We are not a carniverous animal, so let's go slow on meat: If it's meat, let it be clean, such as lamb, mutton, veal or young beef. Be sure to get some raw vegetable matter when you do use meat. PHOSFO is rich in raw mineral salts—just what you should have to make up what the flesh lacks.

PHOFSO neutralizes the acid also and what a help to the action of the bowels. You can't lose—we refund if you feel dissatisfied. We deliver to any part of the world. Only $1.00 per can. In U. S. A., three cans for $2.00; Canada, five pounds in bulk for $3.00, and six pounds in U. S. for $3.00.

Be a healthy wide-awake Saint. Sick Saints will not develop Zion very soon.

Tentative Reunion Schedule

We publish herewith a tentative list of the time and place of the reunions for the 1933 season, so far as these have been arranged with the First Presidency. District presidents and others concerned will please check the following list and inform the First Presidency as soon as possible of any inaccuracies as to time and place. Presidents of districts which intend to hold a reunion but which are not listed should immediately get in touch with the First Presidency and send the information requested in various communications sent out from headquarters. It is particularly important that we know immediately the time of reunion, the place at which it is to be held, and the speakers desired.

Our Departed Ones

LEEPER.—Harriett Elizabeth Hawkins was born October 1, 1862, near Le-beck, Cedar County, Missouri; departed this life February 17, 1933. She married Albert S. Leeper in 1878, and to them were born seven children, four of whom have passed on. For many years she was a faithful member of the church, having been baptized by I. N. White, at Walker, Missouri, March 26, 1892. She is survived by her husband, A. S. Leeper; three sons, Lee, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri; Willian Albert and Silas Floyd, of the home; one sister, Mrs. Mary Snyder, of Eldorado Springs; two brothers, Nicholas and Dan Hawkins, of Pawnee, Oklahoma, and four grandchildren also survive. Funeral services were held at the Methodist Church at Walker, Missouri, R. T. Walters, the pastor from Eldorado Springs, in charge. Interment was in Mount Vernon Cemetery. Mrs. Leeper's kind deeds will long stand as a monument to her memory.

KOEHLER.—Frederick Eugene Koehler, youngest child and only son of Ada and Frederick Koehler, was born May 3, 1912. At the age of eight years he with others of his classmates was baptized on Children's Day in the Stone Church font, Independence, by Elder W. W. Smith. He was a regular Sunday school attendant during his growing years. After the death of his father, almost four years ago, Fred with his mother moved to Rogers, Arkansas, where there was no branch of the church. A year later they returned to Missouri, making their home in the Englewood district near Independence. There he enrolled in an organized young people's class which he had attended but a few hours before the accident which caused his death, March 5, 1933. He was a quiet boy of sterling qualities, much beloved by those who knew him best. Besides his mother he leaves these sisters: Mrs. E. M. Moore and Mrs. W. R. Crick, of Englewood; Mrs. A. R. Moler and Mrs. Albert Waters, of Independence; Mrs. J. M. West, of Denison, Texas, other relatives, and many friends.

DOPP.—Mark Dopp was born July 19, 1860, at Tuscola, Michigan. Passed away January 14, 1933. He was baptized into the church February 14, 1905, at Fieldbrook, California. Married Miss Hester Copeland in 1884, who preceded him to the beyond, August 9, 1930, at Ava, Missouri. To them eight children were born, five passing away in childhood. Three survive, Michael Dopp, of Independence, Missouri. There also mourn, three grandchildren, three sisters, one brother, and many friends. The funeral was held from Enoch Hill Church, Independence, Missouri, January 16, in charge of H. L. Barto, assisted by J. E. Martin. Interment was at Blue Springs, Missouri.

HYSLOP.—William Hyslop was born in Monroe County, New York, December 2, 1858, and was married to Fannie Grandey, October 13, 1881. He was baptized a member of the church April 26, 1918. Died January 17, 1933, at his home following a stroke. Left to mourn are his wife, three sons, three daughters, five brothers, two sisters, and thirteen grandchildren. One daughter died at the age of eleven. Funeral services were at the home in charge of Elder G. W. Burt, of Beaverton, and interment was in Brookside Cemetery, West Branch, Michigan.

WELCH.—Bert Milton Welch was born March 18, 1871, at Elgin, Illinois, and passed from this life December 3, 1932. Although he had been in poor health for some time, his death was sudden and came as a shock to everyone. He married Vica Parker, June 19, 1902, and had made his home at Gladstone, Michigan, for thirty years. Was baptized July 22, 1923, at Gladstone by Ernest N. Burt, and was ordained a priest, August 31, 1924, in which office he served faithfully until his death. He was loved and respected by many, and his words of encouragement and the patience with which he bore his trials, will long be remembered. The funeral was held December 6, 1932, from the Saints' church, Elder Allen Schreur, of Gaylord, conducting the service. Pallbearers were Warner Acker, Ambrose Shippy, John Rasmusson, Dan Shannon, James King, and Orville King. Interment was in Fernwood Cemetery. Left to mourn are his widow, one daughter, Mrs. Rex Stowe, two grandchildren, and many friends.

SANDERSON.—Frances Maria Sanderson was born August 20, 1882, at Yorkshire, England. She was baptized September 26, 1929, at Independence, Missouri, by M. Rasmusson. Four years ago she moved from Detroit, Michigan, to California, living in Pasadena and Los Angeles, then at Pomona. She was a member of the Ontario Branch. Her husband, Gwynne A. Sanderson, passed away in 1921. She died January 30, 1933, at Pomona after a long illness. Is survived by two sons: Leonard J. and William H. Sanderson, and one daughter, Frances A. Sanderson, all of the home; her father, Joseph A. Howden, of Pennsylvania; three sisters, and three brothers.

Question: If 235 Branches Can Sell 2200 Heralds Each Week, How Many Could 750 Branches Sell?

Answer: ? (It depends on you.)

The truth is that there are 750 Branches in the Church. Of this number 235 are selling Heralds each week at 5c retail—An average of about nine Heralds per branch per week.

If each branch would sell an average of 9 Heralds weekly it would add 6750 Herald families to our 7000 regular yearly subscribers—our total would then be 13,750.

The Pigeonhole

"Sunny Monday"

"Monday's always a hard day for me," declared the pigeon as he alighted on my window sill.

"How's that," I asked taking my fountain pen from my vest pocket.

"Just too many things to do—say, you needn't quote me! You've already gone too far in that direction! Forget that pen and let's just have a friendly chat, you and I."

"All right," I agreed relinquishing the offending instrument. Someday I hope to secure a little dictaphone which I can conceal on my desk. The pigeon is a good talker.

"I begin my Monday by flying back and forth near some house—and you'd be surprised how many there are—where they have the radio tuned in on the 7 a. m. Latter Day Saint studio worship service, the quarter of an hour when John Sheehy talks and Drexel Mollison plays the organ. I like that service. Then I snatch a few crumbs for breakfast before flying over to the Sanitarium. I like to see how the San is getting the week started—how my friends there are improving; how many new babies have arrived; something about the attitudes of the officers and nurses and the ministers who visit there.

"You have quite an early morning program," I ventured, "but where next?"

"To the Auditorium. I like to watch 'headquarters' get under way for the week, too. I have many friends in the church offices there. But one of the most interesting groups to watch on Monday is the women. Rain or shine, cold or hot—but it's been mostly cold—they're busy gathering up their sacrifice envelopes. I like to go to their regular Monday afternoon meetings, too. They're a peppy bunch—and work!—you don't know the half of it unless you trail them around an hour or two as I have done."

"But now you're through for the day?" My watch said a quarter after four.

"No, indeed I have several errands to do yet. The children are just getting home from school, and I have to find out how some of them got along with their lessons. And then there's an old minister down the street whose eyesight is failing—I like to call on him to give him any news I may have picked up."

"And after that?"

"Oh, it will be supper time, and then time to go to roost. Sometimes when Monday is almost gone, I'm glad I'm a bird and am not counted in on these church night meetings. I'd be exhausted if I had to attend club meetings, classes, and orchestra practices on Monday night, too."

"Then I take it you don't enjoy Mondays so much."

"Now who gave you that idea? I do enjoy them. They're never blue to me; they're always bright. How could I be discouraged when I see so many courageous, industrious, and kindly people about me? No, sir, I like Mondays."

Somewhere in the make-up of every one of us is a spark of kindness. But what peculiar ways we have of fanning that spark into a flame!

Editorial

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

WILLIAM PATTERSON, writing from Port Huron, Michigan, says: "Despite financial conditions in the world, we have reduced our debt four hundred dollars in six months, and have maintained our necessary current expenses. Tonight we conducted a supper which we hope will net us fifty dollars. This will be placed on a note which is now due. Port Huron received a severe economic blow last Saturday week, when a large bank closed its doors. A number of our people had their savings in this bank. The people became panic-stricken and a run was made on the other bank, which was offset by business strategy and a flow of currency from Detroit. One poor fellow lost his reason and was taken away to the mental institution; another died of heart failure; while others are breaking under the tension. These are times of stress which involve the lives of the people of the church, and I am wondering if we are going to prepare the Zion of God before the great crisis."

Not only in Port Huron, but elsewhere the pressure of the times is turning the eyes of the thinking and feeling people toward the Zion which soon must be. And let us not forget the prophetic warning which points to such time of pressure and danger that the Saints must need flee to Zion for safety, if they would not wage battle in fraternal or neighborhood warfare. But again let it be said, we have first to prepare the place of safety.

IT IS ALWAYS MORE PLEASANT to tell our readers about the good things written to us by officers and others; but to pass over some of the unpleasant things sent in, would be to ignore possible lessons. A district president wrote recently, and in speaking of certain branches he said: "Ministry as a whole very inactive. Scarcely any visiting or other activity outside of Sunday and Wednesday nights. No organized activity among the young folks. They do not seem to have caught the vision of the work."

Yes, that's it—they have not caught the vision of the work. "Without vision the people perish." It is not expected that every member will see the goals of the church in clearness; but somewhere among the "ministry" there must be some who see where we should go, and it becomes the duty of the ministers to point out the picture of our goals and objectives. But where "the ministry as a whole are very inactive," what can be expected of the others?

Just why the ministry in the district are not leading as they should is "hinted at" by the brother when he in speaking of "the lethargy in all departments" being due to the inactivity of the priesthood, says: "They have in the past been greatly disturbed by agitators and are not quite certain what it is all about."

That is one of the costs any organization must pay when a group of trouble makers or agitators or organized minorities attempt an overthrow of "the powers that be." Unfortunately, many have been disturbed; but gradually the disturbances are quieting, and a finer spirit of unity is spreading. But a crying need is for an alert priesthood in all branches. They must awaken! I could wish nothing better for the church than that every man who has been ordained would be alive to the needs of the work, restless in priestly duties, assiduous in study, and constantly in touch with the Saints, ministering to their needs—visiting, teaching, preaching, and exhorting.

And then an encouraging note creeps into the report. Still speaking of the priesthood, the district president says:

"I have been stressing the need of greater activity along all lines whenever it is my privilege to address them, and I believe I can see signs of life. I hope I am right."

Well, brother officer, keep at it, and it may be you can wake them up after awhile. And don't forget to hold that moribund group of ministers up in your prayers. You need divine help in arousing them. But the Spirit of the Master is moving among us, and the sleeping ones are in for being left in the rut, for we are onward to Zion.

A LETTER from one of the Saints in Jonesport, Maine, says:

"Newman, Ed. Wilson, and Lewis Hinkley have just completed the painting of the interior of the church, and it looks fine. The 'Willing Workers' supplied the money."

Now that's quite in harmony with the usual faculty the Jonesport Saints have of getting things done. The church always has looked neat and clean when I have seen it, and a factor in this appearance is the use of good paint. My guess is that the appearance of the interior of the church has been much improved by the skillful brushes of the brethren named, for I know somewhat of the versatility of those Maine men when it comes to "fixing up."

Samuel Twombly Passes

The sad news reaches us that another long-time servant of the church has passed on. It is Samuel Twombly, one of the Order of Evangelists, who died Monday, the 13th instant. Obsequies were held at Fanning, Kansas, long his home, and his standing in the community was attested by the attendance which overflowed the capacity of the church building. As head of family, citizen, church member and church officer, Brother Twombly had won and held the respect of all who knew him, the love of the many to whom he had ministered, and the friendship of hundreds who knew him well. Gentle in manner, kindly in word, helpful in attitude, active and loyal in his support of the church, he has left an enviable record and a place in the church which will cause him to be missed greatly. As man and priest he won and held our respect and love, and we grieve with his family. F. M. S.

Don't Wait for the Installments

Don't wait for the installments. Satisfy your curiosity and see how the story comes out now by purchasing the book. You'll probably want to read it over again anyhow, and lend it to some friend, or make a gift of it. Handsomely bound and modern in style, it compares favorably with the best books issued by the great publishing houses of the country. Its story of how character and goodness can triumph over temptation and wrong in the lives of very human people, of how the call of the church brings the best of ideals and service out of the ordinary imperfection of common living, is a worthy one to put in the hands of young people who have been all too conscious of the world and the problems it presents.

Send the Stories Soon

April 1 will soon be here, and with it the closing date for the Short Story Contest. All stories should be in our office by that time, as they will go into the hands of the judges immediately. A goodly number have already arrived, and we are hopefully expecting others. If you have not yet finished your story, you still have time to complete it. Hurry!

Names on Articles, Please!

An article arrived at the office a few days ago without either name or address attached. The postmark is so badly smeared that we can not tell the name of town or state where it was mailed. The Editors must know the name of the author before an article can be used. In this case we shall be unable even to report a decision to the writer.

OFFICIAL

Final Settlement of Church Radio Interests

As is well known to the church we at one time built up and owned a broadcasting station which was (and is) prominent among stations in the Mississippi Valley; but because of the unfavorable attitude assumed and persistently maintained by the Federal Radio Commission, we were compelled to sell the station to a group of men to operate as a business affair. These negotiations extended over quite a period of time, considerable difficulty being experienced in agreeing upon all the details. At the last General Conference, authority was given to the Presiding Bishopric to make necessary adjudication of the matter. The Presidency has received from the Presiding Bishopric an official communication indicating a satisfactory settlement of the case; and we herein present the communication:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 12, 1933.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
The Auditorium,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Brethren: We are glad to report to the church that in accordance with the authority given us by General Conference, April 12, 1932, and after receiving the advice and counsel of the Standing High Council, a complete agreement has been concluded respecting the radio interests of the church.

The Bill of Sale from the church to the directors of the Midland Broadcasting Company dated November 10, 1928, called for a cash payment out of the profits of the business, the obligation being secured by all of the capital stock of the Midland Broadcasting Company as collateral. This cash consideration is being met as profits accrue, and the total amount due has been increased fifty per cent by agreement.

As further consideration, as originally verbally provided for, the church is to receive for a period of ninety-nine years, extending from January, 1929, broadcasting facilities without cost, other than that of program material, or unusual broadcasts by remote control. These matters are fully defined and confirmed.

The purpose which led to the establishment of the radio, to place the message of the church upon the air, continues to be served, and the cash proceeds of the sale as received will aid in the discharge of debts and in carrying on the church's activities. Doubtless it will be a cause of gratification to the church, as it has been to those immediately concerned, that this hitherto "unfinished business" has been terminated.

Sincerely yours,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By L. F. P. CURRY.

It will be, I am sure, pleasing to the Saints, as it is to the Presidency, to know a full and satisfactory agreement has been reached between the Bishopric representing the church and the brethren of KMBC directorate. And we hope and believe that the broadcasting interests of the church will continue to be efficiently served by the station.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

A Tentative Program for the Conference

Purpose

This Conference and Convention has been called by the First Presidency as the one church-wide gathering of the year. It is significant that emphasis is placed upon young people and their place and work in the total program of the church. The Conference is of outstanding importance in the developing interests of young people who in the near future must carry forward the work of the Restoration. It is desired that representative young people, leaders, pastors and district presidents be in attendance.

Registration

The work of the Conference will be greatly facilitated if all who contemplate attendance will notify the Young People's Division, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, of their plans. No advance fees are required. Registration will take place at the Graceland Administrative building, Saturday, at 10 a. m. June 17. A single fee of $1.00 will entitle one to a copy of the official program, a ticket which will admit one to all sessions of the Conference and Convention and to the evening programs. The fee will also entitle one to obtain credit for the work of the Conference.

Credit in Religious Education and Leadership

It will be possible for one to attend two classes and two forums daily for six days, five evening lectures, and three Sunday addresses—a total of 31 hours.

This will make possible a total of 31 credits for those who attend throughout the session. Credit will be given those only who attend not less than 25 hours.

Board and Room

Board and room may be had at the college dormitories at $1.00 per day. As is customary with college students, each should bring his own linen and bedding.

The Program

In response to repeated requests from those planning attendance, we submit below a tentative schedule of the sessions. While subject to change this will indicate the nature of the Conference, the opportunities offered for training, the possible enrichment of our appreciation of the Restoration, and the enlistment of all in the responsible work of the church.

Youth's Forum

The Youth Conference Is For All Young People

We are happy to note the expressions of interest in the Youth Conference and the problems that it will discuss, even on the part of many who, because of the distance and expense, will not be able to attend.

This Youth Conference is for all young people. Those who can not be there will be considered as well as those who can. It is a church-wide affair. We hope to hear from many everywhere, and those in distant places can help by writing to us of their problems, their ideas, and experiences.

More than that, we expect the influence of the Conference, and of the young people to go on. A page devoted to the youth of the church, their problems, their letters, and matters of interest to them will be continued after the Conference is over.

Leaders of young people can help by undertaking preliminary discussions of the problems to be considered by the conference, and by writing to us of their findings.

Write to us. Other young people will be glad to know what you are doing through the columns of the Herald.

The Effect of the Right Decision

(The following is an extract of a letter to the First Presidency by Walton Lambkin, of Burksville, Illinois. It reflects a fine spirit of courage and devotion.)

I have a testimony of God's goodness which may interest you, and perhaps others, as my case parallels that of a good many young people today. About two years ago, I started to reawaken, spiritually. Since then, I have been blessed in many ways, in proportion to the effort and faith that I put into the work of God, but I wasn't fully following the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." I was worrying and working more for my own temporal good (in the form of a course at Graceland) than I was about God's work. About two or three weeks ago, I decided to quit worrying about the financial and physical matters of life, do what came my way in that, and center my efforts on my spiritual development and the service I could give to my church. Just making the decision helped me to do that. This week I was offered a correspondence course with the I. C. S. in the very subject I had been trying for two years to study. The offer came through the high school and costs me only paper and postage! And I have a chance for part time work.

The Story of Etta Kett

Something About "Blind" Dating

ETTA was frowning at a point just above the telephone transmitter.

"Bill, you know very well that I don't like a blind date."

Bill's reassurance came easily over the wire.

"Oh, he's all right, Etta, he's a cousin of Ralph Billings. Sorry I can't be along myself, but I just can't. He's a regular fellow. And I promised I'd help Ralph out. Give me a lift, won't you? Be a sport!"

Etta continued to frown. "Well, I'll do it for you, Bill, even if I don't like to. But I'll certainly hold you responsible if he isn't O. K."

"Thanks a lot, Etta. You've helped me out of a hole. I'll do something nice for you some day. So long."

Etta gave the stair step a vicious kick. "I'm a boob," she said as she went upstairs to dress. "I ought to know better."

Wilton Cummings was "good looking," "sort of like a well-fed race horse," Etta said afterward.

WHEN Ralph chose a quiet dark lane for the drive that evening, Etta's heart sank. When he brought the car to a stop at the side of the road, she was dismayed. When Ralph went into a clutch with his girl friend, and it looked like a spooning party, she was positively apprehensive. But when Wilton Cummings put his arm around her, her blood boiled.

"Mr. Cummings," she said in a firm and business-like tone, "I agreed to go on this party as a favor to a friend. He assured me that you are a regular fellow. But I didn't agree to let you paw me over like this, and I won't stand it now."

"Aw, be a sport, Etta," Ralph called back, and Ralph's girl giggled and snuggled closer to his shoulder.

"Come on—show the little boy a nice big good time," said Wilton.

For a moment Etta hesitated. She hated to be a killjoy. It would take a lot of nerve to do what she knew she ought to do. But it made her sick to think of spending the evening letting a strange man—well, you know what they do. She opened the car door and stepped out.

"No," she said, "I don't think I care for it. We've made a mistake. I'm not any more responsible for the mistake than you are. But I'm not going to do your way any more than you will do my way. Let's call it off. Good night!"

And Etta walked to the car line and thence went home.

The next day Bill was terribly sorry.

"I'm angry, Bill," said Etta over the phone, "very angry. But I'm not too angry to talk it over with you."

"Save a date for me. I'll be up tonight," said Bill.

Anticipating the Conference

A Word of Encouragement From Western Maine District

The young people here are anticipating the June Youth Conference. Because of financial conditions it is likely that there will be no representation from this branch, as far as we know now. But the young people here are heart and hand in it. It is their request that if possible you report at least part of what takes place, in the Herald. The young people, as well as the older ones, enjoy the articles on youth. We are busy here, and have on the average three or four meetings for the young people each week. We pray that the Conference will be a success in every way.

Forbidden Books

The corner of the Forbidden Books added a zest and a perilous excitement to our explorations. The grown-ups certainly had curious notions about what it was inadvisable for children to read. I read a good many of the Forbidden Books, almost all of them in fact, and found nothing bad in them. Some of them I found merely dull and returned them unfinished. I tasted Belzac, for instance, but didn't like the taste. Of course in later years, with the tremendous knowledge gained by grownupness, I should probably have coincided with Their view, but you have to know a good deal about badness in order to recognize it when you see it. If you are only young enough, you can read almost anything, skimming lightly and safely over unguessed depths of wickedness. It really was Ellen and the elders whose reading should have been restricted.—Margaret Lynn, in A Stepdaughter of the Prairie.

Men shirk political economy as they shirk housekeeping; yet it means nothing more abstruse than the art of managing a country as a housekeeper manages a house. If the men shirk it the women must tackle it. The nation has a certain income to manage on just as a housekeeper has; and the problem is how to spend that income to the greatest general advantage.—Bernard Shaw.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle Gleazer Tells of Conditions in Quake Stricken Area

Apostle E. J. Gleazer who was in Los Angeles during the recent earthquake, has visited the more heavily damaged areas of Long Beach and Compton, and is chief church informer as to the condition of Saints in the affected regions. He tells of his own experiences and the information he has obtained in a special letter in this issue, also in the introduction of the Long Beach, California, news letter.

In a late letter Brother Gleazer relates this incident: "We had quite a quake when I was preaching Friday night. The congregation was disturbed, but I calmed them. The building rocked and the pulpit jumped around a little. We had another temblor during the Sunday night service when I was speaking at Central Church. I was going strong and did not expect the shock. How I jumped! A girl screamed, about two thirds of the congregation jumped to their feet, and several went out. Seeing that a panic must be averted, I called out to them to be calm. The choir is still laughing at my calling upon them to be calm after jumping so hard myself."

Oldest Elder in British Isles Is Dead

John Austin, believed to have been the oldest elder of the church in the British Isles, died January 26, of this year, at the age of eighty-four years, eleven months, and seven days. He was ordained in November, 1879, and was a faithful Saint, a stalwart in the faith. It was his firm belief that the latter-day message would accomplish the purposes of God.

Great Day for Saints in Washington, D. C.

While March 4, was a great day for everyone in Washington, District of Columbia, the following day, Sunday, was more enjoyed by the little, growing band of Saints. Among the church officer guests of the services were Apostle Paul M. Hanson, District President H. L. Livingston, and Bishop and Sister E. L. Traver, of Boston.

On this day the Saints witnessed a beautiful ceremony of ordination when Brother William Froyd, who for a number of years has faithfully served the church in Washington, was ordained an elder by Brothers Hanson and Livingston.

Native Priesthood in Charge at Hilo, Hawaii

During the absence of their pastor, Elder R. L. Macrae, who was visiting Saints on neighboring islands, native priesthood members were in charge of the branch at Hilo, Hawaii, directed by Elder James A. Pauahau. Brother Macrae who is also missionary to Hawaii, left Hilo, February 9, to begin his tour.

Early last November the priesthood of Hilo began an intensive visiting campaign, strengthening church members and encouraging them to greater activity. This was followed by cottage preaching services marked by increasing interest.

Apostle J. A. Gillen in the South

Apostle J. A. Gillen recently conducted a short series of meetings at Alaflora Branch, near Brewton, Alabama, going from there to work with Saints at Pensacola, Florida. A short time ago he visited Mobile Branch, inspiring the Saints with his sermons.

Stone Church Intermediate Girls Prove Themselves Good Guests

Ninety girls of the Stone Church—most of them from the intermediate department—proved themselves splendid little guests at their department Saint Patrick's party, held in the Dining Hall, March 14. They had a happy time playing games, singing songs, and eating simple refreshments. Older, more care-weighed members would have found the world brighter and happier if they had been privileged to watch these girls frolic. At ten o'clock the guests departed, expressing unanimous appreciation of the entertainment, and asking department officers to "do it again."

The party was in charge of a committee of women teachers of the department, who were assisted by Miss Hazel Clow and by the Girl Scouts of Troops 46 and 37 (Stone Church).

Reunion Equipment Helps Quake Victims as Reconstruction Goes Forward

Reunion tents, mattresses, cots, and other equipment of Southern California District were taken to the homeless Saints of Long Beach Sunday, March 12, by Bishop D. B. Carmichael, of Santa Ana, and Brother Don Nimmo. These were loaned to provide adequate shelter to about sixty members temporarily housed with their pastor, J. L. Milner, while the work of reconstruction got under way.

An Eye-witness of the Earthquake

The following is an extract of a letter from Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who has been in the area affected by the earthquake. Sister Gleazer kindly permits us to print it.

Saturday Morning [March 11].

I know you will be anxious to know how I am. Thousands of telegrams have been sent out of Los Angeles, and I was afraid mine would be delayed.

I wrote that air mail letter at Sorden's yesterday afternoon. I had it in my pocket when the first quake hit us. I had left Sorden's, and was on a street car on my way downtown to catch a bus for East Side where I was scheduled to preach. I was reading that news clipping you sent me when I felt as if the trolley were leaving the wire; I looked up and everyone was jumping off the car. By this time the car was lurching and rocking on the tracks like a toy. I did not realize what was wrong. I thought something was ploughing in on us. I ran with the rest of them rocking from side to side until I landed on the sidewalk.

I looked to see what struck us, and seeing nothing, I asked what was wrong. Several answered me with disgust: "Don't you feel the earthquake?"

The power was off and we were delayed about fifteen minutes. The plate glass windows around where we stood were shattered. Bottles in the drug store were broken and piled on the floor.

As we continued downtown, expecting other shocks to follow, we saw chimneys down, windows broken, and the goods in stores scattered over the floors. When I reached the downtown section, I found the plate glass windows in department stores and banks shattered. The banks were open at last! I saw debris on the sidewalk and street. Parts of buildings had been broken off and thrown to the street. The people were out in the open, but this was dangerous because of loose concrete and the possibility of another shock. I finally went into a substantial building to get a little to eat. In the meantime I had mailed your letter and marked on the envelope "Safe."

When I reached the church I was surprised to see the crowd. Many of them did not know how serious the quake was as it struck the city in various degrees. We commenced to feel shocks in the church before I was through preaching and I preached the last ten minutes with small quakes accompanying me. Then we had another hard one that rocked the church.

After meeting we drove through Huntington Park. That is where I am rooming. Sorden's family had joined us. We could travel only on certain streets. Buildings were torn down and people had been killed. It looked as if the business center of Huntington Park had been shelled. Their beautiful high school was burned to the ground. All we could hear was the sirens of ambulances and fire trucks. Most of the ambulances were going and coming from Long Beach which had been hit so hard. The American Legion was called out to assist in policing Los Angeles. Sailors and marines were landed to police Long Beach. No cars were permitted to travel on any of the roads leading to Long Beach.

The authorities announced over the radio that another quake was due between midnight and one a. m. Of course we were having light quakes ever so often. Sordens and Sutherlands decided we would make for the hills to spend the night. We had to travel about twenty miles, but we reached the highest point. We found many others parked in cars all the way along. Many kept their cars in the street ready to dash if the condition got worse. We decided not to wait for we feared a panic. I could not sleep in the car, so you can imagine how I feel now. We came back to the house about 6:30 this morning. I tried to sleep, but the phone kept ringing, and we were still getting a few quakes. You never know how hard they are going to be so even the slight ones worry you.

We called Brother Milner, pastor at Long Beach, on the phone a short time ago. We could reach him by phone because he lives at Lomita. He said some of the members had lost their homes, but so far as he was able to find out, none had been hurt seriously. Of course no one knows yet how many are killed. We have not had a shake for the last two hours, and the hard ones seem over. . . .

You will never know what a night of terror we put in, although Los Angeles did not get it as bad as the smaller towns around. Of course Long Beach is not a small town. I know how the soldiers must have felt as they went over the top. We did not know but that the next quake would finish us. It is a terrible feeling and one is so helpless. You just have to wait and take it. Many ran for the street, but some were killed last night as they reached the sidewalk. The only safety seems to be in the open country. We were afraid of fire last night, and a tidal wave was reported, but the wave did not come.

Millions of dollars worth of property is ruined. There will be no trouble to find work here now. I can not describe the havoc.

Some Facts and Principles

(From a Radio Address)

By R. S. Salyards, sr.

THE DEPRESSION with unemployment, perplexities, and suffering is causing many to look downward, to the earth and to exponents of earthly lore, in the fields of industry, farming, economy, finance to find solution of problems that affect the peoples of all nations. It is right to take account of conditions, especially those which relate to welfare. It is necessary that man strive earnestly to solve his problems, to provide for present and future needs. "Self-preservation is the first law of nature." According to that axiom it has been the custom to make provision for physical life. The world as never before has developed physical resources to the extent that there is enough and to spare to meet all needs, in food, clothing, shelter, and general necessities. Food supplies are abundant, also of fuel, power, and light. Means of transportation and intercommunication are available; other resources contributing to physical sustenance and enjoyment in excess of any other period exist. There are also great stores of money in the realm, in the banks, the piled-up resources accumulated for future use.

But, confronting all peoples, is the paradoxical situation of the masses: millions unemployed, in want, hungry and in despair because lacking food, clothing, warmth, and shelter. "Perplexities of nations," based upon the facts recited, face statesmen, publicists, financiers, and economists. Thus far, remedy for the suffering has not been found and applied. There seems to be little or no unity of understanding among leaders of thought and action. The situation is admittedly precarious. It is conceded that the World War by which billions in property and millions of lives were destroyed and governments unsettled, was one of the leading causes of the situation; that competition among nations for the commerce of the world, with age-old animosities—that such factors constitute leading causes of the world-wide disaster. Whatever the cause, widespread suffering is international; no nation is exempt; mankind, though differing in opinion and antagonistic in attitude, are united in this: they are suffering in common, all sharing the perils from which none has been exempt. Socialism, Communism, Fascism and other forms of political and social control are offered as prescriptions to restore health to the masses, but no one has been able to effect a cure of the complex ills. Progress has been made in all lines of human endeavor in this modern period, and largely under democratic systems of government; but in this the great twentieth century of advancement in all fields of effort, the race seems to be confused, dismayed, unable of itself to solve its problems.

THE TRUTH IS, that with due appreciation of all the great and good, the intelligent and the learned, a leading fact stands out clearly and indisputably. It is this: "No one is wise enough after the flesh." Bancroft the historian said that in his funeral oration on the death of Abraham Lincoln, in reviewing the efforts of Presidents who preceded Lincoln in endeavor to solve the problem of slavery. He discerned in Lincoln a man not trained in the popular schools of political thought, but one nurtured in the wilderness of the primal west, a man raised up and endowed by divine providence to administer the government in the greatest crisis of our nation.

There has been always a remedy for any abnormal condition, but to apply the remedy the disease must be diagnosed. The symptoms are so plain that he who runs may read. The present situation has resulted from disregard of cosmic, universal law. The race has reversed the true order of life. It is written in the word of God that "man does not live by bread alone." The world has gone mad in the pursuit of material wealth, in the strife for riches and pleasures, for physical satisfactions. It has developed and fed to extreme its materialistic appetites. Advancing in science, applying its powers to development of physical resources, it has largely forgotten its Maker and disregarded his sovereign power—the Power underlying all science and order. It has "worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever." Saint Paul said that and similar things concerning the ancient nations that had forgotten God and turned to heathenism and its corrupting evils that caused their downfall. But what he then said in his Roman letter applies to much of our own time. Heathenism is not confined to worship of crude idols of wood and stone; its basic evil is loss of disposition and responsibility toward God and fellow man; its attendant worldliness, carnality, selfishness, love of power, strife for advantage over fellow beings, resort to methods that rob men of common rights. Such are the fruits of heathenism in its unnatural turning from obligations to God and to man. It exists in manifold aspects, but in essence it is in all ages the same in principle.

We have much of heathenism in our own times, with our boasted culture and refinement. The same results as anciently are in evidence, because, notwithstanding great discoveries and developments, there has been and is pagan ignorance of God—crass, stupid ignoring of obligation to God and man. The sacred record says, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." The world is experiencing some of the fruits of that forgetfulness; and the end is not yet.

GOD is the self-evident First Cause of life and being. His attributes and works indicate his existence and perfection. Man is innately aware of his sovereign power and rule. He is dependent upon his Creator. All forces, all law and order witness "his eternal power and Godhead." Man can not find a substitute for Him. His nature and attributes are such as justify the ways of God to man. They meet the demands of human intelligence in its highest and best requirements. The first words of the divine record are, "In the beginning God." This is significant. It also states him to be both beginning and end of life. All life centers in and is maintained by him. "Whither shall I flee from thy presence?" exclaimed the Psalmist. The race has largely ignored the great truth that God is, and that man should seek and find and serve him. It has assented to nominal belief in God, but in the main has not sought to be in conscious harmony with him.

Belief in God, acknowledgment of God, obedience to the divine will, ties man to his Maker. It places him in rapport with the central Sun of the universe, with all the forces that minister to his good. It develops and enforces a sense of conscious association with and responsibility to the law given to govern man. This apprehension of God and enlightened cooperation with him have been inherent as desirable and necessary in the minds of good, intelligent men, from the dawn of history. The judgment and conscience of the race also has accepted conviction of existence of Deity as a fundamental necessity. It has been the normal conclusion of the best minds. It is impossible to erase that conviction from consciousness. It is as much a patent, self-evident fact as any visible, tangible material fact. It persists in the face of all skeptical, obtuse, disobedient denial. It will not down, but remains the basic, outstanding potent factor in conscious personality.

This fact of God means for man more than nominal acceptance. All forms of life, all elements, all existence is subject to the domain of all-pervading law. "Nature" is not a system of blind, unrelated, mechanical forces which act and react without system and order. All parts are interrelated, interdependent, and interpenetrate in unity of manifestation to an ordered end. In the operation of universal law there is order, quantity, quality, means to end manifest throughout the vast reaches of space. Interaction, conjunction, exactness, mathematical accuracy, certainty, make clear the indwelling, sustaining, universal Personality of God. All intelligence is personal; we know of no other manifestation of mind or intelligence. The personality of God is deducible from nature as well as from the word. And it is in harmony with our human experience.

BUT God is not manifest only in the physical creation and its power. He is a moral being; he is not revealed only in physical creation. Before the physical, antedating all there must have been and is, purpose, intention, law, order, Being, superior to the creations, above and apart from them. God's nature is moral, spiritual. Wisdom, knowledge, affection, love, mercy, et al., attributes of God—these things are great and superior realities; they are eternal, and can not be made void and of none effect in the absorption of the soul in pursuit of the carnal, the material. The nature of God demands morality, consistency, truth in man "his offspring." Man is created with attributes similar in nature to the attributes of God; but man, greatest of all creation, has been and is rebellious, disobedient, self-willed in enmity to God, in antagonism to the "eternal purpose," which provides for ultimate completeness and perfection. It is not necessary to present theological doctrine to set forth the fallen, perverted nature of man; it is apparent. He is blinded by self-interest, generally satisfied if physically well provided for. He seeks his own, greatly in disregard of fellow beings. This is seen in political oppressions, inequalities, and other manifestations of cold-blooded selfishness. Partisanship, one great bane of our national life, is exhibited in reprehensible adherence to party in contravention to general welfare. Statesmanship, public weal, are lost sight of in unpatriotic adhesion to selfish ends. As a result great evils thrive while the masses are dissatisfied, despairing of relief. Revolution, violence, threatens; but wrong holds tenaciously.

A sincere effort "to establish justice, promote the general welfare, insure domestic tranquillity, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," stated in the enacting clause of our national constitution, is not sufficiently in evidence. There is disobedience to God, in lawlessness and crime, now increasingly menacing our institutions.

It has now been decided by Congress that the states are to have another opportunity to decide on the fate of national prohibition and the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution. It is to be regretted that so many of the American people are minded to approve the return of liquor. And the liquor interests themselves are apparently ready to abandon all pre-campaign pledges about not bringing back the saloon. For the present, prohibitionists seem destined to enter into a difficult and losing contest to preserve their gains.

Problems of the Eighteenth Amendment

By A. B. Phillips

Many politicians and others who favor repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment now claim that the political landslide of the recent national election proves that an overwhelming majority of our citizens desire the outright repeal of the national prohibition laws and the return of liquor license under State control.

To this supposition it may be said, that a careful examination reveals the fact that in many states and cities of our nation votes were cast for candidates who favored repeal, even when the voter himself was opposed to repeal. The large number of instances in which this occurred proves that with many voters other considerations far outweighed the question of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Most of the late remarkable change in party affiliations developed during the present economic depression, and did not arise from any recent outstanding experience with the liquor problems, for during the past year prohibition enforcement has to some extent improved in the United States as a whole. This fact is proved by no less an authority than Colonel Woodcock, in his report as Director of the Bureau of Prohibition. For these reasons it may be well if our political doctors who are observing the nation's pulse decide to give more consideration to the effects of the depression, and to revise their diagnosis of the patient's disease, lest they attempt improper treatment and increase his illness.

Why the Nation Adopted Prohibition

The conditions which caused the Eighteenth Amendment to be adopted did not arise suddenly, but had developed over a period of many years. The use of alcoholic liquors had proved to be a moral, social, political, and economic evil for many decades. It had proved to be a breeder of immorality and crime, a destroyer of peace and safety in society and the home, a corrupter of national, state, and local politics; and a producer of misery, destitution, and sickness wherever its indulgence was not restrained.

The liquor business had not only degraded the whole social fabric and endangered the very foundations of public and private life, but it also threatened the integrity and stability of national, state, and local governments themselves. Something of this serious menace was noted by the Wickersham Commission, which was composed of eleven of the most distinguished jurists, educators, and other prominent individuals of national reputation. By unanimous agreement the Preliminary in section four of the Commission's report made the following statement:

"Organized liquor interests contributed to the campaign expenses of candidates for National, State, and local offices. Laws and ordinances regulatory of saloons were constantly and notoriously violated in many localities. The corruption of the police by the liquor interests was widespread. The liquor organizations raised large funds to defeat the nomination or election of legislators who opposed their interests. The liquor vote was the largest unified, deliverable vote."—Prohibition Manual, page 1.

After twelve years of national prohibition there are millions of young voters today who have little or no memory of the intolerable and shocking evils that formerly permeated all sections of the nation and most of its communities. Therefore it is perhaps to be expected that the persistent misrepresentations of the Wets may deceive many who are told that conditions are now worse than before the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted. Every one who can realize that the former evils were far worse than those of today, and that every other known means of eradicating those evils had failed, can understand why national prohibition was finally adopted. In a pamphlet issued in 1930 by the Department of Justice at Washington, it is declared:

"Speakeasies flourished under State control, so did political corruption; synthetic liquor, just as poisonous as any bootleg liquor sold today, was legally sold in misbranded packages. Brewers and distillers were more obnoxious than the bootlegger and gangster of today, because they worked under the cloak of the law and respectability, yet encouraged gambling, prostitution, and illicit sales."—Value of Law Observance, page 46.

Former Attemps at Liquor Control

In every nation of the world the history of liquor is a history of corruption, crime, and unnumbered evils, menacing the social, political, and economic body. It is universally recognized as an evil by all men and women of unquestionable moral and ethical standing and habits, and is even admitted to be such by many who indulge in its use. Almost every method conceivable has at one time or another been employed to destroy or control the nefarious business, but no system has ever been divised and tried that has been one hundred per cent effective. The Eighteenth Amendment has accomplished more, however, than all other methods combined, though it has existed but twelve years, and satisfactory attempts at enforcement were not put in operation during the greater part of that time, because of opposition.

Prior to prohibition, various appeals had been made to the conscience and morals of those who had brought disgrace upon themselves and their families. This helped to some extent, but many were either lacking in moral rectitude or were too weak to resist temptation, which was constantly and sometimes diabolically placed before them by the liquor interests. Then temperance societies were formed, and many who were addicted to drink signed the pledge to abstain from intoxicants, but in many instances were compelled by liquor men to return to drink, force sometimes being used.

In dealing with this situation, various laws were enacted, and Federal, State, and local licenses were required. But this was not wholly effective, for by means of many speakeasies, forgery, perjury, and other lawless schemes, licenses were avoided. Various systems of taxes were also tried, and attempts were made to limit production and distribution of liquor by different expedients. State control, and State or local dispensaries were established in a number of instances. But any and all methods that permitted the use of intoxicants as a beverage were flagrantly violated, for the fundamental reason that men who insisted upon evils which produced such great immorality, poverty, and misery, would not respect either the morals or laws of any honorable and respectable nation or society.

Evils That Led to Prohibition

The truth became more and more apparent, that the only successful way to prevent the vicious results of liquor is to prohibit its beverage use. All other means had been tried thoroughly and patiently, and the result of every method employed proved conclusively that to license its use was to invite iniquity to masquerade in the cloak of respectability. One reason why many law violators today demand repeal of prohibition is, that the disreputable use of intoxicants may be whitewashed by the law and thus give appearance of decency.

Many vicious evils that became manifest under liquor licence forced the conclusion that only prohibition by the Federal Government could ever protect the rights and welfare of the people. A great majority of them were being injured in divers ways, morally, physically, or economically. The liquor business not only increased crime, and therefore taxes with which to suppress crime, but it caused remarkable depreciation of property in many places. It forced higher taxes also to provide for the destitute women and children of drunkards, who often became moral and mental derelicts. It caused a fearful increase of intoxication and moral delinquency among both women and children, and scientific research proved that it was fast causing physical degeneracy of the race, leaving its effects upon the germ cells and functional organs of the body in many ways.

These facts, and a host of others that would fill volumes, have brought home to the nation the alcoholic peril to its very existence. They are not the hastily formed opinions of a few ignorant men, but are the proved results affirmed by leading medical experts of the nation. They included such notables as Doctor Emerson, Professor of Public Health Administration at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University; the famous Doctor Mayo, whose great reputation is world-wide; Doctor Brown, mental hygiene expert of New York; Doctor Partlow, well-known superintendent of Alabama Insane Hospitals; Doctor Doll, of the Vineland Training School, and Doctor Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium. The statement of Doctor Alexander Bryce, well-known expert of New York, is representative of the important discoveries made. He states:

"The result of medical inspection in the schools of New York has revealed the fact that 53 per cent of the children of alcoholic parents are 'dullards' as compared with 10 per cent of the children of abstainers."—Prohibition Facts; page 32.

The Educational Problem of Prohibition

If every man and woman, and every boy and girl, were adequately informed in regard to the liquor problem, it would be far less difficult of solution. Reasons for retaining the Eighteenth Amendment, perhaps with such additional Federal and State enactments as will secure better cooperation in its enforcement, are many and so well-founded that our

A Problem Story for Young Home Builders

Riches Untold

Does a Woman Know When to Quit?

Chapter 12

Enter—Temperance

LONG before daylight Polly had laid her plans. She would surrender her chairmanship of the group Harvest Home Festival work; the remodeling of clothes she did for the Commodity Shop, she would do at home. She would give up the Happy Half Dozen, too. After all, she had had them long enough. Time and again the ugly question pushed itself into her consciousness: "What will you do if all this is too late? If you can't hold Brad any longer?"

For four long hours she lay weighing the various elements of her problems against each other. And the more she thought, the larger the difficulties seemed to grow. Bravely she faced the situation, resolving to do her best to right the wrongs of which she herself was guilty, to atone for neglect, to be forgiving. Many times during that dark morning, she prayed for strength and understanding.

When the alarm sounded at six-thirty her head ached so miserably that she could scarcely raise it from the pillow, and Brad ordered her to stay in bed. He brought Carrol, who in his waking hours delighted in telling "sekets" to his red rubber rabbit, "Remus," and put him in bed with Polly before he went downstairs to fire up and to prepare his breakfast. It was not long until the odor of boiling coffee and frying eggs floated upstairs.

Before leaving for the office, he came upstairs, seated himself on the side of the bed, and looked anxiously at her. "Now, dear," he told her, "Mother's up, and she'll take care of things, so you're not to worry. Just rest and sleep. Yesterday was too much for you." How cool his hands felt on her throbbing forehead. "I'm going to send the doctor out. We can't afford to have you sick."

"Oh, I'm all right. It's just my head," stammered Polly. "I don't need the doctor. I'll be fine, and I'll be up by noon, really."

"You're to do no such thing. Mother's going to bring you some breakfast in a little bit, and she wants the kid downstairs so you can have it quiet."

"Oh, Brad," Polly managed a feeble laugh, "don't get excited—I'm all right. Don't worry. I tell you I'll be up by noon."

But it was several noons, a whole week of them, before she was allowed downstairs.

The doctor on the first day diagnosed her case as being "as near a nervous breakdown without actually breaking," as he had ever seen.

During her illness everyone was very kind. Mother Nelson took charge of the house, and daily reported that Carrol was being "unusually good." Brad climbed the stairs dozens of times each day, doing this and that to make his wife comfortable, and Edith flitted about the house like a brown shadow. The members of the Happy Half Dozen were permitted to see their leader long enough to tell her hello and to bring her gifts of fruits and flowers. All of them came except Echo. Sister Livingston visited Polly at least twice every day, bringing choice little bits of news. She also cooked "special invalid" dishes and brought them over in her best pewter ware.

Brother Evans, elder in the group, brought another elder with him and administered to Polly three evenings in succession. For a time it seemed to her that his prayers were all that mattered in the world. They were full of cheer and hope and comfort, and Polly looked to them for help.

The neighbors were lovely. They called often to inquire about her, sent fruits and kind wishes, and offered, "If there's anything we can do to help—just let us know."

MEANWHILE Polly suffered hours of torture and doubt that the rest knew nothing about. Over and over again she went over the events leading up to the Valentine party and then the party itself. She thought of the many things she had been doing, activities that kept her away from home long hours and of Brad's patience; of the coming of his mother and her negative influence in their home; of Brad's following her into the pantry that time long ago (at least it seemed long ago); of his telling her only last Saturday morning that he wanted to talk to her, that there was something he wanted to explain, but she had been too busy to listen to him; of that night when she had freed herself of club meeting only to find that he was "busy," and of all the events of the party.

She longed every hour of the day to see Brad, but when he came into the room, his very presence made her weak and shrinking. She wished a thousand times as he bent over her, to fling her arms about his neck and say: "It's all my fault, darling. Let's forget it and start all over again." But the words wouldn't come. Something always reminded her, "He lied to you, Polly," and pride sealed her lips.

And when one day she picked up a volume of selected poems Edith had left for her, she read this one by Robert Louis Stevenson:

"If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!"

She groaned. Certainly she had faltered in her task of happiness. She had been obdurate, blind. And was this — Brad and Echo — her "piercing pain"?

Brad carried her downstairs to the living room the first night she was permitted downstairs, and very gently propped her in his big leather chair which he hauled in from the study. Just the effort of sitting up made her weary.

During the days of Polly's illness Mrs. Nelson had proved a capable housekeeper and nurse. There was something about the presence of a sick person that softened her tongue. "And she's so busy," Brad had confided to his wife, "that she doesn't have time to jaw at me every time I make a move."

"Dearie me, Polly," she was proudly surveying her patient, "but you've lost ten pounds, I'll warrant."

Polly was pillowed in front of the fire, Carrol, very still and mouselike in the chair beside her. His father had promised him he might sit there if he didn't "wiggle like an eel."

"Well, I could afford to do that," returned Polly, trying hard to be her old self, but failing because she was so weak and trembly. "I was pretty fat, you know."

"Fat!" scoffed Brad tenderly, "you weighed all of one hundred and twenty-five, didn't you? . . . Now tell me when you're tired, darling, for Doctor Royce says you're not to be up long enough to overtax your strength."

"You treat me as if I were a china doll," retorted Polly not realizing how large and luminous were the eyes she raised to her husband's.

"You're much more important than that," he softly assured her.

She wanted, when Mrs. Nelson left the room, to turn to him and ask: "What have you done about Echo?" But she knew she would not. That something that seemed like a cold, heavy stone in her heart had grown larger, colder, during the week.

But a yearning for sympathetic understanding compelled her to give expression to some of her misery. "Oh, Brad," there was petulance in her tone, "I've been having the worst dreams about you since I've been sick, and I'm so worried!"

"Tell me about them," he urged. The hand which held both of hers was strong and warm. "Tell me, Polly."

"I can't," she quavered, feeling foolishly near tears.

"Can't you tell me everything, Polly?" The question was low, for Mother Nelson was no farther than the dining room.

"Can you, Brad?" The directness of her question did not make him flinch as she had expected.

For a long moment he looked at her, smiled reassuringly, and then said: "Yes, dearest, I can tell you everything when you are stronger."

From that moment Polly began to grow better. Strength seemed to return to her hourly. The old light came back to her eyes, the spring to her step, and everyone remarked at her improvement.

THE first night she was able to go out, she and Brad went to prayer meeting, a few doors down the street. Edith had offered to take care of Carrol, pleading that she was "seeking solitude" to write a letter to Dan. Mother Nelson and Sister Livingston started earlier to the service than the young Nelsons.

The group members welcomed Polly and Brad quietly but with genuine happiness.

"Here, Sister Nelson," a gray-haired man insisted, "take this comfortable chair."

And Polly sank into its velvety depths as Brother Evans arose to open the service. He was a tall, fair man of about fifty-five years. When he spoke to a group of people, each person had the peculiar sensation that he was being directly addressed. Frank, faithful, sincere, he was liked by everyone, and there was something very soothing about the way he expressed his thoughts.

"Saints," he began, "I feel that tonight there is a need on the part of some of us, or perhaps all of us who are here assembled, to be reminded of a few of the fundamentals of righteous and happy living, and I have chosen to read to you the fourth paragraph of the eleventh section of Doctrine and Covenants. This is a part of a revelation given to Joseph Knight, sr., in 1829, but the lesson applies to all of us today:

" 'Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care. Behold, I am the light and the life of the world, that speaketh these words; therefore, give heed with all your might, and then you are called.' "

And then they were singing, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Not until that moment did Polly realize how much she had missed the church services during her illness. She did not sing with the rest for her heart was too full of tumultuous joy, and the melody seemed to sweep into her soul, carrying away all the little misgivings that had besieged her. And, too, she was thinking of the Scripture reading and its application in the lives of those about her. Certainly Brother and Sister Evans were living those divine injunctions, and Sister Livingston, and others were trying hard. She wanted to be like them, but the words: "Being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care," rang in her ears. She, Polly Nelson, knew nothing of temperance. She had forgotten in the rush of doing things that temperance is something that should be applied to work as well as other activities. She had not been temperate in the things intrusted to her care.

When Brother Evans gave the opening remarks at prayer meeting, everyone listened. They liked his direct, sincere applications of the lessons he chose to read. They liked his humility. They wanted to be like him.

"Saints," he was saying, "there is something about this revelation that brings home to us questions about ourselves and the things we are doing. It acts as a check by which we may know if we are coming up to the qualifications God asks of his children—humility, love, faith, hope, charity, and temperance.

"Together we are striving for more zionic conditions in our lives and in the lives of those about us. The very word Zion strikes a responsive chord in the hearts of all of us. We think of it, talk of it, pray about it, and sing about it. It is the greatest thing in the world to us. What would we do without the hope of Zion? But, Saints, before we can have the Zion of which we dream and for which many are working, we must live the full law of God, and this paragraph I have read tonight is part of His law, an important part.

"When we are humble and full of love and faithful; when we have hope and charity and temperance, ours will be a happy community. Ours will be a happy world. Then some will not be overworked while others do nothing. Hardness of heart, misunderstanding, and mistakes will be forgotten.

"These things, friends, are Christlike. Jesus, when he was here, taught them. He lived humbly. He taught faith, hope and charity. He was the Master of understanding, balance, and temperance. These things tonight, Saints, I feel it strongly, deserve our prayerful consideration."

Old Brother Barton, across the room from Polly, nodded his head at the end of almost every sentence, and at the close of the talk gave expression to his feelings in a vehement "Amen."

Mrs. Nelson's eyes were dewy, and there were lines of repose and calm in her face. Brad was gazing steadily at the hymn pamphlet open on his knee, but his wife knew that he had heard. Brad was a good listener.

At the close of the service some seemed reluctant to leave. A little group stood about the dining table discussing thoughts aroused by the remarks of the elder. Among these were Sister Livingston and Mrs. Nelson.

While Brother Brown and Brother Henderson were discussing the whims of the weather with Brad, Polly found time to speak to Brother Evans who had stationed himself near the door to bid each one good-night.

"I wish I could tell you how much your talk helped me tonight, Brother Evans," and she slipped her hand into his with a confidence born of years of association and understanding.

His kindly, blue eyes glowed: "Do you know, Polly, I was led to say those things tonight. I hadn't planned to talk on that subject at all, but something impressed me that some one was here who needed them. The Spirit was certainly with us. And the more I talked and looked into your face, the more I felt the person who needed my remarks was you. Sister Evans and I have often spoken of you. It's the temperance part that's troubling you, isn't it? You've been doing so much."

His genuine interest and concern moved Polly. Her troubled heart responded to his sincerity. She looked at him through a sudden mist of tears: "I am worried, Brother Evans," she confessed in a low tone. "I've neglected some things that I should

Pressing Forward

By J. E. Vanderwood

IN THE COURSE OF EVENTS there is need for man to make progress, to unfold and enrich his life and usefulness among men; and as we come to view the landscape, and take into consideration the factors that go to make up life, we see there is need of enlarging our concepts. I am persuaded that there is nothing so sublimely noble and beautiful as a properly poised life, a sunny disposition, and a kind and gentle spirit revealing itself in the children of men. This, and more, the teaching of Christ is intended to develop within us, and in the measure that we pursue its leading will we come to be benefactors to the race. Men can only advance as they enlarge their concepts, and this may be successfully done through a proper application of the principles of the teaching of Christ to our lives. In order to advance in the things that are of most importance to men they must be reborn, that is to say, they must be regenerated, made new, aroused to a consciousness of their real need and of the possibilities that lie before them. Man can advance only insofar as he sees the need for advancement. He must come to the place where he is willing to bestir himself and lay hold upon every opportunity that presents itself; yea, more, he must create opportunity by concentrating in thought upon the things that will enlarge his understanding, enrich his thinking, and soften his attitudes toward men and things about him.

WE SHOULD COME TO LEARN that Christ came into the world as a fleshly man that he might be able to demonstrate to us the possibilities of human life; he wanted us to find the life that is more abundant, and to share in the blessedness of service to those who are less fortunate than ourselves. He said, "Learn of me," that is to say begin to exercise your faculties, enlarge your concepts, and ennoble your thoughts by giving heed to my precept and to my example. If you are to share in the life that is life indeed you must begin to partake of the things that will produce that life, you must dwell in thought upon the things that are pure and beautiful until they become a very part of your being, yea, until they become your very selves. It is the purpose of the Christian religion to develop and unfold the life of man in this way, and to fashion it after the pattern that was so majestically revealed in the man of Galilee. Let us think of the privilege we have extended to us of becoming like him in nature. This at once becomes so infinitely important that it demands the best there is in us, for as yet none of us have attained to this blessed state; we have not reached the stature of Christ in the poise of life and in the expression or, revelation of character. There is much that the invitation to "Follow me," enjoins upon us, there is much that should be considered by us as we contemplate the course that he has so graciously revealed to us. To begin with we discover that it is written of him, "He went about doing good," and the sole purpose of life should be to help our fellow men come into a better state or condition in life. The most important thing in religion is the opportunity it affords us of having the privilege of growing into the likeness of the One divinely beautiful. It is the means of enabling us to come in possession of the powers of godliness; that is to say, it is possible through a proper application of the teaching and the example of the Master for ordinary men as we are to come into possession of the qualities that will enable us to become workers together with him, and in this way, and by this means, come to grow more and more into the likeness of the Infinite; while by the same process we will be able to render a service to humanity that shall assist them also in the forward movement.

IT IS WELL for us to observe that Christ had but one purpose, and that was to do his Father's will; he came into the world with a very definite purpose, and he asks us to follow him in this as well as other things that he revealed for our profit and learning. His single purpose was revealed in the work that was daily performed by him. He was careful to represent the Father in all things. We are too prone to represent him only in a few minor things, and to permit the larger or more worthwhile things to escape our attention. The Master said, "I do all things that he hath commanded me." For example, when he requested baptism at the hands of John, he said, "Thus we ought to fulfill every righteous duty" (see Weymouth's translation, Matthew 3) and by reason of his obedience to the divine will he was made a sharer in the divine blessing, for the writer of the biography of his life informs us that the heavens were immediately opened to him, and the Spirit like a dove descended upon him, and that it (this divine Spirit), abode upon him. Christ himself was baptized by a man whom God had sent and the result was the birth of the Spirit, he became a possessor of that which before had not been a part of his earth life. True he had been led of the Spirit, he had felt its quickening impulse, but the gentle dovelike Spirit now abides with him, the Spirit becomes his companion, his constant supporter and strength.

HERE is the most profound truth of the Christian religion. After receiving baptism we are told the Spirit descended upon him and abode with him. Hitherto he was not the constant possessor of the Divine Presence, but from this time on he was. If we will but follow him here we too shall come to share in that fellowship, in that presence of the divine Comforter whom the world can not receive, we may share in the dovelike Spirit that descended upon him, that most gentle Spirit that made him the most perfect and complete representative of God the world has ever beheld. It was his purpose to press forward in his labor of love, and his service among men, until the ends of the earth would be able to see, and understand the mission of the Son, and come to have an admiration for the things that are divinely beautiful.

IN WRITING to the Philippian saints, Paul said: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." This wonderful man was saying that he had but a single purpose, and a definite purpose in life; and that he was determined to press forward unto the mark for the high calling of God; and let me say here that the high calling of God is of such importance as to demand the attention and the earnest consideration of all mankind. It also brings to us the outstanding message of life caught up in the one thought that he who is to achieve the highest and best must be devoted to but one supreme cause, and that every thing must be made to contribute to this end. That is to say, the man, or the people, who would come to the realization of the best, must of necessity be dedicated to but one supreme task, and that task should be the subordinating of all things to the accomplishment of the one supreme task, which is the shaping of a life, and a service of life, that is so closely related to the Christ that whereever we may be found in life we may be able to reveal to men the relationship we have with the Infinite one. It is therefore of most vital importance that we come to see in the Christian religion the possibility of becoming all that the high calling of God will make us, and if it is properly received and properly applied it will transform our lives, and our service, into the likeness of the Just One. But in order to have it bring us to this condition we must let it become a reality; we, like the Master of men must make it flesh. That is to say, we must live so as to cause men on earth with whom we are permitted to mingle to discover such a relationship with him that they may be able to see his life reflected in that which we do and say. And if this be not done we are not pressing forward in our endeavor to reach the mark that is set us in Christ.

THIS ONE THING I DO, should be thought about and affirmed by every one who would be a follower of the Master. There can be no real progress in life until man has determined to concentrate his efforts upon one objective; he can only achieve his objective as he presses forward in pursuit of the goal that is set for him. One reason why many of us fail is that we are divided in thought, in aim, and in purpose. We divide our efforts, and we mingle the trivial with the sublime until we come to the place where there is no certainty or even soundness in us. We permit things of no consequence to deter us from our course, and we wander so far afield that we lose our course and are compelled to wander about in uncertainty until the pathway of life is obscured from our view. The Master kept his course; he was able to make contact with the Infinite at any time, and the secret of this rested in the fact that he did always the things that pleased his Father. If we would come to believe God, as did Abraham, we like him would be called the friend of God, and being the friend of God we would be entitled to his association and his leadership; and like him we would make our labor among men the basis of our discipleship, for we would demonstrate our relationship with God by the works we do in his name. I am convinced too, that if we were willing always to conform our wills to his will by learning to respect his counsel, and to follow his example we too would have the heavens open to us after our baptism, and we would come to share in the excellency of his Spirit to the degree that it would abide with us continually, and we would be able therefore to speak as those who possess authority, for we would reveal Christ in our labors of love.

not, and now I'm trying to make amends. Your talk helped me—oh, so much."

"Sister Evans and I will pray with you, Polly," he replied in the same low tone, and then turned: "'Good evening, Brother Nelson, how are you? It's mighty nice to have you and your wife out with us again."

"Isn't he the sincerest man!" thrilled Polly as she clung to her husband's arm on the way home.

"Something striking about him all right," agreed Brad. "It's not every man that can wish you a 'God bless you' at the end of a meeting, and leave you thinking he means it."

chief problem now appears to be a more complete and more general education throughout the nation. Many States have passed laws requiring education on this subject in the schools, and in some States these laws are so compulsory that those in charge of the schools neglect them at the peril of their position. But other States appear to have been unduly optimistic in supposing that general observance of the law would follow its enactment. Special instruction concerning alcohol is required in many States, including the State of Missouri, but in many of the schools the law has been largely disregarded. A well organized effort of prohibition supporters to insist upon observance of the law would doubtless be helpful. The Missouri law, in some ways similar to other State laws, contains this requirement:

"Physiology and hygiene, including their several branches, with special instruction as to tuberculosis, its nature, causes and prevention, and the effect of alcoholic drinks, narcotics, and stimulants on the human system, shall constitute a part of the course of instruction, and be taught in all schools supported wholly or in part by public money, or under State control."—Revised Statutes of 1919, section 11162.

The governments of Canada, France, and other leading nations have found the liquor problem of such a serious character that they have sought to educate and warn the people against the use of alcoholic beverages. After scientific investigation in Germany has revealed the dangerous effects of intoxicants, the former Kaiser, William II, urged his subjects to total abstinence, and made the following startling prediction:

"The next war and the next naval battle will demand of you sound nerves. Nerve power will decide the victory. Victory will lie with the nation that uses the smallest amount of alcohol. That, gentlemen, must be your position, not as individuals, but as patriots."—Alcohol, page 8.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF PROHIBITION

The better education of our people on this subject must include more than physiological aspects, though directly they are of chief importance, perhaps. With this question are also involved social problems of great moment. The unfortunate attitude of some prominent men and women of the nation is weaking to the morals of many who have come to realize to some extent the evils of liquor license, but who are influenced by others of social standing who do not hesitate to proclaim their desire for liquor and their determination to indulge in it regardless of the misery it has caused and will cause.

Those who recognize and honor the obligation to refrain from that which so

generally is injurious to human life, security, and happiness, can usually be trusted to support the laws enacted for the common good. But there are many others who selfishly disregard the laws that they do not happen to want. Many of these individuals are of the criminal class, but others are among our respected citizens,—respected at least by many of the thoughtless multitude. In this way even criminals often have the sympathy of more worthy people. This problem must be solved, or we shall suffer a breakdown of civilization. Much harm is caused by those who advocate lawlessness in any form. It seems almost incredible to right-thinking people that open defiance of the Eighteenth Amendment should be advocated in full-page advertisements of various papers. Yet the following statement was so published. It stated:

"I call upon every free-thinking American who can think at all to break this law; break it repeatedly; break it whenever you can. Drink what you please when you please. Urge others to drink. Don't betray the bootleggers who are smuggling liquor to you."—Prohibition Facts, page 90.

The problem of the unsocial minded is of far graver importance to the nation, and even to the home, than might be supposed. No social organization can long endure without a right social attitude toward others on the part of its individuals. The precept of Christ when he said, "love thy neighbor as thyself," must be honored at least in some degree if society is to endure.

The Eighteenth Amendment is perhaps a nearer approach to this basic precept of Jesus than any other amendment of our Federal Constitution. In order to preserve it, a more unselfish regard for the moral and material well-being of our fellow men must be secured, for without such regard our higher ideals can not be maintained. When these fraternal ideals are sufficiently instilled in human hearts, we shall move forward with a power that ever leads to victory.

Trusts are violated by men in control of financial and service corporations in which thousands have invested their savings; sexual immorality and general corruption in disregard of basic virtues stalk abroad and debauch millions. Vice rears its frightful forms in many demoralizing aspects, while other crimes greatly increase. "Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps," in insufficient assertiveness to repress growing disorder.

IN THE FACE of much actual woe and want, the movies with their sensational, artificial allurements and portrayals of abnormalities continue to receive expensive patronage by the masses, many of whom, like Nero, are fiddling while Rome is burning. The nation can ill afford the extravagance and folly of moviedom. It develops abnormal ideas of life; it robs many of necessary quiet and wholesome home life. It creates appetite for the sensational, the unsubstantial, the foolish, the vain. It is one of the signs of the times, of the decay incident to much of our feverish modern life. Modesty is thrown to the winds; solid virtues are cast to the void in the greater part of movie productions and with decidedly bad returns to the masses. Rome had its arena where human victims fought one another and with animals, while the so-called higher classes cheered the bloody exhibitions. It had also its luxurious baths of Caracalla, where after the conflicts of the arena, its corrupt society languished in nakedness and engaged in indecent immoralities. In such atmosphere Rome decayed, became degraded and inert and perished from the assaults of the more virile, purer ranks of the "barbarians." America will do well to take heed and to avoid the same fate. Daniel, the Hebrew prophet, admonished Nebuchadnezzar the Babylonian king, "Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." That is good counsel for today. Responsibility to God, love of truth, must be inculcated and made a living power within the hearts and minds of men and women if our civilization is to endure. God must be known, sought, and obeyed, if we are to be saved from the storms that now beat upon us. A new heart, a new mind, a new man, a higher purpose must be created in the consciousness of the race. A great call for personal and general repentance, is needed. Comprehension of our condition must be developed. National and international repentance is the great need. There is no other remedy. This means religion, with its high sense of duty, its pure morality, its intent to maintain integrity, common sense, and truth—its power to redeem, to recreate, to strengthen and preserve.

NO OTHER REMEDY can be effectual. God has always demanded conformity to truth when his ancient people were found disregarding his statutes. He blessed when his counsel was heeded; he punished when his injunctions were disregarded. In every system there must be a head, and law must govern administration. This is true in the natural world, in the best constitutional, governmental processes. God is the great, supreme head; law is the method by which he moves and preserves. Until his sovereign will is acknowledged, his law obeyed, there will be disorder, disaster, poverty, suffering. It is the course of wisdom, of common sense, that men repent and conform to the divine order. The truth in God is "the savor of life unto life, or of death unto death." The race can not escape the consequences of ignorance, of disobedience. It is true always of all law, as the scriptures state, and as experience proves, "Every transgression received its just recompense of reward"; also as Moses declared, "The way of the transgressor is hard." "Return unto me," said God to Israel, "and I will return unto you." That is the way out; "there is no other way"; and it is a way that secures and insures sound and satisfactory results, within both the mind and the entire life of man. High character is formulated by right thinking and doing. Out of the abundance of clean and informed mind it proceeds upon safe and sane methods in all the ways of life.

We have not developed beyond the need of God. We can never go beyond or outdo him. "By him are all things, and by him all things consist." The God of the Bible is not the God of the Jew only, but the God of all nations. He has prescribed wisdom as the pathway of life. We can not find a better, a nobler method, a more sublime system for attainment than he has prescribed. Science informs us of the material world. It has its place, but it can penetrate no farther than the tangible, material things which it weighs and analyzes; we can not rely upon it to bring ultimate unity and harmony. It can help, for it is based upon orderly methods and processes. Philosophy, man's reasoning and conjectures concerning life's meaning, can not take us to the higher spheres, the meaning and ultimate goal of life. Religion, morality, spirituality, which are both scientific and philosophical, and more than all that, can inform, endow, qualify, and bring to ultimate fullness of life—eternal life. In that high conception men will be enlarged and strengthened and qualified to know and to obey their Creator and God, to live by the Golden Rule, and thus solve their problems.

Greater Love Hath No Man

By Geraldine Wyatt

As the shades of evening were falling, a little soul lay ready to take flight. For a week this little baby had lain unconscious, under the influence of opiates, recognizing neither father nor mother, although one of them was constantly at her bedside, silently watching, awaiting the approach of death.

One doctor had just left, and after he had felt her little cold hands, and cold feet, he had shaken his head. Before he departed he called a member of the household aside, and requested that the father be called home, for the child was dying.

Silently the vigil was resumed. A vigil of death. The father arrived. The use of opiates no longer needed, the baby lay fretful in her mother's arms. Twice the little heart rested. But the loved ones, ever watching, startled the baby to new action.

A second doctor arrived, examined the baby and shook her head. Again an outside consultation that the baby was dying.

Medical science had failed. Would God fail? The father and an uncle left in search of two elders. While they were gone the tide of life was ever running lower.

The elders came and administered to the sick one. Their prayers of eloquent simplicity brought tears to the doubting mother's eyes. The ministers of God left, but their pleas had brought comfort to the parents' hearts.

Was this deep sleep death? No, but it was nature's own sweet medicine. The infant was receiving the rest so long denied by natural means.

All through the night the baby slept soundly. When daylight came the little soul had a weak hold upon life. But even so, the parents still were doubtful. The mother as she left to go to the hospital stopped and looked at her child and thought that she would never again see her baby in this world.

Later in the morning the elders again came and administered to the infant. By this time her weak little heart was showing great improvement.

That afternoon a prominent doctor walked into a room of a hospital, where lay a mother with a new babe. As she looked down at the woman, she thought of the miracle that had been effected in this mother's home. And a sweet smile flickered across her face as she said:

"It was through nothing that we did that your baby's life was saved. She was beyond our power."

And so an old and a new member were brought into the fold, and can testify to the fact that "God works in mysterious ways his wonders to perform."

The Knight of the Road

By James G. Maitland

Up from the South with the first breath of spring comes a flock of migratory birds; and each succeeding "side-door Pullman" makes its contribution of migratory men.

It was one of these "Wandering Willies" who had inadvertently rushed the season, found it rather too cool so far north as Minneapolis, and was returning post haste to his winter quarters, like a ground hog that has seen his shadow. This good knight of the road chanced to stop in to absorb a little heat and to seek the long-delayed satisfaction of his oft-recurring wants. Through pity or curiosity, I know not which, I felt particularly interested in him. A slender old man of perhaps sixty-five with a gray stubble on his chin and a slight stoop to his shoulders, he was indeed a typical tramp. Under his tattered black overcoat he wore his entire wardrobe, which consisted of three suits as nearly as I could determine, and the remainder of his worldly effects he carried in a small canvas bag with a piece of rope in lieu of a handle.

"Poor old man," thought I, "you certainly have made no ponderable acquisition in your more than threescore years; I wonder what life has to offer you."

I soon learned, however, that my pity was unwanted and my sympathy misplaced. A few moments' conversation revealed the buoyant spirit of optimism which was characteristic of the fellow. What need had he for sympathy? He was getting free and first-handed from experience what cost me hours of toil to get second-handed from books. Although "broke flatter than a pancake" my friend was no fool. He, like many another independent wanderer of the world, had tramped in every sizable city in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. He had first-hand statistics on the labor situation in North America for nearly a half century back. He had picked cotton in Texas, shocked wheat in Canada, packed oranges in California, and even given Wall Street the once over while in New York. What need had he to study labor problems or industrial geography?

Salesmanship? Had he not been selling himself three times or more a day without missing a meal, although force of circumstances had necessitated the indefinite postponement of some few? What more could be expected of the best of salesmen? What a glorious opportunity was his to study astronomy as he lay on his improvised couch under the starry canopy of heaven dreaming of—"—going to a better land where everything is bright; where hand-outs grow on bushes and you sleep out every night. Where you never have to work at all, or never change your socks; and little streams of whiskey come trickling down the rocks."—Without cares or worry! Unencumbered! Free as the air! Oh, for the life of a Knight of the Road!

But is this kind of freedom altogether desirable or conducive to progress? As I talked with my curious visitor the questions uppermost in my mind were, "Good friend, what did you do with your youth? Did you not know that the path of least resistance makes men and rivers crooked? Could you not foresee the time when your race would be nearly run and you must face old age friendless, penniless, without the comforts of home or the loving companionship of a family? When you would appreciate the human sympathy you now so arrogantly scorn?"

Proverbs tell us that where there is no vision the people perish—but statistics show that where there is no vision civilization never gets started. Were we all to follow the care-free life of the "weary willies" what of our civilization? Men of vision are responsible for the glorious advantages and privileges to which we are heir. Men of industry have built this marvelous civilization; men who have appreciated their rich heritage from the past and sensed their responsibility to the future as evidenced by their present achievements. And so I concluded to let the floaters continue to float and the tie-warmers continue to warm ties; but as for me I should continue to plod along my chosen course undeceived by the alluring pleasures of the present that do blind so many to their duties of the future.

Thus I mused as my recent acquaintance, the Knight of the Road, shouldered his knapsack and hied himself along for parts unknown.

Not Understood

Not understood! We move along asunder,
Our paths grow wider as the seasons creep
Along the years we marvel and we wonder
Why life is life? And then we fall asleep,
Not understood.

Not understood. We gather false impressions,
And hug them closer as the years go by,
Till virtues often seem to us transgressions;
And thus men rise and fall, and live and die,
Not understood.

Not understood. Poor souls with stunted vision
Oft measure giants by their narrow gauge;
The poisoned shafts of falsehood and derision
Are oft impelled 'gainst those who mould the age,
Not understood.

Not understood. The secret springs of action,
Which lie beneath the surface and the show
Are disregarded; with self-satisfaction
We judge our neighbors, and they often go,
Not understood.

Not understood. How trifles often change us!
The thoughtless sentence or the fancied slight
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange us,
And on our souls there falls a freezing blight,
Not understood.

Not understood. How many breasts are aching
For lack of sympathy! Ah! day by day,
How many cheerless, lonely hearts are breaking!
How many noble spirits pass away.
Not understood.

O God! that men would see a little clearer;
Or judge less harshly where they can not see!
O God! That men would draw a little nearer
To one another! They'd be nearer Thee,
And understood.

Prayer and Testimony

All Have a Missionary Responsibility

By Mrs. J. W. Abbott

We should all become missionaries for Christ. Although we are denied the privilege of frequent church attendance, we are endeavoring to teach the gospel to our neighbors.

Brother H. M. Aebli has held meetings in our home twice, coming each time on Friday and staying over till Sunday. He plans to do this each month that has a fifth Sunday. He has been preaching some wonderful, doctrinal sermons, and I trust that much good may be accomplished through his efforts to spread the truth here.

I would like the Saints to remember me in their prayers, that I may be healed of a trouble for which the doctors say I must have an operation.

Here I would add a word of testimony to the truthfulness of this gospel. I know this is the church of Christ with all its gifts and blessings. May we as Saints seek to overcome every fault that is ours so that none of us will dishonor the name of Christ.

Would Repay the Lord for His Goodness

By V. G. Lents

In February, 1929, I was taken to the hospital ill with pneumonia. I suffered more than a week, and at last the day of crisis came when I should depart this life, or begin to improve. On that day Brothers H. Castings and G. F. Hull, two of God's servants, drove from Des Moines to see me. They were refused admission to my room. They insisted, and were allowed to remain long enough to administer to me. It gave me faith to think of God's servants driving a total of one hundred and forty miles. If they had faith to come that far, I thought to myself, I should at least have as much.

I began to improve but not as I should. The doctor operated on my lung four times and finally removed part of a rib and put a tube in to drain the lung. It drained for almost three months. Finally the doctor said I would have to return to the hospital and have two more ribs removed. My lung collapsed. I felt I could not stand it any longer as I was very thin and weak, and then I thought that if God had a work for me to do, he could heal me.

The doctor dressed my wound in the morning and my companion dressed it in the evening. I had been administered to several times, but seemed to get little relief.

On Sunday evening I dressed and went to church one block away. My wife dressed the wound before I went, and it was still draining. I was administered to by Brothers C. M. Richeson and E. G. Beye, as we lived at Rhodes at the time. I felt nothing unusual, but the next morning when the doctor took the bandages off he said, "It's all healed over and looks like a good clean wound!"

Then I began to improve rapidly, and as soon as I was strong enough, I began to work. This trouble has never bothered me since, althought I know I have one weak lung.

I hope that I can do a little to repay the Lord for his goodness to me. I feel now that we need more faith than ever, for the Evil One is trying to cause all the misery he can. We must draw nearer to God if we expect to escape the disasters of this world.

We are now living at Marshalltown, Iowa, where we have Sunday school and church at our home, 110 South Third Street, every first and third Sunday of the month. We are few in number, but have some spiritual meetings. We shall welcome any Saints who happen to be going through here at any time. We are trying to press on in the faith.

God Will Guide Us

By George W. White

I find great comfort in reading the many letters in the Herald, and help in the instruction from the general officers.

The work of the church is progressing nicely in this part of the great vineyard of the Lord. We are now looking forward to a visit from District President Hubert Case whom we have not seen for several weeks.

In harmony with the words of President Frederick M. Smith, I feel that God will guide us safely through this time of depression if we continue to place our problems before him. My earnest prayer is for the accomplishment of our great task and the redemption of Zion.

An Incident of the Lord's Protection

By Mrs. Isabell Rowley Pyle

I have been a member of the church since I was eight years old. Father was a priest and a very good man. He died in 1921. Mother is a woman of faith and goodness.

God has been very good to me. Many times he has healed me of suffering and helped me at my work. He has also saved me from rashness in my youth. Here I would like to relate one incident which occurred when I was fifteen.

My brother George's wife was in poor health. They had two children, and she was unable to do all her work. So on Thursday and Friday my sister, Rachel, seventeen years old, and I would go over and wash, iron the clothes, and clean the house.

One Friday in April Rachel was doing the ironing while I did the Friday cleaning. I went into the bedroom to clean the room, and Audrey, three years old, was playing with her daddy's double-barrelled shotgun.

"Sadie," I called, "Audrey is playing with George's gun."

"Take it away from her," the mother called back. "It is not loaded, but she might hurt herself on it."

I took the gun from the child and opened it up. There was a shell in it. "Sadie," I called again, "it is loaded."

"No," she replied, as she came into the room; "that is just an empty shell. George never leaves the gun loaded."

Still doubtful, I pulled the shell out and looked at it. It was empty. Then I hurriedly pushed the empty shell back into the gun, and put the weapon away.

On Sunday morning after Sunday school and morning preaching service, Rachel and I went home with George for dinner. After the meal Sadie wanted to go to see her mother, so my brother helped her to bundle up the kiddies, and they left us alone in the house.

While Rachel and I were clearing up the dinner dishes, she told me that she had a date with her beau, Everet, and we made plans to take a long walk. But by the time Everet came, an April shower had arrived, too. So we had to spend the afternoon in the house. We sat and talked and laughed for a time. Then we decided to do something more exciting. We planned to stage a play we had seen.

I told them that I would be the villian, and so I dressed up in my brother's clothes.

We went through two acts very well. In the third and last act the villan was to kill the heroine's sweetheart. To make the play more exciting and having no other weapon, I ran for the shotgun. I opened it up and showed Everet: "See," I cried, "it's loaded, and I'm going to shoot you!" I was quite satisfied that the shell in the gun was still the empty shell.

With much bravado I closed the gun and raised it to my shoulder. I pointed it not more than a foot from the young fellow's face and pulled one trigger. I was about to pull the second trigger when Rachel reached up and snatched the gun down.

Just at that instance the gun went off with a terrible roar. I simply could not believe my ears. Everet was chalk-white, and Rachel, very pale, too, had fallen back on the sofa. I felt so sick and weak that I could hardly stand. My voice trembling, I gasped: "Why, it wasn't loaded!"

"It wasn't loaded?" repeated my sister; "well, just look at my foot!"

We looked, and part of the sole of her shoe was torn away. Her big toe was slightly burned. Fortunately the muzzle of the gun had been too close to the floor for the shot to scatter, but the discharge made a hole through the rug and the floor.

While we were still pale and shaken, Brother George and his family came home. Rachel explained everything to him while I changed back into my own clothes. He said nothing to me, but blamed himself for having the gun loaded.

They invited us to stay for supper, but we did not feel as if we wanted any, and also we decided that we would not go to church that evening. We wanted to go to our home.

We had no more than entered the house when mother said: "Isabell, what were you doing about four o'clock?"

"Why nothing, mother," I returned.

"Oh, yes, you were," she said with conviction. "I was sitting here reading the Herald when a voice said to me to pray for Isabell. Before I could get down on my knees, the voice said again, 'Pray for Isabel.' So I dropped to my knees and prayed: 'Oh, Lord, you know what she is doing more than I. Be with her quick.'"

It was all very plain to me then. The Lord had been with me. Through my sister Rachel's hand, he had been with me.

My prayers are always for God's people and the redemption of Zion.

God Leads His People

By Hans Andersen

Many of you are acquainted with my brother, P. T. Andersen. I mention him because he and I were reared together and a strong brotherly tie has always existed between us. Our childhood was spent together with a loving mother in our native land, Denmark. We were members of a family of thirteen children, Peter being the twelfth, and I the thirteenth child.

Our father died when I was five days old. Peter was then two years of age. Mother taught us to pray, and one of my earliest recollections is that of kneeling in prayer. We knew the Lord's Prayer, and another short prayer was always prayed before bedtime and when we were in danger.

I remember one time when mother was very ill. The minister was called to her bedside to give her the Lord's Supper and repeat the Lord's Prayer, that being the custom of the Lutheran faith. Peter and I had at other times knelt and prayed to God that he would spare our dear mother. This time we went to a woodshed on the farm and knelt down, praying in our earnest childish way that God would again spare her life. When we went in to her bedside, she called us and said: "If it had not been for you two little boys, I would have died, but God heard and answered your prayer." She put her arms around us, and tears of joy were on our faces.

We lived with mother until we were sixteen years old. At that time Peter left for America. His going was a great sorrow to mother and me. Never shall I forget when mother said good-bye to him, or how grieved we were. Mother admonished him always to remember our heavenly Father in prayer.

Two years later I left for America, to join Peter. We came into a neighborhood of Latter Day Saints. The restored gospel appealed to us. We joined the church, and both of us married Latter Day Saint girls. We have received unnumbered blessings. We have been called to the holy work of ministering for Christ. Peter has served the church as a missionary to our native land for some twenty years. His companion and his children were willing for him to go on this great errand as ambassador for Christ. Through him many have heard the gospel call and been led to obey. We believe these things have been possible because of earnest prayer. We believe that because of prayer we were led to come to this blessed land of Joseph.

We were told by our oldest sister one day in 1925, when I with Peter had the privilege of visiting our childhood home, that just before our earthly father passed from this life, he prayed a humble prayer in our behalf. He asked that God would lead us. Do you wonder, dear friends, that we believe God is. Yes, we know he lives and blesses his children. He gently led us until the day ten years after our coming to this land, our youngest sister came here. She had been left with five children in Denmark. She, too, has been wonderfully blessed. Later she married a kind and loving man, and they together with their children received the news of the latter-day gospel.

So I would say that while we have had trials and disappointments, through it all we have seen the hand of an all wise Father who controls the destiny of people as well as nations. With his help we shall be redeemed with those who are humble and show their faith by their works.

Request Prayers

Brother Samuel M. Hunt, of Clinton, Missouri, asks prayers in his behalf, that he may be permanently relieved or cured of stomach trouble. He has a strong faith in healing and has been blessed many times.

Sister Lucy M. Cochrane, of Stockville, Nebraska, asks to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints. She is advanced in years, has poor health, and is isolated though she is enrolled with Eustis, Nebraska Branch, twenty miles away.

QUESTION TIME

May the gift of the Holy Ghost precede baptism and laying on of hands?

Some students distinguish between the baptism of the Spirit and the gift of the Spirit. Paul shows (1 Corinthians 12) that those who obey the gospel are promised the gift of the Holy Spirit, or the "manifestation" of the Spirit. But the gifts mentioned are clearly for members of the body of Christ. The baptism of the Spirit is also to be received by those who accept the word of the Lord, and it appears that this came in ancient times after baptism, as a usual thing. It was after baptism that Jesus received it (Mark 1:10), and it was after baptism and laying on of hands that disciples at Samaria (Acts 8:17) received it.

But while God's promises are usually conditional, this fact does not prevent him from bestowing his blessings under various circumstances that may appear to disregard any specific rule. Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead, but we have no reason to think a similar miracle will happen to us before the resurrection. The people of Cornelius (Acts 10:44) received the Spirit before baptism, but this did not prevent Peter from commanding them to be baptized. Probably the Jews would not have recognized the Gentiles as fit for eternal life, if this miracle had not occurred. So also God may perform other miracles for unusual reasons, without violating the laws commanded to men, and without releasing them from the obligation to obey him.

Who are meant by the called ones, referred to in Acts 2:39?

In this text Peter declared that the promise of the Holy Spirit through obedience to the gospel was given to "as many as the Lord our God shall call." The Greek term here used literally means "to call toward oneself," to summon, to invite. This would indicate that the promise is to those who are summoned or invited by God, which one might naturally suppose is an implication that not all are included. But this view seems hardly tenable in the light of the distinct statement made repeatedly in the New Testament, that the mission and message of Jesus should be "to all people," unless we assume that the invitation or summons does not refer to all who are invited to receive the gospel, but rather to those who are obedient to the gospel.

This appears to be the real significance of the text, which would then mean that the Holy Spirit is bestowed upon those who are invited to receive it, and that this invitation is extended to such as will "repent and be baptized." The previous verse bears out this meaning by declaring:

"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2:38.

The call or summons here referred to implies a closer relationship with God, and it means much more than a mere announcement of his message. The promise therefore applies to those who approach God in obedience. This term is closely related to the ekklesia which is rendered "church" in the New Testament. It refers to the "called out" ones who compose the true believers and followers of the Lord. Hence, in a broad sense, the promise of the Holy Spirit applies to his church, or called out people, of which we are informed: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

What is the "rest" into which Hebrews 4:9 says "remaineth for the people of God"?

This is the Christian rest of those who die in Christ, of which the eleventh verse says:

"Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief."

The blissful state of that rest is pointed out by the Revelator when he records the voice from heaven which said:

"Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Revelation 14:13.

This great rest is that sabbath of which the Jewish sabbath was a type and pointed forward to the true rest, of which verse 8 says:

"For if Joshua had given them rest, he would not have spoken afterward of another day."—Revised Version. Hebrews 4:8.

The Jewish temporal rest typified the Christian spiritual rest, which is the fulfillment of the Mosaic hope and the hope of all the world.

Des Moines, Iowa

Des Moines Branch started the new year under the direction of Pastor V. L. Deskin and associates E. O. Clark and C. Wayne Wolf. All new officers and old ones are working together in a degree of harmony that will, if continued, bring credit to themselves and good to many souls.

A special feature of the closing scenes of the year, 1932, was the splendid Christmas program arranged by the church school officers and given by the children, and the beautiful play, "Christmas at the Inn," given by the young people under the direction of Sister Bertha Deskin.

Sister Eva Cook and the associate director of music, Lloyd Mussell, are developing a splendid choir which is rendering anthems for the Sunday services. By trading music books with other branches they have been able to offer a greater variety of music for special occasions with practically no expense. Christmas cantata books were exchanged with Shenandoah Branch, and for the Easter music an exchange has been effected with Saint Joseph Branch, sending them the cantata, "Jesus Lives," and receiving in return the beautiful cantata, "Olivet to Calvary."

Sister Hattie Clark and her corps of assistants in the home and service group are serving meals at the church each Friday during the session of the State legislature, with splendid results in cash toward the church budget.

So impressive an installation service was held at eleven o'clock the second Sunday in January, that those participating in it and witnessing it will not soon forget. District President Henry Castings gave the charge to the officers and read a pledge to which they all arose in assent. Then he read a pledge for the audience to which they all arose and gave assent. While all were standing, he reverently pronounced a prayer of blessing upon them. All were made to feel that they are responsible for the success of the work of the church in Des Moines. Brother E. E. Spencer was ordained a priest at this meeting.

C. B. Hartshorn, former pastor who is now superintendent of schools at Hiteman, Iowa, received a hearty welcome when he spent a week-end in the city at the close of January and beginning of February. He assisted in the sacrament service Sunday morning.

There have been three baptisms since the first of the year, all three being performed Sunday evening, February 5. Those baptized were William G. Renard by V. L. Deskin, and Norman Clutter and Berniece Clutter by E. O. Clark.

The sixty-fourth annual conference of Des Moines District was held in Des Moines Church, opening with a young people's banquet at six thirty the evening of February 10. The business session which was held Saturday afternoon at two o'clock was orderly and lasted but thirty-five minutes. The minutes of the conference have already appeared in the columns of the Herald. Bishop Charles Fry preached an instructive sermon Saturday night. He stressed the remarkable fulfillment of prophecy in these perplexing days of trial and disappointments.

Sunday morning Apostle J. F. Garver addressed a representative priesthood group of the district. His address was full of human interest stories that touched the hearts of all. His instruction was given under the power of his office, and brought conviction to his hearers. Church school was in charge of newly-elected director of Religious Education, Ernest Kirlin, of Newton, Iowa, assisted by the local superintendent, C. W. Wolf. There was a large attendance at this service. At 10.30 a. m. the sacrament was served to an audience that filled the upper auditorium. The true spirit of worship was manifest in the faces and manner of the Saints, and with the exception of one, all branches and groups in the district were represented. District President Henry Castings was in charge, assisted by his counselors and Apostle Garver. The time was well occupied in prayer and testimony, interspersed with spiritual songs. Many heart-felt testimonies were given.

Dinner was served in the basement of the church by the Des Moines Home and Service Group.

At 2.30 Apostle Garver delivered a forceful sermon. At 6.30, under the direction of Sister Bertha Deskin, a play was given by the Des Moines young people that depicted clearly the conditions in many of the homes of the Saints during these distressing times. The closing sermon of the conference was preached by Missionary L. G. Holloway on the subject, "Sharing With Christ." Most of the visitors remained until the close of this service, even though it meant a late drive home.

Plans for a district reunion or special services such as were held in the Des Moines Church last year, were left in the hands of the district officers.

Brooklyn, New York

Activities and Fellowship Increase

There is a steady increase of activities in this branch. Everyone seems to sense a personal responsibility, and is responding to the call for service.

The priesthood are visiting the homes of the members, getting in personal contact with the seemingly isolated ones, and many good reports are coming in of the work accomplished.

The district conference of February 11 and 12 was a success in every way, each branch in the district being represented. The prevailing spirit, "Let every man esteem his brother as himself," demonstrated the brotherhood of man to those who have visioned the infinite and divine fatherhood of God. Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here and gave timely helps in his talks.

On February 17, in a get-together meeting of the officers and teachers of church school and adult division, some interesting and constructive things were planned to be worked out. It was decided to follow the program outlined in the Herald as nearly as possible.

The young people's council invited the branch to join them in a social function at the church on February 24. Each person was measured and taxed a penny an inch of height. Harry Moorman was master of ceremonies. A number were called upon to participate in song and game contests, the winners being awarded prizes. Everyone joined wholeheartedly in singing old time songs, led by Le Roy Squire. The music of rippling laughter throughout the entire evening brought to the writer's mind the words of the song, "Prayer Perfect." "Let the lips of laughter overflow again."

On February 21, the women of the adult division met at the home of Sister Kathryn Nichols, Forest Hills. The topic for discussion was relief work which they have well under way. Sister Ella Sears was chosen to work with Brother George Potts who has charge of the relief work in the branch. Sister Adeline Harris was chosen supervisor of Patroness Group, to succeed Sister Anna Box.

Lee A. Hartshorn, Herald Office representative, reports more homes taking the Herald than ever before.

The Saints have been much enlightened by the preaching of the word by our local priesthood. Each minister readily responds in his turn to the call of the pastor, Brother Ephraim Squire. Their sermons show intelligent and prayerful preparation.

Coeur d'Alene, Idaho

Coeur d'Alene and vicinity experienced some very cold weather during the month of February with a deep snow which handicapped church services to some extent.

Elder Joseph Sandidge met here in sacrament service, February 5, and that evening began a series of meetings. Interest seemed to grow among the nonmembers who have been sending their children to the church school; also there were a few other nonmembers attended.

The meetings closed February 26, with a full house. The economic situation through which the country's passing seems to have brought the people to a condition of mind where they are more willing to listen to the latter-day message than they formerly were.

Sunday afternoon, February 26, Elder Sandidge led two elderly people, William Taylor and wife, into the icy waters of the Spokane River and inducted them into the kingdom of God. Brother Taylor had at one time, before coming West, gone to Independence, Missouri, to seek employment on the Auditorium; yet he and his wife did not learn of the restored gospel until they came West, and their car broke down near Mansfield, Washington. At Mansfield the church has a wide awake priest, Louis N. Johnsen, who runs a repair shop. It seems he never loses an opportunity to tell the gospel story, so while he repaired the car, he planted the gospel seed. From Mansfield these people came to Coeur d' Alene, and became more thoroughly acquainted with the gospel.

March 6, Apostle M. A. McConley visited this branch and delivered an interesting sermon. Elder Stanley Fout, pastor, and Elder L. E. Holmes accompanied Brother McConley in visiting as many of the homes of the Saints as time would permit during his stay here. Elders Fout and Sandidge did considerable fireside work during the recent series of meetings.

There were fifty-two adults present at the church social, March 2. They spent an enjoyable evening together.

March 5, Miss Esther Davis one of our young people became the bride of Mr. Walter McNeil. Elder Holmes officiated.

The young people's class of our church school are preparing to furnish the Easter program.

There are eight adult members in the class on "How to Teach Religion." Each one has an earnest desire to qualify for better service.

Mobile, Alabama

Apostle J. A. Gillen Recently There

Mobile Branch recently enjoyed a visit from Apostle J. A. Gillen. His sermons were inspiring and uplifting. The members regret that his visit was so short.

The district conference was well attended at Vancleave, Mississippi, by members of the various branches.

The junior children of the Sunday school gave an entertainment for the benefit of their department.

At carnival time the women of the branch had a booth downtown, where they made quite a nice sum of money to apply to the church building fund.

Brother F. E. Smith was elected branch treasurer with Brother Brewton Green as his assistant.

The church services are fairly well attended. Pastor Amos Berve is using, "Finding a Purpose in Life," as his topic for sermons during the month of March.

Berkeley-Oakland, California

East Bay Church

The young people's convention of Northern California District opened at East Bay Church, Berkeley, Friday evening, February 24, with a good service followed by a fellowship meeting in the lower auditorium. Refreshments were served by Sister J. B. Carmichael and her group of young people.

The Saturday morning prayer service was one of inspiration and spiritual endowment. A lunch was served by the Junior Dorcas girls, after which a delightful outing was enjoyed.

A beautiful and effective candle-lighting service was held Saturday evening. It was gratifying to see the fine young people taking part in this service and having as their speaker Elder Arthur Oakman.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer contributed much toward the success of the convention with his dynamic preaching at the Sunday morning and evening services and also in the class work.

The music, ever an inspiration and aid to a true worship experience, was beautiful under Christiana Waller's direction. The Fresno Choir sang on Sunday afternoon, receiving many favorable comments.

The afternoon service was devoted to Graceland College. The Acacias for years back were brought out and enjoyed.

As a result of this convention which closed on Sunday evening, it is felt that the "youth looks at life" (using Brother F. M. McDowell's words) a little more courageously and that it is eager to help in the great task of evangelizing the world and Zionizing the church.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael has been here recently. It is hoped that the helpful message he brought with so much love and sincerity was wisely received, and will bear fruit. He is a living example of all that is good, noble, and saintly.

A most unusual service was recently experienced by the congregation. It was Saint Paul who said, "Make melody in your heart unto the Lord." This was made possible through the efforts of Miss Elizabeth Smith, harpist, from Independence, Missouri, Arthur Oakman, vocalist, and Roy Elliot, organist. This was an excellent worship service.

Lorain, Ohio

Memorable Occasion Causes Saints to Rejoice

January 22, was a memorable day in the history of this branch, as it marked the addition of four new members to local ranks. These members were baptized by Elder E. Guy Hammond, of Akron, and confirmed by Brothers Hammond, F. T. Haynes, and Pastor C. G. Minkler. Three of these new members are heads of families, and workers feel that their membership will result in increased unity and spiritual development here.

On the morning of this, Brother Hammond delivered a forceful and inspiring message. Taking as his text, "And it shall come to pass if the Gentiles have not charity, I will take away their talents," he stressed the principle of love as the basic factor in intellectual and spiritual advancement, and showed how it indirectly influences even physical well-being.

On February 5, Brother Hammond returned to Lorain with a message for the new converts. He admonished them not to be deflected from the path in which they had started by the mist of darkness, which so frequently veils the faces of those who have begun the quest for God; but to hold fast to the rod of iron which leads to the tree of life eternal. (Book of Mormon 12: 32.)

The above meeting was also graced by the presence of Patriarch G. W. Robley, who is richly blessed with the gifts of the gospel. This brother remained ten days, during which time the Saints experienced a portion of the Pentecostal power which, at the present time, is so abundantly manifested throughout the church.

The labors of Brother Robley awakened within them a greater appreciation of the gifts of the gospel, and they desire to qualify for the presence of these gifts in their midst to a greater degree than they have enjoyed them in the past.

The chief aim of Lorain Saints is the exemplification of Zionic ideals in their midst, that others may be attracted to the latter-day message. Truly, "The field is white already to harvest," and while it is true that all can not be ordained laborers, they realize that "he that laboreth in the ministry, and he that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work," may "labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

Independence

The young people's services, to last throughout the week and include next Sunday night, opened auspiciously in every respect except the weather, Sunday night at the Stone Church. But cold and sleet seemed not in the least to dampen the ardor and interest of the young people and their older friends, and a large congregation listened to President Elbert A. Smith's inspirational, opening sermon, "What Latter Day Saints Believe."

The evening's service opened with the singing of the hymn, "Soldiers of Christ, Arise," Sanford Downs leading the congregation. The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, loyally responding to an invitation to support the young people's meeting, sang, "Remember Now Thy Creator," and the Aeolian Chorus, also directed by Brother Craig, sang, "Open the Gates of the Temple," being accompanied by Mary Okerlind, pianist. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was the evening organist. A special vocal number was the bass solo by Colin Ferrett, who was accompanied by Mrs. Ferrett.

The speaker was introduced by Elder D. S. McNamara, assistant pastor in Zion, who was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder W. Earl Page. Pastor John F. Sheehy, assistant Pastor A. K. Dillee, and Bishop J. S. Kelley also were in the stand.

Youthful faces dominated the listening congregation, and there were reserved seats for the young people's council and for the To-Ko-Lon Class of the Stone Church. Young men served efficiently as deacons. Monday night's service indicated, too, that the young people are remembering Brother Elbert in their prayers and with their support and attendance. Kansas City O. B. K. members attended this second service in a body, and the O. B. K. Choir from Central Church, directed by Eugene Christy, sang.

After nineteen weeks of arduous labor and sacrifice, the women of Independence faced a crucial test a short time ago in the midst of the bank "holiday." Could they raise their quota in the face of this increasing difficulty? Undaunted they set about it, performing their regularly assigned duties, saving, economizing, sacrificing, collecting, and reporting. And that week their offering amounted to one hundred and forty five dollars.

At their meeting on that Monday such characteristic remarks were heard as:

"No one turned me down flat. If they hadn't anything they were kind about it."

"I haven't been turned down either. People give me money, saying, 'This is the last quarter.' 'This is the last dime.' I find many people praying how they may help in this campaign."

"We are not discouraged."

"Everyone is willing to do what she can. Although some are not able to give money, they are willing to quilt and do other work."

"I have had some wonderful, spiritual experiences. Sometimes we forget we are out collecting and have some very helpful visits."

"We have a good group. The workers are certainly dependable."

"They see me coming and meet me at the door with their envelopes."

Their regular Monday meetings are spiritually encouraging an financially helpful. Under the leadership of Sister Charlotte Koehler the women go busily about their task of remembering the general church with their sacrifices.

Stone Church

The boys' choir, which is increasing in membership, sang again to the Stone Church adult, intermediate, and junior departments Sunday morning. Miss Marcine Smith and J. Glenn Fairbanks are directors of this organization. The Clematis Chorus of girls is also helpful with music for the opening worship service of the church school.

Pastor John F. Sheehy took his congregation "into the temple with Jesus," in his sermon Sunday morning. His text was the words of Jesus to the woman of Samaria: "The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." With him the Saints watched the money changers driven from the temple, saw the widow cast her mites into the treasury, heard the prayers of the Pharisee and the Publican. This discourse brought a worship experience to the congregation.

The Stone Church Choir sang the anthem, "The Lord Brings Back His Own," L. A. Woodside singing the baritone solo. The Graceland College Male Quartet, George Potts, Leslie Kohlman, Sheldon Reynolds, and Wilbur Chandler sang, "Jesus Savior Pilot Me," and Mr. Woodside sang a solo, "Fear Not, O Israel." Assistant Pastor H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder W. B. Paul.

Elder R. V. Hopkins spoke to the juniors at their own service downstairs on, "God's Book of Nature." Among the other items of the program was a reading by Ruth Barnby. The junior pastor, Priest James Moses, was in charge of the hour, assisted by Mrs. R. A. Moler, superintendent of the department.

The general prayer meeting at two thirty counts its attendants nearly two hundred each Sunday afternoon. Full-time participation and activity characterize this service, and the testimonies and prayers offered are sources of inspiration and comfort to the worshipers. During the past month Elders Ammon White, H. W. Hattey, W. A. McDowell, and Leonard Lea have conducted these meetings.

Among the many events sponsored by groups in Independence for the benefit of the women's sacrifice offering was the three-act comedy-drama, "A Southern Cinderella," presented last Friday night at the Dining Hall, by Group 20. A good crowd was present to enjoy the drama and the special musical numbers between acts. Mrs. Leonard Lea directed the play.

Second Church

Pastor William N. Inman was the morning speaker, March 12, basing his discourse on Doctrine and Covenants 4. B. C. Sarratt was in charge assisted by Lane Bolt. The choir, directed by Earl Audet sang, "If On a Quiet Sea." Mrs. Kathern Inman and Mrs. Alice Mintun, accompanied by Miss Edna Stobaugh, sang, "My Wonderful Dream."

"God's Plan for Us," was the theme of Brother Conyer's short talk to the juniors on this morning. Elder C. Ed. Miller gave an interesting talk about the Book of Mormon.

Sunday evening Pastor William N. Inman was in charge of the seven thirty service, and was assisted by Elder W. E. Grubb. Jamie McPherson, Alfred Curtis, Gene Knight, June Thomas, and Clara Thomas played, "King's Serenade," "Drowsy Waters," and "The Old Rugged Cross." The girls' quartet composed of Ruth Bolt, Nadine Inman, Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Lee Street sang, "The Church by the Side of the Road," and "It Pays to Serve Jesus." They were accompanied by Geraldine Fields. The former pastor, A. K. Dillee, was the speaker.

Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt was in charge of the eleven o'clock preaching service last Sunday morning, "Come We That Love the Lord," was sung by the choir, the duet part being given by Mrs. Alice Mintun and Mrs. Kathern Inman. The opening prayer was by Elder D. A. Whiting. The sermon was by Elder S. H. Fields.

Mrs. J. R. Lentell's chorus of girls sang at the six o'clock meeting, "Now the Day Is Done," "Day Is Dying in the West," "Come Thou Almighty King," "Hark, I Hear a Voice," "Song of the Frog," "Lullaby and Goodnight."

The ladies' quartet, composed of Mrs. Ethel Schuyler, Mrs. Edna Fetter, Mrs. Alice Mintun, and Mrs. Ethel McBride, sang, "Keep On Smiling," at the evening service. A duet, "Drifting," was sung by Mrs. Edna Fetter and Mrs. Alice Mintun. Pastor William Inman was in charge. The opening prayer was by Brother Ellis Murdock. Elder W. A. Hougas was the speaker. His text was, "Has God Forgotten Me?"

Walnut Park Church

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker at the morning service Sunday. Preceding the sermon Evelyn Phillips played a violin solo, accompanied on the piano by Maurine Nace, and the young people's chorus sang, "O That Men Would Praise the Lord," under the directorship of Maurine Nace. Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker in the evening.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

On Friday afternoon, March 17, the women's department of district 3 met at the home of Sister F. R. Schaefer for a surprise welcome. Sister Schaefer, before moving from the Walnut Park neighborhood a year ago, was district supervisor of the women's department over a period of several years. She had been missed by her associates in the women's work, and they were glad to welcome her back to Independence. About forty women were present and after a period of visiting, refreshments were served.

Funeral services for Ethel Virginia Amick, twelve-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Amick, were held at the church at two o'clock Friday afternoon, March 17. She died Wednesday morning at her home. Elder George Jenkins was in charge of the services and Elder Harold Hattey preached the sermon. A mixed quartet composed of Gordon Morgan, John Isaacks, Lois Butterworth and Maurine Nace sang, "The Saints Shall Wear Robes as the Lilies," "Asleep in Jesus," and "The Lord Knows Why." Flower girls were Grace Dillee, Betty Ward, Winifred Dillee, and Josephine Byrd, and pallbearers were Rosemary Dunbar, Mildred Schafer, Jean Dillee, Alice Brown, Helen Brown, and Jessie Anderson. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Barnhardt announce the arrival of a baby daughter, Thursday evening, March 16.

Englewood Church

The Englewood Religio was recently entertained by Brother Leon Snow's orchestra, the program preceding classwork.

The La-Da-Sa Class of the Religio is sponsoring three one-act plays to be given at Bristol School, March 24, for the benefit of the Parent Teacher Association.

Ralph Dunlap, president of the Religio, is missed by the local group. He is visiting his mother at Oxford, Michigan.

Pauline Clow Seymour is very ill at her home on Northern Boulevard.

The women's department is busy quilting. They met at Mrs. Harold Clow's home recently and today are enjoying a covered-dish luncheon at the home of Mrs. D. S. McNamara.

Mr. "Doc" Jurden recently underwent a major operation at the Provident Hospital in Kansas City. He is getting along nicely.

The Chelsea Choir will give the program at Englewood the first Sunday night in April.

Sister Lacy Barnett, who has been ill for several weeks, is much better.

Sister C. C. Moore has not as yet heard from her son, James, who lives in Long Beach, California, but is hoping that "no news is good news."

Sadness came to this congregation in the removal, by accidental death, of one of one of its young men, Frederick Eugene Koehler, youngest child of Sister Ada Koehler and Frederick Koehler, deceased. The boy leaves five sisters, many other relatives and friends. His death occurred March 5, and the funeral was held March 7, from the Carson Funeral Home, Elder J. F. Sheehy in charge, President Elbert A. Smith preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery beside his father who preceded him in death four years ago. Mrs. Koehler, who is Englewood's news correspondent, returned with her daughter, Mrs. West, to Denison, Texas, for a few weeks.

Long Beach, California

Quake Victims Camp Out About Pastor Milner's Home

Apostle J. E. Gleazer and Brother L. L. Sutherland drove from Los Angeles to Lomita, California, Monday, March 13, where about sixty of the Long Beach Saints were camped around the home of Pastor J. L. Milner. Of these members made homeless by the earthquake, Brother Gleazer writes: "Few of them owned property, but the houses they lived in were wrecked. Most of them did not own the furniture, so they lost little.

"The house where I stayed a few weeks ago is in ruins and it was a good house and well finished. The schools at Long Beach are also in ruins. Some of these were modern buildings, but they fell, too. The reason more of the larger buildings stood was because the shock did not hit every part of the city with the same intensity. Of course steel and concrete stood better than anything else, but one can see where these buildings were shaken and twisted. We succeeded in getting around parts of Long Beach because Brother Milner had a police badge. The city certainly looked as if it had been shelled. I am sure if the shock had been just a little more severe many of the larger buildings would have crumbled also. Even in Los Angeles the modern buildings show the effects of the quake. The streets were covered with glass, and cornices and corners show the breaks.

Of a visit to Compton, California, where considerable damage was done by the quake, Brother Gleazer says: "I visited Compton Sunday afternoon, March 12. Compton is about six miles from here (Los Angeles), and the entire business section is ruined. We had to leave the car and walk for blocks, for they would not let traffic in. They had steam shovels working night and day, picking up the debris. They still expected to find some bodies Sunday. I saw one place where the pavement was thrown up six inches. The sailors and marines were on duty with fixed bayonets. Hundreds of American Legion men were on duty regulating traffic and keeping people away from the ruins.

Well-rounded Program Takes Branch Forward

The Sacrifice Period in Long Beach may be pronounced a success. Although the income in tithes and offerings was not as great as in previous periods, due to the economic stress, there came a spiritual enrichment to the Saints by reason of sharing that which they had.

The aged and the youth gathered at the church to watch the old year out and the new in. A resolute determination to move forward to the accomplishment of the goals of the church seemed to prevail in the midnight worship service and in the sacrament service Sunday morning. These resolutions are bearing fruit in the activities that are already being carried out. There is but one night each week that the church building is not being used for the welfare and development of the Saints. That is Saturday. One can almost see the fulfillment of the prediction made some years ago that the church would someday be open at all times for the feeding and nourishing of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness.

Some changes were made in the official personnel of the branch at the December election. Pastor J. L. Milner was reelected with Elder A. S. Moran and Priest R. C. Leibold as counselors. Brother William J. Moyle was reelected home visiting director. Sister Effie Gregory was sustained as branch statistician, and Brother Joseph Crum continues to receive and disburse the branch finances. The new church school director, H. O. Sacry, is well supported by Fred M. Savage as adult supervisor, R. C. Leibold supervising young people, and Leo Pendarvis who continues as supervisor of children's work. Each of these four men has qualities and abilities which make him valuable in his position. Sister Flossie Sacry is now leading the women's work. Many others are serving in appointive positions that strengthen the ties and enlarge the field of activity in the branch.

Three special social events have occurred in the branch this year with a fourth in the immediate future. The senior young people are preparing to entertain their younger brothers and sisters of the Junior High Class with a banquet. The former group will prepare and serve the meal.

The senior young people's banquet was held January 31. One will long remember the beauty and inspiration of the occasion. The spirit of life which prevailed, seemed to shine upon the faces of each one present. The committee asked the pastor to serve as toastmaster. Special guests and speakers were R. C. Leibold, supervisor; Edward Lane, class teacher; Winifred Milner, dramatic leader; Laura Packard, supervisor of young people in East Los Angeles Branch; and Sister Edward Lane. Readings, vocal and instrumental numbers were given by George Scott, Natalie

Kamerick, Virginia Kuykendall, Maxine Kingsbury, Margaret Wilson, and Winifred Milner. Each person present was asked to contribute some thought to the speaking program.

Brother and Sister A. S. Moran entertained the priesthood and their wives at dinner, February 20. Along with the splendid spirit of good fellowship present, one could also sense a feeling of steadfastness of purpose. After the dessert, the host called upon each one to offer something that would help in carrying on the work. There were twenty-two present. Brother Will Farley, of Durango, Colorado, was a special guest and all appreciated his message given at the close of the evening.

Under the capable guidance of Brother Pendarvis and his corps of teachers, the children's division enjoyed a George Washington party in the basement of the church the evening of February 21. Thirty-eight happy youngsters mingled with their leaders, singing songs, playing games and making merry in all the ways known to children. The surprise of the evening was Chandu, the magician. Brother Pendarvis secured the services of a young East Indian who is skilled in the magic arts of his native land. The children were quite sure this was a fitting climax to a perfect evening. Refreshments were served.

The women of this branch are doing excellent work as a part of the adult division. They meet weekly for work and study and serve a dinner every other Thursday evening. These occasions have proved beneficial in bringing Saints and friends together socially as well as aiding in raising the branch budget. Under the leadership of Sister Sacry, they are now in the midst of a campaign to win a cash prize offered by local business firms. It is only necessary to attend prayer meeting and listen to the testimonies of these mothers of Israel to realize the vital interest they have in the spiritual welfare of the branch as well as in financial conditions.

District President W. A. Teagarden and District Bishop D. B. Carmichael met with this branch recently and brought much of hope and encouragement to the Saints. Members were happy to have Apostle E. J. Gleazer drop in for prayer meeting February 15. He remained to talk to the priesthood the following evening.

Brother Thomas Ward recently moved to Long Beach from southern Ohio. He has been put to work teaching the adult class on Sunday morning.

Local speakers have been J. R. Johnson, R. C. Leibold, W. J. Moyle and the pastor.

When I hear of people asking why America does not join the League of Nations I have to point out to them that America is a League of Nations, and sealed the covenant of her solidity as such by her blood more than sixty years ago.—Bernard Shaw.

Far West Stake

Conference and Young People's Rally at Saint Joseph

Another Far West Stake conference has come and gone, and with it a successful young people's rally. The conference and rally opened Friday evening, March 10, at First Saint Joseph Church, and continued through Saturday and Sunday.

The stake-wide young people's program on Friday was entitled, "A Perfect Day," and was composed of poetry by James Whitcomb Riley and appropriate musical numbers all given by young people from the various branches. Much talent was displayed and a large appreciative audience attended this first session.

A get-together hour was conducted by the First Church O. T. Z.'s following the program. The spirit of fellowship reigned, and everyone seemed to be better acquainted after the games of the evening.

Saturday's activities were commenced with a young people's prayer service at 8.30. Elder C. G. Mesley, of Kansas City Stake, was in charge and gave a fitting theme talk. A fine spirit of loyalty and devotion was expressed by all participating. Such a good service was enjoyed that it was decided to have another one on Sunday morning at an early hour.

At nine-thirty old and young gathered for a joint prayer service which was followed by the business session at 10.45. The business consisted chiefly of the reading of reports and the election of officers. Elders Ward A. Hougas and F. L. Hinderks were sustained in the stake presidency. Bishop Milo Burnett his two counselors, Elder John Hovenga and M. H. Hinderks, were likewise sustained in the stake bishopric. The High Council, composed of Elders A. B. Constance, B. R. Constance, Thomas Fiddick, David Gamet, William G. Hamann, Alec Jensen, L. A. Keck, and Howard C. Timm, was sustained. Other officers elected were as follows: Director of Religious Education, Preston Hinderks; supervisor of women's activities, Sister Letha Timm; head of stake music committee, Evan J. Ehlers; director of young people's activities, Leonard G. Ehlers. Several members of the high council and pastors who were present were asked to make short talks.

After dinner had been served in the basement at noon, Apostle J. F. Garver, of Lamoni, preached to a good-sized congregation. This was followed by various group meetings. The young people met for a round table discussion in charge of George Mesley. Many helpful suggestions were advanced and the time was profitably spent. At the same time the women enjoyed a talk by Rex I. Gary, Boy Scout executive of Saint Joseph, also a talk by Brother Hougas. Apostle J. F. Garver conducted a priesthood meeting at this hour.

A prelude of music, furnished by Stewartsville young people, preceded an illustrated lecture, "From Palmyra to the Present," given by Stake President Ward A. Hougas on Saturday night. Many beautiful pictures and an interesting lecture brought the story of this church forcefully to the minds of the large audience.

Sunday was a busy day of enjoyable services. The young people's prayer service was well attended, and took on the spirit of an allegiance meeting under the direction of Ward A. Hougas. This service brought memories of the splendid prayer services of the reunion and of other rallies when the youth had met together to express their earnest desires. Many again consecrated their talents to the upbuilding of the work.

An interesting worship service was arranged by the local church school including two numbers by the newly-robed girls' chorus after which Elder Mesley lectured to the adults. The children's division provided a service for the children throughout the morning service with Preston Hinderks as the speaker.

The sermon of the morning was preceded by an anthem, "Jerusalem, O Turn to the Lord," Gounod, and a solo, "When I Behold," Clara Edwards, sung by Mrs. C. E. Haden. President Elbert A. Smith, of Independence, gave an appealing sermon on "Prayer," stressing the need of and the types of prayer.

In the afternoon Apostle J. F. Garver again addressed the conference. Preceding his sermon the choir sang, "The Woods and Every Sweet Smelling Tree," West, and a trio composed of Mrs. Bert Ritchie, Mrs. Robert Farnham and Mrs. Harold Sleezer, sang, "Blest Are the Pure in Heart," Risher.

The joint council of the stake met following the afternoon service to discuss plans and problems. The young people gathered for a business session and informal discussion. At this time the name of O. T. Z.'s was decided upon as the name of the stake young people's organization. The young people also voted to organize uniformly in the local groups and to form a council of representatives in the stake. Plans were discussed for the next convention and the time was tentatively set as June 10 and 11 at Guilford. Much enthusiasm was shown and a willingness to cooperate was manifested by the various groups which should make the task of unifying the local organizations easier. Several groups reported plans under way of having representatives at the June convention in Lamoni.

The closing feature of the conference was the three-act biblical drama, "The Slave Maid of Israel," presented by the Ul-Lik-Us Players of the Saint Joseph church, and directed by Mrs. Olive McLean. This was effectively given to a capacity house and was repeated the following night to another large audience.

The scene was laid in Syria in 894

www.LatterDayTruth.org

B. C., and the play was built around the well-known story of Naaman's leprosy and his healing. The leads were well taken by Gladys Christiansen, as Thamar, the beautiful; Herman Johnson as Naaman, and Harold Sleezer as Simeon, second in command. The entire cast gave a good performance.

Hilo, Hawaii

Local Ministry in Charge While Pastor R. L. Macrae Visits Other Islands

Missionary R. L. Macrae left the branch here, February 9, to do missionary work on other islands. At present he is on the island of Maui, visiting with isolated Saints and making new contacts. Sister Macrae and daughter, Mildred Louise, remain at home to help with the work at Hilo. During the absence of the pastor, Elder James A. Pauahau is in charge of the branch with the help of the local priesthood.

The women have been giving much support to the branch in many ways. Their aid in financial matters has helped to keep the branch going. Recently a Hawaiian luncheon was given under their direction which netted a neat little sum to the treasury. The group has its weekly sewing day and once a month they meet to discuss matters pertaining to their work and also to enjoy talks by members of the priesthood.

The Saints were caused to mourn recently by the death of Brother A. A. Tapai. Although he had been in ill health for some time, his death was a shock to his family and to the community at large. He was a member of the priesthood and had contributed much to the advancement of the Hilo Branch.

February 5 was one of the most spiritual sacrament meetings the Saints have enjoyed. While the prayers and testimonies offered were not many, the worshipers were impressed with the spiritual value of the entire meeting. Elder Macrae admonished the Saints to seek God in humility and with contrite hearts that the latter-day cause will go forward in Hilo.

January 1, found nearly every member of the branch present for the sacrament service, and a goodly degree of God's Spirit was there. Hearts were made glad to welcome once more some of the members who had been unable to attend previously.

Early in November of last year the priesthood started an intensive campaign of visiting the members of the church in an attempt to strengthen and encourage them to greater activity. This was followed up with cottage preaching services. An increasing interest is being manifested in these services each night.

On Christmas Day Elder R. L. Macrae led six young people into the waters of baptism, and on the following Wednesday two more were baptized.

A good number of Saints and friends gathered at the church for a watch service, December 31. A prayer and testimony meeting opened at ten o'clock, Elder Macrae in charge. A good spiritual season was enjoyed and each one expressed a desire to come up higher in the sight of God and to consecrate his life anew to the cause he loves so well. At the close of the service at eleven-thirty, Brother and Sister Macrae invited all to come to the mission house. Light refreshments were served and the new year was ushered in while all sang "Aloha Oe."

Christmas entertainment preparations along with sacrifice endeavors made December a busy month for Hilo.

Washington, District of Columbia

Banner Day at Nation's Capital

The Saints in the Nation's Capital had a banner day Sunday, March 5. While the city was thronged with inaugural visitors, this little group enjoyed a quiet and spiritually uplifting sacrament service. They particularly appreciated having with them as guests for the day, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, District President H. L. Livingston, and Brother and Sister E. L. Traver, from Boston.

In a beautiful ceremony, Brother William Froyd was ordained to the office of elder by Apostle Hanson and Brother Livingston, Bishop Traver delivered the charge of office. Brother Froyd has faithfully served the group at Washington for many years, and all rejoice that he has thus been honored.

Following the morning service, dinner was served, and in the afternoon, Brother Livingston delivered an able address. Truly it was a happy day, rich in the spirit of good fellowship, and blessed by God's Holy Spirit.

Camden, Maine

Helped by Visit of Elder Archie Begg

This is a very small branch isolated from larger groups of Saints. The nearest branch of any size is Vinalhaven, Maine. But though the number of Saints in Camden is small, they are making progress little by little. This group is a part of Rockland Branch, and the Saints generally find a way to get to Rockland on the first Sunday of the month, to attend sacrament service. The meeting seems much better if all meet together instead of each little place holding a separate service.

About the middle of February Elder Archie Begg was here and held a series of cottage meetings. On the first night, Sunday, he talked chiefly of Joseph Smith and his associates in the early days of the church. For two or three nights he played games with the young people. The last night he was here he talked on recreation, a subject on which he is an authority. His help and visit were much appreciated, and local members hope he will continue his calls. Always they are delighted to have the elders come and talk with them.

Nearly one hundred per cent attendance is enjoyed by the Camden Sunday school.

Santa Ana, California

Earthquake Sends Saints Home From Tamale Supper

Santa Ana Saints gathered in the basement of the church on Friday evening, March 11, for a tamale supper. But in the midst of the preparations the church began to rock and heave in a dangerous manner. Brothers Farley, Best, and Carmichael urged the Saints out of the building, then looked about to see that no one was forgotten, turned off the fires, and came out to join those on the sidewalk in front of the church. Continued temblors made it necessary for each family to return home taking their dinner with them, and until the church has been carefully inspected, services will not be held there. Apparently with the exception of a fallen chimney, there was no damage done. The business district just a few blocks away suffered considerable damage.

The following Sunday, Bishop D. B. Carmichael with Pastor A. M. Starkey, drove over to Long Beach to aid the Saints in that locality. No one had been hurt, but nearly all were homeless and temporarily domiciled at the home of their pastor Brother J. L. Milner at Lomita. Later in the day Brother Carmichael with the help of Brother Don Nimmo took over reunion tents, mattresses, and cots so that the Saints could have adequate shelter while the work of reconstruction gets under way.

The last Thursday in December Santa Ana Branch held its annual business meeting when A. M. Starkey was reelected pastor and James Farley was put in charge of the church school with Sister William Kuhn assisting in the adult division, Sister R. P. Mitchel with the young people, and Sister Charles Calkins continuing her fine work in the junior department. They have worked very successfully together so that in the last two and a half months the services have been inspirational and well attended.

In February, the women under Sister William Kuhn gave a potluck supper, the young people doing their part by erecting an attractive valentine booth and selling candy. The ten dollars netted by the evening's fun went for branch expenses.

Friends of Sister Lola Melton Morrison will be interested to know of the birth of her son in the Santa Ana Valley Hospital on George Washington's birthday.

In memory of their daughter, Martha, Brother and Sister Clarence Mills gave as an offering to the church the money she had in the bank. The amount, seventy-five dollars, was added to the sacrifice fund the Santa Ana Saints gave to the general church. This gift was a fitting end to a little life that had brought sweetness here on earth to relatives and friends.

Alaflora Branch

Near Brewton, Alabama

Under the capable management of young Brother E. T. Higdon and his associates the branch work is moving smoothly along, and unusual unity prevails.

Elder A. D. McCall, a young man of dynamic qualities, well qualified to lead the Alabama-Florida District, occupied the pulpit the morning of February 19, and his message was one that thrilled his listeners with the importance of its meaning. The theme, "Jesus Christ, the Light and Life of the World," was effectively illustrated by comparing the sun with its life-giving rays, which cause the earth to rejoice and bear fruit, to the light of Jesus shed abroad in the hearts of those who accept his teachings, causing them to bear abundant fruit in lives well spent.

Brother E. N. McCall is giving Alaflora Branch a good program each Sunday in the church school, and attendance is increasing. Brother Ben Jernigan conducts song service for a half hour before preaching service on Sunday evenings, increasing attendance and giving much enjoyment.

At the beginning of this service on a recent Sunday, Azalene Brooks told a story and Wilma Jernigan and John David Enfinger played a piano duet.

Elder Lomax Jernigan, former branch president here, is now associated with the district presidency and has been preaching over the district. He has just returned from Mobile Branch, where he conducted services.

March 3, Apostle James A. Gillen began a series of meetings extending over Sunday. "What Price Glory," was his opening theme, and on Saturday evening he preached on "The Resurrection." On Sunday after a spiritual sacrament service, participated in by members from all over the district, Brother Gillen who is dear to the Saints here, gave a fatherly talk on the efficacy and need of prayer, especially in these trying times. His talks contained a note of warning which it is hoped all will heed.

A daughter, Bettie Bernice, was born to Brother and Sister E. T. Higdon, February 24, 1933.

On Sunday mornings Dehryl McCall is seen at the church with a bundle of Heralds, disposing of them to people who are glad to have the opportunity to read the encouraging and helpful periodical.

Apostle Gillen departed Sunday evening for Pensacola, Florida, where he sees opportunity for doing good, preaching and encouraging. This is his second visit to Pensacola on this tour of the South.

Pastoral

To branch presidents of Rock Island District and others concerned, Greetings: The following proposed program for the quarter ending June 30, is presented to conserve time, strength, and traveling expense, and at the same time try to reach as many of the Saints and friends as possible with a constructive and helpful message. You will note that I am reserving Monday of each week as a rest period. This I feel is essential to my health. Will branch presidents and others affected who find it impractical to hold meetings in their respective communities according to this program, kindly advise me at an early date? Please keep a copy of this program at hand for reference, and make all necessary arrangements for such meetings as are here outlined. We are expecting President Frederick M. Smith to be with us for our young people's convention and district conference, at Rock Island, June 9 to 11. Watch the Saints' Herald for further announcements:

Conference Notices

Wheeling district conference will be held April 8 and 9, at the church in Wellsburg, West Virginia, Apostle C. F. Ellis has promised to be present and will add a wealth of interest and value to the sessions. First meeting will be at two thirty Saturday. The only business scheduled for this conference is to choose the place of the September conference and ordination matters. Let us all try to bring the Holy Spirit with us and have its power increased in our assembling together.—William Richards, district president; Samuel A. Martin, district secretary.

Conference of Southern California District, will be held at Central Church, Thirty-ninth and Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, California, April 7, 8, and 9. We expect Patriarch Albert Carmichael, and Apostle M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer to be with us. Classes in Religious Education will be taught by L. L. Sutherland, and D. B. Sorden. This conference will decide upon a reunion for the district this summer, and there are several ordinations to take place. Meals will be served at the church as usual for the convenience of those from a distance and every effort will be made to make these meetings helpful. The Saints are urged to attend and share in the spiritual blessings we always receive at our conferences. For additional information or special reservations write, W. A. Teagarden, 595 Third Street, San Bernardino, California.

District Young People's Convention

The young people's convention of Portland District will convene at Portland, Oregon, April 7, 8, and 9. President Elbert A. Smith will be the speaker, and Apostle Myron A. McConley, teacher. The program is outlined as follows: Friday, April 7: 7.30 to 9 p. m.,

Smith, 8 to 9.—District president, J. L. Verhei.

Request Prayers

The following urgent request for prayers came to hand too late for inclusion in the regular prayer column: M. R. Shoemaker, of Beardstown, Illinois, again seeks the prayers of the church in behalf of his wife. For ten weeks Sister Shoemaker has suffered. She is now in the hospital and her physician holds no hope for her recovery. Her family ask the Saints to remember her before the heavenly Father.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. M. MCDOWELL.

Our Departed Ones

MAVIS.—Ida Tennant was born June 14, 1860, at Galesburg, Michigan, and was married to William Rosevear at Evart, Michigan, in 1889, who preceded her in death in February, 1901. To this union four sons, Walter, William, Fred, and John, were born and all survive their mother. In 1906, she married Theodore Mavis, who also passed away about four years ago. She was baptized into the church October 7, 1917, by Elder O. J. Hawn. Died at the home of her son, John, January 30, 1933, leaving to mourn, four sons and two brothers. She was loved and esteemed by many, and will be greatly missed. The funeral services were held from the Stuernal Funeral Home in charge of Elder Hubert Case, and interment was at Lake City, Michigan.

CRAVEN.—Rebecca Cato was born February 9, 1859, in Alabama. She moved with her parents, Elbert W. and Sabrina Ann Cato, to Missouri, in 1868, and had resided in Ray County most of the time since. Married Elkanah Craven, March 5, 1879, and nine children were born to them. Three children preceded her in death, Jesse Allen, Edward R. and Joseph D. Her husband departed this life eight days before she died. Six children are left to mourn: Mrs. Elsie Surbaugh and Edith Craven of the home north of Hardin, Missouri; Mrs. Ada F. Alexander, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Azel P. Craven, of Bonner Springs, Kansas; William Craven, of Richmond, Missouri, and Alma E. Craven, address unknown. There also survive ten grandchildren, one great-grandson, other relatives, and friends. She was baptized into the church in March, 1870, by Elder J. W. Johnson, and was a faithful member. She had been in poor health for several years but was confined to her bed only a short time before her death, February 26, 1933. The funeral services were held at New Hope Church by Elder Oscar Case, of Richmond, assisted by Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

MYERS.—Ina Myers was born at Eddyville, Iowa, July 17, 1856. She was married to James L. Myers, March 5, 1878, and to them six children were born. She united with the church in 1889. Passed from this life, March 3, 1933. The funeral was held at the home, Elder Lee Quick preaching the sermon. She was a good Saint, strong in the faith of the latter-day work. Interment was in La Harpe Cemetery.

WARNING!

Better not eat pork if the animal has not been fed according to Word of Wisdom. Government inspection will prove to you that over 90 per cent of the hogs are diseased. WHY? They are fed decomposed foods such as dead animals, decomposed garbage, all sorts of filth from slaughter houses and elsewhere.

We are not a carniverous animal, so let's go slow on meat: If it's meat, let it be clean, such as lamb, mutton, veal or young beef. Be sure to get some raw vegetable matter when you do use meat. PHOSFO is rich in raw mineral salts—just what you should have to make up what the flesh lacks.

PHOFSO neutralizes the acid also and what a help to the action of the bowels. You can't lose—we refund if you feel dissatisfied. We deliver to any part of the world. Only $1.00 per can. In U. S. A., three cans for $2.00; Canada, five pounds in bulk for $3.00, and six pounds in U. S. for $3.00.

Be a healthy wide-awake Saint. Sick Saints will not develop Zion very soon.

The Pigeonhole

The Pigeon (Himself)

The Pigeon poised for an instant on the window sill this morning, twisted its head around and plucked a blue quill feather from its right wing.

"Let me borrow a little of that purple ink of yours," he requested with one beady eye fixed on my favorite bottle of writing fluid, at the same time nipping the end of the quill into a point with his sharp beak. "I'm going to take a little hand in this writing myself. Everybody's asking who I am, and they're endowing me with the name of this one and that, till I'm all mixed up in the minds of the people. Of course when they have a lot of fault to find, after some of my recent experiences, I wouldn't mind if they'd blame the other fellow; but I object to carrying about a jumble of masculine and feminine names and being a mere hit-and-miss (mostly miss) character. So here with my own pen, and in my own claw-writing I'd like to inform the public that as I drift in and out the editorial window occasionally, I have a personality all my own. It may often be more felt than seen, but it is real, just the same. Believe it or not, I am

Yours truly,

THE PIGEON.

Back to Work

The daily press makes quite a hullabaloo over the fact that certain breweries of Saint Louis are putting several thousand men back to work in anticipation of the flood of beer that is presently threatening to deluge the country. The daily press is astute enough not to mention the fact that it will take several million drunkards to keep these few thousand sturdy workers busy. And we are suspicious that when the carpenters get through nailing up the rat holes they will soon be unemployed again.

Pied type * Many a man becomes tongue-tied when he is required to speak sense * According to the autobiographies, there are no bad men in the world * According to the biographies, there are few good ones * Pedestrians can tell you all about the faults of motorists * And motorists are eloquent about the stupidity and depravity of pedestrians * Neighbor A—— is a Democrat, and neighbor B—— is a Republican; and they have a terrific time trying to settle which party is responsible for what * They have never settled it, but the main idea seems to be this: your party is responsible for all the mistakes, and my party is responsible for all the good * Some men need four vocabularies: one to borrow money, one to flatter a woman, one to answer the judge, and another to pray for forgiveness * A good Christian can get along with one—he speaks the truth with it * Last week a giddy robin, sitting on our back fence, sang a blithe song of spring * This morning he chirped dolefully at a world covered with sleet and snow * But the robin is right—the snow always melts, if you wait long enough *

The Expanding Mission of the "Herald"

To any effort on the part of the business management of the Herald to increase the circulation of the Herald, we give our hearty approval and support. There has been a gratifying increase in the number of subscribers in recent months, and this has given much encouragement to the editors in their efforts to maintain and improve the literary standard of the Herald. Filled with good things each week, the paper goes on its mission to the Saints throughout the world, to help them in appreciation of the work, the ideals, and the progress of the church. It is carrying messages to youth and age, the office and the home, to priesthood and layman.

So, we sincerely hope that all who can will give hearty support and help to the efforts of Brother Hougas to get the Herald in the hands of a larger number of Saints, for the greater our subscription list the better we can make the Herald. And in helping the Herald you help the church, for it is the paper of the church, working for it, and holding up its ideals. A Herald should be visiting regularly each home in the church. F. M. S.

Blue Pencil Notes

The return of beer in America seems about to miss April 6 by only a moment. For that much let us be thankful. To us April 6 is rather a sacred day. God started something on that day—naturally the Devil is quite willing to start something the day after.

The recent legislation "legalizing" the sale of 3.2 beer and wine is the biggest piece of humbug since the days of P. T. Barnum—who had a remarkable animal to ballyhoo called the "What is it?"

Prohibition is still in force—still in the Constitution. It prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages. The ingenious plan was hit upon to declare 3.2 beer non-intoxicating. While about it Congress might have voted that opium is not a habit-forming drug and that revolvers and machine guns do not kill; such legislation might help some people who think that they are dead.

Men, women, and children killed by drunken auto drivers will be just as dead as though an enlightened Congress had not declared 3.2 beer non-intoxicating. Prohibition agents report that the "bootleg" beer that they have been seizing from the "speakeasies" has averaged about 3 per cent. The manager of a taxi line in Kansas City says that 3.2 beer may not intoxicate Congressmen but it will intoxicate his drivers and they are forbidden to drink it. Railroads, bus lines, air ways will probably take a similar stand. But thousands of irresponsible auto owners are free to drink as much as they can buy and then get behind a steering wheel and meet the sober man's car head-on—and we have no assurance that it will be a Congressman's car.

The masses of the people are hard put to it to finance needed expenditures for food and clothing and other bare necessities. Millions are flat broke and hardly know where the next meal will come from. Yet it is fondly hoped that the masses of the people will buy enough beer, with money that should go for bread for the family, that immense sums will be raised in taxes on such sales so that Uncle Sam may balance his budget. Had our representatives at Washington shown some willingness to reduce their mileage allowance of twenty cents per mile when they travel by rail (and even when they are only supposed to travel) we might understand their passion for a balanced budget. As it is their ardor seems more a passion for beer.

Chain drug stores palpitate between a desire to make money on the sale of beer and a fear that customers drunk on the non-intoxicating fluid may do more damage than will be balanced by the sales. The modern drug store is like Noah's ark, it contains a little of everything, and a customer somewhat tipsy on perfectly harmless beer might do considerable damage in the store—and he may do damage outside the store, too.

In Independence we had a hard fight to rid the town of the saloons, before the days of national prohibition. Our people were credited by the Kansas City papers with casting the deciding vote. But of course the credit had to be distributed among all those who helped. The day of the election that drove the saloons from town the minister of the Christian Church was carried into the Office of the First Presidency (then up town) having been beaten in broad daylight on the public streets by agents of the saloon interests. The liquor interests have always been lawless, they are lawless, they always will be lawless. Under cover of this dispensation

they are now able to evade the letter of the Constitution as they have done constantly since Prohibition was enacted—only now they may do so openly and in otherwise perfectly respectable places of business.

It now seems necessary for believers in strict temperance to begin again at the ground with a campaign of public education. For a hundred years the church has stood for temperance. Uniting with all other temperance agencies of a legitimate nature we must help to raise up another generation that has been made acquainted by educational processes with the real evils of alcohol. The abuses sure to spring up under the loose and haphazard way in which the return of beer and wine is being administered may help to create a revulsion of feeling that will make the task easier. E. A. S.

In Commendation of Our Women

In another column of this issue of the Herald our readers will find a report of the results, as measured in dollars and cents, of the special effort of the women of the church to raise funds for the general church budget. We are happy to join with the Presiding Bishopric in their commendation of this splendid showing. The amount thus raised has been most valuable and timely in making possible the meeting of pressing obligations and carrying forward the work of the church.

We call special attention to the results of the systematic effort on the part of the women of Independence. The more than four thousand dollars which they have turned over to the Presiding Bishopric is not only an eloquent testimony of self-sacrifice, zeal and devotion, but seems to carry evidence that the method which they have followed, that of systematic weekly solicitation in every home and the encouragement of strenuous sacrificing on the part of each home, is the method that may be depended upon to get results.

While we recognize that the methods used by the sisters of Independence may not for various reasons be the one best suited for smaller branches, we do heartily recommend that local officers and organized groups of women throughout the church give careful consideration to the possibility of adapting this method to their use. Evidence available from other points, notably Kansas City Stake, seems to support the contention that frequent, regular, systematic solicitation made possible by increasing the number of solicitors is certain to make a substantial increase in the tithes and offerings received.

Close observation of the experiment as it has been conducted in Independence leads us to the conclusion that the spiritual by-products of this effort have been even more valuable than the financial returns. Among these by-products we may mention the following: The number of contributors has been substantially increased. This refers not only to those giving offerings but to those paying tithing. Any number of instances have been reported where the visits to the various homes on the part of the sisters have brought timely advice and encouragement, have opened the way for such homes to receive material assistance and spiritual ministry, have removed misunderstandings and paved the way for the forming of new friendships, and, not the least, have reestablished the contact between such homes and the church. Anyone who has observed the women of Independence as they meet each Monday in the Stone Church can not fail to be impressed with the thought that something splendid has happened to them spiritually as a result of their work. Otherwise, scattered throughout Independence, meeting in their various congregations, engaged in the concerns of their own homes, they have been more or less strangers to each other. Now we find them welded into the highly-to-be-desired relationship of "the tie that binds." Such results can not be added up in columns but nevertheless they blaze the trail to Zion.

We are happy to announce that Sister C. C. Koehler, the leader of the women of Independence, has volunteered her services to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to help in any way she can to further the work of the women in other places. Sister Koehler's cooperation will make available to us the splendid experience which she has gained in organizing the women of the center place and supervising their activities during the past several months. We respectfully suggest and urge that stake, district, and branch presidents, as well as leaders of organized groups, get in touch with Sister Koehler through the office of the First Presidency, thus profiting by her experience as they endeavor to follow up their already successful beginning in this church-wide effort of raising the funds absolutely essential to the work of the church.

Many theories have been advanced in regard to the final destiny of man; but, as a rule, those theories have been too narrow, and have limited either the power of God or his goodness. But for all that, they have done good, no doubt, by stimulating thought and causing people to read the Bible more closely than they had done before.—Elder Isaac M. Smith, in "The Atonement of Christ and the Final Destiny of Man."

OFFICIAL

Report of Women's Effort

In the Saints' Herald of October 19, 1932, an appeal was made to the women of the church to assist the organization of the Bishopric in the raising of funds for the General Church. It will undoubtedly be of interest to the membership to learn of the results attained. We are herewith submitting figures showing the amounts raised by districts.

The figures include only the amounts received up to the end of January, 1933, and do not include funds received during February and March as we do not have complete reports to date for these two months, except for Independence. The amount raised by Independence up to and including March 20, totals $4,030.00.

It is to be noted that these figures do not reflect accurately the extent of the financial assistance rendered by the women of the church as many are engaged in activities for raising funds to pay off local church debts. It is quite probable, however, that there are a number of groups which are in a position to help in this project, but are not yet organized. We take this opportunity of soliciting the support of such groups as well as asking for the continued support of those who have already contributed.

It is to be noted that the total amount received through this source up to the end of January amounts to $6,287.11. We believe the women are to be congratulated for such a successful beginning.

A Few Thoughts for Young People

"And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."—Henry W. Longfellow.

• The whole world today is in a state of confusion. This one word describes the state of affairs at the present time—confusion in politics, confusion in industry, confusion in religion. Into this confusion Christ comes and calls our attention to the first old, familiar landmark—"Have faith in God."

• There is only one key to the solution of the problem of the origin of the universe—"In the beginning God created."

• In considering the origin of the universe we have our choice. Either we came here by chance, or by design. But in our experience we know nothing important and lasting happens by chance. A painter does not mix his paints in a bucket and fling them on a canvas hoping to produce a masterpiece.

• Some say it takes blind faith to believe in God as the Creator, but to believe in chance, one must not only be blind but deaf and exceedingly dumb. We must realize that back of law and order lie intelligence.

• The road is open before you. You have the green light, the right of way. Don't permit anyone to flag you down or to send you on a detour—"Have faith in God."

• We believe that God is the Creator, and next that he is a personal God, and third, that he is an unchangeable God.

The Story of Etta Kett

A Petty Subject

THE SUN WAS SETTING by the time Bill and Etta, in Bill's coupe, left Elmwood behind and reached the beautiful road known as River Drive. With the glory of the sunset before them, the river like a sheet of silver at the left, and the rugged silhouette of the bluffs at the right, neither felt like speaking. It was too nearly perfect to spoil it with speech.

As they swung around a curve in the gathering dusk, the car's headlights flashed through the back window of a car parked at the side of the road.

"Cars park on the roadside for two purposes," said Bill, laughing. "One is for repairing tires and the other is for petting. And I don't see anybody repairing tires there!"

"'Somehow, after my experience last night, I can't see any humor in it," answered Etta. "After you've had to fight to escape it once, it looks disgusting and degrading. I wonder how many girls submit to it because they are afraid of never having any dates if they don't. Don't you think, Bill, that it's terribly unfair for a fellow to take a girl out riding in his car and then, without any warning, expect her to let him kiss and caress her? And what do those do who have been taken too far out to walk home?"

Bill did not answer directly, but spoke rather slowly as he turned the car around to go back to town.

"I've always been glad that we didn't do it, Etta. It gives a person a feeling of cleanness and honor to know that he has never done anything that he'd be ashamed to have his family or friends know. I'm glad that we can look them all in the face with clear consciences."

It was the first time Bill had expressed himself on the subject, but Etta was thrilled with a deep sense of happiness that she had the friendship of a man to whom principles and character meant something.

After a short silence Etta spoke again.

"When I get married, Bill, I don't want to come to my husband like a used handkerchief. I'd like to come to him with a clean heart. And it would make me very happy if he would come to me in the same condition."

When they separated at her door, Etta knew that their conversation that evening had strengthened the bond of understanding between them.

How to Be Happy

Happiness is the true end and aim of life. It is the task of intelligence to ascertain the conditions of happiness, and when found, the truly wise will live in accordance with them. By happiness is meant not simply the joy of eating and drinking—the gratification of the appetite—but good, well-being, in the highest and noblest forms. The joy that springs from obligations discharged, from duty done, from generous acts, from being true to the ideal, from a perception of the beautiful in Nature, art and conduct. The happiness that is born of and gives birth to poetry and music, that follows the gratification of the highest wants. Happiness is the result of all that is really right and sane.—Robert Ingersoll.

There Is Work for All to Do

By Virginia Ann Williams

AS I LOOK BACK on the history and founding of this church, my heart is filled with gratitude and praise to the pioneers who faced the sting of criticism and the lash of persecution to bring to us the wonderful teachings of this church. It is up to us, the young people of this church, to carry on the great work which is now in its infancy, to build on the foundation which was laid by those whose vision and inspiration planned this wonderful future.

When we were baptized we were adopted into the family of God. We have separated ourselves from the world and by our gospel covenant we have dedicated our lives to the service of the Lord. Hence we are not our own; we belong to God and to his church. We must be very diligent, humble, and prayerful, for the temptations of the world are many.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matthew 5: 16.) Let us so live that our life may be an example for good to others. We have all heard the old familiar saying, "Actions speak louder than words." Let our actions speak for the good of our church. In this way we, the young people of the church, may be helpers in evangelizing the world.

As we go forward we should not hesitate to accept every opportunity given us to serve our fellow men. There is a work for all of us to do. If we have a desire to work but do not know just where our work lies, we should pray earnestly and ask God, and he will open up avenues of service that will be acceptable to him.

Let us all cooperate in the effort to "'Evangelize the world and Zionize the church." The task is as much ours as it is our parents' and the missionaries' of this church. There is something we all can do even though it seems small. It is highly important that we should qualify for the greatest efficiency but let us recognize that in attending to the smaller things that seem so insignificant we acquire strength and ability to discharge the larger responsibilities. So let's start now trying to find "something to do for the Master each day" and joy and happiness will be ours to enjoy.

NEWS BRIEFS

G. J. Waller Ordained a Patriarch

Elder G. J. Waller, who has lived fifty years in Hawaii and given unstintingly of his services in building up the church in the islands, was ordained a patriarch March 22, at the Danvers Street Church, San Francisco, California, by President F. M. Smith and Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer.

It was fortunate that Brother Waller could be on the mainland of the United States in time to meet President F. M. Smith in San Francisco, also Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer.

In Hawaii the natives call Brother Waller the "big father," and are grateful for the help he has given in building the three groups in Honolulu, the Hawaiian, the Chinese, and the Japanese branches. Brother Waller is manager of the Hawaii Meat Company.

Northern Saskatchewan Young People Hold Convention

Attendance far in excess of all expectations. Accommodations taxed to the limit. Good music, dramatics, and forensics. Sober thoughts on youth and the church. Splendid sermons by Ward L. Christy and W. J. Cornish. True Latter Day Saint fellowship. Worshipful prayer services. Inspiration. All of these combined to make a highly successful young people's convention for Northern Saskatchewan District, held at Saskatoon, March 10, 11, and 12.

Hard Times Reach Society Islands

Hard times have just reached the Society Islands according to word from Elder J. H. Yager, missionary. The price of copra, the principal commodity of the islands, fell to 2 cents minus or 47½ centimes per kilo landed in Tahiti, the latter part of February, which means that the land owner got from 1¼ to 1½ cents per kilo for the product. Such prices are working hardships on the natives and on our mission in the islands.

Large Nonmember Response to Missionary Meetings at Buffalo

Over two hundred nonmembers attended a series of meetings conducted at Buffalo, New York, early this month by Missionary William I. Fligg. And as a direct result of the services a class in baptism was arranged for Palm Sunday.

Ample preparations were made for the series. The week preceding was devoted to special prayer services and fasting. The meetings were also given splendid publicity. Brother Fligg's subject was "The Lord's Vineyard," and he illustrated his sermons with a large chart. Saints and their friends gave a gratifying response.

Brother Fligg is holding meetings at Niagara Falls until April 2, when he plans to go to other points in the district.

Tigres Branch Builds Home for Pastor

Feeling the need of the capable help and permanent residence of Pastor Carl Freeman and his family, Tigres Branch, near Ava, Missouri, decided not long ago to assist in the construction of a home for the family. Saints and their friends—and Brother Freeman has many friends in that community—came together and felled logs. A sawmill operator promised to saw the logs free, and soon the branch hopes to have a house erected. Everyone is enjoying his part in building this home—indeed the Saints of that community like to cooperate. Members of Four Corner Mission, south of Ava, desiring to do their part, gave the family a grocery shower.

Limerick, Ohio, Branch Celebrates Natal Anniversary of Aged Sister

Though Sister Catherine Grow, member of Limerick Branch, has passed her ninety-sixth birthday anniversary, she has not yet observed her second birthday as a church member. March 25, Sister Grow was ninety-six years old, and on Sunday, March 26, her home branch celebrated her birthday which was an event in the community. Sister Grow was baptized a member of the church April 13, 1931, at Jackson, Ohio, by Elder John R. Grice.

Brother A. A. Hapai Is Dead

Hawaiian Saints mourn the death of Priest A. A. Hapai, of Hilo, January 13. He had been a member of the priesthood since 1918, and contributed much to the progress of Hilo Branch. Was baptized by M. A. McConley in 1917. Brother Hapai was fifty years of age. Besides the Saints of the mission and many friends, he leaves to mourn, his wife and seven children. The funeral was very large because of the esteem and regard held for him in the islands.

Member Converted by "Printed Word" Hears First Sermon

Sister Audrey Slone, of Bartlett, Nebraska, is a young woman who was converted by the "printed word." When convinced of the truth of the church's message, she traveled, to Independence for baptism. She is superintendent of schools of Wheeler County, Nebraska, and a short time ago, while attending a State meeting of school officers at Lincoln, heard her first Latter Day Saint sermon.

Death and Destruction in the Earthquake

By Winifred Milner

Lomita, California, March 22.

The horror of an earthquake can not be described. A low rumble . . . the reeling of the earth . . . Falling buildings . . . Women's screams . . . Children's wails. . . . Terror . . . Death! Through all of this man's faith reaches to find God.

Twelve seconds after five fifty-five in the afternoon, March 10, beautiful Long Beach, and surrounding vicinity lay desolate. It was as if an unseen hand had laid hold of the cities in this region and flattened them. In twelve seconds fifty million dollars' worth of damage was done.

Out of this trembling and shaking our people emerged unharmed. Strange as it may seem, a little while after the shake-up, Brother Milner and I found many of the Long Beach Saints gathered around a little campfire, on an elementary school campus, near the church, their frightened hearts finding comfort in the companionship of one another. The air was quite chilly. Some in their hurry had forgotten to get blankets.

When we returned home we persuaded two families with small babies, the Crums, and Leibolds, to go with us. The others remained at the schoolhouse, until about ten thirty, when the alarming cry of "Tidal Wave" drove our frenzied people, with others, into the hills.

On Signal Hill, among oil derricks, electric wires, and gas, they realized they were in far more danger than they had been around the little campfire on the school lawn. By morning, one by one, they shamefacedly came back, each condemning himself for his lack of faith, each determined to trust God for protection in the future.

By Saturday night our home was alive with activity. Fifty-three Saints were being sheltered here. Brother and Sister Moyle, and Brother and Sister Fred Savage opened their doors that our people might find comfort and rest. At first there were so many of us that beds were made all over our house. Several of us were sleeping on the floor. Sunday Bishop Carmichael, from Santa Ana, brought cots and tents. We are very comfortable now.

It has been twelve days since the earthquake, and our camp remains peaceable and happy. The days have been warm. Our children play contentedly outside.

Some of our number have gone back to Long Beach, but most of us remain. We are learning to put into practice the Zionic ideals of living. Every evening finds us gathered together, in our large dining room, and living room, for family prayer. God is closer to us because of this worship together. Last Sunday we had Sunday school and preaching in the morning, a worship service in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening. God's Spirit was here to bless us. How thankful I have been that my home is large enough to accommodate a large number of friends so comfortably.

Sister Flossie Sacrey has taken over the management of my large family, and the planning of the meals.

Our fifty-four-inch table is extended to the full extent. We feed the children first, then the men, and lastly the women.

Those who have entered the Moyle, Savage, and Milner family circle are Brother and Sister Jesse Johnson and family; Sister Moran; Brother and Sister George Johnson and child; Brother and Sister Hacker and sons; Brother and Sister Mark Hacker and family; Brother and Sister James Hazzard; five members of the Jones family; five of the Otis family; Brother and Sister Leibold, June, and baby; Brother and Sister Crum and family; Brother and Sister Ralston and children, Brother and Sister Sacrey, their sons Jerald and Jack; Sister Packard; Sister Taylor; Brother and Sister Pendarvis and son; Sister Scott and two sons.

Local friends headed by Mrs. Marion Welch of the Red Cross, and President George Key, of the Lomita relief, have rallied splendidly to our needs, sending delicious food, and everything possible to help in our emergency. We are very grateful for these things.

Our hearts are lifted up. We feel that God is blessing us, even as he blessed the children of Israel when they crossed the Red Sea. It is our desire to live worthy of the blessings that are ours. It is our aim to go forward as a great chain, purifying our hearts, that we may have a part to play in the redemption of Zion.

The difference between a religious man and one who is irreligious is not that one is necessarily better than the other but that one includes God among the realities of his universe, with which he feels himself in some living practical relation, while the other does not.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

A Youth Conference Problem Discussion:

The Challenge of the Present Crisis in Education

By G. N. Briggs
President of Graceland College

One of the most famous and oft-told stories of Chauncey Depew is that at his final examination for a degree in Philosophy at Yale University the professor said to him, "Rise, Mr. Depew," and Mr. Depew rose. The professor, looking at him sternly, said: "Mr. Depew, your topic is 'The Immortality of the Soul'; your time is ten minutes."

So in "from one thousand to fifteen hundred words," as reads the invitation to write this article, I am to discuss "Education," a subject on which more volumes have been written than could be stacked in any fair sized college library in the country.—Author's Note.

THERE probably has never been in the lifetime of the present generation more urgent problems for solution or a greater need for clear thinking and for the fullest cooperation.

President Butler of Columbia University recently expressed it as his opinion that there are abundant and convincing signs that America has reached the end of an era in education and in the history of some of those forces which have made possible the extraordinary development of the past generation—that we are now in the period of transition leading to the new era—an educational renaissance such as the world has never witnessed.

Our historically minded brethren are sometimes led to overpraise the past, to underestimate the present, and to overfear the future.

As one historian has said, "The present is merely the invisible bridge over which the historic past marches to the shaping of the undetermined future. The use which we make of the past will always be the chief influence in determining what the future shall be. That future may be either ordered progress or chaos, according as we understand the past or are ignorant of it. The question always presses for answer whether or not men will really begin to learn from experience, whether they will really avoid the old time-worn mistakes and errors, and whether they will strengthen the ancient and well-established advances and successes which men have made, and improve upon them."

The answer to the question thus propounded by this eminent historian is to be found in the influence the schools and colleges can bring to bear on the present and the next generation.

This transition period through which we are now passing and from which we are just beginning to emerge has brought into view an unexampled prominence a series of difficult problems whose solution affects the happiness and satisfaction of the entire world. The solution of these problems demands with the greatest urgency study by the keenest intellect which the world can provide.

To find a way out of these economic, social, and political difficulties, with their disastrous consequences, is a responsibility which rests especially upon the leaders in the educational world.

PHILIPS BROOKS many years ago said, "Sad is the day for any man when he becomes absolutely satisfied with the life he is living, the thoughts he is thinking, and the deeds he is doing; when there ceases to be for ever beating at the doors of his soul a desire to do something larger which he feels and knows he was meant and intended to do."

The fact that the general officers of the church have called a Youth Conference and Leadership Convention to meet at Graceland College in June is evidence of their appreciation of the significance of the present epoch and that if our youth are to be prepared to take full advantage of the golden age of opportunity soon to pass to them they must be alive to the present requirements for study and education. The entire program will be one of education in the broadest sense through a realization of the significance of world and church problems. Most significant in the onward march of today is the increasing recognition of the value and necessity of education.

Research is the advance guard of progress, and no research is possible unless it is engaged in by those who have been educated for it.

It has often been said, but it can not be too often repeated, that there is no saturation point in education. No man ever goes so far that he can afford to say, or even afford to think, that his education is completed. The wisdom of the truly educated man is made up of the accretions of day by day observation, study, and discussion of the world about him, and particularly of that part of the world which most closely affects his own life and the lives of his associates.

The basic principle of any program of education is that it enables those engaged in it the opportunity to keep abreast of their times. Conditions change constantly, and rapidly, and only by keeping in step with these changes can one in the modern world win the success which should be the goal of everyone. That is why educational institutions are conducted at great expense of time and money—why frequent meetings of leaders are held, why conferences and conventions are called—so that all that research reveals may be made available to every man who will take advantage of the opportunities that are placed before him for advancement.

Education fits men for life—it enables the church to function to the maximum, making it possible for God to come into the lives of the people with the largest degree of success.

"The Glory of God is Intelligence."

WE ARE IN THE MIDST of a great transition from one era of human life to another. The present crisis is the first shock of this great transition. We may move in either of two ways—toward the painful road of violence, revolution, destruction, and rebuilding, or toward the common sense road of patient readjustment through political and social reform by education. Whether America ultimately shall take the path of reform or of revolution depends in the last analysis upon the schools to guide and stabilize the neighborhood and the community; upon the college to provide the leaders to guide and enlighten the nation.

It is in times like these that new leadership is born. Young men and women in the colleges learn first hand the facts of political, industrial, and social life in the hard school of their personal experience. They ask why? who? how? because they perceive that they and others have a stake in the larger world.

The world was startled a few months ago by what one has called the most potent and significant statement to be made in the centuries of man's habitation on this small planet. This is the statement, "Man, in his age-long struggle for leisure and the elimination of toil, has finally arrived at that position where, for the first time, this goal is not only possible, but probable."

Education is the means by which this golden age upon which we are about to enter can bring the greatest return to mankind. With Shakespeare we may say, "The times are out of joint," but we have heard of no one who is acknowledged as having been "born to set it right." There are many who feel that they could do so if given the opportunity but adjustments will be made only through the most complete cooperation between individuals, associations, states, and nations.

What is the challenge? to whom? for what? and how is the challenge to be met by you, by the church, by the nation?

Full and correct answers to these questions would put the world back on the road to complete recovery—no one individual has the answers. They can be found only through the leadership developed by research into the religious, social, and political situation in which the world finds itself.

That research is the dominant factor in social and economic progress is evidenced by the fact that last year in a thousand laboratories 15,000 scientists spent two hundred fifty million dollars with results that have largely revolutionized many of the activities of mankind.

YOUTH does not grow twice—they pass this way but once.

What is not done for youth today can not be done at all. Tomorrow they will be grown men and women and the time for preparation will have passed.

If America is to grow in strength and influence, it will be because she gives more, rather than less, attention to education; it will be because the gap between the scholar and the mass is bridged by a recognized education; it will be because representative government represents thought, intelligence, and scholarship rather than the political ambitions of some officeholder.

The aphorism of H. G. Wells regarding the race between education and catastrophe has great significance for the United States, for democracy lives on education. The challenge then is to education to lay plans to defeat the catastrophe of which Wells speaks.

Why is education more important to the people of America than to those of other countries? The answer is that the perpetuation of democratic government and ideals depends on an educated citizenry. Democracy lives on education. The rule of the people must be preserved at all times and at all hazards and that is possible only through the largest educational opportunities.

The report of the President's Research Committee on Social Trends appointed three years ago and consisting of five hundred of the leading investigators of the country may well be regarded as one commentator has said, "as the first step toward a Magna Carta the great charter of a re-emancipated

The Visiting Priest

From the viewpoint of the one being visited

By ELLA BRACKENBURY LAMBKIN

The amount of comment and criticism that one hears on every side indicates that the affairs of the priesthood are of interest to all the church, and not the exclusive concern of the ministry themselves. Many questions arise. What do mothers, for example, think of the visiting priest? The article below is written by a mother and home-maker who has herself made contributions to the work of the church. Do mothers have a right to be heard concerning an office of so great importance to their homes? We think they do. We do not regard this article as final on the subject. But we do believe that it contains some thought-provoking ideas. Other good articles on the subject will be welcome.—Editors.

WHAT MAY WE EXPECT of the priest in his visits to our home? He was placed in the church to supply a specific need in the perfecting of the Saints. What is the need that called forth this office?

The part of the duty of the priest which has to do with home visiting reads, "—and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.)

To exhort, we learn from the dictionary, is to incite by appeal or argument to good deeds. To incite is to move to action; stir up; spur on; encourage; impel. Then to exhort is to stir up, spur on, encourage, or impel to good deeds by means of appeal or argument.

The priest comes to our home. It is supposed, of course, that he is a praying man, that he knows how to pray and can teach us how to pray if it is necessary. If this were not true how could he spur us on to perform this good deed? That seems simple enough. Every priest understands that he must be able to pray with the family visited.

Still I wonder what would happen if the mother of the family should say to the priest that she wanted to teach her children to really pray and not just to say their prayers and should ask how to do it. Could he offer some suggestions as to how it can be done. Would he be concerned? A public school-teacher makes the statement, "We do not attach enough importance to the training of our little ones or we wouldn't have so much trouble with the big ones." So these things can not be too trivial for a church officer.

Let us suppose that the priest has studied the subject of prayer and is willing to give the benefit of his study to the family he is visiting. Is then his duty completely performed? Is that all we may expect of him? The text says that besides teaching them to pray vocally and in secret the priest should exhort them to attend to all family duties.

And what are family duties? Is not the training and care of children a big element in family life? Then I wonder if it is any business of the priest if children are undernourished? Some criminologists tell us that underdevelopment may be a cause of crime. It certainly limits the usefulness and value of the individual to the group and to himself. Perhaps the parents may have the best intentions in the world and still, possibly because of overindulgence, fail to produce people who will help to make Zion the group of happy, healthy people it should be. What can the priest do about it? Is he expected to study balanced rations? Well, shouldn't he? He can not teach people how to pray unless he knows something about how to pray. How can he teach parents to perform this family duty if he knows nothing about it? How can he spur them on by appeal and argument if he knows nothing about it? Women's study groups may be providing for a part of this work but are the people who need it getting the benefit? The fact that our parents are not trained for their important work puts a double burden upon the priest, no doubt. There is no one who should give more hearty cooperation than should the priest to classes in the church school bearing upon these subjects. Let us imagine that the priest has done his duty along this line. Is that all? Are the needs all provided for?

"All family duties," one of which is to teach the children so that they will be prepared to be baptized when they are eight years of age. The church school is helping in this work but they can not do the foundation work. I visited in the home of a small boy not long ago. I was amazed to discover that the parents were actually teaching the child to be disobedient. He was a puny, sickly little fellow, but bright and interesting. His anxiety for approval, which could have been used to make him a pleasant, agreeable child, was being used instead to spoil him.

Would that sort of thing be any business of the priest? It would seem so. What can he do about it? These parents did not want to injure their child. They loved him, so much so that they actually thought it was smart to see him be disobedient and disrespectful. The trouble with such parents probably is that they have not a sufficiently broad vision of their task. They do not know their child. They know how darling he is, how cute and bright. But they do not realize the effect that the daily experiences are having upon him. Even if they realize that something is wrong they do not know exactly where the mistake is being made nor what to do to correct the trouble. For the priest to come to such a family and tell them they are making a mistake and they must change will do little good and may do harm. It must be a matter of education, a gradual bringing to light the better ideals and ideas. It can not be done in one visit. It "is not reached at a single bound, but we build the ladder by which we rise."

Can the priest exhort these people on this subject; can he stir them up by argument and appeal if he knows nothing of child psychology? He will be able to see that things are not right; it is easy to see that with other people's children. But will he be able to put his finger on the mistake and suggest a remedy. Young parents often feel the need of guidance along these lines but they do not know where to look for help. They do not even know what they need, definitely. Where can they go for advice better than to the officer set in the church organization by God for just such service?

One more thought I wish to express, a thought that has been with me for years. There is no doubt that the family visit by the priest is a good thing. But is that enough? The text says, "visit the house of each member." Has the boy and girl a family duty to perform? Is it any concern of the priest if he sees that the boy is disrespectful and disobedient and spends the most of his time on the street? Or if the girl is impudent and is cross and impatient with the younger brothers and sisters? Have these boys and girls no family duties? To be sure the priest could do little with the lad or lass by calling them to task in the family circle. He might do more by visiting them by themselves. Visit the house of each member, exhort each member to attend to all family duties.

If a child is old enough to be a member of the church does he not rate personal attention from its officers? Perhaps these youthful members should be visited with the consent and sympathy of their parents, but how often parents would welcome this assistance if it were offered? There comes a time in the life of a youth when a person outside the family can have more influence with him than parents can because he has reached the age when he seeks independence from parental control. To whom may the parents look for a guiding hand at this critical time? Who could better do it than the priest whose duty it seems to be?

This opens up another whole line of study and thought. If he is to influence the youth the priest must speak the language of youth. He must understand and sympathize with the urges and impulsions which cause the youth to do the foolish things he does. He must help to guide these impulses without dangerously repressing natural trends.

Some of these duties may be partly supplied by other means, women's groups, young people's leaders, but it seems to be the particular and peculiar duty of the priest to see that they are supplied.

An immense task! I can not understand how any sane man can deliberately ask for or crave this work. Still less can I understand how any person, having this task given to him, can look for a larger task. There are offices carrying higher authority, greater honor, but is there an office in the church which offers opportunity for more essential or vital service to the Saints than the office of priest?

Aside from provision for our spiritual welfare provided by the eldership we seem to need a family-relations-expert. God has provided for this in the office of priest. I wish that we might be able to send our young men through high school and, at least, two years of college in preparation to become priests. Since we can not do that the need can be partly supplied by home study and reading. To be sure, all this learning would not be enough. The world has not solved the problem yet and it has all this. But the rest is God's part and I am sure he will do his if we do ours.

The reasonableness of belief in the life of the soul after death in a very different sort of existence is not at all invalidated by the present dependence of the soul on the body, or on any part of the body. The illustration of the butterfly and the cocoon serves the purpose of bringing this out quite clearly. In the chrysalis state, the butterfly that is to be shut up in a cell, without power of locomotion, feeding upon very different food from what it will need in the next stage. Nothing in the nature of the chrysalis would lead us to suppose that this dingy, formless, immovable creature would some fine day change into a brilliantly colored, wide-winged, roving animal, sucking its sustenance from the nectar of flowers, and vying with them in its beauty. I suppose that one who had known only the chrysalis would scoff at the idea of the butterfly emerging from it. It is acquaintance with the fact which has made it a commonplace for us.—J. Palestine as I Saw It in 1913

By E. F. Robertson

FROM THE DAYS OF MY CHILDHOOD, I always had a desire to visit the Holy Land and view the scenes that are made sacred by the deeds of holy men and prophets, the apostles, and our Lord Jesus while in the flesh. Upon my return from the Australasion Mission, early in the year 1913, my long cherished desire was to be realized. My friend and fellow missionary, James W. Davis, and I disembarked from the German liner by which we had come from Fremantle at Port Said in Egypt and in the dim light of the early morning, we were rowed by a native boatman from the ship, which was at anchor some distance from the land, to the shore. Everything was far different from the scenes of our western world. People wore different clothing and looked different. They also behaved differently. It being so early in the morning, we saw the milkman making his rounds, not like our American milkman, taking up empty bottles and leaving full ones. But going to the doors with his flock of goats following him. The housewife would bring out her pint or quart measure and watch the process of milking, thus making sure that it was milk she was getting and not water. He did not expect to be trusted and knew he was not worthy to be trusted, for he was not brought up in a Christian land, and had not the background of our Christian ideals.

After several hours spent looking around this strange and interesting city, we boarded the Egyptian Mail Steamer for Jaffa, where we arrived some time in the early hours of the next morning. I was awakened by a pandemonium of shrill cries, and hoarse croaks, all in a language that I could not understand; and, rising upon my elbow, peeked out through the porthole upon a scene that is hard to describe. Men in long flowing dresses and with long beards, in small boats of varying descriptions, dozens of them—scores of them; and each one doing his utmost to make more noise than all the rest, with a view to getting passengers to employ him to take themselves and luggage to the shore, as there, too, we were at anchor some distance from land. The oriental ports seem not to have been equipped with wharves like our western ones. Rising and hastily shaving and dressing, and going through the motions of eating the abominable conglomeration they called "breakfast," we permitted one of the boatmen to row us to the shore. The city of Jaffa, called Joppa in the Bible, looked like one vast irregular building covering the hillside that sloped down toward the sea.

Soon we had reached the land, and were in the narrow, dirty, and ill-smelling street. When we met a camel laden with a cumbersome burden that filled the street from one side to the other, we were advised to squat as close to the wall as possible and let the said burden pass over us. We were conducted to "Hardegg's Hotel," where we left our luggage and secured the services of a guide to show us the interesting scenes of the place. First he took us to the housetop that is claimed to be the very one upon which Simon Peter was resting when he saw the vision of a great sheet let down from heaven, with animals which as a Jew he had been taught were unclean, and he was bidden to rise, and slay and eat.

IT MAY HAVE BEEN the same housetop—at least it was the same city with many buildings that Peter saw still standing, and the same blue sea rolled away to the westward to meet the same blue sky that greeted the eye of the famed apostle. Our guide also reminded us that it was from this port that Jonah set forth on the occasion that he had the experience with the whale. Next, we must be shown some reminder of the good woman, Dorcas or Tabitha, whom Peter raised from the dead. We were taken to a beautiful tomb, which we were told was Tabitha's. It may have been—anyway it was interesting and beautiful, and from the top of it we had a splendid view of the Plain of Sharon, the sea coast plain of Palestine, stretching away toward the hills and mountains of Judea.

In addition to its beautiful scenery and its historic interest, Jaffa is noted for its luscious grapes and oranges. Oh, such oranges! So big, and so sweet!! After luncheon at the hotel, we boarded the train for Jerusalem, employing the same guide to accompany us. We passed through Lydda, where the infirm man who had been bedridden for eight years was healed under Peter's ministration, and passed through the fields where Sampson is said to have burned the ripened grain of the Philistines as it stood in the fields, by catching three hundred foxes and setting fire brands to their tails and turning them loose. We passed also through the valley of Ajalon, where Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still, when Israel battled with the Philistines. This is called the battle of Beth-Horon, and was one of the most decisive and important battles that has ever been fought.

AT SUNSET, we arrived at the station in Jerusalem, and hiring a dilapidated conveyance we were taken to the Floyd mansion where our brother Reese Jenkins resided, and where we were made welcome during our stay in Jerusalem. With what interest we walked about the city! How we tried in imagination to reconstruct the scenes of the past, when it was the proud capital of the Israelite empire under the reigns of David and Solomon: or even as it appeared in the days of our Savior with its beautiful temple, its splendid walls and fortifications, now in varying stages of ruin. And as we looked upon the Mount of Olives with only a few scattered and scraggly trees, and bestrewn with rocks, the crumbling remains of the beautiful buildings that must have graced a former age, we tried to see it as a garden of olives, as it probably was in the time of the Master. And visiting the small parked inclosure that is called Gethsemane, we tried to vision the garden that used to be at or near that place, where Jesus used to retire with his disciples for quiet meditation and heart to heart instruction, and where he knelt in agony during the last hour of his liberty, while his disciples slept. In the church of the holy sepulchre we were neither impressed with the gilded tomb, where Jesus never was laid, with the three holes in the ground where the crosses of Jesus and the two thieves never stood, nor with the grave of Adam, where Adam never slept. So many places you are shown where tradition says something of great importance took place, and you will learn that this particular tradition originated only a few years ago. Yes, we even saw the basin in which Jesus was baptized by John in his infancy (?), and a portrait of the holy mother and child painted by Saint Luke! And many other things that our common sense taught us were only fakes. But when we visited the Pool of Siloam, we felt that it was the very water where Jesus told the blind man to wash and he would see. And at Bethesda, when we saw the peculiar troubling of the water at regular intervals, we were sure this was the very place where Jesus found the impotent man and asked him, "Wilt thou be made whole?" And told him to "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." Or when we stood at the summit of Olivet as the sun was setting and looked westward to the lower level where Jerusalem stood, surrounded by her walls, enthroned on her hills, we thought we were viewing at least a somewhat similar scene to what his prophetic eye beheld when he stood on the same mountain and wept over the city, saying, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate because you knew not the time of your visitation." Returning to the city and passing the Jews' wailing place, we saw crowds of Jews, some in silken robes and some in coarse raiment, and heard their agonized cries as they mourned that their beloved city was under the heel of the oppressor.

ONE COLD, MISTY AFTERNOON we went to Bethlehem and saw the place of Jesus' birth. At least if we were not in the lower chamber that was once the stable where Joseph and Mary found shelter, we were in the near vicinity of that hallowed spot. And from the roof of the Church of the Nativity we looked out upon the very fields where the shepherds were watching their flocks when the heavenly choir sang to them of his birth.

On another occasion, we hired a carriage, and taking Brother and Sister Jenkins, our blind brother "Solomon," his daughter Lulu, and a young boy whose name I do not remember, we journeyed to the Dead Sea and the Jordan, stopping overnight in the town of Jericho. Thus we had crossed the sea coast plain, the Shephelah, the mountain region, entered the Jordan Valley, and had seen from the distance the eastern highlands, with the peaks of Pisgah and Nebo especially prominent. A night in the town made famous by the parable of the good Samaritan, and as the home of Zaccheus, and then we returned to Jerusalem, stopping to see the valley of Chereth, where Elijah was fed by ravens, and many other places of interest.

OUR NEXT JOURNEY was to Galilee, and was taken in company with a party of tourists whose acquaintance we had made in Jerusalem; with one of the most efficient guides that money could procure. Leaving Jerusalem in the early morning, in three carriages, we drove northward, stopping at the ruins of Nob, the ancient priestly city; at Luz or Bethel where Jacob dreamed about the ladder; at Shiloh, the one-time home of the ark of the covenant and the Tabernacle; at Jacob's well where Jesus talked to the woman of Samaria. This was one of the places that was real, for it is the only well in that part. Jacob digged it, one distinction, and Jesus visited it, another distinction. And it is deep, well covered, and appeared sanitary. And, being very thirsty, I drank deeply of its waters.

We spent a night in the ancient city of Shechem, with a visit to the Samaritan temple at the hour of worship, and a conversation with their High Priest, and a journey next day in which we called at the ancient city of Samaria, and were impressed, and awed, by the splendid ruins that remain of a civilization long since dead. We then crossed the plain of Dothan where Joseph's wicked brethren sold him, to the village of Geneen where Jesus cleansed ten lepers, and only one returned to give him thanks;

A Problem Story for Young Home Builders

Riches Untold

By Florence Tracey

Is Any Man Irresistible ?

Chapter 13

Things That Prick

"I GUESS life is just one problem after another, Polly," and Edith rubbed her forehead a little ruefully, that is, she came as near rubbing it as her date-sticky hand would allow. It was Saturday afternoon, and the two were preparing a quantity of date loaf, for which Polly was famous in her community. It was to be a special treat for the girls of Edith's school society at their regular meeting after school the following Tuesday. "All of us have them. Problems are like gray hairs. When one comes and you get rid of it, two more come in its place. You have yours, mother has hers, and even I have mine. Right now mine is great gobs of unmanageable dates, the kind that adhere to your fingers and are too sweet for words. They have hearts of stone, too," she added as an afterthought.

"I knew there were problems worrying you." Polly was watching the boiling kettle on the stove. "But I wanted you to bring up the subject. I didn't want to mention it when—"

"My goodness, Polly," broke in the girl, "you know I wanted to talk it over with you just as I do everything else, but you were sick. How could I bring up my little problems when you looked like a ghost? I tell you, you had me scared for awhile. I thought you were going into a decline or something or other. You know the old saying: 'The good die young.' "

"Then I shall live years yet," laughed the older one. "But come, when shall we have a more opportune time for discussion of perplexities? Tell me Problem Number One. If I can I shall be glad to help."

"My problems Number One to Ten inclusive are all rolled into one—Dan." Polly nodded. "You remember that I've always said I wouldn't get married until I was at least twenty-five and had some sense? Well—I said that before I saw Dan. Of course Mother just snorts at the idea of a daughter of hers marrying just as soon as she graduates from high school—and it does sound silly, doesn't it?—but, Polly, mother isn't the one that's crazy about Dan." Seriously Edith regarded the pile of dates from which she had removed the stones.

Polly did not speak.

"You see," the girl continued, "if I were to marry him in June, it would mean giving up so many things for one as young as I—Independence, the church, the gang, school, almost everyone I know. Why, I'd be stepping into a new world!" Dan's home and headquarters were in Shreveport, Louisiana.

"You'd be giving up Graceland, too," suggested the other.

"Yes, and my career as a nurse." The brown eyes were dream-drenched. "But sometimes, Polly, I think I love him enough to give up all of them, and like it."

"This is getting serious. You don't mean you've capitulated already—when you've seen him only twice!" teased Polly.

"No, I haven't—yet, but I've been thinking." Then more slowly as if she were meditating aloud: "I've liked him from the start, but when he first wrote that he cared about me, I thought he was teasing, and answered him in that vein. Then when I learned that he really meant it, well it almost got me. Honestly, I cried a whole evening over it—I couldn't reconcile his love with my life plans. That's when I began thinking. . . . And then again, Polly, I want to go to Graceland so bad that I can just feel it. I want to go there free and able to study, and when I feel like that I almost wish I had never met Dan!"

"But has he suggested a June wedding?"

Edith blushed. "About a month ago he wrote asking if he could send me a ring. Said he really wouldn't send it, but would bring it. He even had the nerve to add that this would be his idea of an engagement, short and sweet—just right for a June wedding."

"Fast worker," dryly commented Polly as she removed the boiling candy from the stove. She had fallen behind the times during her illness. In reality she had intended to keep up with Edith's romance, but it had developed to astonishing proportions.

"Now that—those are my problems," concluded the girl rubbing date meats from her fingers and

preparing to wash her hands in the kitchen sink. "Lend me your wisdom, Polly."

"My wisdom!" Polly laughed shortly.

"But you are wise," retorted the other. "Mother says you're unusually wise for your age. She says you've been showing much more wisdom of late, too. She's glad you've been freeing yourself of so much to do. Said she never could understand how you could care properly for a husband and baby and home, and do all you did. I told her it was all because you were a wonderful woman."

POLLY caught her breath sharply.

They had rolled the date loaf in wet cloths and placed it on the cold back porch before more was said of problems.

"You're an angel, Polly, to help me with all this. And I'm going to tell the girls who did the work."

"You'll do nothing of the kind. This is to atone for my neglect of you and your situations."

Then they dropped into the breakfast nook to rest.

"Are you sure this Dan person isn't just a passing fancy, Edith, as some of the others have been?"

"Sometimes I am, Polly, and sometimes I'm not." She toyed with a paring knife on the table. "Sometimes I vow that I'll not write to him any more, that I'll forget him, and then I wake up to the fact that I couldn't possibly do that. I've liked several men, Polly, but never like this—this liking and caring that hurts you all the time. You know how it is." The tone pled with her to understand.

"I knew," corrected Polly to herself with a pang of anguish. Though in the past few days when she had been giving almost her entire time to her home and family, Brad had been attentive and considerate and almost all else she could ask—still, there was a barrier between them that hadn't existed before Christmas.

"What shall I do, Polly?" Complete trust and confidence were in the face across the table from hers. The lips curved into an expectant smile.

"My heavens, child, you don't expect me to say outright—Do or Don't, do you?" Polly heard herself stuttering. "That's not the way things happen when you grow up; you have to decide for yourself and accept the consequences. Love, dear, is an unfathomable thing," somehow she could not keep that tremble out of her voice, "and it's wonderful! If you really love Dan, and he really loves you, I would say, don't put it off too long. But take your time if you're not sure. The establishing of a home and family is a serious undertaking, the seriousness of which we seldom realize at first. It should not have selfishness or near-sightedness for a foundation. Dan seems to me to be a splendid chap, but he doesn't belong to the church, dear, and I'd hate to see you drift away from us."

"Oh, mother has talked hours on that, too. Says people will say I'm weak in the faith and everything. I know all about that, but somehow I don't care much what people say!" Restlessly she arose. "I only wish it could be settled at once, for I do dislike suspense." She took a few steps toward the work table and then faced about: "But I've been awfully selfish, dear, occupying your time with all my affairs when you have difficulties of your own. Do you know, Polly," and she dropped back into the seat opposite, "I believe I can help you. Frankly, how much do you know?"

Instinctively Polly knew that she was referring to Brad and Echo. She spread out her hands on the table in front of her, and carefully inspected each finger before she attempted a reply. "Too much!" she said at last.

"That's what I thought." Edith nodded understandingly. "Well, let me give you a tip—don't you worry any more about that. Echo's all right. I saw her the other night with a hotsy-totsy new date. He was a queer one, small, much shorter than Postelle even, and blond with that English dukey look. They were getting into the cutest coupe I've seen in months. I was crazy about it if I could have had it without the man. She was all dolled up and looked like a queen."

"Well?"

"You won't be mad if I tell you something, Polly?"

The other shook her head.

"While you were ill I did some detective work on my own accord. I had known something was up for a long time before Valentine night—"

Polly shivered involuntarily.

"—but when I caught them in the study that night, I got to thinking. I cornered Postelle next day, made him take me to lunch, and he admitted that he had known Echo was crazy about Brad for several weeks. He was awfully worried, too. So we got our heads together in a common cause. We started watching, and I'm positive Brad and Echo haven't seen each other since that night—I'm just positive. Postelle and I kept notes—oh, Polly, you mustn't ever breath a word of this to anybody!—but we checked up on them every evening, and even kept a twenty-four-hour-a-day record of Echo. She'd never forgive us if she knew."

Starry-eyed, Polly was about to speak. Words of gratitude simply stuck in her throat. She felt very small and futile. All she could do was reach for her friend's hand and cling to it as if it had been a life line and she was a drowning sailor.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

AT THAT moment Mrs. Nelson burst into the room, her face haggard, her lips trembling. In her shaking hand she held the pages of a letter. "The mail just came, and I have a letter from Milly—"

"Bad news, mother?" demanded Polly, starting towards her. She was afraid she would faint, she was so very white.

"Awful! I've been afraid of it for months, but I prayed it wouldn't happen. I prayed hard, and—oh, Polly—"

"Is some one sick?" anxiously queried Edith.

"No, but it would be better if he were dead, then she could collect his insurance!"

"Why—"

"Henry has left Milly!" There was nothing dramatic about this speech, just the plain statement of a dreaded fact.

"Oh!"

"More problems," murmured Edith. "I give up, Polly. This isn't my affair, and probably when she feels more like herself again, she will resent my knowing anything about it. I'm leaving."

Polly and Brad were as helpful as they could be, but there wasn't much they could do to console Mrs. Nelson. After the first shock, she began to regard the situation with something like a grim delight. Her resentment toward her erstwhile son-in-law, Henry Brown, knew no bounds. That evening she told her son and his wife as much as she knew of the situation, dwelling at length on the crudities and shortcomings of the runaway husband and describing the inconveniences he had caused his family.

It seemed that without any more warning than a curt note stating that he was "through," Henry had left his wife and three little girls, departing into parts unknown. The family had no means of support except what Milly herself might earn. She had been a beauty parlor operator before her marriage. There was a faint chance that she could find a similar position now.

"That's a strange way for a man to act, mother," reasoned Brad, "just to up and walk out. If it was just a quarrel, probably he'll be back in a short time, and for that reason I'd suggest we don't make any drastic move at the present."

"It'll be better for his family if he doesn't come back," snapped Mrs. Nelson. Already she had reconciled herself to his absence. "He's been running around with other women for a long time, and Milly knew it. . . . If Milly can get herself a job, the family will be a lot better off than it was before, I'm sure."

"Well, after all, it's Milly's problem, not ours, mother. Of course we'll stand by her, but we'd best leave it with her for a few weeks," Brad advised. "Let him have time to come home. If he doesn't she can get a divorce. Meantime if she needs a little money, we can let her have some, can't we, Polly?"

A nod was his answer. Sitting there with her son asleep in her arms, Polly was sympathizing with the sister-in-law she had never seen, a woman with three small daughters, alone, away out in Oregon. She shivered at the bleakness of it, and glanced at Brad whose very presence was reassuring.

"If he doesn't come back, Mother—say we give him a month—we'll have to make some definite arrangements about Milly."

Then Brad took Carrol in his arms and carried him up to bed. The child was so sleepy, that he couldn't be aroused enough to say his prayer. "Oh, let him off this time," chuckled Brad, "the lazy little duffer!"

When they returned to the living room, Mrs. Nelson informed them that she was going to write to Milly "this very night."

"Better put that letter off until tomorrow, Ma," counseled her son, "till you've cooled off. A lot of berating of Henry won't help Milly one bit. It'll only make it harder. When you lambast him, Milly'll come to his defense, and then she'll realize how much she does love and miss him." Brad knew his psychology all right. And then he buried himself in his paper so that he did not see his mother's sniffing exit.

Polly busied herself at her quilt blocks. She was making a new quilt, an old-fashioned log cabin pattern. She had completed four blocks this week. How nice it was just to sit and sew while Brad, not four feet away, rustled the paper! As her fingers flew, her mind was busy analyzing the condition of contentment, how it is made up of little, lovely, homey things, and her sympathy for poor, deserted Milly grew and grew.

But when Brad threw aside his paper, and yawned audibly, Polly did not look at him—she did not trust herself at that moment. If she did look, she feared that she would find herself saying things she wanted him to say first. Deliberately she picked up another piece of material and fitted into place.

"Do you know, Polly, you make a pretty picture sitting there at work?"

"Do I?" lightly.

"Yes, you do," and he moved over beside her. "You needn't smile about it either."

"Be careful," she warned as a brown hand closed carelessly over her sewing, "you'll stick yourself."

"Don't care if I do," he mumbled as his arms went around her, "Ouch!"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"There, what did I tell you?" she couldn't suppress a giggle; "you ought to give a fellow some warning; let me have time to put my sewing down."

"I didn't know needles were so sharp," from Brad as he nursed a pricked wrist.

By that time the quilt blocks, needle, and thread were stowed away in the sewing basket, and Polly turned her attention to the injury.

"That'd be a good headline, you newspaper fiend," she teased: 'Husband Pricked by Needle as He Attempts to Hug Wife.'"

"Yes, and a dandy subhead would be, 'Wifie Laughs and Rescues Needle.'"

"Silly!"

"Am I silly, Polly—to you?" His face was very near.

"Of course not, sil—. Of course not, Brad."

A hand lifted her chin and forced her to look at him. "What's the matter, Polly? You haven't been the same lately—can't you tell me what it is?" That vibrant tone! The look in his eyes!

Something sharper than a needle's prick was stabbing Polly's heart. Words flashed to her consciousness, words she could not forget, his words: "I'm a married man, and happily married at that, or I thought so until a month or two ago!" And he had promised when she was well and strong to tell her everything. Now she was well and strong. It was time for him to speak. But he did not.

With a choking exclamation, Polly wrenched herself free, and rushed from the room.

people and as the outstanding achievement associated with the Presidency of Herbert Hoover."

It is an epoch-making document and will be a definite point of reference for all time to come. It is such an eye picture of America, her institutions, ideals and standards as has never before been available.

It may safely be concluded that this report represents the best that the scientific sociological resources of the United States are capable of producing.

The committee finds that the school and the college are society's chief agency for the care and protection of youth. Education in this country, the President's committee reports, is one of the major contributions of America to this social science.

On education's development largely depends the development of the race.

PALESTINE AS I SAW IT IN 1913

by the city of Nain where the widow's son was raised from the dead; past the Mountains of Gilboa where Saul and Jonathan fell in battle; across the Plain of Esdraelon, with the long ridge of Carmel to the westward between us and the sea, and the high peak of Tabor to the eastward; with the white buildings of Nazareth beckoning us from the hilltops at the north. But the sun had gone down and the twilight streamed up behind Carmel before we began the long climb to the home of Jesus' childhood and youth. However, the city was reached at a late hour, and we were made comfortable in a hotel for the remainder of the night. Then followed a day of interesting sight-seeing. We were not impressed with the house they told us was Jesus' home, nor with the chamber where Mary received the annunciation. But we were impressed with the out-of-door view. The one watering place, where even now women come with their pitchers to get water, often followed by small sons and daughters. And we thought of the child Jesus thus accompanying his mother. And when we looked across the plain, and noted Gilboa, Carmel, Tabor, with the many ancient villages and towns, we knew that Jesus of Nazareth beheld with Mortal eyes the same outlines of hill and vale, the same gleam of blue Mediterranean water beyond Mount Carmel. The same blue sky and green earth.

But we had still in store the visit to Cana of Galilee; the place of the Sermon on the Mount; the beautiful lake of Galilee; Capernaum the later home of Jesus, and Mount Carmel, where from the port of Haifa we embarked for a short trip into Egypt before continuing our journey from Port Said, toward General Conference and HOME.

My Times Are in Thy Hand

By Kleta Finley

(A talk given at the young people's banquet at Des Moines at the opening of the district conference, 1932.)

Through all the years of our lives, through mankind's long history on this earth the one constant thing is the "fatherly will" of God. With the poet we can say, "Change and decay in all around I see." We notice the changes from day to day, year to year, age to age, in nature and in history. But God's will is always the same.

In our personal contacts we see that human purposes are inconstant. We slip, fall, rise, and repeat the process in our effort to progress. But God's will has never failed. Unmindful of his presence though we be, still he leads us on, urging us to rest in him, to put our times in his hands.

Let us consider for a moment two lives. Both are heavily burdened. Accepting the invitation to put his times in the hands of God, one kneels, presenting the problem, seeking his aid, and rises full of power assured that with this guidance, the problem will be solved in the best way. The other, overanxious, troubled, attempts to solve his problems alone and remains burdened, fearful, disturbed.

Isn't the peace and assurance we gain by accepting God's invitation to place our lives in his hands worth our time and trust? Lives are weakened by disquiet, unrest, and lack of assurance. We lose efficiency and the confusion of the world is reflected in us. Picture Christ, more busy, more burdened, yet never lacking that inner poise, serene and peaceful in the gravest uncertainties. He placed his life and times in the hand of his Father.

These same qualities may be ours. It is not God's will that we should fail in any of the good things of life; but sometimes we like to take our own way of thinking as the best way, and we find the end of the trail in a barren desert. The oasis of this desert is found by laying our hands in his, following his guidance.

The road may not be paved, may be a muddy trail, and we may go bumpity bump, have a flat tire, run out of gas, or be held up. But God with us, we shall get there; and after all, it is this companionship with him that all our hearts crave.

Even though we have all the other gifts of life if we do not feel the intimacy of his presence, we are poor. It is his presence that helps us to resist temptation, to develop Christian manhood and womanhood. Our souls never reach a point of strength where they are secure from the possibility of failure. Knowing this, let us keep our wills ready, our minds aware of the will of God. And with Enoch Arden:

> "Cast all your cares on God . . .
> That anchor holds."

In this way we share in his final purpose to bring forth a perfected humanity in the likeness of Christ, to establish Zion.

Human nature, as we know it, will tolerate only a certain limited amount of common sense. Force too much common sense upon human nature and it will infallibly revolt, and when it does revolt there is nothing to be done but yield as pleasantly as you can to the mutineer.—Arnold Bennett.

QUESTION TIME

Does the Scriptures show that Christ will come and reign on earth?

There are several texts which so indicate when they are compared with others. For instance, we have the promise of the two angels to the disciples:

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11.

Jesus had ascended from the earth while his disciples gazed upon him. If he shall "so come in like manner," he must of course come to the earth again. It has been argued that as the word informs us that the Saints shall be caught up to "meet the Lord in the air," therefore he will not come to the earth, but only to the point where the Saints meet him in the air. This notion has no scriptural proof, however, and does violence to the text itself. Suppose we were to receive word that a dear friend was coming to visit us and we were invited to meet him at the railroad station of our home town. We would understand that it was not intended for us to remain at the station, but we would bring him to our home.

The promise states that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven," which would not be true if he were to come but part way. Some interpret the words, "so shall we ever be with the Lord," to mean that we shall ever be in the air. But the Greek word translated "so" means "after that" as well as having other meanings, hence this does not so indicate. The text says we shall "ever be with the Lord," hence the promise that "the meek shall inherit the earth," is evidence of the place where we shall be. Revelation 5: 10 also promises that "we shall reign on the earth," which indicates that it is on the earth where we shall "ever be with the Lord."

What does the Word of Wisdom mean by "fruits in their season"?

Let us note the exact words in connection with their context. In fact, it would be well to consider the whole revelation in this connection, as it is evidently based upon the danger of "evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men." It says:

"All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof."—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2.

It will perhaps be conceded that some of these herbs are for medical use. Would the season thereof be limited to the month in which they may happen to grow, or would it be during the period when they are effective for medical use? The same question would apply to fruits, probably, and the answer would doubtless be somewhat similar. Yet perhaps these herbs would be fresher and a bit more efficacious when first grown, and so would be particularly appropriate then. At least some of them might be so. I am inclined to believe that it is the same with "fruit in the season thereof."

But it would not necessarily follow that dried fruits were unwholesome, or that properly canned fruits were dangerous, even though their virtue might be greater while freshly grown. However, the poisons that were placed in some canned foods before the pure food laws were enacted emphasize the fact that "evils and designs" do exist in the hearts of conspiring men, and proper care should therefore be taken to avoid any adulterated foods or those packed in unsanitary condition. Doubtless fresh foods are preferable so far as they may be available.

Did Christ visit the "spirits in prison" before his resurrection, or afterward?

The views of students differ on the question, some holding that it was prior to his resurrection, while others believe it was afterward. The text itself seems to imply the answer, however, when it says:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." – 1 Peter 3: 18, 19.

The term "quickened" means to make alive, "by which he went" to the spirits in prison to preach to them. Evidently it was by the Spirit that he went to preach to them, and this appears to indicate that it was before his resurrection. However, I do not think the proof is conclusive, for it does not seem impossible that might be otherwise.

Prayer and Testimony

This Is God's Work

By William A. McClain

Many times while reading letters and articles in the Herald I have been made to rejoice when the Holy Spirit rested upon me. This Spirit has been the joy of my life for about forty years.

As I was reading Brother J. F. Garver's "Experiences by the Way," in a recent Herald, I found myself wishing that more of the missionaries would write, for they would do much good. When the Spirit confirms their testimonies to the members, it brings food to their souls. The Master says to his servants: "Feed my sheep." Here is the opportunity for men of the ministry to feed many sheep by their writings whom they will not see in this life.

May the good work go on. I know the Reorganized Church is God's work set up for the last time, and it will go on until Zion is redeemed.

I have seen God's power manifested many times—the sick healed, broken bones mended, evil spirits cast out, and all the other gifts of the gospel enjoyed.

Brethren, let us go on to perfection. My testimony is that this is God's work, and if we are faithful to the end, we shall enjoy eternal life and joy in the world to come and with Christ when he comes to reign here on earth.

A Confirming Incident

By V. G. Lents

As I read the interesting experiences of the Saints, they cause me to want to tell of an experience I had. I believe it will encourage and strengthen some in their faith.

Some five or six years ago while we were living in Rhodes, Iowa, our house burned. Practically everything we had was destroyed. What library we had was in the bookcase near the center of the house. After the fire I was examining the ruins and found our Inspired Version of the Bible. The back was burned off, also the edges of the leaves and the blank leaves in the front and back, but from Genesis 1 to Revelation last chapter, we could read every word. I think this was the only book we could say was not destroyed.

Herald Is All "The Best"

By Mrs. Ida M. Hunter

I would say with many other Herald readers—"The testimonies help me so much." We learn also from "Question Time." In fact it would be hard for me to say just which feature of the Saints' Herald I like the best. I think it is all "the best."

We are always glad to hear from eastern Montana, especially Fairview, as it was there my daughter and I became babes in Christ. I have tried to help myself grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth.

We were happy to see that note had been taken of the work Brother A. H. Parsons at Elk Mills, Maryland. I have received many very instructive sermons from him.

It is my daily prayer that the Saints may all realize their great responsibilities in helping to redeem Zion, in order that the world may become a better place in which to live.

We are isolated and would be glad to have Saints or elders come to see us. We live one half mile east of Laytonsville, Maryland. We hope soon to get in touch with Saints living in Washington, District of Columbia. Would be glad to hear from some of them.

What of the Law of Tithing?

By Lena M. Trosper

I am wondering if the law of tithes is not underrated by the church. Why do people take it unto themselves to use the goods that is really our heavenly Father's with such jealousy concerning what they pay him for its use? If we rent a house, the landlord is not going to keep building on to the house for our pleasure, nor will he let us stay in it indefinitely if we do not pay our rent. Can we not realize that the use of God's goods is a privilege instead of a duty.

The duty is that we show appreciation for the privilege we have in the very promptness with which we pay our rent to the Great Landlord.

I want to live the financial law. I want to help bring back the Order of Enoch. I know that every penny, every article I have in my possession is God's, and I wish to use them as he would have them used. It is my desire to turn over everything except my barest needs to the Bishop's representative when the time comes, and I pray for faith to do this. The law of tithing is not hard. Just put ten cents of each dollar earned aside for God's purposes instead of ten cents of each dollar left after we have had the fun of spending what we want of what we earn. I feel if we try this way, we shall not be left to go hungry unless we waste the nine tenths we have left.

Looks for Missionary Help

By Mrs. Bertha Vaughn

We are the only Latter Day Saints here, my nineteen-year-old daughter and I, and we thoroughly enjoy the church paper. Only those who are isolated can sense the depth of our enjoyment.

Though my husband is not a member of the church, he likes to hear our ministers talk, and always makes them welcome in our home. But it has been more than four years now since we heard a Latter Day Saint talk. I am hoping that God will see fit to send an elder here, that the rest of my family may hear and obey the gospel, and also that others will unite and believe. There are many people here who go to church, and if some of them were Saints I would be most happy.

I am grateful for the blessings Christ has given me and my family. I realize that he blesses us in many ways, sometimes more than we deserve.

Some time ago I was worried about my father whom I had not seen for sixteen years, and who died a year ago. I was wondering if he was all right and in God's care. In answer to my prayer concerning him there came the assurance that he was well and happy. This assurance has been a great comfort to me. I am grateful for it and for other similar experiences.

Please pray for us that we may be worthy of God's blessings.

Prayer the Source of Help

By Mrs. Emma Beckman

I have great faith in prayer. Prayer to me is the source of life, for to comprehend and understand God's will is meat and drink to me and only through prayer can come such knowledge and peace to the soul. Upon several occasions when my soul has been in deep distress the still small voice of God's Spirit has whispered words of comfort to me, words sweeter than anything earthly.

Through the Herald I wish to ask prayers for my niece, Iris Eva Harper, who is afflicted with serious throat and ear trouble. She is losing her hearing and the doctor says she must have an operation. I have great faith in God as our physician, for I know the prayer of faith avails much. The child is five and one-half years old. Her mother died four years ago. Since then Iris Eva has been in our care.

Those Who Are Called Have a Responsibility

By E. B. Johnston

I am thankful that I have accepted the gospel in its fullness. It has meant much to me, and I have found great comfort in it. I find joy in the work of God.

The experiences that have been mine since I joined the church have brought to me the knowledge that this is the church of the living God. While I have been called to pass through much sorrow and tribulation in the past year, God has been with me in my hours of greatest need.

It is my desire to go forward in his work and do what I can for the upbuilding of the church. I believe that those who are called into the ministry have an opportunity to do the greatest work that is intrusted to man. And I also believe that when a man is called to the priesthood, God expects him to labor in his calling to the best of his ability and as far as the conditions under which he labors, permit. I desire to be true and faithful.

"Is Any Sick Among You?"

By Mrs. J. H. Thomas

When we are sick, the Lord has told us, we should call for the elders. Read James 5: 14, 15. I have seen some suffering ones healed by administration when they had been given up to die.

We should be a thankful people with all the gifts and blessings in our church.

Here let me relate a wonderful experience that was ours. One of our daughters was very ill. The doctor had told us that there was no hope for her. I felt heartbroken. The room was full of Saints. One of the sisters said, "Let us all pray. God will hear us." We knelt in prayer. When it was my husband's turn to pray, he felt the power of the Spirit come over him, and it seemed as if he was lifted about a foot from the floor. In this exerience he was shown that our daughter would get well. When he related this experience, I wept for joy.

Let us put our faith and trust in God who is the giver of all good gifts.

Seek for Gift of Faith

By C. C. Randall

I also have experienced God's watchcare and protection. In my patriarchal blessing I was given to know that my life had been spared and that I am here on earth only because of the prayers and faith of loved ones who prevailed with the Lord in my behalf. I was given to know this referred especially to my mother who died when I was a boy.

What a legacy for a mother to leave a son, the gift of faith in God and his promises to his Saints. I could relate many instances of his great mercy, love, and protection. Oh, for a greater, a living faith in him and his promises to his people!

I know of a brother, now near his seventy-second year, who does not remember of calling a doctor or having one called to see him. When he has been sick the Lord has come to his rescue. This example was set for him by his parents.

May we seek humbly, earnestly, and patiently, for the faith which is manifested in works, the kind of faith which will take us through these perilous times.

Ask Prayers

Sister Effie Anderson, Robertson, Missouri, Route 1, Box 384, is suffering with cancer, and desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She has been examined by five specialists; was in the Sanitarium at Independence in December. She has been told that nothing could be done for her except to give her the radium treatment, and even with this, the physicians promised no certain cure. She wishes to place herself in the hands of the Lord, having faith in his healing power. She enjoys reading letters, but is not able to answer.

Mrs. Harve Williams, of Valentine, Nebraska, requests the Saints to remember in prayer her mother, Mrs. Eunice Shepard, of Valentine, whose hearing has been seriously affected by a case of flu a year ago. Mrs. Shepard who is seventy-four years of age, has belonged to the church since her sixteenth year, but has always lived in isolation. Though she has never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon, her faith is strong, and she faithfully studies the church books and papers.

Sister Ruby Merrill Ackley, Wyomissing, Pennsylvania, 1311 Cleveland Avenue, asks the prayers of the Saints for her patient, Mrs. Stiteler, who is mentally ill. She is a Baptist and a believer in prayer. While in the Philadelphia Hospital, she asked for administration, and was relieved of some pain in her head. Before she became worse, she enjoyed hearing read such books as In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, and the Book of Mormon.

Mrs. Mary Whiteside, of Beason, Illinois, requests prayers in behalf of her daughter who is in a hospital at Springville, California, suffering from lung trouble.

Sister Margaret Neville, sr., of Akron, Ohio, 114 Paris Avenue, wishes the Saints to pray for her little grandson who has been a cripple from birth. Through some of the ministry this boy has been told he will be healed. He will be baptized a few days after his eighth birthday, March 26, and feels that the promise to be healed will be verified by God's power.

Buffalo, New York

Good Response to Missionary Meetings Conducted by W. I. Figg

District Missionary W. I. Figg conducted a series of meetings extending from February 12 to March 5. The week prior to the services was devoted to special prayer services and fasting.

Elder Figg's subject was, "The Lord's Vineyard," and the large chart which he urged, depicted the dispensations of time, the coming forth of the restored gospel, the proof of its divinity, the millennium, etc. The meetings were well advertised, both by daily papers and by house to house canvassing. The response to the appeal was most gratifying, the auditorium being confortably filled at each service.

On Sunday, February 19, the young people met in a special prayer meeting before the church school convened and on February 26, a prayer service for all groups was held in place of the regular church school. The sacrament service, March 5, brought the meetings to a close. A peaceful influence and the presence of the Spirit were noted.

Elder Figg is a forceful speaker and has his subject matter well in hand. Not only were the church membership edified, but it was noted that over two hundred nonmembers attended the meetings. As a direct result a class in baptism has been arranged for Palm Sunday. Prizes were awarded to the "group" winners as well as a general prize to the member bringing the most nonmembers to the services. The awards were as follows: Children's group, Raymond Kennedy; young people, Ruth Harris; adult group, Helen LaFae, and men's club, Thomas Morris.

Brother Figg plans to hold meetings at Niagara Falls until April 2, and throughout the district following.

Buffalo Branch was perhaps one of the first to adopt the "unified service" and "group method of religious training" from which wonderful progress is being made. Group classes are continuously studying for credits for teachers' certificates. The Wednesday and Friday evening meetings are well attended and interest is being maintained. Pastor P. L. Weegar is earnest in his endeavor, and he is ably assisted by Elder George Schaefer as assistant pastor, who is in charge of junior church; Elder Paul Braman as supervisor of the adult department; Sister Florence Kennedy, supervisor of the young people, Sister Wagner, supervisor of the children, and Elder Earl Wagner, director of Religious Education. Sister Anna Lloyd heads the women's department and Brother Robert Harris the men's club.

The fact that church services are well attended and interest being maintained is an indication that progress is being made. Workers are particularly pleased at the response made by the young people. In all branch efforts the priesthood are ably assisting, and a unity of purpose is manifested. They press on with a calm determination to do their part, and with faith that the general church will soon emerge from its present status, into the brighter future that lies ahead. To this end the membership of the Buffalo Branch pledge their united support.

Minot, North Dakota

Rejoice Over Many Blessings

The Saints of this branch have been handicapped in meeting this winter because cold weather set in unusually early and continued for a long period. Since most of the members live at varying distances from Minot, those who attend services have to overcome great odds in cold weather and uncertain road conditions. But though attendance this winter has not been so large as in past years, the members have derived great benefits from associating in worship.

Church services are held at the home of Brother and Sister E. D. Chase, 902 Second Street, Northeast. Brother Chase's family recently came from Rich Hill, Missouri.

The Saints were uplifted by the recent visits of Elder O. W. Okerlind who met with them, December 18, before continuing his journey to his home in Independence for the Christmas holidays. He stopped here again, January 29, on his way to his Saskatchewan Mission.

Missionary P. T. Anderson has returned to his field from his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Minot Saints expect him to come to this part of the State, and know they will profit from his ministry among them.

Laurel McElwain, youngest son of Warren McElwain, of Lansford, is taking his degree in education from the Minot State Teachers' College. He holds the office of priest, and the local Saints have been helped by his talks. They are happy to have him with them this year.

Ralph Darling is another young priest of the branch. He teaches near Minot, and has made several successful efforts in the beginning of a preaching career. At present he is confined to the hospital, having just undergone an operation for appendicitis.

Minot Branch remembered Brother Swen Swenson with a general letter and also with many personal letters in honor of his eightieth birthday. His pioneer work in presenting the gospel in this State is much appreciated by North Dakota Saints. His living testimony remains in the hearts and minds of the people there.

A newcomer in Minot is little Joyce Yvonne McElwain, born September 2, 1932, to Mr. and Mrs. Warren K. McElwain. At a service, October 16, she was blessed by her two grandfathers, Elders E. D. Chase and Warren McElwain. She is a member of the fourth Latter Day Saint generation on her father's side and the third on her mother's.

Elders F. G. Spaulding and E. D. Chase were called to a small town forty miles distant early in January, to administer to an aged sister who, with her daughter, had lived in isolation for many years. Word was received later of her passing. As roads were impassable at the time of her death, an elder could not go down to conduct funeral services.

Minot members are rejoicing with Brother F. G. Spaulding in the miraculous recovery of his daughter, Mrs. Elwood Glesne, of Long Beach, California. While visiting home last August, she was stricken with appendicitis. Following a third operation, October 2, she was given up by her physician as past medical aid. The Saints met in special prayer in her behalf. Though her recovery has been slow, her return to health seems assured.

Saints are happy to have with them again, Sister M. D. Graham, who was confined to her home most of the fall and winter. She also received great blessings through the ordinance of administration.

Mrs. John Hiatt, a sister of Mrs. Laurel McElwain, was administered to by Elder Warren McElwain as she was in a very critical condition in the Bottineau Hospital. She received relief almost immediately and has since been steadily improving.

For these manifestations of God's power through the gift of healing and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

many other blessings received, the Saints are rejoicing. They are working and praying for the advancement of the gospel cause.

What a Persistent Effort Can Do

Sister Pratt Makes Definite Contribution to Revival of Activities at Milwaukee

Since coming to Southern Wisconsin district, I have tried to keep my eyes and ears open, to gain information and an understanding of the forces that are at work for the good of the cause to which we have dedicated our lives. It is with considerable appreciation that I have watched the work grow and unfold in the city of Milwaukee. On first coming to the district, I was told that the church work there was rather below normal, and that it would require persistent and untiring work to revive it. To my happy surprise I discovered on my first visit to Milwaukee that there was much possibility for the branch, for I found a force at work that was intended to advance the cause of Christ and to make the work of the church honorable in that city. I saw that there were certain persons who were closely in touch with the Spirit of the living God. This, of course, gave me courage and profound hope in the outcome of the work there.

On my last visit to Milwaukee, I secured information concerning matters of importance in that city, that I think is worthy of special mention. This information will enable others to see what can be done in advancing the work if only we learn to bring ourselves in touch with the Spirit of the Master, and work in keeping with the provisions he has made in the law that has been given for the government and advancement of his work among men. The circumstances are these: Some fifteen months ago, or a little longer, the Pratt family came into the city of Milwaukee. At that time the church had few activities. Sister Pratt felt an urge to do something that would be helpful, and so began to make an effort to get in touch with the women of the branch, but her first efforts did not seem to meet with much of a response. It was natural for them to think that one just coming into the group was not familiar with the existing conditions, and therefore, it was quite impossible for her to understand their needs. But Sister Pratt continued to press her way on. As opportunity afforded she talked with and encouraged her sisters, and tried to enable them to see what could be done in the place if only the women of the branch would unitedly put themselves to the task of pushing forward the work of the church in that great city.

Brother Pratt's work was limited and his income was meager, so that which was accomplished by our sister had to be done under a severe handicap. Nevertheless, she was anxious to see the work of the church move forward. In her quiet moments she would talk with the Lord about the matter; she would ask for wisdom and judgment, and then as she was able to do so, she would get in touch with the women of the branch. At times she was not clearly understood and yet she did not become disheartened or discouraged. When she could not go to visit her sisters she would pray over the matter and then write them a letter in which she would express a desire to have their help and cooperation in the work that she would like to see advance. In the course of a few weeks Sister Pratt was placed as supervisor of the women's work in the city, and this gave her an advantage that she had not enjoyed before. Still she was laboring under the handicap of the depression. However, she continued to keep in touch with God, and that is the secret of her success. In every circumstance she showed the Spirit of the Master in her reaction to things as they came whether they were favorable or unfavorable, and in this way she gained ground daily. She began by introducing the Doctrine and Covenants as the most necessary textbook for the women. She read from it and stressed the need of unity, so clearly indicated in its message to us. She pointed out the blessings that would attend obedience and faithfulness, and the results of failure on our part to keep the statutes of our God. She stressed the virtues of love and courage in our church activities; that the Lord enjoined upon us the need of a profound charity and also a forgiving spirit. Through the reading of the Doctrine and Covenants and commenting upon it, she revived the spirit, yes, the very soul of these good women, and kindled within them a desire to do something for the church that they had not done before. She enabled many of the sisters to receive a new birth, to become quickened in the spirit of truth and to catch a vision of the work that was entirely new to them. The thing that enabled her to make this advancement was the spirit of meekness, kindness and patience that she revealed in her efforts. She did not become harsh with those who failed to understand her motives, but showed kindness and love for them until now, as I visit about with the good people there, the women tell me how they love Sister Pratt.

One sister who has been a member of the church for many years said to me a few days ago, "If I could have known years ago that the church possessed all it does, if I could have been awakened then to the deep spiritual significance of our work as I have been recently, what difference it might have made in the history of my household!" I am sure these things are worthy of our thought and consideration, for I know that the language in section eleven is true wherein it says, "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity." I care not who it is, without these qualities we will not be able to assist, and with them the most humble and obscure can prove a factor for good in the work of the church.

At the present time the spiritual condition of the Milwaukee branch is, I believe, ahead of any in the district, and the success of our work there can be largely attributed to the faithfulness of our good sister who has meekly put herself to the task of living close to God, and of revealing the Master of life to her sisters by the kind, loving, and helpful attitude she has assumed toward them. I am convinced that if any of us will be able to help advance the work of the church, we must know the message of the Doctrine and Covenants and qualify as fully as it is possible for us to do in the things which the Lord tells us are necessary for those who would become helpers in the great cause.

What is being done by Sister Pratt can be done by others. And in connection with the spiritual advancement of the members, the financial aspects have also grown. This branch that has so many members who are out of work is still showing a very excellent attainment in the raising of funds. All this convinces me that when we place ourselves in the right relationship with the Infinite, all things that are needful will be added unto us. May we take courage and make our first undertaking that of finding the Lord and ordering our activities in connection with his precept and example.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Saints of the Lincoln Branch may not have been saying very much of late, but they have been trying to keep busy, to stay out of mischief, to preserve the faith, and to be "earnestly engaged in good works." There are some sleepers here—where are they not?—but the members who do "meet together often" smile in token of complete friendliness and good fellowship, glad to greet each other, glad of good health, glad of opportunities to labor and to be "kindly affectioned one towards another."

Quite unique in the history of Lincoln was the middle week-end of February when they were honored by a visit from one of the First Presidency. It was Brother Floyd M. McDowell who established this precedent. In his honor a play, "Abraham Lincoln," was presented on Saturday evening, Sister Francis Schrunk being director and moving spirit. This was followed by a short talk by the guest of honor, a "Receiving line," reception in which each one in attendance was presented to him, and a social hour in the lower auditorium, where refreshments were served by the women's service group, Sister Ralph

Harder in charge. During its progress Brother McDowell was properly surprised by the appearance of his wife, who had taken advantage of the opportunity to ride from Independence with Brother and Sister Fred O. Wilkinson.

The next day was a memorable one, Brother McDowell delivering three stirring addresses which touched the hearts of all who heard, quickened to renewed hope and interest, and kindled afresh fires of consecration and determination.

The sisters continue their weekly meetings for quilting, luncheon, sewing on Red Cross or other charitable work, and listening to two hours of reading. Lloyd Douglas' Magnificent Obsession left a thoughtful and definitely uplifting impression upon them. Just now Hutchinson's One Increasing Purpose is engrossing attention. "Yet I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs," and "God he hath strange ways and for the increase of his purpose chooseth he strange vessels," are quotations which give an idea of its tenor. Certain meetings have been marked by special observances of birthdays, a fine cake and a small gift being featured. Sisters Ruth Pfanmiller, Capitola Mechling, and Eva Coffman have been honored in this manner recently.

The last Sunday in January was one a bit out of the ordinary. The eleven o'clock hour was taken up by speeches from the various officers of the branch and those placed in charge of special activities therein. These set forth their ideas of their duties and opportunities and explained their plans and objectives for the year. The meeting was planned by Branch President B. M. Anderson, who presided and introduced each one.

That evening, an unexpected visit from Brother and Sister O. L. D'Arcy, of Auburn, provided a forceful sermon from the district president. Other visitors during the day were Brother and Sister Henry White, of DeWitt; Brother William Brollier, of Wilber; Brother Harold Reed, of Independence, and Sister Audrey Slone, of Bartlett, Nebraska. This latter is a young lady who was converted by the "printed word" sent to her by a friend. When convinced of the truth of our church message, she traveled, in the brief interval of a vacation, to Independence for baptism. She is superintendent of schools of Wheeler County, and being in Lincoln to attend a State meeting of such officers, stayed over to come to church—the first time she ever heard a Latter Day Saint sermon. She expressed herself as being greatly edified and encouraged.

Eighteen Lincoln young people attended the young people's institute at Omaha Sunday, January 22. They came home bubbling over with enthusiasm and delight over the incidents of their visit, and with unqualified admiration for "Big Brother Mac." They were chaperoned by Brother and Sister Francis Schrunk. Two weeks later, at the regular monthly Sunday evening service in charge of our young people, they presented a program of music and speeches, the latter describing in considerable detail and from varying angles, the impressions received at the meeting, not forgetting the big banquet of the Saturday evening. The program was arranged by Sister Rogene Anderson, and those appearing were: Francis Schrunk, Esther Schrunk, Mary Reichenbach, Richard Stake, and Clarence Williams. Margaret Jones sang a contralto solo, and Alfred Jensen and Rogene Anderson contributed two duet numbers.

On Sunday of National Boy Scout week Brother Lenox was in charge of a special service. He was assisted by young Brother Clarence Williams, one of the newer members, (formerly of Burlington, Iowa, and an ex-scoutmaster) who made the principal address. He described the ideals and achievements of the organization, and directed a group of young scouts in giving the scout law and pledges. Two others gave an interesting exhibition of signaling, or wigwagging, used by the scouts. The audience sang patriotic songs as its part of the service.

Prayer meetings are held in the homes of members during the cold weather, with good attendance and splendid results. When the meeting was at the home of Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson, the members surprised that couple by presenting them, at the close of the meeting, with a book of poems as an expression of good will and congratulations upon a wedding anniversary.

The La-Da-Sa Club of young people, capably watched over by Brother and Sister Schrunk, holds regular meetings each Sunday at six thirty, when varied programs and educational features are presented. One of their number, John Bliss, about sixteen years old, was gravely injured recently when his bicycle collided with a truck. While neither he nor his parents are members of the church, he has received administration several times at the hands of our elders, and has shown considerable faith in the ordinance. The Saints earnestly pray for his recovery.

Among recent visitors the Saints have welcomed Brother and Sister Harry C. Smith and their boys, from Beatrice. Brother James F. Keir is another who occasionally drops in when his travels bring him near. He bears a strong testimony of God's goodness and watchcare over his people.

In addition to those already mentioned, the pulpit has been occupied since the first of the year by Brothers B. M. Anderson, W. E. Poague, Grover Wall, Ralph A. Harder, Clarence Williams, Francis Schrunk, E. J. Lenox, and C. L. Nirk. The latter and his wife, parents of Sister W. E. Poague, are new arrivals here from Lamoni. Brother Harder and wife came here in the late fall, from Independence, and have entered happily into the branch activities, endearing themselves to all by their earnest and consecrated services.

Perth, Western Australia

Church School Fosters Progress Here

For some years past a letter from this branch has not been seen in the columns of the Herald. But since the inauguration of the church school organization, Perth Branch has made wonderful strides. The new movement brought to the fore talent that otherwise would have remained unseen and unheard. Especially has it increased attendance at meetings, practically doubling the number.

Since the members of the group are scattered, they hold junior church school every Sunday afternoon at two thirty followed by adult church school at three thirty every second Sunday in the month.

Of late the priesthood has been increased by the ordination of Brother Alma Robinson from the office of teacher to elder, and the ordinations of Brothers Oscar Stack and Len Broadway to the office of priest. The ministry are laboring under the leadership of Elder E. H. Davies, the appointed missionary to Western Australia. Brother Davies is doing a good work here in tracting from door to door. He is assisted by fellow officers. They have just opened a group meeting at Fremantle which is nine miles from Perth Branch, and the movement is doing well considering the hardships under which the workers labor.

During the week they have prayer and testimony meeting at Subiaco Church on Thursday evening. On Wednesday evening they have a preaching service at Fremantle.

The branch held its annual church picnic a short time ago at Peppermint Grove, a picturesque spot. Here games and contests were enjoyed and a picnic meal.

The young people are making great headway, and officers feel that it is up to all members to give them support.

Elder and Sister E. H. Davies have been blessed with another little daughter.

La Moure, North Dakota

Enjoy Visit of Elder P. T. Anderson

The Saints are endeavoring to carry on though they are few in number. The little Sunday school meets, and is thoroughly enjoyed by all attending, for it is the only service the Saints at La Moure hold. There is no priesthood member in this community.

Members were happy to have Elder P. T. Anderson here for a week the latter part of February. He held cottage meetings and was blessed in his effort to present the gospel story. Blessings were also received by those to whom he administered.

Visits Quake-damaged Cities

First Tremors Found Least Number in Downtown Districts

Los Angeles, California, March 17.—Conditions here are not so bad as I they are bad enough. Had the earthquake been a few hours earlier, it would have caught the children in the Long Beach schools and thousands would have been killed. And had it happened later in the evening when the crowds were in the theaters, the loss of life would also have been heavy. It came at the most opportune time, when the fewest people were in the downtown area.

Long Beach, Compton, and Huntington Park suffered most. It was surely a test of the strength and workmanship put into the buildings not only in these places, but in Los Angeles as well. The quake shook things thoroughly here. For instance, the chimneys on the houses on this street at 5145, 5307, 5311, and 5319, all between us and the car line, were demolished. And in the next block north of us on the opposite side of the street there is hardly a chimney left.

Out at Vermont and Slauson, in the parking stand south of Sears Roebuck, the wall of the adjoining building poured tons of brick upon cars, crushing them. There seemed to be a zone along Slauson which suffered more than other parts of Los Angeles.

I was in to see Doctor A. W. Teel yesterday and found that the Roosevelt Building suffered quite a bit. The elevator boy said the building shook like a leaf. The tremors cracked the plaster down the side wall in the office, but no violent damage is discernible.

Little Damage to Our Church in Long Beach

I went down to Long Beach on Wednesday with Brother J. L. Milner. Our little church there did not have a window broken. The clock is stopped at 5.53 p. m. That was a little slow, but it shows the time by our church clock when the quake hit. It cracked the glass in the sign on the front of the building, and loosened a bit of the pebble dash cement on the tower and front of the building. It broke some of the dishes in the cupboard in the basement and the big bottle on the stand where they have the special spring drinking water. In the auditorium upstairs some plaster came off the ceiling along the edges of the wall. The damage, however, is slight.

The most damaged street in Long Beach was Anaheim Boulevard. The older buildings were badly hurt in the business district downtown, but the newer ones came through pretty well. The sale of plate glass surely got a good boost, and there will be an abundance of work for the bricklayers, erecting chimneys, etc. However, I think in the new building restrictions, brick will likely be taboo unless there is a reinforced steel skeleton to a building.

Public Schools and Chcurch Buildings Suffer

The churches and public schools suffered tremendously. Some of Long Beach's finest churches are wrecked and many of the schools are a total loss. It looks to me as if school is out for this year.

None of our people were injured that we know of. Their homes were damaged and as the tremors continued daily up to yesterday, the people were nervous about moving back in. Gas and water were lacking in most houses, particularly gas.

Brother J. L. Milner invited those of his congregation who desired to do so to come over and camp with him at Lomita, that is camp in his yard. Brother David Carmichael brought over some of the district tents he had secured, and on Wednesday there were fifty-four of the Saints camped at the Milners'. But in the next few days we expect they will be returning to the city.

The Quake Did Peculiar Things

The quake did some peculiar things. One brick church, a fine big edifice, has a cornerstone on which is this statement: "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." But the quake almost ruined the building, making it evident that the Lord was not talking of that local church building. Another church was giving the religious drama, "The Rock." It had a big sign out in front advertising the fact. Well, the church is a wreck, the walls demolished and the top fallen in. But enough of the wall stands still to support the sign, "The Rock."

The big Christian Science Church I always thought was of reinforced concrete turned out to be brick plastered over. The quake revealed that fact as the walls cracked and spread and some of the roof caved in. It reminded me of some people. Their lives look sound enough in fair weather; but under special strain they go to pieces because their structure was only outward veneer with the heart unsound.

One of the finest church buildings in Long Beach is made of hewn stone, huge, massive, and solid. The quake shook off some of the copings but that is all. This reminded me of solid Christian people who are sound and true at heart, but they take on a little of the foolishness of the world. In time of stress the main structure stands though some of the "trimmings" may fall off.

One wonders if the quake had been slightly more intense or had lasted a few seconds longer just what would have happened to Los Angeles. I think the city would have been a wreck.

Tigres Branch

Near Ava, Missouri

Saints of this branch are hopeful of progress throughout the rest of this year. Many testify of God's goodness and mercy to them while clouds of depression hover low.

The branch election of officers in December resulted in the sustaining of Carl Freeman as pastor. Sister Merle Zuber was chosen branch clerk; D. A. Fuller, solicitor; Sister Carl B. Freeman, correspondent; Sister Roxanna McGinnes, Sunday school superintendent; Sister Vera Norman, religio superintendent; Sister Nellie Chrestensen, head of the women's department; Sisters Charlie Norman and Merle Zuber, heads of the musical department.

February 5, Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons met here in sacrament service. They spent a few weeks in this community, and the Saints believe Brother Simmons' efforts have borne fruit.

Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons left for Oklahoma the latter part of February. In spite of advancing age Brother Simmons is able to render valuable service to the church.

February 17, a party for the young men was given at the home of Brother and Sister David Main. The young women held a party at the home of Brother and Sister David Main, March 3.

The Leaders' Class met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Childers, February 23, to complete organization, formulate bylaws, and plan future activities.

The women's department met at the home of Sister Sam Kuner, February 23, for sewing and quilting.

The branch was favored with the presence of the district president and missionary from February 23 to March 5. His counsel and sermons were greatly enjoyed.

Flu and mumps have of late invaded this neighborhood.

Pastor Freeman has been unable heretofore to make a permanent location at either of the branches in this community, and Tigres Saints have felt the need of the capable help he and his family could give. The Freeman family have many friends in this community. So the Saints and their friends decided to assist in the construction of a home for the family. They came together and felled logs. A sawmill operator promised to saw the logs free, and soon the Saints hope to have a house built for the Freeman family. In making this possible, they are experiencing the true Zionic spirit. May they have more of it. Saints of Four Corner Mission, south of Ava, desiring to do their part, gave a grocery shower.

Visiting Saints will be welcome to Tigres services. The church is about ten miles out of Ava on Highway fourteen.

Independence

Large Crowds Attend Closing Functions of Young People's Series

The young people's meetings with President Elbert A. Smith as speaker, came to a grand climax in attendance, interest, and profitability on Sunday evening when the Stone Church was crowded for the closing sermon. The evening's theme was, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Marriage and the Home," and the young people's council were guests of the evening. Miss Opal Williams, a council member, read Edgar A. Guest's "It Takes a Heap o' Livin' to Make a House a Home," and Miss Delta Maurine Nace, another council member, sang, "I Love a Little Cottage," by O'Hara, accompanied by Drexel Mollison. Roy Settles, teacher, president of the council, assisted Elder D. S. McNamara in charge of the service. Sanford Downs directed the music.

Three hundred and ninety were guests at the young people's banquet Saturday night served by the Laurel Club in the basement of the Auditorium. President F. M. McDowell was the principal speaker, and Elder Ward A. Hougas was the master of ceremonies. Preliminary music was by the Liberty Street Orchestra; there were special songs by a quartet of high school boys, and Elder John F. Sheehy led the singing of the entire group. The young people's council was directly in charge of the evening's program and entertainment. A novel idea of toasts and responses was worked out as follows: Leonard Lea, "Sun," (Church). Response by Elbert A. Smith. Kenneth Morford, "Moon," (Zion). Response by John F. Sheehy. D. S. McNamara, "Planets," (Local Congregations). Response by Cecil Walker.

Though weather, during most of the week, was inclement, young people and their friends showed their interest by steady attendance. And as a result of the meetings, all have a deeper realization of their responsibilities as church members, and with renewed vigor they return to their task of spreading helpfulness and friendliness abroad in the center place. The council and all young people's leaders are enthusiastic over the series just concluded, and the prospects for accomplishment during the spring. It has been some time since the young people of Independence enjoyed a series of meetings dominated by their own interests and needs. They consider President Elbert A. Smith's sermons inspirational and very worth while, and are grateful for his help.

The best of cooperation was given the series by musicians of Independence and Kansas City, chiefly young musicians. Organizations contributing programs were the Stone Church Choir, the O. B. K. Choir of Central Church, Kansas City, the Wahdemna Choral Club, the Cantinina Chorus, girls' quartets from Second Church and Liberty Street, and the Independence Boys' Choir. Organists for the week were Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee and Drexel Mollison, and Sanford Downs was the musical director.

Guest groups during the week included the Kansas City O. B. K.'s, local congregations in Independence, and visitors from other churches. On Friday night when the theme was, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Citizenship and Duty to Country," Mayor Roger T. Sermon, of Independence, and Chief of Police D. O. Cato were in the stand with the speaker.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy addressed the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning on the theme, "The Leaven at Work," choosing for his text the words of Jesus: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." (Matthew 13: 33.) His principal thought was that people today are discovering that the "leaven" of the Restoration is showing evidences that it has been at work in the world.

Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder D. S. McNamara.

Music by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, opened with the singing of a Russian anthem, "O Gladsome Light," unaccompanied. Robert and George Miller, organist and pianist, played two movements from Beethoven's Pastorale Sonata. Irene and Mildred Shupe and Evelyn Shupe Flournoy sang, "My Task," accompanied on the piano by Joy Harder, then the choir sang, "Lo, My Shepherd's Hand Divine," by Haydn.

KMBC radio listeners were pleased Sunday morning at the addition of a seven-minute talk to the eleven o'clock half-hour musical program. Elder Leonard Lea began a series of brief talks from Stone Church studio on "The Epitome of Faith."

The Y. K. T. Class of the Stone Church school was favored with a challenging discussion on "The Social and Recreational Aspects of Zion," by President F. M. McDowell. The class accepted the challenge and is making arrangements to carry out a number of Brother McDowell's suggestions.

Independence people were grieved a short time ago to learn of the death of Sister Luvèrnia Roberts at Cameron, Missouri. Sister Roberts was the wife of Isaac N. Roberts, long-time missionary in the church, who passed away in 1915. Born April 21, 1845, at Weston, West Virginia, Sister Roberts joined the church, October 31, 1874, at Elmwood, Nebraska, being baptized by Gordon E. Duel. She was a resident of Independence many years. Two years ago she went to Cameron to live with her son, J. W. Roberts. Her death occurred March 12, 1933, and the funeral was conducted the following Tuesday. Interment was in Pleasant Hill Cemetery at Stewartsville. Besides her son, there survive five grandchildren, other relatives, and many friends.

Walnut Park Church

Church school Sunday morning was unusually well attended. The program features were furnished by the young people of Brother O. Athey's class. The Scripture reading prior to the class period was by Leonard Curtis, and following the class work, Fritz Drigalla gave a reading in German and Harold Dillee played a cornet solo.

Preceding the sermon at the eleven o'clock hour, Orlando Nace played as a violin solo, "At Sundown," accompanied by Maurine Nace. The speaker of the hour was Elder T. A. Beck, who took his text from 2 Timothy 3: 1-5. Conditions in the world were reviewed and the Saints were warned to give their serious consideration to these facts and to strive more diligently to prepare themselves for conditions that may yet be in the future.

At two thirty the monthly meeting of the Walnut Park priesthood was held in the junior room. In the absence of Pastor Frank McDonald, who was out of town, Elder Mansel Williams presided. The lesson was taught by Elder C. I. Carpenter, the subject being, "The Oath of the Priesthood."

New officers of the Walnut Park Religio were elected for the ensuing three months at the meeting of the society Sunday afternoon. Those elected were as follows: President, Vernon Sackman; first vice president, Milford Nace; second vice president, Eddie Butterworth; secretary, Opal Colebank; chorister, Harold Dillee; pianist, Thelma Moorman; chairman social committee, Fern Price; chairman membership committee, Leonard Curtis; chairman devotional committee, Helen Moorman. The program which followed was composed of children's readings and songs by a group of grown-ups. The "children" who took part in the program were: Helen Moorman, Arlon Chapman, Lois Butterworth, Laura Pennell, Opal Colebank, Fern Price, Kathryn Price, Melba Moorman, Kenneth Morford, Erwin Moorman, John Pennell and Benjamin Bean.

At seven thirty Elder C. Ed. Miller was the speaker. Quite a number of the young people were absent from this service because they attended the young people's meeting at the Stone Church.

Spring Branch Church

Sister Florence Smith has been remembered at the prayer services of this congregation in recent days, and she is still in need of the prayers of all.

Pastor G. W. Eastwood gave a talk to the Sunday school on helping others. He was also in charge of the eleven o'clock service, assisted by Morris Jacobson. The choir sang the anthem, "God Be

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Merciful," and the speaker was Elder Robert Fish who read Mark 4 and 5, the parable of the sower.

The program at the evening church school was arranged by an eight-year-old girl, Shirley McFarlane. She had several fine numbers.

There were two evening speakers, Brother Jake Andes and Arthur Peer. Francis Tankard sang, "My Savior Takes Care of Me," and a quartet, Alma, Imogene and Gladys Dixon, and Fern Belk, sang, "The Half Has Never Yet Been Told."

Eventful Convention of Northern Saskatchewan Young People

Cooperation of Workers Produces Helpful Program

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.—The district young people's convention was voted a great success by all who attend. Attendance far exceeded the expectations of the committees, and accommodations were taxed to the limit.

On Friday evening, March 10, the "Be Ye Doers," Sister Christy's class of girls, served a tempting meal prepared by their own hands. Even the bread and buns were home-made. They also displayed some beautiful handwork.

"The Bishop's Candlesticks," a one-act play, taken from Victor Hugo's famous Les Miserables, was staged later in the evening. In the cast were Elvin Anderson, Arthur Gendron, Mrs. Arthur Gendron, Margaret Nisbett, Paul Cruce, and Elvin Nisbett. A short musical program preceded the play, those contributing being Mrs. Eric Boland, Elvin Anderson, Mrs. Steeves, Pearl Mogenson, and Alex Mackie.

The prayer service next morning was in charge of Brother Frank Piedt and was followed by classwork. Elder W. L. Christy distributed comprehensive outlines among the audience, and lectured on "How Well Has the Church Succeeded in Your Life?" Sister Christy discussed the activities of her class.

At two-thirty, the following young people gave short talks on Book of Mormon characters and the origin of some of our favorite hymns: Vera Cruce, Ruth Denton, Violet Cruce, Elvin Anderson, Vera Steeves, Irma Denton, Mabel Cruce, and Lily Anderson.

After a couple of hours of recreation, the women's department served supper to the young people.

At eight o'clock the chapel was crowded with people eager to listen to the debate on, "Resolved That Stewardships Provides the One Way to Abiding Social Progress." Effie Ziegler, Ralph Jordan and Averil Diggle upheld the affirmative, and Elvin Anderson, Paul Cruce and Marvin Diggle, the negative. The judges, Brother Christy, Brother Diggle, and Sister Beckman, decided in favor of the affirmative. Sister Burton Asay was the director of a very amusing and effective play, "The Dear Departed," which followed the debate. Those taking part were Phyllis Gendron, Effie Ziegler, Vera Steeves, Brian Carson, Burton Asay, and Marvin Diggle.

Sunday's prayer service at eight o'clock was in charge of Brother Diggle. During the worship service of the church school Brother Henry Piedt gave an excellent talk on prayer, and Sister Christy made an earnest appeal to youth for higher living. Ninety-one were present at this session.

Brother Christy preached on "Youth's Place in the Family," at eleven o'clock, and the worth-while message was delivered with force and earnestness.

A number of the young people visited the radio station during the church broadcast, and Brother Christy shortened his sermon to give Sister Gregory and Brother Ralph Jordan an opportunity to speak with their homefolks. The subject of his sermon was, "Social Justice Through Godly Government."

During the afternoon Mary Skinner and Frank Piedt gave excellent talks on the social and spiritual reaction of recreation. Violet Cruce spoke on the life of W. W. Phelps who wrote our favorite hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," and Sister Diggle gave an address on, "Partnership in Marriage."

That evening the young people listened with rapt attention to W. J. Cornish, who in spite of physical disability, spoke with great earnestness and power on, "The Spirit of God."

Others who contributed musical numbers were Sister Lila Smith, Brother Christy, and Sister Steeves. Sister Pearl Mogenson was also generous with piano and accordion solos.

The young people who took part in the convention are to be congratulated on their evidence of preparedness. In spite of the fact that they were given assignments at the eleventh hour, they performed well.

Last month Saskatoon Branch enjoyed a visit from District President Roy Bowerman. He preached twice and spent several days visiting the Saints, encouraging and inspiring. At the morning prayer service the Lord spoke through him, encouraging and admonishing the Saints, giving a special message to the young people, and calling Brother Henry Piedt to the office of elder.

Prayer meetings during the past few weeks have been of a more spiritual order, and there is evidence of increasing consecration among the members of the branch.

Copra Price Is Falling

Hard Times Reach Society Islands

Papeete, Tahiti.—Copra, the principal commodity of these islands, has reached its lowest level yet and is going still lower—2 cents per kilo landed in Tahiti. I understand that today (February 27) it is 2 cents minus or 47½ centimes per kilo landed in Tahiti. That means the land owner will get from 1¼ to 1½ cents per kilo for the copra. Such prices are working hardships on the natives and on the mission, too.

One of the leading Chinese trading societies was seized by its creditors, the bank, a few days ago. That affected a number of other Chinese stores and even closed the Chinese bank for a few days. The bank is again open for business after the depositors signed an agreement not to demand their deposits for three years and no interest.

Whites and Chinamen who had loaned into millions to the Chinese trading company at big interest, lost everything, for the assets will hardly cover the French bank's claims. The poor Chinese garden farmers could only sit and cry when they first heard it.

We are trying to get along and advising the natives to return to their island homes at once, for the bottom has not yet been reached. Hard times have just reached us, and we are not prepared for them. The natives are carefree, however, and do not realize the economic conditions.

Holden Stake

Young People Hold Institute

Holden stake young people met March 17, 18, and 19, at Lees Summit, Missouri, in what officers hope to be the first of an established semiannual institute for stake young people. The institute came as a result of the organization of the young people which took place at the Atherton conference in October, 1932. At this time officers were elected, and immediately started to work. Through their alertness and persistent efforts, and through the cooperation with the stake president, Brother W. S. Macrae, they enjoyed one of the most successful conventions we could wish for.

Much work on the part of Gladys Beebe, of Atherton, president of the organization, and Genevive Smith of Lees Summit, secretary, proved that "it can be done." The Lees Summit women did their part in making everybody who attended feel perfectly at home. They deserved much credit for the well-planned arrangements to take care of those in attendance.

The convention started with an encouraging delegation of youth from practically every group in the stake, on

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Friday night. The service was of a recreational nature and gave every person present and opportunity to get acquainted. Everyone joined in wholeheartedly. The same whole-hearted spirit was carried over in the Saturday 8:45 a. m. prayer service and throughout the institute. It was a source of inspiration to those in charge to look out into the faces of over one hundred and fifty young people. Surely any person present could not fail to contrast the spirit present, with that which fills the air during worldly contacts of our daily life. There was a spirit present which seemed to lift them up to a higher level and made evident the worth-while quality of the beauty and purity, which only the life of Christ offers.

Six classes conducted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards and President Floyd McDowell seemed to be bubbling over with that same beauty and purity and every ear was at attention for the valuable information they brought. The theme presented by these brothers was, "Church Work and Service." Much emphasis was placed upon the imperative purpose of the church to build godly men. The importance of love for each other was stressed, thus establishing a brotherhood which must be if his children serve their purpose here on earth. The young people were admonished to go to their branch officers in their home groups and offer their services in any place they are needed and prepare that they may fill those places intelligently.

Saturday evening a musical and literary program was presented. Also two one-act plays were given by Atherton and Warrensburg. The numbers furnished were selected from various groups of the stake.

Besides the regular Sunday services there was an election of officers for the ensuing year. Gladys Beebe was reelected president; Ammon Andes, of Warrensburg, vice president; Genevive Smith, of Lees Summit, secretary; Gladys Carr, of Holden, Lawrence Martin, of Blue Springs; Bennett Enfield, of Knobnoster, and Frankie Thayer, of Marshall as the advisory council. They look forward to another institute during the summer, and hope they may be able to see immediate results in the groups as an outcome of this much appreciated and successful institute.

Atherton

Young people's day, February 26, opened with prayer meeting for the youth which created a good setting for the services to follow. Young people were in charge of all meetings during the day. Church school was brought to order by the playing of the song, "Give Me Thy Heart," after which Elder F. A. Cool announced the hymn, "Come Learn of the Meek and Lowly," Brother Richard Gratton offered the prayer.

After the study period all met in the main auditorium for the eleven o'clock service in charge of Lloyd Kaufman, assisted by O. D. Hughes. The choir sang the anthem, "Thou Wilt Keep Him," and the speaker, James A. Thomas, used as his subject, "Prayer," which was the theme of the day. He gave an inspiring and helpful discourse.

The evening service was in charge of Richard Moore assisted by Oscar Blackmore. The choir sang, "Nearer My God to Thee," and Elder Howard Andersen, of Independence, delivered a splendid sermon.

The branch is striving for a higher plane of spirituality, and to this end the priesthood are meeting in special prayer meeting.

A double shower was held recently for Harley Bogue and wife and Harold Curtis and wife. These couples were recently married.

An orchestra has been organized among Atherton young people, Brother Nace of Independence the teacher.

The dramatic club presented a play at the young people's convention held at Lees Summit, March 17, 18, and 19.

Washington, Oklahoma

First Meetings in Many Years

Surely many in the church will be glad to hear of the meetings recently held at Washington. Circumstances have hindered the holding of meetings here for about a dozen years though a series of missionary gatherings has long been the dream of some isolated members.

It was twelve years last October since services were held by R. E. Miller and Joseph G. Smith. They had good meetings, preaching and teaching, and the following May, Elder Earl D. Bailey came for a few days. That was when the last sacrament was held until a few weeks ago.

But about four weeks ago Brother G. J. Harding with Brother E. F. Yerrington, of Oklahoma City, came over, and the people had a splendid meeting. Saints were here from nearby places, and they enjoyed listening to Brother Harding's sermon, given with power and much assurance. Two days later Brother Harding left for his home at Council Bluffs, Iowa. The Oklahoma members would have been glad if he could have remained here for a time.

Brother Yerrington wants to organize a Sunday school here, and has promised to hold meetings and preaching services twice a month.

"We enjoyed the testimonies of the Saints at our meeting," writes Sister Mollie Cross, of Washington, "and Brother Harding said that he was thankful for the spirit that prompted him to come to this place. Pray for us that the work may get a start here. It is lonely living in isolation. We love the latter-day gospel and know it is of God. Pray that we shall live it and let our light shine to convert our children, friends, and neighbors."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. M. MCDOWELL.

Our Departed Ones

POTTS.—Mary Johnson was born October 10, 1854, in Licking County, Ohio, and died at Central City, Nebraska, February 17, 1933. She united with the church, February 23, 1902, at Oak Grove, Oklahoma, and was a faithful member, always ready to testify to the truthfulness of the gospel. Was baptized by W. P. Pickering. While still quite young, she was married to Mr. Potts, and to them six children were born. One died in childhood. Four sons and one daughter survive her. With them she made her home in her declining years. E. J. Lenox, of Lincoln, Nebraska, had charge of the funeral services. Interment was at Central City, Nebraska.

BUEB.—Hanna C. Bueb was born at Templeton, San Louis Obispo County, California, January 7, 1895, and passed, away at Santa Cruz, California, March 4, 1933. She leaves to mourn, her husband, Landel A. Bueb; five children, Landel, Charles, Mary Jane, Henry, and William Sanford Bueb; her mother, Jane Twitchel, six brothers and sisters. She was an earnest worker in the mission Sunday school at Santa Cruz, and leaves a host of friends who miss her. Funeral services were conducted by Le Roy E. Harris, pastor of San Jose Branch, March 7, and interment was in Live Oak Cemetery, Santa Cruz. Many beautiful floral pieces attested to the love and high esteem held for her by a large circle of friends.

TWOMBLY.—Samuel Twombly, son of Calvin and Susan Twombly, was born at Mount Sterling, Illinois, August 19, 1861. Moved to Nebraska in early life and grew to manhood there. He married Harriet Wood in 1883, and to them three children were born, one dying in infancy. He became a member of the church at Comstock, Nebraska, in 1890, removing to Atchison, Kansas, in 1892. He was united in marriage to Mrs. Bettie Hopkins, September 17, 1896, and to them three children were born. In 1897, he was ordained an elder; in 1909, a high priest in which office he occupied seventeen years. During this time he also served as a member of the High Council for fourteen years. Was ordained a patriarch in April, 1926, in which capacity he served until his death. He joined Smithson No. 1 A. F. and A. M., of Highland, March 27, 1922, later joining the council at Troy. Fell ill in the latter part of January with the flu which terminated in pneumonia. Died at the Sisters Hospital, March 13, 1933. Left to mourn are his wife, Mrs. Bettie Twombly; two children by his first marriage: Mrs. Maude Long, and Raymond Twombly, of Sparks, Kansas; three children by the second marriage, William Twombly, of Fanning, Kansas; Mrs. Vera Ratcliffe, of Fargo, North Dakota, and Mrs. Fannie Jeschke, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; two step-children, George Hopkins, and Mrs. Ida Jeschke, both of Fanning; thirty grandchildren, three great-grandchildren; one brother, Edward Twombly, of Sargeant, Nebraska, and a step-brother, Charles Bedford, of Comstock, Nebraska; other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was held at the home at Fanning, March 15, Elder O. Salisbury in charge, assisted by Patriarch W. A. McDowell.

GEORGE.—Richard Savery George was born June 22, 1881, and died March 9, 1933, beloved husband of Jessie Sanborn, and father of Grace Lucile. He was the son of William C. George and Alma Savery, his father preceding him in death five months. Besides his wife and daughter, he leaves to mourn, his stepmother, Mary Hulmes George; four sisters: Mrs. Edna Morley, Alma Curry, Marcine Schlink, and Mary George, and a brother, Edwin. He was baptized when eleven years old. As it was said of Whittier, so can it be said of this beloved son: "He loved little children." He could readily descend from the dignity of his manhood to enjoy a frolic with his little friends, and perhaps some of the most pleasant and peaceful hours of his life were spent among the flowers, holding the hand of some little one, who understood his thoughtful moods and walked by his side in silence. He was a member of Kirtland, Ohio, Branch.

VAUGHN.—Joseph C. Vaughn was born February 5, 1868, at Oregon, Missouri. Was baptized into the church, February 17, 1895, at Guilford, Missouri, and was ordained an elder June 10, 1900. He died of a heart attack at his home at Norfolk, Nebraska, February 8, 1933. Had lived in that city for sixteen years during which time he had been a grocery salesman. At one time he operated a grocery store. He was active in the church in Norfolk, and was bishop's agent of Central Nebraska District, working tirelessly for the good of the church. Surviving are his wife, one daughter, Mrs. C. C. Collins, of Los Angeles, California; one son, Harold Vaughn, of Norfolk; three brothers: W. H. Vaughn, of Grand Junction, Colorado; E. M. Vaughn, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and W. C. Vaughn, Rea, Missouri; one sister, Mrs. M. C. Barnes, of Saint Joseph. The funeral was conducted from the home, Elder M. A. Peterson, of Neligh and the Reverend H. H. Pyche, of Leigh, in charge. Interment was in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

McCOY.—William H. McCoy, was born November 16, 1852, near Peoria, Illinois, son of James and Minerva Tracy McCoy. When he was eleven years old he went with his parents in a covered wagon to Poweshiek County, Iowa, settling on a farm twelve miles south of Tama. He married Miss Margaret Randolph, of Tama, and the couple would have celebrated their golden anniversary this April. They lived in Marshall County, Iowa, until 1919, when they moved to their present home in Waterloo, Iowa. He died there March 7, 1933, in a Waterloo Hospital of a heart attack caused by shock from a fall when he suffered a fracture of the right hip. Surviving besides his wife are one son, Harvey N. McCoy, of Waterloo, and five daughters: Mrs. Reuben Ackerman, and Mrs. August Michaelson, of Waterloo; Mrs. J. C. Harrington, of Hamilton, Missouri; Mrs. William Merrill, of Gladbrook, Iowa, and Mrs. George Esass, of Shanghai, China, whose husband is a lieutenant in the Marine corps there; eleven grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and two brothers, T. S. McCoy, of Grand Junction, Colorado, and James McCoy, of Tama, Iowa. The funeral was from the Saints' church at Waterloo, March 9, in charge of Elder E. R. Davis, of Lamoni, Iowa. Interment was in Elmwood Cemetery.

ORDWAY.—Clara Webster was born near Buffalo, New York, October 14, 1860. She was married to B. F. Ordway in Peoria, Illinois, by Elder J. Frank McDowell, May 30, 1883. On a visit to Independence, Missouri, where she lived from 1884 to 1886, she was baptized by Elder F. G. Pitt and confirmed by him and Elder Joseph F. Burton. She went to California in 1903, from Peoria, Illinois. Though bedridden for several months she never complained, but passed away peacefully at her home at Altadena, California, where she has lived for twenty-seven years. Funeral services were held at a Pasadena funeral chapel which was nearly filled with friends who gave many beautiful floral tributes of their love and respect. The sermon was preached by Elder D. B. Sorden. Burial was at Mount View Cemetery which adjoins her old home. Services at the graveside were conducted by the staff of the Crown City Rebekah Independent Order of Odd Fellows Lodge. She was a Rebekah for over fifty years. She is survived and mourned by her husband, B. F. Ordway; one son, Clifton W.; two daughters, Mrs. J. G. Morris and Mrs. L. R. Wolfe, all members of the church. There also survive eleven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, all living in or near Altadena. Mrs. L. R. Wolfe resides at the old home.

AUSTIN.—John Austin was born February 18, 1848, at Sheffield, England. He was baptized a member of the church June 29, 1879, and was ordained an elder in November, 1879. He was believed to be the oldest elder in the British Isles. Died at Sheffield, England, January 26, 1933, after an illness of two weeks, passing peacefully to rest. His was a remarkable life for he was a faithful Saint, always ready to undertake the least service or the gravest duty. He knew no fear in presenting the gospel message. Would travel miles to see a friend or to speak a word for the church. He was a man of cheerful spirit, humble in disposition, clean in word, thought, and deed—a stalwart elder. The funeral was in charge of Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, assisted by Elder J. H. Sykes, president of Sheffield Branch.

ARCHIBALD.—David Archibald, son of Russell and Ellen Archibald, was born at Duquoin, Illinois, August 31, 1857. His childhood was spent mostly in the vicinity of Belleville, Illinois. He united with the church at Belleville in 1873, and held the office of elder over thirty years, being a faithful member until death called him. He enjoyed comparatively good health for one of his years, but was taken by a heart attack and passed away February 6, 1933. Lived at Centerville, Iowa, for fifty-one years. July 29, 1883, he married Alice Angell at Belleville. She preceded him in death by five years. To them were born nine children, one of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Russell, of Centerville, Iowa; Thomas, of Trenton, Missouri; George, of Rockford, Illinois; Joseph, of Centerville; Gilbert, of Clinton, Iowa; Mrs. Pearl Snyder, of LeRoy, Minnesota; Mrs. Ruby Webb, of Mystic, Iowa, and Theodore, of Centerville. There also mourn four sisters, Mrs. C. A. Dawson, of Jefferson City, Missouri; Mrs. Lizzie Pipergerdies, of Stewartsville, Missouri; Mrs. Nellie Whitehead, of Warm Springs, Montana; Mrs. George T. Angell, of Albia, Iowa; three brothers, Russell, of Saint Louis, Missouri; James, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and Coventry, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. He leaves twenty grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

SCHAEFER.—Phillip J. Schaefer was born August 30, 1877, in Saint Louis, Missouri. His death occurred in Saint Louis, February 18, 1933. Those left to mourn his departure are his beloved wife, two sons, two daughters, one son-in-law, one grandchild, and three sisters. To the church his passing was quite a shock. He had been a faithful member for the past nineteen years. Was present at services the Sunday preceding his death. He was a dependable, quiet, unobtrusive man of good habits. He had been employed in one of the departments of the city government for the past eighteen years. The funeral sermon was by T. J. Elliott.

COWLISHAW.—Eliza A. Geeson was born October 14, 1848, in Nottingham, England. Died in Saint Louis, Missouri, February 18, 1933. Those left to mourn are her son, William R.; a sister, Mrs. Clara Eberts, of Alexander, Kansas; a brother, Henry Geeson; three grandchildren; a nephew, Walter Geeson whom she reared from infancy. Her husband, William C., and daughter, Clara, preceded her in death. As a child she went with her father's family in a caravan of fifty-nine ox teams that trekked across the country seeking Zion, and, disillusioned, returned to Saint Louis. One tribute paid to this woman is given by a sister: "When my little family was stricken down with diphtheria and no one would come, Sister Cowlishaw said: 'I will stay with you and help.'" God extended her years, and those who ministered to her in her declining years have not gone unrewarded. The funeral was from Krons' Mortuary. Sermon by T. J. Elliott.

ORR.—Charles Thomas Orr, son of Robert and Margaret Orr, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, April 23, 1838, and died at the home of his great-nephew, Nelson Garr, south of Jamesport, Missouri, February 11, 1933. He suffered a slight stroke of paralysis, February 8, which caused his death. Mr. Orr was the second in a family of seven children, all of whom preceded him in death. In childhood he moved with his parents to Aurora, Illinois, where he grew to manhood and learned the wagon maker and carpenter trade. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the Union army and served three and one half years as a member of Company H. Fifty-second Illinois Infantry. During his service he was sergeant, captain, and first lieutenant, and with General Sherman he marched to the sea. After the war, he emigrated to Missouri in a covered wagon with his mother and sister, taking the place in the home of his father who died at the age of forty. When his mother and sister passed on, he spent the rest of his life with relatives. He never married. In early life he united with the church and was an upright Christian. He held the office of priest for a short time, and in 1882 was ordained an elder, in which office he served until his death. He leaves two nieces and three nephews, his closest relatives and a host of friends and neighbors. The funeral services were conducted at the home of Nelson Garr, south of Jamesport, by Elder Everett Gamet, of Trenton. Interment was in Mount Zion Cemetery south of Jamesport.

WILLIAMS.—William E. Williams was born July 8, 1864, at Saint Clair, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, and passed away February 19, 1933. He was married to Mary Jane Samuels, May 22, 1888, and to them were born twelve children, six of whom are living. When ten years old he was baptized into the church, and was true to the faith until the end. Was ordained a priest, May 30, 1894, at Hiteman, Iowa. February 13, 1898, he was ordained an elder in which capacity he labored the rest of his life. During these years he presided over four different branches of the church, three in Iowa, and one in Colorado. He labored faithfully, sacrificing time, energy, and means for the good of the work. At the time of his death he was a counselor to the branch president at Wichita, Kansas, also counselor to the president of Southwestern Kansas District. He moved with his family from La Junta, Colorado, to Wichita about ten years ago. His wife passed away two years ago after a long illness during which time he faithfully cared for her. He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Martha Truman, of Wichita, Kansas; Mrs. Eleanor Russell, of Detroit, Michigan, and Miss Margaret Williams, of Wichita; three sons, Thomas S. Williams, of Lamoni, Iowa; Reece Williams, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Glen Williams, of LaJunta; nine grandchildren, and one brother. The services were conducted by Elder A. E. Stoft, pastor of Wichita Branch, from the Gill Mortuary the afternoon of February 21.

SOUTH.—Ida J. Lockling, daughter of Orson W. and Charlotte Maule Lockling, was born near Magnolia, Iowa, November 15, 1864. She passed away at Spokane, Washington, January 8, 1933, at the home of her daughter where she was visiting. Her home was at Saint Maries, Idaho. She became a member of the church June 25, 1876, being baptized by Phineas Cadwell and confirmed by her grandfather, Elder A. W. Lockling, and Joseph R. Lambert. She was united in marriage January 7, 1882, to J. W. South, who survives her together with three daughters: Mrs. P. F. McDermott, Mrs. Bert Stucker, Mrs. C. W. Adams, and one son, H. V. South; seven grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. J. E. Swalley, of Independence, Missouri. Services were conducted by Elder R. H. Porter, of Spokane, and interment was at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

LUKE.—Myrtle Beverly Luke, eight-months-old daughter of Lois and Irvin Luke, was born May 22, 1932. Died February 4, 1933, after a brief illness of pneumonia. The funeral was from Quindaro Church, Elder H. A. Higgins conducting the service. Interment was in Memorial Park Cemetery. The child's mother was formerly Annie Lois Allen of Artland Branch at Evesham, Saskatchewan, Canada.

STEFFEE.—John Alfred Steffee was born at Newton, Ohio, June 10, 1854. Died March 5, 1933, In Kansas City, Missouri. The funeral services were held March 7, at Bennington Heights Church. Interment was in Mount Moriah Cemetery. In the pioneer days of western Kansas, Brother and Sister Steffee took up a claim and established their home in a sodhouse. He was a carpenter and also engaged in sawmill work which he continued after moving to Blue Springs thirty-seven years ago. He was studious, being particularly interested in reading and studying the scriptures. His delight was to talk the gospel, and he taught his children and grandchildren many of the gospel principles. Because of his kind disposition he leaves many friends who will do well to carry out in this life the things for which he stood and sought to live. He is survived by his wife, three sons: D. W. Steffee, George R. Steffee, and Ira L. Steffee, all of Kansas City; one daughter, Mrs. G. W. Helard, with whom he lived, and sixteen grandchildren.

COON.—Isabel E. Fry, oldest daughter of Amon and Mary Ann Fry was born near Logan, Iowa, August 7, 1866, and her childhood was spent at the old David Fry homestead in Bigler's Grove, six miles north of Logan. She was married at Sturgis City, South Dakota, July 16, 1886, to Lewis Vincent Coon, and to this union nine children were born, two of whom have preceded her: Mattie Niles, and an infant daughter, Pearl. Surviving children are, Lester Coon, of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Atla Mischnick, of Beatrice, Nebraska; Mrs. Bessie Burch, Whiting, Iowa; Ruth Coon, at home; Paul Coon, Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. Mary E. Finley, Missouri Valley, Iowa, and Joseph M. Coon, at home; grandchildren, four; great-grandchildren, two. She is also survived by her husband; a sister, Mrs. Minnie I. Harper, of Logan, Iowa, and three brothers, Bert E., of Allen, Nebraska; Edgar C., Onawa, Iowa, and Fred A., of Woodbine, Iowa. She died February 22, 1933, at the home near Logan, Iowa, following a rather long illness, during which she suffered much. She had been a consistent member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since 1890, and her faith of a share of her Redeemer's love was a constant source of joy and a comfort to her soul. Funeral service was held February 24, 1933, at Logan, Iowa, the sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by Raymond C. Smith. Interment was in Bigler's Grove Cemetery.

BENNETT.—Howard Harris Bennett was born January 14, 1933, to Howard and Eleanor Mae Bennett. He died February 1, 1933, just twelve days after the death of his mother. The funeral service was conducted at the home of his parents in Masury, Ohio, February 3. Elder W. G. McCune, of New Castle, Pennsylvania, was in charge. Interment was in Oakwood Cemetery, Sharon, Pennsylvania.

AUSTIN.—John Austin was born February 18, 1848, at Shemeld, England, where he spent the whole of his life. He died January 26, 1933. He was baptized June 29, 1879, and was a most devoted and faithful member. He was always full of hope. Brother John presided over the Sheffield Branch as long as thirty years ago, when the branch was one of the largest in the mission; he also presided over the old Sheffield District. Served as bishop's agent under Bishop E. L. Kelly, and did duty for Bishop Roderick May, and again for Bishop Charles Fry. In his workaday life he was a spring fitter and vice maker being a strong trade unionist. He later became the secretary of his union, a position which he held for more than thirty years, retiring therefrom at about the age of seventy-five. He enjoyed good health in general, his hearing being only slightly impaired. He died as a result of influenza. He was married twice. His first wife was with him in the church. They had a family of eleven children. His wife and seven of the children preceded him in death. Three sons and one daughter survive. He married again about two years ago. His second wife who is about eight years his junior, survives him. There are many grandchildren, also great-grandchildren who will miss him. He was given to exercise for a man of his years, being an expert in the English game of "Bowls" in competitions of which he won many prizes in his later years. A week or two before his death he would rather walk a mile or two than ride on the tram car. He had many friends in the city of Sheffield; was known by all to be a clean, honest and thoughtful man. The poor always had his deep sympathy. He had a cheery word for everybody, and a good hearty laugh, which acted as a tonic to many. Interment was at Crookes, Sheffield, January 30, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, officiating, assisted by Elder J. H. Sykes.

WHITE.—John Lawrence, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. White, was born April 19, 1918, at Independence, Missouri, and died March 4, 1933, at his home, in Kansas City, Missouri. His passing was sudden and without warning of impending disease and was a tremendous shock to his friends and loved ones. His cheerful disposition made him a universal favorite with his friends, and his loss will be keenly felt. He was baptized October 17, 1926, and was a member of Central Church congregation, Kansas City. Besides his parents, he leaves to mourn his untimely death, two brothers, Norman White and George White of the home, and a host of friends and relatives. The funeral was from the home in charge of his pastor, C. E. Wight, the sermon by Ammon White, and the burial in Woodlawn Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

McQUEEN.—Victoria Elmedia Shippy, eldest child of Benjamin and Annis Shippy was born October 28, 1854, near Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and passed to her reward February 27, 1933. At the age of six months, she with her parents moved to Iowa and located on a farm six miles west of Oelwein. She has lived practically all her life in or near Oelwein. She was united in marriage to Webster

McQueen, October 29, 1874. To this union were born six children, three sons and three daughters. The three sons, Roy, Ben, and John preceded her in death several years ago. Those left to mourn are her husband, three daughters, Mrs. Earl Gaye, Mrs. J. L. Powers, and Mrs. Harvey Pratt; one daughter-in-law, Mrs. McQueen; one brother, C. D. Snippy; twelve grandchildren, and two great grandchildren, all of Oelwein, besides a host of other relatives and friends. She was a devout member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, although she was in poor health and unable to attend many services. To know "Grandma" McQueen was to love her. Her sweet smile and her kind disposition will be remembered by old and young. She seemed to think of others and never of herself, ready to do what she could as far as her health would permit. Funeral services were held Wednesday, March 1, at the Christian Church at 2 p. m. by Elder E. R. Davis, of Lamoni, Iowa, assisted by Elder George McFarlane, of Oelwein. Interment was made at Woodlawn. The pallbearers were Chester, Harold, Russell, Clair, Charles, and Ira Shippy, nephews of the deceased.

DURFEE.—Myron James Durfee was born at Moorhead, Iowa, April 10, 1860. Moved to Idaho at the age of twenty-one years. Was married to Emma Laura Graham, February 12, 1885, and to them were born three sons and three daughters. One son and two daughters preceded him in death. Surviving are his wife, Emma, one daughter, Mrs. Emma Jenkins; two sons, James Madison, of Hagerman, and Ray, of New Jersey; twenty-two grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. He died at his home at Hagerman, March 5, 1933. Was a charter member of Hagerman Branch, and was ordained a priest at the time of the branch organization. Acted as its president a number of years and remained loyal to the church through the dark days. Gave his financial support. The funeral was in charge of Silas D. Condit, and the sermon was by Elder William Glauner.

GRAYLESS.—Eliza J. Meyers was born, December 18, 1848, in the State of New Jersey. Came to Savanna, Illinois, when a small girl, and has resided in this community ever since. Died at her home March 2, 1933. She was united in marriage to James Grayless, August 26, 1865, at Beloit, Wisconsin. To this union ten children were born, seven daughters and three sons: Mrs. Thomas Nesbitt, Mrs. Edward Lister, Mrs. Ted Nordwell, Mrs. Jess Anderson, Gertie and Howard Grayless, all of Savanna, and Mrs. George Black, of Eades, Colorado. Two sons and one daughter preceded her in death. She was left a widow over forty years ago. Besides the living children, there are thirty grandchildren, and thirty great-grandchildren, and a host of friends left to mourn. Sister Grayless was a hard-working, self-sacrificing mother, and grandmother. She united with the church when a young woman, and remained a faithful member for over half a century. Funeral services were held Saturday, March 4, at the Saints' church in Savanna, at 2.30 p. m., by Elder E. R. Davis, of Lamoni, Iowa. Interment was in the Savanna Cemetery.

HOISINGTON.—Frank Jessimera Hoisington was born at Winterset, Iowa, April 24, 1862. He died near Juliaetta, Idaho, March 4, 1933. He married Susie Frances Eaton, January 15, 1887, at Nebraska City, Nebraska. To this union were born four children who survive him. He leaves, his wife, three daughters: Mrs. Myrtie Heimgartner, Mrs. Bessie Heimgartner, and Mrs. Lona Heimgartner and a son, Cletis F. Hoisington; twenty-seven grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and a sister, Mary Michels, of Iowa. One granddaughter, and one great granddaughter preceded him in death. He was a member of the church for many years and a firm believer of the latter-day faith. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Peter F. Klaus.

RICHARDS.—John T. Richards was born October 4, 1871; died at the City Hospital at Parkersburg, West Virginia, March 4, 1933. He married Jennie Stallman, January 21, 1899, and to them were born two children, one dying in infancy. He leaves to mourn, his wife, one daughter, Eva B. Yoak, and two brothers, Camden, and Harrison Richards, besides a host of other relatives and friends. He united with the church in early manhood and was faithful to the end. The funeral was from the home near Big Springs, West Virginia. The sermon was by A. C. Silvers. Interment was in the home cemetery, March 6.

QUICK.—Cornelius Quick was born in Indiana, June 15, 1850. He was married to Hanna Davis in February, 1870, and to them nine children were born, six sons and three daughters. Three sons preceded him in death. He joined the Christian Church when a young man. He moved to Kansas. He believed it was his duty to preach. He was a great Bible reader. In 1893, he heard the latter-day gospel and for three years he read and studied his Bible. He came into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in February, 1896. Was ordained an elder and became a strong defender of the latter-day work in the pulpit, in print, and in conversation. He died at his home at Rich Hill, Missouri, March 10, 1933, leaving to mourn his wife, six children, twenty-six grandchildren, twenty-six great-grandchildren. Brother Ralph Murdock was in charge of the funeral, and Elder Birch Whiting preached the sermon. Interment was in Walnut Hill Cemetery near Uniontown, Kansas, where he was baptized into the church.

WARNING!

Better not eat pork if the animal has not been fed according to Word of Wisdom. Government inspection will prove to you that over 90 per cent of the hogs are diseased. WHY? They are fed decomposed foods such as dead animals, decomposed garbage, all sorts of filth from slaughter houses and elsewhere.

We are not a carniverous animal, so let's go slow on meat: If it's meat, let it be clean, such as lamb, mutton, veal or young beef. Be sure to get some raw vegetable matter when you do use meat. PHOSFO is rich in raw mineral salts—just what you should have to make up what the flesh lacks.

PHOFSO neutralizes the acid also and what a help to the action of the bowels. You can't lose—we refund if you feel dissatisfied. We deliver to any part of the world. Only $1.00 per can. In U. S. A., three cans for $2.00; Canada, five pounds in bulk for $3.00, and six pounds in U. S. for $3.00.

The Pigeonhole

The Sunshine Lady

By Thelma Moorman

In the recent play contest there was one play presented called, "The Sunshine Lady." I am going to tell you about another sunshine lady who lives down the street from us. She is a sweet white-haired old lady, past seventy, who lives alone in her cottage, but her cheery manner brightens the whole block.

Her home is the sunniest spot on the street. While waiting for the plants in her window to bloom, she has made some silk flowers to brighten the green foliage. Of course she has a depression plant.

Like all dear old ladies, she makes quilts—beautiful ones. She has just finished a gold-fish pattern and is going to let the girls of the neighborhood learn to quilt on this one. Although the quilting will not be so fine, she will love it more for the stitches they put in. She is like that, with always an encouraging word for all or a cheery smile to welcome one into her home for a chat before her little gas heater. She sends her guests away with lighter hearts because of the sunshine that radiates from her own dear self.

Hail, Columbia!

"Well, who stepped on your toes?" In answer to my question the pigeon hopped down on the space bar of my typewriter, with a frown which denoted deep thought and meditation.

"You know," and when the pigeon begins "you know," well—I generally know. "People are funny! I've noticed more than ever lately that each Wednesday night they go to the midweek prayer service, and as sure as clockwork they get up, say the same old thing, in the same old way. It seems as though they have memorized a little piece, and in order not to sound trite, they just change the time and tense a little." Here he stopped long enough for this observation to soak in properly.

"After all, it's only human," I began, but he interrupted.

"That's just the trouble. The phrase 'only human' fits in too many places, and is used too many times to help one out of difficulty. I guess some people will never understand that Zion can not be built with flowery prayers and testimonies. Of course prayers and testimonies help but it is really the deeds that reap a harvest. Men and women worry about not being able to go out in foreign fields to preach the gospel, when they could find enough work here at their own door to keep them busy for the rest of their lives, if they were really looking for it," and with this he hopped upon the L and P keys of my typewriter, cocked a beady eye at me, and continued, "and when they read this I will probably get 'hail columbia' for saying this much."

"Isn't it odd how many of us lack in appreciation of the present?" demanded the pigeon fanning my ear with a mottled wing. "Some fine day we shall wake up and realize what a happy, helpful time we had back in good old 1933 in spite of the depression."

Editorial

A Tidal Wave of Liquor

With the modification of the Volstead Act to permit the sale of mild alcoholic liquors, the country sees the mounting of sentiment against prohibition. This sentiment, of course, is thoughtless and mistaken.

Prohibition is not yet defeated. While the Eighteenth Amendment stands we have the fundamental structure for the control of alcohol and its many evils. As long as we can retain that, a simple law can easily be modified, and the machinery of prohibition again set in order.

A number of states have made moves to ratify the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. Others are considering similar action.

Against that repeal towards which the Wets are now vigorously and somewhat successfully working, every Christian, every right minded citizen, ought to set all his strength. The safety of our homes and highways, the safety of the growing boys and girls, the security of wives and mothers depend upon it.

The loss which would be sustained in the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment would be a calamity. It would set back the progress of the nation for many years. We should not permit the hands of time to be turned back for the restoration of the Dark Ages of Alcohol. L. L.

The Church School Plan Wins Favor

To like to "point with pride" seems to be a rather deep-seated trait of human nature, and since we are all human we feel sure that our readers will pardon a little editorial indulgence.

In the General Conference of 1930 a program of religious education was approved, which called for the unification of the various educational agencies and activities into one program and organization, and the integration of all with the total church program. In the local branch this unified and integrated effort is usually spoken of as the church school. For the guidance of the officers and leaders of the church school the church has provided a Church School Handbook which contains a fairly complete statement of organization, plans, programs, and activities of the church school.

The Church School Handbook has received many favorable comments from within the church. From time to time, moreover, the scope of its influence has extended to other churches and even to educational institutions. In a recent letter from one of our young men who is in attendance at a mid-western state university, we have the following:

> "The other day I handed our Church School Handbook to our instructor in Organization and Administration of Religious Education. After scanning it carefully he said, 'That is the most modern thing of its kind in the field —We have voted to adopt a similar program in the organization with which I am connected for next year—I especially like your plan for certification of teachers.' "

The same brother loaned his Handbook to a fellow student, who, upon returning it, said, "Mr. ——, your church is to be congratulated upon having prepared such a fine work. I shall be glad to have you order one for me."

Our brother continued his splendid missionary work with the Director of Religious Education in one of the largest and most modern churches of his city, and he, too, was so delighted with the Handbook that he ordered one for his own use.

One of the most recent textbooks in the field of religious education discusses at some length the organization of the church school. It is of special interest to note that after presenting various plans the author calls attention to the fact that developments in this field have invariably followed three steps: 1. A separate organization for each functional activity. 2. A plan of correlation or coordination of the various organizations interested in religious education. 3. The merging of these activities and agencies into one organization with a program for each age group. "This," says the author, "is the best solution. Only a few churches have as yet ventured into this field."

Recently the wife of one of our pastors who is enrolled in an eastern university happened to mention the program of our church in her class in religious education. Her instructor was so much interested that the sister was given the entire class period for each of two days to outline our complete program. According to her report the comments and expressions of approval were very flattering indeed.

Are we not just a little justified in "pointing with pride" to our church as it sets the pace with its teaching program? F. M. McD.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

LAST CHRISTMAS, among other Christmas cards received was one from a young couple, and following my usual custom receipt was acknowledged. This brought to my desk another letter in which I find much of interest because of the frankness with which a certain condition is discussed. The letter was written after having returned from a visit to the old home branch, one which at present is torn with internal dissension because of difficulties which have gradually arisen between some of the older members of the priesthood, differences which have resulted in astrangement of one-time friends. Let me quote from the letter:

"I heard a group of young people who should be the future leaders of that branch discuss the situation until well past midnight and they were a very discouraged and disillusioned group. It hurts, you know, when you see your parents, who you know have lived honest, upright lives, and have given years of service to the branch, ignored, and their reputations viciously attacked. When you hear of stories which are being circulated that haven't a word of truth in them, you almost feel 'What's the use?' And yet no accusations are ever made in public where they can be refuted—a whispering campaign seems to be so much more effective. . . . When everyone has been patient, and things have worked themselves out, the older folks will probably still be there, but I am wondering where the older young people of the branch will be."

The writer of that letter has put his finger on one of the most serious factors of branch troubles. The older ones may make their adjustments, but what of the youth who expect to find peace and concord and comfort and satisfaction in their branch meetings, but who are denied this surcease from worldly stress because of the friction existing among those who should be brothers in fact as well as in name. The writer of the letter might have gone further and asked, What of those who have become interested in the message of the gospel when they see the lack of the fruits of the gospel?

Yet what exists in the branch referred to at present exists in some others and has in the past proved the undoing of some of our best branches. It is discouraging when men of the priesthood can not agree. It is discouraging to general officers and to others when they, associating with men whom they know to be men of fine qualities, are compelled to listen to disparaging remarks about those whom they have learned to love, remarks which are prompted by peevishness, by bitterness—all of which could have been avoided if the spirit of the Master were permitted its proper work.

For the sake of our young, for the sake of our friends, for the sake of those who are investigating the beauties of the gospel, why shall we not learn to agree and work together in fraternity?

BROTHER A. E. ANDERTON, president of Southern Ohio District, writes us in fine spirit, saying that while the district as a whole did not make its quota, he finds cause for rejoicing. The Second Columbus Branch and Dayton Branch exceeded their quotas. "We are trying," says he, "to instill into all that even though they are members of God's church, they are in the position that the church has become their own, and they are responsible for the destinies of the organization." And then he adds encouragingly, "Southern Ohio continues its unqualified support, and will continue to do so."

Of course it will. And the Saints in their efforts to carry on their tasks as church members, amidst the trying conditions existing, will find a spiritual uplift and happiness that will compensate them in full for every effort put forth. Second Columbus and Dayton are to be congratulated on their success in reaching one goal. They must look to their laurels, however, for some of the other branches of the district may surpass them. Carry on, Saints in Southern Ohio!

D. J. WILLIAMS, our representative at Chatham, Ontario, sends in something which can not but be of interest to all of us who are still fighting the "liquor traffic." He thinks the information might help our readers appreciate more fully the advantage of prohibition when compared with so-called "liquor control" in Canada. He says that although the population of the United States is ten times that of Canada, he has observed on the street and in the press as much as or perhaps greater violation of law in the same length of time in Canada.

In the light of this he thinks it particularly interesting and significant to note that the Globe and Indemnity Insurance Company, one of the largest traffic insurance companies in Ontario is authority for the following statement by its representative, Mr. A. E. Wilson:

"Then again times have changed. Eight years ago people were obliged to be very careful in the handling of liquor. Now there is a great freedom. Motorists carry it with them and in them with disastrous results. It is impossible to prove in these cases that the operator was intoxicated and we must be able to do this in order to win the case. The court invariably takes the stand against the municipality and gives judgments in favor of the injured parties."

Brother Williams adds that this company has carried about seventy-five per cent of the insurance of the provincial highways in Ontario for many years, but they are now asking a raise of thirty per cent in premiums; this is an appeal to the Tilbury East, Kent County Council of which Elder R. T. Brown is a member.

Quite interesting this, and if there be Saints who are disposed or inclined to abandon our long held position of opposition to the liquor traffic, they will do well to consider this along with many other reasons pointing to the necessity for avoiding the evils of liquor.

BROTHER VERNE DESKIN, who was recently chosen president of the Des Moines Branch, wrote us in a somewhat facetious vein telling of his election, then adds an interesting comment on response to the call of duty. He says:

"I have been thinking for several weeks that I would write and tell you what a terrible mistake our people of the Des Moines Branch made when they elected me their president. But I presume that by this time you have already discovered the error. However, that may be, it is sad but true. From almost any standpoint I can think of many other things that would bring fewer heartaches and much less of demands upon my time and energies; but from somewhere there came into my consciousness the vision of a need, and if only that one thing can be accomplished the resulting joy and satisfaction will have compensated me for all it may cost.

"Your letter relating to the youth conference came to me some time ago, and I would have you know that we expect to do all in our power to have quite a number of our representative young people there. I am directing a large portion of my time among that group and truly believe that I enjoy a modest portion of their confidence and respect and they certainly have mine."

Of course we had not worried at all about the "terrible mistake" made by the Des Moines Saints, because we knew something about both that branch and Brother Deskin. In the first place the branch is not likely to go far wrong in choosing its leader, and would be likely to correct soon any mistake made in that line, and in the second place the brother has in the past displayed qualities which indicate that the branch is not taking much risk in asking him to assume the responsibilities of leadership. But it is pleasing to see that our brother sees the responsibilities he has taken up, and that he did not seek the honor or the task. Only the desire to respond to the call of duty prompts acceptance of the position. One of the evidences of fitness for a task is such a keen sense of its responsibilities as to cause hesitancy to accept. Deliberately seeking office for the honor attached usually indicates unfitness.

Of course we shall watch the course of events in Des Moines Branch; but we feel sure that Brother Deskin, with the support of the Saints in Des Moines, will "make good." F. M. S.

Too many of us have been lovers of wood, stone, buildings, and lands, and have failed to be lovers of God. If we are not lovers of God we can not hope to be in love with our fellow men.—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "This Do and Thou Shalt Live," delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Do Not Inclose Writing in Packages of Books, Quarterlies, or Merchandise

Patrons who return books, quarterlies, or merchandise to the Herald Publishing House for credit on their accounts should be careful to send letters separately.

To include any handwriting or typewriting in any mail package violates the postal rule for parcel carriage rates, and makes the whole package "First Class Mail," and we have to pay a heavy "Postage Due" charge. Many such packages have been received lately, costing us considerable amounts of money. On one small package, worth only a small amount, this charge was more than fifty cents. Others are similar where writing is included in the package.

Patrons will be asked to stand the cost of their mistakes in this matter. Please remember—do not include any writing in the package; send all letters separately.

Herald Short-story Contest Closes

Eighty-one stories finally crowded in before the closing hour of the Herald short-story contest on April 1. The stories and the names of their authors have been listed by the Contest Editor, and all names removed from the manuscripts in order that the judges may be perfectly impartial in their decisions.

At a glance, the stories entered in this contest appear to represent a gain in quality as well as in numbers over the preceding contest. We are happy to note this improvement. As the quality improves, the competition becomes keener.

Judges are being selected from the staff at the Herald Office, and some outside help will probably be called in. Every safeguard is being provided to assure fair and impartial consideration for all manuscripts. The judges will proceed by process of elimination, first selecting the best and then arranging them according to order of merit.

The knowledge of God means not the bare assurance that something called "God" exists, but an apprehension of the qualities that constitute the meaning of the word. This apprehension, we have reason to believe, is not to be gained by mere scrutiny of things as they appear, but must result from the self-disclosure of God to men in religious experience, as they open their mind to his revelation.—Edward Grubb.

Youth and the Church

By Dwight D. W. Davis

District Young People's President of Seattle and British Columbia

The spirit of reciprocity ought everywhere to characterize the relationship existing between youth and the church. Neither one nor the other should expect to receive to the exclusion of giving, nor give to the exclusion of receiving. A "from each to each" attitude is necessary for complete spiritualization. What, then, is the church justified in expecting of its young people; and in turn what has youth a right to demand of its church?

YOUTH HAS A RIGHT TO EXPECT OF THE CHURCH:

1. Opportunities for the natural development of God-given talents, plus adequate stimulation for the expression thereof.

2. Help in the evolution of a Zionic code of morals, and sufficient motivation to live up to these norms of conduct.

3. Vital induction to the best religious history of the race.

4. Present-day spiritual and temporal guidance in a godless world of selfish materialism.

5. An expanding philosophy of responsibility toward social inter-relationships. (To what extent are we "Our Brother's Keeper"? To what degree should we "do unto others as we would that others do unto us"? How should we "love our neighbor as ourself"?)

In return for these the church would be justified in making one, all inclusive, demand of its youth:

Consummate Fidelity in the Attainment of Its Primary Function: Evangelizing the World and Establishing Zion.

Loyalty of this nature certainly implies being a child of the King in word, in deed, and in truth; and carries with it the very embodiment of discipleship:

1. Spiritualizing our lives by righteous living, pure thinking, clean conversation, and daily prayer at the family altar.

2. Preparing ourselves for work in the church by daily study of its books and papers, and other good writings.

3. Attending church regularly, and helping to maintain the dignity and beauty of the services by reverent conduct.

4. Giving willingly of our talents and labor whenever and wherever we are needed in the work.

5. Supporting the church by continuous and conscientious compliance with the financial law.

How far the Young People of this church are willing to adventure in these spiritual fields will in turn determine their place in the organization and their contribution to the building of God's kingdom on earth. For that more abundant life, Youth needs the church and the church needs Youth. Let us go forward together.

The Story of Etta Kett

The Purpose of a Cork

The most dangerous thing in a car is a cork, as Bill and Etta discovered one Friday evening when they were invited to ride with George Appleton out to the country estate of Robert Breckenridge, the banker. Bill usually drove his own car wherever he went.

"It's a lot safer," Bill always said. "You can come home when you want to. And if I must put my life in anybody's hands, I prefer to have it in my own." But Bill and Etta both knew George and had no fear of going with him.

The road there followed the steep and tortuous grade of the Sioux Trail over Sentinel Mountain. From the piazza of Mr. Breckenridge's home the plain appeared like a large map, with farms, homes and trees studding it like toys. Elmwood raised the towers of its office buildings in the distance. Below them the narrow ribbon of highway wound in a snake track around hairpin turns and sweeping grades.

As darkness fell, the guests went inside and, seated about a crackling fire on the hearth, they passed the time in story-telling and fun. Mr. Breckenridge was widely-traveled, and there was not a dull moment in the three hours they sat there.

"I'd like to have George stay overnight with me," he said to Bill and Etta when the time came to go home. "We have some plans to discuss. Would you mind riding back to the city with Allan Rothmer?"

Of course they could not refuse, although neither of them knew anything about Rothmer. Sitting in the back seat before starting the return journey, they were surprised to see Rothmer take a drink from a hip-flask.

"Anybody else like a little nip?" asked Rothmer, offering them the flask. Both declined rather shortly, and Etta clutched Bill's hand as she thought of the dangerous grades they would have to descend with an intoxicated man at the wheel.

Rothmer's powerful car roared as his numbed wits and uncertain foot put too much pressure on the throttle. Lurching and skidding they went around the curves, sometimes on two wheels. Wildly they passed the cars of other guests. Fortunately, they thought, they were nearing the last turn, and hoped they might get home safely. But that last turn proved to be too much for the drink-befuddled man. The car left the road, ran through the brush and crashed the radiator and a front wheel on a boulder. Bill and Etta had braced themselves for the impact, and were spared any injuries, but Rothmer was pitched out through the side door, and had two ribs broken and some nasty gashes on the head as a result of falling on the sharp rocks.

Luckily, other cars drew up. Rothmer was taken in one car, and Bill and Etta in another. For the first time in her life, Etta cried hysterically, and Bill was white and trembling.

"Never again!" said Bill a few days later. "Never again will I ride with anybody else."

"The real purpose of a cork is to keep the liquid in the bottle. And it should never be removed," was Etta's comment.

Over the Horizon

THE YOUTH CONFERENCE at Lamoni in June is attracting church-wide interest and attention. Young people are making plans to drive in cars from even the most distant branches. Enthusiastic letters are coming from everywhere. The crowds will be at Lamoni. Will you be there to meet them?

GLANCE over the copies of the Herald in recent weeks, and you will find that young people are figuring pretty heavily in the news. They are doing a great deal of work, and with their help the church will go forward.

ONE FRIEND of the young people has written to us suggesting the establishment of a "Youth Day" to be observed all over the church. Young people would be in charge, and the ideals and work of youth would be stressed. What do you think of the idea? Let's hear from you.

ETTA KETT says that she invites criticisms and suggestions for the story of her life. One person lately told us that Etta is "just too good to be human." Etta says that no matter what you do you get criticized, and you'd better displease the wrong crowd than the right one! "Choose your enemies with the same care that you do your friends," was her parting shot. What do you think?

THE OTHER night a sweet young woman got hold of the book copy of "Riches Untold," started reading; she neglected her escort, ignored the company, and let her ice cream melt until she finished it before she went home. That's the kind of a book it is.

NEWS BRIEFS

Commendable Motto for Bisbee, Arizona

"Cooperation with the church," the motto of Bisbee Branch, is reflected in all local activities. The unity of the priesthood is proving effective, every man being busy in his office and calling. Sunday school has taken on a new spirit and is growing in numbers. Seven candidates were lately baptized, and nonmembers are interested in the gospel message. This news of progress comes to the Herald from T. R. Davis, presiding officer.

Australian Branch Completes Two Years in New Church

The branch at Euroa, Victoria, Australia, has completed two years in its new church building. During that period fifteen have been baptized. Workers there are looking toward missionary meetings the latter part of May, to be conducted by Apostle G. G. Lewis and Elder A. J. Corbett. Elder H. Jacka is pastor of Euroa group.

Yakima Young People Will Give Gift

The young people of Yakima, Washington, plan to add a class room to the local church building as a gift to the branch. They now have their own organization in operation, and Ben E. Nutley is their teacher.

Minneapolis Hopes to Increase Membership

The branch at Minneapolis, Minnesota, hoping to increase its numbers is striving to establish missions in South Minneapolis and Saint Paul. In this undertaking the Saints are led by their pastor, Charles Johnson, and lately have been greatly aided by Apostle J. F. Curtis.

Men's Herald Club at Saint Clair, Michigan

The Men's Herald Club of Saint Clair, a new organization in the branch, meets twice monthly, and its purpose is to widen the intellectual scope of the community and impart information about every-day topics. Its members are men who are interested in the topics of the day. For each meeting a study topic is chosen from the late number of the Herald, and reviewed before the club. David Chisnell is president of the organization. The club has its missionary aspects, too. Nonmembers will, through it, come in contact with the gospel message carried by the Herald.

Denver Members Interested in Class Work

One of the chief activities of Denver, Colorado, Saints this winter has been class work, and in many of their classes they have aimed for Religious Education credit. They had a class on "How to Teach," and now are enjoying courses in Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and "Stewardships." Teachers have included Glen Holmes, Clarence Bruno, Alva Christensen, and Pastor Glaude Smith. These classes are held on Sunday evening preceding the preaching hour.

Forty-second Anniversary for Branch at Detroit

Detroit, Michigan, Branch which now numbers approximately 1,950 members, celebrated its forty-second anniversary April 2. It was organized as the Evergreen Branch, Detroit, Michigan, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Shaw in 1891, by R. C. Evans and H. Rathbun, and there were sixteen charter members. George W. Shaw was the first president.

Doctor Charles D. Carter Completes Half a Century of Service

Doctor Charles D. Carter has just completed half a century in the practice of medicine at DeKalb, Illinois, and the event was given generous press notice by the DeKalb Daily Chronicle which presents the community's felicitations, and says among other things: "Fifty years of faithful serving of his fellow man in fair weather or storm, prosperity or adversity, discouragement or elation, establishes a mark of which the worthy doctor can well be proud. . . . Fifty years of service in easing the pain of the suffering and bringing comfort to the aches and pains of those who need comfort. That is about as magnificent a career as man could wish."

Doctor Carter is also president of the DeKalb Branch, and, although advancing years have somewhat hampered his activities, he carries on with the fidelity and devotion to the gospel that have always characterized him.

Worth While Project for Ava Young People

For a group project this year the young Saints of Ava, Missouri, undertook the raising of funds to pay bus fares for two young people who otherwise could not attend high school. Much fun and entertainment have characterized the affairs staged to assist in raising money—socials, a literary program, a play, and a wiener roast.

A Discussion for the Youth Conference

FACING THE PROBLEM OF LEISURE

By F. M. McDOWELL

INTRODUCTORY NOTE: Not the least of the perplexing problems of the present day are those which have to do with the use of leisure time. While the problems involved can only be solved adequately by entire communities, they do have a vital bearing on the work of the church. Young people and leaders of young people are constantly appealing for help and advice in this field. What sort of activities may the church legitimately sponsor? Why has the church tabooed certain modern forms of recreation? What determines the right or wrong in leisure-time activities? These and other problems we hope to discuss at the coming Youth Conference and Leadership Convention in Lamoni. In order to stimulate thought, study, and discussion of some of the aspects of this major problem, we are presenting the following outline. We have not attempted to exhaust the subject but only to provoke serious study. Comments will be appreciated in the Youth's Forum, and we trust that local groups of young people who are not permitted to attend the June Conference may be able to use the outline as a basis for group discussion.—F. M. McD.

Two Pictures

The first is provided by Benton MacKaye and describes the leisure-time activities of his boyhood in a New England town:

"There was the swimming hole in the mill stream and the flooding of the meadows for skating around the evening bonfire. There was the after-haying picnic in the river intervale and the double-runner coasting parties by February moonlight. There was baseball and shinny, trout fishing, and tracking rabbits. There was the illustrated lecture on the stars or on the Norman Conquest. There was 'Evangeline' read aloud on a long solstice evening, May baskets on twilight doorsteps, drop the handkerchief on the common. There was a Grand Masquerade in the January thaw and quadrilles, reels, and slides. The church bells rang out on the night before the Fourth, the sleigh bells rang out on the night before Christmas."

The second presents the activities of the American people on a Sunday in the summer of 1929 as described by Stuart Chase:

"On a summer Sunday in America people also play. Some forty millions of them are being carried by a machine at forty miles an hour past Goodrich Tire signs and Come-On Inns; anon creeping in single line at one mile an hour to the escarpments of bridges, ferries, tunnels, and bottle necked highways in a steamy sweat of oil and dust. Many millions are eating the inevitable steak and chicken dinner at the inevitable blowsy roadhouses, while the gin gurgles into the Canada Dry and the radio drowns the engulfing of the canned tomato soup. Ten millions are seated in the dark watching a personable young woman alternately misplace and recover her virtue for six thick rolls of celluloid.

"For some hours of the day practically the entire population of the Republic disappears under something in the nature of sixty tons of woodpulp to the accompaniment of a noisy if not a sanguinary struggle between Susie and Junior as to which has prior right to Mutt and Jeff.

"Along the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Great Lakes stretch ten thousand miles of fine hard beaches deserted save for the sandpiper, the sea gull, and the crab, but from point to point between these lonely stretches, more millions on our summer Sunday congregate, each with his bottle of pop, his banana, and his cheese sandwich. Fifty thousand are roaring as the home-run king lifts a horsehide pellet over an Arrow Collar signboard."

What It Costs

The annual cost of recreation reaches the total of more than ten billion dollars.

Governmental expenditures for recreation in 1931 reached a total of 193 million dollars.

Two billion dollars were spent in 1930 for touring and short daily trips.

American tourists spent abroad in 1930, 790 millions of dollars.

The total annual cost of radio entertainments is 525 million dollars.

The annual expenditure for motion pictures is $2,392,000.

The total investment in motion pictures is estimated at two billion dollars.

What Is Happening

Even a superficial examination of the trends of the last few decades in regard to the use of leisure time reveals the following significant developments:

Increased time for leisure.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Tremendously increased unemployment.
Increased need for leisure.
Increased facilities and opportunities for recreation.
Increased intensity of leisure-time experiences.
The commercialization of recreation.
From "participation" to "witnessing."
From "Puritanism" to "libertinism."
From "recreation" to "amusement."
Growing demand for education for leisure.
Growing demand for supervised recreation.
Growing consciousness of responsibility on the part of the community, of the school, and the church.

The error of the present age is much the same as with the Jews when Jesus taught and wrought among them; there is a great desire to be partakers of the "loaves and fishes," but too little disposition shown to commend the religion of the Master by keeping his sayings. There can be no nearer approach to the doctrine of equality without an earnest effort of self-denial and unselfish sacrifice.—E. L. Kelley, in "Equality."

Psalms, the Musical Worship of an Early People

By L. B. M.

A psalm is a sacred song or poem, a composition for use in the praise and worship of God. As such it was used by the Hebrews long, long ago.

Let us here go back with the children of our church school to that dramatic incident of the escape of the children of Israel through the Red Sea and the destruction of the hosts of Pharaoh. Who of us has not thrilled at the imaginative rumble of chariot wheels? Who has not seen in his mind's eye the blue waters rush together to trap and destroy the Egyptians? Who has not sung with the children of Israel at their deliverance?

Here is the story as it is told in the book of Exodus:

"And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them. But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left. Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians."

At this deliverance, the Scriptures tell us, Moses and the children of Israel sang a song to the Lord, a song of thanksgiving for his protection. There was great rejoicing in the camp of Israel on that day. This is the first example of psalmody given in the Old Testament.

But from that time the history of this early people gives us many incidents in which musicians sang their joy and praise to God, and played their instruments.

Miriam, the prophetess, and sister of Aaron, took her timbrel and sang.

Many years later David became the armor-bearer of King Saul, and soothed and refreshed the king with music plucked from the harp.

Certain ones of the Levites were appointed to be "singers with instruments of music, psalteries and harps and cymbals, sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy."

Chenaniah, who was chief of the Levites, instructed them in song, "because he was skillful."

Once after King David, with the help of the God of Israel, had smitten the Philistines, he prepared a place for the ark of God, according to divine command, and the sacred piece was brought down from the house of Obededom and placed in its new home. After appropriate ceremony King David sang a psalm. This was known as "David's psalm," and is the first mention of a psalm in our Bible. It was a song of joy, happiness, and worship. You will find it recorded in 1 Chronicles 16: 8-36.

In our minds psalms and psalm singing are inseparably linked with this same David who was first a shepherd boy singing and playing his harp out on the mountainside, and later king of Israel. True, nowadays we are sure that David did not write all of the Psalms credited to him in the Bible. One authority says: "It is plausible to assume that there was a 'Davidic' collection [of psalms] designating not a series of hymns written by David, but for some reason called after him. It is natural that a later unscientific age which has created for itself a traditional David who differed largely from the historical one, should have seized upon the existence of a Davidic collection as a support for its traditions and converted David into the author of the seventy-three psalms bearing his name."

The psalms presented in the book of Psalms are lyric poetry and compose the most notable product of Hebrew poetry. The Hebrew title of the book is Tehillim meaning "songs of praise." Lyric poetry, according to Webster, whether actually sung or not, generally is composed in stanzas, and, as distinguished from epic and dramatic poetry, is expressive of the poet's feeling rather than of outward incident or events." This poetry may take the form of ode, sonnet, hymn, roundel or numerous other verse schemes as distinguished from the traditional meter of epic and drama.

The book of Psalms is supposed to be a collection of hymns which became a manual of temple service at Jerusalem.

Remembering that the psalm is of lyrical nature, that it is a form of musical and poetical worship, let us read one which for sheer beauty of thought and composition and for complete confidence in God has been loved by men of many generations:

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

FAITH AND WORKS

By R. E. Davey

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS those who have accepted the "Angel's Message" have placed great emphasis upon the statement made by the Apostle James: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? . . . Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. . . . For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." (James 2: 14, 18, 26.) Frequently it has been used as a theological brickbat to hurl at those who may believe differently than we do, and in all too many instances we have almost completely failed to apply it to ourselves.

Then, too, it has been assumed that the works referred to are compliance with the principles of the gospel: faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, etc. Such can not be true, for these are the principles, obedience to which will develop in an individual the spiritual power and strength to do the works. In and of themselves they are meaningless. They are means to an end, not the end themselves. They are the laws of life which, if obeyed from the heart (which undoubtedly means putting them to work in our lives producing something), will result in our doing the works that will move us individually and collectively towards Zion's establishment. If this does not result, then our professed faith, our external compliance with the principles of the Gospel is meaningless, useless, dead.

"Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.) "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matthew 7: 21.) What were some of the things Jesus said we should do, what was the will of the Father that he revealed to us? Love your enemies, do good to those who mistreat you, forgive those who hurt or offend you, do to others in all activities of life as you would have them do to you, develop patience, manifest charity, keep yourself unspotted from the vices of the world, put your material resources in service livery.

HOW ABOUT our people? Is our profession of faith in Christ, in his gospel, in his church, real and vital, or is it just on the surface? Are we ready to show our faith by our works? We profess to believe the work of this church is in very deed the work of the living God, that it came into existence because the God of heaven spoke. We profess belief in a God who speaks in this day and age. We profess belief in the ultimate possibility and grandeur of Zion. What are we doing about it? Are we showing our faith in God by doing what He has commanded? Or do we begin to doubt as soon as a cloud appears on the horizon, and decide we will just sit on the side-lines and await developments? Do we lose our assurance in the promises of God when discouragements assail us from both within and without? Think we the frailties of men will thwart the purposes of God? In these trying days well may we sing, "Oh for a faith that will not shrink—"

NOW IS THE TIME for us to be seeking diligently to manifest our faith in Christ and in his gospel and church by using them to produce the works of the Kingdom. We have been told time and time again that trying days were coming. We have been warned that we are in the "sifting time." God has said that he would have a tried people. These days should cause us to redouble our efforts, to take our religion seriously enough to put it to work developing in us the works of the Kingdom. Shall we then dare to show our faith by our works?

Are we measuring our lives and conduct by the Christ standard? Or are we continuing to measure ourselves by our present environment?—excusing ourselves in what we do because those about us do so and so? Well could the Apostle Paul warn, "For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise. But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you." (2 Corinthians 10: 12, 13.) We dare no longer to justify ourselves in our conduct because others participate in certain things. If we would indeed be the people of God then we must dare to measure ourselves by what God has given to us, not by what others do.

Are we developing the capacity to forgive those who may offend and hurt us, to love those who despitefully use us? Certainly people who nurse hurt feelings, carry hatred in their hearts will never be

Authority

Part One

By Hermann Peisker

"And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4.

The Old Way and the New

God is a God of order. The Bible history of the days of the patriarchs and also to the end of the Old Testament proves it.

When he needed men to act for him, he spoke to them by his own voice, in visions and dreams, by angels, or through living prophets and priests already in his service.

When the matter of receiving authority to occupy in the ministry and to act as priests for God was under discussion in the New Testament times, they could think of no better example than that of Aaron to illustrate their own experience. Every priest or minister (Isaiah 61: 6) was "taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God" (Hebrews 5: 1).

As an example Jesus himself was submissive to the same unchangeable law and divine order of call and ordination.

Called of God

Aaron was called through the prophet Moses (Exodus 28: 1). He did not "take the honor unto himself." God wanted him for a special work and told Moses to set him apart for it. He was not selected by the congregation or elders because he was educated for the ministry or because he felt a personal call to act as a priest. He was called and selected by God himself. God called him through Moses.

In the New Testament, John the Baptist and Jesus were both called and sent in a similar way. There was no divinely authorized ministry without a divine call and commission.

Apostolic Authority

When Jesus began to build his church He did not invent some new way. He made the "Old" the "New." He followed the ancient established order.

In case his disciples should ever forget their calling, He warned them "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit," Also, "as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." (John 15: 16; 20: 21.) They were both given authority and sent by their Master: Christ.

When he commanded them to "pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest" (Luke 10: 2) it was a definite hint to his disciples that the selection of men for the work of the ministry was not to be left to them. It was reserved to himself. The same Lord who said, "I will build my church" reserved to himself the right to set it in order, also to fill vacant offices.

Paul, when writing of the organization of the church, said, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets" (1 Corinthians 12: 28). God set them there and renewed them as it became necessary, just as he sustained the spiritual gifts. (Ibid., verse 11.) Man could no more call men, set them in the church and give them authority to administer sacred things, than he could give them power to work miracles, cast out devils, talk in tongues, etc. That work belonged to the Lord during the days the church remained faithful.

The Apostolic Method

Jesus said, of those he had called to the ministry, when commending them to his Father, "I . . . pray for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine." (John 17: 6-12.) It was after "all night in prayer to God" (Luke 6: 12, 13,) that "He called unto him his diciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles. From his own declaration, those whom he selected had already been made known to him by the Father.

Until the day he ascended Jesus personally did all the work of setting men apart for the ministry. With the removal of his earthly visible presence Jesus promised to send them "another Comforter . . . even the Spirit of Truth," to dwell with them and be in them. The Holy Spirit was to take the place of Jesus and carry on his work. He said "He shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you." (John 15: 16, 17; 16: 13-15.)

Remembering the arrangement her departing Lord had made, the New Testament church was loyal to her Lord. When missionaries were wanted for a special work in the days of Paul she did not go to work and select them by popular vote or because of education.

"There was in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers . . . as they minis-

Chapter 14

An Unused Opportunity

PERHAPS it would never have happened if Polly had not made herself a new dress for Easter. They really could not afford it just then for they had sent money twice to Milly and her girls out in Oregon; and, too, she felt a little guilty at having anything new when there were many right in the Stone Church congregation who needed any kind of clothes they could get to keep them warm. And so to establish her wardrobe balance, and salve her conscience, Polly gave away two of her old dresses.

The new dress was just the hue of green that was becoming to Polly, warm yet pale and lovely. And when it was finished, Polly looked like the picture of her mother that hung in the study. The neck was round, the sleeves voluminous, and the lines of the skirt were long and close-fitting.

You see the reason it might not have happened without the new dress was that Polly probably would have gone home after Sunday school, and not stayed for church.

But in the new dress she appeared before her class of little girls, and at eleven o'clock found her favorite seat in the gallery between Brad and Carrol.

It was a beautiful Easter Day with bright sunshine, clear skies heralding spring, and a crisp little north wind reminding the people that it was still winter. In keeping with the day everyone seemed happy. It hardly seemed possible to Polly that just two weeks before they had received the bad news from Milly that Henry had deserted her. He had not yet returned.

Carrol, in his blue suit, was sitting up straight. He looked like a stubby, young angel. Once he was furnished a pencil and paper, he would probably keep quiet during the whole service, for he loved to "write." However, his mother was not so sure about the peace of this service. He had caught a cold and was more restless and irritable than usual.

Scarcely had they settled themselves when Edith and the Bris twins joined them, and Brad took his son on his lap in order that Edith might sit beside Polly.

The special Easter service was well begun when a slight pressure from Edith's arm caused Polly to look up. Her glance swept the gallery opposite her. There, just seating themselves, were Echo and Postelle.

It was the first time Polly had seen the girl since Valentine Day. Echo was unusually attractive in her close-fitting black hat with the single silver arrow and the new suit the black fox collar of which smothered the high neck of her pearl-gray waist. Gloves and hose to match the blouse and black pumps completed the outfit. Echo's face was very white, and her lips supplied the only color about her. They were almost a cerise. Polly wondered where she had found such bright lipstick. The young woman looked as if she had just stepped from a fashion plate, a little too smart and modish —people would talk about her—but she was exquisite.

She paid not a whit of attention to those about her, but sat demurely looking at the speaker's face. She seemed completely engrossed in the service. Postelle, to the contrary, looked about him a little self-consciously. Polly could not interpret to her entire satisfaction the blending of pride, gentleness, and was it defiance in his expression?

The service was impressive. The music by the choir was appropriate and well executed. Polly, too, gave her entire attention to those in the pulpit. It was not until Carrol, forgetting that he was in church, called her attention to something he was drawing with a loud, chirping, "Mummie!" that she again thought of Echo. As she raised her head, the girl was looking at her. There was a flash of frightened recognition, then she looked away.

BUT pleasant weather vanished with the coming of Monday. It was cold and lowering. Blue Monday indeed. Polly was not soon to forget the day.

She had promised to help Sister Livingston with some sewing, and so, shortly after lunch, leaving Carrol in the care of his grandmother, she went next door.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The garment she was to remodel was an old silk dress which combined many tucks and bits of lace. Getting it ripped up and re-made was an all-afternoon task, but the young woman hoped to get the hardest part finished by four o'clock, and leave the simpler things to Sister Livingston.

"I don't have the knack you do," the other had said. "You're an artist at doing such things, Polly, my child. When I make over clothes for myself they hang on me just like sacks, but when you do them, they're nifty as you would say."

And so the two were sitting by the dining room window sewing "just like old times," said the hostess, placing a plate of oatmeal cookies near at hand.

"You'll make me fat again," laughed Polly. "In spite of the fact that I ate a good lunch, I can't resist nibbling at your oatmeal cookies."

"A little fat on your bones wouldn't hurt you a mite." Mrs. Livingston shook her head. "You're really thin since you were sick."

They were trying on the dress, and Polly in perplexity sat back on her heels. "Do you know what I'd do if I were rich, Sister Livingston?" she asked. "I'd get you a dress of that bolt of lovely gray material I saw up town the other day. It would just match your hair, and you would look a dream."

"Now, Polly, my child," deprecatingly, "me a dream! And you speak as if you weren't rich. You have so many riches that people envy you."

"Is that why they talk about me and my affairs?" flung back Polly.

"I suppose it is. You can't blame 'em much. They see you with your youth and your family and your friends and your health and energy and goodness. And it just makes some of us old 'uns talk about you." She beamed down upon the younger woman.

"Oh, I don't mind 'old 'uns' like you talking about me. I really don't mind being talked about myself at all, but when people say dreadful things about those I care the most for in the world, it, well, it almost wrecks me." She stepped back to inspect the fitting in the hips.

"Well, then be sure, Polly, my child, the ones you care the most for in the world don't give people cause to talk." The look she gave her young neighbor was wise.

For a half minute Polly was too busy to reply. Then: "I'm to blame for some of that, Sister Livingston. I didn't know you had noticed anything—"

"I wasn't born yesterday, Polly, my child," simply.

"I wasn't staying home as I should and conditions were not conducive to his staying alone at night." Neither had mentioned Brad's name, but each knew to whom the other was referring.

"Now, you listen to me, Polly, my child. I haven't lived sixty-nine years for nothing. You're not to blame for this affair. It's just one of the many weaknesses of the flesh. It sounds hard for me to say it, but I've had a husband and been the mother of three sons, and experience has taught me that most men are polygamous by nature. I heard some real smart lecturer say as much one time, too. Just give 'em a chance and away they go. Your man made considerable of a fool of himself, but most of us do at one time or another. I've thought of you and Brad a lot lately, but give me credit for keeping my mouth shut." Her voice was muffled for she was struggling out of the half-finished dress. "I've thought, too, of the things I'd like to say to Brad, and I think if I was to write them down, they'd look something like some of Paul's writings to young Timothy."

Mrs. Livingston glanced sharply at Polly before she went on. Though the young woman's cheeks were flushed, her hands never wavered at their sewing. "In spite of the fact that Paul was a cranky old bachelor, I always try to remember that he was an apostle of the Lord, and I get more comfort and help out of his writings than any other in the Bible. Lately I've been reading his first epistle to Timothy, and there's a part of it that reminds me of you, Polly, my child."

"Won't you read it to me?"

And so while Polly sewed, Mrs. Livingston lovingly took a worn Bible from the shelf on which stood an ancient but time-worthy clock, rustled the leaves for a moment, and began to read in her pleasant voice:

"Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

"What is there in that to remind you of me?"

"Aren't you rich in good works? Aren't you always ready to distribute what you have? and aren't you always laying in store a good foundation against the time to come?"

"Oh, no. It's you who are always thinking of those things." As she spoke Polly's glance went out past the pink begonia in the window.

THERE in the yard, not twenty feet away, was Carrol, coatless, hatless, gloveless, his cheeks ruddy from the cold air. In one hand he carried a favorite plaything, a little engine painted yellow and red.

His mother could only stare. She seemed paralyzed. Only her brain was working. How had he got out of the house? How long had he been there? Had something happened to Mrs. Nelson? Was the baby cold? These and a dozen other questions rushed into her mind. She recovered the power of motion before she did that of speech, and rushed out of the house.

"Chappie!" she cried.

He looked up and waved a stick at her, then uttered a loud protest as she snatched him up and bounded on toward the door of the back porch.

Hair tousled by the wind, her eyes very large and anxious, Polly confronted her mother-in-law. "How did he get out? And how long has he been there?"

"Out?—"

"Yes, in the yard." The child's hands and feet were icy. His mother began to rub them briskly. "And he had a cold already," she mourned.

"Why—why, I don't see how he could have got out, Polly. He was right in his pen when I went to my room to lie down a spell. He must have slipped out while I was lying down."

"Evidently."

"I had been out on the back porch hunting in my trunk for some things, and when I came in I was a little tired, so I decided to rest. Carrol was playing in his pen."

"When you came in you must not have latched the door. He couldn't possibly have unfastened it himself, but he could get out of the screen door by just throwing his weight against it. That screen's always been hung wrong." As she talked, she acted. Grabbing up a blanket from a chair in the hall, she went to the bathroom, followed by Mrs. Nelson whose half-apologetic, half-terrified efforts to help were really a hindrance.

Hastily Polly filled Carrol's little white tub with warm water from the faucet of the large tub, and plunged him into a bath. This was his second in one day and he objected vociferously and strenuously.

Before the bath was finished Sister Livingston joined them demanding to know what had happened and offering to help.

"You see he already had a cold, and we don't know how long he was outdoors unwrapped like that. I want to get him warmed up and keep him that way. We don't want any pneumonia at our house." There was a worried pucker in the young mother's forehead.

"Castor oil," Sister Livingston prescribed without hesitation. "That will take a young cold right through any normal baby." Mrs. Nelson nodded.

And so though he screamed his disapproval, Carrol was given a dose of castor oil, followed shortly by a drink of warm lemonade. After that he was put to bed with Remus, his rubber rabbit, on the lounge in the living room, where the three women could keep an eye on him. He had not had his afternoon nap, and soon was sleeping fitfully, breathing hard.

Almost timidly Mrs. Nelson came into the room. "A letter for you, Polly."

The scriptlike handwriting was familiar, and made Polly's pulse quicken. Amazedly she read:

"Dear Polly: When I saw you in church yesterday I knew I just had to write this. I am so unutterably sorry for the suffering I've caused you that I feel like a criminal. I know it's too much to ask you to forget, but I hope that someday you'll find it in your heart to forgive me.

"It was all my fault. I was nothing but an ungrateful, silly, little fool. Brad wasn't to blame.

"ECHO JENNINGS.

"P. S. Look in the Examiner tonight."

Yes, there it was, right on the front page:

"Duncan-Jennings

"Miss Echo Louise Duncan and Mr. Postelle Edgar Jennings were married at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Laura Duncan, 1145 Aurora Avenue, at eight o'clock last night by the Reverend Samuel Harbinger. Only the families of the bridal pair witnessed the ceremony which was followed by a bridal supper. Mr. and Mrs. Jennings are now taking a brief wedding trip in the Ozarks. In a few days they will be at home to their friends at 3417 Blackstone Street, Kansas City."

Postelle and Echo married! She couldn't believe her eyes. She was still dazed when the telephone rang a minute later, and Edith's voice trilled: "Have you seen the Examiner? I was never so surprised in my life! You could have knocked me over with a feather!"

IF he's any worse in the morning, we must have the doctor." Polly and Brad were standing beside Carrol's crib watching his labored breathing.

"Yes," worriedly agreed Polly.

Once again in the living room, Brad took up the paper. Polly sat at the music cabinet sorting music. She wondered if she should show Brad Echo's note. The question to tell him about it or not to tell him played continuously back and forth in her mind.

At last he threw down the paper and yawned. If he had seen the account of the marriage, he had not mentioned it.

Bravely Polly arose, and drew Echo's note from the pocket of her house dress: "I received this today," she offered a little hesitantly. "I didn't know —for sure—if I ought to mention it—but here it is."

Silently he read it through. "Whew, so she's Echo

WORSHIP PROGRAMS FOR MAY

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

GENERAL THEME: "SHED FORTH THY SPIRIT."

MAY 7, 1933

Theme: "Have Ye Any Sin?"

Instrumental Prelude: "Come, Holy Ghost," number 193, new Saints' Hymnal.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 108: 1; Alma 8: 87, 88:

"Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the Lord your God, and hear the word of the Lord concerning you; the Lord who shall suddenly come to his temple; the Lord who shall come down upon the world, with a curse to judgment; yea, upon all the nations that forget God, and upon all the ungodly among you. For he shall make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of their God. Shall he save his people in their sins? I say unto you he shall not, for it is impossible for him to deny his word."

Group Response: Alma 8: 91, 92:

"He hath said that no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of heaven; therefore we can not be saved in our sins."

(S) Hymn: "Gracious Spirit," number 192.

(S) Prayer: A petition for light that in searching our own hearts we may discover those things that cause us to fall short in our attainment of the goal that Christ has set.

Scripture Reading: 2 Nephi 3: 30-66.

(S) Hymn: "Lord, for Tomorrow and its Needs," number 276.

Talk: There is no more vivid expression of the sense of sin than in this utterance of Nephi. It seems that the more one is enlightened by God the more deeply he feels the necessity of diligent watch care over his conduct. Most of us are not intentionally wicked. Many of us on the other hand are not consciously, actively, courageously righteous. We are careless. We seldom think through the consequences of what we do. We treat lightly the commandments of God. We should take time to search our own hearts and then we should do those things that God through his Spirit has told us to do. By thus acting we will find ourselves being more concerned about everything we do. It is God who reveals our sin to us that we may rid ourselves of it and be more like him. He does this because he loves us, and wants to dwell with us.

Period of Meditation: While one verse of, "Lord, for Tomorrow and its Needs I Do Not Pray," number 276, is played softly.

(S) Group Response: Psalm 51: 1, 9-12:

"Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions. Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit."

(S) Benediction: Galatians 1: 3-5:

"Grace be to you, and peace, from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world according to the will of God and our Father; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

Picture: "Sermon on the Mount," Tissot.

MAY 14, 1933

Theme: "Be Ye Humble."

Prelude: Hymn number 213, played softly.

Call to Service: Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4, and 59: 2.

(S) Hymn: Number 258, "Come Learn of the Meek and Lowly."

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4-5, and 52: 4.

Hymn: Number 213, "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee," verse one.

Short period of Meditation, conclude with a short prayer.

Hymn: Number 213, verse two, "Help Me the Slow of Heart to Move."

Leader Reads:

"God who is just and kind,
Will those who err instruct,
And in the path of righteousness,
Their wandering steps conduct.

"The humble soul He guides,
Teaches the meek His way,
Kindness and truth He shows to all,
Who His just laws obey.

"Give me the tender heart
That mingles fear with love;
And lead me through whatever path
Thy wisdom shall approve.

"Oh, ever keep my soul
From error, shame and guilt!
Nor suffer the fair hope to fail
Which on thy truth is built.

(Anon.)

Hymn: Number 213, verse three, "Teach Me Thy Patience."

Leader Reads: Moroni, 7: 45-53.

Hymn: Number 213, verse four, "In Hope That Sends a Shining Ray."

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 39: 9:

"If ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, you shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity. It must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride lest ye become as the Nephites of old. And again I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that every man both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded. Let your preaching be with the warning voice every man to his neighbor, in mildness and meekness. Go ye out from among the wicked. Save yourselves. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Even so, Amen."

(S) Hymn: Number 307, "Take My Life and Let it Be," verses 1, 4, 5, and 6.

(S) Benediction: 2 Corinthians 13: 14:

"The Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all."

Picture: "Christ Washing Peter's Feet," Brown.

MAY 21, 1933

Theme: "Come Lord Jesus."

Prelude: Number 328 played softly.

Scripture Meditation: 3 Nephi 4: 44-52:

"Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the Heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I came to mine own and my own received me not. And the Scriptures concerning my coming are fulfilled. I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. Whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost.

"Behold I have come unto the world to bring redemption to the world, to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for of such is the kingdom of God."

(S) Prayer: A petition for forgiveness.

(S) Hymn: 193, "Come Holy Ghost."

Worship Through Art: Picture, "The Light of the World," Hunt.

There is a picture hanging in Keble College, Oxford, that has, after many years of obscurity, come at last into its rightful place among the masterpieces of the world. It portrays Christ standing outside a tightly closed door. He is dressed in kingly robes. On his head are two crowns—one a rich crown befitting a king, the other a crown of thorns. His face expresses love and tenderness, his attitude one of patient waiting. One feels that these characteristics are the result of the deep suffering he has endured, that within him lies the power to conquer and rule when he will. He carries in his hand a lighted lantern. When the door is opened the light will penetrate the gloom. It has been a long time since the door swung back, for weeds are grown up in front of it. There is no latch: it can only be opened from the inside.

The artist is telling us that Christ is waiting patiently outside the heart of each of us. That he can not enter unless we willingly open the door so that he may. He who was born to kingship has permitted a crown of thorns to be placed on his head because of his great love for us. In humbleness he comes to our door and knocks instead of commanding us to come to his. The light of his life is always to enter our hearts when we have made it possible.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear to hear let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches."—Revelation 3: 20-22.

Hymn: Number 333, "O Jesus Thou Are Standing," verses one and two.

Leader Reads: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 2.

Hymn: Number 333, verse three.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 50: 8:

"Behold ye are little children and can not bear all things now. Ye must grow in grace and in a knowledge of the truth. Fear not little children for ye are mine, and I have overcome the world, and you are of them that my Father hath given me; and none of them that my Father hath given me shall be lost; and the Father and I are one; I am in the Father and the Father in me; and inasmuch as ye have received me ye are in me, and I in you; wherefore I am in your midst; and I am the Good Shepherd, and the day cometh that you shall hear my voice and see me and know that I am. Watch therefore that ye may be ready. Even so, Amen."

(S) Group Response: Repeat the Lord's Prayer.

Picture: "The Light of the World," Hunt.

MAY 28, 1933

Theme: "Press Forward in the Spirit."

Prelude: Hymn number 206.

Preparation for Worship: 1 Nephi 3: 187, 188:

"Blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion in this day, for they shall have the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, and if they endure to the end, they shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb."

Group Response: Doctrine and Covenants 108: 8:

"O Lord, when thou comest down, and the mountains flow down at thy presence, thou shalt meet him who rejoiceth and worketh righteousness, who remembereth thee in Thy ways; for since the beginning of the world have not men heard nor perceived by the ear, neither hath eye seen, O God, besides Thee, how great things Thou hast prepared for him that waiteth for thee."

(S) Hymn: Number 208, "Fight the Good Fight," conclude with instrumental "Amen."

(S) Prayer: For strength and fortitude.

Meditation: Talk:

The reign of God on the earth can only come when we individually recognize the claims of Zion in our lives. We must work with our immediate brethren who are seeking the same goal. Thus may the gathering more fully be affected. The Gift of the Holy Spirit is given only to those who are seeking to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion To this end available opportunities and projects are provided in the local branch activities. By using these opportunities we may develop the Zionic type of character—purity of heart. To press forward in the spirit means for each of us to purify our own lives, doing with diligence whatever comes to our hands in righteousness.

Responsive Service:

Leader: Alma 10: 28:

"Humble yourselves before the Lord, and call on His holy name. Watch and pray continually, that ye may not be tempted above that which ye can bear. And thus, being led by the Holy Spirit ye may become humble, meek submissive, patient, full of love, and all long-suffering; having faith in the lord."

Congregation: Deuteronomy 1: 14; Mosiah 9: 42:

"This thing thou has spoken is good for us to do: This is the desire of our hearts."

Leader: Moroni 10: 28, 29:

"Awake and arise from the dust, O Jerusalem; yea and put on thy beautiful garments, O daughter of Zion, and strengthen thy stakes, and enlarge the borders for ever. Yea come unto Christ and be perfected in Him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and if ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind and strength, then is His grace sufficient for you, that by His grace ye may be perfect in Christ."

(S) Hymn: Number 203, "Father Hear the Prayer We Offer."

Picture: "Peter and John," Burnand.

Suggestions for Carrying Out the Worship Services:

(S) Signifies that the congregation shall stand during that portion of the service.

All hymns are found in the new Saints' Hymnal. The hymns which are new should be taught to the group in a preworship period. All scripture is quoted from the Three Standard Books, using the Inspired Version of the Bible.

The talks are only suggestive. They should be adapted to the needs of the local groups. Unless this is done, and the talk suited to the specific needs of each congregation it is of no great worth. The subject matter should be within the comprehension of all. The service for May 21, it built around Hunt's picture, "The Light of the World." If possible this picture should be the focal point for the service. It may be kept covered until the time for the appreciation talk comes. It is not essential, however, that a copy of the picture be procured. The verbal description may be so graphic that the actual picture will not be needed. If possible read the picture interpretation as is given in Bailey's book, The Gospel in Art, pages 181-184.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark.

FIRST SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1933

Adults and children meet in Sacrament service together.

A suitable story to be told to the children before they go into the Sacrament service is, "In the Guest Chamber," page 52, Junior Quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," April, May, June, 1931, by Myrtle A. Weber.

SECOND SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1933

Theme: "The Pure in Heart."

Prelude: "Be Pure in Heart," Zion's Praises, number 103.

Call to worship: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." (Matthew 11: 28, 29.)

Hymn: "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," Zion's Praises, number 7; new Saints' Hymnal, number 258.

Prayer.

Scripture: 1 Samuel 16: 7; Matthew 5: 8; Philippians 4: 8.

Hymn: "Be Pure in Heart," Zion's Praises, number 103.

Sermon Talk: Use the illustration given by Jesus in Matthew 7: 16-20, of the good tree and the bad tree. Jesus said: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," (Matthew 12: 34) and "By their fruits ye shall know them," (Matthew 7: 20.) What we are inside will show in our lives, in the things we say and do. We can not always keep impure thoughts from coming to our minds, but we can drive them away by thinking of beautiful, worth-while things. Just as a good tree will bear good fruit, so a person who has a pure heart—thinks pure thoughts—with live a pure life, and their words and actions will be good and pure. Jesus gave such people a wonderful promise: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." (Matthew 5: 8.)

Story: "The Great Stone Face," page 121, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw.

Special musical number by Junior Choir: Song, "The Saints Shall Wear Robes as the Lilies," Zion's Praises, number 78; new Saints' Hymnal, number 185, (first and last verses) or, "I Would Be True," new Saints' Hymnal, number 294.

Story: "A Pleasant Day," Stepping Stones, July 28, 1929.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Closing Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," Zion's Praises, number 147; new Saints' Hymnal, number 209.
Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, MAY 21, 1933

Theme: "The Holy Spirit."

Prelude: "Come Sweet Comforter."

Call to Worship: "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.)

Hymn: "Love Divine," Zion's Praises, number 143; new Saints' Hymnal, number 131.

Prayer.

Scripture: John 15: 26; 16: 13.

Hymn: Zion's Praises, number 1; new Saints' Hymnal, number 1.

Sermon Talk: See Sermonette by Cecil R. Walker, "Laying On of Hands," Stepping Stones, January 24, 1932. The promise of the Holy Spirit is for us today, the same as it was to the people we read about in the Bible. If we obey God's law, he will send the Holy Spirit to help us to know what is right and to give us strength to do what is right. Tell about the coming of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost (Acts, second chapter), and the endowment at Kirtland (Church History, volume 2).

Stories: "Philip in Samaria," (Acts 8: 5-25) page 9, Primary Quarterly, "Learning to Live as God's Children," April, May, June, 1932, by Ruby M. Williamson. (Adapt this to junior children.) "The Gospel Carried to the South," (Phillip and the Ethiopian, Acts 8: 26-39) page 25, Junior Quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," October, November, December, 1932, by Hallie M. Gould. Told by juniors.

Special Musical Number: Vocal solo, "Come Sweet Comforter," (words by President Frederick M. Smith, printed in sheet music with "Onward to Zion.") by an adult soloist, or song, "Tenderly Lead Thou Me On," Zion's Praises, number 5; new Saints' Hymnal, number 267, by junior choir. (Remind the boys and girls that the words of this song are a prayer; that they were written by the late Joseph Smith when a great sorrow came into his life—the death of his little daughter, Azubah.)

Stories: "The Holy Spirit in Our Day," page 9, Junior Quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," October, November, December, 1932, by Hallie M. Gould; page 27, same quarterly. (The latter part of the story on page 27 is an experience of Patriarch Samuel Twombly, who died March 13, 1933.)

Closing Hymn: "A Parting Blessing," Zion's Praises, number 90; new Saints' Hymnal, number 95.

Benediction: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen." (2 Corinthians 13: 14.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1933

Theme: "Walking With God."

Prelude: "The Beautiful Light," Zion's Praises, number 77.

Call to Worship: "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." (Isaiah 2: 5.)

Hymn: "The Beautiful Light," Zion's Praises, number 77.

Prayer.

Scripture: Micah 6: 8; Jeremiah 6: 16 (omit last sentence.)

Hymn: "Stepping in the Light," Zion's Praises, number 100.

Sermon Talk: Text: "The ways of the Lord are right and the just shall walk in them." (Hosea 14: 9.) If we wish to walk in the "ways of the Lord" we must obey his commandments. Adam and Eve lived in the beautiful garden and were very happy as long as they did what God told them to do. Enoch was so righteous that he walked and talked with God and he and his people were taken to heaven. Jesus said, "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life . . ." (Matthew 7: 23, Inspired Translation). Tell about Lehi's vision of the rod of iron and the straight and narrow path (Book of Mormon, page 21). Paul walked in the "narrow way" after his conversion, and when his work on this earth was finished, he said: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Timothy 4: 7, 8.)

Story: "A Man Who Walked With God." (Enoch, Genesis, chapters 6 and 7, Inspired Translation.) Told by a junior.

"Hundreds of years ago there lived a very righteous man named Enoch. Many of the people who lived at this time were very wicked. God spoke to Enoch and hold him to go out among the people and tell them of their wickedness, and teach them that they must repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. Enoch did as God told him and preached to the people and told them what they must do to be saved. Some of the people wished to live right, and they obeyed the gospel as preached by this good man, while others would not listen and became angry.

"God was pleased with Enoch and loved him very much. We are told that God walked with Enoch and talked with him. Enoch and his followers became such a righteous people that God called them 'Zion,' and Enoch built a city for them and called it 'Zion.' God came and dwelt in Zion, and Enoch and all his people walked with God. They lived this way three hundred and sixty-five years, and at the end of that time God took Enoch and his people to heaven to live with him."

Hymn: "Glorious Things Are Sung of Zion," old Saints' Hymnal, number 110; new Saints' Hymnal, number 173.

Story: "Should He Steal?" page 33, Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Eggleston, or "The Boy Who Was Not Afraid," page 117, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw, or "Daring to Be True," page 35, Junior Quarterly, "Jesus and His Helpers," April, May, June, 1930, by Lucie H. Sears.

Closing Hymn: "With a Steadfast Faith," Zion's Praises, number 21.

Benediction.

A Prayer to Our Creator

By Harry M. Henson

O Father of all,
God of heaven above, and earth below,
Have compassion on the children of thy creation;
May they find their way back unto Thee, their God.

Giver of every good gift,
May their burdens be lightened,
Their sorrows lessened,
Their hearts softened.
Lead them from this terrible night
Unto the graying of a new day.
Where the Light in its effulgence
Brings joy and happiness
Unto thy tear-stained and sin-worn children.

Grant that they may seek thee, the Infinite,
Until Thy time be accomplished
When thy will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven,
And peace come to this dark and miserable world,
Good will to men.

He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

looked upon as the people of God, and certainly such can never build the kingdom. Are we deliberately and seriously endeavoring to live in the way Christ said would bring real and lasting happiness and joy? "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" "Faith without works is dead."

Are we submerging selfishness in service for the Kingdom and for others? Are we conscientiously endeavoring to keep the financial law given us of God? Have we filed our inventories, are we trying to pay our tithes in the measure of our possibilities? Do we attempt to curtail our wants so as to be able to assist that much more building the Kingdom? Or must we still gratify all our own selfish wants and desires first? "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." (Psalm 50: 5.) "Faith without works is dead."

It will be time for us to tell the world it takes faith plus works to save when we demonstrate that we actually believe it to be true as witnessed by the fact that we are showing our faith by our works. But this is not all—the statement of James is true. Unless we as a church, and as individuals, do show our faith by our works, and in so doing make possible the upbuilding of the church, the development of stewardships, the establishment of Zion, we will most surely be lost, and we will suffer with the rest of the world as it passes through the pangs and sorrows of its social and economic maladjustments, its class hatred, war and strife.

It is true that Christ promised his people deliverance in these last days, but we are also told that that deliverance is to be found in Zion. Speaking of the last days Enoch says, "And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; . . . And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; . . . and it shall be called Zion." (Genesis 7: 69, 70, Inspired Translation.) "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said." (Joel 2: 32.) ". . . and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God." (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12.)

In Zion is to be our deliverance, and Zion will only be brought to pass by the pure in heart. The pure in heart are those who have dared to show their faith by their works; their righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the pharisees; they are such as can dwell together in peace, love and fellowship, that use their material blessings each for service to all.

The call of God today, then, is for people who dare to show their faith by their works. Our faith can only be measured by what we attempt to do. Do we actually have faith in this as the Work of God? Do we believe He is in this work? Are we sincere in our belief that God speaks today, and are we willing to carry what he has spoken into action? Then let us each analyze his own life, his own doings, and let them be measured by the measuring rod given us of God. "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show you my faith by my works." A faith that does not express itself in doing is meaningless.

Let us show our faith by our works.

tered unto the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. So they, BEING SENT FORTH BY THE HOLY GHOST . . ." (Acts 13: 1-4.)

Barnabas and Saul had to wait until they had been called to their ministry by the Holy Spirit through the living Prophets in the church, and had been ordained by God's recognized servants.

In the same way, the elders who were pastors over the local congregations were made overseers by the Holy Ghost. (Acts 20: 28.)

God reserved to himself the direct selection of his servants, both for the missionary and also the pastoral work, after Jesus had returned to heaven. The early church obeyed.

Neither God, men, nor devils, recognized those whom God had not called and sent forth. When certain men took it upon themselves to exercise authority over demons in "the name of the Lord Jesus," the devils replied, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye?" (Acts 19: 13-15.) They had no divine authority to do such a work. It was sheer presumption and usurpation.

In spite of the fate of unauthorized ministers, both in the Old and the New Testament times, many take and use the name of Christ today. They officiate in sacred things without any divine call or commission. They "take the honor unto themselves" like the "sons of Sceva," without being "called of God as was Aaron," Jesus, John, Paul and Barnabas, and the Ephesian elders were.

The days Paul warned of have come. Men "have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." (2 Timothy 3: 5.) They have the form without the authority. Without the authority or power (Acts 1: 4-8) no man has the right to go out into the world as a minister for Christ or to officiate in the sacred ceremonies and ordinances of the gospel of Christ. (Romans 10: 14, 15.)

RICHES UNTOLD

Jennings now! I always wondered when they'd decide—"

"Brad, you knew they were married. You just finished reading the paper," she accused.

"So I did, so I did!" he agreed heartily, a little to heartily, it seemed to her. He completely disregarded the contents of the note and their implication of his own name. "Well, isn't that fine? I hope they'll be happy. They're a nice pair."

Not a word about Echo and himself. Would he never mention it? Couldn't he at least tell her, his wife, that he was sorry it had all happened? Dully Polly turned back to finish her work at the cabinet.

Our task is to so live before God that we shall be justified in both seeking out and asking for the best gifts of the gospel. . . .

If we are to "abide the hour" we must watch and pray for the hour, "Watch ye and pray lest ye enter into temptation"; we must prepare for the hour, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work"; we must endure and bear patiently the hour, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—Dwight D. W. Davis.

Prayer and Testimony

Go Forward With the Work of the Church

By Gomer T. Griffiths

Between four and five o'clock on the morning of the ninth instant, the writer enjoyed what he deemed to be a spiritual experience, in which the distressing conditions as they now exist throughout the world and in the church were presented to him, the same being accompanied by a certain degree of enlightenment thereon.

It was brought to my mind that certain phases of the church work which at present are very discouraging and disheartening to many, both officers and Saints, could be remedied only through the united efforts of the priesthood as well as the laity. It was especially impressed upon my mind that the Lord's annointed, the prophet of the church, was to be upheld by the whole church by their faith, prayers, and confidence, he being the medium through whom the Lord will direct his people and the work of the church in its efforts to bring about the redemption of Zion, a place where the Saints of the Most High God may be protected from the terrible conditions now existing in the world and worse to follow.

In the present economic crisis through which this great country of ours, the United States of America, is now passing, (along with the rest of the world) the leaders in the political world recognize the great necessity of standing back of their present leader, the President, in a united effort to remedy these conditions; this regardless of any particular political party. The urge now is for all to forget politics and work together for the ultimate good of the country.

It was pointed out to me, that as it is with the country, so it is with the church. The time now is when the members of this church, officers and laity, should rally around their leader, the President of the church, supporting him and his associates, and the heads of the church and concentrating our united efforts in bringing the church out of its present dilemma; we must forget the mistakes of the past, cease contention and faultfinding, and look forward to the future.

I was shown that our President is under very great pressure in the responsibility resting upon him, that the Lord wants his people to uphold the one who has been ordained and set apart to be the leader of his people, and that if we would do this, the Lord will use him to bring the church triumphantly through this great crisis; furthermore, that the church can not succeed otherwise.

The conditions in the world today are very trying and distressing. We have all suffered. Had we heeded the warnings given in the past through the Spirit from time to time, this need not have been so. Let us then profit by our experiences, bitter as they have been to some of us, and heed the voice of the Spirit now; start today with a determination to make Zion a reality, that history may not repeat itself and we again be caught in a like predicament. Remember that today is the day of salvation and the command is to work while it is yet day for the night cometh wherein no man can work.

The alibi is often used that conditions have changed, that there is not now the opportunity to reach the people that there once was. The word of the Lord is, "Nevertheless, ye shall go forth from house to house, teaching the people; and I will go before you." (Matthew 6: 26.) Where there is a house and people living therein, there is a place for the ministry to teach them the gospel of Christ.

There are many villages, towns, and hamlets throughout this broad land where the people have never heard of such a thing as the restored gospel. Thousands are now turning their minds toward God. The time is ripe, the grain is ready to be gathered in. God intends that these people shall all be reached and to this end he wants coworkers. Therefore, let every member of the priesthood arouse himself to diligence and thrust in his sickle and reap while it is yet day. Thus will the church triumph over all opposition and God's name be glorified.

May God help us by his Spirit to so do, is my prayer.

A Vision-Testimony That Has Helped Many

By William Hardy

I became acquainted with the Reorganized Church in 1914, and for a number of years afterwards I attended meetings, as circumstances permitted.

My wife joined shortly after she first heard the angel's message, but the message did not affect me as readily as it did her. And so I stayed out of the church. I felt it my duty to assist in carrying on the work, but I had some doubts, as to whether Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God or not.

Whenever I would hear what I considered a good sermon, I would say to myself, "Well, I guess it is all right." But such periods would be followed by doubt.

One of the things which held me back was the conduct of some of the members of the church. It did not seem to me that people who were members of the church of God, would or could allow themselves to do things, that I who did not belong to the church would not do.

My feeling in these trying times was, that I ought to join the church, but there seemed to always be something standing in the way, and one of the greatest stumblingblocks was the question, Is Joseph Smith a Prophet of God?

Believing that God would answer prayer, I earnestly besought the throne of grace, for light and understanding on this important subject. And one night it seemed to me I found myself in a deep valley. The place was very dark; I could not see anything, except a small light, at considerable distance, and situated high above the valley. At this juncture there appeared a Personage at my side, and he said, "Come and I'll show you the right way to salvation." He took me by the hand, and we began to ascend a very steep hill and he said, "This the straight and narrow path; go straight on; turn not to the right hand, nor to the left, but enter in that door." At this point a very large building was in sight, which seemed to reach to heaven: My guide showed me a wide road, at our left, on which many were traveling, some on foot, while others were in automobiles, and when they reached the top of the hill they disappeared in darkness, and he said, "These are going to destruction."

Pointing to some on the right hand who seemed to have strayed from the "narrow path" and were wandering around as though lost, he said, "These have strayed off the path, and are looking for worldly things, and unless they return they will be lost."

About this time, while he was showing me these things, I said to my guide, "And who called Joseph Smith to this work?" My guide replied, "I called him to be an instrument in my hands to restore this gospel." He then said to me, "You rejected this gospel a couple of times, and this is your last chance. I will not always strive with man."

I saw a few of those who had left the narrow path, cross the path and enter upon the broad way at our left. As we ascended the hill toward the large building we came to the door at the end of the narrow path and entered the building. In the room where I was permitted to go was a large table, with a very large book lying on it, and a large man sat near the book. There were twelve men dressed in white sitting on twelve chairs. One of these men I recognized as my eldest son, and he spoke to me saying, "Are you come up here, too?" I replied, "Yes, I was brought up here." He smiled and said, "That is good." Then all twelve disappeared through doors at the back of the room.

The personage sitting near the large book, which was open about the middle, stood up and addressed me saying, "What do you know about the gospel?" Replying to his question I said, "I have heard a few sermons." He said, "Do you believe it?" I replied, "Yes, I believe it." "Then, why don't you obey it?" To this I replied, "I saw so many that did not live right, nor do right. At this saying he sat down, and scanning the pages of the book, said, "I am sorry to say that we have quite a few of them, but you must pay no attention to them. You go and do what is right; you do not have to answer for what they do. They will have to answer for themselves, and if you do wrong you will have to answer for yourself." Then the door opened of itself, and I went out, only to awake from my instructive spiritual experience, and I can assure the reader I slept no more that night.

This took place about the middle of March, 1931, during a series of meetings in the South Bend-Mishawaka Branch, conducted by Elder O. J. Hawn. At the end of the series, March 22, I was baptized along with thirteen others.

God Blesses His Children

By Jennie Hayes

I want to bear my testimony to the goodness of God to us. He has healed us many times through the administration of the elders. He opened up the way for us to come to Bemidji Branch and for this blessing we rejoice.

We know that the Father will always care for his Saints if we put our trust in him and are faithful.

I have been a widow for more than eight years and God has helped me through every trial. I wish the Saints to pray for me and my family, that we may remain faithful.

Young People Should Study Languages

By John Vigil

I hold the office of elder and am assistant pastor to Brother W. B. Farley. I am of Spanish descent and am not a master of the English language. But my portion in life has been to work with English speaking people even though I do not use the language very well.

I was the only elder in Durango from 1922 to 1930, and was in charge of the branch. I have put my faith in the Lord, and he has blessed me in many ways. The Saints have been an encouragement to me, standing by and helping me in every way they can.

When I preach to the Spanish people, the Saints are always willing to help me in the music.

We are happy working together in the upbuilding of the church. And there are many of the Spanish people who have heard the word of God. The other day I preached the funeral sermon for a young Spaniard. The young man's father requested his wife if he preceded her in death, to have me preach his sermon, too. It was not long until I preached his funeral, and the chorister of our branch provided singers for the occasion.

There is one word of advice I should like to give to the young people of the church. Do not be afraid to learn languages. Read song 28 in Zion's Praises, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go."

Must Desire to Quit Habit

By Clyde C. Roberts

I am writing this in the hope that it may be encouraging to some one who is trying to overcome the tobacco habit, as I, too, have had to abandon this practice. After I joined the church, it seemed as if I just could not quit using tobacco. I had tried several times, but to no avail. I had been blessed with God's Spirit many times and had been healed of afflictions.

Finally I decided that I was asking for something that I really did not want to give up, and that if I was going to quit, I must make up my mind.

One Saturday night I determined to quit because I really had the desire to do this. As the next day was sacrament Sunday, I would ask God for his help. This I did, and I am happy to say that I have not had one cigaret in my mouth from that day to this, the intervening period being over three years. I am thankful to God for this blessing.

I also wish to say that he has given me health, and in my temporal affairs, as well, his blessings have been mine to enjoy. I know I have many weaknesses, but it is my desire to overcome them. Sometimes I become discouraged; then the thought comes to my mind, "What have I to complain about when there are others so much worse off than I?"

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may become more humble, and obedient to his will, and I will remember you.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Viola Caswell, of Mankato, Minnesota, seeks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her son, John Caswell, jr., of Dallas, Iowa, that he may be restored from a nervous breakdown. For many years the young man's mother has felt that there is a work for him in the church, but physical inability to do the work outlined for him is proving a hindrance.

Sister Milt Schuette, of Coldwater, Michigan, the mother of five children, is in very poor health, and asks the Saints to pray that she may be restored. The doctors have told her that she can never be well without a serious operation.

Sister Winnifred Howe, of Horton, Michigan, is suffering from an affliction which the doctors seem unable to name with certainty. The seat of the trouble seems to be back of the tonsils. Her sister rode to Coldwater, thirty-five miles away, to purchase oil and take it back consecrated. Sister Howe desires the prayers of the faithful.

Mrs. Leora Gussman, of West Branch, Michigan, requests prayers for her mother, Sister Libbie Twining, who is in very poor health and is lonely, having just lost her husband. She is strong in the faith, and knows that if it is the Father's will, he can heal and comfort her.

QUESTION TIME

Did Joseph Smith translate his version of the Bible from original manuscripts?

It was not from Bible manuscripts, but from a printed Bible, that Joseph Smith produced the Inspired Version. The Bible used was H. and E. Phinney's Stereotype Edition, published at Cooperstown, New York. It is inscribed in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery: "The Book of the Jews and the property of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, bought October the 8th, 1829, at Egbert B. Grandin's Book Store, Palmyra, Wayne County, New York."

From the markings on the book and other evidence available, it appears that the corrections were made as the verses were read. The corrected reading was written in manuscript form, and the chapter and verse were given to show its location in the text. Marks were also used in the printed text to show where these corrections were to be inserted, and also to show words to be deleted or changed. A portion of the manuscript of the Inspired Version is written in full, but most of it is not written except when a change in some verse was made.

The work of translation was begun in June, 1830, two months after the church had been organized. The New Testament portion was finished February 2, 1833, a few weeks before the revelation known as the "Word of Wisdom" was given. The Old Testament portion was completed exactly five months later, at which time Sidney Rigdon wrote down the words in manuscript which finished the task, of which he said:

"Having finished the translation of the Bible, a few hours since, and needing some recreation, we know of no way we can spend our time more to divine acceptance, than endeavoring to build up his Zion, in these last days, as we are not willing to idle any time away, which can be spent to useful purposes."—Church History, volume 1, page 303.

The manner of translating is referred to in the History of the Church as follows:

"We have omitted to mention that about June, 1830, Joseph, as directed by inspiration, began a translation of the Jewish Scriptures, which work he did by the Spirit of revelation."—Ibid., page 159.

Did Christ place a physician in the church when he organized it?

According to the best information contained in the Scriptures, it appears that he did. Jesus himself was a physician who healed both body and soul, and he applied the term to himself when he declared they would say to him: "Physician, heal thyself" (Luke 4: 23). But he was not the only physician in the early church from its beginning, for Paul tells us there was also "Luke, the beloved physician." (Colossians 4: 14.) It is clear that Luke was in the church and was a minister of the church at the time of its organization, for he says of himself:

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus."—Luke 1: 1-3.

That Luke, who was in the church "from the very first," was actually a physician is also stated by Eusebius, the most ancient historian of the church, who had access to the earliest known documents and writings of the Christians of that period. He states:

"But Luke, who was born at Antioch, and by profession a physician, being for the most part connected with Paul, and familiarly acquainted with the rest of the apostles, has left us two inspired books."—Ecclesiastical History, Book 3, chapter 4.

What was the first system of years and months known to the Jews?

The most ancient system is not known with certainty. Some claim that the Jewish year was at first lunar, and it is known that at one time they used the lunar month. But later they employed a year of twelve solar months, though the months did not correspond to those in use today among us. The Hebrew lunar year contained 354 days. The frequent references to the "new moon" indicate the lunar basis once used. Moses changed the beginning of the year (Exodus 12: 2) at the time of the Jewish deliverance from Egypt, which shows that a different year had been in use. This older year had probably been derived from Egypt, and was much like our own.

The beginning of the Egyptian year was regulated by the rising of the Nile River, and was the system in use from the earliest dynasties, it is believed. The year contained twelve months of thirty days each, five days being added at the end of each year.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

To Hold District Young People's Convention

Adults and young people of this branch have been quite active this winter, raising money for the general church.

Sister Livingston's class of young girls gave a dinner at the Food Craft Shop, January 10. They had an attendance of seventy-two, and were able to raise more than twenty-six dollars which was their contribution to the general church.

The Junior Sand Table Class gave a program, February 18, dramatizing the parable of the ten virgins and "The Story of the Wheat Field," by Blanche Edwards Mesley. The program was enjoyed by everyone.

Young people's day, February 26, was in charge of the young people. A special choir was made up of young men and women and conducted by Norman Preusch. The program of the day was inspiring and encouraging to the branch with regard to the interest of the young.

A special meeting was held, March 11, for the young people to elect counselors to represent them at the council meeting once a month. Those elected are: James Bortel, Eleanor Lewis, Harley Butler, Martha Quedenfield, Doris Lewis, Stanley Merz, Minnie Scouton, Thomas Worrell, and David Wiesen, jr.

Officers of the young people of the Philadelphia and New York District have set the date for the young people's convention of the district, to be held at Philadelphia, April 22 and 23. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be here from April 15 to 23. During the week previous to the convention Brothers McDowell and Hanson will conduct an institute. Both men will talk each night during the week.

The young people of Philadelphia Branch are going to take care of all the work attached to the institute and convention. The following are the assignments of duties that have been made: Adolph Edwards, housing; William Leonard, music; The K. U. Club, commissary; Charles Langjahr, publicity.

On Saturday evening, April 22, young people of the nine branches of the district will compete in a musical contest. The plans of the contest are being worked out by Norman Preusch and George Asa Fowler.

The local Herald bundle is growing. At first Philadelphia took fifteen Heralds a week, and now they are taking forty. A Saints' Herald in every home is the goal for which they are working.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Press on in Gospel Work

The Saints have had able help from visiting elders during the past year. Brother Leslie Wight spent a couple of months or more with them, and they hope he will come again, as he expects to, for his sermons were enjoyed by young and old as well as his visits in the homes.

Elder J. O. Dutton, district missionary has held a number of meetings, and they have missed him in the past few months since he has found so much work to do in other parts of the district, where the Saints are more isolated. They look forward each time to the visits of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, for we know he will be with them whenever possible. Their faith has been greatly strengthened and their courage built up as he presented the possibilities of the work at this place. Patriarch F. A. Smith and daughter, Frieda, made a short visit the week before Christmas.

At the local business meeting the first of the year Elder Arthur W. Gage was reelected pastor. Because of his untiring effort Brother Gage has filled this place as none other could. Each evening finds him busy in church work of some kind; it may be in the homes of the Saints here in Indianapolis, or it may be several miles from here with some of the isolated members. Sister Gage is also an untiring worker and invaluable in cases of sickness. Brother Charles H. Fish was later chosen as assistant to the pastor and also as publicity agent. Sister Rebecca Nolan was elected branch clerk and Sister Edna S. Gage, pianist.

The women of the branch are trying to help with the local indebtedness by taking orders and selling soup and chile to their neighbors every Thursday. They are not ashamed to deliver the goods because Sister Louis Burch, whose soup and chile were trade builders at the State Fair, can be depended upon to make the best.

Indianapolis has one family of nonmembers who are regular attendants. They first heard the gospel through the faithful life of Sister Maggie S. Wright (Snively) now deceased, of Burlington, Iowa.

Brother and Sister Ellis Whitehead were here for several months during the past year; both Brother Ellis and Sister Grace are faithful workers.

The play, "Milestones in the Life of Joseph Smith III," was given under the direction of Sister Rebecca Nolan, assisted by Brother W. P. Creviston as stage manager. While it required hard work, the Saints feel that some outside of the faith have a better knowledge of the church history.

The sick ones are improving and while Brother John Kinnear has been confined to his bed most of the time for nearly two years, his friends know that the Lord has heard and answered their prayers.

Brother Charles Nolan who has been seriously ill for three months is on the road to recovery and was able to worship at the morning service last Sunday for the first time. Members feel that it is only through the many earnest prayers of the Saints that he has been restored. Sister Nolan's mother, Sister Carrie L. Weld, of Lamoni, has been with her during the greater part of his illness.

Though all are feeling greatly the depression they are trying to press on and do all we can to carry on this great work.

Beardstown, Illinois

Five Baptized in Impressive Ceremony

When Elder Joe Williams, of Springfield, Illinois, wrote to Beardstown for permission to baptize one convert, he suddenly found that he had the opportunity to baptize five. An impressive service was held, a great degree of the Spirit being present. Elder C. H. Davis assisted and Priest Frank Corcoran offered prayer. Elder E. E. Thomas gave a sermonet and a charge to the converts and the members of the branch. Then the baptismal service took place, Brother Williams officiating.

The confirmation took place at the evening service, Elder Davis, Williams and Thomas confirming. Brother Frank Corcoran assisted at the evening services and Brother Williams gave an impressive sermonet on "The Lord's Anointed."

In the past month the following speak-

ers have occupied: Elder C. H. Davis who talked on "Greater Faith"; Priest Frank Corcoran on, "The Gospel Cure for Ills of the World"; Deacon Guy Lewis on "The Resurrection." Elder E. E. Thomas gave two sermons on "The Tests of the Restoration."

After ten weeks of intense suffering Sister M. R. Shoemaker, wife of Pastor Shoemaker, passed to rest on March 18, at Schmitt Memorial Hospital. She was sixty-six years old, and had belonged to the church since 1896. Sister Shoemaker was a devoted Saint. Leaves beside her husband, two children: Leah Alice Denton, of Bloomington, Illinois; Carletta May Norman, of Independence; four grandchildren; one sister; one brother, other relatives and many friends. The Saints of the branch had spent much time in prayer for her, but the Lord saw fit to relieve her of suffering and take her home. She will be greatly missed at Beardstown.

Beardstown Branch continues to grow. The church school last Sunday had an attendance of seventy-five and the total enrollment is eighty-three. The Saints are looking for a visit and series of meetings by Elder R. L. Fulk. There are about ten who are very near the kingdom.

Prayer meetings are being held in the home of the Saints, with good attendance.

Lenox, California

Blessed With Help and Assurance

Lenox Mission is very much alive. All its members have suffered from the conditions which exist throughout the world, but they feel wonderfully blessed by the Spirit of God in their work.

Pastor W. J. Nuckles had the pleasure of baptizing a young man, January 22, the son of the Sunday school superintendent.

Brother Andrew Catron died March 9, and was buried March 12, Apostle E. J. Gleazer preaching the funeral sermon. Brother Catron had been sick a long time, and although he was wonderfully blessed by administration, and relieved of all pain and suffering on August 7, last, and later healed of what was supposed to be a cancer, God saw fit to take him.

Saints living in this place have ample proof that God still blesses those who believe. February 19, the pastor was called on his way to Sunday school to administer to Sister Owen's baby boy who was ill with typhoid fever. The child had a high temperature. That same afternoon he was well, his temperature normal.

March 12, was guest night. Everyone was given a card inviting a friend as a guest. This proved very successful, the congregation being more than doubled. Fourteen nonmembers were present.

Lenox Mission is one hundred per cent for the program of the church.

Brockton, Massachusetts

Visits of the J. A. Gunsolleys Help

The few Saints living at Brockton were greatly encouraged by a visit from Evangelist and Sister J. A. Gunsolley last fall. Brother Gunsolley's blackboard sermons were very clear and instructive, and Sister Gunsolley's talks to the mothers were also helpful.

Since their first visit they have returned for two or three days two different times, helping everyone.

After the meeting last evening, March 17, a pleasant surprise was given Brother and Sister John Hoxie. A group of the Saints met at their home and sang the songs of Zion and enjoyed cake and ice cream.

The women's department meets each week for sewing or doughnuts sales. They are trying to do their bit for the cause they love so well.

Wagner, South Dakota

During the month of February the biweekly social evenings were postponed due to the inclement weather. On March 24, they were resumed when Mr. and Mrs. L. Uecker opened their home to the group for a potluck dinner. Each person was responsible for some part of the evening's entertainment.

On February 26, Brother Walter Farley, of Bates City, visited the Sunday school. Sister Pearl Amundson was recently called to Independence by the illness of her daughter, Mrs. Boyd Davis. Her family accompanied her to Sioux City, where they visited with friends and attended church. Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Youngbluth returned last week from Beardstown, Illinois, where they were married. They will make their home near Wagner.

The Sunday school classes have completed the quarterlies. The young people's class will continue with part two of Roy Cheville's "What it Means to Be a Latter Day Saint." Part one of this quarterly will be used by the adult class.

Woodward, Oklahoma

Second Year of Work for Small Church School

The home department of the church school of the little group here, is in its second year of work, and is doing well. Times have been hard for the Saints in this locality, but God has led them on. It takes real sacrifice to keep the little group in working order, but all are busy.

Last summer the Saints had the good fortune to enjoy a visit from Brother and Sister Weedmark, of Topeka. They met here the first Sunday in July for sacament service, and a spiritual feast was enjoyed. This was followed by a splendid sermon by Brother Howard Harpham, of Seiling. The Saints were filled with joy and gratitude that God remembered them through his servants.

The workers are happy in their effort. They have God's promise of watchcare and help if they obey his will and fulfill his purposes.

Happenings in the Society Islands

"My Mother's Prayer" in Two Languages

Last Mother's Day, Sister S. W. Ballard, at the special service of Tarona Branch, sang the song entitled, "My Mother's Prayer." Since then she has several times asked me to translate it into Tahitian so that the people here might understand, and perhaps sing it themselves, in their own tongue. Recently I started to translate it, or rather to rewrite it in the Tahitian dialect, adapting it to the old familiar tune. I had the song finished, all but the first stanza, when my muse failed. I picked up the Stepping Stones for January 8, which had come the day before, an extra mail on a freighter. I went out and sat on the veranda steps to read. The first thing I noticed was that self-same first verse, quoted in the body of an article. I then glanced back to the beginning and saw that it had been written by a former missionary to these South Sea Islands, Elder J. Charles May, better known here as "Ioane Me."

Several coincidences, if they are nothing more than that, are disclosed in the above recital. I am sending a copy of the above-mentioned Tahitian version to Brother May. When you meet him ask him to sing it. He is well qualified to do so.

The Saints here were very sorry to hear of Apostle M. A. McConley's loss. Though Brother McConley never visited this part of the Southern Seas, yet the people here felt that he was near to them, on account of his laboring so long among their cousins in Hawaii (Vaihi), and at one time the Society Islands were included in the Pacific Mission of which he was associate apostle in charge. He is known to the Tahitian Saints as "Mairona."

Called to Rest

Our native missionary, Taruiarii a Tauhiti, more familiarly known as "Horahitu," who visited America in 1930, has also recently suffered the same kind of loss and grief. His wife, Teata a Tamariki, passed away on January 10, on the island of Tubuai, about five hundred miles southward from our mission headquarters. Her funeral was attended by almost the entire population of the island, including government officials and representatives of the other churches. Sister Teata was respected and beloved by all classes of people, because of her courteous manner and good works. She had accompanied her husband and assisted in his mission, leaving Papeete last May for Tubuai, the island where the restored gospel was first preached in this mission and where the first branch of the church was organized.

On the sacrament Sunday before their departure, while speaking to the Tarona church school, I made the statement, "There will be another sacrament service next month, but we here present today shall not all meet again." I noticed that the Spirit was in the words that I had used, and I repeated them. At the close of the service I went straight to my house, followed immediately by our two native missionaries, Aririma coming in at the back door and Horahitu at the front door, and practically simultaneously they asked me the same question: "What did that statement mean?" I answered, "I do not know."

Before the next sacrament service Aririma and his wife Konea had gone to the Tuamotus, and Horahitu and his wife Teata had gone to Tubuai. It is now evident that Teata is one that we shall not meet again in this life in our solemn services before the Lord. Her name is now inscribed on the roll of those who have been called away while actively engaged in missionary work in the Society Islands. First, Charles Lake, whose mortal remains were interred in the sands of the island of Amanu, at the extreme eastern limits of the mission; second, "Luita" Ellis, taken in the great epidemic of 1918, and resting near mission headquarters in Paurani Cemetery, Papeete; and now Teata, called to rest from her labors in Tubuai, the extreme southern limit of the mission.

Sailing the Pacific in a Nine-ton Boat

Leaving Papeete on December 9, 1932, Elder S. W. Ballard and I took a trip to the Taumotu Islands on board our little cutter Celia, a nine-ton sailboat, with Elder Rongotama a Tekautoki as captain, and members of the church as sailors. Other passengers were Tepehu, solicitor for the branch at Avatoru, returning home, and Tumureva, an energetic deacon, returning to Tiputa, where the Rairoa district conference was to be held at Christmas, and Teua a Rai (Pataha's youngest sister), who was to be organist for the conference, taking with her the mission's portable organ.

It was one o'clock in the afternoon Friday that we left Papeete, and five o'clock in the morning Monday that we anchored in the pass at Avatoru, island of Rairoa, too late for the Sunday services, due to having to sail very close to a wind coming directly over the front starboard quarter. This was also the cause for constantly recurring drenchings with sea water—more effective at night than in the daytime, due to the effort being made to keep mat, blanket, and pillow in a condition conducive to slumber on the springless, featherless planks of the deck. It seemed that the helmsman, when he saw an extra large wave coming to meet us, seldom turned aside to let it have the right of way.

But it was not a rough sea that put Brother Ballard on the indisposed list for a few hours; it was merely an error in diet, drinking too much "pape haari" (coconut water) the first afternoon out, but after that he could always take his share of the work with the rest of the sailors. As for the writer, he was born and raised on an island on the Canadian side of Lake Huron, and that may account for the fact that he has never yet experienced that qualmish feeling.

We met some of the Saints at Avatoru, but most of them were away on their plantations making copra. We left Avatoru for Tiputa about two o'clock in the afternoon and it took about five hours hacking against the wind to make the seven miles between the two towns, sailing across but a small part of the lagoon, which is over forty miles long and twenty miles wide.

We had a preaching service with the Saints at Tiputa that evening, and next day at noon left for Ahe, about forty-five miles away. We went out on to the ocean again through the Tiputa pass. A few miles away we encountered a squall. Our crew now consisted of only the captain and Tumureva the deacon, who was substituting for the sailors who had stayed behind at Tiputa. The captain ordered the sails down, but the taffrail which carries the mainsail parted from the mast, dropped outside the port rigging, and stuck there—it was neither up nor down: but Tumureva, as agile as a monkey, climbed the sail with a knife in his hand, and, after cutting something, managed to get the taffrail inside the rigging—and down. Then the rain came down, cold and very wet, and enough of it. Nothing to be done but sit there and perform the function of a sponge. But we soon learned how warm and refreshing a drenching with sea water is after the icy cold of rain.

However, headwinds direct from Ahe compelled us to tack continuously, and on the evening of the second day our log told us that we had sailed about seventy miles. The next morning when the log was consulted it was found that the line had ceased to twirl, and when drawn in, the brass "twirlumgig" that should have been at the end, was missing. A shark had evidently bitten it off. Our position could now no longer be determined by dead reckoning, so it was decided to change the course so that if we missed Ahe we would be sure to strike some other island. We sailed all that day and toward evening, sighted land. Tumureva reckoned that it was Rairoa, the land we had left; I guessed that it might be Apataki to the eastward; but soon large flocks of "kavake" proved that it was Arutua, between the other two. We stayed in the shelter of the island that night, and the next day went on to Kaukura, where we arrived about six o'clock in the evening (Friday). We stayed at Kaukura four days, very hospitably entertained there by the Saints and others. There were the usual services, prayer, preaching, and a special one on Sunday evening when presentations of gifts of money and handwork were made.

On the night of our arrival (or rather about three o'clock in the morning), Brother Ballard and I were called out to administer to a young man whom we had heard shouting deliriously earlier in the evening. The house was full of relatives and neighbors. The young man and his people are not members of the Saints' church, but he is engaged to a young lady member of ours and intends to be baptized as soon as he is married. The symptoms of his affliction were pains in head, chest and hands, but no fever. Afterwards I learned that the natives believed that he was the victim of a kind of sorcery (pifao) practiced on him by a certain man whom they named and who wanted the young man to die rather than marry that certain girl, as he wanted that girl for his own son. I myself do not attempt to judge whether the affliction was due to evil spiritual influences or to ordinary physical causes.

We administered to him, and in the prayer I used an expression that I probably never used before. I asked the Lord to choose a blessing from his storehouse and send it to the young man by the hand of an angel. A few nights later some of the native elders administered to him, and the young may says that while Tuaora was offering the prayer of confirmation after the anointing he saw a vision. An angel came into his presence, a bright sword in his hand, saying: "My work is appointed to me in the land of the rising of the sun, but I have now been sent to you with a message. And this is the message—you shall overcome."

From Kaukura we went to Niau—headwinds again. After a half day and a night and a day we reached the village, but were not able to land. We sailed back to the west side of the island and drifted for the night. In the morning we went back to the village. The sea was rough and one of the Niau natives fell out of the skow as it came up to our sailboat, but he climbed back in as nimbly as a cat, though a bit ashamed. We got ashore, but without baggage, the skow being almost swamped with sea water coming in from both above and below.

A welcome service was held in their fine new church—not yet completed. In the afternoon we crossed the island by a road leading westward, partly on foot and partly by horsecart, to the place where our boat was waiting for us, and departed for Apataki. A brisk fair wind—the first—and we were at Apataki about 10 p. m., but had to wait till eight o'clock in the morning to enter the pass. We were piloted by the president of the branch, who had come out to meet us in a canoe. We tacked twenty-six times across the pass against both wind and current. That brought us to the wharf.

Many of the Saints were away in a distant part of the island making copra, but a boat had been sent to carry the message of our arrival. Some boatloads arrived before the time for the service in the church, but one, carrying the chief of Apataki and some others we had wanted to see, was late and we merely hailed it at sea as we were leaving for Arutua.

Christmas at Rairoa District Conference

We arrived at Arutua at 6.30 p. m. Friday, December 23, held a service there that evening and departed early next morning for the district conference at Tiputa, for the time was short in which to redeem our promise to return for Christmas. The wind was fair but soon died away and we experienced a near calm, but in a few hours the wind revived, and finally we reached Tiputa at midnight—just in time for Christmas Day itself but just too late for the Christmas Eve celebration, as also for the principal part of the mission conference which had started on Wednesday. However they had saved some of the best of the numbers for the Sunday and Monday evening program. Monday night Elder Ballard and I left the meeting about midnight to get some sleep. The great majority continued the entertainment until daybreak. Thus they were all ready to depart for home on the morrow, while we had to arise and get all dressed up again.

But for all that, this particular tomorrow was a red-letter day for me. Exactly ten years before, the original Celia (not the sailboat Celia) had stood up with me before "Uncle" John Taylor and he made us promise a great many things.

Leaving Tiputa we went to Tikehau, changed the gravel that we had been carrying for ballast for copra, and soon were on our way to Tahiti—home. But now that we were going fair with the wind, it began to show another streak of perversity. Sometimes we made a full two or perhaps three miles an hour, and sometimes less than one mile an hour. On the third morning we saw two triangular dark spots in the clouds directly ahead, the peaks of the twin mountains, Aorai and Orofena. Many hours later the land itself was seen, but as we neared Tahiti the wind died away and the sea became as smooth as glass, except that a swell passed over the surface, severely jarring the boat and jolting the port light into the sea. Sails were taken down and arranged to give shade and protection from the blistering rays of the sun. That was how we spent New Year's Day, 1933.

Toward evening a breath of air was noticed, the sails went up, and the wind gradually increased until it was blowing quite a gale, which took us to the entrance to Papeete harbor. The wind then died away completely and the sailors had to row the boat to the wharf. We arrived at two thirty Monday morning, the second of January, 1933.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

The leader of Religious Education appointed Brother Mason Stobaugh to take charge of the church school worship program for the month of March, and for a theme he used "The Stewardship of Faith." R. L. Bishop gave some helpful talks on this theme.

The Clematis Chorus of girls from the Stone Church, directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, contributed several numbers the evening of March 12, and Elder S. A. Burgess preached the sermon that evening on "Love."

Stake Missionary J. Charles May has been laboring in Mount Washington district, holding cottage meetings for four weeks. Attendance has varied from fourteen to fifty-two. These meetings will continue this week at the home of Brother E. S. Zink.

Pastor Will Bolinger and family were called to Fanning, Kansas, March 13, by the death of Patriarch Samuel Twombly, Mrs. Bolinger's uncle. Brother Twombly had served the church many years as a General Conference appointee and will be greatly missed.

People of Mount Washington are suffering from epidemics of chicken pox, measles, and mumps. Many, however, are now on the convalescent list, and church attendance is growing.

The month of April has been chosen as a red letter month for attendance. Plans have been formulated to bring the people out to services.

Bennington Heights Church

Elder Fred S. Anderson, bishop's counselor, was the speaker of the morning service on March 12.

P. T. Anderson, one-time missionary to the Scandinavian countries, was the speaker for the evening.

On Tuesday, March 14, Pastor O. G. Helm called a meeting of the officers and teachers of the church to discuss the problems they meet during their experiences in their respective offices. After the meeting, refreshments were served. Brother Helm was in charge.

Those from Bennington who attended the stake young people's prayer meeting at Northeast Church were Aileene Schwartz, Margaret Clark, Mary Agin, and Brother E. H. Agin.

The O. B. K.'s of Bennington had a Saint Patrick's party at the home of Brother and Sister E. H. Agin on March 17. Many were present for an enjoyable evening. Honorary guests were Pastor O. G. Helm and wife, Brother and Sister Don C. Stafford, and Sister S. D. Hastings.

For the morning service March 26, Brother A. B. Phillips was the speaker. He gave an interesting discussion on the different parts of the Bible. Brother Henry Davis, pastor of the Northeast Church, was the speaker for the evening service. He had a very good message for the young people who were in charge of the meeting. A solo was rendered by Sister Luella Wheeler.

Joe Wright was married to Miss Ada Rice, of Cameron, Missouri, March 5. They are now living in Cameron.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph M. Freeman are living in Independence, Missouri, since their marriage February 16. Mrs. Freeman, before her marriage, was Miss Marian Worden.

Far West Stake

Cameron Branch

Work has been progressing smoothly in the various departments of Cameron Branch this year. Attendance is increasing in every group and constructive programs are finding cheerful cooperation on the part of the Saints. The elders of the branch have just concluded a series of sermons, prepared for evening worship, explaining and teaching in turn each of the first principles of the gospel. These discourses have been attended with a fair degree of interest both among Saints and nonmembers, and the speakers were blessed with the liberty of the Spirit. One baptism has followed this series.

Clifford Constance occupied the stand January 29, and preached a splendid sermon on the subject, "Investments." In the thoughts presented, he pointed out our inheritances, how God could use them in His service, and the necessity for immediate action in cultivating and contributing them to the welfare of the church.

In the evening the young people, by request of the local Methodist Epworth League, attended the meeting as a group and gave the program. The program was carefully planned to present the theme of the close tie between God and his people, and was ended by a talk by Elder David Gamet. By previous request of the Methodist young people, he told them of our doctrine, pointing out the necessity for a restoration of the New Testament Church; then in greater detail, he told of our present-day ideals, our Zionic movement, and of our practice of stewardships. Many older people were present, and each was eager to obtain a tract at the end of the service.

John Hovenga, of Maple Grove, preached an earnest message to the branch on February 12, admonishing each to strengthen and sustain his faith in the church and its program. His was the only out-of-town sermon of the month.

Elder Arch McCord, formerly an active missionary but confined to an invalid bed for more than a year, preached from his wheel chair the evening of February 26, to a large congregation of listeners. He has been able to attend several services recently, and appears to be making progress in recovery of strength and health.

The midweek prayer services are a never-failing source of cheer and strength to participants, and are still increasing in interest.

Sister Avanell Dwyer, one of the music committee, has undertaken the training of a newly-organized women's chorus and has been having special practice aside from the regular choir rehearsal evening.

The girls have reorganized the Temple Builder group, and meet every other Monday evening in the church basement or at some home for an evening of companionship. Each of the girls is working on quilt blocks in preparation for making friendship quilts.

The young people hold their regular meetings Sunday evening at six o'clock at the church, under the supervision of Sister G. Scott Daniel. They are completing the study of a Book of Mormon quarterly. Each individual takes his turn in assuming responsibility toward furnishing a short program for each meeting. A valentine party was held in the church basement, February 14, by this group. A pleasant evening was spent in playing games, and ended with the serving of chili to the thirty-two present.

The women's C. S. S. group is doing its bit in making financial contributions to the church. The women have divided into competitive groups and are striving to see which group can first raise the equivalent of a "block of pennies." Sacrificial offerings and bake sales are the chief factors contributing to the growth of the fund. An all-day social gathering is held each Thursday, and the women work on friendship quilts. A covered-dish lunch is served at noon.

Oyster soup was served in the church basement Tuesday, February 21, by members of Elder S. H. Simmons' church school class. The proceeds were contributed to a fund for the purchasing of more new Hymnals.

Stewartsville Branch

Saints were pleased to have F. L. Hinderks, of the stake presidency, with them on Sunday, January 29. His theme was "The Church of Jesus Christ, How Shall I know It?" The point of identification stressed was, "That ye have love one for another."

Another visit from Bishop C. J. Hunt the latter part of January was much appreciated. His rich experiences in his long years of consecrated service to the church, and his onward, progressive, and loyal attitude are a great source of strength and inspiration to those with whom he comes in contact.

The young people's division gave a valentine party in the church basement February 17. The young people of Maple Grove Branch were invited guests. Regular activities are held every two weeks on Thursday night with an impressive worship service followed by games and recreation. A dramatic and musical vesper service is being arranged and will be given in the near future with the theme, "The Road to Happiness."

The young people gave a thirty-minute musical prelude to the Saturday night service at the stake conference and young people's rally at Saint Joseph, March 11. A large number from here attended and much help and inspiration were received from the varied activities.

On February 5, at seven-thirty, Elder B. J. Dice gave a convincing sermon, stressing that God's promises at the beginning of creation are still the same to his children. The object in the beginning was to save mankind. There has been no change. The Saints are always glad to hear from this aged brother, whose efforts in the work have been untiring.

W. H. Worden, another of the aged brothers, who has been teacher of the Doctrine and Covenants class for many years, has been forced to tender his resignation on account of the continued illness of Sister Worden. Her vision is much impaired. All hope, as spring comes, that she will be able to meet with them again.

A large attendance was had at the communion service February 5, which was in charge of the pastor, Elder Gordon Hidy, and his associates. The subject for worship was "Our Covenant With God, What Does It Means to Us?"

The women's division is gaining inspiration from their study of the Book of Mormon under the direction of Sister Madge Head. Their leader, Sister Frances Mauzey is giving much time and conscientious effort to her work.

Brother L. A. Keck, of Saint Joseph, was the guest speaker on February 19 at 10.45. He gave a timely discussion on "The Ship of Life." An interesting coincidence was in the choosing of the opening song, "We Have an Anchor."

A Frances Willard memorial service was held at 7.30 p. m. with Brother Curtis Vernon giving the sermonet. Appropriate music and readings were also given.

The Saints were glad to welcome Elder O. Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, who gave an interesting and helpful sermon on February 26, in the evening.

The Wednesday night prayer services are not as well attended as they should be, but those who are always found there are much strengthened and benefited by carrying on.

Brother and Sister Morris Worden and Brother and Sister J. O. Worden, of Kansas City, visited their parents, Brother and Sister W. H. Worden, the week-end of March 19. It was a pleasure to hear Brother J. O. in an impressive message at the morning service.

The branch is happy to announce the arrival of an eight-pound daughter at the home of Pastor and Sister Gordon Hidy March 19, who has been given the name of Marian Jean.

Richmond Branch

Saints at Richmond are carrying on in spite of the serious effects of economic conditions. Under the direction of Elder Oscar Case the work is being pushed forward. The sermons of the pastor and other local priesthood have been mostly evangelistic in nature.

Stake President Ward A. Hougas visited Richmond the morning of March 19, preaching to a good congregation. His sermon was well received and much appreciated by the Saints.

Independence

Independence citizens were called on to fight the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment from all the church pulpits in the city Sunday morning. All prohibition organizations, all denominational bodies, both men and women, and all civic organizations supporting the Eighteenth Amendment were invited and urged to participate in the Jackson County movement and rally to the support of the dry cause. This challenge comes through the United Dry Forces of Jackson County, a new organization established for that purpose. Two big county-wide meetings were announced for the week, one to be held in Kansas City, Tuesday night, and the other at the Independence Memorial Building. Forceful dry speakers were scheduled to give addresses on both evenings.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell talked to the elders' quorum on "The Elder as a Pastor," at the regular monthly priesthood meeting at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon at two-thirty.

Stone Church

A large crowd participated in a worshipful sacrament service Sunday morning, enjoying the order of the service, the sacredness of the ordinance of the Last Supper, the singing of hymns, and the short talks by those in charge. Organ music leading up to the service was played by Mrs. T. A. Beck. In the stand assisting Pastor J. F. Sheehy were Elders D. O. Cato, S. A. Thiel, C. Ed. Miller, T. A. Beck, and Bishops J. S. Kelley and R. T. Cooper.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, the speaker Sunday evening, presented to the congregation the spiritual and economic phases of the law of tithing. This discourse by one who is not a frequent speaker at the Stone Church was deeply appreciated.

Music for the evening was supplied by the Graceland String Ensemble, Charles Ballantyne, Pauline Bathe, Lois Barrows, and J. H. Anthony, and by the

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Stone Church Choir which sang under the direction of Paul N. Craig, "O Jesus, Thou Art Standing." Robert Miller was the organist. Bishop J. S. Kelley was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder J. E. Kelsey.

The Graceland String Ensemble also furnished the musical program at 5 p. m. for the Graceland broadcast over KMBC, and B. A. May, a member of the college faculty, talked on "Iowa Farm Revolt."

At the junior church service, conducted in the lower auditorium Sunday, March 26, at eleven o'clock, the pastor of the group, Priest J. B. Moses, talked on the topic, "A Loaf of Bread." The juniors also enjoyed a fine sacrament service last Sunday.

Second Church

Pastor in Zion J. F. Sheehy gave the first of a series of five lectures on "The Old Jerusalem Gospel," Sunday evening. These meetings are sponsored by the local young people. W. N. Inman, pastor of Second Church, was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder A. K. Dillee. The choir, directed by Earl Audet, sang "They That Love the Lord," being accompanied by Mrs. Inman and Miss Edna Stobaugh. Mrs. Kathern Inman sang "Give of Your Best to the Master."

The communion service Sunday morning gave many in this congregation an opportunity to assemble and worship in song and prayer. Pastor William Inman talked on the meaning and significance of communion, and those assisting in the service were Elder W. Grub, Elder B. C. Sarratt, and Brother Earl Audet.

Speakers a week ago Sunday were Elder Perry Hiles, from Englewood, in the morning, and Brother Thomas Hartnell in the evening. Splendid musical support was given at both services by local musicians.

An effective junior church service was conducted March 26, at eleven o'clock, R. C. Conyers in charge, and Mrs. Agnes Edmunds telling the story, "To Whom Would You Pray?" "Oh, for a Faith That Will Not Shrink," was sung by Bethel Davis and Helen Willoughby, accompanied by Geraldine Fields. An interesting experience was told by Geraldine Fields, and Billie McPherson played "Tarantelle," a piano solo. Elder E. E. Thomas was the speaker.

Liberty Street Church

Patriarch U. W. Greene has consented to speak to Liberty Street congregation each Sunday evening during April, and his opening subject for Sunday, April 2, was, "Upon This Rock Will I Build My Church." The local choir furnished musical numbers, "Now the Day Is Over," "Would God I Were a Tender Apple Blossom," and the Negro spiritual, "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?"

"How Much We Need God," the sacrament talk given by a former pastor, Elder F. A. Cool, was much appreciated Sunday morning. The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Elmer Petre was blessed by Elders Cool and J. R. Lentell, and the infant son of Brother and Sister Calvin Johnson, was blessed by Elders W. A. Stephenson and Walter Curtis.

Brother William A. O. White, seventy-four years of age, a long-time resident of this district, passed away March 31, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ennis Triplett. He is survived by his wife, Bertha E. White, of the home, and three other daughters: Mrs. Ona R. King, of Humansville, Missouri; Mrs. Olive Crawford, and Evelyn White, of Independence; three sons: William Curtis White, Wilmer A. O. White, and Vernon White, of Independence; one brother, D. C. White, of Lamoni, Iowa, and one sister, Mrs. Eliza McCawley, Berkeley, California, and twenty grand-children. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church Sunday afternoon at one-thirty, sermon being preached by Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Walnut Park Church

Large attendance and splendid meetings marked the services at Walnut Park Church Sunday. Church school drew an attendance of 458 and the Religio 209, and practically every seat in the building was filled at the communion service.

The Swastika Class of young people was in charge of the devotional and program portions of the church school period. Gomer Stowell offered the opening prayer and gave the Scripture reading. Following the class period, Maurine Nace and Drexel Mollison played an organ and piano duet.

Pastor Frank McDonald presided at the sacrament service, assisted by Elders A. K. Dillee and M. T. Williams. Pastor McDonald introduced the service with a few earnest and inspiring remarks.

New officers for the Religio, which were elected last week, took charge Sunday evening. Following the classwork, they were called to the platform and a brief induction service was held. The charge was given to them by the pastor. Following this a program was given, consisting of a debate upon the subject, "Resolved, That the Microscope Has Done More for Humanity Than the Radio." Gene Douglas served as chairman of the debate, and the speakers were Thelma Moorman and Milford Nace for the affirmative and Gomer Stowell and Ruth Bryant for the negative. The decision of the judges was unanimous for the affirmative.

Elder C. B. Woodstock was the speaker at the evening service, and an anthem was sung by the choir under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday was record attendance day for this congregation, the total being present at all services during the day being five hundred and twenty-four. Officers and members were elated at this fine show of interest.

Pastor Eastwood with Jesse Smith was in charge of the early morning prayer meeting which was characterized by unusually large attendance.

The sacrament hour was also in charge of the pastor assisted by Brothers Fish, White, and Bath. Miss Mildred Bath sang, "Come, Sweet Comforter."

The program for the church school hour was arranged by Roy Andes and presented by three boys from Second Church.

Elder J. Charles May was the evening speaker, and in honor of the event a quartet sang the old missionary song, "What Was Witnessed in the Heavens?" Brother May gave a splendid sermon on the church, its organization and mission. At the close he sang and played, "The Church Without Apostles."

A play night has been planned for Friday night, April 7, and a good program will be given.

Holden Stake

Knobnoster

Recent speakers have been Pastor John T. Nutt, E. E. Petre, E. L. Moorman, C. A. Kramer, and R. E. Burgess. An increasing interest in the midweek prayer service is noticable.

Wilmot Kirkpatrick, youngest son of Brother and Sister J. E. Kirkpatrick and Miss Lena Irene Gowin were married recently.

This branch was represented at the Young people's institute at Lees Summit by four Knobnoster young people, Bennett Enfield, who was chosen a member of the advisory committee, Kelvin Brendel, Lou Etta and William Norman. They were very enthusiastic. Bennett occupied a short period of the church school time with a report of the gathering.

Brother and Sister H. O. Petre, who spent the winter in Colorado, have returned to Knobnoster.

R. E. Burgess attended the services at Marshall March 5, assisting in the sacrament service and speaking for them in the evening. He plans to visit some of the branches and assist as opportunity affords. Brother Burgess has given considerable help through the stake in the past and his work was appreciated.

Yakima, Washington

Missionaries Give Help and Cheer

During the latter part of January, Elders Joseph Sandidge and Stanley Fout, spent a week visiting and holding meetings here. Elder Marcus H. Cook, held a series of meetings beginning in the latter part of February, and continued into March. Apostle M. A. McConley spoke to this group the evening of March 1. His visit, although short was much appreciated.

The young people's class held a meeting on the eve of Saint Patrick's Day, at the home of their teacher, Ben E. Nutley, to elect officers to fill vacancies. Paul Anderson was elected president, and Edith Clapshaw, vice president. The young people plan to add a classroom to the church building, as a gift to the branch.

Many friends of Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton will be glad to hear that she is recovering from an illness. Sister Clara Linse, who has been in poor health for some time past, was recently called to Pasco, Washington, because of the serious illness of her sister. During the winter there has been considerable sickness in our little branch.

Early in February, Allen James Shrock, two-year-old son of Brother and Sister Jacob Shrock, passed away after a short illness. The funeral services were held at Yakima, Elder B. H. Van Eaton in charge.

The Bulletin Board

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given that J. H. Yager has been appointed to act as bishop's agent for the Society Islands Mission, succeeding R. J. Farthing.

We wish to take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation for the service rendered by Brother Farthing and to solicit the continued cooperation of the Saints in supporting Brother Yager in this phase of church work.

Southwestern Texas District Meetings

We have arranged with President Frederick M. Smith to pay us a short visit according to the following schedule:

Wednesday night, April 26, preaching at 804 Patterson Avenue, Austin, Texas.

Thursday night, April 27, informal reception at 1640 West Summit Street, San Antonio, Texas.

Friday night, April 28, preaching at Bandera, Texas.

Sunday, April 30, all-day meeting at First San Antonio Branch chapel, South Cherry Street, and Rockwood Court, commencing with 8.30 a. m. prayer service. Basket dinner will be served at the church. President Smith will address the congregations at 11 a. m., 2.30 p. m., and 7.45 p. m. Church school, in charge of district officers, will be held at 9.45 a. m., and the night service will be preceded by a song service. We have made some fine progress since the last district conference, so let everybody come to these meetings and enjoy the fellowship of Saints and make this another stepping stone toward our ultimate goal, Zion.—John A. Robinson, district president.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. M. MCDOWELL.

Our Departed Ones

SIMMONS.—Margaret Elinor Larsen, daughter of Andrew and Margaret Larsen, was born June 27, 1901, at Ferron, Utah. Moved with her parents to Lees Summit, Missouri, in 1907, where she has since resided. Passed from this life at the Lees Summit Hospital, March 1, 1933. She married Herbert Simmons in 1922, and to this union four sons were born: Willis Andrew, Herbert Allen, Edward Lee, and Donald. Herbert Allen preceded her in death. Leaves to mourn are her husband and children; parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Larsen; two sisters, Cleo Larsen and Luscio Larsen, all of Lees Summit; one brother, Carlos Larsen, of Tuscon, Arizona; one half-sister, Mrs. A. O. Beach, of Ferron, Utah, and many friends. She was baptized a member of the church, August 23, 1909, by Elder C. De Puy, and remained faithful. Funeral services were conducted from the Saints' church, and interment was in Lees Summit Cemetery. Elder Calvin De Puy had charge of the services, assisted by J. T. Smith and E. F. Brace. A loving and devoted mother has gone to rest.

WESTOVER.—Aves Egella Foster was born August 30, 1882. In 1897, she was married to Charles Alvin Westover. September 30, 1906, she was baptized into the church by Elder George Shippy, and was one of the charter members of the church at Marlette, Michigan. Died March 1, 1933, leaving her husband, four sons: Wesley, Lavern, Berthold, and Everett, and two brothers, Dexter and Charles, of Marlette. She was a good woman, a loving wife and mother, a faithful Saint. The funeral sermon was by William M. Grice, assisted by Edward Weaver.

ALLAN.—Harriet Allan was born at Preston, Ontario, Canada, February 17, 1837, and was baptized by F. B. Stade, September 13, 1924, at Guelph, Ontario. She remained firm in the faith of the restored gospel. Was in fair health of mind and body when she celebrated her ninety-sixth birthday, but soon after was taken with a stroke from which she never regained consciousness. Died at Harriston, Ontario, February 26, 1933. The funeral was held from her home at Harriston, February 28, in charge of F. B. Stade and J. H. Cohoe; sermon by John Shields. Interment was in Harriston Cemetery.

BENTHAM.—Joseph Bentham died at the Cottage Hospital, Galesburg, Illinois, November 10, 1932, following an illness of two years. He had made his home at Galesburg for the past year and a half, he and Mrs. Bentham residing with a daughter, Mrs. Guy Maxfield. He was born August 24, 1860, in Crosscannonby-by-the Sea, England. Came to this country in 1878, going first to Youngstown, Ohio. He was married in Sheridan, Iowa, to Elizabeth Ann Fletcher, and moved to Kewanee, Illinois, about thirty-eight years ago, living there until May 1931, when he went to Galesburg. Mr. Bentham was employed with the Walworth Company as gardener until his health failed two years ago. Surviving are his wife, three daughters, Mrs. Charles DeWitt, Mrs. Richard Norris, of Kewanee, and Mrs. Guy Maxfield, of Galesburg; two sons, William, of Hollywood, California, and Joseph, of Kewanee. Also six grandchildren, and other relatives. One daughter, Mrs. P. G. Conner, has passed away since his death. Mr. Bentham was not a member of the church, but attended the church the greater part of his married life, his wife and children being members. He was a faithful reader of the Saints' Herald for years, a kind husband and father, and an honorable and respected citizen of the community where he resided. The funeral services were from the Erickson and McHugh Funeral Home at Kewanee, Monday afternoon, November 14. Sermon by E. R. Davis. Interment was made in South Pleasant View Cemetery.

ANWAY.—Charles Henry Anway, fifth son of Erastus and Mary A. Anway, was born, October 6, 1873, in a little log cabin located at Cambridge, Iowa, and after an illness of a number of months passed away at the home of his son, George, in Independence, Missouri, Tuesday, February 21, 1933, age fifty-nine years, four months and fifteen days. At eleven years of age, in company with his parents, he moved from Iowa to Kansas, passing through Lamoni while the first general conference of the Latter Day Saint church to be held in the basement of the old brick church was in session. In a short time the family moved to Nebraska and when he was fifteen years old they returned to Iowa. He was united in marriage, August 12, 1896, with Miss Catharine Ada Higgins, at Nevada, Iowa. To this union were born seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Anway started their home together in Collins, Iowa, but soon moved to Rhodes, Iowa, and later to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, where their three oldest children were born. Some years later the family moved to Akron, Iowa, where he held a position as rural mail carrier for eight years. From Akron they moved to Lamoni, where for a time he sold goods for the Rawleigh company, and in 1914 accepted a position as caretaker of the new school building in which work he continued until the Christmas vacation of the present school year when he found it necessary to give up the work on account of the serious condition of his health. During those years of service to the public schools he was more than a caretaker, he was an adviser to hundreds of boys, an assistant to the faculty, often substituting in the manual training department and some times in the lower grades. When a young man, Mr. Anway united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder O. B. Thomas. He remained true to this faith to the end. There are left to mourn his departure, his companion; five sons, George E., Paul E., and Joseph H., of Independence, Missouri; Harold W., of Charles City, Iowa, and Mark E., of Lamoni, and an adopted daughter, Leila Mae, also of the home. A son, James Earl, passed away in infancy, and a daughter, Geraldine Viola, died at the age of seven in October, 1921. There are also remaining one brother, George, of Colorado; two sisters, Mrs. Carrie McLain, of Colorado, and Mrs. Julia Prock, of Des Moines, Iowa; four grandchildren and many other relatives and friends. Funeral services were held from the Lamoni Coliseum, February 24, 1933, in charge of Elder Thomas S. Williams, Elder W. E. Prall delivering the address. Music was furnished by the Graceland College A Cappella Chorus. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa.

SANDERSON.—Celestia Horton, daughter of Skyler and Eliza Horton, was born at Elgin, Illinois, January 22, 1850, and passed away at the home of her son, Walter F. Sanderson, at Plano, March 3, 1933. She was an invalid three years, but was seriously ill less than a week. When eleven years old she united with the church and remained faithful until death. September 11, 1870, she was married to Frederick Sanderson, of Chebance, Illinois. Four children blessed their home, one dying in infancy. After living in Chicago a number of years, they moved to Canada in 1907. Six years ago they returned to the United States, and for five years had been making their home with their son, Walter F., and family, where they have been lovingly and patiently cared for. She was a woman of high ideals, a conscientious wife and mother. Leaves to mourn, her aged husband; two sons, Walter F., of Plano, and Arthur G., of Chicago; one daughter, Mrs. Mabel Whipper, of Lansing, Michigan; six grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; three brothers; one sister; others relatives, and many friends. Funeral services were held March 4, at the home and at the Saints' church, Elder J. M. Blakely officiating. Pallbearers were Kenneth Blakely, Marion Blakely, Richard Wildermuth, Delbert Bollie, Glenn Blakely, and Bert Reynolds. Interment was in Plano Cemetery.

HEALTH versus SICKNESS

I fully believe God wants us all to be healthy. He has no joy in our sufferings. He does all He can that we might have JOY. He even gave us words of wisdom in Latter Day revelation.

We are getting wonderful letters from Saints, even from Canada. A part of letter just received:

"Our little girl has suffered constipation since birth; have tried all kinds of medicine; we find Phosfo the best yet. Send us five pounds at once. W. B. Simpson, Webb, Saskatchewan, Canada.

Constipation is due to tissue starvation, when you do not get the phosphate to feed the Nerves and the raw mineral salts to clean the blood and bowels, the blood becomes acid and the gall duct congested, and it's the gall that regulates the action of the bowels.

Why not send us a dollar and get a can, enough for a month; or better yet, send $2.00 and get three cans. Why not interest a friend or Saint?

The Pigeonhole

Modern Proverbs

By E. Leola Nice

I find it easier to forgive the one who errs and says, "I was thinking of something else," than the one who says, "I was not thinking."

Though I commit all the seven deadly sins, let me never be guilty of destroying the faith of another.

To see the failure of one who brags is as disappointing as to reach for a top step which isn't there.

The sign of the tremendously fine spirit is his ability to wear Spring on his face when his heart is locked in the icy grip of Winter.

If you really are what you tell me you are, you need not tell me.

He has not lived in vain whose good works are his legacy to life when he is forgotten in death.

Because you see no virtue in your neighbor does not prove that he is a scoundrel.

You will know real darkness when you lose the faith of one who has loved you.

God gave you talents to hold until somebody needed them.

A Living Martyr

Each time I see her home I think of the Christian martyrs of old. They were valiant men and women and braved even death. But they would be no greater than she. To them death brought an end to trouble. She goes on living.

Practically every day finds her at her washboard trying to make a living, not only for herself but for those who should be performing a like service for her. As she struggles about her tasks they sit blithely by, reaping the benefits of her labors with no attempts to assist. She is scarcely able to walk and must ever support herself by chair, table, or wall. They are strong and sturdy in the fullness of manhood and womanhood.

So far as the church is concerned she is a virtual prisoner in her own home. Her physical disability makes it impossible to travel the distance to church so that several years have passed since she has entered a church. Visits of church members and officers have been very few.

To some it is given to stand in the spotlight; others go gaily along with their burdens offset by the love and companionship of friends; she must go ever onward, giving all, getting nothing in exchange. Each rising sun brings nothing but drudgery. Yet with a smile upon her lips she rises to a new day. No earthly goal is hers; she has nothing to work towards. What keeps her at her task? It is hope and faith; hope for earthly release from toil, hope that a new spirit shall inspire her loved ones and cause them to repent of past errors and begin anew; faith that the promises of God standeth sure and that a mansion has been prepared for in the hereafter by her Lord and guiding star, Jesus Christ.

If more congregations had self-starters, they might not have so many cranks.

Building the Church From Within

I.—The Responsibility of the Local Church

Two great fields of endeavor are open for the building of the church: missionary work outside, and conservation within. The missionary work is of great importance, but at the present time the reduced forces under appointment have greatly limited our possibilities in that direction. This fact makes the conservation process all the more imperative at the present time.

Some of our local churches suffer a large mortality rate in membership through the loss of two classes of people: the young people who should grow up to active membership, and the recent converts. But we know that these losses are not inevitable, for other churches are able to build and grow. There is nothing inherent in the church or its message that makes losses necessary, and it appears that we must place the responsibility upon the congregations and their officers.

No number of converts that the missionaries can bring to the church will ever build up the membership if the branches continue to lose them as fast as they are brought in.

The causes are not hard to find. Converts and young people are lost for the same reasons: a lack of adequate spiritual, social, and cultural life to hold their interest and loyalty.

The branch is the natural conservator of all our church gains. It should help and protect the faith of the new convert. It should give vision, ideals, and inspiration to the young people. If it fails in these duties, it is worse than useless. The branch must be a real spiritual and social home for its people. It must build from within and conserve the resources that are intrusted to it. There is no use in evangelizing the world, unless at the same time we can Zionize the church.

The church must be built from within as well as from without, if it is to stand secure. The very foundation of that building from within depends upon branches that are strong in spiritual power, alert to their tasks. Prepare today for the work of tomorrow. L. L.

A Church Program for Spring

"Build From Within"

1. Improve and decorate the buildings, grounds, and equipment.
2. Develop dignity and reverence of the services.
3. A training class for candidates for membership.
4. Organization meetings for teachers and officers.
5. A parents' and children's banquet.
6. Enlistment and consecration service for the young people.

Easter

Easter's perennial message of hope and cheer comes this year to a needy world. Things have been pretty generally dead in a good many respects: spiritually and intellectually as well as economically. Hope and faith, too, seemed to have died so far as the world is concerned. It reeked with the smell of an offensive mortality. For a time there appeared to be some truth in the pessimist's notion that better things die, while the worse live on.

"Christ is risen," was the greeting of the early Christians. "He is risen, indeed," was the response. And Christ is risen in our day, too, in a way that we may not understand. Out of our crushed hopes, our disappointments, our griefs, He rises again to inspire us once more with the old, old ideals of a better world, a better way of life. Christ is risen in the hearts of an older and chastened generation, who, we hope, have learned a little by the things they have suffered. Christ is risen in the hearts of a younger generation that is more clear-thinking, more serious, more true than generations that have gone before it.

The world has gone through a Gethsemane, has approached the tomb. But turning again to Christ, it finds its resurrection in him. In him and in him only is our hope.

Faith gives reality to the joy of our Easter songs. Wrong can not for ever rule, right triumphs in the end. Life is stronger than death, courage and hope surmount defeat and despair. Temporary reverses come, but they make us the more determined and harden our resistance. We know that evil, because it is destructive in nature, will also destroy itself. And we know that righteousness and good, because they preserve and promote life, will survive over all opposition.

Christ is risen. He is risen again in the world of men. He is "the resurrection and the life." He is immortal. And they who follow him share in the blessed assurance of his greatness and his love.

The resurrection of Christ signifies a great conquest in which all the children of men can share. Their songs of joy bespeak his triumph. L. L.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

A COPY of Brother Blair Jensen's report to the recent stake conference found its way to my desk. I note one or two matters touched by him in the report. Speaking of the priesthood members of the stake, he says that perhaps more than seventy per cent in the Lamoni Branch report activity for the past year. He says: "Several of them have accepted additional responsibility and have acquitted themselves well of their added charges."

One wonders why we can not have one hundred per cent activity on the part of the priesthood members, but we seldom get it. Just why there are always some who are moribund, is difficult to say. Brother Jensen comments upon the matter of priesthood activity rather tersely when he adds:

"One can not but be heartened by the affirmative and aggressive movements which have characterized the greater percentage of men who bear the priesthood responsibility throughout the stake. Priesthood activity invariably results in progress, and inactivity just as invariably results in spirtual death. This is true of the individual as well as the group."

If what he says be true, then a survey of the priesthood members of a branch or district would indicate the state of progress of the church in that locality. And that just about represents the case.

On your toes, members of the priesthood. Don't retard by your inactivity the progress of the church.

A LIVE DISTRICT PRESIDENT who makes the round of branches with some degree of frequency and regularity, and also, I am sure, with helpfulness, recently wrote of having visited a small branch, but one "in good condition." He spoke of the fine cooperation of the branch president and his assistant, "both fine men," and then adds: "If every branch in this district was as free from contention, and had as faithful officers as this branch has, we would have a very strong district."

I wonder if there is any good reason why our branches all should not be free from contention. How fine it would be if we could be free from all contention except that contention or rather emulation, of who can best work and best agree. Our greatest hindrance or "draw back," is the contention, especially among the officers, which has its roots in selfishness and inordinate ambition.

I was about to congratulate our worthy district president on having such a branch as a source of encouragement and pleasure; but perhaps I had better commiserate with him because the other branches of the district are not equally harmonious and active in well doing.

A FRIENDLY PAT cost no greater effort than a vicious kick, perhaps not so much, and yet the effectiveness of the pat as compared with the kick can scarcely be estimated. I am reminded of this in a recent letter from one of our missionaries, one of our "old-timers" who in acknowledging receipt of a letter of certain date expresses his appreciation for the kindly interest shown in his work as a missionary of the church. He says:

"Such mutual interest is worth far more than gold or silver to put our work over; it has more power and will last longer."

Of course it will, and all the more wonder that we do not more frequently use the pat rather than dip our pens in the ink of caustic criticism.

IN SOME OF MY TRAVELS some months ago I had occasion to visit Rosedale, British Columbia, and there visit a small branch which has struggled along under various adverse conditions. I found that the interest to a large extent was maintained by a splendid family of women, a mother and two daughters, whose unswerving zeal and devotion to the cause have been a constant encouragement to the Saints of that small branch. I recently wrote to this family, to Sister Alice Smith, the mother, and asked how things were going. They told of a recent visit of Brother Lasater and Sister McDole and of the encouragement that the little branch had received from the visit. They told of the splendid reunion in the district last August where Brother Gillen and others of the brethren stimulated and encouraged the Saints so that they are looking forward to another good reunion this year. In speaking of the branch, however, they say:

"Our branch is very small indeed. Our last officer, a priest, is leaving us early in the spring for the Caribou country. There is a gold rush on there, almost a repetition of '98. We are sorry and will feel the loss greatly, but we are going to do our best to continue on with the church school work. We would rather see the Saints making ready to move in the direction, Zionward, but all do not see alike."

How many times in the past have branches been left stranded because of the moving away of the last officer? Of course I hope that the priest who is seeking the treasures of earth in the form of gold may be successful, but I will venture the guess that it will take many pounds of gold to equal the satisfaction that would come to him from a faithful discharge of churchly duty, and I doubt if an ordinary quantity of riches will ever compensate him for a failure to lead the people toward Zion.

These comments are made with the general needs and welfare of the people in view and in the hopes that they may to some extent at least stimulate our priesthood toward greater activity in seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness by attending to priestly duty. F. M. S.

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

An Effort to Help

The other day Brother J. F. Sheehy, Pastor in Zion, came into the office and said, "Why don't you print something that will help the pastors?"

We had been thinking about it for some time, but lacked the materials. Asked to contribute, Brother Sheehy agreed to let us have copies of the materials used for prayer meetings in Independence, which ought to be of help to other pastors. We have printed it below, and will follow it with other installments monthly.

Another friend made a good suggestion: Every pastor has preached a few sermons that he has found to be effective and well received. Why not make a brief summary of it, furnish the text, and send it to the Herald to be printed for the use of other pastors?

We are inviting the pastors to do exactly that. Send us your text, with a three-hundred-word summary of your sermon. Summaries will be better than outlines, and the pastors can elaborate them with their own thoughts as they may find it convenient.

Suggested Order and Theme for Mid-week Prayer Meetings

By J. F. Sheehy

Suggest that people come in a prayerful attitude.
No visiting, story-telling, and laughter before the meeting.
Let all visiting wait until the close of the meeting.
Elders "shall direct as they are led by the Spirit."
Do not ever say, "the meeting is in your hands."

Contest Stories From Many Places

Not only a generous but a very representative response was given by story writers throughout the church to the Herald Short Story Contest which closed April 1. Almost ninety entries were received in our office, representing twenty-two States in the Union, Canada, and far-off Australia.

Missouri was the State submitting the highest number of stories, entering sixteen. Seven of this number came from Independence alone. Next highest in entries came Illinois with nine, followed by Nebraska and Ohio with six apiece. Other States from which stories were received are: California, Michigan, Washington, Colorado, New York, Idaho, Arizona, Kansas, Wyoming, Montana, Iowa, Indiana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Maine. The Dominion of Canada is represented by four stories, and Graceland College by two.

The youngest contestant, Lyman O. Cover, of Eagle Butte, South Dakota, proudly states his age as fourteen years. The oldest—who can say? He or she did not mention age. The contest includes amateur writers and experienced writers, church members and non-church-members, boys, girls, men, and women—almost everyone interested in any stage or style of writing.

And the stories? Well, we're leaving them to the judges, who are up to their elbows in the manuscripts.

Wants to Help in the Young People's Work

(The following is an extract of a letter written to Ward A. Hougas, President of Far West Stake, whose active and sympathetic interest has led to a splendid development of the work among the young people there.)

Dear Brother Hougas:

My thoughts go back to our last Far West Stake reunion. I remember the few moments I talked with you and in parting you said, "Lavata, I'm expecting a lot from you." . . . I do want to help in the young people's work.

One of the many things for which I have been most grateful is the association of the young people of our church. It has been through the young people's conventions and reunion that I have learned the joy of serving and the value of friendship. It is in these meetings that the young people learn to place their ideas of life on a higher level. After hearing young people pledge a clean character, a more willing and consecrated service, all that is best in them to the service of God, I think we must be spiritually asleep if we can not enter into the joy of the service of giving our best to the Master and if we can not form friendships which are lasting and true. The challenge, "Be not spectators but participants," surely can not go unheeded. It must be the desire of every young person interested in church work to be a participant.

The young people of Guilford are eagerly looking forward to the Youth Convention in Lamoni. Plans are being made for a group to attend. Each one is looking forward to meeting other young people, and all together to prepare ourselves for the work of the church.

Brother Floyd McDowell, in a devotional service at a young people's convention, pleaded with the youth that we spend less time in seeking God, and more time preparing ourselves so that God can reach us. It is my desire that as a group of young people we will study and prepare ourselves that God might reach us and we can be instruments in his hands. We will then move onward to Zion.

Yours sincerely,

LAVATA JOBE.

Enjoys the Herald

As one of the youth of the church, I wish to say that I enjoy the Herald more than I can tell you. I believe the young people would become more interested in it if they would only get started reading it.

No

Men are strong just in proportion as they have the ability to say NO, and stand by it. Look back on your own life—what was it that caused you the most worry, wear, vexation, loss and pain? Wasn't it because you failed to say NO at certain times and stick to it?

You think too much of the opinions of other people and not enough of your own. "Put your name right here—it is only a matter of form, you know—just between friends."

And you sign your name. The years go by, and there comes a time when you pay for your weakness in blood and tears.

And the real fact is that the good opinion of the best people comes from your saying NO, and not weakly yielding and putting your name to a subscription, or a contract which is none of yours.—Elbert Hubbard.

The Story of Etta Kett

"I'm only human!" Etta Protests

"Say, you!" A neatly dressed girl, brown eyes flashing fire, swung her 115 pounds and at least that many wild-cat power into the office and clicked her heels together. The Editor took one look, and vanished beneath his desk, armed with the long pair of scissors that he always keeps handy.

"My dear young lady," he quavered from his retreat, "whom——"

"Yes, it's you I want," she said laughing. "Oh, come on out. You look so pathetic that I wouldn't have the heart to hurt you now."

"Are you sure that you are quite——"

"Perfectly. But I have a bone to pick with you all the same."

"Won't you have a——" asked the Editor, as he crawled from his retreat.

"Thank you," she said sitting down. "You needn't inform me that you are the Editor. I can tell it. They all have the same half guilty, half scared look."

"Who——" but the Editor couldn't get a start.

"Oh, yes. I'm Etta Kett, that you've been writing all those goody-goody stories about in your paper. And thanks to you, everybody is already thinking that I'm nothing but a little prude, and that I never have any fun."

"I'm sorry, but——"

"Now don't go and apologize. I'm here to tell you it isn't so. And if you think for a minute that you are going on writing the kind of nonsense that you've been putting out about me, I'll just take you on for a couple of rounds of any style of boxing you care to name and prove it different."

"Really——" but the Editor didn't have a chance.

"I wish you wouldn't interrupt me. I'm very busy—I've only a few minutes to spend in your office—and I don't want to waste them listening to you. Now just keep your chin up and your ears open while I tell you something."

And while she talked, Etta tallied off her activities on her fingers.

"I'm the champion swimmer at the Elmwood Y. W. C. A. pool. Last summer I beat Bill (he's my friend) swimming across Lake Rondocomo. I'm wild about tennis and I can play it with the boys, too. I like my golf, and I'm a first-rate auto driver, according to all my friends. In the winter I take to the skiis like a Norwegian. And when there is nothing else to do I improve my mind with a book. Oh, yes—I nearly forgot. I teach a Sunday school class, and I have an adorable troop of Girl Scouts. Now if you think I have a dull time with all those activities on my hands you simply don't know anything about it. And don't you write anything more of that namby-pamby nonsense about me, or you'll regret it."

"But surely——" and the Editor was lost in another torrent of language.

"I'm just about done. I'm just awfully sorry for the sweet and sickly dumbbelles that can't think of anything to do but play bridge or dance. And I'm even sorrier for those who feel that they have to take a drink to get a kick out of life. It seems to me that they miss so much of the real fun. Why don't you tell them about it?"

The Editor gulped.

"Well, I'm glad to have had this little chat with you, and I'm sure we'll understand each other better. Good-bye!"

She left like a gust of March wind, and a few papers slid off the desk down to the floor.

"We certainly will," said the Editor.

Log Notes

Hundreds of young people have become regular readers of the Herald since its change in style and content. Numbers of them are writing for it, and their articles appear in the regular columns as well as on this page.

Wouldn't you like to write and tell us how you feel about the work and problems of the young people, or anything else you think needs airing? We'd be glad to hear from you.

NEWS BRIEFS

Evangelist and Sister J. A. Gunsolley in Southern New England

Though March was a stormy month and unfavorable to large attendance at meetings Elder and Sister J. A. Gunsolley were busy. They have visited all branches in Southern New England District except Haverhill, Massachusetts, and are starting over the second time, being glad that they are appointed there for another year.

A brief sketch of their March activities will give an idea of the work they are doing. They attended prayer meeting at New Bedford, March 1, then went to Attleboro, Massachusetts, where they held thirteen services. Held two meetings at Brockton, and then went to Providence, where they conducted six services prior to the convening of the district conference March 25 and 26. When word was received from them early in April, they were at Groton, Connecticut, holding meetings.

Word From Youth Conference at Detroit

The following message came from Apostle F. Henry Edwards, one of the teachers at the Detroit youth conference and leadership convention, April 1-10: "Things are going wonderfully here. Crowded house for preaching. Two hundred and nine for opening classes. An excellent spirit."

President F. M. McDowell also attended this convention as a teacher and leader.

Help Elder J. W. McKnight Celebrate Birthday

On March 18, Saints and friends from Grand Rapids, Belding, Battle Creek, and Buchanan, Michigan, braved snow and sleet to help Elder John W. McKnight, of Galien, celebrate his sixty-sixth birthday. Brother McKnight has spent many years in the missionary field, and is a well-known church worker in Michigan. Though now released from the field, his zeal in ministerial labor continues unabated.

Sister J. M. Terry Passes On

Sister Mary Jane Terry, eighty-three years of age, passed to her reward April 3, and her funeral was held from the Stone Church two days later. After sixty-two years as a faithful Saint, a friend, and a helper, she has gone to join her husband in the land immortal. For nearly three score years Brother and Sister Terry traveled as missionaries for the church, cheering, blessing, helping. Their memory is loved and revered by hundreds. Brother Terry passed away October 24, 1931.

Educational Reunion for Australian Young People's Clubs

A unique one-day reunion was sponsored early in February by the Balmain Kimnor Klub and the Dorian Literary Society of Leichhardt, in Balmain Church, Sydney. Orations, dramatic events, music, and the spirit of real fellowship spoke well for the two clubs, and enlisted interest and new members in their activities.

McDermott, Ohio, Branch Does Missionary Work

Elder Richard Shope, president of McDermott Branch, assisted by the Saints, began a special series March 6, two miles north of town. Having to work at the mill each day, Brother Shope sent for Elder Francis May, of Dayton, to assist him. Elder May arrived March 17, and meetings continued until April 2. Average attendance was seventy people, and four adults were baptized. A Sunday school was organized with sixty-five members. Midweek services have been instituted and preaching on Sunday.

New Branch at Essex, Ontario, Growing

The thirty or more members of Essex Church, organized a little more than a year ago, are endeavoring to increase their number and add to their spirituality, under the leadership of Elder J. A. W. Kettlewell. About two years ago Brother Kettlewell moved into that community and with the help of two other men of the priesthood, sought to organize the Saints. They secured a meeting place and invited the help of Apostle D. T. Williams who organized the branch.

Eleven families compose the local membership, and all are much interested in and loyal to the church. They now own their meeting place which circumstances brought to them at a bargain price.

Golden Wedding Anniversary for Lamoni Couple

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Church, of Lamoni, quietly passed their fiftieth wedding anniversary April 3, at home with relatives and friends. A celebration of the day had been previously planned, but sickness and other preventing circumstances made this impossible.

Charles F. Church and Laura Smith spent their youth in Lamoni, being members of pioneer families. They were married by Elder O. B. Thomas. Three of their four children grew to manhood and womanhood, Mrs. W. E. Prall, deceased, A. B. Church, and C. F. Church, jr.

The Republic Under the Present Administration

By Blair Jensen

DURING the late political campaign we have been led to dwell upon the statement from Proverbs, "He whose spirit is without restraint is like a city that is broken down and without walls."

As we have viewed the masses of our citizenship in turmoil, we have been reminded of how William James in his work on psychology compares the so-called hair-trigger constitution of the animal with the capacity of man to see into the future and real values. He tells us that the puppy plays with a ball because he wants to. To have the desire and to have the ball present is sufficient cause for him to immediately place this desire into activity. He has no capacity to look to the future or to weigh values. He lives for the present alone. Man, on the other hand, has the capacity to and must curb his impulses, if obeying them would interfere with the attainment of higher purposes. He can not live for the present alone.

There is another school of psychology which has come into considerable prominence within recent years, whose slogan says obey the impulses now. It is based upon the idea that the desire to do is evidence that we should do it. Its slogan of expression is not a new thing. It is at least as old as the history of mankind. It has ever been found present amongst all nations and all races. It is that philosophy of a lower order and its expression has always taken its followers without the pale of the law. Its proponents tell us that we must obey the impulses or the desire as it comes to us, lest we become afflicted with a dread disease known as inhibition. Once afflicted with this disorder, our personalities will be lessened. Our life shall not be full or complete. Its progress will lead us to the door of the penitentiary and the house of correction. As children, our parents taught us the need of controlling our tempers. We sense the value of this lesson today when we sing that song which goes "To him that overcometh . . ." The expressionists would tell us that if we feel angry we should let ourselves go and enjoy the luxury and satisfaction that only a tantrum can bring us. We are to rip and to rave and rear at any time according to our feeling of the moment. It does not take much of hard thinking for us to know that there are impulses that must be curbed and controlled. Our asylums, our houses of correction, and our penitentiaries are filled with those tragic examples of men and women who have ruined their lives and ofttimes the lives of others by giving expression to that which should have been inhibited. The road of self-expression to any man has been a trail that has lead to crime and terminated in disgrace or death.

A Book of Wisdom says, "Speech is a messenger of the heart."

THE political campaign of the recent past has been interesting to us, as it has revealed to us in a very clear way the hearts of the people of this nation. From this revealment we sense that the "signal is a signal of danger"; danger, not from without, but rather from within.

The great war united us in a strong bond of fraternity bound by one endeavor, one goal and one purpose. And yet, through and from it we have emerged with a loss of our idealism, a loss of our tactfulness of approach to the problems of life. We smile upon crime. In general we tend not to inhibit, but rather to express self freely without reservation and without regard to the propriety of the expression.

History reveals the fact that the great endeavors of man have not been understood or appreciated until time has revealed them with a clarity of view. A decade passed before Abraham Lincoln was set forth as the peer of American citizenship and idealism. Only now are we beginning to appreciate the actual value of the idealistic and much-slandered war president, Woodrow Wilson. It is sad, and yet I am convinced that the history of the future will contain an attempt at the analysis of the insanity which has swept this nation in a post-war period that is not yet ended; a period that is characterized by the betrayal of the war president and his ideals by those who were members of his own party; a period characterized by racketeers and the gang rule because a nation fallen into a fool's security founded upon a fool's prosperity looked aside from their responsibilities and rights of citizenship; a period characterized by a political campaign permeated with the deadly virus of the scoffer, the liar, the hypocrite, and the slanderer.

The Talmud states that these four persons shall not enter paradise. If we see aright, then, when this generation has passed away, hell should be filled to overflowing. The slanderer injures three persons; himself, the one slandered, and the one who hears the slander.

Our fear is not in who shall sit in the White House

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

Lecture to Priesthood at Independence, Missouri, February 6, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

I.—Spiritual Goals

IF WE ARE TO MOVE FORWARD as a church we must have in mind certain spiritual goals. Any body of people who propose to accomplish anything in an organized and cooperative way which requires them to move forward must have visualized objectives. That is largely the meaning of the prophetic statement, "Where there is no vision the people perish." Where they see nothing ahead of them toward which they must press they fall into confusion and difficulty and wickedness and perish.

I was reading a book on natural history by a scientist recently in which he described a species of caterpillar known as the "procession caterpillar." At a certain time in the summer they start out across the garden in regular procession and according to their instinct they go forward one after the other in single file, but if they strike an obstacle of some kind they are deflected and may go off at a tangent, this way or that way, any way, just so they are going ahead. If some mischievous boy should take a stick and divert the head of the procession a little more and a little more and a little more until it comes around and joins up with the tail of the procession, they will just go around in a circle, around and around and around, all the time in motion, all the time going forward, but never getting anywhere. I am talking about caterpillars—but human beings act that way sometimes. The trouble with those caterpillars is that while they have an instinct that perhaps ninety-nine times out of a hundred will serve their purpose (they keep going until they find soft ground into which they can bore) they are not endowed with vision to see any particular objectives or goals towards which they are pressing. They can not see such goals in the first place, and in the second place, if they could see them, they would not appreciate their significance.

We are different. We were created to stand erect and look ahead: we can see physical objectives and shape our course; and we are endowed with reason and spiritual perception, by which we may determine the goals toward which we press in spiritual matters.

THE WORLD DEVOID OF SPIRITUAL GOALS

The trouble with the world at large today is that it has no spiritual goals. I can not think of a country in the world today that has an outstanding spiritual goal or ideal toward which it is endeavoring to press. The world therefore is in confusion. The only country I call to mind at all that has any definite goals is Russia. It does have very definite goals and a very well thought-out program of getting to them (and some of those goals are very fine), but their methods are so ungodly and so entirely unchristian and brutal that they hold no hope for humanity.

In the world generally the people have no spiritual ideals. They have only material ones. They want prosperity back again, and that is about all they want. A German writer in the American number of the Outlook magazine said, "Political parties in Germany are getting to be nothing more than empty vessels which used to contain the political and social philosophies of the people, but now are devoid of any great conception whatever to catch the imagination or arouse the enthusiasm of the masses." Consequently, Germany, like other nations, is in confusion, perhaps even worse than others. As Jeremiah said, "They have hewn out broken cisterns which can hold no water."

Take our own land, America. Can you name one outstanding spiritual goal that engages the attention of the American people at this time? I can not. I have sought diligently to find one, but if there is one it escapes me. Our forefathers who founded America had definite spiritual goals. They looked forward to religious liberty, to political liberty, and they sought to realize their goals in the great experiment in democratic government which they launched. People generally do not think about religious liberty now. What they want is liberty to be irreligious. Political freedom does not mean much. Politics has become a by-word. Democracy has lost its hold on the popular imagination. The people too often do not respect the Constitution and have little respect for Congress. Some people are even beginning to wish for a dictatorship. In other words, they have forgotten the old ideals and have found no adequate new ones, so far as the nation is concerned.

OUR ULTIMATE CHURCH GOAL

How about the church? What are our goals? What is our ultimate spiritual goal? Different members of the priesthood would give different definitions of what that goal is, but in all probability they would have about the same thing in mind. I would say that our ultimate goal is the salvation and development of human souls to the highest point to which they are capable of being developed. Here is an expression of our goal: "And he gave some, apostles; and some prophets; and some, evangelists, and some, pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, until we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Ephesians 4: 11, 12.) Paul here sets forth the objective for which all the machinery of the church is set up, the development of the Saints individually and collectively, to perfect manhood and womanhood in Christ Jesus.

Intermediate Goals

I wonder if our people ever forget the ultimate goal and intermediate goals of the church and fall into circles and just go around and around. There are intermediate goals that might be called enterprises or projects which will help us toward our ultimate goal, or, for purposes of analysis, we may call them intermediate goals toward which we shall move. There are two of them. President Smith stated them recently: (1) to "evangelize the world," and (2) to "Zionize the Saints,"—missionary work and pastoral work. That is what it spells. "Go preach the gospel in all the world." That is first. Then organize and develop the Saints in branches, districts, stakes, and finally in the center place, until eventually Zion is realized. Those are our two great goals in line with the main far-off goal, the realization of perfect manhood in Christ.

Unfortunately, we have in Independence individuals and probably entire families who never seem to give a thought to these goals. We have families who never apparently take any interest in missionary work. They do not contribute financially to the support of the missionaries' families. Prayers never ascend from their homes for the help of the missionaries. We have families living here in what we call Zion—calling it that in the hope of the city that is to be—who never seem to give a thought to our Zionic goal. They live here exactly as they would in Milwaukee or Denver—or Reno.

It is the province of you ministers to arouse such people. They have been diverted from the way. They have lost their vision. They go around in circles, like the "procession caterpillars"—to the shop or the farm in the morning, back home at night, to the shop in the morning, eat three times a day, go to bed. They have also a little round of worldly pleasures. They never lift their eyes any higher. It is the province of you ministers here in Independence—of all places on earth the most important place—to go out and arouse the people to a vision of the goals of this church. But first, of course, we must see those goals ourselves. We must keep them in mind and we must be moving toward them.

Preaching the Gospel

Take this matter of evangelizing the world, of going out to preach the gospel in all the world. I wonder if you men of the ministry are any of you going around in circles—a very good circle, perhaps, but a circle nevertheless. Do you go to prayer meeting, and preaching meeting, and priesthood meeting, and home; to prayer meeting and preaching meeting and priesthood meeting and home? Perhaps if you would lift your eyes and visualize this missionary goal your course might take you out from the prayer meeting or priesthood meeting into some of the suburbs of Independence or Kansas City to establish a mission, or to assist some one else who has already established one. I do not say that all of you could do that, but I say it is possible to some. If you would lift up your eyes and visualize our missionary goal, that is where it would take you, and the results of such experiences have been so obviously beneficial that the experiment is worth trying when we have the opportunity.

A few months ago I visited in Southern California the branch at Long Beach, meeting in a nice little church, but one that is too small for their active and growing congregation. They have a fine body of priesthood and a united membership. My mind went back twenty or twenty-five years ago to the time when I visited Los Angeles and with Brother Robert T. Cooper went out to Long Beach to a little mission that had been started there in some out-of-the-way hall. There was the beginning of the Long Beach Branch, and judging from appearances then you would not have given thirty cents for the prospects of that little mission. But just because devoted local men like R. T. Cooper, Peter Kauffman and others would go out to Long Beach to that little mission week after week today we have that branch.

I believe this congregation right here at Liberty Street Church where we are meeting is the result of a little mission. They used to call it Liberty Street Mission. During one General Conference when it was my business to appoint speakers I appointed one of our missionaries to preach here, but he declined and said, "When you find an appointment worth my attention I will go." But because that mission was worth somebody's attention it became organized eventually and moved into this beautiful chapel. I think Spring Branch had a similar start,

THE VISITING PRIEST

From the Viewpoint of One Who Visits

By E. P. Sanders

IN THE March 29 issue of the Herald I read a very interesting article by Ella Brackenbury Lambkin, entitled, "The Visiting Priest." I served as a priest in the church for ten years and as president of a quorum of priests for three years. I have always been interested in and have made quite a study of home visiting, and I believe that my observations, study, and experiences entitle me to make the following comments.

The question is asked: "What may we expect of the priest in his visits in the home?" A very natural question. What may we expect of the doctor who visits the home? What may we expect of the carpenter or other workman who comes to our home to perform a piece of work? Logically we expect each of these men to perform the task he comes to perform and do it well.

The priest is a professional man. A professional spiritual adviser or family relations expert—I like the latter term very much—and as such should be expected to know his job the same as the doctor or the carpenter. These latter men make their profession their life work, and so should the priest, not giving thought to ever being anything else. If he does this, he will take his work more seriously and it will be more effective.

The priest in his work in the home must be one of the best informed men in the church in economics, sociology, and hygiene. He must also be a student of human nature. He must be congenial, easy to meet and become acquainted with. His work calls for a sincere and sympathetic nature and requires that he be possessed of a high degree of tact. He meets no two conditions in his visiting that are exactly the same, and he must be able to read and adjust himself to varying situations instantly or else he will arouse antagonism and people will resent his call.

He must, as suggested, be a praying man, and should be more than willing to help the mother teach her children to pray. Prayer is an art as well as a necessity, and the priesthood should be highly efficient in that art. If the visits of the priest are resented, and they sometimes are, I am inclined to think it is because of a lack on his part rather than upon the part of the people he visits.

Most people, with but few exceptions, like to talk to and be advised by some one whom they feel knows their business and can help them. We send for the doctor because we need him. We send for the elder because we need him. Why not the priest?

What are family duties? Is it any business of the priest if the children are undernourished?

Some few years back the first quorum of priests in Kansas City Stake spent six months in the study of visiting and during that course of study the question of family duties was discussed at length with the result that a comprehensive list was compiled and adopted by the quorum. They said that the following should be classed as family duties and taught by the priest conditional upon his qualifications to teach them—prayer, care of children, hygiene, finances, relation of parents to children and children to parents, relation of the sexes, problems of proper housing, proper feeding, care of the body, relations to neighbors, problems of education, church relations, reading of proper literature, temperance, etc. Practically every phase of family and community life was listed as coming under the head of family duties and should be taught by the priest.

We agreed that in some of these duties it would not do for the priest to take the initiative, but to qualify himself and be informed along these lines and wait until he was consulted. I believe that the people should be educated to the fact that they need the priest in the same measure as they need the elder and that when they need advice along a certain line pertaining to family duty, they should send for him and talk it over with him and should be able to feel that the advice they receive comes from one of God's servants. I believe that the priest should take his work more seriously, and should qualify as a family relations expert.

Yes, the priest is important in the church, highly important for "God hath set" some in the church, and priests are among them.

When God has a task for a man to do, that man is tried; tried to the limit of his stand powers. His very soul is tested to the extent of his ability to stand, for God has said, "I will have a tried people." If this is true, we can easily deduce the fact that sorrow and grief will come to us as we become what God would have us be.—President Frederick M. Smith.

The Christ of Youth

By Merl B. Grover

"Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."—Luke 5: 4.

THE TEXT of which I am making use is a statement made by Jesus to Simon Peter, a young fisherman, whom he subsequently called to the office of apostle. In this brief bit of counsel is caught up a great philosophy of youth. "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught." To whom would these words appeal more than a young man? "Launch out into the deep!" Note a bit of daring, the appeal to youthful enthusiasm. Danger? Of course, but consider the reward, for "When they had done this, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes." And, indeed, what feat is to be accomplished without danger, what worth-while reward has ever been won without some man or men braving great danger?

We sing, "I would be brave for there is much to dare." The pages of history are full of accounts of youthful daring and triumphant winnings. The story of the boy David is of one who dared not once but many times—dared because, though the danger was great, the reward was always greater. Each one of the twelve apostles, when they accompanied Jesus to Judea to administer unto Lazarus, knew that in this undertaking, their chances for dying were far greater than their chances for living, yet they gladly went because if their lives were required, the thing for which they died would indeed be a sweet reward.

David Patton, in the early days of the Reorganized Church, was the first to give his life for the Lord's work in the latter day dispensation. He was a youth when he entered the work, and was still a young man when he died—filled with all the fire and vigor and glorious enthusiasm which is the heritage of all youth. David Patton knew that his path in this work was one fraught with danger and one that required real courage and daring. The danger he braved ultimately caused his death—yet who can say that he lost the cause for which he fought? He went down wrapped in that glorious spirit of exuberance which marks all the triumphs or losses of true youth. He, as did Simon, launched out into the deep and let down his nets. Though the sea in which he cruised was more dangerous than that of Simon, requiring his life, his response to the call was truly as noble.

There is a young man of this generation who has stirred admiration in the hearts of young folk throughout the entire world, more perhaps than any other figure in history. That young man is Charles A. Lindbergh. Many men have flown the Atlantic Ocean, so his high place in our hearts is not held alone by virtue of the feat, but by the characteristically youthful manner in which he did it. No press agent bally-hooed his preparation through the newspapers for months in advance. No company was organized to finance his flight. No others were asked to share the danger. Quietly, thorough in detail and preparation, Charles Lindbergh launched out alone and the news of his flight was almost unknown until his plane had vanished out above the blue stretches of the mighty Atlantic. Thirty-four hours later when he landed in Paris, the youth of the world silently applauded, because a mere boy had been the first to cross the Atlantic, and because he had "launched out into the deep" alone.

THERE ARE those who conceive of Jesus Christ as a righteous, dignified personality, one feared rather than sought out; one held in awe rather than in confidence. The youth of this church of this generation—modern youth if you please—have no such conception of the immortal Son of God. We see Him as a young man, filled with the same passionate zeal and enthusiasm as all youth, yet tempered with Divine wisdom. We see him as one who was strong enough physically to go into the temple and overturn the money changers' tables and bodily cast out the traders; strong enough mentally even at the age of twelve to confuse the learned scribes and doctors; strong enough spiritually that, just before the horrible agony of the cross, realizing the terrible suffering he was about to undergo, He said, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." We see him as a man so brave that when his friends, Lazarus and Mary, were in need of him, he immediately disregarded the danger of going down into Judea among the Jews who sought his very life. We see him as a young man in whose heart was such great human love for his mother, and such deep manly affection for his friends, that as he hung in unbearable agony on the cross and looked down upon the multitude of people, he spoke to his weeping mother and indicating John, said, "Mother, behold thy son," and to his sorrowing friend, "Be-

Sunset

POLLY had paced the floor of the living room until she was exhausted. Heart weary, mind weary, body weary, she dropped into a chair and rested her head in her hands. If only she could be the nurse upstairs, holding a little piece of cotton, handing an instrument to the doctor, doing any helpful thing! She could at least see his face then. This suspense was killing her.

In another chair huddled Mrs. Nelson, her dark eyes staring at nothing at all. Her face was as white as the marble of the fireplace. She had been crying. Not so Polly. She could not cry. The tears would not come. All she could do was walk and walk, and clench her fists hard against her as she implored God to spare him.

For three long days now Carrol had been very ill. Double pneumonia, Doctor Royce had pronounced it on Tuesday morning after his Monday afternoon exposure, "And a hard case of it."

That was the beginning of the fight between disease and scientific skill, and a human life was hanging in the balance. For more than twenty hours the little fellow had been in a stupor, his eyes glassy and unnatural from high fever, his breath coming in short, painful gasps, that almost tore Polly's heart out of her breast. Hour by hour she had listened to that hard breathing until it seemed she would hear it for ever, and hour by hour it had grown harder and tighter as the lungs filled with fluid. Carrol was in danger of choking to death.

For twenty hours also Miss James, the gentle-eyed nurse, had reigned upstairs where the baby lay in the big bedroom.

The shock of Carrol's sudden illness, and her responsibility in its cause had rendered Mrs. Nelson utterly useless. Most of the time she had remained in bed crying and praying until Polly had implored her not to feel so bad, explaining that no matter who had been there, Carrol might have made his escape into the cold out-of-doors.

"But I left the door unfastened," moaned the grandmother.

"I—I might have done that too," choked Polly. It had taken a big effort to say that.

"Don't—don't! Oh, Polly, you're too good!" Mrs. Nelson burst out through grateful tears. "You've been more than a daughter to me, better than either of my own daughters. You've tried hard to love me—oh, I've watched you trying. And I've been so ungrateful. I know I've caused you trouble and sorrow, and I'm—well, I can't tell you how sorry." She sobbed uncontrollably.

"There, don't cry, mother," soothed Polly. "It's all right." She hoped that Mrs. Nelson, too, wasn't going to be sick.

"No, it isn't all right," vehemently denied the other. "I've been nothing but a trouble and a source of worry to you ever since I came. And if Carrol gets well or if he—" her lips trembled so that she could not utter the word, "I intend—to—leave! I don't want to be a burden to anyone. I've been thinking of it for some time now—you don't need me, and Milly does. I'm going to her just as soon as this," and she waved her hand in the direction of the stair door, "is over."

And so for two days Sister Livingston and Edith had managed the household affairs of the Nelsons. Even now their low-toned conversation drifted in from the kitchen.

At times Polly worked feverishly for want of something to keep her busy, but always there was the thought of Carrol, and a great dread. Repeatedly she faced the issue. She tortured herself with the thought: If Carrol dies—what then? No smiling, blue eyes, no round little face, no baby laughter, no halting expressions. Horror-stricken she turned away from her mind's picture, loneliness and foreboding gnawing at her heart. "No! No!" she fiercely told herself: "God can't be so cruel!"

WHAT were they doing up there so long? Were they hurting her baby? Her mother heart wanted to drive them all out, Brad, the two doctors, and the nurse. They were doing him no good. Only God could save the child's life. Didn't they know that? Then she was walking again, back and forth, back and forth.

This morning Doctor Royce and Doctor Black were tapping Carrol's right lung, to drain the fluid that had been gathering there for tortuous hours. "It's the only thing we know that will save his life," they gravely told the father and mother, "and there's a question—" But they did not finish.

How long, oh, merciful heaven, it took them to drain one poor, little lung! For three quarters of an hour Polly had heard nothing from above but quiet footfalls and occasional low-toned words. Nobody on the stairs. Would Brad never come to tell them?

"Polly, my child," Sister Livingston's voice seemed far away and unreal. The young woman scarcely felt the two hands placed on her arms. Dimly she was aware of Edith's eyes, dark with concern, a firm hand, the smell of camphor.

And then she was sitting in the high-backed occasional chair, tossing her head back and forth, crying softly to herself, but there were no tears. "Brad! Brad! Brad! Brad!" she was saying over and over. And then she realized that it was his hands that held hers, not Sister Livingston's.

"Polly, dear, it's over," gently he told her.

"Over! Over! He—then I must see him!" she cried, struggling to rise. But he would not let her. Instead Brad took her in his arms, and sat on the lounge holding her tight. He said not a word, just gripped her to him, and the strength of his arms quieted her as it had often done before at times less critical than this. Presently he began in the way of one telling a story: "It was hard, Polly, seeing all the queer instruments and the doctors at work on his little body, and his pale baby face. But they were bringing life back to him. I kept reminding myself that. . . . The operation took so long that I had a chance to do a lot of thinking. In that hour, Polly, superficial things seemed to slip away from me, and I saw things as they are, dear, how priceless he is to us—to you and me."

Polly lay very quietly now.

"Then came my most humble moment," the low voice went on. "His white little face there, more like that of an angel in heaven than our little Carrol—don't you remember we named him that because he was our song of joy and exultation? . . . And when I thought of myself, his father, how small I felt! It made me think of Brother Evans's talk the other night—about humility and other Christlike things."

Polly was crying now unashamedly. "Is—is—he—all right?" she choked.

"He's still under the anæsthetic. Doctor Royce says the operation went fine. If the lung just doesn't gather again."

"It mustn't! It mustn't!" desperately.

"S-s-sh, s-sh! We must be brave, Polly," and Brad slipped her back against the pillows on the lounge. "Much depends on our keeping hold of ourselves right now, dearest. But I'm wondering," the soothing voice went on after a moment's hesitation. "There's something about this reminds me of the lines in the hymn, 'The arm of flesh will fail you, ye dare not trust your own.' Would you, Polly?—I'd like to pray over it—all of us."

His wife nodded her head.

"Ma," Brad turned to his mother, "will you get Sister Livingston and Edith? And let all of us kneel in prayer together."

It was the first time, Polly knew, that anyone besides herself had ever heard Brad pray. They all took their turn, Brad, Sister Livingston, Polly, Mrs. Nelson, Edith, imploring a merciful heavenly Father to act in his own wisdom, sparing the life of the suffering little one upstairs, or taking him home as seemed best.

It seemed an eternity before Doctor Royce allowed them to see their baby. Then Brad led Polly into the room.

The little sleeper had not stirred since the operation. Eagerly Polly stepped forward, and then stopped appalled. How blue his forehead was! How pinched his nose! She wanted to fall on her knees beside the bed, take him in her arms, cuddle him, but Brad's hand on her arm and the nurse's quiet efficiency restrained her. The doctor sat immovable at the head of the bed, his hand on the diminutive wrist, his keen eyes noting every breath.

Wordlessly Polly turned to her husband and hid her face. There was nothing she could do. She felt almost in the presence of the immortal. She did not see the doctor shake his head in her direction, but as Brad started to lead her away, she turned and caught a significant look between the doctor and the nurse. Instantly she interpreted that look. It filled her with a horrible fear; it meant plainer than words could have told her that her baby was not doing well. Again she looked at the still white face. Even as he lay there, he seemed to have little in common with the earth earthly.

Sheer panic swept over her. They thought he was going to die. They had done all they could. They knew nothing more to do. She wanted to shriek. And yet there was nothing—nothing she, Carrol's mother, could do. Dumbly she bowed her head.

Nothing she could do? Something flashed over her. Where had that feeling of quiet, restful assurance come from? She knew exactly what to do. She would be the strong one now, for she was sure—oh, so sure. It was a Brad with tear-filled eyes who stumbled after her down the stairway.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Brother Evans must come," she turned on her husband as they closed the door. "God will bless us through Brother Evans—I know he will, Brad." She spoke confidently. "We are taught to call the elders. As you said, the arm of flesh has failed us, and we, too, have failed. But there is always God."

ONE hour, two hours, three hours. Would five o'clock never come? They could not reach Brother Evans at his work, but Sister Evans had told them by telephone that he would come with another elder as soon as he could after five o'clock. And all during that day Polly's faith buoyed the others up.

Only once during those hours did Carrol move. The doctor and nurse did not leave his side. "It's gathering again," the physician muttered in an undertone to Brad, but Polly heard. Once while they were waiting he said: "I've seen people miraculously healed through prayer, brother, but this baby—!"

Then their watch ended. Brother Evans came, his kindly, Scotch face eloquent with sympathy. Silently he shook hands all around, and then asked them to come upstairs. First they knelt about the bed, and Brother Evans's short prayer gave unreserved expression to his simple wish, that the will of God be done, and that, if possible, the child be spared to his sorrowing, young parents. Then gently he anointed the still, baby head. The confirmation prayer by Brother Elmer Smith, the second elder, Polly thought, was the most beautiful appeal she had ever heard. In it had her faith rested, and she was not disappointed.

But as he prayed Polly ceased to hear the rise and fall of his voice. The eyes of her soul were opened upon a country, pleasing and fair. It was summer there. Flowers bloomed at her feet, a profusion of flowers of all colors. The sky was very blue and there were large, white, fleecy clouds. It was a restful place. Across the way, seeming not far, stood buildings of a radiant kind of stone. Then she seemed aware of the gleeful shouts of children at play, and wee boys and girls were romping among the flowers. As she watched one drew nearer her than the rest, a golden-haired boy, busy picking blossom after blossom. He raised a smiling, joyful face to hers—Carrol! He was dressed in a little white suit. When he saw her, he seemed to drift nearer, and in a small rosy palm he offered her a single white blossom. "For you, Mummie!" he said in his childish treble.

The peaceful vision seemed to linger with her for some minutes, making her supremely happy and content, then she was suddenly conscious that she was kneeling beside her son's bed and that Elder Smith was asking God to bless all of them, each one as he deserved, and especially to be with the parents of this child, giving them strength and courage. He, too, besought the Divine One that the little boy be spared, but he also asked for each one of them resignation to His will. He prayed that if it was God's will to relieve the little one of earthly responsibilities, joys, and sorrows, He take him home to Himself according to His promise: "Those that die in me shall not taste of death, but it shall be sweet unto them."

These words seemed to ring in Polly's ears: "Shall not taste of death, . . . sweet unto them." How blind—how selfish—how craven she had been! A thousand reproaches flooded her consciousness. Carrol was their gift from God, and if God chose to reclaim his gift only a short time after it was given, why—it was his to take. Already the tiny body had suffered more than death—and after all, this was not death, but life. "Shall not taste death, . . . sweet . . . sweet!" Carrol in that beautiful, joyous, happy place. Oh, she would not hold him here through her own selfishness. No. No.

POLLY arose with the others, sharply conscious of the little, drawn face above the coverlet, conscious—oh, too, acutely conscious—that even now her little son, her firstborn, part of her life and breath and being, was approaching the borderland of that happy place of which she had been blessed a glimpse.

The doctor was again in his place at the bedside.

"May the Lord bless you, Polly, with his loving care, and buoy you up in your time of trial." Elder Evans took both her hands between his strong, rough ones. The look in his eyes was one of calm faith and trust in the heavenly Father. "We'll go now, and if you need us—at any time, just call." His voice seemed to come from far away.

Polly felt herself in a world apart from everyone, everything, except Carrol. The rest looked strange and unhappy and ill at ease. They were afraid. Couldn't they understand that God was good and kind, and that Jesus himself said: "Suffer little children to come unto me." Carrol was a little child, and he was going to Jesus, . . . going soon.

Her voice was clear as a bell. They all heard her question: "Could I be alone with him for a few minutes?" It was all they could do. Surely they would grant her request, and leave her alone with her son.

The doctor hesitated, looked at the child, then nodded to the nurse, and arose from his chair.

"But Polly darling—" Why was there such concern, such anxiety, in Brad's voice? Ah, he didn't understand—he couldn't. He had not been blessed as representative of this great nation, but of what has happened and is happening among the masses of the people of this nation. Slander can not be hurled broadside against the candidates of the political parties of this country without resulting in a distinct breakdown of confidence and of respect for authority. Even as an old monk demonstrated that feathers cast to the four winds could never be recovered, so likewise must we enter into the new administration with the recognition that the ranks of the citizenship of this nation are weakened because of the undermining done by obnoxious campaigning. The story of the Red Revolution in Russia demonstrates the easy manner in which the people can be caught up and moved to destruction and revolution. With the Kerensky government seemingly quite substantially in power and determined to carry on the war on the side of the allies of the German government simply herded into two or three coaches a number of the Russian radicals who were exiled from Russia and living in Berlin, locked the doors of these coaches and sent the train toward Moscow. When it arrived, the padlocks were removed and in three days this small group of Bolsheviks, crying aloud on the street corners of Moscow their fiery doctrines, had overthrown the Kerensky governmnet and brought Russia definitely into an era of deadly destruction and disregard for Deity.

No president has ever needed your support as President Franklin D. Roosevelt will need it. Unfortunately he was elected president, not by a majority constituted by Democrats convinced that the principles of their party were best, neither by a majority of members of the other parties who had become convinced to the rightness of Democratic principles, or to the superior ability of Franklin D. Roosevelt; but rather by a vast throng of insane peoples, motivated by a desire—the desire to express themselves as they felt for the moment, the desire to have a change, any change, just so it would be something different. This vast throng of people was neither moved by advice nor careful consideration, and such a class is always dangerous; dangerous if it is for you and dangerous if it is against you; for it is from such a group of mal-contents or expressionists that there will first arise the clamor and the howl to down the new president in his earnest and worth-while attempts for betterment of this country. They would be the first to join in a new hope and to leave the old ship as she is steadfastly battling her way onward. Their activity and endeavor will but plunge the nation into chaos.

It has been with pride we have read the report that Herbert Hoover has written his message of congratulations and pledged his allegiance to Roosevelt. You and I would expect him to do about as he has done. Franklyn D. Roosevelt expected about such a committment and he, in turn, would have made the same had he been given to play the role of the defeated. The need this day of this nation is for the united mustering of the strength of her citizenship in a harmonious endeavor during the coming administration.

These same elements of destruction; these same principles leading to decay which we have been able to view with clarity during the recent political campaign are the same factors and forces with which this church must contend, and which she must master in her progressive endeavors.

In the language of our point of departure, it is truly essential, then, that as citizens of the nation, as members of the church, our spirits must be restrained that we might be lighted into the city with walls intact, a city fortified and strengthened. A book from which I like to quote tells me that if silence is becoming to a wise man, how much more so is it to a fool?

when one of your number would walk out east of Independence week after week and hold prayer meetings, and later Sunday school, and finally preaching meetings. There are a thousand places in America just as promising today as Long Beach and these nearer points were.

I realize of course that most of you men are busy with local work and perhaps can not thus move out. That does not excuse those who might. But it is yours to keep alive in the hearts of the Saints of Independence the missionary spirit. I think some of our men have been mistaken in the past. They have argued, "If we can work out a real demonstration of Zionic living here in Independence, we can forget all about missionary work until that job is done." I thought then and think now that was altogether wrong. A people who forget missionary work can never build Zion.

Pastoral Work

The work in which you are most directly interested is pastoral work, the Zionic endeavor. That is more important to you because you are the "standing ministers" to the church in our work and particularly so right here in Independence where pastoral work would be expected to have its highest flowering and most beautiful fruitage. You have the watchcare of the Saints. It is yours not only to arouse them to a vision of Zion but to keep it in their minds. I know that sometimes people think this is a poor time to talk about Zion. They argue that if we have not failed, we have at least encountered a terrible setback. We can not advise people to gather here right now and we can not push the matter of stewardships now. We can only fight to get out from our present difficulties and organize ourselves for a forward movement. But this is a time to keep in mind the vision and keep before our eyes the goal, lest we, like the world, fall into hopeless confusion and never again catch that vision.

So it may be possible that if some of you who find a good deal of pleasure and profit in going to prayer meetings and preaching meetings and priesthood meetings and then home, will lift up your eyes and catch the goal, your vision may lead you out of these priesthood meetings and into the home of your next-door neighbor and from his home on down the line, because the commandment is given in section 17 that the priests in particular are to visit the homes of the Saints and teach them to pray and arouse them in their duties and give them the vision of Zion, teaching them to live Zionic lives. If you will just vision the goals of the church, will not that vision take you out somewhere into the homes of Saints where under present conditions you are so greatly needed?

Faith and Courage Needed

There is one beautiful thing about pressing forward towards the goal, it gets bigger and more visible as we go forward. I will note here in conclusion some of the qualities that we shall need in our forward movement. Of course we can not cover many of them tonight. They will be developed as we proceed. I will name two qualities we are certainly going to need. We need them now and may need them in greater quantity in the future: they are faith and courage.

I admire the Apostle Paul. He stands up through the New Testament pages, a colossal figure. We hardly ever preach without using some of his texts. He said, "This one thing I do: forgetting past things (no matter how many blunders we have made; no matter how many calamities have come upon us; no matter how much difficulties overwhelm us) I press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." "This one thing I do!" No matter what happened to Paul, that was his habit.

He said that he had been beaten with stripes five times, forty stripes lacking one. I do not know why they left off that one. They were generous in those things in those days. Anyone who had been beaten even once with the kind of stripes they laid on then—the cat of nine tails, each lash weighted with lead—was likely to find his spirit broken. "Five times Paul went through that, three times he was beaten with rods; once he was stoned (stones are awfully hard things on human flesh); he was shipwrecked, in perils among his own countrymen, among the heathen, and on top of it all he said he had had "daily the care of all the churches." Some of us know what that is, and at one time he said that all the churches of Asia had turned away from him.

And yet, no matter what happened to him or to the church, he rose up out of it courageously and said, "This one thing I do—I press forward." It took courage and faith to do that. We need that kind of men, and we will need them more in the future. We need many such men. So far as humanity is concerned, Paul is the one man who, more than anyone else, saved the Christian church in that day. Who will save the church in Independence today? It will not be those men who work diligently and courageously for a day, a week, or six months, and then quit. You must be men who will not give up, who will not quit, and who will not turn aside.

I know we all have our periods of personal discouragement. That is human nature. We have to take that into account and realize that we will have them, and realize, too, that we will come up out of them again. Brother T. W. Chatburn used to say, "The depth of the ocean is not measured from the top of the highest wave nor the bottom of the deepest trough of the sea." God does not judge us from the highest height we reach or the lowest depths to which we fall. He considers life as a whole. The boatman down in the trough of the sea has this consolation, he knows there is coming all the power of old ocean, which will lift him up again and no power on earth can stop him from being lifted up. And the man in this church who gets down in the spirit of discouragement should realize that all the power of God is coming presently to his rescue and will lift him up again.

One of our apostles last June had one of these periods of profound discouragement. He went into the little branch in Lancaster, Wisconsin, to their conference, and in the prayer meeting he sat down under the spirit of discouragement. But during the meeting the spirit of the Lord came upon him and he bore this testimony: "New hope came to me. I can not describe the experience. I can only say, as I sat under the ministry of the spirit, there came to me its reassuring power. It filled the whole of my being. It brought the conviction, the church shall go on. This does not say that no man will fail. Anyone of us may fail, or any number of us, but the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints shall go on, and under God's outstretched hand shall finish the work he has called it to do. This was the assurance of the spirit that Sunday in June—The church shall go on!"

I think we can join with that apostle in the rededication that he then made: "With the assurance came the occasion for the rededication of what little I have and am to the unfinished task of the church. So that be the time long or short for me, I can but give to the cause the best that I have."

That was an apostle, leaving his home and family and children, burdened with debt, going out into the field and receiving this baptism of assurance, making this resolution. He has a right to expect that we men who live in Independence and are at home shall, under a similar spirit of courage and faith and dedication, look after the converts that such men as he, with great sacrifice, shall divert from the snares of the world and turn their faces toward Zion.

hold thy mother." In short, we youth see Jesus as a youth, possessed of all the great ambitions, impulses, passions and eagerness which characterize us all, differing only that in him, all these things were tempered by an infinite wisdom.

There are always those who would criticize the actions of the young. They believe that this generation is headed straight toward hell. In every act, decision, or effort made by the young, they see something to criticize, something that should not be. Such people, had they lived in Christ's time, upon witnessing him cleanse the temple would no doubt have immediately pronounced him radical. When he condemned the scribes and Pharisees, those people would perhaps have thrown up their hands and deplored such hasty action. And had they been present when Christ said to Peter, "Launch out into the deep," they must surely have shaken their experienced heads and counseled Peter to remain near the shore where, even though there were no fish to be caught, there was no danger to be braved, and no chances to take.

There is nothing that appeals more to any young man or woman in the world than to be permitted to "Launch out into the deep." We want to go forward in our own vigorous and enthusiastic way. If our methods seem radical, or hasty, or fiery, remember our own conception of the Jesus of Youth. President Elbert Smith once said, "Give the young folk elbow room." That is all we ask. Remember, please, that whatever may be your idea of modern youth and its ideals, nevertheless we worship, love and believe in Jesus Christ as we see him. We believe that he would have us apply to ourselves today the command which he gave to the young fisherman so many centuries ago, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught."

with a taste of the sweetness of death unto life.

Gently: "Wait for me, dearest, just outside the door—just a few minutes. Then you may come in. But I want to be alone with him a little while."

Uncertainly he turned away. Polly remained standing at the foot of the bed until the hall door softly closed. Then she moved nearer. She walked along the bedside toward Carrol. It seemed rather a long way. For a moment she stood looking into the diminutive face. She saw the little parched lips, the pinched nose, the place in his cheek where a dimple once played. The rise and fall of the coverlet as breath came and went was scarcely perceptible.

Slowly she sank into the doctor's chair. "A little white flower," she intoned. And again, "'A little white flower . . . for mother."

Nothing more for a long time. The doctor and nurse had been willing to leave for a few minutes because they knew they had done all they could. Carrol was in the care of God now, and God knew best.

She touched the tiny hand that had so many times patted her cheek or clung to her skirt. Suffering had taken away some of the chubbiness, but as Polly nestled it in her own warm palm, she pictured this little hand picking flowers, beautiful, heavenly flowers.

Then, like a benediction, through the western window there fell squarely over her baby a shaft of sunlight. The setting sun had broken his mist prison of the long day to tell a gray old world good night.

How beautiful the baby face in the light, golden, celestial. It was no wonder that Jesus loved little children. Polly was content to put her own face on the pillow near Carrol's and to murmur into the shell-like ear, "Mother's precious little son! . . . She'll miss you."

And so it was a few minutes later that Brad found them.

Faith

Faith is not a sixth sense by which we apprehend realities for which we have no other evidence. It is a capacity which we possess as human beings of appreciating the true significance of the realities with which we are in contact at all times. It is not a substitute for our other methods of knowledge. Rather is it our way of unifying what these other methods bring us piecemeal. Without faith, no one of the great convictions that make life worth living would be possible.—William Adams Brown, in Pathways to Certainty.

Missionary Finds Helpful Spirit in His Field

By W. A. Smith

Last November I was called to go to De Soto, Kansas. There I had held a few meetings a short time before, leaving S. C. Smith, an old-time missionary, who continued to preach to them for a time.

October 23, Brother Baker, his family, Brother S. C. Smith and I went to De Soto, holding a few meetings. There I baptized five candidates into the church, Brother Baker and little daughter, Brother and Sister Mitchell and little son, Robert. Sister Mitchell had been sick for about three months and under the doctor's care. Brother Baker drove his car up to the door of their home, and Sister Mitchell was carried out of her bed, placed in the car, and taken to the river two miles away. Brother S. C. Smith had charge of the service, and we sang a hymn. Then Brother Smith prayed and as he did so his prayer was answered. God's loving Spirit rested upon all who stood on the bank of the river.

After baptizing the other four, we took Sister Mitchell out of the car and led her into the clear water to bury her in the watery grave that she might come forth in newness of life. During this ordinance God was with us in power. Then we drove back to her home, put her in bed, and Brother Smith and I confirmed her a member of the church and kingdom of God. Then we administered to her. This was on Sunday, and the next Tuesday, I received a letter from her in which she said: "Brother Smith, I have received a wonderful blessing. I am up and about the house." On the following Sunday we went back to that community. She came out to church and we went home with her and her family for dinner. She helped with the meal.

This sister made the thousandth candidate whom I have baptized into the church. She and her companion are mother and father of sixteen adopted children. It is no wonder that she was blessed. She has two little boys with them now. We shall never forget that day.

February 4, of this year I left my home at Independence, Missouri, and took the train at Kansas City for Auburn, to visit the home of Brother and Sister O. L. D'Arcy. Brother D'Arcy is president of that district. On Sunday morning, the fifth, they took me in their car to Fairfield, one hundred and forty miles away. The weather was bitterly cold, but we arrived at Fairfield church at eleven o'clock. It was sacrament day and on the platform sat Branch President Chapin and Brother Charles Teeter. We had a fine meeting and at 2.30 p. m. Brother D'Arcy gave an inspiring sermon. Then we drove home.

I assisted Brother Chapin with meetings for nearly three weeks, feeling blessed. Some nonmembers were interested in the message. We have a noble little band of Saints there and I learned to love them. Brother H. F. Chapin, their president, is a good, gentle-spirited man who is like a brother to all.

February 23, Brother Charles Teeter took me in his car to Selden, Kansas, where his Brother Willis Teeter and family live. We also have a few members at that place and had meetings in the Teeter home. I expect to call on them again in the near future if possible.

Then February 27, Brother Charles Teeter took me to Eustis, Nebraska, to call on Brother Ernest Keller and his sister, Henrietta. We began meetings in their cozy little church, and I was happily surprised to find so fine a band of members there. Our loving Father was with me from the first sermon and all through the meeting for nearly three weeks. My experiences there are among the most pleasing in my missionary life. Though there is no priesthood member at Eustis and consequently there was no one to help me, I had the faith and prayers of the members. Sunday, March 5, was a very busy day. We had Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at eleven, and at twelve forty I led four into the waters of baptism. We had lunch at 1.30 p. m. An hour later we confirmed the candidates members of the church and had sacrament meeting. The Lord blessed the Saints with his Spirit in this service; they had not partaken of the sacrament for some time. At eight o'clock in the evening I preached, blessed one child, and administered to one person.

March 12, four more candidates were baptized into the church, an aged brother, and three young men. All were dressed in white, and I, too, wore a white suit. After baptizing them, I felt so good standing there in the crystal water that I told the gathering I was reminded of the scene nineteen hundred years ago when John baptized the Lord in the watery grave. While standing there I repeated the first verse of the hymn, "God Is Marshaling His Army." A nonmember woman who stood near told a good sister that that was the most sacred baptismal service she had ever witnessed.

Still I am desirous of pressing on, of telling the gospel story to people, and leading them into the waters of baptism. I bade Eustis Saints good-bye, March 14, after having preached seventeen sermons there.

We began meetings at North Plate, March 15, where Brother E. R. Sivits is president. A good little group of Saints is there, and they responded well to the services. At North Platte as well as in all other places, I felt very much at home. The people were kind and good, and all enjoyed the services.

I find, brother and sisters, that wherever I go there is a loving spirit in the church. I believe God is blessing his people with his helpful influence. I love the gospel and the church, and pray that God will continue to speed the right.

Thankful at Finding the Truth

By H. S. Ayers

I am glad to have this opportunity to testify of the goodness of our Lord. I was baptized last August by Apostle J. F. Curtis at Bon Accord, Alberta, about twenty miles north of Edmonton, just a few days after the conference held at Edmonton. I had never before heard one of the ministers of the church of Jesus Christ, but I had been looking and praying for light, and I knew that I had been led to the right place.

I thank God that now I am one of his disciples, and my desire is to love and serve him all my life. I am sure that if we follow the words of Jesus, we will be blessed accordingly.

I want to ask the prayers of the Saints that my faith will continue strong and that I may have the power of expressing my desire to serve the Lord. My prayers are for the advancement of the church.

MULHURST, ALBERTA.

Sister Marida Irish, who is in the sanatorium at Howell, Michigan, would appreciate letters from Saints who have the time and feel inclined to write to her. Address Miss Marida Irish, Howell, Michigan, Care M. S. S.

Prayer and Testimony

Song of Appreciation

By Thomas G. Walmsley

FOR a troubl'd world midst sinful blight
My Savior left the realms of light,
Through glory born His message given
To lead us up to God in Heav'n—
To God in Heav'n.

His living words in love proclaim'd
Fell in true hearts and error sham'd.
Through tumult of both land and sea
His blessed voice speaks peace to me—
Speaks peace to me.

Some many years ago, they say,
Evil hands took His life away,
And raised Him up where all could see,
The Prince that reigns eternally—
That reigns eternally.

Close tombed His body lay at rest.
His followers ne'er quit the quest
Of life of which he spake alway.
Hark! Angels rolled the stone away—
The stone away.

An Easter gift that's crowned with love,
A light that lifts us up above
The sordid things of life below,
Quickened by its radiant glow—
Its radiant glow.

Clothed with flesh His Spirit came
To break the shackles of my shame.
Through love, He made me love His all—
That hearkened to the Spirit call.

A roughened path His feet made smooth.
He lifted me from the erring groove
Of crafty scribe and priestly sham
And bade me serve the Great I am.

Taught me to trust, repent, and live,
Through water's birth my sins forgive.
Earnest of my inheritance felt
While 'neath the Spirit's power I've knelt.

To death He gave His life for me,
That from its grasp I might be free,
At judgment's bar—to find the power,
Shed forth in that eternal hour.

Isolated One Worships at World-wide Prayer Time

By Lewis R. Adkins

Each Wednesday evening, prayer meeting time throughout the land, I have formed the habit of reading some passage from one of the three standard books of the church and then kneeling with the Saints everywhere to pray for the uplift and good of all. On a recent Wednesday night I was reading the third chapter of Church History, volume 1, giving the account of the ordination of Joseph Smith, jr., and Oliver Cowdery and their association with the heavenly Being. As I read I was impressed to kneel and pray for the raising up of a Mrs. C. E. Raymond, of Newcastle, Wyoming, that she might be spared to help do a great work in her city similar to the work the women are doing for the church in Independence.

Through my own suffering I have learned that obedience to God is the keynote of accomplishing the work at hand, and now I hope always to be faithful without having to be driven to faithfulness. I know that to resist evil adds strength to my will power. I pray that the Saints everywhere shall be victorious over sin.

Finds Workers in Saint Louis County

By James L. Gray

About three months ago we left good old Independence on account of sickness in my sister's home here.

I believe that the sending of the Heralds to the different branches each week is a step forward, and the men who sell them here in the branches are go-getters. The churches here are very spiritual, and are good groups with which to work. Those in charge of Saint Louis County are workers and constantly on the job. I speak for some of them every Sunday, and am glad to help in a small way.

We shall never forget the wonderful, God-fearing men and women in Independence and in the church elsewhere.

OVERLAND, MISSOURI, 2655 Chaucer.

Request Prayers

Claire Van Eaton, of Yakima, Washington, desires the prayers of the church in behalf of her mother, Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, who for two months has been very ill. She has been blessed under administration, and her children trust it is the Master's good pleasure to spare her to her family for yet a season.

Sister Bertha E. Buttery, of Newfane, Vermont, asks the Saints to pray for her twelve-year-old granddaughter who a year and a half ago suffered an attack of infantile paralysis. The child was in the hospital for three weeks and the Saints prayed earnestly for her. Then it was thought she had recovered, but after a time she began to grow crooked, one shoulder becoming twisted and the opposite hip. Her people have taken her to the best of doctors who say she will continue to grow in this way until she has attained her full size. By that time her family fears she will be hopelessly crippled. Sister Buttery also desires prayers for her daughter who is mentally afflicted.

Miss Bessie Guyer, of Port Elgin, Ontario, is grateful because she has been permitted to return home from the sanatorium where she spent some time, and she asks the prayers of the church that the heavenly Father will further bless her by restoring her to good health.

Elder J. C. Crabb, of Mondamin, Iowa, one of the oldest church members, and a missionary of many years service, requests the prayers of the Saints. He is growing feeble and has been quite ill. Brother Crabb was at one time a member of the Standing High Council, and was always an able defender of the faith.

Perry Shaw, Rey Hotel, San Fernando, California, was a member of the Evergreen Branch at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, forty years ago, and would like to communicate with old friends and relatives. He is now working in the mission garden at San Fernando among palms and flowers.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's Beacon Light

The Evergreen Branch, Detroit, Michigan, of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, was organized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Shaw, April 2, 1891, by R. C. Evans and H. Rathbun. George W. Shaw was elected the first president. The names listed on the branch records at that time numbered sixteen, and of this list just six names remain on the present records. The election of branch officers was held every six months at that time, and the numbers of the branch continued to increase until today they have a membership of approximately 1,950. The record tells us that in 1900, a group of women organized as a ladies' aid, coming out of a previous group called the Mission Church Building Society, and for the past thirty-three years this women's division has continued to grow and has been indeed an active group in the branch. The first record they have of a choir was about 1894. In later years the name of the branch was changed to Detroit Branch.

A youth conference and leadership convention opened April 1, and continued until April 10, inclusive, under the auspices of Detroit Branch at First Church, 5858 Fourth Avenue. It began with a three-act comedy sponsored by the Amaci Tia Club, "The Three Pegs," given by a cast of nine girls under the direction of Thelma Dowker.

President F. M. McDowell and Apostle Edwards arrived prepared to teach, lead, and aid the convention in every way, and all members of the branch were urged to avail themselves of the class work and meetings.

On Sunday, April 2, the noon and evening meals were served at the church, and during the week an evening meal is being served each day. On Saturday, April 8, and Sunday, April 9, the noon and evening meal was served, and on Monday, April 10, the young people's banquet was held at 7 p. m.

Detroit Branch has a group of young people temporarily organized under the leadership of Lloyd Heaviland, and they have appointed several committees. They had a successful meeting the evening of March 21, and after reports were made by various committees and details of arranging for the coming convention worked out, the young people were entertained by Mayme McBrayne, of Windsor, who took charge of the evening's games.

Special musical numbers have been arranged for meetings throughout the convention, and the Detroit massed choir was asked to sing both Sunday afternoons.

Ava, Missouri

Ava Branch officers for the coming year have been chosen as follows: Branch president, Elder James Dobson; solicitor, S. Spease; treasurer, Sister L. Morris; musical director, Alvin Dobson; church school director, F. V. Elliott; assistant, Grant Dobson; secretary, Ruby Dobson; musical director, Sister Gomer Maitland; director department of recreation and expression, Eldon Morris; assistant, Margaret Gettys; secretary, Audrey Wells; janitor, Ralph Gettys.

The department of recreation and expression has been meeting in private homes during the winter months. They have a splendid group of people who are earnestly striving to develop themselves, mentally and spiritually. They are studying the Book of Mormon, public speaking, and different phases of writing. Quite a number of nonmembers are interested. On the evening of Friday, March 17, they met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. Wells. Brother Spease taught the lesson on the Book of Mormon. Several remarked that it was the most inspirational lesson he had ever taught. An unusual number of nonmembers were present and were favorably impressed.

The young people took for a project this year the raising of funds to pay bus fares of two splendid young people who otherwise could not attend high school. They have held socials, staged a literary program, given a play, also had a wiener roast. The last was held at the home of Brother and Sister Gomer Maitland. The wieners were donated by the Maitlands. A good time was reported.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Wells, formerly of Red Oak, Iowa, moved into this community last fall, and have been a real help in social and church activities.

Brother Haden preached two splendid sermons during January. His visits are encouraging and are much appreciated. Brother Simmons also preached a good sermon here one evening in February.

London, Ontario

3444 Maitland Street

During the latter part of January the upper auditorium and vestibules of the church were redecorated in soft cheerful tones of color, harmonizing with the interior surroundings.

In this beautiful atmosphere, a two-week series of special missionary services were held, commencing Sunday, February 5, with Apostle D. T. Williams, who preached every evening and concluded on the following Sunday. The second week of services were held with Elder Percy Farrow who ended the series Sunday evening, February 19. Apostle D. T. Williams spoke on several phases of the teachings and philosophies of Jesus Christ as interpreted by Latter Day Saintism, climaxing his sermons with a wonderful testimonial treatment of the subject, "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint."

Elder Percy Farrow followed up with a magnificent treatise of the doctrine and teachings of the church, beautifully illustrated with lantern slides. Workers hope that the effort put forth will bear fruit in the near future, for there were quite a number of nonmembers interested. The speakers were assisted in the services by the choir, orchestra, and young people.

On the evenings of February 27 and 28, members of the Swastika Dramatic Club presented a three-act comedy-drama in the parlors of the church. The parts taken by the various players exhibited exceptional good work in dramatics, which was a credit to the coach, Louise Judkins. The music was provided by the orchestra. The presentations were well attended and received. The plays put on by this club each year have gained an enviable reputation during the last seven years. They are presenting this play at other churches and centers during the ensuing weeks. The cast was composed of Muriel MacGregor, Mary Rankin, Madeline Timbrell, Beatrice Ridley, Gertrude Timbrell, Lincoln Rankin, Nelson Ridley, Doctor D. A. Campbell, Chester Abell, and George Nethercott. The chairman and founder of the club "Uncle" John Vasbinder was unable to attend because of a lingering illness, which has confined him to his home for some time. The players therefore gathered at his residence one evening and gave a private presentation of the play for him.

Under the auspices of the church school orchestra, the entire orchestra of the Dundas Centre United Church, directed by Stanley Byfield, presented a musical treat in the form of a concert in the upper auditorium of the church, March 13. The orchestrations were interspersed with individual numbers that were highly appreciated. The artists participating were Harold Neal, violin solo; Miss Mathews, organ selection; R. Neal, piano selection; Florence Ebsworthy, vocal solo; R. Neal and W. Alder, trumpet duet; T. White and R. Gardner, clarinet and flute duet; Gerta Hunter, readings. This was possibly one of the largest orchestras ever heard in our local church, and the program consisted of popular classics.

London lost one of its oldest and most respected members, March 13, in the person of Sister Malinda Lott, wife of George H. Lott. She was in her seventy-seventh year. Although in poor health for some time she passed away very quickly at the last with just a few days of sickness. The funeral was held with Elder J. F. Winegarden preaching the funeral sermon and Elder J. E. MacGregor assisting at the service.

Brother and Sister Jack Mills had their infant daughter, Marion Flora, blessed recently, Elders Gray and MacGregor officiating.

The Royal Oaks Bible Class, composed of senior members of the church school, held their annual banquet and social gathering, March 21. More than fifty sat down to a sumptuous feast attractively prepared by the women. Bert Richardson, teacher of the class, was the chairman. Extemporaneous speeches by the men revealed talent in oratorical attainments hitherto unknown. Vocal solos, instrumental solos, readings and sketches were enjoyed. Some participating were over seventy years of age. The oldest member present was Brother John Newton, age eighty-eight. Specially composed songs were sung in honor of Sister Mame Harrison and Brother Harry Ward, for long service in teaching a class and faithful work in deacon duties respectively. The evening was successful in the good will engendered, and spirit of cooperation enjoyed.

Bisbee, Arizona

Seven Baptized—New Spirit in Local Work

Bisbee Branch is active. Seven were baptized March 19, at Douglas, twenty-two miles away, since Bisbee has no font. Brother J. F. Wiles, of California, stopped here a few days, giving those interested in the gospel convincing assurance and deep conviction.

A greater work is now outlined for local members. The unity of the priesthood has proved most effective. All are busy in their office and calling. Non-members are becoming interested in the latter-day work.

Sunday school has taken on a new spirit and is growing in numbers. The branch has grown in membership, and each member is attending services oftener. Other services are being planned. "Cooperation with the church" is Bisbee's motto.

They hope to report additional baptisms at an early date. They also hope to have every family reading the Herald.

Seattle-British Columbia District

Aspects and Ideals of Missionary Work

The year looms big before this district, not alone because of the pressing economic conditions that prevail, but because the number of Saints here is few and the spirit of indifference is hard to meet. The old saying, "many are called, but few chosen," is the result of many not being qualified to assist in telling the "old, old story."

It has been the purpose of the district missionary to give service to each group by cooperating with all. He is trying to find the time when each branch can best serve its neighborhood with meetings. Then the forces of the branch can be organized, and harmoniously work toward the date of beginning, and with the missionary be prepared for a good series.

Officers want every member to be a missionary. To serve in this field demands an intelligent reason for the hope one has. Then there is the need to be tactful in the approach to the one invited, and the need of clean, intelligent conversation. Also Saints should be clean and neat in appearance. Why? Because God wants clean vessels through whom He can witness that he is God today and that his law is practicable. When the member lives the gospel, he is better qualified to invite the sinner to come to Christ because his own life reveals Jesus.

In some ways the missionary work has been discouraging because of the lack of means to carry on a campaign. Then some lack the missionary spirit. This naturally increases the burden of those who wish to serve and warn.

The gospel to all people as a witness can only be taken as the Saints live the word in spirit and in truth. Through the embodiment of gospel ideals made living flesh will salvation be assured. And individual salvation means group salvation until Zion is redeemed which in turn means salvation for the world.

To this big task the Saints of the district are committed because of their partnership with God through baptism. They can not afford to see their business fail.

Seattle Branch

Following the prayer service, Wednesday, February 15, Brother and Sister Frederick Holman, for many years workers in this church, celebrated their silver wedding anniversary, by renewing their marriage vows. A large basket of yellow chrysanthemums made an appropriate setting for the service. Preceding the ceremony Austin Earl sang "I Love You Truly" and Basil Inslee sang "Silver Threads Among the Gold." The couple entered the church to the strain of the wedding march played by Melva Crum. Elder Alma Johnson read the ceremony, that wished them continued happiness in the wedded life that the Father had joined together twenty-five years ago. The bridesmaid was Gertrude Clark and the best man was George Clark, the flower girls were Phyllis and Ione Martin. Immediately after the ceremony, refreshments were served in the lower auditorium of the church. At this time thirty-five dollars was realized to go toward the painting of the church.

Seattle Branch welcomed Apostle M. A. McConley back into the district again. His pleasant, genial disposition has won many friends for himself and the cause he represents.

It is encouraging to note the progress being made in the branch. The prayer meetings are exceptional though the attendance is small. Workers are concentrating on this service and are trying to have better attendance. A beautiful and impressive service was conducted the morning of March 5. After the serving of the emblems, a special program was given for the blessing of the twin babies of Brother and Sister Clark Coleman. The blessing was pronounced by Elder Monte Lasater and Bishop D. S. McDole for Clark Wesley, and by Elder Alma Johnson and Dwight Davis for Beverly May. A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout the service. Pastor Alma Johnson was the speaker in the evening.

One of the best ways in which greater understanding of each other can be had is for the men of the church to labor together with an eight-foot saw, cutting wood for the church. This has been the happy experience of several of the men of Seattle Branch. Through the efforts of these men the year's supply of wood has been obtained at a very low cost to the branch. By working together on this project a greater feeling of fellowship exists which creates a greater appreciation of membership in the church. Officers hope the time is not far distant when they will have more cooperative efforts until all their time is spent in righteous laboring together.

The women's club is zealously laboring for the good of the branch and the general church. Each month they sponsor activities for the raising of funds. Just now they are striving hard to raise sufficient funds to paint the church. In the near future the men of the branch will have the opportunity of demonstrating their skill at painting.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

District Missionary Elder A. C. Martin is conducting cottage meetings in Seattle at the home of Sister Spicer. Good interest is being shown by the attendance each night. Brother Martin intends to hold meetings in as many parts of the city as places are available.

Each Tuesday at the home of Sister Earl the local ministry conduct services.

Centralia Branch

The Saints in Centralia are happy in the church work. They had the privilege of having Missionary H. I. Velt and wife for over a month. They are real missionaries, filled with love for the people, which is expressed in their untiring efforts in carrying the gospel to them. They spend the days in visiting in the homes of members and nonmembers and talking the gospel. At the evening service Brother Velt not only preaches the gospel but also makes good use of the stereopticon lantern by giving illustrated lectures. Sister Velt operates the lantern and helps with beautiful vocal solos. Brother Velt also plays the violin. They came to Centralia more than a week before the services started and the time was spent in visiting and advertising the meetings. Handbills were printed, and the town was divided into districts. Teams of two took the bills to all the homes. Most of the women of the branch took part in this work and the men who could. It would take too long to mention the many that helped in the series, and in the music and every way, to make the meetings a success, but the Saints responded in unity and love. Attendance and interest were fine, Saints attending regularly and several nonmembers coming all the time. A number are attending services since the meetings closed. The attendance of nonmembers went over fifty several times.

During the first week Brother Velt gave illustrated lectures, furnishing wonderful proof of the Book of Mormon, and the next two weeks he preached gospel sermons, presenting the truth with the Spirit attending. The crowd met early each evening so as to enjoy a twenty-minute illustrated lecture on Australia before the sermon. In the talks Brother Velt told of his experiences in coming into the church. The Saints were strengthened, and several friends are reading church books.

The Saints are enjoying a fine spirit of peace and unity in all their services, a large number attending prayer services.

They are especially proud of their young people. The active attendance is over twenty at the morning and evening classes, with many staying for preaching service. Over twenty attended the convention at Seattle, having a wonderful time and receiving real spiritual benefit. They enjoyed Brother M. A. McConley's teaching and some asked him at the close what they could do to help. One thing he told them was to help in Brother Velt's services. Several came home and attended the meetings regularly. Some of these young people are nonmembers and their parents do not belong or attend. A few weeks ago Apostle McConley stopped in Centralia for two nights. The branch enjoyed his illustrated lectures and advice. All the members are hoping they can have him with us for a longer stay in the future.

While the Saints in Centralia are having their trials financially they are sure that God is blessing his people and that they are going to emerge from their trials ready to build the kingdom of God. They pray for the Saints and especially that God will bless the leaders of the church.

Tacoma Branch

Tacoma has been fortunate in having Puyallup members attend the Sunday evening services, since they have not been having evening services in their own branch. Brothers P. P. Reed, C. E. Wheeler, and L. W. Bronson have been occupying the pulpit at the Sunday evening preaching hour.

They regretted to see the McGuire family move to the country, as it was necessary for Sister McGuire to resign as secretary. She was replaced by Sister Elma Rolfe.

Sister Eleanor Thomas was married recently.

The Sowers trio, Roy, Lilah, and Ester have entertained the branch with some instrumental music. A choir has been started by George L. Sowers. Tacoma Branch was sorry to have George Sowers resign as church school director as he was doing splendid work. He has not been replaced.

Vancouver, British Columbia, Branch

Prayer meetings are bigger and better. Last Wednesday evening the theme was, "Blessings." All felt that they had received more blessings than they deserved. Many have been healed the past year.

Brother Lambert, who has been quite ill, is improving.

On Monday evening, March 6, the Fidelis Club gave a pleasant surprise party for their leader, Sister Stoynoff, who is leaving next week. It was held on their regular meeting night and the young women with their parents had gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Miller before Sister Stoynoff arrived. She was presented a leather handbag by the club, and a very pleasant evening was spent with games followed by refreshments. The club will miss their leader, and it will be hard to find one to take her place. Sister Stoynoff and family who have been here for the past three years are leaving for the north. Dorothea and Alice are remaining in Vancouver to finish their term at high school. The rest of the family are going north with their mother. We are going to miss them all as they take an active interest in church work.

The club is a success in every way. Every immediate goal they have set has been accomplished. On March 10, the club presented a play, "The Delegates." It was held in the Hastings School under the auspices of the Hastings P. T. A. The P. T. A. said they appreciated the privilege of working with the club, and all who went enjoyed the play.

Brother Dale, of Calgary, is visiting in Vancouver and preached an educational sermon on the Book of Mormon Sunday evening.

With good weather at the door workers expect to be able to have many more activities.

Bellingham Branch

New officers for the year are Pastor L. R. White with his two counselors, H. A. Sprague and G. Edgar Ward; church school director, Edna White, and her assistant, Berniece Johnson. With this splendid corps of leaders Saints are looking forward to a year of increased vigor and determination.

The priesthood class has been meeting the first Sunday of each month. They have decided now to have a class every Sunday morning.

A council meeting of officers and teachers is held once each month. A potluck dinner is an enjoyable feature of each meeting.

The women's activity group is functioning under the able leadership of Sister M. Hindsley. They have chosen for their name "Zion's Service Club."

A number of local young people attended the conventions at Seattle, February 10, 11, 12, and at Vancouver, British Columbia, February 17, 18, and 19. All reported an enjoyable and worthwhile time—particularly the class instructions by Apostle Myron A. McConley.

This branch was favored with a visit from Brother McConley for one night only. He gave a sermon of advice and admonition to stir the members up to greater activity.

At the church school and sacrament service March 5, they were visited by the district superintendent of Religious Education, Sister Emma McDole and her son, Marvin. At a meeting in the afternoon a class of the teachers and assistant teachers was formed to take up the study of "The Teaching of Religion," using the textbook by Betts.

Bellingham church has been papered and varnished just recently, and new lights add to the attractiveness of the place of worship. The work was done by our Brother M. N. Johnson who donated his services. Plans are made to do work on the outside of the church and to beautify the grounds as soon as the weather permits.

Divine love is a sacred flower, which in its early bud is happiness, and in its full bloom is heaven.—E. L. Hervey.

Denver, Colorado

Spear Boulevard and Locust Street

The Saints have been very busy all winter, and have found much joy in their service and in the consciousness of good accomplished. Pastor Glaude Smith who is also district president, finds the days too short for the many calls for his ministrations, but can always be depended on to respond whenever calls come.

Elder Clarence L. Bruno is director of Religious Education, and has under his direction Mrs. Ethel Fishburn, supervisor of adult department; Vernon Young, superintendent of young people, and Mrs. Elsie Harper, superintendent of children.

Several classes are being conducted in some of which the members are working for credits. Glen Holmes is teaching a Book of Mormon class for credit, which is well attended and in which gratifying interest is manifested. Clarence Bruno had a class during the winter for credit on "How to Teach," using Betts' book, How to Teach Religion. A Doctrine and Covenants class for credit will be organized immediately. Brother Alva Christensen has a class on "Stewardship" which is meeting with excellent response. Brother Smith is finishing a class on the Book of Mormon. These classes are held on Sunday evening before preaching service. At sixten on Sunday evening a short miscellaneous program is given, in charge of Una Holmes. Increasing interest is being taken in this feature, which is somewhat reminiscent of our old religio.

The women of the adult department are working in two groups. One group, called the "Loyal Workers," holds an all-day session each Tuesday at the church. Most of the time is spent in quilting. Sister Myrtie Fenn leads this group. The "Columbines," under the leadership of Sister Ethel Fishburn, meet the first Thursday of each month for business and social recreation. On the third Thursday of the month they have a class in Doctrine and Covenants, in charge of Sister Laura Kohankie. They also make quilts and engage in other lines of work.

The music department, with Sister Alice Milligan as chorister and Sister Inez Schrunk as organist, is working on a cantata for Easter Sunday. The Denver Choir furnished the music for the district conference held in Denver the last of February.

Brother Glen Holmes conducts the junior church service every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock in the basement of the church. The children enjoy this and are receiving excellent training.

The young people of the branch deserve special mention for their devotion to their tasks. A prayer service is held the first Sunday of the month at eight o'clock in the morning. Once a month they have luncheon at the church after the morning service and spend some time in devotion and in making plans for the conducting of their work. Beside their own department work they help in the church school, in credit classes, the choir, and other activities. Their drama club has presented a number of plays under the direction of Sister Myrtle Smith. Sister Bertha Black has had charge of religious drama, chief of which have been the "Conversations," written by Elbert A. Smith, depicting scenes in the history of the church. These have been given at the Sunday evening services and have been well received.

Denver Saints enjoyed the very successful district conference held here in February and deeply appreciate the help and spiritual inspiration given by President Floyd McDowell and Apostle Roy S. Budd, who were here at that time.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Would Increase Membership by Establishing City Missions

Saints of this city have begun activities to enlarge their membership and to establish missions in south Minneapolis and in Saint Paul.

On January 21, they were pleased to have Bishop G. L. DeLapp with them. In his discourse he gave much hope for a period of prosperity, saying that the Saints should labor diligently to establish the cause of Zion. Tracts were distributed in different sections of the Twin Cities, and missionary meetings were held.

Elder Willard Hield visited Minneapolis February 26. He and Mrs. Hield were attending the teachers' convention in this city. He gave an inspiring sermon Sunday evening.

Apostle J. F. Curtis arrived here March 12. He and Pastor Charles Johnson are conducting meetings at the church at Minneapolis and also cottage meetings in south Minneapolis and Saint Paul. A fine interest is shown and a number of nonmembers as well as the Saints are bearing the gospel sermons. Apostle Curtis's labors here have awakened a greater appreciation of the latter-day message. They have made the people aware that God is with his children today as he has been in every dispensation.

Saint Clair, Michigan

Men's Herald Club Takes Its Place in Branch

The men of this branch, who are interested in the topics of the day, met the evening of February 28, at the home of Brother Harry Lively. This marked the second session of the Men's Herald Club. President David Chisnell presided and nine were present. General business was first taken up, then came the study period. The study topic was chosen from a late number of the Herald and much good was gained from the review.

Meetings of the Men's Herald Club take place on the first and third Tuesdays of each month at the homes of the members.

One of the main purposes of the study session is to widen the intellectual scope of the community besides imparting knowledge of everyday topics. By creating interest for themselves in these topics, the men become better citizens. Another good thing about the discussion is the exchange of ideas which results.

It is designed that men outside of the church, when invited to the meetings of the club, will in time be brought in touch with the gospel message as conveyed by the Saints' Herald. In this way the club will endeavor to further the Zionic movement.

Southern New England Conference

Helpful, Missionary Talks—Unity of Spirit—Peace—Desire to Go Forward

The annual conference of Southern New England District was held at Providence, Rhode Island, March 25 and 26. Saturday afternoon and evening were given over to business sessions, presided over by District President E. L. Traver.

At the close of the afternoon meeting Brother Traver called upon four of the men of the ministry for a short talk. The first to speak was Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who chose the theme of, "Being Happy." The Lord has said, "Be cheerful in your warfare."

The remarks of Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley followed in which he stressed the thought of "Service." Elder E. F. Robertson urged the Saints to take courage: "Lift up your heads and rejoice for your redemption draweth nigh." Bishop M. C. Fisher's remarks closed the afternoon meeting and the Saints were called upon for a greater consecration of their lives.

The business meeting continued at 7.30 p. m., when the following district officers were chosen: President, E. L. Traver; vice presidents, Daniel F. Joy and Raymond Bradshaw; secretary, Frank S. Dobbins; treasurer, Myron C. Fisher; chorister, Helen Coombs; historian, Laura Sears; auditors, Everett York and J. W. Foster.

Throughout the entire business session the spirit of peace and unity prevailed which bespoke on the part of all present a desire to work together. Perhaps this spirit was enhanced by the reading of Brother Elbert Smith's poem, "Burying the Hatchet," at the opening of the meeting.

Sunday arrived, a chilly day with rain and sleet falling, but in spite of unpleasant weather, the church was taxed to capacity. The stress of the times seems to have filled the Saints with a stronger desire to gather together for comfort, for courage, and for strength.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The priesthood met at eight thirty and heard an instructive and helpful talk by Apostle Paul M. Hanson on priesthood duties, decorum, etc.

The prayer service at nine thirty was preceded by an organ voluntary beautifully rendered by Edward Joy, which filled all with the spirit of worship. Brother Hanson suggested three themes for meditation: "What Has the Church Done for Me?" "What I Would Like to Do for the Church," "What Special Blessing Would I Like to Receive?" Once again the members were privileged to hear the voice of Brother Moses Sheehy, father of John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion. He is proud of the fact that he has been a member of the church for fifty-nine years, and with fervor said, "I thank God for the family he has given me." Soon after, Sister Cliff, of Fall River, arose and said that she has been a member of the church for sixty-four years. A brother then arose and stated that he had met with the Saints in various parts of the world and had found the same spirit prevailing everywhere. Brother Hanson introduced this brother as Brother Clark, who is known throughout the church. He has traveled with Ringling Brothers' Circus for many years. Brother Clark's life is a testimony that no matter where one may be, or into what environment his lot may be cast, he can live his religion if he loves it and is determined to do so.

Preaching service followed, Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley, the speaker. His theme was taken from the parable of the wise and foolish virgins. Wise council and helpful instruction were given. At this service the Providence Women's Choir sang two numbers, directed by Sister Louise Fox.

Dinner was served to the visitors in the lower auditorium by Providence Saints, one hundred and twenty-five being seated at a time.

At two-fifteen the main auditorium was again filled to capacity to hear Apostle Paul M. Hanson. A pleasing fifteen-minute program of music was given by the district orchestra, directed by Sister Helen Coombs. This orchestra was composed of musicians from Attleboro, Boston, Brockton, Providence, New London, and Onset. At this service the Attleboro Choir, directed by Sister Helen Coombs, sang, "The Heavens Are Telling," and "Praise Ye the Father," accompanied by the orchestra.

Brother Hanson talked on the history of the Jews, the promises made to the fathers, their scattering, and their return. "While today in Rome the Arch of Titus, commemorating the victory of Rome and the destruction of Jerusalem, is crumbling to ruin, on Mount Scopus, in Jerusalem, stands a great university erected by the returned Jews," he said. The history of the Jews has its counterpart today. The Lord gave Israel a land of promise; they were driven out, and now are returning. Zion's children are returning also. We shall never have much success in evangelizing the world until the church has been thoroughly "Zionized" was the closing thought of this wonderful sermon.

The conference closed with a sermon in the evening by Elder E. F. Robertson.

East Saint Louis, Illinois

Lansdowne Branch

A contest was recently held in Lansdowne Branch between the young married class whose teacher is Sister George Barraclough and the young people taught by Brother Prosper Carl. It continued for four Sundays and the young people won by about forty points, building their class up to an attendance of thirty-eight. Much good was accomplished by this contest.

The music department has been active in sponsoring a musical program once a month, trying to discover the best talent in the group. On a recent Sunday night they gave a Saint Patrick musicale which featured young people from Saint Louis Branch.

They are now working on a program for Easter morning under the direction of Sister Don Grim, children's supervisor. On Easter evening Miss Ruth Archibald will give a piano recital.

The women's department gave a supper on a recent Friday evening which was followed by a play, "Plummer Breach of Promise Case," directed by Mrs. Wilbur Smith. The third Wednesday of each month this department gives a covered birthday dinner for any having a birthday during that month. Sister Malone, who recently moved to California, was remembered at the last birthday dinner, each one writing congratulations in a joint letter.

The dramatic department will give the play, "Hey, Teacher," in the near future.

Elder T. J. Elliott, of Saint Louis, was the speaker here Sunday night, March 26, and Apostle J. F. Garver will be here April 9.

Nowata, Oklahoma

Elder Lee Quick There for Easter

Elder S. W. Simmons held a week of meetings here, March 12 to 19, helping and inspiring the branch. He and Sister Simmons are expected to return in June for an indefinite period.

The church school is progressing under the direction of Sister Bertha Simms.

The young people are studying the Book of Mormon on Sunday evening under the direction of their sponsor, Sister Mildred Place. This group has been enjoying socials once each month, the last given at the home of Brother and Sister O. E. Place.

The women's department, directed by Sister E. J. Lumm, has been working.

Nowata Branch expects a large crowd Easter Sunday when Elder Lee Quick will be the speaker. There will be a basket dinner, and an Easter program is being prepared. Brother Quick will be able to stay and hold a revival following Easter.

A spiritual sacrament service was enjoyed April 2, in charge of Elder O. A. Duncan, the pastor.

Workers here desire the prayers of the Saints, that Nowata Branch will keep moving forward. Especially do they ask prayers for their young poeple who are making an effort to help in the work of building Zion.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Street

President Frederick M. Smith was the speaker Sunday and Monday evenings, March 26 and 27. The choir, directed by Ethel Godfrey, sang, "Thy Will Be Done," the solo part being given by Laurence MacDonald. They were accompanied by Mrs. L. W. Roberts.

President Smith presented the principles of stewardships which are fundamental to the doctrine of the church. One of the objectives of the church is to preach Christ and him crucified. He also said that it is one of our chief missions to present this gospel in a way not presented by other churches, that is, in the social life of the church.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael conducted a series of meetings from March 19 to 24. He said, "What we are looking for now is Zionic building material among our people. Until we are willing to hear God and put away our differences we will never be Zion-building material. We must become God-minded." Brother Carmichael also gave a number of Patriarchal Blessings.

The women's department is busy sewing quilts. They have finished one and have decided to send it to Graceland College for the use of students who may be in need. They met at the home of Sister Thompson for a Valentine and farewell party. She has move to Los Angeles.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gift Godfrey, was blessed March 5, by Elder Ethan Godfrey, assisted by Elder A. S. Votaw.

The young people have chosen an executive committee, Laurence MacDonald, Robert Nephew and Maxine Godfrey, in order that they might have a more cooperative organization. We hope to have a definitely organized recreational program. They will attempt to have each member an individual steward, with a view to preparing themselves for group stewardship. Their motto is, "Let us come nearer to one another."

Independence

The outstanding feature of the quarterly conference in Zion, held at the Stone Church, April 3, was a short memorial service for Saints who passed away in Independence during 1932, and the first two months of 1933. Pastor J. F. Sheehy read a scripture lesson and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess sang, "Going Down the Valley." There are eighty-two names on the list of those who died in 1932, and thirteen in January and February of this year. Assistant Pastor A. K. Dillee offered prayer.

Pastor Sheehy took charge of the conference and submitted a report of the work and activities of the churches in Independence. He was assisted in the stand by Elder H. G. Barto and Bishop J. S. Kelley.

The name of Elder A. K. Dillee was approved as one of the assistant pastors in Zion. Brother Dillee was formerly a pastor of Second Church.

The conference approved the following names for ordination: To the office of elder, Jesse Smith and Morris Jacobson; priest, Cecil Walker, and teacher, D. Lee Davis.

Last Wednesday night the forty-six group prayer meetings in Independence began a series of worship themes for the month of April under the general head, "The Church." During this month the attention of the Saints is being centered upon the organization of the church one hundred and three years ago.

Saints of Independence mourn the death of Sister J. M. Terry April 3, who passed away after several weeks of illness and suffering. She was eighty-three years of age and had been a faithful member of the church for sixty-two years; for nearly sixty years she traveled with her husband as a missionary wherever the church sent them. Brother and Sister Terry have many friends throughout the United States. Brother Terry passed away October 24, 1931, on their sixty-second wedding anniversary, and through many lonely hours Sister Terry waited for the summons which would unite her again with her beloved husband. The funeral was held at the Stone Church, Wednesday afternoon, Pastor J. F. Sheehy preaching the sermon. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Terry is survived by one sister, Mrs. L. C. Main, of Osceola, Iowa; a brother, George Guthrie, of Long Beach, California, and hundreds of friends all over the church.

Stone Church

Palm Sunday was observed at the Stone Church with a sermon by Pastor J. F. Sheehy in the morning presenting in review the last week of the Savior's life.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang, "Into the Woods My Master Went," and Gomer Cool played a violin solo, accompanied by George Miller. Mrs. Nina G. Smith sang a solo, "O Lord Most Holy," accompanied by George Miller, pianist, Robert Miller, organist, and Gomer Cool, violinist.

In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller presented stereopticon scenes from the life of Christ, giving and explaining not only pictures of historic places in the Holy Land, but also evidences that Christ visited the people living on the American continents.

Music was by Mrs. Louise Lewis, organist, and J. Glenn Fairbanks led the congregation in a number of latter-day hymns.

Next Sunday night a special Easter musical service will be given in which all the choruses connected with the Stone Church will participate, the Clematis Chorus, the Stone Church Boys' Choir, the Cantanina Chorus, the Wahdemna Choral Club, the Æolian Chorus, and the Stone Church Choir. Mrs. Pauline Arnson will be the soloist. The program will consist of the choral story of the life, death, and resurrection of the Savior.

Miss Gladys Givens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Givens, of Independence, and Roy A. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Smith, of Linn, Missouri, were married Sunday, March 26, by Evangelist U. W. Greene. They have the good wishes of their many friends.

Newly-elected officers of the Independence Music Club are: President, Mrs. O. L. James; vice president, Mrs. Bertha Burgess; secretary, Mrs. Louis Lewis; treasurer, Mrs. Emma Stahl; business manager, Mrs. Mildred Grabske; publicity, Mrs. Tessie Smith, and historian and librarian, Mrs. Louise Hills. Those in charge of committees are: Voice, Mrs. Nina Smith; piano, Mrs. Jeannette Craig; hospitality, Mrs. J. R. Sturges; active membership, Mrs. Sunshine Beck; associate membership, Mrs. Stella Moore, of Kansas City. The election occurred at the regular meeting of the club, April 5.

"The Industrial Institution of Zion," is the name of a lecture course Bishop J. A. Koehler is giving each Sunday night at six-fifteen in the Y. K. T. Room, under the auspices of the Y. P. R. Class. The church young people in Independence have been invited to attend this lecture series.

Second Church

Brother R. C. Conyers was in charge of the eleven o'clock junior service Sunday morning. "The Barefoot Boy" was read by Grace Dillee. A piano solo was played by Billie McPherson. Mrs. Jess Queen told a true story of a family living in New York State in 1831. Brother Conyers talked a short time.

The eleven o'clock preaching service was opened by an organ selection played by Mrs. Gladys Inman. The choir sang, "Thy Will Be Done," directed by Earl Audet and the two solo parts were sung by Miss Geneva Edmunds and Mrs. Kathern Inman. The speaker was Elder Sam Inman. Brother Inman chose as his text, Luke 12: 27-31. The opening and closing prayers were by Elder George Inman.

The evening service was begun by an organ prelude, played by Miss Lena Mortimer. The girls' quartet, composed of Ruth Bolt, Nadine Inman, Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Street, accompanied by Geraldine Fields, sang "Under His Wings." The opening prayer was by Leslie Sellers. The girls' quartet sang, "God of Our Fathers." The speaker, Elder J. F. Sheehy, gave the second of five lectures on "The Old Jerusalem Gospel."

Walnut Park Church

At the session of the church school Sunday morning, a banner was presented to the intermediate girls' class taught by Fern Price, for the most perfect attendance record of any class in the school. The class had been perfect practically every Sunday in the quarter. In the absence of Ruth Bryant, young people's supervisor, the presentation was made by her assistant, Kenneth Morford, and Miss Price responded in behalf of the class.

Preaching at the eleven o'clock hour was by Pastor Frank McDonald. Among other things he reviewed the work of the congregation during the first quarter of the year.

No religio session was held Sunday evening. The time usually given to the religio was occupied with a program of musical numbers as follows: Organ numbers by Drexel Mollison, a violin solo by Forrest Liebold, and several numbers by a girls' chorus composed of Velva Butterworth, Leona Hartman, Mary Taylor, Helen Moorman, Melba Moorman, Hazel Hartman, Alta June Moorman, Thelma Moorman, and Lois Butterworth.

At seven o'clock, following the musical program, an Easter pageant, "The Triumph of Love," was given under the direction of Sister E. E. Moorman. It was in three acts and represented the events surrounding the crucifixion and resurrection. The prologue was given by Pastor McDonald, and the cast was as follows: Simon Peter, John Pennell; James, Knoefel Mosier; John, O. L. Athey; blind man, E. E. Moorman; soldier, B. O. Grimes; Mary, mother of Jesus, Mrs. Vivian Athey; Mary, wife of Alpheus, Mrs. Elsie Reynolds; Magdala, Mrs. Ina Lutz; Salome, Mrs. John Pennel; slave girl, Lois Jean Williams, and Jewish child, Lois Dean Jacobs.

The Swastika Class of the church school gave a party at the home of Audrey Horn, Tuesday evening, April 4. About thirty attended. Games and jigsaw puzzles occupied the evening. Refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Logeman, jr., announce the birth of a son, Bruce Curtis, March 31. Mrs. Logeman was formerly Lyra Curtis.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Gudgell Park Church

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker at Gudgell Park the evening of March 5, shortly before leaving for his mission field. Other speakers during the month were Elders A. K. Dillee, H. E. Winegar, and R. V. Hopkins, Bishop M. H. Siegfried, and Priest A. H. Chapman.

Brother Donald Burch has accepted work for the government in Iowa.

Brother William Odom has gone to Akron, Ohio, to bring his wife and family to Independence. They plan to make their home in Gudgell Park District.

Brother W. A. Atwell is in Saint Joseph, Missouri, working for the Burlington Railroad.

Englewood Church

Sunday evening, April 2, Englewood congregation enjoyed a musical service given by twenty singers from Chelsea Park Church, of Kansas City, Kansas. The choir director was Jessie Bell Taylor, and pianist, Mrs. Mabel McHarness. Soloists were Lurabell Sears, Mildred Tousley, Jessie Bell Taylor and Raymond Bleil. After the service the Englewood choir and young people entertained Chelsea musicians at the home of Brother and Sister Roy Howery. Sister Stella Howery is Englewood's pianist.

Last Sunday morning Pastor Perry Hiles was the speaker, and the choir sang, "Seek Ye the Lord." Earl Moore spoke at the evening service.

Brother and Sister A. G. Hougas were recently called to Lamoni, Iowa, by the death of Sister Hougas's mother, Mrs. Ellswick.

Elder and Sister D. S. McNamara announce the birth of a little daughter, Marjorie Sue, to keep her two sturdy brothers, Dickie and Tommie, company.

The women's department has a new supervisor, Sister Marie Hiles, and the members are busy quilting and trying in other ways to raise money for the general and local church.

Sister L. L. Burch, a member of the church for many years, and a resident of this congregation, passed away the morning of April 10.

Spring Branch Church

Both prayer meetings held in this district last Wednesday night were exceptionally active and encouraging. Elder D. S. McNamara and Brother Roy Settles attended the group prayer meeting and made talks.

Roy Andes gave a talk at the Sunday school hour Sunday, and Pastor G. W. Eastwood based his eleven o'clock sermon on the reading from Luke 16: 1-13. His sermon was one of instruction, exhortation, and encouragement.

The program for the evening church school was given by Beulah Donkawich, Elizabeth Hinderks, and Harold Buseth.

Earl F. Hoisington was the eight o'clock speaker.

Last Friday night was play night at the church, and the building was crowded. The program consisted of a mock trial, school days, and several musical numbers.

Webb City, Missouri

Corner of Oronogo and Second Streets

James M. Jones addressed the Saints Sunday evening, March 25, taking for his text: "What Shall I Do to Be Saved?" He presented his subject in a clear and forceful way.

Mary and Ruth Hobart had the happy privilege of attending the young people's meetings at Independence, and report an enjoyable time.

The Saints here have been greatly encouraged through a recent visit from District President Amos T. Higdon. They are looking forward to a similar visit in the near future.

Thirty-five met at the home of Brother and Sister W. R. Virgin, March 27, to celebrate the eightieth birthday of Brother Virgin. The evening was spent in music and games, and many old-time songs were sung. Hazel Spooner gave a reading; C. H. Hobart sang, "Silver Threads Among the Gold." Refreshments were served and Brother Virgin was presented a large birthday cake, Sister Virgin read an original poem decicated to her husband after which Pastor Ira O. Waldron made a fitting talk about the years of his acquaintance with Brother Virgin and his faithfulness to the church. After prayer all departed for their homes. The party was sponsored by Mrs. Frank Stokes.

The April sacrament meeting was well attended, and a fine spirit was there.

Some of the membership has received wonderful blessings since the last branch letter. Sister Millie A. Waldron fell, December 26, 1932, while attempting to remove some clothes from a clothesline. The result was a broken hip. She was taken to the hospital, and remained there one month. Since being brought home she has been able to walk in the house with the aid of a cane. The doctor said this was a remarkable case. Sister Waldron gives the Lord the praise through the faith of the Saints and through administrations. She is seventy-one years old.

During the sacrament service of January, the Spirit of the Lord was witnessed by the calling of James M. Jones to the office of Elder, admonishing three young men, Joseph Bair, Harold Fry, and Houston Hobart, to prepare themselves by consecrated efforts. They were told that in due time, according to their earnestness, they would be called to occupy in the priesthood. Priesthood and congregation were admonished: "Now is the appointed time to give your best efforts by study and activity for this church."

Brother Joseph Bair and Brother Harold Fry are cousins. Their great-grandmother united with the church over fifty years ago. Their great-grandfather, Elijah Bradley was an elder. Brother Fry's grandfather was a deacon in Webb City Branch. Brother Houston Hobart's grandfather was also an elder in the branch in the early days. His father, C. H. Hobart, is a priest. The workers feel inclined to compliment these young men for their earnest desires and activities in the church. God has recognized their efforts.

Traverse City, Michigan

Alert to Church Needs

Though the Saints in this branch have been subjected to the same conditions of unemployment, financial uncertainty, and sickness, that have swept over the world, these things have but served to draw them together in a closer bond of love and sympathy and a deeper concern for the welfare of all.

Branch President John Clark is able to be out and looking after church duties after six weeks of illness which confined him to his bed. He had an abcess on his leg caused by a fall on an icy street. He was missed from meetings, but the Saints never forgot him in their prayers.

Although several priesthood members in the branch are out of employment, they are not found idly sitting by, but are using the time in church work, visiting the Saints and encouraging them to continue in the straight and narrow way.

Sister Orma Gardner has been very ill, but is improving. Her friends are hoping she may continue to gain in health and strength.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited here, March 24, and preached a good sermon which was appreciated by all members and several nonmembers. He with brothers from Traverse City Branch visited the branch at Bendon, delivering a wonderful sermon, and then he left for Bellaire, Michigan. Brother John Clark accompanied him north and will visit in Boyne City several days.

Brothers H. A. and B. H. Doty have sold their drug business here to Leon Moore. Brother H. A. is planning to redecorate the interior of the church, a work that is much needed.

Brother Harry Doty pledged himself to be the Herald newsboy in this branch, and several Saints are buying the paper from him who otherwise no doubt would not be receiving it.

After reading the Herald of March 15, in which Mrs. Elmer G. Neumann, of Central Lake, Michigan, requested the prayers of the Saints, Brother Ray Dick, a traveling salesman who calls at Central Lake, and Elder H. A. Doty decided to make the trip to call on Mrs. Neumann. Their visit to the home informed them that the lady and her husband are not members of the church but have received several copies of the Herald from a relative, and are much interested. They would like to get acquainted with Saints, and also to be remembered in prayer. Mrs. Neumann is suffering with a severe case of diabetes.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Jay C. Doty, assisted by his father, B. H. Doty, has delivered several forceful Sunday evening sermons.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

Interest and Participation Insure Achievement

Last December by request of Branch President Skelding and Missionary P. E. Farrow the Saints came fasting to elect officers for the year and to transact other business. Those selected to serve were: President, Elder James Skelding; counselors, Elder Albert Cordery and Priest Nelson Kelley; secretary, Sister L. J. Burger; treasurer and solicitor, Sister N. Kelley; deacon, Miles Rock; pianist, Sister Emily Saint John; chorister, Sister L. J. Burger; president of young people (Religio) Brother Miles Rock; auditors, Brother Colin Hammond and Sister E. Ford. Reports showed that there had been twenty-seven baptisms.

Saint Thomas members have enjoyed visits from President F. M. McDowell, Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elder P. E. Farrow. During the short stay of Brother Farrow here in February, three more souls were added to the kingdom. Ministers from London, Bishop Dent and Elders Winegarden and MacGregor, have also assisted. A visit from Brother Sherman and his daughter, of Chicago, former residents here, was much appreciated, also the presence of Elder Weeks, of Tillsonburg.

The annual business meeting for the Religio was called January 6, and the president, Miles Rock, appointed by the branch, was in charge. Officers elected were: Vice president, Sister W. Stephens; secretary, Sister Eva Johnson; treasurer, Emily Saint John; organist, Sister Hughena Duncan; chorister, Sister J. LaCourtois. A corps of efficient teachers has been enlisted to help with the work of this department. Elder A. Hewitt, of Chatham District, was present at this meeting.

Brother and Sister Farrow have in the past year paid a number of visits to this branch, giving splendid help to the young people. The religio is the service in which young and old take part, and everyone enjoys the splendid meetings. They have a program every night. Sometimes they are in form of a Bible quiz. Once a month there is a social evening when lunch is served. From forty to seventy-five attend. For the past three years the religio has been a big success. Many have been brought into the church from these gatherings.

The women's department has been doing a wonderful work in helping finance the branch and assisting those who are unfortunate as a result of the depression. The workers have been busy making clothing and giving food.

The Saints are known all over Saint Thomas for their hot suppers, especially Jigg's suppers (corned beef and cabbage). In September the women served three hundred, and all were pleased. Their slogan is, "The best ever." Sister I. Kinsman, the president, is loved by all because she is always ready to give good counsel Sister A. Cordery is vice president, Sister L. Burger, secretary, and Sister J. Taylor, treasurer.

Quilting is the chief work done by the department. They meet every Thursday afternoon. The women are hoping to continue their effort, for they feel it is a great help to the branch. Besides their help for the local they are sending a sacrifice offering to the Bishop each month. Sometimes they have a supper or a food sale or each member tries in some way to earn as much as she can, and brings it at the end of the month.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Faith and Works Are Growing

Local Saints continue to look forward to greater achievements for the advancement of the latter-day gospel in this branch. Many members are still out of employment which causes much anxiety, but faith prevails and a willingness to put their trust in the heavenly Father.

The pastoral work of the branch is being carefully supervised by Elders Charles Cramer, John Carlisle and William Goudy with the willing assistance of Samuel Mansell and Richard Watkins, priests.

They have a splendid church school with an average attendance of one hundred. Adults and senior classes are studying Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants quarterlies under well-selected teachers. Junior church is conducted each Sunday. The young people's department, under the supervision of Elder William Goudy, has been holding monthly social gatherings to create enthusiasm and cooperation. Among those who contribute their services to church work when the occasion demands. They are looking forward to warmer weather for which greater activities are planned.

The young people held a Saint Patrick's social at the church, March 17. Elder William Goudy was in charge, assisted by Richard Watkins. After a short devotional service, a program was presented and a recreational hour was enjoyed. Refreshments were served by the committee in charge.

Sacrament service, April 2, was well attended and a portion of the Holy Spirit was enjoyed by all. Sacrament and prayer services since the beginning of the year have been of a high spiritual order, and those in charge of the pastoral duties have been making efforts to create interest and stimulate attendance at all services.

The women's department has completed its portion of labor in assisting women of the Methodist Episcopal Church to supply meals to needy children. The members have signified their willingness to rally to the cause again if their help is needed. A fine cooperative spirit was carried on during the project.

Best wishes of the branch go to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Clerici (formerly Rebecca Carlisle), whose marriage was solemnized January 9 by Elder Louis Serig at Wheeling, West Virginia.

Wheeling, West Virginia

To Observe Branch's Fiftieth Anniversary

Wheeling Branch is preparing to hold special services May 28, to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of its organization. Elder G. T. Griffiths organized the branch and served a short time as the first president, and the Saints hope to have him take an important part in the memorial service. If any of the church officials, or traveling ministry can arrange their itinerary to be present, they will be welcome.

The branch has had six presidents, four of whom are living. Two, A. M. Teagarden and O. L. Martin, have gone to their reward. L. D. Ullom, the third to preside over the branch, is the oldest, and is still living. O. J. Tary served longer than any other, while L. A. Serig, the present incumbent, comes next in point of time served.

At a recent business meeting Sister Jane Serig was elected superintendent of Sunday school, and O. J. Tary publicity agent. These changes were made to relieve Brother Samuel A. Martin of the extra portion of official work he had been carrying, and permit him more time to look after the work of bishop's agent.

Brother George Criswell is doing a commendable work with the class of young men he teaches in the Sunday school, most of whom are nonmembers. The prospect of augmenting the long depleted force of local young workers is now more encouraging. Visitors of late included Brother and Sister Frank Brown, of Kirtland, Ohio, and Mrs. Margaret Irwin, of Martins Ferry, Ohio.

While the number of membership in this branch is below that of former times, Wheeling has furnished members and workers to many other communities and branches. Elder Joseph E. Ebeling, president of Colorado Springs Branch, was formerly one of Wheeling's active workers. Another of the family, F. J. Ebeling, was a member of Wheeling Branch when he entered the missionary field. Patriarch John F. Martin was baptized and spiritually nurtured in this branch. Many other names of noble workers could be added. Some have gone to their reward, while others are in distant parts.

Unity and Cooperation in Central Michigan District

Special Conference Decides to Dispense With Reunion

Officers are happy to say that the work in Central Michigan District is on the upward trend. A number of one-day meetings have been held in the district of a very high spiritual order. Among those of the recent past were a meeting at Butman, March 12, and one at West Branch, March 19. They were spiritual feasts to all who attended.

There seems to be a tendency toward greater unity and cooperation throughout the district than for some time in the past, resulting in the old-time, spiritual blessings characterizing the assemblies, and fulfilling the promise, "Return unto me and I will return unto you." The Saints have been made to know that the power of the gospel is as great now as in any previous time, and the signs are following the believers.

The depression is hampering the work here as elsewhere, but despite this fact, things are moving on satisfactorily. With finances very nearly depleted, the Saints in many places are making splendid improvements on their church buildings, substituting labor and prayer for money. Saginal Branch have rebuilt their church which was almost totally destroyed by fire some time ago, and the Saints in Bentley Branch are moving forward toward building a neat little edifice in the near future. They hope to do all in their power to make conditions conducive to the ingathering of many honest-hearted souls who are yearning for the gospel message.

March 25, they enjoyed a district conference. A special session was called for the purpose of considering reunion work this year. A fine spirit prevailed. On account of the extreme hard times, all concurred in the plan to dispense with the reunion for this year, at least. On March 26, a splendid meeting was held at Coleman. Three men were ordained to the priesthood, and so great was the power of the Lord manifested at this ordination service that there was scarcely a dry eye in the audience.

A number of missionaries have been at work holding meetings in various places. Elders William Grice, of Croswell, and Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan, together with District President Hubert Case have held several series of meetings with splendid results. Some of the local men have also been active in the northern parts of the district, preaching and baptizing as in former days, and they report an excellent response.

District President Hubert Case and his counselors are very busy ministering to the spiritual needs of the various branches throughout the district. They are to be highly commended for their efforts.

Members feel very much encouraged over the outlook of the work in the district and feel certain it will be able to make its contribution.

South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

Mishawaka, Indiana

Saints of this community are endeavoring to continue in the Lord's word. Unemployment among the bread winners has been a grim foe to battle. Financially the members are losers, but in spirituality they have risen to a higher plane of brotherly love and fellowship. Through their hardships they have felt the actual need of Zion. They have learned their lesson, and are planning to prepare so that they will be ready to "come out of the world" and gather with the Saints.

Local elders, Brothers Myers and Hoxie, have just completed a short series of meetings which turned out more successful than they had dared to hope. Attendance was good, the average being fifty. Nearly eighty were present on the last Sunday evening in spite of the bad weather and much sickness.

At the close of the series, March 26, two who had heard the story that never grows old, requested baptism. Sisters Myrtle and Marie Nunn, mother and daughter, were led into the waters of baptism by Elder Myers. This brings the total to three baptisms for the first three months of the year. Robert Ellis, eight-year-old son of Brother and Sister Clement Ellis, was baptized by Elder Hoxie, January 8.

The Saints rejoiced to have Apostle D. T. Williams with them March 16. Nearly one hundred assembled to hear his message.

The women's department held their first social activity of the year in the form of a Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister Ellis. Songs, music, and games for young and old characterized the evening.

On March 17, the men reciprocated with a party at the home of Pastor F. E. Myers. The program and refreshments were furnished by the men, and although the sisters had much comment to make on the "Irish stew," it all disappeared. They hope for more good times in the future.

The Oriole Girls, led by Sister Galloway, and the Temple Builders led by Sister Granger, are busy and happy in their work.

All departments are pushing steadily forward, the young as well as the old taking a decided interest and helping in the programs, especially in the Religio. Attendance in the last-named department ranges from eighty to ninety. Songs, music and talks are given by young and old, and practically everyone remains for the sermon to follow.

Brother Charles Ferry is still in poor health and requests the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. Sister Hardy is recovering from a fall which hurt her back and which for a time appeared to be very serious along with a threat of pneumonia. But she put her trust in the Lord, and was greatly blessed.

South Bend-Mishawaka Saints appreciate the "bundle system" of obtaining the Herald. Through it copies of the Herald are being put into homes they never before reached.

Shidler, Oklahoma

First Series of Services in Two Years

Shidler Branch has had a very fine meeting. Elder J. E. Montague, of Ralston, Oklahoma, started the services, preaching three splendid sermons. Elder J. E. Lancaster, of Tulsa, district missionary, followed with ten good sermons.

Apostle R. S. Budd was here the last three nights and preached to a full house. Shidler Saints appreciate the help of these brothers, this being the first series of meetings they have had in almost two years. None were baptized but some seem very near the kingdom.

Shidler has a branch membership of eighty-four and all are striving to live the gospel and teach it to others.

Peoria, Illinois

Gospel Fire Still Burns in Historic Branch

Peoria members are striving to keep the branch alive. They are widely scattered and very poor, but have sacrament meeting at the home of Sister Norris the first Sunday of every month. They used to have a Book of Mormon study class which was greatly enjoyed, but so many people have been out of work that they could not afford carfare to come together. And so local members get together only once a month.

Sacrament meetings are generally quite well attended, and the members feel that God has blessed and helped them. A few Saints live at Pekin, Illinois, and some of them drive up once in awhile for meeting.

Brother and Sister Silvers met with the Saints April 2. They frequently visit their daughter who lives at Peoria, and the Saints happily welcome them. Then Elder E. R. Davis, district president, comes at intervals to make a short visit. Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt never forget Peoria. Brother Pitt has been visiting this branch many years and his help is much appreciated.

Brother and Sister J. G. Cole celebrated their golden wedding anniversary a few weeks ago. They received many cards and good wishes from friends.

Sister Mary E. Gillin despite intense pain and long continued illness is still able to talk convincingly on the virtue of having faith in God. Her pen has not been active of late because her eyes have been troubling her and the pain in her arms is much worse.

Although Peoria Branch has had a hard struggle to live, her members are proud to say that the group is still active and to recall that this branch organization is one of the oldest in the church.

Wagner, South Dakota

Enjoy Visitors From Sioux City

The group enjoyed a social evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. Uecker, March 31, each person presenting a game or part of the evening's entertainment.

Brother and Sister C. E. Burnett and Brother and Sister Haviland, of Sioux City, visited with the Saints of this place April 2. The theme of the Sunday school hour was, "Here Ye Him." Sister Nina Amundson sang Ashford's, "Abide With Me," preceding the class period. Brother Burnett took charge of the sacrament service. Sister Anna Sell, of Springfield, was administered to. Baby Donna Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Kimball, was blessed. A basket dinner was served at noon. Brother Burnett conducted a round table and spoke on "The Little Deeds," at the afternoon session.

The Saints were commended for the spirit in which they are trying to accomplish their tasks. They look forward to another visit from Sioux City brothers and sisters.

Kalamazoo, Michigan

Look Forward to Meetings of Elder A. C. Barmore

This branch has been recently favored by a visit from Apostle D. T. Williams who spoke to an appreciative audience on the subject, "Technocracy and the Brotherhood of Man." This is the first time that Apostle Williams has been in Kalamazoo on Sunday evening. His visits are looked forward to with keen interest and great anticipation.

District President A. C. Barmore will soon make his first visit to this city and conduct a series of meetings from April 20 to May 1. It is hoped that an all-day meeting will be held April 30. The Saints hope for much help and direction from Brother Barmore.

New names have been added to the cradle roll, two sons and a daughter coming to gladden three families in the branch. The little girl, only a few months old, daughter of Sister Dorothy Burrows, is suffering from a fractured skull. It is hoped that she will recover.

Sister Volney Glidden, who underwent an operation a few months ago, is reported to be in a critical condition. She recovered somewhat from the operation, but has suffered a relapse. The prayers of the Saints are asked in her behalf.

Church work here has not made notable progress during the winter, but it is hoped that with the coming of warm weather conditions will be improved and all the workers will catch a new vision of the organization needed to conduct branch activities. Some members have moved away and are greatly missed.

Workers look to the time when the branch will have a hall available for church work at all times. They hope such a place of meeting may be secured by the end of this month, in order that they may follow up the good work of the district president.

Birmingham, Alabama

Few in Number But They Help the Church

Elder V. R. Chandler was again chosen branch president at the annual business session of this group. The following other officers were also chosen: Chorister, Gloria Booker; pianist, Sister Vida Booker; secretary-treasurer, Sister Sadie Chandler, and publicity agent, M. L. Salter. Fay Booker is in charge of programs.

Birmingham is proud of its eleven-year-old chorister, Gloria Booker, and believes her to be the youngest chorister in the church. The Saints are proud of her not only because of her youthfulness, but because she is a capable music student and does her work well.

Apostle J. A. Gillen stopped here on his way to the southern part of the state and Florida, to the delight of Birmingham members. Always he has an inspiring message. The Saints here extend an invitation to church members, especially the priesthood, who may be passing through, to visit them. They are strengthened and helped by such visits. If you are coming through this city write a card to V. R. Chandler, 1618 Fifty-first Street, Central Park, Birmingham, Alabama, and some one will meet you at the station.

There are only ten regular attendants at Sunday school now as Wilbur and Elbert Chandler are attending Graceland College. The Saints have been passing through some distressing times, but with the members of other districts feel they have made some progress. Their financial contributions for the year, 1932, were as follows: Sacrifice offering, $24.70; College Day, $7.20; oblation, $4.72, and tithing, $110.22. The figures are not mentioned in the spirit of boasting, but to show that no matter how few in number, Saints may help. The church of the living God must not fail. Each contribution helps.

Feel Spirit of the Work

The Saints are feeling the spirit of the work and are looking forward to better days. They believe that soon the church will be relieved of many of its difficulties.

Brother and Sister H. E. Waite and daughter have moved to Independence, Missouri, to go into business. Thayer group regretted to see them leave.

A short time ago Brother Marce Harder and family moved here from Sacramento, California, and are making their home. The branch welcomes these good people. The Saints rejoice to see the number of branch members grow.

The women's department is doing a helpful work in the financial line. Many of the branch undertakings have been highly successful because of the women's help.

Fairland, Oklahoma

Branch Is Blessed

Saints here are encouraged to go forward. Although there is some sickness among them, they feel the Lord is blessing them. Attendance at services has increased since the first of the year. Especially is this noticeable at the prayer meeting, as it was in this service that they formerly had their smallest number.

The last of February, Elder S. W. Simmons and wife came to Fairland to make a short visit. Pastor E. R. Hart asked Brother Simmons to preach for at least a week and this he did, delivering some inspiring sermons. At the age of eighty years Brother Simmons still has the powerful voice of his young manhood. Those who were sick were greatly blessed through his administrations. At the close of the services five were baptized by Brother Ott S. Jones, local priest.

It it not long now until the annual home-coming day the second Sunday in May. To this day the members look forward, hoping to meet again many old-time Saints.

Wellsburg, West Virginia

While Wellsburg Branch has been hard hit by the depression and unemployment situation, the members have displayed courage and perseverance which have, in a large measure, triumphed over all opposition. Because many of the members have been out of employment, it has been more difficult to meet the interest and payments on their church debt, but with undaunted courage they have succeeded.

They have a fine group of earnest young workers, who are developing talent which adds prestige to the church. Under the capable management of Sister Allen, they gave a three-act play that elicited much favorable comment. They gave two performances for the benefit of the building fund, and one for the Pythian Sisters, who sold the tickets and shared in the proceeds.

The activities of the members have brought a decided upward trend in spirituality, in attendance, and in interest of nonmembers. In addition to the good work of the branch officers, visits and sermons by District President William Richards, Patriarch John F. Martin and Elder O. J. Tary have been helpful.

As evidence of the progress being made, on March 22, eight were added by baptism. The branch president, Elder Willard Allen, officiated, and was assisted in confirmation by J. F. Martin, William Richards and O. J. Tary. Brother Clyde Zonker is chief office deputy to the sheriff of Brooke County, and is also giving valuable service as superintendent of the Sunday school, assisted by Brother Paul Lannum.

Brother and Sister R. E. Rodgers, in addition to other activities have been doing much good by using their car to get members to church who were not in position to pay carfare.

With the district conference which convened here April 8 and 9, and preparation for the Easter program, everybody is busy and cheerful in the good work.

Euroa, Victoria, Australia

From "The Record"

Saints of this branch were looking forward to a visit from Patriarch J. H. N. Jones last month, and were grieved to hear of his illness which prevented his coming. All united their prayers to the end that he might be blessed with a speedy recovery.

February 12, at the annual business meeting of the branch, the following officers were chosen: Pastor, Elder H. Jacka; assistant pastor, Elder R. Butterworth; director of Religious Education, A. Frater; assistant director, Hugh Jacka; chorister, A. Frater; secretary and treasurer, F. Dowell; correspondent and historian, A. Frater.

Euroa Branch has now completed two years of service in its new church. During that period there have been fifteen baptisms. May the future see wonderful work for the Master.

Sister Harris has been called away from home on account of the illness of her daughter.

The various classes of the church school are taking turns at presenting an afternoon program. The first of these programs was given March 12 by the primary grade.

It is very probable that a mission will be conducted at Euroa early in May. Apostle George G. Lewis and Elder A. J. Corbett will be here to assist in the work.

A visit from the district presidency was expected the latter part of March.

The branch has decided to publish a monthly paper known as The Record, containing news of the branch and also extracts from literature. The purpose of the paper is to inculcate a love of beauty and an appreciation of all that is good and fine in the world.

President F. M. Smith to Be in Southwestern Texas

President Smith will be in San Antonio, Texas, for an all-day meeting at First Branch church Sunday, April 30. This is to be district day for Southwestern Texas District, and we are expecting Saints from all over the district to attend. Previous to this on Thursday, April 27, a reception will be given in President Smith's honor at the home of the district president. Friday and Saturday will be spent in a tour of the hill country adjacent to San Antonio, President Smith speaking at Bandera Friday night.—J. A. Robinson, district president.

Request Prayers

There being considerable urgency in this request for prayers which arrived too late for inclusion in the regular column, we present it here: Sister Earl Caldwell, 4 Curtis Street, Saint Thomas, Ontario, asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that her life may be prolonged in order that she may rear her little family. She has been in the Memorial Hospital for five weeks. This week she undergoes a very serious operation.

The Pigeonhole

The Pigeon Went to Church

"I went to church last night," confided the pigeon, "Oh, yes—I do go to church, and I see a great many things. Well, I saw a number of things last night. I saw an old lady, so frail that she could scarcely climb the church steps, totter alone down the aisle, seat herself, and lift her eyes trustfully to the preacher's face. I saw a young couple holding hands. I saw a man whose head was bowed in prayer. I saw two young girls, dressed in the height of style, ogling two boys not far away. I saw a blind man led to his accustomed place by a friend. I saw a pair of young parents exasperated by the wigglesomeness of their little son. I saw a choir that sang beautifully—then whispered. I saw a man of God inspired by the Spirit to eloquent utterance. Yes, I went to church last night."

The Pigeon's Own Collection of Earthquake Comment

From a loyal Native Son of the Golden West: "This is so unusual!"

From Hollywood: "The most stupendous, epoch-making, awe-inspiring, earthquake ever staged."

From the Chamber of Commerce: "The earthquake was greatly exaggerated by the eastern press."

From the San Francisco newspapers: "Now it's your turn."

From the Los Angeles newspapers: "The earthquake did little damage to any but the oldest and poorest sections of the city."

From the real estate men: "The earthquake is a forgotten incident."

From the Californian's History of California: "There was no earthquake."

From an expatriate Californian: "Blah!"

Modern Proverbs

Building the Church From Within

2.—Instruction for Candidates for Baptism

Some children receive adequate instruction before they are baptized, and so have a foundation for beginning a successful career in church membership. It is unfortunate that many do not. To those that lack all instruction except the statement, "You're old enough, you ought to be baptized," baptism can mean very little more than a ducking under somewhat solemn circumstances.

As yet the church has no better material for guiding the instruction of youthful candidates for membership than the Epitome of Faith, which was never designed for such use. Yet that document, in the hands of a well-informed pastor, or some other consecrated and qualified member of the priesthood, can be a means of bringing a knowledge of the truth and a grounding in church membership to the young candidates. Plans are under way whereby it is hoped that other literature, adapted to the needs of all teachers, can be made available for the instruction of candidates of all ages.

The instruction should properly come before baptism, rather than after, in order that the candidates may understand better what the ceremony is all about and what membership means. There is something not altogether fair in the method of baptizing them first and telling them afterward what membership requires.

In many churches the pastor himself takes charge of this particular branch of religious education. It is his privilege if he can perform it, and it should be undertaken very seriously in order that the experience may be remembered by the young candidates.

The instructor of such a class should arrange for his pupils to meet once every week from now until Children's Day. The material for instruction and the manner of presentation should be considered very carefully, in order that interest may not lag and the whole subject become tedious and distasteful to the young children. One must consider the possible effect on the whole future course of their lives.

6. Enlistment and consecration service for the young people.

The Church and Economics

In Time, issue of April 3 last, under the heading "Religion" and caption "Holy Years," comment is made upon the "holy years" or Jubilees, regularly proclaimed every twenty-five years by the Catholic Church, and two good reasons pointed out why the "Energetic Pius XI" is fortunately situated for calling a holy year observance, with all of which there might be found agreement among those acquainted with the historical roots of Catholicism and present tendencies; but in commenting upon the admirable background furnished by the depression for renewal of age-old attacks by all churches upon Mammon, the writer makes a comment which should be challenged. He says:

"Only the Roman Catholic Church may be said to have an official attitude on 'Economics.' This attitude, based on Leo XIII's encyclical Rerum Novarum (1891), the Statesman-Pope, Pius XI, has elaborated in many a pronouncement. Denouncing communism, rejecting Socialism, chiding Capitalism, finding Syndicalism (the Fascist type of government-in-business) too powerfully concentrated, Pius XI has come out for: minimum-wage laws; old-age pensions; private property, even a 'modest fortune' for workers; government regulation of business; cooperation between Capital and Labor in some form of local unit resembling the medieval guild. Without anywhere attempting to promote these ideas by direct political action, and without reducing them to concrete proposals, Pius XI has offered them to the world as supreme economic wisdom, divinely inspired and backed by the sublime authority of God's earthly vicar."

In commenting thus the writer in Time has overlooked several important things. It is not true that the Catholic Church is the only one with an "attitude" on economics; for though we are small comparatively the Latter Day Saint Church has for a hundred years had a definite "attitude" on economics. What is more we have had a program along the lines of which we have suggested approach be made to the solution of the problems presented and methods by which social progress could and can be made as well as better economic conditions established in industry have been suggested.

In Communism, Socialism, Capitalism, and Syndicalism, good is to be found though much of their teachings may be undesirable; hence rather than denouncing Communism, rejecting Socialism, chiding Capitalism, and finding Syndicalism too "powerfully concentrated," the task of the Christian church is to find and preserve, and vitalize the good in all these doctrines and catch them up in some form of social order in which these good things shall be correlated and coördinated in a social program of reform. Minimum-wage laws, old-age pensions, government regulation of business, and revival of the medieval guild are all palliative merely, and do not strike at the root of our trouble at all. What the church must stand for is the institution of Christian principles in industry. The leaven needed to "leaven the whole lump" is the doctrine of stewardships, as inculcated by the Master and exemplified by the apostles when the people "continued daily in the temple, and ate their meat in gladness."

At the base of this doctrine is the consciousness of our relationship to God which carries fraternity into business as well as into social amenities. This means religious motivation. And our church has stood for a social order in which the dynamic of industrial and political activation shall be on the basis of brotherly love rather than the aggrandizement of selfish interests. When men can be found working at wealth production for the mere love of contributing to the common weal, the question of a minimum wage will become merely incidental; old-age pension laws will not be needed, for the care of the dependents will automatically be found from the communized surpluses consecrated by the stewards. The amassing of large individual "fortunes" will stop right at the point where these fortunes cease to be used for common good. All above needs and just wants being consecrated to the group will automatically protect against the evils of large fortunes in the hands of persons not dominated by the desire to serve common ends, and will automatically answer the question of law governing the inheriting of large fortunes.

The doctrine of stewardships will make governmental regulation of business unnecessary, and will insure the cooperation of Capital and Labor; and this without revival of medieval guilds. For when laborers and capitalists begin working with the goal being the common good rather than aggrandizement of selfish interests, their common interests, because of having a common goal, form a basis on which they freely cooperate, and adjustment of differences becomes easy.

Time should know there is at least one church which not only has an economic "attitude" but an economic and social program as well. And we are sure that our doctrine of stewardships, once made operative in a community, will help solve the various problems above mentioned.

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

What to Do for Sunday Evening

Sunday evening is a difficult problem for most pastors. Crowds are slim and interest is frequently low. Especially in warm weather people prefer to ride in the country or rest at home rather than attend church. Put on a competitive basis with many other interests and possibilities, the church suffers. People have already attended church once and they feel that they have done their duty.

What the pastor can do who feels that he must keep up the evening service is a problem. To continue with desultory efforts and nothing offered but preaching with no continuity of theme, is almost certain to produce small crowds, feeble interest, and discouraging results.

Here are a few things some pastors are doing successfully:

1. Stereopticon lectures on church history subjects, or general themes. (Sets of slides may be rented of our Graphic Arts Bureau, Independence, at moderate cost.) These are always popular.

2. A special speaker for a series of missionary sermons, and a selected group of singers to render gospel songs. A good soloist will help.

3. Give the young people of the branch one Sunday evening a month, for which they choose or furnish the speaker and arrange the program. Some young member of the priesthood can be in charge. This plan is useful in stimulating the interest of the young people, and gives them a feeling of having a share in the church work.

4. Religious drama, with a musical program. Many branches used the Conversations, a series of church history plays by President Elbert A. Smith, which appeared in Vision in 1930, with excellent results. Lacking copies of these, some local writers may be able to produce short Book of Mormon or church history plays, or morality plays.

5. Music. Cantatas, orchestral programs, or congregational singing supplementing a short sermon or given alone have brought out good crowds.

Remember this: the Sunday morning service is generally for the church members, and few others come. But Sunday evening is the time to receive strangers and nonmembers. The service is less formal, and they feel less hesitancy in attending. Long evenings, with nothing to do, may bring them to your church. What will you have to offer them?

The Branch Bundle is now taking the Herald into more than sixteen hundred church homes.

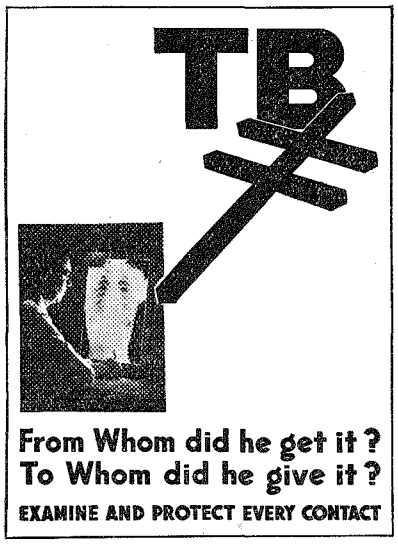
A BARREL OF APPLES

A Statement by the National Tuberculosis Association



SMALL POSTER FOR THE CAMPAIGN

"ONE BAD APPLE can spoil the barrel," says an old proverb. A case of tuberculosis may, from the public health viewpoint, be like that bad apple—the disease tends to spread from him who has it to those with whom he lives.

But the spread of this disease can be prevented. How? By examining every person who has been in close contact with a case. This means not only medical examination of adults, but also of children. With the aid of the tuberculin test and the X-ray it is now possible to discover if a person is infected, and if so, how much damage, if any, has been done. If any danger signals are discovered, much can be done to prevent the development of actual disease.

One difficulty is that tuberculosis usually develops slowly. Months or even years may pass before the symptoms become troublesome enough to drive the patient to the family doctor. Meantime other members of the family may have become infected. People need to be reminded that "that tired feeling," or the "cough that hangs on," or certain other symptoms may be due to tuberculosis and should be investigated by a doctor.

To accomplish this, the National Tuberculosis Association and its two thousand and eighty-four affiliated associations throughout the United States conduct each year an "Early Diagnosis Campaign," during which they seek to focus attention upon a single phase of tuberculosis, which still kills more persons between the ages of fifteen and forty-five than any other disease.

This year the campaign begins on April 1 and will ask the public "From Whom Did He Get It?—To Whom Did He Give It?" These suggestive questions will be pointed up by the slogan, "Examine and Protect Every Contact?"

In numerous ways persons will be helped to find out if they have the disease, to secure proper treatment, and to learn to protect others. Emphasis will be laid on the danger of the disease to children and the necessity of examining them with the tuberculin test and the X-ray. Because of the economic stress it is all the more necessary to build our defenses against the enemy, who strikes when resistance is low.

Physicians, health officers, public health nurses, social workers, civic groups and community leaders will participate. Insurance companies, employers, business organizations and others can help. Readers of this magazine are urged, as a matter of personal and family health protection, to give serious thought to the information and advice that will be given widespread circulation during this campaign, and where such a step is indicated, the family doctor should be consulted promptly for a medical examination.

But this requires a deep religious motivation as a social dynamic, which will place the devotees of that religion under the impulsion of right doing because the welfare of the group demands it. This impulsion will not be found in laws governing wages, or regulating business but from the greater and divine law of love, where love of God and love of neighbor will go hand in hand, thus giving parallel direction to the social forces now so badly set awry and running counter by the disrupting forces of selfishness. It is socializing and industrializing the Christian religion. Perhaps it were better to say, it is Christianizing industry and economics.

And it can be done by inculcating and practicing the doctrine of stewardships. F. M. S.

They Like It

Mrs. Tressa Baker, a member of the Lansing, Michigan, publicity department, writes: "We were glad to take advantage of the Herald bundle. The original order of twelve has been increased to twenty-five copies. The story, Riches Untold, is especially interesting. All agree that the Saints' Herald is the 'best ever'."

Nauvoo Summer Camp for Young People

YOUNG PEOPLE throughout the church will be interested to know that plans have been made to hold a camp at Nauvoo again this summer. The camp will cover a twelve-day period, from August 7 to 18 inclusive. The total cost for room and board will be one dollar per day. In addition there will be a registration fee of one dollar; this fee, however, will be refunded if the registration is sent in before August 1.

The daily program will be similar to that of last year. In the forenoon there will be class work in health, music, dramatics, recreation, and other fields of leadership training. At the ten o'clock assembly periods, topics covering the present program of the church and some of the outstanding historical events of special significance to young people will be discussed.

Every afternoon will be devoted to recreation, auto trips and hikes to nearby places of interest, boating, swimming, organized games, and competitive sports. During these activities the campers will have opportunity to put into actual practice the instruction given in the class period earlier in the day.

The evenings will be spent around the camp fire or in some specially planned activity. There will be two Wednesday evening fellowship services in "David's Chamber"; three special lectures by visiting church leaders; and at least one evening of musical and dramatic productions. Ideas for organizing the young people's group in your home branch will be demonstrated on all these occasions.

Tentative arrangements have been made for President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Apostle J. F. Garver, and others, to visit the camp and participate in the program of instruction.

Young people between the ages of 15 and 24 are eligible for registration. Those outside of this age limit who desire to attend must make special arrangements with the camp director before making plans to attend camp.

Further information may be had by writing Eugene Closson, Camp Director, Lamoni, Iowa.

Speak the truth by all means; let it fall upon the hearts of men with all the imparted energy by which the spirit gives it power; but speak the truth in love, and, perchance, it may subdue them by its winsome beauty, and prompt their acknowledgment that it is altogether lovely.—Reverend William Morley Punshon.

Your Gifts

Religion that takes the form of ecstasy, with no outlet in the way of work, is dangerous. . . .

You are the steward of any gift the gods have given you, and you answer for their use with your life. Do not obstruct the divine current. Use your knowledge and use it quickly, or it will disintegrate and putrefy.—Elbert Hubbard.

The Story of Etta Kett

"I'm Too Young," Says Kathryn

"Mother! Can I go to the senior dance?" Etta's little sister Kathryn whirled about the kitchen in a mad fantasy of dance steps.

"'Say May Kathryn, say May I. When will you learn to speak correct English?"

"I'm too full of language to speak English, Mother dear. Tell me quick, before you stop to think—Can I go to the senior dance?" and Kathryn whirled about the room again. Mother Kett was not worried.

"What do you think about it?" she parried.

"I think I ought to go," and Kathryn hummed lightly as she watched her mother's face for the hint of an answer. But that wise lady discreetly refrained from betraying herself. She would not risk creating a storm of tears by refusing.

"Well, I'll not forbid you, but you know how I feel about it."

"I only wish, Mother dear, that you could know how I feel about it. All my best friends will be there. It's the one important social event of the year. And Charlie Grant has asked me to go. And you know he's one of the nicest boys in the whole class. If I don't go everybody will think I'm an awfully funny stick. Oh, Mother, I've just got to go. And if I don't get to go I'll stay home and be perfectly miserable, and I'll get pale and go into a decline, or something, and I'll probably cry all over your shoulder and get tear stains on your dress, and—and—and" Kathryn had been reeling it off pretty rapidly, but finally ran out of something to say.

Mother Kett pushed her gently away. "Unsmother me, Kathryn, unsmother me. I want a chance to breathe," she said. "You are partly right and partly wrong. Not all of your friends will be there. I know some of your best friends that will not. You know, of course, that the yard back of the hall will be full of bottles the morning after, and you know that the boys and girls who drink will be there on the floor with you, and that you will come home smelling as smoky as a hotel lobby. You know, too, how the church stands on the question, and that your example will influence the thoughts of many younger girls who admire you very much. I'm just going to leave you to think it over for yourself. I can't go on making decisions for you all your life. But I want you to know that I am very much interested in the kind of a decision you make." And Mother Kett said many other serious things to Kathryn which time and space will not permit us to record here.

"Oh, Mother. That's too much responsibility for me," wailed Kathryn. "I'm too young for it!"

At this point the front door slammed and Etta came in.

"Come Katy, get on your hat quick. I have a feeling that the violets are blooming under that creek bank in the park. Hurry! We've time to get them before Dad gets home for supper!"

And Etta pulled Kathryn out through the front door with her.

Log Notes

Our Australian friends have instituted something of a novelty in what they call an "Educational Reunion," according to the Gospel Standard. The features indicate something altogether charming and worth-while in the way of a program. The day's meetings were sponsored by the Balmain Kimnor Klub and the Dorian Literary Society of Leichhardt, in the Balmain Church. Music, both vocal and instrumental, orations, scenes from famous plays, and other features filled the day. The young people are enthusiastic about the idea. We are glad to pass it on to others.

Perhaps you have a club, program, or local plan that has been of interest and value in the young people's social life and church work. Don't be selfish. Don't hoard all the good things you have learned. Share them with others. Let us hear from you soon.

"Youth's Forum," said Cecil, reading the heading for our page. "Well, I'm for 'em, too." And so is the whole church. Never before has there been a time in the history of the church when there were more fine and promising young people in it, ready and willing to offer their services in its work. And the church, too, is more ready to welcome them than ever before.

NEWS BRIEFS

New Saints' Hymnal in Braille

Warrington Branch, Northern England District, has just finished a complete translation of the new Saints' Hymnal into Braille for the use of a blind brother, Herbert Mellor. Brother Mellor is engaged in public work in schools, teaching basket making. He has also commenced two classes in the branch for the instruction of boys and girls in this art.

Two Missionaries Complete Thirty Years of Service

Thirty years ago this month two young men came to the General Conference of the church, held at Independence, to receive their first missionary appointment. They were E. F. Robertson, recently appointed missionary to Southern New England, and J. E. Vanderwood, now laboring in Southern Wisconsin.

Forty years ago this spring Brother Robertson joined the church, and thirty years ago he left the farm to attend General Conference, where he received his first appointment. Since that time he has labored continuously under appointment, serving in half the States of the Union and under more than a dozen foreign flags.

Brother J. E. Vanderwood was baptized into the church forty-six years ago this fall, and was ordained and sent into the missionary field in March thirty years ago. He, too, came to the conference of 1903, and receive his first appointment. He has labored in many districts.

Both missionaries have excellent records of service and continue zealous in telling the gospel message. They have the appreciation of many friends.

Underwood Young People File Inventories

Underwood, Iowa, began the year by complying with the financial law of the church. In January ten young people of Underwood Branch gathered one evening at the home of a member for the purpose of filing their inventories. District President J. A. Hanson was there to advise and help.

Pittsburgh District Statistics

There are six hundred and eighteen members of the church living in Pittsburgh District, Pennsylvania, according to a recent report by the district secretary. These are divided into the following branches—Pittsburgh, Donora, New Castle, Punxsutawney, Fayette City, Lock No. Four, and the nonresident group. Pittsburgh, the largest branch, has one hundred and eleven members.

April—Birthday Month

April is the birthday month of the church. One hundred and three years ago April 6, the church of latter days was organized by six young men. April is also the birthday month of many of the church's faithful members. Among these are the following familiar names: William H. Kelley and Peter Anderson, April 1; Charles B. Woodstock, April 3; Israel L. Rogers and J. Arthur Davis, April 4; Dewey S. McNamara, April 6; Joseph F. Burton, April 9; Marietta Walker, April 10; Charles W. Wandell, April 12; Elizabeth J. Blair, April 13; Peter Whitmer, sr., and John A. McIntosh, April 14, and Clara Kellogg Ellis, April 28.

Served by General and Local Ministry

Saints of Lansing, Michigan, Branch were fortunate during the winter and early spring in having inspiring sermons from Apostle D. T. Williams, President F. M. McDowell, District President A. C. Barmore, and Elder Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan.

There is at present considerable activity on the part of local priesthood members. Cottage missionary meetings have been and are being conducted in various parts of the city by Clarence Dudley, Alva Dexter, Clair Easlick, Wesley Russell, and others.

North Manchester, England, Holds Missionary Day

Special Missionary Day was observed by North Manchester Branch, England, March 19, Apostle John W. Rushton, speaker at the morning service, Branch President F. H. Smith in charge. In his sermon Brother Rushton recalled attending a quarterly conference of Manchester District in this very room many years ago.

Patriarch W. H. Greenwood spoke on "Life's Experiences" in the evening.

Two Hundred and Fifty Voices Sing Easter Story at Stone Church

Most beautiful and effective among Easter programs was the choral story of Christ's life, death, and resurrection sung Sunday night at the Stone Church, Independence, by two hundred and fifty voices composing six different choruses and choirs. A crowded house listened with appreciation to numbers sung by the Stone Church Choir, the Aeolian Chorus, the Wahdemna Choral Club, the Cantanina Chorus, the Boys' Choir, and the Clematis Chorus. Mrs. Pauline James Arnson was the soloist of the evening.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE

By EVAN A. FRY

"This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1: 5-7.

Several years ago, before the depression made vacations unpopular, I spent a vacation period in company with several friends in the famous Ozark region of southern Missouri. One episode of our stay there was a trip to one of the equally famous Ozark caves. Through a narrow slit in the earth—down a few steps—then down a steep incline of debris—and we were in a huge underground room which would have contained several buildings the size of the Stone Church. On past a huge bell-shaped stalagmite some fifty odd feet in circumference, where God had been building for nobody knows how long at the rate of a cubic inch or so each year. Down—and on through narrow passages where we had to twist and squirm our way through, or drop primitively to all fours. On, and down—often over seemingly precarious and slippery wooden bridges over huge boulders or precipitous little canyons. And as we made our way, lighted by a lantern in the hands of the guide, and a candle in the hands of each member of the party, the guide regaled us with stories of vast portions of the cave not yet open to tourists, where explorers had pushed on for three days without coming to the end of the seemingly endless maze.

At last we paused—some three hundred feet below the surface—and the guide made a startling suggestion which amounted to a command. "Blow out your candles." Out went his lantern, too; and deep, black darkness—thick—heavy—oppressive—fairly exuded from the rocky walls.

Our sanity told us that everything was all right—that this was only one of the stock-in-trade of thrills which the guide dispensed to all customers. But doubts and fears and nameless terrors would intrude. If we had entertained them, it would have been easy to give way to useless hysteria. What if the guide had forgotten his matches? What dangerous beasts or reptiles might not have strayed into this damp, desolate place? Without light how would we dare move? A misstep—a slip—a loosened rock might send us crashing down an unseen crevice, or into an underground lake. Perhaps one of our number had already disappeared. If we should become lost in that cave, we might wander for months—even for years—in the unexplored depths below us, even if we had a light. How could we hope to get out without one?

And just then the guide struck a match. Seen in the light, the jagged rock walls became friendly. The path beneath our feet, though rugged, became firm and dependable. The beasts and reptiles became mere figments of our imagination. We were all there, safe and sound. Though we could see only a small portion of it, we knew that the path back to the surface could now be easily found. A little circle of light from an ordinary gasoline lantern had changed the whole atmosphere of that sepulchral cave.

I've been thinking about that experience lately, and about the words of Jesus, "I am the light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." The people of this old world, and I'm afraid some of our good Latter Day Saints, are in darkness—spiritual and mental darkness—just as thick, just as real, just as oppressive as the darkness of that cave was to us. They are beset with a thousand nameless fears and doubts and terrors. They have not the courage or the faith to move forward. These are admitted, self-evident facts. And to a disinterested observer, does it not seem strange that most of the millions who profess the name of Christ, and claim to have had the light of his countenance in their lives, are just as fearful, just as doubtful, just as terror stricken as their neighbors who make no profession of religion? "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth."

In these days when men's hearts are failing them for fear, shall we not all seek anew after the Light of Life which shall drive away the terrors of darkness, and dispell the doubts and fearful obsessions with which our imagination has peopled the onward way? The light need not shine so that we can see the path clear to the mouth of the cave; if it illumines the next step of the way, we need have no fear. And we can be assured by faith and hope that the dazzling sunlight of God's love shall yet break upon us if we continue to follow upward the path marked by the Light of Life.

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

A Lecture to the Priesthood at Independence, Missouri, February 13, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

II.—Spiritual Illumination

"The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

"This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, his Son; he that ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

"And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3.

IN JUNE, 1930, I underwent a major operation. Before I went into the operating room I was administered to by Brother John Garver, and as I was going under the anesthetic I had an experience which the physicians might say was due to the anesthetic wholly, but which to me was quite impressive, whatever its cause. I perceived three personages standing over me and they towered up majestically. They were in conversation and I listened to their talk. I knew what they were talking about. They were talking about matters of life and death and the mystery of the beyond. Though I knew what they were talking about I could not understand all they were saying because they were talking on a higher level, just out of my reach, and yet it had the sound of truth and of wisdom, and I felt that sometime I would understand. I might go on to say that it seemed that these three were standing in front of an immense natural gateway into a vast country. I was all for going inside, but one of them said, "No man can enter here except he shall first pass through the pain of death, and if you enter now you can not return." I preferred to return, and I did.

When I read some of the sections in the Doctrine and Covenants they make me think of that conversation. There are some of them just above my reach (Section 76, and section 90, and 85 and some others) but they have the sound of truth and wisdom. There is light in them. As we dig into them as time goes by we understand some things that years ago seemed to have no meaning at all.

SOURCE OF ILLUMINATION

In Section 90 the statement is made that the "glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth." And it seems that in view of what is set forth in section 85 the word "light" in association with "truth" has more than a symbolical meaning. I think it has a literal meaning. We read in section 85, as we proceed, that the light that lightens the sun and moon and stars proceeds forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space. We recognize of course that God is the source of all our spiritual illumination. James says, "He is the Father of light from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift," and the statement is made specifically in section 85 that this light that lightens our eyes, that comes from the sun (electricity is just sunlight that was stored away centuries ago in the form of coal or oil) this light, he says, that lightens your eyes, "quickens your intelligence." Now it has seemed to me ever since first reading that, though I could not get hold of it entirely, that even the sunlight that floods the fields brings intelligence with it from God and quickens other intelligence—all intelligence, even of the vegetable kingdom. When you plant your garden in the springtime, if you plant a rosebush and some sweet corn side by side, as the sunlight quickens them the rosebush reaches down and appropriates from the earth certain material which develops a lovely rose, and the corn selects other material from the same earth which builds an ear of corn. There is intelligence at work. That does not mean that the rosebush thinks, but there is intelligence in that process. There is purpose in it, a purpose had in mind that was hidden in the seed you planted. Intelligence comes from somewhere. You can not even paint a picture of the rose without thought. Well, this section 85 indicates that intelligence comes from the presence of God; borne even on the sunlight.

We know that there are many different kinds of light. Some of it is visible. Many rays are invisible. They penetrate otherwise opaque objects. With X-rays we can look into a man's body, and there are still more powerful invisible rays that must have a profound effect on all kinds of life. So

I think there is a hidden philosophy or a law of science in the statement that the glory of God is intelligence or light and truth, and that this light proceeds forth from him to quicken all other intelligence.

Jesus said, "My words, they are light and they are life." John said: "He is the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world"—not a single exception, not even among the ungodly. Their intelligence is lightened from him, though they do not use it in the right way.

Scientific Confirmation

This statement, contained in the Doctrine and Covenants and fortified by other statements, seems to be sustained by the later findings of science. In the year 1897—that was well over half a century after Joseph Smith gave this revelation—William James, a very noted psychologist, delivered a lecture at Harvard College—a scientist yet of authority in the world. He was combating the arguments made by some that the human brain originates thought of itself and hence when the brain perishes that is the end of man for ever. And James took the position that the brain does not generate thought. Its function is to transmit thought, and he made a comparison of the brain to a glass prism or lens, that gathers up light and transmits it; the color of the lens and its form would modify the character of the light, its manifestation, and quality. Thus he argued that our brains are simply organs of transmission, to transmit thought that originated in intelligence, and he said that intelligence was "coeval with the world," and that is exactly what the Doctrine and Covenants says. He made the remarkable statement that perhaps this world that we see is, after all, only a surface show, and the invisible world is the great world of light and reality, and from that invisible world rays of light pass through our consciousness in a great variety of forms. He seemed to be walking right along in the footsteps of Joseph Smith, and that seems strange because Joseph was supposed to be an ignorant boy, and he is a very wise man.

Much more recently things have been discovered that quite confirm what William James had in mind when he was speculating philosophically. I will read an extract from a statement by Wallace Russel, president of the Society of Arts and Sciences, who delivered an address before a meeting of that organization on December 30, 1932:

"In the discoveries of Einstein, Eddington, Jeans and others about the puzzling nature of space, Walter Russell, president of the Society of Arts and Sciences, says that science is likely to find a new conception of God and more tangible evidence of His existence.

"The universal nature of light is one of the keys to this new puzzle. Light, according to tests with scientific instruments, is not merely what human eyes see, but essentially the same radiation as heat, X-rays, radio waves and all other forms of radiation.

"Getting down to the ultimate particles which form matter, which seem to constitute light and which carry energy, scientists find them all acting suspiciously like some of the processes of human thought.

" 'The question arises,' says Russell, 'is there any line of demarcation between a spiritual and a physical universe, and have we been calling the invisible universe spiritual just because we could not see it?

" 'We have begun to see something tangible and inspiring beyond place, mass and dimension. There must be a limitless source of static energy somewhere back of all dynamic expression.' "

You will note some outstanding statements. He speaks of the "universal nature of light as one of the keys to the puzzle of the Universe." I think section 85 puts that key into our hands. He says that scientists find some forms of light acting suspiciously like processes of human thought, and back of it all, he says, there must be some great limitless source of energy, which the Doctrine and Covenants says is God "in the bosom of eternity," in the center of time and space, from whom proceeds all power, light and intelligence to fill the immensity of space and to quicken our intelligence.

Just one more brief quotation from J. Arthur Thompson, professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen, in the book called Science and Religion: He says, "The big discoveries on which all the great inventions depend are in the world of the invisible, beyond the physical, but there is, we have reason to believe, an unseen universe of a spiritual order. Perhaps we are too much given to the adage 'Seeing is believing.' Possibly with due precaution we might oftener say that 'Believing is seeing.' "

The old adage of science is "Seeing is believing," but one of the great truths of religion is that "Believing is seeing." "Seek and ye shall find," "Ask and it shall be given unto you," "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." So that those who are minded to believe may be able to see. They have a spiritual illumination that is not granted to those who are only willing to believe what they first see. What kind of a God is it that we worship? Section 85 brings him close home to us, "in all things, through all things, the power by which all things are made and governed."

Science tells us that solid matter which we all thought so stable is made up of atoms, each one in motion, a little universe in itself, and we are told—though this is probably just a guess—that if the atoms that go to make up a single drop of water should be split asunder and their energy released there would be power enough to light a great city. Think of the power resident in the universe, and

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST

By V. D. Ruch

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one."—1 John 5: 4-8.

Perhaps no other point in God's plan of salvation is so misunderstood as the blood of Christ, and how it can be of value to us in the saving of our souls. We hear much these days about the blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin, but very little about how this great act of cleansing can take place in our individual life.

In order to avoid misunderstanding I desire to emphasize that the death of Christ on the cross is the very center and hub of our salvation. No one could have been saved without it. But we believe that certain terms must be complied with before we can be partakers in the atonement.

The Bible tells us that "sin is the transgression of God's law." God knows how we should live in order to be perfect and have complete happiness. He has imparted that knowledge to us in his law. A complete compliance with his law will enable anyone to live a perfect life. When his law is broken it has to be atoned for.

Why the Atonement Was Necessary

Jesus did not die as a ransom paid to the Devil; neither did God demand his life to satisfy his wrath. Why, then, could not God have forgiven the sins of humanity without an atonement? God is not as a person who says one thing today and changes it tomorrow. He is not fickle minded. His law is divine and can not be changed. When it is broken some one must be punished for it. God is love, but he is also righteous. His love can not rob him of his righteousness. His righteousness demands that all sin be atoned for.

Sin came into the world in the Garden of Eden, and all mankind came under the curse. The righteousness of God could not allow the human family to be eternally damned without giving them a chance to be saved. He gave his Son—one of the Godhead—to suffer and die for the sins of the world and open the way of salvation for all.

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," was the cry of John, the Baptist. The Prophet Isaiah, over seven hundred years before the birth of Christ, prophesied thus concerning him:

"Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."—Isaiah 53: 4, 5.

Yes, that was a wonderful act performed and a great price paid by Jesus on Golgotha. Paul wrote of him in this language:

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow. . . . And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—Philippians 2: 5-11.

How May We Be Partakers in the Blood of Christ?

That is the important question for us today. As stated, we hear much about the blood of Christ, but little about how it will wash away our sins. Jesus shall have died in vain for us if we do not comply with the terms of the gospel. He opened the way for us; we must walk therein. "The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," is quoted often from many pulpits. But that is just the last part of a Bible verse. The entire verse reads thus: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) That little word "if" indicates that there are some terms or conditions attached. One has no right to use the last part of a verse in that manner, especially when it causes the statement to be misleading. If one is permitted to use scripture that way it can be proved that there is no God. The last part of a certain verse states "there is no God." But the entire sentence reads: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Quite a different meaning, isn't it? So with the verse about the blood of Christ.

The Three Witnesses

John tells us that Jesus Christ came by water and blood, and it is the Spirit that beareth witness. He continues:

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one." —1 John 5: 7, 8.

It is striking that water and blood ran from the side of Christ after his crucifixion. A close study of the plan of salvation reveals that water, spirit and blood are very important factors. Jesus said to Nicodemus: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) In verse 3 Jesus states: "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." Many so-called Christian people today have need of regeneration. The world is crying for and needing people who have really been born again.

Baptism for Remission of Sins

I find it difficult to convince even converted Christians that baptism has anything to do with remission of sins. They seem to think that that doctrine is an insult to the blood of Christ and depreciates its value. However, that is not true. No one could have received the remission of sins had it not been for the spilt blood of Christ. On the other hand, the blood of Christ does not bring remission of sins to anyone who is not willing to comply with the terms of the gospel of which baptism in water is a part. A living faith and a true repentance must precede baptism in order to make it effective. If this baptism is performed by an authorized servant of God the candidate receives the remission of sins by virtue of the atonement of Christ.

John, the forerunner of Christ, began his work by preaching "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." On Pentecost, the apostles who had been admonished by Christ to teach men "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," and who upon this occasion were especially inspired by the Holy Ghost in what they were saying, instructed converted people to "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) Here would have been a wonderful opportunity for the apostles to tell these people that there was nothing for them to do, that the blood of Christ cleansed them from all sin, but such instruction was not given. They were to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins. Paul evidently received the remission of sins when he was baptized. At least, Ananias said to him: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) If it was necessary for Paul to be baptized to wash away his sins, why is it not necessary for us all? In Revelation 7: 14 we read of that great multitude clothed in white who had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. It is well to notice that "they" had washed their robes in the blood of Christ. How could they do that? The blood of Christ was not on earth then or now. In no other way than obedience to the gospel of Christ could they or we wash our robes in the blood of Christ.

In Romans 6: 3, 4 Paul states:

"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

Language could not make plainer the fact that baptism in water and the death (blood) of Christ are inseparably joined together in God's plan of salvation for humanity. The old man with his deeds is buried by baptism into death, and even as Christ was resurrected so are we raised up from the watery grave to walk in newness of life. In other words, by obedience we have received the remission of sins in baptism by virtue of the death of Christ, and we have become a new creature in Christ Jesus. We must die (be crucified) with Christ to receive the remission of sins, and be buried with him in baptism. After one has been legally baptized he receives the gift of the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands of the servants of God. There is no other plan revealed in God's word whereby we can be saved.

Conclusion

How do we become partakers in the blood of Christ? By being born again. This includes baptism in water and the spirit. These must be performed in a legal manner by one who has prepared himself for them, that is, has developed a living faith and truly repented of his sins.

"Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; But with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish and without spot. . . . Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. . . . the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."—1 Peter 1: 18-25.

The word of God is truth. It is the power of God unto salvation. Obey it all and you will inherit eternal life. Remember that the water, the Spirit, and the blood of Christ are the three witnesses on earth. Be baptized in water and the spirit and the blood of Christ will cleanse you from all sin.

AUTHORITY

Part Two

By Hermann Peisker

"Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you."—Matthew 7: 22, 23.

"Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up."—Matthew 15: 13.

A Divine Warning

In the days of our Savior, when he reviewed the religious condition and contemplated the many sects of the Jews each claiming to be the custodian of divine truth, he uttered the solemn warnings of the foregoing texts.

He knew the unfaithfulness of the human heart and the perverse courses pursued by men in the name of religion, religious freedom, etc., hence he was careful to warn his apostles that there would be other "plants" than the "true vine."

In his warning he was not referring to heathen religions, but to divisions amongst those "calling me Lord, Lord." There would be many plants which would grow up without being divinely planted. In due time "every plant" which his "heavenly Father hath not planted" and which therefore did not carry divine authority, "shall be rooted up."

The foregoing warnings should be carefully considered by every Christian. Care should be taken to avoid becoming part of any other plant than the "True Vine."

Different Foundations

Every church must set forth some special claim to justify its existence, otherwise it has no right to exist. These special claims constitute the real authority of a church.

Apostolic Authority

The Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, and also the Anglican Churches, point to an apostolic succession from New Testament times as the basis of their authority, although they have not a single living apostle in their organizations today.

But the Church of Jesus Christ was not built upon the foundation of "a succession from apostles" as its authority. It was built upon a "succession of living apostles."

The "living church of the living God" (1 Timothy 3: 15) is a continual process. Jesus predicted, "I will build my church." (Matthew 16: 18.) It was to be a continual process until "the perfecting of the Saints," "the work of the ministry," and "the edifying of the body" had been completed. The divine order was: (1) A living God; (2) A living "foundation of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors," etc.; (3) A living "chief corner stone" and "Foundation"; (4) "Lively Stones, built up a Spiritual House"; (5) The "Holy Temple in the Lord . . . an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Ephesians 3: 18-22; 4: 11-16; 1 Peter 2: 4-9, etc.)

The glorified Jesus was the foundation of the living church, with a continued ministry of living apostles and prophets called by the ever-present Spirit, to minister to the living saints of each age. The foundation of the first church, of which Peter was one of the apostles, was laid by divine revelation from the "Father which is in Heaven." (Matthew 17: 17, 18.) The same was to be true in every age, wherever the true church is found, for "upon this rock I will build my Church."

The Church of Jesus Christ can not rest its authority upon a mere succession from dead apostles, especially when not one of that succession has either the name of apostle, prophet, etc., nor the apostolic form of delegated authority and divine call. (Hebrews 5: 4; Acts 13: 1-3.)

Bible Commissions

There are many who point to the divine call and appointment of the twelve apostles, the seventy, and other New Testament ministers, saying, "That gives workers for Christ their authority."

Such forget that commissions of groups of men, individuals, and pastoral officers, as recorded in the New Testament, are the historical records of God's authority to men he has called in accordance with his divinely appointed plan. A living apostle today might take the commission given to the first apostles, if he has been called of God by divine revelation as they were, as his also; but there is no authority for a man-elected or a man-selected ministry to "take this honor unto themselves" (Hebrews 5: 4). Such a course is contrary to all divine law.

Doctrinal Succession

Quite a number of churches, who make no pretence to a divinely authorized ministry, try to justify their existence and conjure up an appearance of authority by linking themselves up doctrinally with the apostolic times. They serve up "apostolic doc-

Chapter 16

Days of the Cross

FOR POLLY the days which followed were like great, gray pearls on a long string. They seemed never to end—vague, unreal. It was as if she were living in a dream. Her body went about doing strange, usual things, and there were always people to help her. Always some one was beside her to walk with her, to talk with her. Some one held her hand when she sat down to rest. Some one chose the clothes she was to wear each day. Some one cleaned her kitchen and prepared the meals. Some one spoke of the beauty of the sunshine. There were many of them about, and yet the house was quiet and very clean. Her Easter lily still bloomed in its place in the window of Brad's study. It was white, very white.

Polly could not remember all that happened. At first the world had been still and dark and cold. Then the odor of medicine, a nice odor, broke through the darkness, and there had been the touch of the nurse's hands. Her hands were white, too. And when the room had lightened considerably, she realized that Brad was sitting beside her, eyes deeply serious, the lines on his face making him look gray and old. He held her hand a long time, and then the doctor said that she must sleep.

But where was Carrol? . . . After another long interval, she remembered—she knew that Carrol was in that fair, restful country. He was no longer in his little crib, nor even down in the living room romping about "wi' Daddy." Carrol was gone. She knew it should not be so, but her heart was heavy.

After another seemingly long interval she was feeling better, and Brad helped her downstairs. There were flowers. People—all the neighbors—were kind-eyed. Cora Tasley was there with Edith. Mrs. Nelson was in bed. Polly understood that she wasn't feeling well, but somehow she didn't have the strength to go to see her. She mentioned it to Brad and he only said, "Mother's all right, dearest."

And then there was a meeting at the church. Polly really couldn't understand why she was there, that is, she couldn't understand at first. But there she was, and Brad was beside her. He had his arm about her right before all the people. And Mrs. Nelson was there, too, and Edith and Cora, and all the Happy Half Dozen, but they didn't look so happy.

There were banks of flowers, wonderful, colorful, but earthly. They weren't like those flowers in that fair land where Carrol was. Not at all.

And then from somewhere—she didn't just remember where—came a little, white casket. It was the casket that reminded her why she was there. In it, she knew, lay the little clay temple which was Carrol's body, the little temple she had bathed so often and kissed and petted and watched over. He didn't need it any more in the country to which he had gone.

Soft, tender music . . . People crying . . . Pale sunlight through the stained-glass church windows . . . Brother Evans in the pulpit, talking to them. He didn't often do that, for he was not as fluent with words as many other elders. He was reading the words of Jesus: "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not." He was saying many things about Jesus and little children and Carrol in particular, but mostly he was saying over and over: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

After that it wasn't long—not nearly long enough for Polly to decide why she was so numb and untouchable—before they were moving. She was sitting in a large, black car, Brad beside her. And there was Mrs. Nelson, too, and her eyes were so puffed and swollen and red that they didn't look like eyes. Brad had his other arm around her.

When, at last, they stopped, they stepped out on the ground. It must be—why, yes, she had been there before—it was Mound Grove Cemetery. In front of them the hill slipped away into a ravine toward the west. Peace. . . . Quiet. . . . Tall trees stood by, silent guardians of the dead. Dead—a funny sounding word! Polly had heard it before. She stumbled as she walked along; Brad's arm still around her. Somehow she couldn't very well see the ground—it seemed remote, far away. . . .

There before them in the midst of a bank of flowers was the little white casket. It was a pretty thing they had chosen for Carrol, just like a little couch. Inside of it he lay as if he were ready for bed—only they had forgotten Remus, the red rubber rabbit, little Remus with the ears all chewed. That had happened when Carrol was cutting his teeth. Funny they had forgotten that, but still—they didn't know—whoever had done all this—that Carrol never could go to "Sandy man land" without Remus cuddled right under his cheek. She should have told them that.

Everyone came up to look at the flowers and the casket. They were all very interested and curious, and then dull sobbing smote her ears. Mrs. Nelson was crying aloud. Polly raised her head and looked at her. The sun was not shining now as it had been when they were back at the church.

But everyone's head was bowed. They must be praying. She bowed her head, too. She could not close her eyes though as a person ought to do when some one is praying, for she wanted to see all that was happening.

Right at her feet were flowers, piles of them, pink, russet, yellow, gold, blue, dark red roses, and what? . . . Right there at the toe of her left foot a single white, pure white, blossom.

Carrol would have given that blossom to her if he had been there, and he would have smiled. No one was smiling now.

She watched the flower. It seemed to quiver with a message for her. As the prayer went on she thought she could smell the fragrance of it, penetrating, sweet, piercingly sweet, eternal. She must have that blossom.

And then some one handed Brad some flowers, dear, handsome Brad. He was sorrowful because he knew nothing about the sweetness of death unto life. She must explain it to him if she could, but not just now.

He was pressing her arm; he wanted her to turn away from Carrol and the white couch and the white flower. But no—she couldn't leave that way.

Quickly she knelt and snatched the flower. Some one sobbed audibly. As she arose, she looked into Brad's face and said under her breath, "He would have wanted me to have that one." Of course he would.

BACK at home Brother Evans, Sister Evans, Sister Livingston, Edith and Cora and Arthea, oh—everyone. Mrs. Nelson had gone to bed again. And Polly, feeling strangely tired, sat on the lounge.

Some one was talking earnestly to Brad. She didn't know who it was. They were talking about her. They thought she wasn't acting natural. She should cry—cry. Merciful heavens, what was there to cry about? She didn't want to cry—it was too much trouble. She was tired. They said if she didn't cry, she would be sick again. No, no, she wouldn't be sick—she was strong. Besides she couldn't be sick, there was work to do.

More gray pearls slipped on the string for Polly—days and several more, she didn't know just how many. They were rather dull days even if the wind was getting warmer. It was spring. The tulips in her garden were glowing red, orange, and white. There were days of warm sunshine. Days of work about the house. Days of meeting with the group and at the church. Days of sewing. And always people were watching her. They thought her an unnatural mother because she said nothing. They didn't understand—she couldn't explain to them just yet. It was all too sacred. She couldn't describe to them the beauties of the place where she knew Carrol, her baby, played, any more than she could explain to them the vast loneliness that often crept over her. They couldn't possibly know how often her arms ached from awful emptiness; how she missed Carrol in his little play corner, in the kitchen, in the nursery, everywhere. They didn't realize—and she had no right to expect them to—that she hadn't the courage to go into the nursery, that she had never opened the door and that things there were left just as the nurse and Sister Livingston had left them.

No, there were hundreds of feelings that Polly Nelson could not analyze, could not explain. One of these was how very much Sister Livingston had meant to her through all these gray-pearl days. The kindly, old, English woman had almost lived at the Nelsons and especially since Mrs. Nelson had gone back to Oregon. Yes, she had gone, white-lipped, contrite. Left them the same week of the funeral. It was well that she had, for Milly needed her, you know.

ONE morning when the sun was shining gloriously into the garden and the whole world was on the point of awakening, Polly tried to tell Sister Livingston some of her thoughts, tried to thank her. But words were empty. They seemed to drop off into an endless depth, one by one, and were lost.

"Why, Polly, my child, of course I was here to lend you a strong arm. I've lost loved ones of my own—I know what it means. I know how it is, the great emptiness when you come back from putting a loved one away. It's not them we grieve for; it's ourselves, lonely, small creatures that we are. It's in these days of the cross that we need help, all the help we can get both heavenly and earthly. It's in days like these that we must look up—we must look up above the Cross, right into the heart of paradise and see our loved ones as they are."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Polly's hands dropped idly away from their work into her lap. She was thinking of her vision. How she gloried in it!

The even voice went on: "Then I think of the words Christ, the Son of God, prayed to his Father even at that last hour: 'I have glorified thee on earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self.' Jesus taught us that he was the Light, the Way, the Savior of men. We look to him for goodness and all truth, and that was his prayer. Surely our little Carrol in his small life here on earth, did nothing but glorify the Father. And somewhere until the great day of the resurrection and judgment he is going on. I connect the realization that these loved ones are going on over there with something else Jesus says—it's just a fancy of mine, but it helps. He said: 'I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.' I think he comes to us, Polly, my child, in this knowledge that we ourselves are not far from the land where our loved ones are—that after death there is a place for us to meet them and our God. I've prayed that He would come to you, Polly, my child, and comfort you with this realization."

"He has, Sister Livingston." Polly's voice was low. "I'm so grateful that you thought to pray that; I wasn't praying for myself. I was too busy praying for Carrol and for Brad. . . . There's something I want to tell you sometime—when I can. It helped me—oh, I can't tell you how much it has helped me. But—"

"Now, don't feel that you have to tell me until you're ready—just wait. There's lots of time. In the meantime read for yourself some of the lovely passages in the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters of John. It takes sorrow to make us discover those passages—I learned that long ago. But," and she hesitated, "there's something I've worried about."

"Yes?" the hand with which Polly reached for another potato to peel for lunch, was not quite steady.

"Well, I've worried about Brad—and about Sister Nelson."

"Brad and Sister Nelson," Polly stupidly repeated. "Why—"

"I'll take Sister Nelson first. She left here under sort of a cloud, Polly, my child. I talked with her. She feels horribly responsible for Carrol's illness and death. And you weren't yourself enough to receive explanations and she couldn't have given them—she's too hysterically inclined. It was a miserable situation. There was only one thing that she could do—leave. And she has gone off thinking herself a—a murderess!"

Polly laid another potato in the pan beside her after inspecting it closely.

"A woman of her age oughtn't to feel that way. It really wasn't her fault any more than it was mine for having you away from home right then so the baby could get outdoors. Things happen that way—often. We don't know why—but they do. Well, she felt herself a misfit here anyway, and well, Polly my child, I'm not sure that I can explain it. But in Carrol's death a light in her life has gone out. I suspect you don't realize how much that one grandson meant in her sight. She adored him. She often mentioned it to me. I know she was a trial to you—you thought her a queer, melancholy sort of woman, but she is good-hearted, and you could see her only through the eyes of youth and inexperience. I'm wondering if it will ever be possible for Carrol's passing to make a deeper understanding between you and Mrs. Nelson, and, for that matter, between Brad and his mother."

"But Brad?" there was a note of impatience in Polly's reminder.

"Polly, my child, I'm going to speak frankly. I think you've been pretty selfish about your grief—you've left Brad out. I've watched you. You've had your grief to yourself and somewhere you've found your own brand of consolation. You've forgotten that Brad, your husband and the father of the child you've just lost, needs the sort of faith you have. To me he's been a pitiful spectacle in the last three weeks, very pitiful. He's a strong man, but his faith is weak, his knowledge of eternal things is small, and he doesn't have quite the free conscience you do. The past has been knocking hard at Brad's door lately, and he looks it. Haven't you noticed how haggard he is? He's worried over you, too, Polly, my child."

Dull anger stirred in Polly's breast, anger at Sister Livingston, anger at people for judging, anger at herself for her blindness and selfishness. She wanted to say things, hateful, vengeful things, but a look at the anxious face beside her, quenched the fire of her emotion. Then inside of her almost as if a small voice accusing her: "She's telling you the truth, Polly. You have been selfish."

Back rushed the happenings of the past three weeks as well as she could remember them. The little, insignificant details of Carrol's passing were more acutely hers now than ever before—the hard fight, the administration, the resignation, Carrol's tiny dead face, and Brad's hands as he led her away from the bedside. The funeral. The music. The people. Like a panoramic story these scenes passed before her, and the tragedy of them, her own blindness, her selfishness toward her husband wrung her

How I Became a Latter Day Saint

By Ella H. Shuert

My parents taught us children to be honest and true, to keep the Ten Commandments, to attend church and Sunday school, and to study our lessons.

When I was eighteen, I attended a service at Thomas, Michigan. The preacher was Doctor Joseph Luff. I had never heard such a sermon in my life. I knew he taught the Bible as one inspired. He made baptism very plain, saying that Jesus was our great example, that we should be immersed as was he. He told us that when we were baptized, our sins were remitted. It was then that Jesus' blood atoned for our sins. I had never been taught the principle of the laying on of hands, yet I knew it was in the Bible. Brother Luff taught this principle. He said that it was used first, for the confirming of the Saints as members of the church after baptism; second, for ordaining members to priesthood offices; third, for the healing of the sick, and fourth, for the blessing of little children.

Brother Luff preached the principles of the gospel as found in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, and I was sure that I was hearing the gospel of Christ in its fullness. I then felt the gentle spirit of peace and joy; but did not understand it. The hall was full of people, but not one accepted the invitation. If one had, I am sure I would have done so at that time.

On my arrival home, I told my mother of the wonderful sermon I had heard. She said that she was sorry, but those "Mormons" always preached well until they got a following. Then they introduced polygamy; that a "Mormon" preacher by the name of Brown had won quite a following over in Lapeer County and had then introduced polygamy.

I tried to banish this sermon from my mind, but could not although I had no confidence in it. Elder Brown's was a true case, and he was cut off from the church as soon as his odious teachings were discovered. His works still follow him.

I had a great desire to serve the Lord. I attended different churches. I was humble and willing to listen to any teaching. I wished to make peace with my God, but I received no light. I heard ministers arguing over the Bible. Their faces would flush, their voices grow louder; they would become angry. This, I realized, was not the spirit of love or of real religion.

When I was thirty-six, my husband, Bert Shuert, invited me to hear a "Mormon" preach. This was the first "Mormon" preacher I had known about since hearing Brother Luff. I refused to go, saying I was too tired. Then I overheard him telling Mamie, our oldest daughter: "I invited your mother to attend church with me, to hear the 'Mormon' preacher. She said she was too tired. If it had been a Methodist preacher or a social, she would have gone."

"Bert," I said, "you spoke the truth. I heard one of those preachers years ago. I never heard such a sermon in my life. I have not forgotten it. I am afraid to go. I might be led astray, and join them."

Then he told me that I need not fear them, that they despised polygamy. It was the Utah church, a branch off of the original church of Latter Day Saints, that had practiced polygamy. He said that his people knew Joseph Smith the Just when they lived at Plano, Illinois, and that the Latter Day Saints were among the most respectable people in the city. I was then glad to accompany my husband to the service. There we found a pleasant and forceful speaker, J. J. Cornish. He invited us to verify references in the Bible. My husband and many others availed themselves of this privilege. Night after night we looked up those references, and always found them quoted correctly. The Spirit of the Lord rested on us. The Bible was like a new book. We understood it as never before.

At the close of the second sermon, a lovely Methodist woman asked me what I thought of the sermons. "I believe them," I said. "What do you think?" "I do too," she replied. "What are you going to do about them," I asked her. "Oh, I don't know; what are you?" "If I continue to believe them, I am going to join them, won't you?" "I don't know," was her answer. "Well, I certainly shall," I vowed; "my soul is worth more to me than what people may say."

This woman never joined the church. Her health commenced to fail from that time, and she died in the State Hospital several years later.

About a year previous to the above incidents, when I visited the home of my sister, Mrs. Rose Doherty, I met a modest little woman leaving the house. I inquired who she was. My sister said that she was Mrs. Alta Joice, a "Mormon." "She brings me books to read," Rose explained. "I don't bother with them. I lay them on the shelf and return them when she comes with more. I don't like to hurt her feelings. She thinks her sect does not practice polygamy, but they do. They are all alike. She is ignorant."

Dear Sister Joice lived in South Boardman seven years, persecuted on account of her religion. Her husband opposed her. He wrote to Saints of different factions, in order to confound her belief. Every reply was on her side, and finally he was converted to her faith, and sent for an elder to come and preach the gospel.

South Boardman was at that time a village composed of about six hundred people. A church was built which was to be a union church, to be used by all denominations. We worked hard to build the church and dedicated it to the Baptists. We bought an organ, lamps, desk, stove, and pretty carpet. We took considerable pride in our church.

A few days after the dedication one of the Baptist women said that if we used the church we would have to pay rent; that the carpet would wear out and the building would need to be redecorated, painted and so forth. We told her we would help keep the church up. She replied that that was not business. Consequently, we withdrew our interests in the church, and helped build another union edifice. This was dedicated to the Methodists, a church I joined. This building, too, was afterwards refused to the Saints. I then assisted in building a third church which was dedicated to the Saints who did not solicit aid from nonmembers.

George Shultz, a member of no church, came to us saying, "I gave fifty dollars to each of the other churches. I want to treat you all alike, so here is another fifty." This gift was very acceptable.

One day after hearing about ten sermons by the Latter Day Saint elders, I was at the village schoolhouse where I was teacher. I loved my work and felt the Lord had given me the gift of teaching. The director of the school called on me. He seemed in great haste. He said: "Last night we had a board meeting on your account." "Now what in the world is wrong?" I thought. "We have canvassed the district," he continued, "and find you have given unanimous satisfaction. If you will keep out of that Mormon Church, you may have this school as long as you want it." I was refused the next term of school.

Today South Boardman is a Latter Day Saint town. We have the only church there. We have a large Sunday school, which won the second prize as second banner school in the county, and was the only Latter Day Saint Sunday school entered. Our congregations crowd the building.

One day Brother Cornish showed me the picture of Joseph Smith, the Seer and Martyr. He asked me if I thought he looked like a bad man. The Spirit of the Lord rested on me and told me that this man was God's anointed. I could not keep back the tears. I look with love and reverence on the latter-day prophets.

Cornish is a Scotch name, but Brother Cornish has a vein of Irish humor. After I had heard eighteen sermons, he asked me what I thought of the word so far. I told him that I believed it was of God. Dropping his voice he queried: "Don't you think it's time I introduced polygamy?" "Oh, Brother Cornish," I replied, "I don't know what I would do if you did! You have spoiled the other churches for me. I would be out in the world." "Tonight I will preach on marriage," he said more seriously. "Come and hear." I went and listened to a wonderful sermon, which plainly set forth God's plan of marriage—one husband and one wife, or one wife and one husband.

I loved the Book of Mormon, but I did not enjoy being called a "Mormon." I felt as though I could never endure it. Satan told me that I would go by that name as long as I lived, and that people understood that a "Mormon" was a polygamist. I had had many preachers urge me to join their church, but Brother Cornish never invited me to join his. I thought that he must see something wrong in me and did not think me fit.

Sunday, May 9, 1892, after the morning sermon, the invitation was given for those wishing to obey the ordinance of baptism to meet at the water's edge at one o'clock in the afternoon. I did not know of anyone beside myself being ready, but I found eight others there. My sister, Rose, Sisters Hager, Jamison, Ellis, and Campbell from the Methodist Church; Brother Charles Joice and daughter, Rena, and Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Campbell.

The First Easter

By Kenneth A. Morford

Sweet message of the Easter-tide,
Of life, and hope, and joy complete;
Once more the time is here to praise
The Master's love, and life replete
With deeds of kindness toward all men,
The high, the low, the strong, the weak—
He ministered unto them all,
With contrite spirit, always meek.

In triumph to Jerusalem
He came, amid the loud acclaim
Of fickle multitudes, who soon
Were hurling curses to their shame.
And, as in dark Gethsemane
He struggled, on that fateful night,
No one appeared to comfort Him—
To share his load and make it light.

Once more we hear the measured tread
Of myriads of hast'ning feet,
All striving for a glimpse of Him
Who staggered down the narrow street.
And, as the vast throng hurled their taunts
At Him whose heart was full of love
For all mankind, the Father watched
In sorrow from the courts above.

No doubt there were, in all that throng,
Fol'wers who had named His name;
Some who had felt His healing touch:
The sick, the blind, the halt, the lame;
But there was nothing they could do,
There were but few of them to mourn,
As down the street and up the trail
To Calvary, the cross was borne.

He gave His life for all mankind,
Upon the cross, between two thieves;
His sacrifice should melt the heart
Of every soul that lives and breathes.
They laid Him in the silent tomb
And placed a rock before the door;
They sealed it with the seal of Rome:
That "king" would bother them no more.

The morn was quiet and serene,
And dew drops sparkled on the grass
And bushes, dampening the robes
Of weeping women, trudging past;
They reached the tomb, the door stood wide,
The Master was no longer there,
The message, "He is risen today,"
In joyous triumph filled the air.

Loyalty

By Ruth Richeson

(A talk made at the Des Moines District young people's banquet February 10, 1933. Miss Richeson is a member of Rhodes, Iowa, Branch.)

Loyalty is one of the most important factors influencing our onward progress. Loyalty is fidelity to a superior or to a duty. I wonder if it is possible for us to succeed without this quality.

For example let us consider our athletic teams. It would be folly to expect a basket ball team to win if the members of the team were not loyal to the coach, school, and to their duty as team members. Likewise schools can not be successful unless the student body is loyal to the instructors and to their work. Homes can not be successful institutions if the members of the home do not cooperate and work for the good of all. Business institutions of all kinds would fail were it not for loyalty.

One of the great causes of the trouble and strife in the world today is the lack of loyalty. Each person is trying to work by himself and for himself without giving a thought to the welfare of the group. Should we expect our church to be any different in this respect from other institutions? We should not. Without loyalty we can not prosper.

I have heard people say, "Oh, I'd work for the church, but I won't work with that certain person or group." If we are not willing to cooperate we are not whole-heartedly loyal. If a member of my basket ball team gets that idea, she is immediately removed from the game and her place given to some one who is loyal. We teach that loyalty is one of the most important things to learn.

At the present time our church is passing through a strenuous period. It needs the whole-hearted support and loyalty of all of its members. Are we giving it or are we sitting by, saying, "Let the other fellow do it, I'm too busy with my business affairs." I heard a person remark: "What are we paying our minister for? He is supposed to do the work and worrying of the church." One person can not carry this work. It requires the loyal support of each and every member of the church. It is our duty as members to give that support.

If you were asked the question, "Are you loyal to the cause of Christ," could you truthfully answer, "Yes"? For myself, I think it would be hard to say, "Yes," much as I should like to. Some of the questions I have found hard to answer in the affirmative are: "Do I always think first of my church, or do I think first of my personal gain? Have I studied and do I understand fully my duty to God? Do I do at all times all I can to the best of my ability? Am I willing to cooperate? Let us as Saints of God make an honest effort to be loyal to God, the church, and our duty as a member of that church, and by this loyalty enable the church to accomplish the things God has said must be accomplished.

Choosing My Companion

By Geraldine Wyatt

Would I be proud to have him or her to be the other parent of my children? Would I be able to speak my most inward thoughts to him or her, and be assured of a mutual sympathy? And last, could I in all sincerity give my companion this same understanding?

The question of marriage is of the greatest importance to young people. It is from this decision, or contract, that the whole pattern of their lives is formed.

One young lady had already accepted a proposal. As the wedding date drew nearer, misgivings filled her heart. "He is a wonderful sweetheart," she said, "but I don't believe I want him for a husband." She prayed about it. And each day she became more and more convinced that if she married this man she would be making a mistake. So she broke the engagement. Shortly afterward, she became engaged to, and later married a man who has been a wonderful companion to her.

In another case a young man loved a good, sweet girl. But he didn't propose to her, because he had read her blessing, and in this blessing she was told that she should be very careful in the choosing of her companion. When I last heard from them, they were both fasting and praying about being married.

In this day of thoughtless marriages, and hasty divorces, such sincerity is greatly applauded. The lives of individuals, and the future ones to come are far too precious and too valuable to risk by a loveless and thoughtless marriage.

that is God's power. We can understand what is back of the statement, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" And when we think that light is at his command in all forms, certainly we can trust him, as he floods the universe with light, to lighten our spirits.

The method by which he does use that light to illuminate our souls is something quite beyond our power to explain. The Doctrine and Covenants says he works through Christ, and we know they work through the Holy Spirit, but how it is done, how it quickens human intelligence, we do not know, but we know it is done. That need not bother us because as a matter of fact we do not even know how we think. The process is going on within us all the time and we have not the faintest conception or idea of how we do it. But we do know that there is intelligence within us and the Doctrine and Covenants says that the light of God coming to us quickens that intelligence. That is what inspiration is: a quickening of our natural faculties and the raising of them to a higher plane where we can understand some of this conversation that is going on over our heads that otherwise we could not comprehend.

Coming now to some of the manifestations of spiritual illumination with which we are all more or less acquainted. There are several ways in which we are accustomed to think of inspiration or illumination such as spiritual vision, dreams, prophecy, and so on; to which we may next give consideration.

trinal succession" in the place of "apostolic priesthood succession."

Doctrinal succession is based on the conception that there have been a few Christians in every age which have kept a certain important doctrine or doctrines pure and unaltered. The remnants of these faithful peoples have been finally gathered into a church. They set forth the particular doctrines they have preserved as their authority.

Others, who may be classed with them, are those claiming a rediscovery of neglected or forgotten Bible doctrines.

Thus we have the Baptists, Churches of Christ, and others, who teach "adult baptism by immersion." There are the Seventh Day Adventists teaching "sabbath-keeping as the seal of God." The Lutheran and Reformed Churches point to the restoration of the doctrine of "justification by faith." The Wesleyans and others point to the renewed doctrine and experience of "the personal witness and assurance of the Spirit." These and others claim the authority of a "Doctrinal Succession" or a "Doctrinal Restoration."

Where Doctrinal Succession Fails

This form of authority recognizes the apostasy of the New Testament form of the Church of Jesus Christ. It recognizes that the New Testament order of Divinely appointed apostles, prophets, etc., which Paul refers to as the limbs and necessary members of the body or the foundation of the building, has been lost, or it represents them as merely a temporary ministry.

The moment the apostasy of the church is admitted, and the "Word of God" clearly predicts it (Revelation 12; 2 Thessalonians 2: 1-7), the disintegration of the body left by Christ is recognized. When the early church was untrue and mutilated herself by dismembering the visible "body of Christ" and wrecking "the temple of God" on earth, the spirit and authority left her. It went back "to God who gave it." (Ecclesiastes 12: 7; Revelations 12: 5.) The church was shorn of her divine glory and authority when she "went into the wilderness" and in the place of it was arrayed with the authority and power of men.

There is only one known to man who can restore a divine creation when it has been mutilated, lost the Spirit, and the material part has disintegrated—God.

Jesus raised his body, or temple, because he had that power within himself. It was given him of the Father.

The church only had power to perpetuate herself so long as she remained faithful. As soon as she apostatized she lost it.

A "remnant," such as John saw after the woman disappeared and the authority had been taken back to heaven, does not constitute the church of Christ any more than a few atoms of dust from a dead person is the person, or than a few bricks from a temple is the temple.

No man, or set of men, even though they hold part of the truth or are doctrinally correct, can by reformation or reorganization restore the lost authority and the living Church of Jesus Christ with the Spirit and all that his presence means. (1 Corinthians 12.)

Neither baptism, confirmation, sabbath-keeping, justification by faith, witness of the Spirit, nor loyalty thereto are any justification for a separate "plant" claiming to be the "true vine." Neither do they constitute divinely recognized authority.

The sharpest criticism of the church is that its members wear the name of Christ but contradict his life. The world's charge against the Church is not for following Christ but for failing to follow Him.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

heart. She leaned her brown head against the door frame and cried as she had not cried in many days. Long, hard, gasping sobs shook her whole body while Sister Livingston stood by with an arm around her, a warm, comfortable arm.

Minutes slipped away, and when Polly lifted a hand and uncertainly brushed back a lock of hair, she was aware of the love in the kind eyes. "Oh, I'm glad you talked to me," she choked. "They've all been afraid to. But—but I have been selfish! I have! I want you to talk to me some more. You always say the right things." Then she gave the clock a watery glance. "But I must get busy now or I won't have Brad's lunch ready."

"One more thing, Polly, my child, it'll give you something to think about and to live up to, the words of the Prophet Isaiah: 'Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to—' Goodness, gracious! Is it that late? Isn't that Brad's step now?" And without waiting for an answer to her questions, she tucked her sweater about her and scuttled out through the porch in the direction of her own back door.

A Story

By Inez Kinney

A hundred years and more ago
A humble boy plead long to know,
What church of all the lot to choose,
What creed accept, which ones refuse.
The answer came, the message flew,
It stirred to heights the trusting few:
It loosed the floods of hate and scorn
To compass age and those unborn.

The Marvel and the Wonder thrill;
A Book speaks from Cumorah's Hill;
The heavens open—hosts rejoice;
At last the brave prophetic voice
Reveals the way, unfolds the law,
Restores a church without a flaw;
Bids Zion rise and lead the way,
To social righteousness today.

The blessed task is still undone,
Redemption waits—it is not won;
The children of the kingdom stand,
They hear the call the last command,
But selfishness and fear hold sway:
They keep the store another day.
The time is short, the need is great,
Why risk delay—why stand and wait?

Down, then, this people to the knee,
In one united, earnest plea:
"Oh, hold the edict, stay the hand,
Spare yet awhile the fruitful land.
We will Thy Zion fair endow,
We'll give the surplus freely now:
We'll lose our fears in faith on Thee,
We will obey Thy wise decree.

Prayer and Testimony

A Heavenly Manifestation

By Grace Thiehoff

Twelve years ago last December I was very ill in Saint Catherine's Hospital, Omaha, Nebraska. I had spent four months in bed, had been operated on once and was awaiting a second operation on account of a disease that was progressively destroying the tissues of my body. The doctors had given the sad news to my family that the second operation would cause certain death with a life expectancy of not more than twelve hours; in any case they conceded I was dying, with a life expectancy of a few days at most. I lay inanimate and totally helpless and had suffered so much that death seemed most inviting except for the reason that our small daughters needed a mother's care and guidance. I was to be operated on the ninth and as the Saints fasted and prayed for me on the evening of the eighth, the Giver of all good and perfect gifts presented me with life.

An aura, from a divine presence passed over me from my feet towards my head, and as the quick rush of air with its gentle pleasant caress touched my face, I involuntarily took a quick deep breath of that angelic emanation, which revived me on the instant. "Life" is the only word to describe the sensation which permeated my whole body. At the same time a clear voice said, "You will live."

Brother ————, our pastor, was sitting in the room, but gave no sign that he had heard it. He had been very faithful in administering to me. My family were so sodden with grief that they could not comprehend my real meaning when I told them I would live through the morrow. After receiving administration the next morning and before being taken to the operating room I asked permission to sing a hymn, but was too weak to attempt it, though the desire to do so was very great. At the request of loved ones I bid them good-bye, but told them again that all would be well with me, but again they misinterpreted my meaning. I had told no one of my angelic visitor.

I pass over the events of that day and the next three days as I know nothing about them, until about six o'clock the evening of the third day. The chief surgeon came into the room and seeing me awake addressed me, "You are still here." I answered, "Yes, Doctor, why?" He replied, "You had no chance to live," and turning he left the room. Mr. Thiehoff was informed that I would live and he left for home with the joyful message. The next morning my nurse, the floor nurses, the nuns who supervised and the priest who visited me daily thereafter all called me by my own name no longer. I was known to them to the end of my stay there as, "The Miracle Lady."

Six years after these events as my husband and I were shopping one day he pointed out a gentleman shopping at another counter and said that he believed it was Doctor S———, one of the doctors who had attended me in my illness and whom we had not seen since I left the hospital. I walked over to him and asked if he remembered me. He said, "I do, you are the lady who died; I can neither recall your name nor the hospital, but I remember the circumstances of your death." Here he named the disease that had preyed upon me. "I have thought of you so often and always wondered if you knew that you were dead." I replied that I knew that I was very sick. "I know that you were dead, and even though you left the hospital we doctors were sure that you could not live two years," said he.

I am yet very much alive and in perfect health and I have enjoyed the privilege of raising our children. The three daughters are now grown to womanhood. I was indeed granted the boon I craved, to raise our children, but the Lord laid another responsibility upon me. About the time that we met Doctor S———, I was spoken to in prophecy and told that at one time the Lord had thought to take me from the earth but had extended my life that I might bring others unto Christ.

Whether I was alive or dead I can not say; but this I know: When the time comes for me to go through the portals I will enter with no doubts or fears, as I tasted enough of the sweetness and joy of the next life to convince me that the greatest pleasures that life here can offer are as nothing when compared to that other life. It was mine for the taking, but I rejected it then for our children's sake. Life has since been a daily challenge and my prayer is that I may fulfill in some measure the task allotted me.

God's Promises Are Sure

By Florence Bailey

"These are the times that try men's souls." Therefore it is the time to reveal our experiences as a united testimony that God's promises are sure. It is with this purpose in mind that I add my simple experience.

About five years ago, it was my pleasure to return to Lamoni, my home town, to attend the Reunion. At one of the early morning prayer services, the theme, "Are you an asset or a liability to your church," was given. As I listened to the testimonies I was fully aware that my afflicted body and lack of training was shaping my destiny toward the latter side of the ledger. I felt that I had come to the crossroads in life, and that I must meet the situation and choose as the spirit pointed the way.

It was then that I made my decision to grasp every opportunity to improve my mind. I decided, first, to make a more regular study of God's word; second, since, because of illness, I had not been able to finish my high school course, that I would enroll in the Independence Night School, sponsored by our church. This, in itself, was quite a momentous decision for me to make, for, because of my affliction, I was very timid about being around strangers.

With a burning desire to become an asset to my church, I sought administration, hoping to receive physical strength and moral courage that I might reach my goal.

Through this administration I received the great blessing of faith and hope, for, in the prayer of confirmation given by a minister who did not know me, or who did not know why I sought the Lord at this time, I was promised that "I would be granted physical strength to carry out the desires of my heart."

I knew that in order to make that promise effectual in my life I must lose no time. In September I enrolled in the school and along with my classwork, I set aside a time each day to read the Book of Mormon and the spirit of understanding which came to me as I read this book gave me strength and understanding in my classes throughout the two years. I have never missed one class night since because of illness, so I can testify that God's promises are sure and that he blesses us abundantly if we really try.

"God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." For not only was I blessed physically, but when the problem arose as to how I could get home from school each night, He gave me a dear friend and classmate, who always took me in her car. I shall never cease to be thankful for her sweet companionship, nor shall I ever cease to be thankful to my teachers for their kindness and understanding cooperation. I am sure these devoted teachers will be greatly blessed who share their higher education with those less fortunate.

Please remember me in your prayers that I may reach my goal, that I may give acceptable service and be an "asset" to the church.

Our Lives Leading Lights

By Mrs. W. H. Hawkins

I can not express in words how much I love this gospel. I know it is the true gospel of Jesus Christ, and my whole ambition is to live the life a Latter Day Saint should live.

I have received countless blessings since I joined the church, and though at times I am weak and faltering, I desire to press onward in the service of the Master. I have loved this latter-day work since I was old enough to understand, for my dear mother taught it to me.

I know that God hears and answers prayers. If we live as we should and ask him in the right way, he will grant us many blessings. It is comforting to think that one who dies in Christ is blessed and that he shall rest from his labors.

Will the Saints pray for me that I may be faithful. I wish to do my part so that when God calls me home as he called my husband in December, I shall be as well prepared as he was. We are taught the reward is for those who continue faithful until the end.

Jesus is surely coming to earth again, and our lives must be a light to the world, that others may see our good works and be led to the lamb of God.

The Time Is Short

By Fred M. Blystone

As a boy I was taught of God and that we are his children and may commune with him through prayer. It is quite probable that I did not pray very much except when I, or another member of the family was sick or troubled in some way. I recall kneeling when I was a small boy and my father was sick with typhoid fever. The doctor said that night was his last chance. So I knelt by the old cot and prayed for him. That night the fever left him.

That incident has been the source of great strength to me. There are many people who think that if they do not belong to a church, God will not answer their prayers. I believe this is a great mistake. God is the father of all.

Once when living in Minnesota I was sick. I had started to the mailbox to mail a letter, the distance to walk being about a mile. When I had gone half way, I was so sick that I felt I could go on farther. The weather was cold and snow lay on the ground. What shall I do? I thought. Then I concluded that there was nothing else to do but ask God to help me. So I knelt in the road ditch and began to pray. Before two minutes had gone I was feeling well and sound. I knew that it was the power of the heavenly Father that had healed me.

The next time I knelt to pray, as I remember it, was when Brother W. E. Hayden was at Coal Hill, holding a series of meetings. I became very much interested, although I doubted some of the things he said. One thing I doubted was his statement that the time was short and that we were living in the last days. I thought: "Oh, well, a day is a thousand years with God, so it may be thousands of years yet until the end of time." But I felt impressed to ask God, knowing it was true that no man is to know the hour or the day when Christ shall come again. Christ tells us that not even the angels in heaven know the time of his coming. I felt that never had I prayed without receiving an answer, and so I knelt in prayer concerning the question. A voice spoke in answer: "Many will live to see the day."

After I came into the church, God's kingdom on earth, I felt that I would ask again, and before I had knelt the same voice spoke, saying: "Many will live to see the day." So this is my testimony, that our time here is short, and there is much to be done.

Convinced of Truth by Vision

By George Jardine

While I was still a member of a well-known denomination and was dissatisfied with its teachings, a friend of mine, a Saint, terminated a long discussion through the mail by visiting me September 5, 1931. We agreed after much further dispute to make the subject a matter of prayer. I requested the Lord to make known to me which of the many churches he recognized as his own.

After we had been on our knees nearly all night in my room, and in the very early morning of September 7, I saw in vision an angel writing on the wall. I looked and read what was written: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Standing beside the angel were a lamb, a lion, and a little child. After a few moments the vision departed and into my heart there came a sweet peace such as I had never known before.

All doubt was removed and I was thoroughly convinced. I was baptized and confirmed a member of Christ's church, September 27, 1931. I know of a surety that God leads his church and that this great latter-day work is true.

Request Prayers

Mrs. O. C. Doney, of Kaw City, Oklahoma, a member of the church, desires prayers that she may be healed of high blood pressure. She is under the doctor's care and has been ill for several weeks. She earnestly seeks the Lord in prayer, that she may be healed and that she may gain more spiritual light. She also desires prayer in behalf of a son who is a member of the church, but is being persuaded by others to unite with another church. Sister Doney desires the Saints to pray for other members of her family who are not members of the church.

Mrs. John Keillor, of Sharon, North Dakota, has been ill a long time and is bedfast. Thought not a member of the church, she is a good God-fearing woman. She heard Elder J. J. Cornish preach many years ago in Michigan, and particularly desires his prayers. She has just finished reading his book, Into the Latter Day Light. This request comes from Minnie M. Keillor, a sister-in-law of the sick woman, who desires prayers for her own family.

Mrs. Mary Leka, of Shidler, Oklahoma, desires prayers for her daughter of Damon, Texas, who has been ill for some time, and whose mind is now affected. She also asks that Saints living in or near Damon call on her daughter. Her husband, C. H. Fish, is an employee of the Sinclair Prairie Oil Company.

QUESTION TIME

Did Paul, in Acts 19: 12, do away with the need of laying on of hands for healing?

I do not so understand. It was probably after that date that James wrote to the saints concerning the method of administering to the sick:

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."—James 5: 14.

The ancient ordinance of anointing with oil was with laying on of hands, and this was in accordance with the words of Jesus to his ministry:

"They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 18.

There is further convincing proof that Paul did not do away with laying on of hands, for after the miracles referred to in Acts 19 the same writer states:

"And it came to pass that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him."—Acts 28: 8.

It should be remembered that the laying on of hands is a biblical ordinance that is traced to the most ancient times in scriptural records, and yet it did not prevent miracles and healings by other means on occasions. In the case of Paul, the record in Acts 19: 11 states that "God wrought special miracles" by his hands. There appears to be reason for thinking that at least some of these miracles were performed on some whom Paul could not minister to in person, hence he used these vicarious objects. The laying on of hands is declared in Hebrews 6: 2 to be a principle of the doctrine of Christ. This was written after many years had elapsed, and shows that there had been no authorized change from the instructions previously given by Jesus and James. No amount of healing by other means would destroy the force of Christ's commands.

In what way are deacons and teachers "appointed to watch over the church"?

Each local church has a pastor or presiding officer whose duty it is to take charge of the work and the church activities and ministrations within his jurisdiction. The deacons and teachers, as also other assistant ministers, should cooperate and labor with him as he may advise from time to time. The nature of their work is outlined somewhat in the revelation which says:

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

It is evident from this that certain duties devolving on the teacher may be done by the deacon as the teacher's assistant. It would therefore be at the teacher's discretion, or that of the presiding officer, so far as those particular duties are concerned. The officers have precedence of authority in such matters wherever proper organization exists, the order being stated in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9 to be: "high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons."

Is it the teacher's duty to see that officers as well as members do their duty?

Obviously the teacher has no authority over officers of superior or equal rank. The precedence of authority previously referred to is inconsistent with any such power. If superior officers are unfaithful, it may be referred to officers of higher authority than their own, provided they have jurisdiction of the parties. Officers in a branch are under the jurisdiction of the branch president, and it would be a part of his work to direct their labors in local church matters. If necessity should require, he should secure an adjustment and a correction of any error on the part of a subordinate minister. The teacher's duty is with the members as such, but of course should be performed both lawfully and charitably, in the spirit of Christ.

Some distinction should be made, and is made in the law, between official duties or executive acts and the duties which belong to the membership at large in general. In official work precedence in office or authority is necessary, thus securing the harmonious and orderly functioning of the body as a whole.

Young People's Missionary Services Highly Successful

Sponsored by Graceland Religion Club —Roy A. Cheville Speaker

Much inspiration and help were received by the young people of Lamoni Branch from the recent series of young people's missionary services conducted in the Coliseum on the Sunday nights of March 12, 19, and 26. Roy A. Cheville was the speaker on each of the evenings, his subjects being "The Prophecy of Latter Day Saintism," "The Program of Latter Day Saintism," and "The Power of Latter Day Saintism." Brother Cheville keeps himself in constant touch with young people, and was admirably prepared to discuss youth's problems.

The series was sponsored by the Religion Club of Graceland College, of which Walter Johnson is the president. The various details relative to the services were taken care of by committees. The committees and their chairmen were as follows: Publicity committee, Aarona Booker, chairman; committee for personal contact, Harold Leland, chairman; music committee, Leslie Kohlman, chairman; platform arrangement committee, Elsie Stoddard, chairman; and reception committee, Peter Duyzer, chairman. The committees worked with zeal, and as a result the services proved to be impressive. Brother Cheville was assisted on the platform by various members of the college priesthood, Mitchell Carter, Don Chesworth, Harold Leland, Ivan Dillee, Reed Emslie, Howard Harpham, and Walter Johnson. Leslie Kohlman led the singing, and special music was furnished by a chorus composed of college and town young people.

Great interest and enthusiastic support was shown by all the young people of Lamoni and the college. Without this the series would not have been the decided success it was, for only by cooperation of everyone can success be attained. The series was brought to a fitting close by a baptismal service in the basement of the Coliseum following the service upstairs. At this time two young people were baptized, Lois Smith, of Lamoni, and Joe Debarthe, of Wyoming.

The interest of the young people has not lessened since the services, and many plans of activity are being carried out. Preparations for the young people's convention in June are also being made.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

The latter part of January Elder Leonard Houghton was in town on business and visited among the Saints. He preached morning and evening, January 29, and after the service left for Chetek to preach the funeral sermon of Brother George Clark.

A few of the old friends, sons, and daughter of Sister Harriett Stevens met at the home of her daughter, Sister Nell Ott, to help her enjoy her eighty-third birthday, February 1. Sister Stevens is a charter member of the branch and has had many interesting experiences in the church as well as wonderful testimonies. There are three generations of the Stevens family that worship here and cling to the faith of their mother.

On the evening of February 1, Apostle J. F. Garver met with the Saints and preached an inspiring sermon on "The Light of the Body Is the Eye."

February 3, a work social was sponsored at the church by the adult and young people's teachers. They made screens and benches for the children's department in the lower auditorium. Helen Richardson has been chosen junior assistant of the church school.

The young people gave the service the evening of February 12, Lee Root directing. It being the beginning of National Boy Scout Week, the program was of a scouting nature. Lee Root is scoutmaster of a troop of boys who attended the service. He talked of the influence the organization has on boys, relating it to service to God. Paul Utenheimer gave a short sermon.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood preached on "Learn of Me," February 22.

On Monday night the joint priesthood meeting was held at Evansville. Madison, Janesville, and Milwaukee Branches were represented.

"Making the Best of Each Day," was the theme of the young people's service the evening of March 12. The unique and inspiring program was arranged by Archie Root and directed by Lee Root. The branch proclaimed this a beautiful service, and at once the young people began working on the program for the next month.

Brother Vanderwood was here in March, preaching, teaching, and visiting in the homes of the Saints.

The Gleaners invited the men to their meeting Tuesday night at the home of Sister Ethel Richardson, and Brother Vanderwood taught the lesson from the Doctrine and Covenants.

Sister Gertrude Roddick, of Lancaster, is in the Wisconsin General Hospital to have a thyroidectomy. Also Leah Miller underwent an operatoin in that institution.

The April sacrament service was well attended. Saints from Watertown were present.

Prayer services have given much inspiration to this branch. Topics suggested by the priesthood have had much to do with the helpfulness of these services. The aim of the meetings is to help evangelize the world and Zionize the church.

Chicago, Illinois

First Church, 4416 Gladys Avenue

District Missionary R. E. Davey has been here a number of times, encouraging the Saints with his sermons and visits in the homes.

The members of the local ministry have been faithful, taking their turn in the pulpit and helping with all other priesthood duties. H. T. McCaig is the pastor.

Good attendance is enjoyed at most church services, especially the Sunday morning meetings. They are proud of their Sunday school. Brother Pettersson has charge, assisted by Brother Kent. Brother Bone is superintendent of the children's department. A new feature of the Sunday school services is the orchestra directed by Sister Ruby Newman.

During the past year some of the young people have defied "Old Man Depression" and listened to "Little Cupid." Among these were Thelma Ingram and Marion Langdon. Brother and Sister Langdon are active workers in many departments.

Some of the activities of the young people, led by Sister Cleve Petterson, deserve particular mention. On the evening of March 27, they had a "pep" meeting in the church basement. A dinner was served at six thirty by the women's department. Talented young people contributed to the entertainment of the evening. Lloyd Ingram was master of ceremonies. The orchestra offered selections. They planned an educational three-day service at the young people's district convention, April 14, 15, and 16.

The choir, directed by Ruby Newman, is taking on new life due to a contest. The Easter cantata was given at the church hour Easter morning.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Carrie Ballinger, is wonderfully helpful.

Brother Wesley Ballinger has been a faithful worker. The church is more beautiful inside and out because of his untiring efforts. Brother and Sister Ballinger are in Independence, Missouri, at present, but Chicago Saints hope they will soon return. Two such willing workers are greatly missed.

Brother C. A. Edstrom, former pastor, moved his family back to Chicago the latter part of last year. They were Saint Louis workers for a couple of years, but now are a great help in branch activities here.

The midweek prayer service is a help and strength to those who attend.

The April sacrament meeting was well attended, and the worshipers felt the Spirit of God with them. Especially inspiring and touching were testimonies offered by the young people.

Chadron, Nebraska

Appreciate Missionary Meetings

Responding to an invitation from Chadron Saints, Elder F. E. Cohrt, of Spearfish, South Dakota, held a series of meetings here beginning March 14. The first week of meetings was held in the home of J. D. Talcott. Because of splendid interest shown and the number present, Brother Cohrt continued for five nights the following week in the Seventh Day Adventist church, which the Saints of this place have been permitted to use for their regular Sunday services.

The membership attendance was almost one hundred per cent during the entire series; also a few nonmembers who attended from time to time expressed their enjoyment at hearing the word of God so plainly interpreted and the prophecies of old made so clear to their understanding. Brother Cohrt brought words of instruction, hope, and courage, which the Saints sorely needed. His visits in the homes of the Saints have done much good. He administered to the afflicted, consecrated oil for the use of the members, and blessed the infant son of Brother and Sister Charles Coburn.

March 19, Brother J. D. Talcott baptized Hope, the daughter of Sister Connic, and Brother Cohrt confirmed her.

Chadron group has not been privileged to have a member of the Melchisedec priesthood who could spend time enough in the city to conduct a series of meetings since Brother Prettyman passed away. Mere words are too feeble to express their appreciation of the services rendered by Brother Cohrt. They remember him in their prayers, and trust that he will be permitted to return in the near future.

For ten years the few Saints at Chadron have labored with the desire that they might grow and prepare themselves for the time when a missionary campaign should be launched in this community. They wish to give their intelligent support, their help, faith, and courage to the church.

Oelwein, Iowa

Elder E. R. Davis Visits This Branch

Oelwein Saints were fortunate in having Elder E. R. Davis, district president, with them for a number of days the latter part of February and the first of March. He was called here to preach the funeral sermon of Andrew Seedorff, husband of Bessie Seedorff, a member of Oelwein Branch. Mr. Seedorff, a farmer near Arlington, Iowa, though not a member of the church, attended services when possible, and was an interested listener. The sympathy of Oelwein Branch is extended to the wife and three young boys who mourn his departure.

Death entered Oelwein ranks in December when Mrs. Frank McFarlane, sister-in-law of Pastor George McFarlane, passed away. She was never baptized into the church, but had expressed a desire to become a member. One daughter, Edythe, is a member, and Mrs. McFarlane's husband and three sons are regular attendants. Brother Charles Shippy preached the funeral sermon.

Another funeral sermon Brother Davis was called upon to preach was that of Sister Victoria McQueen. She was seventy-eight years old and had been a member of the church forty-eight years. Her life was a splendid example of patience and endurance. She was a faithful Saint and the memory of her cheerfulness will stay with those who knew her.

While at Oelwein Brother Davis conducted study classes which were well attended and thoroughly enjoyed. A number of nonmembers were present at some of the meetings.

The Easter program was in charge of Ruby McFarlane and Ruth Smith.

The Emma Burton Circle is urging more friendly visits by its members. The membership of the circle averages about twelve, and they report two hundred and fifty visits during the first three months of this year. The friendly committee composed of Laura Clark, Nellie Sims, and Nellie Weston, reports the largest number of visits, but visits have been made by all members. An interesting idea which is being worked out in the circle is the exchanging of household hints, recipes, patterns, etc.

The Saints at Oelwein feel blessed. Though hard times are felt here, no one has reason to complain; in fact, each one rejoices for health and strength and God's keeping.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Street

At the March 5 sacrament service, Elder R. E. Madden talked briefly on "The Institution of Sacrament." One hundred were in attendance at this service.

The women's department met four days later with a good number present. They have a new member in Sister Luella Swisher. A paper on "Repentance" was read by Blonde Carey. Interesting variety was given the program with poetry, short articles, monologues, piano and vocal solos.

Group three of the women gave a jitney supper, March 21, in the social room of the church and cleared thirty-two dollars. This makes a sum of more than seventy-one dollars they have paid to the general church from jitney suppers.

Patriarch J. E. Matthews baptized three candidates, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Drazoo and H. I. Swisher, March 26. It encourages the congregation to be augmented by these splendid people.

Second Church is proud of its basket ball teams this year. They have a splendid record. The senior boys won class B championship of South Church League. Intermediate boys won class B championship of South Church League. Senior girls won city class B championship this being the first year they have played. Intermediate girls won class A championship of the South Church League, this being their first year, too.

The sermons were good this month and the following ministers were speakers Elders A. H. Nieman, R. E. Madden, G. H. Kirkendall, W. B. Reeves, and Bishop H. E French and Patriarch J E. Matthews.

Third (Hilltop) Church

Elder J. R. Grice opened his series of meetings to a crowded house early in March. The flower committee had made the church attractive with palms and ferns, Mrs. Dougherty in charge. Someone made two stools for the palms, and contributed to the branch. Special numbers for the first week of meetings were given by Patriarch J. E. Matthews, C. H. Foster, the Sensabaugh sisters, Brother and Sister McCoy, Maryland Burgess.

March 5, Sunday, was an eventful day. The Sunday school eclipsed its record of attendance. Then came the sacrament service in charge of Elder J. R. Grice, Pastor F. C. Welch, C. H. Foster, and Lewis Walter, and G. B. Myers. The Saints were showered with blessings at this hour and rejoiced in the Spirit. In the evening the church was crowded to hear Brother Grice again.

Elder F. C. Welch and G. P. Myers had charge of the funeral of the late Sister Throp.

March 7, First Church Choir paid this congregation a visit, singing two an-

www.LatterDayTruth.org

thems. The conductor is Nathan Weate.

Following the Sunday school hour, March 12, a business meeting was held to consider the plans for the new building to be known as Hilltop Tabernacle. The congregation voted to put Pastor F. C. Welsh in charge with the ministry of the branch as counselors and coworkers. After the business meeting they marched to the lot, faced the West, and sang the hymn, "Guide Us, O, Thou Great Jehovah." Then Elder Welsh prayed and dedicated the lot. That evening the ministry held their first meeting with the pastor, and first steps were taken in the building program.

And now the tabernacle is taking form. The footing and parts of the walls are laid. The workers are hoping for good weather.

The second week of Brother Grice's sermons was concluded, the church being crowded each evening. Special numbers were contributed by Matthew Welsh, J. R. Grice, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Taylor, Mrs. Crego, C. H. Foster, and by a trio composed of Ted Dougherty, R. Albright, and Matthew Welsh. On the concluding night Brother Grice's son and daughter, William and Wanda, gave a duet selection, and Brother Grice sang a solo. The congregation is grateful to the pianists for their faithful services and to all other musicians who helped.

During the series the Hilltop Saints were loyal to the speaker, as also were many nonmembers. They were present to hear him even though the weather was inclement.

Brother Grice baptized three, Sister C. Myers, Sister Van Fossen and Brother L. V. Cross. Brothers Grice, Welsh, and Myers confirmed, there being large attendance at the service of prayer and confirmation.

A standing vote of thanks was given Brother Grice by the Saints.

Not long ago church history scenes were shown by C. H. Foster along with a lecture.

Brother F. C. Welsh baptized Betty Jane, the daughter-in-law of Brother James Bohler.

The Saints are happy to have Elder H. Smith and wife and baby here. Sister Smith is the daughter of Brother and Sister Dougherty. She was a good worker when in Columbus.

The Religio continues to have good interest in study work.

Sorrowfully Saints of this congregation learned of the death of Elder Kribel, of First Church. He leaves a host of friends.

At the last prayer service in March the gifts of the gospel were experienced by the worshipers. The pastor's wife was given a beautiful message relative to her present life, her health, her closing days, and even to her death.

The Divine chemistry works in the subsoil.—Hawthorne.

Independence

Easter Sunday's activities opened with a young people's sunrise worship service at six o'clock in the main room of the Stone Church, the meeting indoors being made necessary by the coolness of the weather. An unusually large crowd of young men and women gathered for this worship hour, and enjoyed the peace of the meeting, the prayers, the period of silent prayer and meditation, the hymns, the organ music, and the talk by Elder H. G. Barto.

Almost the entire corps of pastors in Independence was present, and took charge of the meeting. In the stand were Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, and his three associates, Elders H. G. Barto, D. S. McNamara, and A. K. Dillee; Elder W. Earl Page, director of Religious Education, and the following pastors of Independence congregations: Elder Frank McDonald, Elder William Inman, Elder H. L. Barto, Elder Walter Chapman, Elder Perry Hiles, Elder John R. Lentell, and Elder G. W. Eastwood.

George Anway, tenor, sang "Open the Gates of the Temple," and H. G. Barto spoke on the life and mission of Christ, leading up to the Easter theme of the day. Mrs. Sunshine Beck played the organ, and Blaine Bender led congregational singing.

Stone Church

"The Substitute on the Cross," was the theme of Pastor J. F. Sheehy's Easter sermon to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning and for a scripture lesson he read Matthew 27.

The Stone Church Choir furnished a half hour program befitting the day, beginning with the hymn, "Angels Roll the Rock Away." Miss Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, sang a solo, accompanied by Robert Miller, organist. Then the choir sang the anthem, "Morn of Beauty," and Robert and George Miller played a Mozart number on the organ and piano.

In the lower auditorium junior worshipers also commemorated Easter at their eleven o'clock service, listening to the scripture reading, Luke 24: 1-9, a talk by their pastor, James B. Moses, a story by Miss Olive Curtis, and other program numbers.

A large crowd came to participate in the two-thirty afternoon Easter prayer service, and were greatly blessed in their worship activities. During the month of April E. A. Thomas, president of the first quorum of elders, and his two counselors, J. E. Kelsey and Vernon Reese, are in charge of the prayer service at this hour.

Every seat in the church was occupied and most of the standing room, too, at the evening service which presented the story of the life, death, and resurrection of our Lord in song and reading. Two hundred and fifty singers, members of six choirs and choruses of this congregation, were seated in various parts of the building—the Stone Church Choir and Aeolian Chorus, led by Paul N. Craig, sitting in the choir loft; the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Miss Dorothy Mabbott, the Cantanina Chorus, by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, the Boys' Choir, by Miss Marcine Smith, and the Clematis Chorus, by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, sitting in the gallery.

Appropriate scripture readings had been chosen from Matthew and Luke, and an effective responsive reading was printed in the programs in order that the huge congregation might actively participate in worship. Soloists of the evening were Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano, who sang "Jesus of Nazareth King"; Palmer Phillips, baritone, who sang with the Wahdemna Choral Club, "Open Our Eyes, O Thou Loving and Compassionate Jesus," and L. A. Woodside, baritone, and J. Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, who sang with the Stone Church Choir, "O Come to My Heart, Lord Jesus." Mr. Woodside also sang "As It Began to Dawn" with the Clematis Chorus, the Boys' Choir, and the Stone Church Choir. At the end of the service four of the choruses sang Handel's "Hallelujah" from "The Messiah." Robert Miller was the organist, George Miller, pianist.

Second Church

The church school hour Sunday morning reflected the spirit of Easter. Miss Hazel Clow sang "The Savior Liveth," and Ruth Bolt and Mrs. Grace Nave sang "All Alone," accompanied by Geraldine Fields.

At the eleven o'clock service the choir followed a short organ program with "Christ, the Son," and Elder Arthur Whiting offered the invocation. Mildred Fulk sang the solo part of the choir's number, "Easter Dawn." Carol Virginia Freeman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Freeman, jr., was blessed by F. L. Freeman. Pastor William Inman was the speaker of the hour, reading 2 Nephi 6: 1-19 and Luke 2: 8-12 for the basis of his discourse.

Downstairs Elder D. A. Whiting spoke to the junior church on "Resurrection." Mrs. Kathern Inman sang "Fairest Lord Jesus," accompanied by Mrs. B. C. Sarratt. Mrs. Sarratt told the story, "The Boy Who Discovered the Spring." Calvin Rimmer was in charge of this meeting, assisted by Glenn Tripp and R. C. Conyers. Girls and boys contributing to the program were Bethel Davis, pianist, Dorothy Smalley, song leader, the junior girls' chorus, Billy McPherson, and Helen Willoughby.

Elder C. H. Rich, evening speaker, chose his text from Ephesians 4. Music for this service was furnished by the ladies' quartet, Mrs. Edna Fetters, Mrs. Ethel Schuyler, Mrs. Ethel McBride, and Mrs. Alice Mintun, accompanied by Mrs. Leslie Seller. They sang "All Alone," "Christ Arose," and "Keep the Vision of the Cross."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Liberty Street Church

On Easter morning the local choir, directed by Fred Friend, rendered the sacred cantata, "Light Out of Darkness." Solos were taken by Mayble Tignor, soprano; Mrs. Thomas Crick, contralto; Joseph Frick, tenor, and Harry Blake, bass.

At the evening service the program consisted of numbers from the primary and beginner department and the violin pupils of Arthur Storms.

Evangelist U. W. Greene, the speaker, chose for his theme, "The Doctrines of Christ."

The young married people's class of the Sunday school will present a play, "A Wild Flower of the Hills," the evening of April 21. There will be no admission, but an offering will be taken.

Walnut Park Church

Easter Sunday was observed with an Easter Cantata in the evening and special numbers appropriate to the occasion at the other services. All meetings were well attended.

At eleven o'clock in the morning Evangelist F. A. Smith was the speaker, his subject being, "What Do You Think of This Man Jesus?" A children's choir of fifty-six voices, directed by Lois Butterworth, furnished the musical features. At the same hour a junior service held in the basement, was attended by one hundred young people and an Easter story, "The Hem of His Garment," was told by Miss Gladys Gould. Elder Welton Wood was the speaker.

In the evening at seven-thirty "The Song of Triumph," by Norman, was sung by the young people's chorus, directed by Maurine Nace. Soloists were Thyra Moorman, soprano; Juanita Byrn, alto; Arlon Chapman, tenor, and Harry Hartman, bass. A cornet solo, "The Holy City," was played by E. E. Moorman.

Missionary Activities in Montana

Services in Many Places—Isolated Saints Helpful

Opheim, Montana.—On the first Sunday of April I held two preaching services in the town hall here, speaking to fine and attentive audiences. The seating arrangement of the hall not being suitable, the Methodist church building was granted us for services, large, commodious, well-heated and lighted.

Splendid interest resulted in the week night meetings with increasing attendance. An invitation to ask questions resulted in much interest. Questions seemed to spring spontaneously into mind. Young people naturally asked questions pertaining to recreation, and older people about the state of the dead, heaven, etc.

To the several isolated families here goes the credit for the success of the meetings. They nobly supported the writer in his efforts. Their actions speak well of their love and faith in the ideals of the church. We appreciate also and thank nonmembers for their help in the song services.

I have felt especially blessed in preaching during these meetings. Last week I enjoyed the association and hospitality of Brother C. O. Spangler and family, of Lustre, Montana, and while there held some cottage meetings and services in a schoolhouse east of there.

Previous to that, during the winter, I held services in the Methodist church at Hinsdale, cottage meetings at White Fish and Eureka, west of Glacier Park, and met with Saints and held services at Great Falls. At all of these places and others not mentioned, the Saints and friends have done their part in every way to make the meetings successful.

Portland District Young People's Institute

President Elbert A. Smith Pays First Visit to Portland

President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle M. A. McConley were the speakers at the young people's institute, April 7, 8, and 9, which opened Friday night with a worship service and a short play centered about Graceland College. The play was written by Elder Mark Yeoman and Sister Lila Livingston and presented by the young people. June Bryson, Ardath Young, Ula Young, Bill Simpson, Kenneth Nottingham, and Mark Yeoman composed the cast. An inspirational talk by Brother Harley Morris climaxed the impressive worship program.

A series of classes conducted by Apostle McConley occupied Saturday morning and afternoon. These classes had for their theme the fundamentals of our belief, and credit toward a Religious Education certificate was given to those who attended.

The young people's banquet was the highlight of the day. The lower auditorium crowded almost to capacity by those who came to eat the excellent meal and enjoy the music and speaking. Miss Freda Young was the hostess, assisted by June Bryson, Harvey Clark, Matey Young and others. Perry Hunt, president of district young people, was toastmaster.

President Smith, the chief speaker of the evening, delivered a thought-provoking address on "Citizenship." This was the first visit of President Smith to Portland, and the enthusiastic applause that followed his speech evidenced the interest he had aroused.

Apostle McConley's fifth and concluding class occupied the church school hour, and was followed by another inspiring sermon by President Smith who held the attention of children as well as adults for almost an hour.

Everyone came away from the young people's conference in the afternoon feeling that the district had made progress in the four months that had gone by since the last meeting, and determined to keep on going forward. Branches have been organized throughout the district now, Longview and Hood River being the latest to elect their officers. Willard Becker and Charles Sherwood are presidents, respectively, of the two young people's organizations.

At an ordination service following a short business session in the afternoon the following men were ordained to the office of priest: Floyd Soneson, who already held the office of deacon; Willard Becker, of Kalama; W. W. Belcher, of The Dales, and Brother Bailey of Newberg, who is the leader of the Sherwood young people.

A worship service of song and scripture depicting Palm Sunday was arranged by Elder A. Livingston, director of Religious Education, and Fay Buchanan, musical director, for the half hour preceding the sermon Sunday evening. In his last sermon to the Portland Saints, President Smith spoke of the importance of marriage and the home. His sincere, frank treatment of the subject, his humor and his many illustrations drawn from life served to drive his words home with convincing force. Regretfully the congregation realized with his closing words that the institute was over and that a train would soon take away the man they had learned to love and respect in so short a time, one who had in three sermons taught many valuable lessons.

Apostle McConley remained in the district another week and visited Vancouver, Longview, Hood River, and other points. On Easter Sunday he was in Portland and spoke at the eleven o'clock hour.

Ontario, California

This branch is happy to report that its members escaped damage in the earthquake although they were shaken up quite hard.

Brother Johnson, of Long Beach, was here some weeks ago, and delivered an inspiring sermon on "Faith in God." He has been here several times, and always seems to carry the Spirit of God with him and is happy in the latter-day work.

Brother W. A. Teagarden, district president, delivered a wonderful sermon at the Sunday morning service, March 19.

Through the efforts of Brother F. J. Lacey assisted by Brother Logeman in missionary work at Riverside at the home of Sister Peck and others, Mrs.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Murphy was baptized at an impressive service March 12. A wonderful spirit was present. Others are interested. Brother Lacey is also holding services at Brother Shippy's home at Pomona, California.

The women's department is busy going from home to home and doing for each other the little things that need doing. The branch enjoyed special services Easter Sunday.

Wheeling District Enjoys Successful Conference

Large Crowds—Impressive Ordination Service—Hospitality of Wellsburg Branch

Despite depression handicaps, Wheeling District, West Virginia, enjoyed one of the best conferences in its history, April 8 and 9. In point of attendance it was thought by some to exceed any of the past. Meeting with Wellsburg Branch Saturday afternoon, the small amount of business to be considered was soon dispatched. The conference accepted the generous offer of Wellsburg Branch to entertain the regular business conference in the fall.

Apostle C. F. Ellis was unable to get there for the afternoon session, April 8, and Patriarch G. E. Robley who was expected to attend also failed to come. J. E. Bishop was at his best as he presented an inspiring sermon to an attentive audience Saturday evening. At the early Sunday morning priesthood meeting, Apostle Ellis gave some good council, and clarified some matters pending.

The time appointed for church school found the chapel with a capacity attendance to greet Brother W. A. Schoenian, district superintendent. The greater part of this audience remained for the sermon by Brother Ellis, which was a masterpiece, and the inspiring effect on the audience was in evidence.

An impressive ordination service was had at two thirty Sunday afternoon. Charles Earl Dobbs was ordained to the office of elder, and Ralph Ray to the office of deacon, both members of Moundsville Branch. Apostle C. F. Ellis and Patriarch John F. Martin officiated in the ordination. This was followed by a spiritual prayer and testimony meeting. The closing service at 7.30 p. m. consisted of a sermon by Patriarch J. F. Martin, befitting the occasion.

The whole-hearted hospitality of the members of the Wellsburg Branch, their generosity in providing an abundance of food at a minimum charge, and the willing spirit exhibited in the serving, were important factors in making the conference a success. Wellsburg Branch is forging ahead regardless of difficulties. They have a fine body of enthusiastic workers, and within a month nine have been added to their roll by baptism.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

1225 Division Avenue, South

Sisters Louise Evans and Elvira Champion attended the young people's convention at Detroit, and brought back helpful ideas for branch work.

Sister M. A. Harper, who has been ill for six weeks with heart spasms, is much improved and able to be downstairs after her relapse of three weeks ago.

Sister A. F. Shotwell is also able to get out doors again after several weeks of illness.

Sister Pauline Richardson is much improved in health since her recent operation, and friends hope soon to see her at services.

The women's department has divided into two groups. The north end group is presided over by Sister Long, and the south end group by Sister Newman. They hold meetings on alternate weeks. The south end group was planing a play to be given soon, but postponed it to give the young people all possible preference.

The young men and women are presenting a three-act play, "The Chintz Cottage," on May 4, from which they hope to receive funds sufficient to pay for the gas and oil to send several delegates to the young people's convention at Lamoni, in June.

Brother Merrill Champion's Sunday school class gave a warm maple sugar social at the church, April 14. The women's department planned an Easter supper for April 21.

The south end group of women has prayer and testimony or experience meeting every two weeks, and meets all day with potluck dinner at noon. After the study hour, they hold the before-mentioned experience meeting which always is a spiritual reviving season, and sometimes continues far beyond the hour of closing. Some nonmembers meet with them and say they enjoy the service.

Mrs. M. A. Harper was recently voted business manager of the women's department, and as she was unable to leave her home, she called a meeting there for both groups of women on April 6. It rained all day but twenty women met and learned Sister Harper's plans for the remainder of the year. Sister Harper is a wonderful worker, and when she knows a task depends on her, she is at it day and night until she accomplishes her goals. Right now one of her goals is to see Grand Rapids Branch out of debt. She has prayed for guidance in this matter, and believes that the best and easiest way during time of depression is to start working on a "mile of pennies." She asked each woman to see that her household takes part in this movement, giving at least a foot of pennies (sixteen) to help clear the branch of debt. The collections in each group are to be turned into "feet" also. The women caught a portion of Sister Harper's enthusiasm and have eagerly set to work.

Sister Harper read a paper at this meeting which she called her foundation or plan of work for the rest of the year. This plan is taken from the Bible and mentions the following virtues: Love, Faith, Hope, Charity, Cheerfulness, Temperance, Friendship, Confidence, Contentment, Forgiveness, Endurance, Fortitude, Energy, Integrity, Industry, and Loyalty.

Los Angeles, California

East Side Church, 1169 South Gage Street

In the past three months East Los Angeles Saints have been active. During February a building was moved up to the rear of the church, unemployed men doing most of the work. It is now being used for Sunday school rooms and recreation hall.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was here conducting a series of meetings from March 8 to 19, inclusive. His theme was, "Save Yourselves From This Untoward Generation." Though there were no immediate conversions, members felt that they themselves were greatly benefited. The meetings were well attended.

The young people are taking active part in the work. On the evening of March 11, they sponsored a banquet, Brother Gleazer being the guest of honor. A good number of young people and workers attended the banquet at Central Los Angeles for the young people of the district, President F. M. Smith was the evening speaker.

Saints here are grateful for God's protection given his people in Southern California District during the recent catastrophe.

A short time ago a shower was given in honor of Miss Hazel West, of East Los Angeles, and James Burdick, of Santa Barbara, who were wed on Easter Sunday.

Visitors to Los Angeles will find a hearty welcome at East Church.

Enjoy Memorable Services and Blessings

The Saints here are carrying on in spite of the depression. Services are well attended and good interest is shown by all.

The April sacrament was long to be remembered, for the influence of the Holy Spirit which was present from the beginning of the church school throughout the day. Thirty-five were there and all bore their testimony with the exception of four, two of whom were children and one a nonmember. The Spirit flowed from heart to heart and even little children gave wonderful testimonies.

God has been good to his people here, allowing none to suffer from lack of food, clothing, or fuel. Many have been raised up from beds of affliction through the administration of the elders and prayers of the Saints. Among these suffering ones was one of the elders for whom the doctors held no hope of recovery. He was able to attend the last sacrament service and bear his testimony.

Apostle D. T. Williams was here April 3, and gave a good lecture. Members are hoping that he may repeat this lecture to a larger audience in this place.

Lansing, Michigan

Missionary Endeavors—Study—Cooperative Activities

Apostle D. T. Williams visited this branch several times during the late fall and winter, his sermons inspiring and educating.

On the evening of December 13, President F. M. McDowell preached. Due to prevalence of sickness, many were not able to hear him, but those who attended church will not soon forget the address he gave.

District President A. C. Barmore conducted a series of meetings in February which were much enjoyed. Elder Barmore is also district missionary, and the Saints feel fortunate in having the services of one who has had his wide experience.

Elder Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan, Michigan, also preached several times during the winter. His latest services were held the week of April 3, closing with an inspiring sermon on Sunday morning, April 9. He went to Alma, Michigan, to conduct meetings. Sister Dudley is traveling with him.

Members of the priesthood have been conducting services in various parts of the city, and much interest has been aroused. Brother Clarence Dudley preached each Thursday night at the Sylvester home on the north side. Elder Alva Dexter is holding Friday night preaching services at the Hazen Scribner home. Brother Clair Easlick is doing extensive missionary work, and Brother Wesley Russell is preaching in the south end of the city to an interested audience several of whom have already obeyed the gospel. He reports more soon to enter the kingdom. Other members of the priesthood have been assisting the above ministers in every way possible. Special mention should be made of the spiritual encouragement given to the Saints by Elder Jesse Shelley. He has spent about forty years in church work, and his experiences are inspiring. In administering to the sick, and in delivering the mind and will of God to his people, Brother Shelley fills a place that few can fill.

The women's department has been active this winter, aiding in paying the expenses of the branch, making visits under the direction of Sister James Andrews, doing sewing and other work for those in need. Last fall they sponsored an inspection tour of Estes, Leadley Funeral Home which netted the branch over fifty dollars. In their meetings they are studying the Book of Mormon, Sister Erul Trescott being the teacher. Miss Russell, of the Lansing teaching staff, just closed a successful class in home management at the church.

The young people were fortunate in securing the services of Sister Viola Fiscus as teacher, she being especially fitted for work in this age group. They have organized a study club which meets each two weeks for an hour of study followed by a period of recreation.

Sister Opal Harper who has been of much assistance in the music department, has obtained a position of teaching in Upper Michigan.

Sister Martha Luce is still a patient at the Ingham County Tuberculosis Sanatorium, but is gaining in health. Sister Myrtle Yates, also a patient there, was baptized into the church April 9. Sister Martha was able to attend this service, her first since last summer.

The intermediate girls of the church school recently presented Pastor S. A. Barss with a morocco bound copy of the Doctrine and Covenants. They earned the money for this gift in various ways and were proud to give so useful a present to one whom they feel is well worthy of it.

Three deaths occurred here during the winter. Little Carol Jean Luce passed away November 20. Brother Walter James died November 25, after an illness of many months. Sister Nellie Kutt died January 17, from a heart attack. She was a faithful Saint and an influence for good wherever she went.

The branch looks forward to the ordination to the priesthood of Bruce Douglas to the office of deacon, and Alex Dudley to the office of teacher. Priests John Luce and Clarence Dudley will be ordained to the office of elder.

The church school, under the direction of John Luce and Maurice Baker, is progressing. Some new classes have been organized, the class organizations now numbering twelve. Since the church building is small, the school is handicapped by a lack of sufficient class room.

Under the leadership of the storehouse committee, Saints are planning cooperative gardens this summer, to supply the storehouse with necessary supplies for next winter.

The financial condition of the Saints has not improved, means of earning a livelihood being limited here. Nevertheless, the Saints are cheerful and are learning to put greater trust in the Lord.

There is wonderful opportunity for missionary work in this city. Lansing members wish the prayers of the Saints everywhere, that they may be found alert and ready to serve. They are enjoying spiritual prayer meetings, God revealing his will to them, and they are trying to profit by the things they hear.

Eleven have been baptized here in the past few weeks, and they have more prospects. This branch has been promised that many will be brought into the church this year if the Saints will consecrate their lives to the service of God.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—District assembled for special conference at Beaverton, March 25, at 2 p. m. Meeting opened by singing number 241 in the Hymnal; Prayer by Matthew Umphrey. Motion unanimously prevailed that the district presidency preside over this conference. Fitting remarks were made by Hubert Case and Matthew Umphrey, after which business was taken care of. The following names were presented for ordination, same having been approved by the apostle in charge and their respective branches: William Schmidt, Jason Methner, Leo Tessman, and William Gothip. Motion made that William Schmidt be ordained to office of teacher. Brother Schmidt made a statement, after which motion prevailed. Motion prevailed that Brother Jason Methner be ordained to office of priest. Motion prevailed that Brother Leo Tessman be ordained to the office of teacher. After a statement from Brother Tessman and Elder Leonard Dudley, this motion prevailed. Brother William Gothip then made a statement relative to his ordination. Brethren Horton and Pendleton also spoke in regard to this ordination, after which a motion prevailed that Brother William Gothip be ordained to office of deacon. Brother William Schmidt was ordained at the conference, while the other three ordinations were taken care of in their respective branch. Owing to Brother Lloyd McDonald leaving the district, a vacancy occurred in the office of superintendent of church school. Brother Hubert Case recommended the appointment of William Ash to fill this vacancy. A motion so prevailed. The matter of reunion was taken up. Motion was made that we dispense with reunion this year and favor two-day meetings in various parts of the district. After considerable discussion, the motion prevailed. A motion also prevailed that we have two-day meetings in charge of the district presidency, branches to confer with them in regard to arrangements. Brother Case gave verbal report on money raised at previous conference for bringing Sister Case to the district. After short talks by Brothers Case and Umphrey, adjournment was had.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—District conference convened with Paris, Tennessee, Branch, March 11 and 12, at the Odd Fellows Hall, 209 Market Street, the first service being a prayer meeting Saturday at 10 a. m. Business session was held at 2.30 p. m., the district presidency, C. B. Gallimore, D. R. Dortch, and P. B. Bowlin, in charge. After the formal opening and the routine of reading and approving the minutes, branch, ministerial, and bishop's agent's reports were read and adopted. Paris Branch recommended the names of Ed. Bumpass and Roy Hunt to the conference for approval of their ordination to the office of elder. The recommendation was approved by the conference. Other names presented for ordination were: John Lee Byrd and Weldon Reynolds to the office of priest; Porter Reynolds, teacher. Action of approval was taken, and it was suggested that the ordinations be provided for. The conference decided to hold district conferences quarterly instead of semiannually, the time being the second Saturday and Sunday in March, June, September, and December. Preaching Saturday evening was by Elder Fred Mosier. Sunday morning at nine thirty, sacrament and social service was held. The Saints enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord. In the afternoon Elder J. P. Jimmerson preached. That night Elder Fred Mosier was again the speaker. The conference services were well attended, and the gathering adjourned to meet June 10, with High Hill Branch.

ARKANSAS AND LOUSIANA. — District conference convened February 18, 1933, at 10 a. m., at Fisher, Arkansas. The meeting was called to order by District President A. M. Baker, and reports were heard from the following: George Gordon, A. E. Ziegenhorn, Tom Sanders, H. M. Daniels, Thomas W. Emde, and A. M. Baker. Apostle R. S. Budd was present and gave some excellent talks on the duties and responsibilities of branch and district officers, also preached some good sermons. Brother Cleo Carmac, of Caraway, was ordained a priest by Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder A. E. Ziegenhorn. The following officers were elected for the year: District president, A. M. Baker; vice president, Thomas W. Emde; secretary, Seth P. Harbour; chorister, A. E. Ziegenhorn. A recommendation was read for the ordination of Orlan Phillips, of Eros, Louisiana, to the office of teacher. The ordination was indorsed by the conference. A resolution was passed that each group in the district contribute one dollar seminannually to district expense. Conference adjourned to meet again at a time and place suggested by the district president.

PITTSBURGH.—District conference opened with a prayer meeting, March 18, at 2.45 p. m., at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Apostle P. M. Hanson and Elder E. B. Hull in charge. At the opening of the service, District President T. M. Carr took charge to organize the conference. The district presidency and Brother Hanson were put in charge of the meetings by conference action. The district secretary, John Hughes, was made secretary of the conference; the district chorister was put in charge of music, and ushering was left to local and visiting deacons. Then came the prayer meeting. At 7 p. m. a song service was conducted by T. M. Carr, and that evening Apostle Hanson was the speaker. Sunday began with an 8.45 a. m. priesthood meeting, there being a talk to the priesthood by Apostle Hanson on ministerial duties, personal dress, habits, pulpit actions, church property and church services. He also spoke of the need of the ministry being spiritual experts, specialists in the lives of men. Church school convened at 9.45 being conducted by the local superintendent, T. A. Dersheimer. A talk by the district superintendent, J. W. Winters, followed the class period. Apostle Paul M. Hanson preached the eleven o'clock sermon, the service being in charge of Elders James Raisbeck and F. L. Shinn. A male quartet of Pittsburgh Branch sang, and there was a piano solo by William McCune, jr., of New Castle. The business meeting opened at 2.30 p. m., Apostle Hanson and Elder Carr presiding. After the formal opening and the routine of reading and approving minutes, Apostle Hanson talked briefly of the purpose of the assembly. Then came reports of the district president and secretary; the report of L. S. Eschrich, treasurer, showed a balance of $96.33. Reports of branch presidents were read as follows: Elder E. B. Hull, pastor of Pittsburgh; Elder W. G. McCune, New Castle Branch; Elder S. Winship, assistant pastor of Fayette City, Pennsylvania; Elder James Raisbeck, Lock No. Four Branch; Samuel Gaskill, Donora. Among the priesthood reports were those from Elders F. L. Shinn, W. H. Daugherty, Charles G. Popp; Priests W. D. Gaskill, Arthur Howes, John L. Biddle, and Lamont Ryhal; teachers, J. W. Winters and Calvin Wescott. The election of officers for the district resulted in the following: President, E. B. Hull; first counselor, F. L. Shinn; second counselor, J. Raisbeck; secretary, B. L. Cooper; district bishop's agent and district treasurer, L. S. Eschrich; director of church schools, J. W. Winters; director of music, Sister Pearl McCann. Recommendation of the following names for ordination came from E. B. Hull, Pittsburgh's pastor: Titus Dersheimer, elder; John Hughes, teacher, and Donald Ross, deacon. These names had been indorsed by the First Presidency, by the missionary in charge, Brother Paul M. Hanson, by the district president, and by Pittsburgh Branch. The conference approved the recommendation, and then gave a rising vote of thanks to Brother and Sister Carr for the excellent services they have given the district. After the transaction of a number of other business matters the conference acted to hold the district conference at Pittsburgh during February or March of next year, the exact date being left to the discretion of the district president, notice of the conference to be sent by the district president to all branches and to the Herald, of this and all other conferences or meetings, not later than thirty days prior to such meeting. The conference expressed appreciation to Apostle Hanson and pledged him support and assistance in the work of the church. After a four-hour session adjournment was had until the evening meeting. At the 7.45 service Apostle Hanson and Elder Carr ordained T. A. Dersheimer an elder; Elders Hull and Shinn ordained John Hughes a teacher, and Elder Carr and Apostle Hanson ordained Donald Ross a deacon. A short talk by T. M. Carr, benediction by P. M. Hanson, and the conference adjourned.

Our Departed Ones

TERRY.—Mary Jane Guthrie was born January 20, 1850, in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. On October 24, 1869, she was married to John M. Terry, at Millersburg, by Elder John F. Adams. A son and daughter came to bless their home, but both were taken by death many years ago. Sister Terry was baptized into the church, August 6, 1871, at Millersburg, Illinois, by John F. Adams. Only a short time later her husband began his services as a missionary, and for nearly sixty years they traveled together wherever the church sent them. Brother Terry labored first in Saint Joseph, Missouri, and the surrounding territory. Later he was sent to Chicago, where they spent three years, then twelve years in Oakland, California, eight years in Seattle, Washington, and shorter periods in other places, beloved by the Saints wherever they labored. Over ten years ago they moved to Independence, Missouri, to make their home, where they soon endeared themselves to many. To those who knew them best they were "Uncle John" and "Aunt Mollie," and many hearts were saddened when Uncle John passed away on October 24, 1931, their sixty-second wedding anniversary. Only He who has promised to comfort the widow and the orphan can know the lonely hours through which Sister Terry waited for the summons which would unite her again with her beloved husband in that land where there is no more parting, neither any more tears. She went to meet him on April 3, 1933, after nearly two years of waiting. Sister Terry is survived by one sister, Mrs. L. C. Main, of Osceola, Iowa; a brother, George Guthrie, of Long Beach, California, and hundreds of friends all over the church whose lives have been made richer through their contact with her, and who grieve over her passing.

MARTIN.—Bessie Mae Potter was born August 25, 1879, at Missouri Valley, Iowa. She was married to Obie A. Martin at Blair, Nebraska, June 14, 1897, and to this union were born eleven children, five sons and six daughters. Two sons and three daughters preceded her in death. She became a member of the church in 1908, being baptized in Washington Park Lake, Denver, by Elder Charles Everett. In her last illness she was confined to her bed for seven weeks, suffering terribly, but always uncomplainingly. She was a fine companion and mother and was much loved and respected by a wide circle of friends. Passed from this life in Denver, March 24, 1933. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, Obie A. Martin; three sons, Wilbert E., Jack

M., and Robin E.; three daughters, Mrs. Gladys Phillips, Mrs. Mildred Venrick, and Mrs. Bessie McClain, and many other relatives and friends. Sermon by Glaude A. Smith, at Hoffman Funeral Home, Denver, March 27, 1933. Buriel in Denver.

BACHELLER.—George H. Bacheller was born at Lynn, Massachusetts, September 27, 1859, and died at Lainville, Massachusetts, March 9, 1933, at the home of his son, Milton. He lived on a farm at Plainville twenty-three years, and in addition to doing his farm work, he worked in the jewelry factories, walking daily to and from his farm to the factories, three miles distant, up to a very short time before his death. Before going to Plainville he worked in the shoe factories in Lynn. He was a good man and a respected citizen widely known in his hometown and in the Attleboros. The day before his wife's funeral —she preceded him in death but two weeks— he suffered a paralytic stroke which left him comparatively helpless and which caused his death. He leaves to mourn his passing a sister, Mrs. Warren Gordon, New Hampton, New Hampshire, and three children, all of Plainville: Mrs. Earl Bradshaw, and Milton and Raymond Bacheller.

BACHELLER.—Inez M. Bacheller was born at Bar Harbor, Maine, June 1, 1868; was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder J. N. Ames at Lynn, Massachusetts; died at the home of her son, Milton, at Plainville, Massachusetts, February 22, 1933. She married George H. Bacheller, residing with him in Lynn, Massachusetts, and on the farm at Plainville. Although seldom able to attend church herself because of affliction, she always tried to teach her children to serve the Lord, and died with an abiding faith in the Lord and his church. There survive of her, two sisters: Mrs. D. F. Schroeder and Mrs. Harriet Abbot, besides her daughter and two sons mentioned above. Both she and her husband were laid away in North Purchase Cemetery, Attleboro. Elder Fred Roberts officiated at the funeral of Sister Bacheller, and Elder J. A. Gunsolley, assisted by Elder Raymond Bradshaw, at the funeral of Brother Bacheller.

DROWN.—John Franklin Drown was born March 14, 1857, in Huron County, Michigan. Passed away March 12, 1933, at Cameron, Missouri. In just two more days Brother Drown would have reached the age of seventy-six years. He was the son of James and Eliza Drown. He moved to the vicinity north of Cameron in 1881. Was united in marriage to Miss Emmaline Trotter, April 15, 1883, who departed this life in 1922. Eight children were born to this union, one girl passing away in infancy. Those who survive are Bert Roy and Mrs. Ralph Livingston, of Cameron, Missouri; Mrs. Ernest Rader, of Beaver, Iowa; Claud, of Kansas City, Missouri, and Oda and Donald, of Shenandoah, Iowa. He also leaves three brothers, Joseph H., and George A., of Independence, Missouri; Alma H., of Los Angeles, California, and one sister, Mrs. Orpha Smail, of Kansas City, Missouri. Brother Drown united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when fourteen years of age, grew up in the church, and was always loyal to its teachings. The funeral was held Wednesday, March 15, at the Saints' church at Cameron; sermon by Elder Frank Hinderks. Interment was in the Delano Cemetery.

SIMS.—Mary Ann Walton was born January 5, 1864, at Fort Smith, Arkansas. Married J. P. Sims. Died at her home at Wilburton, Oklahoma, March 22, 1933, leaving to mourn, one daughter, one adopted daughter, three grandsons, and one granddaughter. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, February 12, 1926. Interment was in the City Cemetery, Wilburton, the service being in charge of Elder F. A. Smith.

SHOEMAKER.—Lena Alice Sprague was born at Randleville, Illinois, March 28, 1866, the youngest daughter of Doctor Joshua B. Sprague and Vilinda Martin-Sprague. The family soon moved to Springfield, Illinois, where she spent her school days. January 19, 1887, she was united in marriage to Martin R. Shoemaker, and to them three children were born, Leah Alice Denton, of Bloomington, Illinois; Carletta May Norman, of Independence, Missouri, and Clarence Sprague Shoemaker, who passed away, March 15, 1912. Soon after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Shoemaker moved to Beardstown, Illinois, where they lived forty-four years. She was baptized into the church, October 17, 1886, and was a devoted worker. She belonged to Olive Branch Camp No. 64, Royal Neighbors of America, and held several offices in that lodge. Died at Schmitt Memorial Hospital, March 18, 1933, after ten weeks of intense suffering. She was a woman of sunshiny disposition, happiest when she was serving others. She was talented in music and a leader of young people. Besides her husband and children to mourn her death there are four grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. Viola C. Hane, of Tulsa, Oklahoma; one brother, Otho N. Sprague, of Pawnee, Illinois, other relatives, and many friends. The funeral service was held from the Saints' church, Elder R. L. Fulk in charge. Interment was in the Beardstown Cemetery, the boys of her Sunday school class acting as pallbearers, William Corcoran, Morris Corcoran, Albert Lee, Randall Hart, Ernest Burch, and Harold Skiles.

JOHNSON.—Clara Viola Allen was born at Cold Springs, Wisconsin, January 8, 1861, and spent her early childhood there. Moved with her parents to Valley Junction when she was a few years old. Married George Edwards at Valley Junction, and to them two children were born, Eugene Edwards and E. G. Edwards, who passed away in infancy. Later in life she married Austin Johnson, of Yuba, Wisconsin, and one daughter was born to this union, Mrs. Mildred Roberts, of Chetek. They moved to Chetek in 1913, where they lived until the death of Mr. Johnson. Mrs. Johnson was an invalid of late years and lived at the Ernest Edwards' home at Eau Claire for the last two years. She was baptized a member of the church September 27, 1896, at Valley Junction, by Elder A. L. Whiteaker, and was a faithful member. Left to mourn are her daughter, Mrs. George Roberts, of Chetek; her son, George Edwards, of Eau Claire; three brothers, Henry Allen, of Tomahawk; S. B. Allen, of Des Moines, Iowa; and Eugene Allen, of Olympia, Washington; one sister, Alice, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota; one stepdaughter, Bell Doty, of Lily, Wisconsin; eleven grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends. The funeral was held at Eau Claire, February 22, Elder F. A. Atwood, of Chetek, officiating. The body will be kept in a vault there until spring when it will be taken to Chetek for burial in Lake View Cemetery.

SPARLING.—Mary M. Sparling, fifty-nine years old, and wife of Elder Henry Sparling, of Springfield, Missouri, Branch, died March 6, 1933, at her home, after a brief illness of heart disease. She was a resident of Springfield for about fifty years. She was first the wife of Albert E. Martin, who died eighteen years ago. She and Elder Sparling were married about eleven years ago, and she traveled with him for three years in Central and Southeastern Illinois. She acted as district superintendent of Sunday school and women's department of this same field and became widely acquainted and respected because of her good work. After Brother Sparling was superannuated, she has also acted as superintendent of the junior department in Springfield Branch. Besides her husband, Mrs. Sparling is survived by four daughters: Mrs. Roy E. Starkey and Mrs. Frances M. Bishop, of Springfield, Mrs. D. B. Karr, of Saint Louis, and Mrs. J. H. White, of West Orange, New Jersey; two sons, Henry N. Martin, of Pittsburg, Kansas, and Herbert E. Martin, of Saint Louis; twelve grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; two sisters, and a brother in Texas. Funeral services were held March 9, with burial in Greenlawn Cemetery. Prayer was offered by Pastor William Duemler, and the sermon was presented by Elder J. B. Ansley.

HEIDE.—Lyle Evans Heide, baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Alma Heide, was born February 4, 1933, at his home north of Fulton, Iowa, and passed away at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Heide, at Maquoketa, Iowa, April 2, 1933. Besides his parents, he leaves to mourn, a sister, Mava Joice, a twin sister, Lois Elaine; a great-grandmother, Mrs. Julia Prussia; a great-grandfather, John Heide; grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Prussia, and Mr. and Mrs. Amos Heide, and other relatives. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the Saints' church at Fulton, the great-grandfather, John Heide, officiating. Interment was in Sutton Cemetery near Fulton.

ARMITAGE.—John W. Armitage was born December 7, 1867, near Yeardon, England, and was married to Margaret Yates Jackson April 11, 1903. He was baptized August 31, 1913, by Elder Henry Carr, at Elk Mills, Maryland. Died at his home in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 31, 1932. The funeral service was held from the Saints' church, Elder Henry Livingston in charge. A good man has gone to his reward. Interment was in Leverington Cemetery.

King James Version with 5,566 Corrected Renderings from the American Standard Version 9 Styles of Bindings

A NEW Bible That Unfolds the Bible

and makes Bible study vastly more Interesting

A NEW kind of Bible—nothing like it, none so HELPFUL has ever been published before. JUST OFF THE PRESS—but already in use and heartily recommended by OVER 2,000 OF AMERICA'S LEADING MINISTERS—truly great men, like William B. Riley, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Donald Grey Barnhouse, Pastor, Tenth Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, and leading Bible Fundamentalists everywhere. Based on The King James Version, with 5,566 corrected renderings from the American Standard Versions, the New Analytical Bible gives the Minister, Sunday School Teacher and Bible Student what no other Bible does—it unfolds the Bible and adds fascinating interest and satisfying completeness to Bible study.

A WHOLE BIBLICAL LIBRARY COMPLETE IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

This remarkable volume contains the COMPLETE Bible text. Nearly 2,000 pages—but only 1¼ inches thick. Preachers, teachers, and Bible students say that never before have so many and such HELPFUL Bible guides and explanations been available in one volume.

Makes Bible study fascinatingly INTERESTING, with its 42 full-page charts and its complete but simple and easily understood analysis of both the Old and New Testaments in the King James Version, with 5,566 bracketed renderings taken from the American Standard Version and placed in the text where they belong. As a reference book, it is a wonderful time-saver. Rev. J. Stanley Durkee, D.D., L.L.D., Ph.D., Pastor, Plymouth Church, N. Y., says: "Without my realizing it I have been waiting long for this master work!"

Handy Reference Arrangement

The references follow each verse instead of being placed in fine print in the center. Before each of the 66 books, there is an Introductory Page, giving date, author, design and other information greatly enhancing the INTEREST of each book. "Any Sunday School teacher or leader of Bible study has a TREASURE in the NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE!" declares Rev. M. Joseph Twomey, D.D., Pastor, Baptist Temple, Philadelphia.

NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE

SINCERELY ENDORSED BY SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES

"The title does not begin to suggest the riches offered here in the NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE to the student of the Bible, whether beginner or one who has journeyed far. It is a work that will be studied and LOVED and will grow richer with each year's using," states THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES.

66 ANALYTICAL OUTLINES

An Analytical Outline follows each Book—a clear, simple and informative analysis that will be of wonderful help in your Bible study and in the preparation of Sermons and Sunday School Lessons.

"With this Analytical Bible, I can now accomplish more," says Rev. Ross H. Stover, Pastor, Messiah Lutheran Church, Philadelphia.

PARALLEL HISTORY OUTLINES

A must interesting phase of this volume are the Contemporaneous Histories given in connection with most of the Books of the Bible. For example—just what was going on in Babylonia, in Egypt, or among the Moabites and Ammonites at the very time Genesis was written—What were the Assyrians, Phoenicians and Greeks doing when the Book of Judges was written? These and hundreds of other questions (not answered in other Bibles) are answered in the "Contemporaneous History" section of this remarkable NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE. "It is a wonderfully constructed analysis. In your ANALYTICAL BIBLE you have rendered a real service to Bible students," declares Reverend Mark A. Matthews, Pastor, First Presbyterian Church, Seattle, Wash.

JOHN 5:39

39 ¶ Search [Ye search] the scriptures; for [because] in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

Ver. 46; De. 18.15,18; Lu. 16.29; Ac. 17.11.

ACTS 17:22.23

22 ¶ Then Paûl stood in the midst of Märs' hill and said, Ye men of Ăth'-ĕnș, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious [very religious].

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions [observed the objects of your worship], I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

Facsimile of type showing corrected renderings in brackets and references after each verse.

■ The Pressroom Proletarian says: "The working classes of this country won't get much good out of a new deal, as long as it remains the same old poker game, with everybody trying his best to cheat everybody else. What the country needs is a new game!"

■ "A Tribute to Dad" would be the title of a story about one of our shop foremen. His son, a high school sophomore, comes to the plant to eat lunch with his father, leaving his school friends to do so. Marveling at this, we asked: "Does he eat lunch with you because you keep the lunch, or because he wants to?" "I guess he wants to," was the reply. "I never tell him to do it." Perhaps without knowing it the lad is paying a fine tribute of respect to his father. And we think he must be a pretty good father. The boy, by the way, is well able to take care of himself on any school ground.

■ The Perennial Lover says he will never marry. "I'm not good enough for any girl I'd want for a wife. And the ones that I'm good enough for, I don't want." Every man feels that way when he is young and full of ideals. But after while he will weaken, and decide that it is better to make some good girl a poor husband than leave her fall into the hands of some one else who is even less worthy. Thus most men at once satisfy and compromise their chivalry.

"April weather," spluttered the pigeon shaking his ruff of iridescent feathers, "is like some people—very attractive, charming and likable, but altogether undependable."

"That's not a new idea," I replied a little sarcastically as I penciled a manuscript before me.

"Why should it be?" the bird paused in his occupation of wiping his rain-moistened beak on my ink blotter, "human nature and April weather aren't new either."

Smile your whole life through,

And the whole world smiles back at you.

"Pretty is as pretty does," is a maxim our grandparents were fond of quoting. Why not modernize it and substitute for "pretty" such words as Honesty, Charity, Industry, Education, Neighborliness, Cooperation, and Confidence? I like this idea of doing. Don't you?

Building the Church From Within

3.—Improving Church Buildings and Grounds

Nothing is finer that the happy satisfaction one feels in looking up one of our churches when he is visiting a place new to him, and finding the building on a good street, with the grounds landscaped and shrubs artistically located. If the interior of the building is well decorated, his satisfaction is greatly increased, and he is happy to think of being identified with a congregation so active and thrifty.

Some people consider the spiritual condition of a church far more important than the physical condition of the church plant, and it is proper to do so. Yet experience teaches that the condition of the church building and grounds is an outgrowth and expression of the spiritual condition. A branch that is ready for the Kingdom may be housed in poor location with the front yard full of weeds, the back yard littered with cans, the steps worn and broken, and the plaster scaling from the ceiling of the interior; but the chances are against it. A slovenly body is the accompaniment of a slovenly spirit.

Imagine a stranger coming to either of the churches described above, and the probable effect on him. He has heard some one explain the gospel, he is interested, and he decides to investigate. If he comes to stand before your church, will he decide to enter, or will he go away disappointed?

This is the time of year for repairs and improvements. Mend the steps, or the fence. Cut out the weeds and renovate the lawn. Patch the plaster, replace the broken window, get the cobwebs out of the clock and wind it. Make the improvement of the church an occasion for a Saturday outing. Let everybody come to the church, prepared to eat dinner there and work on it all day.

Idle workmen may be glad to donate their services.

Let your church building express the spiritual condition of your branch. Let it stand as an honest representative, not only of your people, but of the whole church. The time to begin is now. In a short while you can do the work that will make the building and grounds beautiful throughout the whole summer.

"Build From Within"

1. Improve and decorate the buildings, grounds, and equipment.
2. Develop dignity and reverence of the services.
3. A training class for candidates for membership.
4. Organization meetings for teachers and officers.
5. A parents' and children's banquet.
6. Enlistment and consecration service for the young people.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

HERE is something upon which those holding the priesthood might meditate for at least a moment. In a questionnaire sent out recently by the Presidency to branch presidents, two questions are: "Are your priesthood organized? Are the women of your branch organized?" To these questions a branch president replied "No," and "Yes," respectively. The women organized, but the priesthood not! Now how about that? What shall we do?

RECENTLY it was necessary to "discipline" a brother who held the priesthood. This is always a sad task for us to perform and the finer effects of the discipline are frequently lost by an attitude of bitterness and even ugliness displayed by the one disciplined. Where misconduct, or failure to magnify one's office makes such disciplinary act necessary, an appreciation of priestly responsibility on the part of the one affected, will quite surely create a spirit of sorrow and regret that he has not measured up to what was expected of him. And this sorrow should be "godly" and will bring forth the fruits of repentance.

And how much more pleasant it is when such fruits have been displayed, to restore priestly rights than it is to withdraw them.

These thoughts have been stimulated by a paragraph in a letter from the one mentioned in the first paragraph. After saying he would abide the decision of the officers, and wait with patience the arbitrament of time, he adds these fine words:

"I will endeavor to let righteousness rule my life, and work in the spirit of helpfulness. And if we must grow and be matured by the experiences through which we pass, all I ask is strength to endure. We should be thankful that the gospel meets every emergency."

Well will it be with us all when we can under the disciplinary effects of grief, sorrow, or the many things by and through which we learn "obedience by the things we suffer," if we can carry with us the same spirit of resignation reflected in the above quoted paragraph.

A LETTER recently passed over this desk written by a district president to one of the Twelve, and by the latter sent to us. In it is a comment which perhaps involves a number of us, and gives me a chance to say something in our own defense. The District President writes to the member of the Twelve as follows:

"Sorry you are getting doubtful about attending the District Conference and Institute. I was banking on your help in organizing for some real priesthood work at that time, especially since the suggestion you made in a recent letter for such a program. I have been wondering if we are liable to get a let-down from Brother McDowell, too. We have had that happen to us before here in ————. If it happens a few more times we shall not be able to get our folks to believe us when we advertise that we are to have distinguished visitors to help in our conferences. Since you express doubt at being able to attend, I am forced to leave out of my last advertising letter a note that I intended to include, urging the priesthood to make special effort to attend so as to get the benefit of the priesthood work I expected you to conduct."

Now what a thrust is that! I purpose to take up the gauge of battle for the member of the Twelve and for Brother Mac, and thereby "fight" one of my own battles. The general officers are always desirous to help in all ways we can within our strength and permitted by the demands upon our official time, and so we, when urgently requested to "come over into Macedonia and help," will frequently respond by saying we shall be glad to come if it is so we can. In other words, the promise to go is conditionally made, or made with reservations, implied tacitly at least. These reservations are made necessary because one of the functions of supervisory officers is to meet emergencies, and as these can not be foreseen or anticipated, when they do arise plans have frequently to be suddenly and markedly changed. And so tentatively-made dates or appointments must be broken or cancelled. On many occasions when I have made such tentative appointments, those to whom these conditional promises were made have for advertising purposes sent them out as a positive promise to be present. At times when I have specifically stated that the promise was conditional and subject to change by development of unanticipated conditions, and have insisted that any announcement or advertisement must be made with this provision, my requests have been ignored and the announcement made positively. Then when events have made fulfillment of the promise impossible or impracticable, I and not the local men have been blamed. This has occurred so many times that I have become very reluctant to make "long distance" dates, and have actually declined invitations which might have otherwise been accepted and filled. If our local brethren were more careful to protect our interests, then there could be a reciprocal understanding and interaction between local and general officers which would work to the good of all.

So, Brother D. P., I think you have been a bit too severe in your comments to the T. and about Mac and some of us others covered by your tacit charges. Take some of the blame yourself and work with us to a better understanding about appointments, and appreciate the fact that in our desire to help all we can we may make tentative promises which subsequent events may make impossible or very difficult of fulfillment, and "bear with the infirmities" of us general officers who fail to or can not anticipate emergencies so disruptive of long-distance plans.

Trade-mark Contest—Prizes Offered By Herald Publishing House

The Herald Publishing House wants a "Trade-Mark" or insignia for use on its books, pamphlets, letterheads, and publications. We believe that our church artists can give us what we want, and we are sponsoring a contest to give them a chance to help us. The rules of the competition are as follows:

1. Prizes: First prize—$15.00 in merchandise produced by the Herald Publishing House. Five Second Prizes—a copy to each one of our new book, Riches Untold.

2. Specifications: The drawing is to be in ink, between two and three inches in either dimension, and clear enough to allow strong reduction, with clear detail. Any shape may be chosen. New ideas desired. It is believed to be best not to incorporate the church seal in the trade-mark.

3. Any artist may submit as many drawings as he wishes. But he can win only one prize.

4. The drawing must be original, subject to copyright by us, and not an infringement on any existing copyright.

5. Contest opens immediately. It closes June 15.

Friendly Comments

The Herald means a lot to us away out here, and there are far too few Fridays when the Herald may be found in the mailbox. It is edifying and a great source of interest to me. Then, too, always there is something that is totally unexpected and therefore more enjoyable. The "staff" should be commended for such a splendid paper.

Realistic youth has turned itself toward practical affairs. It demands results. Perhaps it goes a little too far in its reaction against the business of words. Many young people deliberately turn their back on ideas and on disinterested research, only to occupy themselves with the very things that this research and these ideas are concerned with. This explains the poverty of their conversation. We know many of them who are capable in mechanical matters but can not utter a sentence of ten words, much less express an opinion. If this is Americanism, we may well say that modern youth is Americanized.—Paul Gaultier.

"My Book of Thoughts"

"They are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts."—Sir Philip Sidney.

Every life contains the material for at least one great book. It should be composed in two parts: the first part to contain the fine thoughts that come to one in reading; the second, to contain the fine thoughts that come to one in a period of "retreat" for thinking.

Every young person will be greatly benefited by having such a book of his own. It need not be expensive; an ordinary composition book will do. Or, for convenience, one may use a loose-leaf binder in which material may be arranged after it is written.

Every day we should do two things: read, and think. A "retreat" or quiet hour of solitude, is best for this. Most people find it best to take the daily "retreat" early in the morning in their own rooms. A season of silent prayer for guidance during the day's work is an important part of the "retreat."

We believe that God will lead and inspire us. Many know from experience that they can enjoy the Divine love and guidance. This can be a daily experience. Those who doubt can find out by trying. It is fitting that we should write for preservation the best and noblest things that come to us.

Will you make an experiment with us? Get a book, large enough to take clippings and give room for writing. Make two divisions in it, one for the clippings and thoughts you obtain from reading; the other for your own daily thoughts written during "retreat." Watch this column during the following weeks, and we shall tell you more about the "Book of Thoughts."

They All Read It Now

(From a letter to the Business Manager)

I look forward weekly for my bundle of Heralds and am always so disappointed when they are delayed in the mails until Saturday, which isn't often. We are all so interested not only in the story, but all articles as well. Until the magazine was combined I doubt if any but two or three of our family gave it much more than a hurried glancing over. Now it is read from cover to cover by all, young and old alike. I am especially interested in the activities of the young people and in articles for and by them.

The Story of Etta Kett

Etta Plays Her Own Game

THE VAMP, as they called her, had been visiting in Elmwood for three weeks. Through the courtesy of Art and Lillian Blanchard, at whose home she was staying, Miss Clarissa Beardsley had been introduced to the younger set of the Elmwood Branch under the most favorable circumstances. All had tried to be kind to her. But she had promptly appropriated the attention of all the young men, and snubbed all the young women.

Clary, as she had invited the young men to call her, was a pallid, half-healthy type of "gold-coast" beauty, with a rosebud mouth, a slinky walk, dresses that clung and revealed, and a pair of languorous eyes that could deliver, on occasion, the most insolent of stares. The men fell for her, and the women fell away from her.

The last party had been a fiasco. It consisted of Clary as a center of interest, encircled by a crowd of men who showed nothing but a row of broad and uninteresting backs to the other girls. Clary, knowing the hostess wouldn't like it, had flicked a cigarette out of a slim case from somewhere. And she had blown smoke into Harry Wentworth's face and made him like it.

The girls clustered in a disconsolate group at the other side of the room. Etta leaned forward and said: "My dears, I think this has gone far enough. We have played her game too long. It is time that we see how well she can play our game."

And then she had walked home without a word to Bill, who had brought her to the party. Crestfallen and penitent, he phoned to her at home an hour later.

"I don't know whether I'll ever think anything of your intelligence again, Bill, or not. Certainly your gang of men are welcome to her type if you like it." Then followed a long and incoherent but very earnest argument from Bill. Etta was not mollified.

"On one condition I may forgive you; but you'll have to do what I tell you. You will come to a beach party tomorrow evening at North Point. We will eat on Randall's Island. I don't care whether you like it or not. And every last man of you had better be there. Get Clary there, no matter who brings her. I'll take care of the rest. Goodbye." Bill was still gulping air long after she hung up.

CLARY came, albeit reluctantly. The slim lines that held such an allure in an evening dress were merely skinny in a bathing suit, in spite of her gaily colored outfit. Even with rouge, she had a washed-out appearance. The sand hurt her feet, and she wrinkled her nose at the whole party. The boys soon discovered that it was very tiresome nursing a whining baby. Harry faithfully stayed with her.

"We're going over to the island for supper. It's all ready to cook," Etta announced. "Into the boats with you!" Clary had to be helped in after all the others were ready.

Roasting meat, hot chocolate, rolls, pickles, and doughnuts took plenty of attention. With singing and beach games the time passed happily, except for Clary, who made no pretense of enjoying it.

A light breeze was blowing from the island to the shore. Nobody missed little Polly Chandler when she went down to the boats and tinkered with the ropes. Boats drift very quietly. . . . Harry Wentworth was the first to discover they were gone, when it came time to go home.

"Then we'll all swim for it!" said Etta. And with that the girls plunged in. The men looked at the water and then at Clary.

"We'll have to give Clary a little help," said Harry. "She doesn't swim much." When the men helped her to the home beach, the other girls had dressed and disappeared. There were no more parties for Clary that season in Elmwood.

"You just have to be rude to some people," said Etta the next day.

Young People in Action

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA DISTRICT young people have four splendid projects under way. The church attendance contest aims at securing one hundred per cent attendance of young people at the Sunday evening services of the church. In each branch young people between the ages of 12 and 28 are enrolled in the project and an accurate record kept of attendance at church school, preaching and prayer services. The contest is to determine which branch can make the highest record through the year. The Herald Study project is designed to encourage regular, thoughtful reading of the Saints' Herald. A unique system of true-false tests has been planned, and each young person takes a test at the end of the month. An essay contest is in progress and an extemporaneous contest is planned for later in the year. The details of these contests may be secured from the district young people's president, D. W. Davis, 8747½ Phinney St., Seattle, Washington.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle E. J. Gleazer in Southern Part of His Territory

Apostle E. J. Gleazer spent Easter Sunday with Saints at Tucson, Arizona, preaching in Transportation Hall at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., and speaking over Radio KGAR from six to six-thirty in the evening. A few days previous Brother Gleazer visited Phoenix, Arizona, with Patriarch G. J. Waller, of Hawaii.

Brother Gleazer was in Los Angeles at the time of President F. M. Smith's visit there the opening days of April, and remained to make a large contribution to the success of the Southern California conference, held there April 7 to 9, which was said to be the biggest in years both in attendance and spiritual accomplishment.

Since the latter part of January, Brother Gleazer has been working in California and Arizona. He is this year associated with Apostle M. A. McConley in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission.

E. Y. Hunker Baptizes Descendants of Early Churchmen

The eight candidates baptized by Elder E. Y. Hunker at Dow City, Iowa, April 14, included a great-grandson of Alexander H. Smith, a grandson of Romanan Wight, and two grandsons of James A. Donaldson, an elder known for his missionary labors in Iowa.

During the winter and spring months Brother Hunker has done much through missionary meetings in Western Iowa District, to stimulate the faith and activities of the Saints.

Variety of Interests for Groups in English District

The ten branches in Northern England District have a variety of local activities—boy and girl movements, Bible classes, health and strength classes, ambulance work and medical instruction in first aid, industrial classes (basket making and sewing) concert parties, and other musical interests. All these are in addition to regular weekly church services.

This year the district is enjoying four quarterly conferences of an educational nature, two young people's conventions, and a ministerial conference was scheduled for April 29 and 30. A local interchange of ministry is also proving advantageous.

The branches in Northern District are Wigan, Warrington, Farnworth, Stockport, Beresford Road (Manchester), James Street (Manchester), North East Manchester, Bradford, Leeds, and Sheffield.

Ohio Saints Held up by High Water

A letter from Portsmouth, Ohio, tells us that on two recent Sundays attendance at the West Side Mission was small because many of the members were cut off by high water in the recent flood of the Ohio River. The town of Portsmouth came very near being flooded, but none of the Saints suffered harm or property damage.

Sacrifice Offering of Independence Women Is Now $4,585

With faithful purposefulness the women of Independence push on, raising their weekly sacrifice offering, which now totals $4,585. Every Monday afternoon they hold their meeting to stimulate and inspire the members to continue their helpful work, and to count the offering.

Under the leadership of Sister C. C. Koehler the women began their sacrifice offering drive late last October, and by small and consistent sacrifices in their household and personal expenditures as well as by special entertainments, have succeeded in raising this large offering. They have many plans for the warm weather months, and are to be commended for their devotion and industry.

A Word About Wheeling District

Wheeling District, which includes territory in West Virginia and Ohio, lately enjoyed one of the most successful conferences of its history. The district is composed of the following congregations: Wellsburg, Wheeling, Moundsville, and Glen Easton, West Virginia, and Bellaire and Steubenville, Ohio. William Richards, district president, lives at Steubenville.

Wife of Early Missionary Oldest Member in Dow City Branch

Sister Bertha Wight, wife of Romanan Wight, early missionary, is the oldest member of Dow City Branch. She has been a member of the church seventy-one years, and on March 14, this year, celebrated her eighty-first birthday.

In honor of this event she was guest at a church dinner following the communion service March 5, which was attended by more than eighty relatives and friends. "Aunt Bert," as she is familiarly known, appreciated the surprise, the loving thoughts of her many friends, and the big three-tier birthday cake presented by Mrs. Ola Boham.

YOUTH ASKS THIS---

A Discussion for Young People and Their Friends - - - -

By ARDENE BYERS

THE OLDER GENERATION can give to the younger two things: a concept of life and a foundation for it. No more. They can not build a life for the young, or live it for them. In the plan of "Things as They Are" every generation and every individual has to work out its own scheme of existence.

A person gets his concept of life from what he sees of it during his formative years. He looks at it first through the eyes of his parents. Later his schoolmates, teachers, and friends have their influence. So, more or less, do all the other people whose lives touch his. But the first idea, the one he gets at home, is the one that sticks. He can't help it. As he grows older he may find flaws in his own attitudes, and try to change them, but that first concept is going to stay in his make-up and greatly influence the quality of his living.

Youth asks of parents, then, that they provide for their children a wholesome, normal home atmosphere. That takes in a lot. It means relations between the parents; it means the conversation the child hears, the pictures he sees, the music and books he learns to know. It covers all the things that go to form his attitudes and tastes. It means wise guidance in building desirable habits. The child needs to learn to understand and control his own emotions, which are powerful factors for good or for harm. He ought to be taught to store his mind with worth-while things; to be tolerant; to think clearly and constructively. It is his right to learn to understand his body and to care for it and develop it to its highest powers. These things are elementary. They form the groundwork for all that comes after.

The foundation of a character is good or bad according to its plan, its environment, its management —and a quality that is all these and something more: unity. Character must be built of elements that will harmonize and cohere. To paraphrase scripture: "A personality divided against itself shall fall."

If a growing personality can be centered around a purpose, an ideal, a reason for being that is grounded into the young life so that the elements of the developing brain and body and spirit work together harmoniously toward it, there is one person well started on the way of complete living.

Parents need a clear vision of what they want to teach their children and what they may in fairness expect of them. It is only too easy for the parent to be so eager to have the child carry out his early ideal or be what he wanted to be that he forgets he can not live the youngster's life for him. This young person must find himself, and then go on from there.

The parent who starts out constructively to determine what he can offer toward the full development of his child finds that he must throw out a lot of cumbersome trivialities to get at the fundamentals he wants. He looks for principles. Details come after. He decides, for instance, that he will teach—and by that he means that he will ingrain into the child's life by simple, comradely talks and above all by example—the broad, constructive principle of thoughtfulness for others. Contrast that with a set of rigid rules about not taking baby's toys, or not speaking impudently to mother. He will try to give the youngster a sense of responsibility for the care of his person and belongings, rather than a series of orders not to come to the table with dirty hands or not to leave his wraps scattered on the hall floor.

The boy who has been taught from childhood to get a straight slant on his problems and then go after them for all he is worth is infinitely better off than the one who knows the Ten Commandments, the books of the Bible, and a hundred wise maxims, but doesn't know what to do about them.

So simple a principle. Perhaps its simplicity is the reason parents overlook it. Yet every business man knows that sincere, positive advertising of his own product gets him somewhere while knocking his competitor puts him in the background before long. The analogy is obvious.

BUT HERE: this is "A Page for Youth." Why give us a lecture on bringing up youngsters?

Because if we younger ones are going to sit down with those a little older and hear their criticism of us and tell them the changes we'd like to see made in their way of doing things, we're going to have to get down to the bottom of things or our criticism will be superficial. The almost resentful attitude adults sometimes bear toward young people doesn't just develop all at once when the have-been children put on high heels, collegiate clothes and an independent pose. It's been growing for years. So if we intend to put up an intelligent objection to that attitude we have to go 'way back and find out where it all started. Then we can begin from there and

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

A Lecture to the Priesthood, Independence, Missouri, February 13, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

III.—Spiritual Illumination

Spiritual Visions

I HAVE had little personal experience with open visions. But there can be no question in my mind that others have enjoyed such enlightenment. The remarkable experience of Paul is a case in point. Paul had an open vision which changed the whole course of his life. Paul was a narrow, hidebound, hard-boiled, prejudiced, bigoted, fanatical Pharisee, and when you get that kind of man there is no power or argument on earth that can change his course; but in a moment's time under the influence of an open vision Paul's whole life was changed, and it is not too much to say the whole history of the world was changed as a result. Paul says, in telling about that vision: "At midday I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me." And he says that when he could not see "because of the great light," they took him by the hand and led him. I can not escape the conclusion that there was a divine manifestation and light in harmony with section 85 in the book of Doctrine and Covenants and out of it came to Paul an intellectual spiritual illumination. From that light, brighter than the noonday sun, Paul emerged the greatest Christian missionary of all time.

The experience of Joseph Smith was somewhat similar. You remember the story of his first vision. I do not need to recount it, but he said, "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun," and in closing his testimony he said that like Paul he could say, "I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages." This vision changed the life of Joseph Smith and influenced the history of the world. From out that shaft of light he emerged with spiritual illumination—a prophet and a seer.

Spiritual Dreams

Others have had light through spiritual dreams. I never got very much that way myself. But in my experience I have had opportunity to verify such dreams in a rather singular manner. When my older son, Ronald, was about ten years old, we were living in Southern California. There was an old Scotch brother who had formerly been a missionary, who had been converted and baptized by my father from the Utah Mormon faith. This man at the time I mention was about ninety years old. We loved the old man so dearly that we named our son after him, Ronald Gibson Smith. This man's name was William Gibson. At the time of which I speak he was so sick that the doctor said, "I do not know whether he is dead or alive. I can not find a trace of pulse." And then the old man opened his eyes and looked up at me and said, "Brother Smith, what think ye, am I going to die?" I said, "Well, I do not know, but it looks like you are." That night Ronald had a dream and in the morning he said, "You don't need to worry about Grandpa Gibson. Within a week you will see him driving by with his pony and buggy." I marked that down, and in less than seven days we did see William Gibson drive past our door with his pony and buggy.

This boy had no possible way of knowing that Brother Gibson would recover and drive past our door within seven days. Telepathy could not account for his dream, since no one else in the world could have known what was to happen. It was not the result of suggestion—I was very certain that Brother Gibson was about to die. Other equally clear and positive instances of intellectual quickening by way of spiritual dreams might be presented. I will relate but one other; one which still waits complete vindication, but which bore good fruit in its time.

Many years ago Brother Timmie Hinderks, who was the finest kind of a German Saint of the old school and head of the German colony around Stewartsville, had a singular experience. Jason W. Briggs, who had been one of the pioneers of the church, became upset in his mind and came to Stewartsville and told Timmie Hinderks so many stories and rumors about what was going on in Lamoni, that Timmie's faith became shaken, but he was wiser than some people are today. He made it a subject of prayer and that night he had a dream. He was standing in the aisle of the Stewartsville German church and two personages came up the aisle. One of them was Joseph Smith. Timmie shook hands with him and then introduced himself to the other personage, saying, "My name is Timmie Hinderks." The man replied, "My name is Wonderful." Then he led Timmie forward and showed him on the rostrum of the church a large rock on which was inscribed the words, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It shall never be moved out of its place." The faith of Timmie Hinderks was restored and he and many who looked to him for leadership were saved to the church.

It is not superstitious to believe in inspired and spiritual dreams. Psychologists tell us that when we dream there is a part of us awake. Our intelligence is not all of it asleep when we are asleep, and I see no reason why God should not take that opportunity to quicken our intelligence through inspired dreams. Some psychologists tell us that just when a person is dropping off to sleep, when his conscious mind is quiet and his subconscious mind yet alert, is the very time in which to plant a suggestion which we wish to be retained by the subconscious mind.

I do not mean by this that I have confidence in every confused and distorted dream that some people treasure up and repeat and want an interpretation for. We are supposed to use our intelligence and it may be quickened in this way, but I think perhaps ninety per cent of the dreams some people think are inspired are due simply to eating too much supper or something of that sort.

Prophecy

Then we have the gift of prophecy. We have many examples of that. Early in the morn of the Reorganized Church, during that awfully "dark and cloudy day" in church history, the Spirit of God rested on Jason W. Briggs and gave him the spirit of prophecy. He later reduced the message to writing and scattered it abroad. There were three statements made: first, that one of the children of Joseph Smith would come and preside over the church; second, that the quorums should be reassembled; and third, that the Saints should gather back to Zion. It was beyond the power of man to know that anyone of those three things would ever be fulfilled. Inspiration quickened his intelligence, and time carried vindication.

In the year 1915 (I want to give another personal experience) President Joseph Smith had died, Brother Fred M. was sick in the East, and when General Conference came it fell to my lot to preside over the conference. Brother Gomer Griffiths and Brother Fred A. Smith were associated with me. We had one of the most trying conferences we have ever had. Quite a number of the priesthood were determined that at that conference the Presiding Bishopric should be reorganized. There was a larger body of men who were equally determined that it should be done. So the conference would adjourn every day that the quorums might meet and consider the question and we would go downstairs and wrestle with that problem all day and far into the night. We would come back the next day and report no progress. The conference would do routine business for about twenty minutes and then this thing would go on again. They were at a deadlock. Finally one day in the midst of it, Brother Griffiths leaned over to me and said, "I have got a statement to make to these people and it will settle this thing." So I acquiesced and he arose and said in substance: "Now if you brethren will adjourn and leave this matter to the Presidency and Twelve for about fifteen minutes we will reach a conclusion and bring back a report that you will adopt, and when we take it upstairs the conference will adopt it without opposition and it will settle the problem." That was a very bold statement to make, but we took him at his word. We went to the anteroom, the Twelve, and I representing the Presidency, and in less than fifteen minutes we wrote out a resolution and brought it back to the mass meeting of the priesthood and they adopted it. I do not think a speech was made. We went upstairs and there was not a speech made, and I think not a dissenting vote. In a few moments it was all over. Now something illuminated that brother's mind. Brother Griffiths in his day has been a real apostle. He may have been wrong sometimes but he was not then.

I had an experience myself in the year 1920 at the General Conference. There was a sacrament meeting for the priesthood of the church. Following the communion service (we served the emblems and then had prayer and testimony) I felt the spirit of prophecy (pardon the personal experience. It was such an one as I could never forget if I live to be a thousand years old) and when I stood up to speak it did not seem so much that Christ stood up beside me, but rather he stood up in me, and I knew what it meant to have great spiritual illumination, to know the will of God clearly and to speak it freely.

I would remind you brethren, too, that the gift of prophecy is one to be used with wisdom. We are told that the spirit of the prophet is subject to the prophet. If you have the spirit of prophecy that reveals the will of God, it does not necessarily follow that you must immediately rise and then and there tell what you received regardless of the message or the surroundings or the rights and privileges of others. We have been cautioned, for example, in section 125, paragraph fifteen, that in administering to the sick we shall be very careful how we make promises. Because of the very strong urge within us, the desire to see them healed, sometimes we may be mistaken. We are to be very careful and be sure of our ground before we make

Part Three

By HERMANN PEISKER

Bridging the Gulf

"And in that day seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel: only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach."—Isaiah 4: 1.

It is quite natural that every woman should desire a recognized husband, both to make her children legitimate and also to give them a name.

The same is true of Churches. The Church is the bride of Christ, and is also called the "Lamb's wife." She is spoken of as "the mother," and is to be "arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." (Revelation 19: 7, 8; Galatians 4: 26.)

Isaiah warned Israel that the day would come when there would be many organizations which were not the legitimate church or bride of Jesus Christ, who would try to bridge the gulf of no-authority in an endeavor to justify their existence. They would even lay sacrilegious hands on the sacred name.

Authority of Bible Interpretation

Some churches, or institutions, lay great stress on the fact that they are specially enlightened by God to understand and explain the Holy Scriptures. Thus we have the Swedenborgians, International Bible Students, Seventh-day Adventists, etc.

But the correct interpretation of the Scriptures is no authority or justification for the existence of a church. Authority does not consist in Biblical interpretation, but in divine establishment, commission, and the demonstration of power. (John 15: 16; 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Matthew 28: 18-20, etc.)

To set up a church on the private interpretation of Scripture is contrary to the divine order. "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation" (2 Peter 1: 20). Certain organizations publish millions of books and pamphlets, which set forth their private interpretation of the scriptures. The fascination of this type of sidetracking from the main issue of "seeking the kingdom of God and His righteousness" blinds many honest seekers for the truth. They are turned from the main issues of What is the kingdom of God? Where is it? Who has the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Where is His Church? Who has the authority to preach, baptize, administer communion, etc., and are satisfied to link up with some system of Biblical interpretation.

Authority of Opposition to False Doctrine

Certain organizations, which regard the main body of the professing Christian church as in a state of apostasy from Christ, owe their existence to an opposition of that which they believe to be false doctrine.

Thus we have the Christadelphians opposing the doctrines of a personal devil, immortality of the soul and consciousness after death. The Unitarians oppose the doctrine of the Trinity. The Adventists oppose Lord's Day worship, etc.

Such opposition, which is magnified and elevated to the position of major importance in Christian faith, is only a minor issue to that of authority. The true church of Jesus Christ always opposes false doctrine. The fact that it opposes false doctrine can not give any organization divine authority to act for Christ.

Authority Resting on a Name

There are some who give great importance to a particular name "Brethren," "Churches of Christ," "Saints," etc., as if the assuming of a name solved the problem of authority.

As we have already shown, Isaiah warned the people of future ages that the mere self-assuming of a name would not make matters right or establish a right relation. He said they would "eat their own bread," i. e., teach their own doctrines (Matthew 15: 7-9; 17: 6, 12). "Wear their own apparel," i. e., establish their own form of righteousness (Isaiah 64: 6; Revelation 19: 8; Romans 10: 3). Yet they would want to "be called by thy name," i. e., Jesus Christ, etc.

Jesus warned his apostles that there would be many who would use "my name, saying, I am Christ," to give prestige to their work (Matthew 24: 5; 7: 21-24).

For a body of worshipers to take the name of Christ, "Brethren," "Saint," etc., does not graft a "plant" which is not of our "Father's planting" into the "true vine," neither does it justify them in assuming for themselves authority to administer sacred things.

Spiritual Gifts

There are several modern churches which put forward healings, visions, prophecies, speaking in tongues, etc., as proof of their divine calling and

The Administering Angel

A Story of the Ozarks

By Charles H. Arven

A SONG trembled on the lips of Cordelia Bronson as she tripped lightly along the worn path that led down to the spring. The bail of the tin pail she carried rattled a squeaky accompaniment to the song on her lips. It was a song of joy and bubbled up from her heart intermingling with the soft blue of the sky and sweet scent of rustling pines. Cordelia was happy because she was married to Jim Bronson, a logger by trade, who worked with the high-liners up on the mountain side. All day her heart had been filled with happiness. She loved Jim and little Junior who would be five in the coming fall.

The spring from which Cordelia intended to fill her pail was curbed by a wooden half barrel but the water did not near reach up to its center. As she bent over, the bail slipped through her fingers and the pail sang to the bottom. She uttered an impatient exclamation and tried several ways to retrieve it but none were effective. Time was passing and finally her impatience turned to alarm as she thought of little Junior whom she had left playing alone in the yard. He might wander away and get lost in the big woods, whose underbrush was so thick and heavy that she might never find him or he might be eaten by mountain cats.

In desperation she picked up a broken limb with a jagged fork and after several attempts, she turned the pail and caught the bail on the bent fork. The pail filled, she hurried back over the rough trail, her heart filled with anxiety and fear. The song of joy had long since died in her heart and her white lips were closed in a firm, straight line. Even the soft rustling of the pines had ceased and dark clouds were sweeping the sky.

TREMBLING with exhaustion from the long, steep climb and the awful fear that stabbed her heart like a keen point knife, she set the pail down by the cabin door and looked wildly around the yard. A cold chill seemed to creep up around her heart as she called and called, then a wild hysterical scream broke from her lips as she realized that Junior was gone, lost for ever perhaps, in the dense underbrush of the tall pines. Frantic with terror, she rushed back and forth among the scattered stumpage that led to the tall timber but no sign of her boy appeared.

Just below the spring where she had lost so much time, ran a long, deep ravine that carried a swift stream of water. Across the stream, up on the mountain side, the high-liners were at work and somewhere among them, Jim Bronson was at work, too. She must find him. She could hear plainly the thud of heavy axes and the sharp hiss of cutting saws. She ran swiftly down the hillside to the mountain stream and though it was quite deep, it was no bar to the frantic mother who rushed through it and on, on up the steep mountain side. She barely escaped as a gigantic pine crashed, not twenty feet away, then she screamed and sank helplessly to the ground just as Jim Bronson and another logger appeared upon the scene.

The white face of Cordelia was twisted with the agony of fear and her arms were outstretched in agonized appeal. "Oh, Jim! Junior is lost in the big woods. Hurry, oh hurry!"

Pale as death, Jim Bronson's head went back with a jerk and a long, drawn out cry pealed from his lips, thrilling in its intensity, reverberating far and wide among the thick pines. A moment that seemed an hour to the crazed mother, then an answering cry came back, the signal cry for help, used by the high-liners. Then suddenly, as if by magic, men appeared in the open in groups of two and three. Anxiously they listened, glancing uneasily at one another for well they knew that section of timber was infested by snarling mountain cats and even then the boy might be dead and eaten. Time was slipping by and Cordelia still sat there wringing her hands, her eyes blinded by falling tears.

A tall logger stepped out from the crowd: "I calc'late we're losin' time. Git across the crick, boys, and scatter. If ye find him, give the signal." Cordelia followed the men back across the creek and sank wearily down on a fallen log by the edge of the big woods. She could go no farther; she was completely exhausted and could only sit there and wait. Her bare arms and even her face was a mass of cuts and bruises and red stains were running down her cheeks. An hour passed with no sign of the hunter's progress. Occassionally a logger would come out of the timber leaving a few words of comfort and cheer. The sun had again broken forth and once more the pines were rustling softly in the westerly breeze. Would the hunt and suspense never end? Cordelia lifted her head. Faintly in the distance came that long, drawn out cry. She knew it and staggered to her feet. Once more it came—this time clear and thrilling and the cry carried a note of hope to her heart. She hurried into the woods, tearing her clothes and her loosened hair in her desperate eagerness to reach the source of the cry. Something must have guided her as she ran, blindly with no sense of direction, but at last she came upon the group of loggers who were gathered at the foot of a low, rocky buff. On the ground knelt Jim Bronson, holding Junior in his arms and wiping away the blood stains that flowed from a cut in his head.

"I calc'late," said the the tall logger, "I got here just in time. That ugly critter was just gettin' ready t' spring when I plugged him for keeps. I calc'late the youngun fell over the bluff."

All eyes were turned to the spot where lay a full grown mountain cat, its lips still drawn back and the white, cruel teeth gleaming.

"I calc'late," said the tall logger, "Ye'd better git him home and go fur a doctor."

"I rekon Cordelia c'n do that and I'll go fur the doctor," said Bronson as he turned and went swiftly down the mountain side.

THE LITTLE HAMLET OF RAWLINS lay nestled close to the base of the mountain and Bronson figured he could make the trip in an hour, if the doctor would hurry. With the help of one of the men, Cordelia carried Junior to the cabin and laying him down on his little cot, she bathed his pale and blood-stained features in warm soapy water. But Junior tossed restlessly and moaned feverishly and his little arms clung tightly around his mother's neck. The fever seemed to be rising rapidly but in spite of it, he sank gradually into a fitful restless sleep. Watching him for a moment, Cordelia hurried to the door and looked long and anxiously down the mountain side. She could see the little hamlet plainly but no sign of Jim. A thin wisp of smoke was curling lazily up from some chimney to vanish slowly in thinning vapor. Would Jim and the doctor ever come? At last a figure became visible to her straining eyes and she knew it was Jim by his walk. It seemed like he had been gone a week, so slowly did the time pass to her impatient mind. She took a last look at Junior, then rushed down the incline to meet him.

She ran swiftly for she was afraid to leave Junior alone and halfway down, she met him, his face dark and scowling. "The doctor!" she gasped. "Where is he?" A torrent of profanity flowed from

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Bronson's lips. "He's gon' t' the city. We cain't git him." Cordelia's face went deathly pale but she recovered herself and said sharply: "I rekon they ain't no call t' use them cuss words, Jim, and Junior layin' sick. If he's gone, ye ain't t' blame. Come on! Junior's awful sick." Cordelia started on the run and Bronson followed close behind. As they reached the cabin door, a stranger stepped aside to allow them to pass. Bronson stopped but Cordelia hardly noticed his presence as she hurried inside.

The stranger bowed courteously: "Could I get a drink of water?" he inquired.

"I rekon ye c'n, Mister. Step in!"

Once inside, the stranger noticed that Cordelia was crying softly by the side of the little cot on which Junior lay so white and still. He hesitated a moment then stepped quietly to her side. "What seems to be the trouble? Is your child sick?"

"I'm afraid baby is goin' t' die," moaned Cordelia. "Cain't git no doctor." The stranger laid his hand gently on Junior's head. "Fever," he said quietly. "Would you like me to pray for your little one? I will, if you wish. Perhaps God will answer the prayer."

Cordelia looked inquiringly at her husband whose lips were twitching nervously. "Pray!" she said dully. "Why Jim an' me don't know how. We just cain't."

"That's all right, just kneel down here and think of God. I'll ask him to heal your child."

Then a prayer that was deep and earnest went up to the God above who holds all human life in his hand and whose Son said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." The mountaineer and his wife cried softly, touched by the appeal to God and the searing pain of anguish for their little child.

The stranger rose quietly from beside the cot and picked up his hat that lay on a stand. "Have courage now. I think God will answer the prayer." Then he turned, opened the door and passed quietly out. The mountaineer followed to the door and watched 'till he had vanished from sight. Then suddenly a scream of joy came from the sick room and with a bound, he reached Cordelia's side.

"Look! Look! Jim, see! Junior's better. See, he's smiling." The sun's rays were slanting down the mountain side filling the darkened room with its glorious light, as Cordelia turned and faced her husband with shining eyes. "Jim, I rekon God sent that man."

The mountaineer stared thoughtfully, his lips twitching. "Well, I calc'late he did. I rekon we ought t' do some prayin' too. I just kinda think we ought t' tell Him we're thankful for his savin' Junior. An I'm powerful sorry fur usin' them cuss words today. I calc-late I ain't goin' t' use em no more."

Humbly they dropped to their knees. Then slowly a silent prayer went up from their simple hearts, crude, perhaps in composition, but graciously received and glorified by the Father above. The light of a great happiness shone in their eyes as they looked at Junior who had fallen into a restful sleep. Somewhere in their subconscious mind rose a vision of a glorious Being who in his unutterable love had heard and answered the stranger's prayer.

That night in the little hamlet of Rawlins, a religious meeting was held in the home of a private family. A visiting elder preached a sermon. At the close of the service, when visiting seemed in order, he casually mentioned that on his way to the place, he had called at a mountain home and administered to and prayed for a little sick child.

What Latter Day Saints Believe About Christ

(Notes reported from a sermon by President Elbert A. Smith for Independence young people.)

We have had three major revelations of God. First, the great book of Nature. The Psalmist said, "The heavens declare the glory of God." Second, in the Scriptures—the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants. And third, in Christ himself, and that is the greatest of the three.

There is no question but that Jesus Christ impressed the world as no other individual ever has. He impressed it so much that by common consent time is divided into two parts—that which came before and that which came after his birth. This is known as "the year of our Lord, 1933."

How did he make such an impression? He had no wealth, no pull, no power, no patronage, no army with which to conquer nations, and yet he did conquer nations. He converted nations, and they have been proud to bear his name as Christian nations. They have even gone to war in His name—the Prince of Peace. How did Jesus so impress the world? How did he become recognized as the greatest revelation of God? He appealed to the heart and brain of all men; he exerted such an appeal as has never before been made and will never be forgotten. He said, "I will draw all men to me."

If you will permit him, Jesus will draw you to him. He will change your life for the better.

Sometimes when we think that we think, we are only thinking that we think; we are really moved by our feelings—generosity, passion, love.

Christ came that he might interpret God to us in terms that we might understand—something that we might. He lived the law. We had it, but he came and lived it.

What do Latter Day Saints believe of Christ? They believe he is God's greatest revelation, that he is the Savior of the world and the only Savior. They believe that His plan is the only plan of life, and that it works now.

When a church man is a hypocrite, it is unfair to hold his hypocrisy against the church. He is a hypocrite not because of the teachings of the church, but in spite of them.

Emancipation of America's Homeless

By Dorothy Pinkerton

AMERICA is dependent upon its homes. The quality of home determines the kind of government that is dominant, the kind of citizens who represent the country. Moral integrity, economic progress, and social health are influenced by the homes which we have.

There are two kinds of homeless people. Those who are financially unfit to have homes and those who live in well-to-do apartments.

How much happier we would be during a cold winter night knowing that everyone had a cozy little home to which he could go. Then the papers would not have to publish crime stories, for there would be little of such deeds. The celebration of Christmas and other holidays would be more pleasant if we knew that all were enjoying life by their own firesides.

The lack of homes has caused one of America's greatest problems—divorce. People should realize that making good homes will sooner or later eliminate such an evil. The fast rising apartments aggravate the problem. In them there is no room to invite friends, no room for informal parties. One can not even cook in those tiny apartments; one must go to a restaurant. Perhaps the food isn't as good as it could be. Indigestion develops. The husband gets cross. A quarrel—and then—divorce! All this just because of unsuitable living quarters.

United States has more divorces per year than all of Europe together. It is time for America to get busy, or a downfall is due. Rome fell because of its social weaknesses. Shall America, too, fall because of that?

Another problem which could be partly solved by the presence of more homes is the number of vagabonds who stop at the backdoor of homes and ask for something to eat. Surely all of these men are not lazy. Misunderstanding, poverty, and the lack of homes have caused these people to adopt such a life.

Those who have real homes do not always appreciate them, but if they were forced to live in a crowded apartment, putting their clothes under the furniture, taking their bed from behind a door and eating food from a delicatessen because they could not prepare their own, and

knowing the social and moral influence of such a place; then would they really wish for home once more.

And how those who never had real homes do envy us who have such a comfortable life! If three wishes were mine to grant, the first would be to give to all good, sanitary homes. Perhaps the second wish would be to give time for play to the poor, hardworking fathers and mothers who have spent their lives for seemingly ungrateful children. The third wish would be to give to each and all the spirit of peace for which the world is seeking. It might be possible to find that peace within the four walls of a home in front of the fireside with the laughter of children echoing about you.

Lincoln said, "I never lie down in the darkness without thinking of home when I am away." We admire such men as Lincoln and Washington. They were among the greatest of home-lovers. Their homes made them great.

America has a future to develop. She must build more homes, build homes where the wanderer may rest. She must make divorce less prevalent. America must do these things or "great will be the fall." Let us free America! Let us emancipate the homeless!

"Oh, it's home again! home again,
From a foreign shore,
It fills my heart with throbbing joy
To be at home once more."

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

Suggested Mid-week Prayer Service Programs for May, 1933

By J. F. Sheehy

MAY 3

Theme: "Temptation and the Way Out."

Scripture Reading: Matthew 4:1: "There was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil."

Special Thought: Few if any escape temptation. All have met the tempter. Expect temptation after baptism! Way out: Study God's word! Know the truth! Then like Jesus you can say, "It is written!" Temptations are preparation for service and sympathy. Temptations overcome makes us that much stronger for righteousness.

Suggested Hymns:
Number 131, "I need thee every hour."
Number 118, "I would be true."
Number 79, "Oh, watch and fight and pray" (second stanza).
Number 269, "Yield not to temptation."
Number 123, "Be with me Lord where'e I go."
Number 105, "What a friend we have in Jesus." (Special attention to second stanza.)
Number 111, "Jesus Savior pilot me."

MAY 10

Theme: "The High Cost of Living for Ever."

Scripture Reading: Mark 10:17: "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

Special Thought: He asked the greatest thing possible.
It is the greatest thing Christ can give.
Christ in turn demanded the greatest price.
Keep the commandments.
Tithe—yes and more—your all.
Time—talent—money!
It costs something to live for ever just as it costs to live in this world. The rich young man had the price, but would not pay it. Read the high ideals required of this church. (Section 42, Doctrine and Covenants.) The high (cost) ideal of 1831.

Suggested Hymns:
Number 106, "I know that my Redeemer lives."
Number 119, "Jesus I my cross have taken."
Number 144, "Wonderful words of life."
Number 168, "Angel message." (Last stanza especially.)
Number 81, "Look for the beautiful."
Number 74, "Am I a soldier of the cross."

MAY 18

Theme: "Workers Together With God."

Scripture Reading: 2 Corinthians 6:1: "We then as workers together with him."

Special Thought: Jesus and Paul, workers together. Jesus' system of work is "together system." Teamwork, "We work together—not only that—we work together with Him."

Suggested Hymns:
Number 119, "Jesus I my cross have taken."
Number 14, "Praise ye the Lord."
Number 74, "Am I a soldier of the cross."
Number 75, "God is marshalling his army."
Number 43, "Brethren breathe one fervent prayer." (Special attention last stanza, "Go with reverent purpose hence.")
Number 83, "Onward Christian soldiers."

MAY 24

Theme: "Come and Hear My Testimony."

Scripture Reading: Psalm 66:16: "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul."

Special Thought: Pardoned my sins; changed my heart; helped in temptation; answered my prayers.

Suggested Hymns:
Number 1, "Come ye that love the Lord."
Number 13, "Oh, for a thousand tongues."
Number 14, "Praise ye the Lord."
Number 37, "With thankful hearts."
Number 46, "Sweet the time."
Number 56, "My God, how wonderful thou art."
Number 89, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus."
Number 133, "One sweet hour with Jesus."

MAY 31

Theme: "Three Important Resolutions."
(Do you know of some others?)

Scripture Reading: Micah 7:7: "Therefore, I will look unto the Lord: I will wait for the God of my salvation, my God will hear me."

Special Thought:
1. The resolution of Faith.
"I will look." Looking forward.
2. The resolution of Patience.
"I will wait." God's time is best: God's blessings worth waiting for.
3. The resolution of Hope.
"My God will hear me." The confidence of hope; Though my cry be feeble, my faith weak, though my request be great, my God will hear me.

Suggested Hymns:
Number 117, "My faith looks up to thee."
Number 95, "How firm a foundation."
Number 94, "Where wilt thou put thy trust."
Number 96, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink."
Number 33, "Met in thy sacred name, O Lord."
Number 88, "Hark, listen to the trumpeters." (Third stanza especially.)

Chapter 17

Bits of Burnished Gold

"WHAT, my Polly alone and in tears?" demanded Brad in that carefully soothing tone they had all used in speaking to her since before Carrol's death. Somehow this noon Polly resented it. Perhaps it was a deep sense of her own guilt and selfishness that made the resentment well up at this moment. Brad spoke as if he were talking to a child and a child verging on hysterics at that. She wasn't a child. There was little in her that resembled a child; she was far too experienced, too rebellious, too angry at herself. No, she wasn't childlike.

"How did you expect to find me?" she snapped as she opened the oven door and drew out an apple pie, baked specially for lunch. "I've been busy all morning; worked in the garden some, and Sister Livingston was over—and I think I'm mad!" She was gingerly testing the top crust with a pink finger. It burned, and she put the finger in her mouth.

"Why, Polly—" concern and astonishment were mingled in Brad's expression. He started toward her.

Abruptly she set the pie down perilously close to the edge of the oven top. "Don't 'Why Polly!' me any more in that tone of voice, Brad Nelson," she warned. "I'm all right. I'm not about to have a fit or anything, and I'm not a child to be soothed. I'm only mad, madder at myself than anyone. Why don't you be natural, and grouch a little?"

She could not see how flushed her face was from the oven heat, or the small brown curl that flew free behind her right ear, or how red her eyes were, or she would have laughed just as Brad did at that moment. It was not a loud laugh, just a short, almost breathless expression of relief and amusement.

"My Polly again!—little crosspatch!" he exulted. That was all, and with a single gesture drew her to him.

The roughness of his coat, the strength of his hold, the warmth of his breath on her forehead—all these caused her to thrill with a great gladness. She felt as if she were home again after a long absence. She uttered not a word, just leaned against him, the pan lifter still in one hand. Brad took it after a time and put it on the work table, then kissed her on the forehead, and tipped up her face to kiss her on the lips.

"You're here again, sweetheart, mine," he murmured in her ear, "Oh, Polly, it's been lonely!"

"Lonely! Don't—" She shuddered and hid her face as if to keep out unwelcome pictures. "Don't, Brad, I've been cruel—and thoughtless!"

"You, Polly? Oh, no! You've been wonderful! But I—I was the one that was cruel and thoughtless—before—before we lost Carrol. I was the cad, the selfish beast—oh, I can't describe myself!" A soft finger on his lips stopped further utterance, and he bowed his head on his wife's shoulder and sobbed brokenly.

"Please don't, Brad. I understand—"

"You would—understand—dear—you're that wonderful! But every hour of every day has been a reproach to me!" He spoke fiercely, shaken with self-reproach. "And then—your white, sweet face before me, your stricken—" He could not go on.

POLLY attempted to guide him to a chair, but he would not. He stood and held her tightly.

At last, "Don't cry, Brad. You make me feel terrible, for I have left you alone with your grief and worry, I who should have been right at your side, understanding and helping all the time."

"I'm selfish—utterly, hopelessly selfish, Polly!"

"No you're not! You're good and kind and strong; why, Brad, don't you understand? You're my Wonder Man!"

"Some Wonder Man!" His lips curled.

"Now don't you be sarcastic. I want to talk. It's as if I'd been gone for a long time, Brad, and now I'm here again. I have some wonderful things to tell you about Carrol and where he is. He's still ours, dear, as much as he ever was. I'll have to tell you about it. It's glorious."

"Is it, Polly?" How he depended on her for a little scrap of hope!

"Yes, yes." Eagerly she went on, pointing to the window: "See that light out there? That's sunlight. God gives us sunlight to make the gardens and the flowers grow. Without it we could not live. He gives it to all alike, to the good and the bad, the rich and the poor. To me, darling, that sunlight is a symbol of His all-reaching, all-penetrating love. God has always loved us, Brad, and he is always near to help us. He loves us so much that he gave his only Son!—Brad, we, you and I—have given Him our son. Let's think of it that way. And oh, Chappie is so much happier and better off there than if he were with us!"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

His only answer was a tightening of his arms about her. Still his head lay on her shoulder. Polly paused long enough to kiss an eyelid. It was wet with tears.

"We've both been selfish, Brad. Most people are when it comes to death, but now I know, Brad; I understand something about it. What we call death isn't death—it's life, darling, life, an opening of the door between mortality and immortality, between the common things and a more glorious realm. Sister Livingston was just talking to me. She says it's not those that have gone on for whom we mourn, but for ourselves when we think of all the things through which we have yet to pass before we are worthy of the Cross, and through these things we must pass alone, without the departed one. Don't you see how selfish we have been? The thing we call death, dear, only brings us nearer Life and the Great Understanding. We mourn because we don't have that understanding, because we are paltry, weak, frail things. Oh, don't you see, Brad?"

But he did not answer her question. He just held her off and looked at her. At last he said with an effort: "Polly, your faith is wonderful! You're an angel!"

"Oh, no I'm not," she demurred. "I'm not an angel. I expect to be tried and found wanting in many things yet, patience, wisdom, understanding, oh, many things! I'm not nearly worthy to meet our baby over there yet. I must stay here and learn through experience and trials."

"It reminds me," softly began Brad, "of a hymn I once heard sung at a funeral. Maybe I remember the whole first verse—I don't know. It impressed me considerably:

> " 'Through the furnace, through the heat,
> There beneath the hammer's beat,
> Through temptations manifold,
> Comes my soul like burnished gold.' "

"I know the second verse to that." There was a throbbing in Polly's throat that she found hard to control, but leaning against her husband she began:

> " 'Through the fires that purge the dross,
> Through the anguish to the cross, > Buried with—' "

She could get no further. For a long moment she stood there sobbing convulsively. Then Brad lifted her in his arms, and sat down with her in a blue and white kitchen chair. All the pent-up flood of emotion was released. Polly cried aloud there with no one to hear her except Brad. It seemed as if she could not stop; she abandoned herself to the storm of her tears.

Then presently, the sobs ceased as do the beatings of hard summer rains when the shower moves away over the countryside. She lay still. Forgotten was everything except that Brad's arms were about her. The fearful heartache that had been hers over him since before Valentine Day, was gone, the coldness had vanished from her breast.

At last he put his lips close to her ear and whispered: "You haven't forgiven me yet, dearest."

"Forgiveness is not finished in a single act or word, Brad," she smiled at him, and her smile was like the rainbow that follows the summer shower. "You have to live forgiveness, and I think it will take me all the rest of my life to live forgiveness for you, and you for me. I, too, should be forgiven—"

But he would not let her finish.

HOW often in a moment of sublimity, joy or exultation, some simple little thing can bring us back into the normal range of living! So it was with Polly. And that simple little thing was the odor of burning potatoes. Long ago they had forgotten the cooking lunch. The potatoes had cooked dry and were sticking.

It was a busy afternoon for Polly. First after lunch was over—and a rather prolonged lunch it had been—and Brad was gone back to the office, she cleaned the kitchen. Then she devoted half an hour to finishing a dress for the Commodity Shop, and while she was at work she bethought herself that the shop was open. She would call her group leader and obtain permission to take the garment down to the shop right away. She was ashamed not to have finished the dress sooner—it had been in the house a month. But perhaps, under the circumstances, they would forgive the delay. It was a dress of red wool trimmed with braid and buttons.

On her way home she stopped in to see old Sister Benson, who lived two blocks away and had been Mrs. Nelson's special care. To atone for neglect she took a special gift, a small jar of her favorite orange marmalade.

Home again, with the north wind blowing a little cooler, she lit a fire in the fireplace. Soon Edith would drop in. It was almost time for school to be out.

But she would have time to do one thing. She had wanted to do it since her talk that morning with Sister Livingston. Checking the impulse to look about for Carrol—when he was so quiet it usually meant he was up to some mischief—she went to the bookcase. She wondered how long it would be before she ceased to think of Carrol about the house. Would she ever be entirely free from the sense of his nearness? She hoped not.

Softly she returned to the lounge carrying a slender, blackbound volume, and opened it. It was her "Messiah" book. She had sung in the Messiah Choir several times, and she turned half a dozen pages with the ease born of familiarity.

Her eyes read these words: "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare, is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.' "

The book lay open on her lap, but Polly was far away. She was living again the exaltation she had often experienced at hearing the clear, tenor voice of Brother Gilbert Anderson as he sang that solo. Now she believed that she liked it the best of all in the oratorio. Now she could listen to, or sing in "The Messiah," with greater appreciation of what it all really meant.

Something had happened to the Polly that used to sing in "The Messiah," something important. She hoped that someday this changed Polly would have a deep and abiding faith, a faith similar to that of many she knew, and then she remembered her husband's words: "Polly, your faith is wonderful!" Oh, no, it was yet very weak and poor. But much depended on her faith. She wondered if she and Brad might in their lives, like John of old, "make straight in the desert a highway" for God. Her faith was small, and this was a mighty challenge, but she would try—there was nothing she would not try for Brad's sake. She would help him all she could.

The front door opened, a quick step in the hall, a low whistle, and "Polly, where are you?" It was Edith.

"My, but you have it comfy in here," she greeted her and threw off her snug little hat. "The wind's colder. Hope it doesn't freeze."

"It would be hard on the gardens," absently.

"What—'The Messiah'? I hope you're not thinking of putting on an oratorio all by yourself," teased the girl.

"Oh, no," smiling, "I was only looking over some of the solos."

"My, but it's wonderful to see you smile again, darling." Edith dropped down beside her and regarded her tenderly.

"I intend to smile a lot," and Polly suited the action to the word. "You see, this morning Sister Livingston woke me up. She showed me in her direct way just how selfish I've been over—over Carrol."

"But you haven't, Polly," protested the other.

"You're too loyal, Edith," and Polly squeezed the girl's arm.

For a moment the two sat silently watching the fire, listening to the popping and crackling of the wood.

"I know something that will make you even happier than you seem to be," the girl began. "I've wanted to tell you for several days." Dreams lurked in the brown eyes.

"I'd love to know it. Is it a secret?"

"Mostly. After I talked with you some time ago about it, I got to weighing my values. Do you remember that sermon Brother Seth Morrow preached two or three years ago about putting first things first? I've never forgotten it. It has been a sort of measuring scale for me. Well, I got my scale out and used it again. I weighed my own inexperience against your attitude and mother's attitude toward my future. It took quite awhile, Polly," frankly, "and it was something of a mental and emotional wrestling match, but—I've decided."

"Well—"

"That Graceland is first for the present."

"But—"

"Oh, I do care a lot for Dan, and if he is what I think he is, I want to marry him some day. But if he doesn't think I'm worth the waiting for, well—then he can marry some one else." She swallowed bravely. "I want him to come up to see me as often as he can, to learn to appreciate my family, my friends, and the church. Perhaps I'll convert him before I marry him. He'd be a good Latter Day Saint, don't you think?"

Polly did not answer the question. Instead she asked one: "Have you told him?"

"I didn't mention the church, but I wrote him that I couldn't consider marrying him for two and possibly three years, that I wouldn't even be engaged to him for a long time yet. I tried to make it sound as reasonable as I could."

"You're the real old gold, Edith, just as I've thought all along."

"Old Gold and Blue," laughed the other.

"Oh, you already Gracelander!" and they giggled as if at a great joke.

YOUTH ASKS THIS—

tell our elders sensibly what we don't like so well about them and why we think they're wrong, and what we'd like done about it and what we're willing to do ourselves, instead of just putting up a big kick, making a great deal of noise and getting nowhere.

Isn't it reasonable to assume that the parent who has given his small child broad, understandable principles and a consistent example of wise living and let him work out the details under gentle, unobtrusive guidance will have little trouble when he discusses politics or marriage or personal morals with his now maturing boy to say, "Well, son, the experience and conclusions of the ages are summed up in the moral and ethical code you have learned. There is no doubt some worthless material in that code. My own experience leads me to believe thus and so, but I, too, am no doubt more or less mistaken. Many of these things are relative, and they change with conditions. Each individual and each generation has to work them out anew. Now, young man, you've had some hard work put in on you. You don't know a lot about that; you won't until you have youngsters of your own. But I know your background and your training, and I've got every confidence that you'll use the intelligence God gave you to evolve a plan of living that will satisfy even your ideals. And while I may not always understand you or agree with you I'm pretty sure I'll never be anything but proud of you!"

People reach out and try to manage the lives of others because their own lives lack in some way of being well-rounded. Parents do that. A mother lectures her young daughter endlessly about little details of her conduct. She mustn't stay out later than such and such a time; she mustn't be seen with so and so; she must on no account amuse herself in this or that way, or permit this or that familiarity. Yet when the same daughter tries to discuss the questions of personal morals which are so vital to her, her mother is embarrassed and evasive. Why? Probably because in her own youth when she encountered these same problems she was unguided, she made more or less serious mistakes, and she was never able to untangle the questions in her own mind. Now that her daughter has come to the same place, the mother realizes only too well how serious the situation is, and tries to guard her child by endless petty rules because she, the mother, has never worked out for herself the broad underlying principles of personal living which are the only things she can pass on to the girl.

Unless he has first settled a question for himself, how can a parent hope to help solve it for his child?

Youth asks then, again, that parents face squarely the facts of life and do the best they can to think its problems through from the viewpoint of youth. It isn't an easy thing to do. Many times the older person will make mistakes of judgment, will feel very unsure of himself, will wonder whether it's worth going through with it. But the trying is what counts, and in his very failures the parent will recall again the early struggles and conflicts he has forgotten over the years, and that band of understanding between the two generations, like a weld joining two pieces of metal, may become stronger than one fabric alone.

Youth asks a lot. And youth knows it. But in spite of their skepticism, their demand to be shown, their determination to accept nothing that fails to work out, these youngsters do have confidence in their elders. They know they can't do alone the things they want to do. They see the big wrongs in the scheme of things, and they want to get busy righting them. They will accept reasonable, intelligent counsel. They'll go fifty-fifty. But they want to do something and do it now.

promises. And in the calling of men to the priesthood, section 125, paragraph 14 states explicitly that the affairs of the branch and district are not to be governed by spiritual manifestations unless they shall come through the regularly appointed officers of branch or district. I never did go into a branch and get up in public and call some one to office. If I had light I quietly gave that information to the presiding officer, because the one called, though he be called, may not yet be ready for ordination, and immediately the call is voiced publicly his relatives and friends begin to push and crowd the authorities that he shall be ordained at once. This caution may not be necessary here, but you have it for what it is worth.

THE "ABIDING" SPIRIT

These expressions of spiritual light—dreams, visions, and prophecy, are occasionally experienced; but that manifestation of spiritual illumination in that "abiding" light that we may enjoy seems to be even more important. Section 17, paragraph 9, says that the elders are to conduct the meetings (all the meetings) as they are led by the Holy Spirit. Section 42 says we are to speak always as we are led by the Spirit and if we do not have the Spirit we shall not teach, and the promise is made that if we ask for the Spirit we shall have the spirit of light and truth.

Jesus said, "I will pray the Father and he will give you another comforter, even the spirit of truth which shall abide with you forever." I like that expression, that will abide with you. I think it means that if we will open our hearts to the light and let it abide with us it will lift us up constantly to a higher plane. We will have higher intellectual life. It will quicken our intelligence all the time and shine forth through all of our ministry. We certainly need men of wisdom in the ministry. The church has suffered many times in the past by reason of the lack of wisdom. Jesus said, "You must be wise servants and harmless as doves."

I believe the greatest characteristic of the late President Joseph Smith was that he maintained a high level of spiritual light. He may have had visions and dreams. He did speak in prophecy. But the thing that showed through his life was the abiding light which continued with him all the time, in all his work, even as the statement that Christ himself loved righteousness and hated iniquity and so that the spirit was not given to him "by measure." That is the kind of spiritual illumination we need and need now.

I may as well continue this as a sort of testimony meeting. Some men feel that in the past we have been given too much to argument and not enough to testimony, and I think perhaps that is true. Many of you know that my father, David H. Smith, was at one time a member of the Presidency, counselor to Joseph Smith, and associate editor of the Herald. He was a man of great mental and spiritual attainment but not strong physically. He was sent twice to the Utah mission at a time when it would have broken almost anyone. His health failed the first time and they sent him back the second time, contrary to his mother's pleading, and it broke again and he never did recover. So there was tragedy entered into my life when I was only two or three years old that I have seldom spoken of and that was hard for me to become reconciled to. My mother, being thrown upon her resources, with her people moved to a part of the country where there was no church of our people. Under those conditions I grew up. But when I was a very small boy, probably not more than seven years old, I was quite alone one day on the prairie, (I did not see any vision or hear a voice) but there was an inner illumination and knowledge borne in upon my mind that when I grew up I must take up and carry on my father's work. That was an abiding illumination because it continued with me, always in the back of my mind. There was the knowledge that that would be my work. I did not talk about it; I had a reticence about it, and later on I encountered people telling what great things they were called to do and they never did do them—so I concluded I had better keep my mouth shut and let somebody else voice my call. But presently I found myself standing where my father had stood, a counselor to Joseph, and sitting at the editorial desk. That has been my experience in the ministry in all the major problems that have come to me. I have not had visions, have not heard an audible voice, have not had inspired dreams very often, but there has come illumination to my mind which caused me to feel often beyond the peradventure of a doubt what the will of God was that I should do at that time; and of course that is the spirit of prophecy, to know what the will of God is. That is in harmony with the promises of God. As a ministry we need to so live that we can have the illumination of mind and heart that will help us in all our labors.

Section 85 continues with this promise: "If your eye be single to my glory, your whole body shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you."

mission. The claim is that the enjoyment of "spiritual gifts," "signs," or "manifestations" are proof of divine recognition and authority. If they talk in tongues and heal, then they have the right to baptize, etc. Such are the Pentecostal Churches, Assemblies of God, and others, including Christian Science.

It often happens that members of the true Church of Jesus Christ are disturbed because they hear of, or read of others who seem to enjoy more of the "manifestations" than they are enjoying. The apostles in the days of Jesus Christ had the same experience. After they had made several failures, they were rather troubled when they found a man who was concentrating on casting out devils, etc., in the name of Jesus, and who was succeeding where they failed. The sore point was that he had no authority from Jesus to do that work, yet he was getting results. They said, "We forbad him, because he followeth not us." But Jesus said, "Forbid him not." (Mark 9: 38-40.)

One lesson that true believers must learn is that "spiritual gifts" are not authority. The magicians of Egypt worked miracles. The heathen had prophetic oracles. Spiritualism has had its signs and wonders in every age. Men have done many wonderful works in the name of Jesus. But none of these have authority. (See Matthew 7: 22, 23.)

True "spiritual gifts" are a natural product of the saving process of the Gospel of Christ and are enjoyed at the will of God by the Church. They are a divine endowment but are incidental to the great work of saving souls. The authority of the church can not rest upon spiritual gifts, for they are sometimes falsely used to establish untruth. (Deuteronomy 13: 1-3.)

GOOD SAMARITAN WORK

Some point to the wonderful charity work, slum work, and the "Good Samaritan" activity of their organization as proof of their divine mission. They concentrate on that type of work and seem to do more of it than the Church of Jesus Christ. But that is no proof of Divine authority. It does not take divine authority to feed the poor, clothe the naked, etc. That is the common duty of all men and has been specialized in by certain Christian organizations.

The work of the "True Church of Jesus Christ" is something more than charity, feeding the poor, preaching, etc. It must establish the Kingdom of God, where "the will of God" is "done on earth, as it is done in heaven." (Matthew 6: 9, 10.) It must establish the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all men. It must "exalt" the poor brethren and also "make low" the rich." (James 1: 9, 10.)

It is much less showy and takes longer and harder work to establish all men as stewards on a basis of equality than it does to concentrate on "Good Samaritan" organizations. Charity work is not the ideal of the Kingdom of God. It is only elevated into the most important feature of any work which lacks divine authority and one-sidedly concentrates on a single phase of Christian activity.

In conclusion, it is evident from a study of the divine Word that neither "Bible Interpretation," "opposition to false doctrine," "taking a Bible or divine name," "spiritual gifts" nor "Good Samaritan work" can of themselves invest any organization with divine authority. At the most they only represent a single phase of the activity of the true church.

Warning From a Pork-Butcher on Getting Engaged

If you have never read a book called a Self-made Merchant's Letters to His Son, you've got a treat in store for you. It is a most amusing bit of reading, but at the same time full of jolly sound advice.

The merchant is an American pork-packer, writing to his son who holds a junior post in the business. He hears that his son is hanging about after a certain young lady.

So he says: "I suppose I am fanning the air when I ask you to be guided by my judgment in this matter, because while a young fellow will consult his father about buying a horse, he is cocksure of himself when it comes to picking a wife.

"Marriages may be made in heaven, but most engagements are made in the back parlor with the gas so low that a fellow really doesn't get a square look at what he is taking.

"Your ma and I set up housekeeping in one of those cottages you read about in story books, but that you want to shy away from when it is put up to you to live in one of them. There were nice climbing roses on the front porch, but no running water in the kitchen; there were plenty of old-fashioned posies in the front yard and plenty of rats in the cellar; there was half an acre of ground at the back, but so little room inside that I had to sit with my feet out the window. It was just the place to go for a picnic, but it's been my experience that a fellow does most of his picnicking before he is married.

"But one way and another we managed to get a good deal of satisfaction out of it, because we had made up our minds to get our fun out of everything as we went along.

"With most people happiness is something that is always just a day off, but I have made it a rule never to put off being happy till tomorrow.

"Of course when you are married you've got to make an income, and this is going to take so much time and thought that you won't have a very wide margin left for golf. I simply mention this in passing, because I see in the Chicago papers that you were among the players on the links one afternoon a fortnight ago. Golf's a nice foolish game and there ain't any harm in it, so far as I know; but a young fellow who wants to be a boss butcher hasn't much daylight to waste on any kind of links—except sausage links.

"Of course your salary isn't a large one yet, but you can buy a whole lot of happiness with fifty dollars a week when you have a right sort of women for your purchasing agent, and, while I don't go much on love in a cottage, love in a flat with fifty a week as a starter is just about right if the girl is just about right. If she isn't, it doesn't make any special difference how you start out, you're going to end up all wrong.

"Money ought never to be the consideration about marriage, but it always ought to be a consideration. When a boy and girl don't think about it enough before the ceremony, they're going to have to think altogether too much about it after; and when a man is doing sums at home, evenings, it comes kind of awkward for him to try to hold his wife on his lap. . . .

"There is nothing in this talk that two can live cheaper than one. A good wife doubles a man's happiness and doubles his expenses, but it is a pretty good investment if a fellow has got the money to invest. . . .

A married man is worth more salary than a single one, because his wife makes him work more. He is apt to go to bed a little sooner and to get up a little earlier; to go a little steadier and to work a little harder than the fellow who has to amuse a different girl every night, and can't stay at home to do it.

"That's why I am going to raise your salary to seventy-five dollars a week the day you marry."

Prayer and Testimony

Happy Again in Sunlight of God's Love

By Mrs. Ira W. Humes

It has been nearly two years since the hand of God laid the chastening rod upon our home. As I look back I can see "from whence cometh my strength" to endure.

It was a beautiful June evening. The sun was lowering in the west as I sat on my porch embroidering, but how quickly the beauty of the scene was turned to terror when a telephone message came saying that my boy had met with a motorcycle accident and was in the hospital!

My younger son and I hastily went to the hospital, my husband being away at the time. When we reached the place, I found my boy writhing in pain, his left leg badly mangled. He was taken to the operating room where he remained three hours. As I sat there in the waiting room in fervent prayer, our pastor, Brother Livingston, and Brother Worrell came. Never was I so glad to see my brothers of the faith as at that time. Later my husband also came.

After the operation, the doctor told us he was doing all he could to save the boy's leg, but just what might develop he was not able to say. After administering to the boy, the others went home leaving me to watch through the night. I pleaded with God continually to spare his life and heal his mangled leg. During the days and nights that followed I continued to plead with the Father, and in my agony and grief I would cry aloud, "O Lord, the trial is too great! I can't endure the thought of my boy losing his leg!" In my own strength I could not have borne it.

After four days of trusting and praying, all hope was crushed when the doctor said gangrene had developed, and the leg would have to be amputated; he despaired of the boy's life as the gangrene had entered every tissue of his body.

The trial I had felt was too hard to bear was swallowed up in the anxiety for his life. Then I pleaded with God to spare his life even though he must be a cripple. He was administered to, then given a blood transfusion, and later taken to the operating room.

How I thanked God for our pastor and the Saints who so loyally stood by! As I sat there surrounded by them, waiting while the operation was being performed, and knowing the doctor gave us only a ray of hope of our boy coming through the operation, I felt the presence of a personage at my side. A feeling of assurance filled my soul, and I was able to pray for the first time since the accident: "If it be thy will, spare my boy." I did not have the power to question whether God meant to spare his life or take him unto himself. I felt fully resigned to his will, and while I prayed continually, it was with "thy will be done." Not until my husband's sister whispered to me: "Ira is back from the operating room and is able to talk," did I notice the personage was gone.

The words of the Psalmist David came to me with a new meaning, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. . . . Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Then began the fight for life. With administration and prayers and medical aid the gangrenous condition was cleared from his system.

The beautiful expressions of love from Saints and friends through visits, flowers, and baskets of fruit were bright spots in our anxious hours.

Three weeks after the operation while we felt the pleasure of God was smiling upon us, I met with an accident in my home. I was carrying a pan of boiling water across the kitchen, and in my haste in trying to get my work done that I might hurry down to the hospital, I tilted the pan and the water ran down my right leg. Realizing that a burn like that would confine me to bed for many days and knowing my boy looked forward to my visits each day, I cried out in anguish of soul, "O God, have mercy on me!" I seized the bottle of consecrated oil and poured it over the scalded parts, then signaled my neighbor to come in, for I was alone. The doctor came and I was put to bed. The burn formed a blister from my hip to my toes, and I lay in bed four weeks under the care of a doctor, a nurse dressing my leg each day. Through administration, however, I was spared the severe pain that usually accompanies a scald.

During those long days and sleepless nights I prayed to God, pleading with him as an afflicted child pleads for health for both myself and my son. I found much comfort in singing the hymn, "My Times Are in Thy Hands," as a prayer.

At the end of four weeks my burn was healed and I was able to get out of bed. At the same time our boy left the hospital and was home to celebrate his twenty-first birthday. A week later we were convalescing on my sister's farm along the Mason and Dixon line.

I want to keep my eyes always focused on my past blessings, and to sing praises to God for his mercy and patience with me.

Since those dark days have passed, and the sunlight of God's love shines forth, my praises rise to him who hears the cries of his children.

Our boy is going to school now to educate himself for usefulness in this life, and my daily prayer is that he may give his life fully and unreservedly to our Maker, "from whom all blessings flow."

The Greater Assurance

By Edna Stobaugh

The gospel must have always meant something to me for I have gone to church and Sunday school ever since I can remember without much, if any, urging, but in the past few years its meaning has been increased tenfold to me.

During the winter of 1927, '28, I lived with my sister in Dayton, Ohio, and it was during this stay that I had my first real experience with the power and love of the Father. One of the most beautiful and impressive meetings that I have ever enjoyed was at a district conference on Easter Sunday in Jackson, Ohio. There was a sacrament-prayer meeting held at eleven o'clock, and after the meeting all visitors and home folk met next door to the church for dinner. A preaching service was held at two o'clock and I was privileged to accompany and sing with three of the presiding officers of the district an Easter song. During the preaching there was a wonderful spirit in the room. I had heard people tell of experiences they had had and of prayers that had been answered. I felt that I should have something of that sort to confirm my belief in this church. I asked during that meeting that I might have something made known to me.

After we left Jackson that evening I was somewhat disappointed because my prayer had not been answered, but the beauty of the meeting was too great for any such disappointment to last. Two weeks later we had a rally day in Dayton. Such wonderful meetings I have seldom attended. My prayer was answered to a greater extent than I had ever hoped and those that I knew and loved were there to enjoy the message with me. I realized then that the Father always knows what is better for us and the things that will make us appreciate his blessings more.

Since then I have had other messages and felt his spirit, and at each time I look back and thank him for that first experience. He has been very good to me, but some times I fail to thank him for his loving guidance and kindness to me. It is my prayer that I may live a better life so that the promises made to me back in Dayton may be fulfilled.

A Resolution

By Edith Burbridge

My mind has been in rather a turmoil of late because of the conditions of the world, the indifference of a number of my young friends, and my own lack of spirituality. I have heard so many times people in prayer meeting say: "I know this work is true." And I have wished that I might say with just such assurance: "I know this work is true!"

On Wednesday evening, March 8, I had the privilege of attending the stake O. B. K. prayer service at North East, and derived a great deal of benefit from it. There was a prophecy given through a young man to the effect that God does hear and answer our prayers. He pleaded with his children to come unto him, that we need him, but he also needs us, that we can not hold to the sins of the world with one hand and to God with the other. He is only waiting for a chance to guide and direct our lives. I came away from that prayer service with the resolve to pray more often, to stay in touch with the heavenly Father, that I might have his Spirit to be with me; not only that I might be comforted, but that I might be able to inspire others.

I teach a Sunday school class and I want to be able to say to those children: "I know that this work is true!"

Time to Study God's Word

By Mrs. Charles Powell

I, too, have experienced many rich blessings in the gospel and have witnessed that God rewards those who diligently seek him.

My husband is a life-long member of the church, and though formerly I had no scruples against latter-day teachings, I belonged for eighteen years to a popular denomination. I felt that I did not care to change my religion as I was quite satisfied.

A year ago I was taken ill with tuberculosis, and the first thought that came to me was to be administered to. But it seems to me that it was not God's plan to heal me instantly. For eight months I lay trying to recover from my illness, and the thought was constantly before me that I must read and study God's word. I read the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants in addition to numerous books of my own faith.

It was not long until I was thoroughly convinced that I wanted to be a member of this church. I yearned for baptism. I was at my mother's home, twenty miles out of town, and one Sunday in July, Brother Roscoe Peterson brought me to Saint Joseph, where he baptized me.

In October, I entered the State Sanatorium, where they found me without the least trace of disease. Now I am at home taking care of my household duties and caring for my three little children. I am in excellent health.

I realize much more than ever before how merciful God is. I am thankful for my illness, for I believe he had to put me in a place where I would study his word before I would allow myself to be convinced of this truth.

My prayers are for those who are hesitating about coming into the church.

Delights in Being at Post of Duty

By John Heide

I lost my companion ten months ago and still feel the loss most keenly. But what a hope we have that we shall meet our loved ones again where parting will be no more!

I celebrated my seventy-sixth birthday, March 28, and desire to improve my few remaining years in the service of the Master. It is my great delight to tell the story of the restored gospel wherever I have opportunity, and I feel it my duty to tell the people what God requires at their hands.

Very seldom do I miss a service at the church. It is my greatest delight to be at my post of duty.

Blessings in the Gospel

By Mrs. Clara J. Young

I know there are blessings to be had in the gospel which are not to be found elsewhere. My daughter had Elder William Frost come to our home to administer to me recently, and then, as many times before, came the healing power of the Almighty. The pain was rebuked, a condition doctors of the earth have not been able to bring about.

I love this gospel and know it is true. No power on earth can change my mind concerning it, and I want to do what I can for the gospel.

We had sacrament service in my home the first Sunday in March. The few Saints here had had no service of sacrament since May of last year.

Request Prayers

Requests for prayer received too late for inclusion in this department will be found in "The Bulletin Board."

Mrs. Fred Howe, of Horton, Michigan, wishes the Saints to remember her husband in prayer, that if it is the Lord's will, he will be healed of stomach trouble. He has ulcer. He seemed greatly improved as a result of a former request sent to the Herald.

Sister Nevada Brooks, of Repton, Alabama, asks the prayers of the Saints, that if it is God's will, she may rise from her bed of affliction. She has been confined to her bed four months.

Sister N. J. Solomon, of Gillette, Wyoming, an aged and isolated Saint, desires the prayers of her brothers and sisters, that she may be faithful to the end, patient in sickness and humble at all times. She has recently recovered from an acute illness, and prays that God will help her in other afflictions.

Sister Edythe R. Brown, 511 Tenth Street, S. W., Cedar Rapids, Iowa, wishes the prayers of the church in behalf of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Adey, of Des Moines, who is suffering with tri-facial neuralgia. She seems to be unable to get permanent relief, though administration brings temporary relief. The sick woman has been a member of the church for years.

QUESTION TIME

How did the scriptural writings come to be called "The Bible"?

The inspired writings are the work of many different individuals living in various ages, and they were therefore compiled gradually. The Greek word biblos anciently was used to mean the inner layer of the papyrus reed from which books were made. This word occurs thirteen times in the New Testament Greek, and in the English Version it is translated book. It was thus applied to various books (see Matthew 1: 1 and Acts 19: 19). From this use of the word the Greek Christian writers by the fifth century often referred to the sacred writings as "Ta biblia," or "the books."

In time both the Eastern and Western churches employed the Greek term referred to as the title of the sacred compilation, and in the thirteenth century this Greek plural passed into the Latin as a singular, from which the English form "Bible" was derived. A similar word in the Greek, biblion, has the same significance, being found translated book twenty-eight times in the New Testament. The definite article "the" therefore means The Book, which distinguishes the Bible from all other books.

Why did Jesus call himself "the Son of man"?

This term is used of himself by Jesus in many instances, and appears to serve the double purpose of emphasizing the Savior's humanity and his humility as the Son of God. From the fact that he came in the flesh, his humanity was derived from his human ancestry. He therefore apparently loved to refer to his divine condescension in taking upon himself flesh and becoming in his human nature "like unto his brethren." The Hebrew writer says of him:

"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Hebrews 2: 14, 15.

It was necessary for Jesus to become the "Son of man" in order to work out the atonement for mankind and become the Redeemer of the world. But he was not just a son of man, for the term implies his distinction from all others.

Explain Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8, about "the last shall be first," etc.

This verse deals with things spiritual and temporal, and therefore it explains that things were first created spiritually, and then temporally. The Inspired Version shows that all things were created spiritually before the earth was made, and man's temporal creation was accomplished afterward. The law of God itself is therefore spiritual, and all of his law is for spiritual ends, and not for temporal ends. The first or spiritual creation shall therefore in the end triumph over the things temporal, and when man is resurrected and becomes a spiritual being for ever, "the first shall be last."

The term "the last shall be first" probably indicates that the last creation or re-creation of man as an immortal being shall become first in all things, that is, preeminent over temporal things for ever. This distinguishes the immortal triumph of the redeemed over those who are to be judged and condemned, and who therefore shall not receive the celestial glory of the righteous. The spiritual shall hence be both first and last.

What became of the "pillar of salt" into which Lot's wife turned?

The story of Genesis 19: 26 is probably but a brief reference to the result of the fire of brimstone that came down as Lot fled from Sodom, which appears to have fallen upon his wife when she "looked back," that is, intently regarded with favor the place from whence she had fled. Some have considered that she was one of the forms found at the south end of the Dead Sea which remain from the chemical action supported to have resulted from the great destruction, but there is nothing to prove such a theory. She probably became a pillar of salt in the sense that the mass of bituminous matter fell upon her when she tarried in disobedience to divine command. Thus she would have the appearance of a human form turned to "salt." The Hebrew word for salt included both nitre and bitumen. No trace of her appears to remain today.

Good Response in Sweden and Denmark

Two Baptized at Helsingborg, Sweden

Early in February I received word to come to Helsingborg at once to administer to a nineteen-year-old boy who was dying with quick consumption. The doctors said he had just a few days to live. When I reached his bedside I found him in a very bad condition. Both of his lungs were badly affected and the disease had gone up into this throat so that he could hardly eat solid food, or talk.

Permission had been obtained from the doctors in charge of the sanatorium to administer to the boy and the ordinance was performed in the presence of one of the head nurses. A fine spirit was present during the administration, and we had the assurance that God heard our prayer and would deal with the young man for his best good. I was pleased to hear a few days later that he was much better and did not cough as badly as before. I have received no word from him since, but sincerely hope that he is still living and is gradually regaining his health. He desires to live so that he can unite with the church and live his life serving God. His father, Brother Isaksson, is a faithful member.

I enjoyed the hospitality of the Isaksson home for nine days where we held a few little meetings, telling the gospel story, singing the songs of Zion, and praying with our friends there. On Saturday evening, February 18, I had the pleasure of baptizing Mrs. Isaksson and her fourteen-year-old daughter. There was about a foot of snow on the ground and the thermometer was several degrees below the freezing point. But these two candidates went courageously down into that cold, swift, running stream and entered into a covenant relationship with God. We had about a ten minutes' walk back to the house in our wet clothes before we could change, but none of us suffered ill effects therefrom. And this in spite of the fact that Sister Isaksson had had a bad cold and cough all week. On the day of the baptisms her cough was very severe and she had a pain in her lungs. She was so sick that she was hardly able to stay up out of bed, but she was determined to be baptized. After the baptism I advised her to use olive oil freely. This she did, and the next morning the pain was entirely gone and her cough much better. God blesses those who try to do his will.

At one time quite a number of Saints resided in and near Helsingborg, but several families have emigrated to America, some of whom are now living in Independence. It will be of interest to them to hear that Sister Paalsson and Sister Appelquist as well as Brother Isaksson are still faithful, and bear a strong testimony to the truthfulness of this work. Sister Appelquist's daughter, Lycki, seventeen-years-old, who has been a good Christian girl all of her life and who is now teaching a Sunday school class in another church, became very interested in our work while I was there. I believe that the time is near when she will unite with our church.

Large Crowd at Aalborg

From Helsingborg I went to Aalborg, Denmark, where I spent two weeks visiting with Saints and friends and holding a few meetings. No regular meetings are being held in this city now. For the encouragement of our members I rented a little hall and held three public meetings. Aalborg is a hard place in which to do missionary work and it has been difficult to attract many people to our meetings, especially in the last few years. To our very great surprise our little hall was overfilled, and at one meeting some had to be turned away. I was richly blessed in my preaching and many favorable comments were heard. Many showed a deep interest for our message and of course the Saints were happy and encouraged.

Pastoral Visits in Sweden

From Aalborg I went back into Sweden again and visited two weeks at Södertelje and Stockholm. I visited nearly all of our members at the various points where I stopped, and almost without exception I found them strong in the faith; they were happy to have the missionary visit them in their homes. Being the lone missionary in these three countries I have devoted most of my missionary efforts to Norway and have been content with an occasional visit to Sweden and Denmark to encourage our members and try to help keep them spiritually alive. These visits are intended to be more pastoral than missionary, but the Saints at some of the points insist on having a few public meetings where their friends can be invited and given an opportunity to hear the gospel.

Makes Friends for the Gospel in Stockholm

This was true again in Stockholm. We rented a hall and held three public meetings, and again to our surprise a large crowd greeted us at each meeting, and the interest was good to see. Brother Lindberg, our local elder, stated that in his nearly twenty years of association with our work in Stockholm he has never seen such a large attendance and such interest manifest. It seems that the spirit was present to the degree that all prejudice and unfriendliness disappeared and that large crowd of strangers were melted together in a brotherhood. I could feel friendliness and love coming to meet me on every hand. Never in my experience have I seen the Spirit of God move so mightily in a congregation of strangers as it did in our last meeting in Stockholm. People stated that they had never attended such a meeting nor heard such a message. Others said they had attended the various churches in the city looking for the true gospel of Christ and had been disappointed everywhere, but now they believed they had found it with us. They gladly accepted several tracts and promised to investigate our claims thoroughly. They had no desire to go but lingered long after the meetings to talk with us about the church. Several took our local elder's name and address and are going to keep in touch with him. And we have arranged for him to hold a public meeting occasionally in order to give interested friends an opportunity to hear more. I expect some baptisms in Stockholm this summer. At least one or two have practically given their names for baptism when I return there in the late summer. I feel very much encouraged over my visit in Sweden. Brother Lundstrøm and his son, Gustav, rode their bicycles all the way from Södertelje to Stockholm (about thirty miles) to attend the meetings there. Such interest will be rewarded. I enjoyed Brother Lundstrøm's hospitality in Södertelje. Two of his boys are desiring baptism, but because of circumstances over which we have no control they could not be baptized now. We trust, however, that their wish may be fulfilled soon.

Back in Norway

After these six pleasant weeks in Sweden and Denmark I returned to Norway and am busy in the Lord's work here. Next week I go to Porsgrunn for an extended series of meetings. The interest for the gospel in these three countries seems to be greater now than I have ever seen it before. I believe present world conditions are wakening people to the seriousness and responsibility of this life and the necessity of putting their trust in God. May we be directed to take the best advantage of this interest is my prayer.

Young People's Day at North Star Branch

Impressive Services in Interest of Youth

"Lovest Thou Me More Then These?" was the theme of an impressive and successful day of young people's services held in North Star Branch, Underwood, Iowa, March 19. The day's events were sponsored by the young people.

In spite of the inclemency of weather there was a nice attendance at the 9.45 prayer service. It had been previously arranged that a group of young people should take part in testimony, so no time was wasted. The spirit of devotion accompanied the prayers and testimonies.

District President J. A. Hanson told of an incident which occurred some years ago. The work of the church seemed to be suffering for want of workers in this branch, and Brother Armond Salisbury, then president of the district, prophecied that the time would come when the Lord would raise up workers and when the branch would prosper.

The Saints believe that this prophecy is now being fulfilled, for at present Underwood has one of the active branches in the district. The district president presented the names of four fine young men to be ordained to the office of priest. The three from this branch are, David Damitz and Cyril Damitz and Derald Sewing. The Saints are gratified to know that these young men are preparing for service, and hope they will accept and magnify their calling.

The theme of the day, "Lovest Thou Me More Than These," was the basis of the address by Elder E. Y. Hunker at 11 a. m. Special music was by the choir. At noon the women of the branch served dinner.

In the afternoon Paul Harding conducted a round-table discussion on the Tenth Legion. Music was furnished by Crescent young people who had driven twenty-two miles in a school bus in spite of bad roads and weather. Hazel Dell young people were expected to furnish musical numbers, but were unable to come because of the weather.

In the evening a half hour vesper service was led by Brother Lee Landon, of Council Bluffs. Musical numbers were furnished by Council Bluffs, Crescent, and Underwood members. Brother Hunker delivered the evening address. He remained in the branch two weeks, holding a series of meetings and being given a good response by an interested audience.

Chicago, Illinois

Golden Wedding Celebration at First Church

First Chicago Church was the scene of a most enjoyable family gathering Saturday, January 21, in celebration of the golden wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister W. B. Henderson of Danville, Illinois.

While Brother and Sister Henderson make their home in Danville it was quite appropriate that they celebrate their golden wedding anniversary in Chicago, where Brother Henderson's seven brothers and sisters and their families could attend. Two of Sister Henderson's sisters live at Mason City, Iowa, where Brother and Sister Henderson spent last Christmas with them and their families enjoying a preanniversary celebration.

George Henderson, a brother of W. B. Henderson, and his wife, of Chicago, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary eight years ago, while Brother Henderson's sister, Mrs. J. Durbin, and her husband, also of Chicago, celebrated their golden wedding two years ago. These two couples and their families were among those helping Brother and Sister W. B. Henderson in the celebration of a half century of wedded life.

The Chicago relatives after deciding to entertain in honor of Brother and Sister Henderson chose First Chicago Branch as a proper setting for the occasion. One of the women's groups in which two of Brother Henderson's sisters and a daughter, Sister R. E. Hower, are active, was asked to prepare and serve the dinner. The members responded royally. Decorations appropriate to the occasion enlivened the church dining room, while gleaming cut glass, the snowy whiteness of linen, the glow of candles, the scent of roses, and the fragrance of a wonderful dinner completed the picture. Brother Harry Passman officiated as toastmaster, introducing the various speakers and injecting the proper amount of humor into the program. Speeches and reminiscences were offered by a number at Brother Passman's call.

Prior to the serving of the dinner a re-wedding ceremony was held in the auditorium of the church, the pastor, Elder H. T. McCaig, officiating. Sister Nina Campbell sang two solos and Winfield Henderson, nephew of Brother and Sister Henderson, and his wife, who were celebrating their eleventh wedding anniversary, acted as best man and matron of honor. Mr. G. B. Henderson, of Villa Grove, only son of the bride and bridegroom, escorted his mother to the altar and gave her away. The wedding march, the congratulations of friends, the very atmosphere of the occasion impressed upon the happy couple the reality of the occasion.

The Danville newspapers gave Brother and Sister Henderson a good write-up carrying their pictures with a two-column story.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church

Although Saints of this branch have not been very prosperous of late in temporal things, many have enjoyed rich, spiritual blessings which accompany this work of latter days.

January 1, 1933, brought a bright outlook to First Church. Sacrament was enjoyed in the morning, and District Missionary John R. Grice admonished the Saints in a good sermon at the close of the day.

The investiture service of the Boy Scouts furnished an appropriate program for the Religio, January 6. On the following Sunday Patriarch G. T. Griffiths arrived. His fatherly advice is always appreciated.

January 15, was the opening day of a four-week series of sermons by Elder John R. Grice, whose discourses were timely and given in a forceful manner. Some of his subjects were, "The Hope of Glory," "Religion—What Is It?" "Facing About," "Where are the Dead?" "The Book of Mormon, What Is It?" "The Challenge of the Restoration." Many people not of the faith attended, and the fruitage of this effort is bound to be apparent later. Baptism and blessing of children followed at the close of the sermons.

During the month of March the branch was fortunate in having several visitors, Brother Harry Smith and family, Brother Boone, of Cincinnati, and others. Elder A. E. Anderton, G. Myers, Priest Paul Vale, and Pastor C. W. Clark, and others occupied the pulpit.

Miss Edna Weate became the bride of Oscar Cline, March 18, Elder C. W. Clark officiating.

The members were saddened to learn of the death of Sister Mary Ella Thorp, March 3. She was a pioneer of the work in Columbus. Also Elder S. B. Kriebel passed away March 25. He was an earnest worker and faithful servant in the branch until the last, and will be greatly missed.

The choir gave Elder Grice much help during his series of services, the singers being led by Donald Gabriel, assistant choir leader. They elected officers in January and will continue to meet once a month at the members' homes for practice on special anthems and a social time. The February meeting took the form of a Valentine party.

The troop of Boy Scouts with its officers went, March 12, to Akron, Ohio, to see the new airship, Macon. They stopped at Barberton for Sunday school, it being too late to go to Akron for service. The troop participated in the annual scout circus held April 21 and 22.

The women's department and Loyal Club forge ahead. They, too, elected officers in January, having again Mrs. John R. Grice as president of the department, and Mrs. Hovey as president of the Loyal Club. Other leaders chosen are: for young women's club, Mrs. Loraine Clair; Temple Builders, Mrs. Emily King; Orioles, Mrs. Margaret Crosier, and Blue Birds, Miss Vivian Grice. A box social proved financially successful in February for the Loyal Club. Also a Valentine program was arranged for the entertainment of all. Living models of Valentines were presented. The department still continues to meet for weekly prayer service at 10 a. m. at different homes, and has found them to be a source of help and better understanding of God's plans.

The Sunday school held a penny carnival and made quite a sum for the benefit of the general fund.

Far West Stake

Series of One-Day Rallies

Apostle J. F. Garver conducted a series of three one-day rallies at keypoints in the stake April 14, 15, and 16. He was accompanied by Stake President Ward A. Hougas and Elder J. E. Hovenga, a member of the stake bishopric.

The series opened at Cameron on Good Friday with a sermon at eleven o'clock. A basket dinner was served at noon followed by a prayer service in afternoon. At eight o'clock Apostle Garver gave another sermon. Attendance was good throughout the day, and a splendid spirit prevailed. Most of the branches in that territory were represented.

Saturday found the various groups in the northern part of the stake gathered at Guilford where a rally of the same nature was conducted. Again the day was profitably spent, and the Saints were encouraged and strengthened by meeting together.

The final rally was held at Saint Joseph on Easter Sunday, where Apostle Garver preached at Fourth Church at the morning hour, at First Church at the vesper service, and at Second Church at their evening service.

This type of divisional rallies has proved very practical in this stake where the distance is great between points. By holding services at these three keypoints, practically all groups are enabled to attend the one in their territory. This enables general and stake officers to form contacts with many more Saints.

Maple Grove Branch

On April 9, Maple Grove Saints had the opportunity of hearing Stake President Ward A. Hougas again. He was accompanied by Bishop Milo Burnett. Elder Hougas spoke forcefully to a good-sized congregation at the morning hour. In the afternoon a priesthood meeting was conducted at which Brother Hougas again spoke.

At noon the entire congregation had a basket dinner at the home of Henry Piepergerdes in honor of his birthday.

King City Mission

Saints at King City and Union Star are earnestly attempting to carry on in their little mission. Although their number is small, they are growing. They report the recent attendance of three interested nonmembers. They now have regular services including a Wednesday prayer service, a class on Friday evening and a church school and preaching session on Sunday afternoon.

On April 9, Elder F. L. Hinderks, of the stake presidency, met with them in their afternoon service and was the speaker of the hour. Elder O. Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, spoke to them April 16, on the subject, "The God of the Bible."

Saint Joseph Branch

The regular quarterly amalgamated sacrament service on April 2, was very well attended by all groups in the city. The service was one of solemnity and beauty. In addition to the ordination of the sacrament, another beautiful ordinance was witnessed. Two babies were blessed by the elders.

A short and fitting theme talk was given by Elder O. Salisbury, pastor of Second Church, and special music was furnished by a quartet from Second Church. City Pastor Ward A. Hougas, presided.

First Church

In recent weeks First Church has enjoyed many good sermons by local and visiting speakers. Some of the speakers who have addressed the congregation are Elders H. C. Timm, John Ruoff, L. A. Keck, O. Salisbury, T. E. Hale, F. L. Hinderks, Ward A. Hougas and Apostle J. F. Garver.

At the Wednesday prayer meeting, March 15, all were happy to have one young man enter the waters of baptism. The confirmation followed at the close of the prayer service. Elder H. C. Timm officiated. This young man has been interested for some time, and all welcome him as a brother.

The prayer services have continued on a high plane with some outstanding meetings. Many have become regular attendants and each week finds them gathered together for strength. Each week an elder is in charge assisted by a priest or deacon.

The first Sunday in April Pastor Ward A. Hougas commenced a new series of sermons based on the Sermon on the Mount. He is setting forth the practical side of religion as taught by Christ in his famous sermon. He continued the series at the vesper service, April 9, and the morning of April 16.

The O. T. Z.'s have had their regular meetings and have spent some interesting evenings. One evening was devoted to tricks and puzzles of all kinds. Another evening all participated in a hare and hound hunt which ended with a wiener roast. Easter morning an early prayer service was held at Krug Park. The O. T. Z.'s of Third Church joined in this service. An inspirational meeting was enjoyed in the midst of the early spring beauty. Elder Hougas was in charge of the meeting assisted by the pastor of Third Church, Roscoe D. Peterson. A committee of boys fried eggs and bacon and a delicious breakfast was eaten before the members departed for church school. This is the second annual Easter morning prayer service and will, no doubt, become an annual custom.

The Ul-Lik-Us Players held their monthly meeting March 28. The evening was spent in lesson study, led by the director, and a program of skits, charades and the reading of a one-act play. Plans were discussed for the spring activities of the club.

Easter dawned a most beautiful spring day. The worship period of the church school was made up of appropriate Easter numbers. The girls' chorus sang two Easter songs and three members of the Ul-Lik-Us Players presented a one-act play, "The One Thing Needful," which portrayed the first Easter morn.

Following the class study, Mrs. E. J. Ehlers and Mrs. A. N. Denton played "Adoration" (Borowski) as an organ and piano interlude. The choir sang, "Awake Up My Glory" (Harker), and a quartet sang "He Is Risen" (Jewett). Elder Ward A. Hougas was the speaker giving the third sermon of his series based on the Sermon on the Mount.

At the vesper service another Easter anthem and a solo preceded Apostle J. F. Garver's sermon. Apostle Garver delivered a fine Easter sermon, taking his text from the biblical words of the solo, "In the End of the Sabbath."

Perhaps a word concerning the activities of the music department of First Church would not be amiss here. This phase of the work is so often taken for granted and is so faithful given that not much is said about it. The choir meets regularly under the direction of Evan J. Ehlers, who is ably assisted by his wife as organist and accompanist. They meet each Wednesday evening after the prayer service for rehearsal, and render their service each Sunday evening as well as providing special music on all special days.

The adult division of the church school sponsored a social evening Thursday, April 20. A good supper was served at a low cost and a program was given at eight o'clock. Rabbi Myron M. Meyer gave a fine talk, and the musical program consisted of several vocal solos, a violin solo, and an organ and piano duet.

Second Church

Second Church has been enjoying a series of sermons by the pastor, Elder O. Salisbury, outlining the difference between the "Reorganized" church and the "Brighamites." Many interesting historical facts have been presented and differences in doctrinal teachings have been discussed. Brother Salisbury is well informed on the subject, and his sermons have been delivered in the spirit of kindness and good will to large and interested audiences. The Reorganization phase will be treated upon in a continuation of the subject.

Elder Ward A. Hougas, Far West Stake president, delivered the evening sermon April 9. Many comforting thoughts were brought to those for whom the "fountain of joy" seemingly "had ceased to flow" and the theme was taken from the Old Testament story of Elijah when the brook from which he was to drink dried up.

Apostle John F. Garver was a welcome visitor, April 16, and preached the evening sermon.

A young people's sunrise prayer meeting was held at the church at 7 a. m., followed by breakfast served in the lower auditorium. The meeting was well attended and enjoyed by all. The church school hour was followed by an Easter program which was rendered by the young people and children. A varied program of readings, dialogues and musical numbers in keeping with the spirit of the occasion made the hour inspirational.

The junior choir, which has been conducted by Sister Leva Ritchie, has been divided into the girls' chorus, conducted by Sister Ritchie and the young men's glee club conducted by Brother Verne Goodenough. An active interest is being shown.

Third Church

The young people of Third Church organized their group as O. T. Z.'s the latter part of March in accordance with the recommendation of the stake young people's organization. Miss Bernice Tracy was elected president. They are meeting every two weeks on Tuesday evening.

The O. T. Z.'s joined First Church in an inspirational Easter morning prayer service at Krug Park. This service was thoroughly enjoyed even though the air was a bit chilly so early in the morning.

Fourth Church

The spring months have been busy ones at Fourth Church. All meetings are well attended, and interest is good. Prayer meetings were conducted at the homes of members during the winter, but are now being held at the church again each Wednesday.

The women's department has been active. In March the women were the guests of the Second Church women's department, furnishing the program, and on April 15, Second Church women returned the visit, giving an interesting program.

The religio continues to grow in attendance and in quality of programs given. Brother Ferd Wheat, religio president, won a silver medal in an oratorical contest sponsored by the W. C. T. U. at the Grace Methodist Church in March.

The Fourth Church Dramatic Club gave a play, "Good Medicine," March 16, to a full house. A sketch, "When I Was Young," followed the play. Guests of the club who assisted on the program were Misses Sylvia Wheat, Dorothy Bradley, and Marybelle Bear.

April 2, Fourth Church was pleased to have Elder Ward A. Hougas as the speaker at the evening service. He used as his subject, "How to Be Happy."

Easter Sunday was a red letter day for Fourth Church. The newly-organized orchestra made its first appearance and the church school attendance as well as the attendance at the preaching hour was the highest for this year. A short Easter program followed the lesson period, and Apostle John F. Garver was the speaker. His sermon was uplifting and his illustrations, both interested and charmed the audience of which the greater number were young people. This was Brother Garver's first visit to Fourth Church, and they hope he will be with them again soon.

In the afternoon a baptismal service was held at Second Church. Four candidates from Fourth Church were baptized before a large gathering. The Fourth Church Junior Choir sang, "Give Me Thy Heart," and two little folks from Second Church sang "Suffer Little Children."

The confirmation service was held in the evening, Elder Frank R. Gist assisting the pastor, Elder J. L. Bear, in the ordinance. The charge to the new and old members was voiced by Brother Gist in an outstanding address. After the confirmations and a talk by the pastor a hymn was sung and all the congregation was invited to come forward and shake hands with the new members. So ended a beautiful and happy Easter day.

We never fail when we try to do our duty—we always fail when we neglect to do it.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

At the annual business meeting, held February 11, the following officers were elected: President, O. A. Rexroad; first counselor, James Cheffin; second counselor, Donald Bealor; secretary, Edward Sexton; publicity agent, Luther Crabtree. The Bible class was organized with James Cheffin as superintendent, Emma Culp, secretary, and Walter Culp, Edward Sexton, and Harry Culp, teachers. The study period is Friday at 7.30 p. m.

On that evening, too, the women were organized with May Crabtree as superintendent, and other officers were chosen. All officers and teachers were elected to serve till September 15. At that time the Sunday school and all departments will be reorganized so as to be in harmony with the general church school plan.

With workers well organized and active, the Saints hope to carry on their undertakings more ably this year. The women have begun well by piecing quilt tops and producing excellent handwork. They meet every two weeks for work.

On two recent Sundays attendance at the church services has been smaller than usual, members from Portsmouth being cut off by high water. The town came very near being flooded, but none of the Saints suffered harm or property damage.

Elder O. A. Rexroad held a series of meetings on Mable Road, Portsmouth, winning good interest and attention.

Missionary John R. Grice, of Columbus, was scheduled for a meeting the night of April 8.

Owing to the depression and high waters, this mission was not represented at the district conference held at Columbus the first part of April.

The little daughter of Brother and Sister Donald Bealor, who suffered an attack of scarlet fever sometime ago, is now out of quarantine.

Butler, Missouri

Workers Are Optimistic

The Saints are trying to move forward. They have a good Sunday school, and their pastor is A. B. Kinny, of Rich Hill. Their church is paid for, and is situated on a good paved street.

Workers at Butler are not discouraged, indeed they are optimistic of the future of the church, and feel that the time is ripe for the Saints to help spread the gospel. They think there are many honest souls waiting to hear the latter-day story, and that it is the duty of the laymembers to help the priesthood in every way. They pray that the Holy Spirit will direct those in charge of the church, and that the Saints at Butler may continue to live as a united band, ready and willing to do the will of the Lord.

Butler Branch was given the gospel truth by such men as F. C. Keck, I. N. White, James Moler, E. T. Atwell, F. L. Sawley, W. S. Macrae, H. E. Winegar, and Frank Curtis. The workers here often think of these brothers who have proved themselves excellent servants of the Master.

This branch is located sixty-three miles south of Independence on Highway 71.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The monthly stake priesthood meeting was held in the I. X. L. room with fair attendance. A departure from the usual order of the service took the form of talks by three young men of the Aaronic priesthood to the assembly. They were Edward Baker, Brother Siebert and Lyle Davis, and the basis of their addresses was taken from recent issues of the Herald on the duties of the ministry. They acquitted themselves like veteran speakers, and their words were well received. The usual lecture is given by an elder schooled in church experience.

The church school is increasing in attendance. On April 3, 275 were present, April 9, 285, and April 16, 317. Easter Sunday saw a large gathering of the church people as well as some new friends. The contribution of the choir and soloists was much appreciated, and Elder C. E. Wight's sermonet, though short, brought a message encouraging the Saints to push forward.

At the evening service Brother J. A. Gardner was the speaker, and his theme was, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives." The musical program was given by Lawrence Siegal, baritone, and Helen Scott, soprano.

Central Church is progressing. Its members are friendly and kindly disposed toward one another and toward their visitors. They want to do the task which is theirs.

Argentine Church

These Saints were favored by the presence of Elder C. B. Woodstock, general workers in the field of Religious Education, who gave the sermonet at the church school, April 9, addressed teachers and workers at 11.30, and occupied the sacred desk at 7.45 p. m. His good talks were much appreciated, and he urged the teachers to greater efficiency through training.

On Sunday, April 16, the sermonet period was occupied with a playlet by seven young girls, depicting the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ. The girls were supported by a young women's chorus.

At night the cantata, "The Dawn of Easter," was rendered very creditably by the choir, directed by Daniel P. Cooper.

Splendid attendance was noted at all services of the day.

Under the auspices of the Boy Scouts, Brother Frank Tuttle, scoutmaster, the cast of "The Old Maids' Convention," composed of twenty-five members from Independence, presented their mirth-creating conference at the high school auditorium. The crowd was small, probably due to the time of presentation, which was in the midst of Easter week with services being held at the various churches.

Chelsea Church

The Girl Scouts, under the direction of their captain, Miss Adalain Taylor, gave a supper at the church March 18, as a part of the national scout drive to raise money to carry on Girl Scout work. The supper was well attended by local church members.

Delbert Sears and R. B. Smith, representing Chelsea in the stake debate contest, lost the decision to Fourth Church, March 26, having won the previous Sunday at Grandview over Quindaro. The question was, "Should Christianity Be Concerned With the Problems of Industry." The Chelsea team took the negative side.

On the same evening Chelsea listened to a sermon by Elder H. Arthur Koehler.

Sacrament Sunday evening, Chelsea O. B. K. Choir was invited to give a musical program at the Englewood Branch in Independence. They were later given refreshments at the home of one of the sisters. Chelsea members were delighted at the privilege of being of service to another branch, and were happy at seeing new faces and making new friends.

In the afternoon the Boy Scout committeemen had their monthly committee meeting in which they discussed the re-registration of scouts and scout leaders. R. B. Smith, director of records and property exchanged positions with James McHarness, director of advancement. It is hoped by this arrangement that more time can be given to the scouts during the coming year. On Monday night, April 10, five new scouts were admitted to the troop, making a total of twenty-five. Associate Stake President George Mesley gave an interesting slide lecture about Australia the evening of April 9.

The Easter Sunday school service was given by the junior choir under the direction of Mrs. Mabel Crayne and assisted by Misses Jesse Belle Taylor, Adalain Taylor, and Mr. Delbert Sears. It was a beautiful service and was a credit to the patience and leadership of Mrs. Crayne who worked long and hard on the program. Mrs. Crayne is a devoted church worker, and much of Chelsea's success is due to her loyal and unselfish help.

An inspiring sermon on, "The Resurrection," was given at the eleven o'clock service by Elder Levi Gamet.

Independence

For the first time in two years Independence people will have the privilege of hearing a concert by the A Cappella Chorus of Graceland College, Friday evening, April 28, at the Stone Church. This chorus will be joined by the Wahdemna Choral Club of Independence, in giving a concert at the Scottish Rite Temple, in Kansas City, Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Missionary E. Y. Hunker addressed the young people at their Sunday afternoon meeting at the Auditorium, April 23. This was the last meeting of this kind for the season. There was also a reading by Miss La Von Budd, and music was supplied by Girl Scouts of Troop 37.

Stone Church

The church school attendance soared above the eleven hundred mark two Sundays ago, and is still increasing. Good musical support has of late been given the worship services, conducted by the school superintendency for the adult, intermediate, and junior departments, by the boys' choir directed by Miss Marcine Smith and the Clematis Chorus directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell. Their help is appreciated.

A sermon glowing with spiritual uplift and cheer was given at the Stone Church Sunday morning by Patriarch F. G. Pitt, who chose as a Scripture reading the first Psalm and for a text read Jeremiah 6: 16. It is not often that Independence Saints are privileged to hear Brother Pitt, their one-time pastor, speak. Brother Pitt is a veteran of service of many years and places, and is greatly loved and highly respected by the Saints. He is more than eighty years of age, and speaks with convincing forcefulness and charm. He is known for his devotion and earnestness and his affirmative presentation of the gospel message.

With Brother Pitt in the stand were Elder H. G. Barto, in charge, and Patriarch Hyrum O. Smith.

The Stone Church Choir sang two anthems, "Unfold, Ye Portals," and "Come Unto Me, Lord Jesus," L. A. Woodside, baritone, singing the solo in the latter number. Paul N. Craig directed and Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee accompanied. Mrs. Withee also played a pleasing organ number.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith was the evening speaker, this being the first time he has been heard at the Stone Church in a number of months. Brother Smith has been very busy in the interests of the church this winter, and has visited and helped the Saints in a number of places.

Music for this hour was supplied by the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, who sang "Praise," and "My Jesus, I Love Thee."

Elder D. O. Cato was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder J. E. Kelsey.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Sudden death in the form of a paralytic stroke claimed two well known members of the Stone Church congregation on the same day, April 20, Elder Robert O. Self passing away early in the morning, and Doctor Frank H. Criley, near midnight. Such invasions of the ranks of those who are helpful, shock everyone and cause many to grieve.

Brother Self was seventy-nine years of age, and had belonged to the church since May 27, 1888. With his wife he traveled in Nebraska in the early days and in Missouri, going from place to place in a covered wagon and holding missionary meetings. For a time they were in charge of the Home for the Aged at Holden, Missouri. Brother Self is survived by his wife, Mrs. Amelia Self, and one brother, Walter M. Self. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church early Sunday afternoon, Elder Joseph Luff in charge, assisted by Elder Richard Bullard. Patriarch F. A. Smith delivered the sermon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Death stopped Doctor Criley in the midst of his activities for community and church. He was a dentist and had practiced his profession in Independence for twenty-five years. His interests and activities were many. He was one of the owners and promoters of the Independence Natatorium. He was a singer of ability and a member of the Independence Chamber of Commerce Glee Club for a number of years. Until a short time ago he served as announcer for KMBC, making his announcements as "F. H. C." Doctor Criley was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, October 19, 1884. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hazel Criley, two daughters, Wilma and Melva, and a son, Carwin C., all of the home; four sisters, Miss Della L. Criley, Mrs. G. L. Harrington, Mrs. Henry W. Stahl, all of Independence, and Mrs. W. B. Spalding, of Plattsburg, Missouri. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Another whom death has taken was Sister Irene C. Stone, fifty-eight years old. She died April 16, at the Independence Sanitarium, and her funeral was conducted April 19, Elders W. M. Self and J. F. Sheehy in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Stone was a faithful Saint.

Spring Branch Church

An effective service the night of April 16, brought the Easter services to a pleasing close. The evening was devoted to the presentation of the play, "The Gate Ajar," and at the close Hazel Andes, Laurel Goold, and Lawrence Jones were baptized by Elder D. S. McNamara. This ordinance was beautifully performed with the play cast and the angel chorus on both sides of the font.

That morning Brother J. Andes took the young people, fourteen in number, to the sunrise service at the Stone Church.

An Easter morning prayer service was also held in the home church, Arthur Peer and Alma Tankard in charge. "Showing the Christ Life in Our Homes," was the theme.

At the close of the Sunday school period the primary department sang "Suffer Little Children," and Helen Elizabeth, the little daughter of Brother and Sister Harry Ward, was blessed.

Elder Leonard White chose the Easter theme for his morning sermon, and appropriate music was by the choir.

Five hundred and forty people attended last Sunday's service at Spring Branch, this being the record attendance so far this year. Workers were highly pleased at the interest shown by the worshipers.

The confirmation of the three candidates, baptized the evening of Easter Sunday, was had at the beginning of the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning, and the speaker for the remaining part of the hour was Robert Fish who talked on confirmation and the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Church school sessions, both morning and evening, were very helpful. In these the study classes are enjoyed, and considerable local talent is discovered in the program numbers.

The night service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood and Jesse Smith. Elder J. Charles May sang, "Mother's Prayer," accompanying on the guitar, and other numbers. He was also the speaker.

East Independence Church

Easter Sunday's services were greatly enjoyed by a large number. The church school was visited in the morning by Assistant Pastor D. S. McNamara and W. Earl Page, director of Religious Education. A pleasing Easter program was given by the beginner, primary, junior, and intermediate classes in charge of their teachers, and there were numbers by an adult double quartet. Brother McNamara finished the hour, discussing the Easter theme, and challenging the congregation with pertinent questions concerning the risen Christ.

The word of God has been ably expounded in this district, speakers showing a spiritual intelligence growing out of a consciousness of the need of preparation and service.

Attendance at the Wednesday evening prayer meetings is increasing with the spring weather.

Hot Springs, Arkansas

Missionary Meetings by A. M. Baker

The services which Elder A. M. Baker held here from March 1 to 17, were well attended, and he used stereopticon slides in connection with his sermons, presenting some highly interesting material.

Brother Baker organized the women's department which is now doing considerable good. There was one baptism, that of Sister Lonnie Tins.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Active Work Goes on in Historic Center

The priesthood of Nauvoo Branch are active and always ready to render such assistance as the pastor requests. Seven members of the priesthood take turns in addressing the congregation on Sunday mornings and in the evening Pastor J. C. Page has been giving a series of gospel sermons on the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

The worship programs published in the Herald are a great help to those in charge of this service and the results are being manifested by a more reverent attitude on the part of those in attendance.

During the winter months, the midweek prayer meetings have been held in the homes of each family in turn and judging from attendance and interest, this has worked well. It so happened that on Washington's birthday, they met with the Pages at the Mansion House. Sister Page decorated the room with American flags; a large picture of George Washington occupied a prominent position, and the inspiring life of Washington became the theme of the evening.

Bishop Charles Fry was here March 12, in the interest of the district reunion. He occupied the pulpit Sunday morning and evening, also Monday evening. His sermons were encouraging to the Saints.

Apostle J. F. Garver arrived on April 3, and spent two days in Nauvoo. His sermon, "Fear Not Little Flock," was very comforting and his message the following evening, "The Just Shall Live by Faith," brought needed encouragement.

A get-together social was held in the basement of the church recently under the auspices of the women's department, and a potluck supper was served. This was well attended and a pleasant time enjoyed.

A union service was held on Good Friday at the Methodist Church with Brother Page and Reverend Goff, of the Presbyterian Church, as speakers.

Under the direction of Miss Karr, music director of the public school, the Presbyterians, Methodists and Latter Day Saints united in giving an Easter cantata, "The Resurrection Story," by Carrie B. Adams. This was held in the Presbyterian Church, and was enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience. Dorothy Fussellman and Alma Grotts, of the Latter Day Saint singers, took part and Mildred Sanford, their director of music, who assisted Miss Karr in the preparation of the cantata, was one of the soloists.

Roberta Lewis, who is attending Boston University, was one of the eight undergraduate women students chosen to join the National Education Sorority, Pi Lambda Theta. The requirements are high and her home folks are very proud of the fact that she was so honored.

Joseph Henderson, Herald "newsboy," has, through the Herald bundle method, been able to place the church paper in the hands of nearly all the membership.

Brother Page was called to Ivywild, at Hamilton, one Sunday afternoon, to conduct the funeral services of Edward P. Johnston, who, with his cousin, Mrs. Green, had entertained the Saints on several occasions with music and recitations at the church and also at the Mansion House. His favorite musical selections were played by the Wallet Trio, who always accompanied them, and selections were read from the writings of Mr. Johnson and poems of Mrs. Green. The burial was in the family burying ground on the Ivywild farm, while the large crowd, congregated from far and near, sang, "In the Sweet Bye and Bye." Ivywild, where Mr. Johnston spent his last years cultivating acres of beautiful flowers, has for many years been open to the public and was a favorite spot for picnickers.

Mrs. Adaline Augusta Radel, eighty-five years of age, sister of William Marshall, who was baptized a few years ago, passed away April 9. The funeral was held in the Catholic Church, Father Tholen officiating. Sister Radel, whose parents were among the early pioneers of the church, married John Radel, a Catholic, and their four children were raised in the Catholic faith. On the death of her husband, Mrs. Radel braved the bitter opposition of all the members of her family and entered the waters of baptism. This act was ignored by them, and upon her death the traditions of the family were carried out.

Dallas, Texas

Branch Is Growing

Under the leadership of Pastor H. H. Davenport, Dallas Branch is making excellent progress.

Elder G. H. Wixom was here and held a two-week meeting. The series was extensively advertised, and there was good attendance each night. More nonmembers attended these services than any other series ever held in Dallas.

The branch music has shown great improvement since Sister H. C. Bliel has been director. Choir practice is held every Tuesday night.

On Friday evening two study classes are held at the church. The young people are studying the Bible under the supervision of Sister Micoll. The adult class study the Book of Mormon with Sister Zella Standifer as teacher. Another study class is held on Sunday evening by Sister Chattie Everett.

The children have their recreation classes every Saturday afternoon. Sister Virginia Williams is supervisor of the children's division. Many new members have been added to the Sunday school through this department.

The women of the church were fortunate in having an opportunity to serve a supper to a musical show of the American Legion. They cleared twenty-five dollars.

The much needed sidewalk along the side of the church lawn was laid a few days ago.

Detroit Closes Successful Meeting

Young People's Conference and Leadership Convention Draws Large Crowds and Interest

Saturday, April 1, marked the beginning of the Detroit young people's conference and leadership convention, under the direction of President Floyd M. McDowell and Apostle F. Henry Edwards according to arrangements made by Elder J. Charles Mottashed, president of Detroit Branch. No one realized at the time what a memorable success it was to be.

Friday afternoon marked the beginning of a steady stream of guests from neighboring cities. Arrangements for their comforts were made by the housing committee. London, Chatham, Essex, Amherstburg and Windsor, Ontario; Port Huron, Saint Clair, Croswell, Flint, Pontiac, Orion, Michigan; Toledo, Ohio, and other neighboring branches and districts were represented.

The opening event was the three-act play, "The Three Pegs," sponsored by the Amacia Tia Club; the comedy was directed by Mrs. L. Boyington and Thelma Dowker.

Sunday morning President McDowell lead the young people in an early prayer service at the First Church while Apostle Edwards was in charge of a like service in East Side Church. Both meetings were exceptionally spiritual, and well attended by the youth. Church school followed with talks by these two men. Sacrament services in the two churches were beautiful in their simplicity. A spirit of worship prevailed.

In the afternoon Apostle Edwards preached, and in the evening a half-hour song service preceded the sermon by President McDowell. Over four hundred people attended both these services.

Classes began Monday evening. Due to the huge crowd the leaders were forced to give their material in lecture form rather than in class discussion. Apostle Edwards spoke on, "The Purpose in Creation," President McDowell followed with "Purpose of the Church."

Tuesday afternoon a Doctrine and Covenants class was conducted by Apostle Edwards, and continued Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons with an average attendance of eighty-three. At six o'clock there was a leaders' and teachers' dinner at which President McDowell spoke. At seven thirty the regular classes were held, "Reign of Law," by Apostle Edwards and, "The Law of Leisure," by F. M. McDowell.

The subjects taken up for the rest of the week during the evening classes were, "Agency and Responsibility," "Ways of Service," "Sin and Forgiveness," "The Price of Life," "The Church and Eternal Life," and "The Harmony of the Kingdom." The average attendance for the evening classes was 263 people, and the interest was exceptionally good.

Thursday afternoon at three o'clock a half hour's meditation service was conducted by the two leaders, being the anniversary date of the organization of the church.

Saturday morning another early prayer service was held. Class work followed. In the evening a special program was arranged by Mrs. Henrietta Davis.

Prayer meeting was conducted by Brother McDowell Sunday morning. Apostle D. T. Williams spoke during the church school hour. At 10.45 a. m. Apostle Edwards preached. In the afternoon organization of the young people was discussed. The last service was a discourse by President McDowell on Sunday evening.

The young people's banquet climaxed the convention. Two hundred and fifty persons gathered in the Masonic Building Monday evening. A delicious dinner was served pleasantly interrupted by songs that go with banquets. Lloyd Heaviland, convention leader, introduced J. Charles Mottashed as toastmaster for the evening. The theme was, "I Must Be About My Father's Business," Brother Edwards gave a short talk after which the following young people responded to the toasts: "Rise Up, O Men of God," by Jeanette Burstrom; "Have Done With Lesser Things," Marie Mottashed, of London, Ontario; "Bring in the Day of Brotherhood," Mr. Crooker and "The Church for You Doth Wait," Gilbert Gustavus. "The Final Word," was the topic of an address by President McDowell.

The toastmaster informed the guests that arrangements were so made that the last word of this banquet would be by a man, but Margaret Ayers saved the day by unexpectedly giving a "thank you" from the young people. Suddenly everything was over. Little groups gathered to say good-bye. Such snatches were heard as, "Yes, I'll write." "I'll see you in June at Lamoni." "Don't forget Park of the Pines."

Little did these "two giants" of the young people, Brother McDowell and Edwards, realize the genuine enthusiasm they had created. They awoke a new sense of responsibility, a keener interest in higher things, a new will to do right. The young people tried to show a bit of their appreciation to them by regular attendance, testimony in prayer meetings, and personal thank you's, but these were weak in comparison to what they felt. The young people of Detroit have found something new, and they want to keep it close to them.

The convention was a success. No one doubts that. The lectures were attended by an average of two hundred and sixty-three persons each night. For Sunday service loud speakers were placed in the lower auditorium for the convenience of the overflow crowd. Much of the success was due to careful planning on the part of the branch officers, and Lloyd E. Heaviland. Mrs. Henrietta Davis arranged special musical numbers for each service. Special thanks goes to Mrs. Charles Carrier, Mrs. Bertha Floyd, and Mrs. Wallace Janrow, who served food during the entire convention. Robert Walker and Howard Thomas merit praise for their work on the housing committee. It was the cooperation of everyone that made this convention the outstanding success that it was.

Small Group to Carry Out Worship Programs

The group of Latter Day Saints here is small but strong in faith. There are five families and their Sunday school enrollment is twenty. Because they are scattered over a considerable area, it is sometimes difficult to get the majority of them together, but those who can meet are striving to keep the gospel work going.

A few Sundays ago they held election of officers. Brother Marinus Knudsen was elected superintendent. They have four members of the priesthood, an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. This seems good for so small a group, and if each functions as he should, much can be done.

The Saints are familiarizing themselves with the worship programs suggested in the Herald and expect to carry them out fully. The first Sunday of April was set aside for sacrament, but to the disappointment of all, this plan did not carry through. Regular prayer service is on Wednesday night at the homes.

During nice weather they have Sunday school in a schoolhouse and are striving to create an interest among nonmember friends. They feel there is much work to do for the Master.

Help us to pay honestly, unstintedly, and bravely
Our part of the great price,
Which of old and for ever thou, O our God, pays for man.
Ennoble us this day with a share in thy work of redemption.

O. T. Z. Convention

The Far West Stake O. T. Z.'s will hold their quarterly rally at Guilford, Missouri, Saturday and Sunday, June 2, 3, and 4. Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, will be the guest speaker.—Helen R. Beadnall, secretary.

Request Prayers

Mrs. J. L. Goostree, of Iuka, Illinois, desires the prayers of the church for her daughter, Olga Henson, who has been in the hospital for the removal of a tumor.

Mrs. A. C. Adams, of Port Clinton, Ohio, requests prayers for her father, J. E. Miner, who underwent an operation for cancer of the stomach three weeks ago, that he may be spared to his family.

Mrs. Patsy Peevy, of Crichton, Alabama, is in a critical condition from pellagra of long standing and other complications, and asks the prayers of the Saints. She wishes to keep her hearing and mental faculties.

Our Departed Ones

BLOOM.—William Henry Bloom was born October 4, 1864, at Mokolumne Hill, California. He moved to Stockton when a young man, and lived there continuously until his death. On March 13, 1892, he was baptized into the church and on the same day was married to Miss Cora Belle Cross, already a member of the church. To them eleven children were born all of whom with his wife survive him. He died January 7, 1933, at Stockton, and the funeral was held January 10, from the B. C. Wallace Undertaking Parlors, by Elder George W. Vallem. Mr. Bloom was employed by the Southern Pacific until health failed a few years ago. He was steadfast in the faith and was well thought of in his community.

JONES.—Eliza Julia Thomas, daughter of Eliza and Richard Thomas, was born at Brigham City, Utah, February 27, 1866. Moved to Malad City, Idaho, with her parents when but a girl. Married Morgan M. Jones. To this union five children were born, two of whom passed to the other side in childhood, Morgan at five years, and Ada at seven. Mrs. Jones died at Sandusky, Michigan, March 2,

The Nature of Life

A Quotation From Sir Oliver Lodge, with a Letter of Introduction by John W. Rushton

■ The unanswered question of the ages continues to baffle man's science and provoke his imagination. "If a man die, shall he live again?" is a query that has brought wonder to the heart of poet and peasant, saint and sage. That endless quest for certainty as to the nature and destiny of life is bound up with man's deepest purposes and all his theories of conduct. Through the dark age of scientific doubt, while Reason would have terminated his existence in the grave, Faith postulated the immortality of the soul. Now light breaks on a new horizon, and science reads in the first flush of another dawn the promise of assurance and hope.

The Pigeonhole

Ahka Pella!

The Graceland A Cappella Chorus had just given its excellent program at the Stone Church, and the whole audience, as usual, was greatly impressed with the performance. These singers, directed by Miss Mabel Carlile, are making a reputation for themselves throughout Iowa and Missouri, and Independence is always happy to hear them, especially since they are, for the whole church, "our own." Two Young Things, all a-flutter, were passing down the aisle ahead of the Pigeon. "Oh," gurgled one, "Wouldn't you like to go to Graceland?" "Would I!" said the other, "You're telling me! Why, I've been wanting to go for years." No, she wasn't very old. She just started wanting very early. Does the College want the young people? Very much? Do the young people want to go to the College? Ahka Pella!

Age of Enlightenment?

Learned men have described the present age as one of enlightenment. We Latter Day Saints like to think of it as the time foretold by the prophets when knowledge should fill the earth.

But the other day in a jitney which runs between Independence and Kansas City, I was suddenly pricked into acute awareness of a conversation that was going on not far away. Familiar words were being uttered by a talkative little woman who sat in the driver's seat. She seemed to be entertaining the driver with a bit of her loquaciousness.

"Book of Mormon?" her voice was high with—well, was it a hint of derision? "Oh, I know all about that!" ("Wonderful," I thought hoping to hear more.) "Why the man that wrote the Book of Mormon wrote it for fiction. He admitted that it was. I have a friend whose mother lived in the same town where the writer of the book lived, and everybody knew it was fiction! Then some one suggested to the man who wrote the book: 'Why don't you organize a church and have the book as a foundation? You could, you know.'" The satisfaction in the tone of this feminine conversationalist was born, no doubt, of the completeness of her knowldge. She knew all (?) about it!

"Well, I declare," replied the driver, "well, I declare! They do say, though, that you can organize any kind of a society in the world if you just start out with an idea."

"Yes, I 'spose that's so, too."

How I longed to break into this conversation! I wanted to ask this woman who knew "all" about the Book of Mormon, the age of her friend whose mother lived in the same town as Joseph Smith, and what town. I wanted to see if she had any idea of the date of the first edition of the Book of Mormon, or what it contained or of whom it was a record, or a hundred other things. And yet she thought she knew all about it.

This an age of enlightenment? To enlighten one must "shed the light of truth and knowledge upon" —(Webster). And yet this woman—she seemed to be honest and sincere—lives within five miles of Independence, the center place. She left the jitney at a familiar station between Independence and Kansas City. She enlightened? And there are thousands like her.

Building From Within

4.—Training for Parents

The churches are now making plans for Children's Day, when large numbers of young people will be inducted into church membership through the ordinance of baptism. The churches are doing their best to prepare the children for new responsibilities, new growth, new opportunities. What are the parents doing to help in this important work? What are the churches doing to help the parents with their problems and responsibilities?

When one considers what is expected of parents, he is appalled at the weight of their obligations. Following are some of the standard and fundamental duties that fall upon them. They are expected to: (1) provide physical care and maintenance for the children's bodies; (2) give them home training and discipline; (3) maintain a type of home life that will insure their love, loyalty, wholesomeness, and happiness; (4) supplement and watch the educational training of the schools; (5) impart moral principles and ideals; (6) help them to make proper social adjustments; (7) lead them to an experience of the spiritual way of life; (8) impart a knowledge of the church literature.

Is it any wonder, in view of the scanty training that parents receive for these tasks, that so many of them fail, and send so many children into the world who, like themselves, are doomed to ineffectiveness and failure?

The quality of our future church membership depends upon having the church do something for parents. Every church of sufficient size should have a class, frequently, in studies for parents. It is to the credit of the women that they have undertaken such studies seriously in many places. It is not to the credit of the men that they have paid little attention to them. The day may come, and we hope it will, when there will be classes and forums where both mothers and fathers will meet to learn, to plan, and to discuss problems.

Meanwhile, the branch officers can do something in the way of organizing a class, or giving some talks to parents, or in laying the groundwork for future educational endeavor. L. L.

United Support

The reclamation of souls for Christ is the work of the missionary; the preservation of souls for him is the work of the pastor. These two men are of equal importance: neither can claim precedence over the other; neither, in the spirit of the Master, will claim it. They stand in strategic positions; but their work can be effective only insofar as they are conscious that behind them stands the united support of the great body of the church. They work together as leaders in the great task of redeeming the world.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

RECENTLY I had the pleasure of sending to a number of superannuated men, members of the Order of Evangelists, the button to be worn by the "superannuated ministry." One of these is Brother James Davis (or should I have said Father Davis?), of South Boardman, Michigan. From him I have received acknowledgment of letter and button, expressing his pleasure in receiving what will be "a nice memento as long as" he lives. Then he says that he does not expect to give many if any patriarchal blessings as he has given one in the last three years. Then he adds: "But I want to do all I can as long as I live. This gospel is dear to me, and it is hard for me to think of not being able to do something to help and encourage the Saints. I have been in this church over sixty-two years, and I want to stay in it the rest of my life."

And we all want you to do so, my dear Brother! If other persons are like me in this respect, which is more than likely, then the presence in our midst of aged men and women who through long lives of usefulness and probity have earned the respect and love of their fellow men, is heartening and encouraging to the younger ones. To see those who have clung tenaciously to their ideals, squared their lives by the principles of virtue, and are still devout in their religious activities, and are finding happiness in having clung to the faith, helps us to carry on in faith, deny ourselves the pleasures which erode and undermine character, and carry on in the work of the church.

My good but aged brother, we know your desire to be of service; and this and your very presence among us are helpful and encouraging. We honor our faithful aged.

IN THESE COLUMNS we have a number of times commented upon the apparent effect of unfavorable industrial conditions reawakening within many of the Saints a keen desire to see Zion established, and sense the satisfaction of security in a place of safety. Some weeks ago a live pastor wrote us and in his letter is a paragraph I desire our readers to see. Brother William Patterson writes:

"The conditions in the world and in our own country are forcing our people to a realization of the necessity of establishment of Zion. Never were the people more prepared, and the times more propitious for the establishment of Zion. How true the Word of the Lord: 'Wherefore, treasure up wisdom in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you, by their wickedness, in a manner that shall speak in your ears, with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth: but if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.' Section 38: 6. Our people are very fearful, and many are lamenting the fact that they had money in closed banks which was not tithed. These are the times that we should be capitalizing as a ministry for the good of Zion and her people."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And here is another paragraph from the same letter:

"The closing of the banks throughout the State of Michigan is creating suspense and anxiety thereby. The lesson that we learn is that the Saints shall not escape while they are a part of the present economic system, and if we shall be prepared for the future we shall have to speed up the work of Zion's redemption."

Yes, we are thinking about Zion, her work, and her safety.

BROTHER Percy Farrow recently wrote a letter to me, and gave vent to some thoughts which had been aroused by his experiences, which were given direction by reading the Herald. He says:

"During the past two weeks I have been unable to work and have had some time for reflection. I was in this mood in our sacrament service Sunday at Corinth, Ontario. My mind surveyed certain incidents of history that I felt were greatly responsible for the heritage we enjoy today. One of these was the massacre of St. Bartholomew where 30,000 Protestants perished in France alone rather than give up their ideals. I believe we need some of that same courage today to enable us to say "Onward to Zion." Then I thought of the Pilgrim fathers who came to America and suffered such privations to establish their ideals. I believe our history tells us that nearly one half that colony perished the first winter. We look back on these people as being pioneers. We need pioneers today in the establishment of Zion. If that pioneering requires sacrifice and suffering and even death as in days agone, then we must have the courage to carry on and to suffer and if need be give our lives, for surely our ideals and the task they set before us are as great as theirs.

"Two weeks ago while on our way to Corinth to hold special services we (Sister Farrow and I) suffered a severe auto accident. Sister Farrow was driving our Ford when another car suddenly made a left turn in front of us forcing us into the ditch. The car turned over. Sister Farrow received bad bruises and a broken rib, while I had my knee badly cut. Fortunately no bones or cords were cut and we are well on the road to recovery."

Each age has its own crises to pass through. The people of today shall probably never see or experience a Saint Bartholomew; but before Zion is reached or built, we shall probably be tried to the core. And the battles of peace may require as great though different courage than those of war, and to be of longer duration. I am glad we are thinking about facing our trials with fortitude and prudence.

SOME DAYS AGO two letters came to me almost simultaneously in which comments were made on the editorial on the bank holiday which appeared the fore part of March. One writer seemed to have caught the spirit of the editorial and hence read it understandingly; the other seemed only to find matters to criticize adversely and quite entirely failed to appreciate our viewpoint, reading into my sentences what I did not say at all. Here is what one said:

"The spirit of the last two paragraphs of your article in the Herald of March 8 on 'The Bank Holiday' impressed me very much, and I am penning a few lines to express my appreciation for the cheer these sentiments gave me. I believe that such courage is imperative to our ultimate success, and success I am confident will come. More and more each day I feel that with the help of God the church will arise out of its present dilemma chastened it may be true, but with a consecrated people, including the ministry, bigger, and better equipped spiritually for the task assigned from heaven."

Now that's the spirit! If we can smile amidst our afflictions, and find courage even in the midst of stirring and trying (even depressive) times, then we will carry on.

In contrast to this letter, the other one I mentioned carped on in criticisms so far beside the sentiment of the editorial that I wondered what kind of "spectacles" the critic used in reading it. I guess they were not borrowed, for he usually criticizes thus.

I would not have mentioned it here, but I cannot but feel that a reader should try to read understandingly, and catch the spirit, the real spirit of what he is reading. Then his criticisms are more likely to be just. F. M. S.

Quarterlies in Danger

Many branches have greatly reduced their orders for Quarterlies. Some are buying them for the teachers only. And others, harder hit by the depression, have quit ordering Quarterlies altogether, leaving the teachers entirely dependent on their own resources or on old materials.

This has caused considerable reduction in the circulation of Quarterlies, especially for certain of the grades. At present the Herald Publishing House can hardly maintain the system and publish all Quarterlies, even if no further reductions should occur. A warning must be issued to branch officers that they are endangering the educational curriculum of the church school by failing to support the Quarterlies.

Perhaps these officers are failing to see what the children and teachers of the church school are losing by not having Quarterlies. The future will show that loss more keenly than the present does. Not only money, but a great deal of time and effort by some of the best minds of the church have gone into the production of the Quarterlies. To let them fail now would bring a most serious reverse in our development. Branch officers should see what they can do to continue their support of these useful works until better times are here.

Speeding Up the Service

Do You Get Your "Herald" on Time?

The Herald is now published on Tuesday instead of Wednesday, and last week's issue was in the mails a day earlier than usual. This should make it possible for subscribers on both coasts of the United States to get their copies by Saturday. This quick service will not be possible for many who live on R. F. D. routes, but should affect all who receive their mail by city carrier.

We are making every effort to do what we can to get the paper to you on time. Now we would like to know about the results. If you receive your mail by city carrier or post office box, and do not get the Herald by Saturday, kindly let us know. We want to keep the Herald growing, and we want to improve the service.

A Letter to the Editors

Teaching the Law of Tithing

"I just read the editorial, 'Supporting the Church,' in the Herald, and have at other times read articles urging the Saints to pay their tithing. It seems that maybe if this plan were used by every parent, these articles would be unnecessary as everyone would be paying his tithing.

"Perhaps some of the Saints are already doing this, but those who aren't might try the idea. Nearly every child has a bank. If the parents would start, from the first time the bank is opened, and lay aside one tenth for tithing, and let the child watch them do this, and later let him do it himself, it would teach him from babyhood to pay his tithing. The parents would have to explain to him, why he should do this. He will be glad to pay his tenth to the church and will feel that he really is helping to support the church, even if it be only a few cents.

"If every parent would try this, the Saints in the future would give willingly and regularly and the church could make more rapid progress.

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

Please!

Send Sermon Outlines

We are hoping to make this column helpful and interesting for the pastors and members of the priesthood active in local work. The more contributions we can get from readers, the better the column will be.

Send us an outline of your best sermon. This should include the text, together with a three-hundred-word summary of the main points of the sermon. We prefer not to have outlines, as they frequently mean little to anyone but the writer of them.

Do You Make Posters?

A unique and very helpful suggestion recently came to our attention—helpful at least to busy teachers and leaders who wish to do some poster and display work but who lack the abilitiy to do artistic lettering. Miss Ella V. Smith, 1205 College Street, Topeka, Kansas, has designed a number of sets of alphabets—letters in three sizes, suited for poster work. These are artistically done in light cardboard, suitable to use as patterns for tracing, later to be filled in with paint or ink, or to be cut out and pasted. The alphabets are not expensive. Sister Smith will be glad to furnish these at cost to be used in church work. Send a 3-cent stamp for information.

If there is any one thing that the people of the world need today, it is soul rest. This means the quality of mental and spiritual contentment—happiness. This is what we all need and seek though we do not always find it. And the great reason the majority of people are not happy is because they have adopted the wrong method of finding happiness. We seem to be trying to find happiness by seeking wealth. . . . And wealth alone can not bring happiness, but oftentimes brings misery because it is wrongly used.—F. G. Pitt in a sermon preached at the Stone Church, Independence.

Job had no greater need for a continuing and abiding trust in his God than do we of today when our bodies are racked with pain, when we lay our loved ones under the ground, and when what we have laid away as savings is swept away.—President Frederick M. Smith.

The Story of Etta Kett

Just a Bit of Gossip

DID YOU EVER NOTICE, Mother, that trouble makers always kick up a fuss when you're already up to your neck in work and worry? This afternoon it broke loose. I've been expecting something. Things have been running too well this last month to keep it up. With as many cats as I have in that choir, there is bound to be some meowing and scratching."

"Well, what happened?" Mother Kett was peeling potatoes for supper.

And Etta told her mother the story in her own way. But we are going to give our readers a chance to see it just as it happened:

IT HAPPENED while Etta was conducting the choir's final rehearsal for the spring concert at the Elmwood Church. They had romped through the lines of their last chorus with a great deal of fun and enthusiasm. Just as Etta was turning to go Cammie Gannot had cornered her.

"I'm not going to sing in this choir any longer," Cammie declared angrily.

"What's the matter with the choir?" asked Etta. "Except for a few, it's a pretty good choir."

"There's one of them that's not very good."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean she's cheating."

Etta's thoughts swam dizzily, but she kept calm.

"But who is it? Do you realize, woman, that you are destroying somebody's reputation? Do you know what you are talking about?"

"I certainly do. It's Fanny Saunders, if you want to know. And she keeps her window shades down all day long, and I know there is something wrong going on in that house. She's————," but we spare the reader the rest of the accusation, which Cammie delivered in a stage whisper. Etta reached for a chair to steady herself.

"I hope you're mistaken. I hope anything so it's not true. Fannie Saunders is the last woman on earth that would do anything wrong."

"Well, it's true," snapped the other. "You can see for yourself."

"Then come with me now," commanded Etta. "I will see for myself, and you shall go with me." Cammie seemed a little less certain then, but Etta yanked her out to the car, and they sped away.

Fannie Saunders greeted them at the door quietly but cordially. Etta fairly dragged the now pale and excited Cammie in with her.

"We've just dropped in to see how you are," said Etta. "We saw the shades down. Anybody sick?"

"Poor Junior has had a bad time with the measles. It has left his eyes so weak that he can't stand the light. I have to keep the house dark." And Junior, pale and weak, sat bundled in a chair. During the whole visit Cammie said never a word. Etta terminated the visit in friendly manner and took the accusing woman with her. When she let Cammie Gannot out at her home, she had a few words to say:

"I never want to see you in the choir again as long as I'm in charge of it. I think you have one of the most unspeakably nasty and contemptible imaginations I have ever encountered. And I hope you'll try to be better in the future."

"My Book of Thoughts"

Retreat

"Thoughts rule the world."—Emerson.

We have two great needs: the society of our fellows, and solitude. We need society for development, opportunity, and stimulation; we need solitude for rest and for thoughts. Among men we sharpen our wits and acquire information; alone, we let our souls expand and reach out to God. In society we act and react; in solitude we think and pray. We pass years listening to the querulous, impatient, and meaningless voices of people. We ought, for our own good, to spend a few minutes of each day in silence, listening to God. If we would go into His presence, we must go alone.

Last week we explain the plan of the "Book of Thoughts." This week we begin our experiment. Do you have your book ready? If you haven't, read the article of last week, and you can catch up with us.

Above, in boldface type, we give the first quotation for your book. Clip it or copy it as you wish. Put it among the thoughts gathered from your reading. It explains the purpose of "retreat."

Every day try to find some time to be by yourself for the purpose of reading, prayer, and thinking. Write in your book, beginning with an entry of the date, the things that you ought to do. Then write some good things that you can do to make others happier, or to help them. Think of your faults, and resolve to correct them. Reflect on your experience, and write what lessons you have learned from it. Do this every day that you possibly can. Do it in a spirit of prayer. You will find that you will be blessed.

Young People in Action

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN. Twelve young people have complied with the conditions of membership in the Tenth Legion and have taken a mutual pledge to enter actively upon the responsible work of the church. Three report distribution of Heralds, one Stepping Stones, three The Call at Evening, and a copy each Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Young People's Church History, all to outsiders in an effort to introduce the gospel to them. Forty-five nonmembers have been invited to our services, and with thirty-five personal influence has been used to acquaint them with the ideals of the church. Each of the twelve has filed his inventory and fully complied with the financial law.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA. Lawrence Brockway writes: "Our list of prospects for the June Convention in Lamoni has been seriously curtailed by the announcement of a very late closing date for the public schools here. We have the names of eight persons who are definitely planning to go, however; and the enclosed list also includes the names of four who have not yet completed their arrangements. Two branches, San Bernardino and East Los Angeles, are each sending a representative by means of the proceeds from entertainments and suppers put on by the young people of the respective branches. Certainly this interest indicates at least a partial appreciation of the purposes of the convention.

"A district gathering of young people occurred in Los Angeles on March 31st and was attended by a little more than two hundred. After a dinner prepared by the girls of the Los Angeles Branch President Smith spoke on the current problems of youth and I know that a number of his audience were deeply moved. I feel encouraged by the present trends toward an awakening on the part of some of the more promising young folks of the district, but the need for a general enlistment in the church of the interest of youth is overwhelmingly apparent."

DES MOINES, IOWA. The young people are to present the one-act play "At the Gate Beautiful," as one of the three plays to be given Saturday evening June 24 at the Youth Conference.

HOLDEN STAKE. Young people are to present "The Governor's Shoes" as their contribution at the June Conference.

NEWS BRIEFS

Interest Revives in Nebraska Indian Mission

Interest is reviving among the Indians of the mission at Decatur, Nebraska, according to word from their pastor, Bernard Case. On April 23, a band of them gathered at the church, and called a feast for the following Sunday, expecting to bring together a crowd of several hundred.

The gospel work there is beginning to assume some of its former-day proportions and prospects. The women are organizing themselves. Indian workers are beautifying the church grounds. And the children are being recruited in garden clubs. In this movement each child is assigned a plot of land to prepare, plant and harvest under the instruction of a teacher. Brother Case plans to use the garden club project as a means of teaching the children and their parents to remember the Lord with tithes and offerings.

Young People and Priesthood Busy in Alabama Branch

Effective programs have lately been given by the young people of Pleasant Hill Branch, near McKenzie, Alabama. The young women are organized in the Dorcas Circle, and the young men are the R. O. L. H. Club ("Richer Opportunities Lie Here").

There is considerable activity among the ministry of the branch who are sponsoring missions at Jane's Mill and Deer Range. Local men have also visited most of the ninety homes in the branch. They are exerting consecrated effort. Elder Lyle D. Flynn is their pastor.

A Cappella Chorus Popular in Independence

The Graceland A Cappella Chorus won a lasting place in the hearts of Independence and Kansas City people on its visit here April 26-30. Directed by Miss Mabel Carlile, the chorus sang for William Chrisman High School, Independence, Friday afternoon, and gave a concert at the Stone Church that night.

On Sunday, combined with the Wahdemna Choral Club, of Independence, they rendered the music at the Stone Church eleven o'clock service, directed by Paul N. Craig. The concert of the combined choruses at the Scottish Rite Temple, Kansas City, at 3 p. m., proved a fitting climax to a musical weekend. Linna Timmerman Hunt, Graceland's voice teacher and artist, was the soprano soloist, and special numbers were sung by the Graceland Male Quartet.

Meetings All Winter for Historic Clitherall

For the first time in many years regular weekly church services were held all winter in the little church at Clitherall, Minnesota. This was due in large measure to the interest and industry of members living in the vicinity.

Their services were of high order, and God has ministered to them through their pastor, Lester Whiting, J. W. Peek, Frank Tucker, and others. Apostle J. F. Curtis lately visited this group, arousing new interest.

Missionary Promise in Arkansas and Louisiana

Elder A. M. Baker, missionary to Arkansas and Louisiana, feels that there is much to be accomplished for the gospel cause in his territory. He is now carrying out an active missionary program, having worked recently at Dunn and Eros, Louisiana, Hot Springs, Arkansas, and other points. In the past few weeks he has baptized twelve candidates.

Miss Amy Glassford Leads Choir at Youngstown, Ohio

The choir of Youngstown Branch, Ohio, organized last fall, passed an important milestone of its choral experience with the rendering of the Easter cantata, "The Resurrection and the Life." This group of seventeen singers are making a name for themselves, and much of the credit for their success goes to Sister Amy Glassford, the director. Miss Glassford was one of the soprano soloists in the Centennial Conference oratorio, Brother J. T. Gresty's "The Course of Time."

Des Moines Class Studies President Elbert A. Smith's Pamphlet

The young married people's class of the Des Moines Church school, the members of which call themselves the K. S. O's ("Keep Serving Others"), meets once a month for social and recreational purposes, and are studying President Elbert A. Smith's pamphlet, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." There are thirty members in the class and Elder George Orr is their president, and Elder Clyde McDonald, their teacher.

THE NATURE OF LIFE

A Communication From
John W. Rushton - -

Apostle John W. Rushton kindly sends a clipping from the "Birmingham Mail" (England) and a letter of explanation. The trend of thinking among greater men of science toward a belief in a spiritual universe is a strong support to those whose lives are lighted by faith.

GLASGOW, SCOTLAND.

Mr. Leonard Lea
Independence, Missouri
Dear Brother:

I am enclosing the latest pronouncement of Sir Oliver Lodge on the question of the continuity of life, which may prove of interest to your readers. It is rather singular that the strongest support these days for a spiritual interpretation of the universe is coming from the "physicists." When one considers the names of Crookes, Lodge, Rutherford, Eddington, Millikan and Jeans as well as Einstein whose writings are saturated with a reverent recognition of the "mystic element" which was supposed to be the especial field of religion, it is indeed significant. It is not too much to say, the "materialistic interpretation" is no longer acceptable and the "spiritual reality" is the foundation of modern philosophy. The closing paragraphs of this article are of encouragement to those "who endure as having seen the Invisible." "If you have evidence of the existence of a spiritual world, a world of help and guidance and sympathy, then you can hold to it in spite of every denial of the materialists, who can only base their denial on the absence of any sensory stimulus to their material organism. Such a world may exist all around us, yet can only be spiritually discerned. The existence of a spiritual world throughout the depths of space is becoming to me a great and fundamental, even a physical reality." Summed up very simply, Sir Oliver means that there is more to our life than we are able to register through the five senses. That Death which takes us to our Gethsemane of bereavement is not the end, but the beginning. The beginning of a new experience in which life, that mysterious organizer of form and beauty, will continue its organizing power in further "evolutionary developments." The fact that we only know of life in association with matter does not justify the conceit born of ignorance, that there can be no more or other associations.

With Saint Paul we may argue from the analogy of Nature and believe in the "glories of the sun, moon and stars." And, as one star is different from another, so also will be the resurrected state. Good Friday is not the end of our Lord's life; there followed the Easter and then Ascension Day. The eyes of love see the angel in the tomb where the eye of criticism sees only a shroud.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Maundy Thursday 1933.

(The article following is reprinted from the Birmingham Mail for April 4, 1933.)

Sir Oliver Lodge contributes to "Q. H.," the Queen's Hospital annual, just published, an absorbing article on "The Mode of Future Existence" in which he outlines the case for survival after death.

"When we consider the question of Survival from the physical point of view," he says, "we are up against the ancient problem of the connection between mind and body. The body is certainly made of matter, but matter is inert, it never does anything, it is completely controlled by the forces acting upon it, which forces exist in the empty space merely continues in whatever state it was last made to accept. If any change is observed in atomic or material behaviour, it is a sign of some activity, surrounding the atoms. Left to itself, matter some energy apart from matter, demonstrating its existence by acting upon matter, and causing some acceleration or retardation proportionate to the force exerted.

Energy only makes itself manifest by its effect on material bodies, but its main existence is in space. We have no sense organ for perceiving energy itself, our senses tell us of nothing but matter. We can see the results of energy as expended upon matter, but we have no direct apprehension of the energy. We are not acquainted with anything in the Universe save by its effect upon matter, and that is the origin of our tendency to philosophic materialism; we are liable to doubt whether things not apparent to the senses can have a real existence, though there is no justification for such a doubt.

NOT MATTER ALONE

"The physical Universe does not consist of matter alone. If it did, it would be absolutely inert, no change would ever occur. Experience shows us con-

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

A Lecture to the Priesthood, Independence, Missouri, February 14, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

IV.—Spiritual Attitudes

THE Apostle Peter (2 Peter 3: 11,) propounded the question to the Saints, "What manner of persons ought we to be?" Certainly as a ministry, in view of our sacred calling and setting apart, our priestly investment and our responsibilities, we may well ask ourselves, What manner of men ought we to be?

The Lord desires to implant certain ideas in human minds and to arouse certain emotions in human hearts. That is just about what preaching is. If those ideas and ideals were something ponderable like a bushel of wheat or a gallon of gasoline, and if men were simply containers, it would be an easy matter to pour into each one according to his capacity. Men are more than containers. We are not chalices into which God may pour the sacramental wine and fill us, and we are not garbage cans into which the devil may pour his trash. Men must of themselves perceive these ideas. They must apprehend them. They must appropriate them, just as we did; and the most that the Lord has ever promised to do for them, in the light of their free agency through which they can accept or reject, is to guide them in their search for truth and to quicken their intelligence, that they may see, and comprehend, and appropriate.

We Are Persuasive Agents

In this task we are persuasive agents. There are very few times in our ministry when we are in position to say to anyone, "You must toe the mark"; and there are fewer times when that is advisable even if we are in a position to do so. Sometimes it may be necessary, but the character of our ministry is pretty well set forth, by Paul: "We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." (2 Corinthians 5: 20.) That is the very spirit of our ministry, to reconcile men to each other and reconcile men to God. We must have the spirit and ministry of reconciliation.

We must never forget that we are persuasive agents. I think that was characteristic almost entirely of Christ's ministry. His attitude was one of invitation. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "The spirit and the bride say come, and whosoever will let him come and drink of the waters of life freely." He said on another occasion, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." When he appeared to John on the Isle of Patmos he said, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man will open I will come in." He does not propose to force the door of any man's heart. That was the spirit of his ministry, and he said, "As the Father hath sent me into the world, so send I you." Our ministry must be one of persuasion, whether we are preaching the gospel to the world or attempting to teach or advise or influence the Saints. All the time our ministry must be persuasive.

Appropriate Dress

There are certain factors that will aid us in this ministry. Our audiences, if we are preachers, the family we visit, if we are visiting officers, will see first of all certain externals. The question of dress, appropriate dress, may seem a rather unimportant item in a spiritual ministry, but there is no question but that our dress has some psychological influence on our own mental attitudes, as well as upon the attitude of those who see us.

As a boy I grew up in a state of at least near poverty, near enough anyway. We always had enough to eat but we had no luxuries and seldom had what we called "store clothes." My mother made my clothing when I was a boy, from the skin out. One year Sister David Dancer, of sacred memory, sent me from Lamoni a pair of trousers which her son had outgrown; and very acceptable they were, but the color did not suit my mother and she determined to dye them brown—which was a very good project except that they came out of the dye pot red. The first time I was persuaded into those trousers and wore them in public was on the Fourth of July (Independence Day), and all day long I felt that I attracted more attention than the fireworks or the parade. When I went home at night I issued another "declaration of independence." There was no authority on the place that could get me into those things again. So I discovered that while clothes do not make the man, they may make him very uncomfortable, and self-conscious.

A young man who is teaching for the first time this year in Graceland College said to me, "I find that I have to be more careful in my dress now that I stand before a class. I feel more confidence if I am sure that I am properly dressed." When he was just a student sitting in the back row, an old sweater and pair of trousers were all right, but now that he is up in front as teacher he has an instinctive feeling, which is well grounded, that his class will have more respect for him and hence give more attention to his message if he is properly clothed than if he were in slovenly garments. If that applies to teachers, it will apply to ministers, whether they are preaching from the pulpit or visiting in the homes. We have enough prejudices to overcome without creating unnecessary ones.

I think this is rather unnecessary to present to this congregation. Our priesthood here and generally our ministry throughout the church have made a great improvement in the matter of dress in the last twenty years, and they present a fine appearance, even in these hard times.

Correct Speech

In delivering our message, whether in preaching or as visiting officers advising and counseling, our hearers hear our words first, and they are too apt to judge the message by the words. They may never get any farther than the words, like the county school superintendent when the would-be teacher entered his office and said, "I have came for my certificate," and the superintendent replied, "You can went home without it." The applicant was examined and failed to pass before he knew what had happened.

One of our local men filled with enthusiasm preached to the young people a special sermon and admonished them to make good use of their time, which was a very good idea, and he bore down on them pretty hard for wasting their time in various ways; but he made so many blunders, so many errors in grammar in the course of his sermon, that afterwards the young people got together and said, "This man has been a preacher for twenty or thirty years. If he has not thought it worth while to use his time to learn how to speak the English language reasonably well, he has no right to stand up and tell us how to use our time." They may have been entirely wrong. They should have listened to his message—but that is what happened. His sermon was a failure for that one reason.

I realize that the argument is made that the Lord will use the stammering tongue and that he will use the ignorant and so on, and I make due allowance for that. He has done all of that. But when he has selected a man with a stammering tongue it has been because of other outstanding qualities. Moses was a man slow of speech, but he had the characteristics of a very great leader. In fact as you review the history of the world as revealed in the Scriptures you will find the men God selected were usually outstanding men, men of strength, of intelligence, men of great native ability; and you will discover that they (though they had defects of training and were sometimes handicapped by ignorance) began almost immediately to polish themselves. "Study to show thyself approved" is the admonition of New Testament times.

We have the classical example of J. J. Cornish who when he started out to preach could not read his own text. He had to have some one read his text for him, and yet the Lord certainly blessed him. He was one of our most powerful and profitable missionaries. But J. J. Cornish immediately began to study to overcome those defects, and some years ago when he sent in his autobiography written by his own hand and we went over the manuscript we found it well written, even excellently punctuated. Many a university man would do a worse job of spelling, punctuating, and construction than J. J. Cornish did. Do you think he was any less useful to God after he had passed through the process of self-education?

Gomer T. Griffiths was another man who started out under great difficulties. I believe he was not able to read his text. He had great difficulty in pronouncing many of the English words. He was of Welsh descent. You have heard his story, I suppose, how he was to preach on Sunday and wanted to use the word spurious, and he could not pronounce the letter "s." All he could say was "purious." So he sat up half the night saying that one word over and over, until he could say, "spew," "spew." Finally his wife called him and said, "Gomer, what is the matter? Are you sick?" Thus he industriously and diligently labored to overcome the handicap of a stammering tongue and to store his formerly ignorant mind with a vast amount of self-acquired education.

I do not mean that our men must be finicky "purists" in their language. I suppose most of us make many blunders in talking, in pronouncing words, but fortunately often they are of that character that the congregation does not know much more about it than we do and does not catch us at it. But certainly all of us should learn to avoid the grosser errors in grammar. Here are some things that will really help you men, who, like myself, had very limited opportunity for education in youth. Nothing will help a man more in this regard than reading good literature; read carefully—and there is no literature in the world finer than the Bible. That is rather significant, too, that God's word, compiled by so many different writers, should be so outstanding in the fine characteristics of literature; there is nothing to surpass it in the written word anywhere in the world. Read good literature.

It will help you sometimes, too, to take your own sentences apart. For example we so frequently get

"And a Little Child Shall---"

By L. B. M.

WHAT will he do on Children's Day this year, that four-year-old boy of yours? What are the plans? Are adequate preparations being made in your home and in your church school to make this Children's Day significant in the lives of that eight-year-old of yours who wants to be baptized, and that shy-eyed, eleven-year-old daughter who loves to "imagine things" on the piano keys? Such questions are causing parents, teachers and officers to think as the day again approaches.

To many people in the church Children's Day, generally observed on the second Sunday in June, is just another Sunday, one of the two times in a year when the children's interests dominate the church services. The other day is Christmas Sunday. It means little else than just a time when the kiddies may speak their pieces and sing their songs amid the approving smiles of glowing and proud parents and friends. It is no more than a parade of cradle roll, beginner and primary departments to some adults not interested in children, who smile with amused forbearance at the program numbers, or stay at home from service. But the fact that Children's Day means so little to such people is not the fault of the children.

There is a meaning, and there is an effectiveness in Children's Day. It is the task of parents and workers to discover that meaning, and to make apparent in the lives of every young one that effectiveness.

The origin of Children's Day is indefinite. From very early times pastors who were child-hearted—our modern term is child-conscious—have devoted certain Sundays to special services for the children. On such occasions sermons were preached for the little folks. With the growth of the Sunday school, a comparatively new organization, concerts by children and young people began to be popular. About the middle of the nineteenth century pastors of certain denominations learned that such days were opportune for the dedication of children to Christian life, and some were wise enough to think of the rededication of parents and guardians to the bringing up of their children in Christian faith and training. In 1856, the Reverend Charles H. Leonard, pastor of the First Universalist Church, of Chelsea, Massachusetts, set aside the second Sunday in June for this purpose.

The movement grew among other churches, the name of the day, the character of its program, and sometimes even its purpose varying according to the notions of the churches and people concerned. Many considered it a day for the cultivating of benevolence, usually benevolence of a denominational character. By some the day was designated as "Flower Sunday"; to others it was known as "Rose Sunday"; some one else spoke of it as "Christening Sunday." To many it became Children's Day, a time when the smiling faces of little boys and girls made a lasting impression on the grown-ups of the congregation. It will never be known how long those childish voices raised in song or recitation, echo in some lonely, old heart.

Yes, Children's Day arose in response to the quickened, warm-hearted interest of the churches in their children, and now is annually observed.

The day is a pleasing occasion to the normal adult. Its programs and ceremonies, the little ones taking prominent part, remind them that Jesus when he was here on earth, laid his hands on little children and blessed them. They remember that the Savior of men told those who stood about on one such occasion that they must become as little children before they could enter the kingdom of heaven. They recall that Christ himself was given to the world as a little child: "Unto us a child is born. . . ." And the angel announced to the shepherds, "Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes."

What does Children's Day mean to us? An important question. But more important is: What are we making Children's Day mean to our boys and girls? Do we help them learn to appreciate it for its significance—a time for the dedication of their lives to Christ? Is it a time for happy, hopeful thoughts, decisions, songs? Is it a day when new understanding springs up between parents and their children, big brothers and little brothers, big sisters and little sisters? (Such an understanding must exist if the family is happy, and it frequently needs renewing, freshening, making more sympathetic and enduring.) Or is it just a day on which the departments of the church school are permitted to look at each other in action, and many times the action is confused as to meaning?

Children's Day is not a time for adults to gush, lose themselves in baby-talk, or overwork the program element. It is a day for men and women to think and plan, not to play. It will help them to recall the days of their own childhood and to con-

Chapter 18

Visiting Little Shrines

IT WAS a lovely spring morning. The sky was a deep blue and there was not a cloud in sight. Polly assured herself of these facts before she started to dress. She was glad, for she had plans for that day, important plans.

But she said nothing at breakfast in answer to Brad's query concerning her work except that she hoped to keep busy, and then she asked if he expected anything to prevent his coming home to lunch. He did not—he would be home.

It was Friday and since the women of the group were to hold their meeting at her house the following week, she wanted to revel in the first house cleaning she had done in several weeks. She really ought to be thinking of spring house cleaning soon. Already several of her neighbors had done theirs.

The morning went well. She delved into the attic, scrubbed her workroom, and thoroughly cleaned her's and Brad's room. Only the door to the nursery remained unopened. It was nine-thirty when she brought the dust mop and all other cleaning apparatus downstairs. She was making excellent time, and so she decided to freshen up the living room. After she had run the sweeper on the rug, she turned on the radio and heard some of the mid-morning programs as she worked. Thought of her plans for the rest of the day gave her vigor.

From the living room she swung her attention to the study. It showed signs of frequent occupancy. Books stood in uneven rows on the shelves. Brad's desk was a pile of papers and books with pencil sharpeners, pens, ink bottles, and even a clothes-brush and a spool of thread intermingled. The couch was dusty and the covering wrinkled. Pillows were strewn about, and in the window seat her Easter lily had withered. Evidently Sister Livingston and Edith, who of late weeks had done most of the housekeeping, had considered the study sacred to Brad's belongings and use, and had left it untouched.

Standing the sweeper against the wall, she began picking up the pillows and restoring them to their usual places. Then she came to the big leather chair, Brad's chair. A book was sprawled open on its face in the seat of the chair, one of Brad's books of poems.

Brad reading poetry? That fact in itself was a mild shock, but the poet was even a greater surprise. "John Greenleaf Whittier" the gold lettering on the back said. There was something not exactly congruous about Brad reading and appreciating Whittier. She picked up the book. Heavy pencilings on the open page attracted her eye. The marks encircled:

"Yet Love will dream, and Faith will trust,
(Since He who knows our need is just,)
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress-trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own!"

Along the margin was written the single word, "Polly."

It was a soberer Polly who went on with her work. Brad expected a great deal of her. She wondered if she were able to show him the kind of faith he needed. Brad was groping for faith, for help, for strength, she knew, else he would not have turned to poetry and Whittier. He was not much of a reader of books.

As she folded up the old papers on his desk, she breathed a prayer of bigness, strength, and faith. All these she needed for him, for something told her that Brad's status as business man, kindly host, and good neighbor, commendable though it was, was not all there was in store for him. She seemed to sense a broader future for him.

IT WAS two o'clock in the afternoon, and the sun glistened through budding tree branches when Polly, garbed in a brown suit and hat and wearing walking shoes, went into her tulip bed. On one arm swung a small basket. She cut all the white tulips in the bed. There were nine, and placed them in the basket, and then she crossed the yard and set out up the street northward.

This mission was a secret, at least until after it was over. Soon she was out of town and had crossed Highway 24. She liked to walk along River Road. The view of the town was excellent. It was a mile to Mound Grove Cemetery, but the distance did not seem that far to Polly. She turned in at the iron gate and slowed her step in order that she might look at a number of familiar monuments. Soon she was walking down the long western slope.

What a tiny green mound it made, there under the tall oak tree a little apart from the other graves! The undertaker's marker informed the passerby that there lay sleeping Carrol Winslow Nelson, age two years, seven months, and four days. Some one had taken away all the withered flowers.

Spreading a paper on the ground, Polly seated herself, put the basket aside, and idly looked all about. It was beautiful there with new green just sprinkling the hills, the blue haze of the spring sky, and great splashes of sunshine. And then she gazed more intently at her son's resting place. In imagination she pictured it made attractive with a small white marble marker, plants of baby breath on the mound, and a white lilac at the foot. But for this coming summer they would have to be content with white petunias and marigolds. And until these could grow and bloom, she would use cut flowers from the garden at home. As she planned, she laid the tulips one below the other down the center of the mound. The bell-shaped blossoms resembled curious buttons down the front of a slightly gray, slightly green coat.

"This is the best mother can offer you just now, Chappie, dear," she spoke gently. One should always speak gently over a grave. "They aren't as pretty as your flowers—oh, I haven't forgotten them. Later, when it's summer, your bed will be white and gold with petunias and marigolds. Remember how you liked the marigolds in the garden last year?"

Then she realized that she was talking aloud, and stopped. She looked guiltily about for fear some one had heard her. After all it was rather silly to sit talking to a grave.

But there was no one about, and so placing both hands on the little mound of earth, she went on: "I rather imagine, Chappie, this place will be a sort of spiritual clearing house for mother. Maybe she can solve some of her problems here. I want the memory of you, the very presence of you to help me; I need it so much, darling."

A problem uppermost in her mind was that of Brad's mother. Lonely old soul that she was, despondent, her faith wavering. What could be done to relieve her of her self-imposed anguish? For a long time the young woman sat motionless, her gray eyes gazing at a point on a distant hill. She recalled the words of Sister Livingston: "A light in her life has gone out. I suspect you don't realize how much that one grandson meant in her sight. She adored him." And thinking she had been the cause of that adored grandson's death, she had gone away, back to Oregon to an already unhappy daughter! Polly shuddered. Perhaps the ground was yet too cold and damp. Perhaps she should not sit there. Still her mind worked with the problem, and she did not move.

A glance at her watch told her that it was three-forty. She had been there more than an hour. She found it a great effort to concentrate on any one of the many readjustments to be made. She could not keep her thoughts away from that beauteous place where Carrol played with other little children in the flowers.

Her face lit up with a pleased smile. She had thought of something she could do. She hoped it would help Mrs. Nelson. At that moment a bluebird fluttered into the oak and out again, only a flash of blue, but how it brightened the world for Polly.

Then she set about stirring up the earth over the grave with the garden trowel she had brought in the basket. Over the upper part she sowed white petunia seed, and near the foot, marigold seed. And after she had planted, she carried water from a near-by hydrant in a minute sprinkler which had also been tucked away in her basket. Then the small grave was alone under the oak, the spring breezes sighing a lullaby in the yet bare boughs.

"What do you want to do tonight?" Brad's question was casual, as he drew his wife down on the arm of his chair.

For a moment she did not reply, but ran her fingers playfully through his hair. Finally she lifted his chin with an index finger until she could look into his eyes. There was a world of devotion in the light of those eyes—funny she had ever worried about that. A smile twinkled in the corners of her mouth, but she soberly replied: "Just to be with you, Brad. Let's don't go anywhere. I like it better at home. I'm getting to be a regular old hermit."

For answer he took her into the chair beside him, held the evening paper for her, and together they read the news of Independence.

"So you would rather be just with me, eh?" he demanded after a time, and kissed her. "Since when, young lady?"

"Oh, but I have something for us to do, something special." She nodded gravely, entirely disregarding his question. "I've saved this evening for it. We're going to visit a little shrine tonight." She drew herself out of the chair and leaned against the desk. "Carrol's shrine, Brad, don't you want to go with me?"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

His gray eyes spoke eloquently even before his lips: "You know I do, dear." He stood up and reached for her hand: "I'll go with you anywhere —as far as I am worthy."

Then she told him of her mission of the afternoon, of the quiet and peace, the seeds she had planted, the bluebird.

IT WAS about this time that they usually put their son to bed, and as they went up the stairway, Polly thought of other nights, how Brad had carried the precious, sleepy burden, put him in the crib, and together they stood looking down at their drowsy son. Frequently Brad had said: "With him, Polly, we are rich."

Suddenly an intense yearning filled the woman's heart, and she thought of the lonely grave out north. Courage was failing her, but the grip of Brad's hand over hers was tight, and softly he turned the knob of the nursery door.

Nothing except shadows until Brad's fingers found the light button and pressed it. How familiar the Mother Goose wall paper, the little lamp, the ivory-colored crib, small dresser and chest! Together they crossed the threshold and stood looking about.

The sight of so many dear, familiar things associated with Carrol's happy existence shot Polly's heart with a grief more poignant than she had yet experienced. It seemed almost as if Carrol himself were hiding about from pure mischief and would presently emerge into view. Everything of Carrol's had been carried into that room. There in the corner was the squatty, spotted hobby horse his grandmother had given him. Little Remus still lay among the bedclothes in the crib. Carrol's baby expressions, and many of his little habits and tricks rushed into his mother's consciousness.

"Oh, it's all so sweet!" she choked, stepping away from the crib. "Oh, Brad, let's go out—I can't stand it! I miss him so much!"

"Not just yet, Polly, can't you stay with me?" Something in his tone held her. He reached with his other hand and reverently touched the little white blanket in the crib. "This is a shrine. It is a place to worship. Do you remember how many times, we've stood here together, Polly—" he halted to still the trembling of his voice, "looking down at him as he slept? And we thought how rich we were?"

Praying for courage and strength, Polly nodded her reply.

"Polly, he isn't here now—he isn't here!" His voice broke with suffering and fear. It didn't sound like Brad's voice. "He's gone, and we—"

"We're still rich," her clear voice supplied. "Oh, yes, we are, Brad," she hurried on. "We don't have Chappie, but we do have a beautiful memory, and we have a promise that if we live as we should, we shall some day meet him again."

"Do you really believe that, Polly, honestly? Or are you just fooling yourself like so many others?"

"I know it's true, Brad." Her voice was steady now. Again assurance had come to her in a time of real need. Fear was gone, heartbreak forgotten. Here, where so often they had been with their son, was the place to tell him of her vision, of her knowledge.

"Let's sit down," she suggested, and drew up an ivory-painted stool. He found a chair, and there, within arm's reach of the little crib, she told him of her experience during the prayer of administration by Brother Smith. Her hand rested on his, and as her even voice continued, his head bowed lower and lower until, at last, his forehead rested against the foot of the crib.

"It was all so wonderful, Brad, that I felt supremely blessed. I should have told you of it before—it would have helped you, too, but I was thoughtless, selfish. Such an experience is sacred to me and very blessed. And it links up so closely with the words of Jesus of which Sister Livingston reminded me yesterday: 'Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.' Some day, dearest, I hope that you, and Carrol and I and all our friends shall be gathered where He is. Isn't that a wonderful promise?"

"But faith, Polly!" and Brad raised his head from its resting place, "I don't have it! I wish I did. God knows how much I would like to have faith! But I have always considered religion as a sort of ritual and ceremonial thing for women and the church as an organization of hypocrites. In my cocky way I have laughed at faith, or at least suspected it, and now when I need it, I don't have it. I don't deserve it either."

Polly let him talk. It was best that he give expression to all these things.

"And when one has stumbled along in the darkness and gloom of an inactive church membership,

OUR AUTHORITY

Part Four

By Hermann Peisker

In our previous articles we have set forth the basis of authority, both in the Old and also in the New Testament times. We have also examined many of the claims, which are used by present-day organizations to justify their existence as separate bodies, in their demand for recognition as ambassadors for Jesus Christ.

It is only right that we should set forth our own claims and compare them with the divine method revealed in God's Word. We have no right to criticize others if we are not willing to allow the light of God's word to shine on our own Church.

The Test

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8: 20.)

The test of all claims is "the law and the testimony." The "law" is the word of God spoken by His Own voice, by Jesus Christ, by angels and by the mouth of His prophets. The "testimony" is the historical record of the way in which God's people received and acted on the divine revelations. The "Word of God" is the rule by which we can test and measure every church and organization.

The Name of the Church

Paul called the church the "body of Christ," "church of the firstborn" and "the whole family" "of Jesus Christ" (1 Corinthians 12: 27; Hebrews 12: 23; Ephesians 3: 14, 15.) John called the church the "bride, the lamb's wife." (John 3: 29; Revelation 19: 7, 8; 21: 9.) Jesus Christ said "my church." (Matthew 15: 18.)

As early as the days of Paul there were divisions in the church. Some called themselves after Paul; some after Cephas and some after Apollos. Paul rebuked them sharply. The only name under heaven for the church was that of the crucified one and the one in whose name they had been baptized—Jesus Christ. (1 Corinthians 2: 2; Acts 2: 38.)

By command of God we call the church by the name of her Lord, The Church of Jesus Christ.

The Origin of Our Church

History repeats itself. God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake anciently to his people by his own voice, his Son, angels, and through his prophets, has done the same thing in the present age.

After a complete apostasy of every branch of the early Church of Jesus Christ in doctrine, organization and practice, and spiritual darkness for many centuries, God again spoke from heaven and called men directly into his service and ministry.

Between the years 1820 and 1830 the heavens were opened again. The voice of God was heard by men. Jesus Christ appeared in vision, just as literally as he did to Paul, calling men to lay the foundation of His church once again. Angels and servants of God who held the authority in past ages appeared openly and at the direction of God helped men of the present age in the "restoration" of the church. The authority and knowledge which they possessed was made available to men of the present age.

Authority and Organization

The first work of the restoration was a divine command and authority to preach the Gospel and act as ambassadors for Jesus Christ.

The command to preach was soon followed by the command to officiate in the gospel sacraments, most of which had been changed or rejected by the apostate churches. Adult immersion, baptism of believers only was restored. So also were the ordinances of confirmation, blessing of children, anointing and healing of the sick and many other forgotten or neglected gospel practices.

The restoration of authority, and the return of the ancient gifts and blessings which accompanied the restoration of ancient order of doctrine and ceremonial, paved the way for the complete renewal of the New Testament church.

Between the years 1830 and 1835, under the direct supervision of heaven and command of God, the church of Jesus Christ was restored. The organization comprised living and divinely called apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, elders, bishops, deacons, seventies, teachers, etc., all functioning as in New Testament times. (1 Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4: 9-16. Acts 14: 23; Luke 10: 1, 2; Philippians 1: 1, etc.)

Apostolic Succession

The church of Jesus Christ has a real apostolic succession today. It is a living one.

Men are called to the work of the ministry exactly as the Apostles of New Testament times were.

FAMILY LIFE---A Protest

By W. L. CHAPMAN

SURELY there are but few subjects that prove as interesting for study as various points of view of persons born and raised under varied environments. Yet it is not strange that each should think the others view peculiar, since their minds have been trained so differently.

Then, with this thought before us I feel sure that I will be pardoned for expressing my peculiar opinion on family life and the place of parents in the family circle. That you might have the background for my thinking, permit me to review, briefly my early life. Father and mother were the parents of eight boys and three girls. All lived to adulthood save the second boy. To add to my peculiar thinking I happened to be the seventh son of my father who was the seventh son. To add to that, my mother dedicated me before my birth. All of this together surely gives me the right to be peculiar.

Decisions in our family had to be made by each child. My parents did every thing that they could to help each to fashion his life. Family prayer, in which each child took part each morning and evening, was perhaps the basic factor that helped the most. Bible reading was also a part of that foundation. Proper examples were set; each child was taught the right thing to do; but when that failed, mother had a way of talking to each one that in most cases secured results. But if that failed father had a "manly way" of persuasion, some times a small switch or just a common razor strop would help the thinking organs. Regardless of the method used, my parents saw to it that we had the proper foundation for right thinking. That foundation was obedience to law and orders. Years have proved to the family the correctness of our parents' method. Today we praise their names, character and methods.

The preceding paragraph suggested "Obedience to laws and orders," as the basis of all proper thinking. Surely "Obedience" has been forgotten by many persons, both in the church and out. Everyday we see, hear or read of the results of disobedience. It may be just an auto accident, a few years of confinement with the Government as their supervisor, or it may be just a last seat on a special built chair, perhaps a gangster's bullet. Even if all of these are passed some day we come before the "Judgment Bar" of a just God from which we can not escape. Then the price for disobedience is paid and paid in full. Why not practice self-control before rather than after?

Disobedience and its punishments are a result of attitudes that call for theories such as "This is my life—keep out." May I be permitted to use personal experiences, not just individual cases but cases that are common to every pastor. A few years ago, while pastor in a certain city, I was asked to go to the "city hold-over," in company with others, to plead the cause of a mother for her boy. The chief was very kind; he asked us to listen to the story from this lad himself. The story was told, after which we were forced to agree with the officer of the law. Nevertheless, a physical examination was made, according to the request that we had carried to the court. As a result of the examination the chief proved his position and he and the doctor so told the mother and her boy. This was the advice; the thing that was needed was not medical treatment but that the proper mental treatment was needed years before. Christian teachings were not given during the period when that mind could have been molded. The crime that brought disgrace to the boy, his parents, his church (and above all he brought his Master to an open shame), he and this mother had done as a result of neglect.

Now for another that is much more pleasant: A boy that had been trained in a good Christian home. I just happened to go there to make a priesthood visit. The lad was of course, desirous of getting my reaction—what was to be my position in regard to a change that this boy desired to make, that his parents advised against? Was I to say, "This is your life. Tell all others to keep out"? Or was I to say just what I did say, and what any other pastor would have said, "Listen to your parents."?

No one need be a "wallflower" because of confiding in his parents. Every person, who confides in his parents, who are of the Christian type, will find plenty of friends and they will be of the higher type. It was my pleasure, all my life, to enjoy all of the friends that one could desire. Aside from that I was selected by the young people of Independence to head the first young people's organization that was ever started in this city, to my knowledge. What more could one desire? That honor was not a result of my telling my older friends, my mother or any others to keep out of my life. It was, however, a direct result of listening to counsel from my mother and from good Christian people.

Now leaving these personal experiences let us tune our ears and hear the words of others on this subject. Here we have Paul in Ephesians 6: 1-3: "Children obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right. Honour they father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise, that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." Of course that is just Bible. Nevertheless, a thousand persons may say that it is wrong, the fact still exists that some day we each will have to face that statement and be judged accordingly, for it still remains as scripture, after all has been said against it. As proof of its worth, people who consider it live happier and after all that is what every one desires.

Here are the inspired words of Joseph Smith in Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4: "All children are bound by law to obey their parents, and to influence them to embrace any religious faith or be baptized or leave their parents without their consent, is unlawful and unjust. We believe that all persons who exercise control over their fellow beings and prevent them from embracing the truth, will have to answer for that sin." This places a great responsibility on the shoulders of any person who would advise any child to say to his parents, "This is my life; keep out." It matters not what the subject may be so long as the parents are trying to advise according to the truth.

The Master of men said in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, taking just the part that applies to this, "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine . . . the sin be upon the heads of the parents, for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion . . . and they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord . . . their children are also growing up in wickedness . . . These things ought not to be and must be done away from among them . . ." Regardless of how

Some weeks ago a short article entitled "Wallflowers and Cactuses" appeared in the Pigeonhole, admonishing anxious mothers against the fallacy of trying to snare "dates" for backward daughters and otherwise interfering with their proper social development. We still think that certain parents are severe handicaps to their own children.

One isolated sentence moved the author of the article on this page to write. That sentence was, "This is my life: keep out." Quite independently of the thing that started it, this article, from its special viewpoint, merits attention.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

many persons who may advise, "This is my life, keep out," it does not take these statements from the divine word. This still remains to face us; and as a parent, I expect to do the teaching of our child and not to leave it to another.

A speaker to the young people, one Sunday afternoon, said something about like this, "If we are going some place we need a pilot for our ship; but if we are going no place we need no pilot, for it matters not that we hit the rocks, for we are going no place anyway, and since we are sure to hit a rock some time we might as well hit one as another." That is just it. As people of God we are going some place, or at least there is a goal that we are expected to reach. Some one has said, "Since God could not be everywhere he sent mothers to act in his stead." Our parents are the very best pilots that we can secure. When we lose them we lose a treasure and then it becomes necessary for us to make other associations. This is not something that can be lightly considered. Counsel, of the right kind, can only be received from people who have first proved their right to counsel by having patterned their lives after the Master of men; for he never did say, "This is my life; keep out."

May we learn to appreciate more fully the great value of these Christian men and women. In place of seeing them taking a back seat may they be brought forward and placed in an easy chair where the younger men and women can come and sit at their feet and learn the lessons of life from them. As long as we have to learn by experiences we will never make any more progress in the future than has been made in the past. But if through the experiences of these fathers and mothers we can learn to come to the place in our early lives where they are in their closing lives, progress will be assured, for we have already started beyond their best goals.

The best description of the young American girl in our literature is in a wholly forgotten but excellent novel by Laurence Oliphant, entitled Altiora Peto, published more than forty years ago. Laurence Oliphant was the Aldous Huxley of his age, and he saw the American young woman with a fresh, unbiased, but critical eye, and he saw that she was very good. Her chief handicap is her harem. No sound civilization can be built up when one of the two sexes is confined in a harem. "Let the men out of the harem!" should be the slogan of America; and once this is achieved, the possibilities of America for a great cultural future that will surpass that of Egypt, Greece, of the European Renaissance are great indeed. . . .—W. J. Turner.

Logic is the anatomy of thought.—Locke.

stant change, constant activity, and, when analysed, the source of this activity is always found in the field or space between the atoms. That is where the energy exists, that is where it is stored; and we can gradually realise that it is through interaction between the void and the material particles that every change or activity is accomplished.

"It is only by observing the behavior of material bodies that we can become aware of the existence of a field of force or of a seat of energy. The form with which we are best acquainted is the form of motion, and that is the only form ever associated with matter. All the other forms are hidden and make no impression upon us, save when they encounter material particles and thus display their existence. No one, for instance, could experience a magnetic field without a bit of iron to test it with. No one has any knowledge of the broadcast waves which now surround us unless he has a suitable detecting apparatus in the form of a wireless set and a telephone. And, strange to say, we can only appreciate light when it impinges upon some piece of matter and thence is deflected into the eyes.

"We cannot understand the activity of the material Universe without taking energy into account, and this energy exists in the space between the particles. Matter is discontinuous, consisting of isolated particles; they are connected only through space. But inasmuch as this space is impregnated with energy, it must be something more than mere emptiness. It makes no impression on our senses, yet it is full of energy, and is the reservoir of all activity; hence we have agreed to call it the Ether.

What Life Can Do

"So when we say that life only exists in a material organism, we ought to say that life only manifests itself in association with such an organism, and that when it is dissociated from matter we know nothing of its existence. We have no right to say that it is extinct. All that we know is that it is no longer manifest; it has gone out of our ken. But the same may be said of every form of energy: in itself, it has no power of becoming known to us but by its effect on material bodies. A body under the action of life can do many things, can initiate spontaneous movements, can build up an organism, can operate on the physical Universe, and leave structures behind it of interest and beauty, but it is not the material body that does these things; they are due to the life or animation of the body.

"If, then, we can adduce any evidence that life or mental activity exists in space, and only sporadically makes itself evident by some material activity, the state of our present knowledge of physics renders our acceptance of the fact entirely harmonious. We have to do no violence to our physical conceptions if we admit the fact of survival. Life and mind never were functions of the material body, they only displayed themselves by the material organism. The organism was not essential to their existence, but only to their display—that is, to our apprehension of them. If they ever find means of operating in a novel or unusual manner on a physical organism, then they may still manifest their continued existence; and that is exactly what they do. Why should we decline to receive the evidence?

A Physical Reality

"If you have had evidence of the existence of a spiritual world, a world of help and guidance and sympathy, then you can hold to it in spite of every denial of the materialists, who can only base their denial on the absence of any sensory stimulus to their material organism. Such a world may exist all round us, yet can only be spiritually discerned.

"The existence of a spiritual world throughout the depths of space is becoming to me a great and fundamental, even a physical, reality. The manifestation of that world in connection with material organisms on one or other of the planets is a comparatively trifling and temporary episode, of great importance doubtless in the history of evolutionary development, but our real existence is not dependent on a material organism. Our spiritual and real home is the Ether of space."

mixed on the personal pronoun. We say, "The Lord is willing to bless you and I." You do not need any book on grammar to find what is wrong there. Just take it to pieces. "The Lord is willing to bless you." All right so far. "The Lord is willing to bless I." Not so good. So if we examine our speech it will help us.

It helps any man who is attempting to be a public speaker to write. It is altogether too easy to stand up and talk, and we have no time to give very much attention as to how our language is constructed; but to write is a different matter. It takes labor, and time, and we fall into the habit of putting words together in a concise and clear and comprehensive way. I wish more of our men, especially our young men, would form the habit of writing for publication, even if it be not printed. I wrote reams of manuscript that was never used.

Above all in our ministry we should feel like Nephi, who said, "My soul delights in plainness." It has been one of my great ambitions always to make every sermon so plain that anyone of ordinary intelligence can understand it. And when some little child comes forward at the close of a sermon, tells me, "I enjoyed your sermon," that is the highest compliment I can receive, because then I know that everybody else understood. And after all beautiful language is simple language. Take the Twenty-third Psalm, one of the marvels of literature. I think there are only four words in it of more than two syllables. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."—Only one of those words has two syllables. This matchless song is composed of very simple words. And the Gettysburg speech, the greatest piece of American literature, is of the same type. So that after all it is a matter of plain speech, and with our ministry it ought to be a matter of clean speech.

One of the greatest, or rather most popular, preachers of this country in a past generation was Doctor Talmidge. I think he was the first minister to have his sermons syndicated, and they were printed in many newspapers all over the country. At his death the question arose, who should take his place. A very popular minister was had in mind, and the head of the syndicate went to see this man to work out a contract. He found the man surrounded by a group of fellow ministers and engaged in telling one of those stories that Bishop Short used to call "smoky," one of those stories that a certain type of traveling salesmen like to tell. This newspaper man listened just long enough to hear the story and join in the laugh and then turned his back and walked away and selected some other minister to prepare those sermons for his syndicate. That was all he wanted to know about that man.

Exemplary Deportment

We come to something that perhaps will seem to most of you more vital, and that is exemplary deportment. Some seem to have the mistaken notion that a minister can step into the role of minister on Sunday and then step out of it on Monday; that he can step back on Wednesday night and out on Thursday morning; that he can be a minister on public occasions and a private citizen the rest of the time; that it is nobody's business what he does as a man so long as he is a successful minister. As a matter of fact a man's ministry will be profoundly affected by his deportment, in his own home first of all, and in his business dealings with other people, and in his contact with his neighbors. He is not a minister just on Sunday or Wednesday night. He is a minister all the time, and he can never step out of this ministry no matter whether he be a high priest, an apostle, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon. He carries with him all the time not only his own reputation, but the reputation of the church. I need not go on to say that he ought to be particularly careful in his relations with women. The minister, whether he be a missionary, pastor, or visiting officer comes in contact with some of the finest women in the world. There are no women in the world superior to our good Latter Day Saint women. I know that: I had a mother and have a wife, and many friends and associates among these women. Their friendship will be invaluable to the minister, one of the most pleasant experiences of his ministry; but he must always maintain a certain formality and reserve. There is a line of familiarity he must not cross. He must maintain a respect for the conventions and his own reputation.

The minister will also encounter another type of women. I picked up a new expression from Mayor Sermon in one of our Sanitarium board meetings. We were talking about the liability which the church might have in the new, unfinished Sanitarium building, supposing some one should go in and fall down the elevator shaft and be hurt. Would the church be liable for damages, even though a sign was posted to keep out? The Mayor then went on to explain. He has had some experience in suits for damages and he thought we would not be liable, but he said there were some things which were called "attractive nuisances," such as an abandoned park with swings in it that might be an enticement to children, and even though posted "Keep out," if children went in and were hurt there would be liability for damages. It seems to me that of some women that is about all we can say: they are "attractive nuisances." The Lord has put up plenty of warning signs, but still some persist in getting hurt.

Good Reputation

A good reputation will be helpful in your ministry of persuasion. It is worth our time to remember that a good name is almost invaluable. A minister is in a different standing from other public servants. A lawyer, for example, may be regarded as a "good lawyer" though he may not be known as a good man; that is, he may be a skillful lawyer but not a good man. But people demand that a minister shall not only be a good minister but a good man. We cannot say to the people, "Do as I say, but not as I do." A physician may do that, but a minister must not. It is not enough that he is a good preacher and a good mixer; the people must feel that he is a good man.

The Pastoral Spirit

Last of all in our ministry we need the pastoral spirit, if we are to persuade. We must have patience—almost inexhaustible patience; and if we are to have patience we must have that charity which enables us to see the good in all men. That is our business, to look for the good qualities, and I have yet to see the man in whom I could not find good qualities when I got well enough acquainted with him. The trouble is that when we do not really know people we see their worst failing first and are too prone to condemn them then and there and want nothing more to do with them. The pastoral spirit is one that leads us out to seek and to save. Christ said, "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." He may not lie down and die for them, but he wears his life out in their interest. He must answer their every call, day and night, when they are sick. He must bear with every weakness and infirmity. That calls for inexhaustible patience. I am not talking alone about the pastor who presides over a congregation, I am thinking about all of you visiting men who are pastoral in your calling. But you have your reward. McClaren, who wrote Beside the Bonny Briar Bush, makes this comment: "The preacher has admiration for his peculiar reward, but the pastor has affection. No man in human society gathers such a harvest of kind feeling as the shepherd of the flock, nor is held in such grateful memory."

sider the sources of some of their own childish impressions. It is a day for them to walk with their children to the water's edge and to stretch forth a hand to receive them out of the water, the gesture being symbolic of the spiritual, mental, and physical support they are to give this boy or this girl who is entering "newness" of life. Children's Day is a season for adults to forget their own pressing, selfish interests and to consider again—whether they are parents or not—their responsibility to the children of their community.

For the boys and girls it is "our" day. To them the very name is synonymous with programs—music, songs, lessons, pieces, and doing something "extra" nice for mother and daddy. They love the flowers, the sunshine through the church windows, and the dress-up clothes. It is an important day to them, and there is a quality about it more heavenly than mere self-importance. There are men and women today who treasure the memory of Children's Day as it came and went each year as one of the outstanding impressions of their early church experience.

"And a little child shall . . ." Well, what is your child doing this Children's Day?

Let me always remember that it is not the amount of religious knowledge which I have, but the amount which I use, that determines my religious position and character.—Alex MacLaren.

God speaks through his servants the prophets and calls men to fill the positions made vacant in the ranks of the apostles by death, age, etc. (Hebrews 5: 4; Acts 13: 1-4.)

We have an unbroken line of apostolic authority and succession from the restoration to the present day.

Witness of the Spirit

One of the promises which the Lord remade with the restoration was that "if any man shall do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." (John 7: 17.) Hundreds of thousands have accepted the promise and as a result have received the witness of the Spirit.

Our faith is not blind belief but knowledge. We have the assurance which holds us firm under every vicissitude. We know that Jesus Christ died to redeem us. He purchased us with his blood. He is our Savior. He will triumph over every power in heaven, earth, or beneath, which has worked to hinder the coming of the kingdom and the "manifestation of the sons of God." He is coming soon—in his kingdom, and to his own.

No living or dead thing stands between us and Jesus Christ. The word of God tells us about him. His servants declare him and are the instruments who point us to the way and officiate in those things which Christ instituted for our blessing. Yet every child of God has access directly to God, by Jesus Christ, and through the Spirit.

Perfect in Functioning

The Church of Jesus Christ is not one-sided. Her sphere of activity is the world. Her special interests are all men of every nation and sphere. She is the friend of righteousness and truth; but the unwavering enemy of evil and untruth.

She caters for no particular class or classes, concentrates on no one line of activity, takes sides with no particular political party and opposes every measure which is contrary to holiness, charity, and the realization of the kingdom of God.

The true Church does not concentrate her main energies of "Good Samaritan" work, healing of the sick, building costly churches, etc. She regards every man as a steward and concentrates on right relations. "Good Samaritan" work she does. Divine healing and ministering to the sick she practices. Churches she builds as necessary. These, however, are only incidental to her great ideals of establishing God's kingdom.

Souls must be saved. Bodies need healing. Society needs reconstructing according to the divine plan. Poverty must be eliminated. Miserliness must be eradicated. The brotherhood of all men and the Fatherhood of God must be realized. Selfishness in all its ramifications must be eliminated from God's footstool.

The church must lead in every forward and upward move. She is called "Zion the perfection of beauty." (Psalm 50: 2.) It is through her "God will shine." Service is her watchword. Ultimately, the test of authority is one of service.

Recapitulation

To sum up, our authority rests upon a divine restoration and commission.

The church has her authority from Jesus Christ. She was established by his command. Her founders and her officers were given authority to act as ambassadors for him. He has continued to fill the vacancies and to guide the destinies of his church by revelation. Thus the Church of Jesus Christ is identical today with the New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, ideals, and ceremonial.

She has true apostolic succession. To her belongs the commissions given to living apostles, etc., anciently and again in this age.

She is bringing forth and establishing the kingdom of God and the brotherhood of man. She is elevating the poor and bringing low the rich in the divinely appointed way of stewardships. In reality, she is preparing a people to form the basis of the millenial kingdom of Jesus Christ on earth.

"The kingdoms of this world are [must] become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." (Revelation 11: 15.)

it's hard to bear the effects of sudden, clear and active faith!"

"We have to try, Brad," she soothed, "try with all our might to right things, when we wake up to a value of life as it is, we always have One to help us. Somewhere—I believe they're in an anthem the choir sings—are the words, 'An everpresent Help in time of trouble.' That is the Savior of men, Brad, the one who promises us wonderful blessings if we obey him. He tells us that our love for him will be measured by the way we keep his commandments. These are his words, Brad, let me see if I can quote them—the language is beautiful: 'If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.'"

"It does sound good, sweetest, and I want to believe it. Oh, Polly," desperately, "help me believe—help me!"

He had put into words the great need she had felt. It was her work, probably the biggest task she had undertaken. "Brad," slowly, "will you pray with me right here, pray God for that help? He can give it to you, not I. Will you pray aloud?"

He did not answer her in words, but together they slipped to their knees there beside their son's crib. Carrol's nursery had become a shrine to them in deed as well as word.

Seven Ways to Kill a Church

1. Don't come; stay at home, or go somewhere, rather than come to church. Staying at home is not only helping kill the church, but by degrees is killing the spiritual life of the individual.

2. If you do come, come late. The faithful few are generally on time. Getting to church on time shows an interest in the Lord's work that no one can call in question.

3. If you come, come with your mind made up to take a back seat. Act as if you were afraid of the front seats, and afraid to be seen.

4. If you come, come with your mind made up to find fault with the service; the preacher in particular. There are some that never have a good word to say about the church nor the preaching of the word, though they go to church occasionally.

5. If you come, come determined not to give a cent to any object, not even to keep up the expenses of the church. Many say they would go to church if it was not for the taking of so many collections, and yet such people never give anything. This ought not to keep them away.

6. If you come to church, return to your home without shaking hands with your pastor or with any of the brethren or sisters. The preacher often, after a hard effort to reach his people, returns to his home with the blues, saying: "I wonder what was the matter with Brother Snider, Brother Snow, Brother Simmons, and Brother Smith—not one of them spoke to me."

7. If you come to church, come all alone; don't bring your wife or husband, or children, or neighbors. Many people when they start to the house of the Lord slip off as if they were afraid some one would find out where they were going. "Andrew first findeth his brother Simon, and he brought him to Jesus."—John 1: 47.

The seven things mentioned above will kill any church. Are you guilty of any of them?—C. C. Haymore, in the Biblical Recorder.

Ideas go booming through the world louder than cannon. Thoughts are mightier than armies. Principles have achieved more victories than horsemen or chariots.—Reverend Doctor W. M. Paxton.

Visit to the United States Helps in Work of English District

By William H. Chandler

I shall never forget the visit I paid the United States in 1930, to attend the wonderful Centennial Conference. It did me much good and inspired me to push forward the interests of the church as never before, and this is manifest, I believe, in the development and growth of the young people and the response made along financial lines by Northern District, England, of which I am president.

My visit of three years ago placed me in a position to bring very prominently before the membership the wonderful degree of unity existing among general officers and the great efforts being made to unify the teaching program of the church. I did not meet a single thing while in that country that would cause me to view the situation otherwise. And on my return my efforts were directed to bring this knowledge of strength to the notice of the membership over here. It did them good to have some one return to them with a glowing tribute of the wonderful effort the church was making to meet its spiritual and temporal obligations.

While there I visited Kirtland Temple, and brought with me a small stone lying in the foundation, just a pebble, a stone from Hill Cumorah, a bit of growing stubble from the Joseph Smith farm, and a piece of bark from the sacred grove, taken from the tree under which Joseph Smith the Seer knelt to pray, and received the manifestation from God which caused him to set out to plough the lone furrow of this great work which today represents all that is true and worth while in religion.

The above may be a little sentimental, but sentiment plays some part in our religious experience. Whenever I have had the opportunity to teach children and young people about the early history of the church, these little things fasten the truths in their minds more than a multitude of words, and in these and the many photographs I procured, my hearers are interested. It rather surprises me that many men who have visited the scenes of early church history and returned to this country, have brought with them none of these little reminders of the early sacrifices of the Saints.

This visit found me a stranger in a strange land, but I shall always remember the kindness of the brothers and sisters of the church who ministered to my every need. I enjoyed the visit and consider it the greatest experience that has come into my life apart from the day when I united with the church. I pray to God to spare my life and let me work for his kingdom until I again earn the right to renew the visit to his promised land.

We are with the head and officers of the church in their striving to bring peace to this troubled world, and to send abroad the message of the gospel of Christ to the nations so that peace may come. I hope the means will be forthcoming to lift the missionary depression from the church.

Church Means Everything

By Mrs. Roy Payne

Two years ago last August I entered the church and now it means everything in the world to me. God tested us by permitting all our earthly possessions to be taken from us. My husband had a spell of sickness two years ago and had to give up his position. But two weeks ago we were able to pay a little tithing we had saved from our milk money.

I was reading some Heralds a good sister sent me from Arizona, and found a testimony of a brother which tells how the still small voice spoke to him, telling him to throw away his pipe. I believe he was spoken to three times before he heeded, and he said also that he gave up coffee and tea. I was a great coffee drinker, and so I sat pondering over his testimony. I decided that if coffee was not good for my brother, it was not good for me. I have not tasted it since that time. I was telling about my giving up coffee and how I happened to do so day before yesterday when I was calling on one of the sisters. "Well, Sister Payne," she said, "I have given coffee up, too. I thought if it wasn't fit for you, it wasn't fit for me."

And now the Lord has opened up a way for us so that we can make a living—before we were just existing, and had to be helped by the good Saints at Clinton. Now we can help others instead of being helped.

After I came into the church, my whole family united, and our hearts are glad.

We have a nice Sunday school about twenty-nine being present. Two more families of Saints have moved here and will join us. We meet in our home and are praying that God will send an elder to Clinton to make his home. We have been assured that if we continue as faithful as we have been, God will send us an elder.

I am asking prayers for Sister Bowman who can be so much help in the Sunday school, but who has suffered with a dislocated hip since November. Will you pray also for our Sunday school and especially for Sister Ermina Kearney who is the superintendent? Her health is not good. Pray for my family and me also.

Lord Blesses Each Contribution

By Mrs. W. R. A. Abbott

I am thankful for the many blessings I have received and for God's goodness to me and my family. I have belonged to the church only a short time, but feel that I should write the Herald, for certainly I receive much good from it and deeply enjoy reading the letters from other Saints.

The book, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, brought me greater understanding and light concerning the church and latter-day message than I had ever received. I wish everyone could read that book, and all the rest of the church books, too. I should like to buy many more of them, but our financial condition prevents that.

We are trying to help the church with the little we have. Sometimes we can give only ten cents, but we know if that is all we have to give, the Lord will bless it. I once heard a brother say that he would not pay less than one dollar in tithes in a single payment, but I do not agree with him. I believe that when we give all we have, no matter how small the amount, the Lord blesses it just as if the sum were large. We have pledged to give twenty-five cents a month to the church, and I hope we can do that much and more.

We are trying to live Christian lives, and trust that God will always lend us his helping hand. Certainly we need his help.

I fear there are many in the church who are proving stumblingblocks to people not of the church. The lives they live are keeping those who are seeking the truth from embracing it. I have had people designate certain Saints and say: "If they were not of your church, I would feel more like joining it." I feel that often a thoughtless or selfish

Jesus Tells the Truth

By Giles Byron Moore

Did Jesus tell the truth when he said: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father"?

I know that he did, for I have proved it.

I have seen the sick healed many times. I saw on one occasion a woman so sick that she cried when they turned her in the sheets, administered to by J. W. Wight and E. H. Hunt. Prayer meeting had just begun in the big tent at camp meeting when they administered to her. She dressed and went to attend the meeting being a well woman. She bore testimony of the blessing given her, and hundreds witnessed it.

Did Jesus tell the truth?

He said that these signs should follow those who believed. He tells us that the believer would lay hands on the sick and they would recover. He says that they should pick up serpents and not be injured. We have the promise that the believer is to do the things Jesus did.

Once I knew a woman in our city who was so blind that her husband had to lead her about. She arose in prayer meeting and said that she expected yet to see in this life. Another brother and I prayed together that she might recover her sight, and she did, and for many months after that was a Sunday school superintendent.

I believe that where two or three agree upon one thing and ask for it in the right spirit, it will be given them. Jesus spoke the truth when he uttered the above words. He never falsifies. It is our faith that is defective.

Some time ago my wife was very ill and was healed in a remarkable way to the extent that she and I are convinced of the goodness of God and the truthfulness of his Son.

Bridges

By R. E. M.

Many times I have sat in prayer meetings and listened to the testimonies of the older people. Of their dreams, visions and wonderful experiences in the church, and I have often wondered if the time would come when I, too, could arise and give such a testimony.

Perhaps you have heard or read the poem of the old man, going along the highway, who came at evening, cold and gray to a chasm vast and wide, who crossed in the twilight dim and built a bridge to span the tide. A fellow pilgrim passing, asked him why he wasted his time with building then. He said it was for a youth who would pass that way, and he had built the bridge for him.

The prayers and testimonies of the Saints are such a bridge in my life. They give me strength to go on, a greater desire to live more as Christ lived. I am glad that I have the privilege to help and work in this church, and do what little I can. I trust that I may direct the footsteps of my life in such a way, that some day the bridge that I may build, may be a help to others who are passing by.

How I Joined the Church

By Fred M. Blystone

I became acquainted with the latter-day message when I attended a series of meetings at Coal Hill conducted by Brother Hayden. I believed the gospel as he preached it, but did not tell him so. I was ready to unite with the church but I hesitated. When he came to me after one of the sermons and asked me if I believed what he was preaching, a voice spoke to me, "You can not say, No." So I had no excuse. I told him, however, that I would rather wait until my wife was ready to join the church, too. How natural it is that we try to put off the things we should do and want to do the things we should not.

As I was going home that day I thought, "Well maybe I am not doing as I ought." Then I asked God if this was the true church and if I should unite with it. I prayed that I might be shown.

When I arrived home I found that we were out of kerosene, and so I went to one of our neighbors to borrow some. I had not more than arrived at the neighbor's house when a voice told me that one of my friends was down at my home. I doubted it, but was again told that some one was waiting to see me at home. Returning, I arrived on top of a neighboring hill and saw that my friend, Charley Costin, was there. I knew he had come because he wanted me to join the church with him. "What shall I say?" I asked in my soul. Then a voice spoke with convincing firmness: "My boy, you can not say no any longer."

At that I went on home, and the first thing they asked me was if I was ready to join the church. I told them I was. We were baptized that evening.

About three days after I entered the church I was going to do some chores, and as I went I was thinking of the things that had been spoken to me. I knew that the latter-day work was true. "If I could only see into the future!" I thought. Then a voice spoke to me, assuring me that the time would come when the righteous people from every church would unite. I had not read the Doctrine and Covenants at that time, but as I read it now, I can see that this will be for our own good and safety.

I was told to go to a certain place and preach from the Book of Mormon. That was the first time in my life the thought had occurred to me that I might be called to the priesthood. At that time I had not yet read the Book of Mormon. My mother gave me one for Christmas. As I read and studied it, it seemed greater than any other book.

Request Prayers

Requests for prayer received too late for inclusion in this department will be found in "The Bulletin Board."

Sister Flora Fisher, 115 Lexington Avenue, Rockford, Illinois, asks prayers in behalf of her mother, Sister S. H. Fisher, that her eyesight may be restored, and her vision be cleared. She would like to be able to read the church books and literature, and to perform her household duties. She has great faith in the Lord's answer to prayer.

Jennie May Walburn, Jaskson, Ohio, desires prayers in behalf of her husband who for eight months has been confined to his bed. He has been blessed by the administration of the elders. He was baptized by John R. Grice, and seven months later was ordained a priest. His help is much needed at Jackson, and his family and friends feel that the prayers of the Saints will assist in restoring him to health and strength.

Toronto, Canada

Local Achievements Indicate Progress

The second anniversary of the opening of Toronto's new church is now history. The day was perfect from the standpoint of weather and services. The Saints were fortunate in having present Elder William I. Fligg, of Independence, who also conducted a week of missionary services following the anniversary.

Toronto District was well represented on this day, many members coming from different branches. Elder H. A. Dayton, president of Owen Sound District, was also there.

Brother Fligg presided at the opening prayer meeting which was well attended. Bishop A. F. McLean spoke at eleven o'clock and the evening speaker was Brother Fligg who chose the theme, "A Bible Sum in Figures."

One hundred and seventy-five sat down to the banquet on Monday evening, the meal being served under the auspices of the department of women. There were entertaining musical selections and speeches.

Sister Jackson's group of the department of women held an anniversary service of the church organization, April 6, the program consisting of sketches, talks, and lantern slides. The first sketch presented Joseph as a baby, the next as a young man. In the following scene six young men represented those who organized the church in 1830. Sisters Marjorie Clark and Isobel Pycock gave readings; Bishop A. F. McLean gave a talk, and Brother S. G. Clark showed stereopticon pictures of early church scenes.

On April 9, the young people had charge of all services, supplied the speakers and had a fine choir of over thirty voices. To see the coming generation of workers in action is encouraging and inspiring. The morning speaker was Ernest Newton, the evening, Frederick Le Feuvre.

At the quarterly meeting of the department of women, these workers raised three hundred and sixteen dollars, and since then fifty more dollars have been taken in. Their objective is one thousand dollars by July 1, for payment of interest. The men have about four hundred collected and hope to make it one thousand at the same time, to pay on the principal of the mortgage.

April 14, Brother William Archer's Sunday school class of girls presented the play, "Easter Dawn." The silver offering taken was given to the pipe organ fund.

The local priesthood are earnestly endeavoring to spread the gospel message. They hold four cottage meetings each week, one in the east end of the city, another in the west, and two in the north. Each meeting is in charge of capable officers, who use the rotating system for speakers which lends variety to the services. It is encouraging to note the development of young members of the priesthood. Many nonmembers attend the meetings and good results are expected by this consistent service.

Late speakers in Toronto have been Bishop A. F. McLean, Elders J. A. Wilson, Douglas Cameron, James Pycock, B. H. Hewitt, and J. L. Prentice, Brother Frederick LeFeuvre and others.

New hours of Sunday morning services have been inaugurated—prayer meeting at nine-thirty for one hour, then preaching for forty-five minutes, and Sunday school for one hour commencing at eleven fifteen. There is an intermission of five minutes between each service. Such an arrangement gives a morning preaching service for the young men of the ministry.

There is manifested in all departments the desire to do something to help spread the gospel message and cooperate with those in charge. This is the spirit that prevailed in former days and caused the church to reach that high standard of spirituality which it is Toronto Saints' hope to gain.

Dow City, Iowa

Elder E. Y. Hunker Baptizes Eight

It is with deep sadness that this branch reports the death of Sister Fred Baber, who was called home March 9. She lived a life of devotion to her family and the church, many times going beyond her strength in the interest of their welfare. Her faith was outstanding. She leaves her husband and three children. The funeral was in charge of Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan. Some of the musical numbers rendered by friends were those requested by the deceased.

But recently the Saints have been made to rejoice in the missionary services conducted in this district by Missionary E. Y. Hunker. His sermons and presence have served to stimulate everyone, and the spirit of fellowship which prevailed was deeply enjoyed.

Brother Hunker baptized eight young people ranging in age from eight to twenty-six. They are John Morris Griffin, Donald Spence, Verdine Pearsall, Donald Rigsby, Iris Vanlandingham, Frances Stout, William Floyd Rigsby, and Emerson Wight. Confirmation service was held at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, Brothers Elvin Baughman, George Hansen and D. A. Holcomb being the officiating elders.

A large crowd witnessed the Easter pageant, "In Remembrance of Me," given by seventeen young women on Sunday evening. A quartet, Mrs. June Griffin, Mrs. Kathryn Baughman, Lynn Talcott, and Frank Fry, sang appropriate hymns.

The spirit of high school graduation is in the air with its many activities. Phyllis Pearsall and Frances Hansen represent the branch in the class this year.

Sister Zeta Clothier's father has been ill for several months, and his sickness adds to her responsibilities. She teaches in the public school and is supervisor of young people in the branch.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Working Units Go Forward

In December excavation was begun for a basement under the church. The basement represents much strenuous labor donated by the brothers of the church. The saying that anticipation is better than realization has not proved true in this case, as the basement has long been needed for additional class room, and for the women's association meetings.

The women's department has been busy, attempting to raise money necessary for the completion of the basement. On March 31, a three-act play, "Clubbing the Husband," was presented to a well-filled house. It caused much merriment and netted the workers a tidy sum.

They have been fortunate in securing the following elders as guest speakers during the winter and spring months: Apostle R. S. Budd, Brother Zene Renfro, Brother Emmet Lancaster, and Brother G. J. Harding, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Brother Harding and wife spent several weeks in Oklahoma City visiting at the home of his son, Lloyd Harding. The Saints were pleased to listen to several of his splendid sermons.

An impressive ordination service was held the evening of December 18, Brother E. L. Kemp in charge. The service was opened by singing "The Angel Message," and prayer was offered by Brother Kemp, followed by the congregation's singing "Master Use Me." Brother Loren Vickery was ordained to the office of teacher by Brothers F. E. Dillon and E. L. Kemp. Brother George Guy Clessen was next ordained to the office of teacher by Elders G. J. Harding, and E. L. Kemp.

The branch is proud of the efforts put forth by the choir during the past few months. The beautiful cantata, "Victory," was rendered on Sunday evening, April 16. Solo parts were sung by Sisters Geneve Clessen and Louise Kueffer, and Brothers Lloyd Harding and Roy Butler. Sister Mary Vickery is to be commended for her untiring efforts as choir director.

They are trying a new plan in the women's department. The first meeting of each month is what they call their social meeting. They meet in the homes of the members, and the hostess is allowed to invite her friends and neighbors who are not Latter Day Saints. At this meeting they have a short literary program, one number of which must be a paper or talk on some one of the beliefs of our church. The women are trusting in this way to interest some who otherwise would not know of the restored gospel plan. The first meeting of this kind was held March 7, at the home of Sister F. P. Bowerman. A splendid paper, "Palestine of Today," was read by Sister Ed Yerrington. Also selections from Edward Guest's poems were read by Sister Rene Williams. The next meeting will be held at the home of Sister Ed Dillon, the first Thursday in May.

Brother Ed Yerrington has organized a teacher training class which meets on Tuesday evening of each week. This is made up largely of the young people of the church. They are studing the New Testament.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Young People Prepare for Lamoni Convention

Recently Apostle D. T. Williams was here to give the third of his series of sermons, his subject being "Technocracy and the Brotherhood of Man."

In spite of existing conditions attendance at services kept up well during the winter months.

A silver tea in the month of February proved to be a success.

The women's department has given two penny socials to help the building fund, these events being well attended.

The young people hold weekly prayer meetings, a study period and a class on the care of the body. These meetings have been held for the purpose of preparing them for the coming convention at Lamoni. They are in the midst of a contest, writing papers on the Book of Mormon in connection with the convention.

Elvira Champion, superintendent of young people, was sent to Detroit to the young people's institute. On her return she spoke on "The Highlights of the Institute," inspiring the younger members to carry out the plans the church has for them.

Los Angeles, California

Central Church, 3851 South Grand Ave.

They have had so many outstanding occasions at their branch lately, that the Saints are of the opinion, that the tide has turned. Foremost in their minds is the visit of President F. M. Smith. His first public appearance was made on the occasion of the district young people's banquet, Friday evening, March 31.

More than two hundred gathered from the neighboring branches; Apostle Gleazer presided, with Evangelist Albert Carmichael, Pastor D. B. Sorden, and Brothers L. L. Sutherland and Lawrence Brockway addressing the group on various phases of young people's activity. As a climax to the evening, President Smith spoke stirringly and feelingly.

A direct result of the banquet was the organization of the young people of the local branch, under the leadership of L. B. Shippy. Brother Shippy was active with the young here when he formerly resided in Los Angeles, and everyone welcomes his return as a leader. Officers: Drexel Knowlton, president; Lawrence Brockway, vice president; Thelma Austin, secretary, and Sidney Omohundro, treasurer. It is planned to have all the activities unified through this one group, devotional, educational, and recreational. Immediate plans are being effected for a caravan of visitors to the Young People's Institute at Lamoni.

A capacity crowd filled the church Sunday morning at the sacrament service, over which President Smith presided. He spoke on the significance of the sacramental rites, and the Saints felt that they had truly participated in a spiritual feast. Again in the evening the President poured out his words of wisdom, to the large congregation, admonishing, advising, and inspiring.

The district conference held April 7 to 9, seemed to benefit by the previous activities. Not only was the conference one of the biggest in late years, from the standpoint of attendance, but it was also outstanding in spiritual accomplishment. The classes were well attended, and set the high tone for the three days. Pastor Sorden's class, "Our Belief in God," and Evangelist Carmichael's class, "Becoming God-minded." drew numbers of consecrated workers who are looking towards certification in the Religious Education program.

Apostle Gleazer delivered a powerful sermon on Sunday morning, on the theme, "He Hath Need of Thee." Having been preceded by a splendid early morning prayer meeting, and church school service; the sermon was doubly effective, and many were impressed with the presence of the Spirit.

Most of the six hundred present stayed for the dinner served at the church, and to attend the ordination service in the afternoon. Four young men of the district, Harold Wixom, J. C. Stuart, jr., Theodore Dexter, and Earl Clayton were ordained to the priesthood, in an effective and simple service.

At its conclusion, the district choir presented the oratorio, "The Holy City," by Gaul. The success of this presentation was largely due to the persistent efforts of the choir leader, Sister Stella Hodges, who has gathered the choirs together for monthly practices over a period of eighteen months. The chorus numbered about sixty in its appearance Sunday.

During the course of the conference, the former Graceland students initiated plans for organizing a local alumni association. An immediate project is the founding of a Southern California Loan Scholarship, which will be given to enable some student from the district to start to Graceland this fall.

The congregation was surprised on Sunday, March 12, to find itself guest at the wedding of Miss Lucile Crawford and Clyde Baskerville. The young couple are both active in local music work. Miss Crawford is the daughter of Brother and Sister L. W. Crawford, formerly of Independence.

The branch was saddened by the death of Brother F. W. Klein on April 1. He and his family first came into the church in the Hawaiian Islands, and Apostle McConley conducted his funeral services. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Ben Budworth, and Mrs. Lawrence Brockway, and his son Walter, to whom sincere sympathy is extended.

Los Angeles Saints are also sorry to report the death of Sister Lottie Good Logan, April 12. She has been very ill for some time, suffering with cancer. She was formerly active in choir work in Chicago and Brooklyn.

Among the activities consummated since the last letter, was the production of the play, "Attorney for the Defense," under the leadership of Al Mason. The first performance was so successful, that a return engagement was staged, proceeds being turned over to the church.

They are happy to be looking forward to a summer of activity, and to be planning for a district reunion here again. They join hands with other Saints, in a new determination to make the next quarter count in the history of the church.

Clitherall, Minnesotta

Union Branch

For the first time in many years regular weekly services were held all winter in the little church in historic Clitherall. This was due in great measure to the interest and industry of the new and old members living in the vicinity.

The services have been of a high order, some of the members receiving visible evidence that God was speaking on different occasions through the members of the priesthood, Pastor Lester Whiting, J. W. Peek, and Frank Tucker.

Due to the good leadership and untiring energy of the church school superintendent, Sister John Murdock, two very enjoyable programs were given; one at Christmas and one at Easter.

A surprise party was given early in April to Brother and Sister J. W. Peek, who have been instrumental in making the interior of the church very inviting. Brother Peek varnished the organ, pulpit, and chairs, and Sister Peek donated several bouquets of hand-made flowers. This party was a couple of months late, being intended as a birthday celebration for Sister Peek in February, but was postponed on account of bad roads and stormy weather.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was here again for a series of meetings the first part of April. He was given a good hearing, and left a number of nonmembers keenly interested. One Sunday he held services at the home of Brother and Sister John Kellar near Wadena, with fairly good attendance considering the cold, rainy weather. The Saints are looking for Brother Curtis again in June at which time two ordinations will be attended to, Frank Tucker, to the office of elder, and Malcolm Whiting to that of priest.

Dayton, Ohio

Priesthood Leads in Activities

The priesthood of Dayton Branch are responding to the admonition given them at conference to become active and the Lord would bless them.

Elders Floyd Rockwell and G. W. Stephens are planning to hold meetings every Tuesday evening at the home of Brother C. M. Greer. Elder E. L. Ulrich will hold weekly meetings at the home of Brother George Lockwood.

Dayton Branch is going forward under the able leadership of Elder Franklin Reiske, who contributes unstintingly of his services.

Easter proved to be a day of rejoicing for the Saints. In the morning at nine o'clock two candidates, Juanita Reiske, and Mr. B. J. Reeves, were baptized into the kingdom of God. At nine thirty church school held a short session, followed by the confirmation of those baptized. At ten thirty Elder E. L. Ulrich delivered an appropriate sermon in remembrance of the Lord Jesus Christ. At two thirty preaching services were held at the home of George Lockwood, Elder Ulrich delivering the message. In the evening, three young men, Albert Griffin, Clarence Bierse, and Theodore Boeckman, were ordained to the office of deacon. The women's chorus furnished the closing program with a variety of musical numbers.

Dramatic Society for Young People

Sister Carrie Gray Is Director

Joplin young people organized a dramatic society Friday night, April 21, in order to become better equipped to carry on the work of entertainment within the branch as well as for personal development and the creating of a greater interest in church work among members and nonmembers. Before organizing, this group sponsored one Sunday night service, presenting a short drama from the Bible, which was directed by Sister Carrie Gray. The play was preceded by a sermonet. Also under the leadership of Sister Carrie Gray and Sister Grace Lohr, the group gave the three-act play, "An Old-fashioned Mother," before five different audiences, each time with a great degree of success. Another engagement for this play was made for Thursday night, April 27, at Opolis, Kansas, and the cast hopes that one or two other places will ask the cast to present it so as to make some more money to help with church work before the warm weather sets in.

In the perfecting of the organization Sister Carrie Gray was elected as the director. She has proved her ability in this line of activity on numerous occasions, and every member has given his approval of her and pledged his wholehearted support in the work which she will endeavor to present. Other officers are: Lena Harvey, president; Marguerite Sheppard, secretary; Raymond Troyer, business manager; Curtis Pearson, stage manager; Neletha Pearson, costume manager and Jimmy Daugherty, property man.

Hibbard, Indiana

To Combine Rally and Children's Day Program

About fifty members and two visitors were present at the annual Easter dinner and egg hunt at the church. After Sunday school came a short program of recitations, special songs, and instrumental music. Then followed the egg hunt for the children, which was held in the basement of the church because of rain. After a basket dinner the Saints assembled in the main room for visiting and singing. All departed in the late afternoon. That evening sixteen young people gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Aby for a late lunch and more music.

The women are again active. On a recent Thursday twelve members met and spent a time dyeing eggs for the Easter hunt. Because of the depression, bad weather, and illness, meetings were discontinued late in January. The women, however, are looking forward to a more prompt active participation in the work of their department.

Sister Almyra Freis is again able to attend Sunday school after a long illness.

Hibbard Saints regretted to hear of the death of Elder O. J. Hawn last fall, and extend their sympathy to Sister Hawn who is living in Independence.

With the return to work of Brother Glen Reed, the Saints in Hibbard all have a small income for which they are thankful, as their church building is far from being completed and the departments have not all been prosperous this winter.

The Saints look forward to a visit from one of the local, retired elders. A small collection is being taken each Sunday for the traveling expenses of these men.

Plans are under way for the June rally day which this year is to be combined with Children's Day. A special effort is being made this year to have a better entertainment and larger attendance.

Cadillac, Michigan

Blessed in Efforts They Undertake

Saints here have suffered the effects of the depression, but are very thankful that they are able to keep their church work going and to hold regular services.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited them again on March 9, delivering a discourse which was wonderfully encouraging and helpful.

Five days later a large number of Saints gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Joseph Scott in observance of their sixteenth wedding anniversary. Brother and Sister Scott were presented a gift, and a good time was enjoyed.

The ladies' aid society sponsored a musical program for the benefit of the Cadillac Welfare Union, turning over all the proceeds and a quantity of groceries. The union was much pleased with this effort and program, and requested the women to arrange to give the program again. This they hope soon to do.

A large number of the Saints helped Brother and Sister Mikiel Oligney to observe their golden wedding anniversary on April 14. The happy pair were presented a gift of money, and the evening was spent with music and games.

The Lord has been mindful of his people in Cadillac, blessing them with the gifts of the gospel. On Easter Sunday the Saints were admonished to be faithful, and were given much encouragement through the gift of prophecy.

On that day the ladies' aid was requested to raise the money to pay the insurance on the church building, a sum of sixteen dollars. A special meeting was called for the next day, but on Monday rain poured down. However, a number of the women gathered at the home of Sister M. Oligney and cheerfully set about the task of making plans to earn enough money to meet the needs of the branch.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Saints of Rich Hill have been busy during the past year, and while some obstacles have had to be met and overcome, progress has been made.

A few members have been lost by transfer to other places, but others have moved in, and several have been baptized.

Last fall Elder John Dellar, of Rockville, Missouri, conducted a series of services here which were a great help to the Saints. During the month of February another series of services was conducted by the local priesthood.

March 16, a little son arrived at the home of Brother Chester Lewis and wife. He was given the name Lyle Chester.

Brother Cornelius Quick passed away on March 10, at the home after a long and useful life. Brother Quick was loved by all who knew him for his steadfastness and loyalty, and the branch realizes that it has lost a strong supporter of the gospel. Birch Whiting preached the funeral sermon at the church March 12. Burial at Uniontown, Kansas.

Clinton District enjoyed through the hospitality of Mapleton, Kansas, an institute with Elder C. B. Woodstock as instructor, March 25 and 26. Brother Woodstock's lectures were built around "The Purpose and Plan of the Church School."

An impressive service was conducted at Rich Hill, April 16. Following the regular worship service, the theme of which was, "Ye Shall Also Live," two babies were blessed. Hershey Merle Walling and Lyle Chester Lewis. Appropriate songs were sung and pictures were taken of the babies and officiating elders, Ralph Murdock and A. D. Allen.

An Easter program was given, April 14, and Sunday evening, April 16, the choir gave a program of music in keeping with Easter after which Brother J. A. Marstellar, of Butler, delivered the sermon.

April 22 and 23, Fort Scott Branch was host to the district at which time Bishop G. L. DeLapp conducted an Institute.

Apostle J. F. Garver was here to attend the last district conference, held in July, 1932, at Rich Hill, and expects to be present again in July, 1933, at Nevada, Missouri. President F. M. Smith is also planning to attend this conference.

On July 29 and 30, the young people of Rich Hill will hold a young people's institute for the youth of the district.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg

Under the leadership of Brother T. L. McCormick, this branch has grown in spirituality and attendance.

The weekly prayer services are uplifting and well attended by young and old.

The dramatic club has given some very successful plays of late.

A young married people's class has been organized. Workers and officers are realizing that the church building is hardly large enough now to accommodate all the classes of the church school.

Most of the young people attended the young people's convention at Lees Summit, and returned with a greater desire to accomplish something worth while.

Sacrament service, April 2, was a spiritual feast. The Saints were admonished to support the pastor and were assured that the Lord was pleased with the effort Brother McCormick had made.

Sister Gladys Beebe, president of the stake young people, met with those at Warrensburg, April 9. Summer activities were discussed, also what and how they should study, and ways and means of raising money.

Knobnoster

Knobnoster Branch has four young people who will graduate from high school this year, Dortha Nutt, Verna Peery, Ben Kramer, and William Norman.

Several of the young people have planted a "community garden" on land loaned by the pastor. The proceeds will be placed in the branch storehouse for the benefit of the needy during the coming fall and winter.

Knobnoster Saints appreciate the bundle of Heralds which they receive each week. The Herald is the best it has ever been and every copy is ladened with food for the soul.

Marshall

March 5, Brother R. E. Burgess, of Knobnoster, visited this branch. A wonderful degree of the Spirit was present at the sacrament service. Brother Burgess remained overnight to preach for the Saints in the evening.

On March 12, Brother and Sister W. S. Macrae visited the morning services, Brother Macrae being the speaker for the eleven o'clock hour. In the evening the young people of Warrensburg presented a splendid patriotic play to a full house.

Seven from here attended the young people's convention held at Lees Summit. Much good was derived from the classes of Brother F. M. McDowell and Brother F. H. Edwards, also the association of the other young people of Holden Stake.

S. S. Smith, stake missionary, was here and held meetings a week and a half before Easter. Some wonderful sermons illustrated by charts were given.

Easter night the children's division gave a pageant, "The Easter Spirit." The little church was filled again, many nonmembers being present. Those helping to direct were Beulah Smith, Dorothy Ridge, Beryl Bishop, Dixie Spohrer, and Frankie Thayer.

Twelve Baptized in Arkansas and Louisiana

Group Activities Encouraged

I just closed a four-night series at Dunn, Louisiana, in the Baptist Church. It was a busy time for the farmers, but the crowds were reasonably good. Four candidates, all adults, were baptized, Clyde Pitts and wife, Mrs. Rosie Byrd, and J. C. Ainsworth. Brother Pitts had just recently been ordained a deacon in the Baptist church here, and Brother D. A. Byrd presides over the Baptist Sunday school and is doing an excellent work.

April 3, I commenced a week's meetings in the union church at West Monroe. The Saints living there support the work in an interesting way when the missionary makes them a visit. They gave me money for expenses, and took me down to a big clothing house and purchased a new suit.

I started a series of meetings in the old Eros, Louisiana, Branch, March 22, and served two weeks there. Grandma Fuller, about eighty-five years old, was in attendance almost every night. She loves the church and is always ready to give it her support, financially and spiritually. There I had the pleasure of leading seven into the kingdom, all adults except two promising boys. A short time before closing these services, we spent one night as a "get together meet." It worked splendidly, some saying that it was the best meeting they had ever attended. Here the good old-fashioned handshake was enjoyed. While there I organized the women into a working unit or department. They swung immediately into service and gave a pie social for the benefit of the church. Raised thirty dollars to purchase songbooks and screen the building in preparation to Brother R. S. Budd's visit sometime during the summer.

March 2, I arrived at Hot Springs, Arkansas, ready for service. Attendance was good, and part of the time I used my stereopticon machine. I showed pictures for about one week. On the last Lord's day I had the pleasure of baptizing the deacon's wife. Two brothers were liberal with financial help for the missionary. While there, I was able to organize the women's group, and according to late reports they are doing fine.

By a united, consecrated effort through Arkansas and Louisiana, we can accomplish much more than we have done in the past. Nevertheless, the Saints are to be commended for what they have done, but let us purge our work so that it will bring forth fruits. President F. M. Smith has consented to be with us at our next conference at Bald Knob, Arkansas, July 21 to 23. We want a good representation.

A. M. BAKER.

Young People of Northern England Hold Convention

Apostle John W. Rushton Commends Efforts

The young people of the Northern England District have made the most of the last twelve months, and improved their talents in the service of God as was evidenced on Sunday, March 12, at their convention held at Wigan. Although the last convention was an enjoyable and profitable experience, this gathering excelled it to a remarkable degree. It is a beautiful sight to see a splendid, well-organized band of enthusiastic young people, willing at any time to do their part to further the great cause.

Apostle John W. Rushton, who was present, remarked that fears need not be entertained as to the future of the church with these splendid young people ready to carry on when the time shall come.

The theme chosen for the convention was "Youth's Preparation for a Life's Work." All musical arrangements were in the hands of the district director, Elder James Schofield, assisted by Sister L. Fawcett, of Wigan, as organist.

There were three speakers at the morning service, in charge of William J. Entwistle, jr., of Wigan, namely, Harold Hope, of Farnworth; Cyril Chorlton, of Northeastern Manchester, and James Barrington, of Northeastern Manchester.

The ladies' service in the afternoon was an innovation. Sister May Holden, of Northeastern Manchester, made an able president, and Sister Eva Baguley, of Northeastern Manchester, read as a lesson, Proverbs 3. Sister Doris Gallop, Warrington, was the speaker, and a novel demonstration was given by Sister Lily Preston, Stockport, who first told the story in simple language and then demonstrated with models the experience of Elijah in proving to the prophets of Baal that God Omnipotent reigns. Not only were the children delighted but the grown-ups, too, when, in response to the prayer offered by Elijah to the Almighty Father, real fire burned up the bullock which he had sacrificed in accordance with the custom. This was a charming addition to the day's services and extremely interesting even to the youngest child.

After tea, a council meeting of the presiding authorities and the representatives of the young people was held, at which letters were read from Brothers in Germany and Poland. Brother Rushton conveyed greetings from other friends across the sea, and suggested that they would be interested to hear news of what English Saints are doing.

Brother Rushton, the speaker at the evening service, highly commended all who had taken part in the day's services and the splendid work which is being done by the young people. He also paid tribute to the memory of the pioneers of the work in England, and expressed the thought that the young people will do well to give a thought and a care to the older brothers and sisters, and to those not able to attend the services, as it is largely due to their efforts that the young people of today have such splendid opportunities.

Soloists included Sisters A. Davies and M. Barnett, and Brother C. Spargo of Wigan Branch; Sister M. Holden, of Northeastern Manchester, and Brother G. Dawbarn, jr., of Warrington.

Revival of Interest Among Nebraska Indians

Feast Day and Organization of Forces

Indian Mission, Decatur, Nebraska.—Church work is beginning to move rapidly among the Indians, our Lamanite brothers, of this place. New life has come upon us, and it begins to look as it did in old times when several hundred Indians used to gather to church on Sunday.

Last Sunday (April 23) a band of Indian Saints gathered at the church, people who had not been there for two years, and they called a large feast for next Sunday. They are inviting all Indian members of the church to return and attend regularly. We expect a crowd of several hundred, and are looking for great good to be done here.

Next Wednesday the women will meet to organize a department, and next Saturday all the Indian children will meet to be organized into garden clubs. Thus organized, they will plant their gardens in plots, ten by forty feet, preparing the ground and planting the seeds. While carrying out this project the boys and girls are going to be taught the law of tithing, giving one tenth of all they grow in their gardens to the Lord's church. And through the children the older Indians will be taught by example to remember the Lord with tithes and offerings. The garden plots join the church yard, and we shall have Indians to help and instruct the children in their work.

Already the beautifying of the church grounds has been begun by Indian workers, and many flowers will be planted.

We feel that the Lord is reaching out after his Saints, and are encouraged to do our part to lift the banner of King Immanuel high among the Lamanites.

BERNARD CASE.

Independence

The convening of the joint council of the church, composed of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, brought to Independence all of the presiding officers with the exception of Apostle G. G. Lewis who is in Australia, and Apostle John W. Rushton who is in Europe. Independence people welcomed them happily, and a number were invited to speak in the churches on Sunday. The opening session of the council began at 10 a. m. today, and meetings will continue through this week and probably into next week.

Mrs. Howard Harder, of Independence, was elected the new president of the Independence Parent-Teacher Council on April 26, at the session at William Chrisman High School. Mrs. R. R. Redfield is the retiring president.

Stone Church

Stone Church members heard two powerful sermons Sunday, presenting the tasks yet to be accomplished by the church if the Saints are to come up to the standards God expects of them. Bishop G. L. DeLapp, the morning speaker, was urgent in his appeal to the members to take what he termed the "second step" in the building of Zion—organizing themselves and coming into an understanding and unity of belief as to the methods to be used and the resources to be called upon in carrying out God's plans on earth.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, a frank and fearless speaker, talked in the evening on the judgments that are coming on the earth as a result of the people's disobedience and indifference. For his text-theme he read Revelation 14:6-8. He emphasized the words of the angel which flew "in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach": "Fear God, and give glory to him," and declared that the hour of God's judgment is come.

The morning musical program was given by the combined Wahdemna and A Cappella choruses, directed by Paul N. Craig, Robert Miller at the organ, and George Miller at the piano. They sang, "Deck Thyself, My Soul," by Christian, the hymn, "Lead Kindly Light," by Dykes, and "Praise Ye God," by Tschaikowsky. Orrin Fry, violinist, Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller pianist, rendered "Cavatina," by Raff, as an instrumental trio.

In the evening the Stone Church choir took its place in the choir loft and sang

www.LatterDayTruth.org

two anthems, "Peace I Leave With You," and "The Radiant Morn."

Mount Washington young people gave the junior service program in the Stone Church lower auditorium, the morning of April 23, and with them came their pastor, Elder Will Bolinger, who was formerly junior pastor at the Stone Church. The visitors presented the play, "The Seeing Heart," and other numbers which were greatly appreciated.

This congregation lost a faithful helper and deacon in the passing of Brother Walter A. Page last Saturday morning at the Sanitarium. Brother Page underwent a major operation there several weeks ago, and for a number of days his condition was serious. He was the surviving member of the firm of Bronson and Page Hardware, Independence. W. G. Bronson died December 18, 1932. Brother Page went into partnership with Brother Bronson eighteen years ago. He was born at Hollister, California, sixty years ago, and came to Independence in 1913. His wife preceded him to the beyond by fourteen months. Brother Page leaves two daughters, Mrs. Alberta Cox and Mrs. Helen Brackenbury, and two sons, W. Earl Page and Paul Page, all of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Emily Davis, also of Independence, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was held from the Stone Church Monday at 2 p. m., Pastor John F. Sheehy in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Members of the class in Religious Education, conducted by Elder and Sister C. L. Munro, surprised the couple the evening of April 28, at the close of the class, the day being their fifty-eighth wedding anniversary. A program was in charge of two of the students, and at its close Elder J. Arthur Davis read passages of scripture on marriage and based remarks on that subject in honor of Brother and Sister Munro. An anniversary cake was provided by the class.

Second Church

Elder S. H. Fields took charge of the eleven o'clock preaching service the morning of April 23, and introduced the speaker, Elder Arthur Whiting, who used as his texts Proverbs 14: 12 and Matthew 5: 13. The choir, directed by Earl Audet, sang "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works."

Pastor William Inman was in charge of the seven-thirty service, and Earl Audet played the organ prelude. The opening prayer was by Brother Finis Beebe. A men's chorus sang "Tell Some One," and "He Is Mine." The sermon was by the pastor in Zion, Elder John F. Sheehy.

The junior service on that day was conducted by Glenn Tripp, assisted by R. C. Conyers and Norman Rimmer. Elder E. A. Thomas talked a short time on a verse from the second chapter of Matthew. Mrs. Agnes Edmunds told a story.

The theme for the junior service at the Second Church Sunday, April 30, was "Christ in Our Lives." Norman Inman was in charge. Norman Rimmer read the Scripture reading. Brother Fred Mollison and his orchestra played during the program. A duet number was sung by Nadine Inman and Helen Willoughby. "The End of the Feud," a story, was told by Mrs. Edna Hopkins.

Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt was in charge of the eleven o'clock preaching service. The opening prayer was by Elder G. W. Grubb. The choir, under the direction of Brother Earl Audet, sang, "Alleluia, Alleluia!" Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker, and used as his text the twenty-fifth verse of the tenth chapter of Luke.

The seven thirty service was opened by an organ prelude played by Mrs. Sunshine Beck. Pastor William Inman conducted the meeting. Mrs. Agnes Edmunds led the singing. The opening prayer was by Brother Roy Settles. A duet, "Come Unto Me and Rest," was sung by Mrs. Grace Nave and Mrs. Roy Settles. The speaker was Elder J. F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion. His subject was, "The Old Jerusalem Gospel."

Walnut Park Church

Orlando Nace's orchestra furnished special music at the session of the church school Sunday morning, April 23. Brother Otto Smolny played two numbers on a rather unusual instrument, the violin zither, during the assembly period.

At eleven o'clock Elder George Jenkins spoke on the second coming of Christ and the signs of his coming, taking his text from Isaiah 11: 11.

A large number of the priesthood attended the monthly district priesthood meeting at two thirty that afternoon. The advisability of discontinuing Sunday evening services during the summer was discussed, but no definite action was taken at that time. It was voted unanimously to transfer the troop of Boy Scouts which has been meeting for a number of years at Enoch Hill Church, and which is composed of boys from that congregation and from Walnut Park vicinity to the latter church. Brother Ammon Badder is scoutmaster of the troop and reports that thirty-three boys are enrolled at the present time.

Lois Jean Logeman, two-and-a-half-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister Jerard H. Logeman, died April 27, at the Independence Sanitarium. Besides her parents she is survived by one brother, Bruce Curtis Logeman. Funeral services were held at eleven o'clock in the morning, Saturday, April 29. Services were in charge of Pastor Frank McDonald, who preached the sermon. He was assisted by Elder Samuel Smith. Drexel Mollison at the organ played, "The End of a Perfect Day," and "Mighty Lak a Rose." Maurine Nace and Evelyn Phillips sang, "Sleep, Little Lambs"; Mildred Crabb sang, "Jesus Bids Us Shine," and an organ duet, "Going Home," was played by Drexel Mollison and Maurine Nace. Pallbearers were Betty Rhors, Argene Wenholz, Hazel Hartman, and Leona Hartman.

Funeral services for Rolly Brunson, twelve years old, who died Saturday morning, April 29, were held at Walnut Park Church, Sunday afternoon at two thirty. He is survived by his parents, Brother and Sister George M. Brunson; three brothers, Wallace, Earl and Wayne, and a sister, Bonnie Lee. Brother George Jenkins was in charge of the funeral service, assisted by Elder Frank McDonald. Organ music was played by Drexel Mollison, and a quartet composed of James Blackburn, Alta June Moorman, Helen Moorman, and Drexel Mollison sang "My Jesus I Love Thee," "Abide With Me," and "He Cares." Pallbearers were Robert Butterworth, Harry Mitchell, Rollie Wolf, Paul Anderson, Kenneth Coleman, and Jack Bowles.

The boys' chorus, directed by Brother R. G. Blackburn, gave the program at religio, which meets Sunday evening at six o'clock. After three numbers by the chorus, Elder Welton Wood gave a short talk. Milford Nace is in charge of the programs for the coming three-month period.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell spoke on the mission work of Jesus at seven thirty Sunday evening. His text was John 3: 17, "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

Four hundred and thirty-four were in attendance at the church school Sunday morning. Five classes were perfect in attendance. At the assembly hour after the classwork the priests' quartet, composed of E. E. Moorman, R. G. Blackburn, C. G. Closson and Albert Chapman sang "Sweeter As the Days Go By."

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the speaker at eleven o'clock. The choir, under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains." At the same hour Elder Welton Wood spoke to the junior service in the church basement, and Sister E. E. Moorman told a story from the Book of Mormon.

The religio was entertained after the class period by a program consisting of two piano solos by Lola Fallon, a cornet solo by Harold Dillee, and a reading by Rudene Huff.

Bishop C. J. Hunt, talked to a good Sunday evening audience at seven thirty o'clock. An anthem, "More Love to Thee, O Christ," was sung by the senior choir.

Spring Branch Church

Speakers at this church on Sunday were Elder William Bath in the morning and Bishop J. A. Koehler in the evening. Both delivered inspiring and instructive sermons, encouraging and edifying the people.

At the morning preaching hour Sister Corrine Haines French sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd." And in the evening

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Francis Tankard sang "Heavenly Love."

Prayer services in this congregation continue to be helpful, and are given the support of priesthood and laymembers.

The evening church school Sunday entertained the pupils after the study period with a short program of instrumental numbers and readings.

Spring Branch young people are happy to have Norman Ward, of Mallard, Iowa, back with them. He may locate here permanently.

Senlac, Saskatchewan

During the winter, prayer meetings were held from house to house. But since April 5, they have been held at the church.

January 10, William Thomas, residing in this district, was baptized into the church. A good little crowd of Saints assembled on the ice, where the service was performed. A. J. Cornish officiated. The confirmation took place at a prayer meeting the next day at the home of Brother W. J. Cornish. Elder J. J. Cornish was the spokesman.

Recently Brother J. J. Cornish returned from a visit with his brother-in-law at Rutland, British Columbia. He reports a number there interested in the gospel.

Some of the people in districts near here seem interested. At one place a request for a Sunday school has been made.

Coleman, Michigan

Has Impressive Meetings

This branch has made great progress in the last two months, both spiritually and in number. The Sunday school enrollment now numbers ninety-two.

Brother Dudley, of East Jordan, has been here a few weeks, delivering about thirty sermons, which were a help to the Saints and also to nonmembers. In the sacrament meeting of February, Brother Dudley admonished the Saints to be faithful to their leader, Brother Burt Turner. Before he left for Marion, he suggested having a general prayer meeting on February 26, and that the members come fasting and praying. They were greatly repaid for their effort, for God's Spirit was felt by everyone. Branch President Burt Turner arose and called Brother Jason Methner to the office of priest, Brother Leo Tesman to the office of teacher and Brother William Gothrup to the office of deacon. The Saints will never forget what they witnessed that day. The gift of prophecy was also had. The following night two young boys were baptized, one of them was spoken to the day before and told that if he would obey this gospel, his tongue would be loosened, and some day he would preach the gospel.

Due to the fact that there was only one day of conference, it was suggested that Coleman Branch have an all-day meeting March 26, and have the ordination of the three brothers called. District President Elder Case was here, and they had another Pentecostal feast.

Apostle D. T. Williams was at Coleman March 30, and delivered an interesting discourse, which was appreciated by the members and nonmembers.

The Sunday school presented an Easter program, which was well attended.

Elder Case was here April 17, and gave a good talk, trying to show the Saints how to keep the Spirit of God in their midst. He used for his text James 3. Saints of this branch are determined to press on to the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

Saginaw, Michigan

Missionary Meetings Help

Since the remodeled church at Saginaw was dedicated February 5, Elder William Grice held a two-week series of meetings, and although during the first week this region was visited by its first real snowstorm of the winter, a large crowd was usually present. Considerable interest was aroused, and resulted in the baptism of five persons before Brother Grice left Saginaw, and one since his departure.

People there are showing more interest in the latter-day message, and they have from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and forty present at church school every Sunday. The Book of Mormon Class, under the leadership of Brother Lewis Grice who is a talented teacher, is growing steadily.

Elder Hubert Case, district president, visited this city twice, and the Saints are hoping soon to have him hold another series of meetings. Others are interested in the gospel. They pray that the latter-day work will move forward there and everywhere, and that everyone will feel it his duty to do his part willingly and in harmony with God's law.

Dunn Center, North Dakota

Weather Favors Regular Services Now

Elder P. T. Anderson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was with Dunn Center Branch from October 9 to 23, last year, holding instructive services with good attendance. His help was greatly appreciated. Due to severe and changeable weather throughout the winter, services were not regular, and attendance was small, for many of the members live in the country. But with the coming of spring days, attendance has increased, and services are now regularly held.

The Sunday school gave a good Easter program.

These local officers were elected March 12: President, Lester H. Anderson; church school director, Chester Moffit; clerk, Mrs. Elsie Tucker; treasurer, Chester Moffit; chorister, Florence Tucker. Brother Frank Anderson was sustained branch solicitor, and minor officers were also chosen. Teachers selected are: Adult class, Guy Adams; young people, Lester H. Anderson; juniors, Florence Tucker; primary class, Inez Adams.

Everyone is now looking forward to the return of Brother Anderson. He is a general favorite here, and the young people appreciate him, too.

Youngstown, Ohio

Work Begun Here Years Ago Continues to Grow

In 1914, many years of work were crowned with success, when Saints in Youngstown celebrated the opening of their church home with special service. All of the work of the preceding years, while not directly connected with the securing of a church building, had indirect bearing on it.

Many of those connected with the efforts made on Briar Hill have gone to their reward. Some are in other parts of the country. Some of their children's children are rejoicing in the gospel. Of the families connected with the church in that early time one can recall the Richardsons, Strachans, Frews, and Glassfords.

It was a strenuous time, those days when their new church home was built. The steady hand of Sister Glassford had much to do with the success of that venture.

The next step was the dedication of the church. After a few years of hard work in which the sisters did a noble part, the church was dedicated. Elder T. U. Thomas labored as pastor in Youngstown at that time.

Brother P. L. Glassford who had been serving as president of the branch for some time was ordained to the office of elder last June. He has continued to serve as branch president, and is beloved by all.

Last October advice was given that a choir could be started. This was a new field of endeavor. Nothing had been tried in this direction for some time. No one thought that the ones available had singing voices. So everyone was pleasantly surprised to hear several of the White family sing in the choir as well as develop ability to sing solo parts. One of the main reasons for this musical development is the consecrated effort and ability of Sister Amy Glassford.

Easter Sunday was another day of success for Youngstown. The choir of seventeen voices rendered the cantata, "The Resurrection and the Life." It was an inspiration to hear so fine an interpretation of this composition. Solo parts were sung by Don White, Milo Seagrave, Anna Williams, Sister Wedell, and Sister White. The piano accompaniment and directing of the choir were done by Sister Amy Glassford. The services were in charge of Elder P. L. Glassford and Elder James E. Bishop gave a twenty-minute talk on the theme of the cantata. A large and sympathetic congregation attended this service, and the members were more than pleased with this joyful Easter experience. There were visitors from Sharon, New Castle, and Steubenville.

Pleasant Hill Branch

McKenzie, Alabama

Apostle James A. Gillen strengthened the Saints in this part of the Southland during his visit in March. When he stood on Sunday and the different nights during the week, proclaiming the gospel and bearing personal testimony of its divinity and its blessings, there was no doubt as to his calling to be an apostle in these latter days. His very presence gave encouragement; his sermons gave determination, and his testimonies gave assurance.

The Dorcas Circle, composed of the young women of the branch, gave an inspiring program the evening of March 5. The girls portrayed the lives of such noble women as Dorcas, Florence Nightingale, Helen Keller, and the Elect Lady, Emma Smith, outlining the beauty, the chastity, and the purity of womanhood. Julia Parker read "The Neighbor," which portrays the wonderful life of Dorcas; Virginia Sellers read the Bible narrative of Dorcas; Edith Odom outlined the purposes of the Dorcas Circle; Inez Sellers told the story of the Elect Lady, the life of Emma Smith; Myrtle Barlow and Odessa Harper Flynn sang "Take My Life"; Lulu Odom gave an interesting talk on "The Ministry of Women," reviewing Elder O. A. McDowell's article as published in the Herald some weeks ago, and read "The House by the Side of the Road." The entire program was accompanied by the presence of the Spirit, which gave all a desire to beautify their lives.

The prayer services are well attended and active. The priesthood endeavor to present themes which cause the membership to think seriously concerning the work. Both young and old respond well.

The April communion service was perhaps the most outstanding in many months, the theme and pastoral remarks being based on Mormon 4:85-95. Following the serving of the emblems, there were fifteen prayers each prayer being short, full of meaning, and containing a petition that all might so live that the promised blessings will be given to the Saints. The Spirit was felt in great power, hovering over the congregation even after they had left the building.

The R. O. L. H. Club (Richer Opportunities Lie Here), composed of the young men of the branch, had charge of the evening service on April 2, their theme being, "The Storehouse." Muriss Miniard outlined the purposes of the organization; Rogene Odom talked on "The Storehouse as God's Plan for Supplying the Temporal Needs and Wants of Man"; Don Odom sang, "Holy, Holy, Holy," as a tenor solo; George Parker's theme was "What We Can Do Here Toward the Establishment of the Storehouse?" and Ammon Salter discussed "Cooperation in the Community." The club studies a special subject each month, the "Financial Laws of the Church," serving as their April theme.

Recent local speakers have been Elders D. E. Sellers, W. H. Drake, and J. W. Baldwin; Priest George W. Hall; Teacher J. T. Coleman, and Pastor Lyle D. Flynn. The local priesthood are sponsoring the missions at Jane's Mill and Deer Range. Then, too, the local men have visited most of the ninety homes in the branch since the first of the year.

Most of the Saints through this section are farmers, who are poor in the material things of life, but find opportunity to become rich in the things of the Spirit. All are determined that Zion shall be.

Hutchinson, Kansas

Corner of Plum and C Streets

This little group had a busy Easter Sunday. With church school timed to open at 9.45 a. m., followed by a thirty-minute song service by the choir accompanied by prayer and scripture reading of the resurrection story, everyone had opportunity to take part. This was followed by a reading by Miss Elinor Patterson, a nonmember. Miss Patterson has a fine talent and her contributions are much appreciated. These activities occupied the time until eleven thirty when the Saints drove to the water where Elder T. Comer Turpen, pastor, performed a baptismal ceremony, adding to the fold Sister Cora Woodward who has long desired to unite with the church. The Saints are happy to welcome Sister Woodward and recognize that God has removed the obstacles which hindered her for so long. They feel that this is an answer to her prayers as well as the prayers of the members.

The evening meeting beginning at seven o'clock and including the confirmation of Sister Woodward, was an elaborate Easter service of songs, readings, and pantomime carried out by the young people's and children's divisions of the church school, assisted by the music department. This program was directed by the program committee, Sister Haley Roberts, chairman, Sister Ivy Hall, and Sister Deck. Sister Clara Mettlen, chorister, gave valuable assistance to the program committee. The branch has invested the program committee with cabinet powers, and is asking them to work out a worship program to be used throughout the year in connection with the regular school study period. Workers hope to impress these young people that they are responsible for the success of each session of church school activities.

Carson, Iowa

Easter Appropriately Observed

In January, Elder E. Y. Hunker held a series of meetings that was well attended and much appreciated. One child was baptized.

Easter was observed with appropriate and impressive services. At the morning preaching hour, Brother T. A. Hougas preached an Easter sermon, following a beautiful Easter solo, "The First Easter Morn," by Ashford, sung by Sister Ann Morgan, of Lamoni, Iowa, now director of music in the Henderson consolidated schools. She was accompanied by Sister Elaine Small, of Henderson. At the night service the dramatic class, under the direction of Sister Turpin, gave a two-act play, "The Light of the Cross," making a fitting close for the service of the day.

At the annual business meeting in December, Brother Clarence W. Bratches, of Council Bluffs, was chosen pastor and Gene Turpin, also of Council Bluffs, associate pastor. Sister Gene Turpin is in charge of the junior work. The basement has been rearranged, and junior services are held in it each Sunday morning.

Brother Turpin is regularly drilling the young people's orchestra, preparing them for church and other services.

Sister Edna Hotze found it necessary, owing to ill health, to resign her position as superintendent of the church school and it was with many regrets that the school accepted the resignation. Sister Hotze has been a faithful and efficient worker in both branch and school, her work beginning in her early years. Her inability to work will be a distinct loss to the school and branch. She was also branch solicitor and branch clerk. Both positions she resigned.

Missionary Meetings at Wimer, Oklahoma

One Baptized—Others Ready

I held a two-week meeting at Wimer Mission in northern Oklahoma, preaching seventeen sermons, and baptizing one person. I believe about nine more are ready, and will try to return the last of May for a week-end meeting. Some fine people live in that region. They were very orderly in services, and gave me the best attention I have found in years.

On the first Sunday we had prayer and sacrament meeting at two-thirty, and the Spirit was present in power. The second Sunday, Easter, was the climax with Sunday school at ten o'clock, preaching at eleven and basket dinner. Then we organized a young people's group and after that everyone went to the creek where a young woman was baptized. The confirmation took place in the schoolhouse at two-thirty, followed by an afternoon sermon. There was preaching again at eight o'clock. Everyone enjoyed the meetings. Brother Bly, of Nowata, Oklahoma, confirmed the candidate and opened the services for me and I appreciated his help.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

J. L. CREVISTON.

Mount Vernon, Illinois

Have New Testimonies of Blessings

The Saints at Mount Vernon have many new testimonies of the blessings they have received during the past few months. Attendance is increasing at church services, and a good work is being done.

Elder R. L. Fulk held an eight-day revival, beginning January 22, and keen interest was manifested. On Sunday, January 29, following the morning services, dinner was served in the basement of the church. In the afternoon J. M. Henson led two into the waters of baptism. At the afternoon services they were confirmed, and two infants were blessed. The Saints were impressed with the spiritual value of the entire service.

Brother Fulk held the election of officers for the year January 31. Louis Deselms was elected branch president; J. M. Henson, assistant president; John Deselms, superintendent of Sunday school; John Rockett, secretary and treasurer; Sister John Rockett, director of music; Sister Ralph Poore, head of women's department; Sister L. M. Ellis, superintendent of recreation.

The Easter program, directed by Mrs. L. M. Ellis, was much enjoyed. "The More Abundant Life," a play taken from 1931, Vision, was the chief feature, and there was special music by a quartet, also a duet number, "The Old Rugged Cross," in pantomime. "The Third Day," the dramatic story of a mother without faith in God, who suffers great fear when her little boy is injured, proved very attractive. The mother falls asleep to have three visions which give her new faith and courage as her child recovers.

KURL.—On July 20, 1923, at Keota, Iowa, a baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kurl, and was given the name, Betty Ruth. Her short life was handicapped because of her frail body, so that she was the constant care of her parents whose hope it was that she would eventually outgrow physical weaknesses. But the child was stricken with infantile paralysis from which she suffered four months before death relieved her January 29, 1933. She leaves besides her parents an infant brother and her grandparents. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church at Montrose, Iowa, January 31, Elders O. T. Miller and F. T. Mussell in charge. Interment was in Montrose Cemetery.

Artists, Attention!

Trade-mark Contest—Prizes Offered by Herald Publishing House

The Herald Publishing House wants a "Trade-mark" or insignia for use on its books, pamphlets, letterheads, and publications. We believe that our church artists can give us what we want, and we are sponsoring a contest to give them a chance to help us. The rules of the competition are as follows:

1. Prizes: First prize—$15.00 in merchandise produced by the Herald Publishing House. Five Second Prizes—a copy to each one of our new book, Riches Untold.

2. Specifications: The drawing is to be in ink, between two and three inches in either dimension, and clear enough to allow strong reduction, with clear detail. Any shape may be chosen. New ideas desired. It is believed to be best not to incorporate the church seal in the trade-mark.

3. Any artist may submit as many drawings as he wishes. But he can win only one prize.

4. The drawing must be original, subject to copyright by us, and not an infringement on any existing copyright.

5. Contest opens immediately. It closes June 15. Address:

The Pigeonhole

Jig-saw Puzzles

"You may say what you like about jig-saws—and judging from the look in your eyes I wouldn't be surprised to hear you tried one again last night—" confidentially cooed the pigeon, "and I'll admit they do make me a little dizzy after the third hour of concentration; but they are a social boon to some people. Think how the fretting hostesses are spared. They don't have to plan entertainment for their guests if they provide plenty of puzzles. Why, I know of entire families that haven't spent an evening together in years, getting acquainted again over a puzzle. Just last night I flew in on a family here in Zion and found a cozy scene. Mother and Dad and daughters and sons and a beau or two were gathered around the dining table, puzzling, sorting, advising, and before they quit, they had it —the puzzle all worked! And I firmly believe if a family learns to puzzle out the little things together in the proper spirit of cooperation, the big things will be much easier solved."

Voices in the Night

"There is a family lives on the other side of our block, that I would never have noticed but for their voices," said the Pigeon. "Whenever they get out in the yard the whole community can hear them. Their normal conversation is carried on in the tone of high C. They shriek at each other most of the time in scolding, fault-finding words. Their normal manners towards each other suggest ungovernable rage. It is queer—in their business they are polite and refined, steady workers. But at home they scream at each other like harpies. Many a fine summer evening, rich with the perfume of flowers and the beauty of nature, is rent to high heaven with their cries."

Silk Hats and Soap Boxes

In the old days, the Soap Box Orator shouted in the square while the Silk Hat Plutocrat rode down the avenue in one of those old-fashioned buggies called a Limousine. We all thought the Silk Hat Plutocrat was Right, and we were pretty certain that the Soap Box Orator was Wrong.

Now, while the Soap Box Orator flits down the avenue in a sport roadster, the Plutocrat sits in jail, and a great many more of his kind ought to be there. And we begin to wonder if, after all, the Plutocrat might not have been Wrong, and the Soap Box Orator Right. There is nothing like a jail term to prove that a man is Wrong.

When the world's economic system went into convulsions, we first began to suspect that the medicine the economic doctors and experts had been giving it contained poison. It did. But there are other kinds of poison, and other people to give it, too.

Our danger is now that we will listen foolishly and credulously to the Soap Box Orator as we did to the Silk Hat Plutocrat. And we may be led just as far astray in this direction as we were in that.

■ One can't take much stock in anyone's religion unless it makes them easier to live with.

■ No man is ever tall enough to be above criticism.

Building From Within

5.—Organization of Teachers and Officers

Questions coming to the fore these days concern the effective organization of our church work in the local branch units. Organization cannot create personnel that does not exist in the branch, but it can coordinate and help the officers available and make their work more effective. The greatest benefit to be realized from organization is not the organic structure of it, but the improvement of morale.

If every pastor can gather his church school officers together, and ask the priesthood to meet with them, in order to talk to them about the branch responsibility for the children who are to be brought into the church on the coming Children's Day, much good will be done. Now is the time to think seriously about what the children are learning to prepare them for membership in the church. Will their baptism be only a rather solemn ducking, or will it be the climax of a spiritual experience that is the culminating point of a teaching program that has been carried on by the branch officers and teachers?

This training of the young as a preparation for their entrance into the church is not, of course, the only purpose of organization. The teachers and officers themselves ought to meet to discuss problems and to hear a good inspirational talk from the pastor at least once a month. It can be made a happy social occasion by arranging to have them eat dinner together at the church, so that the full evening afterward may be devoted to the work in hand.

"Building From Within" is no idle slogan. We must build our strength from within if we are to have the spiritual power and the physical equipment for carrying on our tasks. Building from within requires organization, coordination of effort, allotment of tasks, and team work.

Separate organizations may, due to the nature of their work, for the teachers and the members of the priesthood. Yet these two could meet for the purposes of a common understanding and a common ideal. It may not be out of place here to suggest that the meetings should have a devotional as well as an educational character, in order that priesthood and lay-workers may vision and accomplish the work of the church together.

Personality is the pole around which the electrons of the social life revolve.—George A. Buttrick.

Paying Our Debt of Honor to Mother

Many beautiful and eloquent things have been said in tribute to the mothers of men. On Mother's Day we are all stirred to utter lovely phrases, look upon the mothers in our midst with softened and respectful glances, and give gifts to our own mothers. In fact, these things are carried on to such an extent on this day of days for mother, that, if she is unaccustomed to commendation, kindness, gifts, and consideration, she is supremely self-conscious and uncomfortable.

But paying our debt of honor to mother involves much more than mere and often superficial Mother's Day observances. Poets have sung her praises. Great men have given their mothers credit for the positions they have attained. And because it is the popular thing to do, we, on Mother's Day, are prone to lose ourselves in a flow of words, to conceal our feelings behind verbosity.

Our debt of honor to mother? In most cases it is very great. Mother's Day is a time to remind us of mother's love, her trustworthiness, her utter unselfishness—if she is utterly unselfish—and all the other good qualities that are hers. In paying our debt of honor to her as in doing many other things, deeds speak so very loudly that our words cannot be heard. No matter what we may say on Mother's Day of our love for our mother, if we neglect her on other days, if we do not consider her happiness at all times, our debt of honor, in our own hearts and before the world, goes unpaid.

The only way in which we can pay this debt is in the pure gold currency of righteous living every day in the year. If by our actions, we show the teachings she instilled in our minds during our growing years, if we remember her at all times, if we love and cherish her while she is yet with us, if we strive to carry out her ambitions for us, we are daily paying the debt of honor which we owe her.

And yet—we can never quite pay her all that we owe. We cannot know the number of prayers she has offered, the suffering she has endured, the anxiety she has lived through, the hopes she has cherished, the disappointments she has known, the sacrifices she has made—all these that we, her children, might be strong and happy and grow up in the fear of God.

"Of all mothers, I am glad that I had that little mother of mine," said a woman who has given the church years of consecrated service. This pioneer mother in the faith gave everything to the rearing of her eight sons and daughter. She was a woman of great faith and integrity, and her constant prayer was for wisdom and understanding. Frail in body, yet strong in the Spirit of the Lord, she was a powerful example for right and goodness to her children, and today her daughter is endeavoring to pay the debt of honor she owes her mother by service to others.

At a prayer meeting a few nights ago while bearing her testimony, another sister, who also has given many years of active and faithful service to the church, gratefully acknowledged the worth of her mother thus: "If I hadn't had a mother who always used great wisdom, I don't know what I should have done."

True mothers of the earth follow the injunction of the Scriptures to "covet earnestly the best gifts." They pray for faith and wisdom and understanding, and they work while they pray. The only way their prayers can be effectually answered is in the lives of their sons and daughters. For this reason we owe mother a great debt of honor. Now is the time to think of beginning to pay that debt—for it will take us all the rest of our lives—with our love, help, sympathy, and strength. And if she has gone from us, we can pay the debt by revering her memory and living honest, purposeful, devoted lives.

Mothers Day Observance Takes on New Social Significance

Nations wax and wane, governments rise and fall, war and persecutions, as in centuries past, add their weight of grief and anxiety to a puzzled and disjointed world, but Motherhood, with its ideals of loyalty, sacrifice and devotion withstands all these, remaining the one universal bond of sympathy and understanding on which humanity may depend.

Whether in the wilds of Tibet or in the African bush; on a fronded isle in the midst of the Pacific or in the center of Western civilization the Mother carries on.

While this has been true since man emerged from the primitive it has been only in the past twenty-five years that a Mothers Day has been observed and public recognition given to her unfailing devotion, her tenderness, her self-sacrifice.

Recently the observance of the day has taken on a new social significance. Formerly it emphasized the remembrance of one's own mother—flowers, gifts, messages, if she were living, a white carnation worn if she had passed to her heavenly reward. But the economic crises, which has, in effect, leveled society, bringing home to countless thousands the kinship of poverty and one's duty to one's neighbor, has emphasized anew the obligation of the more fortunate to those who have borne the full brunt of the depression. So that today we have a golden rule observance of Mothers Day, with "forgotten" mothers and dependent children sharing in the gifts and memorials to Mothers.

This plan is sponsored by the Golden Rule Foundation of New York, that reminds us that "these are praying not for flowers but for flour; not for candy but for bread; not for books but for food and shelter."—The Golden Rule Foundation.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

SISTER MENDENHALL writes the Presidency from Cheyenne, Wyoming, about some matters having to do with publicity, then adds a bit of news by saying that the Saints there have built a "tiny church," and had their "opening" last July, and that now they owe only one hundred and nineteen dollars on the little building, and are praying that they may sometime have a member of the priesthood sent to them. They have Sunday school and Book of Mormon class.

It is always heartening to know that Saints in their zeal and devotion are doing the best they can in carrying on against odds, even if we feel a bit discouraged or depressed to know that we do not have available the men to send to help. The main thing to do is to hold on, carry on, hope on, pray on, and do not forget to "pray on" while we work. Better times are surely coming, and in the school of experience we are being prepared for better things. So to the Saints at Cheyenne we say, Carry on, good people, and keep your trust in God alive and active.

Words of Appreciation

Everyone was pleased with his copy of the Herald, and we are thankful for the new system of purchasing the church paper. We hope to increase our branch order before long.

KATHRYN O. REED.

Hibbard, Indiana.

It is a full and perfect obedience to the law of Christ that brings us into harmony with the divine will where all may be owned as children, sons and daughters of God, and receive of the divine Spirit and the distribution of spiritual gifts, not as we often wish and ask, but according to our needs, and "as he will."—E. L. Kelley, in "Equality."

A Tribute

To Patriarch Frederick G. Pitt

A fine tribute to Patriarch Frederick G. Pitt, a valiant soldier for the gospel through many years, comes to us from Mary E. Gillin, of Peoria, Illinois. We believe that the following extract from the author's letter should stand with the poem.

Editors of the Herald:

No doubt you have heard Brother Pitt relate the incident which is the theme of this poem. The story of Brother Pitt's life is filled with interesting experiences wherein Divine care has been granted. His life has been spared, and, perhaps, he is better known than any other missionary of his day and time. He has sung the gospel into the hearts of men all 'round the globe. He has often helped to drive out dissension and establish peace. Brother Pitt had had a long life and a useful one, and I have been wondering if the verses enclosed might be offered as a sort of tribute to him as a "Soldier of Peace" as well as of war.

A Soldier's Promise

1863-1933

By Mary E. Gillin

Just a soldier-boy in his tattered blue—
Just a picket-line where the bullets flew—
Standing alone the long night through
With death before and behind him!
He looked at the starry heavens above—
He thought of the God who must be love,
And sent a prayer like a winging dove
To the God in heaven to spare him.

"And if my life is given to me,
And I am spared my home to see,
I'll dedicate that life to Thee
And serve where Thou wilt have me!"
All through the lonely night he stood,
And felt that heaven his prayer had heard,
Although there came no spoken word—
His covenant—accepted.

Unharmed—through weary years of strife—
Unscathed—though sin and death were rife—
Unsullied by those scenes of life,
The boy came home—remembered!
And through the years from now to then,
Oft has he stood twixt warring men,
Has oft sought help as he did then,
And stood his ground—undaunted.

Throughout these years, for peace he wrought;
And "as ye would" both lived and taught
He neither place nor honor bought
By sacrifice of virtue.
Now when the bugle calls the right
To stand again—to speak or fight—
To bar the way of Power and Might—
May heaven's windows open!

Will not Jehovah stoop to hear
When Might in power is drawing near
To crush the weak and cause them fear
And force them into bondage?
Thou, God, that stayed the bullet's power,
List to the cries this midnight hour,
Hear Thou! Thy Veteran richly dower
That he may bless Thy people!

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

Zionizing the Church

A Sermon Summary by E. R. Davis

Text: Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5: "For this is Zion, the pure in heart." The basis of our progress is the spiritual, moral, social and cultural growth of the people. "The Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart, and one mind, and dwelt together in righteousness." Doctrine and Covenants 98: 3 informs us that through jarrings, contentions, envyings, strifes, and lustful and covetous desires they polluted their inheritances. The same things will pollute our inheritances today. Pollute means to make impure, defile; but Zion is the pure in heart. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly the counsel of the Lord, but in the days of their trouble, of necessity they felt after him. He was slow to hearken to their prayers. It seems to me that history has repeated itself in the present crisis.

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 1 informs us that "Zion shall be polished with that refinement which is after the similitude of a palace," and 128: 8 informs us "That the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord." Zion is to be polished so that it will shine and reflect the glory of God. (See also Isaiah 60: 1-3.)

In Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4 we read, "Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments." We must learn to wear these garments (robes of righteousness) now, so we will know how to act when we get into the company (Zion) that is ready. Revelation 19: 7, 8 informs us that the fine linen to be worn at the marriage of the Lamb, is the righteousness of saints. Turning to Jeremiah 26: 18 we read, "Zion shall be ploughed as a field." We plow the field to prepare the soil so the seed will be able to produce fruit. If the process through which we are now passing is the plowing of the soil of Zion's children, and if the field has not yet been sufficiently stirred to produce the polished, shining, righteous fruit "the pure in heart," then I say, O Lord! let the plowing process be continued.

Excuse It, Please!

Through a mistake which the Editors regret, the name of the author was not given with the poem, "The Vision of Joseph Smith on Judgment," on page 595 of this issue. We take this opportunity to apologize to G. E. Harrington, the author.

The Story of Etta Kett

The Family Honors Mother

"I WANTAMAKASPEECH!" Etta's eyes sparkled with what the family recognized as the symptoms of an idea. It was Saturday night, and the whole tribe of Kett were present at the dinner table. And Etta proceeded:

"Tomorrow is Mother's Day.—Now, Mother Kett, you just stay right here. I want you to hear this too.—This year we ought to have a Mother's Day celebration different from any we have had before. Last year we celebrated by letting Mother get a great big dinner for us. After dinner every one of us tore out of the house like a whirlwind and left her to do the dishes by herself. Oh, I know I was just as bad as the rest, and maybe worse. But I'm repenting, and this time I'm going to do better. If every one of us will do something to help with the dinner and the work, Mother can spend the day in perfect rest and enjoy it. Shall we put it to a vote?"

Daddy Kett laid his knife down. "I think it's a good idea."

"All right, all in favor signify by raising the right hand, as they say in business meeting."

Kathryn raised her hand half way, partly in willingness, partly in reluctance.

"Now, Katy, what's the matter with you?"

"I have a date for tomorrow."

"Well, the date can wait a little while. Or better still, you can tell him to come on over and help us celebrate. We need him to turn the ice cream freezer. And he better be husky."

"But—" began Mother Kett, as mothers often do in situations like this. Etta interrupted her.

"No buts now, Mother dear. We will listen to your objections very patiently on Monday morning. At present there is no time for discussion. We have voted on the plan, and it carried."

"Tomorrow all but Mother will be routed out of bed promptly at six-thirty. She stays in bed. I'll get breakfast, and Mother will take hers in bed. The roast is all ready, and we start cooking it early. After breakfast Kathryn will wash the dishes, and Dad will peel the potatoes. Ronald will set the table for dinner, while I make a cake. Then we're all going to Sunday school, and when we come back dinner will be ready. No one is to escape for the afternoon. We're going to take Mother for a nice ride along the Pine Forest Road. And when we get back we'll make the ice cream."

Sunday was a memorable day in the Kett household. The work was done with ease and speed, and the family enjoyed it. Mother Kett seemed astonished and lost in the hurry of things, but when the day was over, she confessed that it was "the best Mother's Day" she had ever known.

"My Book of Thoughts"

A Page of Ambitions

Great truths are portions of the soul of man;
Great souls are portions of eternity.
—Lowell.

Big ambitions make big men. No man can rise higher in this life than his ambition leads him. If you would realize an ambition, think about it often, pray about it, talk about it, dream of it and work for it. Desire it more than anything else in the world. Let it be so worthy a purpose that you can make it the subject of serious thought and conversation at any time or place. If it will not bear being brought into the open in the company of your family and your most respected friends, you had better discard it as unworthy. Your ambition is the bridge over which you must pass into a finer and a better future.

A page of ambitions should be one of the really important features in your "Book of Thoughts." As we suggested in the beginning it can be changed from time to time, as you realize each particular objective, or as your interest passes on to something else. Your page of ambitions should be flexible, subject to change according to your growth in thought and character.

What ambitions shall you write on this page? Why, the things you most earnestly want. If they include a college education, a good home, a trip abroad, or a new car, write them down. If the thing you want is represented in some picture you have seen, cut out the picture and paste it on your page of ambitions.

Take your "Book of Thoughts" with you as you retire for your daily "Retreat" for meditation and prayer. Do not be afraid to pray about the greatest and most moving desires of your life. You will gain spiritual strength from the effort.

If you encounter a fine thought in your reading, wouldn't you like to share it with other young people who read this page? Send us a copy of the thought, being careful to give us the name of the author, so that it may be printed. If a specially fine thought should come to you, out of your own thinking, send it to us. Let us remember that we gain immeasurably by sharing the good things of life with each other.

Notes From Our Friends

"Who is the Pilot?" asks one young lady. The Pilot is the person who has all the fun of fixing up this page each week, and of being the very first to read the letters that come in. If you would like to express an idea or start an argument for the benefit of the young people, we shall be very glad to hear from you. Simply address Herald Editors, Youth's Forum, Independence, Missouri.

Mary Hiles, of Beeville, Texas, writes: "I thought you would like to know what the young people of Texas are doing. As the state is so large and the Saints are scattered, it is hard to get together for any kind of meeting. So we have organized a 'Correspondence Club.' Now it has become state-wide. The purpose of the club is to get acquainted, and to further our plans for work, play, and occasional meetings. . . . The real pleasure is in getting the 'chain' letter." Think of all the friends such a plan should make! Why not try it elsewhere?

Myrtle Vaclav, Bisbee, Arizona (General Delivery) writes: "There aren't many young people here, and we haven't any of the clubs and departments that I read about in the Herald. . . . I hope some day to be in a branch, and that I may be able to help. . . . I love this work, and have many blessings to be thankful for. I am making a scrap book of extracts from the Herald." Perhaps the correspondence idea they use in Texas would help the young people in Arizona.

Remember that this is your page. Perhaps you have something that will interest other young people. Let us hear from you.

THE PILOT.

NEWS BRIEFS

After Reviewing Church Situation Joint Council is Hopeful

After a week of sessions the attitude of Joint Council members is generally hopeful. Harmony and unity to an unusual degree have marked the sessions of the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, which began May 2. All members were present except Apostles John W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis, foreign appointees. There has been less legislation than in any previous session of the council, but the men have concerned themselves with frank discussions of church policy, the financial situation, and the missionary program. Action taken has included the readjustment of appointments of men in the field, and the council promises a financial statement soon, which it hopes will be of encouragement to the church. In addition to the council sessions, the Quorum of Twelve has held several meetings of its own.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey at Topeka

Elder J. W. A. Bailey began special meetings at 1116 Clay Street, Topeka, Kansas, April 30, his general theme being "The Drama of Human Life of Ancient Bible Times." With charts to illustrate his points and attractive sub-topics, Brother Bailey is winning good response. The meetings will continue a number of days.

Elder and Sister S. Ballard Return to Australia

Elder and Sister S. Ballard returned to Sydney, Australia, March 11, on the S. S. Maunganui, after an absence of about four years spent in the Tahitian mission field, according to The Gospel Standard. An official welcome home was tendered them in the form of a social evening. Many friends greeted the newly-arrived missionaries. Apostle G. G. Lewis and Elder Swain extended greetings of welcome to them in behalf of the members of the various districts throughout Australia.

Ninetieth Anniversary for Brush Creek Branch

Last December Brush Creek, Illinois, Branch was ninety years old, and now a log cabin is being erected on the site of the old Caudle Schoolhouse in which the branch was organized, as a memorial to those who so valiantly struggled to carry on the gospel work. Among those were Nathan Morris, Doctor Green, George Hilliard, Elder Jefferson Hunt, the missionary who first came to that community, and I. A. Morris, branch president for almost fifty years.

The cabin will be dedicated June 24 and 25, at which time the ninetieth birthday of the branch will be formally commemorated. President F. M. Smith and Missionary R. L. Fulk and family are expected to be present.

Many Baptisms for the Church in Latter Part of April

The following are included in the News this week:

Elder Harold I. Velt baptized and confirmed fifteen men, women, and children in the Longview, Washington, Y. M. C. A. Swimming Pool April 22, these being the fruits of meetings conducted in a private home at Kelso, Washington. More have given their names for baptism, and others are investigating the truth.

Three young married people were baptized by Patriarch John F. Martin at Wheeling, West Virginia, April 23.

On Easter Sunday thirteen were baptized at Sperry, Oklahoma, as the result of a series of meetings conducted there by Elder J. E. Lancaster and Apostle R. S. Budd. And another candidate was baptized the evening of April 26.

Three were recently baptized at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, by Pastor Walter Lewis, two of these being inducted into the kingdom April 30.

Six persons were baptized by H. A. Higgins, pastor of Quindaro Church, Kansas City Stake, and one by John Tucker, of Heathwood Church, as the result of a pre-Easter series of services at Quindaro.

Five were baptized at Beardstown, Illinois, April 23, by Elder E. E. Thomas.

Six young people have been baptized at Sylvania, Ohio, as the result of new interest generated by the church school chiefly through the organizing of two basket ball leagues, one for the young men and one for the young women. This movement began in January. Sylvania Church School now has the highest average attendance of any church school in Northwestern Ohio District. Many young people are interested in its classes.

Two, a young man and a boy, were baptized the afternoon of April 23, at the Western Oklahoma Conference.

Four people have been baptized in the Stone Church font, Independence, during the last two weeks, Pastor John F. Sheehy officiating.

Three were baptized at Mount Washington Church, Kansas City Stake, on Easter Sunday, the ordinance of baptism being an effective part of the special Easter service.

MOTHERS IN ZION

By GERALDINE WYATT

THIS is not so much a tribute to mothers, as a tribute to God for giving us mothers. For it is they who lay the foundation for our religious training. Winston Churchill was indeed right when he wrote: "Unless there be in the background a mother, no portrait of a man is complete. She explains him, is his complement. Through good mothers are men conceived of God: and with God they sit, forever yearning, forever reaching out, helpless except for Him; with Him, they have put a man into the world. Thus, into the Supreme Canvas, came the Virgin."

In my mind I picture a mother. Not an ordinary one, but one that has tried to help build Zion. It doesn't matter much if her hair is grey, or if her smiling eyes are just a shade darker, but it does matter that she has done her part to further God's work here on earth. It matters a lot, that when she is called home, she can face her Master, and look up into his shining face and have Him say: "Well done my good and faithful servant."

So I would inquire of this mother, that has so successfully reared a family for Zion, how she has accomplished this great feat. Her eyes kindle with love, and as her words ring in my ears, I realize that the vicissitudes of life have left their marks upon her, for her face is covered with a multitude of wrinkles, and her voice is no longer that of a young woman.

"I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me," she begins. Then resumes with a saying of Christ: "Man cannot live by bread alone."

I pondered upon this, and came to the realization that this mother loved God more than all earthly things, and that she had placed the teachings of Christ above those of the teachings of the world.

Yet, I knew it to be a tremendous task to teach children of God, and too, that it was much easier to let them pick this knowledge up. So I asked her why she had taken the trouble to instruct her little ones. Again the tired and worn voice resumed, and I realize that there was a distinct beauty in it that could not be acquired, but by age.

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; . . . and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

So it was only the fulfillment of a commandment. I was disappointed, for I had thought that she had shown more than obedience. Then I thought of her first words, and knew that there was also love; love for her heavenly Father, and obedience to His will.

"But their earthly reward," was wrung from me before I could control the impulse. So much being said, I finished by telling her that it was not always easy to be "laying up riches in heaven" when others received their rewards here upon earth.

A look of reproach spread across her face, as her voice resumed:

"Now they never had fought, yet they did not fear death; and they did think more upon the liberty of their fathers, than they did upon their lives; yea, they had been taught by their mothers, that if they did not doubt, that God would deliver them. And they rehearsed unto me the words of their mothers, saying, we do not doubt our mothers knew. . . . Behold, I numbered those young men who had fought with me, fearing lest there were many of them slain. But behold, to my great joy, there had not one soul of them fallen to the earth; yea, and they had fought as if with the strength of God."

As the accomplishments of their sons, had been a reward to these women; so the attainments of her own children were a reward to the mother I picture. It seemed that I could look back with her, and see her beside her children as they developed in faith. First as little babes toddling along at her side, with one wee chubby hand held firmly in hers, as she took them with her to the family altar where they first learned of God. Then as the years rolled on, and their eager faces looked up into hers, seeking wisdom about things spiritual, it seemed I could see her often, studying the scriptures with zeal, that she might be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Then I pictured the glow upon her face when she watched her children as they descended into the waters of baptism to be born of God. I knew I had seen a woman that communed with God.

You would ask who this mother is. You have but to step inside of a church in Zion, or the churches in Zion's outlying stakes, and you will see her. Perhaps she will be well towards the front, for her hearing may have been impaired by time. Perchance you will see her turn around, momentarily forgetting her great work is irrevocably finished, and look to see if all of her children are in their places. For the habits of a lifetime are not easily abandoned.

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

A Lecture to the Priesthood, Independence, Missouri, February 16, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

V.—The Formal Expression of the Spiritual Ministry

We are admonished, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." (2 Timothy 2: 15.)

The Spirit of man usually seeks expression through some physical means. It is quite dependent on the body to express its will vocally or forcefully or in some other way; and so in our ministry the spirit of our ministry expresses itself in certain formal ways. It is true that we may impress people spiritually, without saying a word or making a move. John Rushton used to say there are some men whose very presence cast out devils, and I can imagine that any sort of evil spirit in the presence of a man like our Brother J. M. Terry would have felt rebuked. But as a rule the spirit seeks some visible expression; it seeks expression for example in the ordinances and sacraments of the church and in the labors of the ministry in some lines that might not be either ordinances or sacraments.

We are admonished that we shall be "polished shafts" in this work and the Lord says he stands ready to quicken our intellectual powers by his spirit. By the term "a polished shaft" I do not mean outside polish, such as the world may impart to a man of society or fashion, but an inner polish of the spirit that will inevitably show itself in all the outer manifestations of that spirit. In order that the men in the early church might be prepared to do this thing in the exercise of their ministry and the ceremonies and ordinances of the church, the School of the Prophets was established, and a meeting of this sort, to a degree only, is of a similar character.

The School of the Prophets

In that same wonderful section, 85, already discussed, these statements are made about the School of the Prophets:

"I give unto you a commandment that you assemble yourselves together, and organize yourselves, and prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves."

First of all it is a spiritual preparation.

"Yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean; that I may testify unto your Father, and your God, and my God, that you are clean from the blood of this wicked generation."

Brother Joseph at one time at a general conference answered a group of men who were asking why the School of the Prophets had not been established. He said, in substance: "You are required to testify that you are free from the blood of this generation. Are you men prepared to certify that you have done all in your mortal power to spread abroad the gospel story, or to help others spread it, and to live it at home so that you can say absolutely that you are free from responsibility for the blood of this generation?" I do not know why, but there was no man there who accepted that challenge.

"Also, I give unto you a commandment, that you shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms,"

And what was the object?

"that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you."

So they were to diligently prepare themselves in many ways that when they were sent forth they could be servants that needed not to be ashamed and could fill the mission on which they were sent. There are some provisions concerning the School of the Prophets that would put us on very strict behavior:

"Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and lightmindedness, and from all your wicked doings. Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesmen at once, but let one speak at a time, and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified" and so on.

I used to wonder why the Lord said that in the School of the Prophets we should cease from all laughter. In my life the sense of humor helps me over a great many hard places; there are times when if we cannot laugh we are going to do something else; and many times it helps when you wish to advise some one rather straightly if you can first break the ice with a laugh or a smile. They will listen to counsel that they would not otherwise take if they can see just the right kind of a smile. Sometimes in a general conference when there has been most intense feeling, and men lined up on either side were ready almost to fly at one another or at the man in the chair, a little gleam of humor has caused everyone to laugh and relax, and it was like the opening of an abscess to let out a lot of poison. But this says that when we come to the School of the Prophets we are to cease from all laughter. There is another statement elsewhere in the book Doctrine of Covenants that says we are to cease from "excessive laughter." We are permitted within reason to be cheerful and happy and to express ourselves among ourselves in joyous ways, but whenever we fall into an excess of laughter, that is not good, and I think in some of our councils we have failed to heed that admonition. The School of the Prophets is to be something more serious than any council we have ever taken part in, and to impress the seriousness of it on us all the time, no one at any moment in that school is to indulge in light or frivolous speech or in laughter.

These meetings of the priesthood I hope, especially here in Independence, are a step forward that will help us to perfect ourselves that we may be approved and to draw ourselves into the attitude which we must eventually assume when we finally enter into that School of the Prophets.

Ordinances and Sacraments

I have said that our spiritual ministry takes visible form in formal expression and certainly it is consistent with our belief and that which we have read that we should desire to make all of these ceremonies and ordinances and sacraments and labors as dignified and as beautiful and as impressive as may lie within our power. It is true that we do not have very much of a formal service. We have no book of prayers. Only two formal prayers have been given to us that I recall, the two uttered over the emblems. There is one set of words to use when we baptize, and those are all the set forms of oral expression that I call to mind. And yet there are a number of ordinances and rites and ceremonies that are formal. Some of them are sacraments. Joseph R. Lambert used often to remind us that when we are engaged in them we are "handling heavenly things."

There are at least five of the ordinances that seem to involve a sort of covenant. We call the communion of the Lord's Supper a sacrament. The Roman soldier took an oath of allegiance, the "sacramentum" and the word carried it over into church terminology and we use it regarding the communion service. We speak of it invariably as a sacrament service. A sacrament involves a sacred covenant. In baptism of course there is no oral covenant. There is an understood covenant. The one being baptized takes that way of expressing his promise to enter into new life, to put away old sins and witness before God, the church, and the world that he will enter upon a new life; and God has given his promise, that the man's sins shall be forgiven and he will have the chance he desires to wash the slate clean and start over again.

Confirmation may be considered as a similar covenant. In the confirmation, a man presses into the church promising by so doing that he intends to live the life of a Latter Day Saint, and the Lord promises the spiritual baptism that comes with membership. They make that covenant under the hands of the ministry even though no such words are spoken.

And in receiving your ordination, certainly you pledged yourselves to a life of consecration in the prosecution of the particular labors that come to you in that calling, and the Lord in turn promises you the spirit of your office and calling. In the communion service, rather definitely, when the prayer is offered over the emblems, we promise to take upon ourselves "his name that we may have his Spirit to be with us always," and in return we hear the promise of the Master, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

While many people regard marriage simply as a civil contract, I do not know how we can solemnize it at the altar of the church in the presence of God in the way we do and not think of it as a more sacred covenant than simply a civil contract.

In another class is the blessing of children. That could hardly be said to involve a covenant unless the parents were thought of as making a covenant. Neither, ordinarily, in the administration to the sick. These are ordinances and rites of blessing and consecration, and petition.

Then there are funeral services, and last of all, but by no means least, the pastoral visits which are commanded to be made in the homes of all the Saints.

At the Crises of Life

You will notice, if you wish to, and I presume you do, that in administering in these ordinances and sacraments and rites and privileges and duties you touch humanity at the high points of life. Some of you administer in all of these and probably all of you in some of them. Young people who are in love come to you that they may be married and may thus feel their union is recognized in heaven as something holy. People come to you to be taken down into the water of baptism to make their covenant with God. Under your hands they receive confirmation that entitles them to membership and the

ZIONIC PHILOSOPHY

By L. S. Wight

IF WE are to make the most of our present-day opportunity to "Zionize the church," we must develop a rational Zionic philosophy in regard to policies or methods of achieving our purposes. That philosophy must at once adhere strictly in principle to divine commands, and when applied it must actually solve the present problems of community life. Yet it must be simple enough to be easily understood by all members of the church, particularly by those coming in as we grow.

There probably is no disagreement of opinion as to the basic work of the church. We are primarily a missionary organization and must ever remain so if we are to accomplish our purposes. Although there perhaps has been some disagreement of opinion as to the purpose of the missionary work there should be none. It is axiomatic that no work can be a success unless it has some definite goal. To make the most of our missionary efforts there must be a definite objective and with Latter Day Saints that objective is a material Zion or community life where church members may have the greatest opportunity to enjoy life in its fullness.

In achieving this goal there is bound to be difference of opinion as to best methods, for the simple reason that God in his wisdom left this part of Zion building to man's own ingenuity. Then since each member of the church will approach the solution of this problem from the background of his own experience, it is only natural that there are and will continue to be differences of opinion as to the wisdom of certain methods. This should cause no concern as long as the motives or attitudes of the members are above question, and as long as it is possible for us to agree on some basic rule for determining the values of such differences of detail. Such a yardstick might consist of the following questions:

1. Does it fit divine principles?
2. Is it practical?
3. Is it simple enough to be easily understood?

We may liken these three rules to the three great basic principles of faith, hope, and charity. The Apostle Paul says that of the three, charity is the greatest, and that should also be true in the application of any Zionic plan since the ultimate purpose of Zion is to make it possible for all, which includes the lowliest, to have fullest opportunity for a life development. What could give us greater faith in our Zion building plans than the assurance that they measure up to divine patterns? What could give us greater hope than the confidence that our efforts are practical, that they can solve our common problems, and that they will give us our long-looked-for Zionic communities? Or in what way can we show greater charity to those who are looking for relief than to interpret our Zion building plans in terms which all can understand? No greater opportunity ever existed for any group of people to demonstrate the value of the brotherhood of man in its fullest meaning. To Zionize the church then will result in a real demonstration of faith, hope and charity.

It is not my intention to attempt to settle any controversial questions, but it is my purpose to try to arouse each reader to a realization of his responsibility in helping Zionize the church. Each one must do his part to help develop a rational understanding of the problem. When each member does get into action he will run into some problems which seem insurmountable. Too many have been willing to evade their responsibility at this point by waiting for some one else to solve their problems, especially questions on which there may be some difference of opinion. There should be no hesitancy as these problems can be solved only by direct attack. Each individual will always have problems which are peculiarly his own and should be willing to do his utmost to solve them. He who is sincere in his desire to help Zionize the church will be willing to first solve his own problems. Then he may offer constructive suggestions for the solution of group problems if he is willing to permit them to be measured by the accepted yardstick. If they pass the test, they may be a real contribution to the cause of Zion building. When all suggestions are made with this attitude in mind we will find that we are reaching that unity of thought and purpose so necessary to the success of our Zionic enterprise.

PERHAPS the most important decision any church member can make is to become willing to fit in with the group. He may have some plan to suggest but if an analysis of his suggestions shows that it does not fit the accepted yardstick then to be a true Zion builder he must be willing to change his plan or suggestion so that it will fit, or be willing to see it discarded entirely. If he holds back because his way can not be the way of the group then he only proves that he is not a Zion builder at heart. In fact the first step in developing a sound Zionic philosophy is to train self-interest to be subordinate to group interest. This does not mean that we must give up our God-given agency, but it does mean that we must be willing to fit into group needs.

Zion-building includes many things, in fact it should be an all-inclusive term covering spiritual, mental, physical and material development. Since the first three are dependent on the use we make of available materials or tools perhaps the basic expression of our philosophy will be concerned with material things. The kind of Zion we build then will depend on our ability to handle material things as well as upon our attitude toward them. Therefore if we have the right kind of attitude towards these lesser things of life and use them as a means to an end instead of making the accumulation of them our goal we will put ourselves in a position to make the Zionic demonstration we have been talking about for over a hundred years.

WHAT then should be the starting point in our Zionic thinking? The basic principles of the church and Zionic ideals are so much a part of each other that it is hard to separate them but if we think of Zion as a specific development within the church then we can easily start our Zionic thinking with the law of tithing. We should not need to hesitate at this point to convert our own members but for some reason that has had to be done. Men have even accepted the responsibility of priesthood without being fully converted to the law of tithing, but our growing generation will have no patience with such an attitude. I look for the time to come when no man will be permitted to hold the priesthood without having obeyed the law in full. Furthermore he should show an enthusiastic interest in it. I am ready now to say that I will not knowingly vote for the ordination of any man who is not on record as having obeyed the financial law of the church. As has been said before, this does not work a hardship on anyone as filing the inventory is a fulfillment of the law. That act shows intent and that is the important thing. All God expects of any of us is the best we can do, but he does expect that.

There probably is not a member of the church today who objects to the payment of one tenth of his increase as rent to God. We all understand that this money should be used exclusively for the furtherance of the spiritual or missionary work of the church. Nor is there anyone who even questions that part of the tithing law which has to do with free will offerings. We are all habituated to that idea so it fits in in one form or another to the experiences of every one, both those who have been born into the church and those who come in from year to year. After having paid the debt of the tenth, to give out of necessities that the work of the church might go on is real sacrifice, of which we have had much and of which we will need much more. Those who give in this way are actually giving of themselves to see the work of the church progress.

BUT when it comes to consecrating of ourselves or our surplus we come to the problem that usually starts differences of opinion. The reason for this is that we naturally approach the problem from all types of backgrounds and experiences. And it is in the consideration of these points that so many suggestions are made which may not always qualify under the rules proposed in this article. A study of God's laws covering social conduct reveals that his purpose is that man shall have full opportunity for development of all his talents. Mosaic law was the restrictive type of rule, given because of necessity but when Christ came he revealed the fuller understanding of God's laws. His interpretation of the law of talents shows clearly that he recognized that men should have equality of opportunity but that men are not necessarily equal. He emphasized the error of covetousness, which is just as bad in the poor man who covets what his richer brother has accumulated, as it is in the rich man who covets his fellow man's production. In the restored gospel we find that each one of us should be willing to consecrate all that he has for the accomplishment of the church purposes. This means that we should have a desire to use all our possessions, either mental development or material things for the advancement of the cause, and should not in any way be interpreted as meaning the separation of man from his possessions. Much misunderstanding on this part of our gospel or Zionic philosophy undoubtedly has been one of the contributing factors towards our lack of progress.

My favorite illustration to show the meaning of consecration is the story of a young Englishman who attended a service at which the members contributed certain amounts toward the building of a new church. All donations of course were named in numbers of pounds sterling, in sums of one, two or five pounds. When it came time for this young man sitting in the rear to make his offering he rose up and said, "I'll give 175 pounds"—instantly everyone looked to see who could be giving such a huge amount—then he finished his statement by adding one word, "avoirdupois." In other words he was giving all that he had, himself. In thus offering himself for service he was not giving up the control or possession of any part of himself, as that was his stewardship. He would be responsible for the conduct of that stewardship at the time of final ac-

THE OPEN DOOR

By A. M. CHASE

"When Israel out of bondage came, the sea before them lay,
The Lord reached forth his mighty arm and rolled the sea away."

—(Old hymn.)

IN THE STORY of the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, and particularly the passage of the Red Sea, we have the pattern of most forward movements among the inhabitants of the world, as well as in the Church of Christ. Every attempt at achievement of better things leads to a crisis, and out of the crisis comes deliverance.

It is true that these critical periods have not always been foreseen by those traveling the upward path, nor have they always been faced with as high courage as we could wish, but, as Lyman Abbott says in his Redemption of Society, "The birth of Christ was the beginning, not an ending. It was the beginning of many sorrows and much burden bearing because it was the promise of those spiritual and imperishable joys into which men enter only through the gate of suffering. The great gifts can not be received until the spirit is prepared to receive them." (Everybody's.)

When Moses, obedient to the word of the Lord, gave Israel instruction to "turn and encamp before Pihahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon," it looked to Pharaoh and his host that the time had come when they could surely "take the spoil," and to the multitude of Israel it seemed that the enterprise which they had engaged in was at an end. But the command was, "Go forward," and by going forward, in conjunction with the power of God, they found deliverance, but not the completion of their task. That only came after years of arduous toil and suffering in the wilderness.

When the prediction of Nephi was fulfilled, that "The spirit of God . . . wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, . . . that they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance," (1 Nephi 3: 148-151), it took them more than a century of hardship and endeavor before they came to the crisis where "A nation was born." Indeed this birth was not without travail, as any one who reads the history of the beginnings of this nation will realize.

Today civilization is facing a crisis that must either bring forth a birth of better things for humanity, or result in disaster. Is there an open door for these nations, and peculiarly this nation to "go forward"? We think there is if our lawmakers will courageously meet the issue. But the way must be forward.

WHAT IS TRUE of the nation is also true of this church. A century ago we embarked in an undertaking that can only be accomplished under the Divine favor, and by this same aid from on high. But today, as with Israel of old, we must go forward. As the birth of Christ was only the beginning—a beginning that led the disciples to Calvary—yet out of that travail which Christ pictured when he said to the Twelve, "A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour hath come; but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world. And ye now therefore have sorrow, but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh away from you": I say, out of this travail came the "Church of the Living God."

I will not deal with the apostasy and the dark ages accompanying it, but will say that the Restoration of the Gospel with the accompanying restoration of the priesthood, and the command to "Build Zion," was also only the beginning. Can we hope to successfully build this Kingdom of God without the accompanying travail and suffering that always must be endured before we may be prepared for the rewards of our endeavor?

If the church could not be established and sanctified by the Master without the devotion of his life, his entire life, even unto the offering upon the cross, can His kingdom be successfully established in our day with any less devotion? This is what John seemed to sense when he said: "Hereby perceive we the love of Christ, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." (1 John 3: 16.)

Because the Saints would not pay the price of devotion of their all—because there were jarrings and contentions, and covetous, lustful desires among them, they were driven out (see Doctrine and Covenants 98: 3); and today, when men's hearts are failing them for fear, we have no place of safety. But today, as it was in the days of Moses and Israel of old, the way lies before us, and the command is to "Go forward."

TODAY, as never before, are the Saints made to feel the need of Divine aid and protection, and this can only be found in His Kingdom. I believe

Chapter 19
Ricks of Vanity and Selfishness

A FAMILIAR voice, yet over the telephone it took Polly a moment to place it—"Oh, yes, Cora!"

"What are you doing this afternoon, Polly?"

"Well, since it's Saturday afternoon, my housewifely soul will not let me miss out on the bargains. I thought of going to town. Why?"

"Could you do that early and let me come over later?"

"Yes—why, yes, of course I could. And I haven't seen you for an age. How are you? It'll be fun to have you over—"

"Could I come about four o'clock? Tell you what—I'll set your wave for you. I'll do anything to help if only I can see you. I just have to talk to you, Polly." The urgency in the young voice challenged all of the counselor and advisor there was in Polly.

"Certainly, you can wave my hair. I need a shampoo anyway," she returned, "then I'll feel especially groomed for tomorrow. But is four-thirty all right? I might not get back from town much sooner than that."

Promptly at four-thirty Cora presented herself, looking very trim in her deep red coat and hat. Polly was just getting a cake into the oven. She had not had time during the morning to do her baking.

"We're having a guest to dinner tonight," she gaily informed the visitor, "and so I'm baking her favorite cake."

"Yum, yum, a spice cake! Why, Polly, that's my favorite cake."

"Of course. You're the guest. I forgot to ask you over the telephone, and I haven't had time to call. You can stay, can't you?"

"Why—oh, I don't want to impose—"

"You aren't. You're conferring a great honor upon Mr. and Mrs. Nelson—"

"Well, if you put it that way, thank you; but I can't stay long afterward."

"Naturally not. There's always a Charley or an Oscar or a John to consider, isn't there?" and she closed the oven door on the cake with a decisive little gesture.

Cora blushed.

"And now, Miss Beauty Operator, I'll be ready for you in a few moments." Polly flourished a towel as she started in the direction of the bathroom.

"Oh, do let me shampoo your hair for you."

"Now we'd better begin," suggested Polly as they emerged from the bathroom and she seated herself in front of the guest room dressing table, only a few steps from the kitchen. She did not dare go upstairs and leave the cake in the oven; it would be sure to burn. Down here she could keep a closer watch of it.

"I guess so," but Cora was laboriously putting in the "first" wave and so she did not begin for a moment. "I've wanted to talk to you for some time, Polly, but circumstances were so I couldn't. Maybe what I have to say will surprise you, but I'm concerned about it. I'm twenty-two, Polly, and I'd like to settle myself down to this business of living to the best advantage of all concerned; but there, that sounds like the letters my boss dictates." She picked up a bobby pin and carefully inserted it into the desired wave before going on. "I'm glad the Happy Half Dozen is no more, Polly. That's the brutal truth."

"Are you?"

"Yes. It was too exclusive, too restricted, too much of a clique, Polly, just us six and no more—oh, you know, Polly. I enjoyed it, and I know it was a lark for the other girls, but, Polly, there are hundreds who need reaching right here in Independence, simply hundreds of young people!"

Polly did not speak, but her eyes asked questions.

"As you know, I'm one of the Stone Church representatives on the young people's council of the churches in Independence, and lately I've been studying young people and their needs. I've taught children's classes and watched old people's classes, but Polly, I like young people."

She paused to apply the comb to a refractory lock of hair.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"The other night at council meeting it was announced that there are in Independence today, in Zion, if you please, eighteen hundred young people between the ages of sixteen and thirty, and how many of those do you suppose the church is reaching in any way?"

"I don't know, but I'm afraid it's not a very big per cent."

"You're right. We're reaching by hook or crook only between seven and eight hundred!"

"Is that all!"

"That's all." Their eyes met in the looking-glass. Neither smiled.

Cora went on: "And yet the age of adolescence is the time of expanding loyalties, they say. Where, Polly, are one thousand of our young people putting their loyalties? Into what fields are these loyalties expanding? Certainly they are not expanding into the church. Since that meeting I've worried about where those loyalties are and what's happening to them. It seems to me that's a terrific casualty list for the 'center place.' If the church is holding less than fifty per cent of its young people—well, where will the church be in a few years at that rate?"

Polly was obviously shaken, but she did not attempt to answer Cora's question.

"Something's missing somewhere, and yet, like so many other things, you can't trace this situation to one cause only. There are many causes. What do you think of some of these for causes of the present situation—selfishness of us all, conceit of us all, carelessness, lack of understanding, poor parenthood, gossip, no equipment for our church schools, and the lack of a sense of personal responsibility on the part of every Latter Day Saint in Zion!"

AFTER a little consideration Polly answered simply: "You have a real head on your shoulders, Cora. You incriminate all of us. You make me feel guilt of every misdemeanor, chief of which are carelessness, indifference—"

"That's it—indifference! Pardon me for interrupting you, Polly, and I don't think you're indifferent. But hundreds of people here are. They're so indifferent that they wouldn't jump if you were to stick a pin in them."

Polly laughed. "You feel rather strongly, don't you?"

"Don't I have a right to, Polly? I'm a young person, and when I see these boys and girls falling away at the rate of about fifty-five out of every hundred—or is my arithmetic rotten?—why, it's heart-breaking! We need leaders, men and women with understanding and experience. We don't need leaders as young as I, though, goodness knows, they should be in the training, but we need people like you and Brad to be at the head of a whole big group—"

"People like you and Brad," "and Brad." Those words clung to Polly's consciousness.

The girl continued: "I've sat in the Stone Church and watched people—I love people, Polly—watched lonely ones lost in the crowd, the hunger in their eyes. I think this is one of the worst places in the world for a person to be lost in numbers. And there's nothing more torturing than the loneliness caused by such isolation. It's like a sailor dying of thirst with water everywhere, salt water. These people are perishing for friendship with friends all about, but indifferent friends, people who don't even care to try to get acquainted. I know, for I'm quiet and not very forward. I came here from Nebraska and lacked the initiative to go out and get acquainted. I came to the Stone Church for two whole months and not a soul spoke to me though they were friendly enough among themselves."

MANY times before, Polly had heard criticisms of the Stone Church congregation for its coldness, its indifference to incoming Saints, its cliques, its clubs. Always she had been disposed to excuse this seeming lack of warmth because of the size of the congregation, about twenty-five hundred members. The clubs and classes were all right, she had thought, because a congregation so large had to be organized in some way. But when she had listened to these same criticisms several times, she began to take them seriously, and resolved to devote more time to getting acquainted with others, shaking their hands and wishing them well. It was with a small shock that she realized she knew few of these twenty-five hundred people except the members of her own group, the neighbors on her street, the Saturday Club, the Happy Half Dozen, her Sunday school class, a few sick people, a few officials. Then she had begun to make friendly overtures to strangers.

"Why, I've lived here eighteen years!" a woman replied to her kindly question: "Are you new in Independence?"

"Gracious, my dear," another had looked askance at her, "I was born here. Why, I'm a Courtland."

And a third had giggled: "Yes, I've lived here a long time. Used to teach in the Sunday school, but now it doesn't seem that I know a soul. My name's Jones. This is a hard place to get acquainted and stay acquainted."

NOW Cora was working with the short locks at the back of Polly's neck. Polly could not see her face as she declared: "It's because of the great need of the many, Polly, that I think these organizations for the privileged and the pampered and their children have little right to existence. If all Latter Day Saints were only big enough to forget their own little clique and organize themselves in representatives groups!"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"I think I'd better turn the oven a little lower. I smell the cake," and Polly fled to the kitchen. When she returned she smiled at the girl who leaned against the table, the picture of deep meditation. "Well, what would you suggest as a remedy for this appalling situation among the young people, my dear?"

"That's too big a question for me. The council is considering it. Its purpose, you know, is to stimulate activities to interest all the young people."

"Then what would you say is the crying need," ventured Polly, "good leaders?"

"Yes. If we had leader material, people who were really concerned about the young people, people who were not just overgrown boys and girls searching for self-glory and fame! Somewhere, Polly, I read of this little incident, and I like its application to our need. A Chinese rice grower had his farm on the top of a mountain. One day there was an earthquake, and the farmer, from his high place, saw the waters of the near-by ocean withdrawn from the land in a great wall. They drew up like a lion about to spring, and when that spring came, he knew it would be a tidal wave. Down below on the rice-field flats he could see the workers. Those workers would be destroyed by that wave if something was not done quickly. Without a thought to himself, he rushed to his rice-ricks and set them afire. Then he rang the temple bell furiously, and the people, thinking his farm was burning, clambered up. When they turned to look behind them they saw the fields where they had been working covered to a great depth with surging, green waters. He had saved their lives. Maybe it's far-fetched, Polly, but I would like to burn my rice-ricks of personal vanity and selfishness and conceit."

"You conceited, Cora, dear!" Polly's laugh was derisive. "You're about as conceited as a dove. I think you're sweet. You'll be a wonderful leader one of these days. All you need is years."

"A pretty pecky dove I'd make, Polly," rejoined the other. "Now you're finished," and she gave a final pat to Polly's head and stood away to look at her.

"Thank you. Well, we can say that the Happy Half Dozen has done one thing for you; it made you alert to young people and their needs."

"My office work has made me aware of that, too. Church work affects you like that. It makes you feel as though you knew a lot of people you really don't. People who live away from Independence would be surprised if they knew what queer reports reach here of their doings or their undoings," and she made a little grimace. "But the biggest thing the Happy Half Dozen did for me, Polly, dear, was that it gave you to me."

"I'm flattered."

"Well, I really meant that. I've wondered, sometimes, Polly, why a woman as attractive and capable as you didn't always have a trail of girls following her."

"Because I haven't been concerned enough about all girls. There, that suits your analysis, Cora. I've been concerned with only a small group—my loyalty to girldom has been pretty little."

But Cora shook her head.

"I consider it the greatest compliment in the world," Polly asserted as she began to set the table, "to have people want to be like me. Sometimes, though, I feel sorry for them, because, I'm a very insignificant person—"

"Who's an insignificant person?" demanded Brad bursting in on them, "my wife, and she's admitting it! Why, hello, Cora. Are you ladies up to a confessions party?"

"No indeed, we're just discussing young people and their needs."

"Needs? Well, now let's see, a girl nowadays needs a lipstick, a new manicure, a pocketbook full of clothes, a date, and some 'mad' money. There you are!"

"And I suppose," chuckled Cora, "on the same scale, a young fellow needs a coonskin coat, a frat pin, an Austin, a girl, and a movie! No, we were saying how many young people there are in Independence who have no church contacts and of the need of leaders."

"But surely they don't need any more leaders, Cora, when they have you."

"Don't be silly!"

"Silly or not, I'll recommend you any day of the week."

Cora's glance wavered from Brad to Polly and back again. There were words on the tip of her tongue, words that she wanted to utter. Polly could almost feel those words, but she soon forgot the things Cora might have told Brad at that moment, for her own mind was seething with thoughts of ricks of vanity and selfishness and laziness, and in her brain a daring resolution was forming. She would see the superintendent tomorrow.

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

reception of the holy Ghost. When they have children they bring them to the altar for your blessing, bringing the incarnation of their fondest ambitions and the flowering of their most sacred love to be received into your hands for a blessing from on high. When they are sick, perhaps sick unto death, they call for you to come and implore God for a blessing in the way of relief. When they die you may be there at the bedside. You may officiate at the funeral rites.

So you touch human life in all of its vital experiences, and to crown all you are sent out as pastors of the flock into the homes of the Saints. I cannot think of any more sacred duty. Going on a foreign mission is in no way superior in its responsibility or even possibility.

We should study how to do all these things in the best possible way, that we may "show ourselves approved," that we may do them in a dignified, orderly, and solemn manner; and not in a careless, hasty, and slovenly way.

The Experience of John Jones

I was talking to a group of our priesthood in Spring River District since General Conference, and I was remarking that in the past we had sent men out without giving them adequate instruction, and I used these expressions: We will say some one has risen up in a prayer service and said that "John Jones" is called to the office of elder. He is ordained. Then we have sent him out and told him to go to work without giving him any instruction as to his duties. And I went on to say that this man, John Jones, has some one come to him for baptism. John Jones has seen people baptized but he did not pay any particular attention to the procedure and no one has told him how, and he does not just know how. He does not know how the candidate should stand to secure the necessary leverage to raise a man out of the water. He does not recall, perhaps, the words he ought to say. These are small matters, apparently, but the solemnity of the occasion may hinge on them.

A minister in another church was baptized in the Mississippi River at Nauvoo and because he did not know any better than to baptize downstream and attempt to raise the candidate up against the current, both he and the candidate lost their footing and went under, and there came near being a tragedy, though it proved to be just a comedy, when it was meant to be a solemn occasion.

Well, some one comes to John Jones who wants to be married. John has seen people married but did not take any particular notice, and when the time comes he is just as badly perplexed as I was at my first wedding ceremony. I quite literally stood the couple up against a wall and fired at them one question point blank, "Do you both mutually agree," etc., and it was all over before they knew it had begun. It took a long time for me to learn. Nobody ever told me how to go about it. But I have solemnized marriages in later years in which the spirit was the same as we have in communion services and I do not think the contracting parties will ever forget the spirit of the occasion. Well, thus it is with John Jones. Perhaps he is called to administer. He has seen administration but just did not notice how it was done and does not know how to proceed.

I went over this and more, and I noticed a gentleman in the audience, a smiling, jovial looking man, who paid especially good attention, and at the close he came forward, extended his hand, and said, "My name is John Jones. I was called and ordained exactly as you said, and I had all the experiences you have related—and more. Some one wanted to be baptized and I did not know how and later the same man wanted to be married and I did not know how to do that. I had to learn everything by sad experience."

It was a little embarrassing to find I had been holding this man up before the audience as an example. I thought John Jones was a safe name. But at least it showed I had painted a very accurate picture of life.

Priestly Preparation

The consideration of this condition came before the Joint Council and it was determined to attempt to get our priesthood together and teach them, particularly the inexperienced men, concerning their duties—and to provide them lessons and helps. Tonight I would not have time to give any advice about these individual or particular sacraments and ordinances and duties. I will just make some suggestions. In approaching this line of your duty, of course the first preparation indicated all through the books is a prayerful attitude. In the teaching objectives set forth and adopted by the late conference the first objective in teaching the Saints is to teach them to pray, and naturally the ministry themselves must also observe that objective. Then comes the question of study, "Study that you may show yourselves approved." Study the law in the three books. You will notice that the line of study outlined for the School of the Prophets is very broad, "Things at home, things abroad, laws, governments, the nations of the earth, etc., yet it starts out first of all with the doctrine of the church and all things pertaining to the kingdom of God—all things in governments and laws and nations and signs of the times that pertain to the kingdom—those are the first things to study. I fear that sometimes we study almost anything and everything, and as a side-line pay some attention to the three books of the church. Study all good books, but the three books first.

And in addition to these books, beginning immediately after the late conference, material was made available for your hands. The Manual of the Priesthood was prepared, largely through the labors of Brother McDowell, Brother Edwards, and Brother Lea, and printed and distributed. The first edition is practically exhausted and a second edition is in preparation. Probably there are some things in that Manual you might criticize, but there are so many things helpful to the ministry that every ordained man ought to have a copy and study it, and this is especially true of every beginner.

In addition there was begun the publication of a series of study pamphlets. The first of these: "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God," has been published and about sold out. The second, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Immortality," is now in the hands of the printer. The third, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Christ," is in course of preparation. These later numbers await your order from the Herald Publishing House. Other numbers are to follow. This series of studies in doctrine paves the way for a series giving more specific attention to the practical details of your ministry: "The pastor at Work," "The Priest at work," etc. If you support this project and buy and study these pamphlets you will not only profit thereby yourself, you will also make possible their continuation that others may be profited. For they can not be published unless they pay their way constantly, the sale of each number making possible the publication of the next.

You who live here in Independence have also an opportunity to observe others. You have fine pastors and they call to their assistance in these ceremonies and sacraments and duties men of experience. Our services in all of these matters in Independence are on a high level, of order and system and solemnity. Just watch and observe how others do these things.

counting so of course must have full power of control in handling his responsibilities.

This principle has been emphasized so much and in so many ways that it has always been rather puzzling to me that so much of our Zionic thinking is expressed in restrictive type of rule rather than creative, with freedom of action. Christ emphasized the fact that talents should be controlled by those who proved their ability to take care of them. Yet too often our suggestions for rules covering community development would restrict and control, instead of attempting to encourage unlimited development. There should be no cause for fear of any kind as long as a man recognizes the basic law of tithing and attempts to carry it into effect to the best of his ability in cooperation with proper officers as per divine instruction.

To make my meaning clear, the church is suffering today because we have had too much of that type of thinking in spiritual work as well as material. When the Reorganization was effected it was natural that the leaders thought constantly of the division of the people as they followed many leaders who sprung up after the assassination of the Martyr, the most influential being the one who led the largest group west. Therefore they determined to prevent another such catastrophy by hedging about the executive officers of the church so many restrictive rules that their responsibilities were interfered with. This resulted finally in the disaster of 1925 when the church decided that executive responsibility should carry with it equal freedom of action.

It seems to me that the relationship between the individual member of the church and the group of which he is a part should be such as to encourage the member to develop himself to the utmost. That is positive or constructive thinking and is in accord with divine rule. To artificially or arbitrarily set a limit on what the member as such may do, or on what he may own or control seems to me to be against divine plan and if so it would be hard to make such a rule fulfill the requirements of fitting the divine pattern. Instead of a group of people being careful to so arrange their rules of group relationship to prevent any one creating something which he could take from the group, it would mean much more to them for each to feel the responsibility of producing all possible and to not worry about what any one else might do. Suppose one should want to exercise the God-given principle of free agency and leave such a group, taking with him all that he had created except of course what he had paid in as tithing or deeded by way of consecration, the loss to the group would be negligible. It would not be so much as it would be if in watching each other to see that no one did take something away, they would fail to each produce to his maximum.

The restrictive type of community government smacks too much of the kind of bureaucracy which has been running rampant in our national, state and local governments. It breeds complicated forms of group control which are hard to understand and therefore could hardly measure up to the requirement of simplicity which should be an outstanding characteristic of our Zionic development. Neither is it practical as it always creates a cost of supervision which makes the cost of overhead far too great. The simplest forms of control are always the most practical. If we develop a complex system which will require too much cost of supervision, or overhead, we will defeat our purpose and create groups which might eventually come under the control or possibly under the domination of small groups of officers. Most of the methods of solving our daily problems are the result of years of experience and are the natural evolution of growth. There should be no thought of discarding those things which have proved to be best.

The gathering of course is our great Zionic objective for the simple reason that in numbers there is strength. It is in looking forward to the grouping of many members that various rules to govern such grouping are suggested. If all such rules are made to qualify under the simple restrictions herein suggested there need be no fear of developing a complicated system of Zionic government which might defeat the purpose of the gathering. As a matter of fact to many sincere, devoted Latter Day Saints the move from an isolated condition to that of becoming a part of a Zionic group will mean only one change, and that will be the change of location. Attitudes, habits, customs, methods of work or of doing business will not be changed in the least as long as they have been developing their lives on a gospel basis. They will already be accustomed to letting natural laws control their habits of work or business, and will look forward to Zion as the one place which will guarantee natural simplicity in government of community life.

Every member of the church should devote some time and thought to the study of Zionic problems and should have an open mind in order to get a full understanding of those problems. When solutions for the problems are suggested it would be well for us to measure them carefully by some accepted yardstick and we should be willing to discard all such suggestions or plans which will not clearly measure up to a high divine standard.

When we think in terms of the financial law of the church including tithing, surplus, free will offerings and consecration; stewardship and its problems of individual development; or the gathering with its problems of community development; we should make sure that our conclusions accord fully with divine standards, that they can easily be put to practical tests, and that in their operation they are simple enough to be clearly understood by anyone who is willing and anxious to do his bit towards bringing about a realization of our Zionic dreams.

God is still directing us provided we do our part in seeking that direction, and provided also we keep our minds under such control that we are willing to bend ourselves to that direction when it comes. And I believe that God is anxiously waiting and watching for his slow moving children to take the first steps which will prove their readiness to accept the direction which will guide us toward our Zionic goal.

we are sensing this, and that these very conditions will impel us to a greater willingness to give our all—not only in money, but in talents and endeavor to the enterprise of Zion building. Surely, in no other way can it be accomplished. We are coming to realize that only by laying down our lives shall we find them in the fullest sense. When we quit thinking in terms of how much it will profit us individually to build Zion, and think, rather, "Can I do anything to move the cause of Zion," with no reservations in our mental backgrounds, then will we realize that this is our opportunity. Instead of praying to be delivered from this hour, like the Master we will realize and say, "For this cause came we unto this hour."

Paul declares that we are saved by hope, and if this is the Lord's work, if this witness has reached our hearts, then with Paul we can exult: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with the glory which shall be revealed in us." And if any of our Saints are feeling discouraged, it will do them good to turn to this chapter, (Romans 8) and read it as it is given to us in the Inspired Translation. With Paul we can ask the question, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" and follow it with another, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" But let us realize that only as we "prepare our hearts," can we successfully do the tasks needed to enable us to "be prepared in all things," for his coming.

Personally, I feel that the message of John to the church in Philadelphia comes to us today: "I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name." With the Psalmist we feel to exult:

"Sing unto the Lord, O ye Saints of his,
And give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness,
For his anger endureth but a moment;
In his favor is life:
Weeping may endure for a night,
But joy cometh in the morning."

Surely, we may obey the admonition of the Master when we look around us, and take courage for the labor before us, counting no task or sacrifice too great, "for the joy that is set before us."

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh." (Luke 21: 25-27, Inspired Translation.) Shall we not go forward? If our faith is adequate to move us to obedience, the sea will open, and the mountains will be removed that seem to bar our way, for "the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land," and Zion shall be established. Shall we not "Arise, go over this Jordan?"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Take Sleep in the Hours Set Apart by God

By Gomer T. Griffiths

Nearly one hundred years ago the Lord called the attention of his ministry, in one of the most important revelations given to the church, to the absolute necessity of taking sleep within the hours set apart for sleep. As a ministry and people we have been emphasizing the absolute necessity of living "By every word that proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord." (Matthew 4: 5.) In this revelation the Lord said, "Cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.)

Because the ministry and the Saints failed to observe the advice of the Spirit given in the above revelation, the kind Lord spoke again fifty-five years later to the church, through the late prophet, Joseph, as follows: "Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body; take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9.)

Both revelations prove that God who created the body is intensely concerned in its care and preservation. Latter Day Israel is just as forgetful of God's advice and commandments, as was old Israel, and many have to suffer the consequence of their disregard of God's counsel. Every reasonable, intelligent person knows that God can use a healthy body, and a bright mind to a better and greater advantage, than one that is physically and mentally weak. Therefore if we have a desire to cooperate with God and Christ in placing the gospel of Christ before the nations of the earth, and bringing about the redemption of Zion, it behooves us to give heed to the advice of the Spirit that has been given twice to his elders through two of his inspired prophets within the last one hundred years.

If there ever was a time in the history of the world when healthy bodies and vigorous minds were in demand to forward the work of God, that time is now, when turmoil, confusion, doubt and wickedness abound everywhere. God takes no delight in seeing his people suffer in body and mind, and for that reason has given direction in these last days as to what we should eat and drink, and the hours in which we should take sleep. (See Doctrine and Covenants 86.) And herein is pointed out the blessings and protection that will come to those who observe the instruction therein given.

"And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walk in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel. Amen." We should bear in mind the fact that the children of Israel had to suffer untold misery forty years in the wilderness because of their lack of reverence for the counsel of God, and their disobedience thereto. I am confident that a great many of the ministry desire in their hearts to obey the voice of the Spirit; however they are subject to conditions that obtain in the places where they travel, and are hindered in carrying out their desire, because they are subject to the customs and regulations of the homes to which they have been invited.

In some homes the radio is operated until late hours, which prevents the elder from enjoying the needed rest, the host evidently not realizing the ill effect it has on the elder, and that this is of such frequent occurrence in his experience. This experience continued robs him of his physical strength and mental vigor. I have heard some people say that the elder should not pay any attention to noise, that noise did not keep them from sleeping, and they boasted that the screeching of whistles and the noise of the radio did not have any ill effect on them, and keep them from sleeping soundly.

It has fallen to my lot to occupy the same room with some of those boasters. They kept up a terrible noise all night long, snoring, talking in their sleep, rolling and tumbling, but, they, poor souls, were not conscious of the great annoyance that they had kept up all night, preventing others in the room from sleeping. When morning came they imagined they had had a sound, healthful sleep. If science be true these persons are deceiving themselves, for scientists content that noise murders sleep, and the sleeper is not conscious of it. Nevertheless it does have a detrimental effect on both body and mind. This position of science harmonizes with what the Lord has revealed in these last days. In support of this claim, I insert the following, from an article by Doctor Donald A. Laird, director of the psychology laboratory at Colgate University:

The Vision of Joseph Smith on Judgment

I saw a holy temple; its beauty charmed my soul;
The swords within its doorway of entrance had control;
When they were seen in action, man's fear became profound,
Because their flaming glitter caused terror to abound.

'Twas seen that one, defiant, determined to go in,
Who came and kept on coming, so sure that he would win,
But swords were quick in action, with streams of flaming light
By which he was defeated, then left, filled up with spite.

Some others came to enter, with peaceful looking eyes.
I knew them and had judged them unworthy of that prize.
Observing close swords action, to know what they would do.
Surprised I was by seeing they let those people through.

Then others came on smiling—no fear was in them seen—
They felt their entrance certain—proud, dignified, serene.
I too felt sure their entrance would not be barred at all,
But flaming swords fell quickly, producing an appall.

It made me think sincerely, of all we need to know.
About the living people. To judge, we must go slow.
It's best, at last to leave it to God who dwells on high.
Whose judgment's always perfect: ours faulty, though we try.

(This poem is based on another account of the vision that was printed in the Herald of April 15, 1878.)

Disarmament conferences, multilateral peace-treaties—all these will be vain and empty unless the emotional attitude of John Smith can be so changed that he will say, when war looms, what Moses Levy finds burning on his lips but does not dare to say: Fighting is dirty, sinful, and unworthy of man. Above all it is immeasurably stupid; it settles nothing; it is suicidal for all concerned. It is absolute evil as well as absolute stupidity. That is why Moses Levy, even when he follows the drum in fear of being lynched, has an essential comtempt both for those who beat the drum and for those who follow it gladly.—Ludwig Lewisohn in If I Could Preach Just Once.

Prayer and Testimony

Faith and Prayers of Saints Prevail With God

By Helen Moorman

Some years ago my father lay ill with pneumonia. The doctors and nurses held no hope for his recovery. He was working in northern Oklahoma when he fell ill, and our family was living in the home place at Knobnoster, Missouri.

When it seemed that he could live no longer, they sent for mother who went immediately to his bedside, taking an elder with her as there were no Saints in the community where my father lay suffering. When they arrived, the elder administered several times, but seemingly to no avail. The elder finally told mother that he could do nothing there as the wrong spirit prevailed, so he would go home and call the Saints to pray. He did this and that evening at ten minutes past eight o'clock the priesthood of Knobnoster knelt in prayer for the recovery of my father.

That night as mother watched, the nurse came in and took his temperature, pulse, and respiration. She uttered a startled exclamation, and counted the pulse again. "I can't understand," she said, "everything is normal and still there is no change for the worse!" They had said if this happened the crisis would come and he would probably die.

Father could not speak aloud, so he beckoned to mother and whispered, "What time is it?" Mother looked and it was ten minutes past eight. "It is that faithful band of Saints back home," he said. He is alive today to testify to the truth of this story.

Appreciates the Ministry of the Spirit

By Charles L. Sessions

I accepted the restored gospel and entered the church in 1895, having learned something of the principles of truth in the previous fall and winter. I found it to be more interesting and more in harmony with common sense and reason than the teachings of the church in which I had been reared. I found the gospel to be the very same that was taught by Christ on the shores of Galilee and in the temple at Jerusalem. And today I see in it all that is worth living for.

What could we ask that would be of more value to us? It gives us the promise of the kind care of our Father in heaven during this life and of a place in the celestial kingdom in the world to come. And to me the best feature of the gospel for the present time is the ministration of the Spirit which gives us knowledge of many things.

The teachings contained in the three standard books of the church are fine, sublime, and inspiring, but the Spirit teaches us of the deep things of God. These things if we are sufficiently interested to search for them and dig them out, are rare gems and worth more than the effort to find them. Let us dig deep while the world is asleep, searching for precious things, and we shall find them to be continual inspiration to us.

I look forward to the time when Zion will be fully established with its places of worship, its schools, its mills and factories, and with a contented people enjoying the abundance of peace. Let us go.

"Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion the beautiful beckons us on."

Wants to Join the Church

By Violet Leighton

I have been wondering when I should join the church, for I am convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel, and that the Reorganized Church is Christ's church on earth.

An experience of four years ago confirms me in this conviction. My brother was very sick with pneumonia. My father had been ill but had recovered. My sister was also ill. And then my brother and sister while suffering with pneumonia contracted the whooping cough. One evening they were very sick and we telephoned the elders in Madison to come to administer. We called them two different times, and they came at night. They administered to my brother and administered to and blessed my sister. Both sufferers started to get well, but a complication of diseases afflicted my sister, and a short time later she died. My brother was still sick at the time of her funeral. A short time afterward he was healed, and his healing convinced me of the need and the blessings of prayer and the truth of the gospel.

I am going to join the church this summer if I have an opportunity to go to conference or reunion. We do not live where we have branch privileges. My brothers and I have been blessed in the church but never baptized. My father and mother are members of the church.

Child Is Divinely Healed

By Everett G. Huntington

I was baptized June 27, 1897, and in all the time that has elapsed since then, I have never written a testimony for the church paper until now. I have been so slack in subscribing to the papers and helping in that way to redeem Zion, that now I am almost ashamed to do so. But I have been impressed to write to the Herald today, for the Lord has been very good to us when we were worthy.

Here I want to tell you of an occurrence which took place shortly after the birth of a baby boy to us March 1, 1898. When he was two days old, he was seized with convulsions, one right after another, until apparently he was dead. I had been to town with a load of wood, to get groceries, and the midwife was keeping him warm with hot cloths when I reached home. My wife's aunt was helping her. At nine o'clock she told me to lie down and sleep till one. When she would call me and would herself lie down for a nap. "We will have prayer first," I replied. And one hour after my prayer, the baby swallowed food from a spoon, and from that time on he improved. But he continued to wheeze at every breath as time went on. By the middle of June he was only two pounds heavier than when he was born.

I was going to Perham one day and said to myself: "The neighbors and all of us have done all we know, what more can we do?" I was alone and so spoke aloud. But my answer came as plain as any man could speak it: "You might send for the elders of the church."

"I do thank thee, O God, my heavenly Father," I humbly replied, "but thou knowest the time is short for me to get the money together for the land sale and my home will be sold if I fail to get the money. If thou wilt spare the child until then, I will have the administration performed." So on the first Sunday after the land sale I hitched up my team and drove eighteen miles to have the baby administered to, and he was instantly healed. When Brother Whiting asked

Prayer and Testimony

God to rebuke the disease that was preying upon him, the child stretched out in his mother's lap, and from that instant he never wheezed again. He commenced to grow and sat alone on the floor at a much younger age than any of our other children.

This and many other assurances cause me to know that this is the true and everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ.

Has Received Many Blessings

By Hester Somers

I am twenty-one years old and have been a member of the church for eleven years. I have been in poor health for several years, but during that time I have learned that God hears and answers prayer.

We were isolated last year, but decided to move to a branch where I could be administered to. It had been months since I had been up, and to make things worse, I had to have an operation. We came to Salt Lake City and Brothers Chase and Hall administered to me. I received immediate relief, arose and walked across the floor and out of the house. On the next day I visited different interesting places in the city and was up all day. I am not strong yet, but am gaining in strength, and am up practically all the time. I teach a kindergarten class here in Rupert, and am able to attend all the meetings.

About a month ago I had a ring-around on my little finger. I was administered to and it came to a head, broke, and ran within twenty-four hours. The year before when we were isolated I had one and it was ten days in developing and had to be lanced in two places. Indeed I could write for hours about the blessings I have received.

I enjoy reading the Herald. We are not able to take it, but the pastor's wife kindly lets us read theirs, and for this privilege we are thankful.

We have a nice little branch at Rupert. It is growing. The young people are taking hold of their share of the activities, and I believe will accomplish many things. I enjoy the young people's prayer meeting very much. We also have nice meetings on Wednesday night. It is my desire to so live that I may show by my daily walks that I am trying to follow Christ.

God Cares for His Own

By Mrs. William Aaron

I am seventy-one years old and was baptized when I was fourteen. I have witnessed wonderful healing through administration to the sick by our elders. My mother was given up to die by the doctors. She had bronchitis in the worst form and had not slept for weeks. She coughed and smothered constantly and so we sent for the elders. After the administration she went to sleep, and in two weeks she was well and able to help about the work.

My son who went to camp in the late war was there when the flu was raging. Boys were dying by the hundreds, and I was very worried for fear he, too, would contract the disease. He wrote me every day, but there came a day when a letter did not arrive. That evening I received a telegram telling me that my boy was expected to die any minute. Oh, the awfulness of that hour for me! I felt faint and sick, but I knew that I had no time to lose. I went to my bedroom and fell on my knees before God, pouring out my grief to him. There I prayed until I received evidence that my son would live. It was more than a week before I heard from him again, but I did not fret. When I got a letter, he told me that he had seen me standing by his cot and heard me speak to him, and that at that moment all his misery left, and he went to sleep. Next morning he felt well, but the nurse would not let him get up.

I could relate many such blessed experiences, but will let this suffice, in order that I may tell you about a recent meeting we had. March 12 was a wonderful day for a group of isolated Saints in this community. We are not isolated from good Brother Fish, of Indianapolis. He came and led seven souls into the waters of baptism and, in the afternoon we had confirmation and sacrament beginning at three o'clock and lasting until six. We had a feast to the soul of testimonies, prayers, and rejoicing. My seventeen-year-old grandson was called and told to humble himself for the ministry.

A Message of Cheer and Gratitude

By Viola Fohrman

I am a granddaughter of William Napier, who was killed in the Haun's Mill Massacre which occurred October 30, 1838. Often my grandmother used to describe to me the dreadful scene. Grandfather knew he was to be killed. He was given a vision thirty-six hours before the mob came upon them, and he told Brother Haun that calamity would befall them. He was buried in the well with the others who were shot by the mob.

Soon I shall be seventy-eight years of age, but though I am a cripple in my right hip, I am still able to do my house work. I have enjoyed many blessings in the years I have belonged to the church, and as I work I often pray and sing. I am happy to help out in this life. I reared my own family and have helped with my son's family. I think it is our privilege to be cheerful and as happy as we can be, praising God from whom all blessings flow.

I have had many spiritual experiences since my early years which have convinced me of the truthfulness of the latter-day gospel and the goodness of God to mankind. God has watched over me, and though at times I have suffered trials and discouragements, he has helped me. Many times my prayers have been answered. Always I have been blessed with good health and a cheerful disposition. And now I am filled with gratitude for the kindly provisions God has made for his children, the ordinances he has placed in his church. I pray for all of you.

Shall We Stand the Test?

By Mrs. Winnie M. Hulbert

While conditions in the world are somewhat discouraging, and are having their effect on the church in general, we have the assurance that God is at the helm and will speed his work on to victory if the Saints will be humble and let him have his own way with them. A greater consecration on the part of the Saints must come, for we shall be sifted as wheat, the tares being removed. The pages of history are full of accounts of trying circumstances that the saints of God have met at different times and comparatively few have been able to stand the test and remain true to their testimony. However, only to those who do stand the test will receive a crown of life.

QUESTION TIME

What laws will govern when Zion is established?

It is generally recognized that Zion will "be built upon this continent," that is, in North America. The people of Zion will doubtless be subject to the laws of the land in which it is established—at least prior to the coming of Christ. But unless other laws also were to govern those who constitute Zion, there would be no difference in their governing rules between them and other peoples with similar laws. It therefore becomes evident that Zion will be subject to laws that do not govern in the world at large. The law that is designed to govern in the building of Zion is stated in a revelation to the church as follows:

"Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

An examination of the Scriptures make it clear that the principles of the celestial law are those principles which Jesus declared should govern the acts of his people. The fundamental principles upon which all the "law and the prophets" rests are set forth by him in no uncertain words when he said:

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matthew 22: 37-40.

The laws of Zion in their human aspects are to regulate conduct that tends to build and preserve the conditions which make the celestial atmosphere. They are based upon the principle of equality which means mutual consideration, all of which are summed up in the command of Jesus:

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7: 12.

Unless these principles are cherished and given expression in the actual daily relationships of men, they will to that extent fail to establish Zion.

Was the Melchisedec priesthood wholly removed at the death of Moses?

The only direct statement covering this question which I now recall is found in the revelation which informs us that the Israelites hardened their hearts and could not endure the presence of God:

"Therefore he took Moses out of their midst, and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdest the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.

While this statement does not specifically say that the holy priesthood was taken "out of their midst" at the death of Moses, it seems fair to infer as much. But if so, it would appear that Moses was at that time the only person who possessed it, at least the only one remaining alive. Some have thought this might mean that the presidency of Moses was the only living authority through which the holy priesthood could be given to another, and that with his death there would be no one living to confer it after his time. This might still leave it a possible question as to whether or not others of his time possessed it, but without the right to transmit it.

If the last supposition were true, it would mean that the presidency of the high priesthood is necessary to its continuance. In that case it could still be possible that others under Moses had possessed it until their death, though there seems to be no evidence to determine that such was the case.

What is meant by the term, "fullness of the gospel"?

So much might be implied by this term, that one must know what was in the minds of those using it, in order to explain its meaning in all instances. However, the term of itself would evidently mean the gospel in its entirety. Under the Aaronic ministry the gospel of repentance and baptism was preached and the ordinance observed. But the restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood enabled the people to receive the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands, the seal of their adoption into the divine family. The fullness of the gospel would include these divine powers and gifts, as well as the power to receive further revelation for the guidance of the church. The fullness of the gospel in fact includes a continuation of divine guidance, as God's people may need.

Missionary Pair Write Australian Saints

Tell Countrymen of Labors in Northwestern United States

(Elder Harold I. Velt, now missionary to Portland District, is accompanied in his labors by his wife, Sister Evelyn A. Velt. Together they recently wrote to the Saints of Australia through the mission paper, the Gospel Standard. Brother and Sister Velt are native Australians, and they write their countrymen a cheering and informative letter. We think all Herald readers will be interested in what they have to tell their friends in far-off Australia.—EDITORS.)

We have been delighted to hear the good news of the progress of the work in Australia. We read eagerly the letters from there, and look forward to the mails from time to time for further news.

We have been laboring at Longview and Kelso, Washington, since March 14. Longview is on one side of the Cowlitz River, and on the other side is Kelso, an older city. Longview is sometimes called the "Vision" city. It was laid out by Mr. R. A. Long about eight years ago, a Utopian city built between the Columbia and Cowlitz Rivers in the interests of the Long-Bell Lumber Company. Sister Velt and I had the privilege recently of being escorted through this great mill, the largest mill in the world. Its plant covers 645 acres, eighty acres of which are under roof. In normal times about twenty-two hundred men were employed at this one mill (There is another large mill in the same district), and between eight hundred and nine hundred are employed in these days of depression. The power and efficiency of modern machinery are wonderful. One could watch the machines for hours. We shall ever appreciate the opportunities that have been afforded us to see the great mills working here, at Port Angeles, and Everett, Washington, also at Hammond and New Westminster, British Columbia.

But about our church work. We found that the idealistic outlay of the city of Longview was not the most conducive to the spread of our work just at present, for rent is high, and the hall occupied by the few scattered members at Longview and Kelso, though about midway between the two cities, is too far away from the residential areas of both. Few people can afford to drive cars at present, and nonmembers will not walk far until they become really interested. The highest number of nonmembers we secured for our Book of Mormon lectures was forty-one, considerably below the number in most places with the same amount of publicity.

Coming back from Portland district convention (about which we shall speak later), we decided to hold meetings in a private home in Kelso to get some of our interested friends into the fold if possible. For one week I preached gospel principles and social ideals, using charts, the effort being calculated to prepare candidates for baptism.

Attendance increased, and yesterday (April 22) we had the privilege of baptizing and confirming fifteen men, women, and children. The baptisms were performed under ideal conditions, in the swimming pool of the Longview Y. M. C. A. which was willingly given for the occasion. I had not baptized so many on one occasion before. Elders Barker and Nelson, of Portland, were present to assist, and the confirmations of necessity were more brief than usual with a wonderful spirit of peace and light attending. We have more names for baptism next Sunday, and there are several fine families investigating who may give their names soon.

Sister Velt and I are extremely happy in missionary work. It is good for a missionary to be free from local responsibility. We travel together and together we spend from fourteen to forty-five hours a week visiting in gospel work. We usually have preaching about six times a week with an occasional social evening, and violin, piano and vocal specials are a regular part of our meetings. We should think it strange now, to have preaching only a few times a week as in Australia. Both Sister Velt and I are enjoying better health as time goes by, and this makes our work more enjoyable.

Now we have something more important to tell than about our own work. We have already expressed to you our pleasure at finding the leading authorities of the church so powerful and yet so humble and prayerful. You know that we have always felt we could not get too much of the company and association of the leading churchmen. The privilege we recently had of hearing President Elbert A. Smith's splendid talks and sermons was of real value, and then in company with the district president, his wife, and Brother M. A. McConley, we had a day's outing with Brother Elbert up the beautiful Columbia Drive, Oregon. I think perhaps there is no man who enjoys the beauties of nature to a greater degree than does he, so it seemed quite natural that up

www.LatterDayTruth.org

among those rugged rocks by the waterfalls, with the lofty mountains towering above, Brother Elbert suggested a season of prayer.

To associate with the man is to love him, and to determine to be more prayerful and more perfect. I am sure that you are all enjoying Brother Elbert's writings in the Herald and the pamphlets the church is putting out.

The present efforts of the church to have its membership better trained for service, are commendable. At the recent Portland district convention (where President Elbert A. Smith was present as mentioned) Apostle McConley conducted five class periods during two days. His preaching and teaching are better than ever.

Alaflora Branch

Near Brewton, Alabama

"Forward March," is the watchword in this branch where Brother Earl T. Higdon is the pastor. He and his helpers are ever alert. The branch now has a splendid young people's prayer meeting each Wednesday evening, the pastor leading. Some of the very young participate.

A splendid sacrament service was had the first Sunday of April after which Elder A. D. McCall gave an earnest talk, "The Unfinished Work of the Church."

Alaflora Branch is now furnishing speakers for different groups in the district. Special mention should be given to the splendid work being done by the McArthur group. The young people have regular prayer meetings and are doing their bit to help raise funds for the church.

The women of the branch met April 12, at the church to organize their group to function more efficiently in local activities. Elder E. N. McCall, leader of religious education, presided over this meeting, and presented some incouraging remarks. Pastor E. T. Higdon was present and charged the women with the importance of unity and love of work.

On a recent Sunday evening Elder Ben Jernigan preached on "Light and Truth." Appropriate music by Sister Faith Higdon and a tenor solo, "I Come to Thee," by E. T. Higdon, were appreciated by the congregation.

Easter service was held at the church on Sunday. Elder Lomax Jernigan was the speaker and his talk was inspiring.

At the business meeting on a recent Friday evening arrangements were made to repair the church roof, and other important items were included in making up the branch budget. Brother Jeff Barnes gave an encouraging report of his work as treasurer, and solicited farm products which he disposed of for cost for branch treasury, this to be considered as the contribution of members who otherwise could pay nothing.

Elder Earl T. Higdon's subject on a recent Sunday evening was "God, Education, and Science." For a text he chose 2 Timothy 2: 15: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Alaflora Saints are happy to hear that some good work is being done among Saints in the neighborhood where Sister Roxie Barnes lives, a few miles from Brewton, across the Florida line. They are supervised by Brother Charlie Barnes. The young people meet at the home of Brother Riley Calhoun for services.

Brush Creek, Illinois

To Celebrate Ninetieth Anniversary of Branch

This branch was organized ninety years ago last December. A log cabin is being erected as a memorial to those who so valiantly struggled to carry on the gospel work at Brush Creek. The edifice is being erected as nearly as can be ascertained on the spot where stood the old Caudle schoolhouse in which the branch was organized. Some of the faithful men who labored here were Nathan Morris, Doctor Green, George Hilliard, Elder Jefferson Hunt, the missionary who first came to these parts, and I. A. Morris, branch president for about fifty years. This log cabin will be dedicated June 24 and 25 at which time the ninetieth anniversary of the branch will be commemorated. President F. M. Smith is expected to be present on this occasion, also Missionary R. L. Fulk and family.

This branch is planning to put a basement under the church building this fall.

The Saints were sorry to learn of the death of Sister Mary Sparling.

A review of the winter's outstanding features at Brush Creek will no doubt be of interest to many. The church school sponsored a Christmas program and tree on Christmas Eve, the function being well attended considering the condition of the roads. On Christmas night O. C. Henson directed the pageant, "Why the Chimes Rang." The reading was by Delbert Morris.

On account of much sickness and bad weather services were not largely attended during the winter months, but with the arrival of warm weather larger crowds are expected. Plans are being made to organize study under the new church school plan.

Evangelist Richard Baldwin held a series of meetings here last fall. Sister Baldwin taught a class before the preaching service in the evening, presenting the new church school plan. Their faithful help was much appreciated.

District President R. L. Fulk was here January 14 and 15, and his help was greatly enjoyed.

Brother Floyd Sherill, of Taylorville, spoke at the morning hour January 29.

The death angel has claimed several members in the past months. Sister Laura Hoover answered the summons home February 10. She had been in failing health for some time. The Saints fasted and offered many prayers for her, but the Lord saw fit to relieve her of the suffering which she patiently bore. She was fifty-five years old. The funeral was conducted at Brush Creek by Elder O. C. Henson, assisted by Elder R. H. Henson. Interment was at Jacob's chapel at Orchardville.

Sister Alice Chaney died March 22, at the home of her son, Joseph Caudle, at Centralia. She was a faithful member of the church for nearly fifty years. The funeral services were conducted at Jacob's chapel at Orchardville by Elder O. C. Henson. Sister Chaney and Sister Hoover were sisters.

Sister Bright, another member, who was making her home at Saint Louis, passed away March 22, and her body was brought to Orchardville for services and interment. The sermon was by Elder R. H. Henson.

Sister Lizzie Chapman passed away at the home of her daughter at Centralia. Funeral services and interment were at Centralia.

Wheeling, West Virginia

All Departments to Contribute to Progress of Branch

Experiences coming to the Wheeling Branch during the last few weeks have quickened the spiritual life of the members, and brightened the outlook for the future. For a long time efforts to interest nonmembers seemed to be fruitless. But due to various activities sponsored by the different groups, under the leadership of L. A. Serig, pastor, the tide is turning. Branch officers, Sunday school workers, the women's department, Temple Builders and religio work have all made valuable contributions.

Brother George Criswell moved his family to Columbus, Ohio, which was cause for regret on the part of the young people, in whose behalf he had done a valuable service. However, he will rejoice to learn that one young man from his Sunday school class, and also his wife were baptized April 23. On that date Patriarch John F. Martin baptized three young married people who had been attending the various meetings for some time. They were Sister Edith Hicks, who had been active with the Temple Builders for some time, and Harry Nickerson and wife. These fine young people are welcome additions to the branch. Brother Martin was assisted in the confirmation by Brother Tary.

Pastor Serig and wife attended the conference at Akron, Ohio, on April 23, leaving O. J. Tary in charge of the meetings here, and Louis C. Serig in charge of the Sunday school.

O. B. K.'s Sponsor Third Stake Music Festival

The third Kansas City musical festival to be sponsored by the Stake O. B. K. Council, was held at Central Church from April 23 to 26. Over two hundred young people participated in the various events, there being fifty-eight entries in the different divisions of the contest.

A fine feature of this year's program was the presence of the Graceland A Cappella Chorus as guest artists on the last night of the festival. Their concert of sacred and secular numbers was enjoyed by an appreciative audience. Following this concert a reception for the chorus by the Kansas City alumni was held where an opportunity was given for prospective students to meet the chorus and for a renewal of old acquaintances.

Individual prizes are not awarded in these O. B. K. contests, but the church securing the highest score from its participants receives the O. B. K. trophy. This is held until another group wins it in like manner. To date four different groups have each held the cup twice. This year's music winner was Central Church, (Jack Burlington, councilor) with fifty-five points; Second, Grandview (Blythe Conkey, councilor) twenty-three points; and third, Chelsea (R. B. Smith, councilor) eighteen points.

In preparing for his numbers each participant must memorize and present two numbers, one from a selected list of good music and one from his own repertoire.

The festival is for amateurs in the finest sense of that word, and every year there are many who enter and participate for the first time in public. The spirit of good fellowship rules, and the stressed object of the festival reads "Not to win a prize nor defeat an opponent, but to pace each other on the road to excellence."

The ratings of the various participants were as follows: Elementary piano; Martha Jane Cunningham, first; Vivian Alter, second; both from Central; Charline Allen, from Fourth, receiving third place. Junior voice: Ethel Hicklin, Grandview Church, first; Ona Comer, Fourth Church, second; Jeanette Dunn, Central Church, third. Junior violin; David White, from Grandview Church, first; William Kreuger, also from Grandview, second. Choruses: Central, first; Chelsea, second; Mount Washington, third. Advanced piano: Ruth Ringer, Malvern Hill Church, first; second, Hazel Scott Withee, Central; third, Zelma Lungwitz, Quindaro Church. Girls' quartets; First, Mount Washington; Second, Chelsea; third, Central. Boys' quartets: Second place Central, there only being one entry. Mixed quartets: Third place to Central, there only being one entry. Advanced violin; First, Frank White, Central; Second Otis Swart, Quindaro; third, Ona Comer, Fourth. Soprano solos: First, Helen Scott, Central; second, La Rena Bullard, Central; third, Vivian Palmer, Quindaro. Contralto solos: First, Ann Decker, Grandview; second, Jule McCarty, Mount Washington; third, Mona Gross, Quindaro. Tenor solos: First, Garland Tickemyer, Fourth; second, Wayne Powell, Grandview; third, Ramond Bleil, Chelsea. Bass-baritone solos: First, Lawrence Siegal, Central; second, Blythe Conkey, Grandview; third Dale Brady, Fourth. Violin ensemble, third place to Grandview, only one entry.

The next feature on the council's program will be the oratorical contest which will be held at Central Church on conference Sunday, May 21.

During the past year the council has sponsored a fine series of young people's prayer meetings which have been held in different churches each month. The church acting as host has arranged the service and provided simple refreshments. The attendance has ranged from ninety-six on stormy nights to one hundred and eighty with an average of about one hundred and thirty. The meetings have been conducted in a varied but fitting manner that reflected great credit to those who prepared them, and the participation and spirit of the various meetings have been of a high caliber.

Argentine Church

On April 23, the church school sermonet was by Elder W. S. Brown on "Jesus, the Perfect Example." In the evening Pastor R. E. Browne talked on the journey of the two disciples who were joined by Jesus on the way to Emmaus (Luke 23). Fair attendance was had at all services.

A week later the church school sermon was by Edward Baker, from Quindaro Church, who represented the stake bishopric. He drew a lesson from natural history, describing the smallest living organism and grading up to God's greatest handiwork, man. Pastor R. E. Browne was again the evening speaker.

Word came through Elder Alma R. White that his brother, John D. White, of Berkeley, California, passed from this life, May 1, at Berkeley. His body was brought to Independence, Missouri, where it lay in state Sunday from half past twelve to half past two, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery with concluding funeral rites. Brother White came to Jackson County with his parents, Alfred and Elizabeth White when a small boy. He was graduated from the University of Michigan and the Kansas City School of Law. For the past twenty years he has practiced law in California. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances White, a son, Alfred, of Berkeley, and two brothers, Alma R. White, of Kansas City, and Leonard White, of Independence.

Brother White was one of the counselors to George H. Hulmes, president of Independence stake, organized in April, 1902, and comprising seven counties in Missouri and three in Kansas. Later he was appointed Kansas City stake missionary, and while he was laboring in this office, the Argentine church building was erected, also Third Kansas City, Missouri, church in the North East bottoms. His missionary efforts created interest in the Malvern Hill community and started the nucleus for the work there, also in the Quindaro community and the former Grandview church near North Tenth and Ohio Streets, Kansas City, Kansas, now disorganized. He was a tireless worker, sparing neither time nor talent to carry forward the responsibility intrusted to him.

Mount Washington Church

Elder J. Charles May, stake missionary, has been laboring in this community during April, holding cottage meetings during the week and speaking at the church each Sunday. He closed his services with a short series of sermons at the church. Brother May's interesting way of telling the gospel story, his music and songs, some of them rendered in the language of the South Sea Islands, all contributed to the success of the services. Several nonmembers who attended became very interested.

Mount Washington had several entries in the music festival of the stake conducted April 16, at Central Church. A number of local Saints attended. The festival is an annual event sponsored by the O. B. K. Stake Council.

Red letter month in attendance, April, brought a maximum of attendance of a hundred and forty-one and a minimum of a hundred and twelve during five weeks.

The women meet each Friday at the home of Sister Frank Hunter, enjoying a covered-dish luncheon and spending the day quilting. They have a study hour at 10.30 a. m., and interest is increasing.

Some young people of this group are entering the oratorical contest to be held at Central Church May 21.

The children's department sponsored the Easter program, rendering an attractive service. Three were baptized on this day and confirmed during the Easter service.

Elder T. A. Beck spoke the morning of April 30, which was bishop's day for the stake.

Quindaro Church

A successful series of pre-Easter services was held in this church this year. The pastor, H. A. Higgins, was the speaker. He was ably assisted by the local priesthood and congregation. The choir, under the direction of Otis Swart, who is a willing and efficient musician and director, added much to the services with special selections. Mrs. Eola Hawkins, at the organ, played beautiful preludes each evening. The congregation entered whole-heartedly into the song service which preceded each sermon.

The congregation was divided into the "Golds" and the "Purples," with Mrs. Charles Scriviner and Everett Gaunce leading the first group and Mrs. Emmet Palmer and Mrs. Alice Baker guiding the second. The "Golds" won the attendance contest for the series by the narrow margin of nineteen over the "Purples." Average attendance for the eight services was one hundred and fifty. The largest attendance was on the night of Good Friday when two hundred and twelve were present.

A pantomime, "Coming to the Cross," was presented at the close of the sermon on Friday night, Miss Dorothy Carmichael taking the leading part, Miss Vivian Palmer singing as a solo, "Rock of Ages." After the pantomime, six persons were baptized by Brother Higgins, and one by Brother John Tucker, of Heathwood Church. The candidates were: Mrs. Rose Everett, Mrs. Zelma Lungwitz, Herbert Fryatt, George Hurd, Master Leonard Graham, Master Bruce Simpson, and Master Cooley Miller.

The topics discussed were: "The Plumb Line of Jehovah," "The Rewards of Faith," "Jesus Christ, the Architect," "The Eternal Pathway of Life," "Eternal Life the Gift of Jehovah," "They Crucified Him," "He Is Risen," and "Christ, the Eternal God."

This is the third series of pre-Easter services held by this congregation, each one more interesting and drawing more people. Brother Higgins has been the speaker of each series.

The Easter offering, which goes entirely to the general church, amounted to $43.22.

Holden Stake

Atherton

On Thursday evening before Easter Sister Maurine Nace, of Walnut Park Church, Independence, brought her chorus of singers to Atherton and gave a splendid performance of the Easter cantata, "The Song of Triumph."

An impressive program in commemoration of the resurrection was given at eleven o'clock Easter Sunday. In the evening Brother J. A. Thomas was the speaker. The choir sang the anthem, "He Is Risen."

April 23, in the evening Sister Henrietta Allen and her choir gave the Easter cantata, "The Thorn-crowned King," which they had prepared and given at their home church, Enoch Hill, Independence.

At this time the Saints are extremely busy, most of them being farmers. But on Sunday they are glad to rest from their labors and in quite large numbers attend services in the little brick church which is now three years old. Brother George Beebe, the pastor, has the interest of the gospel work at Atherton at heart. The church school is well organized and each class is of interest to its pupils.

Independence

Five of the six contestants sent by William Chrisman High School to the Annual State Interscholastic Music Contests of Class A Schools, held at the University of Missouri, Columbia, May 4 and 5, were Latter Day Saint boys and girls, and of their record the church is proud. William Chrisman entered tenor and baritone singers in the voice contests. John Isaacks, tenor, took first rating, and Lester Resch, second. Virgil Woodside, baritone, took second honor rank, and Noel Morgan, fourth. In violin Dorothy Nace went to the finals and took first rank. In piano Willa Mae Redfield took fourth honor rank. The two accompanists were also members of the church, Drexel Mollison, and Alice Woodside. A new system of grading was used in the contests this year. Instead of the conventional first, second, and third place awards, the contestants were given honor rankings of one, two, three, and four. Rank one means outstandingly good in performance and quality; two, excellent; three, very good, and four, above the average.

Unity and harmony have characterized the sessions of the Joint Council which began May 2, all members being present with the exception of Apostles John W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis, foreign appointees. Discussions have centered about questions on church policy, the financial situation, and the missionary program, and action taken has included readjustments of appointments of men in the missionary field. In addition to the council sessions the Quorum of Twelve has held several meetings of its own.

Stone Church

Four people have been baptized in the Stone Church font during the last two weeks, Mrs. Mildred A. Grabske, wife of Doctor Charles F. Grabske, and son, Charles Frederick Grabske, jr.; Shankland Arnson, and Herman Keel Woodside. Pastor John F. Sheehy officiated.

The church was filled with worshipers for the monthly communion service last Sunday, and with the priesthood in the choir loft sat several members of the Joint Council. Presiding over the service were Pastor J. F. Sheehy, President Elbert A. Smith, Bishops L. F. P. Curry, G. L. DeLapp, and R. T. Cooper, Patriarch U. W. Greene, and Elder J. S. Kelley. Paul N. Craig led the congregational singing, and Mrs. Sunshine Beck was at the organ.

The singing of old and favorite hymns, the quiet order of the service, the remarks on "Remembering Christ," by Bishop Curry, the period of prayer and meditation, and the special prayer for the congregation and church by Patriarch U. W. Greene combined to make this an impressive service.

In the evening the Stone Church Choir sang, "O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem," and "The Shadows of the Evening Hour," Paul N. Craig directing. Soloists were Mrs. Nina G. Smith, soprano, and L. A. Woodside, baritone. Elder D. O. Cato was in charge of the service, assisted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

Apostle D. T. Williams, the evening speaker, chose for a text the words of Jesus: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It has been many months since Stone Church people listened to Brother Williams speak, and his words were received with deep appreciation.

Second Church

The eleven o'clock service Sunday was opened by an organ prelude played by Mrs. Gladys Inman. Pastor William Inman conducted the service. The invocation was by Brother Inman. A talk on the oblation was by Elder A. K. Dillee. Apostle E. J. Gleazer talked on the communion.

Assistant Pastor B. C. Sarratt was in charge of the seven thirty service. The opening prayer was by Elder D. A. Whiting. The choir, under the direction of Brother Earl Audet, sang, "Savior, Breathe an Evening Blessing." Apostle P. M. Hanson was the speaker.

Friday, May 5, the young people of Second Church gave an entertainment. A play entitled, "Fun in a Photographer's Gallery," was given. Its director was Mrs. Agnes Edmunds. Songs by a chorus, directed by Miss Hazel Clow, composed a part of the program.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and Howard P. Andersen, presided over the sacrament services Sunday morning. Fred Horn, a deacon, talked in behalf of the needy of the church before the collection of the obligation. Opening remarks were by the pastor, and following the serving of the emblems Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was called to the stand, where he delivered a short message to the congregation.

The religio Sunday evening enjoyed, during the program period, a concert by an orchestra of young people under the direction of Leon Snow.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was the speaker Sunday evening. His sermon was preceded by an anthem by the Walnut Park Choir, "Thou Will Keep Him in Perfect Peace."

On Thursday evening, May 4, the Galilean Class of the church school surprised the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, and Sister McDonald, at their home, 11718

Winner Road. Games occupied the evening, after which refreshments brought by the members of the class were served.

Brother and Sister Eli Kester, of East Hayward and Raymond Streets, are the happy parents of twins, a boy and a girl, born Sunday, April 23. The boy has been named Loren Eli, and the girl, Doris June.

Williston, North Dakota

Enjoy Visit of P. T. Anderson

Williston Saints greatly enjoyed the privilege of hearing from the State missionary, Peter Anderson, during the week just before Easter. He could stay only two days as he was expected at Fargo on Easter Sunday, to assist in an ordination; but his sermons while here brought evidence to the Saints that God is working with his people and seeking to build them up in righteousness.

The few members at Williston seldom hear a good sermon without wishing that those who are still more isolated than they could hear it too. The word of God is like food to a hungry man.

On Easter the Saints again rejoiced. Brother L. O. Wildermuth, of Montana, was here, and gave the sacrament and preached some good sermons.

The Saints of this place pray that the Lord will bless them and help them to be doers of his word.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Grand and Carter

"Jesus Lives" was the theme developed in Saint Louis Branch Easter morning by Pastor T. J. Elliott in a brief serman, and by Brother E. C. Bell with a cantata of the same name by Gabriel. More than two hundred were present at the service. In the congregation were Brother and Sister Russell Archibald, sr., who have recently returned from Tucson, Arizona, where they spent the winter.

Plans have been completed and bids have been received for the erection of a new front entrance to the church which was necessitated by the widening of Grand Boulevard. Howard Elliott and J. J. Billinsky are the committee in charge of this project.

The priesthood have been meeting regularly once a month during the entire winter. Since the first of the year, they have used the new Priesthood Manual and "What Latter Day Saints Believe" series as a basis for study on the first Sunday of each month. The pastor is the instructor. Members of the group have been assisting in filling the pulpits of the branches of this district.

At its last meeting, the women's department discussed a monetary pledge to the general church organization. Plans for raising this fund will be presented at the next meeting. Since the last letter to the Herald, the women have given an Armistice tea, a colonial dinner and entertainment, and a bake sale. They have sponsored classes in Book of Mormon study, quilting, dressmaking, and paper flower making. As a result of all these activities, the department has been able to assist the branch with contributions, has provided a new concrete floor for the kitchen, and has purchased an electric sewing machine.

On the one hundred and third anniversary of the general church Organization, Sister T. J. Elliott, president of the group, entertained thirty-six women at luncheon, at her home. Sister Zoe Davidson had charge of the program which followed.

They regret to report the death of two prominent members of the branch, Brother Phillip Schaefer, and Sister Eliza Cowlishaw.

Successful Conference for Western Oklahoma

President F. M. Smith and Apostle R. S. Budd Take Part

The Western Oklahoma district Conference was held at Davidson, Oklahoma, April 21, 22, and 23. Apostle Roy S. Budd, who came with F. E. Dillon, president Central District, arrived Friday for the opening service that night.

President F. M. Smith arrived Saturday afternoon. The Saints received much good instruction from Brothers Smith and Budd. May they use it for the good of the cause. A goodly number were present, coming from Texas and central and western Oklahoma. Davidson Saints treated the visitors royally, serving splendid meals and furnishing good beds.

The conference approved the recommendation that Chester Richards and Orlan Crownover, of Calumet Branch, be ordained to the office of priest, also that B. F. Creel, of Freedom Branch, be ordained an elder.

At the baptismal service Sunday afternoon, two, one young man and a boy, were inducted into the kingdom.

There were good spiritual meetings throughout the week-end.

Davidson Saints have recently erected a bulletin board on the corner of their lot, also have a new concrete walk in front of the church. Elder Sam Simmons and wife were among those present, and many rejoiced in being able to visit with Brother Simmons, recalling memories of the work of former days. The highway has been rerouted, and now passes on the street just east of the Davidson church.

The Saints of the district appreciate the visit of the Prophet, and hope that they shall receive many more visits from him. Apostle Budd stated that he expects to be here during the reunion this summer.

The only change made in district officers was that of district chorister, Sister Edith Skinner replacing Sister Carrow. The work of Sister Carrow is appreciated.

Beardstown, Illinois

Thirteenth and Monroe

An impressive service was held Sunday, April 23, when five persons were baptized, two adults and three of junior age. Elder M. R. Shoemaker gave a splendid sermon on baptism and its significance, and Brother Frank Corcoran offered prayer. Elder E. E. Thomas officiated in the service of baptism, and those who confirmed were Elders Shoemaker, C. H. Davis, and E. E. Thomas. A considerable degree of the Spirit was present throughout the service.

Easter Sunday was marked by an Easter program given in the evening and largely attended.

Maurice Corcoran, baritone, and Eva Martin, contralto, took second places in a sub-district high school contest.

The following speakers have occupied here the last month: Brother Frank Corcoran talking on "Christian Progress"; E. E. Thomas, "Let Us Try Our Ways and Turn Unto the Lord," Guy Lewis, "Eternal Judment," C. H. Davis, "The Right Way of Service," and M. R. Shoemaker, "Social Purity."

The Blue Bird girls have just been organized, and the junior choir is preparing for special work.

Sperry, Oklahoma

Fourteen Baptized—Others Interested

Though Sperry members have been subjected to unemployment, financial uncertainty, and sickness, these conditions have but served to draw them closer together, giving them a greater concern for the welfare of each other.

Elder J. E. Lancaster, of Tulsa, commenced a series of meetings March 5, which lasted two weeks. Brother Lancaster spoke the first week, and Apostle R. S. Budd was here for the latter part of the series. No series of services had been held here for over a year, and the Saints showed their appreciation by filling the house and bringing their friends.

On Easter thirteen were conducted into the kingdom of God through the waters of baptism as a result of the meetings. The church, decorated with lilies and ferns, was filled by the crowd of attendants. On April 26, Miss Violet Bruice, a public school teacher, was baptized. Others are investigating the gospel. Sister Bruice is loved by all who come in contact with her, and the members feel that the Lord had a guiding hand in charge of these meetings.

Brother Ward Rumsy, branch president and local pastor, with his pleasing personality yet firm discipline is alert for things which will benefit the group.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

He extends to Brother Lancaster and Brother Budd his thanks for their work, and assures them of a welcome at all times.

The Sunday school is progressing. Brother Lonzo Harper is the new superintendent. Attendance is good, and Brother Harper is working hard with the cooperation of the pupils. The aim of these workers is to make theirs one of the outstanding church schools of the Southwest.

The women of the branch are to be commended. They furnished meals for the teachers of the public school. The teachers taught the last two weeks without pay, and the churches furnished the meals.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

Their Activities Reflect Their Growth

Under the able leadership of Pastor Walter Lewis and his associate, Elder H. A. Cunningham, and with the cooperation of the active members of the branch, this group is making steady progress in the work of the Lord.

Recently the pastor baptized the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hartman, of Hummelstown, Pennsylvania, who have been isolated for a period of ten years.

Interest is growing, and several people are investigating the gospel message.

Patriarch George W. Robley visited here the week of April 23, as he was on his way home from his missionary field in Ohio, and on Sunday, April 30, preached two uplifting sermons which were well received by his hearers.

Prior to the evening sermon, two more candidates were received into the kingdom, being baptized by the pastor.

The Saints feel that as a branch their efforts to do the will of the Lord have met with divine approval, and he has seen fit to pour out his Spirit upon them in mighty power. Their prayer services are well attended, and they have received manifold blessings through the gospel gifts.

The church school also reflects a healthy condition, its number having been augmented by several additions which can be traced directly to the efforts of the pastor through the medium of stereopticon lectures given every other week.

The women's auxiliary has been instrumental in assisting in branch expenses during these trying times, and which functions whenever there is need.

Branch activities during the week are confined to a Book of Mormon class with Patriarch A. D. Angus as teacher. The priesthood are studying Doctrine and Covenants with the aid of the quarterly written by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

As a branch they are closely in touch with the church through the Herald which they find much easier to acquire through the new method of distribution.

Dahinda, Illinois

L. G. Holloway Wins Good Community Response

Elder L. G. Holloway closed a two-week series of meetings here April 21. Interest was good to the last, about eighty being present at the closing service. The townspeople and Methodist friends cooperated as never before, helping with song service each evening. Brother Holloway is a splendid mixer, and interests himself in all the worthwhile affairs of a small town. The Saints appreciated his interest in them, as they are very few and need help and encouragement.

The church members and the whole community were shocked and deeply grieved at the sudden demise of Lynn Dawson, son of Sister Stella Dawson, April 17. The funeral was conducted by Elder L. G. Holloway, and a large number attended. Brother Lynn was in his twenty-ninth year and was genial and kind to all. Sister Dawson, his mother, has the heartfelt sympathy of everyone in her sorrow. She is a wonderful woman, sweet and submissive, and bears her sorrow with grace and fortitude, fully realizing from whence her strength comes.

"Grandma" Farquer passed her eighty-fourth birthday April 7. Sister Adeane Dawson with her sister, Bessie Farquer, with whom the aged sister lives, gave a dinner, and her twelve-year-old granddaughter, Bonnie Jean, baked the cake for "grandma." Grandma is exceptionally keen and active for her years though not in the best of health.

Sister Audrey West was married to Mr. Edward Sommers, and has gone to Longview, Washington, to make her home. She is missed in the work of the branch for she was a good helper.

Brother and Sister Charles Dawson spent a Sunday evening recently with her brother, Burt, and family at Princeville, Illinois. Brother Burt is priest of this branch, but is unable to be present very often because he is so far away and is tied down by his work.

Because several of them do not live at Dahinda, the branch is handicapped by not having the full service of all its officers. The Saints were happy to welcome Brother King and family at a recent meeting. He is branch president and though he lives several miles away, is present when it is possible.

Elder E. R. Davis, the district president, visited the several branches of the district recently, while Brother Holloway was here. When he travels among the Saints he does not miss any isolated home, but brings cheer and comfort to all as he goes. He has many friends at Dahinda who hope to see him soon.

Sister Charles Dawson entertains her young people's Sunday school class each Tuesday evening in her home. A half-hour study of the Doctrine and Covenants is held after which a social time is enjoyed. Two or three nonmembers occasionally attend.

Denison, Texas

Few Saints Enjoy Get-together and Plan Future Activities

There are only three church families at Denison, but they are keeping closely in touch with each other through social gatherings. Since they have no services of their own, they attend services of other churches helping as they consistently can. Sister Young, who was born and reared in the faith, but who has been isolated all her life, and is yet a stanch Latter Day Saint, has taught a class in the Christian Sunday School for seven years, and during that time has held a record attendance. Her husband and two children are not yet members of the church, but she is hoping that some day an opportunity will come to bring them in. There has been no missionary effort made at Denison since she has lived here, but a visit from Elder George H. Wixom some months ago, greatly encouraged and strengthened the Saints.

Sunday, April 23, the little group met at 6 a. m. and in three cars started a twenty-five mile journey to a beautiful spot on the river side, where they planned a full day of Latter Day Saint fellowship. It was Robert Burns who wisely said: "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agley," and the month of April is a good time of year to prove the truth of that saying. Showers cut short the journey, and sent the travelers back to the Young home, where they were happily welcomed by Brother Patrick, seventy-nine years old and father of Sister Young. Brother Patrick is an old-time Latter Day Saint, but he had not felt physically equal to the trip and day planned. Though the children of the group were disappointed in not getting to picnic as they had planned, a happy time was had by everyone. The breakfast they had planned to cook on the newly-made camp stove was prepared on the kitchen range, and the food was spread on the dining room table. During that day the members enjoyed three meals together, much visiting, and a good social time. Other members of the party not mentioned above were Brother and Sister Lester Hershey and daughter, Addie Alice, a senior in Denison High School, and son, Donovan, who have lived here the past year; Brother and Sister Jesse M. West and little Lois, who have lived at Denison for three years, and Sister Fred Koehler, of Independence, Missouri, Englewood Branch. Sister Koehler, since the death of her son, Frederick, eight weeks ago, has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. West and family.

Denison Saints are planning a course of study for the near future, to include one or all of the church books.

Our Departed Ones

PAGE.—Walter A. Page was born near Hollister, California, March 8, 1873, and passed from this life April 29, 1933, at Independence, Missouri. He united with the church at San Benito, California, being baptized by J. M. Range March 20, 1885. On May 9, 1900, he was married to Miss Rose M. Pooler, at Gilroy, California. In April, 1913, he moved with his family to Independence, Missouri, and for the past eighteen years had been associated with the Bronson and Page Hardware Company. April 8, 1928, he was ordained to the office of deacon at Independence, in which office he served faithfully until a short time before his death. His wife having preceded him in death just fourteen months, he leaves to mourn his passing, two daughters, Mrs. Alberta Cox and Mrs. Helen Brackenbury, and two sons, W. Earl Page and Paul Page, all of Independence; four grandsons; one sister, Mrs. Emily Davis, of Independence, other relatives, and a large circle of friends. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church Monday, May 1, at 2 p. m., Pastor J. F. Sheehy preaching the sermon, assisted by Patriarch Albert Carmichael. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, near Independence. A dependable and much-loved worker has gone to rest.

TWINING.—Joseph E. Twining was born at Deshler, Ohio, June 2, 1863, and was married to Elnora L. Ackley in January, 1887. Two children were born to this union, one passing away in infancy. His wife died in 1892. March 7, 1896, he was married to Mrs. Libbie E. Clark, and to them five children were born, three of whom survive. He was baptized by Elder S. T. Pendleton in February 1912, and was a faithful worker and capable teacher. He was serving as branch solicitor at the time of his death. To mourn his departure are, his wife, three daughters, Mrs. Perry Holt, Mrs. Henry Gussman, and Mrs. Albert Lang, of West Branch; one son, Charles Twining, West Branch; one step-son, Buel Clark, of Palmyra, Michigan; fourteen grandchildren, a half-brother and a half-sister. Funeral services were held at Stuernols Funeral Home in charge of Elder G. W. Burt, of Beaverton, Michigan, and interment was in Brookside Cemetery, West Branch, Michigan.

THOMAS.—Alva Prentice Thomas was born September 1, 1901, and died March 25, 1933. For three years he suffered with tuberculosis and was tenderly cared for by his mother the latter part of the time. He had known of the church for years, and at one time was about to obey the gospel, but some of his friends discouraged him. Finally, just a week before his death, on March 18, he was baptized by J. O. Dutton and confirmed by J. O. Dutton and C. N. Maymon. He leaves his wife, Velma Thomas; his father, W. M. Thomas; mother, Mrs. Emma Mosier; sisters, Mrs. Jessie Savage; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler, Mrs. Renie Ems, Mrs. Josie Harrison, Mrs. Eva Salmon, Mrs. Alvena Tretter, and Mrs. Geneva Cochran. The funeral was held at Byrneville, Indiana, Church, the sermon being preached by J. O. Dutton, prayer by C. N. Maymon. Interment was in Byrneville Cemetery.

MOTTASHED.—George Todd Mottashed, son of George and Harriett Mottashed, was born in London, Canada, December 12, 1865. He was united in marriage to Anna Bedour in Detroit, Michigan, October 8, 1889. To this union were born two daughters and two sons, all of whom with his wife survive him: Mrs. Helen G. Anway and and Mrs. Coral I. Anway, of Independence; George Mottashed, of Simcoe, Canada, and Charles Mottashed, of Oakland, California. There also survive, three brothers, William, of Windsor, Canada; Joseph, of Detroit, Michigan, and Frederick James, of Saint Louis, Missouri; one sister, Mrs. Hattie Marshall, of London, Canada, seven grandchildren and many friends. In 1920, he moved with his wife to Independence, Missouri, and made his home. There he died April 9, 1933. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff, assisted by M. M. Case. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HOLSTEEN.—Emma A. Oelslager was born at Herman, Missouri, October 28, 1841. Her marriage to Sophus Holsteen took place at La Cross, Wisconsin, before the Civil War. To their union fourteen children were given, three of whom, with her companion, preceded her in death. On October 28, 1932, she celebrated her ninety-first birthday. Her health and vitality were unusual considering her advanced age. She went to bed March 23, 1933, seeming to feel as fell as usual, but next morning it was discovered that her spirit had taken flight during the night. Surviving are her children: Fred S., Walter E., and Edward F., of Burlington, Iowa; Clyde B, who lives on the home farm place; Harry G., of Danville, Iowa; Joe P., of near Denmark, Iowa; Dio M., of Nelson, Nebraska; William H., of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Huffman with whom she made her home, and Mrs. C. E. Foster, of Wapell, Iowa; forty-eight grandchildren, and thirty-six great-grandchildren. The funeral was held at the family country home, a short distance from Burlington, March 26, by Elder F. T. Mussell. Interment was in the family burying plot nearby, known as Bazel Cemetery, where she rests beside the companion of her youth. She united with the church in January, 1876, and for fifty-seven years remained faithful to her covenant. It was a pleasure to her to speak of her faith and to the end of her life she took delight in reading her German Bible which she did without the aid of glasses.

WHITE.—William A. O. White, son of Almon and Mary Burke White, was born at Gallatin, Davies County, Missouri, November 27, 1858. When sixteen years of age he united with the church at Des Moines, Iowa, being baptized by Elder William C. Nirk. June 13, 1893, he married Miss Bertha E. Gard, at Leason, Iowa, and twelve children were born to them. Five preceded him in death. He died March 31, 1933, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ennis Triplet, at Independence, Missouri, leaving his wife, of the home; three other daughters: Mrs. Ona King, of Humansville, Missouri; Mrs. Olive Crawford, and Miss Evelyn White, of Independence; three sons: Curtis, Vernon, and Wilmer White, all of Independence; one brother, Elder D. C. White, of Lamoni, Iowa, and one sister, Mrs. Eliza McCawley, of Berkeley, California, and twenty grandchildren. His faith in the gospel never wavered, and he passed away in the hope that it brought him nearly sixty years ago. The funeral service was held at the Stone Church Sunday, April 2, Doctor Joseph Luff preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WATKINS.—Benjamin Watkins was born September 4, 1872, at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania. He lived at Scranton the greater part of his life, being baptized into the church May 6, 1914. His wife preceded him in death less than two years. Death came suddenly as a result of a septic throat and complications. He was sick but a few days. Died April 24, 1933. Left to mourn are ten children, six sons and four daughters; six sisters and two brothers. The funeral services were conducted at the home April 29, by Elder Thomas Jones, Elder R. J. Hawkins preaching the sermon. Brother Watkins was a veteran of the Spanish American War, and the local company officiated at the grave side. His friends attended the funeral in large number, and gave beautiful floral offerings.

HOOVER.—Laura A. Burkett was born July 1, 1877. Departed this life February 10, 1933. She was united in marriage to Elijah A. Hoover, December 21, 1893, by Elder I. A. Morris. To them were born six children: Glen Hoover, Joe Hoover, and Faye Burgess, of Xenia, and Lula Lutrell, of Flora. One son and one daughter preceded her in death. She united with the church January 21, 1899, and lived a faithful Christian life. Leaves to mourn, her husband, two sons, two daughters, three brothers: William I. Burkett, of Keenes; Levi Burkett, of Orchardville, Illinois, and Joseph Burkett, of Saint Louis, and one sister, Mary Ann Warren, of Orchardville; ten grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted at Brush Creek, Illinois, by Elder O. C. Henson, assisted by Elder R. H. Henson. Interment was in Jacob's Chapel Cemetery, near Orchardville.

CHANEY.—Alice Chaney was born in Wayne County, Illinois, September 8, 1857. She was married to Benjamin Caudle in July, 1877. He died in 1886, and she again married Jacob K. Chaney in June, 1887. He passed away March 5, 1924. She was a faithful member of the church for nearly fifty years. Passed away March 22, 1933, being survived by three sons: Joseph Caudle and William O. Caudle, of Centralia, and Orville B. Caudle, of Xenia, Illinois; three daughters: Mrs. John Shelton, of Centralia; Mrs. Oggie Brown, of Urbana, and Mrs. M. H. Zea, of Champaign, Illinois; thirty grandchildren; three brothers, Levi Burkett, of Orchardville; Joseph Burkett, of Saint Louis, Missouri, and William I. Burkett, of Keenes, Illinois; one sister, Mrs. John R. Warren, of Orchardville. One sister, Laura Hoover, preceded her in death about six weeks. Short funeral services were held at the church in Centralia by Elder W. W. Brown; services at Jacob's chapel at Orchardville by Elder O. C. Henson. Interment was in the cemetery nearby.

DAWSON.—Edward Lynn Dawson, son of Thomas and Stella Dawson, was born June 3, 1904, near Dahinda, Illinois. Departed this life April 18, 1933. He was married to Vivian West, October 24, 1925. His companion died April 5, 1931. United with the church May 26, 1918. His father passed to the beyond in 1929. He leaves to mourn his departure, his mother; one brother, Lorance; four sisters, Mrs. Anna Poplett, of Galesburg, Illinois; Mrs. Ruth Duvall, Helen, and Jean, of Dahinda; his aged grandfather, J. H. Lorance, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was held from the Saints' church at Dahinda, a large crowd gathering to pay tribute of respect to a departed friend. The sermon was preached by L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni, Iowa, and interment was in a cemetery about fifteen miles from Dahinda.

LOGEMAN.—Lois Jean Logeman was born October 31, 1930, at Independence, Missouri; died at the Independence Sanitarium late the afternoon of April 27, 1933. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Logeman, of Independence, Missouri. Although young in years, she was of such a bright and lovable disposition that she endeared herself to all who came in contact with her. There remain to mourn her passing besides the parents, an infant brother, Bruce Curtis Logeman, of the home, and the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Curtis, of Odessa, Missouri; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Logeman, sr., of the home address, and many other relatives, and a host of little playmates and friends. The funeral was conducted from Walnut Park Church at 11 a. m., Saturday, April 29, 1933, by the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elder Sam Smith. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SCOTT.—John Scott was born in Wisconsin, February 15, 1856, and died at his home in Blue Rapids, Kansas, April 10, 1933. Moved to Marshall County, Kansas, with his parents in 1859, and lived there the rest of his life. He was one of the oldest settlers of Blue Rapids, having lived there for seventy-four years. He married Mary Case, June 16, 1880, and to them four sons were born. He leaves to mourn, his wife, three sons, Walter, of Los Angeles, California; George, of New Orleans, Louisiana, and Alex, of Manhattan, Kansas. His son, Joseph, preceded him in death. Five grandchildren, three brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends also survive. He was a good-hearted man and his home was always open to the elders of the church. The funeral was held in the little church with a large attendance. Elder B. Jackson was in charge and Elder W. A. Smith delivered the sermon. The people of Blue Rapids will miss "Uncle John" as he was known to them.

GUILD.—Alvin Jay Guild was born April 29, 1882, in Emmerson Township, Michigan. Was baptized at Belding, Michigan, in October, 1915. Was married to Celia Wherry, October 16, 1915. Departed this life April 7, 1933, leaving to mourn, his wife, his father, stepmother, one brother, Roy Guild, and a host of friends. The funeral was from the Saints' church at Belding, the sermon being by Elder W. E. Aelick, assisted by Elder J. D. Aelick. Interment was in River Ridge Cemetery.

King James Version with 5,566 Corrected Renderings from the American Standard Version 9 Styles of Bindings

A NEW Bible That Unfolds the Bible

and makes Bible study vastly more Interesting

A NEW kind of Bible—nothing like it, none so HELPFUL has ever been published before. JUST OFF THE PRESS—but already in use and heartily recommended by OVER 2,000 OF AMERICA'S LEADING MINISTERS—truly great men, like William B. Riley, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Donald Grey Barnhouse, Pastor, Tenth Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, and leading Bible Fundamentalists everywhere. Based on The King James Version, with 5,566 corrected renderings from the American Standard Versions, the New Analytical Bible gives the Minister, Sunday School Teacher and Bible Student what no other Bible does—it unfolds the Bible and adds fascinating interest and satisfying completeness to Bible study.

A WHOLE BIBLICAL LIBRARY COMPLETE IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

This remarkable volume contains the COMPLETE Bible text. Nearly 2,000 pages—but only 1¼ inches thick. Preachers, teachers, and Bible students say that never before have so many and such HELPFUL Bible guides and explanations been available in one volume.

Makes Bible study fascinatingly INTERESTING, with its 42 full-page charts and its complete but simple and easily understood analysis of both the Old and New Testaments in the King James Version, with 5,566 bracketed renderings taken from the American Standard Version and placed in the text where they belong. As a reference book, it is a wonderful time-saver. Rev. J. Stanley Durkee, D.D., L.L.D., Ph.D., Pastor, Plymouth Church, N. Y., says: "Without my realizing it I have been waiting long for this master work!"

Handy Reference Arrangement

The references follow each verse instead of being placed in fine print in the center. Before each of the 66 books, there is an Introductory Page, giving date, author, design and other information greatly enhancing the INTEREST of each book. "Any Sunday School teacher or leader of Bible study has a TREASURE in the NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE!" declares Rev. M. Joseph Twomey, D.D., Pastor, Baptist Temple, Philadelphia.

NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE

SINCERELY ENDORSED BY SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES

"The title does not begin to suggest the riches offered here in the NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE to the student of the Bible, whether beginner or one who has journeyed far. It is a work that will be studied and LOVED and will grow richer with each year's using," states THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES.

66 ANALYTICAL OUTLINES

An Analytical Outline follows each Book—a clear, simple and informative analysis that will be of wonderful help in your Bible study and in the preparation of Sermons and Sunday School Lessons.

"With this Analytical Bible, I can now accomplish more," says Rev. Ross H. Stover, Pastor, Messiah Lutheran Church, Philadelphia.

PARALLEL HISTORY OUTLINES

A must interesting phase of this volume are the Contemporaneous Histories given in connection with most of the Books of the Bible. For example—just what was going on in Babylonia, in Egypt, or among the Moabites and Ammonites at the very time Genesis was written—What were the Assyrians, Phoenicians and Greeks doing when the Book of Judges was written? These and hundreds of other questions (not answered in other Bibles) are answered in the "Contemporaneous History" section of this remarkable NEW ANALYTICAL BIBLE. "It is a wonderfully constructed analysis. In your ANALYTICAL BIBLE you have rendered a real service to Bible students," declares Reverend Mark A. Matthews, Pastor, First Presbyterian Church, Seattle, Wash.

JOHN 5:39

39 ¶ Search [Ye search] the scriptures; for [because] in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

Ver. 46; De. 18.15,18; Lu. 16.29; Ac. 17.11.

ACTS 17:22.23

22 ¶ Then Paûl stood in the midst of Märs' hill and said, Ye men of Ăth'-ĕns, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious [very religious].

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions [observed the objects of your worship], I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

Facsimile of type showing corrected renderings in brackets and references after each verse.

The Pigeonhole

Doughnuts

Perhaps you have done some whimpering because you were hit by the depression. Perhaps you have yielded to self-pity, and a feeling that the world has abused you. Have you?

Suppose you had been hit by a locomotive, in addition to the depression? Suppose you had lain on your back for months, unable to move without assistance? Suppose you had seen your savings spent, your home lost, and your family in want? Could you still be cheerful? All that and more is what happened to one man now living in Independence. He and his wife are making a courageous struggle to maintain their financial competence and meet expenses.

Every day they arrive with a cheerful smile, a basket of fresh doughnuts (good doughnuts) and sandwiches. They sell their wares all over town to working people for lunches. The smiles are free.

We have not heard them complain. They have already passed up many a good chance to whine and feel sorry for themselves. Perhaps good cheer and courage are a part of the philosophy of life that keeps them going. A part of their program is to keep up their church work. In this respect they are more faithful than many who are more fortunate. All of us could take a lesson from them.

Dictation

"You think you're pretty good at dictating, don't you?" demanded the pigeon lighting on my windowsill and strutting thoughtfully up and down.

"Well—"

"Of course you do."

"Suppose I do, then—"

"How would you like to be dictated to? Leaders should also be good followers you know."

"I don't get the connection," I stuttered.

"How would you like to take some dictation?" and he meaningfully eyed my pen. "I'd like to write to these people who read what you say I say, but I'm afraid—well, you know you can hardly read pigeon writing yourself."

"Sure, I'll take your message," I replied feeling very benevolent after that last candy bar, "but make it short," I added remembering the pained look on my secretary's face on several occasions when I have dictated long letters.

"Then take this letter: 'Hello, dear readers, top of the springtime to you. I say "top" because depression never gets to the top; it hits the bottom.

" 'This note is to tell you that I'm proud of the church and hopeful of the things it is planning to do this summer. (That's no Pollyanna stuff either.) I'm proud of the faithful workers and of the loyal local help and the spirit shown by all of you. I think you're growing. I want you to remember that the place to begin to work is right where you are. The time—Now! The incentive—the love of Christ. The goal—Zion! Now is the time to walk in the "old, old path," of which you sing; to smile at and help those "friends most dear"; to see the sun that shines through "from its home of blue." Now is the time to "fearless walk with the Nazarene."

" 'Yours dizzy with doing a lot,

" 'THE PIGEON.' "

Editorial

The Gathering

There are few subjects nearer to the hearts of Latter Day Saints than that of our caption, for it looms large among the objectives of the church, and for about a hundred years has been discussed by them in various forms and aspects. While some progress has been made in achieving this goal, it has been unsystematic and quite haphazard. Connected as it is with the greater and broader subject of Zion, the thought of one scarcely comes into consciousness without the other.

In this issue of the Herald is an article under this caption and over the signature of the Presiding Bishopric which every Latter Day Saint who reads it will find to be interesting and instructive. To all Herald readers its careful reading is suggested. While its reading may occupy but a few moments, yet to its study many hours may well be given, for though not lengthy it is extensive in scope and in it the whole subject is touched in various aspects.

The article as it appears was presented to and read before the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and some hours were spent in discussing it. Without suggested change it was formally endorsed. For some months previous to the convening of the Council named the Presidency and Bishopric had on various occasions in conference and through correspondence discussed the subject and the need for a de novo pronunciamento to the church. To this need of a statement Brother Curry gave study and with characteristic thoroughness and terseness covered the field. It is with pleasure and hearty endorsement that the Presidency presents the article in this issue; and suggest to the members of the church, and particularly to those holding the priesthood, its careful reading and study.

For some time past because the times had developed factors augmenting the general interest among the Saints in the Gathering, and because the pressure of untoward industrial conditions had intensified the desire to "go up to Zion," there has been a tendency to forget the warning against haste, and movements, some of which were ill-advised, have developed having in view on the part of individuals and groups the settling in the "regions round about" the "center place," and even in some places remote therefrom. Against haste and lack of preparation and official counsel and advice, the Presidency and Bishopric have had need to warn the Saints. This in itself has tended to discourage some Saints who have a deep-seated and righteous longing to come into the regions indicated, and we have even been accused of lacking the courage of our convictions.

In the article of the Bishopric this element of warning again appears and first reading may give rise to the idea that the suggestions are negative rather than positive; but a more careful reading discloses a most sympathetic approach by the Bishopric and reflects a deep-seated conviction that the work of the church includes a carefully supervised and religiously coordinated movement towards Zion. It even contains some promises made in good faith the fulfillment of which will bring joy to the Saints and, I am sure, advancement to the work of the Church.

The many letters coming to my desk, which ask about the gathering, the many questions propounded to me in private and public meetings, indicate that about the gathering to the "center place" and the "regions round about" the Saints are thinking more earnestly than ever before. And there is, too, a manifest desire on the part of most to comply fully with the laws and regulations governing, as well as the spirit of the principles of Zion. But in this as in all matters, the zealots are prone to run without tidings while those on whom much depends are likely to move slowly towards assuming the responsibilities of supporting the move. The time is here when those indicated in the books of the church to be the first to move towards Zion must, without reserve and with full faith and trust in Him whose will we strive to do, come forward and discharge their tasks. Such are the helpers on whom the Bishopric must depend.

Against the coming of another time of depression we as a people must surely prepare. A part of that preparation is the gathering of the Saints to the land of Zion; not in haste or by flight but by the will of God, and in obedience to his mandates. That the Bishopric is willing to assume their responsibilities therein ought to be a stimulus to the faith of the Saints whose faces are turned Zionward, and engender a still greater determination to work whole-heartedly with the Presidency, Bishopric, and other officers in carrying the law into effect.

The problems awaiting solution are many and vexatious; but the onerousness of the task will not deflect the faithful. F. M. S.

Meetings of the Joint Council

Of Presidency, Bishopric, and Twelve

The Joint Council meetings mentioned in the last number of the Herald continued until Tuesday the ninth, adjournment being had in the afternoon of that day. In session thus for a week, the work accomplished was not so much in the nature of "legislation" or resolutions adopted, as in discussion of the problems confronting the church, in such manner and spirit as to promote not only a better understanding of the problems and their solutions but also better understanding between the members of the council and the individual attitudes towards those problems and the methods of approach. On the basis of this better understanding the common interests have been enriched and finer fraternity developed. These were reflected in the spirit of the council and at adjournment all were conscious that there had been enhancement of the unity in which it is necessary for the council to work. I am sure that from few if any meetings or sessions of the council referred to have its members separated under better conditions of elan, common understanding and sympathetic fraternity. It is well.

Perhaps a chief factor in bringing these conditions about was the apparent determination of the members of the council to keep the discussions to main rather than incidental issues. And to the discussions there was brought a thoughtful seriousness which bespoke the effects of the strenuous time through which the church has recently passed. This was emphasized by the common understanding that our difficulties are not much lessened, and that to the tasks before us must still be brought the spirit of sacrifice, devotion, and unreserved consecration. And this attitude the men of the council desire to share with all the church.

Routine matters, of course, were given attention, requiring "motions, seconds, amendments," etc., but the bulk of the time was, as suggested above, given to discussion of main problems. What some of those main problems are will later be given to our readers and the church in various forms. Suffice it here to say that the financial condition of the church was carefully scrutinized again, and the members of the council once more re-enter the field, not only encouraged by the progress made but heartened in facing the still heavy burden of pulling up the hill yet before us.

Besides this, other matters were considered which have to do with the task of "evangelizing the world and Zionizing the church." To improve and direct the missionary spirit and work of the church is a primary duty. It is firmly believed that the plans discussed and approved will further the work of the church in this direction. And in the article in another column called "The Gathering" our readers will see reflected some of the thought of the council on some of the first steps towards Zionization.

On the whole, in my opinion, the sessions of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric just closed are among the best held in years, and I expect to see its effects written plainly into the results of the work of the church between now and the next general conference, and beyond.

J. C. Crabb Preaches on Hundredth Birthday

President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver Attend Celebration at Little Sioux Church

Brother John F. Garver and I left the Auditorium about 9:30 p. m. Saturday, the 6th of May, just after the adjournment of that day's sessions of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and with Brother Curry and my daughter Lois headed for Kansas City in my car. Leaving Brother Curry at his stopping place in Kansas City we went to the Union Station, where Lois left us, and we boarded a Burlington train for Omaha, while she went home. At Omaha next morning we were met by Dr. H. A. Merchant, and we three broke fast together.

Then, in Dr. Merchant's car, we started for Council Bluffs and north. Brother Merchant said he had a few days before, while enroute to Des Moines, disputed the right of way with a bovine which had desire to cross the road, and that the Buick had suffered some damage as a consequence. Perhaps the cow did, too. Well, the car didn't show it in its performance, and it seemed only a few moments till we had traversed the good cement road to River Sioux, and turned east towards Little Sioux, which was our objective.

Little Sioux!—the words stir up a flood of remembrances. At the old church building we found quite a number of Saints from various parts of the Northwestern Iowa District already gathered and coming in steadily. The occasion was a previously planned celebration of Brother J. C. Crabb's one hundredth birthday anniversary. By ten-thirty o'clock the building was full, and by the time the aged brother arrived later, the capacity was overtaxed.

The program was carried out as arranged by Brother Gerald Gunsolley, the District President—not elaborate, but simple. Of this perhaps more later. Here we tell of Brother Crabb and his part. Under the chairmanship of Brother Garver the program moved on smoothly. There were scores of Brother Crabb's relatives and intimate friends present, and all sensed the occasion as one of rare happenings. After a "speech of welcome" to Brother Crabb by Roll W. Scott, of Omaha, a former citizen of Little Sioux, Brother Crabb was called upon for a brief response. Now let it here be said that Brother Crabb, in being notified previously that he would be called upon to say a few words had vigorously replied that he would not be limited as to the time he should occupy. He was assured he could have all the time he wanted. His reputation for long sermons he seemed bound to keep up. On being introduced he was not content to rise at his chair but requested to be led to the stand. [He is now blind.] He was, and waving his hand before him he asked, "Is the audience out here?" On being told, he began. He took a text, probably a favorite one with him in his long years of service as a minister, "For God so loved the world," etc., and then proceeded to preach a sermon. In a voice remarkably rich and resonant, heard plainly not only by those within the building, but outside the doors and windows by those standing there because of lack of room inside, in excellent language and well rounded sentences, he discoursed. He was and is a Latter Day Saint, and wanted all to know

why. He bore a clear-cut testimony to the truthfulness of the "Latter Day Work" and warned the Saints against growing weak in the faith. For a bit over one half hour he talked. And though his aged body showed signs of tiring, his deep voice was vigorous and resonant to the last.

It was an occasion truly rare. Who in that audience before had heard a man on his one hundredth birthday anniversary take a text and preach for a half hour? Who in that audience was not impressed with the holiness of hearing an aged patriarch, still strong in the faith, bear testimony to the divinity of the New Testament and the Book of Mormon, and urge the Saints to continue to live faithful to their church covenants? Who in that audience could fail to be touched by the sacredness of the time? I doubt if a series of preaching services could have given the Saints assembled more encouragement or the work of that district more stimulation than the one meeting in which we assembled to do honor to our much loved centenarian, and listen to his firm testimony. And the softening, hallowing effect of that meeting continued as the Saints with opened baskets gathered on lawn and in building to partake of the necessities of life. As a result of the fine meeting, I am sure all "ate their meat in gladness of heart" as did the Saints of old.

The Editors congratulate Brother Gunsolley and his coworkers on the success of the day, and we congratulate Brother Crabb and his family on having reached and passed the day on which he became a century old. What a record!

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

One of the "risks of the profession" in being an editor is that of offending some of one's correspondents by using at times what was not intended for publication. We enjoy having our friends write us freely, even if criticism, favorable or adverse, is indulged in, provided, always the spirit in which it is written is good. We enjoy having bits of news and glimpses into personal feelings. But with quite a number of our friends there seems to be a fear, sometimes expressed, that we might use in our columns what they write when they would rather we do not. "Please do not print this," says one writer.

Well, the exercise of editorial judgment is not always easy. Too often there is the choice to make between giving our readers what will be interesting and valuable and straining the proprieties of personal correspondence. And we sometimes err on one side or the other.

Then, too, there is the exercise of editorial rights and discretion concerning changes in verbiage. We strive for clarity or perspicacity, while preserving the best interests of editorial policy.

All of which is just to let you know that the task of an editor is not always walking between beds of roses; we sometimes run into a thorn bush in our journeys. But we aim to do the best we can by readers and writers.

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

The Minister's Calendar

May 30 — Memorial Day

In memory of departed ones. Services, and decoration of graves.

June 11 — Children's Day

Special exercises. Baptism and confirmation.

June 18 — Youth's Day

Special early prayer service for the Youth's Conference, and a sermon for the young people at the eleven o'clock hour. Young people can be given responsibility in this service, especially young men of the priesthood.

July 4 — Independence Day

For the United States this date is a good one for organized Sunday school outings, picnics, and games. This permits group firework displays under the management of competent persons, where such entertainment is used. Canadian Saints generally have a splendid time on Dominion Day (July 1), which is their important summer holiday.

For Your Bulletin Board

Pastors who have young people planning to attend the Youth Conference in Lamoni in June will do a service by clipping out the page entitled "Make Reservations Now" and tacking it on the indoor bulletin board. These instructions are of importance to the young people planning to attend.

Putting Used Papers to Work

Marion Snead, a worker for the young people of Fourth Kansas City Church, tells us of a good plan for putting old copies of the Herald to work.

Brother Snead regularly solicits copies of the Herald from subscribers that have finished reading them, and distributes them among nonsubscribers. This practice has resulted in gaining a number of new subscribers for the Herald, and has induced others to purchase from the weekly bundle. If the people like the sample, they will buy the paper.

And, incidentally, there are still some people who do not know of the improved quality of the church publication since the three former magazines have been merged into one. Now is the time to inform them.

Ideas Wanted

Ideas that have helped you may help some one else. If you have found a solution to some pressing branch problem, write it up briefly so that it may be passed on to help other pastors.

Remember, too, that we wish to have some short outlines of your best sermons, which may be of help. Not over four hundred words in length.

NEWS BRIEFS

Congratulations to the Graduates

This is commencement week for many young people in the church. Graceland College completes another year of work May 19, graduating a class of about sixty young men and women. Many other institutions of learning attended by Latter Day Saint students, are also closing this week.

High schools, too, are presenting the world with more graduates. In Independence there are one hundred and four Latter Day Saint boys and girls in the graduating class of two hundred and twenty-eight. Next fall numbers of these boys and girls will enter Graceland College; some will enter other institutions of training. Still others will find it necessary to hunt "jobs."

To all its graduates the church extends congratulations for the achievements they have made and best wishes in the work they have yet to do.

Large Number Listen to Kirtland Temple Choir

A large congregation of Saints and friends listened to the Temple Choir, Kirtland, Ohio, of twenty-two voices sing Stainer's "Crucifixion," under the direction of Mrs. W. E. Householder the evening of Easter Sunday. There were present 328 Kirtland Saints, thirty-seven from Willoughby, Painesville, and Cleveland, and twenty-nine strangers.

President F. M. Smith Completes Eighteen Years of Service

On May 5, President F. M. Smith completed eighteen years of service as the President of the church. On the evening of May 5, 1915, according to the call of God, the provisions of the organic law of the church, and the action of the General Conference of 1915, he was ordained as President of the Melchisedec priesthood, by virtue of which ordination he became President of the church. Officiating in the ordination were Elder G. T. Griffiths, then the president of the Quorum of Twelve, Elder Peter Andersen, Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Elder J. A. Tanner. The service of ordination took place in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church, and is reported at length in the Herald of May 12, 1915.

In honor of this event President Smith was given a dinner the evening of May 5, this year, by President and Mrs. F. M. McDowell at their home in Independence. The guests included members of the leading quorums of the church and their wives.

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe Favorite of Young People

For the second consecutive year Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, pastor of Davidson Branch, Oklahoma, delivered the baccalaureate address for the graduates of Davidson and Victory High School. Elder Renfroe has spoken frequently during the year at chapel periods, and is a favorite among the young people of the community. He was reelected president of Western Oklahoma District at the conference at Davidson April 21-23.

Baptisms Reported This Week

Pastor P. S. Whalley, Birmingham, England, baptized a young sister on Easter Sunday, and Priest W. Eldridge baptized his young son, Ronald.

Thirty-one were baptized as the result of the tireless efforts of Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth, who conducted an eight weeks' series of missionary meetings at Lachine, Michigan, recently. Some of this group were heads of families, some young people, and some little children. Interest in the series was exceptional, crowds good, and the cooperation of Saints and nonmembers fine. The revival closed with a one-day Sunday meeting attended by members from Gaylord, Onaway, and Alpena.

Brother E. W. Lloyd, of North East Kansas City church, baptized two candidates April 23.

Five junior girls were baptized Easter morning at Flint, Michigan.

W. A. Smith, veteran missionary, baptized two people in the Blue River at Blue Rapids, Kansas, April 16, making the total number of the people he has baptized into the church one thousand and ten.

Three people, a married couple and a little boy, were baptized by F. J. Lacey Easter morning at Ontario, California.

Glenwood, Iowa, Members Are Studying

The hour of class work preceding the Sunday evening sermon at Glenwood, Iowa, now includes four divisions of study. The men organized as the "K. of R. R.'s" (Knights of Religious Research) are promulgating the study of the church books. The young women, "Y. L. R. E." (Young Ladies' Religious Endeavor) are giving attention to teacher training and other activities. The older women are studying Church History. A children's class is active, too. All participate in and enjoy the program part of the hour.

Youth Conference—Graceland College Campus—Lamoni, Iowa—June 18-25

Make Reservations Now

From every corner of the country—from little places and from big ones—they are coming to the Youth Conference on the Graceland Campus at Lamoni, Iowa. June 18 to 25 is the time, and definite arrangements must be made at least four days in advance to accommodate the crowds that are coming.

Naturally, those who make reservations immediately will get the best places to stay, and if you don't want to roost under the wagon with the chickens, you had better send in your order for a place to stay. However, N. Ray Carmichael promises a good place to stay for everyone that will give him sufficient time to prepare. Those who come rolling into town about midnight on June 17 without writing ahead—well, they may have to sleep in the car that night.

Quite seriously, the Reception Committee will have a great deal of work getting ready to accommodate the crowds, and you can help by letting them know ahead of time when you will arrive.

Many Are Planning to Come

One month before the opening of the Conference, nearly two hundred people had signified their intentions of coming, nearly all of them from distant points. No account is taken of those from nearby places in this number. Here are some of them:

Los Angeles	10
Detroit	10
Seattle, Washington	4
Jonesport, Maine	5
Springfield, Missouri	4
Brewton, Alabama	2
Joplin and Carthage, Missouri	7
Tulsa, Oklahoma	4
Oklahoma City	3
Lincoln, Nebraska	4
Spokane, Washington	6
Grand Rapids, Michigan	8
Council Bluffs, Iowa	12
Moline, Illinois	6
Maquoketa, Iowa	7
Fort Collins, Colorado	2
Boston, Massachusetts	several
Holden Stake	20
Independence and Kansas City Stake	Too many to count

And that is only a small part of the story. Help make it complete by doing your part.

What to Do

Here's what you can do to help us.

1. Decide when you will arrive and how long you can stay.
2. Fill out the coupon below, sending one coupon for each person (Coupon will be printed again next week. If necessary, send reservation on another sheet of paper.)
3. Send coupon, together with a postal money order for amount indicated, to N. Ray Carmichael, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. The money will apply on your expenses during your stay.

Expenses

Expenses have been reduced to a minimum, at the same time assuring the comfort and satisfaction of every guest and visitor who makes previous arrangements with Mr. Carmichael for accommodations. For those who stay throughout the Conference, expense will be one dollar a day. For those who come at either week-end, three meals and lodging for one night will be furnished for $1.25. But arrangements should be made ahead of time to insure this service.

Campers

Those who travel with tents and their own cooking equipment will find an excellent camping space reserved for them, located near a college building that will provide showers and lavatories, and other comforts.

Important!

All guests should plan to bring their own linen and bedding, whether they camp or stay in the College dormitories.

ORDER FOR RESERVATIONS

Youth Conference—Lamoni, Iowa—June 18-25

The Story of Etta Kett

Just a Little Help

"WE OUGHT to act like Christians, even at a church social!" said Etta. "I know she's homely, and that her clothes don't fit. She's scared, but I don't think she's as dumb as she looks. One would think she was under quarantine or something, the way you people keep away from her." Etta talked in a whisper so that the pallid and shabby young woman in the corner of the room wouldn't hear. "Now you go right on with your fun, and don't notice me if I go over and talk to her. When I give you the wink come over and get acquainted."

It was Etta's habit to "organize" whenever she found that things were not going well by themselves. In this case she decided it was necessary to "organize" friendship for the lonely and pathetic girl who had very recently come to Elmwood. Mary March appeared to be very much in need of friendly help. When refreshments were being served, Etta carried two loaded plates over to the corner where Mary sat.

"I've brought your plate," she said. "May I eat with you?" There was no condescension in her tone, and a warm smile of gratitude was the answer to her kindness. It was not long before Etta had forgotten Mary's dowdy appearance and her plain face. Her talk was so interesting that Etta felt no sacrifice in being with her. And gradually the younger crowd wandered over and formed a little circle about the newcomer. Etta was delighted with her immediate response to their friendly advances.

"THERE'S a long story behind that girl," Etta told her mother later. "And it's not a very happy one. Her mother's illness and death, heavy hospital and doctor bills, a younger sister to take care of, and the poor thing has been out of work for months. I'm going to try to find a job for her."

The next day Etta, working through some friends, did succeed in finding a job for Mary—not a very good one—but something that would pay expenses until a better chance came. And Mary, with an income to reassure her, was soon transformed in appearance both in health and in wardrobe.

A YEAR LATER no one would have recognized the original Mary as the vivacious girl that taught a lively crowd of junior boys in the Elmwood branch. Nobody in the branch had more friends except, perhaps, Etta herself.

"She's certainly the best investment of friendship I've ever made. I only wanted to help, but I think she has given me far more than I ever gave her. And she's so grateful that I feel like a faker to accept her thanks. It just goes to show that you can gain more in this life by trying to do a little bit of good than in any other occupation."

"My Book of Thoughts"

A Page of Ideals

"And when the stream
Which overflowed the soul had passed away,
A consciousness remained that it had left
Deposited upon the silent shore
Of memory images and precious thoughts
That shall not die, and cannot be destroyed."

—Wordsworth.

An ideal is an incompletely realized need of the personality in its relation to life. Every thinking man feels deeply as to his failures and shortcomings in meeting problems and responsibilities. Out of his discomfiture and embarrassment, he looks to the future with the hope that he may do better, and come nearer to success in his desire to achieve a righteous control of self and environment. Ideals express the essence of his strongest and fondest hopes. Ideals are stern masters, but they lead us to grow in greatness of mind and soul. The world is filled with self-satisfied laborers who, with a burning ideal, might have been doctors and educators, lawyers and statesmen, true noblemen of earth.

By this time you should be getting a good start on your own "Books of Thoughts" and should be adding to it daily from your own reading and thinking. No matter where your life may take you now, there is always the future, and it is possible for you to live greatly wherever you are. But you cannot live greatly without ideals and ambitions.

We should like to see some examples of ideals that you have written in your "Book of Thoughts." They may be of benefit to other young people who read this page.

SOME IDEALS

1. I want to be useful. I want to live a life of serving, not being served. I want to add more to the world than I take from it.

2. I want to be kind. I want to try to suppress ill temper and bad feelings. People suffer enough without my adding to their pain.

3. I want to be positive. It is not enough to be good. I want to be good for something. A "yes man" may not be noble, but he is a million times better than a chronic "no man."

4. I want to be clean. I want to be free of the things that degrade, and besmirch, and destroy.

5. I want to be happy. I want to do it in a way that will help others to be happy, for no happiness can come to me through the misery of others.

6. I want to realize my happiness and welfare in my spiritual as well as my physical life. I want to live completely through all the fine and good experiences that can come to me in normal wholesome living.

Is It Right?

A Column for the Discussion of Youth's Problems

Is it right for parents to assume absolute control of the earnings of young people in the home?

Property rights are among the most sacred known to the human race. When property rights are invaded, personal rights soon meet destruction too. The view has long since passed, among civilized people, that children are property; and modern parents see that the growth of character and personality in young people demands respect for their property rights as respect for the property rights of others.

The farmer who lets little Nellie raise the sickly calf, all the time calling it "Nellie's calf," and then sells it and pockets the money, violates a property right and a sacred trust. He may not consider himself a thief, but he is.

The parent who takes the earnings of an industrious young wage earner to buy luxuries for a lazy or incompetent sister or brother is committing a grave injustice.

Both of these types of parents should realize that they are breeding distrust and rebellion in their own homes, and that the time will come when the injustice sown will bring its own reaping of sorrow. They may pride themselves on being ideal Christian parents, maintaining ideal Christian homes, but in the minds of mistreated children they will be regarded, eventually, as hypocrites, and the children will turn against them and their religion.

Fair treatment, and a reasonable respect for the property rights of young people are the very foundation of the peace and security of home life.

Of course parents must help young people to make financial decisions, as they do other kinds of decisions; and they must protect their children against the enticements to reckless spending with which the commercial world bombards them. Some young people require a measure of control. But the gradual emergence of adult and independent personality from childhood must be carefully managed, and the development of property rights is an important part.

An Official Statement

The Gathering

I

The interest of our people in the gathering is possibly keener today than it has been in decades. This is attested by numerous letters to headquarters, by questions asked the traveling ministry, and by the trend of private conversations.

Partly, this interest reflects a desire to escape local conditions which may have become unbearable; partly, it is an expression of desire to achieve the security long associated with the thought of Zion. In view of world-wide economic, political and social conditions, which point to the fulfillment of prophecy, the desire to gather is not strange. With this desire, it is safe to say, the general authorities of the church are in deepest sympathy.

The center place and surrounding stakes, primary objective points of the gathering, are, however, so badly affected by the economic adversities gripping this country, that in many instances, removing from some outside point to them at this time would doubtless prove very unwise. Severe and faith-shaking financial loss may befall those who come inadvisedly.

However deep our sympathy with the desire to gather, we deal with very obstinate facts. It is impossible to realize suddenly a place of safety, since the building of such a place requires long and serious preparation which has been made only partially. Therefore the warning often has been given and is now emphatically repeated that due consultation with the authorities of the church, and adequate planning are essential before making a move. To make this consultation advantageous to all concerned, the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric are determined to hold themselves in readiness.

II

One of the most fundamental aspects of our church program is the gathering. The teaching of this idea began in September, 1830, (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2,) and with slight intermissions has continued to this day. Beginning as a promise, the thought of the gathering eventually was expressed as an invitation and a command. Complete instructions concerning the main aspects of this important project have been given to the church in a great many specific revelations.

It is natural for people to gather together. The bond of gathering may be varied, resting upon kindred, custom, similar activity, consciousness of kind. Certainly, we of the church find a deep and undimmed pleasure in associating with those who have embraced the same faith. So by some instinct within us, as well as by divine invitation and command, we are bidden to gather, in order that we might achieve religious, industrial, and social solidarity.

III

Since it is highly desirable to guard as fully as possible against missteps, the greatest heed should be given to the Lord's admonitions respecting the gathering. In section 38: 7 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the reason for giving the law to follow in section 42 was stated, that they "be gathered unto me [God] a righteous people." It is His will that His followers "should gather together and stand in holy places," (98: 5). The first emphasis, therefore, is upon righteousness in individual and community character. Without this element a gathering is ineffective, for the type of life the church endeavors to foster grows only in a truly religious atmosphere, and fails if the Lord may say of it, "This people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men." (Isaiah 29: 13.)

A second admonition (57: 6) is, to prepare in advance for the gathering. The growth of the preceding element of righteousness need not wait for times and seasons. It is an underlying form of preparation which may be undertaken anywhere. Other things must be prepared. There must be homes for all, employment for the workers, business opportunities for the business man; farms for the farmers. These things do not materialize unaided. Providing them requires time, careful intelligent study and effort, and money. To the problems thus raised the Presiding Bishopric are giving attention. Without proper solutions the gathering fails and its participants may become mendicants.

Thirdly, there are repeated warnings against gathering "in haste," or "by flight" (58: 12, 98: 9), but all is to "be done in order." In other words, as preparation is carried out there must be a utilization of such provisions as are made, by a systematic gathering of the people according to their ability to forward the cause. To achieve this, the Saints are to gather as counseled by the elders and bishops, and other spiritual officers (58: 12, 122: 6, 122: 7). Naturally, without coordination, the counsel of these men would be ineffective, hence the present statement of principles, and reference to aspects in which specific programs must be set up by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric from time to time.

Lastly, we must be extremely cautious that urgency is not mistaken for necessity. "In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me" (98: 3). Frequently it has been declared by public men that the lessons of this depression would teach wisdom to those who have endured it. Undoubtedly, some will profit by their experiences, but there are thousands who will rush again to speculate in the stock markets, as the newspapers of the recent past have so graphically witnessed. Likewise, there are some now urging the gathering who will not be interested therein when employment again is plentiful. The person whose plea for gathering is to be heeded most is he who has a record of years of faithful, painstaking service, extending over prosperous as well as losing times; who served God when all was well, and who may confidently seek God's help when ill times come.

IV

The general procedure to be followed is clear:

1. The center place is to be filled first (98: 4), then the stakes and regions roundabout. This affords ease of supervision at the outset, when problems are most numerous and pressing; it allows the greatest use to be made of a limited official personnel, cutting to a minimum the costs both of time and money required in traveling.

This statement should be further defined. By the term, "center place," for working purposes we mean Jackson County, according to its present political boundaries, and the immediately contiguous territory. Originally, this county extended across the western end of Missouri, including some of eastern Kansas and southern Iowa. The term "filled," is a designation of population which may apply in either one or both of two ways: (1), numerically, as to gross number; (2), functionally, as to trade or type of business, or availability of land at a price consistent with the purpose for which it is intended.

2. The gathering is to be by familes (57: 6), and by "churches" (98: 9, 10) (branches), insofar as due preparation has been made in advance. Thus, as functions in production and distribution are arranged for discharge by qualified individuals, the social aspect of life is adequately met. For a branch (indicating all or a majority of the members thereof) as a group to gather, is an exceedingly serious undertaking, the carrying out of which requires more than ordinary care, and breadth of advance consultation and preparation.

3. Repeatedly, the Saints have been admonished to buy the land in the center place and regions roundabout. Part of the properties now in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric were in the past accumulated with this object in view. But absorption by the Saints was less rapid than accumulation by the church, causing an acute problem. The present need is to absorb the properties available. When that has been done, a further movement will be considered. We should never forget that in the original instruction, it was intended that the money was first to be provided before purchases were made (100: 5). In this as in other things we must be careful, both as individuals and as a church, not to incur a dangerous debt.

A cardinal point of financial policy guiding our efforts is to sell properties not needed for general church purposes, and apply funds thus realized to the payment of debts. Such land may be sold to members or nonmembers without jeopardizing our program. Other properties, however, fit specifically into the project of the gathering, and these, except in rare instances, it is intended to sell only to our members.

All of this property has been reappraised and priced at what is believed to be fair values in accordance with going conditions. Members interested are expected to be conscious of their personal condition, and what they may consistently do in assuming financial commitments. They should remember, however, that transactions at these prices are opportunities to assist the church in debt payment and at the same time forward the plans of the gathering.

4. Counsel must be given to come to those who will be able to make a definite contribution to the gathering (57: 6, 58: 12, 117: 11, 127: 7, 128: 1). Farmers who may appropriately utilize available acreages; manufacturers who may expand the region's industries, however small may be their beginning; skilled workers, members of the professional groups; merchants; service groups; laborers, these in their due order shall receive counsel to gather. It is not intended that they should accentuate the community's competitive life, but rather that they should expand the community's ability to serve productively.

5. Central in the plan for the gathering is that each participant therein should function as a steward. Let it not be overlooked, that the gathering is the building of Zion, and the full observance of the celestial law, which includes stewardships, is

A Lecture to the Priesthood, Independence, Missouri, February 17, 1933.

By ELBERT A. SMITH

VI. Spiritual Imperatives: "A Minister Must"

A Minister Must Be Stable

In the first chapter of James we find a text that is historical in its significance to our people: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." The passage goes on, "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. Let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. A double minded man is unstable in all his ways."

I have myself greatly enjoyed watching the waves of the sea as they come roaring in to the shore, piling up higher and higher, full of power and mystery, but the next moment they are broken and flat on the sand and nothing but a little foam is left to show where they had been. No one has yet succeeded in extracting power from the waves, profitably, so far as I know, though there is plenty of it there.

You cannot get power out of the waves of the sea, driven and tossed by the wind, but you can get power from a steadily flowing river. You have seen men who are all enthused and who work diligently for a week or a month or six months and then it is all over. They were like the waves that have broken on the beach. You have seen even some extraordinarily able men who over a period of years served the church and then for some reason they were gone. A minister, if he is to receive a blessing from heaven and have success with the Saints, must learn to stabilize his life.

There is a great deal in the commandment to "examine thyself," and if we shall find in ourselves such a weakness as that we should summon all our power and eliminate it. A famous physician over seventy years of age, not many years ago went on the operating table and with his own hand removed his own appendix. If a man of the world has the courage and nerve to cut an offending member out of his anatomy in that way, to save his life for a few more years, a minister should have the will power and nerve to cut out from his life anything that threatens his ministry. One of the finest lines in Markham's poem, "Abraham Lincoln," reads: "He held the long purpose like a growing tree."

A Minister Must Believe His Own Message

I was present when President Joseph Smith was in his last illness and Heman C. Smith came to shake his hand. Joseph in talking to him, about himself (Heman), Joseph Lambert and other old-time elders, said, "The secret of your power, and you had lots of it, was your sincerity." We may not have agreed with those men always, but we always knew they were sincere. They believed the message of this church with all their hearts. They had no reservations. Whether we be apostles or deacons or priests, in our contact with the Saints, unless we believe our own message and the message of the church we cannot bear fruit as ministers. In contrast, one of our most brilliant men in preaching a sermon years ago said, "When I write my creed, I want to have a great big sheet of soft paper and use a soft lead pencil and have a big eraser at hand, so that I can write it today and rub it out tomorrow and write something entirely new, and do the same the next day." Eventually he erased almost everything, including his own ministry. Contrast that declaration with the words of Job, "Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know."

I have heard people say, "I wish I could have the kind of faith those old-timers had." All right, there is something to begin to work on, because Alma, in his wonderful sixteenth chapter of Alma, says, "If you can no more than desire to believe, let that desire work in you." Cultivate it until you do believe, and then cultivate your faith until it grows, and presently you will have knowledge. The trouble with some of our men in the past is that they have diligently thought about and talked about and preached about the things they did not believe. Their attitude was negative. They concentrated their minds on the things they did not stand for. Sometimes that is necessary, but as a steady, habitual thing it is absolutely ruinous, because the thing you cultivate is the thing that grows.

I would advise any young man to select some things he does absolutely believe, if it be not more than two or three, some things so fundamental he feels he can always live by them and, if necessary, die for them, and think about those things and talk about them and preach about them, if he is a preacher, and gradually add to his list the things he verily believes; then he will have an affirmative message, will believe his own message, and he will be a growing power.

Some people have attacked this position of Alma as being illogical, and said that one should not "prefer to believe," but should have an open mind. That is characteristic of a lot of university professors, whose open minds are open to atheism and closed to the revelations of religion. But so great a psychologist as William James more than a half century after the Book of Mormon was in print, stood up in the august classrooms of Harvard College and delivered a lecture called, "The Will to Believe," in which he contended that it is not only a man's privilege but his duty to prefer to believe.

A Man Must Believe His Own Call

That is, he must believe that he has been called and set aside and does have a holy investment, if he expects anybody else to be impressed by his ministry. Even as faith is something that grows with exercise, the man who accepts a call on the authority of the Spirit that has called him, though he may not immediately receive some great revelation, if he will move out and occupy diligently in his calling, his conviction concerning his call will grow as the years go by. I am sure of that. Brother Roy Budd tells a touching little story of how when he was baptized his very wise mother said to him, (as I remember): "Now, Roy, you must remember that from now on you are a member of the church." Sometime later he was called and ordained, and again she took him aside and said, "Now, Roy, you must remember that you are more than a member, you are in the ministry and are responsible for the souls of the people." This sense of responsibility will grow as your conviction of your call grows upon you."

If Christ were to come to this room tonight and put his hands upon you and say, "Go forth and represent me, teaching and administering among this people," with what joy and zeal you would go forth. That is what has happened. By his spirit he has called you and under the hands of his ministry has ordained you, and his voice is to go forth and labor among this people. That is the message of his Spirit to you tonight.

A Minister Must Love His Brethren

The divine statement back of all Christianity is that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." He was sent forth on the impulse of love. And Jesus, when his disciples went forth, said, "As God sent me into the world, so send I you." James very pertinently asks, "Can a man love God whom he has not seen if he does not love his brother whom he has seen?" Christ, in his last recorded prayer prayed three times that his followers might be one.

Brother Joseph warned us repeatedly that the greatest danger ahead of the church would be a division among the priesthood. I wonder if it is not perhaps true, that had we remained absolutely united, all working together as a people, and all giving freely of time and strength and means, if we could not have completed most of our major endeavors and paid for them. I just wonder. I do not know. Perhaps I never will know, but I wonder. At any rate, let us be warned concerning the future. Controversy in the church usually starts between two persons. Make your resolve that you will not be one of those two.

Love, like faith, is something that grows by cultivation. We do not find it easy just to sit and look at a newly found member of the church and love him. It is only when we get into his heart and life and find out his aspirations and good qualities that we learn to love him.

A Minister Must Discipline His Own Heart

Solomon said: "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." (Proverbs 4: 23.) And it is true. The emotions are what govern the actions of most men. Probably the great majority of men are moved in most of their actions by their feelings. Emotions may either drive us to destruction, as they have done many ministers, or they may lead us up to safety and to higher heights. We ought to be a class of men whose intellect, enlightened by the Spirit of God, predominates over our emotions. If our hearts go straying off to some forbidden field, we ought to command them to return. If we cannot command our own hearts to return to safety, we can never command the powers of heaven to be with us in our ministry.

We should be on our guard that there shall not creep into our hearts those little mean jealousies which are so contemptible and yet seem to be so natural. When some of our brethren make an outstanding success and win admiration of the Saints, in some hearts there begins to burn the little corroding fire of jealousy. I wish all the members of the priesthood whenever they feel that flame beginning to burn would extinguish it, because we must be right with God and right with our fellow men. That spells righteousness.

The Minister Must Have Spiritual Power

We have in the ministry a young man who is close to me. About the year 1926 this young man went to one of our biggest reunions to take charge of it. I

Chapter 20
Riches Untold

"I CAN never thank all of you for your hard work," Polly gratefully addressed a dozen women seated about the quilting frames in her workroom. They had been busy all afternoon, and they looked tired.

" 'Tis pretty now, ain't it?" and Grandma Hooper removed her glasses to polish away a speck of dust. Meanwhile she cocked a pair of faded eyes at the quilt they had just finished. "I allus did like that pattern, and this friendship quilt idea is one of the oldest and best ideas we have nowadays."

"And we do hope she'll like it." There was a peculiar pleading quality in Sister Evans' voice. "A lot of love has gone into all those stitches."

These were the women of Polly's group. She knew and admired every one of them. Often before she had bent above a quilt with them, stitching and stitching.

"I just can't thank you enough," Polly repeated, "but I'm going to try to put part of my thank offering to the women of this group, in my sacrifice envelope this week."

How the delicate quilting set off the design of the quilt with its myriads of colors against a cream background! One of the under corners bore in embroidered work the number of the group and the words: "With Love and Best Wishes from the Women."

"That was a real bit of work," Grandma Hooper put it, "just for one month's time. I'm mighty glad you didn't wait later for your idea, Polly."

"Don't you think Sister Nelson will love this?" Sister Livingston put the question to the little dark-eyed woman beside her, and then cast an approving glance at Polly.

"Well, she certainly should. It'll let her know that not only Polly, but others in Independence are thinking of her. I'm glad to have had the opportunity to help quilt this. I think it's beautiful."

"My, but them percale scraps o' mine came in handy!" chuckled Grandma Hooper. "Some o' them I've saved for twenty-five years. I allus thought I'd need 'em some time."

"—and I want to get it right off so she'll get it by Mother's Day," Polly was telling some one.

"She'll know your thoughtfulness is at the bottom of it all, Polly." Sister Evans patted the young woman's shoulder, "but isn't it fortunate that her birthday comes on that day, too, this year?"

When they had gone, Polly returned to look again at their handiwork. She was a lover of beautiful quilts, and this was the most beautiful she had ever seen. Surely Mrs. Nelson's lonely heart would warm at this remembrance from those with whom she had been associated for a short time in the "center place." True, the original idea had been Polly's but the women of the group had taken it up with enthusiasm and allowed not a second of time to go to waste. She would bind the quilt tomorrow and start it out to Oregon. Lovingly her hand stroked a corner. Those fine little stitches by her neighbors represented hours of painstaking work, but all of them had enjoyed it. They had met twice a week in Polly's workroom for the last month in order to get it finished, this in addition to the piecing they had done at home.

Once in a discussion of the work of their group, Polly had questioned Sister Livingston: "I wonder if they feel as near to each other in all the groups as we do in ours?"

"I don't know. I suppose not though. After all, Polly, my child, we are favored in our group. There aren't many group elders that are as concerned about each and every member of the group as Brother Evans."

"He is good," breathed Polly. "It just helps people to see him on the street. There's something so sincere and stanch about him."

"He's a real Latter Day Saint!" That, in Sister Livingston's opinion, was the greatest compliment that could be paid a person.

"It's remarkable," Polly mused to herself, "that women having so wide a variety of interests and talents as those in our group can find so much in common," and she thought of Sister Winston whose home was the testimony of her artistic tastes; young Sister Benson who specialized in kindergarten work; Sister Evans with her great store of kindliness; Grandma Hooper's big heart and active tongue; Mrs. Sterling's supreme desire to be a good mother for her girls, and Sister Livingston.

"Yes, our group is favored," she murmured, as she began to take the quilt from the frames. She would have just time enough for that before she had to put dinner on the table. But though she hurried Polly heard the joyful shouts of children at play on the sidewalk below the window.

Presently she folded the quilt and laid it on the chest, stowed the frames in the corner, and closed the door on the scene of the afternoon's activities. She would show Brad the quilt tonight, and she must also write Mrs. Nelson. All the women of the group were doing that, to shower her with letters on her birthday.

As she passed the nursery door, Polly paused. Memories often drew her to that room, memories so sweet that as she returned to her work, frequently there were tears in her eyes. Here for many months her baby had played and slept; here Brad had knelt and implored God for faith. Here very often, she, too, knelt in prayer.

AT THE bottom of the stairs she was greeted by a glowing-eyed Edith: "Two pieces of news for you, Polly, good news! And they're both partly about me."

"What! has some one left you a million, or has the Prince of Wales written you a letter!" cried Polly with exaggerated concern.

"Silly one! Better than that! Well, first, Arthea is going to Graceland next fall. We want to room together. Isn't that grand?"

"Now I am glad that Arthea has decided on Graceland! Wasn't there some doubt about it?"

"Some—just gobs of doubt! You see, her father doesn't belong to the church and he wanted her to go somewhere else. To tell you the truth, Polly Nelson, I think you were the deciding factor in this thing."

"I—why, what did I do?"

"Well, after the way you talked with Arthea this winter about dancing and card playing and doing other things. You knew she'd stopped dancing, didn't you? She told me she wanted to be like you, Polly—honest, she did."

"I'm so glad she's going to Graceland," chanted Polly, disregarding the reference to herself.

"So'm I."

"But you had another piece of news."

"Uhhuh, and that I have. Guess who's coming up to commencement!—Only two more weeks!" and unable to restrain her spirits any longer, Edith seized her friend and hugged her fervently.

"Oh, excuse me," giggled Polly, "I didn't mean the Prince of Wales a little bit ago; I meant Prince Charming."

"Don't be Victorian, my dear," airily, "but Dan is coming up to commencement!"

"There now, aren't you glad you let me persuade you into getting that glorious golden dress for the baccalaureate sermon?"

"He says he wants to see me anyway," demurely.

"That's sweet and generous of him. Do you think you'll have the nerve to bear up?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean do you think you can resist Dan's charms in person—it's lots easier to do that by letter, you know—and not give in for a June wedding?"

"Oh, Polly, don't tease. Of course I can. I don't want to get married this June. I'm not nearly ready. Dan was pretty nice about the stand I took. He even agreed not to bother me about it—getting married—but he threatened dire things if I went up to Graceland and fell in love with some one else—as if I could. What does he think I am, a polygamist—oh, no, I'd be a polyandrist, wouldn't I? Like the women in Tibet or some country or other. Don't tell me I don't know my sociology," she followed Polly into the kitchen. "But there, I almost forgot another reason why I came over. Mother said for me to be sure to look at that friendship quilt all of you made for Mrs. Nelson."

And so, while Polly busied herself with setting the table, her visitor went up to the workroom. Soon she returned effusing praises of the gift.

"I've a message for you," Polly informed her. "Cora told me to tell you that she wants to see you soon. It's something about the young people's council."

"Oh, dear!" ruefully. "She probably wants me to do something, and, Polly, right now with everything happening, I don't have time to do anything. There are exams, and my party dress yet to make and my Sunday school class. Of course I know I'm not nearly so busy as you, but anyway—I'm busy. By the way, are you reading the Book of Mormon again? I noticed it up on the little table at the head of your bed. Thought you read it just this last winter."

"No, I'm not reading it. I finished it in March. Brad's reading it."

"Brad! Don't razz me, Polly."

"What's so odd about Brad reading the Book of Mormon?" There was a hint of an edge on Polly's tone.

"Well, I just never thought of his doing it, that's all. Does—does he like it?"

"Seems to."

"Gee! wouldn't it be grand, Polly, if Brad did take his religion seriously?" she burst out. "I know it

www.LatterDayTruth.org

isn't my affair, but Brad has changed a lot lately. I've heard several mention it. People are watching him. They've done it all along. I hope you won't think I'm a little tattletale if I tell you what I overheard Daddy say to Mother not long ago. He said: 'It's hard on an ordinary fellow's pride to be the husband of a woman as wonderful as Polly Nelson, but Brad's not an ordinary fellow. He has good stuff in him if he ever finds it out.' Daddy's expecting greater things of Brad in the future, Polly."

"So am I," Polly confided in a low voice, and her eyes were starry, "a great deal more."

Then it was evening and Polly was writing a letter. She was sitting at Brad's desk, carefully choosing her words. Brad finished the evening paper, answered the telephone a time or two, and presently went upstairs for his Book of Mormon.

"Are you writing a letter or a book?" he finally demanded of his wife.

"A letter, dearest, but a very particular letter." Polly's expression was meditative.

"And who, may I ask, is to be the recipient of all this particularness?"

"Your mother."

"Ma?"

"Yes, and that reminds me that you ought to write something, too. Do you realize that Sunday is Mother's Day, and her birthday as well?"

"Jiggers, now it is!" Brad whistled thoughtfully. "Trust you to remember. Golly, I would never have thought of it! What are we sending her?"

Polly signed her name, laid down her pen and beckoned to him. She led him up to the workroom and there spread out the quilt for his inspection. "This," she said, "is what the women of the group are sending her, a friendship quilt."

"Isn't that a corker! How long have they—have you been working on it?"

"About a month. And they're writing her letters to keep her from feeling lonely. And this, my dear, is what we are sending her." She guided him to her own cedar chest and drew forth folds and folds of tissue paper. In these lay a shimmering, gray silk dress with white lace collar. There was a pink slip to match it in length as well as gray hose and gloves.

"Aren't they lovely?" she queried, her eyes sparkling. "I do hope she'll like them. I made the dress and slip."

"Lovely—lovely, why, Polly, they're just like you!" And for a long moment two shadows on the wall merged into one.

"Now, Brad, you must write her something," began Polly when they returned to the study. "Just say hello and happy birthday if you can't think of anything else."

"Oh, all right," her husband agreed not very graciously. "Gimme some paper," and he dropped into the chair before the desk. "First, maybe I'd better see what you say before I begin." He picked up Polly's letter.

Polly lay on the couch resting and listening to the crackle of the paper as Brad read:

"Dearest Mother, this is to wish you a happy birthday and to remind you that a son and a daughter in Missouri are thinking of you often and with love. Don't forget that.

"Last year at this time I remember that I wrote you a birthday letter, but then it was like a leap in the dark. I wasn't sure what to say, for I didn't know you. Now I wish that I might see you again and tell you some of the things I am thinking. I believe it would help both of us. Letters are so difficult when it comes to expressing one's feelings, or at least they are when a person writes as seldom as I do.

"Tomorrow I am mailing you a package for your birthday. I hope you like the things. All the while I was making them I thought of how much we, you and I, should mean to each other. You know we have gone through some wonderful experiences together—I don't want to think of them as sad experiences, for now I know they aren't. When you wear these things, please think of Brad and Polly and Carrol—for he is with us in memory.

"Our baby was taken away from us in body, Mother, but he is with us in spirit, I am sure. He prompts us to thoughtful things. It was as I was sitting by his little grave that some of these ideas about your birthday and Mother's Day came to me. Ideas, did I say? Well, I'm not telling all. The rest is a surprise.

"Give Milly and the girls my love.

"POLLY.

"P. S. You would be happy if you could see Brad. He is waking up to some spiritual realities. He is discovering soul wealth. He has been teaching as a substitute in some of the boys' classes at the Auditorium. It's wonderful, Mother; I'm so glad!"

Then Brad was kneeling beside his wife as she lay on the couch. His arms drew her to him, and as he kissed her face he found tears there.

"Tears, darling?" huskily.

"But they're tears of joy," she shakily assured him.

"You may be glad, dearest," he whispered, "but I'm twice glad. Why, Polly, we're finding them—riches, riches beyond compare!"

WORSHIP SERVICES FOR JUNE

The Church School

Prepared by Elva T. Sturges and Arthur Oakman

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "LIVE BY THE SPIRIT."

JUNE 4, 1933

Theme: "Hear Ye the Voice of God."

Instrumental Prelude: "Holy, Holy, Holy." N. S. H. 39; Z. P. 131. (See "Suggestions" below.)

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 76: 1.

"Hear, O ye Heavens, and give ear, O earth, and rejoice ye inhabitants thereof, for the Lord is God, and beside him there is no Savior; great is his wisdom, marvelous are his ways; and the extent of his doings none can find out; his purposes fail not, neither are there any who can stay his hand; from eternity to eternity he is the same, and his years never fail."

Response: (Either by the people, or sung by an unseen quartet or choir.)

Hymn: "O Worship the King," verse one, N. S. H. 9.

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16ff.

"Verily I say unto you, my friends, . . . this commandment I give unto you, that ye shall call upon me while I am near; draw near to me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you; whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you; and if ye ask anything that is not expedient for you, it shall turn unto your condemnation. Behold that which you hear is as the voice of one crying in the wilderness; in the wilderness because you cannot see him; my voice, because my voice is Spirit; my Spirit is truth: truth abideth and hath no end; and if it be in you it shall abound."

(S) Hymn: "Lord we come before thee now." N. S. H. 71, S. H. 352.

(S) Prayer: Of confession, asking forgiveness, concluding with the Lord's prayer by the congregation.

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 90: 1; and 19: 1.

"Verily thus saith the Lord, it shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh their sins, and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am, and that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; . . . I am Alpha and Omega, Christ the Lord; yea, even I am he, the beginning and the end, the Redeemer of the world: I having accomplished and finished the will of him whose I am, even the Father, concerning me; having done this, that I might subdue all things unto myself; retaining all power, even to the destroying of Satan and his works at the end of the world, and the last great day of judgment, which I shall pass upon the inhabitants thereof, judging every man according to his works, and the deeds which he has done. And surely every man must repent or suffer, for I God am endless; . . ."

Response by the Congregation: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6.

"We know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God. And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true, . . ."

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18, 20.

"If your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, sanctify yourselves, that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him; for he will unveil his face to you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will. Behold, I will hasten my work in its time, and I give unto you a commandment that you . . . sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean; that I may testify unto your Father and your God, and my God, that you are clean from the blood of this wicked generation, which I may fulfill this promise, this great and last promise which I have made unto you, when I will."

Response by the Congregation: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6.

"We know that sanctification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true to all those who love and serve God with all their mights, minds and strength."

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6b.

"But there is a possibility that man may fall from grace, and depart from the living God. Therefore let the church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptation; yea, and even let those who are sanctified take heed also."

Response by the Congregation: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6c.

"We know that these things are true, and according to . . . the Holy Scriptures, or the revelations of God which shall come hereafter. . . ."

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6d.

"And the Lord God has spoken it; and honor, power, and glory be rendered to his holy name, both now and ever. Amen."

(S) Hymn by the Congregation: "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." N. S. H. 33, S. H. 92.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 50: 8, and 129: 9.

"Behold, ye are little children, and ye cannot bear all things now; ye must grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Fear not, little children, for you are mine, and I have overcome the world, and you are of them that my Father hath given me; and none of them that my Father hath given me shall be lost; and the Father and I are one; I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and inasmuch as ye have received me, ye are in me, and I in you; wherefore I am in your midst; and I am the Good Shepherd, and the day cometh that you shall hear my voice and see me, and know that I am." "So be ye encouraged, and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory. Amen."

(S) Benediction: Jude 24, 25.

"Now to him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, To the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion, and power, both now and ever. Amen."

Picture: "The Sermon on the Mount," Tissot.

JUNE 11, 1933

Theme: "Order Thy Life."

Instrumental Prelude: N. S. H. 114, "Glory Be to God." S. H. 46.

Call to Worship: Micah 6: 2; Isaiah 1: 16-18:

"Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, Israel. Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord."

Group Response: Micah 6: 6:

"Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God?"

Leader: Isaiah 55: 6, 7:

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

(S) Hymn Prayer of Confession: "Lord, thy mercy now entreating," N. S. H. 312. Conclude with a short prayer by the leader.

Scripture Reading: Psalm 91.

(S) Hymn: "Unmoved by fear, my praise is due," N. S. H. 21.

Talk: The voice of revelation is calling us to constantly higher levels of righteousness. To obey this voice and strive to live more righteously is the practice of repentance. "Cease to do evil and learn to do well." It is only through the practice of repentance that the suffering which comes from an evil way of living can be avoided. "Wickedness never was happiness." An unrighteous way of life, however, cannot be overcome by doing nothing about it. No man overcomes anything by running away from it. A righteous man is not one who ignores sin, but one who fights it. The spiritual kingdom, as does the physical, abhors a vacuum.

The way to overcome sin is to plant in our lives the habits of righteousness. To pray constantly, and by doing this to cultivate the habit of referring everything to God, makes us God-conscious in a way nothing else can. To seek wisdom through a daily study of the Scriptures is an invaluable aid to righteousness. To participate reverently and regularly in the services of the church will enable us to gain strength from others who have achieved spiritual power. It is only through activity that we prove ourselves truly repentant and willing and able to do the things that we should.

Commission: Psalm 37: 23, 24, 27: "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore."

(S) Hymn: "Come let us anew," N. S. H. 433, S. H. 367.

Benediction.

Picture: "Christ and the Fishermen," Zimmermann.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

JUNE 18, 1933

Theme: "Continue in My Name."

Instrumental Prelude: "To thy temple we repair," N. S. H. 59.

Call to Worship: Malachi 3: 1, 2, 6:

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. For I am the Lord. I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

Response by Congregation: Moroni 8: 19:

"I know that God is not a partial God, neither a changeable being; but he is unchangeable from all eternity to all eternity."

Leader: Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1:

"The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."

(S) Hymn: "Dear Lord, and Father of Mankind," N. S. H. 243, verses 1, 4, 5.

Scriptural Meditation: 2 Nephi 13: 18-32.

Recitation of Belief: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4, 5, 6.

We believe "that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God, the framer of Heaven and earth and all things which are in them, . . ."

We believe "the almighty God gave his only begotten Son, . . . (that) he suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them; he was crucified, died, and rose again the third day; and ascended into heaven to sit down on the right hand of the Father, to reign with almighty power according to the will of the Father, . . ."

We believe "that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God."

Talk: The Christian life is one of continuous adjustment to the will of God. It is not enough that we refrain from doing that which is evil. This is merely the negative aspect of service. One might refrain from doing many things harmful to spiritual progress and yet remain unconverted. The way of Christ is positive. It includes certain definite commandments which must be obeyed. To fail to obey is to be disobedient. It is a sin of omission. Repentance has two aspects, ceasing to do evil, learning to do well. In other words—cease to do evil by learning to do well. So long, therefore, as we continue in the word of Christ we are his disciples. (John 8: 31, 32.)

(S) Hymn: "O Master, let me walk with thee," N. S. H. 213.

Commission: Mosiah 3: 21:

"I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works, that Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life, through the wisdom, and power, and justice, and mercy of him, who created all things, in heaven and in earth, who is God above all. Amen."

Prayer: A petition that we may be enabled to continue steadfastly in the truth and thus demonstrate that we are truly repentant.

Benediction: Moroni 9: 28.

Picture: "Head of Christ," Hofmann.

JUNE 25, 1933

Theme: "Grow in Love."

Instrumental Prelude: "Father Thy Paternal Care." N. S. H. 6, S. H. 154.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 34: 1; John 15: 12-15.

"Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, even Alpha and Omega the beginning and the end, whose course is one eternal round, the same today, as yesterday and forever. I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who was crucified for the sins of the world, even as many as will believe on my name, that they may become the sons of God, even one in me as I am in the Father, as the Father is one in me, that we may be one." "This is my commandment that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Response by the Congregation: Psalm 25: 4, 5.

"Shew me thy ways O Lord; teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth and teach me; for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day."

Prayer: That we may be more appreciative of God's love for us, and better able to understand what it demands.

(S) Hymn by the Congregation: "There's a wideness in God's mercy." N. S. H. 132.

Scriptural Meditation: Parable of the rich young man: (Mark 10: 15-22.)

Minister: "Lovest thou me more than these?"

Response by the Congregation: "Yea Lord, thou knowest that we love thee."

Minister: Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 44: 3; 3 Nephi 11: 13.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties for their support." "Behold I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law which ye have received." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

(S) Hymn by the Congregation: "When all thy mercies," N. S. H. 289.

Story of the Nephite Church based on 4 Nephi 1-21: This may be read, or retold from the scriptural background.

(S) Hymn by the Congregation: "Let Us All Be Brothers." N. S. H. 287.

(S) Benediction: Psalm 19: 14.

"Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

Picture: "Christ and the Rich Young Man," Hofmann, or "The Charge to Peter," Raphael.

Suggestions for Carrying Out the Service:

(S) Means that the congregation shall stand.

All the hymns may be found in the new Saints' Hymnal. Those that are also in the old Saints' Hymnal are designated and the page number is noted. If you do not have the new hymnals, it may be possible for you to get a copy of the words of the songs and substitute a hymn tune that is familiar.

The prayer should be carefully thought out. Christ considered the prayer of such importance that he gave us an example of how we should pray. There were no unnecessary words included. We spend much time in preparing to talk about God, and frequently no time in preparing to talk to God. The one who is to pray should be notified well in advance so that proper preparation may be made.

These services can only be effective as the Spirit of God gives them life. To receive that life, proper preparation must be made by each one who participates. First there must be a desire to come into contact with God; then we must purify our lives so that God's Spirit can abide therein. When we have made ready God cannot fail to meet with us.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark.

FIRST SUNDAY, JUNE 4, 1933

Sacrament service for adults and children. "This do in remembrance of me." (Luke 22: 19b.)

SECOND SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1933

Theme: "Telling the Story of Jesus."

Prelude: "To a Wild Rose," by MacDowell, or "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," Zion's Praises, 27, new Saints' Hymnal, 153.

Call to Worship: "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify thy name." (Psalm 86: 9.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Hymn: "His Love," Zion's Praises, 112, or "Join the Children of the Lord," Zion's Praises, 188, new Saints' Hymnal, 399.

Prayer.

Scripture: Psalm 33: 12; Matthew 28: 19, 20; Doctrine and Covenants 116: 1. (It is suggested that the scripture be read by junior boys. It will help them to become more familiar with the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants if they look up the passages and read them from the books.)

Hymn: "From Greenland's Icy Mountain," old Saints' Hymnal, 97; new Saints' Hymnal, 401.

Sermon Talk: Text: Doctrine and Covenants 83: 10. (First sentence.)

One of the outstanding objectives of the church is "Evangelizing the world." (Explain.) See "Missionaries Abroad." (In column, "Among Our Church Friends.") Stepping Stones, April 9, 1933.

On a certain Sunday morning at Lamoni a number of years ago, Apostle J. F. Garver gave a talk to boys and girls. Among other things, he said something like this: "Some day Brother ——, a missionary in ——, will have finished his part of this work; he will reach the age when he cannot carry on the work like he does now. What will happen to the people in that place who have not heard the gospel story? Of course, some one must be ready to take his place. Is there some one here who will volunteer to take his place?" The children readily responded and there were volunteers, both boys and girls, for all the places he mentioned, including missionaries and church officers. He commended the children for their willingness to serve, and then gave them a splendid talk on preparation for service. It was an inspiring service and encouraged the missionary spirit in the boys and girls.

Picture Appreciation: "The Hope of the World," painted by Harold Copping. Story: "How the Artist Forgot Four Colors," found in the book Missionary stories for Little Folks, Primary, by Margaret T. Applegarth; or stories in pamphlet, They Love Him Too, by Katherine S. Hazeltine, 10 cents, William H. Dietz, Chicago, Illinois.

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," new Saints' Hymnal, 397. (This may be sung by all or as a special number by the junior choir.)

Stories: "Telling the Story of Jesus to the Nations." Suggested material: "Missionaries Abroad," Stepping Stones, April 9, 1933. Each story should be told by a different boy or girl. It will be very effective if the story is told as if a boy or girl from that country were telling it. It will add to the interest if one or two juniors wear appropriate costumes. (For costumes, see National Geographic Magazine, books at public library, Outline drawings, Children of Other Nations, 15 cents for set of ten outlines, for sale at publishing or supply houses.)

Closing Hymn: "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," Zion's Praises, 28, or "Shout the Tidings of Salvation," old Saints' Hymnal, 21; new Saints' Hymnal, 386.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, JUNE 18, 1933

Theme: "Repentance."

Prelude: "Give Me Thy Heart," Zion's Praises, 29, or "Take Time to Be Holy," new Saints' Hymnal, 322.

Call to Worship: "My beloved brethren, repent ye, and enter in at the straight gate, and continue in the way which is narrow, until ye shall obtain eternal life." (Book of Mormon, Jacob 4: 16, page 189.)

Hymn: "Give Me Thy Heart," Zion's Praises, 29.

Prayer.

Scripture: Mark 6: 12; 1: 15; Acts 2: 38; 3: 19.

Hymn: "Have Faith in God," Zion's Praises, 214.

Sermon Talk: Text: Psalm 34: 14. See Lesson Seven, page 33, Junior Quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," April, May, June, 1931, by Myrtle A. Weber. Repentance is the second principle of the gospel. If we are truly sorry for the wrong things we have done, and are baptized, God will forgive us. After that, we must continue to repent whenever we do wrong, and we must try to keep from doing the same thing again. God knows our hearts, and if we truly repent and ask his forgiveness, he will forgive us.

Story: "The Prodigal Son," (Luke 15: 11-24) page 63, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw. (The juniors may arrange a dramatization of this story, ending with verse 24.)

Special musical number by a junior boy or girl.

Story: "Tom's Fun," page 36, Junior Quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," April, May, June, 1931, by Myrtle A. Weber.

Closing Hymn: "Stepping in the Light," Zion's Praises, 100, or "The Old, Old Path," Zion's Praises, 207; new Saints' Hymnal, 260.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, JUNE 25, 1933

Theme: "Showing Our Repentance by Our Deeds."

Prelude: "Blessed Are They That Do," Zion's Praises, 224.

Call to Worship: "He who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world and eternal life in the world to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 5b.)

Hymn: "Never Pass Them By," Zion's Praises, 42.

Prayer.

Scripture: James 2: 18; John 12: 26; Isaiah 1: 16, 17a.

Hymn: "Something to Do," Zion's Praises, 228.

Sermon Talk: Text: "By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold, he will confess them and forsake them." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 9.) This is the test of repentance. If we truly repent we will try to do right in the future. We will also do the best we can to right any wrongs we have done. A good example of a person trying to make up for the wrong he had done is the constable who arrested Joseph Smith on one occasion. At first this man was very cruel to Joseph Smith; he insulted and ridiculed him; fed him only bread and water, and would not let him see his family. At the trial the testimony offered on behalf of Joseph Smith convinced this constable (with many others) that Joseph Smith was a good man and innocent of the charges brought against him. The constable was very sorry for the way he had treated Joseph Smith, and he apologized and asked his forgiveness. To show him he really meant what he said, he helped Joseph to escape from a mob. (Church History, volume 1, pages 98-100.)

Stories Told by Juniors: "How Paul showed he had truly repented." Paul's conversion, Acts 9; Paul before the multitude, Acts 22; Paul before Agrippa, Acts 26; Paul in Rome, Acts 28: 16-31. "How Zacchaeus showed he had truly repented." (Luke 19: 58.)

Hymn: "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult," new Hymnal, 337.

Story: "The Story of Alma's Repentance." (Book of Mormon, pages 286-298.)

"Alma was the son of Alma, the high priest of the Church in Zarahemla during the reign of the good king, Mosiah. Alma II and the four sons of King Mosiah were very good friends and were together a great deal. These five young men could have been good helpers to their fathers who were striving hard to make Zarahemla a Christian land, but they would not help, and chose to go about among the people, telling false stories and destroying the people's faith in God and in the church. Alma was a wonderful speaker and soon led many people away from the church and caused much trouble for the people who were trying to serve God. Alma, the father, was very sad because of his son's wickedness, and too, because so many of his people were being led away from God, and never ceased to pray to God about it. And the happy part of this story is that God heard and answered the father's prayers.

One day when young Alma and his friends were going about rebelling against God, an angel appeared to them, and, to their amazement and fear, began to speak to them. The angel asked Alma why he was persecuting God's church. Among other things, the angel told Alma that God had heard the prayers of his father in his behalf, and also the prayers of his people. Then the angel told Alma what he must do, and departed.

Alma had never seen an angel of the Lord before and he was so overcome that he was unable to move after the departure of the heavenly messenger. He was removed to his home by his friends and there he lay almost lifeless for two days and nights. At the end of that time he arose and told his family that he had truly repented and from then on would serve God. From that day on, Alma II went among the people, telling them of his wonderful experience and also making right the falsehoods and wrongs he had done. Later he was ordained high priest of the church and became the first Chief Judge of the land, continuing to serve God the remainder of his life. Alma's friends, the sons of King Mosiah, also repented, and went among the Lamanites as missionaries.

Closing Hymn: "Never Be Afraid," Zion's Praises, 170.

vital therein. This emphasizes once more the need for careful selection of those called to gather, and equally careful counsel and guidance by the authorities of the general church. Again, this indicates how necessary is a small beginning so that our efforts do not fall of their own weight.

6. The present debts of the church which have led to a reduced official personnel, must to a considerable extent, circumscribe our efforts. As a church, one of our primary duties is to pay these debts, and until that is done we are not free to move as we otherwise might. We tend to lose sight of this fact, but if we do so, we shall find ourselves rather sharply halted by the discovery that debt has tied our hands. In devising "the methods of procedure" (128: 3), we must endeavor to do what is possible without slackening our efforts as a church to discharge our financial obligations.

V

Amplification and definitization of the foregoing principles will be made from time to time, each item to be added so as to fit into our policies and plans as a whole. Haste must be made slowly, hysteria must be avoided. Zion must be built by the use of the best intelligence we have, and the following of revelations given in the past applying to this problem, or to be received as need may arise. This society must be a spiritual structure whose cornerstone is Christ and whose light is God.

SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR MINISTRY

came along a week later. He was presiding over the reunion, and holding classes, and doing the best he could, but he was very much discouraged and the Saints were very free in their criticism. He said to me with downcast air, "Brother Elbert, I have found out that we must have something more than intellectual preparation. We must have spiritual power." I was glad that he had learned that lesson, even at the expense of some grief. This past summer that young man went back to the same reunion, and letter after letter came from those Saints commenting on the power and spirit he brought to that reunion, and certainly it was put to the test because in company with such veteran men as F. G. Pitt and two or three others I might name, he was called to administer to a girl, whose father believed she was possessed by an evil spirit. Now this was a college man, and though he believed in a sort of hazy, technical way the Bible stories of possession by evil spirits, he had no great convictions regarding the matter. He had never had an experience, and he did not go there with any definite belief in such a thing. But the moment he entered the room he felt that power. In fact it was vocal, and the evil spirit said, "Go away. Why bother me? I am not doing very much harm." Then there came a greater power of the Spirit than the young man had ever before felt and to his surprise he found himself saying, "In the name of Jesus Christ, I command you to depart." And that poor girl relaxed immediately and became normal and joined in the song that the elders sang before they left. Men who had been in the mission field for many years wrote us that it was the most wonderful thing they had ever experienced.

How came that increase of spiritual power? It came not alone as endowment. Spiritual power may be an endowment, as on the day of Pentecost, when the disciples tarried at Jerusalem "until they were endowed with power." But it came also as a process of growth. This young man had not only studied, he had prayed and labored and exercised himself in his ministry, and his increase of spiritual stature came along as naturally as for a tree to grow. Certainly without that spiritual power we shall not get far in our ministry.

A MINISTER MUST GROW

Now last of all I have noted that the ministry must grow. Age sets a limit to physical growth. We quit growing physically rather young, but fortunately there is no such barrier to mental and spiritual growth. I told you the story the other night of William Gibson who was ninety years old and who was very sick and the doctors did not know whether he was dead or alive. When I stood at his bedside the old man looked up at me and said, "Brother Smith, think ye I am going do die?" And I said in all seriousness, "It looks that way." He said, "I hate to go. There are so many things to learn." Ninety years old, and he found so many things to learn!

Growth is the law of nature. How shall we grow spiritually? The spiritual objectives, the teaching objectives, which the General Conference adopted and which the ministers are to teach to the Saints are as follows:

a. Individual and family prayer.

b. Study the word of God, especially as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

c. Intelligent and regular reading of the church periodicals.

d. Regular attendance at church services.

e. Intelligent, alert, and efficient participation in the work of the church.

f. Financial support of the church through whole-hearted compliance with the financial law.

g. Godly walk and conversation.

If the ministry are to teach the Saints these things in order to help them grow spiritually, is not that also our program of spiritual growth among ourselves? You will note four fundamental elements of growth: Prayer and study and worship (regular attendance at church services) and service ("intelligent, alert, and efficient participation in the work of the church.")

After all, a man may pray, study, and worship, but, if he is an ordained man and does not move out in his office and calling to which he has been set apart, he will not grow, because growth comes with service.

I thank you for your attention during these meetings, and I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to God for strengthening me in body that I might again join with you in service.

Arouse and See!

America, what have they done to thee?
Thy lovely flag is trailing in the dust
That ever proudly waived o'er land and sea;
Thy honor has been stained by "drink's" vile lust!
Oh shame for thee that nations now are grieved
They trusted in thy strength and are deceived.

They looked to you to help them from the shame
Which self-indulgence binds them sadly to,
By your example clean and power to stay
What "evil and conspiring men" would do.
America, sung as the brave, the true,
Surely the world expected more of you.

And you have legalized an outlaw mean!
Hurtful, degrading from earliest days!
Think of your children here and those unborn,
Will you deserve from them a song of praise?
America, with tears your honest children plead,
That you will stay this avalanche of greed.

Oh, think with what a price you have been bought!
God was with your fathers unto victory.
Nations have passed by weight of their own sins.
Unless thou turn'st, that fate awaiteth thee.
Call to the "Prince of Peace" to come to save,
Rallying to his banner the pure, the brave.

Prayer and Testimony

An Interesting Experience

By Harold I. Velt

It was in 1916 or 1917 while Brother A. L. Loving and I were laboring together in Gippsland, Victoria, Australia, that a debate was arranged with a very able minister of the Seventh Day Adventist Church—a man named Stewart. This debate occupied one night a week for four weeks, Brother Loving acting as chairman and offering prayer each evening. I was at a little disadvantage the first two evenings, being young and inexperienced in debate, and not being familiar as one might have been with the many technicalities that are used by our Adventist friends in support of the Ten Commandment law and the Jewish Sabbath, for the discussion was confined to those propositions. Indeed I have never known of a Seventh Day Adventist minister to be willing to debate from the standpoint of the origin, organization, faith, doctrine and practice of the church. The reasons are obvious. But maybe Mr. Stewart would have done so had we pressed for it—I do not remember. However, the last two evenings, and more especially the last one, the advantage was absolutely on our side, I believe, and a perfectly friendly spirit prevailed throughout the entire debate. The fourth evening Mr. Stewart came to us and asked to discontinue the discussion and said, "I believe you two young men are honest, and I know I am, yet we both cannot be right while preaching opposites. Come to my home as you can, and let us pray again for light and further discuss the matter privately." This we did from time to time, our friendship never being divided. How earnestly we prayed that that good man would see the light of the restored gospel. He was moved to another state however, and naturally enough, in time our prayers for his conversion were forgotten in our interests for many others with whom we were more closely in contact. But something happened which brought the whole subject forcibly back to mind. I think it was in December 1921, that we Australian missionaries tried somewhat of an experiment, all coming together just before the Australasian Mission Conference and holding a big mission in the Newcastle District, putting out thousands of pieces of literature daily. It was just at that time when Apostle McConley came to Australia. I remember that the first day he came to Newcastle he took one side of the street and I the other while we talked to people at their doors. Some days later, while working a street alone, I had just finished and was about to join the other missionaries, when a well-dressed gentleman turned the corner into the street that I was leaving, on the opposite side. Immediately the Spirit of the Lord indicated to me, "That man is a Seventh Day Adventist." I did not know why the Lord should have revealed that, but I crossed the street and contacted the man. Talking with him a little while I said, "Now you are a Seventh Day Adventist, aren't you?" He said, "I am, but I would like to know how you know?" I replied, "Do you think it possible that the Lord can reveal anything in these days?" He look somewhat surprised at my question and I continued, "Are you acquainted with your people in Victoria?" He said, "I am not, for as a matter of fact I have not been in Victoria except to pass through on the train from South Australia. But I have just been associated with one of our ministers who met two of your elders in Gippsland, Victoria some years ago, and had a debate with one of them. I have many a time heard him explain the difference between your church and the Utah church just as you have just done, and have heard him say that if ever there were men of God, those two young elders were who were of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints." I described the man. He gave assent. I described him a little further. He said, "That's the man." I said, "Well, I am the man with whom he had that debate, and I am very glad to meet one who has just been associated with that gentleman." I was at that time about one thousand two hundred miles or more from where this man had been associated with Mr. Stewart. We had a friendly little visit, and exchanged addresses, though we never did write. As I walked along to join the other missionaries, I felt the Spirit of God fill my very being, and I thanked Him for the experience, feeling well repaid that the discussion of years before had been kept on so friendly a basis.

I related this experience at our last Reunion at Silver Lake, little realizing that the story was not yet complete. Eleven years had passed by, and thousands of miles of water separated us from the land of that experience. Recently we began a series of meetings in Longview, Washington. One sister was anxious to have me meet a certain Adventist minister, and invited him to our lectures. One night he and his family were present. During the day I had said to Sister Velt. "Would you be surprised if that man should be the man to whom I was directed by the Spirit in Newcastle, Australia?" To make our story short, it was indeed the man, and what a happy meeting it was under the circumstances! He was rather surprised when after a few questions, I told him that I was that Latter Day Saint elder who met him on a street of Newcastle, Australia. His wife asked how we had happened to meet. I told her. Mr. Cole had remembered the experience quite well, especially that I had claimed that the Spirit of God had revealed to me that he was an Adventist. We have since had visits with him at his home, and he with us where we are domiciled. Have had a few hours discussion with him. I had left with him my ten numbers on "The Riddle of American Origins" in the Zion's Ensign, and I had noticed afterward that along with those articles were those splendid articles by Bishop A. B. Phillips on "The Sabbaths of the Covenants" commencing with number four. He has asked for the first three, and I have ordered for him the Inspired Version, have loaned him the Doctrine and Covenants, Brother Edwards' first quarterly on the Doctrine and Covenants, and some other literature. Strange to say Mr. Cole had never met any other elder of the Reorganized Church. Does not this seem to be a case of fulfillment, or at least nearly so of the scripture "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days?"

Grateful For Healing

By Lucy Brown

Last November I fell ill from flu. My fever rose higher and higher, and it was not long until I could scarcely get my breath. I told my companion that unless the Lord came to my rescue, I could not stand it much longer. He called for Brother Clemens and Brother Halleck Milner. Brother Clemens came just after noon and administered. Brother Milner was away from home and did not get the word.

About half an hour after the administration it seemed as though some one were beginning to fan me. No one was near me, but I could feel the cool breeze starting at my head and going to my toes, then back to my head again. After the third time this strange thing happened, I broke out with a heavy sweat which continued for about two hours and a half.

When the doctor came the next morning and examined me, he said it was a case of healing. I am grateful for this blessing and am endeavoring to live as God would have all his people live. I pray for the welfare of God's children.

Wishes Young People Could Sense Responsibility

By Virginia Ann Williams

I was benefited by the meetings I attended at Houston, and have never felt the Spirit of the Lord so keenly as I have since coming from the conference. I wish that all the young people (especially in our branch) could sense the responsibility of being a member of this church as I do today. As I sat in the church this morning listening to a wonderful sermon preached by Brother G. H. Wixom, I seemed to sense more fully my duty, my responsibility. If this would come with as much force to other young people of the church as it has to me the last three weeks, I feel that our part of the work would flourish, that we should go forward, and that Zion would be redeemed in a very short time.

I hope that the time is not far off when I shall be privileged to associate with the young people of the church, for I become a bit discouraged at times. Nevertheless, I feel that if I am faithful, the Lord will be with me, and assist in solving my problems.

Gospel Gives Hope

By Mrs. George Orr

When I first came in contact with one of the messengers of the restored gospel I was lying in bed, possessed of a peculiar weakness. My condition was partly due to exhaustion, but I have since determined that it was largely due to a state of hopelessness and lack of incentive. As the gospel was brought to me from day to day, I received strength and was soon able to work again, gaining steadily a new interest in life. I am thankful for the gospel because it has filled the void in my heart and made life worth living.

Guidance Through Difficulties

By Jessie W. York

Recent press stories and notices in our local paper would seem to disprove the statement to the effect that a prophet is without honor in his own country. Pastor Newman Wilson is doing a fine work in this vineyard, and his friends, both in the church and out of it, joy in giving him credit and thanks.

I have worked with the young people always, and am intensely interested in their youth's conference movement. For six years my path has carreid me over a very bumpy road. This winter was a hard one for some of us who have had to part with our loved ones. During this time the Zion Builders of Jonesport, led by our pastor's eldest daughter, Pauline Wilson, gave a little "depression party" which was attended by twenty-one, all bringing food and money and helping me very materially. Only the dear Lord and I know what that meant to me during my hours of trouble and stress. This is only one of the good things they are trying to do here in this branch. It would surely seem that our young people have "caught the vision."

It has been my happy lot to have twice glimpsed the condition of life under the promised "endowment," and I can not describe what it is, except to say that it is "the intelligence of God" made comprehensible to man's finite mind. May we all press on and not lose out. God speed his people in their mighty work to "evangelize the world and zionize the church."

Our Individual Responsibility

By M. L. Salter

Our church, the church of the living God, must not fail. Your pennies, nickels, dimes, and those of everyone else count. I for one want to say: Let us make 1933, in spite of prevailing difficulties, a bigger and brighter year than 1932.

Our little band at Birmingham realizes the responsibility resting on them. Everyone still has employment and is a steward. We hope to be wise and prudent in our stewardship.

Let each one of us not only talk about what ought to be done, but get busy and do all these things. And above all, let us unite our hearts and prayers for the welfare of the church and the direction of the leaders, that we may accomplish the objectives God has given us.

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA, 1715 Fifty-first Street, Central Park.

Request Prayers

Brother Leonard S. Rhodes, a rural carrier living at Mancos, Colorado, where there is no branch of the church nearer than thirty miles, asks the Saints to unite their prayers with those of him and his family, that the way may be opened up for him to transfer to an office where there is a branch, and where the climate will be suited to the health of his wife and himself. He has a daughter fifteen years old and a son three.

Sister Julia A. Crocker, of Loomis, California, still suffers from an injury she received in September, 1930, when she broke her hip and leg and injured her knee, ankle, and foot. She is now able to walk some in the house with the aid of a cane, and asks prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She was seventy-nine years old last January. She also desires prayers for her sister, Mrs. Ada M. Earle, of Rocklin, California, who is sorely afflicted.

Sister Alice Porter, of Wabash, Indiana, asks the Saints to fast and pray for her daughter, Burnedean, that if it is God's will, she may be healed of sugar diabetis. She has great faith in the healing power of the Lord and his willingness to answer the prayer of his people.

Sister L. Brown, 319 South Ninth Street, West Helena, Arkansas, desires prayers for her family, herself, and her niece, Ethel Stallings, who is also a member of the church. Sister Stallings is in the Helena Hospital in a serious condition.

Sister P. Kesselring, Valentine, Nebraska, requests remembrance in your prayers. She is in poor health and the doctor says that she is in need of complete rest from work and worry. She has much faith in the Lord's power to help and heal. She also asks prayers for her family.

Sister Beth Davis, of Silver City, Iowa writes: "We desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my mother, Sister Fred Skank, of Henderson, Iowa, who is suffering with liver trouble and rheumatism. She is able to do her work part of the time. But the past few weeks her suffering (from the liver trouble) is much worse. We trust the heavenly Father will restore her to health, through your prayers."

QUESTION TIME

Why were clean beasts by seven's and unclean beasts by two's taken into the ark?

Perhaps the most plausible explanation of the greater number chosen in the case of clean beasts is, that the clean animals could be used in domestic ways or eaten for food and would therefore be needed in greater numbers, particularly before the time for harvesting the crops of fruits and grains arrived. The destruction of all life during the flood would cause some delay before the harvests of the earth could be obtained.

Another possible meaning of the Hebrew word rendered "seven" is, an indefinite or a full number. This might mean that a greater number of clean animals should be taken into the ark, yet leaving that number indefinite. But this meaning does not seem to be implied in the text cited, though possible. If used in this sense, it would probably indicate about the same as our word several, perhaps meaning an abundance. The number seven also was often used as indicating completeness, and in the Mosaic and other times held considerable religious significance.

Are those in the north countries (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 6) the lost tribes of Israel? If so, where are they?

The event referred to in the above citation points to the time of the reign of Christ on the earth. It is at this time that those in the north countries shall be united with the children of Ephraim in Zion. They are evidently of "the tribes of Israel," for this is to be their blessing from God. Therefore it seems reasonable to assume that they are of the so-called "lost tribes." The meaning of the term has two possible explanations: that they have strayed away into unknown countries, or that their tribal identities have been lost through becoming mixed with various nations.

The last explanation offered appears to be in harmony with various texts of the Scriptures. God threatened to scatter Israel among the "heathen" and the "nations" for becoming unfaithful (see Leviticus 26: 33; Deuteronomy 4: 27), and later they are referred to as being scattered, with the promise that they shall be gathered (see Isaiah 43: 6; 49: 12; Jeremiah 3: 12; 6: 22; 16: 15; 23: 8; Ezekiel 20: 34; Zechariah 2: 6). Hyperbole is often used, in scripture, and may have been used in some of these texts, hence one should gather the trend of all texts bearing upon the matter, to determine the more exact meaning or intent.

It is not easy to say what particular countries may be meant by the texts referring to "the north countries." But it seems reasonable to assume that they were countries which had a known existence, and in at least some instances they almost certainly meant specific nations on the north of the Israelites in and around Palestine, but in other cases they are not so easily determined. There is no present reason to think that there are undiscovered nations near the North Pole, for there is very little territory there which has not been actually discovered. In any event, the texts show that Israel shall not only come from the north, but also from the west and south and all other sections in the day when the prophecies are fulfilled.

If Jesus went to paradise with the thief on the cross, why did he tell Mary that he had not yet ascended to his Father?

There is no contradiction in the two statements, as paradise is the place where the spirit rests until the resurrection, while the heaven where God reigns or would presumably abide is not the same place. Paul clearly shows that paradise is a place distinct from heaven, for he states:

> "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." —2 Corinthians 12: 2-4.

When Jesus said to Mary, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father," he used the word haptomai, which has "many implied relations," among them being to "attach oneself to." This might mean that as he was then going to the Father, he did not at that time desire to be longer detained, but would again see her at a later time.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue South

Easter Sunday at the Bungalow Church was a busy day. Apostle J. F. Curtis, Missionary P. T. Anderson and District President Warren E. McElwaine were welcome visitors, also Saints from Sheldon, La Moure and Leonard, North Dakota.

Church school at 10 a. m. was followed by a pretty program from the children's division, presenting "The Garden of the Lord." The setting was a garden effect with a background of artificial hollyhocks and bluebells. Following the children's exercises, recitations, and songs, Billy Couey gave the Bible reading from Saint Luke. Mrs. J. E. Henneman sang "In the Garden," and Apostle J. F. Curtis gave a sermonet.

The visiting Saints enjoyed a dinner at the home of Brother and Sister J. F. Rotzien, prepared by the sisters.

At two-thirty Brother Charles Young, of La Moure, was ordained a priest and Frank Stowell, of Fargo, a teacher, by Apostle Curtis and Elder P. T. Anderson. A spiritual sermon was then preached by Apostle Curtis. Two babies were blessed by Brother Curtis and Anderson, Roger Hunt Ratcliffe, son of Pastor and Sister H. E. Ratcliffe, and Eloda Cynthia Rebecca, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Wilson, of Kragness, Minnesota.

A priesthood meeting was held at four o'clock, and Apostle Curtis preached at eight in the evening. The choir sang, "Come Unto Me" and "God Be With You."

The O. T. Z. Club of young people have held two parties at the homes of Jerome Stowell and Courtney Rotzien. The proceeds of the lunch are to be used for a songbook fund.

Pastor and Sister H. E. Ratcliffe were called to the homes of their parents in Kansas on account of serious illness. Sister Ratcliffe's father, Elder Samuel Twombly, passed away before her return, and Brother Ratcliffe's mother has passed on to her reward since his return home. The sympathy of the Saints is extended to those who mourn.

Midweek cottage prayer meetings are being held at the homes, of the members. The eleven o'clock hour on Sunday is devoted to preaching by the younger priesthood. Jerome Stowell has preached on "Repentance" and "What Is Zion?" and Courtney Rotzien is presenting a series of talks on the Book of Mormon.

Sister Thomas Hunter, adult supervisor, sponsored a luncheon for the ex-presidents of the Relief Corps. The proceeds are to be used for the purchase of songbooks.

Elder P. T. Anderson chose for subjects while here, "Take Upon You the Whole Armour of God," "Are We Church Members Or Kingdom Builders?" and "Sowers."

The children's division enjoyed an Easter party and refreshments. This department is growing in attendance.

Sister Minnie Peterson went to Minneapolis for Easter Sunday, and was united in marriage to Elder E. E. Weddle, of Lamoni, Iowa, former pastor at Fargo, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Marvin Ziech. Elder Vernon Lundeen officiated. The bridal couple spent a few days at Fargo, and a reception was given them at the Frank Stowell home. They will live at Lamoni.

A committee has been appointed to beautify the church grounds.

Sister Fern Shackow, chorister, has been faithful in her work. Sister S. M. Brown furnished her home for choir practice during the cold weather.

Lachine, Michigan

Thirty-one Baptized When Elder J. J. Ledsworth Conducts Missionary Meetings

Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth were here eight weeks, holding very successful meetings. Through their tireless efforts thirty-one candidates were brought into the kingdom, some of these being heads of families. The candidates also include a fine group of young men and women and a few children.

The church was full almost every night even when the weather was stormy. Brother and Sister Ledsworth showed pictures which were very educational to children and grown-ups as well. Saints and nonmembers gave splendid cooperation, being present and helping in every way.

The Saints regret to hear that Brother Frank Migent, who lives at Lachine, but went to Ann Arbor for an operation a few weeks ago, is not doing well. Will those who know him remember him in their prayers?

The eight weeks' revival closed with a one-day meeting on Sunday. Saints from Gaylord, Onaway, and Alpena came and worshiped. Brother and Sister Ledsworth expect to start meetings at the Spratt schoolhouse about nine miles from Lachine. An ingathering of souls is hoped for at that time.

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

Topeka Saints were encouraged and strengthened by the sermons of Elder J. W. A. Bailey beginning the evening of March 5, and continuing for one week. He expects to return and hold more meetings in the near future.

At a banquet held at the close of a training school at the First Christian Church, March 16, Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark were awarded diplomas by the International Council of Religious Education. The work of the recipients was favorably spoken of by Mr. Settles of the State Council in the presentation exercises.

On Palm Sunday the juniors of Topeka Branch sang in a rainbow chorus of two hundred voices composed of juniors from the different churches in the city. The movement was sponsored by the Topeka Council of Children's Workers. Wendell Kelley also told a Bible story.

March 26, was the occasion for a "Temple Day Program." Brother and Sister Evan Fry and Brother and Sister J. Adelbert Withee, of Kansas City, were present and contributed numbers on the program. The closing illustrated lecture in the evening on the temple and its mission was by Brother Fry. Preceding this lecture pictures of Nauvoo Temple and other points were shown at the young people's meeting.

Easter Sunday was appropriately observed with two programs, one in the morning by the young people, and another in the evening by the junior department. A two-act play, "Serving," was given at eleven o'clock. The resurrection theme was brought out by Robert Munro, of Scranton, Kansas. At the close of the service the infant daughter of Sister Willet and husband was blessed by G. G. Cadwell and Robert Munro and given the name Martha Mae.

The Saints of Scranton local attended the morning service in a body.

In the evening a picture in living art,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"At the Tomb," by Plockhorst, was posed by four junior girls who took the parts of the three women and the angel.

The members of this branch are sorry to lose Brother and Sister C. L. Ruffcorn and daughter, Laura, who have lived here almost a year. They returned to Omaha, Nebraska, their former home.

Birmingham, England

Gospel Ordinances Made Attractive Parts of Programs

Easter Sunday, the most monentous day in the whole year, dawned bright and beautiful, and the hearts of the Saints rejoiced. Pastor P. S. Whalley baptized a young sister, Miss R. Siviter. As he led her into the water from which she should arise to newness of life the Spirit of God was strong upon him. Previous to the ordinance of baptism, Brother Whalley spoke of the great need of spiritual rebirth and of the power of Christ. Priest W. Eldridge also baptized his young son, Ronald.

In the evening the confirmation was attended by a beautiful spirit of peace and joy.

On Sunday, April 9, the branch had a unique experience, the blessing of three infants. A special service was arranged, and Pastor Whalley emphasized the importance and sacredness of presenting little ones to the Lord. He stressed the responsibility of parents, and compared the mothers to Hannah when she dedicated her child, Samuel, in the temple. The church was crowded, and many remarked how beautiful and fitting was the service. There were beautiful flowers and songs. Three baby girls, daughters of Brother and Sister E. Munslow, Brother and Sister J. Shipley, and Brother and Sister Fred Schofield, were blessed by Elder J. Schofield, Elder E. Norton, and Elder A. Kendrick.

During the last month several improvments have been made in the interior of the church building. A new platform was erected and paid for by the Laurel Club. This is a fine piece of work and meets with everyone's approval. The sacrament services can now be conducted with greater dignity and sacredness, all the priesthood taking their place upon the stand. Curtains of purple velvet (matching the altar cloth) extend across the platform, hanging from polished rails. These were bought and fixed by the women's guild. The deacons built a vestry of which the pastor was in great need. The cost of this will be met by the branch.

All members are active, but especially the young people. They are finding their place in the church. Their prayer services are well attended. They have found their prayers effectual, and pray for all the needs of the branch and the whole church.

The Saints are eagerly looking forward to the next visit of Apostle J. W. Rushton, and trust it will be soon.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Host Branch to District Conference

The annual conference of Western Oklahoma District was held at Davidson April 21, 22, and 23. Despite the depression the Saints enjoyed one of the best conferences in the history of the district. From the opening of the first session to the close, a fine spirit prevailed, drawing the Saints closer together and increasing their understanding of the gospel and of the tasks that lie before the church. The church building was taxed to capacity for night services, and record crowds were enjoyed during the day.

Apostle Roy S. Rudd, using for a text, "Whatsoever a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," brought a forceful message on Friday night. The junior chorus of the public school assisted with music.

Saturday and Sunday were crowded with services which have been already reported in the Herald, and which did much to cheer and help the people of this district. The presence of President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle Budd, Elder F. E. Dillon, president of Central Oklahoma District, was deeply appreciated, and their services helped to make the conference the success it was.

Election of officers in the Saturday afternoon business session resulted as follows: District president, Z. Z. Renfroe, of Davidson, reelected; secretary-treasurer, Roy L. Diamond, of Eagle City, reelected; music supervisor, Edythe Skinner, of Davidson; Brother Renfroe chose as his counselors B. A. Howard, of Erick, district supervisor of church school, and E. E. Crownover, of Hydro, priesthood work.

Splendid meals were served the conference free of charge by Davidson women in the annex building of the church. Davidson Branch extends to all visiting Saints thanks for their cooperation helping to make the conference successful, and especially do they thank President Smith, Apostle Budd, Brother and Sister F. E. Dillon, Elder E. L. Kemp, of Central Oklahoma District, also Brother and Sister Irby Mundy, of Utleyville, Colorado, for their generous contributions.

Local Saints were very busy for several weeks preceding the conference. Many improvements were added to the church grounds, the men donating time and energy to fill in the yard, place new fencing in front of the church, lay a concrete walk the entire length of church lots at the front. Water works were installed, and trees set out. A new sign is the attraction near the southeast corner of the grounds and can be plainly seen by motorists traveling the new highway. The expense for all these improvements has been met and other projects are the plans for the present.

The women's auxiliary served the annual high school junior-senior banquet, April 28, which netted them a sum of more than eighteen dollars. Pastor Z. Z. Renfroe will for his second consecutive year, deliver the baccalaureate address for the graduates of Davidson and Victory High School. Elder Renfroe has spoken frequently during the year at chapel periods and is a favorite among young people of the community.

The Saints are happy in their work, but are not content with their present achievements. They wish to press forward to the accomplishments of greater and nobler things.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Harry J. Hoffman was ordained to the office of priest, April 9, by Elder A. E. Anderton, assisted by Bishop H. E. French and Patriarch J. E. Matthews.

The women's department met in the social room of the church April 13. Sister Georgia Brush read a paper on "Water Baptism," and Sister Verna Grice read a paper on "The Challenge of the Future."

The primary department gave a splendid Easter program. The junior choir and primary band did their part well. Mildred Sensabaugh played a violin solo, accompanied on the organ by her sister, Dorothy.

Bishop H. E. French preached a good sermon on "The Resurrection," at the morning hour. The choir sang the cantata, "Redemption's Song," by Fred B. Holton. A surprise party was given Patriarch J. E. Matthews April 21, commemorating his seventy-first birthday, the celebration taking place at the Knights of Pythias Hall. All three congregations in the city, First Church, Second Church, and Third Church, were invited to participate, and one hundred and ten were present at the dinner, Bishop H. E. French being toastmaster. The guests were entertained by accordion solos by Miss Metzger; the Humbolt Quartet sang several numbers, and the Woods' Harmony Singers also sang several numbers. Elder C. W. Clark, pastor of First Branch, gave a short talk and presented Brother Matthews a gift in appreciation of his service to them. Elder R. E. Madden, pastor of Second Church, gave a short talk and presented a gift in appreciation of his service to them. Other speeches of appreciation were given by Elders A. E. Anderton and John R. Grice, and Bishop H. E. French.

A dinner was given April 27, in honor of the basket ball teams whose splendid records last season are appreciated.

Other speakers for the month were Elders G. H. Kirkendall, A. E. Anderton, C. W. Clark, R. E. Madden, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, and Teacher Chester A. Carey.

Lamoni Stake

Activities Now Center About Commencement

The stake conference was held at Lamoni, Iowa, February 5. President F. M. Smith, speaker at the afternoon service, delivered a message inspiring to a large group of people.

A series of missionary services which lasted for seven weeks, was conducted by Brother J. Charles May, of Independence, at Blythedale and Allendale. He is expected to return for three more weeks at these two places and at Lacona, a mission on the northern boundary of the stake.

Apostle J. F. Garver, accompanied by Brother Blair Jensen, spent a few days in March getting in touch with practically every branch in the stake.

Several Sundays prior to Easter a lenten series of sermons was conducted by Elders Blair Jensen and T. S. Williams. Brother R. A. Cheville spoke in a missionary series three Sunday evenings in March and at the close of the meetings baptized three young people.

In April the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," was given by the Oratorio Society with Colin Ferrett and Edward Brackenbury as guest singers. At the Easter service Sunday morning Brother Blair Jensen delivered the sermon using as a subject, "The Empty Tomb." That evening the sacred play, "Pilgrims by the Way," was presented in a beautiful setting to an appreciative audience.

The women's department is functioning under the leadership of Mrs. H. H. Gold. A midweek Book of Mormon class has recently been organized with Mrs. Columbus Scott as teacher. This department sponsored a mother-daughter luncheon the evening of May 9, at which two hundred and sixty-five persons were present. A program honoring motherhood followed the luncheon.

The Saints of the stake are taking an interest in and an active part against the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. President G. N. Briggs and Roy A. Cheville are representatives of the committee organized.

Miss Lena Mortimore and Mr. Floyd Hulse motored from Kansas City Saturday, May 6, and were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Mortimore, Sunday morning. M. E. Mortimore, uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony. They returned to Kansas City Sunday afternoon.

At the sacrament service Sunday, May 7, many of the Graceland students who are leaving soon for their homes, expressed their gratitude to Lamoni Saints for the inspiration and help they have received during the college year. Doctor Charles F. Grabske, of Independence, Missouri, brought a message of much worth to Saints at the evening service.

Following this meeting a pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cheville. The bride was Miss Vesta Stevenson, of Lamoni, a Graceland graduate, and the bridegroom, Mr. Esmond Crown, of Centralia, Washington, a Graceland student. Mr. Cheville performed the ceremony which was witnessed by a group of friends.

Following the present activities in the stake, centering around commencement season, May 28, is designated as an all-stake young people's convention. In the stake they are pointing definitely toward the young people's convention and the reunion which will convene July 28 to August 6.

Kirtland, Ohio

All Departments Work Together

One Thursday in April the Home Beautiful Circle, led by Sister Mabel Thomas, and the women's department met at the home of Sister Daisy Lewis, leader of women, and enjoyed an interesting program of songs, prayer, instrumental and vocal numbers, and the reading of papers.

President F. M. McDowell visited Kirtland in April and preached one evening, his message being well received.

Apostle George Albert Smith, of the Utah Church, was a recent visitor at the temple.

John Francis Cooper, son of the pastor, is salesman and booster of the Saints' Herald. He has thirty customers.

Maxine Lewis received first place in the oratorical contest held at Kirtland, presenting her oration at Willoughby High School when the best orations from all the county schools were heard. Janet Culp, another Kirtland girl, received first place in the local school, and also won first place in dramatic reading at Willoughby. She was very pleased to bring the banner home to Kirtland.

Several from here attended the district conference held at Akron, April 22 and 23.

The Easter observances under the leadership of Pastor John Cooper, at the Temple, were most appropriate and impressive. The morning service opened with an organ prelude followed by a choral response and a hymn, "Jesus Christ Is Risen Today." After the invocation by Elder George Lindsay, came the anthem, "He Is Risen," by Caleb Simper, the scripture reading by Elder F. T. Haynes, of Cleveland; an anthem, "Why Seek Ye the Living Among the Dead," by E. A. Clare, and the sermon by Brother Haynes. Soloists were Mrs. R. Schneithorst and Mrs. H. Atchison, sopranos; Miss Ruth Davies, contralto, and W. E. Davies, bass.

That night Stainer's "Crucifixion," was given by the Temple Choir of twenty-two voices, directed by Mrs. W. E. Householder; Mrs. R. Clough, organist, and Mrs. R. Flack, pianist. Soloists were George Neville, tenor; W. E. Davies, bass, and W. A. Householder, bass. The solo quartet was composed of Mrs. C. Williamson, Mrs. F. Ebeling, George Neville, and W. E. Householder.

A count of people in the congregation on Easter Sunday evening revealed the presence of three hundred and twenty-seven Kirtland Saints, thirty-seven Saints from Willoughby, Painesville, and Cleveland, and twenty-nine strangers. Sister Maude Mason played Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" at the opening of the evening program.

Elder and Sister George Lindsay, of Cleveland, Ohio, are now living at Kirtland. Their new home on Joseph Street will soon be completed and ready for occupancy.

Sylvania, Ohio

Basket Ball Adds to Young People's Interest and Support

The young people of Sylvania Church school have just finished a very successful season of basket ball. Early in January the group assembled to consider forming a league. It was not long until two leagues were formed, one for the young men and one for the young women. Each league consisted of four teams. Each team was given a name, and the following captains were chosen: for the young men, Herman Lang, Edward Brown, Floyd Clark, and Harry Ries; for the young women, Mary Lang, Madeline Creque, Helen Fallis, and Mrs. Marie Yoey.

Eighteen games were played during the season, and there was much rivalry between competing teams. "The Aces" were the leading team in the men's league, and "The Irish," the young women's league. These teams were given a banquet by the losing teams of the leagues the evening of March 31, and fifty-eight young people attended. Norman Hall, director of recreation, acted as chairman, and Harry Ries was toastmaster During the dinner the guests were entertained by speeches from captains of the teams. Splendid talks were also given by the district president, R. F. Slye, of Bradner; Charles Bryant, superintendent of the Chevrolet Company, Toledo; Branch President A. F. Reed; Church School Director Clyde C. Yeager, and District Church School Director Floyd L. Clark. Musical numbers were rendered on Hawaiian guitars by Milford and Norman Yeager, and there were vocal quartet numbers.

A similar banquet was given for the junior boys and girls basket ball teams, April 10, and was attended by twenty-six boys and girls. The teachers, Floyd Clark in charge of junior boys, and Mrs. Opal Hall of junior girls, were proud of the results attained through the supervised recreation of the junior division of the church school.

These basket ball games were played in the hall above Elder George Yeager's

grocery store which was loaned to the church school for that purpose.

These games more than doubled the attendance of the church school, reaching the peak of one hundred and fifteen, with an average attendance of ninety-seven since January 1, the highest in any church school in Northwestern Ohio District. The Saints feel that too much praise cannot be given the new church school plan for what it will do for a branch when all divisions of the organization function properly. Already six of these young people have been baptized into the church, and the Saints are looking for much more to be accomplished.

Independence

This year William Chrisman High School graduates the largest class in its history, two hundred and twenty-eight boys and girls. Of this number one hundred and four are Latter Day Saints: Paul Anderson, George Arnold, Earl Audet, Barbara Bailey, Theodore Baker, LeRoy Barnett, Mabel Beal, Ammon Beebe, Duane Bevins, Roy Bozarth, Annie Brolin, Clyde Brower, Richard Brown, Virginia Rose Budd, Richard Bullard, Robert Burgess, Ethel Carbaugh, Roland Conyers, Raymond Cook, Mary Ethel Cool, Charles Cox, Marion Denham, Alma Dixon, Gene Douglas, Joan Douglas, Marvin Dunne, Phyllis Ervin, Vernon Esgar, Alice Louise Fender, Kenneth Feen, Irene Fereday, Lucille Friend, James Greenwood, Hazel Hartman, Amy Hedeen, Byron Hedeen, Evelyn Hess, Bernice Higdon, Merle Hoerning, Audrey Horn, Kenneth Hughes, Norman Inman, James Jurdan, Maxine Keir, Majel Kinsfather, Muriel Kinsfather, Mabel Kipp, Oliver Lane, Elmer Lohmolder, Virginia Mathis, Kathryn May, Lyle McCarroll, Hubert McCarty, Zelma McConnell, Wilda Lee McDowell, Jamie McPherson, Alta June Moorman, Thyra Moorman, Noel Gordon Morgan, Marjorie Payne, Dorothy Pease, Evelyn Phillips, Margaret Reimer, Dorothy Ruth Resch, Gordon Resch, Reva Richter, Ronald Richter, John Ross, Orrin Russell, Vern Sappenfield, William Shedd, Vera Sheehy, Fred Sherman, Mildred Sieg, Luther Simpson, Wayne Smelser, Elinor Smith, Josephine Smith, Vera Smith, Wallace Smith, Mary Elza Sprague, Charles Stowell, George Stowell, Gomer Stowell, Frank Street, Alice Thomas, Marguerite Thomas, Fred Tignor, Iris Tordoff, Bessie Merle Totty, Charles Trumble, Keith Tucker, Marcine Turner, Fern Van Trump, Kenneth Van Tuyl, Arthur Watkins, Ralph Watkins, Leonard Webster, Arlton Westwood, Hubert Whitehead, William Wilson, Carol Wisemore, Lawrence Wisemore, and Virgil Woodside.

The women's sacrifice offering, collected in the six-months-old campaign, is approaching the five thousand dollar mark. The exact figures of the sum, as reported at last week's meeting, were $4,950.86. Mrs. C. C. Koehler, leader, announced at that meeting a dollar-sacrifice day for the first Monday in June for the women of Independence. They hope at that time to reach their goal of six thousand dollars sacrifice offering. When this sum is raised, the women plan to have a banquet for all who have participated in the campaign, after which they will begin another lap of sacrifice effort to assist in freeing the church of debt. Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Bishop J. S. Kelley, Bishop C. A. Skinner, and Elder W. B. Paul attended the meeting last week.

The White Masque Players held their last monthly meeting of the season the night of May 8, and elected officers for the coming year: President Miss Margaret Sturges; vice president, Frank Jennings; treasures, Adelbert Withee; secretary, Mrs. J. Glenn Fairbanks; literary critic, Miss Rilla Leeka, and membership chairman, Miss Pauline Siegfried.

Stone Church

Mother's Day was observed with appropriate songs and tributes throughout the morning services Sunday. The boys' choir sang "I Would Be True" at the church school worship period, dedicating the number to their mothers. They were directed by Miss Marcine Smith.

Beginning next Sunday, Pastor John F. Sheehy will conduct a pre-baptism class for candidates for baptism on Children's Day. The students will include pupils from the primary, junior, and intermediate departments of the church school.

At the eleven o'clock service, Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered an appealing Mother's Day address. The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang the anthem, "The Heavens Are Telling," and L. A. Woodside sang "Mother O'Mine." Robert and George Miller accompanied at the organ and piano. Elder H. G. Barto presided over the service, assisted by Evangelist U. W. Greene.

Elder Hubert Case, the evening speaker, based his sermon on a text from Doctrine and Covenants 35, and discussed the fulfillment of prophecy. Music for the evening was by the Auditorium Band and by Miss Juanita Curtis, pianist. Elder T. A. Beck was in charge of the service, assisted by Patriarch W. A. McDowell.

Walnut Park

Mother's Day was celebrated throughout the day Sunday by special numbers at the various services. Following the Sunday school class period, the orchestra under the direction of Orlando Nace, played "That Wonderful Mother of Mine," solo parts being sung by E. E. Moorman. Seven classes were perfect in attendance and four hundred and seventy-six were present. Brother Claurice Closson, assistant superintendent, has been absent from the church school for two Sundays due to an injury to one of his eyes.

At eleven o'clock Apostle J. F. Curtis preached the Mother's Day sermon to the congregation in the upper auditorium. A male quartet composed of J. F. Wolfe, E. E. Moorman, Fred Horn, and John Reynolds, sang "Little Mother of Mine." During this service Betty Gwendolyn, baby daughter of Brother and Sister Lloyd Masterson, was blessed by Elder W. T. Gard, and the baby's grandfather, Elder C. K. Green. The junior service in the basement had a Mother's Day program consisting of music by a children's chorus, directed by Sister Bernice Griffiths; a piano solo by David Rider; a story by Sister Barwise; a vocal solo, "That Wonderful Mother of Mine," by Bobby Rich, assisted by the chorus, and a Mother's Day sermonet by Elder Charles Hamm.

The religio was entertained Sunday evening by a program consisting of a vocal duet, "When It's Lamp-Lighting Time in the Valley," by Woodrow Price and James Odom; a reading, "The Songs My Mother Loved," by Lois Jean Williams, assisted by a quartet of young people; a piano solo, "Country Gardens," by Margaret Chapman, and a vocal solo, "An Old-fashioned Mother," by Melba Moorman.

Elder Leonard Lea was the speaker at seven-thirty o'clock Sunday evening.

Two funerals were held at the Walnut Park Church Sunday afternoon.

Services for Brother George Howery, eighty-one years old, were held at one o'clock. Brother Howery died Friday night, May 12, at the home of his step-daughter, Sister Joseph Stowell. He is survived by four step-children, four brothers and one sister. The pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, was in charge of the service, being assisted by Elder Benjamin Bean. Music was by a quartet composed of Luella Wheeler, J. E. Kelsey, Frank Redfield, and Velma Nunn.

Services for Sister Mary A. Dillee, seventy-six years old, who died Friday afternoon, were held at two-thirty o'clock. Elder Joseph Luff was in charge of this service, being assisted by Elder Frank McDonald. Music was by a quartet composed of Arlon Chapman, Maurine Nace, Pauline Crawford Watkins, and Milford Nace. Sister Dillee is survived by three daughters, five sons, two sisters, five brothers, twenty-four grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren.

A homecoming is being planned for Sunday, May 21. The observance is to extend from Sunday through the following Wednesday. Pastor Frank McDonald will preach both morning and evening Sunday, and also Monday and Tuesday evenings. On Wednesday evening a union prayer service at the church will terminate the celebration.

Enoch Hill Church

Elder J. A. Koehler concluded his series of three sermons on "The Kingdom and Industrial Zion," Sunday evening, May 7.

Sister John Swalley, a faithful church school teacher here for several years, and her family have moved into the Stone Church district.

Attendance at the early morning prayer service is increasing, and the children are attending and taking part. In consequence of their interest and participation, the spirituality of this service is growing.

Because of the growth of the choir, directed by Sister Amos Allen, it has been necessary to add a new section of seats to the choir loft. These singers are remembering the commandment to cultivate the gift of music and song.

The junior church service is progressing under the supervision of Brother C. E. Beal and Sister H. E. Winegar.

The adult church school is in the midst of an attendance contest which is awakening much interest.

The Mother's Day morning preaching service was made attractive by a number, "Sweet and Low," sung by the Enoch Hill Mother's Trio. Sister John Lentell told a story, "A Real Mother Wanted." Richard Maloney sang "Mother Machree," and Pastor H. L. Barto delivered the sermon tribute to mother, taking his text from 1 Corinthians 12.

Elder H. A. Koehler was the evening speaker.

The women of the groups in this district meet each week to study the Doctrine and Covenants, Brother Joseph Martin at present substituting as teacher for Brother William Shakespeare. Enoch Hill women are keeping up with the sacrifice work of the women of this city, and attend the Monday afternoon meetings at the Stone Church.

Spring Branch Church

Many mothers were present at the Sunday morning services. At the church school period after class work, Irene Roberts gave a talk on Mother's Day, and Pearl Wilson read, "Did You Write to Mother?"

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood and Alma Kearns sang, "Oh, Jesus, I Have Promised." Elder John F. Sheehy gave a talk on ordination, and Elder D. S. McNamara delivered a charge to Jesse Smith and Morris Jacobson, who later were ordained to the office of elder by Brothers Sheehy and McNamara. Pastor Eastwood offered a special prayer before the ordination, and the choir sang, "Just as I Am Thine Own to Be." After the ceremony Alma Kearnes sang, "Mother's Voice," and Brother Sheehy was the speaker for the remainder of the hour.

The evening church school program again carried out the Mother's Day theme.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the evening speaker. Music at this service was furnished by a quartet composed of Alma, Imogene, and Gladys Dixon and Fern Belk. They sang "Nobody Knows But Mother."

The services on May 7, were pleasing and encouraging. The spiritual tone of the sacrament service helped the worshipers. Elder D. S. McNamara, the evening speaker, read part of Doctrine and Covenants 98 as the basis of his sermon.

Midweek and early Sunday morning prayer services are well attended by Saints of this district.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Ordinances of the Church Greatly Enjoyed Here

Sacrament service, May 7, was well attended and some helpful testimonies were given, the Holy Spirit being present to bless and comfort. After the sacred emblems had been served, Brother Charles W. Vance, of Uhrichsville, Ohio, was ordained a teacher by Elders Charles Cramer, John Carlisle and William Goudy. Surely Brother Vance will be wonderfully blessed in his work. He has expressed his earnest desire to serve the Lord to the best of his ability, and the prayers of the Saints are asked in his behalf, that he may be faithful in his calling.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bigler was blessed Sunday, April 9, by Elders Charles Cramer and John Carlisle, and given the name, Marlene Jane.

Holy Week was appropriately observed with special services. A program was had Good Friday afternoon. Elders William Goudy and Charles Cramer each gave a touching short sermon, using the theme, "The Seven Last Words of Christ," and several vocal selections were enjoyed, "O Sacred Head Now Wounded," by James Watkins, and "Christ Died," and "He Took My Place," by Samuel Mansell, and a selection by a quartet.

Easter Sunday was ushered in with a seven-thirty service. Elder Goudy read the Scripture lesson and Brother Cramer offered the invocation. A splendidly arranged program was given by a number of young people, vocal and instrumental music and Easter hymns. Elder Carlisle spoke on "The Life of Christ." The church was decorated with Easter flowers and ferns.

The Saints were pleasantly surprised when Apostle Clyde F. Ellis arrived and delivered a sermon.

The day's activities were climaxed by the presentation of a pageant, "Easter Dawn," by a cast of twelve young people, assisted by a quartet.

Little Marjorie Hensel who underwent a serious mastoid operation, is on the road to recovery. She was a regular Sunday school attendant before her illness, and is greatly missed.

The local women's department was one of eight groups of women in the various churches of this city, awarded a prize of ten dollars by the Malley Motor Company during an advertising campaign. This sum was given to the group having one hundred per cent attendance and membership. The local department has a membership of thirty-five. They were also conducted on a courtesy auto trip about the city and returned to the church for their regular meeting. Sister Ada Stein is president of the society.

The choir, directed by Brother Mansell, has been rehearsing for several weeks, preparing a concert they plan to give soon.

The women's group was partly responsible for the choir's trip to Kirtland reunion last fall, and the choir plans to repay its obligation by giving the concert and social.

The priesthood have been providing interesting meetings during the past month, and attendance has been gratifying.

Kansas City Stake

Grandview, Kansas, Church

Pastor George C. Mesley has arranged some fine concerts preceding the Sunday evening preaching services. Brother Colin Ferrett, baritone, has given two concerts. The Wyandotte High School String Trio, directed by Mr. Ben Lewkowitz, gave a good concert; the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Sister Harold I. Burgess, of Independence, and the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig have also been much enjoyed, and music from the Grandview Orchestra.

The nine-thirty family worship period under the direction of Sister Alma Warren has been an inspiration to the Grandview group. Members of all ages have given their talents to make this program successful.

Palm Sunday was observed with an appropriate musical program. The church was decorated with palms and ferns and the congregation made their way to the altar with their offering.

On Easter Sunday the decorations were of lilies and candelabra. The candles were lighted by Sister Ethel Hicklin. Special music was furnished by the robed quartet from Central Church. Speakers for Easter were Associate Pastor C. D. Jellings and Bishop M. H. Siegfried.

The Grandview Orchestra, directed by Brother Fred Brose, gave a benefit program the evening of April 28. George Anway was the soloist. They cleared about eleven dollars.

Sacrament service May 7, was conducted by Pastor George C. Mesley and Associate Pastor C. D. Jellings. The Holy Spirit was present in power, and all felt strengthened in the faith.

Apostle M. A. McConley was the speaker that evening and used as his theme "The Missionary Phase of This Church."

Glenwood, Iowa

Growing in Spirit and Numbers

Church work at Glenwood, Iowa, has been showing signs of progress during the past winter and spring, both spiritually and numerically. The evening services have been the best attended thus far, these being devoted largely to attracting nonmembers. They have also experienced good reaction and received much spiritual help from the morning sermons, sacraments, etc. They have had the privilege of hearing a number of speakers from the district, a large part of them being from Council Bluffs, and are looking forward to hearing Brother W. T. Wellman, newly-ordained bishop in this district. He plans to visit this branch June 18.

On the last Sunday of each month they have had all-day meetings at the church with basket dinner at noon.

The women of the branch have organized their work, and on one afternoon they met at the church to plant flowers and improve the grounds. At the next meeting they will decide on a name for the group.

Preceding the evening preaching service, a one-hour class period is held each Sunday. There has been a considerable increase in attendance at these meetings, evidenced by the fact that instead of one class which was formerly had, they now have four classes. One of these is a men's class organized under the name of "K. of R. R." (Knights of Religious Research). The purpose of this class is largely to promulgate the study of church books.

We also have a young women's class known as the "Y L. R. E." (Young Ladies Religious Endeavor) which is now taking up the study of teacher training. They expect also to work as a group in various activities of the women's work. A third class is composed of the older women who are studying the Church History. Besides these, they also have a children's class, which, no doubt, will eventually be divided into two groups.

A part of the Sunday evening class period is devoted to programs in which young and old participate. These programs consist of musical numbers, readings, debates, and plays.

The young people have met in a number of social gatherings, and are expressing a willingness to assist in all phases of church activity.

Easter was observed with a play, "Bear Another's Burdens."

On May 7, some young people from Shenandoah, Iowa, gave a play entitled "The Gift." It was well produced and was enjoyed by an audience of seventy-four. (This was exceptional as the local membership is only sixty-three.) On this occasion Brother A. M. Taylor, young people's leader of Shenandoah, invited the young people of Glenwood to join them in a conference to be held at Shenandoah, May 27 to 31. This conference will have for its speaker Brother Floyd McDowell, and it is expected that the young people of Glenwood will attend on May 28.

Regardless of the depression, the workers have been able to increase their efficiency by building a new rostrum, purchasing a piano and other necessary equipment.

Dunn Center, North Dakota

P. T. Anderson Holds Meetings During Busy Season

Elder P. T. Anderson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, met with the Saints of this branch and held services from April 23 to 30. Sunday, April 23, was an all-day meeting, and morning and evening services were held on the second Sunday. Due to the busy time of year, services were conducted only on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings during the week, but a good attendance was present each evening.

Elder P. T. Anderson and Brother Lester Anderson visited in the homes of the members, and administered to the sick. They also visited the home of Sister Prolow near Taylor, North Dakota.

Elder Anderson departed for Arnegard, North Dakota, on Wednesday, leaving the branch greatly encouraged and spiritually strengthened.

Ontario, California

315 West Grove Street

The Saints of Ontario are happy to report God's goodness and mercy to them. All are well and the men with the exception or one or two are working at least part of the time. They are able to provide the necessities of life for themselves and families. God has promised these blessings and more if his people put forth an effort to do what he has commanded.

Easter Sunday was an enjoyable day, and the Spirit was felt at all services. The eight-thirty young people's prayer meeting was followed by a baptismal service in which three were ushered into the kingdom by Brother F. J. Lacey. The confirmation was by Brothers Lacey and G. H. Givens. The candidates baptized were Mr. and Mrs. David Peck, of Riverside, and Master James Swain, of Ontario. At the Sunday school hour a program was given by the several classes, followed by preaching.

Brother Robert Leibold, of Long Beach, gave a fine talk telling the need of courage as shown by those in the early days of the church, also the need of studying the three books of the church, that the Saints may be able to defend their belief. He emphasized helping the church by paying tithes.

Sermons of late have been presented with more power and assurance, and show the need of a closer adherence to the words of Christ.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

New families have moved into this community, and the branch is growing.

The church school, in charge of R. J. Stark, is well attended, and there are many young people interested in class work.

Elder C. A. Kress was the speaker the morning of April 23, his theme being, "Blessing Man Through Man." C. A. Joice was in charge of this service.

That evening the religio opened in charge of Lawrence Martin. H. H. Reid gave a talk on "The Life of Sidney Rigdon."

Brother Howard Cook was the evening speaker, his subject being "Jesus Christ, His Gospel, and Our Responsibility." G. G. Phillips was in charge of the service.

R. J. Stark was the morning speaker April 30, choosing for his theme, "Redemption of Zion," and in the evening Brother L. Allen spoke on the text from Hebrews 2: 3: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

That morning a special number was rendered by the junior choir under the direction of Brother A. Campbell.

Pastor O. W. Sarratt and family visited old friends at Mapleton, Kansas, on the last Sunday of the month.

Brother and Sister Andy Oglevie have been greatly missed from services. They have been confined to their home by sickness, also Sister Clarice Oglevie.

The Wednesday evening prayer services are well attended. This is most encouraging and expressive of the interest of the members many of whom live miles away from the meeting place. After prayer meeting a priesthood session is held while the junior choir is instructed for their service to the branch by Brother A. Campbell.

Pastoral

To Branch Presidents and Saints of Rock Island District, Greetings: Our annual young people's convention and district conference will be held at Rock Island, June 9, to 11, at which time we are expecting President Frederick M. Smith to pay his first visit to one of our district gatherings. President Smith has consented to be the speaker Saturday night, Sunday morning, and Sunday afternoon. The first meeting will be an entertainment and program on Friday night, sponsored by the local congregation. Saturday morning at nine forty-five there will be a general prayer meeting, followed by a round-table discussion at eleven o'clock. At two thirty will occur the conference business session. Preaching at 8 p. m. Sunday morning at nine fifteen there will be a general prayer meeting; preaching at ten forty-five; round-table meeting at two thirty; preaching at night. Provision will be made for young people's prayer meetings, recreation, and entertainment, by the district supervisor of young people's activities, assisted by the other officers of the district young people's organization. Seeing that this is President Smith's first visit to our district, let us begin now to make plans to be in attendance. Through a spirit of cooperation in sharing space in cars, and sharing of transportation expense, we should have a large gathering. Will all district officers kindly have written reports ready for the business session on Saturday? Branch presidents are asked to have this announcement read to their congregations, and posted on the local church bulletin board. If the Sunday services are to be held at some place other than the church in order to have room, a notice will be posted on the church door.—E. R. Davis, district president, 2329 Twenty-third Avenue, Moline, Illinois.

Afternoon Meeting at Armada, Michigan

On May 28, an afternoon service will be held at the home of Sister Mildred E. Holmes, Armada, Michigan, at three o'clock. We should like Saints of nearby branches to attend. There are only a few Saints here and we need the assistance of neighboring members to help us. We expect to have a mission at Armada soon. A special invitation is sent to Saint Clair Branch. Pastors, please announce this service in your branches. Ross Frederick York, the two-months-old son of Sister Fern York, and grandson of Sister Mildred E., and Brother William Holmes will be blessed. This service will be in charge of Lake Orion officers. Mrs. James Macklem, formerly of Montana, will play two guitar solos.—Sister Mildred Holmes, Armada, Michigan.

Conference Minutes

KIRTLAND.—District conference convened at Akron, Ohio, April 22 and 23, Saturday at 10.45 a. m., the first session being a prayer service. "Our Temporal Salvation," was the conference theme. At 2 p. m. business session was in charge of District President James E. Bishop, Apostle C. F. Ellis, Elder E. G. Hammond, and Bishop H. E. French. Reports from the ministry and district officers, and statistical reports of branches in the district were read. Recommendations that Clifford Greene be ordained a priest, Myron McKelvey to the office of teacher, and David Dodge, to the office of deacon, all three of Canton, Ohio, and Charles Westley Vance, of Uhrichsville, Ohio, to the office of teacher, were approved by the conference. James E. Bishop recommended that the branch at Cannauetville be disorganized, and the conference acted to refer the matter to the minister in charge and to bishop H. E. French for investigation and recommendation. It was recommended by James E. Bishop that the conference approve the organizing of a branch by Painsville group. The conference adopted the petition of Painsville group with regard to organizing a branch and referred it to the minister in charge, district president, and Kirtland branch president for action. The following officers were elected for the year: President, James E. Bishop; secretary, Edna M. Rhodes; first counselor, E. G. Hammond; second counselor, William Goudy; financial secretary, Mae Webbe; church school superintendent, William F. Webbe; director of music, Amy Glassford; bishop's agent, J. L. Cooper was sustained. The conference moved to express its appreciation of the appointment of Bishop H. E. French by the Presiding Bishopric as bishop of the State of Ohio. The Kirtland District adopted the duo envelope system of collecting moneys in all branches. The resolution recommended by Bishop French regarding the debt on the auditorium at Kirtland was adopted as follows: "Whereas, the Kirtland Reunion Association is indebted to the Cleveland Trust Company, successors of the First National Bank of Willoughby, Ohio, in the amount of $....., and Whereas, it has now become very necessary that this debt be reduced annually; therefore, be it resolved that we, the members of Kirtland District in conference assembled, pledge the sum of one hundred dollars per annum, payable quarterly until the debt is paid on Kirtland Auditorium. Be it further resolved, that we proceed to set up a Kirtland Auditorium fund, payment to said fund to be made through branch solicitors to the bishop's agent, who shall transmit such funds to the bishopric of Ohio. Be it further resolved, that the district president and bishop's agent be instructed to allocate to the several branches or missions of Kirtland District their proportionate share of the one hundred dollars per annum on the basis of membership and ability to pay." On Saturday evening the conference was entertained with a pleasing program by the Barberton Orchestra, under the leadership of Charles Romig. This was followed by a song service under the leadership of the musical director, Josephine Ebeling. Elder J. L. Cooper and C. W. Clark were in charge. Duet by Frances Stewart and Juanita Odom. Interesting talks by Bishop H. E. French, Bishop C. W. Clark and J. L. Cooper. Sunday morning the church building was crowded. The services consisted of church school, preaching by Apostle Ellis, afternoon testimony meeting. On that day William F. Webbe, superintendent of church schools, presented two gold seal certificates, one to Sister F. T. Haynes, of Cleveland, and one to Sister Hazel Minkler, of Lorain, Ohio. Next came the ordination service, Clifford Greene being ordained to the office of priest, Myron McKelvey, teacher, and David Dodge, deacon, E. G. Hammond, J. E. Bishop and A. E. Anderton, officiating. A vote of thanks was extended Akron Saints for their kindness and hospitality, and the conference adjourned subject to the call of the president. This meeting was followed by selections under the leadership of Sister Josephine Ebeling, musical director; two anthems by the junior choir, a solo by Elder T. G. Neville, and a trio selection.

Our Departed Ones

BIRMINGHAM.—Annie Elizabeth Yow, daughter of Henry and Lucinda Yow, was born May 29, 1865, at Centralia, Illinois. On March 29, 1880, she was married to Isaac Thomas Birmingham. This union was blessed with three children, one son and two daughters, the son dying in infancy. In early womanhood she united with the Church of Christ. To this faith she adhered until June 30, 1930, at which time she was baptized and confirmed by Elder T. B. Sharp into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Grannis, Arkansas, and was a faithful member until death. December 27, 1932, she was confined to her bed on account of the affliction which tarried with her until April 13, 1933, when the death angel visited this home, and called her spirit away. She is survived by her husband I. T. Birmingham; two daughters, Mrs. P. J. Wilson and Mrs. Joe Hellet; three granddaughters, two grandsons, one great-grandson; two sisters, Mrs. Alice Coleman and Mrs. Eva Murry, and one brother, Adam Yow, of Vinnia, Illinois. A loving and devoted wife and mother has gone to rest. Her remains were laid to rest in Grannis Cemetery, April 14, 1933.

ROBERTS.—Luvenia Waggy was born April 21, 1845, at Weston, West Virginia, and died March 12, 1933, at the home of her son, Cameron, Missouri, where she had made her home for two and one half years. In 1867, she was united in marriage to Isaac N. Roberts. To this union seven children were born, six of them having passed on as did her husband, his death occurring eighteen years ago. Those left to mourn are one son, J. W. Roberts; five grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren, and many friends. In 1874, she with her husband united with the Latter Day Saint Church. She was baptized by Gordon E. Duell at South Bend, Nebraska, to which faith she remained a devoted member. Death was caused by apoplexy. The funeral was at Cameron, the sermon by Thomas Fiddick, and burial was at Pleasant Grove by the side of her husband.

HASCALL.—John Henry Hascall, son of Charles and Amanda Hascall, was born in Perry County, Indiana, June 12, 1851, and passed from this life at the Jennie Edmundson Hospital in Council Bluffs, April 8, 1933. He was one of a family of eight children, one of whom, Borris T. Hascall, of Omaha, survives him. He went with his parents to Iowa, in 1864. Married Harriet E. Smith April 12, 1874, at Climax. To them were born three children, Harvey C., Blanche A., deceased, and George E., of Emerson. They also have one foster daughter, Mrs. Vant Abney, of Denver, Colorado. He is survived by his wife, children, eighteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Hascall moved in 1882, to Butler County, Nebraska, where he farmed until their return to Iowa in 1900. There Mr. Hascall was associated with his sons at Hawthorne and Emerson in general mercantile business. He retired from active business about twenty-three years ago. Became a Christian in early life and was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. The body was brought to the late home in Emerson, and funeral services were held in the Baptist Church by Elder T. A. Hougas, of Macedonia, assisted by the Reverend J. F. Stille.

SLONECKER.—William Parren Slonecker, son of William Andrew and Lydia Johnson Slonecker, was born February 23, 1862, in Harrison County, Ohio, and passed away at the Ainsworth Hospital, April 6, 1933. The family moved to Grundy County, Missouri, in 1865, where he grew to manhood. He went to Nebraska in 1885, where he took a homestead west of Plum Creek on what is now a part of the Niemoller Ranch. In the fall of 1893, he returned to Missouri, and then in 1896, went back to Nebraska, where he spent the rest of his life. February 27, 1896, he married Blanche Mead Slonecker, widow of his cousin, Samuel Slonecker. To them four children were born, Nellie B., William M., and twins, Lydia A. and Abram T., the latter dying in infancy. He was appointed postmaster when the Meadville post office was reestablished in 1904, and held that office until his death. Was a charter member of the Springview camp of Modern Woodmen and held office in this organization. He never joined the church though he always favored it, his wife being a member. He was a public-spirited man always ready to lend a helping hand. He is survived by his wife, one son, William Mead Slonecker, of Meadville; two daughters, Mrs. Roy Hulshizer and Mrs. Fred Stoltenberg, of Ainsworth; six grandchildren; three brothers, A. T. Slonecker, of Meadville; A. B. Slonecker, of York, Nebraska; A. J. Slonecker, of Trenton, Missouri; one sister, Mrs. Lizzie Skinner, of Trenton, other relatives and many friends. The funeral services were held at Ainsworth, April 9, by Elder Charles Sodersten, assisted by the Reverend McKeeman, of the Congregational Church. Interment was in Ainsworth Cemetery.

MYERS.—Howard Orlando Myers was born April 9, 1913, at Franklin, Kansas. Died April 18, 1933, at Mount Carmel Hospital, following an operation for appendicitis. He was a junior in the Arma High School, a member of the football team, high school glee club, track team, and treasurer of the Hi-Y organization. He was baptized into the church August 21, 1921, at Arma, Kansas. The funeral was held at the Methodist Church by Elder Lee Quick, assisted by the Reverend F. C. Sutten, pastor of the Methodist Church. The high school attended in a body, and musical numbers were rendered by the high school quartet. Howard was held in esteem and loved by all for his genial and happy disposition. He leaves to mourn, his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Myers; two sisters, Mrs. Burk Powell and Mrs. Larry Garret, of Independence, Missouri, and five brothers: James, of the home; Otis, of Denver, Colorado; William and Charles, of Independence, Missouri, and David, of Bisbee, Arizona. Interment was in Mount Olive Cemetery, Pittsburg, Kansas.

STAINTON.—Malinda Elmira Stainton was born August 30, 1860, at Payton City, Utah. She died April 2, 1933, at Fresno, California. She was married to Lewis S. Kerstetter, November 23, 1879, and he passed away four years later. On October 27, 1889, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, she was married to James Stainton, who died August 30, 1930. To our sister was born four children, two having preceded her in death and two living in Fresno, Lewis D. Kerstetter and James M. Stainton, also four grandchildren. She was baptized a member of the church, July 28, 1878, and has been loyal and consistent and loved by all who knew her.

ENSLEY.—Ralph Ensley was born January 18, 1888, and was baptized into the church July 12, 1897. Was ordained a deacon January 20, 1928, at Sacramento, California, and served as an active officer. He loved to work and sacrifice for the church. He and his companion grew beautiful flowers and decorated the church each Sunday from February 22, 1929, (date of entrance into the new church building) until his late illness. He was a faithful attendant at all services and was loved by the members of the church. Nearly two hundred relatives and friends attended the funeral. He passed away January 4, 1933, at Sacramento. The funeral sermon was by District President Guy P. Levitt. Interment was in Odd Fellows Lawn Cemetery. He leaves to mourn, his wife, Agnes; three daughters, Olive, Mildred, and Elva; his father, Oscar E. Ensley, a former missionary; two brothers, Joseph, of Walnut Grove, California, and Ernest, of Missouri, and a sister, Mrs. Elva Petz, of Tracy, California, and many friends.

SMITH.—Charles Monroe Smith, son of Charles E. Smith, was born February 27, 1908, at Lincoln, Nebraska. He was baptized at eight years of age and lived a good, helpful life. Died April 1, 1933. His father passed away early in the winter of 1932, and Charles has cared for the family in his father's place since. Death came as a result of pneumonia developed while employed in snowy weather. The funeral was held at Lincoln, April 3, in charge of Elder E. J. Lenox. Interment was at Bennett Cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—Jerome H. Williams was born at McGregor, Howard County, Iowa, October 9, 1857, and passed away April 7, 1933, at Saint Joseph's Hospital at Aurora, after several week's illness which had necessitated the amputation of one leg. He was baptized into the church July 21, 1892, at Lewiston, Illinois. May 16, 1897, he was ordained a priest which office he faithfully held until death. Little is known of his early life, except that he was in the employ of various steamship companies on the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, being chief master on several packet and passenger boats. The last thirty years of his life were spent in and around Plano, Sandwich, and Aurora, Illinois. He leaves two sons and two daughters: W. Henry Williams, of Detroit, Michigan; A. A. Williams, of Clam Falls, Wisconsin; Mrs. Nancy E. Ballou, of Kaneville, Illinois, and Mrs. Laura Henderson, of Aurora, Illinois; sixteen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. The funeral was held April 9, from the church of his faith at Plano, Elder J. M. Blakely in charge, assisted by M. M. Blakely. Interment was in Plano Cemetery beside his first wife who preceded him in death twenty years ago.

MINIER.—Joseph Minier was born March 16, 1873, near Oak Harbor, Ohio, where he lived until his death, April 26, 1933. In February, 1923, he was baptized into the church by Elder J. F. Curtis. Surviving are his wife, Hattie Minier; three daughters, Mrs. Nana Adams, Mrs. Margaret Reahrs and Wanda Minier; two sons, Russell and John Minier, and two grandsons, John and James Adams. The funeral service was held from the Saints' church at Oak Harbor, April 29, Elder Willard Hetrick officiating. Interment was in Rushaw Cemetery.

LEACH.—Ellen M. Leach, wife of Perry Leach, passed to rest April 16, 1933. She was buried near their home in the vicinity of Swanson, Saskatchewan, April 18, Elder Ward L. Christy officiating at the funeral service. Brother and Sister Leach joined the church in 1888, under the administration of R. C. Evans. Sister Leach was born March 5, 1866. With her husband she homesteaded in Saskatchewan in 1907, and lived on the land first taken

The Pigeonhole

How Are You Living?

In Kansas there is a young woman who is both blind and deaf. Her devoted mother and sister have sought to picture to her a world of beauty, truth, and goodness. She lives in the midst of beautiful and thrilling "sights" and "sounds" that spring from her own imagination and the artful descriptions of those who love her most. To this girl the world is a most lovely and attractive place. She can not see. She can not hear. She is happy. Her mother and her sister look for the beautiful and pass it on to her, and they, too, are happy. What impressions of life are we—you and I—giving those who are younger and more inexperienced than we? Are we living beautifully for them? Are we living truthfully?

Jesus Meant It—

Jesus meant it when he said, "Have peace one with another." He was equally serious when he said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Much is being said these days of peace, but it is peace "with reservations." Jesus recognized no reservations. Few people really want peace enough to practice it, or to look for the peace which Christ has promised his followers.

In Bad, Again

"What made you frown over that letter just now?" quizzed the Pigeon from his perch atop the post of my chairback.

"She—she wanted me to do something—not very pleasant," I stammered.

"Yes?—" encouraged my bird friend. "She wanted you to?—"

" 'Shoot that Pigeon!' she says," replied I.

"Well, well—why, the dear soul!" ejaculated the Pigeon flying down and peering at the closely-written sheet. "Well, well!" again, "I wonder who's been stepping on her toes?"

"From all indications I take it you're the offender," I returned.

"If that's the way she feels, I'm very sorry."

"But being sorry now is a little late in the game. You do say some pretty sharp things sometimes you know," I charged.

"People," he disregarded my last remark, "who shoot pigeons are—"

"Wasteful," I broke in on his reverie, "it's lots cheaper to wring their necks."

"Et tu, Brute," he mournfully regarded me and then flopped out of my window to the sidewalk where he began to pick up crumbs with unmitigated zest.

The Old Bird

"I don't like to have people speak of me as the 'old bird'," orated the Pigeon just this morning, "for wise men are saying nowdays that age is only a matter of mind."

"What about gray hairs and wrinkles?" queried I. "I suppose you just think them, eh?"

"I have neither, thanks. Feathers I have concluded are a real advantage for a bird," and he flew away triumphantly.

Editorial

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

WHEN ONE has journeyed far on the journey of life he will have had many experiences to impress him with the inexorable flight of time. I was reminded a few days ago by one of my coworkers that it is now past eighteen years since the burden of presidential responsibility was put upon my shoulders, and this following nearly ten years of association with my father in the work of the Presidency. It is difficult to realize how swiftly the years have passed.

On another occasion, too, I was reminded of this. It was at a dinner given the members of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric and their companions, by Brothers Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell, at the home of the latter. After the dinner had been served some "speaking" was indulged in by Brother Elbert, Brother Floyd, and Brother James Arthur Gillen. Rather strange how a "program" is not complete with the councilmen without some speaking, even at an informal affair. When Brother Gillen was speaking I saw soon that it was aimed at me; and so I listened. Who doesn't listen when he is being talked about; especially when there is promise of something nice being said? He paid me some compliments, and then read a document which I value highly. It was in the form of a greeting, and was signed by every member of the council (except me, of course), and is now before me on the desk. Here it is:

May 9, 1933

President Frederick M. Smith, Greeting:

We, the members of the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, are reminded that you have just recently completed your eighteenth year as President of the Church. As you enter upon another year of service in that high office we wish to extend to you our congratulations and our best wishes to you as an officer and a friend. We pray that the Lord will bless you with health and strength of body and with divine wisdom and inspiration in your work commensurate with your needs under your calling and under the grave conditions existing in the world and confronting the church. May peace of mind be with you, the good fellowship of the church, and endowment of the Spirit that shall equip you for prophetic leadership to the Council and the Church in general. We have greatly enjoyed the spirit of peace and harmony that has been with us in our meetings. We wish to pledge you the best that we have and are in the advancement of our common cause during the year immediately before us.

Your brethren of the Council:

ELBERT A. SMITH	D. T. WILLIAMS
F. M. MCDOWELL	M. A. MCCONLEY
L. F. P. CURRY	J. F. GARVER
G. L. DELAPP	F. HENRY EDWARDS
JAMES A. GILLEN	CLYDE F. ELLIS
J. F. CURTIS	E. J. GLEAZER
PAUL M. HANSON	ROY S. BUDD

To have the good wishes of such a group of men is fine. It is still finer to have their pledge to give the best they have in our common cause. I value these expressions of fraternity from men with whom I have labored through the years. And who will blame me for feeling a bit proud of them for their faithfulness, their earnestness, their loyalty, and their consecration?

A BROTHER in Ohio recently wrote to A. B. Phillips whose work in the Question Time page of the Herald has been enjoyed by many. The brother says:

"Dear Brother Phillips: I desire information on certain matters, but it may be unwise to have it in the Herald. That is optional with you.

"I fear there has been some very careless work done in the last ten years in a branch not far from here. A brother who really never showed fruit, was coaxed into the church by relatives holding the priesthood. He was baptized and very soon ordained a priest. The first time I was in a meeting with the brother I could discern that he was not converted, and yet he held the priesthood. Well, today a court is sitting on his case and he will probably be removed from the church. When labored with he remarked that he did not care if we removed him as he was preaching in another church and he could see no difference.

"I had charge of a branch and a certain brother was called as a teacher. Three times the voice spoke to me; I was pleased and thought the brother would be. I told him he was called. He did not answer, as I recall. Later he was ordained to the office of a priest, and he remarked to a sister that there must be something wrong, why could he not be ordained as an elder. He does not work in the office of priest and the branch was in need of a teacher. The Lord knew full well. I doubt if this brother is called. He reads off his sermons. No spirit in his work. What can be done in such a case?

"So far I have only made a few questions and it would make trouble should I question into the matter.

"Can a priest or elder not being called of God, yet ordained by men holding the office, baptize for the remission of sins? And is it possible for him to confer the gift of the Holy Ghost?

"Perhaps you recall the case where a man was pushed into the office of a Bishop and never had a call? Well, he went to the bad. This to me looks like a matter that was not considered seriously enough with the priesthood. I fear such ordained men are only man made and the poor humble Saints must suffer the consequences. I wish you would give me some light. I feel troubled over this matter especially since we must remove this priest. Your work in the Herald is very good. I want to compliment you."

To this Brother Phillips in a personal letter replied as follows:

"Dear Brother: Your question so clearly concerns a specific case that I would hardly feel authorized to give it the full consideration that executives might think advisable. I will therefore refer your matter to the administrative department of the church for such attention as may be demanded. All of the factors in a given case should be known before executives would want to make specific recommendations. My answer herein should therefore be understood to deal with general principles, rather than with a specific case.

"As to the genuineness of a call to priesthood office, those called through proper officers of the church in harmony with church law are presumed to be called of God, it being understood that divine guidance is obtained in the matter. It is recognized that when officers thus act according to the law, the Lord sanctions the work done. Jesus said to his ministry: 'Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven.' (Matthew 18: 18.)

"Whether or not one is called of God in a given case is a matter for administrative attention, and could hardly be answered in a general way. Opinions might differ in any case, even when agreement on the law is unanimous. Would it not be reasonable, however, to confide in the judgment of a president of the church acting lawfully in his office, rather than to assume that the adverse judgment of some member was more to be relied on? The case of Bishop Evans would raise this question.

"However, I appreciate the problem you raise, and suggest that such cases may sometimes emphasize the words of Jesus that, 'many are called, but few chosen.' Of those who are chosen, perhaps some do not accept and use their office with full devotion; and yet they may be truly called. Judas Iscariot, and probably many others, miserably failed in this way."

Many, many times have instructions and admonitions been given in the columns of the Herald, as well as from the pulpit and in lectures to priesthood members, that care should be exercised in the matter of selection of those to be ordained to priestly or ministerial office. "Many are called, but few chosen." Undue ambition of the relatives and even upon the part of men themselves has resulted in unwise "calls" (and even unsafe ones) being made when silence would have been better. We should always be ambitious to do God's will, and do our share in the work of the church; but anyone who knows or senses the heavy responsibilities of priesthood will be prone to dodge that responsibility rather than seek it.

The trouble comes frequently in mistaking what a call really is. The law clearly sets out how the call shall come. We have not duly safeguarded this feature. We should be more watchful and careful.

To read one's sermon may not be evidence of a wrongful call, for careful preparation of a sermon may evince inspiration as well as would a pleasing delivery; but for one to seek a higher office and not to be willing to manifest humility and serve where called shows lack of due appreciation of accompanying responsibility.

When one has been ordained by due authority his acts as minister, unless clearly in violation of law and without the sanction of proper procedure, become authoritative. God is merciful in dealing with the mistakes of men, and the errors we make in selecting his representatives, are graciously met by his leniently efficacious and merciful adjustments, but this will not justify us in knowingly committing breaches of proper procedure.

Again let it be said: Let us safeguard the matter of call and ordination, or in other words, the selection of representatives of the church and the Master. F. M. S.

Building From Within

6.—Planning for the Children

Now is the time to plan for the activities of Children's Day. Preparations should be made far enough ahead so that the program may be carried out smoothly. Nothing spoils a ceremony like hitches and awkward pauses, and they generally are caused by lack of preparation and cooperation among the people who have the program in charge. If little Willie is to go up to the platform to speak a piece, it is much better for little Willie to do it by himself, and not have the mother or teacher dashing up to push him along. Also, it is time now to help little Willie to learn his piece. It is no pleasure to listen to him repeat two thirds of it after his mother has read it to him line by line in a whisper that can be heard as far as the corner gas station.

Decision Day should come some time before Children's Day, preferably a week earlier, so that officers can know exactly what to provide for in the way of baptismal facilities for the candidates.

Children's Day should provide an impressive and worshipful service. It should not be too long, nor too ritualistic. The congregation should be very quiet, and without confusion, and the candidates, as they emerge from the water, whether in a church font or outside, should be covered with a robe to protect them from chilling drafts and from the eyes of the curious looking at their wet clinging garments. One church wisely draws a curtain before the font after the immersion of each candidate so that he leaves the font unseen by the congregation. We strongly advise that officers read the section in the Priesthood Manual on this subject.

Whether the service be very simple, or very formal, it can be carried out with dignity and spiritual power, if the congregation will cooperate with the officers and maintain a prayerful dignity and reverent order during the ceremony. L. L.

Youth Conference Begins June 17

Attention is called to a necessary correction in the opening date of the Youth Conference at Lamoni. The first day of the Conference, to be devoted to registration and location, will be Saturday, June 17. It is important that everybody should be there by that day, because there will be little time to care for incoming visitors on Sunday. Besides, the better accommodations will naturally go to early arrivals.

All reservations, as noted in an earlier edition of the Herald, should be in the hands of Mr. N. Ray Carmichael at Lamoni, Iowa, at least four days earlier than the arrival of the Conference visitor.

The Vision of Judgment

Considerable interest has been aroused by the poem by G. E. Harrington, entitled "The Vision of Joseph Smith on Judgment" which appeared in the Herald of May 9. Requests have come in for a reprint of the original article by the late President Joseph Smith, which appeared in the Herald of June 1, 1878, not April 1, as at first stated. The title of the article is "The House of the Lord."

Are You Scuttling the Quarterlies?

The financing of our Quarterly system has become a difficult matter because some schools are purchasing "for teachers only" and some have quit using Quarterlies altogether, throwing the teachers entirely on their own resources. If all schools should follow either of these practices, the Quarterlies would soon be scuttled—"sunk without a trace" as they used to say in submarine warfare. More than this, the teachers would soon run out of material to teach their classes. We submit the proposition that no teacher, however able, can organize proper teaching material suited to the needs of a class in a few minutes on her way to Sunday school. She certainly cannot organize as good a course as people who have specialized in the work, writing under the direction of the church Department of Religious Education.

Of course the Herald Publishing House cannot continue to finance all of the quarterlies at a heavy loss. If the present situation is not remedied soon, it may be necessary to abandon or at least curtail the present program of publication. And we know from past experience what a cry of protest will go up from the local church school and branch officers if no Quarterlies are available when they want to buy them again.

Children never have studied Quarterlies voluntarily; they probably never will. It is the work of parents and teachers to see that they learn their religious lessons. People who expect children to study Quarterlies without help are ignorant of child nature. You can't back a child off into a corner and make him study a Quarterly while you read a magazine or play golf. You have to study with him. That is the answer to the problem, Why the children won't study their Sunday school lessons.

The children need the Quarterly lessons as a part of their religious training. The teachers need them. Is your school giving the needed support to our educational curriculum?

HELPS FOR THE PASTOR

The Minister's Calendar

● May 30—Memorial Day.

Special sermon and music for the morning worship. Decoration of graves in the afternoon.

● June 12, 13, or 14—Farewell to Conference Visitors

This day should be set to allow time for visitors to the Youth Conference to reach Lamoni by Saturday noon. If on the 14th, the young people can be present at prayer meeting, and the farewell party can be given afterward, or as a part of the social service. On this occasion the young people may be assured that the prayers and the good will of the whole congregation are with them on their journey and in their Conference deliberations.

● June 18—Youth Day for all the church.

While this day is not officially designated for Youth Day, many branches will be thinking of the young people at the big sacrament service in Lamoni. They will hold a special early prayer service, and the morning worship and sermon will be devoted to the problems of youth. Young people who are unable to attend the Conference will have an opportunity to participate in these services. Remember, the Conference is for all the young people of the Church—not alone for those who attend.

7:30 a. m.	Early prayer service for the Youth Conference.
9:30 a. m.	Sunday school, featuring a special talk by a young man or woman. A young people's class discussion on youth's problems.
11:00 a. m.	A sermon on youth. Scripture reading, Luke 2: 47-52. Text, verse 52.
2:30 p. m.	Church school outing, ending with return to church and a brief vesper service.

● Patriot's Day.

The people of the British Empire celebrate Empire Day on May 24. Those of Canada also celebrate Dominion Day on July 1. In the United States the Fourth of July is the great national holiday. Exercises on these days have much in common. It is desirable, from the viewpoint of the church and home, that small parties should not go away separately, but that the whole church school should go together with officers and parents present, play and eat their dinners together. Under these conditions all have a happier time, and all are generally safer from harm.

I wonder why it should be so difficult to be humble. . . . There seems to be some bad old pride in my heart; a root of it that puts out a thick shoot on the slightest provocation. . . . This interferes very much with work. One can't be calm, clear, good as one must be, while it goes on. I look at the mountains, I try to pray and I think of something clever. . . . Anything that I write in this mood will be no good; it will be full of sediment. . . . One must learn, one must practice, to forget oneself. . . . Oh God! I am divided still, I am bad. I fail in my personal life. I lapse into impatience, temper, vanity, and so I fail as Thy priest.—Katherine Mansfield.

NEWS BRIEFS

Did You Know That—

Twenty-five boy members at Centralia, Illinois, are organized in the L. D. S. Boys' Club (Loyal, Dependable Sons)?

The name of the pastor of the branch at Parsons, Kansas, is Henry Ford?

Brothers Merl Grover and Marion Cooper, of Omaha, Nebraska, have been broadcasting splendid sermonets over station KOIL under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Educational Department?

Elder A. C. Barmore, now president of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, was for years a missionary in Australia?

After four years of waiting and praying Pueblo, Colorado, Saints now have an elder in their midst, E. R. Darnell?

Elder Ray Whiting has for many months served as pastor of two large branches, Omaha, Nebraska, and Council Bluffs, Iowa?

There is such a thing as a "conscience" dinner? Ask the women of Lancaster, Ohio, who recently had one.

Elder R. L. Macrae, missionary to the Hawaiian Islands and pastor of Hilo Branch, is the son of Elder W. S. Macrae, of Holden Stake? Lately he has been carrying on the work of Patriarch G. J. Waller at Honolulu while the latter was in California. Previous to the call to Honolulu, Brother Macrae was doing missionary work in neighboring islands, Maui and Malokai.

Four general church appointees attended the Easter conference of Midland District, England? They were Apostle J. W. Rushton, Bishop A. T. Trapp, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, and Missionary F. O. Davies.

The home and service department of the adult church school of Des Moines, Iowa, has made $668 since January 1, by serving dinners to Iowa State legislators and senators on Mondays and Fridays of each week during the sessions of the legislature? This department contributed $1,020 to the branch budget, which made it possible for the treasurer to pay another note of the building debt on May 1.

The membership of the group of Saints at Longview and Kelso, Washington, was almost doubled as a result of the missionary meetings conducted there a short time ago by Elder and Sister H. I. Velt? Sixteen candidates were baptized, and others were left investigating the truth.

If you don't know these things, read the News this week!

Young Men's Club Organizes Gospel Team

The young men's club of Attleboro, Massachusetts, Branch organized a Latter Day Saint gospel team this spring. Choosing for a theme "Adventuring in the Gospel Life," they divided it into five subtopics for original talks. The service was rounded out with appropriate hymns, scripture reading, and violin and trumpet solos. It was given at Attleboro the early part of March, and since then the team has visited Fall River, Providence, and Boston branches. The aim of the team is to arouse other young people to an interest in church work, and to secure valuable experience for themselves.

Muskegon Branch Observes Fourteenth Anniversary

The branch at Muskegon, Michigan, observed its fourteenth birthday the evening of Easter Sunday, Pastor Archie Whitehead the speaker. Fourteen years ago April 19, the branch was organized.

Easter Sunday was rally day for Muskegon, and District President A. C. Barmore was there to take part. Services of the day included prayer, priesthood, and preaching meetings, and a round-table discussion in the afternoon.

Pittsburg Intermediates Move to Promote Cooperation

The junior young people's class of Pittsburg, Kansas, sponsored a banquet for the branch a short time ago, which was attended by seventy-five. The purpose of the event was to arouse a spirit of cooperation and to increase social opportunities. District President A. T. Higdon gave an address on the theme of the evening "Let Us Work Together."

Lancaster Priesthood Plan Missionary Campaign

Having been divinely admonished to devote their activities to the work of the Lord in that community, the ministry at Lancaster, Ohio, are planning to carry the gospel message into many homes in Fairfield County by holding prayer meetings in the homes of friends who are to invite in as many neighbors as possible. Such a campaign will give all members of the priesthood active work.

The Lancaster priesthood corps was augmented recently by the ordination of an elder, a priest, and a deacon.

Problems for Conference Discussion:

Youth's Place in the Modern World

By L. L.

■ What shall we do for jobs?

What place should the world hold open for me? Have I a right to expect a job? What good is education and professional training when even those who have prepared can get nothing to do? Why have men and women submitted to the job-slavery and factory-peonage that the machine age has fastened upon them? Are there no opportunities for individual enterprise left? Now that the machine age has turned its slaves adrift, what will they do? What shall we do, who have never had a place?

The world may not owe us a living, but it should and can be better organized to furnish the necessities of life to the people who work for it. There will be enough for all if we work, organize, and manage properly.

■ What shall we do about marriage?

How long must I wait before I can marry the one I love? How long before we can plan to have a home of our own? In the long profitless interval of waiting, what can we do? Would it be better for me to wait and save money? Would it be better to wait in order to complete my education? Or would it be better to marry now and take our chances together? What study and preparation ought I make for a happy marriage?

A good home is a sacred and happy possession, one of the high ideals and objectives of life. But a good home cannot be built by immature, dependent, or ignorant persons. One should be able to support and maintain a home before contracting for it.

■ What are my obligations to my country?

How far am I morally responsible to observe the laws of my country? Do I have responsibilities which extend beyond the legal requirements? What are they? Can I claim the protection of some of my country's laws, while I violate certain other laws? Is there truth or falsehood in the modern notion that "Anything is all right if you can get by"? What should I and my fellow citizens do to make this a better country?

Our country is what we as citizens make it. We cannot condemn the country without condemning ourselves as citizens of it. When the people are truly righteous, there will be justice, equality, and happiness in the country.

■ What are my country's responsibilities to me?

Can I quietly sanction the graft, political corruption, extravagance, inefficiency, and smothering bureaucracy which I see in the administration of government? Does the government not owe me something better in return for the taxes I pay and the allegiance I give?

Public servants, elected or appointed, owe honest service to the government and the people. When found not honest they should be removed. Honorable citizens should be willing to serve when the call comes to them. Government will not run itself; good government cannot be produced by weak or dishonest officials.

■ What about race problems?

Am I free from race prejudice? Am I willing to grant to all other races the rights that I claim for my own? Is there room in the Christian religion for race prejudice? Are other races to have real business, social, and political equality?

All races are entitled to equal rights, protection, respect, and opportunity. They should and can live side by side in peace. Social fraternity cannot be enforced; attempted enforcement aggravates rather than alleviates race friction. Fraternity must be free and spontaneous when it does come.

■ What about war and peace?

Shall I oppose certain wars? or all wars? Under what conditions? How can we combat war hysteria and hate? How can we promote peace? How can we protect our nation against the deception of propaganda and the anger of inflammatory journalism?

Our generation must use its influence to discourage aggressive warfare, both here and abroad. We must cooperate with all good agencies for the promotion of peace. We must not be betrayed, however, into assisting subversive movements.

■ What about disarmament?

Can the world escape the crushing burden of the cost of competitive armaments? What means of escape is possible? How can we have the much needed security at the same time?

International agreements have proved ineffectual in some instances, but the future peace and safety of the world depend upon the understanding and cooperation of the nations.

Etta Kett Will Attend Youth Conference

Elmwood Branch Seethes— Young People on Trek to Lamoni

ETTA was in a state of nerves as she tore open the familiar yellow envelope with the transparent "window." She didn't get telegrams often enough to regard them calmly. She read:

ETTA KETT
ELMWOOD
PLEASE REPORT LAMONI CONFERENCE JUNE 17-25 FOR YOUTH FORUM STOP BE THERE FOR OPENING STOP REPLY IMMEDIATELY
THE PILOT

Etta's communications were generally models of terseness and clarity. In this case she excelled her usual record. She replied:

THE PILOT
INDEPENDENCE MO
YES YES YES
ETTA KETT

And she had no sooner flung the reply to the waiting messenger than she dashed to the phone and was calling her friends with a speed that dizzied the the exchange operators. In a half hour every member of the Elmwood Branch knew of Etta's plans, not only to attend the conference, but to take as many of the young people with her as would go.

BUSINESS MEETING was rarely very exciting at the Elmwood church. Etta didn't enjoy them, but she always attended, as she said, "to keep them from putting anything over on us."

Gaston Crabbe had been orating for at least fifteen minutes on his favorite subject—the "sinful extravagance of this untoward generation"—and he had good meat for his argument. Etta yawned openly until she heard the following:

"And now," Brother Crabbe was saying in his most sepulchral tones, "they are taking the young people of the church down to Lamoni for a conference of some kind. This needless and inadvisable expense, especially at a time like this, to furnish the young people with a vacation trip when the money should be collected and sent to the Bishop—" but Brother Crabbe got no further. Etta was on her feet, her eyes flaming.

"Mr. Chairman. I want to interrupt!" Brother Crabbe turned around in astonishment.

"Brother Crabbe has the floor!" said the chairman.

"I don't care. He's had it altogether too long. I've listened to too much of his talk already. I want to talk. I WANT TO TALK!" Brother Crabbe fumbled into his seat. Finally it was agreed that Brother Crabbe would yield to Etta.

"I'm sick of having the young people and their motives continually misrepresented from this floor. If I may say it, the previous speaker has been one of the most persistent offenders in this respect. And I warn him that if I hear any more of it from him he will get no peace either in this or in any other business meeting of this branch." Etta paused to glare at him.

"The young people," she continued, "will pay for this trip themselves. They have the money. Those who have money will help those who haven't. The young people have paid their tithing—more regularly and faithfully, in fact, than some of those who make it a practice to complain against them." And she glared at Brother Crabbe again.

"The young people are going to the conference," said Etta. "That's all."

Notes From Our Friends

BROTHER WOODSTOCK passes on a very fine word of encouragement which he received from MARGARET KENNY, 401 South Ray Street, Spokane, Washington. Sister Kenny writes: "We enjoy the Youth's Forum in the Herald each week and you will note from the enclosed program that we make use of it in our classes; however, our groups generally seem to have it read before the class period on Sunday and are looking forward to the next issue. It seems that our young people are taking a greater interest in the church and its program since the Herald has included a page for youth." Letters like this make the Pilot feel like keeping up the work.

W. MIKESELL, 209 Washington Avenue, Lancaster, Ohio, writes that he is in need of helpful suggestions for young people's work and organization. He writes: "I desire to ask all young people's departments in all parts of the world to kindly write of their activities, or any suggestions. I am vitally interested in the future workers in the church. We will reply to your letters. Let's get acquainted through Uncle Sam." May the Pilot suggest that there has been some good material collected by Brother Woodstock under the title "Youth in Action" in past issues of the Herald. We have also had some items in the Youth's Forum, and hope to have more in the future. We also refer to the Church School Handbook, which contains helpful material.

Young People in Action

● LAMONI STAKE young people are to have an all-stake fellowship meeting at Lamoni, May 28th. A delegation attended the Iowa Youth Prohibition Convention early in May. A county meeting for Youth was held at Leon, May 21. This was part of an inter-denominational anti-repeal campaign of which Elder G. N. Briggs is county chairman and Elder Roy Cheville is director of youths' work.

● DENVER, COLORADO, has a Drama Club which for three years has entered plays in the inter-church tournament of Religious Drama, where they have made a good showing. They have taken their plays to near-by branches and to other churches in Denver. A boys' basket ball team plays in the Church League of Denver. An all-district gathering of young people is to be held in Denver, May 30. Their secretary writes: "Our big project right now is to have a good representation of our young people present at the Youth Conference and Leadership Convention to be held in Lamoni, in June. We feel sure this is going to be accomplished." Their project for the year is "Every Young Person an Active Member of the Tenth Legion."

● In SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, every fourth Sunday is set apart as Young People's Day. There is an early morning prayer service, and programs throughout the day furnished by the young people. A fine group of varied activities is being planned. The slogan adopted is, "Every Member a Legionaire by 1934."

● OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, leads the way among young people in Northern California district. They have recently organized and adopted a constitution under the name, "Zion Builders All." Their object is stated: "In harmony with the spirit of the general church this organization is to carry into effect the policies, objectives and ideals of the church in the lives of the members of the group, and to promote fellowship in worship and recreation."

● FAR WEST STAKE young people have organized under the name "O. T. Z." Local groups are urged to organize and to send their presidents and supervisors as representatives to form a stake young peoples' council. Their next stake convention will be held at Guilford, Missouri, June 3 and 4. Special plans are also being made for attendance at the reunion in August.

RATIONAL FAITH

By EVAN FRY

"Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11: 1.

At this time I want to consider faith in some of its less popular and not so well known aspects. Far too many people have the idea that if faith can remove mountains, it can do anything; that if we fail in an undertaking, either we have not worked at it hard enough, or we have not had enough faith and trust in God, or God has deserted us completely. I think you will agree with me, if you stop a moment to consider with me, that there are some things that even faith cannot accomplish.

Faith must be grounded in common sense. It must be justified by the past experience of the human family. It must be based upon the promises, express or implied, of God. There are some things that God himself cannot do, no matter how great the faith of the one who petitions that they should be done. God is above all a God of law, and he must remain true to the laws which he has made; he must act in accordance with his own attributes and the inherent attributes of each of his creations.

As I once heard it expressed, even God himself cannot make a stick of wood so short that it doesn't have two ends, or a sheet of paper so thin that it doesn't have two sides. It is the nature of sticks to have two ends, and of paper to have two sides. If it were possible to create a stick with only one end, or a sheet of paper with only one side, that creation would no longer be a stick or a sheet of paper, but something totally new and different. God has already created the stick and the paper with certain definite attributes, and no amount of faith or petitioning can make a change in these attributes unless the whole identity of the substance is changed.

There are, then, many, many things that even God cannot do, because the doing of them would be a violation of his own laws, or a frustration of his purposes in the world. Consequently, no matter how much we may earnestly desire him to cancel some of those laws and some of those purposes for what we think will be our good, he cannot consistently do so and still maintain his integrity and his changeless attributes. If we ask God for that which he cannot give us without frustrating his purposes or defying and mocking his laws, we must expect only disappointment; no amount of faith will guarantee the reception of our wishes and desires.

As I said before, faith must be grounded in common sense, and in the laws and attributes and promises of God; and it must be justified by the past experience of the human family. I should not be justified in asking God to keep me from dashing out my brains if I leaped from the top of the highest building in the world with the deliberate and sole purpose of seeking a thrill and testing my faith in God. Christ himself refused an invitation to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple in Jerusalem—and that in spite of the written promise of God that "he shall give his angels charge over thee, that they shall bear thee up, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." God has abundant time to save the faithful from disastrous operation of his laws when through no fault of their own they are placed in a terrible emergency; but he has not the slightest fraction of a minute to spend on the foolhardy idiot who leaps into danger filled with a reckless bravado and a too abundant faith.

There is such a thing as too much faith in the wrong thing, if that faith is not grounded in common sense. I once heard a story of a young man who was quite sure that God's special protection was over him, and that he would therefore live to a ripe old age. Full of that faith, he volunteered to go into a very dangerous place to repair some of the machinery of an elevator—a place where the slightest manipulation of the defective machinery was apt to bring the elevator crashing down upon him. All other men in the building had refused to go there until proper precautions could be taken to insure their safety, but this young idiot saw no use in waiting or in taking precautions, when God's protection was over him. All he needed was faith, but the elevator killed him just the same. His faith had kept him from taking the obvious precautions that the situation demanded. Without faith, he might still have been alive. With faith, he practically committed suicide.

God, being all wise, has every right to expect that things will be done his way; that men will obey his laws and follow his instructions. God is not selfish, or proud, or dictatorial, or overbearing, in asking that men shall obey his laws. He has made those laws out of his supreme wisdom, and they are made for man's own best good. Man has no right to ask God to change those laws, or to propose new schemes of his own—much less to try to put those schemes into successful operation without the sanction of God. God has (Continued on page 657)

A Borrowed Hymn--"Blest Be the Tie That Binds"

By L. B. M.

IT IS appropriate in any service, in the prayer meeting, the Sunday school session, the church hour, and frequently it is heard in home and community social gatherings. Almost everyone knows and likes to sing it. And we of the Restoration love to sing it, too.

How often has the singing of this favorite old hymn, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," given just the needed spiritual uplift to a worship service! How often has it expressed our sentiments concerning the church and all those around us at General Conference, at reunion, on special occasions at the church, or in a little, cottage prayer meeting! And yet it was not written for our use alone; this is a hymn child of the Reformation movement. We have, like hundreds of other Christian people, simply borrowed it, because it answers a need that no other hymn can supply.

The Saints of latter days have sung it many years. The words appear in the venerable copy of the Saints' Harp which lies before me. This hymnbook was used by Elder Mark H. Forscutt of our church, and contains notes in his own handwriting. Brother Forscutt was a hymn writer in his own right. The hymn is contained in our old edition of the Saints' Hymnal, still used in many places, also in the new Saints' Hymnal. From time to time it has been printed in song pamphlets used by the General Conference.

"Blest Be the Tie That Binds" is associated with our early, individual hymn and church service experiences. We cannot say when we really heard it first. How often have our hearts been lifted up and made larger and more understanding and thankful by the measured sweep of "Blest be the tie that binds

Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

Several years ago I first heard the story of the writing of this hymn. John Fawcett, the author, was a minister in the early Baptist Church in England. He was born near Bradford, Yorkshire, just ninety years before the organization of our own church, and grew up to be a man of thoughtfulness, sincerity, and consideration for others. His congregation, a very small one in Yorkshire, was devoted to him and his family. Then came a call to larger service in London, a call which Mr. Fawcett felt that he must accept. He did, and accordingly his family made all arrangements to move. But we are told that on the day of their intended departure, after several wagons were loaded with their household belongings, and when it was time for goodbyes to be said, the hearts of the pastor and his wife failed them. They could not resist the pleas of their friends to stay in Yorkshire. They could not endure the sadness and pain in the faces of those about them. And so at the last moment they decided not to go at all. They would stay and serve right where they were. Orders were given for the wagons to be unloaded, and the furniture was moved back into the house amid the rejoicings of the people of the community. There quite happily and devotedly the family settled down again, the minister sending a letter to London saying that he was unable to accept the call, and setting to work again on his very small salary.

It was while pondering over this experience, that he wrote the words of the hymn for which he is best known. Here I reproduce the remaining verses as they appear in our hymnbooks:

"Before our Father's throne,
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

"We share our mutual woes;
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.

"This mutual love revives
Our courage by the way;
While each in expectation lives,
And longs to see the day.

"When from all sin and pain,
The ransomed shall be free;
And perfect love and friendship reign,
Through all eternity."

The original hymn is said to have had another verse besides the ones we sing, and the wording we use is slightly different from Mr. Fawcett's composition.

In 1845 Lowell Mason, known for his numerous hymn-tunes, wrote the melody which is familiar to us. He was an American music teacher, born in Massachusetts. From his boyhood he loved music, and at the age of sixteen was directing a choir. For a time he was president of the Handel and Haydn Society, and he founded the Boston Academy of Music in 1832. He gave to the Christian world a number of song collections.

The First Prize Herald Contest Story:

Though a Laggard in Love—

By Gussie Ross Jobe

TWO of the little Misses Clerk hadn't spoken to each other for twenty-five years. Yet they lived in the same house and shared the same bedroom. These were the two younger ones, and they communicated through the eldest Miss Clerk—Miss Ellen.

"Ellen dear, it is sprinkling rain on Lida's clean wash." This from Miss Clarissa to Miss Ellen although Miss Lida would be within earshot, and obediently Miss Lida would go out and gather in the wash, having heard as well as Miss Ellen.

Other times Miss Clarissa—the vocal teacher—would be informed the same way by a call from downstairs, "Ellen, Bennie Smith's sister just stopped by to say that Bennie won't be able to take his vocal lesson this Friday." Miss Ellen never made responses to these vicarious messages and life for the three little old spinsters moved on in a strangely placid groove.

For a long time I imagined that I was the only person in West Placer who knew of this condition between the two younger Misses Clerk, but later I heard the story of the quarrel and the bitter silence. It was because of Jeff Kirby, handsome Jeff, with his flashing teeth and blonde hair.

I supposed that the little Misses Clerk must have been young at some time, but to my ten-year-old perspective they seemed to have popped on the scene like Topsy, and never aged a bit since.

Miss Ellen was the eldest and then Miss Clarissa; Miss Lida was "the baby." The three little old spinsters were teachers of the "graces." Miss Ellen taught piano, and Miss Clarissa, voice. Miss Lida had a small class in dancing. Any Wednesday you could see a few small girls wending their way to Miss Lida, their little pleated dancing skirts with covered sticks in the hems, carefully wrapped in a newspaper. Miss Lida would tinkle out the "Skirt Dance" upon the aged piano and the small girls would pirouette and curtsy while Miss Lida affected an airy vivacity.

Miss Clarissa had the parlor on Fridays and vocal students would "Ah-ah-AH-ah-ah" up and down the scale while Miss Clarissa brandished a bone knitting needle like a baton.

But it was Miss Ellen's pianoforte that really kept the wolf from the door even though her following was small. I know that my parents continued my lessons long after they were convinced that I had no talent for music.

Miss Ellen herself had once despairingly exclaimed, after a particularly stupid exhibition on my part, "Well, Maudy, I am afraid you'll never be an artist, but I'll teach you to play the piano." Which was, or wasn't a lot of encouragement.

But I didn't care, I knew Mother wanted to help them rather than to make a musician of me. And how I did love to go to that house! It was the oldest in town and set back from the street ten steps below the pavement level. It made the fine new street look like a row of healthy molars with a tooth missing right in front. This, my mother explained to me, was because the little spinsters had refused to sell when the street had been raised and improved so the city had built the sidewalk almost on their roof. But it was a fine old place and the back yard was lovely.

On my lesson days I managed to absorb a lot of their method of living and it interested me immensely. Once I had to wait until a rainstorm subsided and I was asked to share their supper. It was meager but served on linen that was hand woven, and the china was of the most choice Wedgewood. Miss Lida had gone to the cupboard saying that a little damson butter would be nice, and Miss Clarissa said, "Ellen, we served the last of that damson butter some time ago."

So it went—twenty-five years of what would have been a farce had the sisters not treated the situation with a fine dignity. There they lived together, slept together and shared bread and tasks and endured holidays year after year and loving one another under their convictions. They were anxious over small ills, and worried each about the other. How tragic! And all because handsome Jeff Kirby had wooed them both and left with the gold rush to Alaska, leaving each with the impression that she was the loved one to whom he would return with the fortune that was to mean their union.

THERE had been no actual proposal to either, but Jeff had somehow managed to create the hope in each sister's heart and each resented the other's surety.

Miss Ellen had long since given up trying to reconcile them; she had become accustomed to this strange condition. Time sped by, but the little Misses Clerk seemed to stand still. Miss Lida and Miss Clarissa were like pale perfect blossoms preserved in alcohol, only instead of the alcohol it appeared to be the calm expectancy that preserved them, kept them looking like wax effigies.

To my way of thinking Miss Ellen was the prettiest of the three. She, too, was tiny and waxen, but her eyes were so blue and had a sweet serious look in them. Her hair was white and curled in soft tendrils that wouldn't stay off her brow. Her soft hands always smelled of lavender and she wore a dark dress always; and a watch upon a thin gold chain that hung around her neck. The watch reposed in a fascinating little pocket fashioned inside her basque fly. Yes, she still wore a "basque" even with the age merging into the gay nineties with its attending "dust ruffles" and passementerie trimmings, the age in which people were becoming style conscious. But still the little Misses Clerk clung to basques buttoned down the front and starched petticoats that simulated the discarded hoops.

Styles weren't the only things that grieved the spinsters; times were changing and it became increasingly hard to get pupils. Why, it seemed that the children wanted to learn, instead of the graceful "skirt" dance, a new dance called the "cake-walk" which had sprung from the recent craze in music; that horrid spine creeping noise called "ragtime."

Miss Ellen almost swooned one day when I asked her if she had heard "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." It was the first time she had ever seemed anything but gentle as she turned the pages of my tall music book and made me play "Moonlight Sonata" and "Dance of the Flowers," her refined voice counting over and over: "One and—two and —" I thrummed away on the quaint old piano, its keys tinted by age to the color of gold. Two of the treble keys gave no sound and when I played a musty perfume arose. The instrument was exquisitely inlaid with mother-of-pearl and just above the key-board was the scar of a bullet . . . a yankee sniper, 'twas said.

AS THE years rolled by it was harder than ever for the sisters to make a living. It seemed that there were no more exponents of the piano as it should be played, these new fangled gramophones were grinding out raucous noises through an ugly horn that extended like a funnel.

Then to cap it all there was a pair of elocutionists, a man and his wife recently located in West Placer. It was whispered that they had been on the stage and for five dollars one could learn

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Horatio at the Bridge," or "The Girl in the Blue Velvet Band," with gestures.

Everyone was doing the "cake-walk" and nearly all of Miss Lida's erstwhile pupils had lost their mincing grace and acquired a bold strut. The Misses Clerk were forced to turn their hands to preparing candied violets, rose leaves and orange peel for the woman's exchange in the village. It was heart-breaking work and paid five dollars a pound for the work of many months.

One day I had run upstairs to remove my wraps and I sensed an emptiness in the lovely old room. I stood trying to remember what had been over against the wall where that empty space was, and then I remembered that it was a walnut highboy. Soon after that a piece of eighteenth century glazed pottery disappeared also. I was never asked to share their evening meal any more and Miss Ellen's hands took on an almost paper transparency.

Christmas was approaching and I had coaxed for money instead of a gift. I meant to give it to Miss Ellen, sealed in an envelope, for Christmas. To one who didn't know the sisters this may have seemed like a large sacrifice, but I, who loved them, saw beneath the surface of the stubbornness that held them victims and no sacrifice was too great.

There was never a mail delivery that wasn't eagerly watched for. The mail man was promptly met at the door by either Miss Lida or Miss Clarissa and inevitably a voice would call out: "Ellen, tell Clarissa (or Lida, according to who took the mail) that there is no mail for her." After this event of the day a sort of settled tranquillity brooded over the house.

I WAS to take a lesson on Christmas Eve. I had decided to take my gift and slip it in Miss Ellen's notes. We were sitting before the tinkling old relic and Miss Ellen's soft voice counted monotonously, "One and—two and—" Suddenly from the hall Miss Lida called in a sharply excited tone: "Ellen, come quick, a man has fallen from the sidewalk into our yard."

I often think that the old fellow must have thought he had fallen asleep, and awakened in some old ladies home, for when we had tugged the poor old derelict in and laid him upon the hall sofa, he presently opened his eyes to see the three old ladies hovering and fluttering about him with quaint old camphor bottles and ammonia salts—floating around like intangible objects while I like an awkward gawk stood by, immensely entertained by the unusual procedure.

The old fellow was poorly and inadequately dressed for the bitter weather. He seemed ill and weak and started up only to be pressed back with little sighs and commiserating clucks from the sisters. "There, there, my good man!" but he would talk.

"A feller told me that this was whar the Miss Clerks lived, and I started down the steps and slipped on the snow. You oughta have a man sweep them steps off."

"Yes, yes. So we should," from Miss Lida, "but you say you were seeking us?"

"Yes, I was. I come clean from t'other end of the world to find ye. Ye know Jeff Kirby?"

Miss Lida clutched the lintel post and Miss Clarissa's hand flew to her heart. Miss Lida's voice came in shaken horror: "You are not Jeff Kirby!"

"No mam, I ain't. But Jeff he was my pal, and many's the year we spent together in Alasky and many's the time he told me about you gals." Here the old fellow stopped and a paroxysm of coughing shook him. Miss Ellen was at his side with a hot, brandy spiced lemonade. When his coughing subsided Miss Lida hastened to ask:

"But where is he?—Jeff—where is he?"

He rubbed the stubble of his beard with stiff, calloused fingers. "Jeff's dead," he answered. "He died quite awhile back; lessee—'twas in July if I calc'late rightly—yes, 'twas right after the fourth. He died in my arms. Me and him was pals fer fifteen yars."

"And you say he sent you to—to us?" Clarissa urged, her voice was tremulous.

"He sent me, Jeff did. Poor Jeff, he was allus a-goin' ter come back with a fortune—kept waitin' fer jest a little more."

"Oh, what could a fortune mean—just to have had him back." Miss Lida breathed.

He didn't seem to hear but went on with his story: "A long time arter me and Jeff give up the idea of findin' gold we did begin to make money, but we didn't mine it, we fried it!" He cackled at his joke. "We started up a shack restaurant, and Jeff made a go of the place with his flap-jacks. Yessir, we begun to make money and Jeff started right in to save so he could come back here and marry his gal."

"Which . . . which?" the words seemed to be torn from two throats simultaneously, but another spasm of coughing interrupted his answer.

When it was over and Miss Ellen urged quiet, the old man stubbornly resumed his tale.

"He had mighty nigh two thousand dollars saved at one time and he aimed to quit and come back for his gal and then he decided that two thousand warn't enough so he stuck on and kept puttin' by a leetle more each year. We stayed thar quite a spell arter the gold rush were over—stayed thar fryin flap-jacks fer the rivermen. Ever once in a spell Jeff would say he were goin' back to get his gal."

Miss Lida laid a soft hand upon the old man's shoulder, "Did he name his girl? Did he say which? Was it . . . Lida?"

But the old man seemed to be in a dull stupor; he made no answer but lay with his eyes closed. Miss Clarissa wrung her hands with a despairing sigh. The air was tense with their eagerness. Presently his eyes opened and he continued:

"Well, we stuck together through sunshine and storm, me and Jeff did, and finally we sold the shack, and divided the money. Jeff he perked up real spry and said, 'Pal, I'm on m'way home this time fer shore.'" Both sisters tried to break in again, but he was telling his story in his own good time.

"But I reckon as how it warn't to be, for pore old Jeff took down with a summer cold that turnt into newmony, and atter the funeral expenses was paid there warn't but two thousand dollars left after all. I brung it. 'Twas his last words. 'Podner, swear you'll see that my gal gets the money,' and I swore, and here I am and here 'tis."

HE REACHED inside his old coat and drew out a packet wrapped in a red bandana handkerchief. He held it waiting for one of them to take it.

Miss Clarissa bent over him and said quite firmly: "But for whom is the money? Which one of us?"

He scratched his head in bewilderment.

"Now ain't that curious? I know your names by heart. . . . Lidy, an' Clarisay, an' Ellen, but come to think on it, Jeff never did come right out and say which one was his 'pick.' I thought you'd shorley know. . . ."

A sort of a stunned silence pervaded, then the old man brightened. "Well, dog my cats, I reckon as to how I am growin' daft, he sent a letter along . . . Jeff did. I put it in the hatband of my hat. . . ." Helpfully I ran for the battered Stetson hat and handed it to him, he ran his stiff fingers around the inside of the crown but no letter came to light. He went systematically through his pockets while the two younger Misses Clerk scarcely breathed. His face was dissappointed. "Shucks, now ain't thet curious? Bet a farm in Texas thet I lost it when I fell out thar."

"Run out Maudy—Maudy would you?" came simultaneously from the two younger Misses Clerk. Yes, I would, and I ran. But search and dig and pry about in the snow as I might, there was no letter to be found. Returning without it I was striken mute by the sight of Miss Clarissa and Miss Lida weeping in each other's arms. Not great sobs and hysterical moans, but gentle ladylike trickles of tears . . . the hard tears of old age that ran down each softly withered cheek. After twenty-five years of silence the little Misses Clerk were talking to one another.

"Take the money Lida. It is yours. . . . I always knew that you were the one." Lida choked over a sob as she replied, "No, no, Clarissa, you were the one he loved. Looking back I see it all so plainly." I felt a great big lump come in my throat. Was I going to tune up and blubber too? But it was so pathetic, so pitifully tragic, I slipped out again and went home, charged with the all important bit of news that after twenty-five years the little Misses Clerk had "made up."

The reconciliation had been mildly exciting to West Placer and the little spinsters kept the sick old man all winter vying with one another to make him comfortable. There was no hospital in West Placer to remove him to, nor would the sisters have consented, had there been one. Lovingly, anxiously, they tended Jeff Kirby's pal, seeming to derive a strange comfort in doing for him. And strange, too, the suspended process of aging that had seemed to keep them like the pale perfect blossoms in alcohol —strange that suddenly this condition dropped away, and over night . . . almost, the two younger sisters crumpled and faded into two withered little old ladies looking every year of their ages. Some strange condition not unlike suspended animation had now ceased and the spinsters, relieved of immediate money needs and the suspense of waiting for Jeff Kirby's return, devoted all their energies to caring for their patient. But their care and devotion was of no avail; for when the first thaws of spring set in and the pussy willow trees in the back yard sent out gray chenille buds, the tired little old miner staked his last claim.

Returning from the funeral I had gone home with the sisters and as I started for my own home Miss Ellen walked out into the yard with me to get a whiff of the lovely spring tang that hung in the air.

I was about to say good-bye when Miss Ellen stooped and picked up a bit of soiled paper which fluttered at our feet tossed by the playful breeze.

Absently she smoothed it out and glanced at it, no doubt thinking it a handbill or a receipt. Then her face became white and she groped for my shoulder, clutching me with surprising strength.

"Maudy, Maudy it's the letter, Jeff's letter—I—I can't read it—it's lain here all winter—Look, Maudy. Your eyes are young—take it—can you read it?"

I barely could. It had been penciled. Winter snows had soaked it, spring suns had dried it, and the paper was crumpled and fragile.

"Beloved:" I read, "I am dying. . . ." Here a part of the message was obliterated. ". . . return to ask you to be mine. . . ."—then more that was indecipherable—"Although you seemed as far above me as the stars, I hoped that a fortune would aid my suit. . . . I send you this pitiful sum with all my love. . . ." Then what followed made my eyes almost start from my head. "Ellen, my beloved, good-bye. Jeff."

I heard a little gasp from Miss Ellen and looked up to see the sweet serious eyes misted with tears. I held the soiled paper toward her with my pudgy thumb beneath the name, so she could see for herself. There it was plainer than any of the faded scawl . . . "Ellen," it said. "Ellen, Beloved, . . ." just like that.

Miss Ellen put her arm around me and dropped her snowy tendril head upon my shoulder and just for a moment I seemed to feel the surge of a great emotion within her tiny frame. Then—

"Maudy, this will be our secret, you and I must never tell," and slowly she tore the tattered scrap into bits and tossed it to the spring breeze.

She turned and went into the house and beneath her breath she was murmuring.

"If I had only known, oh, I wish I might have known."

Faith

By Lora E. Clement

(From Youth's Instructor.)

"I don't," exploded Roger throwing down the morning paper in disgust, "have any faith any more in anything or anybody anywhere!"

"So?" questioned Uncle John. And he picked up the discarded news sheet to read for himself the disturbing details of a nation-wide bank holiday. Fifteen minutes later he joined his nephew for the morning drive "down town." At the corner, Roger stopped to drop a letter in the mail box.

"I thought you'd lost all your faith," remarked Uncle John.

"I have—every atom!"

"Then why trouble to post that letter?"

"What's that got to do with faith?" Roger demanded in surprise.

"Everything. I judge you expect it to reach its destination?"

"Certainly."

"Then you must have faith—absolute faith—in Uncle Sam's postal and transportation system?"

"Well—yes, I suppose I have."

And at that moment they joined the stream of traffic which crosses and recrosses the wide Potomac on the Francis Scott Key Memorial span.

"I'm surprised that you're risking the bridge this morning," observed Uncle John.

"'Risking'? What do you mean?" Again Roger was surprised.

"How do you know it will hold up under all this weight of freight and passengers and automobiles?"

The young man looked at his passenger pityingly. "Why, because it's a perfectly safe bridge," he stated emphatically.

"Faith again!" And this time Uncle John chuckled.

Twenty minutes later they entered the tall office building where the older man spends his working days. Roger was to do an errand for him before he went about his own affairs, and the papers were in a safe nine floors above the street.

"I presume you'll be walking up?" his uncle questioned.

"Walk? Me? Why?"

"Well, since you haven't 'any faith any more in anything or anybody anywhere,' I just wondered. You know you can't ride in an elevator without exercising faith in the power that runs it, and in the operator who controls that power and sends the car up and down the shaft."

"I've faith enough left for that," laughed Roger. "I'm not walking up nine flights of stairs—not even if every bank in the United States is closed."

"They'll never open," remarked Uncle John quietly, "unless somebody exercises faith in somebody else. Remember, lad, that above and beyond any special political faith you may have, you are an American. And the patriotism of a real American—or a real citizen of any country in this troubled old world—is far above politics. Let's have faith in the men who stand at the helm of the ship of state. What they need in this time of crisis is not criticism, but cooperation. The confidence of those of us who make up the rank and file will do a great deal toward helping them to weather the storm. It is my privilege to believe that they are doing their level best—and I choose to exercise that privilege."

"Well, things are in a pretty muddle," gloomed Roger.

"When the outlook is dark, there's the uplook, you know. That's always bright. Our heavenly Father is Governer-in-Chief of the affairs of the world. It takes faith to trust Him, of course."—Uncle John unlocked his office door and turned to place a friendly hand upon the young man's arm—"but faith is the warp upon which the web of life is woven. It is the key to a thousand doors, the very mainspring of not only things religious, but common-ordinary everyday existence. We simply can't manage to live without it. Really, lad, faith is a very wonderful talent that God has intrusted to every human being. Let's take care —you and me—lest we prove unreliable stewards of this wonderful gift."

"You should be a preacher instead of a lawyer, Uncle John," laughed Roger. "But it's been a good sermon. I'll admit this is a new angle on faith. Thank's for the tip."

And a moment later he was in the elevator again and on his way—thinking! Thinking calmer thoughts!!

Music is the inarticulate speech of the heart, which can not be compressed into words, because it is infinite.—Wagner.

Thinking is the talking of the soul with itself.—Plato.

WHO SHOULD DRINK IT?

By LUCILLE CUNNINGHAM

The author, a young high school student of Clare, Michigan, wrote this oration unaided, and has delivered it a number of times for school and church audiences.

PROHIBITION has been discussed to some extent for the last thirty-five years, and is becoming a more interesting subject as the years go by. The "wets" are in favor of repealing the Eighteenth Amendment which is divided into three sections. Section I says, "After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacturer, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited." Section II, "The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." Section III, "This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution, within seven years of the date of the submission hereof to the States by Congress." The "drys" are in favor of enforcing that act. The question before United States today, is whether or not that step taken by our fathers is to be repealed or enforced.

The wets say that liquor under government control has been successful in Canada. It has not. Crime increased in Canada 47 per cent in the year 1929, when liquor was under government control, as compared with the dry year of 1923. The Montreal Daily Star reported an increase of 53 per cent in drunken women, while the problem of child welfare has increased enormously. Former Police Commissoner Burton, of Manitoba, Canada, said, "If all drunks were arrested, there would be no room for them in the jails." And the editor of the Minneapolis Journal reported that the mayor of Winnipeg finds conditions there a "thousand times worse than under prohibition." Great men of the world urge their people and countries to leave liquor alone. The former Kaiser, William II, of Germany, urged total abstinence among his subjects. He said that nerve power would win the next war, and the victory would lie with the nation who used the smallest amount of liquor. France attempted to stop, to some extent, the use of alcholic liquors by means of posters, and the death rate of Belgium, Denmark, Switzerland, and other European countries show an increase with an increase in drinking.

A. B. Phillips in a radio address said, "No nation which legalizes liquor has survived this world depression with as little real suffering as has United States. Prohibition is but a bulwark of great strength, and has accomplished more for the progress of our country, both morally and industrially, than any other law that was ever enacted." It would be impossible to live in this modern age of machinery and believe that we could hold as high a position in the world, as America does and not have prohibition. I agree with Professor T. N. Carver, when he says that the nations who refuse to take this step forward are choosing only a secondary position in the civilized world.

But why think only of the place America would hold when society and all it believes in are trampled to the ground? It has been said that America is proud of her youth. Why not set up ideals for her youth to be proud of? The sin, vice, and crime connected with liquor are not ideals to be placed before the youth of today. Give them a higher standard, and understanding of the place they are to fill, not as drunken citizens, but as ideal Americans!

Think again what would happen to the families: drunken husbands who beat their wives, orphan their children, and leave them paupers and beggars, drunken drivers who kill whole families in accidents, murder, caused by the clouded mind of a drunkard. Are we to bring back such conditions that people will be afraid to leave their own homes?

Every one knows the reasons why prohibition should be enforced, and not repealed. The Declaration of Independence tells us that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Can people have life, or liberty when their lives are in danger? Can they pursue happiness if they are always shadowed by the murder of some member of their family? Everyone will answer no. But the Declaration of Independence also says that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Is not prohibition then, one of the things that take away one of man's privileges for the good of all? Many people think so. When they declare they will not ride on a train with a drinking driver, are they not just expressing themselves in a different way? It all means the same thing.

If people do not want to ride on a train with a drunken engineer, if they are afraid to go riding because of drunken drivers, if the employer will not hire an employee who (Continued on page 658)

The Curriculum of the Church School

By C. B. Woodstock

THE PURPOSE of a course of study is to present in a clear and orderly way the essential informations regarding any field of knowledge and experience. The value of the study depends upon the clearness of its expression, its completeness, and its power to help those who seek its truth. This is true of the courses of study in use in secular schools, and it is especially true in the studies prepared for use in our church schools.

Much is demanded of the schools of the church. To them is committed the systematic instruction of the young and old, youth and the middle-aged, in the sacred and precious truths of life, as revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Under the general direction of the priesthood, the schools of the church are organized to perform this task. In its proper place our attention is called to the importance of organization of the church schools—their direction under the authority of the priesthood, the soundness of teaching method, and the personality and the training of teachers and leaders. But there is imperative need that we have lesson material adequate to meet the needs of instruction in each age group, and that growing individuals be provided an opportunity in our classes to progress in a logical, systematic, orderly way from early childhood to adulthood, growing in comprehension and appreciation of the gospel plan, gaining in ability to control and direct the forces of life in harmony with gospel ideals, and developing a personal character which permits of ready cooperation with one's fellows in dynamic Christian living. The product of our church schools must be human lives progressively molded in the likeness of the Christ, partaking of his nature and demonstrating the power of God in fruitful righteous living.

To help in accomplishing this task our curriculum or church school course of study is developed. At present it consists of twenty one-year courses, planned to be used consecutively from the nursery age up to and including adult classes. In each case the subject matter has been carefully selected out of the total range of information and experience, to secure the most vital informations and to provide the richest experiences suited to the probable interests, needs and capacities of the respective age groups. A critical study of the curriculum (or list of available quarterlies) will readily disclose the orderly sequence of the subject matter. Since the entire range of instruction is covered in this sequence, it is little less than criminal for church school authorities to carelessly omit any one of the series in the church school life of an individual. Such an omission robs one of an opportunity difficult if not impossible to provide later in life.

THE CURRICULUM is organized to provide a full and complete course of study for all who continue regularly in the church school classes from early childhood. For large schools subjects are prepared for each year from three years old up. For small schools in which there is but one class in a department, the course is arranged in three-year cycles, so planned that all of the children in a three-year-age group may be in a single class, some being promoted in and some promoted out of the class each year. Over a three-year period the three one-year quarterlies prepared for the department are each used in order. Naturally the children stay in the department three years and so have the advantage of each of the three years of study.

In the adult department there is a wide range of quarterlies provided in recent years. Each year a fresh study is prepared as the current quarterly, but any of the previous quarterlies listed in the curriculum may be elected for class use. For adults we are developing a standard five-year course. We now have two of these in print, The Message of the Book of Mormon and A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants. For the coming year material is in preparation for a year's study of the financial law. For the two succeeding years provision has been made for church history and Bible study. These latter two will not be ready until October, 1934, and 1935 respectively. Of the content of new courses being prepared for use in October, next, more will be written in Herald columns.

We have much at stake in the construction and use of our quarterlies. Responsibility for the selection and preparation of subject matter rests with the editors and those in charge of the general department. Pastors and church school directors must see that the proper quarterlies are selected and provided for the classes of their respective schools. Teachers are responsible for the continuous and effective use of the quarterly in the hands of every member of their classes. It is not economy to get along without quarterlies, nor to supply them and have them thrown away. Fruitful results in building men and women for God and in equiping them for active service in the church can come only by wise and consistent (Continued on page 658)

The Hour of Judgment

By E. J. Gleazer

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication."—Revelations 14: 6-8.

FOLLOWING the restoration of the everlasting gospel and just previous to the fall of Babylon the Scriptures foretell a period to be known as the hour of God's judgment. It is well that the gospel was previously to be restored, for without its application no one would be able to stand during this period of judgment. The conditions that would bring all people and all their organizations and philosophies into judgment would be so severe that only those people who had accepted and applied the everlasting gospel could endure. Addressing the elders of the church the Lord admonishes them to labor diligently, that they may be perfected in their ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time—to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony, and to prepare the Saints for the hour of judgment, which is to come; that their souls may escape the wrath of God, the desolation of abomination, which await the wicked, both in this world and in the world to come.

Paul predicted a day in the which God would judge the world in righteousness. Certainly the tribulations, perplexities, and trials of today are revealing the righteousness and unrighteousness of the people as never before. All things are being brought into judgment. The pressure is so great that none can escape. We are being tested as by fire. We are being purged like silver. Malachi prophesied of our day:

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be swift witness against the socerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3: 1-5.

PREVIOUS to the coming of our Lord this judgment was to take place. The conditions at the time of judgment were to be such that the prophet exclaims, "Who may abide the day of his coming?" In this same prophecy the Lord says:

"And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the socerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3: 5.

Wickedness has been brought to trial. It has become quite apparent that sin cannot abide the hour. The terrible price to be paid for transgressing God's law is becoming quite apparent. Wickedness has produced its fruit and the nations are alarmed. Sin has hastened the Day of Judgment. Its folly is now apparent.

Judgment classifies—separates—segregates—distinguishes. The wheat is now being gathered from among the tares. The sheep are being distinguished from the goats. The wise are made manifest and the foolish are being revealed. The saint stands out from the hypocrite and the sons of God are now being distinguished from the sons of perdition. Judgment compels us to make decisions. Our reactions to the conditions determines our quality. Peter informs us that judgment must begin at the house of God.

"Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"—1 Peter 4: 16-18.

The church must be cleansed previous to the coming of our Lord. Judgment will accomplish this. Every man's work will be made manifest. Profession means little. Judgment is not concerned with profession but with works. The sinner will not stand in the judgment whether he is in the church or not.

Jesus in advising his hearer to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy, said:

"For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."—Luke 12: 2, 3.

Programs in the Primary Department

By Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Sr.*

"Long years ago—a story runs—
When the whole world was a-Maying
A band of happy little ones
Were in a garden playing."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL is a wonderful garden, made lovelier by the presence in it of children learning usefulness in God's service. The worship program of our department is carried out as suggested in the quarterly. We have our music and lesson—story material harmonizing; and with the different seasons of the year, special holiday numbers and Children's Day programs, they make an interesting variety. Sunday school programs can be made just as interesting as public school programs, and being made so they hold the attention of the child. There is always something to look forward to, and music is very important in our plans.

Music gives the children an opportunity for expression in song-story. They deserve the very best material we can find. In our school programs are planned a month ahead, giving each class in the department its own particular Sunday for a program. The teacher, with the assistance of the superintendent and music assistant, plans these programs. Care is taken in making up the program to maintain a high standard of interest and performance. We try to follow out the seasons of the year with May Day, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Children's Day, Fourth of July, and so on throughout our calendar year.

Our Sunday morning programs for May are as follows—others may choose to vary it to suit local needs:

Quiet Music: Spring Music, selected.
Call to Worship: "The Church Bell," Song Stories.
Opening Song: Selected, Children's Praise, number 1.
Prayer: By the superintendent, repeated in short word groups by the school.
Prayer Song: Number 7, Carols, Leydia.
Welcome Song: Number 8, Carols, Leydia.
Birthday Song: Number 114, Children's Praise, number 1.
Song Service: Selected, Children's Praise, number 1.
Offering Song: Number 95, Children's Praise, number 1.
Study Period: Quarterly.
Programs: A class.
Closing Song: Number selected, Children's Praise, number 1.
Prayer Song: Number 62, Carols, Leydia.

The songbooks suggested are for sale at the Herald Publishing House.

The class programs following the lesson period have proved very interesting and helpful. An instrumental piece, a song and a reading fill the time. Class songs, drills and exercises are excellent for they permit all to take part. Of course it means a lot of work, but the effort is distributed and we always feel well repaid. A child's spiritual growth and training is an inspiring goal.

It is now time to plan for Children's Day. Our program will be carried out along these same lines with music material found in the following new 1933 Children's Day publications: Tullar-Meredith Company, 91 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York; Lorenz Publishing Company, 218 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois (Children's Day, 1933); Children's Praise, number 1 and number 2, and Song Carols, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

After years of music study for children's programs we find simple words and music have the most appeal to them and give us the best results. We trust these suggestions may be of use, for it has just been of late years that music with understandable words for our little folk has been obtainable.

Our children are just little people with love and smiles.

Smiles

"A smile is quite a funny thing;
It wrinkles up your face,
And when it's gone you never find
Its secret hiding place.
But far more wonderful it is
To see what smiles can do;
You smile at one, he smiles at you,
And so one smile makes two.

"He smiles at some one, since you smiled,
And then that one smiles back,
And that one smiles until in truth,
You fail in keeping track.
And since a smile can do great good
By cheering hearts of care,
Let's smile and smile, and not forget
That smiles go everywhere."

(*The author has made an important contribution in the work of the Children's Division of the Stone Church Sunday school in Independence.)

that shall not be made known. The judgment will accomplish this.

Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, admonished them that before Christ would return to earth the man of sin would be revealed. The works of Satan are not always manifest. The judgment will make his works manifest.

Judgment involves trials, and no trial is pleasant. All of us must be tried to determine our quality. As none are exempt from judgment none are exempt from trials. The pain of trial and the ordeal of testing is soon forgotten by those who succeed in making the right adjustment. Judgment is the friend of the righteous and the foe of the wicked. The righteous man should welcome the hour of God's judgment which will reveal God's righteousness and manifest the folly of sin.

much work to be done in the world; he needs men to do it; but he would rather have that work remain undone than to have men attempting to improve on his way and offering substitutes of their own manufacture.

No matter how many well laid plans we may try, and no matter how hard we may pray for the success of those plans, and no matter how great the faith of our prayers, unless those plans correspond with the great universal purposes and plans of God, all of our effort and prayers and faith are wasted.

Jesus told his disciples that if they loved him, they should keep his commandments—not that they should draw up a set of their own. On another occasion, he said to some of his supposed followers, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" God's promises are sure, and to the man who has faith, God will fulfill every promise that he has ever made. But no man who has left the commandments of Jesus—who has set up his own gospel instead of the gospel of Jesus, can effectually lay any claim upon God for the fulfillment of the promises which were conditioned upon the keeping of his commandments. If we break his commandments, no amount of faith can save us from the suffering and disappointment which we earn with our own folly. If we follow our own way and desert the way of God, faith sufficient to move a thousand mountains will not move the molehills that obstruct our path and hinder the progress of our petty plans.

If we have been following after our own devices, or after the ways of other men, let us search our ways, and return to the Lord. Then we may sensibly and conscientiously exercise faith, and God will justify our faith by fulfilling the promises which he has made to those who love him and keep his commandments.

WHO SHOULD DRINK IT?

drinks, if the husband honors his wife and name enough to stay away from alcoholic liquors, if the son respects his parents enough to keep away from it, and the people hire doctors and nurses who have steady nerves, ask the aid of lawyers who have a clear brain and respect his neighbors enough to let them have life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, who, then, would drink it, if the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed?

Robert Ingersoll states, as the evils of alcholic liquor, that, "It produces weakness, not strength; sickness not health; death not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all of them paupers and beggars. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses, demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels, and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries, and furnishes victims to your scaffolds. It is the life-blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God, and despises heaven. It brings shame not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness. It kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out national honors."

You cannot drink alcholic liquors and have strength, health, and life, honor, safety, hope, and happiness, peace, morals, confidence, reputation, and national honors. Without these there is nothing to live for. If every one is created equal, and is endowed by his Creator with certain inalienable rights, among these life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, there need be no question of repeal. Honor the Eighteenth Amendment as the economic safeguard and greatest moral principle existing in any nation of the world today. Abraham Lincoln said, "When there is neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth—how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace of both those revolutions that have ended in that victory." We have abolished slavery, and we can also do away with liquor, not by repealing, but by enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment.

rowed this along with a number of other beautiful hymns. Almost we feel it is our own by adoption. We are glad to share the joy of singing it with others, hundreds of others. But we shall appreciate and love it even more if, when we sing it, we think of the gentle, sincere author of these words who has been called a "good soldier of Christ," and the occasion of the hymn's writing.

DOES MARRIAGE DEMAND PREPARATION?

By Cecil R. Walker

THE BUSINESS MAN, the school-teacher the minister or professional worker would not attempt a career without a period of preparation. But is preparation necessary for establishing a home?

To those who have given serious thought to this question, it may seem a bit arrogant, but it must be admitted that there are still those who plunge into the deep sea of matrimony with little or no thought as to what the adventure will demand of them.

The impulses which lead to the establishment of a new home and family are beautiful and holy, so long as they are not perverted. But a home must be governed by ideals, mutual respect, trust, loyalty, and devotion. The desire for marriage should carry with it the hope of fatherhood and motherhood and the blessing of children. No wedding bells should ever ring for the couple who never intend to be parents. "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh."

Marriage should never take place between those who are unfit to become parents. This calls for a study of the moral and physical life of the prospective companion. I once knew a young lady who inquired of her friend's family physician before giving her answer to his proposal of marriage.

"Will I love this man ten years from now as much as I do now?" Surely we have a right to expect our love to increase with years. And yet statistics show us that one out of every six marriages ends in the divorce courts even though the couple might have been in love at the time of marriage.

I do not believe as some do that all those who do not make a success of marriage were never in love. Neither do I believe that love has died when the first glow of passion is past. But love is pretty sure to disappear when one or both parties refuse to be fair and loyal to the sacred vows they have made. Being honest with each other is a good law for the young married couple to keep foremost in their thoughts.

Not a small factor in choosing a companion for life is the desire for common ideals. A husband who is a lover of sports and a wife who cares nothing whatever for such things often find selves traveling in different directoins. whatever for such things often find themselves traveling in different directions. Not once, but many times this has caused much unhappiness to one or both parties concerned. I do not mean to infer here that a wife or husband should have no individual hobbies or activities. The husband whose wife has no tastes of her own is very apt to become tired of such intimacy. This life would become a very monotonous affair if we all knew each other's thoughts and all had the same likes and dislikes.

RULES FOR THE MARRIED COUPLE

1. If the boys at the office have invited your husband to spend the week-end with them on a fishing trip, by all means let him go. You will both enjoy each other's company more for having been separated over night. Likewise, how about letting the wife have an occasional vacation trip?

2. Learn not to express your disapproval of everything that does not please you. Never speak disparagingly of one another before your children or your friends.

3. Do not try to regulate the life of your companion as you would a clock. Your partner married you to be happy, not to be improved.

4. No married person should have his or her secrets divulged to another. The secrets of marriage are sacred and not even a mother has the right to know them. The permanency of the home often depends upon this one thing.

5. Your companion should be your equal. A man should not seek a wife for a doll to play with nor for an animal to pet. Neither should he seek a slave to come at his call. What he should seek is a friend who will be a friend for life. And a woman should not marry a man simply for a meal ticket.

6. No person should consider marriage who can not leave "mamma and papa." The problems of adjustment that come with every marriage cannot be worked out properly with anyone else in the home.

Does marriage require preparation? If what we have said about marriage is true, it does.

"Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap." Let us hope that young Latter Day Saints are sowing more than wild oats.

Take Sleep in the Hours Set Apart by God

By Gomer T. Griffiths

Nearly one hundred years ago the Lord called the attention of his ministry, in one of the most important revelations given to the church, to the absolute necessity of taking sleep within the hours set apart for sleep. As a ministry and people we have been emphasizing the absolute necessity of living "By every word that proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord." (Matthew 4: 5.) In this revelation the Lord said, "Cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.)

Because the ministry and the Saints failed to observe the advice of the Spirit given in the above revelation, the kind Lord spoke again fifty-five years later to the church, through the late prophet, Joseph, as follows: "Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body; take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9.)

Both revelations prove that God who created the body is intensely concerned in its care and preservation. Latter Day Israel is just as forgetful of God's advice and commandments, as was old Israel, and many have to suffer the consequence of their disregard of God's counsel. Every reasonable, intelligent person knows that God can use a healthy body, and a bright mind to a better and greater advantage, than one that is physically and mentally weak. Therefore if we have a desire to cooperate with God and Christ in placing the gospel of Christ before the nations of the earth, and bringing about the redemption of Zion, it behooves us to give heed to the advice of the Spirit that has been given twice to his elders through two of his inspired prophets within the last one hundred years.

If there ever was a time in the history of the world when healthy bodies and vigorous minds were in demand to forward the work of God, that time is now, when turmoil, confusion, doubt and wickedness abound everywhere. God takes no delight in seeing his people suffer in body and mind, and for that reason has given direction in these last days as to what we should eat and drink, and the hours in which we should take sleep. (See Doctrine and Covenants 86.) And herein is pointed out the blessings and protection that will come to those who observe the instruction therein given.

"And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walk in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel. Amen." We should bear in mind the fact that the children of Israel had to suffer untold misery forty years in the wilderness because of their lack of reverence for the counsel of God, and their disobedience thereto. I am confident that a great many of the ministry desire in their hearts to obey the voice of the Spirit; however they are subject to conditions that obtain in the places where they travel, and are hindered in carrying out their desire, because they are subject to the customs and regulations of the homes to which they have been invited.

In some homes the radio is operated until late hours, which prevents the elder from enjoying the needed rest, the host evidently not realizing the ill effect it has on the elder, and that this is of such frequent occurrence in his experience. This experience continued robs him of his physical strength and mental vigor. I have heard some people say that the elder should not pay any attention to noise, that noise did not keep them from sleeping, and they boasted that the screeching of whistles and the noise of the radio did not have any ill effect on them, and keep them from sleeping soundly.

It has fallen to my lot to occupy the same room with some of those boasters. They kept up a terrible noise all night long, snoring, talking in their sleep, rolling and tumbling, but, they, poor souls, were not conscious of the great annoyance that they had kept up all night, preventing others in the room from sleeping. When morning came they imagined they had had a sound, healthful sleep. If science be true these persons are deceiving themselves, for scientists content that noise murders sleep, and the sleeper is not conscious of it. Nevertheless it does have a detrimental effect on both body and mind. This position of science harmonizes with what the Lord has revealed in these last days. In support of this claim, I insert the following, from an article by Doctor Donald A. Laird, director of the psychology laboratory at Colgate University:

What Murders Sleep?

(Condensed from The Country Home, July, 1930.)

For the past six years, in numerous universities, intensive attacks have been made on the mysteries of sleep. Right now eight students on the Colgate University campus are in a ten-room sleep laboratory equipped with soundproof walls, electric and pneumatic ducts, gas masks, automatic recording machines, and specially designed beds. The boys call themselves human guinea pigs.

About the first thing their tests verified was a truth the old Romans put to use when they killed Cerseus, the last King of Macedonia, in less than a week by not letting him sleep—that all animals (including kings) die quicker from lack of sleep than from lack of food.

Of course the human guinea pigs were not deprived of sleep in amounts large enough to kill. Instead, they were given mental work to do after successively shortened nights of rest. The results proved that while we may appear to do as good work on six hours' sleep as on a full eight, it takes more out of our bodies to do it.

The problem is how to get good sleep.

The effects of noise on sleep were startling. Noise, causing body muscles to tighten, raises blood pressure without waking us. The slight noise made by walking past a bed on tiptoe raised the sleeper's muscle tension almost to the waking point. So while you may not have waked on nights spent in Pullman cars or noisy hotels, the reason you did not feel well rested next morning was that all night you responded to noise without being conscious of it. Our responses to noise can become dulled gradually so that we do not think we mind it. But laboratory records show that we pay the price for blunted nerves.

In this connection, as one of the church fathers, I desire to call the attention of parents to the necessity of bringing up their children in the way of the Lord. My heart has been made sad many times because of the carelessness of some parents, who permit their children out on the streets without proper supervision until late at night, or if in the house they do not retire until midnight, when nature requires that they have proper sleep in order to have healthy bodies and vigorous minds. I have witnessed many cases where the parents go to bed, and leave the children to wander about as they choose and go to bed when they get ready. This custom not only robs the children of their health, but is a serious menace to their morals, by leaving them free from the wholesome restraint of proper home regulations and protection.

The Lord has directed that the parents see that their children walk uprightly, teaching them to pray and reverence God. All parents who neglect to keep this command will have to abide the consequences of their disobedience. It is evident to the writer that many of the ills of body and mind suffered, both by the young and those who are older, are the result of failure to keep the instructions given by the Lord, to safeguard our welfare.

Prayer and Testimony

Everyone Has a Testimony to Bear

Many letters come to the Editors telling of the benefits and encouragement received from the reading of the letters that appear on these pages. Those that have been printed during the months that the Herald has carried this department have come without personal or written solicitation; they have been the voluntary contributions of people who have written out of gratitude and a love of the work. Although we have never had any great number of letters on hand waiting for publication, no week has ever passed in which we did not have enough and some to spare for the current need.

The Editors wish to express their appreciation for the good quality of the letters received. A new high level of testimony has been reached. Young people as well as older ones have contributed to this improvement. Our readers will be glad to hear from those who have requested prayers.

You have been reading this column for some months, and have enjoyed the letters. Have you sent your testimony? Take joy in giving as well as receiving. You may say something that will bring faith and hope to others.

The Gospel Her All

By Clara Wood

It will be twenty-four years this Children's Day since I entered the waters of baptism to obey the gospel. Though I was quite young, I well remember how the gospel sermons seemed to fill my heart with gladness and joy, for it seemed I could always feel God's power with me.

While I have always loved this gospel, it seems that in my earlier years I was much more obedient than I have been since I left my home in the East. Although, I will never forget that in one of the reunions at Onset, I felt God speak to me and he told me in a still small voice that in my lonely hours, he would watch over and care for me, and I can truthfully say that he has done that to this day. Many times when I am alone and am meditating on the conditions that are existing all over the world, and also am a little homesick for my loved ones whom I have not seen for over three years, there seems to be some one speaking to me and saying, "Lift up thine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh thy help."

To me there is no greater thing than this gospel. I have tried to warn my neighbors, but they are grounded fast in other faiths and can not see anything different, yet I believe they know that I possess something more than they because they have asked me questions which indicate that they must be doing some thinking.

Every week when the Herald comes, I lay everything aside and read it from cover to cover. I enjoy the testimonies best because in them my brothers and sisters relate God's goodness to me. The Herald is so full of encouragement and cheer that I wonder why more of us do not see God's guiding hand. Surely we are living in a perilous time, yet I am confident that God will bring his church through if we are faithful.

In my lonely hours when it seemed that my trials were almost more than I could endure, I have received much comfort by singing the songs of Zion, and after I have sung several songs, it seemed that my burdens have been lifted and I once more could go about my work.

It has been a little over two years since my father and mother separated the bonds that were supposed never to be severed, yet in my hours of prayer and fasting, it seems that God is caring for them both. Perhaps it is not best to wish them back together, but how I long to return home and find the home united instead of divided!

The gospel is everything to me, my treasure, my life. I am with the help of Jesus, trying to adjust my life so that others may not have any reason to condemn me for my acts or my words. I do not want to be a stumblingblock, but a stepping stone.

I believe our gospel is the richest gospel on the earth, and that it can do more for mankind, but it requires much faith, trust and patience. God is the light of the world.

May the Saints continue to pray for my loved ones back home and may they know that God is watching over them and guiding them. May God's richest blessings be always upon his children, and may I always uphold his banner and consecrate my life to a greater service.

Let Us Examine Ourselves

By Mrs. J. L. McArthur

I know this is the church of God for I have had experiences which convince me that God is a wonderful Father and that when we do not receive the blessings he has promised, it is we who fail, not God.

We have only to read the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants to see where we fall short of the things God expects of us. I enjoyed Brother G. T. Griffiths letter in the Herald, and I, too, have been on my knees in prayer pleading for the blessing of Brother F. M. Smith. Often I have felt that he needs our prayers and the help of God. I have seen him bowed with care and responsibility, and my heart has swelled with pity for him. I feel that we as Saints are rebuked by the fact that we believe this is God's church and take pride in it, yet we do not have faith enough to give our officers full support in carrying on their work.

Let us wake up and examine ourselves and do our part. Let us live God's will so that Zion can be redeemed and we can gather out of the world. Let us have faith in God and confidence in those in charge of his work here on earth.

Has Proved the Church

By Helen A. Knapp

I was a member of a popular church for thirty-three years, but when I was visiting my daughter at Perry, I was very ill, and the doctor told her that he had no hope of my recovery. She asked me if I would like to be administered to. "Will your elders administer to one who is not a member of the church?" I asked. She assured me that they would if I believed in the ordinance and desired it. I told her that I did. And so an elder administered to me, and the next day I was up. When I was able to go to church again, I went to the church, and above the pulpit were the words—"Our Creed All Truth." "Well, I will see," I promised myself. I have investigated, and sure enough I find the creed to be all truth.

I joined the church, and have learned more in the few years I have been a member than I had hoped ever to learn. I shall be eighty-four June 10, and am ready to meet my Lord at any time he sees fit to call me. God bless and keep the Saints everywhere.

Prayer and Testimony

Let Us Press On

By Samuel M. Zonker

About eighteen months ago I attended a baptismal service at which my sister was baptized. During the confirmation, which was done by Patriarch John F. Martin, he said that the angels of heaven had taken word back to my mother and that she was rejoicing. You who read this will probably never know how I felt, how unworthy I was. From that time, with the help of the Saints, my earnest desire has been to continue on in the work to the end.

My mother was a good woman, and, having the gift of prophecy spoke to me when I was a boy. She told me that the Lord had a work for me to do. But as I grew older I drifted into the world. Now, however, I am glad to be back. My mother's prayers, I feel, are soon to be answered. I was told just recently by Brother Martin, through the Spirit, that the Lord was soon to use me, if I remained faithful.

After my mother's death I did not think that the Lord was kind to me, but now through the talk given to me by Brother Martin I see things differently.

At the last prayer service our pastor and district president both told me that mother's prayers had been answered, and advised me to continue for the Lord was going to use me. So you see I have treasures on the other side, something to live and work for. This gives me an ambition to continue to the end.

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me.
I would be pure, for there are those who care.
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer.
I would be brave, for there is much to dare."

Let us work diligently to come to the unity of the faith.

Continues Missionary Work With Joy

By W. A. Smith

I am still telling the beautiful gospel story, and find a very good spirit in the mission field.

I was called to Blue Rapids, Kansas, April 14, to preach the funeral sermon of Brother John Scott. He had lived in Blue Rapids, Kansas, seventy-four years. I remained and we had a few meetings there. April 16, I led two candidates into the waters of the Blue River and baptized them into the church and kingdom of God. That made a total of one thousand and ten whom I have baptized into the church of Christ. I feel that I have been greatly blessed, especially in the past three months.

On April 23, I was called to preach at North East Kansas City Church, where Brother Davis and Brother Lloyd preside. Preached there in the morning and evening. We were blessed with the loving Spirit of the Master. A noble band of Saints is there, and the spirit of unity is with them. Brother Lloyd baptized two on that day.

I always enjoy preaching to the Saints at that church and pray that God will bless them. They were very kind to me and my companion.

I feel to assure readers of the Herald that this work will move on because it is God's work, and I pray that God will bless the Saints all over the world.

Christian Life Needs No Pretense

By G. B. Moore

A wolf in sheep's clothing or a Christian whose life is patterned after the meek and holy Man of Galilee—which shall we chose? Which are we choosing?

Where should our Christian life begin? In our homes? Yes, surely. What we are in our homes is the true index of our character. If I want to know what a man really is, I ask his wife. The members of a man's family know him for what he really is far better than other people.

Jesus once said that in the last days, prior to his coming, grievous wolves should enter into the fold, not sparing the flock. Has that time come? Answer the question for yourself. As for me, I think it has. I believe that if our lives at home and abroad are not patterned after the life of Jesus Christ, if every day we do not love our fellow men and work for Christ, to make this world a better place in which to live, we are not Christians. We are not making this world a better place for mankind until we do away with greed, hatred, jealously and lust for that which belongs to another. We must rule these things out of our own lives else we cannot make our lives resemble that of Christ.

When we talk of doing good, we are expected to live for that which is good. People watch us to see if we are living what we say. All people admire a true Christian, and abhor the wolf in sheep's clothing. It is natural that they should abhor one who is not what he poses to be, for he is much to be feared. He is not to be trusted.

Let us not pretend to be what we are not. There is no need for pretense in the life of a follower of Christ.

Request Prayers

John C. Kriebel, of Akron, Ohio, writes that Elder A. R. Manchester is seriously sick and asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. Also Sister J. J. McConneigh still suffers a great deal and is not able to be out of bed. Prayers are asked in her behalf, that if it is God's will, she may be relieved of suffering.

Mrs. Grant Barnett, Albia, Iowa, Rural Route 1, asks the church to pray for her granddaughter who is suffering from a nervous breakdown, that she may be restored to health. The sufferer is a member of the church.

Brother Herman D. Smith, of Stuart, Florida, asks the Saints to remember Sister Smith in their prayers. She has been ill nearly six years as the result of exhaustion and sickness brought on by long-time nursing of a son who passed away from tuberculosis.

The Holdenville, Oklahoma, Branch requests the prayers of all Saints in behalf of Brother R. L. Herring, of Holdenville, a former pastor, who has been bedfast for about nine weeks with heart trouble. The doctor holds no hope for his recovery, but Brother Herring has faith that the Lord can heal him. Since his illness, the branch has been losing ground, and the Saints feel that they need Brother Herring for the help he can give them. He was pastor there for a number of years until last year.

QUESTION TIME

What did Paul mean in 2 Corinthians 3: 6 about "ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit"?

It will be noticed that the next verse discusses the Mosaic law, written upon the tables of stone. The previous verse refers to this law of the letter, as distinguished from the law of the Spirit through the New Covenant of Jesus. The King James Version does not capitalize the word "spirit," but the Inspired Version does, as does also the Emphatic Diaglott, the Weymouth Version, and the Twentieth Century Version. As found in the Inspired Version, the text states:

"Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

The term "not of the letter" does not refer to the letter of the New Covenant, as the construction might lead one to suppose, but to the letter written in stone—the Mosaic law. While the Twentieth Century Version is not as strict, in grammatical construction, to follow the Greek arrangement, it does give a clear statement of this reference to the Mosaic law, stating:

"Who himself made us fit to be ministers of a New Covenant, of which the substance is, not a written law, but a Spirit. For the written Law means Death, but the Spirit gives Life."

The term "the letter killeth" refers to the sentence of death which the Mosaic law contained, and which all incurred, for no one kept the law perfectly. The New Covenant is referred to elsewhere by Paul (Romans 8: 2) as "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," which frees from the "law of sin and death."

Explain the term "hate father and mother," etc., in Luke 14: 26.

The requirement to hate father and mother and one's "own life also" contains two inferences that the strict English wording does not convey. Its real significance is to choose something else in preference, or, as Barnes says: "love less," as shown in Matthew 10: 37. The text also means a turning from earthly ties and aims, and the choosing of the life offered by Christ. This is to "hate the one, and love the other" (Matthew 6: 24). Literally, it is to detest, by contrast, the worldly things of this life, because of the glorious realities of the higher life.

Does the dominant church of Utah accept the Inspired Version?

I believe the Utah people admit that Joseph Smith made a translation or version of the Bible, which our Inspired Version represents. However, it has been claimed that he never completed the work, but intended to carefully go over the whole work again before it should be published. I do not know what written evidence they have, if any, that he had such intention. But this view would mean that they do not accept the work in its present form as being Joseph Smith's completed version.

Is the Inspired Version completed?

In Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 723, of which Joseph the Martyr was editor, he states:

"I completed the translation and receiving of the New Testament, on the second of February, 1833, and sealed it up, no more to be opened till it arrived in Zion."

On July 2, 1833, the Presidency wrote to the "Brethren in Zion" the following:

"Having finished the translation of the Bible, a few hours since, and needing some recreation, we know of no way we can spend our time more to divine acceptance, than endeavoring to build up his Zion."—Church History, volume 1, page 303.

This would clearly show that the entire work had been covered, but whether or not it was Joseph's intention to go through it again before being published, as some claim, there is no written evidence, so far as I know. There are a few errors in the work as published, some of which may be typographical or clerical. Such as are discovered will of course be corrected when the new edition is published.

How many comprise a quorum of deacons, teachers, priests, and elders?

Doctrine and Covenants 104: 38-41 shows that twelve deacons, twenty-four teachers, forty-eight priests, and ninety-six elders, respectively comprise a quorum of each. The number of quorums of each, however, is determined by availability and need.

Attleboro, Massachusetts

Increased Interest in Church Work—Young People Alert

Thus far in 1933, Saints in Attleboro have taken more interest in church work than ever before. The young people especially have manifested a keen desire to be of service. While the members are in no better financial condition than many, they feel that God has blessed them spiritually.

In February the branch held its annual roll call supper. The Temple Builders had charge of the supper and entertainment. There were more than a hundred present, and a fine feeling of brotherhood prevailed.

Early in the year the young people began to hold their own prayer services each Wednesday evening. This resulted in an increase of one hundred per cent in prayer meeting attendance and above all, the meetings have held the interest of the young people and have been a source of strength to them. The young men have organized a club, which meets on Monday every two weeks in the homes of the members.

From this club came an idea for a Latter Day Saint gospel team. For a theme for their service they chose "Adventuring in the Gospel Life." This theme was divided into five sub-topics as subjects for original talks. The service was rounded out with appropriate hymns, Scripture reading, and violin and trumpet solos. This service was tried out in Attleboro in the early part of March. Since then the team has been to Fall River, Providence, and Boston branches. It is the aim of these young men to arouse other young people to an interest in church work and at the same time secure valuable experience for themselves.

During the first two weeks in March Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley visited the branch and gave a fine series of lectures. These lectures not only strengthened and encouraged the older Saints but were educational to the youth as well. Every meeting was well attended.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here twice during March. The first time he gave an illustrated lecture on his travels in the Holy Land. During the second visit he gave a series of three illustrated lectures on archæological findings in Central America and their relationship to the Book of Mormon.

The L. D. S. Club, a young people's social organization has been meeting each month in the church. The members sponsored an entertainment in April. Plans were made for a wiener roast held May 20. With a desire to help the branch, the club has taken this way of raising money.

Through the vision of the chorister, Sister Helen Coombs, and the effort of the choir, Temple Builders, and women's department, the choir has vestments. The Temple Builders gave a California chicken supper and the choir promoted two successful bean suppers to pay for the cloth; the women's department gave time and services to making the vestments. The choir sang the "Crucifixion" in a candlelight service on Palm Sunday, and will present a concert May 26.

The young people joined the youth from all Attleboro churches and vicinity in a sunrise service Easter Sunday. Ten of the young people of this branch sang in a choir organized for the service. Merril Nash and another young man played trumpets for accompaniment. In the evening a well-arranged program was given by the primary department in charge of Sister Mildred Heap.

In addition to the preaching by Pastor Earl Bradshaw and members of the local priesthood, Attleboro was privileged to hear Elder Fred Roberts, of Providence, deliver three fine missionary sermons.

The sacrament services have been wonderfully spiritual meetings. In them the Saints have received inspiration in their efforts, and have been brought close together in desire and purpose.

Lennox, California

Have Set Goal of Ten New Converts

Saints of this mission are hopeful of progress for the rest of the year. Many testify of God's goodness and mercy to them while clouds of depression hover low.

Two other members lately joined this group. Isaac Owens and Benjamin Owens were baptized during the conference by Brother W. J. Menzies at Central Los Angeles Branch.

Everyone took part in the Easter program April 16.

This mission set its goal for 1933, at ten new converts. They ask the prayers of the Saints that they may attain this end. They pray that with the help of the Father, the work will move forward everywhere, and every member will feel it his duty to do his part willingly and in harmony with God's law.

Muskegon, Michigan

Rally Days Serve as Peaks of Interest

The men of the church are again banding together for the purpose of fixing up the lawn and beautifying the church property in general. Such a spirit of splendid cooperation for the advancement of God's work as is displayed here is unusual.

District President A. C. Barmore completed a two-week series of meetings at Muskegon April 19. His talks were instructive and the illustrated scenes were interesting, especially those of Australia where Brother Barmore was a missionary for many years.

The midweek prayer meeting on Wednesday evening and the young people's meeting on Friday evening, which were discontinued during the winter months, have been resumed.

Rally day was observed Easter Sunday with all day services as follows: Priesthood meeting at nine o'clock; prayer service at ten; Easter program at eleven. Dinner was served in the basement at noon by the young men. Preaching service, Elder Barmore speaker, began at two-thirty. Round-table talk, in charge of Brother Barmore and Branch President Archie Whitehead, at four o'clock; supper in the basement at five-thirty. Song service began at seven followed by an anniversary preaching service by Elder Whitehead, it being fourteen years ago April 19, that this branch was organized.

Brother and Sister Everett Smith and family who have spent the past three years at South Bend, Indiana, have returned to Michigan and are living on a farm near Shelby.

The Saints look forward to next rally day which will undoubtedly be combined with Children's Day. There are several names handed in for baptism on that day. Some children are also to be blessed.

Brother Clifford Kimball who underwent a serious operation recently, has been moved to the Muskegon County Sanatorium. He has a bad case of tuberculosis, and asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf.

Elder Whitehead and wife spent a week at the home of Mr. and Sister A. McMichael and family, of South Haven, last month. Elder Whitehead is planning to return there to open up the latter-day work.

Several from Muskegon are planning to attend the conference at Hammond, Indiana, next month. It is with anticipation that they look forward to this meeting, as they expect to have some more laborers for the Lord in this part of his vineyard. The names of Douglas Osborn, priest, and Floyd Deal, two energetic young men were voted on while District President A. C. Barmore was here, Brother Osborn to the office of elder and Brother Deal to the office of priest. The vote of approval was unanimous, and these two names will be presented to the conference.

Tabor, Iowa

Review of Forward-moving Activities

Tabor Saints have had several interesting meetings this year and have enjoyed visits from various church workers. The branch was pleased to welcome President Smith last fall and to hear his message. Elder E. Y. Hunker gave a fine series of sermons on "The Kingdom of Heaven." At different times J. A. Hanson, Brother Christy, Otis Currie, and Ray Whiting have been here.

The worship programs of the church school, Mable Leeka superintendent, have been interesting and worth while. Those in charge find the Herald outlines helpful as a program basis.

Morrel Cottew was appointed young people's leader at a combined meeting with Shenandoah young people.

In November they presented "Milestones," the play written by Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess and commemorating the life of Joseph Smith. The young people were in charge of evening programs for Christmas and Easter. The theme for the latter was, "Take Up Thy Cross," and special numbers were presented as a prelude to the play, "The Challenge of the Cross," which was given under the direction of Maurine Greene. The use of candlelight made the simple setting pretty, and added to the effectiveness of the play.

On April 19, Brothers Wellman, Grover, and Landon, the bishopric of this district, spent the day at Tabor. All enjoyed a basket dinner followed by a profitable round-table discussion with Brother Wellman in charge.

May 7, a group of Shenandoah young people presented a play, "The Gift," for a Tabor audience. It was a pleasure to have them here. Tabor members hope to visit their branch, May 28, when President F. M. McDowell will be there. Saints are looking forward to the Lamoni convention which some hope to attend.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Good Spirit in Many Services

The Spirit of the Master was present at the Easter services here. In the morning, following the church school, the little folks presented a short program, and Pastor A. G. Owings delivered the Easter address. Then the children hunted eggs before the basket dinner was spread for all.

In the prayer meeting that afternoon Brothers Chester Richards and Orlin Crownover were called to the office of priest, which calling brought hope and courage to the whole branch.

The conference of this district convened April 21-23, at Davidson, and ten Calumet members attended. It was the first time most of them had heard President F. M. Smith speak.

Brother Simmons is visiting here at present.

The influence of the Lord's Spirit was felt at the May 7, prayer and sacrament service. Brothers Chester Richards and Orlin Crownover were ordained, and two babies were blessed. Brother Simmons blessed his two great-grandchildren.

The Saints look forward to a rally day soon, and visits from Patriarch F. A. Smith and Apostle R. S. Budd.

The young people are planning to attend the district reunion in a body. An ice cream social and a fourth of July program are being planned to help raise money for necessary expenses.

Cleveland, Ohio

All Departments Well Cared for in East Side Branch—Priesthood Are Visiting

A good program, arranged by Sister Annie McNeil, was enjoyed Easter morning. The junior choir assisted with special music and the children with recitations and songs. Elder John A. McNeil preached the morning sermon which was followed by a solo by Sister McNeil, "Before the Crucifix," by La Forge. The church was prettily decorated with flowers which were later sent to Brother and Sister Farnfield who have been ill for some time.

That evening Brother Harvey Spiller delivered a good address on the theme, "Oh, Ye of Little Faith," and Sister McNeil sang, "Consider the Lilies," by Topliff.

The branch was recently saddened by the death of Sister Ella M. Foster who passed away Saturday evening, April 8.

Brother and Sister Orville Loading have a little daughter. Sister Blanch Johnson also has a little girl, born April 20.

The Saints were sorry to hear of the decision of Brother and Sister George Lindsay to take up their residence at Kirtland. Brother Lindsay was associate pastor. His labors at Cleveland were much appreciated.

Brother George W. Robley was here recently for ten days. His visits are always greatly enjoyed by Cleveland Saints.

Brother Harvey Spiller and Brother Ed. Cooper are to be commended for their extensive visiting in the branch. They are enjoying a great degree of the Spirit in their work which is felt by all with whom they come in contact.

Brother and Sister J. A. McNeil celebrated their silver wedding anniversary a short time ago and the branch presented them a lovely basket of flowers.

Pittsburg, Kansas

Visits of Elder A. T. Higdon Very Helpful

Early Easter morning the young people held the first of a series of prayer meetings. They met in an upstairs room of the church, about forty-five being present. The meeting, the most inspiring prayer service held for some time, was of great benefit to all who attended.

That evening the choir, under the direction of Miss Beatrice Deaver, presented an impressive vesper service. Though only recently organized, the choir has progressed rapidly, and made a creditable showing.

On the Friday following Easter the junior young people's class sponsored a banquet for the members of the branch. Seventy-five attended and were shown an enjoyable evening. The banquet was given for the social opportunities it had and to arouse a spirit of cooperation and willing helpfulness. District President A. T. Higdon gave the address of the evening his topic being "Let Us Work Together," the theme of the evening. His talk was inspiring.

In March Brother Higdon was here to stir up interest in church work through home visiting. He is regarded with respect and affection by Pittsburg Saints.

Flint, Michigan

The church in Flint, under the leadership of Pastor A. H. DuRose, has shown a steady growth during the past few months. Interest in various activities of the church has been encouraging to the leaders of every department.

Flint people have profited much from a recent series of missionary sermons by James W. Davis, who has been employed here.

During the month of April, church people enjoyed several interesting services. Sunday evening, April 2, Apostle D. T. Williams talked on "Technocracy and the Brotherhood of Man." A blessing service was arranged for the morning of April 9. The children worshiped with the adults in this service. On the evenings of April 12 and 13, Apostle F. H. Edwards gave the Saints much timely instruction. An illustrated sacred program was given on the evening of Good Friday.

Two enjoyable services were arranged

for Easter Sunday. The baptism and confirmation of five girls from the junior department was the main feature of the morning service. "Life More Abundant," was the subject of a sermonet by George E. Burt. "An Easter Message," sung by Robert Ellis and a reading, "He Rose Again," given by Zola McNamara, added to the beauty of the service. In the evening, "The Resurrection of Christ," was the subject of a sermonet, by James W. Davis. The choir gave the cantata, "Death and Life." The soloists were Ruth Rager and Lucile Provost, soprano; Lucile Barker, contralto; Rolland Provost, tenor, and Allen C. Pohly, bass.

On the morning of April 23, "Zion Unredeemed," was the theme of a sermon by J. Charles Mottashed, of Detroit.

On Friday evening, April 28, the young people of the Baltimore Boulevard Church made their third presentation of a three-act play, "Brown Eyed Betty."

Holden Stake

Holden, Missouri, Church

Through cooperation of the priesthood and church school officers the pastors have eliminated the confusion formerly attending the assembling for church school, returning to class rooms and reassembling in the main auditorium. Organ music five minutes preceding the opening at nine thirty gives a worshipful setting for the service to follow. During this period of music the congregation is permitted to enter the room quietly and be seated, but no conversation is heard. Children sit with parents and the spirit of worship is invited. No one is permitted to enter during prayer or when any special number is being presented. The service is continuous from the organ prelude till the close of the sermon hour. It is a fitting beginning for the worshiper.

The envelopes suggested by the Bishop for the offerings for both local and general church are used, and the amount and number of contributors have nearly doubled. Nothing is allowed to sidetrack the offering service following the prayer at the 10:45 a. m. service. Provision is made in the annual budget for funds for new books for the library. Some recently added are: The Game Book, by E. E. Closson, and works on teaching, dramatics, etc., published or sold by the Herald Publishing House. The Church Usher's Manual, should be available in each branch for use of the deacon.

Playground activities for all are provided Friday night of each week. Two volley ball courts and a tennis court are provided. Brother Freelin Hampton is supervisor.

The church school activities now include four classes on Sunday evening. Mrs. C. A. Silsby, adults; Freelin Hampton, young people's; Mrs. Freelin Hampton and Mrs. C. W. Ballard classes of junior young people and children's division.

The children's division under the supervision of Mrs. Roy Klecker is growing in numbers. Provision has been made for junior church services twice each month. Sermonets have been given by Brothers Robert Dillon and Freelin Hampton.

A move is taking form looking to the redecorating of the church interior, which is badly needed.

The organization of women under the immediate direction of Mrs. C. A. Silsby has collected nearly two hundred dollars for use of the general church. This is a commendable showing, considering the number who live in the country.

President F. M. Smith, Bishops L. F. P. Curry, G. L. DeLapp and J. A. Koehler, Apostle J F. Garver and Sister J. A. Koehler were Holden's visitors last week. Brother Lowry and son, of Illinois, drove to Holden recently and took Brother F. L. Sawley back with them. Brother Sawley was a missionary in their district for years. He expects to spend the summer in the district, doing such missionary work as his health will permit.

Brother C. B. Woodstock was the morning speaker at Holden on a recent Sunday, and met with officers and teachers of the church school at 2.30 p. m.

Six Latter Day Saint young people are graduates of Holden High School this year: Maurine Hancock, Elizabeth Bowers, Hazel and Helen Ballard, Maxine Lovell, and Robert Kittinger.

Miss Lucille Burroughs, daughter of Sister M. B. Burroughs, of Holden, has been selected as one of the teachers of Holden High School. Miss Bernice Hampton was reelected and Miss Mary Beebe will teach again in Kingsville District.

The Wahdemna Choral Club of Independence gave an evening of music at the church Sunday, May 21. Following the program, light refreshments were served in the home dining room by the Holden Choir.

After twelve successful years serving meals at the Missouri State Fair, the Square Deal Dining Hall, sponsored by the Holden Stake, is withdrawing from the field.

The Saints were pleased to have Bishop C. J. Hunt here recently. He assisted in the sacrament service, May 7. Spoke in the Home chapel at 2.30 p. m., and at the church at 8 p. m.

A. E. Allen is conducting a series of classes and sermons on Sundays at Knobnoster during May. He is solving transportation problems for other ministers in Independence and helping Holden Stake branches. Sunday, May 21, on his way to Knobnoster, he brought C. B. Woodstock to Holden and J. Arthur Davis to Warrensburg. Coming back in the evening he picked them up. Thus one trip furnished ministers for three pulpits. This idea is not copyrighted and others with industrious cars may duplicate without fear of legal interference.

Knobnoster, Missouri

This branch was favored May 7, with a visit from Elder Amos Allen of the Holden Stake bishopric. Other visitors on that day were Brother Erwin Moorman and family, of Independence, and Sister Ella Wood, of Kansas City.

The sacrament service was in charge of Pastor J. T. Nutt, Elder Amos Allen, and Priest E. E. Moorman. An encouraging discourse was delivered in the evening by Brother Moorman.

Brother Amos Allen also delivered the Mother's Day address, May 14, paying splendid tribute to the mothers and basing his remarks on Proverbs 31: 10-31. Preceding the sermon Sister Elsie Nutt sang "O Wonderful Mother of Mine." She was accompanied at the piano by her daughter, Maydeen.

One of the young women of the branch who has qualified as a teacher, Sister Luetta Norman, has secured a school near Sweet Springs, Missouri, for the coming year.

A Cross-Section of Missionary Activities In the Hawaiian Islands

(From a letter written by Brother and Sister R. L. Macrae, of Honolulu, Hawaii, to the father of the former, W. S. Macrae, Holden, Missouri.)

I visited the island of Maui in March and also Malokai, where I baptized four. These with the five members already there, compose a nucleus for activities which are taking form in a Sunday school. This is a strong Mormon settlement, the members having gathered to that point from adjacent places and homesteaded several thousand acres of government land. The presence of an elder from the Reorganized Church caused some stir, but none of the Mormons attended my meetings.

I visited the leper settlement, but was not permitted to make any pictures. Two Latter Day Saints are confined there. While there I was summoned to Honolulu to care for the church work while Brother W. J. Waller was in California. I plan to return to continue missionary work later.

My Sunday's work April 16, started at 4.30 a. m., when we attended a union Easter service at "Punch Bowl," an old crater back of Honolulu. Each year they erect a cross twenty-five by fifteen feet, and at night throw a large flood light upon it. It is an impressive and beautiful sight, and standing there on the brink of the crater, the cross can be seen from all points of the city. At night one can see the great circle of light and the cross outlined on the clouds banked in the distance. Returning from this service, we stopped at home for breakfast and then went to the Japanese

Branch for Sunday school at eight thirty. At 11 a. m. the Japanese, Chinese, and Hawaiian Branches joined for a baptismal service in charge of Brother Etzenhouser and myself. There were fourteen candidates from the three congregations. The ordinance was administered by three priests, from the three branches. This was an impressive service attended by a goodly number. The main church choir rendered a beautiful Easter cantata in the evening.

I am leaving at twelve o'clock for a thirty-mile drive to Kauawa where Brother Lee (Chinese) conducts a church school class in a schoolhouse on Friday afternoons. Thirty children attend and several are about ready for baptism. This is another opening for a church school later.

Sister Macrae writes: "Lester and I went 'surfing' with Sister Ka Awakano and Aloha Kalo. We had a great time. We found surfing a great deal of fun, and came home with a brilliant sunburn."

Omaha, Nebraska

Thirty-sixth and Burt Streets

During the month of February the district conference was held in Omaha. There were the usual business meetings on Saturday and on Sunday morning President Elbert Smith preached. He asked four questions that Christ asked of his disciples and the multitudes. They were (1) Whom do ye say that I am? (2) Can ye drink of the cup? (3) Can ye better the cause? and (4) Lovest thou me? They were questions that gave the Saints food for thought, and, if rightly answered with deeds, will further God's cause. The conference was also favored that morning by the Professional Women's Club Quartet of Fremont. Their numbers were beautiful and inspiring. The Saints claimed one member, Edith Jensen, from Blair, Nebraska.

In the evening the choir sang, "Trust in the Lord," and William Hill, jr., rendered a violin solo. Bishop G. L. DeLapp preached on the present condition of the church, showing the members their task and pointing out the ultimate objective.

During the past three months the following men have occupied the pulpit; Pastor Ray Whiting, Elders Carl T. Self, Marion Cooper, Merl Grover, R. W. Scott, H. A. Merchant, George Stelle and Brother Almo Mefford. These men are to be commended on the support they have given Pastor Ray Whiting since Omaha Branch must share him with a neighboring city, Council Bluffs.

The music department has been faithful and has done splendid work under the leadership of Dorothy Gunsolley Stoft. The first half hour of the Sunday night service is devoted to music of the choir and other special numbers.

The Council Bluffs and Omaha young people have organized, and call themselves the Tenth Legion. President Floyd McDowell came for their first dedication service in Council Bluffs. About fifty members pledged their services and talents to the church at their candlelight service.

On Easter Sunday babies of this branch were blessed by Elders Carl T. Self, W. T. Wellman and R. W. Scott. The little ones were Dennis Weymour Huff and Nancy Lynn Huff. The Sunday before Robert Dale Ferguson was blessed.

Also on Easter Sunday, Rogene Anderson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and David Anderson, formerly of Aberdeen, South Dakota, were here.

Sunday, May 23, Apostle F. H. Edwards visited Omaha. He preached in the morning using as his theme, "Every Day Is a Day of Judgment." Harry Greenway sang the "Twenty-third Psalm," and the quartet sang "Love Divine."

In the evening of May 7, a consecration service was held, and Apostle John Garver was present. At this time Brother Lee Landon, of Council Bluffs, and Merl Grover, of Omaha, were consecrated as counselors to Bishop Wellman under the hands of Apostle Garver, Pastor Ray Whiting, and Bishop Wellman. The service was impressive and inspirational.

Brothers Merl Grover and Marion Cooper have been broadcasting splendid sermonets over station KOIL, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Educational Department.

Parsons, Kansas

Easter Spirit Lingers Here

Easter Sunday was an occasion much enjoyed by Parsons Saints. The eleven o'clock service was in charge of the young people. A pageant was presented and those taking part are to be commended for the manner of presentation; also those who spent their time and patience in the practice of the smaller children. Besides the main feature there were songs, recitations, and solos.

Continuing the spirit of Easter, the Saints witnessed the baptism of Brother and Sister Dennis, the rites being performed by Pastor Henry Ford. The observance of the power of God in administration convinced these two young people of the truth of the latter-day gospel. The branch felt their loss from its number as on the following Thursday they left for Lomita, California, where they expect to make their home.

On the return to the hall, dinner was served, and the confirmation service was held at 2.30 p. m. Elders officiating in the confirmation were Henry Ford, Daniel Gray and Norman W. Gray.

The women's department has quilted two quilts and is now working on the third. They have planned a bazaar to be held later in the year and are making many useful articles for the sale. Eggs were dyed and sold at Easter which netted some profit. Money is being raised in these various ways to apply on the pledge of the department.

Elder Amos T. Higdon, president of Spring River District, arrived in the branch May 7, to spend a week conducting classes for the priesthood. The branch always enjoys the visits of Brother Higdon.

A recent service was held at the home of Pastor Ford on Wednesday evening and a goodly crowd was present including Saints from Chanute. The ordinance of the blessing of little children was administered to Harold Ralph Merrifield by Elders Henry Ford and Daniel Gray. Many prayers and testimonies strengthened the faith and hopes of the Saints. All are desirous of continuing in the covenant they have made and in the preparation for the redeeming of Zion.

Midland District (England) Meets in Conference

Apostle John W. Rushton Principal Speaker

On Easter Saturday and Sunday, April 15 and 16, Saints of Midland District assembled at Sutton-in-Ashfield for the annual district conference. Throughout the whole time a beautiful spirit prevailed. The conference theme was "The Higher Life."

There were present four general church appointees, Apostle J. W. Rushton, Bishop A. T. Trapp, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, and Missionary F. O. Davies. These four men with the district presidency presided over the conference.

On Saturday evening at seven o'clock the business session was opened by the singing of "Praise Ye the Lord," followed by prayer by Brother Greenwood. This session included the annual election of officers. There was no change in officership from that of last year.

Sunday morning the first speaker was Bishop A. T. Trapp who talked inspiringly on, "Occupy Till I Come." He clearly portrayed the financial position of the church and how each one can help lift the burden.

Apostle J. W. Rushton was the principal speaker of the day, and spoke immediately following Bishop Trapp. He told how on this Easter morning all the world was celebrating the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

At the church school the young people of the district gave a number of musical selections, and there was a short talk by Brother W. Bailey, director of Religious Education for the district.

The fellowship service which followed was characterized by the good Spirit's presence.

In the evening Apostle Rushton was

www.LatterDayTruth.org

again the speaker and his text was "First I saw a new heaven, then I saw a new earth."

During the day two solos were rendered by Sister Ada Davies, wife of Missionary F. O. Davies. In the morning she sang "Higher Ground," and in the evening, "The Sanctuary of the Heart."

Far West Stake

Far West Stake has at least two events of importance to look forward to in the near future. One is the tour of the stake that President F. M. Smith will make on May 21 and 28. The first Sunday he will speak at Cameron in the morning and afternoon and at Stewartsville in the evening. The following Sunday, he will meet with the northern part of the stake at Guilford in the morning and afternoon. In the evening he will speak at the vesper service at the First Church in Saint Joseph. This schedule enables practically all groups to attend at least one service without traveling a very great distance.

The second event of importance is the O. T. Z. convention which will be held the next Saturday and Sunday, June 3 and 4 at Guilford. This is a stake-wide young people's gathering and is one of the quarterly events provided by and for the young people. Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, will be the guest speaker.

Guilford Branch

Easter ushered in a series of activities for Guilford Branch which will carry over until the last of June. A rally day for the northern part of Far West Stake was held at Guilford Saturday, April 15. Elder Ward A. Hougas, president of the stake, had charge of the meetings during the day. Apostle John F. Garver gave two interesting sermons at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. Prayer service was held at 2 p. m. Brother John Hovenga, of the stake bishopric, was also present. There were delegates from Ross Grove, Sweet Home, and Bedison branches. A basket lunch was served in the basement at noon. The busy season of the year hindered some from attending, but all who were present felt blessed to a great degree.

Easter Sunday dawned bright and beautiful and the Saints' church joined with the other churches of the town in a union sunrise service, held at the Christian Church. Brother W. T. Ross, president of the branch, gave a talk and a girls' quartet from the young people's class sang. Next year the service will be held at the Saints' church.

Church school convened at 10 a. m. with Miss Neva Ross, superintendent, in charge. At eleven o'clock the O. T. Z.'s conducted the service and gave a fine program. All parts of the service were rendered by the young people themselves including musical numbers, readings and prayers.

Easter closed with services at 7.30 p. m., Elder Orman Salisbury, of Saint Joseph, being the speaker.

The O. T. Z.'s, under the sponsorship of Miss Neva Ross, are preparing a play to be given soon in the church basement. The proceeds will be used to defray the expenses of the group that will attend the young people's convention at Lamoni.

The Saints are happy to have Elder J. Charles May in the branch for home visits and meetings. He will spend a few weeks in that territory.

All are looking forward to President Smith's visit on May 28, when Guilford will again be host to the neighboring branches.

The O. T. Z.'s are making preparations for entertaining the stake convention which will be held there June 3 and 4, and are looking forward with anticipation to that event.

This organization meets on the second Thursday night of the month at the home of some member. Supper is served by the hostess, but each member contributes some dish for the meal. A business meeting is held and also a social time is enjoyed.

The women's department is also organized. Mrs. Gertrude Turner is sponsor and Mrs. Crystal Anderson is her assistant. Miss Leola Torrance is secretary. They meet the first Wednesday afternoon of each month. Next month each member is to tell the story of a woman in the Bible. On Wednesday afternoon, April 12, the department met at the church and gave it a general cleaning.

Bedison Branch

On May 7, Bedison Saints enjoyed a visit from the stake president and stake bishop, Ward A. Hougas and Milo Burnett, respectfully. The whole branch turned out to hear these two stake officials and a fine response was given them. Bishop Burnett spoke in the morning and Elder Hougas addressed them in the afternoon. A basket dinner was spread at noon.

First Saint Joseph Church

A lovely day helped in the commemoration of Mother's Day. The worship period of the church school was in charge of the mothers with the theme, "The Love of Home," prevailing in the talk and special musical numbers by a mother's quartet. After the lesson period, the program was continued, the theme changing to "The Love of Mother," and all the mothers were seated as guests in front rows. A program of musical numbers and readings by the younger ones was given for the mothers. This included a selection by a mixed quartet, an effective musical reading, "When Mother Sang to Me," and a solo, "Mother O' Mine." Elder Howard C. Timm gave a sermonet.

The children's division did not overlook mother on her day. All the mothers were invited to the lower auditorium where a short program was given by the children. The teachers had prepared little baskets in which they put pansy plants. Each child gave his mother one of these baskets of pansies as a token of his love.

In the evening the music carried out the theme of the day, using many of the beautiful songs associated with the traditions of Mother's Day. The choir sang "Jesus, Savior Pilot Me," and Evan J. Ehlers sang "Mother of Pearl." Elder Howard C. Timm delivered the Mother's Day sermon.

Several good sermons have been enjoyed in recent weeks. On April 23, Elder O. Salisbury delivered a strong sermon on the subject, "Break Not Thy Covenant." In the evening Elder Howard C. Timm gave a fine sermon. Pastor Ward A. Hougas continued his series based on "The Sermon on the Mount," at the vesper service, April 30 and May 7. These sermons have been very practical applications of the principles taught by Christ in his Sermon on the Mount.

A minstrel and box supper was sponsored by the Anti-Can't Class on Friday, April 28. A jolly evening was enjoyed and a sum was cleared for branch expenses.

Second Saint Joseph Church

Services at Second Church have been well attended the past few weeks and a good spiritual tone has been noted. The sermons have been delivered by men of the local priesthood and visiting members. Brother V. E. Sheppard, of Fanning, Kansas, was a visitor April 30, and addressed the congregation in the evening. His theme, "Do We Want to Become More God-like?" was taken from 2 Peter 1: 5-7. The choir rendered the anthem, "Come, Gracious Spirit," by Carrie B. Adams and a vocal solo, "Resignation," by Caro Roma, was sung by Mary Edmunds.

On May 7, Elder Howard C. Timm was the speaker in the evening on the subject, "The Call to the Heights." Many inspiring thoughts were presented by Brother Timm among which was that of the three-story house of an individual's life as described by Doctor Josiah Strong. The ground floor represents the physical nature, where man eats and drinks; the second floor, the intellectual nature, and the third, the spiritual to which man should attain and occupy as much as possible.

Mother's Day, May 14, was fittingly observed throughout the day. The church school was in charge of the mothers. Elder F. R. Gist delivered an appropriate sermon at the morning hour.

A special Mother's Day program was enjoyed in the evening which was also

in charge of the mothers. The church was filled to capacity and the program consisted of appropriate readings and exercises by the young folk and little tots as well as a selection by a male quartet from Benton Junior High School who sang, "That Wonderful Mother of Mine," a vocal solo, "Little Mother of Mine"; a musical reading, "That's What God Made Mothers For"; a short play, "The World Pays Homage to Mothers," and a tableau, "My Mother's Faith." Bishop Milo Burnett gave a sermonet following this program.

The Lo-Se-Jo Society, organized the first of the year, has been progressing under the leadership of its president, Marybell Bear. The society meets on Sunday evenings and after class study, which is conducted by Pastor Orman Salisbury, a program is given. They are studying the Doctrine and Covenants and the lessons prove very interesting and instructive. The average attendance since the first of the year is thirty members.

The women's department has been busy preparing for a bazaar to be given sometime next month. They are also doing much visiting of the sick and needy ones, administering to their needs as far as possible. Get-together meetings are held every month and all members of the church are invited. Programs are given and luncheon served and a spirit of good will is promoted among all. The department has proved a great help to the church in a financial way also.

The Saints have been busy at Second Church the past few weeks repairing the building preparatory to giving it a coat of paint. The work is progressing rapidly with the help of volunteer workers and should soon be completed. About two dozen spirea plants have been set along the east and west sides of the church, and these with a small evergreen tree on each side of the entrance make the place very attractive.

Hammond, Indiana

Activities Increase Here

At this season of the year, characterized by the awakening of life, there has been corresponding activity and life in the work of the branch.

On Easter Sunday the resurrection of the Christ was celebrated with reverence. In the morning the choir rendered special music and Brought D. H. Smith preached the sermon, emphasizing the thought that it is the task of the church to follow the risen Christ in the way he has set for his people.

That evening Sister Eleanor Myers presented a beautiful program, "Easter Dawn," members of the branch composing the cast. "The Message of the Cross," was read by Louise Ellis and Lola Smith. Sister Myers is to be congratulated on the success of this Easter program as the costumes and presentation were very good.

The Saints look forward to the district conference, to be held at Hammond in June, and trust that all may rejoice together.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The stake monthly priesthood meeting was held at 3 p. m. May 14, the stake presidency, C. E. Wight and George C. Mesley, being in charge. As announced at last meeting, a prayer service was enjoyed, the theme being, "Our Need of a Pentecost." The time was well occupied by the fifty men present, then they met in quorum capacity. A good feeling exists among the men of the ministry.

Argentine Church

Apostle J. A. Gillen gave a stirring sermonet at the church school Sunday morning, May 14, reading Psalm 137. Brother Gillen was pastor of this congregation for ten years.

At 7.45 that evening Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, gave the Mother's Day sermon. His splendid talk was well received, and at the close he was given many words of commendation.

Second Church

The few Saints there are remembering the statement of their late pastor, Elder Francis Evans, to keep their services for the benefit of the few Saints living in that community. Brother and Sister P. J. Raw and Sister Mildred Lungwitz are faithful attendants although they live six miles from this church. Sister Lungwitz had good Easter and Mother's Day programs.

The O. B. K.'s held a successful jigsaw puzzle party April 7.

Brother P. J. Raw baptized three candidates, Kenneth Morrison, Billy Brohamer and Gladys Eckenroed March 26.

Recent speakers have been E. W. Lloyd, P. J. Raw, Ralph Goold, F. T. Mussell, Berwyn Lungwitz, W. B. Richards, John Tucker, and Harry Sevy.

Sister Alice Evans Baker and Brother John Mallard were united in marriage April 7.

Mr. John and Sister Anna Myers Valaer's infant son was blessed Easter Sunday and given the name, John Louis.

Filey D. Moore, fifty-six years old, passed away May 13, at his home. He is survived by his wife, Sister Margaret Moore, six sons, and two daughters.

Bennington Heights Church

The women's department had charge of the eleven o'clock service April 9. Sister Zimmerman was in charge, and Sister Charles C. Koehler, of Independence, was the speaker.

The evening service was devoted to the observance of Palm Sunday. The program was prepared and conducted by Pastor O. G. Helm with the assistance of the church choir. The story of the last days of Christ's mission on earth was given in the form of Scripture readings and songs.

Easter evening was devoted entirely to a vesper service. The theme of the service was "The Resurrection of Christ." The choir rendered songs of the resurrection and Brother S. D. Hastings led the responsive readings. A duet was sung by Sister Mary Helm and Sister Lulu Tyrrell. Elder George C. Mesley gave an address on the crucifixion and the resurrection of Christ. The program was prepared by Brother Edward Larson.

Edward Larson was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour on the morning of April 23. Harvey Agin, Bennington's only representative in the stake music contest, sang one of his numbers to be used in the contest. Elder Joseph Luff was the speaker of the evening.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker of the morning service April 30. Elder Amos Allen was the speaker of the evening. Preceding the sermon Ralph Freeman gave his oration, an entry in the stake oratorical contest.

Sacrament service was observed Sunday, May 7. Those of the priesthood present were O. G. Helm, pastor, Edward Larson, E. H. Agin, Don Stafford, and S. D. Hastings.

At the regular six-thirty hour Sunday, May 7, the following officers were nominated for the ensuing year, final action was had at stake conference. Pastor, O. G. Helm; associate pastor, Edward Larson; adult advisor, Sister Clara Schwartz; young people's advisor, Sister Agnes Curtis; director of music, Sister Mary Helm; head of women's department, Sister Zimmerman, and superintendent of primary department, Sister Georgia Bininger. After the election discussion was held regarding plans for the Children's Day porgram.

Brother Charles C. Koehler, of Independence, was the speaker Sunday evening, May 7.

Lloyd Laughlin, a member of Bennington for many years, was married to Miss Nellie Freeze recently.

One of the adult classes of the Bennington Heights church has started a drive to gain new members and to rouse interest in members who are not attending regularly. Each month class meetings are held at the home of one of the members, and often, surprise meetings are held at the home of persons not in their class but elegible for membership.

John Mawhiney, sales agent for the Herald at Bennington, is receiving much attention from the members. John does not ask the members to buy the Herald. He hands them the Herald and asks for their nickel. He is a successful salesman in the group and a good worker.

The morning worship service, held at nine-thirty each Sunday morning is now presided over by the young people. Victor Witte has charge of the meetings. He chooses a theme for each service and scripture readings and songs in accordance with the theme. Musical numbers are furnished by individuals from the choir. A selected poem is sometimes used also. The meeting is closed by sentence prayers from individuals.

A Mother's Day program was given under the direction of Sister Bininger and Brother Harley Sampson. Those participating were Fred Witte, Victor Witte, Mary Agin, Harvey Agin, Beulah Hare, Melba Sampson, Kenneth Sampson, Charlotte Sampson, Paul Sampson, Madalyn Stafford, Don Stafford, Sister Velma Stafford, Irene Helm, Dorothy Helm, Sister Mary Helm, Maxine Schwartz, Aileen Schwartz, Sister Clara Schwartz, Jack Rininger, John Mawhiney, Raymond Mawhiney, Sister Nelson, Sister Zimmerson, Sister Castile, Margaret Clark, and Elmer Curtis.

Independence

Latter Day Saint boys and girls of Independence have made a good name for themselves in the scholastic, forensic, athletic, and dramatic standing of the public school system during the school term which closed last week. In the graduating class alone, the following honors were won by students who are members of the church: Scholarship medal, Arlton Westwood; Mathematics prize, second place, Arlton Westwood; Mary Sturges Art Memorial, first, Iris Tordoff; Laura Mercer prize, second, Frances Bryant; W. C. T. U. Essay Reward: senior, Vernon Esgar; junior, La Von Budd; sophomore, Alice Constance; Business and Professional Women's Club, stenography and typing, first, Maxine Keir. Others won honorable mention. Of the thirty-three members of the National Honor Society, chapter 266, in the graduating class, thirteen are Latter Day Saints. Lower classmen have also taken places of rank and credit.

Elder Frank Veenstra, missionary to Holland, and Sister Veenstra, returned to the United States and arrived home in Independence at the close of the Joint Council sessions in Independence. The principal cause for their return was the state of Sister Veenstra's health. Brother Veenstra has been appointed to labor in the Utah District, and will leave shortly for his field.

The women's sacrifice offering, raised over a six-month period, amounts approximately to $5,050.

A large number of the Boy Scouts of the church in Independence took part in the roundup of Greater Kansas City last Friday and Saturday nights. Church troops who participated were 222, Spring Branch; 223 and 226, Stone Church; 224, Liberty Street; 227, Walnut Park-Enoch Hill.

Stone Church

The worship service of the church school which meets in the main auditorium of the Stone Church, was dedicated Sunday morning by Superintendent S. A. Thiel, to the teachers of the school and especially to Sister Ada Cochran who was celebrating her thirty-second anniversary of continuous teaching in the intermediate department. During this long period of service Sister Cochran has been tardy once and has been absent not more than one Sunday each year. The boys' choir, directed by Miss Marcine Smith and assisted by Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano, sang one number. Sister Cochran was presented a large bouquet of flowers as a token of honor and gratitude from the school.

Apostle M. A. McConley, the morning speaker, chose to base his powerful sermon on Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8 and 2: 1, and pointed out three major things that are wrong with the world and which only a deep and sincere love for the gospel of Jesus Christ will cure: (1) The world is war weary. (2) Our spiritual life has been frostbitten, and (3) we have gone pleasure mad.

The Stone Church Choir sang "Peace, Perfect Peace," by Protheroe, the incidental solo being sung by Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto. Paul N. Craig directed and Robert and George Miller played organ and piano. "Fear Not, O Israel!," by Spicker, was then sung, soloists being Mrs. Nina G. Smith, soprano, Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto, and L. A. Woodside, baritone. Pastor J. F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder H. G. Barto.

A large congregation witnessed the wedding of Miss Olive Ellen Curtis, daughter of Mrs. Louise M. Curtis, and James B. Moses Sunday night following a half-hour sermon by President F. M. McDowell, who based his discourse on readings from 1 Corinthians and the Book of Ruth. Brother McDowell officiated in the marriage ceremony. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Pauline James Arnson sang "Because," and "I Love You Truly." Mrs. Sunshine Beck, the organist, played the wedding march. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Juanita Curtis, and the bridegroom was attended by Mr. Roy McNeil. Both Mr. and Mrs. Moses attended Graceland College and are well known workers among the young people at Independence. They have many friends who wish them happiness.

Another wedding on Sunday, May 21, was that of Miss Bertha E. Bopra and Harry J. White, which occurred at high noon at the Ammon White home. Forty-eight friends and near relatives gathered to witness the sacred ritual of marriage. The bride is the niece of Brother and Sister Silas Bopra, formerly of Michigan, and now of Independence, and the bridegroom is a son of Elder and Sister Ammon White. Two vocal duet numbers were rendered by Miss Fern Griggs and Mr. Ralph Dunlap, with Mrs. Opal Hanson at the piano. Elder Ammon White read the marriage ceremony. Master Richard McNamara was ringbearer and Katherine Bopra was flower girl. The bridal pair left by auto for a month's trip to New Jersey and Michigan, to visit friends and relatives, after which they will be at home in Independence.

Miss Billie Elva Sibel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sibel, of Woodward, Oklahoma, and William Francis Leeka were married the evening of May 13, at the home of the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Ruth M. Leeka, in Independence. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, uncle of the bridegroom, read the service. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Pauline James Arnson accompanied by Mrs. Paul M. Hanson, sang "I Love You Truly," and "Because." The "Bridal Chorus," from "Lohengrin," was played by Mrs. Hanson. Miss Mildred Sibel, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Miss Rilla Leeka, was bridesmaid. The bridegroom was attended by his brother, Seward Clough Leeka, as best man, and Dale Sibel, brother of the bride, was groomsman. A reception followed the ceremony. After an extended eastern honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Leeka will be at home in Independence.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday was rally day for Walnut Park congregation. Large numbers of Saints turned out at all services, and at the morning and evening meetings heard two inspiring sermons by the pastor. The audience in the evening was especially large and attentive, and Brother Frank McDonald's sermon on the subject, "What Is the Purpose of His Church?" was a powerful appeal and challenge to the membership of Christ's church, wherever they may be found. His text was the second chapter of 1 Corinthians. Preceding this service the choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "Love Divine," and this was preceded by congregational singing under the direction of Brother Erwin Moorman.

At the morning service the pastor's subject was "I Will Build My Church." Special music preceding this sermon was by a string trio composed of Orlando Nace, Milford Nace, Erwin Moorman and Ada Griffice Stout. Mrs. Thelma Countryman accompanied them at the piano.

A special feature at the church school hour, in addition to the introduction of the rally day theme song, "Onward, Forward," under the direction of Erwin Moorman, was a short service honoring the members of the Walnut Park church school who graduated from high school this year. The names of the following young people were read: Paul Anderson, Hazel Hartman, Gomer Stowell, Charles Stowell, George Stowell, William Wilson, Zelma McConnell, Noel Gordon Morgan, Thyra Moorman, Dorothy Pease,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Wayne Smelser, Nenneth Coleman, Audrey Horn, Gene Douglas, Evelyn Phillips, Vern Sappenfield, Alta June Moorman, and Joan Douglas. All were graduates of William Chrisman High School of Independence except Nenneth Coleman, who received his diploma from Buckner High School. The graduates marched in and took seats on the rostrum, where they received a message of congratulation and good wishes from the pastor. Thirteen of these young people are members of the Swastika Class, taught by Kenneth Morford.

The large rally day audience at the religio service was entertained by a program consisting of a number by a male quartet composed of E. E. Moorman, R. G. Blackburn, C. G. Closson and Kenneth Morford; the reading of a group of four original poems by Kenneth Morford, and a violin solo by Eloise Higgins.

Second Church

Speakers on Mother's Day were Elder Ward A. Hougas in the morning and Elder Thomas Richardson in the evening.

May 21, the morning sermon was by Elder Perry Hiles, former pastor, and the evening by Pastor R. W. Howery.

"A Little Parable for Mother," a story, was told by Geraldine Fields at the church school service, Sunday, May 15. A girls' trio, Geraldine Fields, Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Lee Street, sang, "A Flower and a Kiss for Mother." Pastor William Inman talked a short time on the origin of Mother's Day. The regular classes were then assembled.

Calvin Rimmer was in charge of the junior service, and the opening prayer was by Glenn Tripp. Nadine Inman sang, "My Mother's Eyes." A reading, "My Mother," was given by Mary Ethel Hurshman. Mrs. Louderback's Sunday school class presented a short play. "Finding a Mother"; a story, was told by Mrs. Agnes Edmunds. Elder John Miller gave a short talk on Mother's Day.

An organ prelude by Mrs. Gladys Inman, opened the eleven o'clock preaching service. The opening prayer was by Elder F. L. Freeman, sr. Mrs. Kathern Inman sang, "Songs My Mother Used to Sing." The choir sang, "Write a Letter to Your Mother." Patriarch W. McDowell was the speaker, his text being John 19: 26. He paid especial tribute to all mothers.

The seven-thirty service was opened by a duet by Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Lee Street. They sang, "Mother Knows." A string quartet under the direction of Brother Alfred Curtis played "Old Folks at Home" and "Little Mother of the Hills." The girls' quartet, Ruth Bolt, Nadine Inman, Mildred Fulk, and Elsie Lee Street, sang, "There's a Happy Day In the Month of May." The invocation was by Missionary Frank Veenstra, just returned from Holland. The girls' quartet sang, "The Road to Home." Elder V. A. Reese, the speaker, read twentieth verse of the twenty-second section of Doctrine and Covenants 22: 20.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people of Second Church met with the young people living on Enoch Hill in midweek prayer service May 17. Elder William Inman, Second Church pastor, and Brother Roy Settles, church school superintendent, accompanied them.

Splendid music was offered at the morning preaching service Sunday. The choir sang "Matchless Jesus," and the young women's quartet, Sisters Ruth Hays, Ruby Johnson, Rilla Johnson, and May Worth, sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Elder H. E. Winegar was the speaker, and Pastor H. L. Barto was in charge of the service.

Elder W. J. Brewer, a former pastor of this congregation, was in charge of the evening meeting. Brother Brewer has been ill a considerable part of the winter and the Saints are happy to have him with them once more. Elder E. E. Thomas was the evening speaker, and Dick Bullard sang "If We Do Right." Both speakers of the day are local priesthood members.

Sister Esther Kramer, one of the faithful members of this congregation, is able to attend services again after being confined to her bed for several weeks by illness.

Englewood Church

Englewood Saints met in business capacity the evening of May 10, and regretfully accepted the resignation of Pastor Perry Hiles who with his family is moving to Bates City, Missouri. John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, and Elders D. S. McNamara and Perry Hiles were in charge of the service. Brother Roy Howery was elected to act as pastor in this congregation.

Conference Notices

The Northeastern Illinois district conference will be held June 9, 10, and 11, at Mission, Illinois. On the opening night, Friday, the program will be in charge of Mission Branch, assisted by talent from other branches. It will begin at 8 p. m. Central Standard time. Saturday and Sunday will be crowded with activities. Apostle J. F. Garver will be present to preach and teach, and Elder and Sister R. E. Davey will also help. Everyone planning to attend conference should get in touch with the Mission branch president or (and) district presidency, as soon as possible in order that arrangements can be made to care for all visitors. The branch will have full charge of feeding the conference. Music will be in charge of the district music director, Ruby Newman.—C. A. Edstrom, for the district presidency, 1138 South Maple Avenue, Oak Park, Illinois.

Reunion Notices

The reunion of North Dakota will be held at Logan, from June 25 to July 2. Campers will provide their own equipment and food as last year. The grounds are only six miles from Minot on hard-surfaced highway. In these times of uncertainty God is sure, so why not try to get a little closer to him? Come and camp with us the entire time.—Warren McElwain, district president.

Special Notice

Will members of the church in Rock Island District, and those who may contemplate attending our convention and conference at Rock Island, June 9 to 11, from other districts, please note that the Sunday morning and afternoon meetings on Sunday, will be held at the Masonic Temple, Eighteenth Street, and Fifth Avenue, Rock Island? All the other meetings will be held at the Rock Island church, corner Eighteenth Avenue and Tenth Street. This arrangement is being made to accommodate the large number we are expecting to hear President Smith.—E. R. Davis, district president.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Josephine Hare, of Joy, Illinois, asks the Saints to fast and pray for her, that she may be healed of a serious nervous disorder which renders her practically helpless and unable to do her housework and care for her three-year-old son. She feels that only the power of the Lord can restore her.

Our Departed Ones

HOFFMAN.—Jennie G. Donner was born in Belmont County, Ohio, January 29, 1846, to Samuel and Lydia Donner. She was baptized into the church January 27, 1873, by James Brown, and was a faithful member to the end which came April 2, 1933, near Comstock,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Custer County, Nebraska. She and her husband, Henry Hoffman, were pioneers in this part of the State and the first to secure an elder to teach the restored gospel at Comstock, where now there remain a church building and small congregation to bear the evidence of her labors. The funeral sermon was by Elder E. J. Lenox, of Lincoln. Interment was in the little cemetery at Comstock. She was preceded in death by her husband who passed away fifteen years ago.

SMITH.—Cynthia Anne Belden was born in Illinois, November 16, 1854, and passed away at the home of her son, Ross F. Smith, November 6, 1932. She moved to Kansas in 1870, with her parents, settling near Coffeyville. Later she moved to Detroit, Kansas. Was married to Francis E. Smith in 1874, and to them seven children were born. A son, Roy, preceded her in death thirty years. She leaves to mourn, six children, twenty-two grandchildren, thirteen great-grandchildren, two brothers and sisters. She united with the Brethren Church in 1893, and was a faithful worker for her Master in every way. Her task was to live before God, that she should be justified both in asking and receiving the best gifts of the gospel. She bore patiently her serious illness, and calmly awaited the hour when she should be called into the great beyond. She was a woman of Christian devotion and had great faith in God.

CHAPPELOW.—Francis Walter Chappelow was born September 17, 1911, at Harrison, Ohio, and died April 23, 1933, at Independence, Missouri. He moved to Independence with his parents, Frank W. and Martha Chappelow, in the summer of 1920. He became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, December 12, 1920, at Independence, Missouri, being baptized by Elder Arthur Allen, and confirmed by Elder E. E. Thomas and A. K. Dillee. Both parents preceded him to the other side and he made his home with his sister, Mrs. Rawleigh Hall, Fairmount Park, Missouri, at the time of his death. He leaves to mourn, three sisters, one brother, two nephews, and many other relatives and friends. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, the funeral sermon by Elder F. A. Smith.

SELF.—Robert Owen Self was the seventh child of Robert Mann and Emily Baldary Self. He was born July 19, 1853, at Norwich, England. Came to America with his father and eldest brother, George, in the spring of 1867. The rest of the family arrived in this country in July, 1868. In April, 1870, the father and brother, Walter, staked out a claim in what is now known as Palmyra, Nebraska, in November of the same year Robert moved out with the rest of the family, and made his home there for thirty years. In May, 1888, he united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He was ordained a teacher soon after, and served in this office six years; then he was ordained a priest, and served six years in that office. In 1902, he was ordained an elder, and in 1903, a seventy, and was a member of the second Quorum until his retirement in 1920. On February 13, 1889, he was united in marriage to Amelia A. Palmer. To this union one son was born who died in infancy. Brother and Sister Self took their first mission in 1901, traveling in a covered wagon, setting up their tent and holding meetings as they went from place to place, March 25, 1904, they took charge of the Old Folks' Home at Holden, Missouri, as superintendents. In 1904, they returned to Independence, Missouri, where he made his home until death. He was overcome by a stroke, April 19, 1933, and died April 20, 1933. He leaves to mourn his departure, his wife, Amelia Palmer Self; his brother, Walter Self; a large group of nephews and nieces, and a host of friends. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, the funeral services in charge of Joseph Luff, and Richard Bullard, sermon by F. A. Smith.

JORDAN.—Nancy Jordan was born April 27, 1845, and lived a long and useful life. She was baptized a member of the church July 1, 1890, by Elder Emsley Curtis, and her home was open to missionaries and other church workers. She passed away April 30, 1933, at the home of a son, Edward Jordan, Kansas City, Kansas. Besides this son she leaves two daughters, Mrs. Maggie Davis, of Hydrate, Colorado; Mrs. Dutie Goff, of Pasadena, California, and another son, Judson B. Jordan, of Redlands, California. Hers was a beautiful life, and the loveliness of heaven shone on her face as she lay in her casket. The funeral sermon was by Elder E. W. Lloyd. Interment was beside her husband in Mount Hope Cemetery, Kansas City.

WILL SELL my "wind driven electric power plant," patented April 11, 1933, for a small sum cash and five per cent royalty to a Latter Day Saint manufacturer. This plant was invented for the purpose of charging 6-volt radio batteries. It will begin to charge on a 16-mile an hour wind, and a governor takes care of high velocity winds. Weighs 35 pounds complete without tower. Cost of material to build one about $8. Very simple and durable. Can be manufactured and sold at a comparatively low cost. There is a large demand for this invention, and it should make good in the hands of a competent manufacturer. Let me have your cash offers without delay, as I will soon sell to others if not sold through this advertisment. A complete machine will be sent to buyer. Gilbert A. TESTIMONIALS FROM HERALD BOOSTERS

The Herald is the greatest single missionary force and branch helper in the Church today. You are missing something important if it isn't helping you and your branch now.

Think of it! The Herald is reaching nearly 10,000 church homes—not less than 50,000 readers! How about yours?

Read what others have to say about the new Herald:

Likes "Riches Untold"

Miss M. W., Ontario, writes:
"I enjoy reading the Herald very much and look forward from week to week to receiving my copy of same. It is difficult to state which section I like best, as I read it all. Riches Untold is a splendid story and I hope when completed a similar serial will find its way into the Herald columns."

"Wouldn't Be Without It"

A. H., Reedley, California, says:
"The Herald is a real help to us, and we wouldn't be without it."

"Now Read by Young and Old"

L. M. C., Fort Collins, Colorado:
"I look forward weekly to my bundle of Heralds, and am always disappointed when they are delayed in the mails until Saturday, which isn't often. We are all so interested not only in the story, but all articles as well. Until the magazine was combined I doubt if any but two or three of our families gave it much more than a hurried glancing over. Now it is read from cover to cover by all, young and old alike. I am especially interested in the activities of the young people and in articles for and by them."

Making a Scrapbook

Miss M. V., Bisbee, Arizona:
"I am making a scrapbook of extracts from the Herald."

"Like a Drink of Cool Water"

A. M. B., a Missionary, tells us:
"Reading your interesting pages is like drinking cool water from a spring after several hours of famishing thirst. It is refreshing. The story, Riches Untold, is most excellent."

Commends the Staff

Mrs. G. S., Thune, Nebraska:
"The Herald means a lot to us away out here, and there are far too few Fridays when the Herald may be found in the mailbox. It is edifying and a great source of interest to me. Then, too, there is always something that is totally unexpected and therefore more enjoyable. The staff should be commended for such a splendid paper."

"From Cover to Cover"

Mrs. J. Y., Jonesport, Maine:
"Every one is enjoying your wonderful Saints' Herald. I read it from cover to cover, and can't say which part I enjoy the most, although I think the piece about the church and our children was a masterpiece."

"Renewing Today"

L. B., Johnsonville, Illinois:
"I don't want to miss one issue of the Herald. Am sending my subscription renewal today. Please be sure that I receive last week's paper, too."

Saves the Quotations

Brother S., Independence:
"I like the quotations in the Book of Thoughts column. I am saving every one of them and putting them in a book."

"Pleased With the Herald"

Miss K. R., Hibbard, Indiana:
"Every one was pleased with his copy of the Herald, and we are thankful for the new system of purchasing the church paper. We hope to increase our branch order before long."

"Better Than Ever"

E. W. L., a pastor, Kansas City, Missouri:
"I have been reading the Herald since 1878, and I like it better now than ever before. The great improvement has come since the combining of the three publications into one. May the Lord bless you in continuing your work."

Likes Prayer and Testimony

An isolated member writes:
"You will never know how much good we who are isolated get from the pages of the Herald. If I were to take my choice, I think I would pick the prayer and testimony pages, but I like the others, too, and would not think of giving up a single department."

Short Articles Better

A friend in Lamoni tells us:
"I used to criticize the Herald articles for being too long and dry. The new style of shorter articles are much more readable, and I like them a lot better."

The Pigeonhole

Credit

The Pigeon looked solemn this morning. "I see Brother Elbert disclaims responsibility for writing my column here in the Herald. And he had to explode that little myth just as I was really enjoying it! But undoubtedly he is wise, in view of what I have written, as well as what I may yet write. Anyway—" and here he fluffed his feathers proudly, "I really couldn't blame folks for thinking that he wrote some of them. I thought myself that one or maybe two were good enough to have been written by him. But you can put that notion down to my vanity. However," he said in pop-eyed seriousness, "have you noticed that no one has ever given me credit for writing the Blue Pencil Notes"?

Modern Proverbs

By E. Leola Nice

The failure is he who thinks the world owes him a living; the successful man is he who knows he owes the world a life.

Who has never earned something has never known possession.

Look with awe upon the great souls of this life, realizing that their greatness is, not because life has been kind to them, but because they have been kind to life.

Polishing is a pain only the strong can bear.

Live in gloom if you insist, but do not expect to have close neighbors.

If you will spend more time counting your blessings, you will have less time to count your trials.

Some people feel in high altitudes just as others would feel in heaven.

Who would replenish his store of joy must give of it to another.

You will never be a pauper if you put more into life than you take from it.

When you come to a difficult task, don't measure the task—measure yourself.

Shop Notes

THE PRESS ROOM PROLETARIAN says: "The workers of the world are all radical when times are hard and they have no jobs and nothing to eat. But give them a full stomach and a week's pay and they are right back toddling after the capitalist and his bag of candy again. At his bidding they will mob a man who tries to talk to them about political reform or economic justice. . . . And church people are something like that, too. In the depression they holler for Zion. When prosperity returns they all run back to the old ways of living and thinking—every man for himself." Is the Proletarian putting it too strong?

THE PERENNIAL LOVER says that he has quit keeping company with girls. "They keep you up too late," he complains. "A fellow is hardly responsible for what he says after ten o'clock. And I'm getting tired of being a promising young man. I've made too many promises now."

PIUTE PETE declares, "They say the only way to get anywhere is to keep moving; but I've been on the run for twenty years, and I'm still in the same old rut."

Building From Within

7.—Dignity, Reverence, and Spirituality in Church Services

Dignity and quietness provide the necessary atmosphere of reverence and worship for church services. Nothing is so destructive of the mood of worship as noise and conversation. We are given (in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36) the specifications for a house of the Lord, and among other things it is required to be "a house of order."

In the first place equipment can be selected and arranged that will prevent unnecessary noise. Carpets for the aisles, stairs that do not squeak, doors that will not bang, are aids. Folding chairs are the noisiest kind of seating equipment. Any chair or bench not fastened to the floor will be moved or scraped about. The theatre chair, fastened down, with the seat that can be raised, is a little better. Solid pews with high backs, fastened firmly to the floor, are best for the preservation of quiet.

In the second place, the adult members should be trained not to talk and visit before or during the service. Let that wait until the service is over. The pastor can discuss this with his congregation in a kindly way that need not offend. He can deal more firmly with those who obstinately refuse to conform. Adults set notoriously bad examples for the children. The writer was once speaking in a small church when a man old enough to know better came in, visiting right and left as he came up the aisle, and finally sat close to the front. He blinked stupidly for a few minutes, then went to sleep. Nonmembers visiting our churches sometimes receive unfavorable impressions as a result of the conduct of adult members, and do not return.

In the third place, parents should train their children in church deportment. They should keep children near them during services. Infants and small children who suffer during a lengthy service should not be subjected to the strain of remaining, and congregations should not be made to listen to their wailing. Many children gallop up and down the aisles without any attempt at restraint by parents. Parents in other churches can and do take care of their children. Ours could if they would.

An essential part of the program of building the church from within is to make our services dignified, reverent, and spiritual. Until we can do that we shall continue to lose opportunities to present the message to worthy people. The church must support the work of the missionaries by providing a real spiritual home to which new members can be brought. Otherwise they will be lost. L. L.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

ACROSS MY DESK there passed recently a postal card from Hotel Vendome, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, on which the announcement is printed that no beverages containing more than one half of one per cent of alcohol will be sold or delivered in the hotel, or anywhere on the premises connected therewith. This determination to continue as a "quiet, orderly, temperance hotel" is worthy of commendation, and I am confident that hotels and restaurants which pursue this policy will find it pays. I for one will patronize, when occasion demands it, such hotels and restaurants rather than those which serve liquors and beer, and I am sure there are thousands who feel as I do about it. Even the "Wets" are very likely to prefer and will feel safer that their families should be in the "orderly, temperance hotels" or restaurants rather than in "wet" ones.

The battle against the liquor traffic goes on. It may have to be largely one of education, but it is on. And Latter Day Saints because of their traditions as well as teachings are or should be in the ranks of those fighting for clean communities and clean living.

IT IS ALWAYS interesting to read expressions from correspondents who write their sentiments freely, for the glimpses these free running sentiments give of the soul of the writer, grips one as he reads. Nature revealing herself catches the fancy and holds the attention. Too often, perhaps, language is used to conceal our real thoughts; but these too rare occasions when the veneer is stripped off to reveal the inner processes of thought and wishes come only when words flow free from the fear of exposure. A friend whose "chatty" letters reach me at times recently showed a bit of philosophy which we pass on as sure to be of interest to some if not all our readers. Here it is:

"I've been an idealist, I suppose, with a tremendous curiosity about the future—in this way I mean—in my early youth and during my thirties I was privileged to be in the position of helping to counsel and guide a lot of young people and some older ones too, at times, and I was given the opportunity to come in contact with people and to learn to know and understand and sympathize with them in their strength and weaknesses and that there was some good, in fact much good, in every man. We had only to seek for it and concentrate on that and that is the part we would really see most of if we kept knowing that he was our brother (brother or sister).

"I had some rather remarkable experiences, some of which I greatly treasure, and it seemed sometimes that perhaps God in his mysterious way, knowing how truly I love my fellow men, was training me for some special work in his field, but as I grow older I realize that God doesn't need me for any special work, just to do my duty as I find it from day to day, rejoicing in each of the many blessings which are mine. I could be a bit sad about it and think that perhaps it was because I have been found wanting, but I hope that is not the reason. I hope that it may be because he wants me to do the simple things cheerfully, glad that I can give my little share of happiness to others."

Perhaps in waiting for the larger and showier things to do we are resting beside the very thing we should be doing. When we "do with our might what our hands find to do," we are in fact on the road to our big task. So we carry on in our niche, feeling sure that the divine powers guiding the destinies of men will see our labors directed to where we can best serve. F. M. S.

Blue Pencil Notes

I WAS SURPRISED when the "Pigeon" flew in at my open front door one fine spring day recently. Perching himself on my mantel, like Poe's raven, he fixed me with a beady eye: "I suppose," he said, "you know that you are getting credit for writing the 'Pigeonhole,' and that it does not belong to you. What are you going to do about it?" "Did you say credit?" I gasped, "Or am I charged with writing it?" "I said credit," replied the bird, "don't get sarcastic, you know that credit is the word." I replied humbly, "You are right—and I shall have to publish a statement, or go before a notary and swear—or something." So the Pigeon flew away in the general direction of West Short Street; and this is to certify that I have had nothing to do with the "Pigeonhole" or its contents, excepting to read and admire. The Pigeon, by the way, is a younger and better looking bird.

CONTACTS with young people and children may be very inspiring and helpful to a minister. Their reactions are spontaneous and genuine—as Paul would say, "without dissimulation." One of the nicest compliments that I have ever received came to me recently in Portland, Oregon. I had preached for the young people in the morning and was to speak to them again in the evening. As I entered the door of the church in the evening, a boy, perhaps nine or ten years old, met me: "Brother Smith, are you going to speak to us again this evening?" he asked. When I answered in the affirmative, he exclaimed with the utmost enthusiasm: "Boy! O Boy!" That did me more good than a bushel of roses on my casket.

AT VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, I went into the church for the first time, and sat down in the Sunday school. Soon I noticed a girl making eyes at me. That is said to be a thrilling experience —and I hasten to say that this little girl was all of three years old. When I would smile she would dodge down behind the seat back, but soon she was up again exchanging smiles. I learned afterward that she was the little daughter of the pastor. And she had told her mother before my visit, "I will know Brother Smith because he sits like this,"—and she struck a pose, leaning her head upon her hand in a highly meditative attitude. Evidently she had recently observed a picture on the back cover of the Herald.

AS I WAS LEAVING San Bernardino, not so long ago, a fine eleven year old girl came to me shyly and to my surprise emptied her purse into my hand. There was quite a little pile of silver and nickels and coppers—I imagine it was all the money she had in the world. One hesitates to accept such a too generous gift; yet the impulse back of it, the gift itself, unsolicited and not suggested by any other person, is not to be resisted. The act represented her love for the church and her confidence in the man that the church had sent out to preach the gospel.

TO RETAIN the affectionate and respectful regard of young people is an ambition worthy of any minister. To adapt one's sermons at times to their needs and understanding is well worth while. To live that one may in after years be remembered as a worthy exemplar of the message of the church is a ministerial duty.

WHEN I WAS A BOY the few missionaries who visited our part of the country held a very high place in my affections. Sometimes I had a premonition of their coming and would tell my mother that on a certain day Brother C. J. Hunt and Brother W. W. Whiting, for example, would come—and at the time named they were there. One of those old-time missionaries, a venerable man whose name shall not be here mentioned, secured an especially high place in my regard. Judge of my distress when one day the Saints' Herald came to our home announcing that because of immoral conduct he had been released from the ministry. At first I would not believe the announcement—but it was true. A man should hesitate long before he betrays the trust of a boy or girl. Every ordained man has or should have the trust and esteem of at least a few persons. Not to be regarded as of least moment among the few or many are these young in years. Their faith in men and in God is in a formative state; a betrayal of trust may have lasting effects: "I would be true for there are those who trust me."

A YOUNG WOMAN told me that she grew up under the ministry of our honored and venerable Elder James McKiernan. Brother McKiernan was

The Minister's Calendar

● June 12, 13, or 14—Farewell to Conference Visitors

This day should be set to allow time for visitors to the Youth Conference to reach Lamoni by Saturday noon. If on the 14th, the young people can be present at prayer meeting, and the farewell party can be given afterwards, or as a part of the social service. On this occasion the young people may be assured that the prayers and the good will of the whole congregation are with them on their journey and in their Conference deliberations.

● June 18—Youth Day for all the church.

While this day is not officially designated for Youth Day, many branches will be thinking of the young people at the big sacrament service in Lamoni. They will hold a special early prayer service, and the morning worship and sermon will be devoted to the problems of youth. Young people who are unable to attend the Conference will have an opportunity to participate in these services. Remember, the Conference is for all the young people of the Church—not alone for those who attend. (See last week's Herald for program suggestions.)

Themes for Mid-week Prayer Meetings

By J. F. Sheehy

Suggestions

Ask that people come in a prayerful attitude.
No visiting, story-telling, and laughter before the meeting.
Let all visiting wait until the close of the meeting.
Elders "shall direct as they are led by the Spirit."
Do not ever say, "the meeting is in your hands."
"Have all things prepared beforehand," is good advice from the Lord for all our work as well as for the gathering.

Attention, Musicians!

Those musicians who plan attendance at the Youth Conference at Lamoni in June are asked to write at once to Mabel Carlile, Lamoni, Iowa, indicating their choice of the phases of "Music in the Services of the Church" in which they are especially interested. A number of prominent leaders of church music will be in attendance, and in class or group conferences the greatest help possible will be given. Are your needs beginning conducting, or advanced choral work? Do you need help in community sings, in voice training, or in orchestral problems? Are you concerned with local or district music problems? Drop a card today to Miss Carlile.

at all times and in all places such a wise, clean, and kindly minister, and being the only man of the ministry with whom she had association, she thought in her innocency that all Latter Day Saint ministers were like that. When she moved into another field and observed some ordained men who were not like that the experience came to her as a great shock. The man who is not true to his own ministerial standards thus betrays not alone the trust that youth has reposed in him, he betrays also his fellow ministers, the entire ministry, including that One who said, "I have called you and ordained you and sent you forth that you might bear fruit and that your fruit might remain." "My Book of Thoughts"

On Reading

"A good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life." —Milton.

There are few snobs among books. And those who love them belong to a fraternity of kindred souls to whom hearts and intellects are more important than clothes and fortunes. Make a friend of a book that is rich in thoughts, and it will never desert or betray you. It will conduct you into the conversation and intimate comradeship of great minds. It will take you on far journeys, unlock the secrets of the past, and illuminate the dark way that you go into the future. He who makes a friend of books need never be lonely.

A great sculptor once made a statue which showed two figures, nearly identical. One of them was groveling downward towards the earth, and the other, striving to escape from him, was reaching upward toward the light. On the base of the statue, the sculptor carved the words, "I feel two souls struggling within me." All of us are like that. We have the base impulses struggling against the nobler thoughts and aspirations. It is the work of our minds to choose which of these contending forces shall rule our lives, and this decision must be made every day until habit makes us either a slave to one, or a beneficiary of the other.

"On to Lamoni," the Slogan of Elmwood

Bill and Etta Groom Caravan for Hegira

"WELL, what on earth has happened?" Bill Ellison had just driven his coupe into the back yard of the Kett home.

"Oh, Bill," Etta wept miserably, "Everything's gone wrong all afternoon. I wore my best pair of silk stockings and snagged them on a nail, and I've just mashed my thumb with a hammer trying to fix this old box to go on the back of the car, and Kathryn's down in bed with a case of flu, and Dad has had another cut in salary, and—"

"Wait a minute," said Bill, "That's too many now." Etta made a forlorn picture, flushed and hot with her exertions and exasperations, with perspiration and tears running down her face together.

"Come weep on my shoulder," he laughed. "I'm going to have this suit cleaned and pressed tomorrow anyway, and I'd like to get my money's worth for once."

And to Bill's surprise she did. Literally wept on his shoulder. Not little sniffles and dabby tear drops. But big frame-shaking sobs and freshets of salt water. Bill was temporarily awed. She had never acted like this before, he thought. Well, it proved there was always something new to learn.

"Anyway, whatever you do, you do it thoroughly," he said to her. But the storm was soon over, and one brown eye, beginning to clear, peeked upward from the coat lapel.

"All right," said Bill, "That's done. you get some iodine for the thumb and I'll fix up the box."

Troubles were soon forgotten as they went to work on their preparations for the trip to Lamoni and the Youth Conference. Etta even felt better about the sore thumb and the silk stockings. When evening came the car was ready to receive both passengers and luggage, and an announcement came from the sick-room that Kathryn was feeling better and might be out tomorrow. There was time for her to recover and go on the trip.

IN VARIOUS PARTS of Elmwood young people were making similar preparations for the trip. Motors that had been able to give satisfactory city driving service were being tuned up for the harder strain of an overland trip. Boxes were being lashed to running boards, and trunks made weatherproof. Bedding and linen were being packed into the smallest space possible, and plans were made for lunch boxes that would feed the party on most of the trip. Boys were getting one good suit pressed, and finding old clothes for emergencies. Girls made deliberate selections of the dresses they had to take.

"Hard roads all the way," Bill told an assembly of the pilgrims that had gathered at the Kett household that evening. "We'll be loaded heavily, but we can make 450 miles in a day, and that will put us into Lamoni the second evening. And by the way, have all of you sent in your money and reservations to Mr. Carmichael?—No?—Well, you'd better do it."

Just then the telephone rang loudly. Etta reached it in a bounding step. Her tone indicated news. "Oh, hello, Effie. The gang is all up here at my house. Why don't you come up?—Oh, that's just too bad—Why, Effie, you've got to go!—But we can't get along without you! It will spoil the trip for all of us if you don't go.—You wait a minute.—I want to talk to the gang about this.—Don't you decide until you hear from me!" She hung up the phone and turned back to the crowd.

"Effie Chandler says her brother lost his job, and that they haven't any money to make the trip. What'll we do?"

Graceland Ready to Receive Conference Visitors—Good Meals at the Cafeteria

"MEALS THAT YOU'LL REMEMBER," pleasantly, of course, is the promise N. Ray Carmichael makes to visitors at the Youth Conference. You'll be delighted with the large, cool dining room in Walker Hall. And then, of course there is the big cozy living room upstairs, where you can rest and talk or meet the girl-friend or boy-friend afterward.

Or, if you want privacy, you can retreat to one of the many beautiful shade trees on the campus. And a fine carpet of grass beneath it to stretch out on. What better for a siesta?

Showers! The real refreshment for a warm day. You'll like the fine bathing facilities at the college.

And here's the big news. They're putting an all-weather road from the town to the College. Rock surfaced. On the heels of countless generations the mud of College Hill has been carried up and down. But that will be a thing of the past now. Let it rain! Who cares when the road is hard?

Young People in Action

● Young people in SPRING RIVER (Missouri) district are active. They have a year full of good things planned. Their president writes: "We plan to center our attention on attending the Youth Conference in June and our district reunion in August."

● HOLDEN STAKE young people are working on a plan for a large group attendance at the Lamoni Conference. To reduce expense, the group are planning to camp at Lamoni, sponsored by the stake presidency. A schedule of intergroup activities is also under way.

● MADISON, WISCONSIN, young people sponsor a weekly mimeographed paper, The Question Mark. The issue for May 7 contains an illustrated front page, and five pages of announcements, news, sermon high points, observations and contributed articles.

● From SAN FRANCISCO comes a copy of The Zion Builder for May 7, an eight-page mimeographed semi-monthly with attractive cover. Its pages are filled with announcements, notes, summaries and contributed materials. With the issue came a special announcement and song sheet, cleverly illustrated, and used on the occasion of the farewell to Patriarch G. J. Waller who returns to his work in Hawaii. Evidently young people in San Francisco are eagerly about their Master's business.

NEWS BRIEFS

Brooklyn Leaders Set Educational Goal

At a recent meeting, officers and teachers of Brooklyn Branch, New York, set a goal for themselves. They decided by formal vote to set the goal —a teacher's certificate for each officer and teacher in the church school by October, 1934. Study toward this end will begin early this fall.

Three Times a Pioneer

When Brother Nels J. Peterson trekked north from the drouth stricken area of Saskatchewan, with the Ray Peterson family a short time ago, he was undertaking the third pioneer experience of his long lifetime. He is more than eighty-two years old.

He emigrated from Norway when a boy and pioneered in the United States. Pioneered in Saskatchewan in middle life, and in his old age, the pioneer spirit is still unquenched. He has belonged to the church almost twenty-eight years.

Arizona Branches Hold Debate

Douglas and Bisbee, neighboring branches in Arizona, have devised a new way to create interest among members and friends. On May 7, they held a successful debate on the question "Resolved That We Are Resurrected in This Body and Not Another," which was heard by a considerable number. The decision of the judges and also of the majority of the hearers went to Bisbee's debaters. Officers hope to hold more debates in the future.

Tigris Young People Are Leaders

The Leader Class of Tigris Branch, Missouri, is composed of young people, more than twenty in number, who take prominent part in all branch activities. Theirs is an alert organization, ready to help everywhere, and so far they have held the banner class record of the branch.

Traverse City Officers Assist Neighboring Groups

Officers of Traverse City Branch, Michigan, have been busy in recent weeks assisting Saints in neighboring groups in addition to conducting activities in their own branch. Some of the places visited are Bendon Branch, Joyfield, and a group of members and friends meeting in a home east of Kingsley. Among the men lending their help are B. H. Doty, Roland Kapnick, Ray Dick, and H. A. Doty, jr.

Missionary Zeal Apparent in Springtime

The missionary spirit is very apparent in hundreds of branches in the church and among isolated Saints, too. Here are mentioned a few of the many recent missionary activities:

For a period of six months Elder J. Charles May has been conducting intensive cottage and church services in Kansas City and Lamoni stakes. He preached one hundred and fifty-two times and made five hundred visits. Twenty were baptized by the pastors and the missionary. He is now in Guilford, Missouri, Far West Stake.

Elder F. L. Sawley, one-time missionary but now superannuated, was back in his old mission field on Mother's Day and preached twice at Mount Vernon, Illinois.

A. M. Chase, president of and missionary to Utah District, is conducting a series of rally day programs for the branches of the district. He has the loyal help of district and local workers.

A missionary series was brought to a close May 7, at Thayer, Missouri, by Elder W. E. Haden, district president and missionary, and Elder E. C. Shelley. One was baptized on the closing afternoon.

Bisbee, Arizona, Saints were happy to have Apostle E. J. Gleazer stop there two days in April as he was on his way to Independence for the Joint Council meeting. His sermon on Zion and the gathering greatly encouraged them.

Elder C. E. Harpe spent several days in Traverse City, Michigan, a short time ago.

Elder W. A. Smith, of Independence, preached fourteen sermons in a series at North Platte, Nebraska. Three little girls were baptized on the Sunday following his services. He plans to return to North Platte and probably will hold meetings in the new gospel tent.

Elder O. W. Okerlind has strengthened and encouraged the few Saints living at Gainsborough, Saskatchewan, with two weeks of meetings.

Elder Lester O. Wildermuth's spring missionary campaign has included meetings at Bozeman, Columbus, Reedpoint, and Miles City. He has just closed ten days of services at Anaconda, Montana, with fine support from Saints and friends.

Saints at Jay, Florida, have preaching once or twice a month, speakers being A. D. McCall, Earl Higdon and C. T. West.

"Shine With Real Light"

By Clifford J. Long

"If you visit your friend, why need you apologize for not having visited him, and waste his time and deface your own act? Visit him now. Let him feel that the highest love has come to see him, in thee its lowest organ. Or why need you torment yourself and your friend by secret self-reproaches that you have not assisted him or complimented him with gifts and salutations heretofore? Be a gift and benediction. Shine with real light and not with the borrowed reflection of gifts. Common men do not apologize for men; they bow the head, excuse themselves with prolix reasons, and accumulate appearances because the substance is not."—Ralph W. Emerson, in Spiritual Laws.

THERE is a bit of advice we can well apply to our own work and efforts in the church, and without stretching it very far either. How often must we listen to a speaker or preacher hesitatingly start out with "I hope you will be able to bear with me for a few minutes . . . ," "Brother So and So was supposed to speak tonight, but he couldn't get here, so Brother Pastor asked me to occupy. I haven't had much time to prepare, but . . ." Or how often are we confronted with a teacher, in our own church schools, prefacing his or her lesson with, "Well-uh-uh—I don't know very much about this lesson, but I hope it will be of some good to you," or "I didn't know what to talk about this morning, and finally thought you might be interested in . . ."

Why must these useless apologies be made? Why not be "a gift and benediction" yourself, and "shine with real light and not with the borrowed reflection of gifts" of words? Why not have the courage to stand out before the audience and present your message without any excuses or apologies, and allow your hearers to take it for what it's worth? If you don't have a message of any value your hearers will discover it soon and easily enough without your reminding them of its worthlessness before beginning. And if your message is really worth while, you rob it of any force or vitality it might have by making excuses or apologies either for it or for yourself. If apologies are necessary, make them to God—afterward—for not having made the thorough preparation you should have.

I think we are nearly all familiar with the friend, well-intentioned though he or she may be, who bursts out with "Oh, John, I'm so sorry I haven't been over to see you before, but I've been so busy, etc." And who hasn't received a letter, even from the best of friends, beginning, "I hope you will please excuse me for not writing sooner. I've been intending to write for ever so long, but I'm so slow and lazy . . . ," etc. Why not start your visit with something like "Hello, John. How are you? What have you been doing?" etc? Is it too much to presume that he knows you would have come or written sooner if you had been able to?

Of course, these apologies and excuses are not made because the people are not worthy men and women or because they don't have something worth while to say; it is human nature, apparently, to make excuses—and most of us are too modest to presume we have a perfect right to stand before an audience and speak, or teach a class. When a man, or woman, gets up to speak, however, he should be freed from the ordinary shackles of modesty and presume that his hearers will be sympathetic with him and that they will not think him conceited or overbearing if he does not make some excuse for his appearance before them.

How much more vital, inspiriting, and encouraging indeed would be the sermon of a minister who began "Good evening, friends. I shall speak to you tonight on thus-and-so subject. Paul, in his first letter to the Corinthians, says . . ." If his sermon is good and worth while, the members of the audience will appreciate it and inwardly thank him for it; but if he really hasn't much to say, no amount of excusing or apologizing or claiming lack of time will help a bit. If the speaker is a visitor, he may say, "I am very glad to be with you this morning, and appreciate your courtesy in inviting me to speak. I shall talk to you this morning on . . ." Simplicity of statement, lack of effusiveness, makes any expression of emotion seem more sincere.

"A man passes for that he is worth"[1] seems to be more and more true as our experiences in life increase. Whatever we do or say, regardless of any number of excuses or apologies we may make, other people, as well as God, will make their own estimate of each of us by what we think, say and do. The church today needs force, driving power, more than ever before; and every minister, officer, and teacher can help in satisfying this need by dispensing with irrelevant and unnecessary apologies, preparing and making himself "shine with real light." And if this movement is to become church-wide, every member must do his or her part in shining with "real light and not borrowed reflection"; he must do the task, make the visit, say the message that needs doing or saying now, without the stumblingblocks—of his own making, usually—of useless excuses and apologies that do no good to anyone, himself included.

SAVING PEOPLE PHYSICALLY

This article is approved by A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician. - -

By N. T. CHAPMAN

The Author's Letter of Introduction

Editor, The Herald:

I wish to submit as a warning to others, the enclosed article in which I give my experience to those who are unknowingly following the same road I did, which led to my physical breakdown. For more than five years, I have been afflicted with pernicious anemia and its train of intestinal disorders, and in this article I have given some of my personal experience and the truths which I have learned by study and observation. Being of jovial temperament and a lover of good things to eat, I, like many others, paid very little attention to the study of food values. Thinking I had a stomach that could digest most anything, I rather liked to jolly those who practiced certain diets, and the diet issue was a joke to me until I failed in health, and the doctor put me on a diet of spinach and calf's liver—that was no joke. Since I have been deprived of five years of my life which should have been most useful, and since I have been deprived of my social activities and much of the joy of fellowship with the Saints, I feel that I should give my experience to the Herald, so that others may benefit by my experience and be able to avoid the loss of time, medical expense, and terrible nervous disturbances, which I have endured, and the possible criticism of my weaknesses and mistakes.

I am well known by the Saints on the Pacific Coast, having served the church both as a missionary and locally for the past twenty-five years, prior to my nervous breakdown in 1927, at which time I was President of the Southern California District. I was fifty-two years old at the time of my breakdown in health, and I felt that I was too young a "boy" to be laid on the shelf. I now feel that if I can't serve the church in the capacity I have heretofore, I can raise a warning voice to help others avoid the serious consequences of ignoring the laws of nature and the wisdom of God as revealed in Section 86, Doctrine and Covenants (Heaven's instructions in diets). I have no desire for notoriety of any kind, nor do I desire to promote any diet fads, but I know that the diseases of middle age are largely the result of indifference to the laws of health in our earlier life. Digestive disturbances interfering with the nervous system are the curse of our indifference. The medical profession confesses it is unable to cope with the situation, therefore the need of our attention being attracted to the facts, even though by example. It has been suggested by the doctors that "It is no use to warn the people, as they won't pay any attention." I believe that it is a mistake to hide our meanings in medical hieroglyphic and not to make these things plain. Our indifference to the laws of health is due both to lack of early training on the part of our school system, and parents. But I believe that stories of the plain truth will awaken our minds to the observance of these laws.

Yours in gospel bonds,

N. T. CHAPMAN.

"What must I do to be saved?"—Acts 16: 30.

BIBLE HISTORY informs us that the ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ and other historical characters were dependent creatures, as much so as the people they administered to; that they were subject to the same laws of nature as other people of their time. An ordination to the ministry is not a guarantee against sickness, suffering, or other ills of mankind, nor is our license to preach a certificate of special favors. Paul invites us "who are partakers of the heavenly calling to consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." "For it became him for whom are all things and by whom are all things in bringing many sons unto glory to make the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." "For we have not a High Priest which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities." "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." We must expect to endure hardships and trials and suffer from our mistakes the same as other Saints without any special interference on the part of God. I refer to these scriptures to convince our minds without a doubt, that the greatness of our apostleship or priesthood is not a shield against adversity, sickness, nor the fiery darts of the adversary. We must consider the way of "escape" and not neglect the way of our salvation or our "carcasses" may fall in the wilderness. In the hour of our spiritual triumphs our pathway may be strewn with palms and roses and we may be anointed with the richest of ointment (richest foods), but that will not keep us from our Gethsemane.

We well know that obedience is not accomplished by us because of our calling nor by the wonderful prayers for us at the time of our ordination. They may have encouraged us, and inspired us towards our ideals. Our experience has taught us that the preaching of the word, acceptable to God and profitable to our hearers, has to be accomplished by effort, courage, and invincible determination, by prayer and supplication, often accompanied by tears. True, at times we have been inspired as the prophets of old in the delivery of our message. It may have been said of us, "How does this man have such knowledge of the scriptures, never having attended a theological seminary," and they become astonished at the doctrine because "the word is with power." However, it is just as true that at some other time, we have suffered embarrassment.

We have proved that if we make it a practice to wait for the Lord to fill our mouths (without preparation) our empty heads will be sadly disappointed. It is required of us to "study to make thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

In this we are agreed; that the saving of the minister from embarrassment and mental anguish depends upon his preparation to meet requirements. Otherwise we endure needless suffering, so that even serious prayers will not suffice to remove us from our pains. We know by our experience that we have to study to avoid being ignorant of the truth or we fall into "untoward" conditions. But some of us have failed to realize that we have to give due consideration to our physical life. In our enthusiasm in our ministerial service, we forget we are clay, we are negligent of ourselves. We fail to study to retain our health, we often expose ourselves needlessly. We sometimes preach long sermons, speaking in a loud tone of voice, wearying ourselves and our congregation (as though there was no limit to our nerve energy). As to our health, we seem to think "God will take care of us" because we are of "much more value than the lily or the sparrow." Therefore we don't need to bother with the learning of food values nor the balancing of our food intake. We say, "We are well now, what's the use of bothering about our eating? I can eat anything and it agrees with me." Another says, "I could eat shingle nails, hot cakes, chew my toothpick, or swallow my food half chewed. I have a wonderful digestion."

We seem to think that our stomachs are indebted to us (because we are preachers) and that our stomachs can digest anything. We think we do not have to know the process of digestion or the action of the intestinal tract. We let the body take care of itself, "It knows what it wants to eat" and it has its own way about its eliminations. If we feel ill, we go to a drug store and buy some cathartic, Epsom salts, pills, or aspirin tablets, not realizing the effect of these drugs upon our systems. If we get sick, we send for the elders and if the Lord doesn't heal us, we go to the doctor. We think he will know what to do. Yes, and you will know some things he has done if he operates on you, and you suffer for a few months in a hospital, and the little savings you have, your life's earnings, vanish like a snowball on the Equator. Then we say, "Doctor, I thought you could cure me," and the doctor says, "My dear man, we doctors can't cure anybody. Nature has to do that. All we can do is to assist nature (sometimes) and you can help yourself far more than I can help you."

"I can teach you how to protect your health," a true doctor is a teacher. His work is almost like that of the minister; in fact it is very similar. He teaches you about your bodies, the temple of your soul, how to keep it fit so that you may function at your highest efficiency. The Church of Jesus Christ has a church physician. Luke was a physician in the New Testament times, and in the restoration in these latter days as early as September, 1830, Thomas B. Marsh was called to be a "physician to the Church," Doctrine and Covenants 30: 4.

First Corinthians 12: 28 tells us "God has set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." "For the work of the ministry and the edifying of the body of Christ," (the church). God has also "set in the church" the Church Physician to teach "the body of Christ" to protect and care for itself physically. We may have the idea that it is the duty of the Church Physician to cure us when we get sick. Forget that; he can't do it. It is the Church Physician's duty to teach us how to keep well, or get well if we are sick. "How to nourish with all tenderness with herbs and mild foods." He should teach us the values of foods, the mineral and vitamin contents and their chemical action when put into our stomach, and how to prepare our foods with as little loss of these essential values as possible, so that our bodies will have the necessary materials to build and repair themselves. It is also his duty to teach the Saints to avoid the use of adulterated foods, or foods that are robbed or have lost their value in manufacturing or preparation, to avoid foods that are highly seasoned to attract the user by their taste, without considering the materials which are used in their preparation, and to avoid the excessive use of salt, vinegar, mustard, and other condiments, some of which were never intended to be used as food, but have been invented by "conspiring men in these last days" to get gain. We should know how to use foods in their natural state and in their seasons.

From my experience, I advise all to rally to the aid of our Church Physician and demand that he lead us into paths of safety. He will be pleased because of our interest, and will not feel that his efforts are in vain. He may now feel that we ministers are very indifferent to his department; that we are given to cold chills and deep frowns when we are approached regarding our diets and personal habits, and while he would like to save us from physical suffering, it can't be done without our interest. We have to "save ourselves" from this "untoward" condition. He needs help to accomplish his work with this generation. We must teach the mothers and wives to study how to prepare foods to protect the health of their families, how to protect the father and breadwinner of the homes so that they may remain at a high state of production, so that needless want and suffering may be avoided. Give them to understand that the ministry does not require the housewife to (Continued on page 690)

REPENTANCE UNTO LIFE

Radio Address by R. S. SALYARDS, Sr.

"When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life."—Acts 11: 18.

WE MAY safely turn to the word of God for counsel. The race needs counsel, counsel the soundest and best. It has always needed the divine counsel, but has in great measure been disposed not to seek nor to heed the counsel of God. Without light and warmth of the sun men could not live and sustain themselves; without the dews of heaven they would be without the necessities of life. Dependence is written large upon the existence and continuance of human life, but the masses largely ignore and are not conscious of that manifest principle. Such dependence has been apparent in the vicissitudes of human beings from the beginning; man from necessity has been obliged to take note of his need of food, clothing, and shelter. Civilized man has made provision against loss of sustenance in order to survive. He has built progressive civilizations by learning to conform to laws that govern his environment, the laws that relate to climate, food, and other necessities.

This general conformity to the laws of nature has brought benefits that have demonstrated the necessity and value of observation of the physical world. There cannot be a condition in which man shall be free from necessity for studious stock-taking of means by which his life shall be perpetuated; for it is true of physical life that men are obliged to be alert in giving close attention to the laws of life, if they are to enjoy its benefits and preserve and promote general welfare. Governments maintain experimental, statistical, and research departments in order to facilitate well-being of their peoples. The needs of humankind require increasingly intelligent action if the people shall be equipped by knowledge necessary to meet the demands of life.

In the physical world there is written, large and outstanding, the law that man shall improve by conforming to the laws that regulate his being; otherwise, failing to comprehend and act, he would perish. Barbarous man was controlled by superstition; civilized man has learned to observe and to submit to the physical laws of the universe. He has learned that he cannot disregard what is termed natural law and live. Conforming to physical law, he has realized the benefits that minister to his welfare.

Man is not an independent being; there are no absolutely independent beings. Man cannot exist and sustain himself above the timber line; there is a limit upon the mountain side where vegetation can maintain itself. Man must subsist within the limits where nature produces the means of subsistence. The physical world throughout the years of man's domain teaches the facts recited above; we cannot remove from the law of environment. Observance of law, conformity to the law of being, brings sure and continuing results.

But there are higher laws and other necessities than those relating to physical benefits, important and necessary as physical benefits are. But even physical blessings and values are not to be enjoyed or controlled independent of or in violation of other and related laws and realities. In the physical world, as in other realms of living, it is true that no man lives unto himself. Society is interdependent, hence all human efforts should be and must be made with a view to the general good. The world is having repeated the lesson vividly portrayed by history, that life must be lived and regulated by something higher and better than what ministers merely to physical necessities.

Human limitations, human sufferings, have been caused by blindness and selfishness, manifest lust for power, unjust distribution of wealth, etc., resulting in wars, disease, poverty, oppression, lack of consideration for the masses, and other evils that have marked human history. God through nature has given generously, but man has shown himself unable to build a satisfactory, enduring civilization without observance of obligation to regard other and higher motives than those that appeal only to physical welfare.

We of this world, including our own country, are facing again what men faced in other periods. We have become emancipated from the rule of kings and have established democracy in government; but we are not free; indeed we are bound up with other peoples in a condition that is strikingly emphasizing these facts; namely: With all our education and training for life, professionally, scientifically, agriculturally, industrially, we are in actual danger of extinction by forces that threaten every nation with revolution and its accompanying horrors. We are not overstating the facts; they are openly acknowledged by publicists at home and abroad. Outstanding sociologists, economists, business experts, men of affairs in all fields of action, including statesmen of training and experience, are being asked to give close study to problems involving international well-being, with a view to comprehension and application of legal and other remedies to meet the emergency. It is a time for deep concern; for intelligent, temperate consideration; for self-control and just regard for the welfare of all concerned, which is humanity in general.

A Lopsided Civilization

It is clear that our civilization has been and is largely unbalanced, lopsided; that physical welfare, with its determining outlook for gratification of physical wants, its absorption in material things, has failed, and definitely failed us. Belief in the productiveness of nature, increased by facilities of the machine, have failed to solve the problems even of physical subsistence. The present period has been characterized by piling up of material resources exceeding by far that of any other; yet society stands perplexed, nonplussed, and alarmed, notwithstanding the stores of such abundance. Its people are hungry, unemployed, and desperate as they face the abnormal situation. Five years ago or less no one dreamed that such conditions could possibly develop. The nations were abounding in a prosperity that now seems to justify designation as a "fools' paradise."

A notable feature of the modern period is the growing belief that materialistic science accounted for existence of the universe and of man; that man came into being under the operation of organic evolution; that materialistic science would be the means by which man would be developed into fuller life, etc. While some have not accepted such theories and claims, the result of such sentiment, nevertheless, has been to increase materialistic concepts of life and to draw away the popular mind from belief in God and the spirit of religion. Such sentiment is manifest in the increasing formalism in religion, in the growing loss of the spirit of strong, active faith and participation in religion and worship, formerly in evidence in earlier generations. This increasing loss of interest in spiritual life is being acknowledged by many men of the churches. It furnishes a problem of increasing anxiety to those who believe in the God and in the faith of the fathers.

Religion a Permanent Necessity

Religion, with its faith in God, its consciousness of need of the divine government, has been the leading sentiment, the greatest power that has influenced the life of the race in every age. The cause of such strong influence lies in the constitution and nature of man himself. His nature is not only physical; it is firstly spiritual and moral, secondly physical. The spiritual is the inner, the real man; the physical is the outer, the material man. Both natures constitute the soul of man, each affecting or influencing the other. The spiritual or inner man is the man of mind and heart; the outer man, the house or tabernacle in which the spirit dwells and through which it manifests itself. God is a spirit; man is spirit; nature is the garment of God, that in or through which God is manifest; also through man, who is "the temple of God."

The spirit in man, the higher nature of intelligence, should control, should be the dominating, ruling influence in human life. St. Paul, spiritual philosopher and interpreter, finely presents to us the dual nature of man. He says: "For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. . . . While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. . . . For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. . . . For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every man may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." (2 Corinthians 4, 5.)

This is sound, comprehensive truth and philosophy. The spiritual and the physical life are here declared, also the judgment to be passed upon the use of life. These statements are entirely harmonious with present life and experience. Every day is, in a sense, a judgment day; results follow thought and conduct. An eternal judgment will determine final conditions.

Every nation has been at its best in the day of its acknowledgment of basic religious and moral principles—when such have been free from fanatical superstitions. It is only when blindness, selfishness, lust for power, injustice, sensuality, social, political, economic inequality have caused poverty, immorality, disease, and other low estate, that civilization has decayed and declined. God has given to every nation power to contribute to human progress, but when its contribution has ceased and its people become corrupt and materialistic, he has called it to account for its stewardship. And nations themselves perpetuate or destroy their values when they turn to unrighteousness—when they violate the very principles which are the instruments of preservation. For when any evil, of whatever character, begins to operate, immediately a neutralizing principle or force sets itself to work to undermine and destroy that evil. History clearly reveals this outstanding fact. It is in (Continued on page 690)

The Second Prize Herald Contest Story:

Red Death at Manti

By Ralph P. Mulvane

AN ARROW'S flight from the forest edge, across a half-cleared plain, rose the timber-and-earth wall of the City of Manti. A dozen brown-skinned Lamanite guards, naked, save for their loin cloth, patrolled the wall's single "gate," a narrow, open entrance. Just within the forest fringe a giant blond captain of Helaman's battered army, Teomner, scowled as he watched the guards and the small groups of Lamanite spies idly concentrating under a group of trees to his left on the plain.

It was late afternoon and fall of the twenty-ninth year of the reign of the Judges. Behind Teomner and his handful of hidden men, weary of crouching all day in the forest, the Lamanite army which had occupied Manti now plodded eagerly westward in pursuit of Helaman.

"Fools!" growled Teomner to the soldier Mora, nearest him. "They expected to wipe us out in a whiff."

Mora, lean, tall, and rawboned, grinned. "If their spies had known we had been starving for months, or that lately we had received two thousand fresh troops, eh, my captain?"

Teomner spat. "Look at them!" he snarled. "All fools, cowards. Wait till they see men come down on them with red death. Aye, men—no boys."

"What meanest thou?" puzzled the soldier.

"Art thou like them?" sneered Teomner. "Did I not pick my men and make no place for the striplings of Ammon, who fancy death cannot touch their young heads?"

Mora glanced curiously at his chief. He had wondered why Teomner had not chosen one of the two thousand and sixty youths who fought in place of their Ammon fathers. Boys who had lived through many a battle unscarred by death, whose very presence awed the heathen foe.

He spoke timidly: "Thou art mighty of arm, Teomner, yet—"

"Yet what? Am I not Teomner? What more wouldst thou? I want no boys under my feet. This is man's work, to kill yonder spies and guards and capture a city."

"God hath been with them," Mora ventured. "Dost thou not believe in God?"

Teomner tossed his mane of yellow hair. "Aye, fool. But I believe alike in my brawn. Come, let us make ready. Gid will take the guards at the gate. Pass the word along."

Mora slipped back through the trees thoughtfully. Teomner had gone mad with blood-lust. Or was it that he discounted the worth of these Ammon youths because two hundred of them had been wounded? Even so, were they not all recovering?

Mora finished his errand and returned to his post. Teomner still glared out upon the gathering spies, left to cover the Lamanite rear against surprise. But he was seeing past them, through the city's wall to a palace somewhere. To the quarters of the indolent, pleasure-loving Prince Amer, busy with his women captives and courtiers, snug and secure from war's misery. He was seeing the dark-haired Dori, Teomner's betrothed, as she lay prisoner in this prince's grasp. For she was there, else that Lamanite spy he had choked the day before had lied.

In fancy Teomner plunged his sword in the prince's heart and laughed at the dripping blood. The thought was sweet. It made the giant's small ears flatten against his grotesque head, his little blue eyes became slits of venom. It caused him to lick his lips with a dry tongue.

Mora touched him gently. "The men are ready," he said.

Teomner started. Remembered where he was. He drew his sword and snapped a low order. He dashed out of the trees, his men clumping, yelling behind him. Off to the right he could hear the answering cries of the captain Gid and his men as they, too, swarmed out to the attack.

"KILL! KILL!" shouted Teomner. "No quarter."

Sword met sword. The Lamanite spies rallied and stood their ground. But after their first flight of arrows, there was no time to use the bows again. No time for their slings. It was hand to hand now. Naked brown bodies against arm and body shields, against leather and metal head shields which turned aside many a thrust.

Teomner's huge legs carried him ahead of his men. His sword was a flail of fire, flashing upward, falling, parrying. On him the enemy centered, surrounding him with a ring of steel. They pressed him back till the sun's last rays struck him squarely in the eyes. Then a blow from a cimeter belted his head so that he staggered. Another blow sent him to his great knees.

He tried to rally out of a swimming vision. And through his dancing sight saw a sudden flash of fresh steel beside him. A long, slender sword that leaped like a thing alive in the hand of a tall youth as fair as he. A youth whose breastplate was torn, who had a half-healed cut above the right ear and a bandaged arm.

Teomner shook his head. It began to clear. He stumbled to his feet. The strange youth who had come to his aid had cleared the field about him, but there was still much fighting to do. No time to question the lad, who kept even with Teomner as the giant fought his way toward the wall gate. No time to ponder on the amazing sureness and deftness of that long, keen sword.

The fight ended as swiftly as it had begun. Teomner panted through the gate, held now by Gid. His men swarmed within the wall. Now there was much work to do. The men had to be divided into groups to search the city. There were certain to be wounded Lamanite warriors, men too old or too young to follow the army, yet apt to be dangerous foes unless disarmed. There must be no mistake before the Nephite army under Helaman had time to turn in its supposed flight and, by a roundabout route, regain the city ahead of the Lamanites' full strength.

Teomner took charge of this work. Finished at last, he recalled the youth who had aided him. Saw him standing quietly against the wall, a sad smile on his pale, thin face. It was dusk, but even in the fast-falling darkness the young man's features stood out so clearly that the giant felt a moment's awe.

He went up to the youth. "Who art thou?"

"Jed, of Ammon."

OF AMMON! One of those striplings. Teomner felt dazed, angered.

"Where didst thou come from? and why?"

"I came to help thee find thy betrothed."

The giant stared, laughed and sobered with knitted brows. "Who told thee of that? I spake to no one. Moreover, thou art but a lad."

Jed smiled softly. "Aye, thou art mighty, Teomner, but there is One mightier."

"His name?" cried the giant.

"He who directed me in vision to come hither."

Again Teomner fell silent. His pride was hurt that he owed his life to this stripling. He glanced at the youth's wounds and it was in Teomner to taunt him with the fact that the young men of Ammon were not immune to the sword's sweep. Instead, a crafty smile erased the giant's frown. This youth had come to him unbidden, unwanted.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Why not let him learn by bitter experience the results of meddling?

"Thou art a brave lad," said Teomner. "I go to seek Prince Amer. If thou wilt come, remember thy blood shall be upon thy own head. For it may be that the Lamanites have left a strong force within the city, or that their army will return before ours."

Jed took up his arm shield. "We waste time," he said shortly.

The giant grunted and moved off. The youth matched his stride.

Along the narrow street they followed the square stone and mud-brick houses etched themselves out in pale white under the early moon. Beneath their roofs, wall and court recesses were blurred shadows, soon changing to sharper outlines, then strips and chunks of black. House doors were shut; none was abroad, for already the wings of fear had told strange tales of the fighting outside the city's walls. Scents of perfumed oils from women's bowers mingled with the cooling fragrance of evergreens.

Between the strange armed pair there was no talk till Teomner stumbled on a sheep crossing the road. He picked himself up and leaned against a stone wall to grumble.

"We wander at no purpose, Jed, knowing not whither to go. Mayhap it is better to burst in one of these heathen doors and find a guide to show us to the prince—"

He broke off. For a soft arm, reaching out from the darkness of a recessed doorway beside him, touched his hand. He snatched the arm and drew into the moonlight a young, dark-haired woman. She was like a slip of deep brown velvet, shod in sandals encrusted with turquoise beads. Gold bracelets encircled her otherwise bare arms, and rings her fingers.

Her voice was music of the night: "Why dost thou seek the prince?"

"Who art thou?" demanded Teomner. "A Lamanite, yes, but a spy, too, eh?"

Her eyes sought Jed's face, luminous in the moonlight. "Nay, one of the prince's household, stranger," she said. "One driven out to make way for one of thine own kind."

Teomner's blood pounded with eagerness. "Then thou canst guide us—and thou shalt."

"Why dost thou seek Amer?" she persisted.

The giant growled. "What is that to thee? But I'll tell thee—to find a maiden named Dori, then to choke this rat prince."

"What is the maiden to thee?"

Jed answered for Teomner. "His betrothed. Lead us and fear not."

But suddenly the girl drew back with a shiver. "Thou art of Ammon!" she asserted. "One of those who, it is said, cannot die."

"Death?" said the youth gently. "Should I fear it, when He who knoweth all hath promised—"

But Teomner grew impatient. "Enough," he snapped. "Come, girl, lead us, and if thou tryest treachery, thou shalt pay dearly."

The dark hid the hate in her eyes as she flitted away before them.

PRINCE AMER'S palace overlooked from its flat roof the city and all that transpired within its streets, and the wilderness west of the walls. At its entrance, Jed paused.

"Watch thy step, Teomner," he cautioned. "I will defend the door for thee."

Teomner grunted: "Thou art afraid?"

"Of what?" countered the youth simply. "Wait! Yes, I am fearful—but for thee, even with thy great brawn."

The giant sneered. "Thou art a child with prattle. Feel this arm of mine and rest easy."

Jed's reply drifted gently to him. "Dost thou trust in that, Teomner?"

The girl plucked Teomner's arm and he followed her. He groped up stone steps between cold, hard walls. Faint air drafts told him of halls passed, of rooms filled with warm, sweet odors. And at length the two wound through a narrow corridor to a door where the girl paused, whispering:

"Here is thy place."

Then she was gone, he knew not where. The hall was black, her feet soundless.

He stood there a moment, straining with his ears at the silence. At last, sword in hand, he burst into the room, blinking at the change from darkness to light. Light from four fat, squat candles in wall corner niches.

Teomner gasped. The room was empty, bare, save for a narrow table and two stiff straight chairs. Directly overhead these was the usual roof-trap—a square of planking fitted snugly into the stone ceil. At one end of the room a curtained passageway, and near it a window through which twinkling stars seemed to mock the giant's bewilderment.

He could almost hear his heart beat. Foes did not bother him, but silence beat him down. He felt that unseen eyes watched his movements, and recalled Jed's warning. If this were a trap, it was well baited. Here, when Helaman's soldiers arrived at dawn, he could easily be found cold and stiff.

Suddenly his hand tensed on his sword hilt. The curtains of the passageway stirred, opened. At first he could not believe, then a low cry of joy leaped to his lips as he sprang forward.

"Dori!"

He seized her in his arms, pressed her close. Only for an instant, for he was conscious that her small white hands were pushing against his breast, that her face was tight with horror.

"Behind thee! Quick!" she sobbed.

EVEN BEFORE he whirled about, he knew he had been betrayed, tricked by a heathen girl who thus sought to win back the favor of her lord.

The room seemed to fill with men. He counted six with drawn swords, and a seventh who stood by the table. This one was a fleshy, arrogant, gold-bespangled man who smiled at him out of chill, hard eyes. How had these men entered? Through the now open hall door? Well, it mattered not. It was a battle now against odds.

"Behind me, beloved," he called, and thrust Dori into place. "Now watch thy chance while I carve this scum of Ammoron."

The man at the table spoke. "A rival, I see. Hast thou a name, big one?"

Teomner's eyes slitted. He knew this man now—the prince he had vowed to kill. And his sword darted up as he sprang to the attack.

"Have at thee, dogs!" he shouted. "Thou art six to one, but thou shalt see what a mighty fighter canst do. Ha! The craven prince slinks behind his guards, eh? So be it . . . I'll slit thy throat yet."

Amer had indeed flitted into the rear shelter of his men. His lips moved in a low, sharp command:

"Take him, yet kill him not. I would have sport with him before he dies."

Teomner laid about him. His first sword thrust was swift and sure. It lowered the odds to five.

"Defend thyselves," he taunted them. "Teomner, the mighty, spits at thee."

But the five remaining guards were wary. They circled the giant, now giving way, now striking cautious blows, now deftly parrying. Soon Teomner knew that he was meeting five of King Ammoron's best swordsmen, chosen solely to guard the king's heir. Yet he laughed, boasted and feinted. A lunge and he drove his sword home again. Four left.

As he pulled out the blade his foot slipped and a slashing cut reached his arm. Another sword point turned against his body shield, but its impact drove some of the breath from him. His sword swung in a dazzling ring. Sweat ringed his forehead. He was close to the table. On its opposite side Amer slipped further away from him. Some way he must stop that cruel mouth, the eyes gloating upon the fair Dori who now lay in a faint.

Thrust and parry. "Ah-h-h!"

Three now. But his sword arm felt heavy and Teomner reeled as he tried to meet the desperate lunges of the surviving guards. Dimly he realized the role had shifted. They were carrying the fight to him; he was on the defensive. His breath wheezed. His sword cut a candle from its niche. Only one light remained. The room was full of shadows. Flickering shadows that mocked him. He could not see the evil face he sought. It had vanished. Then his sword dripped with fresh blood and he tugged to extricate it from its victim.

Something belted him across the head and he drifted down—down.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

TEOMNER CAME to in a room that was still and redolent with the smell of death. In a far corner a lone candle weakly assailed the gloom. It was enough, though, to show him legs that bent above him and a pale, thin face stooping to his.

"Canst thou stand, Teomner? Come, I will lift thee."

Teomner muttered. "Jed?"

He felt the youth's arms about him. Forced himself to drag to his feet, then sag into a chair, where he gazed about him dully.

"I have bandaged thy wounds," said Jed softly. "They are but light."

Teomner was counting dull blots on the floor. There were six of them. He struggled to remember.

"Six," he mumbled. "I did for four. Yet there are six—six—"

Jed's hand rested lightly on his shoulder. "Gather thy strength, Teomner. Thou wilt need it. The prince has fled. I heard thy scuffle from below."

The giant's mouth tasted bitter. Again this stripling had rescued him, this lad with the charmed life who so often had knelt in prayer for his mother. And the bitterness reacted as a tonic. Teomner stood erect, stooped for his sword and shield. He glanced at Jed. What could he say without rebuking his own pride?

Jed had moved to the window and was staring to the west. Teomner became conscious of the shouts of men in the streets, of a distant rumble, of fire tongues leaping from a Lamanite synagogue. He saw Jed motion to him and joined him.

"Look to the west," said Jed quietly. "There are torches—coming hither."

Teomner's mouth seemd dry. "The Lamanites!" he said hoarsely. "They have suspected Helaman's trick. . . . What hour is it?"

Jed glanced at him curiously. "The Lamanites? . . . The hour? . . . Nigh to dawn."

Teomner was in a feverish haste. "There is yet time. I shall find Amer, Dori." He swung back into the room, head clearing, then paused. "Before I go, I would ask thee a question. Thou didst come with me unbidden and twice thy sword hath proved its skill. Answer me this: why didst thou come?"

Jed's voice sounded weary. "I cannot answer thee—yet, Teomner. Perhaps thou shalt never know. . . . But there, haste thee and I will keep watch at the door."

TEOMNER PLUNGED through the curtained passageway. Within was a woman's room, empty. He passed through one of its doors and began a search of halls and rooms. In his shield hand he held the remnant of a sputtering candle. His steps made faint echoes on the floors between the high walls and at times his sword clattering against stone startled his hand to its hilt. But everywhere was emptiness. Only one room was bolted from within. He could not force it, so he went below to the slaves' quarters and rummaged till he found a long, stout rope. This he took to the roof, fastened one end of it to a beam within the room adjoining the locked apartment, and let himself down over the roof-edge.

Where he swung he was close to the window of the room he wished to enter. There was a light within, but no sound. Outside the stars were paling. It was that curious hour between night and day. On the streets a rabble was gathering, moving nearer. He could hear sounds of fighting, and, once, the cries of Gid's men.

There, in mid-air, Teomner knew the meaning of what he had heard. From here and there, wounded Lamanite soldiers left behind had gathered when they realized how small was the force which held the city. Now they were pressing forward toward the palace and the gate of the wall. With the Lamanite army hastening back toward the city, fearful of a trap, it was entirely likely that Gid's men would be overwhelmed. And that one lone youth who stood below to guard the door?

Teomner reproached himself. He must hasten this work and get back to Jed. Together they might hold the palace steps against fearful odds till human strength was exhausted.

So he swung gently to and fro till, with one great effort, he landed both feet on the windowsill. In an instant he had dropped inside the room—in stygian blackness. The light had gone out. As he stood there listening, something hurtled against the wall near him and rebounded out of the window. A stone. Some one who was clumsy with a sling, for Teomner knew he had made a good target in the window light.

He slipped away from the window, hissing: "Come out of there and fight."

There was no reply. Only the softest shuffle of steps. His unseen enemy was seeking exit from the room. Teomner flung caution to the wind and ploughed forward, sword in hand. He jabbed the blade before him, cut beside him, sent it ringing over his head and front, where it struck stone. The shock numbed his hand. The sword dropped. At the same instant a form leaped upon him and he felt hot breath on his neck as fingers groped for his throat.

They went down together and Teomner rolled atop of his assailant. Just for a moment and the positions reversed. His injured arm impeded him, but Teomner again unseated his enemy. Now his left hand clutched the man's throat and closed. The room was lighting, but Teomner dared not look up. Not till he had raised the head beneath him and crashed it against the floor till struggle ceased.

He was on his feet now, swaying as he sought the holder of the light.

"Dori!" he cried. "This time thou shalt be saved. But the prince? "

She pointed down, shuddering.

Teomner looked. His wits seemed sluggish, but his hand mechanically bent low to retrieve his blade even as Amer stirred. A moment later the giant placed his sword in his leathern scabbard and with one arm about the girl led her to the door. Neither looked back.

They walked through a winding hall. Teomner's steps quickened at the sound of shouting men and clashing steel. Just as he feared. Jed was fighting for his life.

At the head of the stone steps he bade Dori stand, drew his sword and started down. One step, two. He paused, stupefied. Below him, half way down the flight, a fair-haired youth calmly wielded a flashing blade of death. The stairs were slippery with blood, but still the Lamanites pressed on and upward.

At length Teomner rallied. His great voice bellowed: "Have at them, Jed. Here am I, Teomner."

He tried to go down the steps, but Jed's cool voice held him.

"There is room but for one, Teomner. Stay thou with thy maiden. Relief is near."

"Relief?"

His answer was in the sudden yells of the enemy lowest down the stairs, who turned and fled into the open air. A confused roar of voices came to Teomner. He saw red streaks of light across the street, torches coming nearer. Dimly he knew that he and Jed stood alone on the steps and that soldiers bearing shields were making short work of the last Lamanite opposition.

A woman's arm crept within Teomner's. He still stared at Jed, conscious that the youth's face was as clear as though lit by a hundred candles. There was awe within the giant. His voice died to a whisper.

"Thou knewest . . . it was not . . . the Lamanites who came?"

"I knew," said Jed softly. "And now for that other question thou didst ask me—"

"Wait!" said Teomner quickly. ";Thou dost not need to answer. I know. Thou didst come and win through because—" His words died away to the end: "Come, let us give thanks."

Humbly, a man of massive build and blond, followed a youth into the gray light of Manti regained. And when the hosts of Helaman knelt in prayer, giant and youth knelt, too. Between them a tender girl. Beside them, in the dust, two blades of steel.

"Just as the radio can be tuned to a certain wave-length or vibration, so the mind can be tuned to the good and the noble, to success and health, to peace and plenty, or to the reverse—the choice is yours. By keeping your mind centered on worth-while things you attract whatever is on that particular plane."

Sun Baths

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

OWING to the popularity of sun baths, and since it has become almost a mania with some, I conclude an article would be of interest to the Herald readers.

Unfortunately, many of these modern worshipers of the sun, judging from my experience, need to understand more about it.

A too long exposure of the sun's rays is quite serious, but if taken gradually with regular exposure, it gives a healthy appearance to the skin and enables the body to absorb the vitamin D which is a protection against rickets and other diseases.

Cod-liver oil and sun baths are beneficial for infants and growing children. In prescribing sun baths it is necessary to emphasize that a too long exposure is detrimental.

If the patient is feeble, and the light is very intense, it should not be continued in the beginning more than five minutes especially if the whole body is exposed. But for those accustomed to the effects of the sun, a usual safe exposure is twenty minutes to from half to three-quarters of an hour.

Experimenters have been making considerable research with the monkey, a tropical animal, as a subject. Most of these experiments were in the Philippine Islands. They found that the Philippine monkeys died from heat stroke in a very short time. Some of them were only exposed seventy to eighty minutes.

When the skin is first exposed an inflammatory reaction is manifested by the redness and burning of the skin. An exposure of this kind is similar to a first degree burn brought about by contact with hot liquids or fire. If this reaction is intensified, a second degree burn may be produced which may prove very serious. If it is further continued down to the deeper structures of the underlying tissues, then a third degree burn is produced. This usually occurs in those who are not accustomed to the rays of the sun. It has been found out that fair people and blondes are more sensitive to the sun's rays than others.

We must conclude, therefore, that the only safe method is a gradual exposure of the skin. After the coveted tanning has been produced, then almost any one can stay in the sun an indefinite period every day.

Those who contemplate a vacation this summer should use precaution as serious constitutional ailments have resulted from undue exposure.

Physicians have found out that less cod-liver oil is needed for a child during the summer months than in the winter. All children who are underweight and having the symptoms of rickets should be given sufficient sunlight and cod-liver oil to insure a sufficiency of vitamin D.

The Healing Power of Religion

As a means also of resolving inner conflicts what is comparable to religion? In a case of this sort, obviously, drugs and surgery are of no avail. When a man is sick for no other reason than because he is a house divided against itself, you can hardly hope to cure him by dosing him with calomel or by removing his teeth or his tonsils. . . .

When a man has an inner conflict which he himself is unable to resolve; when his soul has become a battlefield where fierce and unholy desires which he is unable to escape are being opposed by shame and humiliation and those nobler desires which also are seeking to dominate him; when the gentleman in him is struggling with the cad and the hero with the coward, but securing no decisive victory; and when, thoroughly discouraged, he is saying to himself, "The harder I try, the worse it gets," what is the most helpful thing that he could do? Is it not to turn his weary and tormented mind away from that inner battlefield where he has met with humiliating defeat and lift it hopefully to God? From that act comes first a heartening sense of relief, a feeling that one is not alone in what seems to be and actually is a truly desperate struggle: a release, therefore, from fear and demoralization, a new birth of faith and hope and courage. And presently, through communion with God, one achieves a blessed release from those fierce and unholy desires that have been acting like a bull in a china shop, tramping over sensitive nerves, smashing beautiful ideals, wrecking peace of mind and self-respect. In the presence of God one discovers new sources of interest—fascinating intellectual pursuits, true and fine and rewarding friendships, enormously worth-while causes in which all one's profoundest hungers have so much chance to be satisfied that one is delivered from the power of destructive desires.—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in We Need Religion.

One can well imagine that a future age may regard much of the learning even of our time as almost as futile, superstitious, fantastic in method, and irrelevant to the ends sought, as were primitive man's methods of producing rain, Egyptian amulets to cure disease, or medieval blood-letting according to the phases of the moon.—Professor Lynn Thorndike, of Columbia, in History of Magic.

THE IDEAL PASTOR

By Willis W. Kearney

IN A RECENT Herald I read an article entitled "The Visiting Priest" in which a mother presented some thoughts on the duties of that official as they appeared to her.

There was also an editorial note with it, inviting similar articles, and so I make bold to present some thoughts, not on the visiting priest, but upon the ideal pastor as viewed by a laymember who has had but very little experience with pastors since his boyhood. Whether this should qualify one to discuss such a subject I do not know, but will make the effort and hope for the best.

The attitude of the pastor toward the younger members of his flock, it seems to me, has a great deal to do with their development along useful lines. As I review my own experience I can recall but few members of the ministry who showed a kindly disposition to aid in my development.

At one time in my youth I felt a strong urge and desire to prepare myself for useful service in church work. Considering it a commendable ambition, and believing that a certain brother, not the pastor, would be interested and show a desire to help me develop, I approached him on the subject one Sunday morning. He looked at me and said, "Why, haven't you anything to do?" I said, "No." He returned, "Well!" And that is all he did say. His tone was such that instead of receiving encouragement, I was so discouraged that I never tried it again with anybody. He never showed the slightest interest or desire to help me.

At another time when I was much older, we were living in a small branch where there were two or three elders under conference appointment. Their missionary work kept them away from home a good part of the time, and often there would be no ordained person present to take charge of Wednesday night prayer meeting—in fact I would often be the only man present, and so the sisters insisted that I should preside at the meeting. I was very reluctant to do so, but since they insisted I tried it and did the best I could. A few days later one of the missionaries returned home, and thinking he would be glad to hear of my effort, I told him about it. Instead of showing pleasure as I expected, he said impatiently, "Huh! That's nothing. Any old woman can do that." Which remark certainly did not seem to be the sort of help I needed.

Perhaps, when we meet one who in his youth, showed more or less promise, but who seemingly has failed to live up to that promise, we need look no further than some such experience as recorded above for the explanation of such failure.

It has often been a source of wonder to me that so many in the ministry show such an unwillingness to aid the youth in his groping bewilderment in spiritual life—but I have never been in the ministry, and so do not know all that may confront them in their work. I merely present these experiences as what, to me, seem shining examples of how not to do it.

I had hoped that now when we have so many more aids to the development of the young than formerly, and when the church itself is seemingly taking a more lively interest in their welfare, perhaps things had improved in this respect on the part of branch officials, especially the pastor—but have they? Perhaps, but I have not had the privilege of branch association for many years, and can judge only by such straws as blow my way.

Recently we have had the rather odd experience of having a member of an important branch come to us in a half-starved spiritual condition, to be fed the spiritual food she failed to get in her home branch. At the sacrament meeting last Sunday she arose and bore her testimony for the first time in her life, and also offered prayer for the first time in public.

This young lady, because of the need to work for her living, often on Sunday, with consequent interference with her attendance at church, has found difficulty in becoming adjusted in her branch, seemingly meeting with little or no encouragement. She, therefore, has not enjoyed her church association and complains that when she does go, all she hears is money.

I explained that because of the financial crisis through which the church is passing, we were all making strenuous efforts to raise funds badly needed. Is it possible that we have become so absorbed in this task of getting the church out of debt that we forget the spiritual needs of at least some of our members, and so permit them to languish and lose interest in the church, or even wander away from the fold?

I have told her that she should see that her pastor understands the condition of her employment, so that he will know why she did not attend more regularly. But whether or not he shows the proper interest, there is one privilege she has of which no one can deprive her—the privilege of taking her problems to God in prayer. I referred her to the text in James 1: 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." I have also recommended Watt's grand old prayer-hymn:

"Lord, in the morning thou shalt hear
My voice ascending high.
To thee will I direct my prayer
To thee lift up mine eye.

"Up to the heavens where Christ has gone,
To plead for all his saints,
Presenting at the Father's throne,
Our songs and our complaints.

"Thou art a God before whose sight
The wicked shall not stand;
The righteous shall be thy delight,
And dwell at thy right hand.

"O may thy spirit guide my feet
In ways of righteousness!
Make ev'ry path of duty straight,
And plain before my face.

"O do thou give my daily bread,—
And be my sins forgiven;
And let me in thy temple tread,
And learn from thee of heaven."

I have advised her to learn this hymn by heart, couple with it the text in James 1: 5, and get them so firmly fixed in mind that they will come to her when she is discouraged and in need of help.

To sum it all up, it seems to me that a pastor should possess these traits:

1. Be a "good mixer," as they say in politics.

2. Cultivate the acquaintance and friendship of every member of his flock.

3. Be interested in their problems and, so far as may be possible and wise, make them his own.

4. Never go off "half-cocked," but find out why any of his members fail in attendance before condemning them.

produce the richest foods of her culinary art when the minister visits her home. The knowledge of food values will lighten the burdens of life for her, and the knowledge of food minerals and vitamins will increase her joy of serving, and relieve her of the drudgery of caring for the afflicted in her home. The money that is spent for high priced medical services can be put to the service of the House of God, and there will be spiritual salvation because of the physical precautions. The Saints will enjoy the visits of the ministry because they have helped them to solve their present problems. We have not only pointed them to the Lamb of God and portrayed to them the greatness of his love and the wonderful provisions made for their eternal happiness, but will have inspired many hearts to serve today. Their hands will be loosened and their hearts gladdened, freed from the terrible incumbrance of disease.

We may expect some opposition: this change cannot be accomplished in a moment. The people must be educated in the right way of living, as they have been educated in the true way of worship. The right way of living is the way of escape from the "desolating sickness that shall come over the land." The need of economy in these times of stress will encourage the Saints to learn. They should know that "quack" medical practitioners have been acting for gain and that professional health restorers are expert salesmen who practice all manners of cures and operations. The world is flooded with them. The greatest advertising artists of the twentieth century are employed for the sale of cure-alls that will cure anything from boils to pernicious anemia, all for $$$$$$. Money spent for these things and professional services that could easily be prevented by right living, would quickly pay the church debts if saved. What Saint among us that has not been deceived by some "cure-quick" advertisement? Think of the millions that are taken every year from a deceived and ignorant public by heartless professionals that prey upon us, causing not only loss of money, but loss of our health and precious days wasted in suffering. What other protection has the church other than the service of the Church Physician and his department? "The eye cannot say to the hand I have no need of thee." "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." The men of the ministry need occasional physical examinations, the local minister as well as the general appointee. To ignore the needs and care of the local ministry is detrimental to the local and general church. Physical ills affect the mind and the disposition, and very often ministers are guilty of unbecoming attitudes. Serious consequences often result when members become possessed of some strange mission and become a nuisance, interfering with the peace and happiness of the worship of the Saints. These are fruitful sources of church difficulties among the brethren and often cause expense and much sorrow, leading to church courts and trials. Some one has said that "Dyspeptic statesmen are the cause of war." We can see the need of individual training in the physical life in the prevention of social fractures that work havoc among the members. The evil forces that go about "as a roaring lion, seeking to devour," fiercely attack the afflicted, overcoming the weakened resisting power, often leading them into forbidden paths wherein they had not previously walked, exposing them to criticism of their brethren, because their true conditions are not known. Oh, men of God, can we not discern the need of the Church Physician and his quorum of workers? Do we not see that no greater work lies before human beings in this dispensation, in the preparation of men and women for the redemption of Zion and the gathering together of the Saints? We men who are called by such a "heavenly calling," can we not hear the cries and mournings of many of our fellow ministers, who may have served the church well in their time, but are now physical wrecks? Everywhere we go, these men are asking why they cannot be healed. Why do they have to suffer and remain in enforced idleness at that age in life when they should be most useful; at the very height of their spiritual service, they are cut down and their trained minds are left to wither and decay. All this is due to the lack of physical knowledge of ourselves, and of the laws of nature that govern them. Ignorance of nature has not proved to be bliss to them. Neither will it prove to be bliss to us who now occupy, while our brother lies suffering today: there we may lay tomorrow. There is no insurance for health, except obedience to the laws of nature.

Do we not hear the voice of the Spirit, as revealed in Section 86: 3: "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, [intestinal tract] and marrow to their bones, [good red corpuscle factory] and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." (The knowing of food values with their hidden treasures of life.)

harmony with the act of God in pronouncing upon the serpent its ultimate destruction and extinction. Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome and other nations are outstanding examples and we "may profit by their example."

The present civilization has become great and powerful because it has stood for human liberty and progressive development by which the minds and souls of the race have been emancipated and granted opportunity. But we have declined, and are rapidly losing out in spirituality, in morality, in physical wealth; for all normal phases and functions of life are interrelated, and law operates in all and through all, to the preservation of that which functions according to law, or to the destruction and elimination of what is in violation of law. The spiritual has been obscured, overwhelmed, lost sight of in the obsessing, overwhelming tide of the material. God has not been regarded save generally in nominal consent to his existence and being. Men in large measure have turned from appreciation of his manifest existence and providence. Even in the face of greatly multiplied and multiplying witness of his sovereignty and goodness, as shown forth even in the material world, in its qualities and ministries in present high development of physical utilities and comforts, man has closed his eyes to the self-evident manifestation of the divine Being. Comprehension and use of material benefits could not be available without the beneficent action of God. What our civilization utilizes because of modern inventions by seers of modern science, results from discovery of elements and qualities and uses of nature's gifts. Men did not originate such benefits; they were inspired to discover and apply what God hath wrought for the use and benefit of man. Material things, rightly estimated, also declare the glory of God and his love toward man.

We are today where preceding civilizations have been brought—largely lacking regard for God, practically blind to highest and eternal interests. Like man in Eden, we have fallen from our estate; and from physical luxury, a condition of abundance of the material, with following confusion, distraction, caught and entwined in a maze of national and international complexity from which we find it difficult to disentangle ourselves. There is no overstatement or exaggeration in saying that our very materialistic developments, in general, and not the machine only, have brought the world to practical paralysis; and the end is not yet. As stated, experts in statesmanship, in the social sciences, financiers, men of business and all walks of life, are being interviewed and enlisted to study the intricate problems involved with a view to remedying the situation by legislation and other lines of action. We repeat it: The very god of this world, in whom its peoples have trusted, has failed us. The materialism of the past and present has been revealed clearly; it has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. We cannot impress it too strongly: Man forgetting his Maker, like those of past ages who worshiped objects of wood and stone—false gods—have practically repeated the same folly, in this age, by worshiping and serving the material more than the Creator. Loss of spiritual life has resulted and blindness holds sway over many of the present generation. Many give little thought or concern to God and religion, hence drift aimlessly, and in such neutral attitude have no clear, worth-while objective.

Christ declared that he came that men might have life, and have it more abundantly. He came to bring men into touch with the larger, the eternal life. To the multitude who followed after he had fed them, he said: "Ye seek me . . . because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled. Labor not for the food which perisheth, but for that food which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you. . . . For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." He declared that "a man's life consisteth not in the multitude of the things which he possesseth."

St. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. . . . For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

It is the purpose of Christ that men shall obey the gospel, and receive spiritual knowledge of God. St. Paul said, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," etc.

Man cannot live a creative, a constructive life in God and to himself by living only the physical life. He needs the indwelling life of God to illuminate his mind, to regulate his course of living, to bring him to full-orbed life of spiritual and moral conformity to the will of God. The physical is insufficient of itself. A conscious sense of unity with God is essential to real life and completeness.

What Do Latter Day Saints Believe About the Human Soul?

(Quotations reported from the sermons of President Elbert A. Smith to the young people of Independence.)

Is life worth living? That is a question that sooner or later forces itself upon the consciousness of everyone. And as one grows older and burdens, trials, pains begin to bear down, he must have some fundamental convictions if he is to answer the question in the affirmative.

Is life worth living? That depends on the one who is doing the living—his convictions, attitudes, and faith.

Things are seen by contrast. In this case we may well contrast the attitude of a man who does not believe life is worth living with one who does believe.

The eminent lawyer, Clarence Darrow, does not believe in God. He does not believe in a hereafter. Debating this question, he said, "Can a man be happy in a madhouse? That is what life is . . . I take life as it comes, because it is a senseless, fool thing that must be lived out because I have sense enough to not do such a messy thing as put a bullet through my head." His message to young people: "I certainly have no encouragement for the young people of today. The sooner they drop out of the window, the sooner they will find peace."

James Thomson, an atheist, summed up his belief in his poem, "The City of Dreadful Night,"

"In all eternity I had one chance . . .
This chance was never offered me before;
For me the infinite past is blank and dumb;
This chance recurreth never, never more;
Blank, blank the infinite To-come."

In contrast comes this message from the City of David. The angel sang it: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy . . . for unto you is born this day . . . a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." And Christ brought life and light.

In 1896, William James said in The Will to Believe that the brain of man does not generate thought; that matter can not generate thought. The mind only transmits thought.

Job asked the question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" And he was permitted to see and give answer: "I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

In this question we have a powerful philosophy. The Doctrine and Covenants (85:4) says: "The spirit and the body is the soul of man." Some one has said that the medical profession has just begun to discover that man has a spirit, and that the church has just begun to discover man has a body. In the deepest sense it is a fact that we must consider the body and the spirit. It takes both to complete the soul of man. Doctrine and Covenants 90:5: "The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy."

What do we believe about the human soul in the future? "Man is that he might have joy," says the Book of Mormon. . . . It is not a part of Latter Day Saint philosophy to believe that in the future all we shall do is play on harps and wear golden crowns—if I ever have to play a harp I shall understand why the millennium will be a thousand years long!—but we believe in a continuation and an increasing activity of the soul.

In the beginning God created the soul with which we are endowed. Man may not understand his purpose in life because he can not understand God, the infinite Father of the universe. Christ came here to express in terms of human living the will of the Father, to give us a life pattern. As we follow him we must remember that we shall find joy in service. This is basic to a philosophy which makes possible an affirmative answer to the question—Is life worth living?

Prayer and Testimony

A Tribute to J. C. Crabb on His Hundredth Anniversary

By W. A. Guthrie

May I extend to Brother J. C. Crabb my very best and most affectionate congratulations, on his splendid ministerial record, so well known throughout the church. And also congratulate the President, together with that audience, that they were permitted to witness such invaluable testimony, on the one hundredth anniversary of a life, the entire adult part of which has been spent in the exceptionally able defense of the gospel.

It was my privilege to get acquainted with Brother Crabb in the summer of 1892, and I spent with him many, many happy days and hours. Long hours of sane, sound, and never-to-be-repented-of instruction in gospel truths were received, and night after night, to both large and small audiences, have we been thrilled by his profound logic and unanswerable arguments defending and teaching the truth of this gospel.

Be it said to his honor so far as I ever saw or heard his life was above reproach, and his fidelity was never once questioned either by me or any one in this mission field.

Now, Brother Crabb: Although your sight may be dim, if this missive should reach the Herald I hope some one may read it to you, and a hundred other thoughts between the lines. I read your request for prayers, and happily joined with the petitioners in your behalf. I thank the good Lord that when those dark hours of "ninety-two" hung over me, with all the militant sectarianism in my community, it was you Brother Crabb, that the Lord sent to be my tutor, and inductor into the Kingdom. May the benediction of the Lord's choicest rest upon you.

The Testimony of M. C. Hendee of Glendale, Arizona

As Told to Louis J. Ostertag

I know that the days of miracles have not passed for I have had an experience to sustain my belief.

It was in July, 1931. I was taking care of a group of cottages for a man who had gone on his vacation. I was living in the owner's cottage. In the medicine closet were some bichloride of mercury tablets belonging to the owner, and some aspirin tablets belonging to me. In order to protect myself I had placed the bichloride of mercury tablets away from the medicine closet, but one night when suffering from rheumatism I arose in my sleep to take some aspirin to relieve the pain, but instead of the aspirin I took three five grain tablets of bichloride of mercury, washing them down with water. It was then that I awoke with a terrible burning sensation in my throat, and checking up I found that I had poisoned myself. I hurried to town, a distance of half a mile, to the home of Doctor Pearson of Glendale, and told him what I had done. He gave me an antidote, but held very little hope for my recovery as these tablets are very powerful poison. The poison works slowly upon the kidneys, cutting off their ability to function, and after four days death ensues. Doctor Pearson gave me only a few days to live.

The next day, Brother Ostertag of Phoenix, nine miles away, came to Glendale to visit some of the Saints, and hearing of my accident came to see me. The first thing he did was to quote from the 16th chapter of Mark where it says, "And if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them." Believing this with all my heart, I asked Brother Ostertag to administer to me, and at the end of the fourth day I had not suffered any ill effects from the poison.

My son, Chester J. Hendee, who owns and operates the La Brae Clinical Laboratory, and lives at 700 South La Brae Avenue, Los Angeles, California, wrote to me, after he had learned about the accident, telling me that I had taken enough poison to kill three men. Operating an analytical clinic, as he does, I am sure he must know; and he also said this,—which I think is miraculous, too—that the pernicious anemia from which I was suffering, would probably be helped if not cured by the poison. Today, after two years, I can testify that I am greatly relieved of the pernicious anemia and feel stronger physically, and of course, stronger spiritually.

Incidentally, a prophecy was given to me at sacrament service in November, 1930, through Brother Ostertag, in the presence of Brother S. S. Smith, who was our missionary in Arizona, and I was told that my soul would be tried, and I would pass through great tribulations, but that God would take care of me. He did, and I am very grateful. I give credit for my recovery to God, my belief in the 16th chapter of Mark, and the administration of the elder.

May God continue to bless and care for us is my prayer.

God's Purpose to Develop Spiritual Nature of Man

By Mrs. Mildred Carpenter

I have been deeply impressed with a quotation found in 1 Corinthians 2: 9, 10, which reads: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

The highest degree of human happiness is not attained merely through the physical life. The mental and spiritual pleasures of which we are capable are far greater and more enduring than the bodily pleasures, and therefore it must be the main purpose of God in this world to develop the spiritual nature of man.

I am grateful to my heavenly Father and to my husband, Elder Howard Carpenter, that I was brought in contact with the glorious gospel. I have belonged to the church about two years. Formerly I was associated with the Utah Church.

May we who have received the light, ever be found faithful, is my earnest prayer. Christ said, "He who will confess me before men, him will I confess before God and the holy angels."

The Greatest Blessing

By T. B. Sharp

Let us look forward to the day when our Lord will return with all his holy angels and when our bodies shall come forth from the tomb to dwell with him.

I know that God is in this latter-day work and is blessing his people. I have had many wonderful blessings, but believe the greatest of all to me is the knowledge that God has given me of this work and the ability to tell it to the world.

Prayer and Testimony

We Should Be Grateful for Trials

By Mrs. Joseph T. McGuire

As I read the letter from Mrs. Ira W. Humes in the Herald of April 25, I felt constrained to tell of an experience which came to me in a prayer service. A brother in the opening prayer was thanking God for our blessings, and as I knelt there, listening to his prayer, the Holy Spirit came to me with great power, telling me to testify that we should thank God for our afflictions, our trials, and temptations and not alone for our blessings, for it is through these trials that God keeps our hand in his. We should be thankful when we are tried, realizing that Satan does not try those whom he knows belong to him already, only those who are striving to serve God. They are the ones whom he tries in every way possible.

We pray constantly for the church and all its people and activities. And we ask all those who are trying to serve the Master to remember us in their prayers.

The Lord Greatly Blesses Her Family

By Mrs. B. M. Barnes

Although I have quite a task to care for six children and do my housework and the many little things which come up for attention each day, I find time to read the Herald each week, and can hardly wait for the next copy to come.

I am thankful that we have the privilege of attending church occasionally. Since it is inconvenient for us to attend regularly, we are holding prayer services each week in the homes in this community. Brother Charles E. Barnes is our leader. Although all of us have our trials and temptations, we feel if we are faithful, much good may be accomplished here. We pray that we may be strong.

In the early part of 1927, my husband was sorely troubled with ulcerated stomach. It seemed that he could live only a short while, and he told me what he would like me to do if he should pass on. But it seemed to me that I could not spare him, and so I prayed continually for the Lord to heal him of his affliction. One morning while I was about my housework in earnest prayer, these comforting words came to me: "He will not die, for he has a work yet to do." Such a wonderful spirit of comfort came to me at that moment! My sorrow was turned into joy and thanksgiving. My companion was healed, and has been working ever since.

My prayers are that all of us shall learn to work together and live closer to God.

Keep the Spirit of the Master Within

By Mrs. Lydia Dunn

Three years ago I took the Herald, but of late I have not had the money to buy it. My daughter lives about three and a half miles from our place, and she brings me the Herald each week.

It does my soul good to read about the Saints afar. It is eight miles to our church and I do not get to go very often. No one knows how a person misses the Saints until he has been away from them.

Let us build the temple of God within us, making our lives true and faithful and clean. Let us keep the Spirit of the Master within us, so that we may help others to follow in his footsteps. My desire is to live humbly and faithfully so that I may meet my Savior when he comes. My prayers are for the sick and afflicted and for the Saints far away. Will you remember me?

The Lord Answers Prayer

By Mrs. Lavinia Clark

I want to say with many other Herald readers that the testimonies help me very much.

I have been healed of goiter through administration. I was blessed in an operation in 1920. When the doctor said I could not live another week, I was taken to the hospital and was unconscious for two days; but when I became conscious I had not the slightest pain. I was gone from home only four weeks. I had left four little children at home, the baby being fifteen months old, but I did not worry about them. I knew that the Lord would take care of them for he was very good to me.

I have prayed very often to the Lord over problems in my home, and he has not turned me away unanswered and unhelped.

I enjoy attending all the church services I can, but I live a distance from the church. I am the only member of the church living on this ridge. Will the Saints pray for me and my family? I have sent for three of the church books and can scarcely wait to receive them.

Healing Comes Through Obedience

By Mrs. Ralph Burch

I appreciate the combination of the three church papers into one. To me the letters are the best part. Sometimes while reading them I am impressed with their truthfulness. Many Saints have had experiences, I feel sure, that would benefit others if they were sent to the Herald.

Some time ago I had an illness that lasted two years. I received administration a few times without the desired results. Doctors, including a specialist, said that an operation was the only cure. I prayed often and did not understand why I failed to get relief.

But one day I mailed some tithing to the Bishop. New strength came to my body, and I continued to gain strength until I was well. I don't know how to appreciate the tender watchcare and numerous blessings that I have received. I want to live to merit these blessings, and exemplify the gospel in word and deed.

Saints make big claims and are always closely watched for misconduct. I sometimes wonder why we say disrespectful things of each other to nonmembers. Why not let them get a good opinion of Latter Day Saintism?

I will appreciate your prayers that my husband may understand and obey the gospel.

QUESTION TIME

For what purpose will Christ reign on earth a thousand years?

The Scriptures tell us that "eye hath not seen nor ear heard" the things prepared for the righteous. Hence we do not have much revealed of the divine purposes during the millennium, and much which seems clearly inferred must be considered in this light. However, it appears that one purpose is to provide a reign in which righteousness shall cover the earth when the meek shall inherit it, as Christ promised. Their desire for association with him and righteous people under holy conditions will be made possible. Some also hold that educational and spiritual development will then be possible to a wonderful extent and will prepare the Saints for the eternal inheritance of celestial life in the presence of God himself.

Even with those who become Christians in this life, there are many differences that exist which only the future life will so modify that a perfect harmony can be attained. The millennium may well be a period during which these harmonizing influences can be more fully developed. It would appear also that these influences will affect children, for some will be living when Jesus comes, of which the church is informed:

"And he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

Paul says "the last enemy" to be destroyed is death. Death will not therefore be destroyed till after the millennium, and during this period such developments must take place as will tend to prepare for the abolishment of death and the ushering in of the eternal conditions to follow. Isaiah says:

"There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them."—Isaiah 65: 20, 21.

Explain the book that John ate (Revelation 10: 10), which was both sweet and bitter.

The book in this text symbolizes the authorized message of God, its delivery meaning the responsibility placed upon the one receiving it. There are two aspects of such a responsibility: the receiving of it, and its faithful discharge. To be honored with the sacred trust from God was symbolized by the placing of the book in John's mouth, which was sweet to him. But the delivery of the message of God may be far from pleasant, for the message may be a solemn warning of fearful events to come. So in this case, John was informed that he "must prophesy again" before nations and people, and subsequent events proved that this experience brought him deep troubles, while at the same time it revealed much of evils to come upon men. When he had eaten it, came bitterness.

Who were the people mentioned in Nephi 7: 25?

This may have referred to some of the Israelites who at that time were scattered over the face of the earth, but if so, it is impossible to state where they were. It has been suggested that Jesus went to the spirits in prison after his resurrection from the dead, and that some of them were of Israel. But others think that he visited the spirits in prison before his resurrection, which would prevent this from having any reference to the people mentioned. This point has not been settled to the satisfaction of all, and of course is speculative.

What was the power to "seal," mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2 and 68: 1?

This term refers to the authority given God's messengers to confirm their message upon those to whom it was delivered. Those who received it were to receive eternal life, while those who rejected it were condemned. In the name of the Lord, the work done was the work of God, and its consequences were sealed upon the people by those who ministered, some of it being inspired prophetically and therefore being as if God himself had spoken to them directly. Thus was power given his disciples to act in his name.

Saints Cooperate to Raise Budget

The home and service department of the church school adult division has contributed $1,020 to the branch budget which enabled the branch treasurer, Stephen Robinson, to pay another note on the building debt May 1. They have made $668 since January 1, by serving dinners to Iowa State legislators and senators on Mondays and Fridays of each week during the sessions.

The K. S. O. Class served dinner and supper at the church Friday, May 5, and made forty-five dollars. The C. W. A. W. Class served on May 12, and made a like amount.

Sister J. L. Dalbey is leader of the adult division and Sister Hattie Clark was head of the home and service department until May 1. Sister Margaret Mayer succeeded Sister Clark in that office, and is carrying on the work of the department.

Sister Grace Brady has had charge of the kitchen almost continually, doing a splendid work with a score or more of faithful sisters who have assisted her.

It is significant that other churches in the neighborhood made only from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five dollars during the sessions of the legislature. Mrs. Bertha Deskin, wife of the pastor, Mrs. Kathryn Wolfe, wife of the church school superintendent, and Mrs. C. T. Kirkwood have visited the Statehouse each week, distributing handbills and using the telephone to get the crowds. They are known at the Statehouse as the "Mormon girls," but they invited the crowds to the Saints' dining hall where good food and right treatment kept them coming.

Young People Hold Special Service for Their Mothers

A special Mother's Day service, arranged and put on by the young people, took the place of the regular Sunday night services at Portland May 14. Solos, and other instrumental numbers, speeches, and readings honoring the mothers comprised the program, which was in charge of Miss Freda Young and Clifford Bryson. Almost twenty young people took part, many of the intermediate girls and boys doing their bit for the first time. Floyd Soneson, who holds the office of priest and is the vice president of the organization, conducted the meeting.

By taking active part in the services, the young people hope to develop so that they will be able to act as leaders of the group in the future.

Appreciate Services of Elder and Sister H. I. Velt

Saints in these two cities, Longview and Kelso, were fortunate in having Elder and Sister H. I. Velt with them for more than a month. Brother Velt began missionary work with three interesting talks in the third week of March. Then he started his illustrated lectures, furnishing wonderful proof of the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

The following week he was called to Portland to attend the young people's convention. Beginning the third week in April he was again here. This time the meeting place was moved from the hall at Longview to the residence of Brother Geer in East Kelso, where he preached gospel sermons, outlining very clearly the truths contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants. Each evening the large house was filled, and deep interest was taken by nonmember friends. By the end of the week a number had given their names for baptism.

On the following Sunday the theme of baptism was carried out in all departments of the church school. Before class time, Elder Barker, of Portland, talked briefly about the baptism of children at eight years of age. Each teacher devoted a part of his time to the subject. At eleven o'clock Brother Velt took baptism as his sermon topic.

And that afternoon seventy Saints and friends assembled at the Y. M. C. A. Building, where arrangements had been made for the use of the swimming pool for a baptismal service. The setting was almost perfect for the occasion, and fifteen were baptized. Then all went to the meeting hall for the confirmation service. The Spirit of God was the ruling power. Brother Velt was assisted during the day by Elder Barker and Elder Nelson, of Portland.

Brother Velt continued his missionary work at the home of Brother Geer during the following week. Each day he visited in the home of Saints and friends and in the evening he preached. His subjects were the establishing and the aim or purpose of the church. By the end of the week one more candidate had turned in her name for baptism.

On the next Sunday before the church school period a short ceremony was enjoyed in which two small children were blessed. Brother Velt was the eleven o'clock speaker. Another baptismal service was held at two o'clock, and after the confirmation service a wonderful prayer and testimony meeting was held. That evening Brother Velt's topic was "The Second Coming of Christ."
