o'clock sermon by Brother Schreur. Apostle Williams preached at 2 p. m. on "How Beautiful On the Mountains Are the Feet of Those Who Bring Glad Tidings." This was a wonderful message and left everyone feeling that he wanted to be such a bearer of good tidings. Brother Amos Guy preached at 3 p. m. on "The Duties of the Shepherds of the Flocks." At 5 p. m. Brother Ledsworth led into the waters of baptism a young man, Herbert Wescott. At 7.45 Brothers Ledsworth and Warner Ackers confirmed the candidate. Elder J. J. Ledsworth preached the evening sermon on "What We Must Do to Be Sons and Daughters of God." This service concluded the 1933 conference.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference met with Central Chicago Church, October 27, 28, and 29. The first session was held Saturday morning, a prayer meeting in charge of Brothers Roscoe Davey and Charles Homuth. The business session convened at 2 p. m. The district president's report, also reports of priesthood, branches, etc., were received. Bishop's agent reported tithes and offerings for the year, $5,472.36. Officers elected for the year were: President C. A. Edstrom; associates, R. E. Davey and H. P. W. Keir; clerk, Grace E. Johnson; director of music, Ruby I. Newman; publicity agent, Harold McCaig; C. C. Simpson, chairman of church finance and relief work; associates, Bert Hayden and Richard Keir. Auditing committee, Stephen Lester, sr., and William Keir; director of religious education, Dorothy Pinkerton. The conference approved the selection of Marion Blakley and Bert Hayden as presidents of priest and deacon quorums. A. O. Skinner was sustained as bishop's agent. Communication came from Central Chicago Church asking for the ordination of Brother Ray Hurst to office of elder. The conference, with sanction of President F. M. Smith and Apostle J. Garver, granted the request, and he was ordained at the service Sunday by H. P. W. Keir, C. A. Edstrom and J. J. Oliver. All looked with favor at having a joint reunion with Southern Wisconsin District at Belvidere, Illinois, next summer, and it was so ordered. "Classwork-Recreational Leadership," was ably presented by Brother J. A. Jaques. The DeSelm Orchestra gave a fine program before the preaching service Saturday night, and a rising vote of thanks was extended them for their efforts. R. E. Davey occupied at the evening hour. Central Chicago Choir sang an anthem at this service. Sunday proved a beautiful as well as a profitable day. At 8.30 a. m. the Saints assembled for prayer service under the leadership of C. C. Simpson and Earl Rogers. Church school was all too short. Teachers as well as those listening were enthusiastic over problems presented. Brother Edstrom had charge of adult work for superintendents and adult teachers. Children's work, Sister Lilly Nelson (for teachers in children's work); music, Sister Ruby I. Newman, (for those interested in choir work); general classes, (for all others not interested in special work) the First Chicago Choir sang two anthems and Elder John Grice, of Ohio, preached in the morning service. The priesthood meeting was held at 2 p. m. During this same time an instructive women's meeting was conducted by Sister H. T. McCaig. The closing service of the conference was the sacrament hour, with the Presidency in charge. It has been a long time since so spiritual a meeting was held in Northeastern Illinois District. The power of God was manifested to a great degree, and all seemed reluctant to leave the conference; all rejoiced in God's kindness and love manifested. This was an especially large conference, and Central Church members were entitled to the hearty vote of thanks given for their hospitality.

Our Departed Ones

SQUIRE.—Francis John Squire, eldest son of the late Mary and John Squire, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, and husband of Ellen Grey, died at his home, September 27, 1933. He was born November 3, 1863. He moved to Australia in 1884, and joined the government service. After serving for forty years, he retired as principal lighthousekeeper. During his service he came in contact with Elder William Jones, through whom he, with his wife, joined the church May, 1901. He is the father of Frank (deceased), Mary, John (deceased), George, William, Helen, Charles, Margery, and Elian (deceased). Funeral services were conducted by Patriarch J. H. N. Jones, assisted at the graveside by Elder A. J. Corbett. Sunday, October 8, Patriarch J. H. N. Jones preached the memorial sermon, assisted by Bishop Craig.

STAHLLE.—Russel W. Stahlle, only son of Henry and Annie Crick Stahlle, was born at Plano, Illinois, February 18, 1889, where he grew to manhood. In 1917, he enlisted in the United States Army. He served his country honorably both at home and abroad for two years. Upon his discharge, he entered service in the Plano Post Office, acting as clerk and mail carrier, which position he held for five years. June 2, 1921, he married Genevieve Nash, of Hinckley, Illinois. Later they moved to Hinckley, where he went into the furniture and undertaking business. Passed away from a heart attack, September 16, 1933. He was a graduate of the Worsham School of Embalming, a member of the Hinckley American Legion and Masonic Order. United with the church July 20, 1905. The funeral was held September 19, 1933, at Hinckley Methodist Church in charge of the American Legion. Elder R. E. Davey, of Aurora, Illinois, delivered the sermon, assisted by the Reverend E. L. Stanton, of the Methodist Church. Interment was in Oak Ridge Cemetery, at Sandwich, Illinois. He was a devoted husband and through his upright life made many friends. Was well known and respected in the business world. Leaves to mourn, his wife, parents, one sister, Mrs. Hazel Vermilye, of Plano, and a host of friends and relatives.

LELAND.—William B. Leland was born June 9, 1850, at Milford, Massachusetts, the son of William and Mary Waterman Leland. He united with the church in 1883, and held the office of teacher and priest in the priesthood. In 1875, he was married to Ruth Emma Manter, at Plymouth, Massachusetts. He died at the home of his daughter near Mount Pleasant, Iowa, October 25, 1933, leaving to mourn, his wife and six children: Benjamin and Alice, of Plymouth; William and Herbert, of Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. Grace Sampson, of Mount Pleasant, and Mrs. Adelena Patton, of Detroit; seventeen grandchildren, and many friends. The funeral services were conducted by Elder F. T. Mussell at the Coos Funeral Home, Mount Pleasant, October 28. A faithful member has passed on to await the resurrection.

GOODWIN.—Betty Ramsey was born in Goldthwaite, Texas, July 11, 1871, and departed this life October 25, 1933, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alma Adams, Tulsa, Oklahoma. She was united in marriage to Edwin I. Goodwin in 1891. She moved with her husband to Holdenville, Indian Territory, in 1895, and lived in that place until moving to Tulsa in 1920. Mrs. Goodwin became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1904, being baptized by S. W. Simmons. She is survived by her husband and six children, Kenneth and John of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Winfred, of Cleveland, Oklahoma; Mrs. Hazel Erter, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Alma Adams, of Tulsa, and Mrs. Iona Goodwin Harrison, of Seminole, Oklahoma; thirteen grandchildren, three brothers and four sisters. Funeral services were held at the Tulsa Church, Brother Emmett Lancaster, pastor, in charge, sermon by Apostle Roy S. Budd. Interment was in the Rose Hill Mausoleum, Tulsa. Mrs. Goodwin was a devoted mother, consecrated church worker, and a true friend, and will be greatly missed among her associates.

OWEN.—Alexander Owen was born August 2, 1865, at Owen Sound, Ontario. Died November 4, 1933, at his home, Porquois Junction, Ontario, after a lingering illness which he bore with Christian fortitude. Was baptized into the church October 13, 1920, at Providence Bay, Ontario, by J. H. Yager. Ordained a priest October 19, 1921. In 1925, he with his family moved to northern Ontario and there although isolated from a branch, he was a true and faithful Latter Day Saint. Leaves to mourn, his wife, son, Alex, jr.; three daughters: Mrs. Pearl Bailey, Mrs. Emily Cashmore, and Mrs. Stella Myers, all of Porquois Junction; nine grandchildren, other relatives, and many friends. The funeral sermon was preached at the home by Elder B. H. Doty, assisted by Elder Albert Shepherdson and the Reverend Roadhouse, of the United Church. Interment was in Porquois Junction Cemetery.

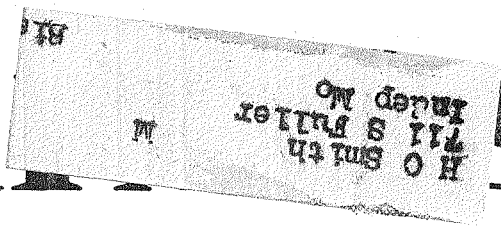
The SAINTS' HERALD



How to Explain Joseph Smith

By Edwin Claus

THE TIME TO ACT

We are approaching the end of the education effort that has been conducted by the church since the beginning of the month with the slogan "Keep the Law."

The time to act will soon be here. Up to the present we have been receiving instruction. It should soon bear fruit in the filing of inventories and the payment of tithes.

The church and its people are interdependent. The welfare of one is conditioned by the welfare of the other. The church can return service to the people in the measure that the people give it steady, consistent support.

The Pigeonhole

The Changeless God

(A Story Told by John Sheehy)

As I look at the trees of autumn, I am reminded of the youthful philosopher, Heraclitus, who centuries ago went out to observe nature and study life. Under the stars and in the glare of the noon day sun, he roamed the woods and the meadows. He walked up and down the highways and the byways. He climbed mountains and he descended into valleys. He wanted to know the secret of life. He wanted to know the cause of all things. He wanted to know for himself.

Heraclitus lived about the time of the young Hebrew prophet, Malachi. One day Malachi received a revelation from God. He was directed to make it known to the children of Israel. Accordingly, he reminded them of the God of Moses, of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The burden of the revelation was: "I am the Lord. I change not." Malachi declared by the power of the Spirit of God that God is unchangeable; unchangeable in his infinite love and tenderness and compassion and justice.

The young Greek philosopher and student, up in the mountains, about the same time the message had come to Malachi, returned from his study with this conclusion: "The law of change is changeless." He declared that the cause of all causes never changes. His observations had taught him to conclude that whatever is responsible for all the changes in nature is never changed. Whatever the powerful controlling influence of all things, this one thing, he knew, was unchangeable. The law of nature which gives us green leaves in the spring, and turns them red, gold, and brown in the autumn, never changes. Heraclitus had no name for this controlling force in the universe, so he called it "Law." He had found this revelation in the places where David said, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the earth showeth forth his handiwork."

Blind, Deaf, and Dumb

"It is astonishing how many people there are who can't or won't read," declared the Pigeon today. "There are signs along the boulevard that tell motorists on the side streets to 'Stop.' Yet many of them plunge out into the traffic without stopping or even looking. No wonder more people are killed each year than the last."

Laws are meant to protect us, but they cannot protect unless the public obeys. People who drive their cars with a headlight or tail-light missing, people who can't or won't learn to signal their turns correctly, people who do not obey the rules of the road are a public menace.

It is necessary to read the signs in order to obey the law.

Every community holds four distinct classes of men and women: those who have risen victoriously over life's battles, those who are fighting valiantly, those who are drifting downstream, and those who already are on the rocks.—Christian Standard.

Destruction is not threatening civilization: it is happening to civilization before our eyes. The ship of civilization is not going to sink in five years' time, nor in fifty years. It is sinking now."— H. G. Wells.

Passing Events

Support the President Political saboteurs, and persons with axes to grind, as well as honest opponents, were frightened to cover by the early vigor and strength of the Roosevelt administration. Now, however, malcontents of all kinds are beginning to find a common ground for subversive attacks on the President. We may well fear another spectacle of futility in the national administration such as we saw in the deadlocks that occurred between the legislative and executive branches of our government under Hoover and Wilson. We may well pray, too, to be delivered from a repetition of that folly. It is too dangerous a game to bait the government these days.

Doing His Best There were many people who didn't care for Roosevelt as a candidate that have come to admire and respect him as the President. They believe in his integrity, and they wish that he may have a fair chance to test his new policies and so be given an opportunity to free the country of the terrors of the depression. They didn't like his ideas on liquor, they didn't like his Tammany friends, and they still don't like them. But they want to see the man have a chance to put his plans in operation. The President is doing his best, and it is unpatriotic of political enemies, at a time like this, to try to thwart him. In defeating him they may wreck the country. But there are people who would ruin the country to keep the other party from succeeding.

The Time for Protest There is a legitimate time for protest. When another election comes the country can evaluate the President and his policies, and decide whether he is suitable to carry his office another four years. Obstruction now may be legal, but is not sensible. Unity and patience are needed to carry the nation through this crisis.

The Christian's Task Our task is to obey the law, and to support good men in office. Civilization is standing, at the very best, on somewhat wobbly legs just now. Whatever the faults of our government or its officials, we want that government to endure. We must anticipate with dread the chaos that would follow the disintegration into which the wrangling of politicians would plunge us. The chances of the church—and all churches in the world—lie with strong, orderly government.

Blue Pencil Notes

THE SON OF A CHURCH MAN who had been a zealous worker was asked what course he intended to pursue. He replied, "The course of least resistance." And he told the truth.

> Count, if you will, their blunders o'er
> Who spend their lives without reserve
> To build the church—they err the more
> Who criticize, but do not serve.

IF ANGER has written the letter, let Charity burn it; if Ill Will has spoken the word, let Humility ask forgiveness.

THE PURITANS thought it sinful to be joyous; their posterity think it joyous to be sinful—which makes two mistakes.

LATTER DAY SAINTS should be on guard against the clever thieves who break the lock in wedlock.

PAUL used hard and unpleasant words to condemn sin. He wrote of the fruit of evil mindedness as "adultery, fornication, uncleanliness." Hollywood has a different word. Hollywood calls it "romance." Hollywood has a school in every community where Hollywood ideas of love and romance are taught.

TRIAL MARRIAGE has its appeal to those who wish to escape the responsibilities, sacrifices, and problems of sustained home and family life—it affords an easy way into matrimony and a quick way out, and puts the mantle of respectability on the shoulders of the philanderer and wanton who flit from love to love: "Always to court and often to wed." And now one Hollywood couple announces a premarriage "trial honeymoon." If the honeymoon is to their liking they may take a dip into "trial marriage."

SIXTY YEARS AGO President Smith saw the development in America of certain tendencies, philosophies, and attitudes touching marriage. He foretold their ultimate effects and his predictions are rapidly coming true. He wrote:

> "The world groans under a loose morality fearful to contemplate; and the course of many talented men and women, in teaching and in practicing the absolution of the marriage covenant for trivial causes, is making the world worse; and indeed, it may be said, with some show of truth, that there will come a time, should the teaching of such philosophers become the rule, that virtue and vice, morality and immorality existed but in name; for that which is now vicious and immoral will by teaching and custom have become the rule.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The church should be the lever of reform in this matter; and while we preach a purer faith, we should also preach a purer practice; while we teach freedom from spiritual bondage to the world, we must insist upon the sanctity and holiness of the marriage bond; for unless holiness shall begin in the domestic relations, it will never be found in the church nor in the state.—Church History, volume 3, page 706.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

An International Church

A letter from a Canadian brother, printed in another section of this issue, very kindly and justly offers a criticism that the "Herald is too national for an international church."

We appreciate this comment, and have felt for some time that it is true. It is only partly excused by the fact that so many of the readers and supporters of the Herald are in America.

The limitations of viewpoint in editors who have always lived in the one country can only be overcome, in a limited sense, by the assistance of members who live in other lands. News, letters, and articles will help greatly.

We try to be more generous and sympathetic with contributions from beyond our borders than with those from within. Unhappily, some of the manuscripts that come from abroad, like all too many that are produced at home, are unusable.

Our only recourse is to appeal to people of talent, and those with education, in all these other countries, to write for us. They can give us real help in making the Herald the international periodical it should be. We assure these friends that their manuscripts will be kindly and gratefully received. It is with the greatest reluctance that we find ourselves unable to use any of them. L. L.

Purchasing Power for the Church

In the Herald of November 21 our special gift section made a serious effort to offer to the members of the church an opportunity for holiday purchases unsurpassed in quality and economy. Much more than price savings, however, is involved. There is the matter of the kind of purchases that are to be made this year for Christmas presents.

In this we hope that we are making the beginning of an effort to mobilize the buying power of the church and direct it toward the right sort of purchases. The time may come, and come soon, when we can expand this service, thus saving money for the members, assuring a high quality in the goods sold, and helping the church by transacting a volume of business that will bring returns to church funds.

We do not ask any favors. All we ask is that you read the gift section of eight pages in last week's Herald. If you find something there that will serve your needs and serve them at a better price than you can obtain elsewhere, we shall be happy to serve you.

Men You Ought to Know

F. HENRY EDWARDS
Secretary of the Quorum of Twelve

He has one of the most capacious and astonishing memories in the Quorum. This is a great help in his work as Secretary. He fairly revels in church history and biography.

Adopted by America, he is sympathetic with American people, but he remains as English as tea. So much so that his young son, Lyman, who is one of his chief adorations, often accuses him, "Daddy's talking English again!"

Miss Alice, daughter of President Smith, was the first American to understand his speech, and now, as Mrs. Edwards, she still understands him best.

But he has learned to "talk American" well enough that American congregations understand and appreciate his strong delivery and his fine message.

Keep but ever looking, whether with the body's eye or the mind's and you will soon find something to look on.—Browning.

He is, in my opinion, the noblest who has raised himself by his own merit to a higher station.—Cicero.

How to Explain Joseph Smith

With a Few Thoughts on Priesthood and Presidential Succession

By Edwin Claus

JOSEPH SMITH was an unlearned young man, particularly untrained as to Greek or Stoic philosophy. His mind was likewise unhampered by medieval or modern theology, therefore it was clearly susceptible to the still small voice of the Lord.

The Latter Day work began in our country when political development was the outstanding achievement, but in the liberal arts, the country was immature. All religions were supposed to be tolerated, yet they had more of partisan theology than they had of religion. On the contrary, the early Christian church had its origin, among a number of highly developed philosophies, and oriental systems of mysticism. Christianity did not hesitate to make the challenge, but was later considerably mixed with them.

Furthermore, all great ethnic religions leave their impress upon the social and economic world. Whatever was the social order but dimly hinted at in the New Testament, Christianity did not make great headway until a development of monasticism took place. Its subsequent abuse, together with some other movements, culminated in the Reformation. The Puritan interpretation of the Reformation was planted in New England, and out of this grew up the "New England conscience," which did not pass away until well after the Civil War. In this, chastity, almost to fanaticism, and monogamic marriage were thoroughly ingrained into the New England fibre, but a revolt was brewing, as later indicated by the popularity of Hawthorne's The Scarlet Letter.

Thus it can be seen that the Puritanic inheritance was among the few things that might bias the inspiration of Joseph Smith. Without a hint of monastic-celibacy, marriage, to him, was already a sacred institution in the Garden of Eden. It never occurred to Joseph that whatever the social relation, or helpmate condition that did ensue in Eden, it was not marriage, for Adam and Eve did not know that they were sexed; otherwise Joseph was the prophet who spoke as moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and under this inspiration his revelations are of high authority. Without inspiration his writing show much native ability and should be interpreted in the light of his time and environment.

PASSING OVER Joseph's economics and philosophy, it is needless to say that he soon attracted brilliant men to his standard, but he was not the man to submit entirely to the influence of any scholar. He carried out a course of study that has had few parallels, but with it all he kept a surprisingly open mind. Joseph admired the scholarly Pratt, and had him sent to a European University. There is much genius and imagination shown in Pratt's later celestial philosophy, biased as it was by his inherent sex-complex, and to this day British thinkers rate Mormonism as an original American religion because of its attempt to graft Puritan morality on the very old custom of polygamy. By the irony of fate, Pratt paid the price for his subtlety by his "Martyrdom." There is not a more unfortunate character in the whole church than P. P. Pratt, a peculiar story in itself. A pity it is, that he could not have used his brilliant talents to better purpose than to subvert those who were susceptible to celestialism.

Joseph Smith's elucidation of priesthood is the clearest in sacred literature, yet it is not entirely conclusive. He does not fully differentiate the Patriarchate from the other orders. It is evident that if Deity marks the sparrow's fall, the Patriarchate may well have been the priesthood of prehistoric man, for if not connected with the Melchisedec order, the Patriarchate does not contribute to church organization or salvation; but prehistoric man needed no salvation, as in the order of nature he stood only on a higher plane than the lower animals. Primarily, then, patriarchal priesthood had to deal with family life as a group and particularly with the good breeding of that group.

WHEN THE LORD wanted to raise a well-bred nation, He selected Abraham, whom he tested for faith in lieu of the Gospel (righteousness). "Abraham had great faith, which was accounted unto him for righteousness." (Memory quotation.) No Melchisedec ordination took place, though the patriarchate continued to Moses, who endeavored to organize a church under Melchisedec authority, which he received in Midian. After the greatest group baptism on record, Moses labored almost in vain, with a stiff-necked people, with whom the Lord became so displeased, that he wished to destroy them and raise up a nation from Moses; but Moses objected so strenuously, that the Lord compromised by leaving the nation with another inferior order. This time it was the Aaronic Priesthood. With it was submitted a law by which, if they could not be good, they should at least be sanitary. Many centuries later the Melchisedec order was given to the Gentiles with greater success. In the Christian dispensation, Paul was the outstanding missionary. He thoroughly understood the efficacy of the Melchisedec order of salvation, but faintly discerned the general church structure. "James, Cephas and John, seemed to be pillars." The validity of Paul's ordinations carried down for four centuries, with the church organization held in abeyance, or in a rejected condition, then came the general apostasy.

In the last dispensation a new world order was met. Legal salvation by the Melchisedec order went into immediate effect in all the church units. With a formal church organization a few years of smooth running would soon usher in the zionistic utopia. It might well have happened in the lifetime of Joseph Smith or his immediate posterity. No long drawn out plan of church perpetuation was called for. No spectacular church dynasty was heralded, for the second advent was near at hand if the Saints could endure in faithfulness for a time; hence it is easily seen why Joseph was exercised so little in a prophetic manner over a succession. This possible succession in the Presidency was in the nature of a special case, for a comparatively short time, a full generation perhaps; therefore a lineal succession could not run into serious abuse for so short a time and hence should be the obvious way out.

HOWEVER, the Lord did manage to inject pertinent statements into the revelations at times, bearing upon the possible succession. In section 27, a revelation given in 1830, the Lord stated that He would make the appointment should a successor be needed. In section 34, a revelation given December, 1830, the Lord still retains the right to appoint another in Joseph place, and this does not mean twelve. In section 43, given February, 1831, "none else shall be appointed unto this gift, except it be through him, for if it be taken from him, he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead, and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelation," etc. Here the Lord specifically states the law of succession. The language is so strong that only lineal succession can fully carry out the law "through him." Some writers have taken from its context, the supplementary clauses "for if it be taken from him," etc., and interpreted it as only to apply in case of Joseph's transgression. The law of the church amply provides for such an event. Joseph should, in that case, have been tried by the highest court of the church, and it would not have taken his appointment of a deacon, let alone his appointment of a prophet to the Church, he had violated. However this highly hypothetical event only occurred in the minds of blind leaders and their blind; but persecution was so violent that death was constantly before Joseph. To say that he had a premonition of death would be putting it with extreme moderation. He was condemned to be shot. The law of succession compelled him to act. He appointed and blessed his son as prophetic successor, before witnesses. In other crises, he appointed and blessed his son before other witnesses. Just previous to his death, and knowing that it would be some years before the son could qualify as prophet, he gave what could only have been a temporary appointment to Hyrum, in the hope that Hyrum would prove strong enough to carry onward the church, now so distracted internally. Truly, to the last, Joseph struggled to save the Presidency. In all this he acted with consistency, and was not remiss in his appointment, under the law of prophetic succession laid down in February, 1831. In section 87, a revelation given 1833, the law of succession is emphatically repeated. "Nevertheless through you, shall the oracles be given unto another, yea even unto the Church." While by inference, all previous revelations were given through the prophet to the church, here it is emphatically stated, that the oracles should be given "unto the church" by the one prophet appointed by, and through Joseph, and this does not mean a prophet set up by any quorum of the church, however prominent.

In section 107, the possible rejection of the church is considered. There is but slight indication that the church should have been rejected for failure to complete the baptismal font in the temple, nor is there any indication that the Melchisedec authority should be taken from individual church units, because the church should be rejected as an organization. There was no reason why the outside branches should not have continued as ever, except for the psychological effect of the death of Joseph and Hyrum, and the conflicting claims of leaders, but the conditions for church rejection lay right in Nauvoo locally. Baptism for the dead was only one temple ordinance. More important were the washings, anointings, etc., which could only take place in the finished temple, by means of which, they could make atonement for the cursings and judgments, brought upon their own heads, by the follies and abominations, which they practiced at that time and in that place. They were given enough time to perform the needed rites, at the end of the appointment, hence they were under condemnation, with no extenuating excuses for failure. Joseph tried to stop those (Continued on page 1532)

NEWS BRIEFS

Thanksgiving

This week all the churches in America are giving emphasis to the Thanksgiving theme. People are counting their blessings. In every branch, in every congregation, Thanksgiving sermons are being preached, testimonies being borne, and other Thanksgiving features are adding to the joy of all. It is well and most appropriate that we think of the latter-day admonition: "Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things."

Apostle R. S. Budd in Nebraska

Apostle Roy S. Budd returned to Independence late last week from a missionary trip to Nebraska. Among other places he called at and assisted Saints at Wilber, Columbus, and Eustis, stressing the "Keep the Law" period. Brother Budd's name was unintentionally omitted from "Official Whereabouts and Activities" last week.

Chatham Celebrates Twenty-ninth Anniversary

Chatham Branch, Ontario, celebrated the twenty-ninth anniversary of its organization October 22, with special services. Large crowds attended to hear such speakers as Missionary Percy Farrow, and Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, and to enjoy the music, worship and inspiration of the day. Elder D. J. Williams is pastor of the church which stands at the corner of Grand Avenue and James Street.

San Bernardino Adds Fourteen to Church Roll

Fourteen candidates have been baptized this year at San Bernardino, California. Seven of these were inducted into the kingdom October 22, at the conclusion of a week's missionary meetings, conducted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

Belding Young People Find New Name

Belding, Michigan, young men and women are organized in a club under the name L. Y. Z. (Loyal Youth of Zion) for the purposes of worship, work, recreation, study, and the cultivation of a fine type of fellowship. In choosing their name they have added another set of initials to the young people's roster of appellations.

Revival Meetings At Frazee, Minnesota

Elder P. T. Anderson closed a four-week series of wonderful revival meetings at Frazee a short time ago. His sermons generated much interest in the gospel there and greatly helped the isolated Saints. They hope he will be able to return in the spring.

Pittsburg Women Save Their Pennies

By saving their pennies from week to week the women of Pittsburg, Kansas, Branch financed a new basement for their church, and the branch installed a new furnace. All labor was donated by men of the congregation, and only a small debt remains to be paid.

Fort Collins Finds "Keep the Law" Opportune

Fort Collins, Colorado, Branch has found the "Keep the Law" season most opportune. For a number of weeks, according to the branch solicitor, local interest in the financial law of the church has increased until intensive teaching and study on the subject were needed. This the general church "Keep the Law" movement is supplying. The branch goal is—"Every member a tithe payer!"

Eustis Has Priesthood Officers After Thirteen Years

After thirteen years of patient waiting the little group of Saints at Eustis, Nebraska, were rewarded November 19, with the ordination of two priesthood officers, a priest and a teacher. They rejoice in having someone to lead them, and pray that God will bless these men with his Spirit and the faith to perform their work.

Word From New York District Worker

"We have just enjoyed a most interesting and fruitful youth convention at Buffalo, New York," writes Elder P. L. Weegar. "It surpassed in numbers and interest any we have ever held in New York District, that I can recall."

Special Publications for Young People

The Dorian, "official organ of the Dorian Literary Society" (Australia) enters a new field in local publications for the young people, and sets a high literary standard in doing so. The purpose of the Society, The Dorian informs us, is to encourage the development of talent in the writing art. The second number of this magazine contained good stories, articles and essays, with a liberal sprinkling of thoughtful and excellent verse.

News occupies but a small place. There are more than sixty pages, mimeographed, the whole bound in an attractive cover. This is a notable achievement. We congratulate our Australian friends on their splendid effort. The quality is so good that we plan to borrow some items for the Herald.

Albert Boynton, genial editor of the San Francisco Zion Builder, makes a generous offer to young people who may be interested in planning a branch or district paper. He is willing to share his experience with them and give them the benefit of what he has learned. The Zion Builder has achieved a distinctive style of its own, and the sample copies will surprise you at what can be done with a mimeograph. The staff is ambitious, for they "look forward to the time when the circulation will be large enough to warrant the printing of the paper." If you desire information, write to The Zion Builder, Danvers and Caselli Streets, San Francisco, California. Care of Mr. Albert Boynton.

The Herald Editors would be happy course, to receive copies of all local publications, whether for branch or district, young people or older ones. Thus we have been able in the past to share many good things with the people all over the church.

Song or Twitter

The story is told of a man who had a canary which sang sweetly. When summer came, the man thought it was a pity to keep the canary indoors, so he hung its cage out in a tree in his yard.

This tree was frequented by sparrows in great numbers. Before long the canary's song lost much of its sweetness, and by the end of summer it couldn't sing like a canary any more at all. All it could do was twitter, twitter, twitter, like an English sparrow. It had spent the summer in bad company and it had become like them, losing its finest gift.

With more free time on our hands, it is well for us to think about how we can best spend it. There are ever so many interesting and worth-while things to do. To be busy with interesting things is the best way to keep out of bad company. By doing this we will not only be keeping what is fine and good in our make-up, but we will be growing in character. The song of our lives will not then have deteriorated to a mere twitter, twitter.—Exchange.

A Fine Thing——

About our young people of today is their courage. No hysterics, no mock heroics, nor any artificially stimulated spasms of dramatic despair. Just plain, quiet courage, fortitude, and patience. The old "desperate Ambrose" manner of talking is as out of date as the hobble skirt.

They aren't expecting too much from life, and they're prepared to give good returns for what they get. On the whole, they're a cleaner crowd than the so-called "post-war generation." They mature earlier, they take their studies and their opportunities seriously. They are preparing for life.

When we consider the fact that the near future of the world is dependent upon the kind of young people we see coming on, we somehow feel more confident.

Missionary Effort a Success

The Y. K. T. Class of Independence, although not now technically young, is not content to settle down to the comfortable and passive routine of middle age. This live group has registered a success in promoting a series of missionary meetings at Liberty, Missouri, just a few miles across the river from Independence. The class literally interviewed the whole town in advertising the meetings, and is now furnishing transportation, music, and a part of the congregation every evening. The speaker, John F. Sheehy, of Independence, is enthusiastic about the results. Many outsiders have been attending the meetings. If young people elsewhere are interested in something like this, we believe we can get some suggestions for them.

There is a big deposit of sympathy in the bank of love, but don't draw out little sums every hour or so—so that by and by, when perhaps you need it badly, it is all drawn out and you yourself don't know how or on what it was spent. —Emily Post.

Holiday Preparations

The church atmosphere is full of drama these days: dramatic contests, Christmas plays and cantatas, one-act plays, and full evening entertainments. Wherever young people gather they like to participate in plays. It is so much fun to pretend you are somebody else for a while—isn't it?—and have a rest from your own everyday personality; to say lines more clever and eloquent than you could ever think of yourself, and to give other people a bit of clean fun.

We can sympathize with the lady who took her small daughter to the city the other day, fell victim to the spell of the toyshops and brought home some toys long before they will be needed. It may have been once for the small daughter and twice for herself. But who can blame her when things look so pretty? The department store Santa Clauses are out very early this year.

AND that reminds us, are your young people planning to make Christmas happier for some needy missionary family? Will you make up a basket of supplies for some of the poor people in your neighborhood? This is lots of fun. Remember it is not only "more blessed to give than receive," but much more excitement. Start early, before all your money is gone for your own gifts.

It Didn't Apply to Pigs

Two Irishmen were protesting their friendship for each other. One said, "Pat, if you owned the whole world would you share with me?" "Ah, Mike, and you know I would." "Well then, Pat, suppose you had a million dollars, would you share with me?" "Sure, Mike, and you know I would."

"Well then, Pat, supposin' you had two pigs, would you give me one of them?" "There now, Mike, sure and you're going too far. You know I have two pigs."

It is decidedly easier and more comfortable to decide what rich people ought to do with their money and to decide how an employer ought to act, than it is to decide ourselves to do the right thing. This whole matter of the causes and cures of poverty should be approached with sincerity and with the conviction that I ought to do something about it. The young people of today, and the men and women of tomorrow, must come to this problem with sincere endeavors to help solve it. Only the young today can make the world better tomorrow.—Howard K. Williams, in Young People's Leader.

What the Church Has a Right to Expect of Youth

By Helen R. Beadnall

THE CHURCH has the right to expect big things of youth. In fact, the church is expecting big things of youth—not in the far distant future but right now. Young people will not only be valuable some day, they are valuable now with distinct contributions to make to the life of the church.

It is a common thing to overlook the opportunities of the present and to expect to do big things in the future. A great twofold task lies before the church—that of establishing Zion and of preaching the gospel to all nations. Or, in other words, the task of Zionizing the church and evangelizing the world. A stupendous task indeed!

It may seem at first thought that this task lies entirely in the future. But does it? It is true, the church is unable to issue a call for its youth to go on distant missions or even local missions. But the church has issued a very definite call to its young people. I wonder how many of us are really willing to answer that call.

Under the rather discouraging conditions with which we are all more or less familiar, about one thousand young people from almost every state in the Union, from Canada and from countries across the water, gathered in a young people's prayer service one Sunday morning at the last General Conference to speak their hopes for the church and their desire to help.

Here was a group of consecrated young people, many of whom were willing to go to the ends of the earth for the gospel they loved. But the church was not in a position to ask that. What could the church ask its youth to do today? President F. M. McDowell voiced this simple, earnest challenge.

"Young people, in this time of crisis, the church needs you. It asks you to do an unspectacular service—to go back to your branch, to teach that class, to lead and to live uprightly before the people of the community. Perhaps the great body of the church will never know of your service of righteousness, but someone will know and someone will respond. Are you ready to seize the opportunity that the present offers and give yourself in unheralded, unsung service to the church?"

If we analyze this call, it falls into two major things that the church has the right to expect of its youth—Service and Character. These two things are both the fruit of Love. Without love, no service, however, great or costly, is of any value in heaven's sight. We need not try doing things for Christ until we love him.

Character, too, is the fruit of Love. If we love Christ, we will have Christ's beauty in our soul. Love for Christ makes us like Christ. But there will be service too. Love is like light, it cannot be hid. It cannot be shut up in the heart. It will live and speak and act. Service is the expression of love.

The Author

She is one of the young people, and a worker for the church in a big way. Secretary of Far West Stake, which has some of the finest young people's organization and activity in the church, she has the experience to know what she is talking about.

Love in the heart of Jesus brought him from heaven down to earth to be the redeemer of the world. Love in his apostles took them to the ends of the earth to tell the gospel story. Love in Joseph Smith sent him to a martyr's death. Love in the youth of the church will cause them to serve.

It is not enough to try to hew and fashion a character into the beauty of holiness although that is very important. The most radiant spiritual beauty does not make one a complete Christian. It takes service to fill up the measure of the stature of Christ. The young man said he had kept all the commandments from his youth. "One thing thou lackest," said the Master, "sell all thou hast, and give to the poor." Service of love was needed to make that morally exemplary life complete.

Your service may not find a place in history. But that should not trouble you. It is the same with the good and useful in every age. A few names are preserved, but the great multitude are forgotten. Earth keeps scant record of its benefactors. But remember, there is a place where every smallest kindness done in the name of Christ is recorded and remembered.

Long, long ages ago a beautiful fern grew in a deep vale, nodding in the breeze. One day it fell, complaining as it sank away that no one would remember its grace and beauty. The other day a geologist went out with his hammer in the interest of his science. He struck a rock; and there in the seam lay the form of a fern—every leaf, every fibre, even the most delicate traceries of the leaves. It was the fern which ages since grew and dropped into the indistinguishable mass of vegetation. It perished; but its memorial was preserved, and today is made manifest.

So it is with all beautiful lives which have wrought for God and man and have vanished from earth. Nothing is lost, nothing is forgotten. The memorials are in other lives and some day every touch and trace, every influence and impression will be revealed.

The church calls Youth to great tasks. Only a consecrated devoted membership with a deep love of Christ overflowing in service can hope to fulfill the great mission of the church. And the hope of the church is in its Youth.

Youth is a time of preparation as well as a time for actual service. Christ himself said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." In order to keep them, we surely must first know them. We have been told to study and cultivate the gifts given us.

There are many more specific things that the church has the right to expect of its youth. But if there were just one thing, I should say that the church expects its youth to have that great love of Christ in their hearts which will develop a Christ-like character overflowing in humble service.

What the church may demand of you or of me in the future, we do not know. But the church calls its youth today to an unspectacular service—yet one which all may do. In the words of Brother McDowell, it is to lead, to teach that class to live uprightly before your community. Each one has a definite place in the great plan of God. The church needs each one. It is true, it may succeed if you do not answer the call to service, but it will miss your service. May we each find our place and work loyally in it.

My Father has need of the birds and the flowers,
A place for each beautiful tree;
And so I am sure in his wonderful plan
There's a place and a mission for me.

So wherever I go and in all that I do
I crave the clear vision to see
My place in my Father's own wonderful plan,
My task and his blessing for me.

I'd like to use all of my talents and time,
And ever so faithful to be,
That God should not miss any service of mine
To perfect his purpose in me.

Then I must look close through the days as they pass,
The signs of his guiding to see;
And be glad that my Father's own loving good plan
Included a mission for me.

Qualities of Leadership

(Notes from a sermon preached by President Elbert A. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.)

Selected and Arranged by the Rambling Reporter

(Scripture reading, Luke 2: 41-49.)

There can be no question that the church needs leadership. I am not thinking about leadership as applied to the priesthood alone, or those in pastoral charge. There is scarcely anyone of us who has any force of character at all, but is leading someone. People are following the leadership of all of us.

This leadership is something that we want to tie up to the service of the church. Many times a man or woman with a busy tongue, working assiduously in one community for a period of several years, leads several families from the church. That is not the kind of leadership we want. We want the qualities of leadership which are constructive. There are many, but I propose to list them under five headings.

1. A leader must have personal convictions. Deep-seated, enduring convictions are necessary to any leader in the church. A dollar made of silver has a ring that is true. Most people like to hear it. But a bogus dollar does not have that ring. Sincerity of conviction rings in our voice, shines from our eyes, and is shown in our example. It is necessary for any successful leader in this church. Belief in the message of this church and belief in the divinity of his own call are necessary to any minister in the church; they are also necessary to the leader.

Abiding convictions of this sort are a matter of growth. Alma says, "Even if ye can do no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you." (Alma 16: 151.) Select a few fundamental causes that you recognize to be beautiful, desirable, and admirable. Think about them, talk about them, and if you are a preacher, preach about them. Live by them and gradually add to this store of conviction.

2. A leader must have the courage of his convictions. The world is calling to us to surrender our standards, or at least to lower them. This has become easier in late years because of conditions. Now is the time when a leader must have the courage to stand for what he believes is true and good and honorable. Have WE the courage of our convictions?

3. A leader must have a sense of responsibility. He is to show the way. That is not all. He cannot say to the people, "That is the way, walk in it," but he must walk that way himself. You demand from those of us who are placed prominently before you that we shall avoid those things which will humiliate the church and embarrass you, and that we shall set the example of constructive righteousness. I wonder if this responsibility does not extend to all the members. Jesus said, "I must be about my Father's business."

> "My testimony is that the gospel works continuously. We see that in the life of the Christ, and from time to time in the lives of those whom we have known. Are we who are leaders following the example of Joseph Smith who was first of all a Christian gentleman and good citizen? As a small lad he was driven from Missouri. He crossed the Mississippi clinging to his mother's skirts, but in later manhood he returned, and he lived such a life, that at his death, the Kansas City Star, one of the greatest newspapers in this section of the country, paid him the tribute of an editorial in which he was designated as 'a Christian gentleman.' "—Elbert A. Smith.

4. A leader must have that sense of fellowship that is mentioned in the Bible as "brotherly love." A bull in a china shop has convictions and he has courage, but he has no friends. If anyone is following him it is someone with a pitchfork in his hands. Ours is a ministry of persuasion; it calls for persuasion and tact. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; . . . charity beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." (See 1 Corinthians 13.)

5. A leader must have stability. Probably one of the most familiar texts in the Bible to Latter Day Saints is found in James, the words which stirred the boy Joseph to inquire of God concerning his church: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." But that is not all; there is a condition to the asking: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." (See James 1: 5-7.)

The double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. He is like "a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed." The life of a Latter Day Saint leader ought to be steady, flowing onward, and deep like a river. If we are to be leaders, our effort and consecration must be long-continued, enduring all the days of our lives.

Every man or woman who occupies the responsibility of leadership whether it be as a mother of a family, as a teacher of a Sunday school class, as a pastor of a congregation, or as an elder of a group, has his or her period of discouragement when it seems that his efforts are wasted.

Not long ago I was in Colorado, and while there with Brother Glaude A. Smith I drove over Mount Evan, the highest automobile road in the world. From the mountaintop we can choose the road we wish to travel, find the trail, see where we are going, chart our route. But when we are down in the valley among the rocks and trees and shadows, the road is often obscured; sometimes we can see only a very short distance ahead. Let us not then change the course that we saw upon the mountain peak, but let us forge ahead on our way. When you are spiritually lifted up to the mountaintop, determine the way you will take, and when you are down in the valley, keep on going toward your goal.

Submission

There's submission in a sunset,
And resignation;
There's attainment in a noon-day sun;
But the dawn is a revelation,
As irresistible as youth.

Should I see a sunset at the end of life,
What would hold me to my Universe;
Attainment of the zenith sun,
The revelation of the dawn,
Or just submission?

—Art Wellman.

The modern religious education movement belongs to the twentieth century, not the nineteenth. It may be said to have begun with the discovery that education in religion is not merely a matter of imparting knowledge of the contents of the Christian classics, but involves the formation of religious attitudes and the development of ability to make judgments and to choose courses of action in life-situations.—Winfred Ernest Garrison, in The March of Faith.

Study the Financial Law

Apostle M. A. McConley writes: "The new adult quarterly, 'A Study of the Financial Law' is fine. Every member of the priesthood ought to have it."

This valuable material has been prepared under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. In the year's study it covers all phases of church finance, the law of God concerning our use of means, the material and spiritual purposes of observance of the law, the pastoral and missionary objectives of the church, stewardships, the gathering and Zion.

Let us go forward through a clear understanding of the law and ready obedience to its provisions given for Zion's perfection. The October-December quarter deals with "The Purpose and Plan of Church Finance." The second quarter, now being printed, discusses "Local and General Church Finance."

Prices: In quantities of one to three, 25 cents each; per year, 90 cents each. In quantities of four or more, 15 cents each; per year, 50 cents each.

Order from Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

When your heart is right with God, you are right with the world. When your heart is right with God, nothing else matters—you are in harmony with everything.—John F. Sheehy, in a sermon at Stone Church.

Junior Stewards Keep the Law

A recent letter from Alto, Michigan, tells of the forming of a Junior Stewardship Club among the young people from ten to fourteen years of age. They feel the urge to "Keep the Law" and wish to observe the financial law in a systematic way. Now the senior class at Alto, ages fourteen to twenty, are sending for record books. This will make a group of about twenty junior stewards in a small branch, following the plan endorsed and provided by the Presiding Bishopric.

A group of junior stewards have just begun keeping financial records at historic Plymouth, Massachusetts.

A class of ten young people at Creston, Iowa, were supplied record books early in November.

Brooklyn, New York, has a group of twenty young people learning the financial law in a practical way through actual record keeping.

The branch solicitor at Herrin, Illinois, ordered thirty record books early in September. He reports a church school of fifty of whom forty-eight are contributing to the church. He says, "The pastor and I are trying to bring our branch up to one hundred percent in paying tithes. We are all very poor in worldly goods, and very few of us are working, but we are going to carry on with all the power we have, and we feel sure that our efforts will be fruitful."

A class of eight at Sherwood, Oregon, have recently ordered record books.

Juniors, intermediates, seniors and older young people will find the record books well planned for their use. Especially in this year when all the church is giving serious attention to a study of the financial law, are these records helpful. They provide a simple explanation of the principle of tithing, stewardship and method of accounting. The keeping of a consistent record is an excellent experience in continuous faithful effort and in good bookkeeping.

Junior Stewardship Record Books may be had through the Department of Religious Education at 15 cents each. If ordered for use in a project under a sponsor, the price is 10 cents each.

The fear of God is essential to control and direct human conduct. I believe in the fear of God, and there is plenty in the word of God that sustains me in that belief. . . . Fear was a part of the angel message and I do not expect to see much accomplished in the redemption of Zion until we have learned to fear God. —E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "The Judgement," preached at the Stone Church, Independence.

Leadership

By Anna Burhart

Will the church ever think in terms of leadership, or will it cast its eye about, seeking a place to follow? Its edifice is founded upon the rock of Peter's discovery: the fact that Jesus is the Christ —the Son of the living God. This foundation is so perfect, so unique, so secure. The philosophy issuing therefrom is so simple, yet so dynamic. The gospel is thorough, complete. How then can the church remain static?

Before this gospel plan was submitted to men, it was tested in the great laboratory of life. All through the centuries where it has been placed in operation, progress has been assured. Yet each age has always fallen short of a complete fulfillment.

The Master studied the unseen hand of God in the development of nature until he was able to use this natural power in a way which was called miraculous. He watched with wonder as the dynamic force in the lily bulb expanded and grew until it burst into a revelation of gorgeous beauty, white and gold. He observed the grass of the field "which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven." The lesson he gleaned from all this is to the effect that if God saw fit to care for his lower forms of life so meticulously, how much more would he care to sustain his higher development, if men will only grasp that degree of faith in God's law, which will inspire them to exercise it.

The church has a beautiful light of unison and coordination in the spirit of brotherhood. Were it shining from the hilltop, strain and stress would fade away, as darkness dispersing in the light of eternal day.

We are all in danger of permitting our time to be taken up with little things and of missing the doing of the things most worth while. We attend innumerable church-meetings and sometimes forget to worship. We canvass our block and give our money for relief of the unemployed and fail to vote for a reorganization of our economic system that would make such things unnecessary. We talk about love and service and let our lives be controlled by the profit motive. We prate about patriotism and do not try to make ourselves intelligent about our country's needs. We talk about the need of religion and do not even teach our children to pray, nor practise daily prayer ourselves.—Young People's Leader.

Thanksgiving in Prose and Verse

Be Thankful

By John Sheehy

Some time ago a radio station in Los Angeles broadcast a program. Out in the middle of the vast Pacific, a man living on one of the smaller members of the Society Islands group, heard that program. He enjoyed it to the extent that he sat down and wrote a letter of appreciation to the station and particularly to those who had given the program. Their program had helped him, and he wanted them to know that he was grateful. He started this letter of thanks to the United States on a sailing vessel. It took four months for the letter to reach Los Angeles. The radio program was four months old before that letter of appreciation arrived; but now the letter is one of the station's treasures. They are proud of it. Though it took four months, the letter came.

If you have not started to express your gratitude to God in the way God would have you do it, don't wait. Do it now. Do it God's way. Some of us may have to ask forgiveness before we can return gratitude, forgiveness for failure to keep part of the law of God.

We Give Thanks

By Frank W. Mills

For golden grain on sunlit plain,
For autumn fruits now come again,
For cattle on ten thousand hills,
For fish that dart through sparkling rills,

For song of bird, for flower of field,
For precious gems the mountains yield,
For wealth of forest, sea, and plain,
For strong defense on ocean's main.

For blessed nation strong and free
Where God, our King rules destiny,
For men of honor, men of might,
For women crowned with queenly light,

For days and nights of heavenly peace,
For rest at last when labors cease,
For grace to grow and strength to live,
For all God's bounteous hand shall give,

For these and other blessings more
That from God's copious fountains pour,
We offer now our humble prayer
And praise for matchless love and care.

Thanksgiving Prayer

By Lora Weir Puterbaugh

As time draws near Thanksgiving Day
And everyone is glad to pray
To Thee, O God, we love to say
The things for which we're thankful.
We thank Thee for that peace of mind
Away from Thee we could not find,
That peace that comes from Thee to thine
And for that peace we're thankful.
That blessed peace of heart and soul,
That buoys us up when breakers roll,
And moves us on toward the goal
For that blessed peace we're thankful.
A guiding hand that always leads,
That still, small voice that with us pleads,
The Bible true that of Thee reads,
For all of these we're thankful.
A home where joy and love entwine,
For faithful, helpful pal of mine,
For a boy rude, and a baby fine.
To Thee, O God, we're thankful.

Thankfulness

By Lomis

Thankful for life, though life ofttimes is dreary,
Thankful for work, though oft the hands grow weary;
Thankful for song, though sad sometimes the singer,
Thankful for striving, though ofttimes not the winner;

Thankful for sunshine, although some days are drear,
Thankful for smiles, tho' oft we shed the tear;
Thankful for friends to cheer us on the way,
Thankful for blessings given us each day.

Thankful for food, and raiment for our needs,
Thankful for flowers that grow despite weeds;
Thankful for faith in God, and faith in man,
Thankful for desire to do the good we can.

Thankful to live, in these the latter days;
Thankful for place to worship, and to pray,
Thankful for the Gospel Thou hast sent our way,
Great God, accept our thanks, for all, this day.

A Psalm of Thanksgiving

A number of children in a mission sewing-school were asked to hand in a list of the things for which they were thankful. The following was written by a little Jewish girl of twelve years, living on the top floor of a poor tenement, in three small rooms, barren of comforts, and yet with an open door for the Spirit of Thankfulness.

Things that I am thankful for are for my parents, sisters and brothers. The republic schools and the republic libraries, and the beautiful clubs where we are taught how to sew and other things.

For our food that grows so pleasant and for the beautiful stores and places where we get our clothing ready made or the cloth.

For the seasons that we have, for our health and our food.

For our dear homes where we live in.

For our arms and feet that we have, and for our stoves to keep us warm. For the home that the little ones that have no parents.

For the doctors to cure people, and the hospitals for the sick ones.

For our beds to sleep in and for the beautiful quilts to keep us from cold, and for the beautiful phonographs, organs and pianos to keep our homes happy.

For the beautiful parks where we have nice times. And for the telephones which we can talk to each other from far away. And for the teachers that teach us how to be straight and tall.

For the cats and dogs that we take care of and for the law and policemen that protects us from trouble.

For the darkness and light that we have.

For the moon and stars, and for the sun.

For the clocks that tell us our time. And for the calendar to tell us our dates and months. And for the tables and chairs.

For the spoons and dishes that we eat from. And for the gas that makes our homes light in the night.

For the newspapers that we read.

For the ice-boxes to keep our food from decaying.

For the water that we have in our homes. And for the train, cars, and boats that we travel in so easily. And for the druggists where we get our medicine from. And for our lives.

And I have still more things that I am thankful for.—By Caroline E. Bartlett.

Detours

IF SHE LIVED TO BE A HUNDRED, Larry knew that she could never forget the horror of the remainder of that night, the twenty-second of February—the excitement among the Playland merry-makers, her own consternation and misery and Greg's penitent concern almost hidden by his gruff business-likeness.

Four days ago now, and nothing had been learned concerning the missing bracelet. There seemed to be no clew. The police were inclined to believe it had been stolen, thinking if it had been lost, someone would have found it in the search which had been conducted.

Larry could not put the loss out of her mind. It huddled there like a dark monster, making her moody and fearful when she was awake, and creeping into her dreams when she was asleep. If she could forget it only for one moment—that would be relief.

This was Sunday morning, and the sunlight streamed in through her window. Yesterday's weather forecast had said Sunday would be a pretty day, and Greg had hinted of a ride in the afternoon. Perhaps it would be warm enough to melt the remnants of smoky snow on city lawns and in the gutters. Perhaps it would be nice enough for her to take a walk alone.

But only for a fleeting second could she hopefully contemplate the opportunities the day might bring. Sadly she yawned and stretched her arms, then pressed the backs of her hands against her eyelids. She was living over again for the hundredth time that hideous panorama of action with its panic and grief. She recalled how Greg had appeared as if from nowhere in the midst of the confusion created when her loss was discovered; how he had taken charge and had set people hunting for the lost article even before he took her to the manager's office to describe the piece; how he had repeated over and over: "Buck up, Larry, everything will be all right." Even yet in her mind's eye she could see the porters hunting, hunting, and finding nothing. She remembered the close attention the house detective gave her story; the questions of the police to all directly concerned over the loss. The lost ad which she had had inserted in the Kansas City papers, closed with the significant words, "Reward Offered." She and Greg had quarreled over the amount that reward was to be and who was to pay it. He maintained that he was as responsible for the loss of the bracelet as she.

No, she should never have gone to the Playland. At the time she knew she should not go. She should have listened to her conscience. She had only gone for the thrill, the newness, the big time, and how much anguish it had brought her! But wasn't this, the losing of the bracelet, just one of life's inevitable retributions? she fatalistically asked herself. She alone was to blame; she should have the moral courage to have said, "No," and suggested other entertainment for Greg and herself on that night. But then—accusing herself did not find the bracelet.

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

In a mood of adventure, Greg invites Larry to a great costume ball in the city. She goes, wearing a valuable bracelet, an heirloom belonging to Eldred Hampton. During the evening, while Greg is with someone else, Rowe McCarley, a member of the priesthood, unworthy of his office, meets Larry. Although she dislikes him very much, she is obliged to dance with him. The evening turns into a very unhappy affair for her, left in the company of men she does not like, and seeing Greg occasionally, at a distance, dancing with another woman.

She reached for the handkerchief she had tucked under the bracelet. Both of them were gone!

Dear, level-headed Greg—how much he had done to help! He had some treasured clews which he hoped would bring light to the problem before long, but the follow-up was taking time. Mrs. Hampton had been very gentle and considerate about the whole matter. She had urged Larry not to think the loss her fault, and cheerfully maintained that the heirloom would be found. Doc had offered wise counsel. Carmen wanted to know if she could be of any help. Was ever a group of friends more comforting, more loyal?

Many times in the past seventy-two hours Larry had told how she was positive that the bracelet was on her wrist until considerably after eleven o'clock, but that it had disappeared shortly before ten minutes till twelve. The fact that no one had found the handkerchief which she had worn under the bracelet, seemed to substantiate the theft theory. But who could have taken it? They had all been cleared of suspicion by the detective and the police on the night of the loss—Larry herself, Greg, Ben, Dora Lou, Dart, Bernice, Rowe, Mr. Johnson, a waiter, and a porter.

On the night following the episode the matter had been generally discussed in the Hampton sitting room. The detective was there to hear it all again—that was the second time he had been out to Independence that day. The Blaines were in and all those immediately concerned over the loss. Conjectures and theories had flown back and forth like English sparrows about a city block, but no solution had been reached. Mr. Farrow, the detective, left, assuring them that every effort would be exerted to sift the matter to the bottom. He wished to call on and question Mr. McCarley and Mr. Johnson again.

WHEN ALL THE REST WERE GONE Larry and Greg had conducted themselves with strained casualness, each battling with pride and dignity to bolster up an air of aloftness. Greg was the first to break through this, and he did so as he stood with his hat in his hand near the door: "There is a little clew," he hesitated, "that I haven't yet followed up. Maybe I'd come nearer learning the truth than this detective fellow. You know they say 'fools rush in where angels fear to tread.' "

"What is it?" the question was remote.

"That Mr. Johnson. Dagmar knows him, says his business—the nature of it I mean, isn't very certain just now—"

"Dagmar?" the tone was cold.

"Yes, Miss Shelby, the girl I was dancing with when I heard that the bracelet was lost. Ben introduced us," Greg's explanation stumbled on. "She says—"

"I don't care what she says! You can just keep it to yourself!" blazed Larry.

"Why—er—whatsa—"

"If it hadn't been for her," the girl rushed on, "this would not have happened!" but she could get no further. Why did she always have that insane desire to cry when she was angry? . . . "Oh, it's terrible—terrible," her voice rose hysterically and she wrung her hands. "I'll never get over it, Greg!"

"What's terrible? What is the matter, Larry?" he demanded sharply. "What will you never get over? . . . Larry!" he was shaking her by the shoulders as he spoke. "Stop talking in riddles!" he commanded, "and tell me—what do you mean?"

"If she—if she hadn't been around," stuttered the girl, "in the way—for you

to dance with, I wouldn't have been worrying. And—if I hadn't been worrying, I would have noticed when the bracelet disappeared! If you'd only been dancing with Dora Lou or Bernice—instead of that woman!" Hot tears were washing Larry's cheeks.

For a moment Greg held her away from him and steadily looked at her: "I'll be jiggered!" he slowly ejaculated. "Well, I'll be jiggered twice—so that's the way the wind blew!" On his face was written amazed understanding, whole-souled relief. "Well, if we weren't a couple of dolts—I mean if I wasn't! Here I thought you were purposely dodging—" his voice broke, and for a moment he halted—"Aw, Larry, do you mean you really aren't mad at me?"

His boyish tone swept away all that remained of her hurt and anguish of heart. Her tears trickling down his lapel, her hands gripping his shoulders she managed to choke: "'Course I'm not mad—silly—I thought you were wanting to dance—with her. So—Rowe was the only one around—I did try to get rid of him—and I looked for you—and I wanted you to come so bad to chase him away!" she ended with a small wail.

With something between a chuckle and sob, Greg caught her up and sat down with her on the piano bench: "Larry, darling, I'm awfully sorry it happened that way! We're just too stubborn and too much alike. You see you were so busy dancing with Rowe when I was first left by myself, that I thought you were liking it—you were smiling. And it was so crowded where you were that there wasn't much chance for me to cut in. About that time along comes Ben with this little dame, and introduces us. Well, there wasn't much left for me to do but dance with her, and she is an easy dancer, for a poor stump like me. When I looked over again, you were dancing with that Johnson tramp—"

"Hush, oh, do hush!" she implored. "Let's forget all that part, and hunt the bracelet!"

AND NOW as she lay in bed, how she wished that she had that bracelet and could hand it to Mrs. Hampton with thanks for the privilege of wearing it! She rubbed her eyes again, glanced at her watch, and abruptly sat up. She had promised Carmen that she would visit her class that morning, a group of primary girls. She really did not care about going, but perhaps it would help her to forget about the bracelet—if she could. Anyway the children would be cute.

It was almost eleven o'clock. The Sunday school period was over. Larry had enjoyed the session more than she expected. How the children loved Carmen! The light in their eyes as they talked to her gave their visitor a tiny thrill of envy.

Now the two young women were standing in the lobby of the Stone Church, watching the people file past into the main room of the building. Most of them seemed in a hurry to find a place for the eleven o'clock service.

AFTER the flashy glory and brilliancy of the crowd the other night, Larry decided this was a rather commonplace appearing group—at least its glory was not apparent in elaborate clothing. Faces always interested her. Here were faces wrinkled with care but smiling; eyes glowing with anticipation as if their owners were approaching an invisible feast. There were chins bravely held up. Some who came in stooped under many years. Though all entered with an air of wearing their best, there were threadbare coats and hats that had seen a hard winter. Nothing thrilling about this crowd—and yet, somewhere, down deep, it had a calm buoyancy of spirit, a hope, a work. Larry felt rather than saw this.

There were old men and women, young couples with a baby or two, girls arguing over where they were to sit. Overgrown young fellows by two's and three's hurried up the steps into the gallery. And so many of them spoke to Carmen and smiled, that Larry wished she had begun counting them at the first.

Again as so often before, she was almost overwhelmed with the feeling that she had no place here—that she was an outsider. These people were only smiling at her because she was with Carmen. The thought made her restless.

Hastily she squeezed Carmen's arm: "I don't think I'll stay for church. I think I'd better go home," she whispered.

"You're not sick, are you?"

"No, but I just don't feel up to seeing a church session through—I'll stay with you some other time. Your class was cute, dear," and she was moving out against the crowd.

ONCE OUTSIDE she turned her face in the direction opposite from home and began to walk. This was like old times when she used to walk her problems away. To her there was something spiritually refreshing as well as physically invigorating about walking. It seemed to take the kinks out of body and mind.

She was in no mood for church. She liked the music, but the preaching, well, sometimes she did not like to be preached to. Perhaps she was too independent, too obstinate—but she just didn't. This morning—it was lovely—she wanted to look at the sky, the wet earth; to think of the trees with all of their stored up energy ready to come forth in leaves and blossoms at the call of spring. She pictured the beauty of these streets in summer—trees, grass, flowers, happy children playing. Now the streets seemed asleep, quiet, Sabbath-like.

She felt as if she were running away from something, a something she could not really leave behind. It was like her shadow. Was it—could it be just herself that she could not escape? Sometimes she felt that it was. But the sunshine called her on, and she could not stop.

Almost before she was aware of it, she was passing the Bethel Episcopal Church. It stood on one of the prettiest streets in town, and its great gray building was a place of worship for many. Along the street in front two lines of cars were closely parked. People loitered on the steps of the building. Their Sunday school, no doubt, was just over and church had not yet begun. Passing the spacious steps, Larry looked up curiously to see what kind of attendants found the source of their spiritual life and strength here. A group of boys and girls of high school age was discussing something. One young woman raised her voice above the others: "Come on, we can all go tonight, and it will be great fun! The folks can think we've gone to church, or whatever they please—" Others in the group seemed to agree with her. Larry recognized the speaker at the same instant she looked down, and their eyes met, Sallie Ruth Blaine!

"Oh, hello," she greeted with a tiny rising inflection curiously like her mother's.

As she walked on Larry wondered how long Sallie Ruth had been attending the Episcopal Church, if it was a habit, and if she liked it and why? There were several things to wonder about Sally Ruth who was so different from her sister. Larry knew there were Latter Day Saint young people, who, when they reached the high school age, sought other churches to continue their religious education—and was it so religious? The Bethel Episcopal Church was one of these "attractive" denominations. It was said to offer Stone Church young people their social peers and a free and easy recreational program to agree with adolescent desires. That these churches were drawing heavily from the Stone Church, Larry knew also, was a source of grief to Eldred Hampton and many others honestly interested in the youth of the church.

"It's no wonder they do," Eldred had once said, "for we are so crowded in our church building, and there are so many things that are lacking; but what surprises me is that some of these good old Latter Day Saint parents permit it."

"Do they know?" Larry had asked.

"I don't see how they can help but find out eventually. The young people themselves don't seem to make a secret of it."

"Sallie Ruth is just taking a detour from the way in which she should go," Larry thought whimsically, "but who are you, Larry Verne, to judge anyone else for taking a detour or two, when so far your whole road of life seems to have been made up of detours?"

That was true. She was not at all what she aspired to be. She wanted to be active, friendly, helpful, very much

An Insufficient Answer to the Josephites . . .

By S. A. Burgess

THE ISSUE OF POLYGAMY is again raised by a recent letter, August 21, 1933, from Heber J. Grant, president of the Utah Church, to W. H. Gilstrap of South Carolina. We are not informed as to the earlier correspondence. Mr. Gilstrap forwarded us the letter and with the letter was a typewritten document headed, A Sufficient Answer to the Josephites. The tone of President Grant's letter is very kind but this answer very much surprises us. We regret that space in the Herald will not permit the publication of the article in full, but we set forth here the essential parts. The article is stated to be from Improvement Era, volume 1, by B. H. Roberts. The first two pages of the article is an attempt to set forth the position of the Reorganized Church. Then follows:

ALLEGED PROPHECY TO DOUGLAS

"In the journal of William Clayton, under date of May 18th, 1843, is the following entry, relating a conversation that took place between Joseph Smith and Stephen A. Douglas, at the house of Sheriff Backenstos, at Carthage, Illinois:

" 'Dined with Judge Stephen A. Douglas, who is presiding at court. After dinner Judge Douglas requested President Joseph to give him a history of the Missouri persecution, which he did in a very minute manner for about three hours. He also gave a relation of his journey to Washington City, and his application in behalf of the saints to Mr. Van Buren, the President of the United States, for redress; and Mr. Van Buren's pusillanimous reply—"Gentlemen, your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you;" and the cold, unfeeling manner in which he was treated by most of the senators and representatives in relation to the subject, Clay saying, "You had better go to Oregon," and Calhoun shaking his head solemnly, saying, "It's a nice question—a critical question; but it will not do to agitate it."

" 'The judge listened with the greatest attention, and then spoke warmly in depreciation of Governor Boggs and the authorities in Missouri, who had taken part in the extermination, and said that any people that would do as the mobs of Missouri had done ought to be brought to judgment; they ought to be punished.

" 'President Smith, in concluding his remarks, said that if the government which receives into its coffers the money of citizens for its public lands, while its officials are rolling in luxury at the expense of its public treasury, cannot protect such citizens in their lives and property, it is an old granny anyhow; and I prophesy in the name of the Lord God of Israel, unless the United States redress the wrongs committed upon the saints in the State of Missouri and punish the crimes committed by her officers, that in a few years the government will be utterly overthrown and wasted, and there will not be so much as a potsherd left, for their wickedness in permitting the murder of men, women, and children, and the wholesale plunder and extermination of thousands of her citizens to go unpunished, thereby perpetrating a foul and corroding blot upon the fair fame of this great republic, the very thought of which would have caused the high-minded and patriotic framers of the Constitution of the United States to hide their faces with shame. Judge, you will aspire to the presidency of the United States; and if you ever turn your hand against me or the Latter Day Saints, you will feel the weight of the hand of the Almighty upon you; and you will live to see and know that I have testified the truth to you; for the conversation of this day will stick to you through life. He appeared very friendly and acknowledged the truth and propriety of President Smith's remarks.' [Italics indicate underscoring in the original letter.—S. A. B.]

"This prophecy was first published in Utah, in the Deseret News of September 24th, 1856; it was afterwards published in England, in the Millennial Star, February, 1859. In both instances it is found in the history of Joseph Smith, then being published in sections in those periodicals. Stephen A. Douglas did aspire to the presidency of the United States, and was nominated for that office by the democratic Convention, held in Charleston, on the 23d of June, 1860. When in the convention he was declared the regular nominee of the Democratic party, 'The whole body rose to its feet, hats were waved in the air and many tossed aloft; shouts, screams, and yells, and every boisterous mode of expressing approbation and unanimity, were resorted to.'

"When Mr. Douglas aspired to the presidency, no man in the history of American politics had more reason to hope for success. The political party of which he was the recognized leader, in the preceding presidential election had polled 174 electoral votes, as against 122 cast by the other two parties which opposed it; and a popular vote of 1,838,169, as against 1,215,798 votes for the two parties opposing. It is a matter of history, however, that the Democratic party in the election of 1860 was badly divided; and factions of it put candidates into the field with the following result: Mr. Abraham Lincoln, candidate of the Republican party, was triumphantly elected. He received 180 electoral votes; Mr. Breckenridge received 72 electoral votes; Mr. Bell 39; and Mr. Douglas 12. 'By a plurality count of the popular vote, Mr. Lincoln carried 18 states; Mr. Breckenridge 11; Mr. Bell 3, and Mr. Douglas but 1.' (See tables in 'American Politics,' Bk. vii, pp. 22, 26; also History U. S.—by Alexander Stephens—p. 559). Twenty days less than one year after his nomination by the Charleston Convention, while yet in the prime of manhood—forty-eight years of age—Mr. Douglas died, at his home in Chicago, a disappointed not to say broken-hearted man."

There follows a statement of the alleged cause. Mr. Douglas delivered a speech on the 12th of June, 1857, in which it is stated certain accusations have been made against the people of Utah. He stated that if these things were true drastic steps should be taken. It is not necessary now to discuss how far these accusations may or may not have been true, as the essential issue is, What prophecy was made, and how far fulfilled? In the issue of the Deseret News for September 22, 1857, a review is made of Mr. Douglas' speech and again this alleged statement from William Clayton is published. The article continues:

"The prophecy is a fact. Its fulfillment is a fact. God gloriously fulfilled the prediction of his servant Joseph Smith

the prophet. Stephen A. Douglas did aspire to the presidency of the United States. He received the nomination for that high office, from a great political party. But he had raised his hand against the Latter-day Saints, the people of the Prophet Joseph Smith; and as a consequence he did feel the weight of the hand of the Almighty upon him; for his hopes were blasted; he never reached the goal of his ambition; he failed miserably, and died wretchedly, when his life had but reached high noon. Could anything be more clear than that Stephen A. Douglas felt the weight of the hand of the Almighty upon him? But mark you, THESE CALAMITIES CAME UPON HIM FOR STRIKING AT THE SAINTS OF GOD IN UTAH. IT WAS FOR TURNING HIS HAND AGAINST THEM THAT HE WAS DISAPPOINTED IN HIS HOPES, BLASTED IN HIS EXPECTATIONS, AND DIED HEARTBROKEN, AND WHEN THE ALMIGHTY THUS VINDICATED THE PREDICTIONS OF HIS PROPHET UPON THE HEAD OF THIS GREAT MAN, HE ALSO DID SOMETHING MORE—HE ACKNOWLEDGED THE SAINTS IN UTAH AS HIS PEOPLE, THE CHURCH IN UTAH AS HIS CHURCH, AND THERE IS NO ESCAPING THE CONCLUSION.

"This prophecy was not fulfilled upon the head of Stephen A. Douglas because he raised his hand against the Josephites; that movement had not then taken definite form when Stephen A. Douglas delivered his Springfield speech on the 12th of June, 1857. Joseph Smith who is now the president of that institution had not then given his consent to take the presidency of the 'reorganized church,' so that 'Josephites' can claim no lot nor part in the fulfillment of this remarkable prophecy—the fulfillment of which is such a complete vindication of the Church of Christ from the charges 'Josephites' make against it. And, furthermore, it should be remembered that this vindication came at the time when, according to 'Josephite' contention, the apostasy of the saints in Utah was at its full height. That is, plural marriage was publicly taught and practiced, and in part it was to this that Mr. Douglas alluded in some portions of his speech; the doctrines which are supposed by 'Josephites' to have led the people to follow after false gods were then most taught; and yet, when from the Josephite standpoint, the apostasy of the church in Utah is at its height, lo! God gives his people there this splendid vindication—so far acknowledges them as his people that the man who dares to turn his hand against them, having been warned by his prophet not to do so, he strikes down with death after disappointing his hopes, humbling his pride, and making him an object at which Time would henceforth point his finger. Would God do this in vindication of a people who had transgressed his law, usurped his authority, abandoned themselves to whoredoms, followed after false gods, and corrupted the priesthood? Such a thought is so revolting to reason that it may be dismissed without further consideration.

"But on the other hand, what becomes of the charges of apostasy made against the people whom God thus vindicated? As idle tales are they henceforth to those who will weigh the force of the argument contained in the facts here set forth. I contend that there is no need of endless cavilings over technicalities; nor weary discussions over the sophistries of the 'Josephites.' Here is God's answer to all their contentions, and calumnies. He owns his people, he vindicates his church, by visiting judgment upon the head of one of America's foremost statesmen who raised his hand against the people and church of God. I am content with God's answer to 'Josephites.' It is sufficient." [Capitals and underscoring in original as received.—S. A. B.]

Naturally the first question that arises would be with regard to this alleged statement of William Clayton and its authenticity. It is of interest to note that no such statement appears in the history of Joseph Smith, even after it was thoroughly revised and corrected under the supervision of President Brigham Young. This extract is stated frankly and quite correctly to be external to that history and so appears in the Deseret News and also in the fifth volume of church history as published by them. In the latter there appears a long article or footnote on this marvelous prophecy and its fulfillment. It was first published, as they state, as an extract from the journal of William Clayton in the Deseret News, September 24, 1856.

Now why was it published at that time? They were having a great deal of difficulty with the Federal authorities. There was a threat of invasion by the United States Army. Numerous statements can be found in the Deseret News and in the Journal of Discourses, official statements somewhat similar in tone. The essential part of this alleged prophecy is that unless the United States Government should undo the wrongs suffered and punish those that were quite truly guilty of abuse of authority and of acts which would have been criminal if performed by any other than the representatives of the state, the United States was to go down to utter destruction in a few years, so that not even a potsherd would be left. In 1856 it could still be claimed as a few years they had before them. Also there was the prophecy of December 25, 1832, with regard to the war between the States which would begin in South Carolina. Also there were the facts of history of the growing irritation between the North and South and the warfare in Kansas. That there was going to be a war was very distinctly threatening as well as prophesied by Joseph Smith.

Under these conditions Stephen A. Douglas in answering questions at Springfield spoke on the Kansas question and on slavery and then by request took up these allegations against the Mormons in Utah. That was July 3, 1857.

As to the accuracy of these statements, the first would be quite probably an exaggeration. There were a great many foreigners in Utah, but not nine-tenths of the people. The Deseret News for September 2, 1857, makes on the whole a much more accurate statement than this "Sufficient Answer." It only claims that a large part were citizens of the United States, and that Saint Louis and other cities had a larger proportion of aliens. Further, they claimed that most of these had already applied for naturalization papers and were upholding the Government of the United States. In the writings of that time are to be found a good many statements which might easily be looked upon as being treasonable. There were also such counter statements as the above and assurance of loyalty.

A report was made of oaths taken in the "endowment house." This was answered at the time simply that they had the right to their secret oaths as much as the Masons or other people. It seems from all the evidence that there was an oath being taken which might well be construed as disloyal. We would not impugn their loyalty today but do note in passing that small children as late as 1931 pointed out to visitors points on the mountains to the East and told how "we fooled the United States armies." This is not considered serious but it does show the traditions that are handed down and something of the attitude of the times.

So far as Douglas is concerned, it is only fair to add that the original speech which we have before us qualifies repeatedly every assertion which he made. He asked that a thorough and impartial investigation should be made and "if upon such investigation," "if these things are found," "if," then certain actions should be taken, but only after such investigation and such impartial and fair findings. It is not true that these allegations were the same thing that Joseph Smith had explained. They were entirely the result of new conditions in Utah. Such rumors had gone out and they included those that Senator stated and as the above reply states; reference was also made to polygamy and how it might be dealt with. There are several statements of which the exact accuracy may well be challenged. From all the evidence it would seem that only a relatively small percent could have been those who came from Nauvoo and vicinity and a still smaller percent would have been known to Senator Douglas.

It seems rather inaccurate to make him out an insignificant local lawyer in 1843. In fact he was a justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, had been Secretary of State, and that very year, 1843, he went to Congress, and became a Senator in 1847. He was a man of strong character and then well recognized. We may well concede that such a prophecy as Joseph Smith's in 1843 was significant and remarkable, even if he were not entirely insignificant and unknown, as he was not.

It is quite true, as stated, that this prophecy was repeated in the Deseret News of September 2, 1857, and a challenge was made, but at that time such a challenge was not so remarkable as might at first appear. Douglas had twice, in 1852 and 1856, and before the first publication, been a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. True, he was not nominated, but it would hardly take a prophet to forecast, even in September, 1856, that he would again be a candidate. Furthermore, the troubles in Kansas and the failure of squatters' sovereignty, which was already becoming apparent, the increasing division with the South, made it possible for Abraham Lincoln to say positively in 1858 that Douglas would not be President. Many of these elements were developing and more or less apparent a year or two earlier.

As to the election of 1856, our writers have pointed out many times the serious inaccuracy of the figures given. As it happens they are correct except for one figure, but that figure is in the millions place. The Republican Party which for the first time made its appearance polled a vote of 1,341,264. The total vote of the two parties was 2,215,798. That party, which in 1860 nominated Abraham Lincoln, had declared in its platform opposition to "those twin relics of barbarism, slavery and polygamy," yet Lincoln was elected, and with him a Congress that passed the first Federal law against polygamy in 1862.

In the second place great excitement is quite common at a political convention, but Stephen A. Douglas was not nominated at Charleston, as alleged, nor was he nominated by the whole Democratic Party, the party which gave Buchanan his 1,800,000 votes in 1856. It was a split party. Only those who represented the northern states appeared in that convention at Baltimore and nominated Douglas. The southern states before this had met at Richmond, Virginia, and some of the border states met the next day, at Baltimore, and both nominated Breckenridge.

Next, while it is true that Douglas carried only one state and a half, it is of marked significance that while Lincoln now had about the same vote as Buchanan in 1856, 1,866,452, Douglas had the second highest, 1,375,357. He received over 537,000 votes more than Breckenridge, who was in third position. With a split party his race was hopeless, and so state the historians. It was known to be hopeless from the start. With the Democratic states of the south taken from him, and with Abraham Lincoln carrying the banner in the northern states, it was a tremendous personal tribute to the man that he received so large a popular vote.

True he was disappointed in the event, but if he were broken-hearted it was not because of the loss of personal ambition but because of the threatened division of the Union. The rest of his life was spent in an effort to preserve the Union. He was no longer a Democrat but stated plainly that the Nation was divided into but two parties, the patriots and rebels or insurgents. He pled at the time of Lincoln inauguration for unity. He stood beside Lincoln and went under appointment to the Northwest, but Fort Sumter was fired upon. He was a sick man and died, it is true, in June, 1861, but other notable men have died at an early age, including men in the Utah Church. Abraham Lincoln was killed by an assassin's bullet in the prime of his life. Parley P. Pratt was likewise shot down. The list could be greatly lengthened. We do not claim that the hand of God was placed upon these men, and the statement that the hand of God was placed heavily upon Stephen A. Douglas is most certainly not proved.

We were amazed at the publication of such a statement in volume 5 of their history of the church as well as this statement published in the Improvement Era. Reference has been made to this alleged prophecy by men among the high officials of the Utah Church several times in the past two or three years. As we examine the evidence, the fulfillment is, to express it mildly, not proved. But even if it were proved, even if Douglas had gone down to a dishonored grave instead of holding one of the honorable names of the nation, still it is difficult to see how any people of even reasonable intelligence could base their claim on this alleged prophecy. For one thing the major statement is the destruction of the United States. That is stated to be in the name of the Almighty. The statement to Douglas is only incidental. How can anyone read it without perceiving not only that the major part has not been fulfilled but cannot be fulfilled, as more than a few short years have passed.

Furthermore, it is grossly illogical to say that because Douglas was defeated this proves that our heavenly Father approves of adultery under the name of polygamy, a thing which he plainly stated in the Book of Mormon, Jacob 2, would be an abomination in his sight. In the mind of any intelligent person such far-fetched inferences must fall before the clear declaration we have of the mind and will of God. But in view of all of the circumstances, even if the first part of this prophecy were omitted it still could be in no sense a sufficient answer to the Josephites, to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Even less is it proof of divine approval of polygamy when we recall that the Republican Party and Abraham Lincoln, despite the stress of the Civil War, passed and signed in 1862 the first Federal law against polygamy.

One further point remains to be noted. Robert D. Foster, quite without solicitation or request, early in 1874 wrote a letter and sent it to Joseph Smith III. In this letter we have a different account of what must after all have been the same incident.

"I will tell you also another prophecy that Joseph Smith uttered in my presence, that has been proved true. That was in relation to Stephen A. Douglas; he said he was a giant in intellect, but a dwarf in stature; that he would yet run for President of the United States, but that he would never reach that station; that he would occupy a conspicuous place in the counsels of the nation and have multitudes of admiring friends, and that in his place he would introduce and carry out some of the most gigantic measures in the history of the nation. This was said when Douglas was Judge in that district of Illinois, and before he ever went to Congress. Has it not been fulfilled? Did he not get Andrew Jackson's fine remitted by law, a thing that was by all considered impossible? Did he not introduce the bills for the covering of Illinois with railroads, without one cent's expense to the general government? Under his management were not the Illinois bonds raised from a condition nearly worthless to a value nearly par with currency? Did he not rule in and through the State of Illinois, work and carry out its destiny for twenty consecutive years, more than any and all other men together? Was he not always one of the greatest men in the Senate? Did he not do more for the line of compromise on slavery than any other one man? Did he not say, 'and cursed be the ruthless hand that attempts to remove it'? Did he not run for President and get defeated? Did he not take the most active part in removing or breaking down that line of compromise? Let the history of Kansas and Nebraska tell the story! Did he not fulfill his destiny and, at last, on his dying bed, bequeath his children to his country, and counsel them to obey the laws and the constitution? Did he not utter these memorable words at the commencement of the rebellion, 'That there were only two parties in all the land; the one he called Patriots, the other Traitors'? Was it not true? Did he not throw his adhesion to A. Lincoln at the time of deep trouble? And does he not now occupy an honored spot in the memory of his many friends, and a sacred spot in his own loved city of Chicago? Yes; this prophecy has been literally fulfilled in my day, and I bear testimony to its truth, when compared with history." (By Robert D. Foster, in True Latter Day Saints' Herald, volume 22, page 230.)

It hardly seems probable that he would twice have prophesied that Douglas would be nominated for the Presidency? Which do we accept? We simply quote the two letters on their own merits, but we cannot but note how literally and fully has the forecast been fulfilled as related or alleged by Robert D. Foster and how poor has been the fulfillment as we turn to this alleged extract from the diary of William Clayton.

Certainly such allegations as these are by no means sufficient for an answer to the Josephites.

It seems to us questionable if at any time we have ever said anything that reflects as much on the intelligence of the people of Utah as does the repeated publication and use of this alleged prophecy and its alleged fulfillment. There are many college students in Utah able to look up the facts for themselves, but even without such a search the thing is distinctly non sequitur. Finally, we regret to note here again, as late as August, 1933, so emphatic an effort to promulgate polygamy as divine. How is it possible that they can expect anything else but repeated violations of their official statements, so long as they issue such statements as this in the letter to Mr. Gilstrap, and their statement of June 17, 1933, and many other statements which have appeared in quite recent years in the Deseret News?

For International Friendship

I am twenty-six miles from a branch, and as I have none of the more modern conveyances, I only get there a few times in the year. I have always come away from those meetings with an inspiration that has stayed with me for a long time. The meeting may not have been outstanding, but a talk with some of the priesthood or members during the day has always been a comfort to me. Any time that I have gone I have always felt that the trip was well worth the effort. These visits are few, so I have to get my spiritual food from the Herald, and it does not fail me.

But still there is one thing I would like to criticize, and if I sound harsh, please do not think I intend to be. I think the Herald is too national for an international church, in some of its articles. As there are a good many church members in the British Empire, I think you should be able to give them a British Edition on the same principle that you have made other special editions. This is only a suggestion. But I would like to see more friendship between our nations. And as a man that served with the Canadian Army in France, I am against anything that looks like war. May God spare us that we may not see the like of it again, and may you my brothers be blessed with that vision that will be able to bring about the brotherhood of man.

Let the Holy Spirit Guide

In each issue of the Herald I see that some have cared enough for the gospel to give much time and prayer to preparing the paper for its many readers. I know their efforts are not in vain. Many times I can give the paper to a friend with whom a spoken word concerning the gospel would be out of place.

I feel that the latter-day cause is something of which all should be proud. The more we study the standard books of the church the more we appreciate the principles for which the church stands. I have just finished reading the Book of Nephi, Book of Mormon, in which we are told of Christ's coming to America, bringing the gospel after his crucifixion and establishing his church in the western hemisphere. Surely his appearance on this continent proved that he cared for one people as well as another.

This knowledge has been a wonderful help to me, and I am sure that the remnant of the early peoples of America will appreciate the fact that God has cared for them and saved their history, that they might know the truth and realize his great love.

I did not hear of the latter-day work until I was grown, nor of the Book of Mormon, but always I have loved the Indians. And when I heard of and read the Book of Mormon, my experience was as the book tells us: "And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if those things are true, and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart with real interest, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you by the power of the Holy Ghost." Of course the power of darkness is sure to interfere when we make a decision to know, but God will give us strength to go on if we are sincere in our craving for truth. Why depend on some preacher to tell us that this book is damned when we have the Lord to point the way? Certainly the Holy Spirit can be relied upon.

As the two apostles walked to the village called Emmaus after the resurrection of their Lord, their hearts were heavy with sorrow. They talked of what had happened. And then Jesus joined them in their walk and talked with them. But they did not know him and yet they marveled because their hearts burned within them as Jesus opened up to them the Scriptures. These men were wise because they let the Holy Spirit guide them. The Holy Spirit does not err. It is the guide to truth, and when we read or hear truth and are willing to obey, the Spirit of God will guide us.

God Is Ready to Bless

I know this gospel is true and that God hears and answers prayers. Last summer I underwent an operation and did not regain my health as I had hoped. I was still in a serious condition and the doctor had advised X-ray treatments. When Elder William I. Fligg visited us in September, I asked for administration. While he was voicing one of his wonderful prayers, I felt the Spirit rest upon me, and knew that it was God's will to heal me. I give all praise to him who is always ready to bless if we comply with his laws.

We enjoyed Brother Fligg's visit and feel that he is a true servant of God. We are few in number here, but feel that God is near to help us in our efforts. Some afflicted ones are near the other shore; please pray that their parting may be in peace and that we may be faithful.

Prayer and Praise

"God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; Selah. That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

"Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

"Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."—Psalm 67.

QUESTION TIME

Do the laborers in the vineyard (Matthew 20) represent ages, or years of service?

In an incidental way Jesus probably included those of any age who serve him, but some parts of this parable could hardly apply to different ages or eras, but evidently refer to the individual and the time of his life. For instance, in the "eleventh hour" the householder asks certain laborers: "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" This implies that those same persons had been there in the earlier hours of the "day," hence the "hours" could hardly refer to different dispensations in that case at least. Their answer implies the same: "Because no man hath hired us."

The beginning of this chapter (Matthew 20) clearly shows a connection with the latter part of the previous chapter, where Jesus promised a reward to those who faithfully followed him. Consonant with this, the parable states that those hired early in the morning complained because they did not receive more than the "penny" which had been promised them, because they had borne the "burden and heat of the day," while those hired in the eleventh hour had "wrought but one hour," yet had also received a penny. From this we think the main purpose of the parable is to teach that all shall receive eternal life for faithful service, and that none of his disciples should seek preeminence or additional gains above those of his brethren. All parables emphasize some points while omitting others, and every detail may not be equally parallel to actual facts in life.

What is meant by "keys of the ministering of angels" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 10)?

This applies to the priesthood of Aaron, by which God administers the "outward ordinances" to mankind, under which men may receive the ministering of angels according to the will of the Lord. The keys are emblems of authority to act in the divine name and to confer this authority upon others under God's command. The ministering of angels has always been a part of the divine means by which God reaches his people, but he recognizes the authority of those whom he has sent, and therefore upon earth these authorized servants hold the keys —the power to act and represent God so as to effectively perform his work. It appears to be in this sense that the revelation refers to the matter, and under their administrations angels may also appear and confirm the work of God to men.

Which benefits the church more, prophesying, or speaking in tongues?

Both of these gifts are promised in the Scriptures, and it appears that all have the right to "seek earnestly the best gifts." Which gift might be more desirable would probably depend upon local conditions and the immediate needs of the Saints, or of others where the work of the Lord was being performed. Paul explains the purpose of tongues to be more particularly for the unbeliever. He says:

> "Tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not; but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe."—1 Corinthians 14: 22.

It appears that Paul was dealing with the membership when he said that he that prophesieth is greater than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret. Hence he desired that those who spoke in tongues should be silent unless an interpreter were present to properly interpret the language to the saints (see verses 2-32). He sums up his remarks by saying: "Covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues" (verse 39). It was in tongues that God manifested his power to unbelievers at Pentecost, but more often it is the spirit of prophecy that is given in the meetings of the Saints, and this seems to be according to God's plan.

Is cremating the dead contrary to the will of God?

In harmony with the Egyptian custom, the oldest Hebrew example was embalming. Both Jacob and his son Joseph were embalmed (Genesis 50: 2, 26), and there is reason to think that this was borrowed from the familiar custom they had observed while in Egypt. However, in several instances cremation was observed among the Jews, as in the case of Saul and his sons. It is not forbidden.

Which Way Are You Facing?

By Edwin H. Davies

As a people we rely on the unchangeability of God. We think today that he is the same loving father considerate towards his people as in the years past. In the history which has been handed down to us, we find that he has acted just the same when his laws were complied with, hence the promise today as in the past, "Lo, I am with you unto the end, if you observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

We gather from the laws surrounding us, that his course is one eternal round. The seasons come and go in their turn, each accomplishing its part in the time allotted it, and we are informed in his word they were created by him, and we sow and reap accordingly, never doubting for a moment that the hand which guides and controls the universe will change his way of doing things, and we go on under the unchangeable rule of the ages, "That whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

However, some forms of plant life take in the beautiful, the pure, and lovely things of life. Others again take in deadly poison, and everything that comes in contact with them are badly affected thereby.

This is the lesson we gather from the Scriptures. We read that when God's people followed and observed the law laid down for them, they partook of his Divine attributes and took in all that was lovely, pleasant, and uplifting; but when they turned away from his word, and partook of the opposite nature, they became carnal, selfish, proud and devilish, and soon lost the vision they once had of eternal life.

We often see in the vegetable world growing side by side, a poisonous plant, and a beautiful rose. To the casual eye they appear to draw their supply from the same source, and are watered by the same dews from the heavens, and we ask ourselves why this is so, but on a closer analysis we discover it is the result of what each takes in. One takes from its surroundings all that is deadly, the other discards the poison and absorbs, all that is pure, sweet, and beautiful.

One becomes a menace to animal life, the other a blessing to all those who come in contact with them, by supplying a bloom to gladden the eye and a perfume to please the sense of smell, and to cheer. It has been the same throughout the ages. When men and women have followed the Divine plan, and have drawn their supply from the Lily of the Valley, the Rose of Sharon, they have been the light to the world, the salt of the earth, a blessing to humanity. But time and time again humanity have failed in this respect, not because God has changed his law, or failed in his promises, but the failure has always been on the part of man to closely observe his law.

In the seventh chapter of Genesis (Inspired Translation) we have the story of Enoch, how he served God so well, it is stated that he walked with God. The company you keep is a great factor in directing your actions and ways. It has often been proved, if you walk with or keep company with an individual for any length of time, unconsciously you will be found partaking of his habits and ways, and thinking as he does. Enoch learned to think, and act like God. Was it then surprising to read that he was translated? We read he had great power in the presentation of the word, and his vision extended to the end of time.

Not only was Enoch greatly blessed, but his whole company lived a peerless life, and strictly obeyed both the spiritual and temporal laws. There was no reservation. It was a perfect obedience to a perfect law, that emanated from their Creator, that brought them to that condition. They were absolutely unselfish. There were no poor among them. They belonged to the family of God in the highest sense. Every one loved his neighbor, and we read that such a condition was pleasing to God, that they were taken to dwell with just men made perfect. They took God into their business. If we could emulate them I am certain the same results would obtain, as all through the Scriptures is found the statement, I am the Lord, I change not."

Everything as to the final result of life largely depends upon the way our faces are turned, as we read the story of Lot and his family, who after separating from his uncle, Abraham, pitched his tents towards the two wicked cities of the plains. He had chosen the best part of the country when given his choice by Abraham on separating, which was so different from the spirit manifested by Enoch and his noble band, as they were absolutely unselfish in carrying out the law. However, while he was very rich in flocks and herds, he was facing in the wrong direction. He discovered that every day he mingled with the people of those cities and did business with them, it became more easy to contemplate moving in there, which he finally did. His daughters married the young men of this ungodly place, but when deliverance came, Lot found it was much harder to move out of than it was to move into Sodom. He went in a rich man, probably exchanged his flocks and herds for choice corner lots, but he went out a poor broken-hearted old man. As the laws of God do not change, it is just as fatal to pitch our tents towards modern Sodom as it was in the days of Lot.

Which way are we facing? The wise man hath said, "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the ways thereof are the ways of death." The Master said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." We must give heed to the voice of the Good Shepherd and follow him. There are not many ways to be saved. Just notice how this thought of oneness extends all the way through the Scriptures. "Straight is the gate" (not gates) "and narrow is the way," (not ways) "that leads to life." There is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." (Ephesians 4: 4, 5.) "By one spirit are ye all baptized into one body." (1 Corinthians 12: 13.) Having been partakers of that one spirit, see that you be of the same mind, see that you all speak the same thing; see that there are no divisions among you. Oneness all the way through, and this can only be had by drinking in of that one spirit, which will develop us, by adding line upon line until like Enoch we reach the Divine heights designed we should attain.

The Beggar Who Was a King

One day, at a time when the German mystic Tauler of Strasbourg was seeking a deeper knowledge of God, he met a beggar.

"God give you a good day, my friend," said Tauler.

"I thank God I never had a bad day," said the beggar.

Tauler, astonished, changed the form of his salutation.

"God give you a happy life, friend," he said.

"I thank God I am never unhappy," said the beggar.

"Never unhappy?" said the mystic. "What do you mean?"

'Well," replied the beggar, "when it is fine I thank God; when it rains I thank God; when I have plenty I thank God; when I am hungry I thank him; and as God's will is my will, and whatsoever pleases him pleases me, why should I say I am unhappy?"

"But what if God were to cast you into hell?" said Tauler. "How then?"

The beggar paused a moment and then, lifting his eyes, answered.

"And if he did I should have two arms to embrace him—the arm of my faith, wherewith I lean upon his holy humanity, and the arm of my love, wherewith I am united to his ineffable deity; and thus he would descend with me, and there would I infinitely rather be with him than anywhere else without him."

"But who are you?" asked Tauler, taken aback by his sublime reply.

"I am a king," said the beggar; "a king."

"But where is your kingdom?" asked Tauler.

"In my own heart!" replied the beggar. —From an old book of the fourteenth century.

Deselm Branch

Near Manteno, Illinois

Through the united efforts of the resident members, Deselm Church has taken on an improved appearance. The women and boys worked hard scrubbing the interior, while the men decorated and did the wiring for electricity.

Saints of this branch have been spiritually helped and strengthened by two rally-day services held recently.

October 1, Elder H. P. W. Keir, accompanied by Sisters Keir and Nelson, of Chicago, motored a distance of forty-five miles to hold services. Church school, at ten o'clock marked the opening of the meetings. Sacrament was served at eleven o'clock. A basket dinner was enjoyed by the members and the visitors at noon. Elder Keir preached the afternoon sermon on world conditions and the need of Zion.

November 5, proved to be another red letter day for Saints of this branch. At the request of Deselm members, Elder Keir and wife, Elder C. A. Edstrom and wife, and Sister Nelson, all of Chicago, motored here to hold services. Scattered Saints were reached, and the meetings were held with a good attendance. A brief review of the Book of Mormon was given by Sister Nelson, a teacher in one of the local high schools in Chicago. At the close of the class period, Sister Nelson entertained the children with a talk concerning her visit to Rome.

Brother Keir delivered a short talk during the sacrament service, on the necessity of keeping God's law.

At the three o'clock service, District President C. A. Edstrom preached on the importance of keeping the law, in order to reach zionic ideals.

Immediately following this service, Pastor Earl D. Rogers in behalf of the congregation, thanked the visitors for their willing contributions throughout the day.

Through the efforts of Brother and Sister William Cochran, formerly of Chicago, the Central Chicago Choir of twenty-two members, rendered a sacred concert on the evening of September 10. Brother Arthur Sherman is the leader of the choir, and is assisted at the organ by Brother Floyd McNichols. Elder Keir delivered the evening sermon.

A pleasant surprise was in store for members of this Branch, September 10, when Patriarch and Sister F. G. Pitt, of Orlando, Florida, accompanied by Sister Frederick and her brother, William Parks, of Joliet, walked into the meeting room. They were immediately pressed into service. Brother Pitt preached an inspiring sermon. Sister Pitt talked of the South Sea Island Saints and their customs, especially of their devotion to the word of God, and decorum in the house of the Lord. They also sang several songs in the Tahitian language.

Easter Sunday and Mother's Day were observed here with appropriate services.

The high school boys' Sunday school class entertained the children with a halloween party. The guests were thrilled with games, stunts, and refreshments.

A number of local Saints were privileged to attend the Chicago conference. They report a wonderful and spiritual meeting. The Deselm Orchestra gave a concert the Saturday evening of the conference.

Several new members have been added to this congregation recently, Brother William Cochran and family, Sister Millman, her sister, and Harold Pement, formerly of Chicago, and Brother and Sister Otto Nepht, from Brush Creek Branch.

Southern New England Departmental Conference

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and F. Henry Edwards Help

The regular departmental conference of Southern New England District met with Boston Branch, November 11 and 12, Apostles Paul M. Hanson and F. Henry Edwards and the district presidency, E. L. Traver, Daniel F. Joy, and Raymond Bradshaw, in charge.

The meetings began with an address by Apostle Hanson at 3.30 p. m. Saturday, at which time the need and value of religious education and spiritual understanding as well as present opportunities of acquiring these things were presented. A general discussion period followed, questions being answered by Brothers Hanson and Edwards.

That evening Apostle Edwards was the speaker, and he gave emphasis to thoughts connected with our individual and collective needs and responsibilities as Latter Day Saints. He brought out clearly the great need of faith, trust, honesty and self-discipline.

Sunday services began with an eight-thirty prayer meeting for adults and one for the young people in charge of Apostle F. Henry Edwards. Next came a class at 9.45 a. m. for the young people with Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley as instructor. The adult group met at the same hour with Brother Edwards as instructor. Junior church was cared for by Sister J. A. Gunsolley.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson spoke to the adults at 10.45 and Apostle Edwards to the young. In the afternoon Brother Edwards preached to the entire group on "Teach the Law."

The conference closed with a preaching service at 6.30 p. m., Apostle Paul M. Hanson the speaker. The church was filled almost to capacity for this hour and the Spirit of God was felt to a marked degree. That Spirit prevailed throughout all conference meetings.

This was Apostle F. Henry Edwards' first visit to this district, and New Englanders hope it was as enjoyable to him as it was profitable for them.

Central Michigan Young People's Convention

Discuss Project of Youth Organization

The Central Michigan Young People's Convention, held at Saginaw, November 12, was a total success. Because of the icy condition of the highways, the attendance was not as large as anticipated, however, about two hundred and fifty were present. Every district in the State of Michigan was represented and some had driven two hundred miles to attend. Much interest was displayed in the subject of a young people's State or general organization. This matter was discussed by the assembly and the general opinion is that the young people want work to do. They want a task to perform which will prove their strength and ability to work together. The matter of organization was left to be further discussed in the various branches and districts, and it is hoped that within a short time a special meeting will be called in each district to lay the foundation and definite plans for this work. Apostle D. T. Williams is our very capable leader of this movement.

Prayer service was held at 8.30 a. m., Apostle D. T. Williams in charge, assisted by Elders Hubert Case, Percy Farrow, Louis Grice, and Otto Bartlett. At 10.30 a. m., Elder Percy Farrow, of Sarnia, Ontario, the guest speaker, gave an interesting as well as beneficial address on the subject, "Ye Must Be Born Again." Brother Farrow's consent to be the speaker for this occasion was very much appreciated. Special music for this service was rendered by the Midland Choir, under the direction of Harry

Runkle. They sang, "Send Out Thy Light," followed by the Midland Octet, singing, "O Love Divine."

A program arranged by Harry Runkle, district musical director, and Willis Shrock, assistant, was given at two o'clock in the afternoon. Each rendition was very enjoyable, but the "highlight" of the entire program was a reading given by one of the "youngest" young people, Elder E. S. White, of Bay City, age seventy-eight. It is widely felt that no program is complete without Brother White's offering.

The program was followed by an address and discussion by Apostle D. T. Williams on the organization of the young people. The convention was dismissed by Elder Otto Bartlett and the homeward journey was begun over the snow-covered highways.

Southern Ohio Conference Highly Successful

Gospel Gifts and Blessings Given the People

Sunday evening, October 1, brought to a close the district conference held at Dayton, Ohio.

Since the first day of September Dayton Saints had been preparing to entertain all visiting members. The conference committee appointed to take charge of all visitors was composed of Branch President F. Rieske, Elder F. T. Rockwell, Elder E. L. Ulrich, Sister Ulrich, and Sister Rainey. This committee is to be complimented for the efficient manner in which they handled all details. Visitors were housed free of charge throughout the conference.

Friday evening Elder F. T. Rockwell opened the conference, there being about seventy people present. H. P. Kelly, of Chillicothe, offered the opening prayer. Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths delivered the evening's message. After seventy years in the church and fifty-eight years in its ministry, Brother Griffiths is still rejoicing in the latter-day work and encouraging the Saints.

Saturday's program began with a social service in charge of Elder F. Rockwell, of Dayton; Elder S. E. Dickson, of Lancaster, and Elder Gard Kirkendall, of Columbus. During this hour manifestations of God's love for his people were given through two of his servants.

Immediately following this service Elder A. E. Anderton addressed a steadily growing congregation. Using as a text "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," he pointed out that things of today and tomorrow must be builded on the truth as revealed of God.

About one hundred and twenty people were served lunch in the dining hall.

Delegates and other members were called together for business session at 2 p. m. The first question before the asembly was "Shall we have a delegate or mass conference?" The answer came in an unexpected way. A motion was made that they abide by Doctrine and Covenants 17: 3, and from henceforth all business be taken care of by an elder's conference. The motion carried and everyone seemed pleased with the action.

The following names were presented by the district president for ordination: Brother Culp, of Portsmouth, to the office of teacher; Brother Mitchell, of Creola, elder; Brother Will Crabtree, of Pleasant Valley, deacon; Brother Charles Altman, of Pleasant Valley, teacher; Brother Orville Altman, of Pleasant Valley, priest; Brother Claire Cummings, of Vales Mills, deacon; Brother Monroe, of Portsmouth, priest.

Supper was served free to all at the close of this service.

Elder C. W. Clark preached on Saturday evening on "The Priesthood." At the conclusion of the sermon a musical program and short play were given by Dayton members. The play, entitled "The Play's the Thing," was published in the Saints' Herald.

At eight o'clock Sunday morning approximately 400 Saints were present for sacrament service. Sister Graber, of Bradner, who was baptized by Elder Ulrich, was confirmed by Elders Gray and Rockwell. Elder John R. Grice, Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, Elder R. M. Gray, Elder J. Halb, Bishop H. E. French, Elder C. W. Clark, Elder A. E. Anderton and Elder F. T. Rockwell, men prominent in the gospel work of Southern Ohio District, occupied the stand. Back of these sat thirty elders. Patriarch Griffiths emphasized the importance of the covenant which Saints make with Christ, and read the two prayers used in the sacrament ordinance. During this hour one hundred and fifty people bore testimonies. Many gifts of the gospel were manifested. During this service also Brother Reeves was called to occupy as a priest in the Aaronic priesthood through Elder A. E. Anderton. The baby of Brother and Sister Russell Rockwell was blessed by Elder Floyd Rockwell, grandfather, and Patriarch G. T. Griffiths. This baby, Marvin John Rockwell, is the fifth generation of the family in the gospel.

Following this service Dayton branch assembled in a special business meeting, voting on and accepting the call of Brother Reeves. This action made possible his ordination at the conference. The ordination service preceded the next meeting and Brothers Culp, Mitchell and Monroe were ordained to their respective offices. The other men will be ordained in their home branches.

Bishop French, of Columbus, was the eleven o'clock preacher, using for a subject "Light and Character."

A short musical program began the afternoon meetings. Brother B. J. Reeves was ordained a priest, Elder E. L. Ulrich and Patriarch Griffiths officiating.

A resolution was offered and unanimously adopted by the conference, instructing a committee, to be appointed by the district president, to forward a message, expressing their love and encouragement to Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, now laboring in the Society Islands.

Missionary John R. Grice delivered the afternoon message, "Achievement." Patriarch G. T. Griffiths felt impressed to leave a blessing on the conference and did so at the close of this service.

Music was furnished by the Ladies' Chorus, of Dayton, the male quartet, from Highland Branch, robed children's choir from First Columbus Church, and soloists were Patriarch Matthews and Brother Turvey. Brother and Sister Ulrich sang duet numbers. Congregational singing was under the direction of District Chorister Nathan Weate, of Columbus, assisted by Myrtle Beckman, pianist.

District President A. E. Anderton delivered the closing sermon of the conference.

Pittsburg, Kansas

Know the Meaning of Cooperation

New officers were elected for the branch in September as follows: Pastor, S. Farrington; director of religious education, R. G. Smith; church school supervisor, Lynn Smith; treasurer, T. W. Bath; secretary, Mrs. Stella Wiley, and musical director, Beatrice Deaver.

Sunday evening services are well attended as also are the sessions of the department of recreation and expression on Friday evening. Wednesday night prayer services show increased interest. The department of women is much interested in the study of "The Message of the Book of Mormon." The women attend exceptionally well and have their work at heart. They are accomplishing much good.

The entire branch has been busy for the past few months, and though the group is small, the workers have accomplished a great deal.

In the early part of July the young people's class installed a baptismal font and July 16, four young people were led into the waters of baptism.

The women's department sponsored a fellowship supper in September. Brother R. G. Smith was toastmaster and District President Amos T. Higdon and Professor I. G. Wilson, of the Kansas State Teachers College, were speakers.

A new heating system was recently installed at the church. The women financed a new basement by saving their pennies from week to week, and the branch installed the furnace. All labor was donated by the men of the church and only a small debt is yet to be paid.

October 29, was Branch President S. Farrington's birthday. At eleven o'clock the Saints had a surprise service for him. A special program was given in his honor. He was presented a gift of a silver offering. T. W. Bath, treasurer, was in charge of the service.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The women gave a sacred play, "Nicodemus, a Servant of the Master," November 12, which was much appreciated.

Elder Lee Quick has been greatly missed since he was taken from this district. He always brought good spiritual advice to the branch, and his sermons were thoroughly enjoyed.

Sioux City, Iowa

Sponsor Active Local Program

During the period since the district reunion was held in Woodbine, Sioux City Saints have been engaged in an interesting and instructive program of activities. Several members from the congregation attended the reunion and brought home the spirit of consecration which prevailed there.

An inspiring promotion day program, September 24, gave the members of this church a splendid start on the new year's work. The members of the church school presented special program numbers, during which the different phases of instruction in the classes were portrayed. A candle lighting service of consecration by the senior boys and girls added much to the beauty of the service. Two young people, Dewey Bruggeman and Lenore Streeter, were baptized and confirmed at this service. Two new classes were formed in the adult department of the church school. Work has begun with each class studying one of the quarterlies offered by the department. The young people's class has taken up the study of the Book of Mormon. Sister Blanche Haviland, superintendent of the adult church school is following the suggested theme for church school given in the Herald.

A marked degree of spirituality characterized the monthly sacrament service. November 5, Brother C. J. Smith spoke under the influence of the spirit of revelation concerning the call to the priesthood of four young men.

Recent speakers have been Elders G. M. Vandel, C. E. Burnett, and C. J. Smith presenting instruction along the lines of the responsibility of the priesthood, the law of the church regarding the call and ordination of the priesthood, and "Keep the Law."

Special music has been provided at several of the services by Raymond Smith, Dorothy De Harty, and an octet.

A group of about one hundred people met Friday evening, October 1, at the farm of Sister James Law to participate in a wiener roast. An interesting program of games and songs provided the evening's entertainment.

The women have been active in their work, having resumed their weekly program of sewing, quilting, and study. As a result of their activities, they have been adding to the branch treasury.

The E. O. W. Class of young people has been busy working toward the goals that they have set. September 5, the class enjoyed a steak fry at Stone Park. The usual programs on the third Sunday in September and October were given by the class. They presented "Living Pictures," a musical pantomime, and "The Play Is the Thing." On the evening of September 22, the class gave a dinner and an evening's entertainment, "The Coontown Wedding." On halloween night, they entertained with a hard-times party

A delegation of young people attended the young people's conference at Missouri Valley, November 5.

A large group of young people recently motored to the home of Sister Streeter to help her celebrate her eighty-third birthday.

On November 8, the home of Brother and Sister Raymond Smith was blessed with an infant son.

Fort Collins, Colorado

Striving Toward Their Goals

The branch held its annual election in September, resulting in the following: K. G. Brolliar, President and pastor; Mrs. Ethel Cable, secretary and clerk; T. S. Moore, director of religious education; Mrs. Letha M. Tilton, supervisor of adult division; Marie D. Hanawalt, supervisor of young people; Mrs. Elsie Moore, supervisor of the children, and Lois Cable director of music. An impressive service was held in October when all officers and teachers of the church school were installed by the pastor.

October 22, after the morning service, nearly the whole congregation repaired to a small lake a few miles from town, where four were led into the waters of baptism by Priest C. C. Cable. The day was ideal and the place beautiful; a foothill of the Old Rockies towered in the West, and the lake was calm. Merle Anderson, a young man, and father was first, thereby setting an example as it were, to the three children who followed, Robert and Louise, his stepchildren, and Patsy, small daughter of Sister Charles Anderson. Confirmation was had the following Sunday morning.

The young people hold a prayer service prior to each sacrament service. They have organized a dramatic club, with Mrs. H. C. Lanphere president, and Carrie Ralston, coach. They are now working on a play to be given November 28. They have their social affairs and help with the homelier duties also, such as cleaning the church, etc.

The branch solicitor states that interest in the financial law has increased in the past few months to the extent that more intensive study and further teaching are imperative, and just now comes the urge from the Bishopric that the teaching of the financial law be stressed for a month. This seems opportune for Fort Collins Branch.

Special interest was awakened during the study of the Doctrine and Covenants and has made a substantial growth. The goal of the branch is "Every member a tithe payer."

"Know the Law," is the theme of each Sunday morning eleven o'clock service, the pastor in charge.

The midweek prayer service continues to be attended with interest. It is not merely an old folks' meeting because the young as well as the older ones take part.

Frazee, Minnesota

Revival Services Cheer Saints

Elder P. T. Anderson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, has just closed four weeks of wonderful revival meetings here. His sermons have been real food for the souls of these isolated members. Much interest was shown in the services, and the Saint hope that the honest in heart will join forces with them in the near future. All have learned to love Brother Anderson and hope that he will be with them again in the spring.

Sister Lillian Jenson, who has been ill for several months with tuberculosis, received a great blessing through the administration under the hands of Brother Anderson.

Frazee members wish it were possible to have this minister of the gospel with them all the time. He has been a help to them in time of weakness and trial. They pray that they may ever be faithful.

Northwest Visits of Apostle M. A. McConley

Spokane

I arrived in Spokane, Washington, from western Montana, October 11, just in time to get a bite to eat and go to the church, where a group of about fifty had assembled for prayer meeting.

Attendance at church services is growing in this branch, and the Saints are reaching out in a missionary way into one of the city's suburbs.

They have done considerable, too, on completing the cement work in their basement. This is nearing a state of completion sufficient to be usable. They hope to have a Thanksgiving dinner in the church rooms thus provided.

I was back at Spokane again for Sunday to Wednesday, inclusive, and met with a fine response from priesthood and laymembers.

Vay Branch

This is off in the hills about forty miles from Spokane. The group of Saints is small, but they are taking renewed interest in local and general activities. They have money in hand to reshingle their church building, mend the windows and effect other repairs, and will shortly be better equipped to carry on their meetings.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Two fine families from Missouri, have moved into this group and are lending their aid in local affairs.

Sagle

This is an old branch and at one time was a very strong one. We have a good church building there, but the city is small and the Saints are scattered. There are two officers in the branch, Elders Gunter and Lew Sommers. Under the leadership of these two men the branch has taken on new life.

Some of the Saints from Vay followed us over and attended the meeting at Sagle. It is just about twelve miles over the ridge between these branches.

Coeur d'Alene, Idaho

I visited the before-mentioned country points in company with Elder Stanley Fout, district president, whose residence is Coeur d'Alene. Friday night after church we drove back to Coeur d'Alene and that gave us all day Saturday there. We held meeting at night with good attendance. They have shingled their church and otherwise effected needed repairs since I was last there.

People in Spokane District are looking forward with pleasure to the coming district conference when they hope to welcome President F. M. McDowell.

Portland District Conference

I arrived at Portland the night of the nineteenth from Spokane, and found Elder H. I. Velt on hand.

A fine conference opened Friday night with a district program. Musical numbers and drama were of a high order. We have some fine talent in Portland now.

Saturday's program included a good morning prayer meeting and class work —two forenoon and two afternoon sessions on the theme, "Zion Building," and Elder Velt spoke in the evening to a crowded house.

Instead of having the conference business meeting on Saturday with a "corporal's guard" in attendance, we held it at 2 p. m. Sunday. The church was packed and a good spirit prevailed. Officers of last year were sustained unanimously. An item of far-reaching importance was the acceptance by Portland District of the invitation from Seattle-British Columbia District to make Silver Lake Reunion Grounds the permanent place for their reunions and to join the Seattle-British Columbia District and Spokane District in effecting permanent reunion arrangements in which the reunion equipment of the three districts will be pooled, and the gathering hereafter will be known as the Northwest Reunion. The matter has yet to pass the December conference of Spokane District.

Altogether the conference was very successful. Attendance covered a wider area than usual and seldom if ever has been as large. I think all went home encouraged, their zeal rekindled, their faith stronger, and determined to do their part. With a few more years of progressive leadership and constructive administration, Portland District will be one of of our strong districts.

Independence

Young People's Rally

A rally of the young people of the city of Zion was held at Walnut Park Church Sunday, beginning with the early morning prayer service at seven-thirty, and ending with an open forum meeting which closed at four in the evening. Large audiences were the rule and a splendid spirit of fellowship prevailed. The meeting was sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council.

At the prayer service from seven-thirty to nine, one hundred and sixty were present. The meeting was in charge of Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, assisted by President Elbert A. Smith, and Elders D. S. McNamara and Frank McDonald. The meeting was active and enriched the spiritual experiences of those present.

At nine-fifteen the church school convened, in charge of Elder W. Earl Page, director of religious education, assisted by Arthur Welch, of Englewood, who offered the prayer. Sanford Downs, of Walnut Park, led the congregational singing at this meeting and also at the church service which followed. Elder Cyril E. Wight, of Kansas City Stake, delivered the message to the church school, speaking of the great changes that have been wrought in the physical world through the medium of inventive genius, and expressing the belief that as great progress lies before us in the spiritual realm if we will only move forward in the land of spiritual opportunity which is before us. At the conclusion of Brother Wight's talk, Mrs. Helen Page Brackenbury gave a Thanksgiving reading.

In the period between the prayer service and the church school the Walnut Park orchestra played under the direction of Orlando Nace. The orchestra also played the offertory. Drexel Mollison at the organ filled the interval between the church school and the church service at ten-thirty. The church was crowded to capacity at both these meetings, the primary grades swelling the attendance to seven hundred at the church school, while five hundred were counted at the church service in the main auditorium, and a junior service in the lower auditorium drew an attendance of eighty.

Elder D. S. McNamara was in charge of the ten-thirty meeting, assisted by Cecil Walker of Liberty Street, president of the young people's council. President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker, his subject being "Law," and he used as the basis of his sermon section eighty-five of Doctrine and Covenants. Among other things he said, "Cells which 'run wild' and disregard law become cancers, and succeed not only in destroying themselves, but the entire body." "Without law no one would long have liberty." "Liberty is like a fire on the hearth, which warms the house; license is a fire on the floor, which destroys the building." He told how our nation was founded with a high regard for law, citing the Mayflower Compact, which ended with the words, "In the name of God. Amen," pledged the signers to enact and obey just and equitable laws; and he expressed the opinion that the growing spirit of atheism is largely responsible for the breakdown of law in America.

Preceding President Smith's sermon, Eloise Higgins played a violin solo and a ladies' quartet from Enoch Hill, composed of Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Miss Ruby Johnson, Mrs. Rilla Johnson and Mrs. May Worth, sang two numbers. They were accompanied by Miss Louise McDonald. The singing of "Onward to Zion," by the congregation, closed the service.

The final meeting of the young people's rally was at two-thirty in the afternoon, and was in charge of Elder John F. Sheehy, assisted by President Elbert A. Smith and Elder T. A. Beck. Guinn Bronson read a poem which had been written recently by Brother H. R. Mills, and Bishop J. Stanley Kelley talked for about fifteen minutes, after which a round table discussion was held. Following the round table a religious drama, "The Lord's Prayer," was presented under the direction of Mrs. Helen Brackenbury.

Stone Church

Almost four hundred young people from the ten congregations in Independence attended the youth banquet Saturday night, which preluded the young people's rally Sunday. The lower room of the Auditorium was the scene of the event, and the meal was prepared and served by the Laurel Club.

Guinn Bronson, master of ceremonies, introduced as speakers Apostle Roy S. Budd, Cecil R. Walker, president of the Independence Young People's Council, Roy Settles, vice president, and Elder T. A. Beck. Appropriate musical numbers and songs by the banqueters added to the effectiveness of the entertainment.

A large congregation listened to the sermon of Elder Ward A. Hougas, president of Far West Stake, at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday morning. He emphasized the fact that the true spirit of thanksgiving is the spirit of living.

Music for the morning service was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. Brother Craig was assisted at the organ by Robert Miller, at the piano by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, and Mrs. Nina G. Smith was soprano soloist.

The evening service at the Stone Church presented a wide range of variety and entertainment. It began with the six o'clock program and study hour. Following the class period the three winners of the city-wide junior story-telling contest told their stories to the congregation. Helen Louise Resch told "How the Iron Gate Was Opened"; Imogene Petentler, "The Story of Hannah," and Virginia Taylor, "Healing the Leper." These were stories which the girls had taken from the Bible and put into their own words. Music was of exceptional quality and interest. It was supplied by the Stone Church Boys' Choir directed by Mr. Richard Dadney, musical director of Kansas City Central Junior High School; by a boys' quartet from Central Junior High School, and by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The spirit of thanksgiving dominated the thought of the entire evening's program, and the sermon was by Elder J. E. Vanderwood.

Prayer services of this large congregation continue to be a source of help and inspiration to the members. The various groups meet in the homes of their members, and the young people have their services in the basement of the church in charge of Elder T. A. Beck.

This is the season when people are thinking and talking about Thanksgiving. Saints of the Stone Church will worship at a special Thanksgiving service at ten o'clock the morning of November 30, Thursday.

Second Church

An organ prelude by Billy McPherson opened the eleven o'clock service. Elder B. C. Sarratt, the morning speaker, chose for his subject, "Being Thankful." Pastor Will Inman was in charge of the service. The choir furnished the music.

The theme for the junior service was "Thankfulness." Gordon Cable was in charge, and Elder Ellis Murdock was the speaker. Mrs. Queen and Letha Hershey each told a story. A vocal duet was rendered by Helen Willoughby and Millicent McCormick.

The evening speaker was Elder S. S. Smith, his theme being, "What Is in a Name?" Musical numbers were furnished by Eloise Higgins, violinist, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Paul N. Craig.

The six o'clock Book of Mormon Class was well attended. Elder J. W. A. Bailey is the teacher.

A union Thanksgiving prayer service will be held at the church Wednesday evening, November 29.

Walnut Park Church

Most of the day at Walnut Park Sunday was taken up by the young people's rally for the entire city of Zion. The rally was terminated at four o'clock and at five o'clock a baptismal service was held in the lower auditorium, a boy and a girl being received into the church. Charles Edward Davis, son of Brother and Sister Paul R. Davis, and Rose Mallott, a niece of Sister Davis, were baptized by Brother Davis. It was announced that they would be confirmed Wednesday evening.

One hundred and seventy-seven were present at the religio session and witnessed a special program in the form of a play, "Our Pilgrim Fathers," written by Brother O. L. Athey and directed by Sister E. E. Moorman.

The church service at seven-thirty saw a special musical program preceding the sermon, the choir and orchestra uniting in its arrangement. Two numbers were played by the orchestra under the direction of Orlando Nace; two hymns were sung by a male quartet composed of Erwin Moorman, Arlon Chapman, Milford Nace and Sanford Downs; and the choir sang "Joy of the Harvest Days," under the direction of Miss Maurine Nace, and "Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Dwelling Place," Minnie Scott Dobson directing. An unusually large audience for Sunday evening was in attendance and heard a Thanksgiving sermon by Pastor Frank McDonald.

Group officers and their companions met at the church Tuesday evening, November 21, for a covered-dish dinner and a round table discussion of the problems of the district. Seventy-five were present.

Enoch Hill Church

The funeral of Martha Erter, seventeen-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister Earl Erter, was held at the Carson Funeral Home, Sunday afternoon. Martha will be remembered for her patience and faith during her eight years of illness. Elder W. J. Brewer spoke words of encouragement to the bereaved family.

A son was born to Lawrence and Sarah Brewer, November 16.

Friday the young people gave a program at the church. They are heeding the command of the Lord to his people to qualify themselves for more efficient service.

In spite of the fact that a large number of this district's young people met with worshipers at the early prayer hour of the young people's rally Sunday morning at Walnut Park, there was good attendance at the local prayer service, Elder Claud Beal, Elder William Shakespeare, and Brother Dick Bullard in charge.

At Sunday school the intermediate girls' class, taught by Sister E. A. Thomas, was commended for perfect attendance since promotion day. Elder W. J. Brewer's class was in charge of the worship period.

Enoch Hill was well represented at the young people's convention, and twenty-six attended the city-wide banquet Saturday evening.

Bishop G. W. Eastwood was the morning speaker.

A class on financial law is being held at six o'clock Sunday evening. Pastor E. A. Thomas presided over the class Sunday.

Pastor E. A. Thomas spoke in the evening, his theme being, "Thanksgiving." The choir sang appropriate Thanksgiving music, and Richard Maloney sang, "Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled."

Liberty Street Church

Liberty Street Choir has chosen "The Adoration Cantata for Christmas," to be given at the church on Christmas Eve. Singers are now at work under the direction of Fred Friend. Also preparations are being made for groups of singers to carry out the old custom of singing carols and radiating good cheer.

Liberty Street was well represented at the young people's banquet and all-day rally Saturday night and Sunday. Those attending brought back to those who could not attend much information and encouragement.

The primary department furnished part of the program of the church school Sunday morning. John Soderstadt, representing the senior young people, sang a tenor solo.

George Atkins was the speaker at the morning hour, and music was furnished by the choir.

The spirit of Thanksgiving has shared the limelight with "Keep the Law" during the last week. It was predominant in the Religio program Sunday evening. Songs, reading, story and playlet pertained to the Thanksgiving season.

A goodly number assembled Sunday evening to hear Elder H. A. Koehler tell of the recognition of Latter Day Saintism in other parts of the world. Two vocal numbers were provided by the music department.

Gudgell Park Church

The house was well filled, November 5, for the sacrament service. That night Elder R. V. Hopkins concluded his series of sermons. Several evenings he was assisted with musical numbers by Mrs. Hazel Moler and Miss Ina Hattey.

Brother Clarence E. Martin, a local man, was the speaker the following Sunday and forcefully presented the importance of keeping the law. Mrs. J. R. Lentell brought her chorus of girls who sang three numbers.

In the evening about thirty young people came from Bennington Heights congregation, Kansas City Stake, bringing their speaker, Brother Garland Tickemyer from Fourth Kansas City Church, and furnishing the music.

November 19, Sister Charlotte Koehler representing the women's department, spoke at eleven o'clock. She stressed the need of better homes and explained the work that the women will attempt to do along this line during the year to come.

The seven-thirty service was in charge of the Young People's Church History class. Five young men gave brief talks, Milton Martin, John Hook, George Martin, Melvin Atwell, and Roy Martin.

A Thanksgiving prayer meeting was held at eleven o'clock, November 26,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Patriarch W. A. McDowell making the opening remarks. The congregation was rather small due to the fact that many of the young people attended the rally at Walnut Park.

A program of Thanksgiving by the Sunday school children occupied the eleven o'clock hour in the evening. Sister Lois Butterworth, from Walnut Park, has been assisting Brother Fred Mollison in directing the music.

The Gudgell Park History Class is moving forward. Two faithful members have moved away, George Martin and M. R. Atwell. The latter was the assistant chairman and secretary of the class. The class meets each Monday evening at 1515 South Dodgeon Street, and you are invited to be there.

Spring Branch Church

The eight o'clock prayer service Sunday morning was in charge of Brothers Fish and Dixon. The theme for the Sunday school hour was "Thanksgiving." A short talk was given by Sister Jacobsen.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey, the morning speaker, chose as his subject, "Zion." An interesting sermon was delivered.

Two members of the local priesthood occupied the evening hour. Brothers Arthur Peer and Robert Fish, talking on "Pay Your Vows Unto the Lord," and "Keeping the Law."

Many of the young people were missed from the morning service. Spring Branch was well represented at the young people's banquet, Saturday evening.

The young people of this congregation enjoyed a treasure hunt and hamburger fry at the home of their leader, Sister Irene Roberts.

Belding, Michigan

Host to All-day Meeting

Belding Branch, presided over by Elder W. E. Aelick, was host to a fine all-day meeting October 15. District President and Sister A. C. Barmore, D. S. Smith, district supervisor of young people, and wife, and Brother A. Dexter, district supervisor of the Sunday school, were present, as well as a remarkable attendance from Alto, Ionia, and Grand Rapids.

Two babies were blessed, a son of Brother and Sister Dorsoy Bush, and a daughter of Brother and Sister Brown.

Dinner was served by the department of women in the lower auditorium of the church.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Farrington to Theodore Bauman, of Greenville, was solemnized October 18, by District President A. C. Barmore, at the home of the bride's parents.

The L. Y. Z. Club (Loyal Youth of Zion), under the direction of Elizabeth Aelick, formerly of Graceland College, sponsored a halloween party, October 27, with the Recreation Club of Alto Branch as guests. Belding's club returned their visit October 31. A fine time was enjoyed by everyone and the spirit of fellowship and unity prevailed.

The young people are taking noticeable interest in the affairs of the church and much is expected of them in the future.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited Belding, November 7, his evening sermon being, "Christianity and Social Revolution."

The women of the branch known as the Willing Workers, have been enjoying a busy fall. November 12, they presented a religious drama, "The Play Is the Thing," at the evening service. The department has been making quilts and sewing for the needy as well as studying the Book of Mormon. Sister Borden is president, and the club meets every two weeks.

The local young people attended the young people's conference at Lansing, November 19, and are resolved to cooperate with the church.

Holden Stake

Atherton, Missouri

The November sacrament service was one never to be forgotten. The Spirit of God hovered over the congregation, rekindling latent desires for righteousness.

This branch is heartily cooperating in the "Keep the Law" campaign. Brother D. R. Hughes opened a series of sermons at the eleven o'clock hour, November 12, followed by Brother J. A. Thomas in the evening.

The largest church school ever held in this district met November 19. Brother R. L. Fulk was the morning speaker, preaching a forceful and helpful sermon.

Brother Thomas Clark preached the evening sermon.

The priesthood held a meeting on the afternoon of November 19, in the interest of "Keep the Law."

A teachers' training class is being organized under the leadership of the church school. Quite a number are taking advantage of the opportunity.

Atherton congregation is divided into two groups. The first group, composed of Saints living in and near Atherton, and the second, of the families who live on the church land about five miles northeast of Atherton.

Each group has its own midweek prayer meeting, and the women's meeting. The two groups meet together for Sunday services.

Blue Springs Church

The annual business meeting for this congregation was held immediately following the sacrament service in October. Elder O. W. Sarratt was sustained pastor. Gerald G. Philips was elected superintendent of the Sunday school; A. E. Campbell, chorister; R. J. Stark, secretary; Oscar Story, treasurer.

Special music was provided for the evening service by the orchestra. W. E. Poague, of Lincoln, Nebraska, sang a solo, "Give Me Thy Heart." Joseph Farrow was the speaker, choosing for his theme, "A Faithful Son."

The business meeting was continued October 8, during the morning service. Several of the Blue Springs congregation sang in the Harvest Festival chorus.

David Spease was the speaker the morning of October 15, His subject was "Zion." Howard Cook delivered a discourse on "Faith" in the evening. A girl's quartet furnished a special musical number.

Betty Lee Toler and Maleta Belle Campbell were blessed under the hands of Elders Harold Hattie and O. W. Sarratt, October 22. R. D. Kleckler, the morning speaker, chose as his theme, "Stay With the Ship." Elder R. J. Stark spoke on "Marriage" at the evening service.

"The Lord's Supper," was the subject of a discourse delivered by C. A. Joice, October 29. Elder Earl Grub was the evening speaker.

Robert Stark, junior, who was so severely burned, is now at his home.

Donald Stark was entertained with a birthday party, October 20, at his home. The event was a birthday party combined with a wedding, Donald Stark and Elizabeth Friend, being united in marriage.

Oklahoma, City

Hold Successful Priesthood Conference

The annual business meeting of Oklahoma City Branch was held September 1. It was characterized by the spirit of unity, shown in the election of officers. Nearly all officers were reelected. This was particularly apparent in the unanimous reelection of Pastor E. L. Kemp. E. F. Yerrington was reelected church school director. A voluntary subscription was taken which will pay off the branch debt by January 1. This debt was partially incurred by the construction of a like Carmen Blaine; still she admired Nancy, too, and Nancy and Carmen were very different. Larry hoped for faith. She desired wisdom with which to direct her life and those whose lives would probably be interwoven with hers. She wanted to be useful and likable, but it was horribly hard, this getting started.

On and on she walked until the clear, brisk air seemed to have permeated her soul as well as her body, and she returned home for dinner with flushed cheeks and a heart happier than it had been for many days. She had come to some strong conclusions. She had made some resolutions.

follies and abominations, but the work was beyond him. Perhaps martyrdom was a mercy.

It was now up to the Twelve to finish the temple in time to eradicate those follies and abominations, or the judgments would come, and the people be moved out of their place, but the judgments came with a vengeance, unparalled even to Saints; so, it is evident, that the temple was not finished on time for its work, and the church was rejected. The mob acted as judge, jury and executioner and did the work thoroughly.

It has been claimed that in a vision, Joseph saw many of the Saints (not the church) go out to the valleys, and become a great people. Many of them did go west, and carried valid priesthood with them. Had the other prophet, whom the Lord had ordained to come through, and be appointed by Joseph, gone to Utah in 1860 and been ordained president of their High Priesthood, they would have had a legally reorganized church. However, that prophet did not go to Utah.

BUT to return. By 1841, Joseph Smith had become well established as the prophet to the church, a matter of the Lord's ordaining. The church had little to do but to accept. Joseph was president of the High Priesthood, a matter of ordination under Melchisedek authority. He was president of the church, which was a matter of election by the church, in the light of the foregoing. By this time, with his multiple responsibilities, Joseph was in prospect, a blessing to all the world. The Lord took occasion to acknowledge this in a special way. The world was taking notice of the success of the Prophet. Notable people, in increasing numbers were coming to the new frontier town, to "contemplate the glory of Zion." The primitive homes did not afford the necessary hotel accommodations. Great as was the enterprise and success of this peculiar people, the Prophet himself was the main center of attention. Therefore, should they build a suitable home for Joseph and his family, suitable for his unique position, and convenient for those honorable men to be entertained in a manner fitting the unique office, because, of the anointing put upon his head; and the blessing on the head of his posterity, "and as I said unto Abraham, I say unto Joseph, in thee and thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed." To interpret this revelation to mean the inheritance of Joseph and family, in a boarding house, would be putting the Lord in the very awkward position of giving an "original" revelation of what was already embodied in statute law.

UNFORTUNATELY the Martyrdom intervened. The appointed Prophet was only twelve years of age, but the church organization was ample to function during his minority, providing that all the quorums remained in place and acted in their official quorum capacity, but they must act in humility and justice. They must finish the temple and perform the atoning washings and anointings, for their follies and abominations in which case they need not be rejected, nor moved out of their place.

Little more need be said. It is now history as to the leadership of the Twelve, and Pratt's fantastic celestialism, degenerated into polygamy. While then try and get interested in better foods. Don't make a garbage can out of your stomach then pray that the LORD will give you health and strength—not wisdom—why do you suppose GOD gave the Word of Wisdom long ago? Do the Saints heed the word?

Better get in touch with our work. We have helped thousands upon thousands in the last 32 years, mostly people outside the church. We want all the Saints to be Healthy and Happy. Only a dollar to test the food.

the few practiced it, the system dominated the Nauvoo following. Outside, a number of leaders arose with varying claims, William Smith, as the brother of Joseph claimed a regency, until young Joseph should take his indicated place. Sidney Rigdon still claimed the presidency. J. J. Strang claimed to be "the appointed" of Joseph. The Utah party seems to have had the greatest distrust of the old organization, for by drastic rebaptism, and reordination, they made the greatest immediate stride towards a complete reorganization. It is doubtful if those acts invalidated their original membership and priesthood, any more than did the ordination by Strang, of former high priests, to other offices in his church, yet we have the peculiar situation of the church that did the most rebaptizing and reordaining do the most complaining about the ordaining done by Strang.

Strang pronounced a curse upon those who should practice the "follies of abominations." This bid appealed to many of the former Saints, but eventually Strang fell a victim to his own curse.

Many of the original members continued in their branches under Melchisedec authority or otherwise awaited events. In 1860 the new Prophet took his place among the faithful Zarahemla following. Many were the old members admitted on original baptism and ordination.

The new organization went back far enough to escape the philosophy of the brilliant though mistaken Pratt. The standing of the other churches is various. Possibly the time is opportune for bitterness to cease. Each church may have an appeal to certain classes. One seems to be successful among Italians. Another makes a strong economic stand and prides itself on discipline. It deserves to flourish for many are the people who need discipline under the iron heel of papacy.

Whatever the new social order that so many thinkers are looking for, it is largely an academic problem. Neither the Church nor the University having made the correct solution, it seems the youth of the world are taking a free hand in finding the solution for themselves. No matter what their efforts may lead to, it cannot be much worse than what "religions" have advocated.

Meanwhile the reorganization is going steadily onward, with a liberal policy, a high degree of personal freedom and considerable peace with the world.

There is no essential conflict between science and religion. On the contrary, the more science approximates to truth, the more support it gives to the fundamental tenets of religious faith.—J. Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

new basement, begun about a year ago.

The priesthood conference convened October 27 to 29, with good attendance. Western Oklahoma District was well represented.

President F. M. McDowell was the speaker at most of the services during his stay. Brother Howard was the Sunday morning speaker, and Apostle R. S. Budd occupied the pulpit in the evening. The sermons were among the most powerful and spiritual ever heard by Saints of this congregation. During the conference President McDowell and Apostle Budd had private and group conference with members of the priesthood. Problems were frankly discussed and helpful instructions were given.

The young people's group held a reception for President McDowell, pledging their support to the activities of the church.

The business meeting occurred Saturday at two o'clock, in charge of the district presidency, Apostle Budd, and President McDowell. All district officers, except the treasurer, were reelected. Elder F. E. Dillon, president; Anna Rowland, secretary; Alma Adams, music director; the bishop's agent, when properly elected is to become treasurer.

The following delegates to the General Conference were elected, F. E. Dillon, Mrs. Rhodilla Dillon, J. E. Lancaster, Lee Quick, E. F. Yerrington, Mrs. Minerva Yerrington, J. S. Meyer, Mrs. Lena Meyer, G. Kueffer and Mrs. Carolyn Kueffer, R. E. Montague, Edward Workman, Mrs. Flora Workman, Selma Stephens, Miss Myra Bailey, Mrs. Mary Vickery, Mrs. Alma Adams, Mrs. Monnie Kemp, Earl D. Bailey, Ward Rumsey, Mrs. Leona Rumsey.

Rita Louise, little daughter of Brother and Sister O. P. Wilson was blessed by President McDowell and Elder Z. Z. Renfroe.

An impressive ordination service was held in charge of Brother Budd, Sunday, at two o'clock. Charles McMullen was ordained deacon, under the hands of J. E. Lancaster and E. L. Kemp; Lawrence Webb, elder, by F. E. Dillon and Lee Quick.

Sister Dillon, head of the women's department, assisted by Leah Rowland, was in charge of the entertainment of the visitors.

Monday evening, following the conference, Elder Lee Quick began a series of missionaries meetings, continuing three weeks. The meetings were characterized by the same good spirit of the conference. Attendance was good and quite regular. One adult was baptized.

The young people, under the leadership of Sister Ethel Bruner, are actively taking care of the music, raising funds, and doing their part in the worship and study periods.

Saints are glad to welcome Sister Williams, who has charge of the children's division, back after a serious operation.

Sister Dillon, well known and loved, is at this time taking treatments at Boise City, Oklahoma. She asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

San Bernardino, California

Fourteen Baptized This Year

During the summer months attendance did not drop off as it has in the past, and local activities, in general, were given good support. Many from San Bernardino attended the district reunion all or part of the time, and were greatly benefited. They returned home with new determination to be more active in all departments of service.

The last Sunday in September was promotion day in the children's division of the church school, and certificates were presented the children by their leader.

San Bernardino Harvest Festival was held October 13 to 15, and the branch welcomed visitors from all over the district as well as many nonmembers of the city. A tent annex was erected adjoining the church, where the exhibits of fruit and staple foods were displayed. Fruit was not so plentiful this year, but a good quantity was canned by the women's division, and this, combined with individual donations, made a good showing. Each housewife had been asked as she did her family canning, to donate one-tenth to the church storehouse. Those who did not can fruit, donated staple foods to be given to the branch needy during winter months. Bazaar booths were in charge of the women's division, also a bazaar booth from the Riverside women's divison who are striving to increase their missionary fund.

On October 13, the pageant, "All Along the Way," was given by the children's division and followed by a social time.

This program was particularly well attended by nonmembers many of whom are parents of children attending the local church school.

Saturday evening and Sunday evening at seven-thirty the pageant, "Timbers for the Temple," was presented. This pageant was given at the Harvest Festival last year and some were turned away on account of lack of seating room. It was given both evenings this year to a crowded house, and again October 21.

Sunday morning, October 15, at nine-thirty a prayer service was in charge of Pastor W. A. Teagarden and Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The theme of this service was the rededication of our lives to the service of the church. This was followed by a sermon by Brother Gleazer at eleven. Lunch was served in the tent annex to the visitors from the district, and at 2.30 p. m. a musical program was arranged by the district chorister, Stella Hodges.

During the following week missionary services were conducted by Brother Gleazer. On Sunday, October 22, a baptismal service was held in which seven children were baptized by Brother Frank Van Fleet and W. A. Teagarden.

This makes a total of fourteen baptized at San Bernardino this year. Confirmation service was held in the evening instead of regular classes, following which Hunter C. Ferguson was ordained to the office of high priest under the hands of Brother Teagarden and Apostle Gleazer. At 7.30 Brother Gleazer concluded his missionary services here.

Local Saints are grateful to Brother Gleazer for his assistance during their festival and in the missionary series. They are also thankful to all workers for their splendid cooperation in branch activities.

Kansas City Stake

Stake Conference

The devotional exercises for the stake conference, held at Central Church, were continuous from the opening nine-thirty church school period till the closing benediction at a little past nine o'clock the night of November 19. All the other stake churches were closed for the day giving their members opportunity to attend the general meeting. And as the weather was all that could be expected, there was a fine turn-out to all services.

Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, the morning speaker, made an earnest appeal to the Saints to "Keep the Law." This was the second time Bishop Curry has been heard in Kansas City Stake, and his effort was well received.

The 2:30 p. m. prayer meeting was soul inspiring. No time was lost. A prophecy was delivered to the edification of all, commending and warning.

The evening sermon was by President Elbert A. Smith, who drew a lesson on the fruits of the Spirit compared with the fruits of the flesh.

Music at all services was very appropriate. There was a concert at 4 p. m. in charge of Colin Ferrett, featuring instrumental and vocal soloists and the Grandview Orchestra and Chelsea Choir. The musicians as well as other workers are to be commended for their splendid contributions to the success of the conference.

The Stake business meeting was held Monday night at Central Church.

Armourdale Church

Armourdale O. B. K.'s were guests in charge of the evening service at Englewood Church, Independence, November 12. Sister Fern McNeese is Armourdale's young people's leader. Elder Edward Tucker, from Grandview, was the speaker here that evening.

The junior department of the Sunday school is planning a parent-teacher program and exhibition for the evening of December 7. All junior Sunday school teachers and supervisors of the stake are invited to attend this unusual event. First, a program by the children, and following the exhibition of handwork, a small reception for the parents.

Sister Marie Rushfelt has begun a class of piano pupils for both junior and adult students. Also Brother James Hawkins, director of the orchestra, is giving horn lessons to a number of young people. This should mean valuable musical material for Armourdale in the future.

Pastor Julian Gough is still improving from his recent illness and will soon be back at his post. During his illness the Saints have greatly appreciated the services of Brother Edward Baker.

There have been two marriages in the last three weeks. Brother and Sister William Kissinger's daughter, Miss Beulah, was married to Mr. Vaught November 11, by Brother Baker at the home residence. Sister Owens and Mr. William Garrison were married November 17 at the home of Brother William Powell who performed the wedding ceremony.

Elder C. George Mesley gave a fine talk on "Keep the Law" the morning of November 12. To date Armourdale Church has a rate of twenty-two percent of inventories filed, the highest in the stake.

This congregation was well represented at the stake conference, and hopes to carry through the next six months the encouragement and progressive spirit that is always obtained there.

Argentine Church

A recent speaker was Elder C. G. Mesley whose subject was "Keep the Law."

Commencing November 12, Missionary J. Charles May, assisted by Elder George Harrington, held a follow-up series of meetings with fair attendance, and for four days commencing November 20, they held cottage meetings. Several friends seem near the kingdom. Brothers May and Harrington began another series of meetings November 26, at Malvern Hill Church.

Beardstown, Illinois

Thirteenth and Monroe Streets

An enjoyable affair in the form of an old-fashioned halloween party proved to be one of the outstanding events of the month of October here. It was a gala occasion, the basement of the church being decorated in autumn colors and the guests coming in costume. A program of novelty piano accordion music, readings and vocal solos was given. The evening was completed with games and refreshments enjoyed by about seventy people.

Beardstown members look forward with hope to the semiannual conference of the district to be held at Taylorville, December 16 and 17.

The Saints at this place believe in working together for the good of all. During the recent illness of Mrs. Thurman, who was taken to the local hospital, the Saints cooperated by taking care of her four children in their homes.

Bishop's Agent E. E. Thomas, of Beardstown, has organized the "Keep the Law" program for Central Illinois District.

Beardstown priesthood are hard at work on their duties. They are looking to the future and hope for a higher plane of living for all in the branch.

Ministerial Institute

Kirtland District: A ministerial missionary institute will be held at Kirtland, Ohio, December 10 to 12. It will be opened with a sermon by Apostle Paul M. Hanson; subject, "A Scriptural Interpretation of the Present Age." Classes will be conducted for the priesthood. Sunday school as usual, with a special class on "Missionary Methods," by Brother John R. Grice. All the preaching service will be public. Special music will be provided. As many as possible should be present.—Paul M. Hanson, minister-in-charge; James E. Bishop, district president.

Our Departed Ones

INGRAHAM.—Elizabeth Ingraham was born March 5, 1857. Died November 11, 1933, having lived most of her life in Benton County, Arkansas. At the age of sixteen she was united in marriage to Bert Ingraham, and to them six girls and seven boys were born. Seven of these survive her: Mrs. Mandy Fletcher, Mrs. Jossey Rich, and Will, Jess, Ode, Albert and George. Her husband died twenty-one years ago. She united with the church September 14, 1910. She endured the hardships of pioneer days in raising her family, and lived a patient courageous life. Interment was in War Eagle Cemetery, the funeral sermon being preached by Elder A. M. Baker.

EPPERLY.—Alice May Charles was born April 27, 1884, at Kewanee, Illinois. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, August 10, 1895, at Kewanee, by Alma Whitehouse, and confirmed by J. D. Jones and Thomas Whitehouse. Was married to James A. Epperly, November 2, 1904. Passed away in Independence, Missouri, after a long period of ill health, November 12, 1933. Surviving are her husband, two daughters, Nora E. Etter and Mabel I. Epperly, both of Independence, one grandchild, other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was held November 15, at Independence, Elder John F. Sheehy preaching the sermon.

SAMPLE.—Edward Arnold Sample was born March 20, 1786, at Croswell, Sanilac County, Michigan. Departed this life October 18, 1933. He was baptized into the church January 14, 1923, at Port Huron, Michigan, by Elder William M. Grice. October 20, 1920, he was united in marriage to Miss Ada Hicks. He leaves to mourn his passing, his wife; one son, Elmer; one daughter, Maurine; two brothers, seven sisters, and a host of friends. Brother Sample was confined to his bed for several months before his death. Funeral services were held from Rose Hall Chapel-Algoe-Gundry Mortuary, Elder James A. Phillips officiating. Burial was in the Gracelawn Cemetery, Flint, Michigan.

The Pigeonhole

"It is disconcerting to discover," said the Pigeon today, "that so many people are fascinated by corrupt politics, when nothing on earth will get them interested in good, clean government!"

Nothing can make better government but better people. Shuffling systems does little good, as long as the system you have is expressive of the character (we have not said desire) of the majority of the citizens.

At the base of most theories of communistic Utopias is the naive notion that the great working class is composed of people who are naturally good, honest, and righteous, and that all evils are an outgrowth of the corruption produced by the governing classes. But the percentages of virtue and vice run approximately the same in all strata of society. This is demonstrated by the conduct of members of the "proletariat" when they gather a little wealth. They are just as likely to oppress their fellows, indulge in graft, and pursue their own selfish ends as members of the capitalist class.

Unless the communist is converted to some gospel of good citizenship, he will act very like a Democrat or a Republican, if given the opportunity.

That is why human beings need the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the best gospel ever devised for the reformation of human conduct, for the purification and exaltation of human personality. As bad as we professed Christians are, Christianity has brought us more real blessings than are enjoyed by other peoples. Some day we may realize that to follow Christ farther would bring us greater blessings.

One generation of honest and thoughtful citizens, converted to the "gospel of Jesus Christ," can "turn this cold world into heaven," and abolish the ills under which we suffer.

It is unfortunate, of course, that the slave masters, the corrupt rulers, the exploiters, should have appropriated the name and fame of Jesus, while they have rejected or violated all his teachings. They build churches in his name and defy his commandments. This has brought His gospel unjustly into disrepute with some good thinking people. The fact that Jesus would drive these money changers from the modern temples seems to be forgotten.

At present we are too much governed by the tumult and shouting of mobs who are alternately fed and betrayed by tricksters and demagogues. Occasionally the mob turns to rend some exposed crook, but the game goes on.

Our trouble, even within the churches, is that we are not converted. That is, not yet sufficiently converted. We believe faint-heartedly. We hope abjectly. We sing, shake hands, shed tears, and go home unchanged. Meanwhile, Christ is still nailed to the Cross.

A Turning Point

The Presiding Bishopric Members of the church will rejoice at the news conveyed in an official announcement in this issue of the Herald by President Frederick M. Smith. Subject to the action of the next General Conference and with the approval of the First Presidency, Bishop N. Ray Carmichael of Lamoni Stake has been selected as Counselor by Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry. This makes the Presiding Bishopric complete. Brother Carmichael has made a fine record in his work in Lamoni Stake and also as business manager of Graceland College. He will bring much needed help and strength to the heavy work of the Bishop's office.

The Church United Certainly the united support of the people of the church for the "Keep the Law" program has been inspiring. It is not expected that the program at this time will yield great sums of money, but relief from some pressing problems is greatly desired. The great benefits from this program will probably be realized in the future when conditions will enable people to give more adequate response to the church needs. With spiritual unity attained, all other things are possible. The church can now go forward.

Needs and Wants There is only one thing that will feed and clothe the families of missionaries, pay interest, liquidate debt, and finance the operation of the church. That is what the filing of inventories and the payment of tithes is intended by the law to produce. Mass obedience to the form of the law becomes mere pageantry unless it produces results—revenues. The time comes when the church must ask for financial support to continue the services and operations that have been undertaken in an attempt to fulfill the law. That time is here—now. The test of our sincerity lies in the answer we give to the call of the church for help.

A Brighter Future Some have been optimistic enough to predict that the worst storm of this prolonged depression is over. It took us at a disadvantage, and it has borne down on us heavily. We should be thankful that we have survived a period that has carried many another institution down to destruction. The faith of the people has survived a severe test and we feel sure now that we cannot fail, if all goes well from this time onward. But as prosperity returns we shall have continued need to call upon the stanch friends who have faithfully seen the church through its difficulties. With strong faith and devotion to our tasks we will not fail.

Blue Pencil Notes

Some weeks ago I met an old-time acquaintance. She exclaimed: "You do not look a day older than you did fifteen years ago." Vastly pleased, I took my hat off to acknowledge the compliment, and then she said: "Oh, oh, you should have left your hat on." Father Time gets the last laugh. He laughs at the boys who run bareheaded in zero weather, and he laughs at their elders who take to wearing hats in August.

A friend told me a little story about two babies. A group of elderly people were exchanging notes, each one saying, "If I had my life to live over I would do thus and so." Two babies, one a year old, the other a five-months' baby, listened. Presently the older people left the room, and then the year-old baby is alleged to have said: "If I had my life to live over, I would not eat spinach, even if it is full of vitamins and sand." And the five-months' baby is said to have said: "If I had my life to live over I would be a bottle baby—I am tired of having cigarette ashes dropped in my eyes."

Thanksgiving season was ushered in with three mob lynchings of unusual ferocity in the respective States of California, Maryland, and Missouri. Governor Ritchie of Maryland and Governor Park of Missouri promise vigorous prosecution of the ring leaders. The governor of California has chosen to put his State in a shameful position before the world by placing his stamp of executive approval on mob hangings.

Mob violence is no new thing in the world—certainly not in America. But it is unusual and alarming to have the highest official of one of our sovereign States voice approval of such lawlessness. Two confessed kidnapers and murderers, guilty of atrocious crimes, were taken from the authorities in California by a raging mob of thousands of men, women, and boys in their teens. After brutal beatings they were hanged while the crowd hooted and laughed. And the next morning Governor Rolph is reported to have expressed great gratification. He is reported to have commended the act of "these good citizens" and promised them pardon in case they should be indicted.

Kidnapings and crimes of violence have greatly incensed the public; but California had demonstrated her ability to take care of such cases through the courts. That was done in the notorious Hickman case; he paid the supreme penalty and it was imposed by due process of law.

Through long centuries of struggle man learned to take vengeance away from private hands and intrust it to properly chosen and constituted agencies. Shall we turn the clock back? The right to trial was dearly bought by the common people. Popular vengeance without trial is a very dangerous thing. It may be wreaked upon the innocent as well as the guilty. It tends to enlarge its scope, and being glutted on the person of a known and brutal criminal may then turn to lesser offenders and even innocent men against whom irresponsible persons have made accusation. No man's life would be safe. It is conceivable that Governor Rolph himself may some day find himself at bay against an inflamed populace. Emerson wrote:

"Whatever outrages have happened to men may befall a man again: and very easily in a republic, if there appear any sign of a decay of religion. Coarse slander, fire, tar and feathers, and the gibbet. . . . whenever it may please the next newspaper and a sufficient number of his neighbors to pronounce his opinions incendiary."

The sheriff and the state troops who stand to defend a prisoner are not defending a kidnaper or a violator of women, they are defending the law and order and safety of the whole country and the common right of humanity to trial. They should stiffen their resistance. Citizens everywhere should lend their moral support to law observance and law enforcement. They should elect state officials who stand for law and order, and they should repudiate those who openly ally themselves with the insane passions of mob violence. Any man who feels that the mob is wiser than the court and stronger than the state should be with the mob and not in a governor's chair.

There remains another consideration that must not be ignored: the "law's delay" in many localities has bred distrust and disrespect for the law. Lawyers and jurists should take note of the occurrences chronicled as emphatic warnings. Legal procedure must be simplified and expedited so that justice may be speedy and sure. That is a task to which a governor might well lend his influence rather than to the encouragement of mobs.

To the Church:

A vacancy has existed in the Presiding Bishopric for some months past because at the time of the ordination of Brethren Curry and DeLapp, Bishop Curry was not prepared to nominate his other counselor. To this matter Brother Curry has given prolonged and prayerful attention and meditation and has informed the Presidency that his selection is Bishop N. Ray Carmichael, at present bishop of the Lamoni Stake.

In making this announcement to the church the Presidency expresses its pleasure at the promotion of Brother Carmichael, for we have confidence in his ability to carry the responsibility of that office and feel assured that his attitude will always be that of a devoted and consecrated servant of the church.

Brother Carmichael will take up his duties in the Presiding Bishopric under authorization of the Presidency, subject to the ratification of next General Conference.

THE REAL WEALTH OF THE WORLD is time, not money. We start life with a bank account of a few thousand hours, to be invested in work, recreation, and sleep. They fly by with incredible swiftness whether we use them or not, and they are irrevocably gone. They give us our sole chance to live, to grow, to enjoy, to achieve, to learn, to serve. They are the only real wealth we have.

The Evidence of Things Not Seen

By Roy F. Davey

"LORD God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget." Yes, man is too often prone to forget those principles vital to the happy, fully rounded-out pursuance of mortal existence. It is well to refreshen in our minds from time to time that faith is the keystone of life, and that the last word of that subject has not been spoken.

Some individuals straining after an appearance of being ultra-modern have somehow come to the absurd conclusion that the outstanding mark of intellectuality at the present moment is the ability to be scathingly sardonic concerning the whole scheme of life as lived upon this planet of ours. Faith has played a great part in the lives of men, so the pseudo-scientists and the would-be intellectuals, those people educated beyond their intelligence, have thought it extremely clever to jest and jeer at faith: placing themselves thereby in the same category as the man who said with fitting vehemence, "Thank God, I'm an atheist!"

Perhaps there has been partially a reason for their attempts to give having faith the appearance of being childish or indicative of idiocy or senility. Narrow-minded theologians have tried to cramp faith into the rigid mold of church dogma and creed, have crystallized it until it has become brittle in their meddling hands. Yet faith given a chance to expand to its full extent would fill the whole universe. Faith is one thing; gullibility and blind credulity are another. Too long they have been synonymous. For too long a time an unintelligent acceptance of someone else's ideas has been considered faith.

TAKEN AS THE SUBSTANCE of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, faith becomes indeed the keystone in the arch of life. "Man is that he might have joy." So as the goal of all our mortal existence is ultimate and complete happiness, I am not thinking of faith as a religious creed that is essential to our soul's salvation, but as an essence that must permeate our lives as the Attar of Roses permeates an unglazed pottery jar, if this goal of our mortal lives is to be realized. Neither am I taking the stand that we must have faith simply because our not having it will displease God, but that the "good life" cannot be lived without the abiding presence of faith.

The Apostle Paul, writing in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, stresses the importance of faith in the lives of men. In fact, fifteen verses of that particular chapter begin with the words: "By faith." For example, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." Also, "By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the King's commandment. . . . And what more shall I say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gedeon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also and Samuel, and of the prophets: who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteous, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."

NOTHING from the beginning of the world has been so powerful as faith. Jesus showed us what faith can accomplish. His was the perfect example of faith. According to Mark (11: 13-22) Jesus cursed a fig tree and the next morning his disciples observed that the tree had withered and they mentioned it to Him. "And Jesus answering said unto them, Have faith in God." Matthew corroborates this story, he writes, "Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done." (Matthew 21: 21.)

On another occasion, Jesus and his apostles were out on the sea of Galilee during a great storm. He was asleep so they awakened him saying, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" After rebuking the storm, he said to them, "Why are ye so fearful? And they feared exceedingly and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" (Mark 4: 40, 41.)

On still another occasion the disciples failed to cast the devil out of a boy and Jesus said to them, "O faithless and perverse generation how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you?" (Matthew 17: 17.) He then told his disciples that if they had faith as a grain of mustard seed nothing should be impossible to them.

What confidence such faith would give us, and what peace of mind it would afford us. Speculation would be needless, for then we would rest in the assurance that what God does is just and kind and wise and merciful whether we understand it or not. And no longer would we be subject to the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to.

On the other hand can anyone picture in his imagination a man devoid of all faith? I believe it is beyond the powers of the human mind to grasp completely what sort of man he would be. Such a man would not only not believe in God or the immortality of the soul, but also he would not believe in the integrity of any other man, or even in the seasonableness of Nature, and naturally he would never attempt any project that depended upon the cooperation of other men or the seasons of Nature. If all men were like him the progress of civilization would cease and social intercourse would become a lost art. Again I say that faith is the keystone of the "good life."

FAITH is broader than a theological belief in God, although that is paramount. An all too prevalent lack of faith in our present forms of business and government has aggravated those conditions that have prevented our coming out of the economic depression that has for so long hung as a black pall over us. Under it without the support of faith men have passed to and fro like haunted creatures: cowering from the future, fearful of what the morrow might bring, lacking the initiative and courage to set about setting affairs right.

How many men though, lacking faith themselves, because of the inspiration they derived from the faith that someone else had in them, have been led to achieve seemingly impossible feats. Yes, faith can truly work miracles, especially the reciprocal faith between individuals. Possibly that is another reason why the Lord has said that it is not good for man to live alone. Is there much else that gives an individual the feeling of rightness with the world than the knowledge that others generally have faith in him does?

The man who with an air of superiority says he is too much of a scientist to have faith not only fools himself, but makes himself ridiculous as well, for the very basis of all science is faith. All scientific advancement has come through the acceptance of many a priori premise. To accept some of the tenets of science requires infinitely more faith than to accept as a fact the immaculate conception of Christ. However these tenets having had faith imposed in them have proved themselves to be of immeasurable value.

Few great discoveries or inventions have ever come without equally great faith on someone's part. And the faithful one has been repaid beyond measure. Does anyone wonder whether Columbus was happy or not when the New World was first sighted? The supreme thrill of that moment would never have been his if he had not had through all his reverses the courage of implicit faith to "sail on and on." Is there a doubt in anyone's mind that Morse was not happy when his message, "What hath God wrought," was transmitted successfully. The experiences of a hundred benefactors of mankind could be cited to show that the rewards of faith are sure. Faith is that we might have life and have it more abundantly.

At this point it is well to issue a caution. In writing to the Corinthians the Apostle Paul states, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Corinthians 2: 4, 5.) We must never allow our faith in the prowess of man to supplant our faith in the power of God who is the uncaused cause, the Alpha and the Omega of all creation.

CHRISTIANITY has tried to make faith folded-handed saintliness. "Believe on the Lord and be saved." Yet James tells us, "The devils also believe and tremble." It is little wonder that such glaring inconsistencies as this one on the part of the ecclesiastical fathers have thoroughly disgusted so many thinking men with faith as a narrow, cramped theological dogma. But faith is not an insipid affair, a matter of passive acquiescence. Faith is vital; faith is dynamic. James, the modern psychologist, substantiates the statement of James, the Apostle: "Faith without works is dead."

Let us take an example. Two ministers hurrying for a train were not at all sure they would make connections. The one said, "Let us kneel down and pray that we be not late," but the other replied, "Let us run and pray while we run." Both men undoubtedly had faith that God would help them in their extremity, but the faith of the second one is the sort that accomplishes miracles. It is the kind that results in the most happiness for the particular individual possessing it, because it means work-together with God rather than passively accepting whatever favors He might feel disposed to pass out.

Faith has little to do with the "thou-shalt-nots" except as it helps us to accept as true the time-tested dictums of society concerning the fundamental facts of life without further individual experimentation. But it has a great deal to do with the "thou-shalts." When we have made our faith a living faith we will be the happiest people on the whole earth. The Apostle (Continued on page 1554)

NEWS BRIEFS

"Keep the Law" Period Brings New Understanding to Saints

Many branches in the church are experiencing richer spiritual conditions, fuller harmony and unity of purpose, and an increased appreciation on the part of all of the functions of the various departments as a result of the "Keep the Law" period, launched by the general church November 12, and closed December 3.

During this time the keeping of the temporal and spiritual law was stressed in study, sermon, and discussion, each member being impressed with his individual responsibility in law observance. While considerable emphasis was given to keeping the financial law and many inventories were filed, financial statements made out, and offerings given by the membership. "Keep the Law" instructions included the observance of all laws. The minds of the people were directed to more righteous and more Christian living.

Impressive ceremonies in many places on December 3, Sunday, marked the close of the official period, but the ministry hope that the church will continue to move forward, observing the full and entire law.

Spokane Has Parent-Teacher Meetings

Regular meetings to promote more intimate and profitable relations between parents of church school pupils, teachers, and officers, compose a part of the winter activities program for the branch at Spokane, Washington. The first of these meetings was held November 17, and consisted of a short program of music and talks, a period of open discussion of problems, and the serving of refreshments.

Ministerial Conference In the British Isles

Priesthood members from all parts of the British Isles Mission were present at the ministerial conference held at Birmingham, November 4 and 5. It was an inspiring sight to English Saints to see so many men consecrated to the service of God. Apostle John W. Rushton gave valuable instructions throughout the conference, this being one of the last large gatherings he attended in the mission before sailing for the United States December 2.

Thirty-one Baptized at Winnipeg, Manitoba

Since last spring thirty-one people have been baptized at Winnipeg, Canada, and the missionary spirit reigns in all the gatherings of the Saints and their friends. Particularly since a twelve-night debate, held there early in October, by Apostle J. F. Curtis and a minister of the Christian Church, are many interested in the doctrine of the church. The Saints are exerting themselves to take the gospel to all who are honest in heart.

Bald Knob Boosts Christmas Offering Fund

One hundred dollars Christmas Offering. That is the goal set by Bald Knob Branch, Arkansas, and it means that each member of the branch must give a little more than a dollar. Two energetic young men have been chosen for leaders and teams lined up to raise the offering. The contest will continue until Christmas Day. Meanwhile a chart shows the amounts raised by the teams each week, and the spirit of giving is growing.

Missionary Series Arouses Interest in Indiana Community

Great interest has been displayed in a recent missionary series conducted at South Bend-Mishawaka Branch by Elder A. Whitehead. Five candidates were led into the waters of baptism on the concluding day of the series, November 12, and two more the following Sunday. Saints from South Bend, Mishawaka, Bremen, Elkhart, Niles, and other points gave loyal support to the meetings.

East Bay Priesthood Answer Call of Service

About thirty men of the priesthood in East Bay Branch, Berkeley, California, are responding to the demands being made on the ministry. Four elders have definite preaching assignments and the Aaronic priesthood are visiting the homes under the direction of the pastor. Unity, understanding, and spirituality are growing here.

Madison Young People at Work

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of Madison, Wisconsin, although but recently organized, are very busy. Their activities are carried on through four committees: publication, correspondence, entertainment, and welfare.

The Publication Committee edits a weekly paper for the branch, and handles whatever advertising may be needed.

The Correspondence Comittee writes to isolated Saints throughout the district, giving them news of the branch and district. They also correspond with young people in branches and isolated places, telling them the news of the organization and endeavoring to develop greater unity, zeal, and fellowship among them.

The Welfare Committee cares for needy families outside the church and by doing this have added quite a number of children to the church school. Another of its duties is the care of children during services, and also assisting the Entertainment Committee in money raising projects.

The motto adopted is: "Keep Going."

The Real You

HAVE YOU ever given much thought to the real you, the person inside whom no one knows so well as you do? How attractive are you trying to make the soul that looks through your eyes out at the world?

"After all," says Lowell, "the kind of world one carries about in one's self is the important thing, and the world outside takes all its grace, color, and value from that."

So the real soul you is important!

We are growing away from the old flippancy: "Beauty is only skin deep." We know that is not true. The lives of many people about us daily prove it to be a fallacy.

Beauty of soul—how it shines through! It puts a glow of friendliness into the eyes, a smile of understanding on the lips, kind words in the mouth; it gives a gentle touch to the hands. It is the indefinable thing which draws us to a man or woman. It is expressed in kindness, friendliness, sincerity, and honesty. All of us want it, but many of us are not willing to pay the price of true beauty of character and soul.

Such beauty comes to us only through consistent and long-practiced efforts to follow Christ—to believe in brotherhood and happiness and peace, to practice honesty and truthfulness, to exercise self-control, to believe in charity and faith and goodness.

The Bright Spot

Make a bright spot every day
For some heart along the way;
Make a place to rest and lean
With the blue sky in between;
That the weary passing there
May be glad of sun and air,
And beyond their lanes of gloom
Hear the birds and see the bloom.

—Folger McKinsey.

NO TIME is better than the present for us as young people to begin to win such beauty. The gospel teaches us to "Think of the beautiful, think of the true," to "talk of the beautiful," to "Live for the beautiful." These are not impractical ideals, fanciful texts—they must be lived if we would make of ourselves consistent Christians and Latter Day Saints.

In our age of rush and hurry, we tend to neglect the real self, the part of us that cries out for improvement, change, growth. No, we are too busy for that today; we will think of that another day. We forget that that beauty-starved soul looks through our eyes every day and gives us away to our fellows.

Sometimes when I have a moment for introspection, or frequently when I hear a stirring sermon or sing an exalting hymn, I wonder what I am doing to the Real Me, the character and personality that I must live with all my life, and then I think of a poem I copied once from Church Chimes:

"You Don't Have to Tell It—
They Know It

"You don't have to tell how you live each day,
You don't have to say if you work or you play;
A tried, true barometer serves in the place—
However you live, it will show in your face.

"The false, the deceit, that you bear in your heart
Will not stay inside where it first got the start;
For sinew and blood are a thin veil of lace—
What you wear in your heart you wear in your face.

"If you dissipate nights, till the day is most nigh
There is only one tattler, and one that won't lie;
Since your facial barometer is right in its place—
You don't have to tell folks—it shows in your face.

"If your life is unselfish, if for others you live,
For not what you get, but how much you can give;
If you live close to God in his infinite grace—
You don't have to tell it, it shows in your face."

Isn't it about time you made the acquaintance of the Real You?

I Am—

The very essence of character.
The first essential to happiness and success.

I nerve men to face the rough and the smooth of life with equal composure.

I am that which enables a man to rule his fears and his passions.

I give men and women greater powers than any king or potentate ever enjoyed.

I lift them above all regrets, all weaknesses, all useless desires and misgivings.

I am that which shows man how to protect himself from his enemies within and without.

I make him the master of circumstances, the ruler of conditions that otherwise would fill him with despair.

Without me, a man is like a mariner without a compass—at the mercy of every wind that blows; the slave of every passion and impulse.

Most of the tragedies, all of the suicides, many of the failures, and much of the poverty and misery of life, are due to the lack of me.

I am the best friend of man, his greatest aid to success. In the midst of dangers and difficulties, in spite of ridicule and opposition, in front of all sorts of provocation, I hold him true to his highest ideals as the needle to the pole.

I am like the celestial worlds that sweep through their orbits in the starry depths, undisturbed by the discords, the turbulence, serene and calm, like the quiet depths of the ocean that flow tranquilly below the tempestuous, storm-tossed surface. The storms and tempests that wreck so many lives—the passions of human beings that mock happiness and wreck success—cannot touch me. I am anchored in the eternal calm of principle.

—I AM SELF-CONTROL.

The Soul of Latter Day Saint Hymnology . . .

By James E. Bishop

IT IS REPORTED, that James Bryce, the great statesman, and author of the classic, The American Constitution, while lecturing on citizenship stopped and said parenthetically, "Who are writing your songs and stirring your hearts—or aren't your hearts being stirred? Nothing is more important than that each generation and each land should have its poets. Each oncoming tide of life, each age requires and needs men of lofty thought who shall dream and sing for it, who shall gather up the tendencies and formulate its ideals and voice its spirit, proclaiming its duties and awakening its enthusiasm, through the high authority of the poet and the art of his verse."

Not only does the singing of songs unify a people and give them new life by creating new desires and formulating new attitudes, the study of the songs sung by a people reveals the innermost recesses of the heart of their psychic life. Professor Odum made a study of the songs of the southern Negro. That study tapped the emotional life of the Negro race. It was an open sesame to a fine strata of humanity. No one could give that interesting study a fair reading and remain the same in his attitude toward the Negro.

THE WORLD WAR required a high degree of unity to carry it through. And one of the greatest unifiers was singing. Not only the civilians, but the men of war sang, "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag and smile, smile, smile." Dr. Hall asked the question, "Why do psychologists who write on army morale never mention music, which is one of its most important adjuvants?" General J. F. Bell said, "A songless army would lack in fighting spirit in proportion as it lacked responsiveness to music. There is no more potent force for developing unity in the army than song." And Dr. Hall well says, "We shall never fully realize the importance of music for morale until we see clearly once and for all that psychologically music is par excellence the language of the heart, feelings, moods, dispositions, sentiments, emotions and attitudes; indeed, of nearly all our vast unconscious life. It is just as much so as speech is the language of the senses and the intellect and, to a less extent, of the will. Music, then, is the organ of affectivity and hence deals with what is more intangible and imponderable though often far more potent, especially to the group mind, than ideas or concepts. Even nations and races sing out of their hearts and reveal in music their deepest and most characteristic traits .... From this its nature, music ought to develop all the classes of sentiment and feeling, and indirectly it tends to strengthen the deeper unconscious instincts men have in common and fuse souls together." No great leader has missed the importance of his people singing the songs that correspond to the goals of his group.

How well does one poet say:

> "The mother of prose is poetry.
> The mother of poetry is music.
> The mother of music is rhythm.
> The mother of rhythm is God."

Wagner says, "Music is the inarticulate expression of the heart, which cannot be compressed into words, because it is infinite."

When we study a people's feelings we have to adopt a sympathetic point of view. When we measure the intellect we may have a war of words and persuade the unskilled that we have demolished our man of straw, but we have not gained much insight by such methods. It is opportune for someone to approach the study of the songs and hymns of Latter Day Saints. What kind of songs did they sing? What may we learn as we thus are enabled to probe into the very depths of their feelings?

JOSEPH SMITH early saw the need of the church adopting hymns. His wife was selected to do this work and many hymns were selected that were used by the congregations of the original church. Latter Day Saints were not slow in developing hymns of their own and many of their own poets arose and wrote their ideals of religion. We find moreover, that just as Latter Day Saint theology has corrected many unwise, narrow and unchristian doctrines held as creeds, so has Latter Day Saints hymnology corrected the errors once sung by many pious people.

If Latter Day Saintism is the Islamism of America where are the songs of Islam? If Latter Day Saintism is so far removed from the Christian religion as some opponents declare then we would expect such to be revealed in the hymns they sing. We do find that the theology of Utah Mormonism expresses itself in its hymnology and that is to be expected, and we shall set out a few examples.

THE CENTRAL THEME of the Christian religion is Jesus Christ. Christ and him crucified representing the God of the Universe and of that God it is declared that He loved the world and to demonstrate his love gave his only begotten Son. These themes together with immortal hope and life and also the brotherhood of man constitute the theme of Christian poets who have written the great hymns for Christians.

In the Quiver for 1899 we find an interesting article on "Everybody's Hymns," by Archdeacon Wynne, D. D. (page 831), and from that article we quote: "A few years ago a clergyman compared fifty well known collections of hymns, and set down as the most popular hymns those which he found in the majority of those books. He found that there are one hundred and five hymns which appear in thirty of these fifty hymnals. He called these first rank hymns, and the twelve first, which occur in almost every book, he asked us to look upon as those which take the lead as favorites in English religious thought." The twelve chief hymns are:

"All Praise to Thee, My God this Night."
"Hark the Herald Angels Sing."
"Lo He Comes, with Clouds Descending."
"Rock of Ages,"
"Abide With Me."
"Awake My Soul and With the Sun."
"Jerusalem the Golden."
"Jesus Lover of My Soul."
"Sun of My Soul, Thou Savior Dear."
"When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."
"Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty."
"Jesus Christ is Risen Today."

It is a matter of striking moment that eight of these hymns should be found in the Saints' Harp, Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises. In a new hymn book published recently another of these twelve was added, namely "Sun of my Soul."

Among the writers of hymns sung by Latter Day Saints we find Wesley, Watts, Doddridge, Montgomery, Condor, Newton, Lyte, Palmer, Hastings, Whittier, Moore, Bryant, Huntington, Hawthronwaite, Johnson, Barbauld, Milman, Brydges, Maitland, Furness, Duffield, Edmiston, Sankey, Gabriel, Palmer, Crosby; and of Fanny J. Crosby's hymns we have very many in the Zion's Praises.

THE SELECTION OF HYMNS made by Emma Smith was eventually published in 1841. This book contained 304 hymns. Of these 180 appear in the Saints' Harp published in 1870. This edition contains eleven hundred and twenty hymns.

Among the hymns selected by Emma Smith are several of the famous hymns of Watts and Wesley as well as other writers of the enduring and standard hymns of the Christian religion. These were supplemented by many hymns written by Latter Day Saints. One of the most prolific hymn writers among the early Latter Day Saints was W. W. Phelps. His hymns reveal a breadth of mentation from the point of view of rich and varied imagery. Some people are entirely visual, others motor-auditory. Very few show that all of the senses have corresponding imagery—at least there does not seem to be evidence that all the imagery corresponding to the senses function in many people. The following hymn by W. W. Phelps indicates a rich and varied imagery.

"Earth with her ten thousand flowers,
Air with all its beams and showers,
Heaven's infinite expanse,
Ocean's lustrous countenance—
All around, and all above,
Hath this record, God is Love."

The first line and part of the second line is visual and the latter part of the second line is tactile, which would seem to be very unusual. The next three lines have the sense distance and height and depth mixed with visual again and climaxed with religious insight. The next verse is of great interest:

"Sounds among the vales and hills,
In the woods and by the rills,
Of the breeze and of the bird,
Of the gentle murmur stirred—
Sacred songs, beneath, above,
Have one chorus—God is love."

Here in this second verse the auditory imagery is dominant, but it also mingles with the tactile sense again (breeze).

The last stanza is introspective:

"All the hopes that sweetly start,
From the fountain of the heart;
All the bliss that ever comes
To our earthly, human homes—
All the voices from above,
Sweetly whisper—God is love."

This little poem, which is so loved by Latter Day Saints, starts with its description of objectivity and concludes with its subjective element and is climaxed in each verse with religious conviction.

IN THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE the hesitant and deferring apologetic expressed by Justin Martyr was thrown aside by the militant Tertullian. Likewise the meekness of Mr. Partridge, when he submitted himself to the mob, provided they would allow the women and children to leave in safety was gradually dispensed with.

The Latter Day Saints were driven from place to place in Missouri and without just cause. Finally they were driven from Missouri and a price placed upon the head of their prophet. They appealed to the president of the United States, who told them that their (Continued on page 1554)

Disarmament of the Emotions

A few days ago—on October 9th—the well-meaning solons of Europe assembled at Geneva for a disarmament conference.

Beside the storied Swiss lake statesmen in frock coats and their secretaries carrying ominous-looking portfolios are running to and fro.

At the formal dinners and at informal teas there smile sweetly the representatives of the nations of the world who stand arrayed against each other with the sullen hatred of old wars still festering in their hearts.

Talk, talk, talk. The grandly-phrased treaties with great red seals announcing good intentions.

And behind it all the hell of national egoism.

The world is beginning to get the first glimmer of the truth that a disarmament of guns and ships is meaningless without a disarmament of emotions.

What will happen at Geneva this month is a repetition of that nasty document which broke the hearts of the world—the Kellogg-Briand Non-Aggression Pact. This was a solemn and meaningless pledge to renounce all wars but defensive wars—but the catch was that each nation reserved the right to define whether any war it engaged in was offensive or defensive.

We know now that such pious phrases are only useful to codify the purple hypocrisy of 1914-1918.

What the world needs is not the abolition of guns and ships and tanks, but the abolition of "Deutsch Uber Alles" and "100% Americanism" and "Rule Britannia" and "La France Avant Tout."

After that has been attained, material disarmament will come of itself.—Winslow Thorpe, in World Digest.

More Out of Life

To grasp the right view of religion is to realize that it is a set of rules to enable us to get more out of the game of life. The Ten Commandments sum up the wisdom of God and of man as to how we have to act if we are to win. At times they may seem to cramp our style somewhat, but in the long run the man who keeps these Commandments gets more out of living than the man who breaks them.—J. Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

The Spirit of Testimony

If the church could recapture the spirit of testimony manifested in the early age of its history, what a power we could be! But we are become a complacent people quite satisfied with ourselves. Above all things else we need the spirit of testimony. We need to live the words of Jesus: "And ye shall be witnesses unto me."—J. D. Robbins, Minister, First M. E. Church, South, Independence, Missouri.

Notes on a Sermon by Apostle D. T. Williams

Text: "My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." (John 14: 27.)

We must realize that peace comes through discharge of responsibilities which God has assigned us. We are asked to heed his teachings and carry out these responsibilities.

Christ died, as some thought him, a common criminal, yet he had said to his followers, "My peace I leave with you." The apostles were peaceful, but their peace was not what the world defined as peace. In the face of severe persecution, they had confidence in their Redeemer, the confidence which comes only through being in touch with God.

Peace is not laziness or indolence. The normal mind is not happy unless it is doing something and doing it well. We have responsibilities one to another and to the world.

Cooperation is a demonstration of peace. "Workers together with God." God's peace is the kind that brings satisfaction to the soul. We cannot learn to work with God unless we learn to work with each other. The task of the church is to demonstrate the stewardship plan. When this plan is developed there will be no rich, no poor, no unemployment. It is a perfect plan wherein God's wisdom will be displayed. Our task is not to gain personal salvation but to earn collective salvation.

Let us make our hearts clean and pure so that we can lay the foundation which in the end shall be called the kingdom of God.

Sectarianism Doomed

"Our denominational system is spiritually bankrupt. The foundations upon which the denominations have been accustomed to justify their existence have been steadily subsiding for many years. Today our church structures rest on frail stilts. Religious vitality is low. Our sects are all operating on momentum from the past, rather than on power generated in the living present.

"The unmistakable proof of this spread out before us in the fate that has overtaken the denominational missionary enterprise. But it is also evident in the condition of the local churches. By our denominational competition we have developed five times too many churches, far too many ministers and theological seminaries, too many missionary societies—in a word, we have so greatly over-expanded the ecclesiastical "plant" that religion is no more able to keep it operating than the people's purchasing power is able to support the vast industrial plant which was developed under competition during the post-war decade. The churches are thus forced into all sorts of irrelevant and unspiritual stunts and devices in order to keep going. . . . The situation is pathetic. Thousands of churches that ought to merge with one another are trying desperately to keep alive. But their fate is sealed. The system that spawned our sectarian churches is doomed. It keeps itself alive only by inertia and vested interests and a visionless leadership."—From an editorial in the Christian Century for November 29, 1933.

Heading Into the Storm

Recently Dr. Hugo Eckener brought his great Graf Zeppelin to the Akron, Ohio, airport. A great storm had been raging and newspaper reporters were anxious to find how the ship had weathered the blow. They rushed to the commander.

"Tell us how you ride out of an approaching storm, Dr. Eckener?" they asked.

The stolid commander smiled.

"We don't try to ride out of the storm," he said. "When we see it approaching we head into it and fight our way through."

There is a mighty nice bit of philosophy in this for preachers and churches who have been trying to dodge the social and spiritual upheaval. Too many have been trying to ride out of the storm. Better to accept it, head into it, and fight it through.—Editorial in Church Management.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

"The Common Cold"

By A. W. Teel, M. D.
Church Physician

"A common cold" in the fall and winter months surpasses in frequency any other disease condition, especially in the middle west and eastern states. Carelessness concerning health habits is one of the most frequent causes of this serious condition. The cold itself is not so serious as its complications. There are few diseases that have required more research work than the common cold, and in spite of all this expensive research work the direct cause remains unknown. Practically all investigators have come to the conclusion that it is due to a germ of some kind.

Anyone that has a lowered resistance of the body is susceptible and this is frequently brought about by exposure of the body to extremes of heat or cold, and for this reason those who live in a changeable climate should be careful to regulate their clothing accordingly. It has been found that the lack of certain vitamins in the diet is one of the chief predisposing causes, also that the inhalation of irritant gasses and vapors, tobacco and powders, are attributable as some of the most common causes. Rheumatic or scrofulous tendencies render the mucous membrane peculiarly susceptible to frequent attacks. The lack of sufficient sleep, continued exposure to cold, wet and dampness and hunger are other factors that must not be overlooked.

Colds like influenza and pneumonia are very properly classified under the general term of "crowd diseases." They spread quickly from one individual to another largely by spraying the germ laden secretions in coughing, spitting, sneezing and talking. Those who are infected or in any way lowered in health should avoid crowds, and those having coughs or colds should protect their fellow beings by avoiding coughing or sneezing in such a way as would convey infection. A handkerchief or some other receptacle should be used to catch a sneeze or cough. Gauze or sputum cups should be used for sputum and subsequently burned. Coughing or sneezing in the hand should be avoided whenever possible as there is danger in thus conveying the infection to the next person with whom you may shake hands. There is great danger of extending the infection, by repeated blowing of the nose, to the various sinuses or to the Eustachian tube and middle ear causing temporary or permanent deafness which may extend to the pharynx or larynx, giving rise to a cough. "Cold on the chest" results from the infection attacking the bronchial tubes or lungs. Many other disabling infections are caused by frequent attacks of colds, such as neuritis, arthritis, heart, kidney disease and conjunctivitis.

Any deformities of the nasal passages render one susceptible to colds; typical deformities are adenoids and diseased tonsils in children, malformation of the teeth and dental arches that are so frequently neglected which interferes with the development of the internal nasal structures resulting in nasal obstruction. Such a condition increases the liability to the involvement of the middle ear and of the mastoid cells which are located just behind the ear. The too frequent use of nasal sprays or douches is not advisable. The mucous membranes of some people are intolerant of water solutions and are liable to produce a chronic conjested condition. These should be used only on the advice of a physician. Individual hygiene and its strict obedience will almost wholly prevent colds. High-protein foods should be eaten lightly and masticated thoroughly. Meat should be avoided. Constipation predisposes to colds, and should be vigorously combated by proper diet and exercise and avoidance of fatigue. The room temperature should be kept between 65 and 68 F. "A day in bed" is a good remedial measure for one who has actually contracted a cold. The feet and all parts of the body should be kept thoroughly and evenly warm; at least it is safer to keep indoors if one does not remain in bed. The room should be kept free from drafts and humidified. Extremes of excessive dryness or moisture increases the congestion of the mucous membranes. Contrary to the usual public opinion, I must say that "stuffing a cold and starving a fever" is an erroneous idea as it is wise to fast and skip a meal or two using nothing but water, orange or lemon juice, partaking of food that has bulk but little food value such as fruit, green vegetables or salads. Some of the simple domestic remedies in early stages of a cold or influenza is a level teaspoonful of ordinary baking soda every hour dissolved in a glass of water for several doses. In addition to this a hot foot bath between 110 and 115 F. together with a hot drink of some kind. The foot bath should last about 15 or 20 minutes. After the foot bath the person should go immediately to bed. Whiskey or any form of alcoholic drinks and large doses of quinine are positively harmful. My advice is, if home remedies do not improve the disease, call your doctor as he may be able to save you money, needless suffering and some serious complication. A good resolution after one has recovered from a cold is to avoid catching them again, which may be substantially accomplished by following the suggestions in this and previous Health Letters.

Above Price

ELDRED HAMPTON was the first person to hear of one of Larry's resolutions. The girl chose early Monday morning to tell her of it. She did not even take time to dress, but came downstairs in her green wrapper and the poppy-colored bedroom slippers Doc had given her at Christmas.

Because she felt very humble and very much at the beginning of things, she chose to sit on the broad brown ottoman at Eldred's feet.

It was Mrs. Hampton's custom to rise early, and after starting breakfast, she left Aunt Annie in charge, returned to the dining room, sank into her favorite chair close to her flowers, and read the Scriptures. Much of Eldred Hampton's cheer and the quality people chose to call bravery, could have been traced back to this early hour when the quiet little woman communed with her God and her own soul.

This morning she laid aside the Book of Mormon she had been reading and smiled up at her early visitor.

"Feeling better about that bracelet?" she gently inquired.

"No," Larry shook her fair head, "not better, just resigned. If we don't find that—I want to pay you for it, Mother Eldred."

"My dear, I'm afraid I can't explain so that you will understand exactly what I mean, but I would rather you did not. It was priceless to me in a way, and to try to put a price in dollars and cents on it seems something like a desecration. There are things in this world—no matter what some people say, Larry—that are above a price. Like this, for instance," and her fingers caressed the satiny leaf of a begonia plant near her. "You would probably pay a dollar and a half to get this plant at a greenhouse—but, my dear, you aren't paying for the plant. You're paying someone for thinking to prepare it for you — planting, nourishing, and potting it so that it comes to you in this convenient form, blooming and radiant. Your money does not buy for you this wonderful collection of growing cells. The plant itself is God's. He only loans it to us for beauty and blessing."

"I've wondered about that," soberly, "quite a lot—the things that are above price, I mean."

"But that was not what you came to talk about," smiled Mrs. Hampton. "You came down to tell me something." Often her remarkable insight into human nature and her gift of prescience combined to startle Eldred's friends. But Larry was not surprised.

"I knew you would understand," she said simply, frankly; "you're that kind of a person. But I want you to tell me candidly—don't you think me a waster?"

"A waster, my dear child, you with your frugal ways!"

"Well, perhaps not a waster, exactly, but an idler, a parasite. Here I am twenty-two years old, have never done anything particularly to help anyone. I'm an orphan—oh, of course, I've adopted you and Doc and John," she hastened to put in, giving the woman's hand a quick little squeeze, "but by blood I'm an orphan. During the last few years I've done pretty much as I pleased, and I haven't always been economical. Right now, I'm trying to save up my money to pay the tithing I owe—and that brings me right to the point."

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Yielding to a temptation with some misgivings, Larry accompanies Greg to a costume ball, wearing a valuable bracelet that is an heirloom belonging to Eldred Hampton. To the discomfiture of being thrown in the company of men she dislikes, Larry is horrified to find she has lost—or been robbed of—the bracelet. Days of remorse follow. The bracelet is not found. Larry struggles with herself, feeling bitter about what she has done, and tries to make some new resolutions.

SHE PAUSED to push a lock of hair away from her forehead. The other woman did not speak.

"I'm woefully ignorant about the church," she confessed. "Before I pay my tithing I must know how much I owe, know how to reckon it. That's where I am a waster, Mother Eldred. With all the information there is to be had on that subject, all the classes taught about it, all the discussions and writings, here I am a perfectly able-bodied and, I hope, intelligent member of the church, utterly ignorant. And it's not only about tithing—its about dozens of other matters. What do you think I should do?"

Thoughtfully Eldred took her Bible from the shelf within reach of her short arm. For a moment she thumbed the pages, then the book fell open as if it were accustomed to resting open at that place.

"Paul's advice to Timothy is the best I know," she began: "'Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.' That's been one of my favorite verses all my life."

"And you show it, darling; but I, well, 'study to show thyself approved' is a big order. Where shall I begin?"

"The Doctrine and Covenants tells us to study all good books. Of course, I think we should first familiarize ourselves with the three standard books of the church—and that is one great big task. But we are to study other books, too. God wants us to use all good things to our own profit and his glory."

"Is there any class or club that will help me get there more quickly? I mean help me learn all this?"

"I know of no shortcuts to a knowledge of God and his holy word, child," was the reply. "You have entered a school that will last the rest of your life. But prayer will help you beyond your power to comprehend. Even if you feel that your prayers don't get very far, don't be discouraged. Keep right on praying. Then is when help comes. That is faith and its exercise."

With an abrupt movement Larry laid her face in Eldred's lap. "Oh, how I want to be like you, Mother Eldred!" she choked. "I doubt if you can understand how I appreciate you. I wasn't brought up to study or have much of a goal—we were always so busy with other things." It was well that she could not see the painful contraction of the older woman's throat at that moment. She continued: "I'm blind to lots of things that I ought to see, and I wish you'd just feel free to give me suggestions about what I should do that I am not doing, and what I should not do that I am doing. Do you understand what I mean?" she lifted an earnest face. "It would make you seem so much more like my family."

"I think I understand, my dear, and I'll try to be a real mother to you." The eyes above her were dewy.

A moment later Larry went on: "I should like to join a class that is seriously studying things about the church—the organization, history, latter-day revelations, priesthood, the teaching work of the church. I believe someday it is in the teaching field that I could help."

"I don't doubt but that you will make a splendid teacher, and that not so far

www.LatterDayTruth.org

in the future," agreed Mrs. Hampton. "But how about a class—"

"I'm not crazy to join a strictly young people's group unless they are serious about their study. By that I mean unless their desire to study transcends their wish to socialize and date about and have a lot of fun."

"Why don't you talk to Carmen about this? There are a number of study classes here for young people and others for adults, but I don't know so much about them. Carmen is up on that kind of information, and she would be glad to suggest. I'm happy, incidentally, that you and Carmen are growing to be friends."

"So'm I," the girl rose gratefully. "I like her so much, and I'll ask her.

BUT IT CHANCED that Eldred Hampton saw Carmen Blaine several days before Larry. On Monday Carmen generally worked the early shift at the store, and was home by four o'clock. That afternoon she swept into Mrs. Hampton's living room with a shower of snowflakes.

Five minutes later, she sat warming her toes at the register, and consuming cocoa and some of Eldred's oatmeal cookies. Eldred herself buzzed busily about, chattering of Larry.

"She's a promising girl, dear," she declared, "and you can help her a lot. She'll return it in gratitude and friendship—she's that kind. Of course, I know you have all the load you can carry—Did Sallie Ruth stay out late last night again? And did she have another date with that young roisterer, Bill What's-his-name?"

Carmen nodded with a trace of reluctance. At mention of her sister, her slender shoulders seemed to droop.

"Oh, I'm so sorry, dear!" consoled Eldred. "I do believe though, you could manage her if your mother were away for a time. Couldn't you arrange to get her to take that visit to the folks in Iowa? She's been talking about it for weeks. Maybe she could stay up there the rest of the winter?"

"But the money, Eldred—I just don't have it."

"It wouldn't cost so much, and it would be worth the price. I'll let you have fifty dollars."

"Will you let me pay interest?"

"I'd rather you didn't."

"Then I can't—"

"Now, Carmen Blaine, your little sister's future is worth more than fifty dollars to you any old day in the week. Don't let's argue over mere money. Won't you see if you can get your mother away because as long as she's around, anyone with half an eye can see you're powerless to get anywhere with Sallie Ruth."

"What would I do without you, Eldred?" sighed Carmen putting her arms about her friend and hiding her face on the other's shoulder. And presently: "Maybe that would be best. "I'll try."

"But back to Larry," Mrs. Hampton resumed, picking up a piece of sewing she had dropped. "She's an ambitious, good-hearted girl, and if you can help her, you will have done your share in making a mighty useful woman. At present she's a little befuddled and inclined to be morbid. I'm a firm believer in being a missionary right among the people in the church—there are many who have not seen the Light."

FOR THREE EVENINGS in succession Larry worked late at the office, and arrived home only in time to eat, change her clothes, and go out again. On Thursday evening she was preparing to go with Greg to the city. A group of their friends were indulging in a theater line party. She was humming a popular air as she powdered her neck and shoulders, when a light knock sounded at the door, and Carmen tripped in.

"You! I'm so tickled to see you!" Larry jumped up to greet her. "I've wanted to see you all week, but our office has been rushed to death with work. We've laid off so much help over there that it keeps those who are left buried with things to do."

"I've wanted to see you, too," Carmen dropped breathlessly upon the bed. "I just had to see you a few minutes tonight. Care if I stay while you finish dressing?"

"Can't you see I'm wild to have you? But that sounded like Nancy, didn't it?"

"Heard from her recently?"

"Not since we were up there. She's dragging some youngster from the South through the heights and depths of puppy love just now, and I guess that keeps her fairly well occupied. But she's not much of a writer anyway."

Then, of course, Carmen had to tell Larry some of the news John had written in his last letter. He had preached his first sermon, and had assisted at a prayer meeting. This led to a discussion of recent events at the Stone Church.

"But I must tell you what I came for," Carmen smiled. "I came to ask you something—seems that I spend considerable of my time routing you out in your room to ask you things, doesn't it?"

"I like it," solemnly declared the other girl studying her reflection in the mirror.

"I wondered if you would like to join our Sunday evening six o'clock class—the W. H. Y. Class, meaning We Help You. It's composed mostly of young people though there are older members, too, and we're studying the Doctrine and Covenants. We only just decided on the course of study the other night, last Sunday, and in the light of that resolution you and I made before we went to Lamoni—to study some of the latter-day revelations—I thought you might be interested. Would you?"

"Would I? Why, Carmen, you're my fairy godmother! I was going to ask you about some classwork. This is the best news I've heard in a week. I should say I would like to join." More seriously: "Really, it's an answer to prayer."

"We'd be delighted to have Greg join, too. I believe once quite awhile back he belonged to the class."

"Then he'll probably come again."

"Brother Aaron Carter is our teacher and he knows the Doctrine and Covenants from cover to cover. He's a high priest, and we're very fortunate to get him to teach us."

The Law of Tithing

By J. A. Morrison

I have given this matter much earnest study and consideration and have reached the conclusion that there is not one whit more blessing to be derived from the observance of the law of tithing than there is from any other ordinance which God has set in his church for the perfecting of his people. Let us examine it.

Malachi, speaking of Christ's coming, says, "He shall be like a refiner's fire," etc. Doctrine and Covenants states, "He that is tithed shall not be burned at His coming." Moses' face shone so, after contact with God that they requested him to put a veil on; they could not look on him. If we have not kept God's Law, how can we expect to look upon Christ when he comes? Summed up in a few words, the law of tithing is God's "Antidote for Selfishness." We are well aware that for each poison there is an antidote, and the remedy is usually printed on the bottle. Selfishness in the world and the church has become so pronounced that an observance of the law of tithing is the only remedy to offset this disease. To say that we are to be outstandingly and wonderfully blessed because we keep that law would have a tendency to set at naught all the other ordinances which Christ has set in his house to bring his people to a higher state of development.

Some years ago in the city of London, Ontario, a certain Hebrew after listening to one of Elder R. C. Evans's wonderful sermons on the benefits and blessings to be obtained by paying tithing, paid his tithing to Brother Evans regularly, so it has been stated. The Jew was not a member of the church but he paid it from a business standpoint. He was persuaded that he would be greatly blessed if he complied with that portion of the law. Probably he omitted several others that were of equal importance: judgment, mercy, and faith. (Matthew 23: 23.)

The late President Joseph Smith in his kindly way, speaking of the observance of the law of tithing, stated, "As to the degree of glory which may attack or may be lost from the payment or nonpayment of tithing, I have no opinion to

We Revere Mark H. Forscutt in Memory and Song

By L. B. M.

"Bow, ye mortals, bow before him,
Bow and keep his sacred word;
Bow in reverence and adore him,
Bow, confess your Savior, Lord."

Beautiful worship thoughts that reach deep into the soul, stirring men to love and adoration of Christ and to profound and sincere humility before him. With these words Mark H. Forscutt, one of our own hymn writers, has appropriated and made a part of our services the beautiful hymn melody "Precious Name," written by W. H. Doane.

"Bow, ye angels, chant his praises,
Strike your lyres with one accord,
While each voice melodious raises
Pæans unto Christ, the Lord."

We know these words and we love them. We sing them often in our prayer and worship services, losing ourselves in exaltation of soul born of the beautiful words and the sweep of the music. Brother Forscutt's version of "Precious Name" appears as Number 2 in the new Saints' Hymnal, and Number 3 in Hymns of the Centennial known to all reunion and conference goers in the church. In Zion's Praises the same tune is used, but the words are those of Mrs. Lydia Baxter.

What joy springs from the thoughts inspired by the third verse!

"Men and angels, seraphs joining,
In one grand harmonious chord,
Voice and instrument combining,
All confess that Christ is Lord."

There was music, real music, in the soul of the man who wrote those words. In this history bears us out—Brother Forscutt was a musician, a hymn writer and composer. He wrote many hymns, tunes and verses, which live today and are familiar to us. Among the hundreds of songs which appear in the latest hymnbook of the church, the Saints' Hymnal, he is author of the words of "Heavenly Father, We Adore Thee!" "Bow, Ye Mortals, Bow Before Him," and "Met in Thy Sacred Name, O Lord," and he composed the music for "Burst, Ye Emerald Gates," "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel," and "Send Forth the Sowers."

In the copy of the old Saints' Harp which lies before me—Brother Forscutt's own book, inscribed with his notes and corrections—are many more of his compositions. He was a man who loved to hear people worship in song.

Mark H. Forscutt was born at Bath, England, June 19, 1834, the son of Thomas and Amy Hill Forscutt. While still young he became interested in the gospel message carried to England by early missionaries, and at nineteen he joined the church, his choice ostracizing him from his family. For over fifty years he was a minister in the church, and at the time of his death the Daily Tribune (Nebraska City, Nebraska), described him as "One of the most able and scholarly advocates of its [the church's] tenets, retaining throughout his long life, the love, respect, and honor of all men for his kindly and humane sympathy, his scholarly attainments and the integrity and uprightness that marked his intercourse in public or private with all the world."

Though not associated with the history of the restored church in the time of Joseph Smith the founder, Brother Forscutt was none the less faithful to the gospel. He endured family bitterness, pioneer hardships, and real danger for the sake of truth. He married Miss Elizabeth Unsworth, March 25, 1860, and on their wedding day they left England for America. They were among the pioneers who crossed the plains to Utah, but after arriving at Salt Lake City and finding the church under the domination of Brigham Young, they withdrew from it, thereby subjecting themselves to many dangers and difficulties for that which they knew to be right and true.

It was not long until they heard of the Reorganization, and joined the movement. Brother Forscutt then devoted the remainder of his long life to the ministry. He returned from the West in 1868, and that year was ordained a high priest. He was a personal friend of President Joseph Smith under whose appointment he labored faithfully. For some time he acted as secretary of the church. He preached many, many sermons fired by the power of the Spirit; he converted people to the truth and baptized them. He did pastoral work, and he labored in many missions.

In 1872, he was sent on a mission to England by the church, and twenty years later he went to the South Sea Islands. He gave unstintingly of himself to any task that he was assigned. In 1878, he was ordained first counselor to the president of the high priests' quorum. A year later he was designated at the semiannual conference of the church as "musical editor of the church," and to him was given the work of taking charge of and preparing material to be printed in The Saints' Harmony.

Brother Forscutt's life was spent in confessing Christ as his Lord, (Continued on page 1564)

Will Saints Pray for Small Group?

I became a member of the church when I was twelve years of age. I am now thirty, and my only regret is that at times I have strayed from the church. I feel much better when I can be among the Saints.

We have a small Sunday school here, but it is not growing in numbers. We need someone to help our school grow.

My husband is not a member of the church, but it is my prayer that he will become one in the near future. I have been blessed many times and am thankful for all good things. I wish the Saints would remember us in their prayers, that God's work will be carried on in this place.

Would Prepare for Service

I am very young in the latter-day work although I have been a member of the church seven years. I was baptized when eight years of age.

I am thankful for the days I spent with the wonderful little group, North East Mission, in Kansas City. It was there I first learned what my church means to me. Although it is a little branch, the young people are well represented and eager to learn more concerning the gospel. I am proud of that mission, its members, and the good influence they had on me.

Many blessings have been given me. I am proud that I am a Latter Day Saint. But I think if more of the young men and women of the church realized the importance of a righteous life, we should be nearer building Zion.

Our little group here is dwindling in number, but our prayers are that even though few in number, we may be blessed with the abiding faith in God and his Son, and that we may strive to serve him. I only ask that I shall be able to prepare for a life of service and helpfulness. I want to achieve the things Christ would have me achieve.

My prayers are for the Saints, that Zion will be glorified by us who compose the present-day church.

God Is Close To Us

Thanksgiving will soon be here, the time when we should offer our thanks to God for his goodness to us.

God has been very close to me all through my life, giving me many wonderful blessings. Had it not been for his tender mercy in the past, I would not be alive today to tell of his goodness to me. His comforting and cheering presence has been with me in the death of loved ones, in sickness, and in trial. Only recently, when our family was called upon to share in the depression as others have been called, I knew despair and sickness of soul, and then, when I felt I could not go on alone, I cried out to God for strength to bear my part and there came that sweet comforting presence.

We are trying to live in harmony with God's law, and since the Far West Stake reunion, we have established our family altar and are paying our tithes more regularly, even though it is not a great deal. Since our effort, I can say that God has blessed us with peace and comfort, and we hope to continue until we have fulfilled all the law.

I love this gospel. It has been the most precious and soul-satisfying thing in my life and I know it must mean as much to others. God loves all his children and I know what he has done for me, he will do for all who seek him earnestly.

Pray for me that I may walk in that narrow way that leads to God and eternal life.

MRS. BEATRICE BOHRER.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The Importance of Faith

I have learned that without faith we can accomplish nothing. My faith has been tested often.

My patriarchal blessing says that I must be faithful and true to the covenant which I have made with the Lord. It tells me that the Evil One will seek to overcome and destroy me.

The only way of safety open to us is to resist his wiles and put our trust in God, relying on his promises. Friends may forsake us. Those who have been friends, may turn away, but Jesus, our Lord, will not turn away; with his Spirit he will abide always with us.

Right now I am passing through trials, and I want to be faithful. I need the prayers of the Saints for me and for my family. I know this is the true church. I have gone to other churches, but their teachings do not satisfy my craving for truth. I have believed the gospel for nineteen years, and want to consecrate myself to the service of Christ.

Joys in Meeting with Saints

I am very thankful for the opportunity to meet with the Saints and enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. We have regular services every Sunday here at Paris Branch, Sunday school, prayer meeting at 11 a. m., and preaching in the evening, also prayer meeting on each Wednesday evening. Not long ago a sermon by Elder Roy Hunt on "Fruits of the Spirit" greatly impressed me.

But I want mostly to tell you about a wonderful day of meetings we had November 19, with May's Hill Branch in Kentucky and Tennessee District. "Keep the Law" was the theme of the round table forum held at eleven o'clock, Pastor C. B. Gallimore in charge. In this session many questions were asked by the members and answered by Brother Gallimore.

Twenty-one were present at the two o'clock afternoon sacrament and prayer service, and everyone took part. This was a time of outpouring of the Spirit of God, and workers felt greatly blessed.

Then we went to administer to Sister Booth who is very ill. She is seventy-five years old, and about two years ago she requested Brother Gallimore to come into the May's Hill community to preach as she was not able to attend church far from home. The branch there has since been reorganized, and holds meetings all day every third Sunday. About forty members live in the community, but some are a distance from the church. E. Y. BUMPASS.

Loves the Truth

I have been a member of the church for some time, and am doing my best to obey the financial law. I think it our duty to obey this part of the law.

In the Herald for July 25, 1933, I noticed an article written by Elder U. W. Greene, entitled "Learn the Truth Through Prayer." In later issues I also noticed that some Saints were much impressed by the article. To say that I was much impressed, would be putting it mildly.

At the time I read the article, I was ill with muscular rheumatism, but was able to read and enjoy the Herald. I became a member of the church September 27, 1891, thinking that I was to be the only member of my family to do so, but as Brother Greene led me from the waters of baptism, Brother George Robley led my companion down to the waters.

An old neighbor and school friend recently called on me. He moved away in the year of 1889, just before Brother Greene brought the gospel here in all of its fullness. I gave him several copies of the Herald to read. He was much impressed with them, and consequently I have sent them to him each week.

I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may continue to be faithful to the end. W. M. ANDREWS.

Helping "Keep the Law"

I have outlined a program that takes me to every organized group of Saints in this district, and a few of the isolated ones, in the interests of the "Keep the Law" period. Beginning November 4, I will continue until December 23 reaching about twenty-one groups of our people in the Rock Island District. So far as I have gone to date, I find my message well received, and a number asking for inventory blanks and Handbooks on the Financial Law. The outlook is encouraging from a standpoint of the filing of new inventories, but I am not expecting a great deal of money to come in from this district at this time. I feel, however, that we are laying a splendid foundation for the church of the coming years. We should have emphasized that part of the law in the past, as we are doing it now, and the church would not be in the distress that it now finds itself.

PRESIDENT, ROCK ISLAND DISTRICT. E. R. DAVIS.

I propose to visit each local in this district personally in behalf of this matter. I have already visited Byrnville Branch and Louisville and New Albany locals. Expect to go to Marengo and Derby and possibly Indianapolis between now and the time the period ends.

I will do all I possibly can to create a desire to "Keep the Law" in a financial way and hope to have the Southern Indiana District make a favorable showing.

SOUTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT. W. O. ROBERTSON.

We are carrying out the financial law program as outlined in the Herald in our services Sunday, November 26th, so desire the inventory reports soon as we can get them so that we can get around and get our inventory in shape. With best wishes, and hoping things are looking brighter for our church, I am, Your brother,

EDWARD R. CARTER.

GLADSTONE, MICHIGAN.

Request Prayers

Sister Annis I. Crandall, of San Diego, California, seeks the prayers of the Saints that if it be God's will she may be healed of a severe affliction and restored to full health.

Mrs. E. E. Lloyal, of Brunelda, Montana, wishes to thank all who prayed and fasted for her.

Sister Minnie M. Keillor, of Hope, North Dakota, requests prayers for her little granddaughter, Phyllis Ruth Woodford. They are isolated from the church and know of no elders to administer to the child.

Brother Lafayette Gott, of Toledo, Ohio, who has been out of work for twenty-two months, asks the prayers of his brothers and sisters of the gospel, that the way will be opened up for him to find employment. He bears a strong testimony to the truth of the latter-day work and expresses appreciation for the letters he reads in the Herald.

Lester Whiting, president of Union Branch, Clitherall, Minnesota, asks the prayers of the Saints in Zion and the entire church, to be united with those of members of Union Branch, in behalf of little Gloria Stabnow, five years old, who is afflicted with epileptic fits, that if it is God's will, she may be healed. Brother and Sister Stabnow are new members of the church. Union Branch will have special prayer for Gloria Wednesday evening, December 6.

The True Power

We are anxious that our children shall grow up joyous, clean-limbed, eager-minded, true-spirited. All we need is power. Then call in the electric hammer and the steam-shovel; in them is power to spare. Ah, but no power to make a boy or girl grow as Jesus grew. Or we would be free from the intolerable load of our sins. All we need is power. Then call upon one of those new battleships. It has power. Yes, but—power for what? Power to blast, but no power to forgive! No power there to make an enslaved will walk in freedom! No power there to lift the cloud of sorrow! No power there to make a friendly earth! When all the blasting has been done, somebody must begin to build. Only love can build. . . .

The Cross—God's power! But power for what? If God's purpose is to make men and women kind and true, then removing mountains into the sea and plucking stars from the sky (such wonders as the world has always required of its Messiahs) are a waste of time. New battleships are worse than a waste of time. What will make people Christlike? The Cross, for instance! There is always the Cross! Love laying down its life—parents for their children, patriots for their country, laborers doing it for us at what seems to be

Paul tells us, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love him." (1 Corinthians 2: 9.) Our enjoyment of these incomparable delights waits not upon our deaths that we may enter paradise, but upon our perfecting our faith until all things are possible to us.

cause was just, but for political reasons he could not help them. The friendship of Illinois was enjoyed for a few years, during which time they built a beautiful city of some forty thousand people. But again the voice and instrument of persecution arose, together with dissension within the church. This terminated in the death of Joseph Smith and the evacuation of Nauvoo. The early meekness of the Saints was now transplanted by a determination to care for themselves, and Brigham Young led a few thousand who were followed by thousands of others out of the jurisdiction of the United States. During this transition the tenderness and deep religious feeling of their songs are transformed for we see the evidence of a decadence.

Of their trek across the plains they sang:

"The time of winter now is o'er,
There's verdure on the plains,
We leave our sheltering roofs once more
And to our tents again!

Chorus:

"O, camp of Israel, onward move;
O, Jacob, rise and sing;
Ye saints, the world salvation prove,
All hail to Zion's King."

Of the hand cart trail they sang:

"We're going to Zion with our carts
And the Spirit of God in our hearts."

And the chorus of another:

"Hurrah for the camp of Israel!
Hurrah for the hand cart scheme!
Hurrah! Hurrah! Tis better far
Than wagon and ox-team."

As a sort of parting shot to their merciless persecutors they sang:

"Hozanna, Hozanna, to God! He has broke From off our necks the Gentile Yoke."

And in what Bancroft calls their national hymn they sang:

"All hell has combined with the World's bitter hatred.
Usurped men's best right, all
Our freedom suppressed."

Their feeling that the heavens would vindicate them is expressed:

"Sacred home of the prophets of God,
Thy deliverance is nigh,
Thy oppressors shall die
And the Gentiles shall bow 'neath thy rod!"

BANCROFT RECORDS that Brigahm Young called upon Brother Dunbar to sing the song in which those lines occur at a time when the United States Commissioners were in conference with Brigham Young. After the singing of the song Commings and McCulloch withdrew. "What would you do with such a people?" asked the governor. "Damn them, I would fight them if I had my way," answered the major. "Fight them, would you? Did you notice the snap in those men's eyes today? They would never know when they were whipped."

The following song was composed by Levi W. Hancock, a member of the Mormon batallion, during their march from Santa Fe to San Diego:

"While here beneath a sultry sky,
Our famished mules and cattle die;
Scarce ought but skin and bones remain,
To feed poor soldiers on the plain."

Chorus:

"How hard to starve and wear us out
Upon this sandy desert route.

"We sometimes now for lack of bread,
Are less than quarter rations fed
And soon expect, for all of meat,
Naught else than broke-down mules to eat.

"Now half starved oxen, over-drilled;
Too weak to draw, for beef are killed;
And gnawing hunger prompting men
To eat small entrails and the skin."

Nine years after the death of Joseph Smith the foundation of the Utah community were solidly laid. It was then that the doctrines of polygamy, Adam-god worship and blood atonement were accepted by the people as the will and commandment of God. Of the former doctrine much has been written. No doubt about it, it now became deeply imbedded in their life. It is still a part of their tradition even though practice of it had been inveighed against by the leading church authorities. Polygamy has found its expression in their hymns. A favorite Mormon hymn is "O, My Father," the third verse of which is impregnated with the tradition and doctrine of polygamy.

"I had learned to call thee father,
Through thy spirit from on high;
But until the Key of Knowledge
Was restored, I knew not why,
In the heavens are parents single?
No; the thought makes reason stare!
Truth is reason; truth eternal
Tells me I've a mother there."

BEFORE THIS, the original Latter Day Saints sang the great and enduring hymns of Christendom. These were supplemented by their own poets, who drew from the thrilling events of their own experience and times. The great concept that they adhered to, the restoration and all that was gathered up in that such as angelic administration, their ideas of priesthood, the divinity of the Book of Mormon and the great objective that they set before them, the establishment of the brotherhood of man, (Zion as they called it,) together with a glorification of the missionary spirit; all of these were sung about. Thus they seemed to bring the doctrine of Christian Theism up to date.

Belief in the visitation of an angel to Joseph Smith is an enduring conviction among Latter Day Saints of all connections. Of that event they sing. As one listened to the pathetic, plaintive, yet appealing and convincing tune that usually goes with it, one seems to be persuaded of its truth and feels inclined to throw aside incredibility and join in the flood of faith as expressed:

"What was witnessed in the heavens?
Why, an angel, earthly bound.
Had he something with him bringing?
Yes—the gospel—joyful sound!
It was to be preached in power
Upon the earth, the angel said—
To all men, all tongues, all nations,
That upon its face are spread."

The belief that the Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity, is expressed in another of their well-known and beloved hymns:

"Book of Mormon, hid for ages,
On Cumorah's lonely hill
Written by those ancient sages
Whom Jehovah taught his will;
Glad we hail it,
Fullness of the gospel still!"

One of the fundamental convictions of Latter Day Saints is the belief that the right to represent God had been lost to the religious world because of transgression and that there was a need of a restoration of this right and privilege. And consequently Latter Day Saints believe that the priesthood, which possesses the right to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances was restored to earth again. Of this we find in their hymns plentifully but in no place more

www.LatterDayTruth.org

graphically than in this hymn by Parley P. Pratt:

"When earth in bondage long had lain,
And darkness o'er the nations reigned,
And all man's precepts proved in vain,
A perfect system to obtain—

Chorus:

"A voice commissioned from on high!
Hark, hark! it is the angel's cry,
Descending from the throne of light,
His garments shining clear and white.

"He comes the Gospel to reveal
In fullness to benighted man;
Restore the Priesthood, long since lost,
In truth and power as at the first."

THE OBJECTIVES of the church were summed up by Joseph Smith the third to be the spread of the gospel in all the world and the redemption of Zion of the establishment of the brotherhood of man. The former requires missionary zeal and sacrifice and of that aspect of their work Latter Day Saints have sung much. The inspiration of the hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" which has thrilled thousands with the missionary spirit has been common to Latter Day Saints and the following is typical:

"Go forth to th' nations and promise salvation,
If they will repent and the gospel obey;
Go sound it aloud to all and each nation,
And teach them to walk in the only good way."

Again:

"Go, ye messenger of heaven,
Chosen by divine command;
Go and publish free salvation
To each dark, benighted land."

And, as though counting the cost and reminding us of "Even bravest heart may quell, at the sadness of farewell," they sang:

"To my dear friends and from neighbors to part,
And go from my home it afflicts my poor heart
With th' thoughts of absenting myself far away
From the house of my God, where I've chosen to pray."

And as though to stimulate the courage of the missionary spirit:

"Onward, onward, men of heaven;
Bear the gospel banner high;
Rest not till its light is given
Star of every pagan sky;
Send it where the pilgrim stranger
Faints beneath the torrid ray;
Bid the hardy forest ranger
Hail it, ere he fades away."

As reward of their labors:

"Then the song of joy and transport
Will from every land resound;
Then the heathen long in darkness,
By their Saviour will be crowned!"

In such hymns the universal mind is found longing to tell the good news to everybody, everywhere.

One of the great projects of Latter Day Saints is "the gathering." This is to effect or bring about the brotherhood of man, their Zion. The theme of Zion is dear to the hearts of Latter Day Saints of it do they frequently sing, Hastings:

"Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning,
Joy to the lands that in darkness have lain;
Hushed be the accents of sorrow and mourning,
Zion in triumph begins her mild reign."

Descriptive of the deep longing of Latter Day Saints for their cherished Zion we read:

"O Zion, when I think of thee,
I long for pinions like the dove,
And mourn to think that I should be
So distant from the land I love."

The deep conviction that sometime Zion would be a reality is voiced in the following:

"Shall we gather home to Zion;
Will our wand'rings soon be o'er;
Shall we cease our tears and sighing,
Shall we rest forever more?
Will Messiah come to save us
From the power of the foe?
Will he come and will he have us
His salvation fully know?

Chorus:

"Yes, we'll gather home to Zion,
Our beautiful, our beautiful Zion!
Gather with the saints home to Zion
And be saved in the Kingdom of God."

And as typical of their sufferings in their early attempts to realize Zion in Missouri in the thirties of the last century:

"God from on high, has heard thy prayer;
His hand thy ruin shall repair;
Nor will thy watchful Monarch cease
To guard thee in eternal peace.

Connected with the belief and earnest activity to realize their Zionic hope and dream is the conviction that Jesus will come and take up his abode with his Saints for a thousand years bringing with him the faithful who have passed on to participate in this reign of peace, thus fulfilling His own word, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" is found in many of their hymns. We select one:

"Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,
Cast aside your doubts and fears;
He who called you to his kingdom,
Soon will reign a thousand years.

Chorus:

"A thousand years, children of Zion
The glorious day so long foretold;
'Tis the morn of Zion's glory,
Sung of by Saints in days of old."

The fifth and last verse:

"Come, Jesus, come and reign victorious;
Come with prophets, martyrs, seers;
Come and take us home to Zion;
Come and reign a thousand years!"

IN A LARGE MEASURE these special hymns have been carried over into the Reorganized movement. And this church also sings the great and enduring hymns of the Christian world and have supplemented them with their own compositions. One of the leaders among them as an expression of his faith and devotion to Christ wrote:

"Tenderly, tenderly, lead Thou me on,
On o'er the way where my Saviour hath gone;
Bright on His pathway the sunlight hath shone,
Tenderly, tenderly, lead Thou me on.
Close to His hand I so tremblingly clung;
Faint were the songs I so doubtingly sung,
Brokenly falling from faltering tongue,
Tenderly, tenderly, Lead Thou me on."

The same writer when burdened with sorrow because of the death of a beloved daughter wrote:

"Beneath the darkest cloud, God's hand I see;
Although it be a shroud that sheweth me.
Still not let sorrows part,
Ere change my aching heart,
His mercy heal the smart that woundeth me!"

Expressive of their zeal and consecration is the hymn "Consecration," written by Albert McCullough. This young man suffering from tuberculosis of the bones and invalided, wondering about his condition was advised to try to write some poetry. From the richness of his idealism for Zion came a hymn that has

QUESTION TIME

Where are the heathen, and what will be their glory in the next life?

In the Bible the term thus translated sometimes refers to surrounding nations, and at times meant certain posterity or connections of the Jews themselves. Also the terms used in both the Old and New Testaments are often translated "nations" or "Gentiles." In later times it frequently meant unbelievers, pagans, and even idolaters. Those who "knew no law" are "heathen nations" in the revelation which states:

"Then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

We are told in Revelation 20: 6 that those who have part in the first resurrection "shall reign with him (Christ) a thousand years," and shall not be subject to the second death, hence if those who know no law come forth in the first resurrection, they will evidently share in the millennial reign, but in what capacity is not so certain. This revelation probably deals with them as a class, and it does not necessarily follow that all to be numbered among the heathen nations will be included, as the Scriptures tell us that certain evil people will not come forth in the first resurrection. The glory of those who die without law, however, with the exceptions implied, is declared to be terrestrial, in a later revelation (76: 6).

To which resurrection does Mark 12: 25 refer?

The verse cited evidently deals with the resurrected state in general, and does not refer to any distinction in this respect in the two resurrections. It states:

"For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven."—Mark 12: 25.

This appears to apply to all resurrected beings. A revelation states concerning those who "abide the day" of Christ's coming:

"They shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

This language refers to those who are living at his coming, and leads some to conclude that children will be begotten during the millennium, though others hold that the children mentioned are those who will be living when the Lord comes, and possibly those who are resurrected. But this could not be the case of all, as those who come forth in the first resurrection will not be subject to death any more, and another revelation states:

"He that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

No specific answer is clearly given as to many conditions of the next life in regard to the social and family relationships there. It is perhaps included with those things of which Paul declares: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man" (1 Corinthians 2: 9).

What became of the Book of Jasher, mentioned in Joshua 10: 13?

The Book of Jasher is also referred to in 2 Samuel 1: 18, as well as in the text cited in the question. Dr. Fallows, in his edited encyclopedia, says it is referred to by Josephus as one of the books laid away in the Jewish temple; but others suppose it to be the book of Judges or one of the Pentateuch, though without much real evidence, of course. The word Jasher means straight, equitable, or upright, thus indicating the sacred character of the book.

In the thirteenth century Rabbi Tham wrote a Rabbinical work named the Book of Jasher, but it apparently had no connection with the book in question, and was not published until 1617. About the year 1840 a book of the same name was offered the public as the original work named in Joshua and 1 Samuel, but it is not generally recognized as genuine. Its presumed translators and publishers do not state where they procured it or the present location of the manuscript from which they derived it. It claims to give an account of the creation, of Enoch, Nimrod, Methuselah, and many others down to the time of the Canaanite conquest. However, the genuine work has probably long since been lost.

Logan, Iowa

Local Progress Noted

At the business meeting, September 21, the following officers were elected: Gerald Gunsolley, branch president; Ruth Gunsolley, clerk; Mary Peyton, in charge of the music. Ruby Adams was reappointed branch solicitor. Myrtle Crabb was chosen church school superintendent with Belle Miller in charge of the children's department; Bert Brooner, young people, and Nellie Hall, adult. Under the direction of the last named, the women of the branch are organized and meeting each week with work and study alternating and a social meeting the last Wednesday of each month.

In an effort to head the admonition to "cultivate the gift of music and of song" the choir meets each Wednesday night for practice with Harrison Peyton as director and Edgar Salts assistant.

Funeral services were held at the church September 17, for Sister Bessie Waples, of Persia, who was for some time a member of Logan Branch. She leaves to mourn her passing, her husband and four children who miss her sorely, as well as other relatives and friends.

A fitting baptismal service was held October 8, when Leslie Juergens, of Glidden was inducted into the waters of regeneration, Elder E. Y. Hunker officiating. The hearts of the congregation were stirred with sympathy for Brother and Sister Juergens, who had lately lost a loved little son by accidental drowning. Sister Juergens was a member of the branch here before her marriage.

Following class work on the evening of October 29, a Graceland program was given by the young people. The church was decorated with autumn leaves and college pennants, and talks by former students interspersed with musical numbers, made up the program. Brother Guy Mintun, a former member of Graceland faculty, who with Sister Mintun is visiting relatives here, was also a speaker of the evening.

Under the auspices of the young people's organization, the Builders, members of the branch met in a jolly halloween party at the Will Gamet home for the annual frolic of the witches. Old and young responded to the invitation, most of them in masquerade costumes. After an evening of fun, lunch was served and the weird figures wended their way homeward.

Local church services were dismissed November 5, and the membership were left free to attend the young people's convention at Missouri Valley. The work there, under Elder E. Y. Hunker and Elder and Sister Leonard Lea, of Independence, was highly instructive and inspirational.

Muskegon, Michigan

District Officers Hold All-day Meeting

The annual business meeting of this branch was held the evening of September 18, with the following results. Elder Whitehead was sustained branch president and his wife as branch secretary for the coming year. Elder E. E. Loomis, is the assistant pastor and church school director. Sister Clifford Cooper was elected director of the women's division; Elder Douglas Osborn and Brother Edwin Hittle, directors of the young people's division; Brothers Vernon Swager and William Farwig, superintendents of the Sunday school. Sister Lena Whitehead is director of the junior division, Sister Eva Soper, branch chorister, and Sister Etha Evans, branch pianist. All other officers were sustained for the ensuing year. Workers look forward to a banner year spiritually and financially.

The Religio department is creating much interest among the young people. This the officers are glad to see, and hope it will increase. Activities consist of plays, debates, progressive parties, and carnivals.

Elder John Randall, pastor of Ludington Branch, accompanied by his son, Elder Roy Randall, his son-in-law, Brother Glen Foster, and his brother were overnight guests at the home of Brother William White on a recent Wednesday evening. Elder John Randall delivered a sermon at the church in the evening on "Faith."

Those recently united in marriage were Sister Olive Bently, who is the bride of Mr. Obernauf; Sister Alma Ward, who married Mr. Delmar Olsen, and Sister Margaret Williams who is now Mrs. Joy Van Dyke.

An all-day meeting was held in this branch October 29, under the auspices of the district officers, Elder A. C. Barmore and Brother and Sister D. H. Smith, of Hammond, Indiana. Brother Smith is district director of young people. At 8:30 a. m., a prayer service was conducted by Elders Barmore and Loomis; church school at nine-fifty; preaching by Brother D. H. Smith at eleven o'clock. Dinner was served in the basement. A variety of ideas was presented at the two o'clock afternoon service. The subjects were "The Worth of the Church" by D. H. Smith; "The Place of Youth in the Church" by Sister D. H. Smith, and "Qualifications for the Ministry," by A. C. Barmore. Six o'clock evening lunch was served, and at seven Elder E. E. Loomis preached on "Discipleship."

Several Muskegon young people attended the young people's convention at Lansing, November 18 and 19, and report a very successful gathering.

The members looked ahead for many days to Thanksgiving. Appropriate church services were held at the church at eight o'clock.

Chatham, Ontario

Grand Avenue and James Street

"Keep the Law," is being given special emphasis and attention in all meetings of this branch.

Chatham Branch celebrated its twenty-ninth anniversary Sunday, October 22, with large crowds in attendance at all services. An ample press story of the event appeared in the Chatham Daily News.

The devotional service on Sunday was in charge of Pastor D. J. Williams assisted by Missionary Percy Farrow and Elder William Ruddick. The church school which opened at eleven o'clock was in charge of Elder V. E. Pritchard, director of religious education. Bishop J. C. Dent was in charge of the senior adult class and the juniors were in charge of Elder P. Farrow. Other classes were taught by regular teachers, and special musical numbers were contributed by the school orchestra.

"In the afternoon session," says the Daily News, "the junior choir of girls led in the singing with Elder Royal Wood, the musical director, presiding at the organ. The speaker at this hour was Missionary P. Farrow. A violin selection was given by Arthur Edwards with William Clark as accompanist."

That evening Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, delivered a forceful sermon. A duet, "Reapers Are Needed," was sung by Miss Gertrude Jones and Miss Helen Wood. Song services at each meeting were in charge of Pastor D. J. Williams.

As a climax to the anniversary services, the women's department gave a supper on Monday evening, and the efforts of this energetic band of workers were well repaid by the proceeds coming in from this annual event.

Winnipeg, Manitoba

Thirty-one Baptized Since Spring

Winnipeg Saints are progressing rapidly in their work. An effort is being put forth by the branch members to take the precious gospel to those who are honest in heart, and the result has been that a number of families have united with the church.

Sunday, November 19, six people were baptized, Elder William Hadath, officiating. The confirmation service was in charge of Elders Pratt, V. H. Fisher, William Hadath, A. C. Fisher, and William Fisher.

A number of others have requested baptism. There have been thirty-one baptisms at this branch since spring.

This city was the scene of a twelve-night debate between Apostle J. F. Curtis and C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, evangelist of the Christian Church. The discussion opened October 2 and concluded October 13. The Christian people were eager to meet the Latter Day Saints in debate and a proposition was drawn up and Brother Curtis called to defend the Reorganized Church. This able brother not only reassured the Saints of the truthfulness of the gospel, but aroused confidence in those who are not members of the church. He baptized six the week following the debate.

Bald Knob, Arkansas

Aim for Greater Unity and Cooperation

Saints of Bald Knob Branch are widely scattered, but are now making a united effort to carry the work forward. Members of the priesthood have been making a special effort to give the people a clear understanding of the financial law and the importance of complying with it. Recently they were blessed and very much strengthened by a visit from Patriarch F. A. Smith. The Saints of this place have a warm spot in their hearts for him, as he was one of the missionaries here a number of years ago. He spoke words of comfort and instruction, and some received their patriarchal blessing during his visit.

The members are now working on their Christmas Offering fund. Two enthusiastic young men were selected as leaders and they chose sides from the entire membership. The goal was set for one hundred dollars which will be a little more than one dollar per member and the contest runs until December 25. A small chart was made to show the amount as it is collected from each side, and in this way the giving spirit seems to be increasing. It is hoped that the entire membership can be brought together to work in unity for the advancement of the work.

The women's department meets every two weeks and is studying the Doctrine and Covenants. The Sunday school had a Thanksgiving program and an early morning prayer meeting for Thanksgiving morning after which a Thanksgiving basket was delivered to one of the members, a young man who has been sick for some time.

Marion, Illinois

Faithfully Continue Local Work

Almost a year ago district conference was held at Marion with few in attendance due to the cold weather and snow. Elders T. C. Kelley, John F. Garver, R. L. Fulk, and other local men were present. It has been some time since any of the leading men of the church have visited this congregation. The spirit manifested on Sunday morning at the prayer meeting will never be forgotten.

Branch President Oral Allen is doing everything in his power to advance the work at Marion. He is assisted by Brothers Dunn and Lindolph Casey.

Brother F. L. Sawley, a faithful old missionary, was a visitor at Marion last summer. His visit created much interest.

The women, under the leadership of Sister Winnie Cuvitt, have accomplished much. They meet each week at the church. Having completed the study of the Book of Mormon, they are now taking up the Doctrine and Covenants.

A halloween party was given at the church on the evening of October 27. The church was decorated with black cats, witches, and corn shocks.

Under the leadership of Sister Glena Jackson, the junior department is progressing rapidly. The church school has increased in attendance. To Brother Ernest Burklow, the superintendent, goes much of the credit for having almost one hundred percent of the students paying tithing.

Kennett, Missouri

L. O. G. Club Is Busy

Kennett young people regret having to give up two officers of the L. O. G. Club, Leon Wiggins and Hugh Jones. These two young men have returned to their southern home.

To fill these vacancies, Gerald Gabriel was elected president, and Darwin Wiggins, vice president. The club members are showing great interest in the study of the Book of Mormon and the Bible. At present they are working on a play which they will present at Thanksgiving. Each member has contributed the returns from one day's work to pay on the district tent.

Plans are being made to construct a church building on the several hundred acres of land just purchased. Brother Hayden and Brother Chrestensen are pushing this movement.

Spokane, Washington

Improve Appearance and Add to Usefulness of Church Plant

Fall was started by a clean-up of the church building, inside and out. The women cleaned and polished in the main auditorium while men worked diligently in the basement.

Labor Day was celebrated with a picnic at a city park at which time over two hundred and fifty Saints participated.

During the month of September, church school teachers and officers met often to arrange and draw up plans for the coming year. Programs have been arranged and plans are being made and carried out.

Two babies were blessed Sunday, September 24, Gloria Gale Storey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Storey, and Robert Wesley Bagley, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Bagley.

An early morning prayer service was held Sunday, September 3, as a farewell to Brother Delbert Coleman, who left for Montana. A farewell party was given September 25 for Brother and Sister Chiles who returned to their former home in Iowa.

The feature event in October was a visit from Apostle M. A. McConley. He came to hold services Sunday, October 15, and remained until Wednesday. He delivered a sermon at the newly organized mission at Hillyard, a suburb of Spokane. This mission was organized Sunday, October 8, and is in charge of Elders A. J. Weeks and A. Andrews.

Plans were laid by officers and teachers during October for meetings of parents and teachers. The first meeting of this kind was held Friday, November 17. In order to make the work progress, it is hoped that a more intimate relation will come about between pupil, parent, and teacher. A short program of music and talks was enjoyed. A period of open discussion of problems was followed by benediction by the Pastor and refreshments. It is hoped that meetings of this nature can be held at least once a month.

After months and even years of work, the basement of the church has been near enough completed to hold meetings. The first was a halloween party. Church school classes, choir, and other meetings now take their turn. Special dedication services are to be conducted during district conference.

The "Keep the Law" campaign was opened with special sermons and class work each Sunday.

A bazaar and supper sponsored by the women was held in the basement

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Friday, November 24. Special services are to be held Thanksgiving Day.

District conference will convene December 7 to 10. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle M. A. McConley are to be in charge.

Bemidji, Minnesota

Send Greetings to the Church

Services were held each week during the summer, with good attendance. District President Vernon Lundeen's presence and services have been greatly appreciated.

Guests during the summer were Brother Walters, of Duluth, Brother and Sister Case, of Warba, Brother and Sister Tucker, of Clitherall, Minnesota; Brother and Sister Birch Whiting, and son, of Rich Hill, Missouri, and Brother Lester Whiting, of Clitherall, Minnesota. Brother Lester served twice in preaching services and his work brought back pleasant memories.

Four children were baptized by Brother Lundeen September 17.

Appreciation is expressed to Sister Ingalls. She has carded virgin wool by hand, completing several beautiful comforts, which she donated to the needy of the church and the community.

On November 3, the women of the branch gave a chicken dinner. The proceeds are to be used for some needed repairs on the church building. This effort was the first of its kind in some time, but the response was so fine that the Saints feel much encouraged.

Eustis, Nebraska

After Thirteen Years Have Priesthood Officers

Elder W. A. Smith came to Eustis, November 7, and preached some fine gospel sermons. A worthy young man entered the waters of regeneration, and became identified with the Saints.

Then Apostle Roy S. Budd, Elder O. L. D'Arcy, district president, and Brother S. Brolliar, of Wilber, came and an all-day meeting was held November 19, a season of rejoicing. John Easterday was called to the office of priest and Ernest Keller to that of teacher. They were ordained in the afternoon.

This was most pleasing to Eustis members who for thirteen years have been without priesthood officers. The prayers of the Saints are that God will bless them with his Spirit and with faithfulness to their responsibilities.

The "Teach the Law" message which Brother Budd brought did much to make the Saints thoughtful, realizing their responsibilities as members of the church. Brother D'Arcy preached the closing sermon.

And now Eustis members feel that their spiritual strength has been renewed. They wish to do all within their power to "Keep the Law."

Local Branch

Near Huxford, Alabama

This branch is grateful for the meeting held October 29, by H. M. Aebli, of Loxley, Alabama. After the church school, came an inspiring song service, then Brother Aebli preached an outstanding sermon on the financial law of the church. Services were held in the afternoon and much enjoyed by this small congregation.

East Bay Church

Berkeley, California

August 6, was an outstanding day for Saints of East Bay Church. At the sacrament service four young men were called to the priesthood.

The ordination service of September 10, was a rich experience. On the same evening, the young people were entertained by Chief Clear Sky, who addressed the group on the customs and traditions of the Indians. He was presented a copy of the Book of Mormon.

The young people conducted a circus in the lower auditorium of the church, which was a huge success, both recreationally and financially.

At the annual business meeting, Elder Arthur Oakman was elected pastor of this congregation, succeeding Elder G. P. Levitt, president of the district, who was forced to resign part of his responsibilities because of work. Pastor Oakman has begun a series of studies in priesthood responsibilities.

Forty young people were present at the banquet and installation service, October 6.

The young adults of the church met on the evening of October 20, and organized for work, service, and recreation. A party was recently held, which was a fine effort in the field of social values.

President F. M. McDowell was a recent guest at East Bay Church, presenting some helpful material.

The annual bazaar was held on the evening of November 23. A social time was enjoyed, which included a short program and light refreshments.

Under the leadership of Sister Camilla Collins, the children's department of the church school is rapidly growing. They have some definite projects towards which to work. Among these is to be a program to raise funds for a piano for their department.

The young people recently presented a play, and are planning a Christmas drama to be presented December 24.

The adults are manifesting a keen interest in their class studies, and have a desire to obtain higher goals.

The priesthood numbering approximately thirty men, are responding to the demands being made upon them. Four of the elders have definite preaching assignments, while the Aaronic priesthood are visiting under the direction of the pastor. The work of the church has resulted in a closer bond of union between the members. The prayer meetings have also been of a high spiritual order.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer began a series of meetings, November 29. Saints of this congregation appreciate the effort he is putting forth.

Hutchinson, Kansas

Wichita Young People Furnish All-day Meeting

October 29, was a most pleasant day for Hutchinson Saints, due to the visit of a large number of young people from the Wichita Branch, who, under the leadership of Brother Whipple, had charge of the activities of the day.

The morning session opened with congregational singing and prayer, followed by a picture lesson, numerous talks, and musical selections. The theme of the morning was "Stewardship," and the fact was brought forcibly to the minds of all that stewardship does apply to every phase of life.

At noon, a picnic lunch was enjoyed in the city park. It was well attended by Saints from both groups.

The afternoon service was a culmination of the things of the morning, including a talk by Brother Baker, of Eldorado, Kansas, and a reading and a vocal duet by Hutchinson Saints. Brother Whipple addressed the Saints and while the afternoon was yet early, the congregation retired to their homes, thankful for the things that they had heard and for the pleasant association of neighboring Saints.

Muscatine, Iowa

Members Are Active

Members of this branch recently rejoiced at a visit from District President E. R. Davis. He was here to attend the local business meeting, and preached two sermons.

A baptismal ceremony was held Sunday, November 12, two being added to the list of members. Elder Griffith Goddard officiated and Elders Lee Allen and Goddard confirmed.

Brother Moore and Brother and Sister Burrows were here from Iowa City Sunday morning, and Brother Burrows delivered a good sermon.

Many nonmembers attend the services, and the Saints hope to see them accept the truth. The members are moving out in the work of the Lord. The young people are up and doing. They held a meeting November 11, at the home of Sister Ella Roberts, and another November 16.

Gainsborough, Saskatchewan

Enjoy Visit of Missionary O. W. Okerlind

Winter is here again after a hot, dry summer with plenty of grasshoppers. The economic depression has been felt here as elsewhere, but has had little adverse effect on the spirituality of the Saints.

Saints of Gainsborough Branch enjoyed the services by Elder O. W. Okerlind for about two weeks. He delivered helpful sermons, which strengthened their faith in the gospel.

Sacrament and prayer service were held, October 22.

Before leaving, Brother Okerlind organized a Sunday school, with ten charter members.

At present this branch is composed of twenty-five members, but they are striving to do their best for the advancement of the good cause.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Extend Missionary Efforts

Attendance is steadily increasing here, especially in the Sunday evening Book of Mormon Class and preaching service. Many nonmembers are showing an interest that is encouraging.

Communion services are becoming more markedly spiritual occasions. For this the Saints are truly thankful.

The branch has been undertaking missionary efforts in the way of visiting groups where there is no member of the priesthood to preside. On Sunday, October 22, twenty-five members left early for Canon City, Colorado, to hold all-day services for this group, who have only a Sunday school under the direction of Sister Logan Scott. Sister Scott has faithfully worked in Canon City until with her own little family and a number of nonmembers they now have an organized Sunday school. Through her efforts three were baptized by Brother J. D. Curtis October 22. Also one baby was blessed on this day. Brother Curtis preached two inspiring sermons during the day. Special music was furnished by Harold DeCoster, Willard, and Ray Ebeling.

On October 29, Brother J. D. Curtis and Brother F. Engstrom drove to Goodland, Kansas, for an all-day meeting.

November 12, Colorado Springs Branch held its annual rally day. Activities began with early morning prayer service. After church school session, Brother J. D. Curtis preached the morning sermon. A basket dinner was served in the lower auditorium of the church by the women's department. Here the spirit of fellowship characteristic of the Saints was manifested.

The next session was held in the form of a round table in charge of Brother F. Engstrom. One of the outstanding senting of a Gold Seal Certificate to Branch President J. E. Ebeling. This is the first to be presented in the district this year.

Immediately after this service, the Saints were fortunate in having Elder Glaude Smith, of Denver, speak to them for one hour.

A play entitled, "The Play's the Thing," presented by the young people, and a sermon by J. D. Curtis composed the climax of a happy and joyous day.

Out-of-town visitors were Sister Flora Leake and family, from La Junta, Brother and Sister J. H. Walker, of Pueblo, Colorado.

In order to acquaint the Saints here with the campaign of "Keep the Law" the congregation has had sermons by J. E. Ebeling and talks by J. E. LaLonde on this subject.

San Antonio, Texas

First Church, Rockwood Court and South Cherry Street

On a recent Wednesday evening Saints of First Church were favored with a visit from President Frederick M. Smith who had been up in the hill country for a week. Instead of holding regular prayer and testimony meeting, presiding officers invited the President to occupy the time, and everyone enjoyed his talk.

A series of missionary efforts by District President G. R. Kuykendall was concluded November 26. Each Sunday evening in November Brother Kuykendall occupied the pulpit, his sermons being of a high order. Good music accompanied these efforts, much credit going to the director, Miss Emma Jackson, and the choir. The last sermon was exceptionally fine, the theme being taken from Psalm 100. The choir sang "The Breaking Waves Dashed High," and an anthem, "Give Thanks," and the latter-day hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," carrying out the thought of thanksgiving and gratitude.

The morning speaker on that day was Brother Rouss Eastham whose text was "Am I my brother's keeper?" His remarks were accompanied by a marked degree of the Spirit.

A chicken dinner was given at the church on a recent Friday evening by the women's department. Following this came a splendid program by Miss Emma Jackson assisted by choir members. This was composed of sacred hymns and readings.

First congregation feels keenly the loss of Brother W. H. Mannering who was called to preside over a group of Saints at Breckenride, Texas. He was a regular attendant at all services here, and always was ready to give a word of encouragement to those making an effort to advance.

Sister Cathryn Eastham who has been confined to her bed for two months is still detained there. The doctor hopes that she will be able to be about again after six months of complete rest. Her friends are looking forward to the time when she will be able to meet with them again.

Spring River District Conference

Apostle J. A. Gillen, Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, Elder Amos T. Higdon and Other Workers There

The conference of Spring River Distrist, held at Nowata, Oklahoma, November 24 to 26, was outstanding in the spirit of fellowship. Apostle James A. Gillen, president of the Quorum of Twelve, and Bishop L. F. P. Curry, were present, and preached inspirational sermons.

The conference opened with a program presented by the young people of Nowata. A five-minute talk on "Zion," delivered by Doyle Reich, church school director, was followed by vocal and instrumental solos. A one-act play, "The Sunshine Lady," and a pantomime, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," brought the program to a close.

Nine-thirty prayer service opened Saturday's activities. The purpose of the prayer hour was to ask God's direction and care over the conference. Apostle Gillen, District President Amos T. Higdon, and Elder C. D. Wilson were in charge.

Business meeting was conducted at ten-thirty, District President Amos T. Higdon in charge. An excellent report of the district work was turned in by the president, indicating that the district had gained in spirituality and in keeping the financial law. Apostle Gillen delivered a fine talk on the duties and needs of the church.

The business meeting was continued during the afternoon, and the following delegates were elected to attend the General Conference: Apostles James A. Gillen and John F. Garver; Elders Amos T. Higdon, Lee Quick, G. E. Harrington, G. G. Cadwell, C. D. Wilson, Norman W. Gray, Ira O. Waldron, Henry Sparling, Edward Campbell, Daniel Gray, J. L. Creviston; Sisters G. G. Cadwell, Katherine Hill, Edith Fry, Susie Hobart, Iva Wilson, Nora Kiser, Mary Hobart, Anna Fisher, and J. T. Riley.

Sunday services began with an early morning prayer meeting, in charge of Elders Waldron, Kiser, and Alvin Smith. The theme of the meeting was "Can the Lord Depend on Me?"

At nine-thirty, Apostle Gillen addressed the young people and adults, using as his theme, "Building of a Spiritual Temple." At the same time, Sister Ira Waldron talked to the children.

Bishop L. F. P. Curry delivered two inspiring sermons in the morning and afternoon, his themes being, "The Gathering," and "Stewardships."

The following young men were ordained to the priesthood at a special service Sunday afternoon: Henry Dunn, of Wimer, Oklahoma; Cecil Cook, of Stark, Kansas; Joseph Van Riette, of Mulberry, Kansas, to the office of priest; and William T. Hayworth, of Nowata, Oklahoma, to the office of deacon.

Independence

A week's priesthood institute opened last night, December 4, at Liberty Street Church, and continues tonight, Thursday night and Friday night. All priesthood members living in the center place were urged to be present and hear the speakers, President Elbert A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

Lovers of drama of the various churches in Independence have associated themselves in an organization known as The Village Players, and each month present to the community a night of high class dramatic work. Their opening entertainment was given in the dining hall of the Stone Church last night, three one-act plays: "A Hand of Solitaire," (comedy), Blevins Davis, coach; "The Valiant" (tragedy), Lyda Budd Robertson, coach, and "The Wonder Hat," (a fantasy), Mrs. Leonard Lea, coach. Music and other entertainment were planned to cultivate the acquaintance and friendship of Village Players patrons.

Stone Church

A large number of Saints of this congregation assembled for worship at the special Thanksgiving service held the morning of Thanksgiving Day. Pastor John F. Sheehy spoke on the theme of the day, and the Stone Church Choir contributed two anthems of praise and gratitude. A prayer of thanksgiving was offered by Evangelist U. W. Greene.

About two hundred members between the ages of sixteen and thirty compose the young people's division of the Stone Church School which meets at the Auditorium each Sunday morning, and is supervised by Elder T. A. Beck, assisted by his wife, Mrs. Sunshine Beck, and by Bill Lee and Miss Opal Williams. Their service begins at nine-thirty Sunday morning with an organ prelude and opening exercises include songs, prayers, a short talk by a member of the department or a visiting member, taking of the offering, and a march to the various classrooms in the building. The Stone Church Young People's Council is closely associated with this group, aiding the superintendents and teachers in every enterprise.

The last sacrament service of the old year was participated in Sunday morning by a large congregation. Baskets of flowers and ferns decorated the rostrum and furnished a beautiful setting for the ordinance. These men were in charge of the service: Pastor John F. Sheehy, President Elbert A. Smith, Elders Roy V. Hopkins, C. Ed. Miller, H. L. Barto, and Bishops R. T. Cooper and J. S. Kelley. Congregational singing was led by Paul N. Craig, and organ music was supplied by Robert Miller.

An overflow service was held in the basement of the church at the same time, and was given good attendance.

Priesthood meeting and the general prayer service of the city of Zion were held early in the afternoon, and at four o'clock singers of the Messiah Choir met to rehearse their Christmas gift oratorio.

Elder A. M. Chase, missionary for many years, preached an inspiring sermon Sunday night, his theme being, "Lead On, O King Eternal!" The congregational song service was directed by Colin Ferrett. Special music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, assisted by Robert Miller, organist, and Mrs. Nina Smith, soprano soloist. A duet number was sung by Mrs. Elizabeth Tanner Hitchcock, of Kansas City, and Mr. George Anway.

A son was born to Paul R. and Irene Pope Rannie the morning of November 28, at Independence.

The Y. K. T. Class of the Stone Church is continuing its nightly missionary efforts at Liberty, Missouri, this week, Pastor John F. Sheehy the speaker. Through its work there in past weeks, the class has made many friends for the church at Liberty, and considers this missionary endeavor as a definite and continuing project for the winter.

At its Sunday morning session the class elected new officers for 1934, Pastor Sheehy in charge of the business meeting. Those who will preside are Paul Wheeler, president; Harrison Rhyan, vice president; Mark Holman, treasurer; Grace Danielson, secretary. These are to be assisted by a corps of efficient committee chairmen and other officers.

Second Church

An impressive sacrament service was held at Second Church, under the direction of Pastor Will Inman. An organ prelude preceded the service. At this hour, two babies were blessed under the hands of Elders Sam Inman and F. L. Freeman.

Elder A. K. Dillee, former pastor of this congregation, was the evening speaker. He chose for his text, "Character Building." The choir, under the direction of Earl Audet, furnished special music.

Last Friday evening, the choir held a social gathering.

The young people are sponsoring a chili supper in the basement of the church Friday evening, December 8. Preceding the supper, a one-act play will be presented.

Walnut Park Church

An effort is being made to swell the attendance at the church school by reaching as many as possible of those who, although members of the church, are not on the school records. The attendance is gradually approaching the five-hundred mark, 479 being present Sunday morning.

Pastor Frank McDonald presided over the communion service, being assisted by Elders George F. Bullard and Royden Barnhardt. Previous to the taking of the offering Brother McDonald spoke of the financial aspect of the "Keep the Law" period, reading a portion of the third chapter of Malachi. The opening remarks, reminding the Saints of the sacredness of the sacrament service, were by Elder Barnhardt.

Elder Robert E. Jones was the speaker Sunday evening.

Liberty Street Church

The Thanksgiving prayer service, held last Wednesday night at the church, was well attended, and the Spirit of the Master was present. The Thanksgiving offering was given at that time.

The infant son of Brother and Sister Raymond Schutt was blessed at the sacrament service Sunday morning by Elder M. A. Smith, assisted by Pastor Lentell and Brother Stobaugh. On this occasion the church was filled almost to capacity.

An adult class has been added to the Religio, and the subject of study is "Law of the Church." Teachers are E. T. Atwell and Harrison Curtis.

"Where Love Is, There God Is Also," was the story told by Sister Ada Adkins at the seven-thirty hour. Mrs. Bernard Hurshman who directed the presentation, used her girls' chorus as a musical background.

Enoch Hill Church

Brother Joseph James Larabee, father of Sister Rumble, Sister May Martin, and Miss Hazel Larabee passed away a short time ago, and his funeral was held at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence Monday afternoon, November 27, Doctor Joseph Luff in charge, assisted by W. D. Bullard.

Thirty-six members of the class taught by Elder H. E. Winegar, enjoyed a social evening Monday, November 27, at the Joseph Alexander home.

A union Thanksgiving service was held at the church on Wednesday. Appropriate contributions were enjoyed by those who attended.

A conducting class in music is being held each Thursday evening at seven-fifteen, under the supervision of Mrs. Amos Allen, chorister. Several members are being prepared for service as choristers.

Brother John Quick is seriously ill at his home.

The young people are industriously working on the Christmas program.

The Dorcas Class was in charge of the worship period at the church school Sunday morning, presenting a splendid program on being neighborly. Each member is trying hard to live up to the name the group has chosen.

The communion service Sunday was well attended. Sister Amos Allen sang "Open the Gates."

Elder C. E. Beal was the evening speaker and his topic was "Faith."

Spring Branch Church

The Sunday morning communion hour, December 3, was in charge of Pastor M. C. Jacobsen, assisted by A. J. Tankard, L. White, and J. Smith. A quartet sang selections which added to the worship spirit of the service.

Attendance was good at both the morning and evening church school sessions. At the former Sister Alma Dixon gave a short talk on Christ's coming. The program of the evening session was in charge of Sister Jalmer Nelson.

Elder W. A. Smith, missionary to Nebraska, was the evening speaker, and his theme was "Baptism." For a text he used John 3: 34. Music at this service was sung by a quartet of local singers.

Brother and Sister Spaulding ask the prayers of the Saints for their son.

Birmingham, England

Fall Program Includes Events of Importance

During the last few weeks several events of importance have taken place. The Harvest Festival of October 22, was quite a success. The harvest truly has been plentiful, and the produce of the land made a fine show. Every harvest gift was of a high grade, and under the skillful hands of Sister Annie Smith and her helpers, was displayed to advantage. The choir, under its leader and instructor, Brother A. Munslow, gave special harvest songs and recitations. Sister G. Allen sang, "Thank God for a Garden," and Brother E. Munslow gave several cornet solos.

The ministerial conference convened November 4 and 5. Under the spiritual power and influence of Apostle John W. Rushton, valuable instruction was given. Priesthood members from all parts of the British Isles were present. It was an inspiring sight to see so many men consecrated to the service of God. Seek goodness, truth and beauty, was the instruction given. Look to Jesus the Chief Shepherd. Brother Rushton made an appeal to the people to get away from narrow petty nationalisms and view humanity as a whole having common interests.

The sacrament service was a solemn and consecrated hour. A beautiful spirit of peace prevailed.

On November 8, a splendid concert was given by the "Smithwickians." These people have given their services for the benefit of the church on several occasions. The concert was a kind of farewell to Apostle Rushton, and a sum of money was handed to him to help him on his return journey to America.

Special Remembrance Day services were held November 12, Elder Fred Davies, missionary to the British Isles, being the speaker at each service. Reviewing the futility of war as a solution of international differences, he made it clear that the present economic and political chaos will, in all probability, result in another war far worse than the World War, and presented the crisis which this will bring to Latter Day Saints who by no stretch of imagination can harmonize war with the gospel of peace preached by Jesus Christ. His sermons were a strong plea for international understanding, disarmament, and good will.

Shenandoah, Iowa

Young People Are Major Part of Church Attendance Here

Shenandoah Saints report a fall of activity, especially among the young people, who comprise the major part in church attendance. There have been a number of socials held at the homes of those living in the country, as well as a halloween party, held in the church basement.

Miss Letha Mattes, daughter of Brother and Sister Alfred Mattes, and Mr. Glenn M. Johnson, were united in marriage September 17, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends. Elder J. O. Rennie read the ceremony. Both young people are members of the church and are well liked.

A number of young men have been called to the priesthood, one of them, Hugh Shoemaker, accepting ordination to the office of deacon, to which he was set apart in September.

A group of twenty young people went to Council Bluffs, November 12, to attend the first of a week's series of meetings. In the evening, a one-act play, "Out of the Darkness," under the leadership of Sister John Topham, was presented. Immediately following the play, a sermon was delivered by Alfred Taylor, a young member of the priesthood.

Missionary work has continued in Clarinda in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Harnagel. A number are ready for baptism. Four have entered the church, and others are expecting to be baptized soon. Elder J. O. Rennie has been in charge of the missionary endeavors, loyally supported by J. R. Epperson, Alfred Taylor, and Mrs. Jessie Walser. A number of young people have assisted by contributing musical numbers.

November 5, Elder E. Y. Hunker, district missionary, opened a two weeks' series of meetings in Clarinda, helping to advance the good cause. His sermons were forceful and inspiring.

At the annual business meeting in September, Elder J. R. Epperson was sustained as pastor, and under his direction the work for the coming year should go forward. The young people wish to contribute their bit towards furthering the church.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp visited Shenandoah Branch, November 26, and preached during the eleven o'clock and afternoon services.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Second Church boasts a newly organized choir, composed of women's voices. The choir, under the leadership of Sister Hazel Gribben, has already contributed its services to the various church meetings.

The women's department met November 9, with twenty-seven members and four visitors. A short program was enjoyed.

The young people of this congregation were pleased to have as their guest, November 12, Elder John R. Grice. Elder Grice delivered a special sermon for the young people during the morning service. His theme was "Youth and Life Values."

Elder J. L. Cooper, of Kirtland, Ohio, was the evening speaker, on the subject, "The Meaning of the Kingdom of God." Several young people from Dayton, Ohio, were present during the day.

Several spiritual sermons have been delivered during the "Keep the Law" period by the local priesthood.

July 20, the women of First, Second, and Third Churches, entertained their husbands with a program and refreshments.

Mission Branch

Near Marseilles, Illinois

The hostesses for the ladies' aid meeting, November 3, were Mrs. Arthur Goodwin and Mrs. Jesse Olson. Mrs. Walter Anderson was elected to serve as secretary for the group for the coming year. An interesting program was delivered by Mrs. E. C. Williamson, Mrs. Vernon Hougas, Mrs. Martin Anderson, and Miss Bertha Jelm.

The November sacrament service was well attended. Sunday school is growing.

Elder Vernon Hougas was the morning speaker November 12. "The Financial Law," was the subject of his sermon. Brother I. E. Turner, the evening speaker, chose the same subject.

Elder I. E. Turner was the speaker November 19. Following the services, a dinner was enjoyed at the church, given by the members in honor of Brother Cramer and Brother and Sister Fisher, who have departed since to their new home near Morris, Illinois. Brother Cramer is the father of Sister I. E. Turner, and is a teacher in Mission Branch. About eighty Saints were in attendance at the dinner.

November 27, the women met at the church. The program was in charge of Mrs. Arthur Goodwin.

The young people held their programs November 12 and 29, at the evening service.

Miss Pearl Turner has entered the Morris Hospital, taking nurses' training.

Mission Branch Orchestra is taking an active part in the services after a short vacation.

Brother and Sister Bibi, who reside near Marseilles, had the misfortune to lose their home by fire. Sister Bibi was formerly Sister Shupper.

South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

902 Raddick Street, Mishawaka, Indiana

Elder A. Whitehead, of Muskegon, Michigan, began a series of meetings here October 22, which came to a conclusion, November 12, in a happy all-day meeting. Five candidates were led into the waters of baptism. The confirmation service was held in the afternoon. On the following Sunday, two more people united with the church. Elder Whitehead is an able missionary.

Saints of this branch are making an earnest effort to come to a better understanding of the financial law of the church, and to fulfill all the requirements therein. Branch solicitors are finding a better response to tithing than ever before.

Attendance at all services during the past months has increased. Saints from Bremen, Elkhart, Niles and other points supporting the meetings by their presence.

Four new members are of Bremen, seventeen miles from this branch, in which place Elder Whitehead continued his work for a week, preaching in homes crowded to the doors. Great interest has been displayed.

Apostle D. T. Williams was a recent visitor. He preached to a crowded house Sunday evening, November 19.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE—Conference of Western Maine convened at Vinal Haven, Maine, October 13 to15. At the opening service, Friday evening, Elder J. A. Gunsolley was in charge. Although few visiting Saints had arrived, the house was filled to overflowing, and they were entertained with a program, the principal feature of which was a play, representing certain features of the Restoration. The play was arranged by Sister Gunsolley and produced by the Vinal Haven group of young people. It was appreciated and enjoyed by the audience. Saturday morning, the ten o'clock prayer service was in charge of Elders E. F. Robertson and J. A. Gunsolley. Following this service, a crowd of young people went down to the landing to await the arrival of the small boats bringing visitors from Stonington, Jonesport, Rockland, and other western points. They were highly pleased to find the first boat bringing forty or more Saints, and the second one bringing nearly thirty more, and besides these, the regular steamer brought in more than a dozen members. At two o'clock, the class period was conducted with Elder J. A. Gunsolley, the teacher. It was well attended. Following the class period, various games and amusements occupied the young people until six-thirty, when the meeting was called for business. District President E. F. Robertson presided. Brother Robertson made a few appointments to complete the organization of the conference, Sister Freda Barton being chosen to act as secretary. The following delegates were chosen for the General Conference: E. L. Traver, Sister E. L. Traver, Paul M. Hanson, Sister Paul M. Hanson, E. F. Robertson, and Sister E. F. Robertson. A motion prevailed that the next district conference convene with Stonington Branch, at the call of the district president in May or June, 1934. Brother Robertson then turned the meeting over to Brother Bernard B. Holland, who proceeded to carry out the program that had been arranged by several visiting branch members. The Stonington Branch presented an original one-act play, and other numbers, all of which were exceptionally well rendered. A group from Eastern Maine District gave some good song numbers, and Rockland Saints presented excellent musical numbers. The Dixfield and Sargentville branches also contributed to the evening's entertainment. Brothers Henry R. Eaton, of Stonington, and J. L. Clark, of Rockland, were in charge of the Sunday morning prayer service. This was the high point of the conference in point of spiritual feeling. The hours from ten o'clock to twelve o'clock were occupied by Brother J. A. Gunsolley, who entertained the adult department. The juniors were in charge of Sister Gunsolley. At one-thirty, Sister Gunsolley addressed the class on "The Place of Music in Religious Education." She was followed by Elder E. F. Robertson, whose subject was "The Church's Challenge to Youth." After this session, the majority of the visitors had to start homeward, on account of having several miles of water to cross in small boats, but Elder and Sister Newman M. Wilson remained. Elder Wilson delivered the evening sermon to a large congregation. Immediately following, a motion to adjourn was accepted. The conference was voted a huge success. Saints of Vinal Haven did wonderfully in entertaining the large crowds in their homes and with the splendid meals served in the vestry of the church. This was the first youth conference attempted in the Western Maine District, and it proved to be a genuine success.

NORTHWESTERN IOWA.—Semiannual district conference for Northwestern Iowa convened at Dow City, Iowa, November 18 and 19. Ideal weather was conducive to a large attendance. Every branch in the district was well represented and splendid interest was manifest at the meetings. Apostle J. F. Garver, Missionary E. Y. Hunker, and Elders Marvin K. Fry and C. J. Smith contributed to the inspiration and success of the conference. The theme for the conference was, "Keep the Law." The opening prayer service Saturday morning was in charge of district officers. President Gerald Gunsolley was in charge of the business meeting. Reports of the district officers were read. Bishop's report shows in tithes and offerings from January 1 to November 1, the amount of $3,559.93. The district treasurer's report shows balance on hand and receipts, $127.19, disbursments, $110.18, leaving a balance in the treasury of $17.01. It was also reported that there is $650 on hand in the tent fund. The budget for the year, 1934, was presented and adopted in the sum of $125. At two o'clock, the business meeting was resumed. A recommendation was presented from Sioux City Branch for the ordination of the following men to the priesthood, Brother A. H. Thompson, elder, A. B. Walback and Lloyd McIntyre, priests. Apostle J. F. Garver presented the name of Brother Gerald Gunsolley to be ordained to the office of high priest, this being the action of the Joint High Council. Bishop W. R. Adams also presented the name of Cecil Burnett, of Sioux City, Iowa, to be set apart as a counselor to the bishop of the district. The recommendations were concurred in by the conference and the ordinations were provided for. The following officers were chosen to act for the district for 1934: District president, Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan; secretary, Ruby Adams, of Logan; church school superintendent, Cecil Talcott, of Deloit; musical director, Louise Hufford, of Missouri Valley; bishop, W. R. Adams, sustained; counselors, E. L. Edwards and Cecil Burnett, sustained. Brother Gunsolley presented the names of Guy Johnson, of Deloit and George Young, of Woodbine, as counselors. The following persons were elected as delegates to the next General Conference of 1934: E. Y. Hunker, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin K. Fry, Fred A. Fry, Mark Hutchinson, Mr.

become a household hymn for Latter Day Saints. It is sung to the tune of "Aloha Oe" and can be heard in almost any prayer meeting of Latter Day Saints. It is so well known and beloved that it is chiseled on the walls of their memories and is especially beloved by the young people. We quote in full:

"Unto God, who knows our every weakness,
With faith we lift our hearts in prayer
Asking, in humility and meekness,
For His love, His direction, and His care!

Chorus:

"In these latter days, with songs of praise,
We all must help to spread the gospel story;
Our every deed from sin be freed
Till Zion we redeem.

"Though the task be great that lies before us,
We trust in One divinely strong;
Knowing well at last we'll be victorious,
We will pray that the time will not be long.

"Lord, accept the humble consecration,
Of our lives, our talents, to Thy cause,
Till Thy word is preached in every nation,
And all men have a knowledge of Thy laws!"

As a testimony of the fact that Latter Day Saints desire that their faith shall be centered in Jesus Christ, is the significant place that they give the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel, Our Only Delight." For many years singing of this hymn is the first public act of the General Conferences. The writer was present at a conference when the chorister attempted to have another selection sung and thus move from the traditional place of honor accorded this magnificent hymn, which was written by W. W. Phelps. Strictly speaking, perhaps, this hymn has been rearranged by Phelps. The first verse runs:

"Redeemer of Israel,
Our only delight,
On whom for a blessing we call,
Our shadow by day,
And our pillar by night,
Our King, our Companion, our All."

Some of the corrections that Latter Day Saints have made to some of the great hymns are of note. Take the great hymn, "Arise, My Soul, Arise," by Charles Wesley. In the original the first line of the last verse read, "My God is reconciled," as though something had changed his attitude from hate to love, whereas we are taught that God is love. Latter Day Saints have changed that and sing, "To God I'm reconciled." Then the great hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." In this hymn the line occurs, "Let me to thy bosom fly." This is pure affectivity. It is a form of mental hygiene that mental process should not discharge itself in affectivity subjectively considered, but should issue in definite action. In this connection the correction offered and sung by Latter Day Saints is noteworthy: "Let me on thy love rely." Reliance on the love of Jesus has been the backbone of their religion. Rather than fly off away from this world they wish to make the world a better place in which to live and set up a standard of righteous living in their hopes for Zionic communities. That the vision of the divine potentialties is still unblurred Latter Day Saints sing, "Come, Sweet Comforter," as well as "Come, Holy Spirit, Come." The words of "Come, Sweet Comforter" were written by Frederick M. Smith, the incumbent president of the church and son of Joseph Smith III.

Zion is still the objective. Zion is still the hope of Latter Day Saints. Its redemption is still to be prayed and worked for. It is the social and religious telesis of the religion of Latter Day Saints. More than that, from a prophetic standpoint it is the last act of the great drama of God that will convince men that God is and that His purposes fail not and that there shall be eternal peace and righteousness. Of this President Smith wrote and it has been quickly seized upon and given in a prominent place in Latter Day Saint hymnology:

"ONWARD TO ZION

"Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Onward and upward, battle along,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.
Onward to Zion, to Christ we belong,
With service the watchword, we fight against wrong;
Onward to Zion, march on with the song,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.

"We have the promise that Jesus will come,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on;
Let us be faithful; his will be done,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on.
Jesus the Savior meeting the throng,
O may His coming be not delayed long;
To God be the glory, to him lift the song,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on."

The Law of Tithing

offer, simply because I believe it to be a matter of speculation. I believe, however, it will be a serious loss to the man's enjoyment of his membership here if he fails to give a fair credence and obedience to the general rules that govern the body. The man who gives nothing here cannot have large expansion of soul, and his loss here is liable to be perpetuated hereafter. His usefulness here in as much as he is an obedient and willing giver of his substance for gospel purposes must necessarily be enhanced and his enjoyment increased thereby. As a matter productive of self-satisfaction, it is worth a man's while to obey the law of tithing." Joseph's letter, written to Elder Dan MacGregor, bears date of May 22, 1902.

Let us not place undue stress upon the observance of some one ordinance, lest in so doing we grow lopsided. All ordinances are necessary, else God would not have placed them in his church. Peter so understood it. (2 Peter 1: 5-12.) Mere obedience to the first principles did not bring perfection but others were needed to make us like Christ.

The True Power

the price of their nobler growth, poets scorning surface gains and living deep, philanthropists pouring forth their gifts, doctors and prophets and teachers. On all these there is the mark of the Cross —love laying down its life. To make people Christlike there is no other power—only the power of loving life laid down. If that is God's purpose then the truest sign of God's strength will be the sign of God's own life laid down! The only ultimate power will be God's life laid down! "Therefore we preach Christ crucified—the power of God."—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

and in telling to the world the wonderful love of Him, who in latter days, saw fit to restore to earth his gospel with all its gifts, privileges and blessings. And when in his seventieth year, death closed the eyes of this man lovingly known to the church as "Uncle Mark," his friends, while they mourned, were conscious that his life had been "one grand harmonious chord." President Joseph Smith, in charge of the funeral conducted at Nebraska City, October 20, 1903, spoke feelingly of his friend, paying tribute to his integrity, his faithfulness, his fearlessness, and his love for truth.

Today we revere the memory of Mark H. Forscutt. As we sing his songs let us think of the noble example he has left us.

Let Contention Cease . . . . . .

By Hazel L. Minkler

AS BUILDERS OF THE KINGDOM of God, the necessity for our compliance with the above command was never more imperative than at the present time, when the need for the speedy redemption of Zion is so clearly in evidence.

THE CAUSES OF CONTENTION

In seeking for the causes of contention we find that self-seeking lies at the root of most of our difficulties. Our ideas are questioned, but we refuse to reevaluate them, not because of their proven harmony with truth, but because they are ours, and we fear to be found in the wrong. We are assigned a less conspicuous place in the work of the church, and immediately we are offended, because the ego has always appeared before us out of its true perspective in the building of the kingdom. Eliminate the personal equation from many of our problems, and the problems, themselves, will cease to be. Such elimination is possible only as we work single-heartedly toward the accomplishment of our purposes. Contention disintegrates our powers, while happy, unified personalities are achieved by the mutual organization of our lives about an unselfish aim, the highest being that of the building of the kingdom of God, and establishing his righteousness. Anna Robertson Brown says:

"A great part of the strength of life consists in the degree with which we get into harmony with our appointed environment. So long as we are at war with our town, our relatives, our family, our station, and our surroundings, so long will much of the force of our lives be spent uselessly, aimlessly."

For other than reasons immediately apparent to his disciples did Jesus command them to love their enemies, bless those who cursed them, and pray for those who despitefully used them and persecuted them. Had these disciples spent their time and energy in quarreling with their enemies it is doubtful if the early church would have spread beyond the bounds of Jerusalem, and the New Testament might not have been written.

THE CURE FOR CONTENTION

"One's environment may be very disagreeable. It may bring constant hurts of heart, mortification, tears, angry rebellion, and wounded pride,—but there is a reason for that environment. To become strong, the soul must needs fight something, overcome something. It cannot gain muscle on a bed of eiderdown."

The first step, then, in the cure for contention is the readjustment of our lives to those with whom we are surrounded. "Let us say, God put me among these scenes, these people, these opportunities, these duties. He is neither absent-minded nor incompetent. This is exactly the place He means me to be in, the place I am capable of filling. There is no mistake. My life is in its proper setting." Then let us seek, through the power of the divine spirit, to reevaluate the character and service of the brother or sister with whom we may have been at variance. Let us remember that love, alone, will enable us to see the gold which lies beneath the dross.

It was the utter lack of the spirit of retaliation which, more than anything else, attests the divine origin of our Savior, and attracts the world to his message. As one of the incidents of Gethsemane you will recall his restoration to the high priest's servant of the ear which was struck off by Peter.

While Jesus at this time announced his power to summon to his aid more than twelve legions of angels, he realized that true victory must come from within, and he had chosen to receive aid in another and, in consideration of his mission, a more legitimate way; hence we read in Luke 22: 43, that an angel appeared, strengthening him. Yes, strengthening him for his conquest of love, for it was love, alone, which enabled him to exclaim from the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." It has been said that "forgiveness is the fragrance which a trampled flower sends forth to bless the foot which crushes it."

In the placing of himself at the mercy of his enemies in the spirit of love and compassion, Jesus rose triumphantly above them, and was able to declare that all power was given him, both in heaven and in earth. Truly it was in the suffering of himself to be mocked, scourged, disowned, and cast out (Book of Mormon, page 251: 32) that the virtue of his death consists. Romans 8: 17 tells us that if we suffer with Jesus we shall also be glorified with him. Not all of us realize what it means to suffer with Jesus. No reward is offered for suffering of any kind, unless it is borne in the same manner in which Jesus bore his suffering. If, when persecuted, we return evil for evil, forgetting the bleeding brow, the nail-torn hands and feet, and spear-pierced side of him who so generously forgave his enemies, we cannot be heirs with him of all things.

Among the things most conducive to the elimination of contention (Continued on page 1567)

and Mrs. W. R. Adams, Pearl Van Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Gunsolley, Mr. and Mrs. George Young, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Johnson, Arnold Adams, Mr. and Mrs. George Meggers, and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Davis, Mrs. J. J. Boswell, C. J. Smith, George M. Vandel, T. O. Strand, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fry, and Mrs. Bessie Pearsal. This closed the business meeting. Brother Charles J. Smith, of Sioux City, Iowa, was the evening speaker. He delivered a stirring discourse on "Keep the Law." The nine-thirty prayer service Sunday morning was attended with a spirit of fellowship and many earnest testimonies were given. Apostle J. F. Garver, the eleven o'clock speaker, spoke in harmony with the theme, "Keep the Law." Brother Garver reminded the congregation that keeping the law was the gathering up of all forces to make life. An offering of $29.03 was tendered at the close of the service to assist in caring for the expenses of the conference. At two o'clock, the ordination service was carried out. After the song, "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee," Elder E. Y. Hunker offered the prayer of consecration. Apostle J. F. Garver, Bishop W. R. Adams, and Elder E. L. Edwards presided over the ordinations. Missionary E. Y. Hunker, the afternoon speaker, delivered another splendid discourse on the slogan, "Keep the Law." This was the closing session of one of the best sessions held for some time. Attendance and interest were excellent throughout the entire conference.

Our Departed Ones

CALHOON.—John Calvin was born in the town of Florence, Saint Joseph County, Michigan, November 10, 1836, and passed away April 29, 1933, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James King, of Wells, Michigan. He was baptized into the church in 1890, by Elder Carter, of DeKalb, and remained a stanch member of the faith although he did not have the privilege of hearing a sermon from the time he was baptized until ten years before his death when he came to make his home with his daughter. Elder Ernest Burt, of Onaway, Michigan, was holding services in a tent at Gladstone. Mr. Calhoon's parents were members of the church and one brother, William R., was an elder. He, with his two brothers, served forty-six months in the Civil War. Married Mary Elizabeth McCarty, December 18, 1865, and to them were born four sons and two daughters. Mr. Calhoon remembered seeing Joseph Smith, the Seer, Brigham Young and Sidney Rigdon. Is survived by three sons, one daughter, twenty-one grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. His wife preceded him in death ten years. Funeral services were held at the home of his daughter, Elder A. M. Boomer, of Wells, officiating. Interment was at Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

LUNDQUIST.—Maria Sophia Lundquist was born March 8, 1848, Blacksta, Sweden. Married Robert Lundquist in 1873. Came to the United States, October 19, 1903. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, February 12, 1904, at Salt Lake City, Utah, by Elder Swen Swenson. Sister Lundquist was the mother of eight children, two sons and six daughters, all of whom survive: Carl Robert Lundquist, Salt Lake City, Utah; David G. Lundquist, Mrs. Oscar Okerlind, and Mrs. John Mayne, of Independence, and Mrs. Frank Mitchell, of Fairmount Station, Kansas City, Missouri. Three daughters living in Sweden. She is also survived by twenty-four grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Her husband preceded her in death thirty-one years. She loved her church and was always ready to lift her voice in song and testimony of the goodness of God to her and her family. She left this life November 1, 1933, at Independence, Missouri. She died as she had lived in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

CASTEEL.—Joseph Anthony Casteel was born December 28, 1850, at Chattanooga, Tennesee. Departed this life November 19, 1933, on a farm near Mapleton, Kansas. He was the father of ten children. His wife preceded him in death three years ago. He became a member of the church in January, 1910, being baptized by Elder Lee Quick. He was a strong believer in the latter-day work. The funeral was conducted at the Saints' church, at Mapleton, November 21, the sermon being preached by Elder Lee Quick. Brother Casteel was laid away to rest beside his wife, in the Mapleton Cemetery.

LET CONTENTION CEASE!

from our midst is the refusal to give expression in any form to the hurt feelings which we may have experienced. In Proverbs 30: 32, we read: "If thou hast thought evil, put thine hand upon thy mouth." In modern parlance, this same truth is conveyed in the words, "That which is not expressed dies." If it be true that all truth dies in the mind which is not expressed in the life, it is equally true that undesirable thoughts not expressed, tend to disappear from the mind.

I wonder how many of us are aware of the fact that in persisting to relate the account of an injury received we are using to an undesirable end one of the same laws as that which governs the successful memorization of a poem, or the retention of useful information, namely, the repetition of that which we wish to remember until it can automatically be summoned to our minds. Again, the mental and physical reactions which accompany such rehearsal of an injury received tend to fix it the more firmly in memory, until it becomes impossible to eradicate it from our minds. Watch the person who is relating to you the incident in which his anger was aroused. Can you not see in the tense muscles and clenched fists an actual renewal of the struggle as far as the physical and mental expressions of this mood are concerned? And is he not as far from the forgetting of the incident, as at the moment of its occurrence? Let us remember that "expression deepens impression," and refuse to express that which we desire to banish from our minds. Many say, "I can forgive, but can never forget." This may be possible in rare instances, but we may safely assume that, as a rule, to forgive is to forget, and to forget is to forgive.

Let us remember the law of reconciliation, as stated in Matthew 5: 25, 26, and thus bring our gifts of service to the altar in love, for it is obvious that a work which was conceived in love must be performed in that same spirit. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses." In other words, the unforgiving cannot be received into divine fellowship and receive the blessings necessary to the accomplishment of their tasks, for "No man can assist in this work, except he be humble and full of love."

Between now and the next sacrament service, let us reflect often upon that hymn, the first and last verses of which read:

"How pleasing to behold and see
The friends of Jesus all agree,
To sit around his sacred board,
As members of one common Lord.

. . . . . .

"Let wrath and strife, those seeds of hell,
No more in Christian bosoms dwell;
But love and union, by his blood,
Prove us the chosen heirs of God."

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

We shall never learn to make the earth a home except as we learn to make homes on earth.—Kennedy.

The Pigeonhole

In the Eyes of a Poet

Readers will be surprised to know that the famous New England poet, John Greenleaf Whittier, heard the representatives of the early church, and recorded a favorable impression of what they taught. This item comes to us by kindness of Apostle F. Henry Edwards:

A Mormon Conventicle

By John G. Whittier

In listening to these modern prophets, I discovered, as I think, the great secret of their success in making converts. They speak to a common feeling; they minister to a universal want. They contrast strongly the miraculous power of the gospel in the apostolic time with the present state of our nominal Christianity. They ask for the signs of divine power; the faith, overcoming all things, which opened the prison doors of the apostles, gave them power over the elements, which rebuked disease and death itself, and made visible to all the presence of the Living God. They ask for any declaration in the Scriptures that this miraculous power of faith was to be confined to the first confessors of Christianity. They speak a language of hope and promise to weak, weary hearts, tossed and troubled, who have wandered from sect to sect, seeking in vain for the primal manifestations of the divine power.—Littell's Living Age, *L, 1847, page 461.

A Song of Courage

By Alma M. Coombs

Sing me a song of courage, I pray,
Sing me a song of daring;
Bring to my memory, deeds of old,
Sing in sweet harmonies, tales once told;
Of men who tried,
Of men who died,
Not counting the cost or caring.

Sing me a song of courage today,
Sing me an epic of valor;
Bring out the melody clear and strong,
Tell of a victory over wrong;
Thrill me again,
With deeds of men,
That sparkle like gems, mid squalor.

Sing me a song of courage, I pray,
Sing me a song victorious;
Maybe this song of yours, who can say,
Shall make me strong again, strong today;
And I with you,
And others, too,
Shall live a new life, most glorious.

■ If you work hard to get rid of your own faults, you will not have time to blame others.

■ Don't hunt for mistakes in the Bible; let it show you how to correct yours.

■ Some men grow under responsibility, others only swell.—Reader's Digest.

C. R. P.

A Missionary Church It has been said before and it should be said again that this is a missionary church. It started as a missionary effort and it must continue to be missionary in character if it is to live up to its ideals and realize the goals which are set for it. As a missionary church it early took the position that there is as much responsibility for converting the "heathen" who are at home as well as those other backward people who still inhabit their distant native wildernesses. This number of the Herald is dedicated especially to the evangelistic work of the church.

C. R. P. While the country is being plastered with initials—the NRA and the AAA, to mention only two out of many—we take the liberty of suggesting a set of initials for the church—the C. R. P. This means the Church Recovery Program. The very beginning of a Church Recovery Program must take on a missionary character; whose foundation is a strong and sacrificing interest in the welfare of our fellow men. No selfish motive can build the church of Christ. One of the writers in this week's Herald suggests that the only really effective missionary work can be done in those communities where there are members living a Christian type of life in all its aspects.

A Seven Point Program The program we would suggest begins with the personal way of life, the daily habits of the individual, and works up to those matters that concern our organized church work. Here it is:

1. Go to church regularly.
2. Encourage and support the very best type of services that your local officers are able to produce.
3. Live a Christian life that will convince the people of your community that the church which produced you must be a good church.
4. Make sure that your church properties are kept in the most attractive condition possible. Have them so kept that you could invite anybody there, anytime.
5. Invite your neighbors and friends to come to church. Make it a point each week to tell someone about the church.
6. Talk the good news of the Kingdom. Be a missionary at heart. If the gospel means as much to you as you say it does, you will want to share it with others.
7. "Keep the Law." Understand the law by studying it. File your inventory, pay your tithing. Contribute to the support of your local church.

Jesus is the great code "Administrator." His symbol is the Cross—the symbol of his love and sacrifice. Are you ready to sign His code?

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

I RECENTLY had some correspondence with one of our younger ministers who is making a splendid development and I offered congratulations on his growth and expressed the hope that he would keep that consciousness of his own limitations that would promote a due sense of humility and dependence upon the Lord. In response to this letter a reply was received, portions of which are quite well worth quoting and which the readers of the Herald I am sure will find of interest. He says:

"I am in the position of having to seek strength for the task, and not tasks equal to my strength. I have never felt more in need of Divine guidance than I now do, and in the recognition of this need, I have already found the source of the supply. The Lord has certainly been with me this last two months, or I have recognized it more than heretofore. Your kindly warning that compliments shall not make me swelled-headed I appreciate. I feel that if I get to the place where I think I can do without God, it will mean a right-about-face for me, and the beginning of my undoing.

"Another thing that I find happening to me is, that I am beginning to find reasons why men are as they are, instead of condemning, mentally, everyone I thought useless to the church. So many times my judgment of others has been condemnatory, although I have never had the courage to tell others, preferring to 'act' towards those I didn't like, sometimes with very poor results I fear. I am beginning to see the wisdom in the Savior trusting men like Peter and in so doing, helping them to save themselves in spite of themselves. I hope I shall always have this attitude, and, as you say, grow in grace, as well as in knowledge."

The above quotation reflects a splendid attitude and is indicative of growth, and we wish more of our men could learn something about charity, for in the growing experiences of the young man above referred to there is undoubtedly the development of charity which is so highly prized by Paul. I am always happy to see our young men developing into men of probity, usefulness, loyalty and indefatigable service.

BROTHER J. L. Verhei, president of the Portland District, recently wrote us telling of the excellent work done by Brethren Myron A. McConley and H. I. Velt at the Portland district conference. He says:

"This was without doubt one of the most successful periods of classes ever conducted here. The preaching services were also very effective. We had record attendance with representation coming from all points in the district, all of whom seemed to realize keenly their responsibility, showing a willingness to cooperate as never before."

Such reports as these are coming in from various quarters and we are happy to know that the Saints are alert to their responsibilities to such an extent that they are anxious to remove their limitations as far as possible, even though it requires assiduous study to do so.

Notice of Silence

This is to inform any or all who may be concerned that G. C. Connelley, itinerant minister, self-appointed, late of Southern Missouri District and last reported to be in Saint Louis, has been placed under silence, cause for this publication being his disregard of the act of silence by continuing to represent himself as and to officiate as an elder. It will therefore be understood G. C. Connelley is not entitled as a minister to support of the Saints, nor is he to be requested or allowed to act as a minister in any capacity whatsoever.

Singers, Attention!

"Elijah" to Be Sung at General Conference

Singers all over the church will be glad to know that in all probability Albert N. Hoxie will direct the General Conference Choir in the production of the Elijah during the conference. Brother Hoxie is anxious to be with us again and it now seems quite certain that he will be able to arrange to do so.

The Independence and Lamoni choirs are beginning intensive work on the oratorio and we feel sure that many other singers will want to join us.

The Schirmer edition of Mendelssohn's Elijah will be used. You may secure your copy from any music house in your vicinity or through Paul N. Craig, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Do not delay! The oratorio is difficult and you will need to begin earnest work now, to insure its success.

You should learn the following chorus numbers:

No. 1. "Help, Lord."
No. 2. "Lord, Bow Thine Ear."
No. 5. "Yet Doth the Lord."
No. 10. "Thou Art Elijah."
No. 11. "Baal, We Cry to Thee."
No. 12. "Hear Our Cry."
No. 13. "Call Him Louder."
No. 16. "The Fire Descends From Heaven."
No. 19. "Open the Heavens."
No. 20. "Thanks Be to God."
No. 22. "Be Not Afraid."
No. 29. "He Watching Over Israel."

We are sure that the production of this great dramatic oratorio, under Brother Hoxie's leadership, will be an experience that no musician will want to miss. Watch the Herald for further announcements.

Men You Ought to Know

JOHN W. RUSHTON
Of the Quorum of Twelve

Apostle John W. Rushton has a capacity for charming and delighting his audiences at the same time that he instructs and inspires them. Known for his eloquence and for his intimate knowledge of the world's great literature, he has set a high standard of delivery in pulpit and on platform, and has given an example of dignity and reverence in the worship of the church. Herald readers know him as a generous contributor of excellent letters and articles.

Of his long years spent in the service of the church, many have been spent abroad, some of them, happily, in his native England. At present he is in charge of the European Mission, and has done much good in visiting and strengthening the membership in these troublous times.

The Christmas Offering

By C. B. W.

While the Christmas offering represents gifts of love and sacrifice made throughout the year, it has special significance at the Christmas season. In the closing days of the year our hearts overflow in gratitude for the blessings the gospel has brought to our lives. It is fitting that we unitedly make our gifts at this time to the church, in the name of the Christ, and for his sake. In so doing we not only honor Him who gave his life for us, but through our gift we help advance the Cause for which the Christ came.

Truly, it is blessed to give in the name of the Lord!

Those who school others oft should school themselves.—Shakespeare.

The Missionary Spirit

By Clyde F. Ellis
Of the Quorum of Twelve

HUMAN NATURE is so constructed that when one discovers a thing that pleases him or appeals to his sense of pride, he almost immediately looks for a confidant or one to whom he can reveal his deep satisfaction and pleasure for the thing he has found. Especially is this true of that which is related to the deeper emotions of the soul. This fact should cause one to search out well those to whom he reveals his spiritually-born joy, otherwise it might be uselessly given to others and the glory of its virtue bedimmed through a failure to appreciate it.

If we were able to determine statistically the percentage of our members who have been brought into the church through this human tendency, either directly or indirectly, we would be greatly surprised at the large number. How utterly unsuccessful our missionaries are in communities where members possess no interest at all in the church and its message! Their time, energy, and money spent for advertising, are of no profit. Upon the other hand, what wonderful results are realized in places where the members are alive to the message of the church! With this latter condition existing the expenditure of time and energy by the missionaries is like a generator creating new energy with little thought of self. No demand is made for large sums of money for paper, window, or house-to-house advertising, because every member is spreading the good news among his own friends, and these friends among their friends. How happy everyone is during such a series of meetings!

APOSTLE CLYDE F. ELLIS

MORE AND MORE must we depend upon this way of doing missionary work in the future. Bright lights and large billboards with their attractive signs may attract the one who is looking for that which will appeal to the eye and shallow thought. But to the individual who would have his soul fed and his spirit revived, an earnest, conscientious, spiritual appeal, by one who, himself, has been touched by immortal forces, is worth more than all the glare and dazzling display of modern advertising. Halls of science, museums, and libraries, need no such demonstrative display of their worth. Their mission and message are to the finer emotions of the soul. The educational institutions of today advertise because of competition in their field more than they do to convert us to the need of an education. We take for granted these things so essential to life in its fundamental aspects while that which is more or less external must have its corresponding attraction.

In most places the day of attracting people by signs and paper advertising to the street corners, second and third story halls, and out of the way church buildings, is past. The missionary and members of the church must search out from the homes and places of business those whose hearts are seeking light. There is no better place in which to do missionary work than the home. A home, either of a member or a nonmember, opened to the missionary for this purpose where those who are invited by interested members or friends can hear the angel's message, is a wonderful opportunity. There the missionary has fewer but closer contacts with interested people than he usually has in a public place of worship. A branch should have a number of these home missionary centers in a community or city, while the meeting at the public place of worship on Sundays can be made a means of deepening the interested person's appreciation of the church, its rituals, and sacraments. Underlying the success in this kind of an endeavor, as well as any other kind, is the spiritually-alive member who is not ashamed to tell a friend of the wonderful blessing received in the restored gospel.

THIS VERY HUMAN TENDENCY to tell others of the good thing we have found is one of the fundamental reasons why churches and societies send missionaries to both domestic and foreign fields, and sacrifice and work that they may maintain them there. The (Continued on page 1586)

Missionary Work in Australia

By George G. Lewis
Of the Quorum of Twelve

WERE IT NOT for the missionary spirit of the Reorganization perhaps we would not be able to make this report to the Saints of this day and age. But the men of the days gone by—and the women, too—were impressed with the importance of the message which had been intrusted to them and they willingly made sacrifices, left their homes and loved ones, sometimes never to see them again in this life, and traveled over the waters to other lands that they might be missionaries in very deed. Missionaries are message bearers and that is exactly what these people were, for they brought the good news of the Gospel to many people.

APOSTLE GEORGE G. LEWIS

Australia has shared in the attention of the zealous missionaries and today the Australian Saints look back upon the history of the church in this land with pious thanksgiving because some people in the years gone by have dared to tell the Gospel story in this land. There is a long list of men and women who have given their lives in service to God and the church in this land at the other end of the world and they have not given in vain for today we see many results from such sacrificing service.

Many of the stalwarts have gone—those who first heard the message in Australia—but they have left their heritage and their undying testimonies in the lives of hundreds and thousands of people. The church in Australia today numbers nearly three thousand souls. Many of these people are scattered through the length and breadth of the land—and one must not forget that Australia is as large as the United States of America—and they are dropping the word here and there, planting a seed of truth in the hope that some day there will be a harvest.

The church today is represented by a branch with a church building in every capital city of Australia; in some cases with two or three branches and churches. A total of twenty-nine branches exist with fourteen groups functioning, many of the groups working towards branch organization. These are just some of the results that have accrued because some have been imbued with the missionary spirit.

THE AUSTRALASIAN MISSION today is practically self-supporting. Eight missionaries are maintained in the general mission field. It is not insular in its missionary outlook for it has inaugurated the church work in the islands of New Zealand and a beginning, though small, has been made in Tasmania. But the field, so far as Australia itself is concerned, has hardly been touched. There are more missionary calls today than we can possibly answer. If the church could appoint twenty consecrated, energetic missionaries in the Australasian field, we could place them to good advantage at once. One recent missionary effort resulted in ten being added to the church; five other missionary efforts have been productive of breaking down much prejudice, and increased interest on the part of many nonmembers. A survey of the Australian field indicates that the "field is white, ready to harvest." And this is true of other places.

There is great promise for the future of the work in Australia. There is an army of young men and women growing up in the church and their energies must be harnessed in the direction of righteousness and missionary service.

THE CONDITIONS PREVAILING IN THE WORLD TODAY demand that the message of Christ be proclaimed to a sin-sick world. This is our privilege. The need is there and we can satisfy that need. We must become more missionary-minded. When this church ceases to be missionary-minded, its spiritual power will be on the ebb. The very essence of the Gospel is sharing—sharing the good news with others. When this church rises to its proper place as a missionary agent (Continued on page 1585)

NEWS BRIEFS

Missionary Activities Here and There

Elder J. J. Ledsworth has been holding a seven-week revival at Rust, Michigan. This is a new opening, and many there heard the gospel story for the first time. Fourteen have been baptized and enrolled in Lachine Branch.

Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley conducted ten services at Haverhill and Dover, Massachusetts, prior to Thanksgiving. He was assisted in junior work by Sister Gunsolley. The Gunsolley missionary pair attended the Southern New England Departmental Conference at Boston Branch, November 11 and 12.

Elder Gomer R. Wells, missionary to Holden Stake, recently held a series of meetings at Post Oak, Missouri. He was assisted during the first week by Stake President W. S. Macrae.

Elder John Carlisle, of New Philadelphia, has been conducting preaching services at a schoolhouse at Tippecanoe, Ohio, and reports good interest.

Elder Roscoe E. Davey, part-time missionary to Wisconsin, conducted meetings at Soldiers Grove a short time ago. He began a week's series at Madison, December 3.

Detroit East Side group, Michigan, is planning cottage missionary meetings for the winter months. Several openings are available, and able ministers will be assigned to tell the angel message.

For almost a month Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin held tent meetings at Xenia, Illinois, beginning the middle of September. Eleven were baptized.

Not only has Elder J. L. Creviston just completed three weeks of missionary meetings at the Medoc, Missouri, schoolhouse, but he was instrumental in establishing regular periods of prayer in this group, and will return the second Sunday of each month to preach morning and evening and administer the sacrament.

The services of Elder William Osler, of Edmonton, have been secured by Saints at Ribstone, Alberta, for the winter season. Brother Osler is now completing a two-week series with others soon to follow.

Missionary zeal on the part of Saints living in the nation's capital is causing interest in the gospel to grow in and around Washington.

Early in September, Elder V. D. Ruch, lone missionary to Scandinavian countries, left Oslo, Norway, on one of his semiannual visits to Sweden and Denmark. In Sweden he visited members at Stockholm, Sodertelje, Holo, Helsingborg and Billesholms Gruva. In Denmark his visit took him to Copenhagen, Hatting, and Aalborg. Everywhere he was joyfully received by members and friends many of whom are isolated and have no contacts with the general church. Brother Ruch keeps up a large correspondence with Saints in these three countries, seeking to cheer them and to assure them of the church's interest in their welfare.

Elder J. Charles May, missionary to Kansas City Stake, has labored during the past six months in Northeast, Mount Washington, Bennington Heights, and Argentine neighborhoods. He has made 796 visits in the homes of Saints and nonmembers, and baptized thirty-eight candidates. Elder George Harrington has assisted him at times. Brother May began a series of meetings recently at Malvern Hill Church.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards began an experiment in missionary work in Kansas City Stake, with a series of "Conversations" at Grandview Church.

From Belfast, Ireland, comes word that good interest is being shown Elder T. Taylor. One thousand have listened to him tell the gospel message in his open-air meetings.

Independence, Missouri, is preparing to open the new year with a two-week series of missionary services in the ten churches in the city. Saints of the various congregations and their friends will participate in this wholesale evangelization.

Home Missionaries Help to Lift the Load

Martha Shelby, teacher of the Loyal Lot Young People's Class, had been ill for months, and she seemed to be getting no better. It was rumored over Belleview that she would not recover. Day after day she lay patiently staring up at the white ceiling of her bedroom or out of the window with its blue ruffled curtains. Dave, her husband, and Sally Van Lacy, her widowed sister, cared for her tenderly.

The Loyal Lot did not forget Martha. No, indeed. Each Friday evening at seven, they mounted the steps to the Shelby cottage together, all nine of them, and for a few minutes were permitted to see their beloved teacher. But each time they came she seemed whiter, more ethereal, more angelic. How thin her pale face! But the luster of her eyes did not dim, and her lips still curved in the old smile.

For a little time they would sit about the room, talking quietly, and then Martha would ask them to sing. At that, having been warned by Dave Shelby not to stay in the room long to see her, they would rise and laughingly say that their brand of close harmony sounded better from a distance, and bidding her goodnight, would retire to the hearthside in the living room to sing hymns.

On one evening the class members exchanged stricken glances outside Martha's door. How deathly she looked! Surely she could not last long. Their hearts ached—she was not gaining ground. When Darwin Hanson's tenor voice—Darwin was their president—sounded the opening note of "Master, Use Me," one of Martha's favorites, some of them found it difficult to sing:

"Send me forth, O blessed Master!
Where are souls in sorrow bowed,
Send me forth to homes of want and homes of care,
And with joy I will obey the call
And in thy blessed name
I will take the blessed light of the gospel there."

For a moment after they had finished the hymn, no one spoke. The singers sat thoughtfully watching the flames leap in the dark chimney throat. Then Sarah Peters said softly: "This reminds me more of Martha. It has more of her spirit," and began to sing, the others joining in:

"It may not be on the mountain's height,
Or over the stormy sea;
It may not be at the battle's front
My Lord will have need of me;
But if by a still, small voice he calls
To paths that I may not know,
I'll answer, dear Lord, with my hand in thine,
I'll go where you want me to go."

"I like that hymn," Sarah continued in the hush which followed, "and when I sing it I think how Martha Shelby has lived it. She hasn't been called a long way off, to China or somewhere—hasn't even expected it. No, she's stayed right at home and preached to the heathen here in Belleview by her good living."

"We're in a missionary mood tonight, aren't we?" queried Edith Mattison half laughing.

"Can't help feeling that way when you think of Martha," returned Harold O'Keefe; "I believe one of the most attractive parts of Martha's personality has always been her glowing missionary spirit."

Several others nodded agreement.

"Those two songs do offer a contrast all right," Darwin soberly observed. "To me, 'I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go,' always seems so much more self-committing than the other. Get my point? Well, when you sing it, you sort of put yourself into God's hands. In 'Master, Use Me,' you put yourself into his hands all right, but you tell him what to do with you—call you forth. I'm like Sarah, when I sing:

'I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountain, or plain, or sea!'

I try to remind myself that he'll probably not ask me to go to any of those places. I'll be doing a big job if I stay right at home and serve where I am needed. The important thing is:

'I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord, I'll be what you want me to be.'"

"Missionary at home?" mused Edith. "You make me introspective, and I think how well I could afford to be a missionary at home. I don't have to go outside of my own family circle to find need for the personal evangelism that we hear so much about in our institutes; no, I don't have to go outside of my own heart. Personal evangelism—" slowly, "I don't believe I ever thought of it so personally before, Darwin."

"When I think how Martha has stayed right in Belleview and helped and helped us since we were little tots when she had talent for more spectacular things," Sarah was speaking quickly and earnestly, "when I think how people have criticized her unkindly, how they have gossiped about her, how they have worked against her sometimes, I wonder if any missionary under general church appointment has had to endure more. But she has been faithful and cheerful; she's stayed right on the job of being a missionary here in Belleview. She has spoken the loving words that Jesus would have her speak, just as the song says. She has trusted God and us; she has labored—" the speaker's voice trembled, "through life's short day. Oh, if only I can be more like her, helping, cheering, pushing, and asking no more credit than she!"

"But look at the credit she has received," broke in another girl, "look at the friends she has, and the respect."

"Doesn't the Bible say something about a prophet not having respect in his own country?" Harmon Long grinned.

"We're talking about missionaries," retorted Edith, "not prophets."

"And I believe," put in Darwin, "that we'd better sing something else and then go. Martha looked so tired tonight—we oughtn't to bother. We can talk somewhere else."

"Right," commended another.

As the nine donned their wraps, they sang softly, "I Would Be True."

In the other room, the sick woman turned her tear wet face to her husband. She was listening to young voices sing:

"I would look up, and laugh, and love, and lift."

"My precious home missionaries!" she weakly murmured. "How much they help, Dave—how much they do lift me up! Oh, Davey, it's wonderful!"

Others

Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray
My prayer shall be for—Others.

Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I'd do for you
Must needs be done for—Others.

Let "Self" be crucified and slain,
And buried deep; and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again
Unless to live for—Others.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new work in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won,
While thinking still of—Others.

Mission Work in Great Britain . . . . . .

By John W. Rushton
Of the Quorum of Twelve

TO SPEAK of "missionary work" to the British people is a misnomer. The words do not possess the same content to the Englishman as to the American. "Missionaries" and "missions" suggest the far-away lands where heathens and pagans live in their benighted state. Bishop Heber's hymn which is still sung in our churches means literally for the British what the bishop meant:

"From Greenland's icy mountains,
And India's coral strand,
Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sand.
From many an ancient river,
From many a palmy plain,
They call us to deliver
Their land from error's chain."

The average Englishman objects very seriously to be classified as "benighted," "vile," "blind," and "bowing down to wood and stone." A modern journalist in a London paper recently put it laconically and cynically thus: "A missionary is one who tries to push his creed down a cannibal's throat and frequently follows it."

This resentment against missionary work in England is true of other European nations and can be understood by those who have had any experience in trying it among them. Perhaps the best word to describe what is being attempted by the church and the missionaries here is "proselytizing." This may seem to be a nuance and perhaps flirting with a distinction without a difference, but it is a serious one here. To begin a propaganda by arousing unnecessary antagonisms by depreciating the prospective convert or his culture is not the best approach.

WE SHALL DO WELL to keep in mind that the history of the church's proselytizing efforts shows that besides being the first foreign field to be exploited, Britain has always been considered of major and strategic importance. At one time I believe eleven of the apostles were appointed to Great Britain. Perhaps one reason may be that owing to her colonizing schemes the British peoples were to be found in many places and the Anglo-Saxon culture is universal, so this is a key situation. Again, the language, customs and civilization of the United States and Great Britain are similar in origin and quality. Perhaps, to those who believe in the "divine ordering" of things mundane and human, the beneficient contributions of this nation to the common good suggested a ready response to the "call of destiny." In any case the beginning and growth of the Latter Day work in Great Britain reads like an epic, and wherever these pioneers of the "new evangel" went it seemed the people recognized "the voice of the Good Shepherd." While the "cradle" of the new movement was at Preston in Lancashire in the north from whence had originated many of the forward movements in religion, politics and economics, everywhere the English, Scotch and Welsh particularly, joined the church and promised to sweep the land with a new fire of enthusiasm. Literally, tens of thousands accepted the message and testified that in it they found satisfaction of soul. Despite the many who emigrated from the country, at the time of the apostasy of Brigham Young, statistics show that more than 60,000 members of the church were reported at the various conferences. The present suspicion and reluctance to the message can be understood when the cruel deceptions of the past are remembered.

In considering the missionary work in Great Britain we must keep in mind that what may be effective and acceptable among other people is not equally acceptable here. To overlook this fact means loss and disappointment. Saint Paul's saying has deep meaning in this regard: "I become all things to all men that I may win some to Christ." To seek to "nationalize" people rather than to "Christianize" them is a perversion of our mission. But the mistake is a common one; the early disciples attempted to "Judaize" their converts and English missionaries of all denominations have tried to "Anglicize" theirs with sometime tragic as well as grotesque results; and we have suffered in our own work because of the endeavor to interpret our message in terms of "Americanism." It must not be forgotten that "In Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free, but all are one in Him."

In all missionary work and to whomsoever we address our message, the two fundamental objectives always are: to evangelize the world, which means teaching all peoples to live their lives according to the teachings of Jesus Christ as found in the New Testament Scriptures; and, secondly, to bring christianized humanity into a societal form which shall become the Kingdom of God, through each and all making the will of God the law of their life and conduct.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

If the religion we are advocating is a "life"—the "abounding life"—then we must be able to interpret that religion in terms of the experiences of the people to whom we preach. In the very nature of things religion cannot be "static." Because we believe that God is unchangeable it is not true that we cannot or must not change our concepts of Him. The Eternal God is always bigger and more than our history or experiences. Jesus has said, "He fills and transcends all things," for "He is above all and through all and in you all."

To be effective missionaries we must learn to understand sympathetically the history and experience of the people we seek to win to our cause. Our approach and technique must be developed out of our knowledge of these and not according to what we believe and know because of our own history and experience. All teaching to be effective consists of interpreting the "unknown" in terms of the "known." We must know the background of the people we would convert regardless of nationality, color or race.

BRITAIN'S EXPERIENCE WITH CHRISTIANITY and missionary work goes back a long way. As one travels about the land and gazes upon the monuments in the existing cromelechs of the Druids at Stonehenge and near to Chagford in Devonshire, the old churches and cathedrals which were begun in the days of the Normans, some even were in existence when King Alfred was a fugitive from his throne, we realize that every piece of this land is redolent with sacred traditions and history. From the traditional visit of Saint Paul who came over from Spain, to the coming of Augustine and his forty monks to Canterbury, on through the centuries which gave Wycliffe, the Lollards, the Reformation movement, Fox and the Quakers, Robinson and the Pilgrim fathers, Whitfield and the Wesleys on down to General Booth and the Oxford movement, and in our own days Evan Roberts of Wales, and Frank Buchman, the work of Christian propaganda is inextricably interwoven in the history. And the noble army of missionaries and martyrs who setting out from this land have carried the news of Christian redemption to the ends of the earth includes some of the names which are forever immortalized; Carey, Moffat, Paton and Livingstone spring instantly to the mind.

Surely from this background of practical experience we can learn something of ways and methods which will help us in our own work. One lesson stands out very clearly;—that pamphleteering, house to house visiting and open air preaching have been the most effective in gathering audiences, and winning their converts. In many of the churchyards there is to be seen the pulpit outside of the church, many places are revered because of being the places where historic preachers have spoken to the masses on the highways. As you ride on the bus or street car down Mile End Road in London, you may see the bust of the late General William Booth to commemorate the beginnings of the Salvation Army.

IT IS NOT A HASTY CONCLUSION that open-air services, house to house tracting and personal contacts constitute the very foundation of successful missionary campaigning in Great Britain. It is not too much to say that the growth of freedom of speech, the development of nonconformity, the rise and increasing strength of the Labor movement besides the popularizing of the Christian message all owe much to the "pulpits" and "Universities" of Hyde Park, Victoria Park, Finsbury Park, and other centers in London, Llandaff Fields in Cardiff, The Quay in Plymouth, Victoria Square and Woodhouse Moor in Leeds, the Bullring of Birmingham, Steveson Square and other places in Manchester, the Green and Cathedral Square in Glasgow, the Custom house steps in Belfast among many other places. These also are some of the many places where we have preached to the tens of thousands in company with many of the brethren, some of whom are long since dead. In my own experience I have much to remember with pleasure and can appreciate the education and disciplining which this work gives to one; poise, control of one's thoughts, humor, to be like lightning in repartee, never losing good nature which, though quick to take advantage of openings, will not leave the poison of sarcasm, to be able to exchange ideas with all sorts and conditions of men is an education which is unique.

The men who have joined in this work include James Caffall, F. G. Pitt, G. Thorburn, John Davis, Thomas Taylor, W. H. Greenwood, William Newton and others of the missionary force. Locally George W. Leggott, William R. Armstrong, the late Joseph Dewsnup (father and son), John Holmes, John Judd and many others, whose contribution in this work has produced some of the abiding results of today. The local organization of the districts here included what is known as the "Rota Plan" which scheduled the local elders and priests according to dates and places appointed to regular missionary effort of this kind. My own experience as a minister in this church began as a local priest giving my spare time on Sunday to local missionary work in and around Leeds. When appointed to Scotland as a missionary there was nothing else we could do but take tracts (Continued on page 1586)

Tested Local Missionary Methods . . . .

By F. Henry Edwards
Of the Quorum of Twelve

EVERY BRANCH of the church should be a missionary power station. No branch can live to itself. Every community containing a Latter Day Saint Church should be thoroughly evangelized, and the spiritual condition of the branch will be in direct proportion to the missionary spirit and activities which are in evidence there.

At the present time local missionary work is particularly important, since branch missionary activity must compensate for the loss of missionary power due to the release of general conference appointees. It was with this thought in mind that I wrote to several of our successful pastors and missionaries and asked them to write me regarding the missionary methods which they have followed in their work. This article is a composite of their replies.

APOSTLE F. HENRY EDWARDS

A Spiritual Background

Bishop A. B. Phillips, long-time missionary and president of seventies, writes:

"Labor where members are imbued with missionary zeal brings the best results, if local discord or iniquity does not exist there.

"I have made efforts in several places where there was missionary zeal but also an atmosphere of iniquity among members. Such efforts are worse than useless, as a rule. The membership must first be put in condition, if results are to follow. On the other hand, I have known of instances where quite a number were baptized under such conditions, and the resulting contaminations produced a sickening situation that was a long-time menace to the church. . . .

"The most spiritual branches are usually those which are alive to mission opportunities. An active and aggressive missionary can come into such a situation at the proper time and reap a harvest. Branch after branch within my memory has proved the soundness of such procedure."

Essentially the same keynote is sounded by Elder Percy E. Farrow, one of our younger seventies. Brother Farrow writes:

"Fasting and prayer for spiritual guidance is of paramount importance. I have in mind a branch where I conducted a series of meetings nearly two years ago. This branch felt keenly the lack of young people at its services. Nearly every Latter Day Saint knows the value of young people to a branch. Also do we well know the results of the lack of young people. This branch decided to hold a series of meetings in an attempt to supply its ranks with the much-needed young people. Before the series the Saints fasted and prayed, imploring the Almighty to lead by his Spirit youth into their ranks. That series of meetings lasted nearly three months. Until the time of writing, from the beginning of the meetings I have baptized thirty-five people in that branch, twenty-six of whom were under thirty and thirty-three were under thirty-five years of age."

Elder J. L. Verhei, our very active president of the Portland Branch and District, says:

"There must be a very definite preparation on the part of the local priesthood toward a positive attitude, and in this they must be absolutely sold to the idea that the teachings and ideals of the church of the Living God are right and just and there must be no turning aside or criticism of the church or its officers, especially the general officers."

A Local Missionary Program

Several of the brethren emphasized the primary importance of a steady and persistent missionary emphasis in the entire program of the local branch. Thus, Elder William Patterson, once an effective seventy, who is now doing equally effective work as a high priest, writes:

"There have been forty-six persons baptized into the Port Huron Branch since I came here a year ago last June. These have come in through a steady and persistent effort rather than through periodic missionary activities."

Elder Henry Livingston, pastor at Philadelphia, another of our missionary enthusiasts, becomes somewhat more specific. He says:

"Sunday evening service is usually made missionary. The gospel principles, church history and our social program are the subjects chiefly used. These have held the interest of the Saints as well as the visitors. The pastor should be the one most interested in the success of this meeting. It will require his time in planning the service. The best material available should be used here and the men who occupy should be given ample notice that they may be able to prepare for it. Encourage the Saints to bring visitors and make the service such that they will not be ashamed to invite them back again.

"Our church school is a large feeder for church membership. We now have about eighty-six nonmembers attending the school, forty-four of whom are good prospects. In one class of adolescent girls the teacher by personal effort converted six and these have been splendid members. One girl of this number brought her family and this resulted in two more baptisms. Encourage the pupils to bring in their friends and make the class work missionary in its character."

Bishop Harry French lists the various methods

which have been used in Columbus, Ohio, and then selects the church school as the most promising missionary factor in Columbus:

"After mature experience and careful consideration of the benefits accruing from all of the methods narrated above, I must in frankness state our experience discloses the church school as being our best membership builder. Through the school we have reached nonmember children, and through these children we have reached entire families, and the growth of the church in Columbus has been influenced more by the church school than by any other agency we have attempted."

Cottage Meetings

One of our outstanding leaders of the Northwest is Elder Monte E. Lasater, president of the Seattle and British Columbia District. Brother Lasater is a personal missionary and missionary administrator. He selects the cottage meetings for special emphasis, and writes:

"The local missionary effort which has proved beyond a doubt to be successful is the cottage meetings. We usually find a home of some Saint who is so situated that it is convenient for the other members of the church in that locality to bring their neighbors and friends there. These church members usually form the background, and among them visiting friends soon feel quite at home. We have a musical program and preach for about forty-five minutes, then at the close of the sermon we give a chance for questions. Usually many of these come and the question period lasts for about half an hour. The next day we have one or two of the women of that locality visit the homes of those who attended the service but who do not belong to the church. These good sisters report back to us if there is anything which needs further explanation, and we treat these problems in subsequent sermons. We keep these cottage services up as long as wisdom directs and frequently go back to cover the same ground again. We have baptized as high as five from one setting."

Evidently they like cottage work in the West, for Brother Verhei, already quoted, says:

"The greatest opportunity for reaching the prospects is through class work in the homes of the Saints, where they can with little or no feeling of restraint invite their neighbors and friends, many of whom have no knowledge of the belief of the family where the effort is being made. We have found that by visiting in homes where the regular attendance at church services has diminished to the point of almost no attendance at all that we have contacted children who knew little or nothing of the religious views of their parents, particularly where one member of the family belonged to the church and the other did not. Often through the class work, we gain the children for church membership and create such an interest in the parents that they lend themselves readily to the missionary effort being put forth, without realizing how much they are contributing. We reach many of the friends and many times encourage the effort by the curiosity aroused by these friends carrying the teachings home to their own church members and have found on several occasions our classes increased by half after someone in attendance has carried back some of the things advanced at a previous class. This is from actual experiences."

From the East, also, come commendation of the cottage meeting method. Brother Livingston's letter advises:

"It is not possible to get all folks to attend the church service and hence we try to go after them. The cottage meeting has been our most successful method. Choosing some worthy Saint's home for the series, we ask them to invite in their neighbors and friends. This has resulted in splendid attendance many times. One sister was able to get into her house as many as thirty for one service and the room was filled to capacity. In addition the street is canvassed each week one or two days before the meeting is held and on the night of the service the street is again canvassed and a reminder tract given to the people. Some have responded to these. . . . Names of the visitors are kept in a permanent record and these are followed up with a view of inviting them to attend our church."

The Missionary Series

Practically all the brethren agree that no series of missionary services should stand by itself. Every such series should fit into the branch program and should be preceded by very careful preparation.

Elder Harold I. Velt, who comes to us from Australia and who has already baptized many good people in the Northwest, lays special emphasis on this point. He says:

"We call the Saints together a few days or one week before the advertised meetings begin, preaching a sermon along the lines of the great plan of cooperation between God, his ministry and members, and the honest in heart who are to be reached. We emphasize that the gospel we preach to them must come 'not in word only, but in power, in the Holy Ghost and in much assurance,' and that this will be our rich experience if we move out in faithful endeavor.

"We meet again for organization, the missionary and the pastor or leader cooperating to see that every need is attended to. The leaders of music and song are invited to help to their capacity. Volunteers are appointed their territory to be covered with handbills. Those having a pleasing and salesmanlike personality are chosen to ask the favors of window space, and instructed to hand a spare one to the proprietor for his own use, inviting him to come to the lectures or sermons. Instructions are given as to the best methods of handbill distribution. Details such as care not to crease the bill, how to place it face upwards between the door and the floor, or best means of approach in giving personal invitations are suggested as having effect. Knocking from door to door is the method used where sufficient workers can be secured to cover the desired territory. In Centralia, Washington, for instance, on one occasion many volunteers undertook to visit about sixty or more homes each in this way in such time as they could spare, resulting in as many as one hundred and ten nonmembers being present each of the first two evenings. Special prayer is called for, usually accompanied by fasting of one meal a day for a number of days or a week, with a set time daily for family or private prayer, that all hearts may be raised to God in unison though absent from each other."

Brother Livingston also stresses this point. He says:

"Spiritual preparation comes first, mechanics second. Seek quality always and not quantity. This applies not only to those we would convert but also in our ministry to the people. No matter how humble the meeting or how many are present always use the best material. Let our work and lives truly represent God."

Brother Farrow gives a good suggestion in connection with printed invitations, pointing out that a neatly printed (Continued on page 1580)

Within the Household

MARCH opens the moving season in Independence. It is then that seasonal householders gather their effects about them and proceed to transplant them into another setting. The moving began early in this particular March, for February's cold and snow had confined chronic movers close to their homes, and they had grown tired of their surroundings.

Eldred Hampton put out her sign, "Apartment for Rent," which she had taken into the house in December because of bad weather, and in less than twenty-four hours she had had several inquiries about the rooms.

And so Larry was not surprised one evening, when after leaving her wraps upstairs, she came to seek Eldred, to find her talking animatedly to a strange young woman in the kitchen. The mixing dish in which she had started to stir up graham muffins for dinner, stood on the table. At the other end of the work table Aunt Annie was making sausage patties, putting a great deal of energy into her work. Her usually calm brow was wrinkled with disapproval.

The stranger wore a brightly-flowered smock over her housedress. A narrow red ribbon caught locks of black curly hair away from her small round face, and her tiny feet were shod in absurdly high-heeled shoes. The young woman's smooth, creamy skin was the envy of beauty experts, and her eyes flashed with the exuberance of her spirits. Larry liked the bright eyes, the curl of her hair, and her short upper lip.

BUT WHAT ATTRACTED HER MOST was a tiny girl—she could not have been two years old, who clung to her mother's somewhat abbreviated skirt, her elfin face dimpling beneath an uncombed thatch of black curls.

"This," and Mrs. Hampton put her arm about Larry, "is one of my girls, Mrs. Cameron." And then, "Larry, this is our new neighbor across the hall, Mrs. Cameron. They just moved in this afternoon, and this is the baby of the family, Dorothy Pearl."

"How do you do," Larry nodded, and then looking down: "Oh, you sweet thing!"

Mrs. Cameron whose name also was Dorothy, and who much preferred that her friends call her that, was not hard to get acquainted with. And now as she stood holding a cup of lard in her hand, the cause of her brief call on her landlady, she spoke as if she had known them months, not hours and minutes.

After she had gone, Eldred told Larry more about the family. Mr. Cameron was doing clerical work in the city, and seemed happy to have the work. He had been out of a job for weeks during the winter, and they were new in this community. They had come from Kansas, the western part. He was an elder in the church, and they had another child, a boy, Sammie, who was not yet five years old. Mrs. Cameron did not belong to the church.

"How strange," Larry spoke her thoughts aloud; "she looks nice and broad-minded and sensible. You'd think she'd want to help her husband along in his big interests."

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him. Among her reasons is the rather startling one that she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Yielding to a temptation with some misgivings, Larry accompanies Greg to a costume ball, wearing a valuable bracelet that is an heirloom belonging to Eldren Hamptan. To the discomfiture of being thrown in the company of men she dislikes, Larry is horrified to find she has lost—or been robbed of—the bracelet. Days of remorse follow. The bracelet is not found. Larry struggles with herself, feeling bitter about what she has done, and tries to make some new resolutions. She begins by making some inquiries about study classes in the church school, and undertakes reading and discussion for the serious purpose of acquainting herself with the church.

"Many women don't," Eldred had resumed the mixing of the muffins.

"Sensible, did you say?" demanded Aunt Annie. "She'd make a first-rate flapper it looks to me. Sensible? Wearin' them kind of shoes to work in!" she snorted. "The children seem pretty nice, but I do hope she don't dump 'em in on us while she goes trapezin' off to play bridge!"

"You misjudge her, Aunt Annie, she's young—you'll have to make allowances for that. She's young and pretty," reprimanded Mrs. Hampton. "I think they'll make nice tenants."

"Well, judgin' from her looks—" grumbled the old woman as she shoved the frying pan over the gas flame, but the rest of her observation was lost to Larry.

"If they're new here, Mother Eldred," she began thoughtfully, "she — they should have some sort of welcome. Why don't we give a little house party just for the homefolks so's everyone can get acquainted? The Camerons can be honor guests. Don't you think that would be the chummy thing to do?" Teasingly she added, "I'll take care of the children so's Annie'll be spared the strain on that night."

The new family was the chief topic of discussion at the dinner table that night. After Eldred had told all that she knew about them, Larry's suggestion was brought up.

"The sweetest little girl!" So enthusiastically did Larry help herself to the baked beans, that one would have thought she had just said: "The sweetest little beans!" She turned to her right-hand neighbor: "Have some, Mr. Holt?"

Mr. Holt, whom Doc had dubbed the "family sphinx," was at least sixty years of age. His half-gray, half-white hair was always plastered to his head. His brows were drawn together as if in concentration, but his broad mouth hung loosely, giving his face a sulky expression. He assumed all the privileges granted eccentric, elderly individuals. Though he roomed at Eldred Hampton's, he was seldom at home except at mealtime. Where he spent his leisure time was a matter of conjecture to the entire household. Greg insisted that he was a gambler, and spent all his "extra" hours in some backstore den, but Doc was sure that Mr. Holt's recreation partook of nothing more serious than checkers or billiards. He preferred solitude; was quite happy when left entirely alone. And he had a great aversion for desserts and religion. As to the first he said: "No, no. Nothing sugary, slithery, or rich for me." Concerning the second aversion he was more violent: "Silly ideas concocted by a pack of conceited hypocrites! Look what a mess these so-called religious people have got the world into!"

"And that was that—no use to argue with him," said Doc to Eldred, Larry, and Aunt Annie out in the kitchen. "There are lots of people it does no good in the world to argue with, and he's one of 'em. Just leave him alone. He'll tell us something yet."

Strange and clamlike though this member of her household was, Eldred Hampton saw carefully to his physical welfare. If he had a cold she suggested a remedy and loaned him her electric warming pad. If the weather was wet,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

and she saw him leaving the house, she reminded him to wear his rubbers. Nor did he seem to resent these attentions from her.

"Do you suppose there's any permanency in the Camerons' stay, Eldred?" Doc questioned.

"Oh, I think so. They're not afflicted with the move-itis. You see it isn't easy for her to get a place where the children can play in the yard—she's tickled over that."

"Not hard to look at," observed Mr. Horace Peterson, a huge, very wrinkled man who sat opposite Larry, generously helping himself to the butter before passing it. "I caught a glimpse of her as I came in. Something of a doll."

"U-um, yeah?" from his companion, Mr. Harvey Peterson. These two were cousins and they conducted a small printing business under the name Peterson & Peterson. They did not room at Hamptons', but were faithful boarders. Mr. Horace Peterson was tall and slender to the point of emaciation while Mr. Harvey Peterson was the exact opposite—short, florid, and plump as a Thanksgiving turkey.

"Were you serious, Larry, when you suggested a little home get-together to help them get acquainted with all of us?" Eldred Hampton asked.

"Well—"

"I think it's a prize idea," broke in Mr. Harvey Peterson, planking his fork down on the table and screwing up his countenance with great deliberation as if considering the repeal of Prohibition or something else equally as prodigious. "May we come, Mrs. Hampton?"

"Certainly you are invited if we have it. All of us will come."

"Why don't we?" Doc seemed to twinkle within himself, and he glanced at Mr. Holt whose only comment was a disgusted "Humph!"

"We could have ice cream," Doc pursued. Mr. Holt raised one eyebrow indicating that he was listening. Ice cream was the one exception to his dessert aversion. He liked ice cream and could eat as much of it as a ten-year old schoolboy. "If Aunt Annie will stir it up, I'll crank the freezer, and Larry here can help me."

"Now I know we're comin', fella," Mr. Harvey Peterson grinned at his partner.

"And maybe Mother Eldred could be cajoled into making one of her scrumptuous devil's food cakes," suggested Larry.

"Better and better," declared Doc. "When do we start?—I mean, when do we have it?"

And so the plans were laid. The party was to be on Friday evening, three days away, and all of the members of the household, including the Blaines were invited. "And Greg, too," whispered Eldred to Larry, "he's part of the family."

When that young man was told, he offered with enthusiasm to bring half a dozen "crackerjacks" of jigsaw puzzles over for the crowd, and also to help Doc "twist the freezer's tail." Larry promised to play the piano if anyone wanted to sing.

"Of course they will," from Doc. "you watch me. I'll give you the high sign," and his blue eyes laughed.

"Oh, but you'll be freezing the ice—"

"Not all the time—not all the time, my dear girl. Greg and I plan to make short work of that."

ABOUT TWENTY would be there. Even Mr. Holt promised that he would come. John, when Carmen and Eldred wrote him of it, wished that he could come, and Larry knew from the look in their eyes, that there were two women who wished so too.

The night arrived, cold and blustery. Right at the start the good time was threatened—Doc was detained uptown, and, well, they couldn't have a party without Doc. A Saint Louis client kept him out to dinner and indefinitely beyond the party hour.

But Greg proved a good pinchhitter. He, Carmen, Larry, Mr. Harvey Peterson, and Aunt Annie had a "stirring" time, mixing, freezing, and packing the five-gallon can of cream. Aunt Annie even let them peek at the monstrous cake Mrs. Hampton had baked, and scolded like an old New England shrew when Greg surreptitiously broke off a bit of the rich icing.

All of them seemed to be having a happy time. Even Mr. Holt was not faring so badly. He had barricaded himself in the corner behind a card table on which he was playing solitaire with considerable vehemence, his brow even more wrinkled than usual.

"I brought the kiddies over just for a little bit," Dorothy Cameron explained to her landlady. "Since this is a get-acquainted party, they had to be in for a minute or two—for, well, people don't know us until they know the children. I'll take them over home soon. It's past their bedtime now."

"Me—but I want some cake and ice cream before I go to sleepy land, Momma," coaxed Sammie.

When Eldred Hampton introduced the Camerons, Dorothy was gracious. Rufus, her husband, seemed eager to get acquainted, but was held back by self-consciousness. He blushed very easily and frequently. Soon, however, he and Mr. Horace Peterson were busy over a puzzle, and Mrs. Blaine was describing her latest illness to Dorothy, who, because she was keeping a watchful eye in Sammie's direction, proved a not too attentive listener.

Larry and Sallie Ruth Blaine took charge of the children. It did not astonish Larry to learn that the younger girl was fond of children. "That's one thing we have in common, Sallie Ruth," she said. A moment later she was holding Dorothy Pearl up to see Windy, the canary. "Birdie, birdie?" she chirped in a small high voice, causing Windy to cock his head saucily, and the baby to clap her hands and gurgle.

"Did you ever see dimples deeper on a human face?" she demanded. "If dimples are, as they say, the marks of angel love pats, then some angel—maybe more than one of them—certainly loved this little gob of goodness," and she planted a kiss on the point of the small cleft chin.

Sallie Ruth and Sammie were chuckling over a game of deck quoits in the dining room. Their "shots" were most uncertain, but they were having a good time.

"Where's Doc, not here yet?" Greg had just come in from packing the cream in the porch.

"Yes, I saw him slip through the hall not five minutes ago. I imagine he's brushing up a little. Too bad he had to be late tonight, but I hope he gets down before Dorothy takes these cherubs of hers to bed."

"When's that?"

"Right away. She says they must get their beauty naps—as if this little creature needed any more beauty," and Larry wiggled a finger to the delight of Dorothy Pearl.

"What's your name, cuteness, eh?" asked Greg taking a tiny hand.

"Dottie—Pull," with grave deliberation.

"Gee, don't those big eyes play tricks?" he demanded.

THEN ELDRED AND DOROTHY CAMERON steered them into the kitchen. Greg was taken along to open the freezer in order that the children might have a "taste" of ice cream before they were taken to bed.

Perched on two thick books Sammie consumed his "ice cweme" amid blissful sighs, and Mrs. Cameron was holding the baby on her lap, lending assistance in her usually unsuccessful efforts to feed herself. "Oh, but she wants to try, and so I let her," she explained. "She's learning."

A fresh burst of laughter from the living room, and a calling of greetings.

"Doc must have come down," Larry started toward the dining room door.

It was Doc and they were teasing him. Mr. Harvey Peterson was accusing him of having kept his "sweetie" out to tea too long.

"Hello, Doc, old-timer," someone else said, and then he was shaking hands all around.

"Sorry I was late, Eldred," Doc stood in the doorway. "I counted on getting home in time to help, but it was unavoidable."

"That's quite all right, Doc. We missed you, of course, but Greg and Mr. Peterson did the cream, and oh, I almost forgot—" she turned to Dorothy Cameron who at that moment had laughingly steered a spoonful of cream from off its course toward the left ear, into Dorothy

A Review of "A Primer of New Deal Economics," by J. G. Frederick. The Business Bourse, Publishers, N. Y., 1933

The Twelve Principles of the "New Deal"

1. General interests must not be sacrificed to special interests. There must be a more fully democratic outlook in economics, (which is also at the same time the most truly scientific and even the most truly businesslike point of view); that of shaping all economic action on the broad base of the increased stability, security, welfare and purchasing power of the common citizen ("the forgotten man"). Such a principle spells the end of unrestrained individualism, since general cooperation alone can accomplish the results desired.

2. Government, in a machine age of large scale operation, must be regarded as an indispensible coordinative and economic planning authority and credit controller, in the interest of stability and sound development for all the people. It must provide even for grant of complete executive command of the situation. But it must preserve as far as possible, the fundamental principle of American life and history, namely decentralization, and leave to logical groups, by a self-government technique, the greatest degree practicable of initiative and scope, applying compulsion only where self-government fails.

3. The modern-day economic and financial structure is now inescapably world-wide. Isolated nationalism, tariff wars, dreams of being prosperous locally, no matter what happens elsewhere, cannot be realized. The "New Deal" economics must make it a cardinal policy to take a vigorous part in the world affairs and strive to develop sound, balanced, peaceful, stable conditions in finance and economics, in all other parts of the world, as a necessary leverage for attainment of the same conditions in America. But at the same time America must realistically place its own interests first. It can help the rest of the world best by being strong and self-reliant itself.

4. Since the key-force in the "New Deal" economics is the directing power and the credit of the United States government, it follows as a principle that it is of the very highest importance that the credit of the Government be kept at a high point at any cost; and that the use of this credit be cautiously administered for the benefit of the whole people.

5. The national economic health will never be really good until the disbalance between farm and industrial economics is corrected, which can be done by sound economic planning, even if such planning must go through a trial and error period.

6. In order to end (for at least the next two years of reconstruction) the sweatshop wages, unemployment, violent unfair competition, lack of balance between production and consumption, destructive price-cutting, there must be set up for all industry a system of voluntary or enforced controls based upon intelligent, economic planning, by logical groups upon a democratic basis, supervised by the government in the public interest. Competition may no longer be "free"; it must be made "fair" and be given social aims.

7. Unemployment is a glaring advertisement of defective national economic planning and control, and as such is a direst responsibility upon the economic executives of the nation. National plans must be laid on a broad scale to create employment; to "prime the pump" by a sizable public works program. Unemployment, in any large measure and over any long period, is a crime against the brains and will of civilized man.

8. Money being the life-blood of civilization, the central government must serve as the real controlling heart of its flow, and also take special pains to see that the small depositors and investors interests are safe-guarded in the issuance and sale of securities, and in the administration of funds entrusted with banks and financial institutions.

9. A spirited people of divergent tastes cannot be made temperate in habit by national prohibitory legislation. Temperance is a matter of character and education, and "New Deal" economics will not endure a vast illicit traffic run by criminals who pay no duties or taxes. Therefore 3.2 percent beer must be made available at high taxation rates and the repeal of the eighteenth amendment urged upon states, to increase the financial and moral stability of the nation.

10. The "New Deal" spirit of active intelligent Government effort on behalf of the whole people and the whole nation, calls for broad projects of constructive development where they are shown to be logical and benefiting large areas of the country and a considerable percentage of the populace.

11. In a large active country like the United States, under modern conditions, all forms of transportation should be considered as a unit, and broadly planned, and their service to the public not left to private competitive waste and duplication. The government should coordinate and regulate all transportation.

12. A great modern civilization like ours must make its economic programs broad enough to permit the widespread development of a more humanistic, rounded American culture, and not concentrate so violently upon mere material success and speculative activity.

For all who would understand the "New Deal," the principles and philosophy back of it, and for those who would like to have some intimation of where it is likely to lead us, we strongly recommend "A Primer of New Deal Economics," by J. G. Frederick.

On this page we quote, without much comment, a part of one chapter, "The Twelve Principles of the New Deal." The book itself is an absorbing explanation of these principles, the men who have helped to develop them, and the men who are trying to apply them to the many problems of this country.

Some of the men it discusses, in the rapid shifts made by the Administration, are already out of the picture. But the picture is unchanged, and the work goes on under the direction of the one great personality behind it all: President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Most of these principles will arouse responses of hearty approval, others will be open to question, and one or two may be distinctly not favored by church people. But this book gives them to you as they are, for what they are worth, in a clear and interesting style.

"The principle of art is the incarnation of God's eternal beauty: The principle of religion is the incarnation of God's eternal human heart. Neither can do the other's work, yet their work is complementary, and I wish the divorce between them were more nearly healed. I wish the artists felt more of the need which art can never fill; I wish the religious felt more of the need that art alone can fill."—Principal Forsyth.

"In the actual to discern the ideal, in the appearance to penetrate to the reality, without taking leave of the material to reveal the spiritual—this is the mystery and vocation of the artist, and his achievement is art."—Noyes.

Said the Robin to the Sparrow,
"I should really like to know,
Why these anxious human beings
Rush about and worry so."

Said the Sparrow to the Robin,
"Friend, I think that it must be,
That they have no heavenly Father
Such as cares for you and me."

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Church Physician
By A. W. Teel, M. D.,

Some Suggestions for First Aid for Accidents That Happen in the Home

IT IS ESTIMATED that fifty percent of the fatalities from accidents occur in homes. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand men, women and children were killed in peaceful America during our nineteen months of war with Germany. Every household and every automobile should have an emergency kit as this may be the means of saving a life until the doctor comes. Every home should be provided with a small bottle of three and a half percent tincture of iodine in a glass corked bottle. At all times the iodine bottle should be kept tightly corked to prevent it from becoming too strong to use safely. Castor oil, olive oil, aromatic spirits of ammonia, smelling salts, picric acid gauze and "carbolized vaseline" should also be included in the emergency kit. Several pieces of old linen that has been thoroughly sterilized should always be kept on hand and carefully wrapped in cellophane, and in addition to this a few bandages of different sizes and a pint bottle of boracic acid solution. This can be easily obtained at any drug store, or if you choose to make it yourself add two teaspoonfuls of boracic acid powder to sixteen ounces of boiling water and when cooled sufficiently put this in a bottle that has been thoroughly cleaned and sterilized by boiling. One of the duties of every mother is to know how to meet emergencies that are common in the best regulated families.

A bruise is an injury where the skin is not broken. A slight bruise seldom needs any treatment. If the bruise is severe considerable discoloration, pain, and swelling are manifest. The discoloration is caused by injury to the underlying blood vessels. If the deeper structures are invaded by the bruise the part soon becomes purple and mottled in appearance. Many cases of this kind require days and even weeks before a normal appearance is returned. If the bruise is not very deep the part becomes red and inflamed and the swelling appears quickly. "Black and blue spots" are quite characteristic in those individuals having a sensitive skin. In these persons the slightest bump will cause these spots.

The treatment consists of extreme cold or hot compresses depending entirely upon the individual and the condition of the bruise. It is the experience of some that if heat does not relieve cold will. Whichever gives the most relief is the one to use. Some cases do better with alternate heat and cold. In cases where the pain is severe the older practitioners were in favor of tincture of arnica or old fashioned lead and opium mixture or tobacco. Local applications are more easily absorbed in some persons than others and for this reason caution should be used in the use of tobacco or other medicinal preparations especially where there is a large area to be covered on account of nicotine poisoning. Where tobacco is used gauze saturated in alcohol and covered so as to prevent evaporation, is valuable in some cases. In any case where the skin is broken by the bruise, greater care must be taken about applying local applications. In such cases it is best to apply warm or cold boracic acid solution. In all cases of this kind it is advisable to consult the family physician. Carelessness is all too common and has caused more casualties than all the combined armies of the universe and every one should be on guard to keep yards free from broken glass, rusty wire, knives and projecting nails.

The first thing to do in these cases is to cleanse the wound and if the bleeding is not dangerously severe it is well to let the blood flow a short time to assist in cleansing the wound. Follow with an application of tincture of iodine, which should not be applied in too large amounts. In these mild injuries pressure will stop the bleeding and after this is stopped hot compresses of boracic acid solution are beneficial which can be kept in place by a bandage. If it is a gaping wound, it is best to hold the edges together to facilitate healing and lessen the formation of scar tissue. In most cases of this kind it is wise to consult your physician especially if the wound shows a reddened area which seems to be extending to neighboring parts. In the meantime apply a hot boracic acid dressing. The possibility of infection is always dangerous in cuts and tears. In many cases the wound is contaminated with dirt. In such cases the foreign material should always be removed by pouring plenty of warm boracic acid solution until every trace of it is removed. After these wounds are cleansed with a boracic acid solution they should be swabbed out with the previously mentioned tincture of iodine and a moist dressing of boracic acid applied. In the torn variety of wounds a boracic acid salve is often quite soothing.

Burns and scalds are produced by coming in contact with intense heat and are injuries of greater or less severity. These injuries are received in numerous ways, steam and boiling water, being, perhaps, the most common medium. Those of gasoline, kerosene and electricity may rank next in order. For the sake of convenience, this form of injury has been classified into the (Continued on page 1585)

THE ROYAL ROAD

Pearl's rosy mouth. "Mrs. Cameron, may I present another member of our household, Mr. Dockerly?"

Larry was amazed at Doc's reaction. Almost eagerly he had taken a step or two forward before Dorothy raised her head. When her merry glance met his, he stopped short, staring hard. His hands made a convulsive movement.

"Why, how do you do," Dorothy was still smiling, "I'm certainly very glad—"

"Momma, momma!" squawked Sammie, "Dottie Pull's got her hand in my—!" The baby had deserted her spoon for more primitive methods of conveying food to her mouth, and blandly overlooking her own plate, had plunged a pink hand into her brother's cream.

Never had Larry seen Doc act so strangely. He continued to stare at Mrs. Cameron as she looked after her baby. He was like a man in a trance. His face grew white, and when he turned, his step was not so buoyant as it had been a few moments before. He seemed to have aged years as he stood there in the doorway.

Eldred Hampton noticed it, too. Larry caught her watching Doc, her expression very sober. As for Doc himself, he forgot to tease and joke that evening. He overlooked Mr. Holt entirely and bumped into Mr. Horace Peterson's puzzle, causing that gentleman to swear under his breath.

"What's the matter with Doc tonight?" Larry managed to whisper to Greg. "Did you notice how funny he acted when Eldred introduced him to Dorothy Cameron—sort've as if he'd seen a ghost."

"Or more as if he'd seen Mrs. Cameron before," practically.

"But surely he hasn't. And she acted so natural and unconcerned."

"Well, some women are pretty good actresses, and the children gave her a reassuring background."

"Greg! don't be silly! She's years younger than Doc—young enough to be his daughter."

"Well, I was just guessing as you were. He did act queer. Come on, let's do something; hadn't we better sing?" He led her toward the piano. "See there—he's prowling about in the hall like a lost soul," the young man whispered. Then aloud: "Come on, folks, let's sing something.

It didn't take much urging to gather them about the piano. Mrs. Blaine pleaded a cold, and Mr. Holt "never sang." A quick glance told Larry that Doc and Eldred were not in the group about her.

The girl was glad Greg had suggested singing. Group singing nearly always clears the air of uncertainty, discomfort, or boredom. Then too—more than people think—the selection of songs tells a great deal about the taste and inclination and even the desires of those who do the selecting. People very frequently sing straight from the heart, whereas they speak from the mind.

That was just what Eldred Hampton's household did on this evening. Carmen called for "Consecration," and Greg for "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." Mr. Harvey Peterson threw his whole soul and voice—which were quite a lot—into the harmony of "Stars of the Summer Night." Rufus Carmeron named as his selection, "Onward to Zion," but had to sing it almost alone, as there was only one hymn book which contained the words and music.

Then Larry saw Eldred's white head among the rest, and she chose two songs, "The Old, Old Path," and "I Would Be True," which, Mrs. Blaine observed, made her feel exactly as if she were going into a prayer meeting. This feeling must have been fairly shattered when Mr. Horace Peterson would be content with none other than "The Anvil Chorus." At first Sallie Ruth wanted to sing a very sentimental popular number, then she changed her mind in favor of "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord," explaining that she had been "crazy" about this Negro spiritual when she sang in the Harvest Festival Chorus last fall in the Auditorium.

"Now, Doc, what do you want to sing? Everyone else has had a choice but you," jocularly bellowed Mr. Harvey Peterson, looking about.

"Doc isn't here," Eldred Hampton explained. "He had a bad headache, and so I gave him some aspirins and he went to bed."

Doc leave the party and go to bed! Larry could scarcely believe she had heard aright. It was not like him. She looked up to catch a fleeting message from Greg. His eyes said that there was more to this than was apparent—they must talk it over after the rest were gone.

"But I haven't had a choice," Dorothy Cameron was speaking.

"Come now," from Mr. Harvey Peterson, "we didn't mean to leave any of the ladies out. It was just an oversight I assure you."

"What would you like to sing?" Greg's voice was sympathetic.

"My favorite is 'Sylvia.'"

for Christ, spiritual power and blessings will increase and the promises of God will be verified. Australia feels that it is a unit in the great universal church and joins with it in its prayer that the missionary zeal may not diminish but that the great commission of the Master might find fulfilment "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel"... and "Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world."

first, second and third degree burns each having reference to the extent and the local and general disturbance received. In burns of the first degree there is a redness of the skin (erythemia) produced by an excessive amount of blood to the part (hyperemia). This condition is a slight inflammation without blistering. In the second degree there is inflammation with the formation of blebs or blisters, while in the third degree the injury extends through the skin to the deeper structures beneath, and may be so severe that complete destruction of the part may result. The burns of the third degree are the most painful. Some authorities further divide them into fourth and fifth degrees, but I believe the third degree is sufficient for the layman to understand. "The first thought of in burns" should be to exclude the air and reduce the inflammation. Where the services of a doctor are not readily at hand a very good paste may be made by mixing baking soda flour or starch with water. Fresh lard, cream, castor oil or "carbolized vaseline" will do for temporary emergency. When available, picric acid gauze is probably the best when moistened with water or steam from the teakettle. To hold the dressing in place a bandage should be applied. An ice bag when not too heavy adds to the comfort of the patient and helps reduce the inflammation. Before the application of the gauze, antiphlogistine applied cold on the gauze adds to the efficiency of the treatment which can be peeled off in twelve to twenty-four hours.

A physician should be consulted in all severe cases of burns as they are a very serious class of injury. While waiting for the arrival of the doctor do not attempt to remove clothing that adheres to the burn but cut the cloth around the part which sticks and leave it on the burn.

In all injuries the householder should know something about the treatment of shock which may occur in severe or sometimes in slight injuries which usually follows shortly after the accident. They should receive prompt constitutional treatment. In these cases the hands and feet are cold, pulse feeble, pallor and drowsiness and if the shock is severe enough actual unconsciousness may occur which is a very evil omen. In other cases the mind may be only slightly confused. The arms and legs should be rubbed toward the body with the body covered up by blankets or your coat, cloth covered hot bricks, hot water bottles, etc., or whatever is at hand, as it requires quick work to save the patient. The patient should be placed on his back with his head lowered. It may help him if you carefully hold smelling salts before his nose. As soon as the patient is able to swallow a half teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in four or five tablespoonfuls of water or some strong hot tea or coffee should be administered.

I have been receiving letters from people who are living in rural districts, where the roads are almost impassable especially in the severe winter and spring months. Many of these people are too poor to defray the traveling expenses of an elder or a physician and this has prompted me to write this article.

MISSION WORK IN GREAT BRITAIN

around to the houses, and find places where we could stand on the streets and preach.

After an expensive and disappointing experience in trying to rent a hall and advertising in papers and circularizing the town personally for a whole month we succeeded only in getting a few curious children besides three of ourselves to the meetings. So, Brother R. W. Munro courageously went with me one Sunday afternoon, and after the churches in Hamilton were closing, we stood forth in a large space and asked the people to stop as we had a message for them. Soon a large ring was formed and hundreds of people listened while we presented the message which lasted for about half an hour. Then we distributed the tracts we had with us. Very few refused them, and after announcing that we would speak again that night at 8 o'clock at the Cross, we adjourned feeling pleased with this effort. So began the campaign in Scotland and included Glasgow, Aberdeen, Airdrie, Motherwell, Carluke and many other places in which Brethern Munro, James Wilson, J. Arber and George Thorburn gave earnest and devoted service. Afterwards a branch at Hamilton and one in Glasgow came into being.

A few weeks ago three letters were sent out from Belfast in Ireland addressed to "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" in Manchester, Leeds and Sheffield. These missives found their billet in the first two named cities. Brother T. Taylor, of Leeds went over immediately and contacted Brother Murray and his friend. I was not able to go so wrote letters and sent some literature. Brother Taylor's report was very encouraging so we arranged matters so as to get over to Belfast together and did so last July. Here again, we had no cathedral, church or meetinghouse. There was nothing else but to find places where we could speak in the open air and went to the Custom house steps, (where years ago W. H. Kelley, G. W. Leggott and T. Brien preached), and to one of the down town streets. We soon had audiences and opposition in plenty. But we felt it was a "door of opportunity" which the Lord had opened. Those who know Brother Taylor will easily imagine how this brother in his fearless manner at 71 years of age renewed his strength and enjoyed this experience once again. Brother Murray was baptized by Brother Taylor in the sea and on the shore we had confirmation service. Without any coaching by us the first thing Brother Murray wanted was the consent to tract and "bear his testimony on the Custom house steps." We gladly gave him permission and supplied him with literature. At the end of August we were able to renew the experience and in company with Brother Taylor we went over to Belfast again. We had a little group of sympathizers this time and after baptizing Brethern Simms and Best we held a service in the former's room where we had confirmation and sacrament service. We proceeded to plan a campaign and once more held the open air services at which many hundreds have heard the word. For a month Brother Taylor has been continuing this work and his reports read like some of the experiences written of in the "Acts of the Apostles"; that unfinished book to which we have all the privilege of adding pages or chapters.

We are planning to engage each member of the church in all the branches in personal missionary endeavor by asking them to go over the list of their personal friends, selecting the names and addresses of those to whom they may tell in an intimate and personal way their religious experiences in a letter and enclose a tract which has been prepared for this especial purpose. Then they will take the replies as they come in and discuss them with their pastor and upon his advice will select another tract and prepare another letter. After this preparation we shall instruct that the names and addresses of those who evince a continuing interest be turned over to the pastor to arrange for the missionary effort by local and general men to advance still further by invitations to attend services and classes of introduction.

In addition to this we are counting all the members of the church who are not active in the work as legitimate material for missionary work; and, Brother Davies, the only missionary we have here, is doing pastoral visiting among these people and treating them in a "clinical" manner. The results are enlightening and encouraging. Those who live outside the branches have been written to personally and when located they will be passed on to Brother Greenwood, the evangelist in this mission, and he will "shepherd" these.

Our purpose is to arouse each and all to the point of enthusiasm in which they will be eager to communicate that which is the biggest blessing of their lives to others, and first of all to their friends and neighbors.

The striking of a match is a wonderful phenomenon, but when that lighted match can communicate its flame to a dried bit of wood,—there is the real miracle of converted life. This illustrates simply what we mean by missionary work and something of the technique we seek to employ.

conscientious believer in the universality of God, of His Son and Redeemer of the world, and of their message of salvation for men, must of necessity yield to the influence of that power which said, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." How could one who has been made conscious of the universality of this great eternal purpose fail to be moved to an interest in what might be termed foreign people and foreign fields as well as domestic ones? Strictly speaking, however, there is no foreign race or foreign field to this universal church. We use such terms for our own convenience when speaking of physical things and boundaries.

When we accept this church we also accept the responsibility that rests upon it, and a great part of that responsibilty is to take the message of life to all the world. We are justified in withholding for a time this message from parts of the world because of a responsibility we already owe to the peoples where we have become established, and also because of our inability to do otherwise at the present time, but sooner or later this church must recognize the trust imposed upon it and move into those places not yet acquainted with our philosophy. All the peoples to whom we have gone during the past years, and who have accepted the gospel, have a proportionate claim on the church, its missionaries, its money, and its service, according, of course, to their numbers, their needs, and their contributions as determined by their ability to contribute, to the general church. These people who may be widely scattered over the earth are not responsible for it, and once they have been raised to the heights of spiritual understanding through the plan of salvation that the church has taken to them, we have no moral or legitimate right to withdraw from among them and leave them as prey for "evil men and seducers" who "lie in wait to deceive."

True, many of these peoples may never in our day see Zion, nor even contribute very much to its building. But what is Zion? Is it not a means to an end rather than the end? The end is immorality and life. The ability or inability of a people to contribute financially should not be the only basis of our going or not going to them with the gospel. Even the fact that they cannot now gather or may not gather for years or generations to come should not prevent us from carrying the gospel to them. The fact, however, that they are creatures of the universal Creator for whom the universal Savior died is sufficient to authorize us in our work of evangelization among them. No one, but God, knows the heighth, the depth and the width, of the great infinite purpose, and the part all peoples will finally play in bringing it to pass. Our responsibility, as well as God's purpose, in this dispensation is clearly implied in the following words of the Lord: "Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, Hearken, ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated, ... and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen, in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1.)

There is a tremendous urge in one who has labored in a foreign land and among people of a different race to serve and to help bring them to a knowledge of God and the wonderful provision he has made for man. This service is not in vain but bears fruit in the lives and faith of those whom we serve. Their hearts rejoice in the hope of the beautiful gospel of love. The hope of the resurrection at the time when death strikes its stinging blow brings to them a joy that is unspeakable. That which brings hope to them and helps them to shape their lives in keeping with higher standards should be continued, although their participation in Zion may be remote.

If you could sit with me in a prayer service in this distant Society Islands' Mission, hear Saints express their appreciation for the gospel they have learned to love, and see their reaction to the Spirit of God as it rests upon them, you would feel satisfied and say, "Let the church continue its good work." And you would contribute more than ever before that the church might be assisted to this worthy end. A sacrament and prayer service, such as we held last sacrament Sunday, helps one to appreciate the truth of the wonderful song, which says:

"In Christ there is no East or West,
In him no South nor North;
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.

"In him shall true hearts everywhere
Their high communion find;
His service is the golden cord
Close binding all mankind.

"Join hands then, brothers of the faith,
Whate'er your race may be,
Who serves my Father as a son
Is surely kin to me.

"In Christ now meet both East and West,
In him meet South and North;
All Christly souls are one in him
Throughout the whole wide world."

Give us consecrated men and women who have a burning desire to serve God through service to their fellow men as laborers in both our domestic and foreign fields,—men and women who can forget self and become as links in a great chain of loving service which will tie branch, district, mission, and stake, to the church and its challenging goal.

card of invitation has a more dignified appearance and a stronger pull than a cheap handbill, and Bishop French joins him in this emphasis:

"We have avoided cheap printing, particularly handbills, or any other type of cheap appearing material. We think such printed matter tends to deter rather than invite nonmembers."

Music is of course very significant in the missionary series, and, indeed, in all branch activities. In this connection Bishop Charles Fry writes most interestingly concerning a successful series of meetings in which he participated.

"In the matter of song service of which I took charge I had previously gone over thoroughly the Hymnal and Zion's Praises, selecting and listing all hymns such as might be used in our services, indicating those to be used by the congregation, and such as could be used as solos, duets, trios, and quartets. I also secured a number of other new and popular songbooks and made similar selection of special and suitable numbers. Two or three were selected as extra special or theme songs and were frequently used. The special songs were assigned to singers carefully selected who prepared them in advance. For using these special numbers there was no set time, but whenever the sentiment of the hymn found a fitting place in the meeting it was called for and rendered. No hymns were selected for the meeting beforehand, but from the list which I constantly kept before my eyes or in my mind I selected at the moment the one which was fitting and effectual. We usually spent a half hour in singing, during which time I would call for any of the special numbers desired.

"Frequently the hymns, which were often but one or two verses, were interpersed with a personal interest story, a bit of church history, a brief biographical sketch, or other item of interest, but always the thing that was fitting. On one occasion when I suddenly stopped the singing I called upon an esteemed brother to come forward and give a few words of personal testimony, and notwithstanding his eighty years and more Brother 'Jap' Richards in less than three minutes gave one of the most stirring testimonies of the gospel I ever heard. These little incidents coming up spontaneously and always fitting in so perfectly, and the songs also, had a great effect in arousing interest. Often in announcing a certain hymn I would call attention to the central thought and make a momentary comment upon it. In one place I did this with each successive hymn during the half hour and was myself astonished at the perfect gospel story told in hymn and comment."

Brother Velt believes in using every legitimate method to bring people out to hear the message and he calls attention to the value of social functions in this connection:

"In most places we have found it advisable to have a social program arranged occasionally in connection with missionary services, and in some vicinities, indeed, we have found wonderful missionary opportunities through that means. In one place we arranged a social program once a week, endeavoring to have as many as possible take some part in music, speech, song, or drama, with games following. The interest in these programs grew almost amazingly, so that other religionists began to use similar methods. After the missionary had left, these concerts continued to grow, under capable leadership until the numbers present would reach up to one hundred and eighty, though there were but about twenty-five members. It was made a point to close up by 9.30 p. m. We have baptized some fine people who were first contacted through this means in that place. In another branch we found it absolutely essential to have some kind of social function to get our own young people out. In doing so we got crowds of strangers' children, also, and left the church school increased by a goodly number."

Follow Through, Follow Up

Another point on which all the writers agree, both with regard to missionary work in the branch and to missionary series, is that there must be no let-up during the progress of missionary activity. Contacts made must be followed up persistently until those interested become members. A person who is half converted is not one tenth as useful as one who is fully converted, yet all too frequently we fail in that final effort which makes the difference between interest in our work and passionate devotion to it. Brother Livingston writes:

"Endurance is vital. Elijah failed in the very face of success because he fled when an angry woman threatened him. Many times in view of apparent success something may happen disrupting the effort, but if one continues doggedly on he will be able to rise above every obstacle. If we can only remember that there is joy in heaven over just one repentant sinner, it will help us to stay to our task even though the effort seems futile."

Spiritual Stepping Stones

I was privileged to hear the gospel in 1927, and it seemed to me a great and glorious light shining into my world of darkness. The more I investigated that light the brighter it grew until its rays penetrated into the inmost depths of my being, filling my heart with a joy I had never before known.

In 1928, I became a member of God's kingdom on earth, and at that time felt my cup of joy was full. I thought that God could have nothing more in store for me; but today I realize the wonderful truth of these words: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." (1 Corinthians 2: 9, 10.)

For five years I have walked and met many obstacles alone, being the only member of my family and immediate friends who has accepted the gospel and yet I have not been alone. The Holy Spirit has been with me to guide and comfort, and God has given me many evidences of his loving care and kindness. These I count as blessings.

I can truly testify that I know the Reorganized Church is the true church of Jesus Christ, not because I believe so, or have been told so, but because God has revealed it to me. I have been blessed with a spiritual experience proving this to me and telling me that the officers ordained of God are working under the authority of Jesus Christ.

Such an experience strengthened and comforted me in my hours of greatest need. It has been my safeguard when the arrows of prejudice and ridicule came my way. To me it is the fulfillment of the words of John: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." (John 7: 17.)

In March, 1933, I received my patriarchal blessing, under the hands of Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, a blessing that is wonderfully spiritual and something I had no hope of receiving because of opposition. But I have found if we love the Lord and keep his commandments, nothing is impossible with him. I was told in the blessing that God will hear my prayers both in my own behalf and in behalf of those near and dear to me. In August of this year my twelve-year-old son jumped from a tree upon an oil can, which went through his foot. We were in the country away from our doctor, so I went to the Lord in prayer. For three weeks the child's foot was swollen, but he says there was never any pain, and my people wonder at his rapid recovery without complications.

Another blessing by no means small to me, is the new way of receiving the Herald. Before this new system I could not enjoy the paper. Now I am receiving it each week through the branch, and it is a blessing.

Nor must I omit mention of the wonderful change that has come to me this year. Heretofore I have experienced joy, sorrow, zeal and anxiety in the gospel work. I have had many disappointments and discouragements, but this year a wonderful peace has filled my heart, and I have learned that whatsoever may come, it is for my good and thereby I am content. The peace of God which passeth all understanding is my golden blessing of this year, and like David I would say:

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." (Psalm 103: 2.)

"Bless ye the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure." (Psalm 103: 21.)

"O give thanks unto the Lord. Call upon his name: make known his deeds among the people. Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: talk ye of all his wondrous works." (Psalm 105: 1, 2.)

"Praise ye the Lord, O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever."

Rejoice at Divine Guidance

We feel that the Lord has directed and wonderfully blessed us during the past year. About a year ago we heard of forty acres of land in the Ozarks offered for trade for Tacoma, Washington, property. We opened negotiations for this trade after much prayer and consulting with our bishop, D. S. McDole. And then we did something which some thought very foolish—we traded for the land without seeing it. Our family prayed constantly that this move would be pleasing to God, and that he would help and guide us.

We left Tacoma, July 15, this year, and drove through to the Ozarks in a Chevrolet truck. Many times on our trip we were given evidence of God's watchcare. Once while we were crossing a desert in Wyoming our fan broke and ran through the radiator letting all the water out. We walked about two miles and found water in an irrigation ditch. While the children and I were gone, Brother Bronson cut small sticks and plugged the hole with sticks and soap. After a short time we were on our way, but with no fan. We went twenty-eight miles before we reached a garage. The mechanics could not understand how we had made those intervening miles with the weather as hot as it was.

Another time we were caught in a desert storm with a broken crank shaft. At any moment it seemed as if the truck would turn over, but again we were thankful. The worst of the storm went around us, and we missed the rain and hail which laid the cornfields flat on the ground six miles farther ahead.

We very much enjoyed the trip all the way. Even in the experiences above mentioned, we felt the sweet spirit that follows trail and engenders humility.

We stopped at Independence, Missouri, a week, to visit places of interest—the Auditorium, Stone Church, Campus, Walnut Park Church, the Atherton Farm community, and the tomb of Joseph the beloved. We enjoyed a wonderful spirit of fellowship while in Independence, but our journey did not end there. We traveled about three hundred miles farther before we came to the property for which we had traded. The land was covered with timber except a small space around a fourteen-foot square shack.

After a few days' work we had cleared away the rocks and brush around the house and found that we had a fine piece of land well worth what we gave. We have built another room to the house and have what stock we need for winter. For these conveniences and blessings we are thankful. We look forward to the time when other Saints will gather here.

We are attending the Union Sunday school and helping as we can. If there are Saints close to Mountain View or Summersville, Missouri, we should enjoy hearing from them. We ask an interest in your prayers, that we may live close to the gospel and according to the stewardship plan, being useful members of the church.

Lonely Member Finds Courage in God's Promises

I am the only Latter Day Saint living at Riverton, though a few are living in the surrounding community. Riverton Branch is scattered now, and many times I am lonely and long for the association of Saints. Then I read my patriarchal blessing and rejoice in the wonderful blessings the Lord has promised me if I am faithful. I know that he has been mindful of me all along the way of life.

I believe that the adorning of a meek and quiet spirit is of much worth to one who professes the name of Christ, and I pray that I may continue to look to my Savior and Master for help and guidance. I want to be faithful until the end, and I pray for the "faith that will not shrink, though pressed by every foe."

I was baptized fifty-two years ago by Brother Henry Kemp. Our branch was then known as the Millcreek Branch. Brother Kemp married me and my husband, Byron Cheney in August, 1887; baptized my husband six years later and as time passed lived to bless our three children. He used to visit us often.

Please pray for me and my family. My youngest son is ill and very much needs the prayers of all.

Are We Measuring up to the Christ Standard?

I am reminded at this time of the year that we who are God's people are not counted by the things we possess. What we really are and how much we love God and his cause are the things that measure us as good Latter Lay Saints. We say that we love the church, but in the final analysis do we not love many things more than we love the Master's cause? Do we not cater to fashions and fine things, to luxury and to vanity?

God has committed his work to our care. We made him a solemn promise in baptism, to do our part in helping him build up his kingdom here on earth. Are we doing it? Are we keeping that promise? Can people tell by our attitudes and our manner of living that we are true Saints of the Most High? Sometimes I think that we who are supposed to be the light of the world have let our lamps grow dim; that we are not concerned so much about our Father's business as about our own personal, trivial affairs.

When Jesus comes to his own, I believe he will claim those who have kept his law, those who can give a creditable account of their stewardship of time, wealth, and personality. He will choose the unselfish, the honest, the just, and the virtuous.

Many times experiences come to us which remind us that no man has a lease on life. You or I may have only a few days left to show the church and the world that we love Christ and that we want to give him our best. Then, by all means, let us show in the things that we do that we are keeping Christ's whole law, and that the gospel is sweet to us, the way of salvation.

God wants to bless us, but in the past we have followed the world and treated lightly his laws to the extent that he has withheld the wonderful blessings in store for his people. Please pray for me that I with the rest of you may have the strength, faith and courage to keep his entire law.

MINNIE DELLER.

ROCKVILLE, MISSOURI.

If We Keep the Commandments—

If we as a church would keep the law, we should be the happiest and most prosperous people on the earth. This is not a dream; it has been proved in the actual experiences of men. Many have tried to abide by the law and have reaped blessings and helps from their experiences. If you doubt this, my frank suggestion is for you to try it.

God always keeps his promises to us. We should not doubt him. He never fails. Sometimes we fail to live up to our opportunities, but if we live according to the plan he has given us, he will open the windows of heaven and pour out such blessings that we can hardly receive them all.

We should not obey the financial law of the church with an idea of making material profit, else we shall be disappointed. We should pay our tithing because it is a debt we owe to the Lord. I have been paying tithing for thirty years, and I want to say that during those years I have been greatly blessed. Never have I gone hungry or in want for any good thing.

My desire is to be obedient and to be grateful to the Lord for the wonderful plan of life he has given us. I want ever to be true and to keep the law. Let us pray in love and sympathy for those who do not keep the law.

Request Prayers

Sister Myrtle Ellis, Concordia, Kansas, an isolated member, seeks the prayers of the church, that she may be healed of liver and stomach trouble. She has belonged to the church a number of years, and finds much comfort in the gospel.

Sister Effie Barr, of Whittemore, Michigan, requests the Saints to fast and pray for her husband who has had an operation for goiter. He suffers with his heart and is unable to do any work. Brother and Sister Barr are the parents of four small children. Sister Barr would be glad to receive letters.

Sister T. J. Jett, sr., of San Antonio, Texas, desires the Saints to pray for her sick daughter, Mrs. Ralph L. Davis, a member of Second San Antonio Church. Sister Davis has been confined to her bed for the past three months, seriously ill and suffering intense pain. Will the Saints fast and pray for her recovery?

QUESTION TIME

What was the origin and authority of the work, "The Pearl of Great Price"?

This work was issued by F. D. Richards in England in 1851, but it did not at first contain all that was later included in some subsequent issues. For instance, I have an edition published in 1888 at Salt Lake City, Utah, which contains the so-called revelation on "The Eternity of the Marriage Covenant, including Plurality of Wives," which was not originally in The Pearl of Great Price, and in fact was not at that time even known to the church or the public.

Other contents of the work include Joseph Smith's famous prophecy on the Civil War, his translation of the "Book of Abraham," and several extracts of revelations now published in our Doctrine and Covenants. The Reorganized Church has never accepted the work, except as to those portions extracted from revelations adopted formally by the church in an early day, but has specifically disavowed some things which it contains. We understand, however, that the Utah faction accepts all of the work as inspired or authentic.

Did Mrs. White, Adventist prophetess, predict the Civil War would end slavery?

Apparently not, for in her "Testimonies to the Church," published by the Seventh-Day Adventist Publishing Association, Battle Creek, Michigan, she declared in regard to "The North and South":

"January 4, 1862, I was shown some things in regard to our nation. My attention was called to the Southern rebellion. . . . Thousands have been induced to enlist with the understanding that this war was to exterminate slavery; but now they are fixed, they find that they have been deceived, that the object of this war is not to abolish slavery, but to preserve it as it is."—Number Seven, pages 209, 211.

Possibly this language might be construed by some to refer only to the aims of certain leaders in the war, were it not that she continues with statements which show quite clearly that she believed the war would not result in abolishing slavery. After some further comments following her language as quoted, she said:

"That which caused the rebellion is not removed. The system of slavery, which has ruined our nation, is left to live, and stir up another rebellion. . . . As I was shown this war, it looked to me the most singular and uncertain that ever existed. A great share of the volunteers enlisted fully believing that the result of the war would be to abolish slavery. . . . Had our nation remained united, it would have had strength; but divided, it must fall."—Ibid., pages 212, 213, 214, 219.

There is not space here for more than a few significant extracts from this voluminous document, but the impression conveyed is that Mrs. White believed she had been "shown" that slavery would continue as a result of the war. Of course it is entirely probable that she later became convinced otherwise.

Where is it said, "if they labor for money, they shall perish"?

The original source of this statement appears to be the Second Book of Nephi, in the eleventh chapter, which declares:

"But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—Book of Mormon, 148: 109.

When were the New Testament books first adopted as inspired?

This was a somewhat gradual process, for some of the books were the subject of dispute for several centuries before a formal declaration of the church was made in regard to the matter. What is called the Muratorian Canon, or Fragment, was written about 170 A. D., it is claimed, and contained all of the present New Testament list except Hebrews, James, and 1 and 2 Peter. Others near this time also gave complete or partial lists, but the books accepted by some church leaders were in some instances rejected by others, and the matter thus became a source of controversy in church councils for several centuries.

The first official church council to indorse the New Testament books as now constituted was probably the Synod of Damascus, in 382 A. D. The Synod of Hippo also adopted the same list eleven years later, and in 397 A. D. the Council of Carthage adopted the complete canon, including the Apocrypha of the Old Testament. The Roman Catholic Church still holds as sacred the books of the Apocrypha named.

In the second century some church officials claimed that revelation had ceased, thus opposing Montanism which claimed prophetic inspiration. But I believe the Council of Florence (in 1442) first officially declared the Scriptures to be inspired.

Missionary Activities in Scandinavia

Summer Open-Air Meetings Acquaint Norwegians With Gospel

Perhaps the most interesting meetings we have held in this mission for some time were our open-air meetings during the past summer. In Norway during the summer months, it is almost impossible to get many people to attend services in a hall unless they have a special interest. So we decided to take our meetings out in the open to them.

We obtained permission from the chief of police in Oslo to use one of the city parks each Saturday night. It is a beautiful park close to the heart of the city where hundreds of people go to rest and spend a few quiet hours. We were fortunate in obtaining the use of it.

Each Saturday evening during the summer found us in the park, with our little folding organ, where we stood up in a bandstand and preached the message of everlasting life to from two hundred to three hundred people who listened attentively. Some of the Saints accompanied Sister Ruch and me and assisted in the singing and distribution of tracts. Sister Ruch played the organ and sang solos. I used members of the local priesthood to take charge of the meetings, read the Scripture lesson and make a few introductory remarks. This was fine experience for them and they enjoyed it.

It was inspirational to note the attentive interest on the faces of that large congregation of people, many of whom came regularly each week to hear our message. I enjoyed the Spirit of God and was able to preach with power. Many friends were won for the cause. Hundreds of people who had never attended one of our meetings before and who perhaps never would have entered one of our halls, because of prejudice, had the courage to stand there at our open-air meetings and listen to the gospel in its fullness for the first time.

Much discussion was aroused among the people with regard to our doctrine. It is so much in conflict with the usual easy way of salvation that is taught in many churches today. Many people resented our attempt to arouse them from their spiritual sleep while many others valiantly defended us.

A wonderful opportunity was ours to preach the gospel as a witness to many who otherwise might never have heard it. A part of our great responsibility as a church is to preach the gospel as a witness to as many people as possible whether they want to hear it or not. We should use every opportunity to give people a chance to hear the restored gospel. Even if no other fruit is gathered as a result of our open-air meetings this summer, we have at least discharged a responsibility in preaching the gospel as a witness in Oslo.

Hundreds of tracts were distributed and the people were eager to get them. One thing is certain, and that is that many people in Oslo are better acquainted with our church and its doctrine than they were last spring. Some of them are attending our meetings at the hall this winter and are investigating.

Of course, the old cry of "Mormons" was heard often. We had occasion to explain that there is a great difference between us and the Utah Church. Many who had thought we were Mormons were astonished at our doctrine and unwillingly admitted that our teachings were in harmony with the Bible.

A Visit to Sweden and Denmark

Early in September I left Oslo and started on one of my semiannual visits to Sweden and Denmark. As many of you know I am the lone missionary in these three Scandinavian countries. Most of my time is spent in Norway, but I visit Sweden and Denmark occasionally to encourage the Saints and to let them know that the church is still interested in them.

In Sweden I visited Saints at Stockholm, Sodertelje, Holo, Helsingborg and Billesholms Gruva. In Denmark my visit took me to Copenhagen, Hatting and Aalborg. Everywhere I was so joyfully received by our members and friends that my visit among them was as much an encouragement to me as it was to them. Many are isolated and have no regular meetings to attend, nor do they have any contact with the general church with the exception of what they get through me. Because of this I keep up a large correspondence with the Saints in these three countries. Many times I am asked when Sandhetens Banner, our mission paper, is to be revived. It is very much missed, especially by isolated members.

I held a few public meetings in some of the places visited, and house meetings in other places. In Stockholm, especially, there seems to be an interest. We had good attendance and the Spirit witnessed to me, as it did on a former visit, that God has a work to do there. One young married woman is converted, and wanted very much to be baptized, but her husband would not give his consent. She will come later. Another married couple are very much interested and are near the kingdom. I hope to return to Stockholm in the spring and work there for a few weeks. I baptized Brother Lundstrom's young son at Sodertelje. He now has two of his boys with him in the church.

Calls on Relatives of Albert Loving

Before going to Sweden, I received a letter from Brother Albert Loving, our energetic brother and former missionary, of Lamoni, Iowa, requesting me to visit some of his relatives who live a few miles from Stockholm, and acquaint them with the church and give them an opportunity to hear the restored gospel. Brother Loving did not do as many do in such instances, merely give me the name and address of his relatives and not attempt to do anything for them himself. He prepared the way before me by corresponding with them, telling them about the church and about me and asked if I could come and visit them. He sent them tracts printed in Swedish and also sent me funds to pay my expenses from Stockholm out to where the relatives live.

The result was that I and our local elder in Stockholm were heartily welcomed in the home when we arrived there. While the interest in the church was not great in that home, we have at least established a contact, were successful in gaining the husband's attendance at one of our meetings in Stockholm and in planting a little of the gospel seed. What the result of that visit will be is in the hands of God.

I admire Brother Loving for his great interest in the salvation of his relatives. Each one of us should feel the personal responsibility we have at least to give those who are near and dear to us opportunity to hear of and come into possession of the pearl of great price. As members of the church we believe, and many of us know, that this is the true church of Jesus Christ. It should be of deep concern to us that our relatives and friends become members of the church by obedience to the gospel. Follow Brother Loving's example. Assist in the missionary work of the church by cooperating with the missionary and by obtaining for him a welcome in the homes of your relatives and friends.

Harmony Characterizes Branch Activities

The newly-organized Book of Mormon class of girls taught by Sister Anna Cramer, successfully dramatized the play, "Other Sheep Have I," by Mabel Williams Crayne, September 21. Their presentation was excellently rendered and was preceded by a pantomime interpretation of the hymn, "Book of Mormon, Hid for Ages," by Madge Thomas, assisted by a quartet. The class meets every two weeks on Sunday afternoon.

Miss Charlene Hensel has also organized a club for which a name has not yet been selected. Its activities will be confined to the study of fine arts. The members meet monthly to enjoy a social hour with contests and stunts. Both the young people's society and the club enjoyed halloween parties.

The congregation was pleased to welcome Apostle Paul M. Hanson, November 2, and to listen to his excellent discourse. On Sunday, October 15, they were happy to have with them once again Patriarch G. T. Griffiths whose visits and kindly counsel are deeply appreciated.

Elder William L. Goudy officiated at the funeral service of T. D. Briggs, a nonmember, age sixty-one, November 1. His family are regular attendants of the church school, and receive the sympathy of all.

The marriage of Sister Lena Watkins and George Tirney, of Conotton, Ohio, was solemnized September 23, by Elder John D. Carlisle.

Brother and Sister William F. Webbe, of Kirtland, Ohio, were visitors here October 1. Brother Webbe, district superintendent of church schools, gave an interesting talk on religious education, and assisted in the sacrament service.

Elder John Carlisle has been conducting preaching services at a schoolhouse at Tippecanoe, Ohio, and reports good interest.

Members of the priesthood have been active in providing interesting messages, and as the year draws to a close the Saints feel that the Lord has blessed them wonderfully in the spiritual endeavors of the branch.

Brother Charles Cramer chose as his topic Sunday morning, November 19, "Keeping the Law."

Sunday morning, November 26, in commemoration of Thanksgiving a beautiful service was arranged. Brother S. B. Mansell spoke briefly on the theme of the hour. Eight girls taught by Anna Watkins, sang a song, and the pageant, "Thanksgiving," was given by local members, a vocal quartet assisting the cast. As the climax of the play four small boys and girls presented "Thanksgiving" baskets laden with fruits, grains, and vegetables.

The annual branch meeting will be conducted December 12.

Missionary Meetings at Medoc, Missouri

J. L. Creviston Aids Small Group

Elder J. L. Creviston held a three weeks' series of missionary meetings at the Medoc, Missouri, schoolhouse, which was well attended by people who seemed very much interested in the gospel. Only three families of Saints live in the community, but they are progressive and are determined to tell the gospel tidings.

Brother Creviston was instrumental in establishing regular periods of prayer meeting to be held every Sunday afternoon at the home of Brother J. L. Mathis. He also has agreed to return the second Sunday in each month and preach at the schoolhouse both morning and night and administer the sacrament to the Saints at their afternoon prayer service.

Ribstone, Alberta

William Osler Lends Missionary Aid

Ribstone Branch, the largest in Alberta, is situated about one hundred and seventy miles southeast of Edmonton on the main line of the Canadian National Railroad. Its membership constitutes the largest church congregation in the locality and is active in gospel witnessing and Zion building. Elder Albert White is pastor, and with his willing and faithful assistant pastor, Elder George Miller, seeks to provide the best care for the flock in his charge.

For the winter season the services of Elder William Osler, of Edmonton, were secured after the loyal and long faithful women's department, led by Sister Annie Burton, assured the pastor, that it would attend to all necessary financial obligations. Elder Osler is now completing a two-week missionary series of meetings with nice attendance, and already several people are investigating the truth.

Following these meetings, there will be a missionary series held at points south of the branch. Priesthood meetings are being held which are of benefit to the local ministry in their work. Keeping the law and living it in spirit and in truth are made plainer in Elder Osler's pastoral sermons each Sunday afternoon. Regular prayer meetings are being held in the church every Thursday afternoon. The young people are planning further activities as their committee attends to such needs. Each Saturday afternoon the young children come into town with their mothers and friends and while the women are busy with their department meeting, Elder Osler spends an interesting hour and a half with the children. With devotional exercises, story-telling and games, the little folks are actively happy in the town hall which is rented for branch activities.

The Sunday school, under its superintendency, Brother Fred Dallyn and Brother Charles Waite, is preparing a Christmas pageant, "The Bethlehem Scene." With its array of youthful talent, aided by music and the help of dramatic leaders, this entertainment will doubtless be an outstanding success.

All departments work harmoniously with each other and the spirit of cooperation is found everywhere. As the congregation nears the close of 1933 and visions the opportunities of the coming year, Ribstone Saints feel thankful for divine blessings of the past and with faith and good works, intend to maintain, develop, and preach the faith once delivered to the Saints—the angel message.

Brush Creek, Illinois

The Baldwins Help With Tent Meetings

Evangelist Richard Baldwin held a series of tent meetings at Xenia, beginning September 18 and closing October 15. Eleven were baptized as the fruits of his labors, Joe Burkett, Curtis King, Oakley King and wife, John David Chaney, John Kurtz, Noel Kurtz, Beulah Mae Slover, Johnnie Lawrence and wife, and Nellie Henson. All Brush Creek members who could, attended the services, and appreciate the help of such earnest workers as Brother and Sister Baldwin.

Several have been added to this branch by transfer.

Brush Creek has a beautiful banner made of church colors and inscribed with the words "Keep the Law" in gold letters across the top. Each member who files his inventory has a gold star placed on the banner with his name on it. The local slogan is "Brush Creek Leads the Way."

The La Da Sa Club met in September with Pearl Henson and Mae Mills at Xenia. In October they met with Anna Slover and Elberta Henson. They met with Kate Morris and Mabel Phillips at Cisne in November.

The men have organized the Brush Creek Development Association.

This local was saddened by the death of Brother James Slover October 26. Funeral services were conducted at Brush Creek, the sermon being by Elder R. H. Henson, assisted by Elder O. C. Henson. Interment was in Needmore Cemetery.

A large crowd attended the annual halloween social, and prizes went to best costumes and make-up. Supper was served and the proceeds went to branch expenses. A quilt was sold.

Some of the speakers who have lately occupied the stand are Elders R. H. Henson, J. H. Henson, O. C. Henson, William Clements, Phillip Henson, and Halleck Milner.

The branch held its annual business meeting October 30, and Elder O. C. Henson was chosen as pastor with William Clements and J. H. Henson as counselors. Delbert Morris was selected as church school supervisor. These leaders are supported by a corps of efficient and consecrated fellow officers and helpers.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brush Creek sacrament services are well attended and the source of strength and encouragement.

Sister Clements happened to a painful accident November 27, when the car in which she and Brother Clements were riding was overturned south of Xenia. She suffered a broken arm and some cuts on her face and head.

The church school held a banquet November 29. More than seventy people were served and a program of talks by some of the elders and church school officers, songs and jokes entertained everyone.

The children gave a Thanksgiving program, December 1, which was attended by a nice crowd. Then the entertainers were marched over to the dining hall where supper was served to them by the church school. Plans are being made by the young people for a banquet in the near future. The Christmas program is now under way.

Washington, District of Columbia

Hold All-day Meeting

Saints of Washington, D. C., met Sunday, November 5, for an all-day service. Sunday school was held at the usual hour and followed by a baptismal service conducted by Elder Froyd in a stream at Arlington, Virginia. The candidate was the little ten-year-old Mary Hunter, daughter of Sister Ida M. Hunter, of Laytonsville, Maryland. Confirmation was held at the sacrament service that afternoon following the basket dinner at the church.

The young people met at Sister Ida M. Hunter's house on Thursday night for a Book of Mormon class. Washington Saints are happy to have made the acquaintance of this family. Sister Meely of Washington group, was instrumental in getting in touch with the Hunter family through a letter in the Herald. Only the mother and three children belong to the church. Several missionary services have been conducted during the summer at this home, and various families of the neighborhood have attended. This afforded a splendid opportunity for missionary activities.

A Christmas program is well under way.

Brother and Sister Adolphus Edwards and family, of Baltimore, were, visitors at the sacrament service here in November.

Brother and Sister James Edwards and two sons, of Washington, have moved to Baltimore, where Brother James has a position. The local group regrets to lose them. Sister Edwards was in charge of the children's division and Brother Edwards holds the office of elder and was active here.

San Francisco, California

Danvers and Caselli Streets

Much has taken place in this Branch since its last letter to the Herald, and the Saints are happy with the results. At the last annual business meeting, Elder Arthur Oakman was elected pastor for the ensuing year, with Elders Frank Steele and Emery Parks as associates.

Workers are thankful that Brother Oakman agreed to accept the appointment, when already his time seemed occupied with his many duties in East Bay Branch. There seems only one answer to this—when one is consecrated to God's work, time seems not to be the essential thing, but willingness to do the many duties that come his way.

At a special business session, the night of the midweek prayer service was changed from Wednesday to Thursday. This was done to allow Brother Oakman to have charge of the prayer hour. There has been marked increases in both attendance and spirit.

Brother Oakman has been addressing the priesthood between seven and eight o'clock on Thursday evenings before the prayer hour.

There is increased activity among the young people of the branch. They have recently organized as "The Zion Builders" with Marie Hinton, President, Maxine Mustar, Vice-President, Dorothy Wells, Secretary and Marjorie Wells, treasurer. They are sponsoring the biweekly paper known as The Zion Builder with Albert Boynton as editor. On Sunday evening, November 12, fourteen members were initiated with an impressive ceremony. Several of their number were absent and will be initiated at a later date.

The pageant "Restoration" was impressively presented Sunday evening, November 26, under the able direction of Sister Ruth Clegg. The audience exceeded the seating capacity of the church.

Much interest was aroused at the announcement several weeks ago, that President F. M. McDowell and Apostle E. J. Gleazer would be in the Bay Cities on November 18, 19 and 20, in the interest of the priesthood. The first meeting was held at this branch on Saturday night, November 18, with thirty-two priesthood members present. This number included members from the Bay area and San Jose, who were given a very fine talk by President McDowell. On Sunday, the activities were transferred to the East Bay Branch, Berkeley, where at 9:30 a. m., President McDowell gave another splendid charge to the priesthood. At eleven o'clock the entire congregation assembled in the main auditorium. District President G. P. Levitt was in charge with Apostle E. J. Gleazer offering the invocation. President McDowell chose as his text "Abide in me and I will abide in you." The message following was uplifting and a challenge to all to "Come up higher."

At 2:30 p. m. President McDowell presided over another priesthood meeting, which was more in the nature of a round-table discussion.

At each of these priesthood meetings the importance and beauty of the ordinances of the church were emphasized, and all led up to the beautiful and solemn ordination service held at 6:30 p. m. Brother Lorin Shaffer was ordained to the office of deacon and Brother Myron Schall, of San Jose, to the office of priest. Apostle Gleazer presided at this meeting, with Elders G. P. Levitt and Arthur Oakman as spokesman.

The message by President McDowell following the ordination service was another feast for the soul. Elder Eli Bronson offered a beautiful invocation and Elder Arthur Oakman was in charge of the service. Saints who came from all surrounding branches felt uplifted and glad of the ministrations received during throughout these meetings.

At a recent business session of the women's department, Sister Rebecca Boynton was elected superintendent. In addition to their customary activities, these sisters have recently started studying the Doctrine and Covenants, Elder Arthur Oakman, teacher. This department held their annual bazaar and cooked food sale December 8.

All are glad to have Brother George Lincoln back after spending several months at Russian River. He reports his health greatly improved.

Detroit, Michigan

East Side Church

November 26, was the date set aside by this group for annual home-coming and rally day. Home-coming has been observed by this people for a long period of years as the culmination of summer and autumn interests and the turning of the branch to the more serious and intensive work of winter.

The services of the day beginning with an 8:30 a. m. prayer meeting, were quite successful. From shortly after the opening hour until the closing one at night the house was filled to capacity. Many members formerly associated with the group as well as a number of visiting Saints were present. The success of the day is attributed largely to the unified effort of priesthood and laity, under the capable leadership of Pastor Wilbert Richards. Surely many whose petitions to God that he would bless this occasion with the outpouring of His Spirit, had reason to rejoice because of the divine recognition manifested in every event.

Elder Kenneth Greene, district president, was in charge of the prayer service; Elder James Davis offered the opening prayer after which Elder L. J. Richards, pastor of Wyandotte group, delivered a spiritual address. The service was of a high order, many responding in prayer or testimony. The local priesthood together with visiting priesthood members gathered on the rostrum. During the course of the service the gospel gifts were given for the instruction, the uplift, and the encouragement of officers and congregation.

Three former East Side pastors were present, Elders A. B. Smith, L. J. Richards, and William E. Leland. The prayer service was climaxed when Pastor Wilbert Richards arose and under the power of the Spirit, called Herbert Lively, jr., to the office of priest in the Aaronic priesthood.

Elder Greene announced the prayer service closed after which Elder A. E. Boos rendered a beautiful solo, and the meeting was turned into an ordination service. William O'Dell, formerly a priest, was ordained an elder by Elders W. Richards and A. B. Smith. Prior to the ordinance Elder James Davis spoke briefly on the significance of the Melchisedec priesthood, its honor and responsibility. Then Mr. and Mrs. George Hosler presented their infant son to be blessed.

Elder J. Charles Mottashed spoke at eleven o'clock on "Repentance as a Comdition of Receptivity and Adaptibility." Group thirteen of the women's department, led by Mrs. Cecil Crooker, furnished a bountiful meal at noon and again in the evening. No fixed price was set on the meal, but all were invited to eat and afterwards those who were able, were asked to contribute to a collection taken. Approximately a sum of twenty-five dollars was realized by the department as clear profit.

At one-thirty Mrs. Eldora Richards, choir director, and the orchestra leader collaborated in furnishing musical entertainment for all. Elder A. B. Smith preached a forceful sermon at three o'clock on "The Signs of the Times." Mrs. A. Cambridge read a paper which she had prepared on the life of Emma Smith.

For a number of months the young people's division of the church school has had allotted to them the last Sunday evening of each month at which time they choose their own speaker. The home-coming falling on their Sunday, they chose Elder Kenneth Greene to represent them, and he spoke at four o'clock on the "Possibilities of the Young in the Work of the Church."

Following the evening meal Elder David Dowker, pastor of Central group, spoke on the thought, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

The priesthood of this group have been enjoying outstanding spiritual experiences of late. Under the direction of Elder Wilbert Richards, they are being brought to a high degree of efficiency. For a period of two or more years they have been meeting bimonthly for discussion and study. Attendance over this period of time has averaged seventy-five per cent of those ordained. Recently an increased effort toward preparation for service was begun in the priesthood. They now meet every Wednesday evening one hour before prayer service for class study. Interest is good. Pastor Richards has made it possible for every member of the priesthood to develop to the extent of his desires and all have responded one hundred percent to the opportunity. A system of visiting has been recently instituted whereby every member of the group will receive one or more visits each month by an elder, priest, or teacher. The deacons are not included in this particular program of visiting, but have been left free to work out a system of visiting among themselves, giving all members an opportunity to contribute financially and to know the financial law; also they are to see that the indigent are cared for.

Last winter the city pastor, Elder J. Charles Mottashed, together with various group pastors, worked out a welfare system which functioned so well that all the needy members of the branch were cared for and that without anyone feeling the weight of additional burden.

The church school is functioning excellently. Capable men and women engaged in this work are proving their worth as leaders. Under the leadship of Mrs. Eldora Richards the choir has proved an inspiration to East Side. No speaker or entertainer who has endeavored to serve will hesitate to say that his task was made lighter by fifty percent because of the timely aid of the choir. Aside from the arduous task of choir work, Mrs. Richards finds time to devote to the care of the group statistical work. Here she has been a decided help to the priesthood visiting the members furnishing them with a list of the group.

Much enthusiasm is being shown throughout the group over the winter's work. Already openings for cottage meetings are being received. Able men are awaiting assignment to these openings which will mean added opportunity for them to tell the angel message.

Observance of the "Keep the Law" period met with a great degree of success. Classes are being conducted on Friday evening and Sunday afternoon with promising outlook.

Wednesday evening prayer services are spiritual feasts to all. Seventy-three people there is not an unusual number. An early morning service on Sunday is held for the benefit of those who cannot be present at the midweek hour.

Unity and stability of purpose prevail within the women's department. Their work is commendable. When finances are needed this department can be relied upon to contribute its part.

A short time ago two young men of sterling character were called to offices in the Aaronic priesthood by Elder Richards, George C. Hose, teacher, and Cecil Crooker, priest. Their ordinations will be had in the near future.

The young men of the group, led by Coach Cecil Crooker, have organized a basket ball team and have played their initial game. During the summer these young fellows played baseball.

Kansas City Stake

Concluding Ceremony of "Keep the Law" Period

Kansas City Stake has been enjoying some unusually fine meetings in recent months. The November conference was of a high order, especially the largely attended business session which developed into quite an outstanding testimony meeting. There were seven ordinations presented for approval by the stake presidency. They had been previously presented to the stake high council where abundant evidence was both presented and felt in the meeting.

This spirit carried over into the business session where the calls of Edward J. Baker, Berwyn O. Lungwitz, David S. White, to the eldership; Lester L. Fowler, priest; John Crimmins, Floyd I. Reneau, teacher, and Joseph Coakley, deacon, were approved and the ordinations provided for.

Sunday, December 3, ended the official "Keep the Law" effort, but for many it was only the beginning of a greater determination to abide by all the laws that God has given to the church.

Under the direction of Bishop C. A. Skinner and his solicitors, and with the cooperation of the stake presidency and pastors, an intensive period of teaching, preaching, and solicitation was arranged late in October. Everyone worked in this effort and many reported an unusual degree of spiritual liberty in the presentation of the financial law.

For the concluding day, a dramatization of the whole story of Nehemiah and the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem was arranged and all the groups worked to participate in the closing service. After the sacrament service in each local congregation, the people there participated in building different sections of the wall. These were made with envelope bricks pasted on a sheet of black building board. Each envelope contained either an inventory or a pledge to file one. Some who could do neither or who had already complied with the law, gave an offering and thus had a part in the building.

In the evening a vesper service was planned and over five hundred people from all the groups crowded into Central Church to see the wall built. The service opened with an organ concert played by Maude Gilmore Evans. Then followed a prelude hymn specially written for the occasion by Sallie Forties. After "Sov'reign and Transforming Grace" had been sung, Elder J. Charles May led the audience in prayer and then "Take My Life and Let It Be" was sung by the congregation.

After the Scripture reading which told the story of the ancient wall being rebuilded, the stake bishop took charge of the modern rebuilding. As each group, represented by its solicitor, stood up and presented to the stake presidency and bishopric, their sections of the wall, they pledged themselves to go forward in the endeavor to keep all laws which God has given.

When the wall had been builded five feet high and forty-six feet long with several sections left over, it became an impressive symbol of the people's desire to be about their Father's business. All joined in singing "Consecration" and Elder George Mesley addressed the audience to point out the parallels between Nehemiah's work and the wall just completed. He spoke in the absence of President Smith and C. E. Wight who were prevented by illness from participating in the service.

When "I Would Be True" had been sung C. D. Jellings, in a fitting and beautiful prayer, dedicated the efforts and the desires of the people of Kansas City Stake, already ranked high in number, who were complying with the law.

Two previous services by young people brought over two hundred new inventories and more than fifty percent of the priesthood are complying with the law. But through this service and special effort, all the people received the great incentive of a cooperative and blessed endeavor to move forward "to serve the Lord Jehovah."

J. Charles May recently began a series of meetings at Malvern Hill Church where he is drawing good crowds.

F. Henry Edwards also began a new experiment in missionary work with a series of "Conversations" at Grandview Church.

Gladstone Church

The young people of this group have organized a choir about twenty-two in number. The director is Earl Cox and Sister Mildred Connelly is pianist.

The O. B. K. young people have charge of the group services once a month.

The women's organization is doing a fine work. They meet each Tuesday. For the past two months they have been making and selling beautiful ties for men and boys. Occasionally a supper is served to which all the group members are invited.

"Keep the Law" has been given special emphasis by Pastor Harry Sevy and Stake Bishop C. A. Skinner.

Following a splendid sacrament service December 3, the membership was given an opportunity to bring their tithes and offerings to the stand. The "Keep the Law" campaign has made them realize the importance of obeying the financial law, and each will be personally interviewed in the hope that the members will increase their present list of tithe payers.

Guest speakers have recently included Bishop C. A. Skinner, H. A. Higgins, pastor of Quindaro group, and Roy Thrutchley, church school director at Central.

During the past month attendance has increased at all services.

Northeast Church

The series of meetings held by Priest Lloyd Seibert was a happy and spiritual feast. He had the support of Saints and friends. One evening the pastor of the Baptist Church and a number of his congregation attended.

Priest Ernest Zink gave an interesting sermon from a chart, and Berwyn Lungwitz, soon to be ordained an elder, gave a fine sermon Sunday evening, November 25. It is a sign of progress to see a number of valiant young men preparing for ministerial service. The young men mentioned above are from Fourth, Gladstone, and Quindaro churches.

The young people in this group are attentive in the services and take a good part in the prayer meeting.

Pastor Henry F. Davis was the speaker on a recent Sunday morning. He is a very well liked leader.

Brother Merlin Strong is doing well in leading the young people.

Independence

Give Emphasis to Missionary Endeavor

Members of the priesthood in Independence three hundred strong, attended the four-night priesthood institute conducted at Liberty Street Church last week, beginning on Monday. As the strains of "God Is Marshaling His Army" were sung by the large chorus of male voices, listeners could not help but feel that God has gathered his forces in this group of workers.

President Elbert A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp, speakers and instructors at the institute, stressed the commandments God has given the church and the steps necessary to comply with the law.

In bringing his closing message to the assembly on Friday night, President Elbert A. Smith read from Doctrine and Covenants and stressed the need of the ministry's working together, forgiving one another, loving each other, and helping. He also stated that the ministry must lead the way, teach the law of God as he has given it, and encourage and strengthen the Saints.

During the institute Bishop DeLapp presented the present financial condition of the church and pointed to what he believes is the way out. He stated that the church is in a better financial condition today than it has been for a time and that it is making progress, due in part to the awakening of the membership to the financial needs of the church. His closing words of encouragement and service brought new strength to those present, who, in turn, will take back to the Saints among whom they labor, the excellent spirit of the institute.

Each service was uplifting, inspiring the ministry to take up their tasks anew in the center place with the hope of Zion bright in their lives.

City-wide preparations are being made to open the new year with a two-week series of missionary services in each congregation in Independence. Members in their group prayer services have been asked to pray for the good of these meetings. Speakers are being lined up for the occasion, and local forces are organizing themselves to invite neighbors and friends to hear the latter-day message preached.

In the past few weeks missionary meetings have been conducted in several of the local congregations. Elder J. W. A. Bailey in his Book of Mormon class at six o'clock each Sunday evening at Second Church is giving emphasis to missionary aspects of his message. He presents his subject material each Sunday to a large congregation by means of stereopticon slides and lectures.

At the Auditorium, Elders C. J. Hunt, J. W. A. Bailey and others are eager to talk of the church and its work to visitors who come to see the building. They have taken charge of the Auditorium guide work, made attractive the reception place, and provided for brief lectures and church literature to be given to those who come to inspect the building.

Local pastors are exerting themselves to keep the missionary spirit growing in their congregations, and invite missionaries home from their fields, to speak frequently in their pulpits. Now that the official "Keep the Law" period is over, attention is being turned to a continuance of missionary as well as other activities of law observance.

The Messiah Choir will present as soloists in its Christmas gift performance of Handel's great oratorio, The Messiah, December 24, Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, soprano; Miss Pearl Kinnaman, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, contralto; John R. Wahlstedt, of Kansas City, Missouri, tenor, and Colin Ferrett, of Australia, bass. The oratorio will be directed by George Anway; Robert Miller, organist; George Miller, pianist. The performance will be a vesper service event at the Stone Church on Christmas Eve, being rendered from 5.45 to 7 o'clock. The oratorio will be broadcast over KMBC.

Boy and girl forces in Independence are being more effectively organized for the opening of another year. Some of the Boy Scout troops sponsored by the church are in a state of reorganization, and new recruits and officers are being enrolled.

A city-wide party for Oriole girls was enjoyed by more than one hundred guests from the several congregations in Independence last Friday night, Mrs. Roland Flanders, Oriole director for Independence, in charge. More than sixty Orioles were pledged at this meeting. Mrs. C. B. Woodstock, author of Our Girls and the revised Oriole program, took part on the program and in the entertainment. Interest in Oriole work is growing.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Girl Scouts are occupied with Christmas interests. Each of the four troops sponsored by the church in Independence, will have a Christmas party for their friends. Toys are being refinished, dolls made, and entertainment planned for a number of children whose chances with Santa Claus this year would otherwise be small. The Scouts of Troops 37 and 46 now have an exhibit of stuffed, cloth animals on display in the window of McNamara Radio Shop. More than forty animals are to be seen, and most of these will be given away at the girls' Christmas party. This show is only a small part of the Christmas Stuffed Animal Show which the Girl Scout of Greater Kansas City are sponsoring.

The women of Independence are continuing their Monday afternoon two-thirty meetings, their winter's program consisting of home study. "The Ideal Home" is their subject topic, and each week a different phase of home work is presented. At the meeting yesterday the home stewardship idea was continued. Next Monday the question of health in the home is to be taken up. At their meeting December 4, Mrs. C. C. Koehler, leader of women, outlined an extensive home-study program including such aspects as home nursing, rest, worship, study, reading in the home, recreation, a study of food and the body, thrift, economy and many others. The women will continue their sacrifice offering, paying into the coffers of the church each week their free-will collection of money.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy, the morning speaker at the Stone Church, addressed a large congregation. He retold the story of Joseph who was sold by his brothers into Egypt, emphasizing the fact that God is still guiding his people.

Two musical numbers were furnished by the Midwesterners Male Quartet. The choir, directed by Paul Craig, sang the anthem, "O Come to My Heart, Lord Jesus," Albert Brackenbury singing the bass solo.

"There can be no success for the church unless the individuals composing the church accept the responsibility of seeing that there wells up in their lives the will to do the things which should be done," declared Elder J. Charles Mottashed in summarizing his evening sermon, "The Will to Do." Brother Mottashed is pastor of the combined groups of Detroit, and his sermon was heard by a large congregation. He was introduced by President Elbert A. Smith. Elder D. S. McNamara was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Earl Higdon.

A musical program of excellent quality was given by the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig and accompanied at the organ by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee. Virgil Woodside, a member of the club, sang a bass solo.

The Stone Church Young People's Council is sponsoring, beginning this week, a house-to-house visiting campaign. These visits are to acquaint everyone, members and nonmembers, with the church and its activities. Young people in each group are to be invited to attend the Sunday morning church school at the Auditorium, the Sunday evening six o'clock study hour at the Stone Church, recreation at the Auditorium on Friday evening, and everyone is to be urged to attend the missionary meetings which will begin the new year in Independence. Opening services of this series will occur in all Latter Day Saint congregations Sunday evening, December 31.

The Y. K. T. Class have been holding missionary services at Liberty, Missouri, to conclude this week. Elder John F. Sheehy has been the speaker. A service was held Sunday night, and another will be conducted tonight.

Second Church

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service Sunday. His subject was, "What Has Jesus Christ Done for This Generation?" The choir furnished music for the service.

Gordon Cable was in charge of the junior service, and also gave the talk. The story, "Fifty Divided by Three," was told by Mabel Farrell. Helen Willoughby sang a solo.

Elder B. C. Sarratt was in charge of the evening service, and introduced Pastor William Inman as the speaker. The young people's choir, directed by Mrs. Sam Inman, furnished the music.

Between two and three hundred attended the six o'clock Book of Mormon lecture by Elder J. W. A. Bailey.

The funeral of Mr. George Bush was held at Stahl's Funeral Home, Sunday, December 10.

Walnut Park Church

The pastor was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning in the main auditorium, taking as his text, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." He stressed the necessity for individual proselytization, and said, "It is better to be a weak instrument in the service of God than a ruling power in the kingdoms of this world." The sermon was preceded by an anthem by the choir and a soprano solo, "Behold, the Master Passeth By," sung by Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley. At the same hour Almer Sheehy spoke to the junior service in the lower auditorium, and Ruth Bryant told a story, "Three Tradesmen Who Went to Visit a King."

One hundred and eighty were reported present at the Religio session in the evening, the class period being followed by a program consisting of a piano solo by Zelma McConnell and two readings by Rudene Huff.

Evangelist A. Carmichael preached Sunday evening, speaking on "The Everlasting Covenant." The choir, directed by Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" as the evening anthem.

The Swastika Class had a chicken dinner Tuesday evening, December 4, at the home of Brother and Sister Fred Horn, teacher and assistant of the class. Thirty-two members were present.

Spring Branch Church

Local ministry continue to make effective the midweek and Sunday morning prayer hours by their faithful help and supervision.

Elder G. W. Eastwood, formerly pastor of this congregation, was the Sunday morning speaker, and his text was Isaiah 9: 6, 7. "Keeping the Law" was his theme. The choir, directed by Mrs. J. G. Nelson, sang "Gently He Leads Us."

As usual the evening school was given big attendance. The program was presented by the primary department.

Brother John Soderstadt, first pastor of this congregation, was the speaker, and read part of Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8. A vocal trio rendered "My Task."

East Independence Church

Recently Elder H. V. Minton started a series of sermons on "Building the Church." He began with the foundation, and before the eyes of his hearers, builded the church piece by piece, putting in officers, doctrines and gifts. This method of presenting the meaning and significance of the church appealed to the congregation.

Pastor Frank Minton occupied the pulpit the morning of the last Sunday in November with a message of faith carrying a witness of the truth with its liberty.

That evening Assistant Pastor Clair Austin spoke. The Glee Club of Spring Branch School gave two numbers under the direction of Miss Jaynne Lewis, teacher at the school.

The Rainbow Class of the church school is sponsoring an attendance contest and is growing. Joseph Friend is teacher of the class.

Columbus, Ohio

The Tabernacle, Third Church

The month of November has been a busy one for Saints of this congregation. Among recent activities have been box socials, wiener roasts, and potluck suppers. Special programs have been arranged for the month of December.

Recent visitors at Third Church have included Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Bishop H. E. French, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, and Brother Gray.

Special musical numbers during the various church services have been rendered by the young people, with Mary Welsh, at the piano.

Far West Stake

Guilford Branch

The Guilford O. T. Z.'s gave a Thanksgiving banquet for neighboring branches Tuesday, November 8. About sixty young people, representing seven branches, gathered at the Guilford church to partake of the tasty food and to enjoy the evening's program. Decorations of both tables and room were typical of Thanksgiving time and this theme was carried out in the program.

The stake young people's officers were guests and each gave a talk. The president of the Guilford group, Sister Leola Torrance, acted as toastmaster, giving an address of welcome to the visitors. Leonard G. Ehlers, stake director of young people's activities, responded on behalf of the visitors. Elbert Schmidt, of Ross Grove Branch, gave a brief history of Thanksgiving after which the group sang, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come." Talks were given by Helen Beadnall, secretary, on "Why Give Thanks"; Kenneth Piepergerdes, president, "What Young Latter Day Saints Have to Be Thankful For"; and Garland C. Snapp, vice president, "How We May Best Show Our Thankfulness." Musical numbers from Bedison and Guilford and a short skit by Guilford O. T. Z.'s completed the program.

The banquet was a decided success and it is hoped that it may be the forerunner of other regional activities within the stake, where neighboring groups may become better acquainted and enjoy the fellowship that comes from such association.

Far West Branch

The little branch at Far West has been faithfully carrying on although their numbers are small. They will greatly miss the services of Brother and Sister M. M. German, who have recently been forced to move to Berthoud, Colorado, on account of Brother German's health. He served as deacon in the branch for a number of years and Sister German was chorister for church school and church services. The Saints wish them well in their new home in Colorado.

Brother Curtis Vernon, of Stewartsville, was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, November 26. He spoke on keeping the financial law.

Elder Frank L. Hinderks, member of the stake presidency, met with the Saints in their sacrament service, December 3.

The Saints sincerely hope that some new workers will move in to fill the vacancy their deacon and his family have left.

Saint Joseph Branch

The annual branch business meeting was held at the First Church Monday, December 4, at which time officers for 1934 were chosen. Group business meetings in the four churches preceded the branch meeting. The election resulted in the following officers for next year: Elder Ward A. Hougas, city pastor and pastor of First Church; Elder O. Salisbury, pastor of Second Church; Roscoe D. Peterson, pastor Third Church, and Warren Hill, pastor of Fourth Church; city director of church school, H. H. McLean; city director of music, E. J. Ehlers; branch treasurer, Bishop Milo Burnett, and secretary and recorder, Helen Beadnall.

Other business transacted included the reading of reports, approval of a recommendation from the joint council for the ordination of seven men to offices in the priesthood, and election of a delegate to General Conference. Elder O. Salisbury was elected as the representative of the branch on the stake delegation.

A group of Saints witnessed a unique ceremony at First Church, Sunday afternoon, December 3, when two sets of twins were baptized into the church. All four were little girls just past eight years of age. Elder E. A. Gurwell officiated in the sacred ordinance. Confirmation was by Elders E. A. Gurwell and J. L. Bear. The candidates were Lela Mae and Clela Fae Gurwell, twin daughters of Elder and Mrs. E. A. Gurwell and Betty Frances and Hatty Bell Tracy, twin daughters of Mrs. Violet Tracy.

Akron, Ohio

Celebrate Twenty-second Home-coming

Akron Branch celebrated its twenty-second home-coming November 26. Apostle D. T. Williams was there and preached the morning sermon, "The Mark Hitter." A basket lunch was served at noon, and a social service was enjoyed in the afternoon. The evening sermon was by Brother Williams.

The series of sermons was continued through the week with good attendance. Saturday and Sunday Youngstown Branch had the good fortune to have Brother Williams with them.

Sunday evening he returned to Akron, finishing his series of sermons with the theme, "The Machine Age and the Brotherhood of Man." The Saints feel new hope and zeal as a result of the work Brother Williams so ably set before them.

Holden Stake

Post Oak, Missouri

Elder Gomer R. Wells, Holden Stake missionary, held a meeting here recently. He was assisted the first week by Stake President W. S. Macrae. Good instructions were given the Saints. An illustrated lecture on the life of Christ was especially enjoyed.

Sister Cumorah Landon, the oldest member of this branch, passed away October 5. The funeral was held October 8, at the High Point Baptist Church, Brother John Nutt, of Knobnoster, preaching the sermon and being assisted by the Reverend Homer DeLozier. A double quartet from the Baptist Church furnished the music. Sister Landon had been a member of the church for forty years and was very faithful. Her greatest pleasure was to attend church services and assist in the work of the Lord. She will be missed by neighbors and friends.

Seven-week Revival at Rust, Michigan

Fourteen Are Baptized

Seven weeks of revival meetings were held by Elder J. J. Ledsworth at Rust, this being a new opening and the gospel a new story to most of the people in the community.

Services were well attended each night. Elder Amos Guy, of Hillman, was present each night to assist Brother Ledsworth in the services, and sometimes to preach. Sister Ledsworth operated the stereopticon machine.

During the services Brother Ledsworth baptized fourteen members into the kingdom of God. These will be enrolled in Lachine Branch where Brother Guy presides.

Both members and nonmembers await the return of Brother and Sister Ledsworth who made many friends in this vicinity.

Young People Hold Convention at Lansing

Workers Bring a Vision and Challenge to Youth

The young people's convention at Lansing, Michigan, November 18 and 19, was marked by the spirit of service and devotion, and produced some definite results.

They were fortunate in obtaining the services of Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder John R. Grice for class work and preaching, and the messages these ministers brought challenged the youth with the work and program of the church. The leadership these men furnished is the type that will inspire young people to do big things for the church.

District President A. C. Barmore conducted class work and gave his help generally, rendering the kind of assistance which helped to make the convention a success. Denison H. Smith, district young people's supervisor, arranged the convention program. The time and effort he devoted to preparing for it had much to do in determining its quality. The music was planned by Miss Louise Evans, district musical director, and was of high quality.

Arrangements to entertain visitors were made by Lansing young people with Eugene Page as director and Sister Martha Luce as chairman of the committee. Meals were planned by a committee.

The opening event on November 17, was a program arranged by Lansing workers. This consisted of pictures of the Rocky Mountains and national parks.

Class work conducted by Elder A. C. Barmore, Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elder John R. Grice began November 18, at 9 a. m. and continued during the remainder of the forenoon and afternoon. Bishop Elmer C. Evans lectured on finance at 7.30 p. m. Then came a program by the young people from various branches in the district.

A two-hour prayer meeting began Sunday's activities at eight o'clock, Elders John R. Grice and A. C. Barmore leading. The spirit to consecrate and serve, expressed by the youth, was outstanding during this service. The gifts of the Spirit were experienced, the assembly being given counsel and encouragement. Several received instructions and blessings which emphasized the fact that God still leads and directs his people.

Class work by Elder Grice followed at 10 a. m., with Apostle Williams occupying the pulpit at eleven. Both services were of high order.

Dinner was served in the lower auditorium between 12 and 1.30 p. m. The afternoon program was composed of class work or lectures by Elders D. T. Williams and John R. Grice.

The ordination of Denison H. Smith to the office of elder took place at the close of the two o'clock service. Sister Louise Evans talked, outlining some plans concerning music which gave Michigan musicians something worth while toward which to look. An excellent sermon by Elder Grice was the closing service of the convention.

Workers believe that the effects of the convention will be far-reaching, and inspiration and vision gained at services of this kind help the Saints to move onward to the accomplishment of the Master's work.

Evangelist and Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley in New England

Hold Services at Haverhill

Sister Gunsolley and I went to Somerville for the Southern New England departmental conference, November 11 and 12, and participated to the extent of our ability and opportunity. I addressed the youth on the subject, "What Shall We Do With Self?" and Sister Gunsolley had charge of the junior church age children for two hours or more.

After the conference Brother and Sister E. F. Robertson took us to Haverhill, where we remained until the twenty-seventh holding ten services, two of which were in Dover, where a mission is maintained under the auspices of Haverhill officers. The services at Dover were in the home of William F. Frost about three miles out of Dover. Attendance was not large, but interest and attention were good and one nonmember is very much interested.

Sister Andrew Wengel and daughter, Sister Ruth Peabody, took us to Somerville on Monday, November 27, where we spent a pleasant Thanksgiving Day with the family of Brother and Sister E. H. Fisher. We also called at the home of Bishop Fisher, where we met his new granddaughter (his first one), daughter of M. C., jr., and Catherine Shaefer Fisher. We spent the evening with the Studley family.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Conference Notices

Western Oklahoma district conference will convene February 24 and 25, 1934, at Calumet Branch. This is our annual business meeting at which the election of district officers will be held. Remember that we will elect our delegates to the General Conference. If we are desirous of keeping the law, we will be present and support those whom we think best qualified to represent us as delegates and also as district officers. Apostle Roy S. Budd expects to be with us. Saints, come and support and further the work of the church by doing our bit in this conference. Come, having made spiritual preparation by giving the time from now until we assemble, in prayer and serious consideration of the work before us. We will gladly welcome any visiting Saints. Zion awaits the time that the Saints will keep the law.—Roy L. Diamond, secretary.

Conference Minutes

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—The business session of the fifty-fourth conference of Kansas City Stake convened, November 20, 1933, at 8 p. m. at Central Church in charge of the stake presidency. The report of the stake presidency was read by Elder C. E. Wight. It did not recite actual work done, but sought to inspire higher standards of living and called attention to the standards of the Master as contrasted with the standards of the world. The bishop's report for 1933, up to October 31, was as follows: General funds: Receipts, $8,524.87. Expeditures including sum to general bishop, $8,542.87. Local funds: Receipts including balance on hand, $843.75, equal $11,139.22. Expenditures including balance on hand, October 31, of $665, equal $11,139.22. Brother Skinner said that during the first five months of the year a material increase over the offerings of the same period last year was noted; but since June there has been a marked decline in general funds which amount to $2,500. For the local fund there was an increase of about $500 for the period. The stake auditing committee had audited the bishop's account and found it correct, and the report was approved by motion. Stake Missionary J. Charles May's report was read. He has labored in North East, Mount Washington, Bennington Heights and Argentine neighborhoods, and had made 796 visits in the homes of Saints and nonmember friends; preached 273 sermons in churches and homes, and thirty-eight were baptized. Many others were interested. Elder George Harrington had assisted at times, his help being appreciated. President Wight reported that some vacancies had been filled in several local churches and submitted the following names for approval: Gladstone—director of religious education, W. L. Barham; young people's supervisor, Lawrence Good; children, Sister V. V. Smith. Quindaro: Children's supervisor, Thelma Carmichael. Fourth Church, young people's supervisor, Garland Tickemyer; children, Sister J. O. Worden. Malvern Hill: Children's supervisor, Sister Charles Allen. These were approved. The following names were presented by President Wight for ordination, having been passed upon by the stake high council: To the office of elder, Edward J. Baker, Berwyn O. Lungwitz and David S. White; priest, Lester A. Fowler; teacher, John C. Crimmins; deacon, Joseph H. Coakley. A motion that the ordination of each be provided was unanimously carried. The tenor of acceptance responses by these young men would indicate that more preparation had been made by them for the responsibility than any class for ordination heretofore. Their fitness was apparent in their pledges of faithfulness in the work they are ready to begin. A report from the stake presidency with regard to Brother Floyd I. Reneau who had moved from Ohio District to Kansas City, and who had been approved for ordination to the office of teacher before coming, but had not been ordained, was read. The situation had been submitted to W. G. Neville, president of the district and to the First Presidency, who submitted the matter to the Kansas City Stake conference. The conference, with the approval of the stake council, recommended the ordination of Brother Reneau. The ordinations of Brother Dale Brady and Brother Garland Tickemyer had been attended to on September 10, at Fourth Church. Brother Wight announced that Elder F. S. Anderson had been presented to the First Presidency with the recommendation that he be ordained to the office of high priest and that this recommendation had had the unanimous approval of the Kansas City Stake Council. The matter will be taken care of by general officers of the church. This concluded the conference business. This meeting was marked by its spirituality. Brother Wight remarked that it was more like a prayer than a business meeting, and this spirit also marked the council sessions prior to the conference.

Our Departed Ones

WHIPPER.—Mabel L. Whipper, daughter of Frederick and Celestia Sanderson, was born December 10, 1875. Died November 27, 1933, at her home at Lansing, Michigan. She married Frank F. Whipper, August 2, 1907, and to them four children were born. Surviving her are, her husband; one son, John, of Lansing; three daughters, Mrs. Bob Eckarts, of Indiana; Mrs. Dale Sharen and Irene Whipper, of Lansing; two brothers; three grandchildren and other relatives. Some twelve years of her life were spent as the wife of a missionary of the church. She was beloved by all who knew her, and noted for her good life. Her love for the gospel was strong, and she was an ardent student of the Book of Mormon. Funeral services were held December 1, from the Gorsline, Runciman Funeral Home. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery, Lansing. Her death was caused by heart trouble.

The SAINTS' HERALD

The Great Commission

By R. S. Salyards, Sr.

Christmas, 1933

One gift is ours this year, and that is hope.

The other gifts we had prayed for are still withheld: peace, an orderly society protected from crime, a desire for right and justice, a new tenderness towards the weak and the poor, a growth of international good will.

But let us rejoice in this one gift—hope that out of the chaos of present conditions some good may come, hope that the gospel of Christ will yet redeem the world, hope that it will bring to humanity the salvation of spiritual, intellectual, and social maturity.

The Pigeonhole

The Heart of the Gift

(The Pigeon's version of O. Henry's "The Gift of the Magi.")

They were very young, and his slender earnings were barely enough to support their newly established home. But they loved each other with the complete absorption and devotion that is possible only to youth.

Christmas time. Each thought and planned for the other a gift—the gift—that would be a tribute of deep affection. But neither of them talked of his plans to the other.

He thought that her hair was the most beautiful he had ever seen. (They still wore their hair long then.) Only one thing it lacked, and that was an expensive and exquisitely wrought comb that he had seen in a jeweler's window. More than anything else in the world, he wanted to give her that lovely comb.

He had received, at the time of his wedding, a very fine watch, but he had no chain for it, so it remained at home in a dresser drawer. More than anything else in the world, his young wife wanted him to have a chain to match it, to wear when they went to visit their friends. She had found one at a certain shop, and had watched it for weeks.

The day before Christmas each of them went his own way, and made the particular bargain that was to secure the gift for the other. Each of them made a sacrifice to purchase his gift. Tremulously she made her way home with the watch chain, hoping he would not be angry because of what she had paid for it. Proudly he carried in his hand the package that contained the coveted comb.

They met at the door of their little home, and went in together. Both were smiling happily.

"It is Christmas Eve," he said. "Let us open our gifts together." They turned their backs while they did it. Then he counted so they would turn around at the same instant. "One—two—three—"

In his hand lay the jeweled comb, flashing its brilliance in the lamplight. In her hand lay the chain, ready to be attached to the watch. As they saw the gifts, both of them went suddenly white.

"But darling!" she said, taking off her hat, "I cut off my hair and sold it to buy you the chain!"

"And I sold my watch to buy you the comb!"

Tears started in their eyes. Then they laughed hysterically at the joke they had played on themselves. Afterward they wept again and held each other in their arms.

"Oh," she cried, "If we had only told each other!"

"It is all right, my dear. We shall treasure these gifts. I shall sometime get another watch. And your hair will grow again. But one beautiful gift is better than all the rest: that we love each other. And the heart of the gift is love!"

Publicity Agents, Attention!

All publicity agents must re-register the first of January to transact business for the Herald Office during 1934. No agents will be recognized without the new card of registration; and no commissions will be granted without it. Pastors are asked to cooperate in getting such agents in their branches registered.

Christmas Greetings

To our readers and friends, to our contributors and correspondents, and even to our earnest critics, we send best wishes for this happy Christmas season. And we hope that peace, security, joy, and the presence of the Holy Spirit may be with you and your families and friends.

We are thankful for many blessings. God has been very good to us, even in troublous and difficult times; and we, in turn, have been able to help pass some blessings on to others. Our plant has been busy with the orders it has had to fill. The regular forces have been steadily employed, and numbers of extra people have been given work, which has prevented some want and distress. Our patrons have supported us generously.

Along with these material blessings, there have been spiritual satisfactions too. To see our publications going into increasing numbers of homes, to receive letters of encouragement from friends who appreciate what we are trying to do, and who are willing to lend a hand, to see everywhere the signs, little and big, of general improvement that indicate gains in progress—these things bring us satisfactions and a sense of gratitude that cannot be expressed in words.

May God bless you and keep you, and give you the full joy of the Christmas season.

The March of Faith

Christianity, like the world, may have its sick spells, but it never dies. It has undergone many an operation, it has changed its garments and its habits, but it remains at its foundation much the same thing as it was in the beginning: the bridge of faith between man's need and God's goodness.

There are always the prophets of evil who fear the destruction of the world, the disappearance of religion, and the collapse of the church. But somehow, in modern times, these things have failed to come to pass.

The march of faith is triumphant—it is a victory over defeat and death. Its war must be waged in each generation to win men to Christ. It has not failed. It will not fail, because behind it there is more than a man-made institution—there is the strength of the living God. L. L.

Blue Pencil Notes

"OUR FOREFATHERS," observed Deacon Goodentart, "objected to taxation without representation, and now we have too much of both."

A GREAT MANY MEN seem intent on getting to the end of life ahead of death. Up to date in every instance the result has been a tie.

DO WE FIND FAULTS in some otherwise very good men? Well, there are spots on the sun.

THE LATE PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH once wrote: "If our friendly critics keep on, and we be heedful of all criticisms offered, we shall in time be free from all the faults complained of,—or we shall have no opinions worth while to name or safe to state."

IT WAS PREDICTED that with the legalized sale of beer and the subsequent repeal of prohibition in America there would be an increase in the number of fatalities due to automobile accidents. Close at home that increase is already in evidence. The Kansas City Star for December 8 announced ninety-three fatalities in Kansas City for the year up to that date, an increase of twenty-eight over last year at the same date. In four major accidents during three days recently liquor figured in each instance, as it does in very many such cases. It will not do to conclude that the increase is altogether due to repeal; but the thing has happened that was anticipated and the coincidence looks suspicious. Alcohol always was dangerous to humanity and it is infinitely more dangerous in this complex machine age. It matters little whether it is bootleg alcohol or legalized alcohol that sits at the steering wheel —the results are about the same in character.

SOME FORTY-FIVE YEARS AGO one of the missionaries who occasionally visited the isolated Saints in the locality where I lived was a young man of such bubbling good nature and such an infectious smile that he was as welcome as June sunshine. Some years later he married, and he and his good wife spent their honeymoon at my home during a General Conference. (We had moved to Lamoni.) General Conference does not always furnish suitable atmosphere for a honeymoon—but in that case it worked well. Today when I go to the Auditorium I see this same brother, Bishop C. J. Hunt, acting as one of the Auditorium guides, and his good nature is just as bubbling as ever and his smile as infectious. The honeymoon never did wane and the missionary spirit did not diminish. Brother Hunt and his indefatigable running mate, J. W. A. Bailey, assisted by S. S. Smith and others, have preached to thousands of tourist visitors, many of them from the Utah church. When Brother Hunt comes into the office of the Presidency, and lights up his smile and begins, "Now, Brother Smith, you understand I am not trying to run the church, or anything like that, but Brother Bailey and I have an idea"—I know that the two of them have hatched another new idea to make their Auditorium missionary work effective. By the way, some weeks ago I had in these notes a mention of C. Ed Miller. A little later Brother Miller said to me, "Judging by the number of letters I have received, people must read Blue Pencil Notes." Why not an occasional letter or card to these various oldtime missionaries from those who hold their ministrations in grateful remembrance? Just a Christmas suggestion.

Copies of The Elijah

Singers who wish copies of The Elijah, which is to be sung at General Conference, should order them soon. Those who live in large cities or near bookstores can order them locally with greatest convenience and least expense. Isolated singers, however, may order copies from Paul N. Craig, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. It is the Schirmer edition, price 90 cents, postpaid.

Musical Christmas Gift Will Be Broadcast

Handel's oratorio, The Messiah, the musical Christmas gift of the Messiah Choir of Independence and Kansas City, will be broadcast over KMBC on Christmas Eve, 5:45 to 7 o'clock, from the Stone Church Auditorium. This year the beautiful composition will be sung by a choir of almost two hundred voices, directed by George Anway, and accompanied by Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist. The soloists will be Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, of Independence, soprano; Miss Pearl Kinnaman, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, contralto; John R. Wahlstedt, of Kansas City, Missouri, tenor, and Colin Ferrett, of Australia, bass. The "Pastoral" will be rendered this time by Robert Miller at the organ, and a string quartet composed of Miss Lillian Green, Gomer Cool, Orrin K. Fry, jr., and Milford Nace. The performance will be given to a large crowd of music lovers in the church and at the same time to an unnumbered radio audience. You are invited to tune in on KMBC next Sunday evening.

Men You Ought to Know

BISHOP N. RAY CARMICHAEL

Awaiting only the confirmation of the General Conference in April, N. Ray Carmichael, Counselor to the Bishop of Lamoni Stake, has just recently been nominated as Counselor to the Presiding Bishop, L. F. P. Curry, and approved by the First Presidency. Brother Carmichael will be eagerly welcomed by Brethren Curry and DeLapp, who are very happy over the strength and help that his splendid abilities will bring to them.

All Graceland students of recent years know Brother Carmichael as the Business Manager of the college. The whole church will wish him well as he takes up his new work.

Our Christmas Gift to You!

In this happy Christmas season, it is our pleasure to offer to the patrons of the Herald Publishing House a number of gifts that we have been preparing for some time. Here they are: an improved Herald with larger circulation than ever, a Stepping Stones entirely built over with better stories and many new features for the coming year, a number of new sales services that have never been attempted before, and a new efficiency and dispatch in the handling of our business that is resulting in increased satisfaction to our customers. These gifts are costing us something, but we believe that they will be repaid in the appreciation and loyalty of those we are trying to serve.

The best of all Christmas wishes to you, and to yours.

Christmas in Prose and Verse

Christmas Eve

O little Son of God,
Though you are fearless, do not come tonight.
Two thousand years
You've braved the cold of snow,
The cold of hearts,
And found perhaps one roof—
Some simple hearts that opened.

But now too many cry with hunger in the streets.
O little Son of Man,
Stay warm and safe with God.
I could not bear
To have another child out crying in the cold.

—Martha Provine-Leach Turner. From The Christian Century, December 21, 1932.

That Holy Thing

They all were looking for a king
To slay their foes and lift them high:
Thou cam'st, a little baby thing
That made a woman cry.

O son of Man, to right my lot
Naught but thy presence can avail;
Yet in the road thy wheels are not,
Nor on the seas thy sail.

—George MacDonald.

Remember the Poor!

There are thousands of homes, this Christmas time, in which there will be no feasts, and the people will shiver with cold. There are millions of children to whom "Santa Claus" will be only a name. From three years of unemployment, or employment at starvation wages, these families have had no chance to recover. Their resources are wiped out. They lack more than the joys of Christmas: they lack the necessities of life.

It will not cost us much to share with them a few things that will bring so much hope and joy to them. To know that someone cares about them, to feel that there is still some kindness left in the world, to be assured that the Spirit of the Master is not far absent from the celebration of Christmas—these will be worth much to them.

A Prayer

Lord, help us to be loyal to the truth as we understand it, but never blind to the truth that we do not know.—Young People's Leader.

I Am Christmas

I AM CHRISTMAS.

People tell me that my origin runs far back into a heathen festival. My roots, they say, lie in pagan life.

So be it!

I accept the charge—and glory in it.

For my pagan practice has been redeemed at the touch of Christ. My heathen ancestry was never the same again once his name and spirit blessed it.

And such is my mission, always, to the soul.

I touch self-seeking, and it gives place to good will.

I touch the warlike plans of men and they hide their battlements with holly, knowing that they are out of harmony with His spirit.

I touch hard faces, and make them tender.

I touch saddened children, and make them laugh.

I touch the cynic, and give him faith.

I touch people like you—and they are not the same again.

I AM CHRISTMAS.

—P. R. Hayward.

Praise

If aught of praise be reckoned theirs who strive
To fill a worthy place in small affairs,
Bestow it then, ungrudging, whilst they live
Nor wait till Death has stilled their busy cares.
We voice with swelling tones the pomp of kings,
With trumpet notes the heroes' path proclaim,
But careless of the needful simple things,
We scorn to yield their patient tenders fame.
The glamour of the deed that thrills, the show
Of manly strength in storied tournament,
Resound in epic song; but we are slow
To hymn the life in lowly service spent.
Red-handed Conqueror and vulgar Clown
Are famed, while Merit dies without renown.

—Geoffrey Gillard, in The Dorian, (Australia).

Christ Child Night

Oh, if your heart is ever warm
It must be warm tonight—
High overhead there shines the star,
The Bethlehem star of light.

And in the glory love can see
The shepherds bending low
The Child—so long ago.

Oh, if your heart is ever warm,
Now it will glow with light,
And shed its radiance everywhere,
Upon this Christ Child night.

—George Elliston, in "Bright World."

Green Christmas

By Lora Weir Puterbaugh

How bright the wintry sun is shining
On the playground of the earth!
The children on the lawns are scampering
With noisy sounds of mirth.

The house encircled by the green,
Is almost hidden from view
By clustering flowers and climbing vine
By leaves all green and new.

The poinsettia lifts its haughty head,
The holly in beauty grows.
How far it seems from Christmas time,
And the glory of new fallen snow!

(Adapted from "Christmas in California.")

Tune In

Tune in on Christmas,
Get the message clear,
Don't let earth's static
With joy interfere.
Good will and gladness
Radiate the air;
Catch the glad spirit,
Send it everywhere.
Broadcast happiness,
Amplify good cheer,
Bright, Merry Christmas And Happy New Year!

—Delphia Phillips.

Old Song

Sing we all merrily,
Christmas is here.
The day that we love best
Of days in the year.
Bring forth the holly,
The box and the bay.
Deck out our cottage
For glad Christmas Day.

—Selected.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle John W. Rushton Arrives in Independence

Independence people were happy to welcome home Apostle John W. Rushton over the past week-end. He arrived in the center place from New York, Friday, December 15, and spent the time until Sunday evening visiting with friends old and new. Then he continued his long journey, going to his home in Southern California. Brother Rushton sailed from England for America December 2, after a sixteen-month mission abroad.

Highland Knows Secret of Branch Unity

Highland Branch, Ohio, works with harmony and unity of spirit and purpose in all departments. Its members insist that the secret of local unity is a united priesthood. Their priesthood members are working with the good of Christ's cause foremost in their souls.

Workers cite Highland's fifth annual banquet of the department of recreation and expression as an example of what branch members can do if they work together. To the Saints themselves this event was positive proof that they can labor in harmony to accomplish any undertaking. One hundred and eighty people attended the banquet. The men donated the food, and the women prepared the meal. The young people made nut cups, programs, and decorations, and representatives of all ages were on the program. Everyone enjoyed the banquet.

In Highland people are saying: "It doesn't seem to make any difference what those people [the Latter Day Saints] try to do, they always make a success of it."

Missionary Opening Made by the Baldwins

"It brought back to us the old days when I served in the quorum of seventies for seventeen years," says Evangelist Richard Baldwin in a letter to headquarters in which he describes his joy at making an opening for the church at Roxana, Illinois. This is the first opening Brother and Sister Baldwin have made in a number of years. They conducted meetings at Roxana in November, aroused much interest, made friends for the gospel, and hope that a later series will bring some into the fold.

Honor First to Accept Gospel at Bradner

Elder and Sister E. L. Ulrich, of Dayton, were invited to attend a service at Bradner, Ohio, in honor of the nine remaining Saints who were the first to accept the gospel brought to that city fourteen years ago by Elder O. J. Hawn, deceased, and Brother Ulrich. The day's celebration was held in the form of an old-fashioned Thanksgiving, and a splendid spirit was enjoyed.

Indian Women Interested in Better Homes

At the Indian Mission at Decatur, Nebraska, Sisters Etta Brownrigg and Julia Case have secured the help of Miss Jessie Schnopp representing the interests of the Government in home economics training, and each Thursday a large group of Indian women meet in the church basement to make useful and pretty articles for their homes. The Government furnishes sewing machines and all materials.

London Observes Seventeenth Anniversary

Many Saints from neighboring places were present at the services commemorating the seventeenth anniversary of the opening of London, Ontario, church, November 19 and 20. In the stand for the opening service Sunday were Pastor J. E. MacGregor, Missionary Percy Farrow, and three former pastors of the congregation, Elder F. Gray, Elder J. Winegarden and Elder W. A. Hardey. Sunday's services were outstanding in spirit, program, and attendance, and a large number enjoyed the banquet and concert Monday night.

A Church Home for Farnworth Members

After forty-five years of worshiping under difficulties in a little meeting room on Ellesmere Street, Farnworth Branch, England, now has a church building. A crowd representative of that section of England gathered November 11, to consecrate the edifice.

The gospel was brought to Farnworth nearly sixty years ago, and the branch has been kept alive by the perseverance and faith of a few members.

The Gift

Five years ago the young people's group of Jonesboro Branch gave the congregation a beautiful dramatic and musical interpretation of the Christmas story. Preparations for the event had taken days, weeks, but the performers all enjoyed it. Strange that today not one who took part can recall the name of that pageant; but everyone of them remembers that which followed the performance.

The angels removed their tinsel halos and put them away in pasteboard boxes. Joseph gingerly disentangled himself from his sweeping beard. Mary, the Madonna, appeared in a fur coat with a sprig of holly on the collar. Her feet were clad in goloshes for outside the snow was deep. By that time the wise men had disposed of their gorgeous trappings, and everyone was clamoring to start.

How delightful on that starry night to sing the old carols, "Oh, Come, All Ye Faithful," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," "Hark the Herald Angels Sing!" and "Silent Night," to elderly people and shut-ins. They passed from house to house. After an hour, they shiveringly stopped at Mary Jewell Brandon's home for cocoa, doughnuts and hard candies.

There seated about the big fireplace in the living room—Mary Jewell's home was a rambling, old-fashioned house where they often gathered—they began to talk not of the gifts they expected to receive, but of the things they would like to give, if it lay within their power and pocketbook, to the church, a sort of "Christ gift." Their minds were saturated with the Christmas spirit of giving. Marion Miller, a black-eyed youth, was declaring in no uncertain tones—

"I'd like to have enough money to be able to plank down a sum which would wipe out the church debt, so we could start with a clean slate this New Year's."

"I would make Graceland College an endowment ample enough for all young people of big ambitions and slender means to go to school," offered the young woman who had taken the part of Mary in the pageant. She was the oldest of a large family and had not yet been able to realize her dream of going to Graceland.

"Ah," from Rufus Marlow, "I'd do something more spectacular with my money—I'd finish the Auditorium, so we'd have something to gloat over."

Another girl thought of money sufficient to enable the church to pay up all the back missionary allowances. A serious-eyed shepherd of an hour before propounded the need for more missionaries in the field—that's where his money would go. Someone else urged the absolute necessity of giving large sums for the purchase of lands and establishing of industries so that stewardships could be given a fair chance in the church program.

"Come, Mary Jewell, you haven't confessed your heart's desire," Rufus finally observed.

"I—I've been thinking," hesitatingly, "you see when you first started talking, I was in the kitchen, so if what I say is a repeat, don't be too bored, please."

"That's not likely," grinned Rufus; "this is an imaginative crowd."

"I haven't money to give the church, and it's not likely I shall ever have a great sum—but I believe I can make Christ a gift that is worth while. Anyway, beginning this Christmas Eve I'm going to try harder than ever," quietly. "My gift shall be the gift of a good life, just as good and useful as I can make it. I want to make it kind and true. I don't want to give the church the gift of a questionable, intolerant, one-sided character. Maybe this doesn't seem much to you, but to me—well, it's everything I have. Christ had no money or home—he gave himself."

For a moment no one spoke. Then Marion said huskily: "You shame us, Mary Jewell—you shame us. We were thinking of money and you of physical and spiritual strength, courage, generosity, and love."

Today if you were to visit Jonesboro Branch you would find Mary Jewell Brandon (Her last name is Miller now.) giving that gift to the church. She has charge of the children and is teaching and training with songs, stories, and little plays. She is also the branch chorister and the director of dramatic events. And Marion, her husband, is making the gift of his life, too. He is in the priesthood now and a student of life and of the Scriptures. Responsibilities pile high upon his shoulders for he is director of the church school, has charge of the young people, and is the local bishop's agent. The Lord has seen fit to accept their gifts to him and has blessed them with his helping, guiding Spirit of peace and love.

What gift are you giving Christ on this his birthday?

Talking to God

God, grant I may be pure and holy,
Like my Savior, meek and lowly;
Ever trusting, Lord, in Thee—
Thou who lovest and careth for me.

Thou who seest each sparrow fall,
Thou who hast created all;
Blessed Lord, our Savior kind,
Thou wilt not forsake the blind.

We, thy children without sight,
Thou wilt bless with heavenly light.
Savior, lead us all the way,
Close to thee we cannot stray.

Give us faith, O God, we pray;
Guide us in the narrow way;
Teach us by thy Spirit's power
How to live each golden hour.

Thou hast inspired the mind of men,
That sightless ones might use the pen;
That we may read thy holy word,
And learn of thee, our blessed Lord.

Father, bless with blessings rare
All who helped the way prepare;
Bless with comfort, joy, and peace;
May their blessings never cease.

State and friends have done their part;
Thou knowest, Lord, our grateful hearts.
Oh, that we may worthy be,
And bear our trials patiently.

May we live a life as true
As the world has ever knew.
Then, dear Savior, we will be Pure and holy just like thee.

—Mrs. L. J. Rudd.

Happiness

I followed Happiness to make her mine,
Past towering oak and swinging ivy vine.
She fled, I chased, o'er slanting hill and dale,
O'er fields and meadows, in the purpling vale.
Pursuing rapidly o'er the dashing stream
I scaled the dizzy cliffs where eagles scream;
I traversed swiftly every land and sea,
But always Happiness eluded me.

Exhausted, fainting, I pursued no more,
But sank to rest upon a barren shore.
One came and asked for food, and one for alms;
I placed the bread and gold in bony palms.
One came for sympathy and one for rest;
I shared with every needy one my best,
When, lo, sweet Happiness with form divine,
Stood by me whispering softly, "I am thine."

The Great Commission

Part One

A Radio Address by R. S. Salyards, Sr.

WHEN ASKED by the one in charge of this Sunday morning period to deliver a series of addresses, I asked, What shall I present? He replied, "Preach the gospel." He is right; it is the business of the minister for Christ to preach the gospel, always, under all circumstances. He is ordained and set apart to do that work.

Jesus, in sending forth his disciples, commanded them thus:

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matthew 28: 18-20.

The verse preceding this account of the commission says: "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

Saint Mark thus records his account of the great commission:

"Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 14-18.

SAINT MARK then records the results that followed the preaching of the gospel according to the Savior's commission. He says: "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen." (Verses 19, 20.)

The Scripture just quoted is the word of Jesus Christ to his ministry after he arose from the dead. His words are not idle statements, to be read and passed by as mere human opinion; nor are they the words of uninspired, fallible man. They come from Jesus, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, who came to save the world. The ground, the basis, the authority of Jesus' instructions is revealed in his statement preceding the commission. It is this: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." The disciples had been with him during his three years of ministry; they had witnessed his crucifixion and death upon the cross. They had not comprehended his admonitions to the effect that the scribes and Pharisees would crucify him and that after three days he would rise from the dead; they also disbelieved the statements of those who had seen him after his resurrection. It was under these circumstances that he "upbraided them for their unbelief and hardness of heart." It was thus that he appeared unto his disciples, giving them visible, actual evidence that he was the Son of God and had risen from the dead.

THE EVENT OF HIS APPEARING was in the highest sense significant. It convinced them that he was indeed what he had taught them concerning himself and his mission: the Messiah, the Redeemer of the world. They were made to know in fact that he was indeed divine. It was necessary that they should comprehend that great fact; that it should be deeply impressed upon their inner consciousness; that they might be qualified to bear competent witness that he was the Christ.

In the book of Acts we have further evidence to this effect. We quote:

"The former treatise [Saint Luke's gospel] have I made, O, Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen: to whom also he showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God: and, being assembled together with them, commanded that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence . . . ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1: 1-8.

MARK'S ACCOUNT, that as the disciples went forth everywhere and preached the gospel according to the terms of Christ's commission, the Lord confirmed the word with signs and other blessings to those who believed and obeyed their preaching—this is confirmed by many accounts of their labors, as given in the New Testament.

As quoted, the disciples were not to begin their work of teaching and preaching until they were endowed by divine power to qualify them for their ministry. The disciples obeyed the injunction to wait for that endowment. We quote again from the record:

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts 2: 1-4.

The account then relates that devout men gathered at Jerusalem to keep the feast of Pentecost were witnesses of this divine power upon the apostles, as it became noised abroad, and were amazed as they heard the apostles preach to them in their own tongues; that discussing the matter, Peter, the leader of the apostles, stood up and recited the significance of what was transpiring; that he recounted the mission of Christ and their rejection of him, his crucifixion and rising from the dead. The account continues thus: "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, What shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. . . . Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." (Acts 2: 37-41.) We read also that "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship."

Following the account of the continuing ministry of the apostles we learn that Peter, John, James, Paul, and all the apostles preached the gospel according to the terms of the great commission; they were obedient to the instructions of the Master, and continued to preach the gospel according to his statement of its principles. Peter did not preach one gospel and Paul another, but they "continued in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship," as stated in the word. There was no variation in their gospel teaching; they held themselves under obligation to follow strictly the commandments given them of their Lord. They seemed not to entertain such ideas that they were at liberty to depart from his inspired teaching; nor did they believe that they or others were qualified to improve upon or change the content or principles revealed by the power of the Holy Ghost. They recognized in Jesus that he was Lord of all. They understood and believed what he said, that all power was given unto him both in heaven and on earth. They were believing and logical men; they knew that as he spake with authority that included the domain of heaven and earth, any teaching contrary to his teaching and commission must proceed from another region, hence must be from that domain which is under the earth, the lower regions, the seat of error and darkness and all evil. Later departures from the primitive doctrine of the apostles, and which in after years led to false teaching and apostasy from primitive Christianity, came from such source of darkness, as the record declares.

IN THE STATEMENT of the great commission we note the command of the Savior: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." To teach is to cause another to know. The people taught by the disciples were to be made to know the requirements, the commandments given in the commission; they were to obey the principles thus given of God through Christ. They were not to believe and obey any other gospel, but the gospel declared in the word. It is noticeable that there is not revealed a number of gospels, as for instance a separate gospel for every nation; but they were sent into "all the world" to preach the gospel to "all nations," or as Mark states it, "to every creature." The word says, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The word taught was a universal word, having application to "every creature" "under heaven." Men were to become united in gospel faith, in gospel hope, in the "one faith," in "one God and Father of us all," in "the one hope of" their "calling." The logic of it all is clear; the Apostle Paul understood it when he wrote concerning his ministry. He said of Christ: "By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations." (Romans 1: 5.) According to his understanding all nations were to obey the faith declared by him and his coworkers. This is in harmony with the commission, "to all nations"; "to every creature." There were no exceptions.

The Apostle Paul, as in our day, had to contend against doctrines contrary to the gospel. He was not a compromiser. He said, writing to the Galatians:

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revela- (Continued on page 1618)

WORDS were haunting Larry Verne. Light, tender, loving words. They seemed to be the words of a dream.

"Sylvia, Sylvia, Sylvia, fair,
Sylvia's hair is like the night,
Touched with glancing, starry beams;
Such a face as drifts through dreams—
This is Sylvia to the sight.
And the touch of Sylvia's hand
Is light as milkweed down
When the meads are golden brown.

"Sylvia, Sylvia, Sylvia, fair,
Sylvia—just the echoing of her voice
Brings back to me
From the depths of memory
All the loveliness of spring.
Such a face as drifts through dreams—
This is Sylvia.
Sylvia, Sylvia, Sylvia, fair."

She had heard them before. She had sung the song a dozen times, and played it many more times than that. But now always she would associate with it the look she had seen on Eldred Hampton's face as her household sang this, Dorothy Cameron's request number. The look was one born of an old soul ache returned to torment and pain.

She mentioned that expression to Greg when the others had gone, and he countered with wondering comments concerning Joe Dockerly's strange actions during the evening.

"Something at the bottom of all this, Larry," he muttered; "never heard of a man leaving a good crowd to go to bed with a headache. Now if it was a heartache—"

"And Doc is usually so—so normal," the girl was groping for answers to the questions in her own mind.

"Is he really? Or is that normality just a pose?" Greg's glance was penetrative.

"Silly, how could you think Doc with his sincerity and geniality could be just posing? He isn't that sort." Larry shivered, for the house was cooler now that the fire had been prepared for the night.

"Doc's no better than lots of people who do pose, people you'd never suspect of hiding things."

"You sound mysterious. But I'm sure that's not the case with Doc, Greg. You see I know him—"

"Do you? All right then, tell me something about him other than that he rooms here, that he eats, sleeps, laughs, works, and teases as other men do. Oh, and that he belongs to the church." This was an afterthought.

"You forgot to add that he owns a grain company," teased Larry.

"Well, tell me some more. I'm waiting," and Greg crossed his legs and twirled his thumbs expectantly.

"You have me cornered," frankly. "I don't know much more about him."

"Neither does anyone about unless it is Mrs. Hampton. Some people are rather curious. Where did he come from? What is there in his past that makes him different from other people; that gave him that white hair for instance, and that look in his eyes when you catch him unawares? Why doesn't he take active part in church work—he's a good man and Christian? And why, in the name of common sense, if he loves her half as much as he seems to, doesn't he marry Mrs. Hampton, and have done with all this mystery? He just seems to have closed a heavy curtain over the years back of about five years ago, and with that charming personality of his he politely tells you that it's none of your business."

The girl nodded absently: "It is strange." Then drawing a breath—"But I can't forget Mother Eldred's face." Somewhere away in a wall a mouse scuttled noisily about.

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him because she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Yielding to a temptation with some misgivings, Larry accompanies Greg to a costume ball, wearing a valuable bracelet that is an heirloom belonging to Eldred Hampton. To the discomfiture of being thrown in the company of men she dislikes, Larry is horrified to find she has lost—or been robbed of—the bracelet. Days of remorse follow. The bracelet is not found. Larry struggles with herself, feeling bitter about what she has done, and tries to make some new resolutions. She begins by making some inquiries about study classes in the church school, and undertakes reading and discussion for the serious purpose of acquainting herself with the church.

At a party at Mrs. Hampton's, Mrs. Cameron, a new arrival, is introduced. But when Joe Dockerly, a fine man about whom little is known, meets her, he turns white, complains of a headache, and retreats to his room, leaving some members of the party in consternation.

"That's just it. They are two perfectly grand people, but something is bothering them, and my guess is that this something isn't a new thing, but that it is old. Their faces show that. If we could—"

"But they don't want us to help them. It's their own affair. We'll just have to accept their friendship—and wait!" Her face was earnest.

"Then," Greg's voice was vibrant, "perhaps we'd better consider our own problems." And a moment later: "Got a nice kiss for me?"

SHE SMILED and leaned her head on his shoulder. "Please, let's don't talk," she murmured in his ear.

"Why?" very softly.

"Oh—"

"But don't you see, Larry, we must?"

She did not reply, just buried her face on his shoulder.

"Haven't I been nice?"

"Wonderful, Greg." The words were muffled.

Oh, the exquisite sweetness of his love for her! The protection and help it promised! The comfort—! But this would never do.

Confusedly she drew away, and her voice sounded sharp in the still house: "Don't do that, Greg—don't! You—we mustn't!" She stood up, but it was a long moment before she could go on. She felt like an executioner. "I've thought about us a lot since we talked last—and you have been grand. I—do care a great deal for you, Greg"—how stiff and formal she sounded!—"I'm really not the hard-hearted person I'm trying to be."

"I know you're not, dearest; that's why I've been so puzzled." After a hesitant pause: "Does that priesthood bug still bite you?"

"Now you're making fun!"

"No, honest I'm not. I just wondered."

"Well, I've been reading a lot about the church recently, and Carmen and I have studied some. Our class, you know, has discussed it, too. I've wondered and thought about it, but still, Greg, I can't reconcile the apparent human frailties of the priesthood with the power they are supposed to have in their holy calling." How simply she stated her problem!

"You're too idealistic, Larry, and do you know, my dear, I think you are making a mountain out of a molehill. When you grow a little older"—was this one of youth's rare insights into the future?—"I believe you will find that you have needlessly made the two of us suffer."

THOSE WORDS stung. So he thought that she was overwrought, overconcerned, that her problem was littleness distorted into bigness! Finally

www.LatterDayTruth.org

when she spoke, she said very quietly: "I was afraid all along, Greg, that you might feel that way—that it was just a whim of mine, just a hold-off—that there was no need of it. I was afraid—" Her tone sagged as if speaking were a very difficult thing, and she turned away from the light to hide her eyes.

"I didn't say that," protested the young fellow—"at least I didn't mean to, dear—"

"It was your reason speaking, Greg," she went on relentlessly. "You think that it's just silly child play—that I'm just trying to prove your love or my own. . . . I've been thinking, Greg, and I believe it would help us both to think more clearly, more objectively of our"—she paused before she could say it—"love, if we didn't see each other—"

"Larry don't say that! It's utterly impossible for you and me to think objectively of our love!"

"You just think so now, Greg, but when we're quite a ways apart—after the hurt and the missing have gone, we can do it then. Perhaps someday when you're safely married to some other—" Here a lump in her throat stopped further speech.

"But, Larry, sweetest girl," bruskly he disregarded the reference to his marriage to another, "there's no sense in our not seeing each other. Haven't I behaved since you—asked me to go on as we did before? You're not being fair, Larry, to me or to yourself. Come on, let's forget it."

HOW SHE WISHED that she might forget it—a mountain out of a molehill, was it? He was trying to look at this matter straight, but she was sure that he was thinking chiefly of his own suffering. Nevertheless she almost relented. Greg looked so eager, so boyishly willing to try again "to behave." But no—something had to be done. There was too much uncertainty, doubt—she couldn't understand it; now was she thinking principally of herself? No, no, she was trying to think of the good of them both. There was no need to cause Greg more suffering than she had already caused him. Herself? What did it matter?

"Let's just don't think of it any more," he pleaded.

"But we must Greg. We can't spend our lives dodging," she almost wailed. "We must face it sooner or later—and now, well, if we break off now, we will not have so much suffering later."

"Great heavens, Larry, you don't really mean for us to quit!" Slowly his face grew ashen as he looked at her. "Why you can't mean it!" His grip on her shoulders made her wince, but he did not notice. "I can't—I tell you I can't—Oh, Larry, please!" brokenly.

"Don't look like that, Greg, don't!" And she shut out the sight of his face with an upflung arm. "You'll get over it. At first it will seem lonely, but then—"

He groaned and turned away, dropped on the divan, and buried his face in his hands. His shoulders heaved. It was overwhelming, cruel, awful, but she could not look away.

Presently she placed a hand on his bowed head and gently began: "Don't, Greg, please don't. After awhile—after we've had time to think over the matter, we'll probably see each other—" Again that dryness and hardness in her throat.

For an answer he seized her hand and covered it with hot kisses, kisses with which tears were mingled. "Then you'll let — me — come — back — sometime, Larry?"

After he was gone, Larry forgot to think of Doc or Eldred Hampton, or anyone but Greg and herself. Surely it could not be true that she had sent him away! Had the world utterly collapsed? She was frightened. The night was ghastly with its loneliness—like a great tombstone—and she was smothering under it! Not troubling to undress, she threw herself across her bed, and muffled her sobs in her pillow. Everything was over!—she didn't care if night lasted forever!—if the sun never came up!—she wished that she could die. Dying was so sweet and easy and peaceful compared to this. "Oh, Lord!" she prayed, and then moaned into the pillow—"What's the use? He doesn't hear me! He isn't interested—!"

It was almost daylight before she fell into a fitful sleep on a drenched pillow, and soon thereafter the alarm sounded the beginning of another work day.

TWO EVENINGS later a note from Nancy awaited her when she reached home:

"Dear child, I've neglected you, and I'm sorry, but I've had my mind rather occupied lately. This is to ask you something about my "Heart's Desire." Do you know what he is doing? I haven't heard from him for three weeks! Do write me the news in that direction if you know any. News breezed up here by way of the Grapevine that he was in some sort of a scrape at the Playland. Do you know anything about it?

"This is necessarily brief—I have a date with Charles. And besides there isn't much more to say even if I had time to say it. I'll try to do better next time.

"NANCY.

"P. S. I do hope you and Greg are getting along better now."

The postscript caused Larry to cry aloud. She was lonely, so very lonely, and it was Saturday evening. She wondered what Greg was doing, if he was at home. She must do something! An evening alone in this room would set her wild! And she wouldn't worry Mother Eldred or Doc. Perhaps she had better hunt up Carmen.

There was no door between the Hampton part of the house upstairs and the Blaine apartment, and so Larry went slowly downstairs and out on the porch, entering the hall off which the Cameron apartment opened downstairs, and the Blaine apartment upstairs.

Sammie and Dorothy Pearl Cameron were playing in the hall near the door of their new home. They greeted her shyly with wide, baby smiles. Almost at once a sharp voice called:

"Sammie, didn't I tell you not to get out of my sight? I told you to stay right by that door." Pointed heels pecked their way across the floor, and Mrs. Cameron stood in the door.

At the first sound of her voice Sammie stiffened, and as if by instinct Dorothy Pearl dropped into hiding behind the banister. Both children were on the first step with Larry.

"—Oh, hello," greeted Dorothy Cameron, "it's you, is it? Won't you come in?" Then she went on before Larry could reply: "Those children have run me ragged today—I've told them fifty times not to go upstairs. It's so hard to try to raise children in an apartment!"

"I was hunting Carmen Blaine," politely.

"Do step in for a minute at least. We aren't all straightened up yet, but I'm so lonely!"

Lonely with these two children—how could she be? wondered Larry.

"Only for a minute then," she smiled and followed the other into the room.

"Welcome minute," Dorothy went on. She looked very tired. "Rufus usually works until six on Saturday evenings. They pick on him," she bitterly explained, "make him do what the rest don't get done to even up the week. But then—goodness knows, if he was home he wouldn't be here long—he'd be out on priesthood duty." Her tone was one of exasperation. "That man has a conscience as overdeveloped as a too-much-irrigated squash! He's always gone, always doing something for the church! You'd think that I and the children simply didn't exist."

Larry was shocked. Why should this woman take her into her confidence in this way? Why should she attack her husband and his conscience? And right before the children, too.

"My, but you have a cozy little place here," she said feeling that she was being a little awkward in changing the subject. "Isn't this the prettiest screen! —did you make it?"

"Heavens no!—I make such a thing? I can't paint any more than a rabbit. I bought it in the city—paid thirty-five dollars and ninety cents for it." The glance she gave the entire room was one of dissatisfaction: "There isn't room enough for all of our things here, but—oh, well, one must get used to crowded conditions, when one is poor."

SO THIS was why Rufus Cameron was so quiet and so self-conscious! Larry felt very sorry for him. Did he hear nothing at home except complaints, and Worship Suggestions for January, 1934 . . .

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "BE ONE IN CHRIST."

FIRST SUNDAY, JANUARY 7

Theme: "Receive Ye the Ministry of Jesus."

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus Calls Us, O'er the Tumult," N. S. H., 337.

Call to Worship: John 1: 1-5.

Response: John 1: 12.

(S) Hymn: "O God, Whose Presence Glows in All," N. S. H., 73; S. H., 84.

(S) Prayer.

Scriptural Meditation: Luke 22: 23-27.

(S) Hymn: "Rise Up, O Men of God," N. S. H., 210.

Talk: There is an erroneous idea abroad that since Jesus proclaimed that all men are brothers, and God is their Father, all we have to do to redeem the world is merely to realize this great truth, and the world will be made over anew. There is no doubt that we are intended to be children of God, but to say that we are, and continue in indifference to the teachings of Christ, is to deceive ourselves. The right to become a son of God, and a younger brother of Jesus, demands the power of God. We cannot do it of ourselves. There must come from beyond the gulf that separates creature from Creator, the life of God—eternal life. For this cause was Jesus Christ manifested, that we might become the sons of God, and brethren in the true sense. And the spirit which is in him is given to us as we make an effort to receive his sayings and keep his commandments. Those who desire the gift of life must be alert to the ministry of Christ, and have minds open to his light, from wherever it comes: through his servants, through his handiwork in nature, through the lives of others however lowly, and through his own spirit in our inner man.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 135: 2 and 125: 14. "The church is admonished once again that the great task laid upon it cannot be accomplished if contention continues. The hastening time is here and greater unity than ever before is necessary if the forces of opposition are to be met; and such unity will prevail if those holding the priesthood will remember their commission to preach the gospel, and each officer will strive to discharge his own duty and magnify his calling. If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."

(S) Hymn: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," N. S. H., 213.

(S) Benediction: Moroni 9: 28.

SECOND SUNDAY, JANUARY 14

Theme: "Work With Each Other."

Instrumental Prelude: "Onward to Zion," N. S. H., 436.

Call to Worship: John 10: 11, 15, 28-31.

(S) Hymn Response: "Awake Ye Saints," N. S. H., 204; S. H., 34.

(S) Prayer: Concluding with the Lord's Prayer, the congregation joining.

Scripture Reading: 1 Corinthians 12: 13-27.

(S) Hymn: "The Church's One Foundation," N. S. H., 359.

Talk: On Christian Unity.

According to our Lord, the one distinguishing characteristic of the church of God, making it Divine in the eyes of all men, was the love that members of that church were to hold one for the other. To Jesus, it was unthinkable that men should fail to respond to the demands that the love of God made upon them. If we love God, we love each other. Nobody can love one without love for the other also. Divisiveness, strife between members, schism in the body of Christ; all tend to break down the quality of friendship between God and his children, and among the children one for the other. We are members of the body of Christ, and as such, brethren. Our work in the church therefore, should be an endeavor which we share with others, for, whenever any constructive work is done, it is the church that benefits. Our desire for a place in the church should be balanced by an appreciation of the place and work of each of the other members.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 117: 12 and 122: 16, 17.

"Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith." ". . . Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me. . . . Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end. Amen."

(S) Hymn: "Blest Be the Tie," N. S. H., 343; S. H., 52.

(S) Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, JANUARY 21

Theme: "Prefer One Another."

Instrumental Prelude: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," N. S. H., 213.

Call to Worship: Alma 14: 97. "Behold, who can glory too much in the Lord? Yea, who can say too much of his great power, and of his mercy, and of his long suffering towards the children of men?"

(S) Response: "Come, O Thou King of Kings!" N. S. H., 179; S. H., 251, verses one and two.

Scriptural Meditation: Alma 3: 27, 28, 29, 46, 47, 50, 52, 54-57. "And now behold, I ask of you, my brethren of the church, Have ye spiritually been born of God? Have ye received his image in your countenances? Have ye experienced this mighty change in your hearts?

"And now behold, I say unto you my brethren, If ye have experienced a change of heart, and if ye have felt to sing the song of redeeming love, I would ask, Can ye feel so now? Have ye walked, keeping yourselves blameless before God? Behold, are ye stripped of pride? I say unto you, If ye are not, ye are not prepared to meet God. Behold, I say, Is there one among you who is not stripped of envy? And again, Is there one among you that doth make a mock of his brother, or that heapeth upon him persecutions? Wo unto such an one, for the Lord God hath spoken it. Behold, he sendeth an invitation unto all men; for the arms of mercy are extended towards them."

(S) Hymn: "Teach us, O Lord, true brotherhood," N. S. H., 341, verses 1, 3, 4, 5.

Talk: Many of the people with whom Jesus associated were not kind or considerate, and yet he loved them. They crucified him and even from the cross he asked his Father to forgive them. They did not realize the thing they were doing, but few men would have thought of that at such a time. Jesus was always able to understand the other persons viewpoint. That is basic if we would truly forgive and love our brothers. And he asks no more of us than he was willing to do.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Period of Prayer: For forgiveness and for light that we may have the power to understand our fellow men and love them.

Commission: Romans 12: 1, 10, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another. Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Hymn Benediction: "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," N. S. H., 243, verses 1, 3, 4. (With an instrumental Amen.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, JANUARY 28

Theme: "Be Forgiving."

Instrumental Prelude: "Father Thy Paternal Care," N. S. H., 6.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2 (Selected). "Behold, thus saith the Lord your God unto you . . . Hearken ye, and hear, and receive my will concerning you; for verily I say unto you, I will that ye should overcome the world; wherefore I will have compassion upon you. . . ." "I will be merciful unto you . . . verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death. . . . I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men. . . ."

(S) Hymn: "Father When in Love to Thee," N. S. H., 151; S. H., 135.

(S) Prayer: A petition for forgiveness, and mutual understanding.

Scripture: Psalm 103. "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

(S) Hymn: "The Lord How Wondrous," N. S. H., 116; S. H., 144.

Talk: From Luke 7: 36-50. This story may be retold from the Scriptural background.

Commission: Colossians, 3: 1, 2, and 13-15.

(S) Hymn: "I Would Be True," N. S. H., 294.

(S) Benediction.

FIRST SUNDAY, JANUARY 7

Sacrament Service

It is suggested that the boys and girls meet in sacrament service with the adults. It will be helpful if the teacher will use a few minutes at the close of the class period to recall, with the children, the purpose of the sacrament.

For convenience, reference is made to the following material concerning the sacrament:

Junior Quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," by Myrtle A. Weber, April, May, June, 1931, Lesson Ten.

Jerusalem the Golden

By Lewis Browne

The following article is reprinted from the San Francisco Examiner, the clipping being kindly sent by George S. Lincoln. The author, Lewis Browne, is famous as a traveler and writer on religious subjects. He presents the ancient city in an unusual and interesting light.

JERUSALEM—There's a boom on here. Wherever we went on this voyage around the world we saw nothing but poverty, heard nothing but depression, and were told to look for nothing but revolution. In Japan, China, Malaya, India—everywhere there was this same dejection and dread. Even in sequestered Bali there was grumbling, largely on account of the falling off in tourist trade, which has become the major industry on that wonderful island.

But here in Palestine all is booming. Incredible as it may sound, no one is out of work here. Indeed, I am told that there are not enough workmen for the labor waiting to be done. Building is going on everywhere, and with each new day the New Jerusalem seems to be becoming more nearly an accomplished fact.

THE SENTIMENTAL and the stickily romantic may not like the change that is coming over this ancient city. They may brand it Jerusalem the Brazen, and turn from it with a delicate shudder. But I remember it only eight years ago, when it was still all iron-rust; and the metamorphosis fills me with elation. For the building and mending have gone on only outside the ancient walls. Within them no alteration has occurred save that the people are moving out. Those wretched hordes who crawled about like vermin in the dark crevices are now moving to the New City, where there is sun and clean air. And the Old City is being redeemed thereby.

There is no more picturesque place on earth than the Old City of Jerusalem with its walls and battlements and watch-towers and arched alleyways. But there is also no place on earth less fit to live in. Eight years ago, when I first laid eyes on it, I came away heartsick, for I saw it then at noon, when all its miserable denizens were swarming in the alleyways. The place throbbed like a fistula. Foul odors nosed their way through the crooked narrow streets like avidly rooting swine. The strident cries of camel-men and donkey-boys, the squabbling of vendors and buyers, the piteous wailing of beggars, the screeching of phonographs in the coffee shops, left me deaf and reeling. After an hour of wandering through that dark, hot, evil-smelling maze, I emerged feeling I had been in an inferno.

IT WAS NOT until I returned again late at night and looked down at the sleeping city from a watch-tower in the Damascus Gate, that I saw its ineffable beauty. I spent the night in that tower—a friend, a young Jewish sculptor, had his studio in one of the guard-rooms—and at daybreak I followed the path on top of the walls all around the city. And I was entranced. Never in all my life had I seen anything so lovely as that huddle of stone walls and domed roofs in the half-light of the dawn. It looked unreal, like something seen in a dream, something imagined in a reverie. I clambered down and walked through the deserted streets, and I thought the heart within me would burst with the melancholy beauty of the scene.

But an hour later, when the people began to swarm from their holes, all the joy was turned to horror again. The dream became a nightmare.

Six years ago, when I again visited Jerusalem, I thought I saw a slight improvement. The Old City was no less lovely at night, but it seemed a little less crowded and squalid during the day. Two years ago, when I again returned, I was almost sure that things were getting better. And now I am completely convinced.

The New City outside the walls has been built up, relieving the murderous pressure in the Old City. Those catacomb-like houses are still there in the walled town, but there are fewer people living in them. The churches and mosques and synagogues have not been touched, the alleyways are still as narrow and crooked as ever, but they are less crowded now, and far less noisesome. Even at noon the glamour of this ancient huddle is able to assert itself.

AND ALL THIS is due to the boom. Jews have come here, and come not to die but to live, and the energy and wealth they have brought with them are transforming all in sight. They have stirred the Moslems and Christians to effort, and between them literally wonders are being accomplished. The most conspicuous wonder, perhaps, is the New City with its splendid hotels, marble-fronted banks, and wide boulevards.

But to me the most significant is the turning of the Old City into what it should long have been—a monument.

A Song for the Christmas Season

The Kings to the Stable
They brought sweet spice,
The gold and the silver,
And jewels of price.

But the Dove by the manger
She would not cease
Mourning so softly:
"Bring Him peace; bring Him peace!"

The Kings from the Orient
Brought nard and clove.
The Dove went mourning:
"Bring Him love; bring Him love."

What would content Him
In silver and gold,—
A new-born Baby
But one hour old?

Not myrrh shall please Him,
Nor the ambergris,
What hath sweet savour
Of His Mother's kiss?

There is clash of battle,
And men hate and slay;
From the noise and the tumult
She hides Him away.

But His sleep is fitful
In His Mother's breast,
The Dove goes mourning:
"Give Him rest; give Him rest!"

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

Toxic Headache from the Liver

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

There are few persons who have not suffered from headache. Most headaches are toxic. It is present at some period or other in the course of most acute and chronic diseases and may be associated or not with organic changes in the brain or other organs of the body. There are many varieties of headache. They may be slight and superficial, or deep seated. It is always a symptom of a disturbance of the human mechanism. It is a danger signal that should never be ignored. The most common determining causes are sinuitis, nasal or pharyngeal trouble; eye abnormalities such as eye strain, astigmatism and other forms of refractive errors; together with various diseases of the eye and neuritis, which is often brought about by the liver being unable to perform its task of preventing deleterious substances from entering the blood stream. On account of the liver function being deranged the accumulated effete material enters the intestines, causing these substances to pass from bowel to liver and liver to bowel producing "a vicious circle."

People who subject themselves to a highly excessive protein or nitrogenous diet are subject to this accumulated toxic material. The time required for its poisonous accumulation varies even in the same person. An emotional strain influences the absorption from the liver producing jaundice. Grief, sorrow or anxiety may also bring on this trouble likewise deranging the liver function and abnormal constituents circulating in the blood producing astigmatism, sinuitis, eye strains, etc.

Toxins are carried to the points of least resistance. Some nerve specialists believe that headaches are due to some unidentified toxin while others believe that the disorder is produced by excessive protein absorption. Nearly all investigators have come to agree that an excess of fat in the diet produces intestinal putrefaction and auto-intoxication. These headaches are usually spoken of as "morning headaches" as they are usually worse in the morning. For such persons it is plainly evident that proper diet is the main remedy. Most headache sufferers constantly complain of bad breath and coated tongue due to a saturation of the tissues with putrefactive material absorbed from the colon. The first step in the cure, therefore, is to remove all the putrefactive material from the colon. If eye strain is a contributing cause it should be remedied by properly fitted glasses; diseases of the eye, sinuitis, etc., should be thoroughly looked after. Most authorities believe that a fruit diet for five or six days is the best; then a more liberal diet for four or five days to be followed again by the fruit regimen for another five or six days. The patient should not get discouraged if three or four attempts or more are necessary for complete success. If the dietetic cure is effective the bowels will become naturally regular; the tongue will become clean, the severity and frequency of headaches will grow less and less and finally disappear. Occasionally some intestinal complication or a diseased gall bladder may be a serious hindrance to a cure necessitating a surgical procedure. Some get temporary relief after vomiting a large quantity of bile, which is brought about by ridding the system of concentrated bile which according to Bouchard is many times more toxic than urine. Some physicians report relief by removing some of the bile by the means of a duodenal feeding tube about three times a week. About six ounces may be removed up to a total of a pint or two pints. Usually about four ounces may be removed at a time. Lemon juice in about one fourth glass of water has been found very beneficial toward a cure by exciting the contraction of the gall bladder. This treatment is believed by some to be more effective if alternated with hydrochloric acid. While others believe that hydrochloric acid is the better of the two on account of it being a disinfectant of the stomach and a normal stimulant of the gall bladder. Either of them are better than epsom salts that is so frequently used. Some sufferers have an almost abnormal craving for fruit acids and are often greatly benefited by these acids by their producing a contraction of the gall bladder and by the increased bowel action thus preventing the excessive absorption of bile. In many cases it is necessary to use an enema before retiring to get rid of the residue of the breakfast. The enema should be hot ranging from 112 to 115 F. A meat free diet and the avoidance of all greasy and fried foods will greatly help to bring relief and should be adhered to. Milk or eggs aggravate some cases. In such cases in order to insure a nitrogen balance, nut protein should be substituted. Tea and coffee must be avoided in all cases.

I have known many cases to get rid of persistent headache by the discontinuance of the coffee habit. This form of headache is more frequent than the average physician and patient realizes. An excess of salt, pepper and spices should be omitted from the diet. Copious water drinking is highly important to aid in elimination of toxins from the blood and bowel elimination. All such patients should avoid severe emotional strains. All sufferers who have repeated attacks should know that headache is a danger signal of some more serious malady and should never be ignored.

WE BELIEVE

"In God the Eternal Father"

A Short Radio Talk by L. L.

"We believe in God the eternal Father, and in the Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." So reads the opening sentence of the Epitome of Faith that, with very few changes, has expressed the belief of the church since its beginning in 1830.

We believe that God is the creator of all things; that the countless stars which move in their orbits through the reaches of infinite space are not the result of an accident. We believe that the remarkable unity that exists throughout all creation, and the likeness that the smallest atoms bear to the very largest of planetary systems, and the harmonious coordination of all things, confirms a belief in One who designed and created the universe. We believe that God is moved by a conscious purpose and love for his creations.

Many men have tried to describe God, and some have said that He is "Omnipotent, Omniscient, and Omnipresent" which means that He is all-powerful, all-wise, and everywhere. In spite of all the books that have been written on the subject, we are still very far from being able to understand and explain God. Yet we see the marvelous beauty and wonder of his creations, and we have daily examples of his power and love.

A little child cannot understand the thoughts and purposes of an earthly parent, but he is the constant recipient of that father's love and care. And his father protects and provides for him until he arrives at the age of maturity and independence. Even so are we children in the sight of God, and we cannot understand all of his great designs and purposes. But insofar as we can understand it is our privilege to obey him and to be able to work in harmony with his will. We can understand, then, why it is that we must sometimes submit to discipline for our waywardness, sometimes wait for direction and help from Him. God is our spiritual and eternal father, and his interest abides not alone in the welfare of our earthly bodies, but as well in the character and destiny of our immortal souls.

We cannot understand God simply because he is infinite, and we cannot understand infinite things. We cannot conceive of limitless space, space where there is no end, space with nothing beyond but more space. We cannot conceive of eternity, for all our conceptions are established upon beginnings and ends, and upon definite points of time. We cannot understand the infinite mind which sees the past and future more clearly than we can see the present. Therefore we cannot understand God. But we do understand what love and mercy and kindness are, and we know that these are qualities of the personality of God.

We believe that Jesus Christ was and is the Son of God, and that he came in the flesh in order that men might see and understand what the Spirit of God could mean in their lives. Jesus was the Word made manifest. He was the incarnation of divinity. In all the centuries before and since his coming, he has represented the godlike man, and the manlike God. Because we have understood Jesus, we have had a glimpse of God. "I and my Father are one," he said to his followers on one occasion when he was trying to teach them this fundamental truth. God is manifested in Jesus Christ, who came to earth as the savior of men.

The Holy Spirit, which comes to men in times of great need and spiritual exaltation, is another revealment of the Divine Power. Men of all ages have testified to their experiences when they have felt the presence and influence of that Holy Spirit in their lives. If we earnestly seek it, we today may enjoy the presence and comfort of the Holy Spirit in our lives.

God is unchangeable. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. The laws of the physical world are unchangeable. The laws of chemistry and physics do not vary to any appreciable degree that scientists have been able to discover. And we believe that the laws of the spiritual world are unchangeable. If God once spoke to men, he can and will speak to men today, under the proper conditions and circumstances. If he ever revealed his will to his servants the prophets, he is waiting to reveal his will to the prophets of today. This revelation of the divine will can only be stopped by the moral and spiritual deafness of men. If they will wait for his voice, he will speak to them as he did of old. This is not only our belief; it is our experience; and it is the substance of our testimony.

John tells us that "God is love," and we do not believe that a God whose character is love will isolate himself in silence from his children on earth. His ways of speaking to us are many. He speaks to us through the revelations of truth in science. He speaks to us in the still small voice of conscience. He speaks to us of better and finer things, of the purer faith and of the stronger, more kindly life. The world is full of object lessons if we will open the eyes of our understandings to read them.

"We believe in God the eternal Father, and in the Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost."

THE GREAT COMMISSION

tion of Jesus Christ."—Galatians 1: 6-12.

PAUL had convictions; even among those who professed faith in Christ and who taught another and contrary gospel, he did not hesitate to speak against their departures from the faith of the gospel. He repeats to the effect that if an angel from heaven would bring another than the genuine gospel, "let him be accursed." From his former religious experience, based upon the traditions of the elders and rabbis of the Jews, Paul knew the darkness and blindness that resulted from teaching contrary to the word of God. He admonished his disciples against it; he "shunned not to declare unto them the whole counsel of God." He also warned the church at Miletus and elsewhere against wrong and corrupting teaching.

Jesus climaxed his great mission on earth by commanding his disciples by clear and plain instructions what to teach and preach. In the beginning of his ministry he preached the gospel according to his parting instructions in the commission. We read: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the gospel." (Mark 1: 15.)

What would the disciples have thought had he commissioned them to preach otherwise than they had heard him teach? What conception of him would they have held had he varied from his former teaching, in giving them the final commission? Jesus said of himself, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." (John 14: 6.) He said also:

"He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me. And he that seeth me seeth him that sent me. I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12: 44-50.

We could multiply similar statements from the Master, showing the authoritative and immutable character of his teachings to the effect that the gospel which he declared is the plan of salvation ordained of God. It is the celestial law; it had its origin in the bosom of God, whose voice is the harmony of the world. It is the only means whereby the race can be redeemed and brought to acceptance with God. God is perfect; his ways are perfect; he declares himself to be unchangeable: "I am the Lord, I change not," is his declaration through the prophet Malachi (3: 6). And of Jesus this is said: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today, and forever" (Hebrews 13: 8).

ONE WOULD NATURALLY CONCLUDE that in the face of such clear and plain declarations from the Christ there would be little or no diversity of opinion among religionists concerning the gospel; that men and women would readily be converted to obedience to the gospel as taught by Jesus. It would seem that its teaching and requirements would be obvious, apparent, to all who desire to place themselves in harmony with the commandments of Jesus, their professed teacher, leader, and commander. But no, tradition, sectarian opinion, former indoctrination have been received and continue to be retained, even when shown to be directly contrary to the plain and incontrovertible truth of the word. As stated, mere opinion, based upon no well-founded basis of belief, is carelessly or traditionally accepted. Careful examination, prayerful seeking for the truth, is the exception, rather than the rule, in these days of much mere nominal belief and church membership.

In religion, as in anything else, men must be earnest and consistent in the search for truth. Great things, especially knowledge of God, are not found without earnest, devoted seeking with a view to finding truth and obeying it. Attainment in any worth-while endeavor, is realized only by the application of heart and mind in the search for principles by which attainment is secured; and salvation, like other quests for actual knowledge and power for good, means attainment. It cannot be secured by mere assent of the mind, by mere formal, uncritical "belief." When the Scripture says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," it does not mean mere assent of the mind in acceptance of Jesus Christ as Savior. It means a belief that is genuine; that accords with the teaching, that renders obedience to the principles taught by Jesus. Such belief is that taught in the word, as note the obedience of the apostles and those taught by them according to the commission.

Notwithstanding things at present have a dark and gloomy aspect . . . we should never despair. Our situation before has been unpromising and has been changed for the better, so I trust it will again. If new difficulties arise we must only put forth new exertions, and proportion our efforts to the exigency of the times.—Washington, at Valley Forge declarations of resignation? Was his life composed of work which he did not like, and at home beratings and scoldings from the woman he loved? How different Dorothy Cameron seemed from the other night!

"I haven't felt well all day," she continued, "and the children have been such a trial!"

"What's a twial, Momma?" drawled Sammie clambering up on the arm of an overstuffed chair.

"Get down off that chair, you little—! Haven't I told you a thousand times not to climb over the furniture?" shrieked his mother, snatching at him and completely disregarding his question.

Almost sadly Larry looked at the stubborn line about Sammie's mouth, at the frightened gleam in Dorothy Pearl's eyes. How much this woman had to make her happy, and yet how little she seemed to appreciate it! Then thought of Greg and her own loneliness stung her back to a consciousness of the personal present.

"I must be going," she murmured, struggling to her feet. At that moment her eyes were drawn to a picture which instantly fascinated her. It was a full-length portrait of a young woman who wore an old-fashioned white dress. The sleeves were enormous, the waist unbelievably slim, the skirt long and flowing. A large white fan was held at a coquettish angle, but it was the face which mostly attracted Larry. The eyes, the hair, the features were winsome, charming. Surely this was Dorothy Cameron.

"You?" the striking resemblance between the picture and the woman before her brought the question to Larry's lips before she was conscious of having spoken it.

"No, that's just an old picture of my mother when she was a girl. It was taken soon after she married my father."

"She was lovely. She was very much like you," Larry's compliment was simple.

"Oh, people do say there is a resemblance, but mother was ever so much prettier than I. She was like an angel in appearance and disposition. I think she suited her name—fact is I would have named Dorothy Pearl after her only Rufus didn't want to. Now I wish I had anyway, for she is growing more like Mother every day.

"What was her name?"

"It was Sylvia."

(To be continued.)

The reign of peace and of universal love does not mean the elimination of conflict, but the raising of all the inevitable conflicts which are the warp and woof of life up a mental, moral and spiritual level so that they become creative rather than destructive.—Kennedy.

QUESTION TIME

Did priesthood originate with the Jews? What other nations had a priesthood?

According to the Inspired Version and modern revelation to the church it existed from the days of Adam. It certainly did not originate with the Jews, for some other nations had systems of priesthood many centuries before the Hebrew people arose. The Egyptians were largely governed through a powerful priesthood thousands of years before the Christian era. The Babylonian priesthood also comprised a strong and influential body that partially controlled even the activities of their ruling monarchs. India, China, Tibet, Greece, Rome, Japan, and other places have had their systems of priesthood for periods beyond historical knowledge, and unless this concept was derived from some prehistoric era and a common origin, it is not easy to understand how it became rooted in the social fabric of all the early nations at such a remote era. It is truly astonishing to learn how strongly established the priesthoods of the nations were for thousands of years.

What are the causes of disagreement concerning Bible chronology?

There are too many of them to give here in detail. A brief statement of some historical facts may help to explain the problem, however. While the Egyptian year was nearly the same as our own, there would be a difference of four years actual time from the earliest known Egyptian period to the present era, if one system were used in contrast with the other. For a time the Roman year had 304 days, and later 51 days were added. In the time of Julius Cæsar the year was made to comprise 365¼ days. The ancient Hebrews had one year of 354 days, and another (the embolismic) of 384. As Moses changed the year's beginning (see Exodus 12: 2), it shows that before that time a different year had been in use.

Before the seventh century, the only dates to be relied upon as nearly accurate were reckoned by the Babylonian, Greek, or Roman eras, of which the Babylonian was the most dependable (B. C. 747). The ancient writers wrote dateless history, the events being ascribed to periods with which they were at that time familiar, as the period in which a certain monarch ruled, or was crowned, or died, etc. Occasionally the statement in one record conflicts somewhat with that of another record, leaving the student uncertain as to which was correct, if either.

In addition to this, it has been discovered that kings sometimes altered the inscriptions, in order to obtain glory for events of another time. Gesenius, the orientalist, found that round numbers were often used instead of definite figures, as seventy, forty, and seven, were used to mean an indefinite number. In the book of Judges, forty is thought to be thus used frequently. Genealogies differ in different texts, such as the Hebrew, Samaritan, and Septuagint. The first makes the period from Adam to Noah 1656 years, the Samaritan makes it 1307 years, and the Septuagint makes it 2242 years. The term father sometimes meant an ancestor, and the terms son and seed at times meant descendant or posterity, in the Hebrew original language. All these and other problems complicate the question.

Does the term "latter days" or "last days" always mean the same in the Bible?

It is practically impossible to determine the limitation of time intended by the terms named in the question except as it may be indicated by the context. "Latter days" (or "day") occurs twelve times in the Old Testament, but sometimes refers to a period not many years away, and at other times it means a period very remote. The Hebrew term used was derived from a word which indicates hereafter, later, following, afterward, etc. An examination of Numbers 24: 14, Deuteronomy 31: 29, Job 19: 25, Jeremiah 48: 47; 49: 39, and Daniel 2: 28, with their contexts, will show some of the variations as to time limits.

The term "last days" means the same in the Old Testament as the term just considered, so far as the Hebrew word is concerned independent of its setting. But in the New Testament it seems to commonly have a somewhat more distinctive meaning, taken by itself. In Genesis 49: 1 Jacob refers to what shall befall his sons in the "last days," yet his information covers a period of the past from our time. Acts 2: 17 refers to the fulfillment of prophecy applied by Peter to themselves, but most texts seem to indicate some late era of time.

The Readers Say---

Let Us Do Our Part

Only one page devoted to "The Readers Say—" in the Saints' Herald for November 28. We do not know the reason unless the editors are lacking for correspondence. If so, "Awake, ye Saints, awake! no time now for reposing." Let's do our part and in such a way that it will be edifying to others. Never mind contentions and unwise criticisms, there will be no room in the Herald for such things if it holds up to its present high standards. There are many readers and if we all do our part, we can have more letters; we need to hear from our brothers and sisters in the faith. Many of us are isolated and have but little other encouragement, so let's do our part.

We know this is the true gospel of Christ, and we should be better builders of his kingdom "while it is yet day, for the night soon cometh." Let us therefore "pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers, for the harvest is great and the laborers are few."

In these days of depression we may wonder how the Lord of the harvest is to send them forth, but he has told us to pray, and if we do our part, spiritually and financially, the Lord will do his part. We can depend on his promises if we obey his counsel.

We can plainly see that Satan and his forces are fighting mightily to destroy God's kingdom in these times, but we must not permit ourselves to be led into darkness. So let us do our part and rejoice in the service of the Master to the end.

I was glad to read Brother J. O. Dutton's letter in the Herald some time ago.

Would Be Faithful and Obedient

I was reared in a Latter Day Saint home, and while I can see that my parents made mistakes, I frankly believe that God was pleased with their earnest efforts to bring up their family in the faith, for they received many spiritual and temporal blessings. I am thankful for the light of the gospel which came to me through them. I sometimes wonder if I would have surrendered myself to God had it not been for their influence and admonitions.

I was baptized June 15, 1915, but must confess that in all those intervening years I have not been awake to my gospel responsibility. The past has taught me the lesson of faithfulness, however, and I need the prayers of all that I may be able to apply this lesson every day of my life, and that through it I may live in harmony with the will and understanding of God. I have been trying during the last few years to live as best I could for the Lord, and he has repaid me for every effort I have put forth.

My father died in April, 1927, leaving two children at home, seven in all, and my mother has been with me practically all the time since. She is in a serious physical condition and the doctors seem unable to diagnose her trouble. For her I ask your prayers. The older child whom my father left at home is now grown, and seems to have no desire to heed the gospel. He needs your prayers, that in his youth he may be made conscious of his responsibility. The younger one, who is the baby of the family, is with us also. I have a wife and three children, and desire that you pray for us as parents, that we may be worthy examples for our little ones. May God be with us all that we may hasten to redeem Zion.

Let Us Give a Christmas Offering

It is with the greatest pleasure I send in a few lines to the church paper as I am turning in my Christmas offering and tithing. My prayer is that each member of the church will feel just as I do and send in all he possibly can to help spread the true gospel of the Son of God.

I am striving to keep the celestial law. I have my trials and temptations, but I realize that the Savior had his trials and temptations, too. He admonishes us to overcome all things and to follow him if we want the peace of his Holy Spirit to rest upon us. If we do these things fully, we shall be keeping the whole law. He says that if we do not abide by the whole law or the celestial law, then we cannot inherit the celestial glory.

For two years I have had little chance to earn much, but whatever increase I have, I am determined to pay my tithing on that, be it much or less. I think, too, that each member of the church should find it possible to make a special offering to the Christmas offering fund. This should be the first gift we think about at Christmas time. Then if we have the means, our loved ones and friends may be remembered.

We are isolated far from a branch and do not have church privileges with any frequency. We enjoy reading the Herald and church books. This winter I am reading the four volumes of Church History, and find in them much valuable information. How glad and thankful we should be that we may live in peace and not be driven from our homes as were the Saints in early days of our church. Indeed we have so many things for which to be thankful that we should be humble and full of love; we should try to be a part of Zion, the pure in heart, and live so that our neighbors can see that we are the children of light. Let us keep the whole law, working in unity, strength, and love.

Abide in the Law

We are one of the many scattered little groups of isolated Saints. There are twenty of us, but we do not live close together. Seven have moved away some thirty-five miles. Elder A. M. Baker held a series of meetings here in August, services which will long be remembered. He baptized seven and left others much interested. Organized a little Sunday school for us which has been a great help.

We feel that the study of the financial law has been what we most needed, and in addition to doing our best to abide by the law during the period set aside for special emphasis on that subject, we are trying continuously to comply with all the teachings of God and his church. We are trying to realize our individual responsibility to the church, and ask your prayers that we may be made law conscious to the extent that we shall comply with the divine commandments, spiritually and financially.

Blessed With Healing

I have been a member of the church more than two years, trying to attend all the services I can. A year ago last May 28, while attending Sunday school when all were singing a hymn, I felt sorrowful and depressed though I knew not why. I felt ill and wished for administration, but since there was no one at the church to administer the ordinance, the thought passed from my mind.

That night I was taken seriously ill, and on Monday night I underwent a serious operation for ruptured appendix and other trouble. Before going on the operating table I offered a prayer, asking the Lord that if it be his will I should recover, if not, that his will be done.

On Tuesday evening I asked my sister to have prayers for me at her home at Mount Pleasant. "I'll call elders," she said. On Wednesday morning Elder George Burt, of Beaverton, and Jason Methner and Frank, my two brothers, came up to my room, and Elder Burt administered to me.

That night I was given a wonderful spiritual experience which assured me that it was the Lord's will for me to live. I gained rapidly. The doctor was elated over my recovery.

Since then I have had other remarkable experiences and my desire is to live humbly and to be a willing worker among God's people. I hope others may gain strength from this experience. I want my life to be full of good deeds so that when, at last, my call comes for me to go beyond, I shall be prepared. I am trying to be a Latter Day Saint.

Hopes to See Regular Services Resumed

We have a little church at Bartlett and until the last few years had good attendance. But some have moved away and others have been called into the beyond, and there are not enough left to hold regular meetings. I miss the church services, and am hoping that in the near future we shall find it possible to meet often.

Nevertheless, though the Saints here do not worship together, all are firm in the faith with no thought of drifting away into forbidden paths. We think and talk of the elders who used to come to us with good advice and encouragement. Some of them were Brother W. E. Haden who labored so hard in the finishing work when the church was being built; Brother B. F. Lambkin who could tell the gospel story so simply and easily that no one could doubt its truth.

I pray that I may live according to the Master's plan. I have tried to do this for more than twenty years.

An Instance of Divine Blessing

The Lord has blessed my family and me and has answered our prayers. Many times he has healed us of sickness.

I want to tell you of one particular instance of blessing. My husband fell from a hay wagon striking his head and shoulder on a large rock. He seemed dead and lay unconscious for eight hours. I prayed constantly for him, and the elders were reached by telephone as soon as the accident occurred. Before the elders could arrive, the neighbors insisted that we have a physician. The doctor dressed the injured man's head and said that the skull was fractured, his condition was serious; it was highly probable he would have to submit to an operation. But God saw fit to hear and answer the prayers of all of us, and my husband was healed.

We feel that we have had more blessings and that we better understand the gospel since we started paying our tithing and keeping the Word of Wisdom. Our prayers are for the whole church.

The Gospel Precious to Her

I should like to send greetings to Saints at Marion and Knobnoster, Missouri. I formerly lived in those places and learned to love and appreciate the members there. Perhaps some of my friends are wondering where I am. I am staying at present with my granddaughter at East Saint Louis, and feel stronger in the faith than ever. I have been here three months.

Some time ago Sister Eaton, of Stonington, Maine, sent me some Heralds. I am reading them and plan to hand them out to others, doing my little bit as best I can. I do not take the church paper any more since I have no permanent home, but live first one place and then another among my children.

The gospel is very precious to me, bringing comfort and solace. If I were without it, I should be most miserable. I hope that Saints living in this community who read this letter will make arrangements to call on me, for I love to hear how the work of the Master is going forward.

MRS. M. A. SIMMONS.

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, 314 South Eighth Street.

Wish to Be Worthy God's Blessings

The Scriptures tell us that if we keep God's commandments, he will bless us. I do want to keep his commandments. This gospel is dear to me and has been since the Lord led me into his marvelous light thirty-nine years ago.

Many, many times I have received courage from the Lord. I know that when we are discouraged and tried we can look up to the blessed Master and he will give us strength to bear our trials.

My companion also belongs to the church, has been a member thirty years. He has been blessed with healing. He holds the office of teacher in the Aaronic priesthood.

It is our desire to be humble and to warn our neighbors. We want to do good and to live worthy the blessings our Savior has promised. Pray for us that we may be given physical health and strength and spiritual courage to live for the Master.

Will You Hunt Up?

Two new members of Nowata Branch, Oklahoma, have moved to different States, and would like to get in touch with Saints in their new localities and to know of nearest branches.

Will Saints living in or near Wilmington, Illinois, please call on Mrs. Joe A. Horn, 302 South Main? She is a new member of the church and needs the cooperation of those of like faith. In writing her, address general delivery.

Brother N. E. Hancock, of Andover, New York, Rural Route 1, Care Ed. Wilson, would like to know the nearest branch to Wellsville, New York.

Requests Prayers

Mrs. Harvey Ecker, of Warren, Ohio, requests prayers in behalf of her husband who has had a very serious operation and is still in the hospital. There is no elder near them, and the prayers of the church will be appreciated.

Celebrate Seventeenth Anniversary

An impressive Armistice service was held by the church school Friday evening, November 10. The school room was nicely decorated. A cenotaph was erected on the platform for the occasion, bearing the inscription, "The Glorious Dead." Quite a number of war relics were placed around the base of the cenotaph. Elder F. Gray, church school director, acted as chairman. The orchestra opened the program with "Onward Christian Soldiers," and the audience sang, "My Country 'Tis of Thee," then the chairman gave a pleasing address. The orchestra trumpeters sounded reveille. Brother Ernest Cambridge who went overseas, told some of his experiences at the front. He referred to the church as a great army with Christ as its leader and commander. Brother Stanley Moore, another soldier who returned, also gave an interesting talk. The significance of Armistice was presented by Bishop J. C. Dent, then the orchestra played Chopin's "Funeral March," in honor of those who gave their lives in the conflict. Then after a two-minute silence, "Taps," by the trumpeters.

The seventeenth anniversary of the opening of the church was held November 19 and 20. Services on Sunday began with a prayer meeting at nine-thirty in charge of Pastor J. E. MacGregor and Elder Percy Farrow. With them on the stand were three former pastors, Elders F. Gray, J. Winegarden and W. A. Hardey. The presence of the Master was felt at this hour, and a number bore their testimonies. Quite a large attendance was present at the church school hour at eleven o'clock. At three o'clock Elder Percy Farrow occupied the stand, giving a forceful discourse on "Keep the Law." Elder Farrow again spoke in the evening to a large congregation, and his theme this time was "Seeing the Kingdom of God." Special music was by the choir and orchestra.

On Monday evening the banquet was in charge of the women's department sponsored by Sister L. Winegarden. A concert in the upper auditorium followed the meal. Beside numbers from the orchestra and the male quartet there were selections by Sister Madeline Timbrell, vocal soloist; Sister Verda Evans, reader; Miss E. Matthews, organist; Miss Helen Cale, vocal soloist; Mr. Thomas White, clarinet player, and an instrumental trio.

During the anniversary services several people were present from branches in the district. Three from Delhi were baptized by Elder Percy Farrow in the afternoon; also Alfred Bruce Henry, son of Brother Alfred Henry, was baptized by Elder Farrow.

A baby boy has come to bless the home of Brother and Sister Heddington. He was blessed on a recent Sunday by Elders F. Gray and J. E. MacGregor, and named Donald Gordon.

The condition of Brother J. Vasbinder, who has been confined to his bed the past few months, is unchanged. He wishes to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints.

On a recent afternoon and evening the women's department held a successful bazaar in the basement of the church. Many articles suitable for Christmas were sold. Booths were well patronized. The department is well pleased with the result of their labors during the past few months. Sister L. Winegarden is president.

The Young Men's Bible Class had a successful banquet not long ago, and obtained Professor Floyd S. Maine as guest speaker. His talk was well received by the class. About fifty were present, and William A. Alford, class president, was in charge. A program of toasts and responses, and of musical selections and comedy was enjoyed. Bishop Dent complimented the class on its year's activities. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: President, W. A. Alford; vice president, L. Rankin; secretary-treasurer, William Risler; director of athletics, S. Moore; social convener, R. Sinclair; supervisor of teaching, Bishop J. C. Dent; teacher, D. Campbell; assistant teacher, C. Duesling.

Elder G. C. Tomlinson, of Saint Marys, occupied the stand November 26, delivering a timely discourse.

The church school orchestra presented a concert for Saint Thomas congregation two weeks ago, under the direction of Raymond Neal.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held the first Monday of the month with a very large membership attendance. Pastor J. E. MacGregor presided, and gratifying reports were read from the church school, the women's department, the finance committee, orchestra, and junior department. Bishop J. C. Dent presided during the election of officers which resulted as follows: Pastor, J. E. MacGregor; counselors, William A. Hardey and F. Gray; church school director, F. Gray; secretary, Arlo Hogdson; assistant, William Risler; financial secretary, Ray Bicknell; treasurer, H. Ward; finance committee: J. E. MacGregor, T. G. Timbrell, F. Gray, C. W. Alford, R. Bicknell, W. A. Hardey, D. Campbell, J. F. Winegarden and J. Vasbinder, honorary member; organist, Miss E. Matthews; chorister, Fred Heddington.

This branch regrets the passing of Sister Cassie Cambridge, a former member of this branch, but of late years a member of Detroit Branch. The body was brought here for burial. Two sisters of the deceased, Mattie Timbrell and Lizzie Constable, live here.

Members are pleased to see Sister Emily Sager at meetings again after undergoing a minor operation at the hospital recently. Sister Grace Vasbinder is convalescing after a serious operation in the hospital.

Highland, Ohio

Southern Ohio District

September 30 and October 1, Southern Ohio District held a conference at Dayton. It was the privilege of thirty-four Saints from Highland to attend, eleven of this number being present for the business session on Saturday. This was a spiritual gathering and all came home rejoicing. Highland members were accompanied home by Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, who conducted meetings throughout the following week. These were highly interesting and profitable to the Saints.

Brother Griffiths visited several of the members, and on Sunday morning, October 8, while delivering his farewell address, he paid local workers a tribute of respect, which they feel proud to write, "I have not found any jealousy among your priesthood," he said.

Highland priesthood consists of four elders, five priests, and one teacher. They are working together. In the community such statements as this are heard from nonmember friends: "It doesn't seem to make any difference what those Latter Day Saints try to do, they always make a success of it." At Highland they believe that unity must start with the priesthood of the branch, before they can hope for group unity and harmony.

The department of recreation and expression held its fifth annual banquet the night of November 18. About one hundred and eighty were present and enjoyed the meal and the program which followed. The men donated food which was prepared by the women. The nut cups, programs, and decorations were made by the young people. To the casual observer the evening's entertainment represented a lot of hard work; to the Saints it was positive proof that they can labor together to accomplish the tasks which they undertake.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

A Good Report From Central Michigan

Central Michigan District is stirred by the call of the Herald and of general officers for a united church. Their program is to persuade all the young people to turn their attention to missionary work and keeping the law, and the results have been inspiring. Organizing the young people has caused the older groups to study and do their part more whole-heartedly. The work is onward. The forward look is in evidence everywhere, and we are ready to report our willingness to cooperate in every way to redeem Zion.

Our district conference was a feast of good things, and a wonderful degree of the Spirit was in evidence, especially at the prayer meeting. Harmony characterized the business procedure, and we face our new year with faith and hope, anticipating the good things that the Lord has promised to his believing and obedient children.

My meeting at Beaverton provided ten nights of good spiritual experiences, with a steady attendance and an exceptional interest in the music. The district generally is in better shape than at any time since my coming to it.

HUBERT CASE.

Bradford, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street

Members of this congregation enjoyed an active week-end November 18 and 19, this being the occasion of the "gentlemen's effort." At five o'clock Saturday evening tea was provided and the men in gala hats proved efficient waiters and collected fines for the numerous penalties inflicted on the ladies. After tea a concert was given by the following artists: Miss Veda Bocking, soprano; Mr. Marsh, baritone; Mr. J. Entwistle, humorist; Mr. C. Spargo, coon song and bone solos; Mr. A. Yarwood, ventriloquist; Mr. G. Wilson, elocutionist, and Mr. H. Barrington, elocutionist. Miss Gemmel was accompanist, and under the chairmanship of Mr. T. Brien, senior, each item was received by an enthusiastic audience.

On Sunday there were special services, Apostle J. W. Rushton being the speaker at each. The morning service (ten-forty-five) was directed by Pastor G. W. Leggott, and C. Spargo was the soloist. The service at 2.45 p. m. was in charge of the church school director, H. Barrington, and Mr. C. Spargo was again the soloist. The speaker while addressing the young people on "Effort" invited their cooperation by asking for answers to the various queries on the subject, and the results showed an intelligent interest on the part of some very young people. A junior, Kenneth Sloane, was the reader of the lesson.

Even though weather that evening was not good, a large number came to hear the pastor. Miss Veda Bocking sang, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Gentle Shepherd." Prior to the sermon the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Leggott was blessed by his grandfather, Pastor G. W. Leggott and Brother F. Tapping.

Progress at the Indian Mission

Decatur, Nebraska

Attendance has of late been good at the mission, and the services conducted for two weeks by Elder Carl T. Self, of Omaha, were especially enjoyed. He lectured to large crowds of Indians on the Book of Mormon, arousing great interest.

Also the "Keep the Law" program has done considerable good here. Quite a number have filed their inventories.

Under the leadership of Sisters Etta Brownrigg and Julia Case the help of Miss Jessie Schnopp, representing the home economics training for the government, has been secured, and a large group of Indian women work each Thursday afternoon making useful articles for their homes. This is designed to create an interest in making better homes. The government furnishes sewing machines and all material. The workers meet in the basement of the church.

District President Oehring is giving fine assistance here.

Three Weeks of Services

Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin

Saints of Soldiers Grove recently rejoiced over a series of missionary meetings conducted by Elder Roscoe E. Davey, of Northeastern Illinois, a part-time missionary for Wisconsin. Brother Davey is a forceful speaker, and his services were attended with great interest.

Sunday, November 26, sixteen Saints drove a distance of fifty miles to Flora, which is located eight miles from Lancaster, to attend all-day services. They report a spiritual time spent with other Saints.

Ruth, daughter of Philip Davenport, is very sick with pneumonia, and requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

Wednesday evening prayer service was held at the home of Burl Sophers. Mr. Sophers is not a member of the church, but his wife is.

Cottage Service at Washunga, Oklahoma

On December 2, it was my privilege to meet with the Washunga, Oklahoma, Saints in the home of Brother L. O. Cassity. The crowd, hastily informed as to the meeting responded excellently, about thirty-five attending. It was largely composed of Latter Day Saints part of whom are of Indian blood.

The good Spirit prevailed throughout the meeting, and many there responded in such a way as to give me reason to believe that they are determined to occupy on a higher plane of Christian endeavor to vindicate their claims as to the meaning and significance of the Restoration and to disclaim the right of self to govern. Their testimonies were encouraging.

Busy Month for Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin

Labor at Roxana, Decatur, and Saint Louis

Our work for November was done at Roxana, and Decatur, Illinois, and at the Saint Louis district conference.

Roxana is a new opening in a little town adjoining Alton. A hall had been hired and in spite of the fact that two other special meetings were in progress, we got more than our share of the crowds, judging from the reports that came from other meetings. We believe that many good friends have been made for the church through this effort and that a series to be held at a later date, will bring in the fruits that we so much desire to see. Several families attended every night, and at the close they told us that our message is in harmony with the Bible, and that they are going to attend our services whenever they can at Alton.

This was the first time in many years that we have started a new opening and we thoroughly enjoyed the experience because it brought back to us the old days when I served in the quorum of seventies for seventeen years.

At Decatur we had a wonderful time. The Saints loyally supported us and nearly all of them attended each night. They advertised the meetings through the newspapers and by distributing cards containing the subjects. They also personally visited their friends and used the telephone freely. Their enthusiasm brought results. Together we were able to convert seven people and the baptism was had at Taylorville.

We were loath to leave the interest we had at Decatur, but found it necessary to return on the last week-end of the month for the Saint Louis district conference. Both Sister Baldwin and I had promised to teach a class. And besides, we wanted to visit with Brother John F. Garver, missionary in charge. So after a two-week successful series we left Decatur. They are requesting our return sometime in the new year, and we hope it will be possible for us to go there again. We started them on the "Keep the Law" program and made out fifteen or twenty inventories. We believe that this branch will make a good showing at keeping the law.

At the conference I taught a class on "Keep the Law" and spoke to the priesthood on Sunday afternoon on that subject. Sister Baldwin taught a class on "Music for children," as this was the musical conference of the district.

We trust that because of the teaching of the law and the keeping of it, many blessings will be brought to the church and to its members. We enjoyed our work in this connection, and believe that God blessed us with a double portion of his Spirit in presenting the financial program to the people with whom we came in contact. We shall continue our efforts and hope that all over the church there may be manifested a greater desire to obey God's commands.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

New Canton, Illinois

Makes Progress in Recent Months

As a result of the spiritual meetings held at New Canton during the latter part of March and until April 16, by Elder R. L. Fulk, many have been made to rejoice. Two have been added to the membership.

Sarah Almeda Harrison and Roy Vernon Johnston were baptized April 16, by Brother Floyd Bowman. Two children were blessed March 26, by R. L. Fulk, Frances Joan, daughter of Vernon and Sister Lula Evans Bolin, and Raymond Richards, son of Brother Raymond and Sister Nellidene Fusselman Howell. April 16, Eleanor Yvonne, daughter of Brother Henry and Sister Elizabeth Gill Phillips, was blessed by R. L. Fulk.

During this month of labor Brother Fulk suffered intensely with infected eyes, and the last week poulticed his eyes all day and preached at night. He left for Independence the eighteenth, where he entered the Sanitarium for treatment.

Autumn is over once again, and as the workers look back upon the past six months of endeavor, they find signs of progress. Some have a greater determination to go on with the work. The sacrament services have been blessed. Peace and unity prevail.

Elder E. E. Thomas and family, Brother Corcoran and family, and Brother and Sister Kratyer, of Beardstown, Illinois, visited here in August, and the day was filled with church school, sermons, instructions in church school work, a special meeting of the young people, a period devoted entirely to sacred instrumental music and songs, and a basket dinner served in the park.

At the beginning of the school year some of the young people left New Canton for the winter. Sister Lula Johnston and Brother Robert Campbell to Hannibal, Lagrange College; Sister Lena Fusselman, to New Salem, Illinois, where she is teaching; Sister Gretta Bower and son, Junior, to New Salem, to keep house for her sisters, Miss Minnie Hunter who teaches at Toll Gate, and Miss Lena Hunter who teaches at Gray.

The Saints are making progress spiritually and are trying to respond to the financial call of the church. They look forward to the conference at Taylorville, hoping to receive much spiritual benefit and instruction.

New York District Enjoys Unity of Purpose

Ministry Give Services in Many Groups —Young People's Convention Climaxes Season's Work

The province of God to the elders of the church, contained in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8, has been demonstrated and enjoyed in New York District in recent months.

Early in the spring the district presidency met together to plan special days and dates for institute and missionary work throughout the district. In some of the places the district missionary paved the way for a real revival, holding special services before the date and remaining a week or ten days afterwards with lasting results. In some places the ordinance of baptism was enjoyed.

At Greenwood several visitors from Buffalo and Niagara Falls enjoyed the Saturday and Sunday services with this old-time branch so rich in experiences and missionary efforts of past years.

At Johnson City Elder William I. Fligg found much to do. This city offers splendid opportunities for church work, and the Saints look for a branch to be built there in the future.

Meetings at Fulton were all one could wish. The Spirit of God was richly enjoyed. About sixty-three partook of the good things prepared by the generous-hearted Saints there. Brother Fligg carried on the services for another week, there being considerable interest and enthusiasm. There he baptized two young men.

The meetings at Syracuse and Rochester were means of strength and encouragement to all assembled.

Coming to Niagara Falls, New York, workers had a busy Saturday and Sunday. The adult Bible class supplied the meals on Sunday in the basement of the church and the profits from this were applied to the Christmas offering. Visitors from nearby branches filled church for all services.

The young people's convention at Buffalo, November 18 and 19, was a fitting climax to a splendid summer and fall of work. It began with the serving of a chicken supper Saturday evening by the women's department. The number served exceeded expectations. This was followed by an interesting program in which all groups participated. The most interesting feature was a pageant, "A Boy for Sale." At the prayer service on Sunday morning the young people marched in a group to their seats in the main auditorium the pastor and assistant pastor acting as ushers. Church school followed in which papers were read by Elder Mesle, of Sherrill and Sanford Morden, jr., of Niagara Falls. Elder Fligg's sermon was next in order, his theme being, "Know the Law." The afternoon session convened at two-thirty, and the feature was a contest in which young people from Niagara Falls and Buffalo participated. A series of fifty questions was prepared on church organization and church law. The judges declared the contest a virtual draw.

At 4 p. m. Buffalo Branch Choir and Orchestra presented a musical which was well received. Sister Maureen Weegar is to be commended for this achievement.

Visitors were present from Niagara Falls, Sherill, Syracuse, and other points in the district. The church was fully occupied at each service, extra chairs having to be carried in to accommodate the crowd.

The fall series of meetings at Buffalo Branch has been interesting and well attended, and all indications point to the necessity of enlarging the church building at an early date.

Elder Weegar as district and branch president has worked hard to build the interest that is now manifested.

In all special days unity of purpose has been well carried out. The gift of music and song, the fine prayers on topics of vital importance, the forceful missionary sermons—all confirm the thought, "The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost." Workers of this district face the future with confidence.

Otter Lake, Michigan

Hold Local Elections

The branch at Otter Lake held its semiannual business meeting December 4, William McTaggart presiding. The presidency changed from Brother A. J. Jones to Brother F. L. Jones, but the remaining corps of officers will serve another year.

The church school held its meeting also. The church school director remains the same, Brother Lornie Jones. Sister Jane Thompson fills the position of the resigned secretary. Brother Harold Jones remains as treasurer. Recreational leader is Harold Jones, assistant, Lornie Jones.

The women's club elected as their leader Sister Grace Baltzer; secretary, Sister Farren, and treasurer, Sister

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Lydia Wolfe. The church school director commented on the work of the women.

The branch will have a Christmas program December 24, for the benefit of the members. This will be a splendid opportunity for the development of talent in the group.

Independence

A large crowd is expected to listen to the oratorio, Handel's "Messiah," next Sunday from five-forty-five to seven o'clock at the Stone Church. The performance, given by the Messiah Choir of almost two hundred voices, will be broadcast over KMBC, and special effort is being made to perfect this musical Christmas gift for the community and radio audience. This will be the sixteenth annual performance of the oratorio by the Messiah Choir.

The women's department entertained the pastors, bishop's agents, and supervisors of Independence and their wives and women's leaders and their husbands with a dinner Friday evening in the lunch room at the Auditorium. An informal discussion of local problems was enjoyed, and plans were formulated for the opening of a new year of labor.

Stone Church

Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be the Stone Church speaker at the two weeks of missionary sermons beginning the first night of the New Year.

Sunday was Boy Scout Day at the Stone Church, morning and evening services honoring the boys and their work. At the eleven o'clock hour Mr. George Charno, scout officer of Kansas City, Missouri, spoke on the responsibility of adults in teaching boys and girls to live happily and profitably. Men prominent in scout activities in Independence were in charge of the service, Elder D. S. McNamara, Elder S. A. Thiel, Pastor John F. Sheehy, Elder H. W. Harder, and Henry Stahl. Mr. Byron Hunt, another Kansas City officer, spoke briefly on the purpose of scouting.

Music for the service was beautifully rendered by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. Brother Craig was assisted by Robert Miller, organist, and Mrs. Nina Smith, soloist.

In the evening a Court of Honor was held for Boy Scout Troop 223 of this congregation in which honors and ranks were awarded the boys in recognition of their recent achievements. Thirteen tenderfoot scouts were welcomed into the ranks of this troop whose scoutmaster is Francis Holm, and mention was made of four boys who hold the highest honor in scouting, the Eagle medal. These boys are G. L. Harrington, Thomas Cairns, Billy Harder and Paul Tandy. Billy Harder was given a certificate for junior leader. Elder John Blackmore, troop committeeman, was the principal speaker of the evening.

During the holidays the Stone Church will have its quota of Christmas parties, reunions and club meetings. The needy will be remembered with baskets of food and clothing. Under the leadership of priesthood officers and women's department everyone will spread Christmas cheer, and the spirit of giving will prevail. A special Christmas sacrifice offering will be taken up at the morning Christmas Day service at the church. Envelopes for this offering were placed in the hands of all who attended church Sunday.

Two Thanksgiving weddings of this congregation should be given mention in the Herald. Miss Mignon Franklin, daughter of Mrs. Pearl S. Franklin, became the bride of Russell E. Resch, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Resch, at a pretty marriage ceremony at her mother's home, Pastor John F. Sheehy officiating.

Miss Margaret Vivian Lewis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lewis, of Bates City, Missouri, and Myron H. Johnson, son of Mrs. Anna Johnson, were married at the home of the bridegroom's mother by the Reverend George Pruitt, of the Baptist Church, Kansas City, on Thanksgiving afternoon. They were attended by Miss Marie Johnson, sister of the bridegroom and Howard Lewis, brother of the bride.

Second Church

John H. Miller was the Sunday morning speaker and his theme was "Peace." The choir sang two special numbers.

Roy Settles was the speaker downstairs at the junior service, and for a text he chose John 3: 16. Mrs. R. L. Fulk told a Christmas story. Nadine Inman sang, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," accompanied by Geraldine Fields.

A meeting of all group officers was held in the basement of the church at two-thirty in the afternoon.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood preached in the evening on "How Have We Used the Opportunity Afforded Us?" and the ladies' trio gave a special number. Pastor Will Inman was in charge.

December 31, will begin a two-week series of missionary services. Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be the speaker.

Liberty Street Church

Much preparation has been made for the presentation of Christmas programs this year. The older young people, under the direction of Sister Gertrude Davis, will present a four-act play, "Christie," next Saturday night. The church choir, directed by Fred Friend, will render its "Adoration Cantata" Christmas Eve.

As a result of the recent law observance period, this branch has been able to take care of most of its outstanding obligations. The members have cooperated in a helpful way in clearing up debts, and real sacrifice has been evidenced.

From the early morning prayer meeting Sunday through to the evening sermon by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, a holy and reverential spirit prevailed. The morning service, Elder H. A. Koehler, speaker, enjoyed its share of fellowship as did the priesthood and women's leader's meetings in the afternoon. The religio added its bit to the enjoyment of the large number of those present with its half-hour of Christmas carols sung by a double-mixed quartet, a piano solo by Joseph Frick, and a story read by Lucien Amos.

Walnut Park Church

Walnut Park congregation was saddened Sunday morning by the news that Brother Burton Barwise had been struck by an automobile Saturday night, and was killed instantly. Brother Barwise was forty-five years old and had been a member of the church for seventeen years. He is survived by his wife, Sister Edith Barwise, and seven children. Funeral services will be held at three o'clock this afternoon from the church with Pastor Frank McDonald in charge and Bishop C. J. Hunt preaching the sermon.

Two children were baptized Sunday morning and were confirmed during the eleven o'clock preaching service. They were Charles Warren Horn, son of Brother and Sister Fred Horn, and Robert Samuel Bateman, son of Brother and Sister Carl Bateman. Pastor McDonald officiated at both baptisms and confirmed Charles Horn; Elder Royden Barnhardt confirmed Robert Bateman.

Four hundred and eleven were present at the church school session and there was also a good attendance at the religio Sunday evening. Elder M. T. Williams spoke at the eleven o'clock service and Apostle F. Henry Edwards at seven-thirty o'clock in the evening.

A pleasant social event was held by the Galilean Class in the basement of the church Tuesday evening, December 12. Games were played and refreshments served. About twenty were present.

Enoch Hill Church

The women's department met on Thursday, December 7, and again on the fourteenth. Time was spent quilting and in study.

The young people's department gave a benefit supper in the basement of the church last Friday night. Proceeds will go toward financing the Christmas play.

Brother E. H. McKean's church school class gave the program at the church school hour Sunday morning. "Love," was the theme and numbers given were inspirational.

Elder Petre was the speaker the morning of December 10, and the choir sang, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is." Miss Marjory Thomas sang "Like as a Hart Desireth." Elder W. J. Brewer was the evening speaker.

Elder W. T. Shakespeare was the morning speaker December 17, and the choir sang "My Recompense," C. S. Warren and Dick Bullard sang "Jesus, I Love

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Thee." Elder H. E. Winegar, the evening speaker, used as his theme, "The Church of Jesus Christ." Mrs. Ruth Hayes sang "Just for Today."

Many are enjoying the class on financial law which is being conducted each Sunday evening. Bishop R. T. Cooper is the teacher.

The Saints on Enoch Hill sympathize with Sister Willis Young in the passing in death of her father, Brother George Bush.

Spring Branch Church

A. J. Tankard, the morning speaker, Sunday, spoke on the kingdom of heaven and used as his text Matthew 13: 44. A violin solo was played by Miss Eloise Higgins, of the Stone Church congregation.

The evening church school service is growing. For a number of weeks the church has been nearly full at this hour. Brother Fish's class gave the program Sunday night.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the evening speaker, and chose for the basis of his discourse a part of the second chapter of Luke. An anthem by the choir added to the attractiveness of the service.

Local priesthood members preside over the midweek and the early Sunday morning prayer services to good effect. These meetings do much to help and encourage the members.

Hammond, Indiana Branch

Local Endeavor Marked by Enthusiasm

Hammond Branch is fortunate in having a number of Saints from Independence secure employment nearby, enlarging our branch membership. About fifteen men have moved here and some of them have their families with them, while some of the families will not come until spring.

The Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother Clair Ellis, has a splendid enrollment and good average attendance. The religio, under the supervision of Brother Harold Willoughby, is meeting on Sunday evenings, prior to the preaching service, and interest and attendance are steadily increasing. This will become a particularly valuable part of our church work, thanks to the untiring efforts of Brother Willoughby, who has recently had the department in charge. The musical department, under the leadership of Brother D. H. Smith, is doing very good work and quite an interest is felt in the rehearsals which are conducted by a very capable musical director from Chicago.

A number of local young people attended the district young people's convention at Lansing, Michigan, November 18 and 19, and their report that they enjoyed a successful convention marked by a great degree of the Spirit of God, is testified to in their increased interest and activity in the prayer services of the branch. D. H. Smith was ordained to the office of elder at the convention and the Saints wish for him the blessings of heaven in his office and calling.

The entire work of the branch is showing a marked degree of enthusiasm and they are expecting a large and full experience in the activities of the winter at Hammond.

All visiting Saints passing through Hammond, or living in the vicinity of Hammond in the Calumet region, just outside of Chicago, should get in touch with the local pastor, Elder R. W. Smith, 733 Eaton Street, Hammond, Indiana.

New Church Home for Farnworth Branch, England

Historic Branch Takes Step Forward

The old grammar school, Farnworth, was the center of interest to Farnworth Branch, November 11, Saturday, 1933. After over forty-five years of worshiping under difficulties in a little meeting room in Ellesmere Street, the Saints were able to realize their ambition in the opening and consecrating of a church building of their own.

A large number of members gathered from all parts of the British Isles Mission, including Apostle John W. Rushton who accepted the invitation of the pastor and members at Farnworth to officiate in this important ceremony; the patriarch of the mission; members of Midland and Northern district presidencies and ministers from neighboring branches.

The gospel was first brought to Farnworth nearly sixty years ago, and since its inauguration, the branch has progressed through the perseverance and faithfulness of its members. Although only a small band of people, their fortitude and resourcefulness have been remarkable.

After the singing of the first and last verses of "Praise Ye the Lord," and appropriate remarks, Brother Rushton offered the consecration prayer, invoking God's blessing on the building and worshipers. He inserted the key in the lock and then invited the various officials present to precede him into the building. High Priest G. W. Leggott represented Northern district presidency; Elder S. H. Hope, pastor of the branch; Patriarch William H. Greenwood, and Brother Rushton representing the general church. Then the laity followed.

A short service in the church consisted of speeches from ministers who had helped to spread the gospel in Farnworth in pioneer days. A pretty interlude came in the form of the presentation of a pink carnation to Brother Rushton by Lena Hope, the pastor's young daughter.

After tea, one hundred and seventy-five guests were entertained with vocal and musical items.

The services on Sunday attracted large congregations. Brother Rushton preached morning and evening. The afternoon fellowship meeting offered the people opportunity to express their gratitude to God in the acquiring of their new church.

The acquisition of this new meeting place is a step forward, and has required great effort and courage on the part of Farnworth members. They wish to push on in gospel endeavor.

Conference of Northern District, British Isles

Apostle John W. Rushton Attends Reunion and Farewell Gathering

The October conference of Northern District, British Isles, was a reunion in form and program, but it also partook of a farewell character. This was the last time that Apostle John W. Rushton met with a general gathering of English Saints before sailing for the United States.

On Saturday, October 28, a tea party and concert were enjoyed, and a large number from various branches in the district were present. Tea was served by members of North East Manchester Branch in whose building the reunion was held, and then the concert, under the chairmanship of Elder J. R. Baty, of the district presidency, was a huge success. Program numbers were contributed by members from all parts of the district.

During an interval in the concert one or two speeches were made by the presidency, and the district secretary read a request from the district membership for the return of Apostle J. W. Rushton and his wife to the British Isles for another term. Then the district president presented a little gift to Brother Rushton in behalf of the officers and members of the district. After Brother Rushton's response, Elder Thomas Taylor, of Leeds, who has been opening up the work in Belfast, Ireland, presented to the Saints Brother Murray, of Belfast, the first convert from that field, baptized by Brother Taylor.

The services on Sunday were very well attended and members came in parties from outside branches to listen to the speaker of the day, Apostle J. W. Rushton. The morning service at ten-thirty was in charge of High Priest G. W. Leggott, assisted by others of the district presidency. Soloists were Sister May Holden who sang, "Doing His Will," and Sister Eva Chorlton, who sang, "Hold Thou My Hand."

In the afternoon Elder J. W. Green and Patriarch W. H. Greenwood were in charge of a fellowship service. Sister Ruth Schofield gave two sacred recitals, "Lockout Time," and "If."

The evening service was splendidly attended and Brother Rushton preached to an attentive congregation. His discourse outlined the position of the church, and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

his text was, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" This was most appropriate for all the visitors present.

Preceding the sermon Brother Murray, the first convert from Belfast, was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood by Apostle J. W. Rushton and High Priest Thomas Taylor, of Leeds. At the beginning and close of the evening service anthems were sung by members of the Preston family from Stockport.

Kansas City Stake

Officers have written notes of appreciation to the members of the stake for their part in the "Keep the Law" campaign. The wall building demonstration, described in last week's Herald, went far beyond their expectations. More than eight hundred envelopes containing inventories, pledges, and offerings were received. This shows what can be accomplished through united effort.

Grandview Church

The Spirit of God is working to great ends in Grandview. Four young men were called to the priesthood a short time ago, and the ordination service was held the last Sunday in November. The service was carefully planned by Pastor C. George Mesley, who gave the charge to the men to be ordained.

Patriarch U. W. Greene and Elder Daniel Tucker ordained Brother David S. White to the office of elder, and Brother Lester A. Fowler to the office of priest. The ordinations for J. H. Coakley, deacon, and John Crimmins to the office of teacher, were cared for by Elders George Mesley and C. D. Jellings. This service was a prelude to the preaching hour, at which time Brother Greene delivered one of his powerful sermons.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards held a week's series of services, December 3 to 10. The services were conducted as if in a home and the congregation seated about as one large family. A period of singing was followed by silent prayer and meditation. Round table discussion took place between the members and Brother Edwards.

Beginning with the story of the organization of the church, he discussed "Faith," "Why Belong to a Church," "Divine Authority," "Celestial Glory," and "Zion." The meetings were well attended each night, and those present felt greatly benefited by the experience.

Three things must a man possess if his soul would live
And know life's perfect good—
Three things would the all-supplying Father give—Bread, Beauty, and Brotherhood.

—Edwin Markham.

Missionary Meetings in Southern Nebraska

Work of the Master Moves On

The Saints of Southern Nebraska District are alive in the latter-day work. Apostle Roy S. Budd has been visiting the branches in this district, and the Saints have been blessed by his wonderful counsel. Everywhere he has been he has impressed the workers with his sincerity, and they hope he will return.

I have been blessed in my work of telling the beautiful gospel of Christ, and his Spirit has been with me. I closed a two-week series of meetings at Eustis, Nebraska, November 19, and on the twelfth I led Alvin Hathaway into the waters of regeneration, baptizing him into the church of God. This makes nine that I have baptized at Eustis. Eight entered the church some three months ago. In all, I have baptized one thousand and fifteen candidates.

The Eustis meetings were closed with an all-day service, a fine spiritual day. Apostle R. S. Budd and District President O. L. D'Arcy were there. Two brothers were called to the priesthood, Brother John Easterday to the office of priest, and Brother Ernest Keller to that of teacher.

This day was greatly enjoyed by everyone. Brother D'Arcy gave the closing sermon to a full house and was accorded fine attention.

So the good work of the Master is moving on. We have a consecrated group not only at Eustis but all over this district, and I pray that God will bless his people here and elsewhere, and help them to obey his law.

W. A. SMITH.

Make the Best of Life

What's the use of always fretting
Over ills that can't be cured?
What's the use of finding fault with
What we know must be endured?

Does it make our burden lighter
If we grumble 'neath the load?
Does it make life's pathway smoother
If we fret about the road?

Better use our time than fill it
Full of sighs and vain regrets
Over some imagined blunder
As does he who always frets.

We cannot expect life's pathway
To be always strewn with flowers
Nor the time that God has given
To all be made of happy hours.

Storms will follow every sunshine
Griefs be mixed with every joy,
And 'tis best that it should be so—
Gold's too soft without alloy.

Half our trouble's our invention
We're to blame for half our strife;
Then if life is what we make it,
What not make the best of life?

—Author Unknown.

The Book of Mormon as a Supplement to the Bible

By Hazel L. Minkler

ACCEPTANCE of the Book of Mormon as an inspired record must be confirmed to those who recognize the possibility of revelation from God, other than that which is contained in the Bible.

POSSIBILITY OF MORE THAN ONE INSPIRED RECORD

The Ensign sometime ago contained an article entitled, "What I Believe About the Book of Mormon." In the first of these numbers, the writer shows that the "stick of Judah" and the "stick of Joseph," spoken of in Ezekiel 37: 15-22, are, respectively, the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

But the point which we wish to emphasize in connection with this Scripture is that irrespective of the identity of the "stick of Joseph," the fact that it was to come forth, reveals the possibility and desirability of revelations from God, other than those which had previously been received.

One inspired record was already in existence. Another was to be brought forth and these, joined together, were to become one in the hand of the Lord, the one confirming the testimony of the other, and incidentally showing that new revelations from God must invariably harmonize in their principles with those already in existence.

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH FURTHER REVELATIONS MAY BE RECEIVED

The Book of Mormon tells us that when its contents shall be presented to the Gentiles as the history of God's dealings with the ancient inhabitants of the American continent, many of them will declare that they have a Bible, and need no other inspired record (2 Nephi 12: 45). It may be said of such that if they truly believed in the record they already possess, they would gladly welcome that which purports to be further revelation from God, and would make a careful and prayerful examination of its contents the basis of their judgment of the book, rather than the biased opinions of those who fail to heed the admonition of Saint Paul to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

To all who read its contents with sincerity of heart, the Book of Mormon promises not only a knowledge of their truthfulness by means of the Holy Spirit, but of greater things than are contained therein (Moroni 10: 4, 5; Mormon 4: 14).

The Lord, speaking through Isaiah, makes known his unchangeability, and the fact that his power to work among the children of men is limited only by their faith. (Isaiah 29: 25, Inspired Version.) Thus God, being unchangeable, and his dealings with the children of men being contingent upon their faith, it is evident that he is accessible to men of every race and clime, who come to him in faith, believing. That the Hebrew race was not to have a permanent monopoly on sacred literature is shown by the word of the Lord as found in the Book of Mormon, in which he declares that not only the Jews and the Nephites, (one branch of the descendants of Joseph in ancient America) but eventually all nations should have his word.

LOST KNOWLEDGE OF THE PLAN OF SALVATION TO BE RESTORED ONLY BY NEW REVELATION FROM GOD

It is well known that, succeeding the Protestant Reformation, there was, for many years, much contention over points of Christ's doctrine. Failing in its original aim of correcting the evils which had found their way into the Roman Catholic Church, the ultimate end of the Reformation movement was to prepare the way for freedom of thought, by releasing the people from the bondage of Papal Rome. But, lacking divine authority to restore the ancient order of things, this new freedom necessarily resulted in a multiplicity of churches, each with its own creed and system of theology. It was inevitable that perverted forms of Christ's doctrine which had their origin in the mother church should survive the Reformation, to be promulgated by her daughters. The following incident shows how Luther and Zwingli differed in their ideas respecting the Eucharist:

"Zwingli differed radically from Luther on the doctrine of the Lord's supper. The German reformer held to transubstantiation, while Zwingli (the leader of the Reformation in Switzerland) regarded the bread and the wine as only symbols of the body and blood of Christ. The reformers met in open defiance. A discussion was arranged, and they met in the Castle of Marburg, where each defended his views. No compromise was reached. Luther, with a piece of chalk in his hand, wrote in great characters on the table, "Hoc est corpus Meum," (this is my body) and with appeal to Christ's own words by which to defend his belief in consubstantiation, the discussion closed.

"Henceforward," says the recorder of this incident, "there was no agreement between German and Swiss theology on the Lord's supper. Luther and Zwingli returned to their fields of labor, each as firmly intent upon the one work of reformation, as if he did not differ from his brother on nonessentials in theological interpretation."

That there can be nonessentials in doctrinal interpretations cannot be conceded by those who sense the import of Christ's teachings. But that it was not the work of the reformers to bring forth the truth concerning the doctrine of Christ must be conceded by all who understand the true purpose of the reformation movement. Only a prophet, clothed with authority from heaven, could restore the knowledge of the ways of God to man. In recognition of this need, Charles Wesley wrote:

"Previous to that dreadful day
Which shall thy foes consume,
Jesus, to prepare thy way,
Let the last prophet come."

It is said that the Pilgrim fathers, as they embarked, were admonished by their aged pastor, John Robinson, "to hold themselves ready in the new world to receive the continued revelations of God, as they might in the future be made known."

Result of the Union of the Two "Sticks"

That the "stick of Joseph," or the Book of Mormon, was to be an agent in restoring the knowledge of the original plan of salvation is shown (1) by the fact that it was brought forth by the same prophet as he who was instrumental in restoring the Gospel, with all its gifts and blessings. (2) One of its avowed purposes is the confounding of false doctrines, and the laying down of contentions. (2 Nephi 2: 19-21.) This purpose it accomplishes, when read in connection with the Bible, by coinciding with the latter in its spiritual and moral teachings, and throwing additional light on many points of doctrine which, in the Bible, are not made sufficiently plain to dispel doubts and uncertainty as to their exact meaning.

Nowhere is the doctrine of the atonement so fully explained as in the Book of Mormon. (See Nephi 6: 10-54). The second part of the article to which we have referred tells of the visitation of Christ to ancient America, after his ascension from Palestine. (Read Nephi 5: 1-11). Here he set up his church after the manner of its organization in Palestine, and instructed the people in regard to the correct mode of administering the ordinances of the Gospel. The teaching of Christ as set forth in Nephi 5: 25, 26, considered in connection with the implications of other Scriptures, such as Matthew 3: 44, 45; Romans 6: 4, 5, and Colossians 2: 12, and the testimony of the church fathers, church historians, and commentators, should leave no doubt as to the precise manner in which the ordinance of baptism is to be administered. The manner of administering sacrament is explained in Moroni, chapters 4 and 5.

In regard to the baptism of infants, an appeal to the authority of the Bible, alone, leaves room for doubt and uncertainty, as nowhere in its pages is such an ordinance commanded or forbidden. It is stated in Matthew 19: 15, that Jesus laid his hands on little children, by way of blessing. But a Book of Mormon writer, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, explicitly states that "He that supposeth that little children need baptism, is in the gall of bitterness, and the bonds of iniquity... should he be cut off while in the thought, he must go down to hell."

It may seem that too drastic a penalty is here prescribed for belief in infant baptism. But we may reasonably conclude that it is not the result of belief in the practice, for its own sake, but of the spiritual condition of which it is indicative. Adherents of the belief are evidently ignorant of the fact that the principle of repentance must precede the ordinance of baptism for the remission of sins, and infants have no need of repentance, nor of the remission of sins. Without a knowledge of the significance and proper application of these principles one cannot be saved from his sins. The reader should understand that infant baptism is one of those doctrines which survived the Reformation, and belongs in the same category of false doctrines as those of transubstantiation, the worship of the Virgin Mary, the confessional, and other doctrines originating during the days of the apostasy.

The Book of Mormon not only clarifies obscure passages in the Bible, and enlarges upon themes not adequately treated therein, but its writers truly anticipated many of the pernicious beliefs of modern times. Of the influence of Satan over a certain class of people (constantly increasing in numbers) it says: ". . . And behold others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them, I am no devil, for there is none." (2 Nephi 12: 27.)

In a dissertation on the law of opposites, one Book of Mormon writer shows that if there is no devil, man, himself, is a mere illusion. This writer says: "And if ye shall say that there is no sin, ye shall also say there is no righteousness. And if there be no righteousness, there is no happiness. And if there is no righteousness, nor happiness, there is no punishment nor misery. And if these things are not, there is no God. And if there is no God, we are not, neither the earth, for there could have been no creation of things, either to act or to be acted upon; wherefore all things must have vanished away."

In the light of the above reasoning, it is not strange that these (Continued on next page)

believers in the nonexistence of Satan should also deny the personality of God, and the reality of matter.

It is obvious that, when confronted with evil, believers in its unreality will fail to recognize it as such, and thus fall a ready prey to the wiles of the evil one.

It has ever been the main part of the program of Satan to destroy the agency of man, and in no more effective way can he do this than by beguiling him into a belief that the principle of evil does not exist, with all which this implies.

"He leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords forever," is the apt illustration which the Book of Mormon uses to portray the illusory nature of sinful pleasures, and the iron grip of sinful habits into which their victims must eventually find themselves.

The most significant message of the Book of Mormon to both the ancient and modern inhabitants of America is that which was given by the Lord through the brother of Jared, the leader of the first colony to reach the shores of our land. After declaring that this is a land of promise, choice above all others, and that whoever inhabits it must serve God, or be destroyed when the fullness of the wrath of God shall come upon them, the message addresses itself to the people of our time in the following language:

"And this cometh unto you, Oh ye Gentiles, that you may know the decrees of God, that you may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness comes, that you may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you, as the inhabitants of the land hitherto have done."

Two great peoples, with their civilizations, have been destroyed upon the American continent. Shall we, also reap destruction, or shall we heed the warning which comes to us through the brother of Jared, and thus maintain our existence as a nation and people.

Much more might be said of the Book of Mormon as a supplement to the Bible, but we believe that we have presented sufficient evidence of its nature as such. All are invited to make a careful investigation of the claims made for this book, and thus receive for themselves the testimony of their truthfulness.

THE BULLETIN BOARD

December 9, 1900, by Elder J. L. Mortimer. He is survived by his wife, six sons, and three daughters: Neta (Mrs. Gerald Parfitt) and Irene, of Toronto; Eunice, of Detroit, Michigan; Oswald and George, of Toronto; Alvin, of Clavering; Evan, Jack, and Harry, at home. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder D. B. Perkins, of Wiarton, assisted by Elder Benson Belrose, of Owen Sound. Elder Perkins spoke from the text: "Behold, I have set before you an open door which no man can shut." The six sons of the deceased were pallbearers, and interment was in Bayview Cemetery, Wiarton, Canada.

ROBBINS.—Ellen C. Robbins, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth Matthews, was born at Stonington, Maine, December 20, 1870. Departed this life December 1, 1933, after a long illness at her home in Stonington. Married Timothy Robbins. She was baptized into the church, October 6, 1910. She was a member of the Rebecca Lodge and was a faithful member of the church. She was one who loved her neighbor as herself, trying to help the sick and suffering. Sister Robbins will be greatly missed by the people of her town. She leaves to mourn, her husband, three sons, three daughters, all of whom belong to the church; a number of grandchildren; three brothers, three sisters, and a large circle of friends. The funeral was held December 4, 1933, at the Saints' church. Sermon by Elder Henry R. Eaton, pastor of the church.

WILLOUGHBY.—Hattie Maria Smith was born August 10, 1868, at Deloit, Iowa. Was baptized into the church March 23, 1884, by Elder George Hyde and confirmed by Elder Levi Gamet. She was married to Leonard S. Willoughby, June 19, 1887, and to this union were born seven sons and six daughters. One son preceded his mother to the great beyond. She died November 15, 1933, at Independence, Missouri, of heart failure. Left to mourn are, her husband, Leonard S. Willoughby; six sons, James W., Roy L., Ammon H., Venis J., all of Independence; Smith S., of San Francisco, California, and Harold M., of Hammond, Indiana; six daughters, Mrs. Ralph J. Zion; Mrs. Ray J. Slover and Mrs. John M. Zion, of Independence; Mrs. Charles A. Zion, of Vernon, Colorado, Mrs. Ira L'Hommedieu, of Amarillo, Texas, and Mrs. Leon Mayhew, of Westby, Montana; three sisters, Mrs. Grace Rogers, Vernon Colorado; Mrs. Carrie Kester, Independence, and Mrs. Pearl Redding, Ewing, Wyoming, and three brothers, Arthur Smith, Ernest Smith, and William Smith, all of Clearwater, Nebraska.

ANDREWS.—Martha A. McLaughlin was born in Canton, Maine, September 28, 1858, and departed this life May 5, 1933. She was the daughter of James M. and Sarah A. McLaughlin. She was united in marriage with Winthrop M. Andrews, February 14, 1877. She is survived by her husband and two children, six grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren. She became a member of the church, September 27, 1891, being baptized by Elder U. W. Greene. Funeral services were conducted at her home, Elder William C. Porter, officiating. Interment was in Dunn District Cemetery.

BAUGHMAN.—Alta Fern, youngest daughter of Fred and Pauline Methner, was born October 18, 1907, near Coleman, Michigan, where she spent a happy childhood, graduating from high school in the class of 1926, then graduating from the Anthony Wayne Business College at Fort Wayne, Indiana. She was married to Delos Baughman, of Clare, Michigan, in 1930, by Hubert Case, and spent three happy years with her young companion. She passed from this life November 22, 1933, at the home of her widowed mother, at the birth of her little son who was buried in her arms. He lived only one hour. She was a real Saint all her life. Was baptized into the L. D. S. Church in 1922, a devout member who lived to do her share at all times. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, mother, three sisters and twelve brothers, and many other relatives and friends, who filled the Coleman Church to listen to the funeral sermon by Hubert Case. The day was stormy and cold, but the house was packed to the limit of its capacity. Her beautiful life was admired by all who knew her.

PATE.—Lewis W. was born October 16, 1857, at Warsaw, Missouri. Died at Neosho, Missouri, November 6, 1933. Was married to Sarah Reeser who survives his demise. She was his life companion for over a half century. Their home was a happy one. He always provided well and loved his church and his home. Was baptized February 19, 1899, at Piedmont, Oklahoma, by R. M. Maloney, and confirmed by C. R. Duncan and W. S. Macrae. He leaves to mourn his departure, his wife and daughter, Dorothy; two sisters, two brothers, many relatives and friends. In 1900, he with Hubert Case went to western Oklahoma and filed on homesteads, where they lived five years, proving up the claims and where they builded a branch of the church. He lived a number of years at Cheyenne running a hardware and was mayor of that city. He was generous, kind to old people having taken care of his mother for many years, also his wife's father and mother, Brother and Sister Reeser. All children loved him. Funeral services were conducted from his home in Neosho November 9; prayer by R. E. Jones, sermon by Hubert Case.

HUTCHINSON.—Laura Ellen Hutchinson, daughter of David and Unice Blastow Hutchinson was born at Deer Isle, Maine, December 3, 1855. She was baptized by George W. Eaton in June, 1866, at Deer Isle, Maine. Passed from this life at the home of her niece, Sister Phylina Sturdee, at Stonington, November 12, 1933, leaving to mourn two sisters and a great many nephews and nieces and many friends. She lived in Boston the most of her life, and traveled into foreign countries. She was always good to the poor and needy and ready to help in time of need. The funeral was held at the home of her niece; sermon by Henry R. Eaton, pastor of Stonington Branch. Interment was in Wood Lawn Cemetery.

LUCAS.—Eleanor Emily Lucas, daughter of Edwin and Angeline Fuller, was born at Richfield, Michigan, November 26, 1852. Died December 6, 1933, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John F. Bliesath, at Waterford, Michigan. When twenty years of age she was married to Corydon S. Lucas, who preceded her in death twenty-nine years. She united with the church in 1881, and was a faithful, loyal member to the end. With the exception of a few years spent in the west she has been a resident of Richfield and Davison. Leaves to mourn, one daughter and a host of friends. The funeral services were held at the home in Waterford, and at the Grove Funeral Home at Davison, Michigan. Sermon by David E. Dowker. Interment in Richfield Union Cemetery.

The Old Year

Every year is a volume in the great Life History each one is writing. It has its opening chapters of hope; its middle sections, sometimes tedious and dull, but nevertheless important; its closing chapters of the realization of labor; and its final summary which takes an inventory of the whole thing.

This issue finds us at the close of the old year, examining the record made. Let us give thanks for the progress made, and determine to make the record of the next year a better one.

The Pigeonhole

Shop Notes

WHEN the Christmas gifts were passed around, the Press Room Proletarian smiled broadly with the rest of us. "Capitalists in general may be a bad outfit," he said, "but our capitalist is a pretty good fellow!"

THE PIGEON cut a "pigeonwing," or something like that.

"I'm going right home," he said, "and give Pigeonette a great big hug!"

"Doesn't she get the Christmas check?" asked Portia.

Pigeon came to an abrupt halt and tipped over on his bill.

"Pigeonette will get half of the check!" he said firmly.

CHORUS of other comments: "I don't think I can work any more today." "Let's go get a malted milk!" "I'm dizzy. I've got to sit down and think about this," "Will somebody pinch me, please? I want to be sure this isn't a dream." "Don't anybody touch me. I'm afraid it is a dream, and I want to enjoy it." "Three cheers for ————" "Shush! He doesn't want to be thanked that way!" "How does he want to be thanked, then?" "Just work hard at your job well next year."

"I wanta holler. MERRY —" "SHUSH! Christmas will be past when this gets to the readers!" "I will holler. HAPPY NEW YEAR!"

AND the Pigeon and all his tribe wish you a Happy New Year.

Complaints Against Members

I've heard of a preacher who had on his desk a special notebook, labeled, "Complaints of members against other members." When one of his people called to tell him the faults of another he would say, "Well, here's my complaint book. I'll write down what you say, and you can sign it. Then when I have to take the matter up officially I shall know what I may expect you to testify to."

The sight of the open book and the ready pen had its effect. "Oh, no, I couldn't sign anything like that!" And no entry was made.

The preacher says he kept the book for forty years, opened it probably a thousand times, and never wrote a line in it.—The Ginger Bean (via Epworth Herald.)

Emotion and Intellect

Mr. Vernon Nash, writing in the Christian Century, draws a distinction between the "emotional voltage" and the "intellectual amperage" of religious people. The characterization is apt. A high voltage current is desirable for display purposes. It makes a spectacular flash, and it is capable of inflicting destruction. The electric work of the world, however, is mostly done by a current in which moderate voltage is combined with generous amperage. Amperage means power. So in the work of a Christian life: while the emotional pressure is necessary, it is incapable of much real work without intellectual power.

"Ring Out the Old—"

New Year's Day New Year's Day is like a mountain top in our experience. We take a last backward glance as we say farewell to the old year before descending into the valley of the new. It is a moment of exaltation. Certain old and disagreeable things we shall be able to leave behind forever. Certain new advantages, never before enjoyed, shall be ours.

Things Left Behind We can drop old weaknesses and sins like outworn garments. We can forget bitterness, and the differences that separated us from neighbors and friends. We can clear our hearts of hatreds and suspicions; we can give up old faults, and abolish the mental hazards that blocked our road to welfare and happiness.

Adventure Ahead It is an exciting adventure ahead of us. We are living in a world where new economic principles are being tested against the problems we are facing. And it looks as if some of the experiments might win. New social ideals, new ideas are in the air. If we can but realize it, a new world is being organized and constructed before our eyes, and we are a part of it. It is a golden opportunity in many ways for men and women who have faith, vision, and the willingness to experiment.

The Church Goes Forward It is a day of new opportunity for the church, too. Men have tested the institutions built by their ancestors, and have found them sadly wanting. They are ready now to listen to the principles of Jesus, and to the social program that the church has to offer. They are thinking, questioning, now as never before. . . . And the church will also have the opportunity in 1934 of righting itself and rebuilding the strength with which to carry out its program.

Faith Necessary We shall need the faith to go forward with our leaders. They shall need the faith which only the confidence in our support can give. Together we must have faith in the overruling hand of Providence, that so long as we all perform well our respective tasks, all shall come out for the best in the end. But a faith is needed which will culminate in good works. Professions of devotion and lip service will not build the Kingdom of God. For, "Faith without works is dead."

L. L.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

IN THE FORE PART of October there came to my desk a letter from Brother Myron A. McConley and remembering that he was writing on the anniversary of the day on which America was discovered by Columbus he wrote:

"Four hundred and forty-one years ago today Christopher Columbus discovered America. It is fortunate for us that it is so. Great advancement has been made in human knowledge since that time. Now, under a machine age, cumbered with scientific knowledge such as no other people have ever developed, there comes to us the call to discover the way to use this knowledge, lest it become a curse and destroy the very civilization which produced it. I sincerely believe that the doctrine of Christian stewardships is the way out. And I wonder how long as a church we will wait until we are able to demonstrate its practical working to the world. I pray the day may be hastened."

IT IS ALWAYS PLEASING to see evidences that our people are thinking more seriously and deeply than ever before of the necessity for a place of refuge in which there will be equality of opportunity in economic and industrial ways and where there will be more even distribution of the good things of the earth. Sometime ago at a conference of the Eastern Colorado District resolutions were adopted which we take pleasure in here quoting and presenting to the readers of the Herald for their enjoyment as well as for their consideration and thought.

"RESOLUTION AND VOTE OF CONFIDENCE.

"To President F. M. Smith:

"In fulfillment of the prophecy of James, that in the last days men would 'heap treasure together' and neglect the cause of the laborers, it has come to pass that great inequalities fill the whole earth. Injustice, sacrifice, and suffering go on apace notwithstanding the heroic efforts of all nations to afford relief. This condition is due mainly, we believe, to the lack of religion and of an adequate economic plan, which plan only regenerated men can carry out.

"Therefore it is resolved by this conference of the Eastern Colorado District, held at Denver, August 25-27, 1933, that we assure you of our support and cooperation in the carrying out of any economic program proposed in the spirit of redemption and in harmony with the teachings and purpose outlined in the three doctrinal books of the church; and we hope such definite economic program may be speedily initiated and receive the endorsement of the General Conference.

"To this work of readjustment and laying hold anew upon the cause of Zion we subscribe with a determination reborn of conviction and strengthened by the cries and afflictions of the unemployed and the poor of these perilous times."

I am very happy indeed to know that the Eastern Colorado District is thinking so seriously of the ideals and goals of the church and are expressing such determined willingness to cooperate in the achievement of our purposes. May the Lord bless them and all others who are thinking about Zion and her redemption.

ANOTHER of the many evidences coming to us that our people are thinking more earnestly and deeply concerning Zion than ever before, is found in a recent letter from Brother E. J. Gleazer. After speaking about his experiences in the great Northwest at some of the district conferences and reunions Brother Gleazer says:

"If God has a people many of them are in this Great Northwest. I am sure that their faith and the sacrifices they made were responsible for the success that attended the efforts of all who participated as leaders and teachers. We sat in heavenly places during the reunion period and we were reluctant to separate and return to the sordid affairs of men. It is to be regretted that our people must go out into this Babylon when Zion could have been established. What I was able to see in this reunion testifies to me that the establishing of Zion is nearer than some think. The members of the church may have less money or property than they had before the depression, but I am sure that the qualities necessary to Zionic relationships have never been so abundant as now. Will we as the leaders to whom the faithful look give them the leadership necessary to bring to pass the gathering and the establishing of right relationships? There is no hope in any other effort now being made. How long shall we hesitate?"

BROTHER RICHARD BALDWIN telling of his activities in the interest of "Keep the Law" period in various parts of Illinois, he says:

"We are enthused with the 'Keep the law' idea. It seems to us to be so much superior to a sacrifice period, and will be more educational and have more lasting effect upon the Saints."

Brother Baldwin as usual is busy and finds plenty of opportunity to exercise his talents.

ONE OF THE BRETHREN who at one time was under regular appointment but was released at the time of the retrenchment operations, recently wrote:

"I have been doing some laboring work for the city. I had several weeks' full time and now am on half time. My wife has worked a few weeks. Our tithing for about twelve weeks amounted to seventeen dollars and fourteen cents, which has been paid. I estimated that if fifty thousand members had been willing and able to pay that amount it would have realized eight hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars during twelve weeks.

"Constant and steady application of the law of tithing would be like the proverbial drops of water that make the mighty ocean, whereas a drive for money is but a brief downpouring, which soaks while it lasts."

The observation of the brother is pertinent and the letter displays a fine spirit. We cannot but wish more of our people were in a similar spirit. We pass this on to our readers feeling sure that most of them will enjoy reading it.

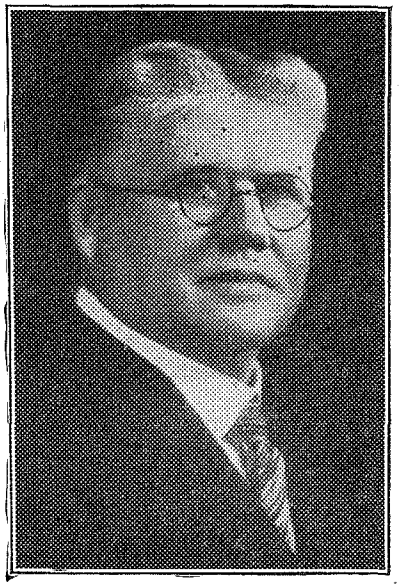
Men You Ought to Know



J. F. CURTIS
Of the Quorum of Twelve

"Defender of the Faith," is a title that should be added to the name of Apostle J. F. Curtis. He specializes in debates, difficult situations, and hard opponents. There is only one military maneuver that he does not comprehend in his gospel warfare, and that is "retreat."

In his many years of service to the church, and particularly since coming to the Quorum of Twelve in 1909, he has preached the gospel with power and has brought many into the church.

The Graceland Radio Broadcast

Miss Mabel Carlile, head of the Department of Music at Graceland College and for the general church, maintains that the cultural value of music is of such importance that it should be included in the schedule of every college student. As an agency for developing character and for increasing an individual's appreciation of spiritual values, music has no superior.

This theme will be discussed by Miss Carlile over KMBC at the regular Graceland broadcast Sunday, December 31, at 6.00 p. m., central standard time. Music for this program will be furnished by a quartet of Lamoni girls who have completed the three-year public school music course under Miss Carlile at Graceland. The announcer will be Colin Ferrett, also an alumnus of the college.

High school students who are hoping to someday attend Graceland, and parents of children interested in attending our church college, will be glad of this opportunity to tune in on this half-hour program centering around the theme, "Music for Every College Student."

The Empty House

A Short Radio Talk

By L. L.

LAST SUMMER we were out driving in the Mission Hills district of Kansas City, admiring the beautiful landscaping and the splendid homes that have been built there. No city in the United States possesses residence districts where the architect and the landscaping engineer have cooperated with finer success to produce artistic homes in a perfect setting. One can drive for hours, seeing something different at every turn, and never anything ugly or inappropriate.

We came to one house that was a little larger than the average, and, it seemed to us, somewhat more distinguished and lovely than the rest. We paused before it in frank admiration. We were afraid that the occupants, if they had seen us staring so, would have been offended at our staring, but we did not feel like going on. Quite obviously, it was a dream home—somebody had thought of it, had planned it for years, had patiently gathered the money to pay for building it, had consulted architects and engineers to make it at once the most beautiful, the most serviceable, the most appropriate to its setting that a home could possibly be. In no small detail could we find anything to criticize. It was perfect.

A good doer is God's gift to an awkward and needy human race.

We looked at it for a time in silent admiration. Then one of us said, "Do you think that we could ever live in a home like that?" And the other replied, "I don't know. Perhaps not. But it would certainly be wonderful."

And then as we reluctantly started the car to go on our way, we noticed a small sign at one side, near some shrubs. It read, "For Sale." It was something of a shock. Whoever had planned and built that home, whoever had dreamed of it and worked for it and paid for it, had also met with reverses in life, and had lost it. It was standing empty—idle. Perfect, but unused. No one enjoying it. No one getting any good out of it. Except for the pleasure that its beauty gave to passing motorists like ourselves, it may as well never have been built.

And as we looked at it, we thought of all the people who could have been living there. People without homes, people living in dingy shacks, in stuffy apartments, in wretched quarters in the slums. People who had never known anything so beautiful as this. Better that the poor and the needy should be permitted to live in it than that it should stand thus idle.

For sale, at a time when nobody could buy. Empty, when so many people needed homes, at a time when several families were in many places being crowded into small apartments and houses. Vacant at a time when mothers and children were being evicted into the streets with unemployed fathers.

BUT there is another aspect than that of social suffering. I am thinking of the vacant lives, the unoccupied talents, the unemployed powers, the idle intellects, and the purposeless abilities that exist in numberless men and women. Some people have spent years in educating themselves, and then do nothing with their training except to enjoy the possession of it. It is obvious how many lives are exactly like that beautiful but empty house. Expensive, luxurious, admirable, but entirely worthless in point of human service. You can easily understand the parallel. However, we don't want to spend all our time on the negative side of the picture.

I know a little woman who has a perfect genius for learning things: not only things to know, but also things to do. And in a world where so very many things urgently need to be done you can understand how important the people are who can learn to do things. A good doer is God's gift to a needy and awkward human race. Well, this little woman is one of God's doers. Besides raising her own healthy and happy family, she has helped many other mothers to raise their families in a healthy and happy condition. She can prescribe a diet for the sick. She knows how to cure the stomach ache, and what to do until the doctor can come. She can advise on the management of a family budget, or tell how to make dresses for families that have four girls and nobody that can sew. She can take time to translate letters from foreign countries, and she visits the homes of foreign families and talks their native language in a way that brings them comfort and cheer. She can tell the children of the neighborhood about the great artists and musicians, and she has stories about the cathedrals in Europe, with a wonderful (Continued on page 1642)

Mobs and the Courts

Another element in the readiness to invoke mob action is to be found in the widespread lack of public confidence in the honesty and efficiency of our judicial processes. Responsible members of the American Bar association have for years been calling on that body for a housecleaning, and it was a meaningful coincidence that the association's present president made exactly that same demand in the week when mob violence surged to its climax. Our most respected judges have long been pleading for reforms in the conduct of the courts. The resort to mob action is always a proof that the community has lost respect for the due process of law. The suspected link between many judges and the corrupt political machines which have elevated them to the bench; the low standards of professional ethics displayed by many lawyers; the use of legal tricks to drag out and thus eventually to defeat the ends of justice—the whole foul process of manipulation that has grown up whereby our "courts of justice" have been so significantly transformed into "courts of law"—all this lies beneath the upsurge of the mob.

Yes, and in addition to all these factors, one other must be recognized. Behind the growth of the mob spirit in America there must be seen the growth of the mob spirit in the whole world. This may be spoken of as one of the legacies of the war; certainly the last fifteen years have seen an increasing tendency on all continents to cast aside the restraints of law and reason and to resort to the appeal to violence. Brutality has thus come to be so common that it is accepted as normal. The ruthlessness by which dictators elsewhere have risen to power bears fruit among us in the ruthlessness by which the mob asserts its momentary supremacy.—Editorial, The Christian Century, December 13, 1933.

Religion and Human Relationships

"All problems of the world today are problems in human relationships. Therefore they are problems of religion.

Something may be done by legislation and education but an ultimate solution is possible only through religion, for religion works in the sphere of human relations as nothing else works.

It is idle to talk of the Kingdom of God, of an ideal social order where the divine will is realized, while an essentially pagan economic system exists. The cry of the masses for bread must not be met by presenting them with a stone of mere ethical truth advising them to keep their minds above the things of this world.

The growing ethical concern for a more democratic distribution of wealth is now supported by an economic discovery that high incomes for a few tend to pile up capital so fast that the masses have not income enough to buy. Hence saving for investment defeats its own ends.—Reverend John McDowell, D. D., Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

Public Service

"After a man has made enough money to gratify every reasonable wish and insure independence not only for himself but for those dependent upon him, there is absolutely nothing for him in merely making money. If he has reached middle age, still has his health and has too much sense to be wholly satisfied with loafing or playing, then there is literally nothing else in life for him save some form of public service or public honor."—Honorable Dwight W. Morrow, former Senator, financier, and Ambassador to Mexico.

A Change of Heart

More than a change of system, we need a change of heart. We need all of us to believe again in "being good." We cannot expect to find honest men to administer our affairs if the majority of us have lost faith in honesty and ceased to practice it. A renewed faith is not a fantastic idea, a change of heart is not impossible. Man's sense of values is always changing. Innumerable times he has placed such things as chivalry, loyalty, chastity, physical courage, religious belief, above money, above life itself. By "man," I do not mean a solitary individual, but great masses of men. The fact that a little band of men in our midst has succeeded, against tremendous difficulties, in laying the rottenness bare, the fact that they cared enough to do so, should make us hopeful and persistent. This is no time for the man in the street to throw up his hands in despair, it is the very moment when he should determine to do his bit to recover the code we have temporarily laid aside. A code of honor is the crystallization of the truths we have slowly learned through long centuries of barbarism and semi-civilization—that to trust each other, be honest with each other, help each other is the only way the human race can truly progress, the only way it can survive. The bedrock of any system must be a bedrock of ethics, of "good old-fashioned morals." —Helen Bryant, "The Flight From Ethics," Magazine Digest.

The Problem of Goodness

One of the best sermons I have ever heard was delivered by a country preacher in a little country church. He said: "People talk to me about the problem of evil, but I will tell you an even greater problem: the problem of goodness. How do you account for the fact that in such a world as this there should be so much self-sacrifice, so much unselfishness, so much love? By what miracle has man, who only a few thousand years ago was living on the level of the beasts, risen to a point where he will literally 'lay down his life' for his family, for a cause, for a friend?"

As the years accumulate do you find yourself more sympathetic and tolerant, with a higher reverence for the nobility of your fellow men? That is the essential test of growth.—Bruce Barton, in American Magazine.

A Book Review

Life Begins at Forty, by Walter B. Pitkin. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York. 1932.

Are you prematurely old? Do you suffer from deflated ego and the feeling that you are a "has been"? Does the army of youth, marching up to the gates of the modern world, make your terrified gray hairs stand on end? Do you suffer from nightmares about losing your job to a younger person?

Do you feel your energy failing? Do you need some comforting reassurance that you are still good for something in the world besides the center of attraction at a funeral? Do you want to expand your interests into the "larger life" now that it is unnecessary for you to work so hard?

If so, this is the book for you. It will make you feel with Browning that "The best is yet to be,

The last of life, for which the first was made,"

is a great opportunity for enjoyment and usefulness. It contains a shrewd observation of life and people, abundant good natured humor, some practical suggestions for a program of living.

It is not the people who make small technical mistakes or even blunders, who are barred from the paths of good society, but those of sham and pretense whose veneered vulgarity at every step tramples the flowers in the gardens of cultivation.—Emily Post.

"Nearer My God to Thee"

By L. B. M.

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me;
Still all my songs shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee."

IN HIS LAST MOMENTS President William McKinley repeated the words of that wonderful hymn as a prayer. And on Sunday after his death, it was sung in hundreds of churches throughout the United States. Then at 3:30 on Thursday, September 19, 1901, the day of the burial at Canton, Ohio, all traffic everywhere was stopped for full five minutes. People stood in cars and bared their heads in the streets. Vast throngs had assembled in Union and Madison Squares, New York, and after a period of reverent silence, the bands played, "Nearer, My God to Thee," and "Lead, Kindly Light." Such a tribute to the spirit of a good man and to the power of a hymn is seldom paid.

As the great ship, Titanic, plunged into the night-blackened waters of the Atlantic Ocean, the orchestra on board was playing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

I am well acquainted with a young woman violinist who closes her practice each evening with a double-note rendition of the beautiful hymn which stirs one's soul. Her benediction-song vibrates with her appreciation of beauty and talent and her sense of the near association of these with Divinity.

Religious bodies of the Christian world, in seasons of intense feeling and stress, turn to this hymn as a means of worshipful and fervent group expression. How often all of us have felt the current of thought underlying these words!

"Though like a wanderer,
Daylight all gone,
Darkness comes over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

"There let my way appear,
Onward to heaven,
All that thou sendest me,
In mercy given.
Angels to beckon me,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee."

Power. Assurance. Comfort. We love to sing it in our services. It is the embodiment of worship.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee," is a hymn universally sung by Christian peoples. Millions enjoy it, but few know how it happened to be written. It was originally printed in William J. Fox's Hymns and Anthems in 1841.

The author was a young woman, Sarah Flower Adams, born at Great Harlow, Essex, England, in 1805. She was the younger of two sisters who were friends of Harriet Martineau and the young poet, Robert Browning. History tells us that Mrs. Adams was both beautiful and talented. She had a rich, contralto voice and was interested in dramatics and poetry. Three years after her marriage to William Bridges Adams, she made her first stage appearance as Lady Macbeth in the Richmond Theatre. But on finding the strain of stage life too great, she devoted herself to writing. She was a woman of great depth of feeling and richness of devotion, and it was one of her hopes to revive poetic drama. Her longest work was "Vivia Perpetua, A Dramatic Poem," which has as its subject the early life of the Christians. Some critics have prescribed it as a "noble lyrical drama."

In Upper Clapton, a suburb of London, Mrs. Adams became associated with the society that met in South Place Chapel, Finsbury. William J. Fox, the minister of this group, assumed an independent position in religious matters, not an unusual thing for those days in England, but was generally regarded as a Unitarian. To the book he edited Sarah Flower Adams contributed thirteen original hymns and some translations.

It is for her hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," that she is best known. Few hymns have such emotional depth and power. Think,

"Then with my waking thoughts,
Bright with thy praise,
Out of my stony griefs,
Bethel I'll raise.
So by my woes to be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, My God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee."

In the almost one hundred years of this hymn's life, writers have tampered freely with it, seeking to make it more "definitely Christian," but they have had little to reward them for their trouble. Several composers set music to the words, but "Bethany," the tune by Lowell Mason, is the best known in America.

In the Valley

HAVE YOU who live on the broad high prairies ever found yourselves in the hills for a vacation period? Have you ever wakened on a moonless night, and wandered outdoors to see only a strip of stars overhead offering you friendliness and linkage between yourself and the world outside? On all sides the hills seem to press in, smothering you in a vast, lonely solitude from which you are helpless to extricate yourself.

That is the way Larry felt during those days immediately following her decision not to see Greg any more. Her world seemed steeped with utter futility and inconsequence. At first her tears were like the rushing of a stream in this valley of her own making, but after a time—no matter how dread the trial or burden, tears are dry.

Perhaps the girl would not have been able to keep her resolution concerning Greg if it had not been for a certain circumstance in which Mrs. Blaine played an important and helpful part by taking herself out of the picture of action for a time.

Not forty-eight hours after Larry's break with Greg, Carmen knew the story. Larry herself sobbed out the happenings on her friend's shoulder. Her heart was almost bursting. Her desire to hear from Greg or to see him was so overwhelming that she was physically ill. To Eldred Hampton she merely said that she and Greg had agreed to quit seeing each other at least for a time. To Doc and the rest she said nothing.

In those days of the valley Carmen and Eldred proved Larry's shield and help. They were the bright and friendly stars in the midst of the dark night. They beckoned and steered her.

When on the Sunday following the house party—Larry had not seen Greg for two days—Mr. Horace Peterson screwed his deeply-seamed face into a smile which looked as if it surely must hurt, gave the girl a keen scrutiny, and said, "My, but you look tired, young lady!" Eldred Hampton had answered for her: "Larry's working too hard."

The cream of tomato soup which the girl was at that moment consuming scorched her throat, but she did not mind. She dared not look her thanks at Mrs. Hampton for fear she would give way completely right at the table. Deep horror clutched her soul at thought of a whole Sunday afternoon and evening without Greg. What could she do? She simply could not endure this loneliness—this awful suspense. Surely he would telephone her, or if he didn't—why couldn't she telephone him? She could, and not only that, she would—! But here pride returned to her. Of course she would not telephone him, no, she couldn't after all she had said the other night. She would not be the one to capitulate.

Then a happy thought seeped into her consciousness—if she stayed for church with Carmen tonight, she would probably see Greg. This buoyed up her spirits, brought back the gleam of happiness to her eyes, the gleam that her friends had missed for many hours. She looked ahead to the evening church hour as if expecting some rich and exalting experience.

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite openly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him because she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Yielding to a temptation with some misgivings, Larry accompanies Greg to a costume ball, wearing a valuable bracelet that is an heirloom belonging to Eldred Hampton. To the discomfiture of being thrown in the company of men she dislikes, Larry is horrified to find she has lost—or been robbed of—the bracelet. Days of remorse follow. The bracelet is not found. Larry struggles with herself, feeling bitter about what she has done, and tries to make some new resolutions. She begins by making some inquiries about study classes in the church school, and undertakes reading and discussion for the serious purpose of acquainting herself with the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, and with what results!

As it was quite natural to expect, Greg did not appear at the W. H. Y. Class session at six o'clock. He would not embarrass her with his presence in so small a group if he thought she did not wish to see him. Brother Carter's usual teaching eloquence was nothing to her tonight. She could not have told what revelation the class was studying. It was as if she were sitting in the midst of a great gray veil. Everything about her was unreal. She was thinking only of Greg—she wondered where he was, what he was doing, if he was suffering as much as she. Even Carmen sitting beside her, seemed unreal.

How was Larry to know as she placed a hot hand against a throbbing temple, that back in the shadow of the door a young man saw that gesture; that the face of this young watcher was set in firm lines; that he looked at her for a long minute as if he were drinking from a well in an oasis preparatory to setting out into the desert, and then strode rapidly out of the church.

And then they were in church. The girls chose a seat under the gallery, secured a hymnbook and began to sing with the congregation—that is, Carmen sang. Larry looked at the faces about her, studying them. Did the owners of these faces have painful problems, too? Were they worried and sick? Were they, too, in the valley?

At last she dared to look up into the gallery where Greg usually sat. Surely he would be there. He could not stay away if he wanted to see her as much as she wanted to see him. There were not many people in the gallery tonight—it would not be hard to pick out that familiar figure. Her eyes roved hungrily over the benches. No, not there, or there—why, where was he? Hadn't he come? Didn't he want to see her? . . .

RETURNING HOME Monday evening, she found Eldred Hampton sewing in her workroom. Soft blue material lay on her cutting table and clustered in her lap.

"Oh, what a lovely color!" Larry forced a cheerful tone. She didn't really care what color that material happened to be, but she must say something. It was expected of her. "A dress for yourself?"

"No, this is Carmen's going away gift to her mother," Mrs. Hampton smiled happily.

"Carmen—going away!"

"No, her mother." Was there satisfaction in Eldred Hampton's tone?

"Why, where's she—"

"Just a little visit to her people in Iowa. She's leaving in a day or two. Carmen has been urging her to go all winter."

"But the girls—are they going to stay alone?"

"Goodness, yes. They've done it before plenty of times. Carmen's a capital mother to her little sister, and I'm hoping to see Sallie Ruth's behavior improve now that her mother is to be away, and she'll be put more on her own womanly responsibility."

"But," Larry felt rather breathless from the surprise, "isn't that a rather unmotherly thing to do?" The parallel was by no means the same, still she could not keep down chilly, unwelcome memories of her own mother's sudden and unexpected departure years before.

"Oh, Carmen lived here three years before her mother came to Independence with Sallie Ruth. And sometimes Sallie Ruth used to visit her. She was a sweet little thing in those days, a little spoiled it's true, but fairly amenable to Carmen's wishes. She was just like a doll when she was eleven and twelve years old, her eyes so blue and her hair curled so prettily. Carmen used to be awfully proud of her—but she hasn't been of late." Eldred continued to lay over and pin some tiny tucks in the garment she was making. The material shimmered under her fingers. "Do you know, Larry," she continued after a moment, "I believe you might be able to lend a hand rather helpfully in this situation. I think—at least we'll soon find out about it—that Carmen can still handle Sallie Ruth, but she may need a little help, help that I might not be able to give since I am an old woman." There was no self-pity in the smile which broke over the speaker's face. "And I happen to know that the child does like and admire you. Her mother told me so."

"Oh," breathed Larry a little fearfully, "I'm afraid—I couldn't do anything to help—"

"Isn't Carmen helping you pretty much right now?" The question was simply worded and gently voiced, but it brought a blush to Larry's face and an uncomfortable feeling about her heart.

"Well," she managed to stammer, "I'll —try. But frankly, Mother Eldred, I don't like the child. There's something so unlovely about her, so antagonistic." She hesitated, "she's too much like her mother."

"But the work of a leader, my dear, is often the making of something unlovely into something lovely. It's not easy. Life does not hand us soft jobs on little silver platters."

THE FAREWELL DINNER for Mrs. Blaine in Eldred Hampton's dining room was an occasion when Mrs. Blaine matched her conversational capabilities —by no means small—against Doc's wit and whimsicalities. As for the rest of the boarders, they had little to say, and much less time than that to say it in. Mrs. Blaine managed to monopolize the conversation, suggesting the topics and their trend.

The dinner was a gracious gesture on the part of Mrs. Hampton and included all the household except the Camerons. Was it just a fancy of her own, Larry wondered, that Mother Eldred was not so friendly with the Cameron family as when they first moved in? Of course she was nice and kind, but there no longer bubbled out of her speech and actions that spontaneity which had been apparent before the night of the party and Doc's strange actions.

Larry sensed that Carmen was going to mean more to her, now that Mrs. Blaine was to be away. There would be more opportunities for exchanges of confidences, for working together, for going places. With their mother gone the Blaine girls planned to eat breakfast and lunch with Mrs. Hampton. Dinner they would have by themselves.

Mrs. Blaine's conversation proceeded like a mountain stream, turning, veering, changeable, swift, never ceasing. Mr. Horace Peterson retired behind his sedate, wrinkled countenance. Mr. Harvey Peterson blew his nose two long blasts, then fell to eating with gusto.

"So you two are going to be the mice," Doc winked slyly at Carmen; "well this is pretty cool weather for mice to get out much. We hope to see you a lot, eh?"

"You aren't calling me a cat, now are you, Joe Dockerly?" cried Mrs. Blaine with the petulance that would have done credit to an eighteen-year-old school girl. Mr. Harvey Peterson half choked over a mouthful of peas, and Mr. Holt chose that exact moment to spear another sweet potato with great deliberation.

"Of course not, my dear Mrs. Blaine," Larry wanted to giggle at the smooth reassurance of his voice: "not a cat, just a mere kitten."

The woman eyed him sharply, then changed the drift of the conversation by observing that this was to be her first experience on the pullman. "We've always been so poor, that I didn't have the heart to spend money we needed so badly, sleeping on a train. Goodness knows, I shall not sleep tonight," she toyed with the food on her plate, "and it's really a great waste of money to go through the motion of trying to, only Carmen insisted—and she generally gets her way."

If they disagreed—and Larry knew that all of them did—on this matter, the boarders did not choose this moment to air their differences.

"I only wish I could take my baby with me," sighed the woman.

"Your baby!" Mr. Harvey Peterson narrowly missed dropping the gravy. "By baby do you mean—"

"She means me," shrilled Sallie Ruth, "and if you can get her to call me something else—you'll be doing a big service to humanity! She embarrasses me frightfully!"

Then she was gone. Doc took Mrs. Blaine and her daughters and her baggage to the station, and, of course, Eldred Hampton went, too. Larry chose to remain at home. She wished to write to Nancy.

HOW UNUTTERABLY LONELY the house was! Evidently the Cameron's were not at home for there was not a sound save that of Aunt Annie clearing away the table and rattling the dishes in the kitchen. She was crooning an old hymn.

To Larry silence had grown to have other qualities than mere stillness. It was heavy, oppressive, sad. Seeking to forget this, she started to her room. But at the foot of the stairs she paused. There was the telephone, and no one was about to know that she had weakened to the extent that she had called Greg. Why not do it? She was tempted. It would take only a minute—and she knew he would come flying over. How wonderful it would be! She put out her hand —but the touch of the instrument was cold, repulsive. Hastily she drew away, and stood contemplating the dark object. Then slowly, as if a great force impelled her to do so, she turned, and went upstairs, her steps echoing hollowly through the hall.

Because it was a little chilly in her room—the March west wind was raw and penetrating—she drew her wrapper over her dress, then sat down at her desk, intent on doing that which had weighed on her mind for several days—write to Nancy.

Quickly she wrote: "Darling Nancy," and then paused. How could she tell her anything about Rowe and the losing of the bracelet at Playland? Nancy would be hurt, would think that Larry thought Rowe had taken it. She was already emotionally overwrought. And anyway, Larry doubted if she could write about anyone or anything now except Greg, and she did not want to worry Nancy with the troubles of other people.

At last she wrote very slowly: "I don't know how to begin to tell you anything about Rowe. I don't know much about him, for I see him so seldom." That sounded so unconcerned, so noncommital, or, if Nancy chose to interpret it that way, she might think something was being hidden. Larry crumpled the sheet in her hand and threw it in the wastebasket.

Another beginning went farther: "Dearest, you ask about Rowe. What do you think I am, a magician to conjure up stories about him? I don't see him much, as I told you when I was in Lamoni, and I don't think you'd be interested in learning what I know of—" That was not true. Nancy was interested in anything about Rowe. She had not heard from him for three weeks.

Laying down the pen Larry gloomily contemplated a volume of Shakespeare's writings and some small books of modern verse on her desk. Was there anyone in the world who had ever had a really happy love affair? Did everyone quarrel and have heartaches and quit? The old maxim: "The course of true love never runs smoothly," flashed into her mind, and she smiled a cynical smile. She thought of Dorothy and Rufus Cameron, how unhappy they were with all their opportunities to be happy; of Nancy and Rowe, their airyness, frivolity and irresponsibility; of Eldred and Doc, the mystery and sadness which surrounded them, and of Greg and herself. She had not seen him for a week, or was it an eternity? His dear face appeared before her mind's eye, his eyes tender, his auburn hair gleaming in the electric light as she had seen it do so often. His lips moved

He Said Unto Them, "Have Ye Received the Holy Ghost Since Ye Believed?"

By Thomas Jones

THERE IS A GREAT DEAL of talk about "religious education" as though it were some modern idea which has recently become the sole possession of a few leading advocates.

At times the subject becomes monotonous. We readily grant that the efforts to educate and stimulate a desire to study throughout the entire church is a worthy one, but like other good designs suffers more from over zealous advocates, than it does from its supposed enemies. There should not exist in any portion of the church a desire to dominate all others with our ideas—my curriculum; as to what constitutes our "religious education."

There are many channels through which religious education comes. One dear old Saint over eighty-five years of age was asked recently: "Grandma have you had a religious education?" Her answer was, "Why, yes, I was taught the gospel, and have many testimonies and experiences that have carried me thus far, and through many trials."

This was from a sister that cannot read or write, but has passed the junior and the higher elementary grades; in fact she is a graduate in faith, loyalty, and devotion, now over seventy years of age. And her face burns with a radiance that is colored by the power of the Holy Spirit, and she still loves to tell the gospel story to any that will listen.

Paul, when passing through Ephesus really had no need to ask, "Have you received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" He knew they had not received it by the gift of discernment. Is not that a part of the system of education?

He was sure that those innocent people had not been baptized by those having authority. There are too many sawdust scientists in every organization who are following the shadows and losing the substance. Paul's education may come under the classification of being academic.

He had been withal spiritually blind. Let us question him regarding his religious education. The answer was, "I saw a light brighter than the sun at noonday." "I heard a voice calling my name twice." We must distinguish between what is often termed religious education and the system that does educate.

Joseph Smith saw a light, and heard many voices that taught him truths applicable to our times, that all the balance of the world were unacquainted with; teachings that have changed the whole religious outlook of christendom.

In Doctrine and Covenants, Section 90, we have the illuminating thought of the eternals. "Intelligence was not created," but disseminated; spirit was not created, yet man is made, and all the other forms of life. "Truth is eternal," not our conceptions of it. Again "the elements are the tabernacle of God." What infinitudes! The ponderous masses in the universe are but the shadows of his greatness in whose cause we are engaged. There must not be any form of education that will divorce us from the great central truths, given in latter days, to make the work unique and distinctive.

We must not do as Elijah did when he went to a lonely cave saddened because his idealism seemed to have failed.

No, we must continue to advocate a restored priesthood, the restored gospel, and an organization that is of divine origin.

Because of our apparent set-backs as a church, we even then cannot afford to incorporate into our blood stream the practices and methods of other religious institutions and foster them instead of the doctrines and practices that have divine approval. The elders always have the right to conduct the services in such a manner as is best adapted to supply the needs of his people. A prophet is not a creature made by human formulas. He receives the message; he it is that makes possible under divine direction the apostle, seventy, high priest, elders, and so on.

The unified program must be in support with the three standard books, "These shall be your teachings as we are led." We cannot wait until we are educated to certain formulas.

We have before us an open field. Many men have many minds. There were in the early days of the church men who were commanded to go out; they went over isles and continents. They felt their inability but they carried in their breasts a burning faith that their mission was God appointed. They believed that no weapon could prosper against the truth. These ministers taught the message of the prophets. We cannot have every unit raised to the same mental or spiritual altitude. Our young people must be taught that education is a many-sided thing.

Why do we almost have to force some people to study? What reason is there to give? Why will others acquire education in spite of all the handicaps in life? Have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed? Some men carry their books, yes the church's standards, into the factory, mine, the mills, and everywhere. Psychology is being taught that it is some magic wand to just wave over the people you would like to obey the gospel, or to give you some fancied will power over those on whom you practice your salesmanship. Those who think that kind of thing helps the church are self-deceived.

The empirical mind of the race challenges such a position visualized, if we may say so, under the guise of religious education in which a teacher tries to develop other teachers with eight, ten, or twelve lessons on "How to teach." I am aware that that was not the mind of the authors of such helps. The formula of those leaders in education is that we first know our materials, our textbooks. We must teach in accord with the genius and spirit of the latter day glory.

Is there a tendency to cram! cram! cram? Suppose we wait and say psychologically assimilate! assimilate! assimilate! Shall we repeat that "religious education" is a many sided question? "Have you received the Holy Ghost?" is a basic question. Do you have faith in the whole teachings of the gospel that it will qualify you to become a child of God?

What we hear at times often disappoints us. Some say, "A few people in the church have disappointed me; I'm going out." Or, "My little boy, Jimmy, died, I have lost faith now." Or, "Brother L—— and Brother M——, and such a lot of men I thought so much of left the church." Another, "Oh, my ——— left and abused the living and the dead after he quit. There must be something wrong when men like that leave us."

How is your religious education my brother and sister? Consciousness is not greater than the Instrument that made it. Effect is not superior, but may be inferior to the cause. The universe is not master of its maker, it is less than He, great as it is to us.

My wife and myself were sitting in a fellowship meeting in Manchester, England, when Brother L—— and others came the first time to England. Brother L—— sang in the morning service, "Dear to the Heart of the Shepherd." He impressed me, but the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me and told me to "look." Brother L—— was the object. The Spirit said of him to me, "He will not stay in this mission. He is a featherbed soldier, and will not endure."

The rest is known to a great many people. I was almost afraid of myself. But I turned to my wife and pointed to the brother and told her what I had received. Another phase of education! My desire in trying to express a few thoughts in this peculiar article is to emphasize that mere theoretical teaching alone is not education, or the kind that the Lord wishes to be the possession of his children. The victorious faith is the great dynamic. Patience is a powerful sedative. Hope is the divine cable that pulls me out of my despair. Impulses to pray: Oh so many times we prayed but there was no prayer like that one; when I was led to pray. So close was I to the Master that I seemed to hear him say, "Whatsoever ye ask." Long ago when in dark despair a whispering Spirit whispers in the ear "press on." Can I prove it by a theory? Can I convey its power to another? Maybe not, "but to me it is life." I see around me a lack of the fuller education for my younger brothers and sisters. Not many years ago we used to take so much care of the baptized convert. We watched them in their progress. We asked, "Have you received the Holy Spirit? Did you get a testimony that there is a loving heavenly Father? Shall we pray together? Yes, today, tomorrow and until the Lord will answer."

God is above my opinions. He is not displeased when we ask him to give us the Spirit of Promise. Every man and woman in the church desires an education of the kind that supports us in every emergency. We hear so many empty sounds—"I'll give my children an education." "They shall not be brought up in ignorance as we were." There are at least two concerned in that proposal. There are those who value an education as a good in itself; and; will get it in spite of every handicap. There are again those whom it is difficult to educate. There remains before us the search. A German professor said, "If God would offer me a choice; knowledge without the search, and through the search, I would choose the searching because the other would rob me of the joy in the finding."

In favor of education? Yes, seek! knock! ask! Find surely, "The pearl of great price."

supply of pictures with which to illustrate all her talks. She is constantly learning and always doing. Her telephone is often busy, with someone asking for much needed help or advice. And, often beyond the limits of her strength, she has always tried to help. Her strength is often not sufficient for the demands that she and others make upon it. But she has learned one thing well, and that is the necessity of serving. Her life is like a great house, crowded full of friends and activities with all the work and play that go to make up a useful career.

IT IS TRUE that more people ought to train and study, it is true that the world suffers too much and always from lack of information—correct information. Our very ignorance makes us the prey of quacks and deceivers in medicine, in hygiene, in food, in pleasure, and in merchandise. If we were better informed, we could not be so easily deceived and misled by the frauds and incompetents in all lines from politics to entertainment.

But there is also a need of activity and work. There are too many people sitting on the sidelines who could actually do better than some who are trying to carry the responsibility. There are people who have been attending Sunday school classes for years who ought to be teaching. There are people continuing to educate themselves for the sheer joy of it long after they should begin to devote a part of their time to helping and educating others.

We cannot live successfully alone, or on a selfish program of existence. The hermit may look picturesque at a distance, and the recluse may present an agreeable mystery. But their lives, when examined closely, are drab, eventless, and without progress or development. We learn, we grow, by contact and experience with others, and the more and better kind of experience we have, the greater our growth. That is why the greatest growth is to be had in service—helping in the neighborhood, and the community. That is why, too, unused talents decay, and undeveloped abilities atrophy and become lost.

There is a great compensation in service. Some time before his death, the Honorable Dwight W. Morrow made this significant pronouncement:

"After a man has made enough money to gratify every reasonable wish and insure independence not only for himself but for those dependent upon him, there is absolutely nothing for him in merely making money. If he has reached middle age, still has his health, and has too much sense to be wholly satisfied with loafing or playing, then there is literally nothing else in life for him save some form of public service or public honor."

The goal of life is not to rest or take one's ease, or to retire and have nothing to do. The real goal of life is to be active, to serve to the end.

THE ROYAL ROAD

as if he would speak to her—but, there, she must stop. Her imagination would get the best of her yet. She shivered.

Up the stairway came the peal of the telephone bell. Hastily she started up, stepped towards the door. Perhaps that was Greg now—perhaps he was calling to—. But no, she must not answer it. If it was he, she would appear too eager, too anxious, if she answered the telephone herself. Aunt Annie would do it.

Breathlessly she leaned against the door, straining her hearing:

"Yes sir, this is Mrs. Hampton's residence. . . . Who? Miss? . . . Oh—"

Larry's hand cuddled the doorknob. Any moment she would hear the familiar call: "Miss Larry, telephone for you."

The conversation continued: "Oh . . . Mrs. Hampton? No, she ain't in. She'll be home about nine o'clock. Yes. . . . Yes sir, she'll be here tomorrow. All right. Goo'-bye."

Disappointment seared Larry's consciousness. Dejectedly, hopelessly she returned to the desk and took another sheet of stationery. That letter to Nancy—how impossible it seemed! She had written only three words when she snatched up her third attempt at a letter, and cast it into the wastebasket also. She couldn't write Nancy tonight. As for that matter, what was there to write about Rowe?

Idly she sat at the desk, her head on her left hand, her eyes fixed on the green blotter. She felt that she was very far down in the valley tonight. The hills were too close, the stars far too few, the darkness too great. She was going to cry.

But she disliked people who were always crying, and so she reached for a scratch pad and began to trace designs on it.

How long could this last between her and Greg? She did not believe it could last always—it simply couldn't. That wouldn't be human. But there were people who had parted never to meet again. Still—Greg and she? Oh—they would have to meet again. Other people's love—it wasn't the kind she had for him, and he for her. She could not utterly let him go. They would meet again and he would smile that same old winning smile. Perhaps she would see him next Sunday, perhaps next Wednesday night at the young people's prayer meeting. She would start attending those regularly with Carmen. She must see him. Perhaps she would pass him on the street in Independence or even in Kansas City. He might be strolling by her office, or she might—she might walk up by Junior College and stumble into him.

Again the valley. It was horrible—empty. How awful!

A tear of self-pity splashing upon the paper on which she was writing checked her thought, and downstairs she heard voices and footsteps. They had come home from the station. Mrs. Blaine was gone.

On the paper in front of her she had written over and over: "Mrs. Gregory Spurgeon, Mrs. Gregory Spurgeon," and for variety, "Larry Spurgeon—Larena Spurgeon."

QUESTION TIME

Did Joseph Smith use the urim and thummim in translating the Bible?

There is no evidence that Joseph Smith was in possession of the urim and thummim at the time he translated any part of the Bible, the work of which was begun in June 1830, and which was done "by the spirit of revelation" according to the views of those who were most conversant with the work. This is stated on the title page of the published book.

According to information obtained, the urim and thummim was delivered to "the messenger" when the Book of Mormon had been translated. In May 1838 Joseph said of "the plates, the urim and thummim, and the breastplate" received from the messenger:

"But by the wisdom of God they remained safe in my hands until I had accomplished by them what was required at my hand when according to arrangements the messenger called for them, I delivered them up to him, and he has them in his charge until this day."—Church History, volume 1, page 18.

The exact time when the plates and accessories were returned to the messenger is not known, but it was in June 1829 that a revelation was given through the urim and thummim in answer to an inquiry concerning the promise of three witnesses, which had just been learned from the Book of Mormon as that part of the translated work was reached. This promise is found in 2 Nephi 11: 133, which is only one fifth of the way through the book, hence it appears that a fifth of the book had at that time been translated. The completed manuscript is said to have been handed to the printer in August 1829, hence the urim and thummim and the plates were doubtless delivered to the messenger by that time. As the Melchisedec priesthood was conferred soon after this, the need of the urim and thummim probably no longer existed.

Are an elder and his wife justified in not permitting visitors to smoke in their home?

To many people tobacco is offensive and sometimes causes nausea to those of stricter habits. Others believe it to be a sin to smoke it and that it is an unclean indulgence at best. The feelings and moral views of such persons should be respected sincerely by visiting friends and their companions, and will be respected by all persons of good breeding and culture. Anyone who is willing to impose upon others in such matters does not invite respect for himself. Such individuals usually are foremost in resenting any act on the part of others that they do not like. The right to object to the use of tobacco in one's home can hardly be questioned by anyone in fairness and from a religious viewpoint seems well authorized by the revelations quoted below:

"And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

"Be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; ... Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example."—Ibid, 119: 3.

The entire church assembled in General Conference has on six different occasions condemned the use of tobacco, and the ministry are advised to "discourage" its use. The church is prohibited from appointing as a missionary any one who uses it, and the Saints are advised not to appoint any such as branch or district president. The conference has also declared:

"That this body declares that the use of tobaccco is expensive, injurious and filthy, and that it should be discouraged by the ministry."—Resolution 217.

While no person should be unnecessarily offensive in his manner of objecting to harmful narcotics, drugs, intoxicants, and other evils, yet it is the duty of all to set an example worthy of a true Saint, and of the approval of God.

May an alien Elder solemnize a marriage before attaining citizenship?

In the United States the laws governing this matter differ greatly in various states, and new laws are enacted in some of them at times, so that one should learn what the requirements are before attempting to act in the capacity named. Some jurisdictions require proof of the official capacity of the minister so acting, while other states specify that one must be authorized by that state, and some require that the minister be a resident of the state. Other states permit any form of solemnization, but many states require a license.

The Readers Say---

Greetings From Australia

To our many friends and Saints in America:

We wish to take this opportunity and this means of communicating our good wishes for the Christmas Season and New Year. We have not found it possible to write to our friends individually because of the press of other duties, but we often talk of the happy times we spent in America. The Saints' Herald means so much to us for we read of the happenings in the branches and in the church—we have a personal interest for we know the parties, very often, mentioned in the news items. We like to tell the Saints in Australia many of the little personal reminiscences that are brought to mind when we read the Herald.

It is five weeks off Christmas, yet we have to get the Christmassy feeling down here early in order that we might be in time with our Christmas greetings. To one who is used to a cool, snowy Christmas an Australian Christmas would be a great contrast. For instead of the snow there is the warm glow of sunshine—it is summertime down on the other side of the world. And it looks so odd to see people rushing to the surf to "cool off" when one knows that back home the people are trying to get warm.

We are enjoying our work in Australia very much. There is much to be done but the Australian Saints everywhere have rallied to our support and we are very much encouraged in the work. There are very good prospects of progress. In some places the missionary work greatly exceeds our ability to satisfy; some branches are building more substantial buildings or are extending their present quarters to meet their pressing needs. We find here as elsewhere that many of the Saints are imbued with the Zionic spirit that is peculiar to Latter Day Saintism and the experiences in the Restoration movement make them stanch standard bearers. We are hoping that the various agencies, the women, the young people, and the priesthood, will rally to the call of the church in these days. We are anxious to do our part, and find joy in service.

There seems to be an improvement in economic conditions over the past year. There does not seem to be the intense suffering on the part of those who are out of employment that is found in other countries. This is probably due to what is termed "the dole"—a payment by the government according to one's needs. It is by no means sufficient for all one's needs, but it has assisted the people and kept them from starvation. The American experiment is being watched with interest by the people on this side.

Perhaps you will be interested in knowing something about the children. Alice June has developed into a nice healthy little girl. When asked what is she, she claims to be an "Ameritan." She talks very well and is picking up Australianisms. Rosemary is five months old. She is growing sturdily and greets everyone with her happy smile.

While you are enjoying your Christmas festivities the annual mission reunion of the Australian Saints will be held at Tiona (Teona) for eight days. The setting for this reunion is difficult to surpass for beauty and natural conveniences. A seven mile ocean beach with its golden sand on one side and a large lake stretching for miles on the other side encompass a narrow stretch of land that is covered with native timber and sub-tropical palms. The recreations of this reunion are mainly surfing and fishing, but boating, hiking, beach sports and other ordinary reunion activities may be indulged in. It is Latter Day Saint, too, for there are very few settlers here. Many nonmembers pass by, stop and promise to come again.

We are interested in the movements within the church and we pray that it will not be long before the church is released from its financial burdens and that it will be able to give its attention to the purpose for which it was restored—the establishment of Zion. Let us all work for the accomplishment of that great purpose.

Yours in the service of the Church,

EDITH AND GEORGE LEWIS.

Missionary Sends New Year's Message From Sanitarium

I very much appreciate the kindness of the church authorities in arranging for my stay here at the Sanitarium and my operation which was very successfully performed by Doctor John R. Green. I have suffered little pain and am getting along well.

I am proud of the Sanitarium and the excellent work it is doing. May God continue to crown its efforts with success. The nurses who have ministered to me have been thoughtful and kind, and I can see more than ever before the divine appointment of this institution. I shall always be able to say a good word for the Sanitarium.

May the new year bring all of us a greater vision of life's work and the faith and courage to perform our tasks. May each one of us make life his masterpiece. May the year bring you peace, sunshine and much happiness. If we have committed the Golden Rule to memory may we this year commit it to life.

Child Tells of Blessings

Although I am but ten years old, I have been blessed many times. When I was eight, I was baptized by Brother Ben Peters.

I became suddenly ill when I was three years old, and the doctor told my mother that I would be a long time getting well. I was administered to by Brother Ward A. Hougas, and was healed. Another time, I was on my way home from school, and had an attack of appendicitis. My brother ran home to get mother and my girl chum stayed with me. I was taken to Brother Ben Peters's house, and he administered to me, and going home, I wanted to sit up in the wagon.

I have been administered to many times, and have never failed to receive help. I am in the third grade in music, and hope to be of some help to the church someday.

Denver, Colorado

Study Financial Law

Elder Glaude A. Smith conducted a class for the study of the financial law of the church, beginning November 19 and ending November 29. He used the new quarterly on that subject. The interest shown was encouraging, and those who attended had an excellent opportunity to get a better understanding of this important part of our church duty.

The pastor's sermons upon such subjects as "The Law of the Lord Is Perfect," "Our Father's Business," "Our Partnership With God," and "Vision," have been planned for the purpose of urging the Saints to a higher plane of living, and have contained much food for thought. He has emphasized the fact that if members spend their time in doing deeds of kindness and of love, they shall have no room in their lives for anything which will separate them from God. "If we give our best, God will add the abundance of His blessings, and we shall have joy as we labor with our Father in His business."

The young people had a party the evening of November 14, at the home of Brother and Sister Burke Nolan. An enjoyable time was had by a large group. These young people are striving to develop in every way which will qualify them for service in the cause they love, and are active in work and study as well as in periods of recreation, where they learn to love and understand each other better.

Mrs. Carrie Neef, an aged sister who is beloved by all who know her, fell and broke her hip several weeks ago, and has been in a critical condition ever since. Six years ago she suffered a similar accident, and lay upon her bed for many weary months. Her constant thought, even in the midst of pain, has been for others.

Louis Lynn Coven, eldest son of Louis and Nellie Coven, passed away November 24, at the Colorado General Hospital, after an illness of eight months, the result of an injury he sustained while at his work. He was born in Lock Number Four, Pennsylvania, twenty-six years ago last July, and came with his parents to Denver about fifteen years ago. He was baptized when a child. He leaves to mourn his untimely death, his parents, two sisters, four brothers, and many friends. Funeral services, in charge of Elder G. A. Smith, assisted by Elder E. J. Williams, were held November 28, in the presence of a large assembly of friends.

A "white gift" service is planned for Christmas Eve at the church. The children's department will present a little play, "The Gift of Self." Each class in the church school is expected to participate by presenting to God a gift of service or substance.

The choir is preparing a Christmas cantata, under the direction of Mrs. Alice Milligan, Inez Schrunk at the piano.

A service of thanks was held Thanksgiving Day at 10 a. m., consisting of music, talks and testimonies of gratitude to God for his abundant mercies and sustaining grace.

The Columbines and Loyal Workers held a successful bazaar December 8 and 9. They have been making preparation for this for about three months.

Bradner, Ohio

Members Honored as Fourteenth Anniversary Is Observed

The fourteenth anniversary of the first baptisms in Bradner was observed Thanksgiving Day in honor of the first ten people inducted into the church here November 27, 1919. One lone Saint, Sister Cora Peterson, who lives at Bradner, had become a member about five years previous to that time. Nearly twenty people had joined by the time the branch was to be organized, and Brother G. T. Griffiths (at that time an apostle) assisted by others, organized Bradner Branch.

With the aid of the families of Elders O. J. Hawn, E. L. Ulrich, E. Patten, H. H. Harms, and F. W. Cadow, the branch prospered. After a time other families joined and many of these helped to celebrate Thanksgiving Day here in 1933.

The time was spent in worship and social fellowship with friends and members who gathered at the church. The Saints were blessed at the early morning prayer meeting and also in hearing Elder E. L. Ulrich, now of Dayton, Ohio, preach. Brother O. J. Hawn, deceased, was not forgotten; his name was mentioned many times throughout the day. Brothers Hawn and Ulrich were the men who were instrumental in bringing the gospel to the village of Bradner.

After the morning services, the people retired to the basement where they did justice to a fine dinner. In the afternoon they reassembled for songs, prayers, readings, reminiscences, and talks by several of the brothers.

Seven of the ten first members were present on this occasion. Of the original ten, Brother Casper Bihu, who was blind, passed away several years ago.

The list of names of men who have assisted in God's work here, includes those of Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, Patriarch F. G. Pitt, Apostles James A. Gillen, J. F. Curtis, R. S. Budd, Clyde F. Ellis, Elders C. B. Woodstock, J. M. Hardin, W. S. Hettrick, William Grice, and John Grice. This branch was also favored with a visit from Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Elder S. W. L. Scott.

Elder Walter Wirebaugh was the first branch president. Bradner members first held prayer services in the different homes, but the time came when they needed a church home in which to worship. They purchased the church which they now occupy but which stood on Cemetery Hill, a mile east of town. Some time later the edifice was moved to its present site where it stands as an evidence of hard work, cooperation, and many happy hours spent together.

Out-of-town visitors on this day included members from Port Huron, Michigan, Gerton, Rollersville, Dayton, and Moline, Ohio.

Brother and Sister Ulrich, accompanied by their sons, sang an appropriate hymn of their own composition and pertaining to the early work of the church at Bradner.

General and Local Workers Lend Help

During the past year Apostle D. T. Williams has visited this city and given some helpful lectures.

In September District President D. J. Williams and wife were here for a week. The Saints enjoyed his spiritual sermons and timely advice, and appreciated the association with this brother and sister.

Recent speakers have included Elders Percy Farrow, G. St. John, and B. H. Doty. Brother Doty is expected to return for a series of meetings after the new year.

Elder George Njeim, of Owen Sound District, was here for a week in October, and lectured and showed slides of Palestine.

The young people's division gave an entertainment November 26, at which time they presented two short plays, "When Women Get Their Rights," and "The Play's the Thing." These and other numbers assured a successful program. Workers also prepared a good Christmas program.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Two local young people, Sister Marjorie Swainson and Brother James C. Phillips, went to Chatham, November 30, to take part in the oratorical contest of Chatham District.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Lily Swainson, meets each week for serving, quilting, and study. December 1, they sponsored a three-act play, "The Three Pegs," by Alice Williams Chaplin, which was the means of raising a goodly sum. The women have assumed the responsibility of paying the building fund of this branch, also helping with other branch expenses.

Considerable sickness has been had this fall, but God has blessed many of the sufferers, and some are again able to attend church.

Mobile, Alabama

Growing Spiritually

A degree of progress and spiritual growth can be seen in Mobile Branch. The Wednesday evening prayer services though not largely attended, are of a good spiritual nature, and at times everyone takes part.

The Sunday evening preaching services are well attended. Some fine subjects have been presented by Pastor Amos Berve, "The Redeeming of Zion," "Man's Relation to God," and "The Chief Cornerstone." Splendid cooperation is enjoyed between pastor and chorister in providing special music.

During the "Keep the Law" period the financial law was ably taught in the various classes of the church school. It was presented in sermon form from the pulpit, and discussed in the homes by visiting priesthood chosen to act as solicitors. A desire to keep the law was shown by the membership of the branch when many inventories and financial statements were filed and laid on the altar at the sacrament service December 3.

November 26, at the eleven o'clock service the juniors gave a short program of songs and a reading with Thanksgiving as the theme. As the junior choir sang an offering song, Sister Berve was requested to join her husband, the pastor, at the altar. During the singing of this song a large basket of fruit, a gift from the children to the silver-haired couple, was brought in and presented by one of the boys.

Sister Berve was again pleasantly surprised when the young girls' club called on her on Thanksgiving Day and left a box of good things.

The Oakdale group of the Women's Christian Temperance Union held their monthly meeting for December at the Saints' church. Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Latter Day Saint churches were represented in attendance, and Elder Berve gave a short talk on temperance.

A chicken gumbo and oyster supper followed by an entertainment, was sponsored by the board of trustees December 12, for the benefit of the branch treasury from which monthly payments are being made on the church building.

Lansing, Michigan

Progress—Unity—Hope—Activity

Attendance at the various services is increasing despite severe winter weather and the economic depression. The communion and weekly prayer services are more spiritual and greater unity prevails in the local.

For a number of days the divisions of the church school were busy preparing the Christmas program which was given Christmas Eve. There were also a tree and gifts for the children.

The young people, led by Elder S. G. Brown, are taking an active part in church work. They are studying the Young People's Church History.

Sister Viola Fiscus is having good success in her work as director of the children's division. Regular Sunday morning junior church is well attended and made exceedingly interesting. This department also has prayer service twice each month. Sister Wanda Ferguson has a junior choir organized and always ready to do its bit in the success of the services.

The young people of the branch entertained the district young people's convention November 17, 18, and 19. Outstanding sermons were given by Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop E. Evans and Elders John Grice and A. C. Barmore. The Sunday morning prayer service was an abundant outpouring of the Spirit.

A dinner was given at the church at 7 p. m., November 25, in honor of the silver wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister James Andrews. Fifty-six guests were present. An appropriate gift was presented. They were also honor guests at a dinner November 26, given by their daughter, Mrs. Hazen Scriber. Then a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Webster Ewing, of Dewitt.

Brother and Sister Clarence Bagswell are the parents of a nine-pound son born November 26.

A prayer service was held at 10 a. m. Thanksgiving Day and followed by a basket dinner. At 3 p. m. the children's division gave a "Thanks" program.

Brother and Sister Andrew Dudley, of Sherwood, are spending the winter with their children, and the branch is happy to welcome them here again.

Elder S. A. Barss performed the marriage ceremony for Sister Evelyn Trescott and Harry Yeoman, of Jackson, November 25. Sister Lillian Trescott, the mother of the bride, has returned to her home in Williamston.

Recent visitors in the branch have included members from East Jordan, Albion, Gladstone, and Ionia.

Gratitude is due Brother and Sister Frisbie, of Detroit, for arranging the special services of December 3. Elder Kenneth Greene, president of Detroit District, and Elder James Davis, jr., were here for the day. The sacrament service was a memorable occasion. At 4 p. m. Elder Greene gave a talk on the gathering to Zion. At 7 p. m. Elder Davis gave an illustrated lecture on the Hawaiian Islands, where he worked as a missionary. At the close of the lecture, Elder Davis related some reminiscences which brought tears to many eyes and impressed the truth of the song:

"Red and yellow, black and white,
They are precious in His sight."

The branch extends sympathy to the husband and children of Mrs. Frank Wipper, who passed away November 27.

Boys of Scout Troop 37 are holding their meetings each Tuesday evening at the church. The troop enjoyed a week-end hike into the country December 1, 2, and 3.

Sister Myrtle Yates, who is still at the Ingham County Tuberculosis Sanatorium, asks the prayers of the Saints everywhere in behalf of her daughter, Mrs. Brooks, who is afflicted with tuberculosis. Prayers are also asked for Sister Harry Carlyle, of Charlotte, who is suffering with an affliction of many years' standing.

The Lansing Saints' Herald bundle now numbers thirty-five each week. All are much pleased with the outstanding improvements in each issue of the Herald.

Elder John Luce, as branch president, with Elders Alva Dexter and Jesse Shelley, as associates, is accomplishing much.

Lennox, California

Activities Marked by Spiritual Growth

Attendance is steadily increasing here, especially in the Sunday morning preaching services.

Sacrament services are becoming more markedly spiritual. For this the Saints are truly grateful.

December 11, was the sixth anniversary of Lennox Mission, and on this occasion the group held an all-day meeting with a basket dinner at noon. They had two guest speakers. Brother Chapman, of Long Beach, spoke at the eleven o'clock service on "The Restoration," and Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present at the evening service, speaking on "The Coming of Elias." The young people gave a musical program during the afternoon.

The "Keep the Law" campaign was opened with special sermons and class work each Sunday.

Intense love of the gospel is a ruling factor in the work and hopes of the Saints of Lennox. And they feel that they have many things for which to be thankful.

Spokane Priesthood Institute and Conference

F. M. McDowell and M. A. McConley Stress Priesthood Interests

Spokane district conference convened from December 7 to 10. Priesthood work began Thursday with many personal calls and interviews by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle M. A. McConley. A class conducted by Brother McDowell met at eight in the evening. Friday, December 8, was again filled with priesthood calls and interviews.

Conference officially opened Friday evening at seven thirty with a play, "A Frock for Frances," by the dramatic club, followed by a period of recreation. During this period another priesthood class was conducted by Brother McDowell.

The young people met for a six o'clock prayer service Saturday morning and this was followed by breakfast at the home of Margaret Kenny. A general prayer service was held at eight-thirty. At ten o'clock President McDowell conducted a class on "Revelation." At the district business meeting at 2 p. m. officers were elected. Apostle M. A. McConley gave a sermon in the evening and at the same time Brother McDowell conducted priesthood class.

The ministry met again Sunday at 8.15 a. m. for prayer service. Regular church school convened at 9.45, President McDowell talking to the young people and Apostle McConley to the adults. The children's division met in regular classes. A wonderful spirit accompanied the eleven o'clock sacrament service, and an ordination ceremony was had at two-thirty in the afternoon, five men being ordained, Louis Johnsen, of Mansfield, Washington, elder; Lloyd Whiting, elder; Merle Chiles, priest; Earl Jordan, teacher; Archie Silver, deacon, all of Spokane. President McDowell, Apostle McConley, Elders J. H. Sage and Stanley Fout officiated.

Brother McConley left for Seattle at six-forty, and Brother McDowell gave the closing sermon. This was preceded at six o'clock by another play, "Faith."

Yakima, Mansfield, Walla Walla, and Pasco, Washington, Vay, Sagle, and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, were represented by priesthood and laymembers. A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout the entire conference, especially at the priesthood meetings. The young people's prayer service was declared by all attendants as the most spiritual ever experienced by the youth of this district. They are now looking forward to March and a district youth conference.

Niagara Falls, New York

Thankful for a Good Year

What a gala year this has been for Niagara Falls Saints! As they look back, it seems they have had more than their share of blessings and happiness. Much of their success has been due to the untiring efforts of Pastor George Landes, who, as branch president, has put his very all into the work. Others who have contributed their time and talents to the building up of the branch are: Brother Thomas Yates, Sunday school superintendent; Sister Catherine Lambert, choir director; Sister Anna Landes, organist; Sister Helen Schnell, superintendent of young people, and Brother Victor Joy, superintendent of the Religio.

They have also been fortunate because of the spirit of love and cooperation that dwells among the members, each being ready and willing to help. It is true that they have had several trials and disappointments, but these have been quite overshadowed by the love they find shining clear and bright in the branch.

In the year gone by, plays and other dramatic work, cantatas, musicals, suppers, banquets, and other forms of work and recreation have made the branch a place of industry.

Outstanding in the memory of the past year is the pleasant week-end the choir spent at Arthur, Ontario. They had long been urged by Arthur Saints to visit them, so finally, the choir, with Sister Anna Landes, in charge, during the absence of Director Catherine Lambert, worked diligently on several numbers and in the latter part of the summer made the long delayed visit. They were accorded a royal welcome during the brief stay. Apostle D. T. Williams was also there, which helped to make the visit delightful and interesting. All meetings were well attended and proved successful.

Workers hope that in the coming year the spirit of progress in Niagara Falls Branch will continue on its way, gathering force day by day so that at the end of the year we may have the same song of thanksgiving in their hearts that they now have.

Toledo, Ohio

Waverly and Dorr Streets

The young people of Toledo Branch are beginning to take a place of prominence in the church activities of this district. Having recently organized under the name "Zion Builders," chosen the motto, "Be a good steward," and a theme song, these youthful workers emerged into a round of activities.

The "Zion Builders" have as their supervisor Sister Eleanor Bryant, and working with her are Floyd Holdren, president of the group; Gerard Willmarth, vice president, and June Bryant, secretary.

Several weeks ago a delightful Sunday afternoon was spent, enjoying the beauties of nature in a jaunt through the woods, and all were in tune for the regular Sunday evening young people's prayer service in charge of Brother Floyd Holdren, which followed. A wonderful meeting was experienced, an abundance of God's Holy Spirit being present.

At a later date part of the group went to Saint Marys, Ohio, to take part in the church school program there.

Since one of the chief aims of the club is to build up its organization and interest other young people, workers have rejoiced to see the increase in attendance and interest in all services. They look forward for a great work to be done by their number, and trust that their efforts, both spiritual and social, will be for the upbuilding of this great work.

Chicago, Illinois

West Pullman Church Dedicated

The dream of West Pullman members was realized Sunday, December 3, when the church was dedicated at the afternoon service, Apostle John F. Garver, representing the general church, and accepting the key from the branch president, Clem Evans. Then with appropriate remarks he returned the key, giving the building back to the branch as their house of worship.

Nearly forty years ago a branch was organized under the leadership of Francis Earle who now resides near Hartford, Michigan. During the intervening time there have been many changes in local membership. A number have gone on to their reward; some have moved to other cities; still others have entered the branch by baptism or by transfer. A building to be used for services was rented until about nine years ago when through the efforts of the women's department, a church was erected. It was the ambition of the members to finish paying for the building so that it might be dedicated to the purpose for which it was intended.

Two charter members of the group were present at the service of dedication, Nancy Bower, of West Pullman, and Ella Burwell, of Battle Creek, Michigan. A fine spirit prevailed at all services of the day.

The choir, led by Richard Keir, furnished music at each service, and Sister Naomi West sang a solo at the afternoon meeting.

A goodly number of young people have taken their place in branch activities with a determination to carry on and keep ablaze the gospel light kindled so long ago.

Ontario Oratorical Contest

First Annual Inter-district Forensic Event

About twenty-eight young people from Toronto and several from Chatham and other districts, assembled at the London, Ontario, Church, Sunday, December 10, 1933, at two o'clock, to listen to the finals of the Ontario Oratorical Contest.

The winner of the girls' contest was Miss Isabelle Pycock, and the winner of the boys' contest Mr. Ernie Newton, both of Toronto Branch.

This movement, commenced by Elder J. L. Prentice, pastor of Toronto Branch, provided that the four Ontario districts, namely, London, Chatham, Owen Sound, and Toronto, select one girl and one boy to represent their respective district in the final contest, the boy and girl so selected to be the winner of a branch contest first and then the district contest, having won out by the elimination method. However, owing to unavoidable circumstances, the London and Owen Sound Districts did not enter contestants this year, and therefore, there were only four speakers, Miss Evelyn Johnson and Mr. James Phillips, of the Chatham District, and Miss Isabelle Pycock and Mr. Ernie Newton, of Toronto District.

Miss Evelyn Johnson, of Chatham District, the first speaker, chose as her subject, "Our Flag," and stressed the significance of the Union Jack to Canadians and pointed out how sincere their allegiance to it should be. She also told, in a very interesting and impressive manner, what the various colors and crosses of the flag stood for.

Mr. James Phillips, also of the Chatham District, selected as his topic, "World Peace." He pointed out by reference to historical facts, the various attempts mankind had made to establish peace on earth and their failures, and urged that the Christian method of living was the only real means to the establishment of world peace.

Miss Isabelle Pycock, the girl representative of Toronto District, spoke on the subject, "Christian Stewardship." She defined Christian stewardship in detail, and mentioned a few of the tragic social and economic conditions which can only be removed by an observance of the law of stewardship, and also pointed out how and where Latter Day Saints can commence their stewardship program.

Ernie Newton, the boy representative of Toronto District, chose as his subject, "Beyond the Horizon," and in an impressive manner pointed out the sacrifices which had been made by our predecessors in attempting to establish the church. "Now midst the present financial crisis," he declared, "we should not become discouraged, but should look 'Beyond the Horizon,' where our highest ideals may be realized."

Mr. Clark, organist of Chatham District, rendered organ selections between the speeches.

The prizes consisted of a silver medal to the girl and boy winner and a bronze medal to the contestants who achieved second place. The district whose contestant was successful in winning, received a beautiful silver loving cup, to be held in the home branch for the ensuing year, the name of the winner to be engraved on a shield on the cup. There were two cups, one for the boy winner's achievement and one for the girl's. Elder J. L. Prentice, of Toronto, presented the medals to the winners, and Elder Frank Gray, director of the London Church School, presented the cups.

The medals and cups were donated by Brother and Sister Angus Prentice, of Toronto Branch, the venerable parents of its present pastor.

The judges of the contest were Doctor Evan Shute, Mr. Arlo Hodgson, and Miss Grace Perry, members of London Branch.

This is the first year the contest has taken place, and in 1934, with the four districts entering contestants, the competition promises to be quite keen. The winners of this year's contests are not eligible to enter next year, but may do so the year following.

Puyallup, Washington

Reassuring Word From Flood Area

The weatherman seems to have been trying to give Washington its year's supply of rain within a week's time. So great has been the downpour that almost every bridge has been condemned and water is the highest in twenty years.

This branch has changed its place of meeting. The building in which they formerly met, has been torn down to make place for a new business structure. For several months the group met at the home of Clarence Wheeler, then rented a building which had been previously used for a store. The new meeting place is located two blocks south of the Methodist Church, one block north of the Catholic Church, and two blocks east of the New Pentecostal Tabernacle.

At the last election of officers L. W. Bronson was again elected pastor and C. E. Wheeler church school director.

Apostle M. A. McConley was here recently, and his talk was an inspiraton to all.

Missionary A. C. Martin held a two-week series of sermons, and is to be commended for his inspirational and educational discourses. There have been no baptisms, but many have a better understanding of the gospel message.

Several of the priesthood from Puyallup were able to attend the priesthood meeting conducted by President F. M. McDowell at Seattle during the Thanksgiving season. Also some of the local members attended Thanksgiving services conducted by Seattle Branch.

Some time ago the car driven by Sister Maggie Coats was struck by a truck and badly wrecked, but Sister Coats escaped without serious injury.

A short time ago the twenty-two months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Bronson swallowed an open safety pin. She was immediately taken to a local doctor who after an examination, advised that she be taken to the hospital. Since the hospital is in another town, the child was taken home first where she was administered to. Shortly thereafter she spit up the pin. The local doctor readily agreed that the child had received divine help in this time of crisis.

The "Keep the Law" period was well observed in Puyallup, and the solicitors was able to send the bishop a good-sized check. Plans are being made for a special evening when all will meet at the church to file their inventories for the new year.

The hearts of all were made sad by the tragic death of Sister Velma Russell. On Thanksgiving evening the truck in which she was riding was struck by a train and she suffered a fractured skull which caused her death Saturday noon. Four others were in the truck, but all escaped injuries. The fog was so dense that the driver did not see the approaching train in time to avoid the accident.

All in the branch, so far as the reporter knows, are at work again, and many are saving every penny they can to buy themselves a home in the center place or surrounding regions.

Young Preacher at Shidler, Oklahoma

Howard Harpham Conducts Services

Saints of Shidler, Oklahoma, were gladdened by the coming of young Brother Howard Harpham who arrived about the middle of November and left December 4. He preached fourteen sermons, and his series of meetings was much appreciated. He was an inspiration to the members because of his youth and his godly walk and conversation. Much benefit was derived from his efforts here by the Saints. Quite a number came from a distance to hear him, and many not of the faith expressed themselves as greatly helped by his logical presentation of the gospel truth.

Webb City, Missouri

Apostle J. A. Gillen Holds Meetings

Apostle James A. Gillen closed a ten-day series December 10, at Webb City. While there were no baptisms, officers consider the meetings most successful. As a result, the Saints seem to be awakened to their duties and willing to do their part.

On Saturday Sister Gillen and daughter and Miss Erma Quick came from Independence to spend the week-end. That night a welcome was given them at the home of Pastor Ira O. Waldron and wife. Music and games furnished the entertainment of the evening. Arletha Fry and Iris LaFern Waldron each gave a reading. Sister Waldron had charge of the evening's entertainment and Sister Clara Stokes the refreshments.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Move Hopefully Into New Year

Business meeting for Lowbanks congregation convened the last Sunday in October, branch and departmental officers being sustained with little change.

November 5, the sacrament service was in charge of District President James Wilson, of Toronto, who was assisted by Elder Clatworthy and Elder Martin Wier, of Niagara Falls. After the morning services, the women's department served lunch in the basement of the church.

An interesting program was rendered at two o'clock in the afternoon by the choir of sixteen young people, mostly nonmembers, with D. MacDonald at the organ and Mildred Clatworthy at the piano. There were instrumental and vocal numbers, readings, and short talks by Elder M. Wier, Brother Walters, Delbert MacDonald, and Austin MacDonald.

November 19, Brother Clatworthy explained the need of the sacrament.

Sister Mildred Clatworthy who recently enrolled in the Saint Catherine Hospital to take up the study of nursing, underwent an operation for appendicitis there, and the members are hoping for her speedy recovery.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs, Missouri

Brother Fred Immer was the speaker the first Sunday night in November. His theme was "Choose Ye This Day Whom Ye Shall Serve."

On the second Sunday of the month the Stark sisters, Josephine and Helene, rendered a piano and guitar number entitled, "Dreaming." Special music was by the Blue Springs orchestra. A. E. Campbell was the speaker, his topic being "Stewardship." In the evening Albert Chapman was the preacher, and his subject was "Faith and Prayer."

Bishop J. A. Koehler and Elder Amos Allen met with the Saints November 19, bringing their class instruction. Brother Koehler's theme was "Prophecy of the Kingdom," and Brother Allen's was "The Financial Problems of the Church." In the morning Brother Koehler sang a number, "The Sinner and the Song," with a response by a quartet. From them the Saints received valuable instructions.

On Wednesday evening classwork continued, and again on Friday night the workers met for class considerations. Sister Amos Allen gave a reading, "A Fence or an Ambulance," also the song, "Bring Ye All the Tithes."

The ladies' quartet of East Independence met with Blue Springs members and assisted with a special number, "Listen to the Voice of Jesus."

NEWS BRIEFS

Into a New Year

For most of us this was a "Giving" Christmas. In many branches of the church Christmas benefits and socials were held, "white gift" services, parties, reunions. The needy were remembered with the necessities of life, food, clothing, fuel. And in the giving all of us have been thrice blessed.

Now the church turns to a New Year with gratitude for the blessings of the past and hope for the future. Looking back over 1933, almost every local group finds that it has made a degree of advancement. Missionary services have increased faith and courage. Baptisms have added to local numbers. Prayers have been answered. Gospel works have been many. Friends have been made. For all these things the Saints are thankful and happy. They are looking now into another year, a "General Conference Year," prayerfully, trustingly.

Toledo Young People Organize

The young people of Toledo Branch have organized under the name "Zion Builders," and chosen as their motto, "Be a good steward." They also have a theme song, and many enthusiastic plans for the year under the supervision of Sister Eleanor Bryant and the presidency of Floyd Holdren. Already they are engaged in a whirl of local activities.

Apostle J. A. Gillen at Webb City, Missouri

The branch at Webb City is much encouraged as a result of a ten-day series of meetings which closed there December 10, Apostle James A. Gillen the speaker.

High Water in Washington State

From Puyallup comes word that the weather man has been trying to give Washington its annual supply of rain, which is considerable, all in a week's time. So great has been the downpour that floods have followed. Almost every bridge has been condemned and water is the highest it has been in twenty years.

Spokane Draws Institute Audience From Many Points

Yakima, Mansfield, Walla Walla and Pasco, Washington and Vay, Sagle and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, were represented by priesthood and laymembers at the Spokane district conference and institute which convened December 7 to 10. A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout all sessions, and President F. M. McDowell and Apostle McConley were there to help with sermons and class work.

Gala Year for Niagara Falls Branch

"As we look back over the year, it seems we have had more than our share of blessings and happiness," writes the Niagara Falls, New York, reporter. Under the guidance of consecrated officers, the membership have conducted local activities—and there have been many—in the spirit of love and cooperation.

West Pullman Church Dedicated

The West Pullman church at Chicago was dedicated December 3, Apostle J. F. Garver representing the general church in the ceremony. Nearly forty years ago the branch was organized under the leadership of Francis Earle, and two charter members were present at this the culmination of a long-cherished dream, the dedication of their church home. Nine years ago the edifice was erected, the women's department being a prominent factor in the movement.

Sarnia Grateful for Missionary Visits

Checking over the year's activities Sarnia, Ontario, members find that they have real cause for gratitude. They have been the recipients of missionary visits and helps from the following ministry—Apostle D. T. Williams, District President D. J. Williams, Elder Percy Farrow, Elder G. St. John, Elder B. H. Doty, and Elder George Njeim, of Owen Sound District.

Our Departed Ones

CLUGSTON.—Robert Clugston, age sixty-seven years, two months, and seven days, passed from mortal life, December 7, 1933, at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania. He leaves to mourn, his wife, brothers, sisters, and many other relatives. Was baptized into the church February 11, 1912, and ordained a teacher June 2, 1918. He lived a consistent Christian life and was kind to and thoughtful of others. The funeral services were conducted by Patriarch George W. Robley, assisted by Pastor Walter Lewis.

ADES.—Ethan Ades was born in Wayne County, Illinois, January 10, 1850. Passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lillie Lewis, at Boone, Iowa, December 5, 1933. Funeral services were conducted from the Saints' church at Boone, December 8, by W. B. Johnson and F. T. Mussell, after which the body was taken to Ottumwa, Iowa, for interment. Brother Ades married Katherine Ellen Wagner in 1874, and five children were born to them. One passed away in infancy. Left to mourn are, his wife; two sons, Henry, of Woodhull, Illinois; Charles of Rexfield, Iowa; two daughters, Mrs. Nellie Erskine, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and Mrs. Lillie Lewis, of Boone; eight grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. He united with the church in 1897, and remained a member till his death.

LAMBERT.—Matilda Alzada Kendall was born October 1, 1851, in the State of New York. With her parents, she moved to Wisconsin, and later to Nauvoo, Illinois. After growing to womanhood she was united in marriage to John Lambert. Four children blessed their union, three of whom with her husband, preceded her in death. She made her home for a number of years at Montrose, Iowa, but some months ago went to live with her only surviving daughter, Mrs. Pearl Moore, at Los Angeles, California, where her death occurred November 23, 1933. She united with the church in 1862, and was loyal to her faith. Interment was in Montrose Cemetery, Montrose, Iowa, following funeral services from the Saints' chapel at Montrose December 4, by Elder F. T. Mussell. Left to mourn are the daughter above mentioned; two stepsons, Richard Lambert, of South Dakota; John Lambert, of Summitville, Iowa; one adopted son, Wilfred, of Montrose, Iowa; fifteen grandchildren, and seventeen great-grandchildren.

CAMPBELL.—Harry E. Campbell was born June 23, 1883, in Lapeer, Michigan, and departed this life, December 4, 1933, after an illness of twelve weeks. In 1906, he married Lavina Bryce, of Soo, Michigan. He united with the church in 1904. Besides his widow he leaves to mourn his death, one daughter, Mrs. Oris Campbell Flood; four sisters, Mrs. W. F. Stevenson, and Mrs. Peter Willis, of Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. James Ferguson, Port Huron, Michigan, and Mrs. Nathanael Witmer, Brown City, Michigan, and seven brothers, William and James, Detroit, Michigan; Sandy, Rochester, Michigan; Thomas and Freeman, Pontiac, Michigan; Duncan, of Brimley, Michigan, and John of Hilton Beach, Ontario. One sister, Mrs. George Sidewand, preceded him in death two and a half years ago, being the first to go of a family of thirteen. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Allan Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan.
