Thoughts at the morning service of February 17 were on the young of the church. After an anthem by the Hymn-Singers Choir, Joyce Elaine Kavan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Kavan, was blessed by Dr. H. A. Merchant and Elder Albert Livingston. The sermon which followed by Elder Livingston challenged the adults present to take their responsibilities to the young more seriously in the future.

Pastor Russell and the college-age people, upon invitation, visited the First Christian Church on February 10. Brother Russell presented the fundamental beliefs of the Reorganized Church to the group. The talk was well received, and members who attended were delighted with the results.

Sunday, February 24, was a high point in the month's activities as Apostle Paul M. Hanson was guest speaker. Many Saints from various parts of the district were present. A district meeting was held in the afternoon at the Omaha church for the election of delegates to General Conference.

Music for the month of February was supplied by Eunice Farber, Louise Steckel, the Bel Canto Girls, Peggy Herrell, Bonita Sands, Lila Livingston, the Zion's League and Hymn-Singers Choirs.

Mrs. Lillian Tabor, for many years women's leader and worker in other departments, left recently to make her home in Los Angeles, California. The women of the church met at the home of Lillian Clark, present supervisor, for a luncheon in honor of Sister Tabor. A parting gift was presented her, after which she expressed her appreciation for having had the opportunity of working with the Saints in Omaha.

Leaguers met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Scott on the evening of February 17. A devotional service was held in honor of Sister Scott. Hymns were sung, favorite scripture quotations were read, and a brief service of prayer was held concluding with a fatherly prayer of blessing by Brother Scott. Sister Scott has been a shut-in for many months, and appreciated the lovely service given by the young people. So many favorable comments were heard that the following week a similar service was held in the Giles Moore home. Brother Moore has been ill most of the winter. The Leaguers expressed a desire to participate in more services of this nature.

Other League activities have been a program of music, a party at the home of Glen Clark, and an early morning devotional service at the home of Reta Russell. Byron Constance, home on leave from the Navy, conducted the devotional service. Breakfast was served following the service. The League also conducts a worship service at the church school hour once each month.

The junior church continues to be an attraction to the children; services are conducted this year by Vesta Crown. At the same hour the nursery class is conducted by Vera Self. These good people and many others, quietly and without much recognition, continue to serve the church in a very vital way.

Australia

Mission Survey

A personal survey of every branch and district, made at the instigation of the First Presidency, was recently completed. In its compilation Apostle C. G. Mesley, Bishop's Agent D. Alberts, and Church School Director A. Frater, assisted by others, interviewed scores of local officers and other Saints. This is the first complete survey ever attempted, and it presents a picture of missionary, pastoral, financial, and educational conditions and trends helpful in planning future ministrations.

The Church at Work in Australia

Apostle Mesley, who has been assembling a comprehensive exhibit of "The Church at Work in Australia," during the last seven years, now has it ready for display in the Auditorium during the General Conference. Australian governmental departments have co-operated to supply 300 excellent photographs of Australian scenes, homes, and industries. All aspects of church life are depicted in sectionalized form. Apostle Mesley also has many films in technicolor taken during his travels around the mission. An adjunct to this exhibition will be a display of Australian arts and crafts prepared by Sister Mesley.

Sorensens Leave for Tahiti

After months of waiting in New Zealand for the approval of government authorities at Tahiti, Elder and Mrs. Sorensen and baby have received their passports. Berths seemed impossible to obtain until a kindly Swedish captain offered free passages on his vessel, the only expense being for meals.

Victoria District Reunion

Victoria district's annual reunion was held at Marysville, Gippsland, December 22-29. A serious strike affected transport and only thirty-five worshippers attended, nevertheless, a happy and friendly spirit pervaded the camp. Hikes were enjoyed in the forest-covered hills, where in one particular area, the tallest trees in Australia, rivaling the redwoods of California, have been preserved in a national park. Visits were paid to Stevensons Falls and mountain viewpoints. Sometimes the pedestrians fled from the summer's sun to fern gullies and ice-cold creeks. Venomous snakes were a source of interest and two were killed by the campers.

Services were held in a tent. District President S. Jacka conducted classes in the open air on church law and procedure. Elders B. Robinson, H. Jacka, A. Veldt, S. L. Harvey, H. Dyke, and R. Walton were in charge of the round table discussions, preaching, Communion, and daily prayer services. Deacon B. Grayden was one whose work made the gathering successful. The Saints shared the work of serving meals in a sport pavilion. Community singing concluded each day's activities.

Tiona Reunion

The twenty-third mission reunion was held at Tiona December 23-31. A record number of 700 camped in the eighty acres of sub-tropical loveliness between ocean and lake. More were expected but could not attend because of a strike which dislocated transport throughout Australia. Nearly every branch in Australia was represented. Olive Shears, Viola Blayney, and June Year journeyed from New Zealand to be present. The flags of all nations where the gospel is being preached, topped by the Christian flag, flew from the flagpole. Emphasis was given the missionary challenge for 1946, "Thrust in Thy Sickle . . . and Reap."

Seventy H. Peisker, acting missionary-in-charge, was camp pastor. Apostle and Mrs. Mesley, who have been striving for months to obtain berths on a boat to America, were present to share in the activities. Religious education, under the leadership of mission director A. S. Frater, was well organized with supervisors taking charge of its different divisions.

The most outstanding group for enthusiasm and attendance, was probably the fourteen-sixteen year old group; Paul Henricks was in charge of the prayer services, Elder Percy Judd the scouting sessions, Mrs. Stalder the Oriole meetings, and Keith and Edith McLaughlin the debates and discussions. Some of the prayer services held in the open air green cathedral would have been sufficient reason to credit the reunion a success for many. Classes were conducted by Elders A. J. Corbett, H. Peisker, F. Potter, A. V. Robinson, and D. Alberts. Excellent preaching services were featured. Sermons by Elder Floyd Potter were based on "A Church That Reaps," "The Church in the Vanguard of Social Reform," "The Need of Familiarity With the Scriptures," and other related topics.

A concert contributed forty-nine pounds towards the reunion budget of ninety-three pounds. "Sunset Reflections" was again a very popular service. Christmas carols, a priesthood breakfast and Communion service, New Year torchlight service, women's sessions, church school, and a vesper service were held. Evensong on the lawn preceded "lights out."

Recreation included organized sports under the direction of D. Mawby; surfing, fishing, and hikes in the bush were enjoyed. A school of porpoises was a source of interest as they disported themselves every day in the ocean near the camp. From a specially erected tower, watch was kept for sharks; only one was seen. An impressive baptismal and confirmation service was held in the green cathedral. Three young people, Ralph Barrett, Jewel Woodward, and Patricia Richards were baptized. Musical activities were under the direction of F. Rawson. A fifty-voice choir sang at the Christmas service.

District President D. O. Chesworth was in charge of the 11 o'clock preaching service. Apostle E. J. Gleazer's timely and inspiring sermon was a stirring challenge to all age groups.

Immediately after dinner the congregation was divided into three classes for a period of instruction and discussion. Apostle Gleazer addressed the men's group. Glada Crinzi, the women, and Bishop Carlson, the younger people.

The afternoon business meeting, with District President D. O. Chesworth in charge, continued to exhibit the spirit of good fellowship and co-operation that was present throughout the day. Assisting him were Apostle Gleazer, Bishop Carlson, and Counselor William Andrew. The bishop's report on district finances showed a balance on hand of $507. An analysis of the general church contributions for 1945 was given, showing a total payment of well over $43,000 from the 3,100 members of the district.

The resignation of William O'Dell as counselor to the president was accepted; no successor was elected. Earl V. Hill resigned as district historian; H. E. Depew was elected to succeed him. Alma Grant was appointed as assistant historian for the district.

As a result of adopting a recommendation from President Chesworth, the district budget assessments to the branches concerned will, in the future, be computed on a per capita basis, thus making a more even distribution of maintenance cost. Another alteration in procedure is that all future business for the operation of the district is to be transacted at an annual fall conference session, rather than in two semi-annual meetings.

Jack William Garnier of Winsor, Raymond Stewart, Victor Hosler, and Paul Shaw of Detroit were recommended for ordination to the office of deacon. All were accepted and their ordinations authorized.

He leaves to mourn his passing his widow, a son, two daughters, fourteen grandchildren, sixteen great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at Hemet, California, on February 23. Elders George Wixom and Charles Fry were in charge.

A Personal Tribute to President Frederick M. Smith

President Smith died today. It brings us to the end of an era in our church history. It is also the end of something for me. There will be too many first-person pronouns in this statement, but one can hardly bear a testimony without them. And this is a testimony. Yet I hope that it may express something that many of my fellow workers feel very deeply today.

These hours have been difficult to bear. They have brought many tasks, telephone calls, requests for information concerning him, people to help, and hard bits of writing to do. Perhaps we should have been able to take the bad news calmly, for we expected it; and we thought we could. But when it came shortly after 10:15 this morning, it struck us like a blow. All day I have worked, biting my lip to keep down a surge of feeling, my eyes often moist as a phrase or some memory of him turned over in my mind. Now I know it is a personal loss. There are many who feel the same way about it.

I bore this testimony once to the General Conference, years ago, when it seemed necessary to rise and defend President Smith. I bear it again, for it is still true, and was true up to the moment I last saw him alive. He was always kind to me, and considerate. He never asked more of me than I could be expected to do, nor required anything honor would have questioned. He never used me as a shield to protect himself, nor did he ever dodge a blow to let it fall on me. He gave me a large measure of freedom in my work, all I was able to manage, and sometimes more. When I made mistakes—and what editor does not have a long list of them like scars on his soul?—he was never harsh in speaking of them. Generally a quiet suggestion, and many times he said nothing at all, when he knew I already understood. When unfair attacks came, he defended me though he had nothing to gain by it. I know others who will bear this testimony.

History records the great things that measure men against the background of eternity; men remember the little things that make friends lovable, kindly, and human. Students will easily find the great things that President Smith contributed to the church. But today I am thinking of many little things that, taken together, make a large bulk of affectionate and grateful memory of him . . . Memories . . .

A phone ringing. "This is the Chief," he says pleasantly, and gets down to business—a question, a problem, or a task. Then, concluding, "Keep in touch with me." Something symbolic in that—it is a good thing to do

A letter of thanks. Something one has done for him. He believes in gratitude, and practices it. A gracious trait in him

High council, trying a case. He lets all the evidence come in. He listens to all discussion, patient with "pro" and "contra." He does not shorten the time; we talk freely, and usually finish by voting together, no matter how we differed at the beginning. We speak our minds, we vote our convictions

Some document arrives, on which he asks advice. The letters of several others are attached, for he seeks much counsel. I have heard him make quick statements, but generally only after he had previously given a thing long consideration.

He appreciated any kindness or service. He was loyal, generous, kind. He remembered things, when the sheer weight and number of cares did not make it impossible. One could go far in this vein

Now that he is gone, I think of things I might have done or said to help him, or to please him. These opportunities, alas, will never come again. And my regret is in vain.

Every life in the ministry is a mixture of the human and the divine. I have seen times when he acted humanly, and I have known times when I was sure he moved and spoke under the eternal power. He bore a terrible incessant burden, and sometimes tried to find relief from it. The load that crushed him was not lifted until today. While he lived, there was no other for his office. And only the One who set him free can acceptably indicate another.

We who worked for him and with him here at headquarters had many reasons to love him, respect him, and remember him with gratitude. If we could have seen our own faults as clearly as we thought we saw his, and had done something about them, how

The Death of President Frederick M. Smith

It is our sorrowful duty to apprise the Saints of the death of President Frederick M. Smith at 10:15 o'clock in the forenoon of Wednesday, March 20, 1946. He was stricken on March 6 by an acute circulatory failure. At this, an early moment after his passing, arrangements are tentatively made for funeral service at three o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, March 22, 1946.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Israel A. Smith,
L. F. P. Curry.

The General Conference

The General Conference set for April 6, through the 14th inclusive, will convene under unusual circumstances. The ordinary concern for its success is immeasurably augmented by the death of our President, Frederick M. Smith. Everything tending to effect his recovery was done: competent nurses were constantly at his side; Dr. Charles F. Grabske, Assistant Church Physician, who attended him, was within call at all times; Dr. A. W. Teel, Church Physician, came from his Los Angeles, California, home for consultation, and eminent physicians from Kansas City, Missouri, were likewise consulted; the healing power of God was sought in his behalf, but all these forces combined were not sufficient to restore him. The result is in accordance with the wisdom and will of our Heavenly Father.

As we give this sad news to the Saints, we are constrained to inform them as to the measures taken to carry on the work of the church. The undersigned have enlisted the wise counsel of the Presiding Patriarch, and members of the Joint Council, including the President of the Quorum of Twelve and the Presiding Bishop. Unanimity of opinion was reached that the General Conference, plans for which were well under way when President Smith was stricken, should be carried through as arranged, and this will be done. These plans are similar to the programs of recent General Conferences and include preaching, classwork, priesthood and quorum meetings, prayer services, and special occasions such as the graduation of Sanitarium nurses, Graceland College night, and the rendition of the oratorio, St. Matthew's Passion.

In prosperity or in the midst of persecution and adversity, the church in the past has stood firm, giving proof of God's guiding and sustaining hand. So now the church goes forward in faith under the direction of quorums and councils provided in God's economy, and once more shall be demonstrated the power of self-perpetuation resident within the body of Christ.

For the success of the Conference, and the progress of the cause, let our prayers in unity and harmony of purpose ascend to Him who never fails. In pursuance to our firm resolve to carry on to the limit of our powers, but ever conscious of our need for divine guidance, we, your servants on whom at this time rest unusual burdens and responsibility, hereby request the Saints to fast by abstaining from the morning meal Sunday, April 7.

With a general observance of this season of fasting and prayer on the part of the Saints, we have the assurance that the church will be blessed and the Conference will witness an increased endowment of power and spirituality.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Israel A. Smith,
L. F. P. Curry.

President Smith's Final Illness

President Frederick M. Smith, died at 10:15 A. M., on Wednesday, March 20, 1946, at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

During the last few months, Dr. Smith has been suffering increasingly from a cardio-vascular disease, arterial hypertension, and other symptoms of arterio-sclerosis. Two weeks ago, March 6, he suffered an acute circulatory collapse. He made steady improvement, and on last Tuesday morning had a decided improvement, with a possible hope of recovery. On Tuesday afternoon occurred another acute episode. In his already depleted condition, he was not able to meet the increasing load upon his system. Over Saturday and Sunday, Dr. A. W. Teel, of Los Angeles, the church physician, was in consultation on his condition. On Tuesday evening a number of eminent Kansas City specialists were called in for consultation. The gravity of Dr. Smith's condition was such as to preclude any hope of preventing the conclusion that followed.

Biographical Notes

Dr. Frederick M. Smith, President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was born January 21, 1874, at Plano, Illinois, which was then the headquarters of the church of which his father, Joseph Smith III, was president from 1860 until 1914. His mother was Bertha Madison Smith, and he was the third child born to this union. His grandfather was Joseph Smith, Jr., who founded the Latter Day Saint Church in 1830.

The family moved to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1881, when the church headquarters was transferred there. He attended the town schools there, and was graduated from the high school in 1891. He showed very early an interest in machinery, engineering, and science; and worked with machinery and electrical companies for a time. He attended the Iowa City Academy in 1895, and the University of Iowa in 1896. Then he returned to Graceland College in Lamoni, which had been established by the church in 1895, studied there for two years, and was the first graduate and only member of the graduating class in 1898. Later studies took him to the University of Missouri and to the University of Kansas. From the latter, he received his A. M. degree in 1911.

He was married August 3, 1897, to Miss Ruth L. Cobb, a daughter of Elijah and Alice (Lyman) Cobb, a young woman who was giving fine service as a teacher at Graceland College. For one year, 1902, he also taught mathematics there. In 1914 they went to Worcester, Massachusetts, where he carried on graduate studies at Clark University under the guidance of the famous Dr. G. Stanley Hall. The work there was interrupted by his father's death on December 10, but he returned to it, and received the Ph.D. degree in 1915.

His church work began early and informally when he assisted his father with the work of the president's office, and his work was given official recognition when he was ordained as his father's counselor on April 18, 1902. In 1906 he moved with his family and his father to Independence, Missouri. It was on May 5, 1915, that he was ordained as the president of the church.

In 1920 he journeyed to Europe, and visited the British Isles, Germany, Holland, France, Italy, and then Palestine and the Near East, occupying some eighteen months for the tour.

Two children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Smith: Alice M., now Mrs. F. H. Edwards, 729 North Delaware, Independence; and Lois A., now Mrs. Edward J. Larsen, Holke and DeKalb Roads, east of Independence. Mrs. Smith was critically injured when struck by a car on April 30, 1926, and died on May 4 at the Independence Sanitarium. His daughter, Lois, continued to maintain his home, and has done so until the present time.

In church circles, Dr. Smith has made a notable contribution in encouraging and directing young people toward educational attainment and ideals. He has given strong support to the church-sponsored Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa. In all his leadership, he has been a champion of modern, liberal, and scientific views. Under his administration, the church purchased the Campus in Independence for recreational and educational purposes; the work on the Auditorium in Independence was begun in 1926, to provide space for general church offices and a meeting place for the general conferences. In 1930, the church celebrated the centennial of its founding with a World Conference, a high point in the history of the organization. He has given strong support to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and contributed much to the finishing of the new building in 1942, which has since served Independence for all hospital purposes. In 1942 the church organization was freed of debt accumulated during the depression.

Dr. Smith has been identified with many organizations: American Sociological Association; American Economic Association; Academy of Political Science, New York City; American Academy of Political Science; American Archaeological Society; American Society for Steel Treating; American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology; Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society of London; American Statistical Society; University Club of Washington, D. C.; University Club, Kansas City; Kansas City Athletic Club; the Masonic Order, in which he is Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, a member of the Scottish Rite Shrine, '33, formerly Potentate of Ararat Temple, Kansas City, and has held many other offices; Sons of the American Revolution, etc.

Dr. Smith's grandchildren include the following: the children of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Edwards—Lyman Francis, Paul Madison, and Ruth Ellen; the children of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Larsen—Frederick Niels, Edward Hale, Laura Anina (whose twin died shortly after birth), Stephen Page, and Daniel Madison.

Those who are left to mourn, besides the daughters and their families mentioned before, include: his brother and counselor in the Presidency, Israel A. Smith, and his family, of Independence; his sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson and her family, of Omaha, Nebraska; a brother, Hale W. Smith and his family of Flagler, Colorado; and three half-brothers: W. Wallace Smith and his family, of Portland, Oregon; Richard C. Smith and his family, of Kansas City, Missouri; and Reginald Smith and his family of Independence.

Discontinue Clothing to Europe

Until further notice, we request that no additional clothing be sent to us for distribution among our church people in Europe. We are awaiting acknowledgment of clothing already sent over. Quite a number of bundles have been received which are still available for use. As soon as we have word that there is further need, we will publish a notice in the Herald.

different our record might have been! And think how many times he was blamed for our failures!

Perhaps the greatest heritage he left us is a group of tasks: the completion of the Auditorium, the building of a greater Graceland, the expansion of the Sanitarium, a new force of missionaries sent into all the world, stewardships, the working order of Zion.

God's love is very great. No doubt he knows how to compensate Brother Fred M. for all his suffering, endurance, and work. We trust that it will be so.

I Am Not My Own

What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

—I Corinthians 6: 19, 20.

By Donna Weddle

HAVE YOU EVER been guilty of remarking to others, or to yourself, "It's no one's business but my own"? If you have, you are one of the vast number, and I do not exclude myself, who has grown to think in terms of me with a capital "M" and God with a small "g." Does the three score and ten years the Lord permits us to live on this earth make us independent of Him? Are we capable of making our business our own? I think not. Know ye not that ye are not your own, but are God's?

It is incredible that mankind should show such disrespect for their Supreme Being and Creator. I speak now of just Christians—people who profess to believe. But let us study a still more select group—our own Latter Day Saints. Did you offer a prayer of gratitude this morning for your good health, your educational opportunities, your fine home life, the privilege of being here with other Saints,—or even for the brisk refreshing air, or the smile of a stranger on the street? A show of hands might prove embarrassing—we do seem to be so busy! When we present someone with a gift, we at least expect a "thank you." But here we are with the glory of God revealed to us every day in Nature and in our association with our fellow men—the very glory of God literally laid on our door steps; and I dare say too many of us, instead of raising our eyes to the sky in thankfulness and humbleness, take everything for granted, and even grumble a little about the weather. Know ye not ye are not your own, but are God's?

MOST OF US will agree that parents should demand obedience of their children. Do we also agree that we haven't obeyed our Heavenly parent as well as we expect our own children to obey us? As a church we are quite proud of the fact that we receive direct revelations from God. Do you take that for granted too? Think of it—direct revelations from God! What do we do with those revelations?—why, we print them in a little black book—then hide the book! How long since your Doctrine and Covenants has been opened? I heard Brother Ray Whiting say one time, that he asked a lady, in whose home he was visiting, if he might use her Doctrine and Covenants for a moment. After searching the house frantically, she remembered that about a year ago she had lent it to a friend, who had never returned it. Twelve months without the revelations from God. Is she a typical Latter Day Saint? I sincerely hope not, but I won't say I believe not. Are we so wonderful we can ignore God's instructions to us? Know ye not ye are not your own, but are God's?

I know that some of you are probably in all sincerity saying to yourselves, "But I'm good, I'm not bad." Perhaps you are good; but are you good enough? In making your decisions do you always choose that which is Christlike? I'm speaking now not just of big things—choosing your life work, your wife or husband, or what church to join. I'm speaking of the small things as well—whether you shall sleep on Sunday morning, or go to church; make friends with your new neighbor, or use the time more to your own advantage; study the Word of God on Sunday afternoon, or get up a bridge game. Our responsibility lies not so much in choosing right from wrong—we assume that as Latter Day Saints we should not have much difficulty there. Our problem lies in choosing between harmless things and good things; or between good things and better things. Know ye not ye are not your own, but are God's?

If I seem radical, I don't mean to apologize. I just hope you won't dismiss the things I've said as the opinions of an extreme person. If you do, you are just closing your eyes and excusing yourself. No one here is perfect, so no one here is as good as he can be. First of all we must know the Law, after which we must keep the Law, then it is our duty to share our beliefs with others. Know ye not ye are not your own, but are God's?

We need to make our business God's business. We need to learn to place first things first. You made that car payment this month; but did you file your inventory? Is paying General Motors or Ford more important than paying God? All belongs to Him, and he asks but a tithe—would you cheat Him out of that?

"Awake ye Saints of God, awake"—and come to the realization that ye are not your own, "For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

You don't have to carry all the burdens of your whole life at the same time. Sometimes you will have one; sometimes you will have none. There will be times when you try to carry too many, and you may put some of them down while you regretfully list a failure in your record. Or you will call on God for help, and He will give you strength to go on. Someway—you don't always know how—you manage to get through life, a little at a time.

Christian Womanhood in Action

By Florence M. Sinclair

THESE WORDS suggest the putting on of a mantle—a covering—the protection (against rain or shine) of Christ. Patterning our lives after his. What was the secret of his success? Christ said, "I do always the will of my Father." It has been said that the will of God was Jesus' "north star." To that his compass kept pointing. To that our compasses can be set, if we will set them. The will of God is vast, and as it concerns the whole universe and the whole future, it is in its totality beyond our knowing. But God has a will for every life, and for every hour of that life. If everyone were doing the will of God, we should find that the pieces of accomplishment fitted together in a perfect mosaic, like a vast puzzle being put together. The will of God is his blueprint for creation. The plan is all right; the only slip occurs in the carrying out of the plan. When we substitute our own wills for the will of God we get a strange world.

It was said of Jesus that "He went about doing good."—Acts 10: 38. I'd like to present a few thoughts for your consideration and for your meditation that pertain to this phase of life patterned after the Christ. May we say "He went about helping other people."

HOW CAN WE HELP OTHER PEOPLE?

What have we to offer to: the woman tormented with loneliness, worries, or frustrations?—a neighbor who has lost a son, a husband, or sweetheart in the war?—someone tormented by an unhappy love affair?—those who have no faith?—the host of people we see every day who are troubled with problems they can't solve?

Never was it more important to know how to help others than it is today. None of us knows enough about helping people. But we shall not learn more about it until we begin to do it. It is human to like to help people. When an accident happens on the street, people gather, not just from curiosity, but also to see if there is anything they can do; and usually one or two of them are very useful. If a family is made homeless by a fire, there are usually neighbors to open their houses and tide the family over. When people are sick or in trouble, we go to see them or send them flowers. There is an enormous flow of kindness between the poor, sharing often in very sacrificial ways. We give to the community chest, the Red Cross, the "neediest families." America has its faults; but it is perhaps the most generous nation on earth. It knows how to help, and it loves to help, in large, material ways. It doesn't take Saints to want to help people; it only takes human beings:

But when we try to do more than meet the most superficial needs of people (usually material), we often discover two things; first, the immediate need which is simple, often goes back to a deeper need that is more complicated; and second, we feel inadequate to handle the intricacies and complexities of a whole human situation. For instance, we give some money to a man who comes to the door and asks for it; but if we try to do a thorough job, we may run into a nature with difficult trends in it, or a family problem, which cannot be handled by giving him fifty cents or a dollar. This has led many of us into a policy of "hands off," and we delegate such responsibilities. Naturally, we turn a sick person over to a doctor, or a person needing legal advice to a lawyer. But then this process keeps on. For a maladjusted person, we call in a psychiatrist or social worker. When a man cannot find employment, we suggest government relief.

For many years psychologists have been studying human personalities with a view to working out a science of the mind and spirit. Probably we have all benefited from this effort, and most of us have taken into our minds more psychological ideas (some true, some false) than we realize. A brilliant Scotch theologian once said, "Psychology crawls to catch up to the Christian religion!" Christ was the greatest psychologist that ever lived, and spiritually and intuitively anticipated what we know of the mind today—not only in the clues he offers to the understanding of human nature and its problems, but in providing such standards and values and spiritual dynamics as will keep people from falling into many difficulties, and in giving them a focus round which to center the new way of living which they find when they discover the reality of faith. Christ has no competitor. The lives best trained from childhood in the art of living, the lives most able to adjust to life as a whole, the lives best able to meet the problems that confront them in actual experience, the lives best grounded in an effectual and satisfying "way of life" for the future, seem to be those which look to him as their guide.

WHAT DOES IT TAKE TO HELP OTHER PEOPLE?

What are the qualities which we must develop if we expect to help other people?

If we want to help people, we must love them. Some of us say we love people, when what we mean is that we find a certain exhilaration in them, or that we are easily touched by distress. This is merely to say we belong to the human species. Real love for people must be unselfish; it must live on their territory and in their concerns. It must be able to take a large look at them, and to want greatly for them the fullness of life which God wants them to have. Real caring for people brings about a twofold activity; it gives us a certain power to get "inside" them, seeing life through their eyes, sympathy; and then it gives an energy which when added to their own makes the burdens lighter and the going easier. The fact that another person is intelligently interested in you and will take time and trouble for you, brings a new factor into life and situations.

But this love must not be sentimental. This may lead to all kinds of mistaken kindness. There is the rich woman who is beset by people who think that a gift of money will get them out of all their troubles; enough flattery and "sob talk" and they usually get what they want. The truth is that such giving is only a sop to both sides; it puts off the day when the receiver must face himself and get down to his real problems; and it wins for the giver a fawning gratitude which only inflates her ego. Sentimental love keeps people stuck in the problems from which we say we want to release them; it goes on trying to help people who have shown they are not in earnest about getting to the root of the problem; it steals the time which we might put into those who mean business. Let us give any amount of time to weak people who want to be strong, to people who are honestly trying to learn; but let us not waste time on those who come back again and again, wanting us to mop up for mistakes they keep making because they will not get to the real root of the difficulty. Creative love has salt in it; it is very different from sentimental love. Let us never begin to help someone conscious that we are going to help them; let us begin by seeking to know them, understand them, love them—and the help, if any there is, will be as unconscious as it is inevitable.

If we are to help people, we must keep emotionally detached from them. We must help people with their problems, but we must be careful not to try to live their lives for them, nor to make their decisions. We should let no more emotion come into the situation than is brought by the normal joy of helping people. If we are to keep healthy and objective about intimate work with people, we should never take their problems to bed with us and lie awake over them; say your prayers for them, commit them to God; and then pull down a shade in your mind which shuts out human problems, and you will be readier for the inspiration which may come to you early the next morning. When we are able to help people, life-long friendships with them may result. But sometimes when we have done what we could, the ways will part. We must leave them free to retreat. It should never be possible for them to hurt us by anything that they do, and if we experience hurt feelings, we may be sure too much personalness has crept in. Our ability to keep emotionally detached, at the same time as we are deeply interested, is the true test of the quality of our help.

If we are to help people, we need a knowledge of what life is. Some people get in difficulty, and many miss the mark, because they try to live in a world of their own making, not in the world that is. We shall help people most if we help them to understand what life is. We must begin with a choice between what Dr. Richard Cabot called "pleasant fortune" and "spiritual training," as the end of life. Millions of people want its aim to be "pleasant fortune," and because such is not the case, they are continually in a warfare with the constitution of things. If we accept "spiritual training" as the aim of life, we shall not expect it all to be smooth sailing; we shall only seek that, whatever happens to us, we may be drawn towards that supreme end. The more we watch life, the more does it become plain that it is never what happens to us that is of supreme importance, but how we take it. A man is stricken with infantile paralysis; his hopes crash, he will not exercise painful muscles, he draws life about him like a curtain and becomes an invalid. Another man is hit with the same disease; he studies, he fights boredom with routine, he waits for the opportunity to come back into the world and make a gallant life. The difference is not in the circumstances; the difference is in the way the man met the circumstance, that is, it is in the man himself.

Trouble comes to everybody, and almost indiscriminately. There is no relation between a man's virtue and his prosperity, nor between his rascality and his adversity. Disobedience to certain laws will bring on difficulty; but obedience in one area of life is no guarantee against misfortune in some other. Religious faith is not a guarantee against trouble, but against defeat. A person is not to seek faith in God in order to ward off difficulty. If he does, he is doomed to disappointment. Faith does not alter what life brings to us, it alters what we bring to life, it alters the way we take what life brings to us. Pain, sorrow, loss, disappointment, death—no one can wholly escape these. But rebellion, self-pity, resentment, sulking, despair—everyone can escape these. The crucial thing in life is not what happens to us, but how we take it.

There is one quality which draws people, and opens the door to helping them, and that is cheerfulness. People are inclined to accept help from those they think to be making a good "go" of life themselves, and if they have found the path, their cheerfulness ought to be the outward sign of it. No wonder Jesus often said to his friends, "Be of good cheer," which means precisely, "Cheer up." The serious business to which they had put their hands tended to make them serious; maybe a frown or a solemn look came over their faces; and then He, who was leading the most important work in the world, would say to them, "Cheer up." Nothing is more unattractive and nothing is more obvious than fictitious cheerfulness. There are people who smile with their lips, but not with their eyes; or who put on a frozen religious smile. You can spot it at once, and most people want to run away from it. But the person who is cheerful, not from self-satisfaction, and not because life is always easy, but because she knows "the way" and is finding satisfaction in following it, is always a good drawing card for the faith she professes.

Of course, the greatest need of all, if we would help people, is faith. Faith is much less an intellectual matter than one of imagination. The mind can analyze; but the imagination can see things in a new conformation. Our own belief that things can be different or better for someone else goes back to what has taken place in our own lives. Faith is like a bicycle. It stands upright only when it is in motion. The minute it stops moving, it flops on its side. Faith means a great expectation, living right up into the very most a situation can yield, praying and working for that utmost. This is the faith that removes mountains, and makes men whole. People do not enter into it, when they understand "all mysteries and all knowledge," but when they simply turn themselves and their needs over to God, go to work with him, and let him go to work with them. Faith is like water, it can steal into the smallest openings. When you love someone, when you pray for them, and when God galvanizes your faith that things can be different for them, you have one of the most powerful forces on earth in your hands. Faith, its possession and transmission, is the heart of helping people.

We also need intelligence. Another quality we need is flexibility. Also moral integrity. The greatest hypocrisy of our day is the divorce which often exists between people's public and private life. When we meet people to help them, we meet them in two ways (1) as a friendly human being, and (2) as an informal yet true representative of responsible society. We must stand for the right things. We must stand for the right in our own lives, so that there is no divergence between what we urge on others and what we demand of ourselves. This does not mean perfection before we can set out to help other people, but it does mean integrity. This work requires an endless amount of patience. Also persistence. And let us never forget the need for humility—genuine, inner humility. Lots of people think that humility is a kind of self-effacement which means doing nothing at all. Real humility, as I see it, is just one thing; it is depending on God, not on ourselves. It isn't inferiority, nor shyness, nor running away, nor everlastingly calling attention to how useless one is; humility is depending on God. In this case, it is knowing that it is God who helps people, not we. This does two things; it keeps us from worrying about people when things are going bad; and it keeps us from pride when they are going well. Our work is to do what God tells us. If we fail, let us bring the failure to him and ask for another chance. If we succeed, let us bring the success to him, for it is his success, not ours. The inner cure for pride is thanksgiving; the more you are thankful to God, the less will you be thankful to yourself.

Briefly, then, let us suggest certain principles for helping people:

1. Let us begin always with a will to understand, not a will to criticize. If we put ourselves in the other person's position, we shall know how he came to do what he did, or to be what he is. It is not our function to either condone or condemn, but to talk a person out of himself, to help him understand himself, and to help him find a faith by which his whole life can be strengthened.

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

THERE HAVE BEEN so many ill-advised attempts to read pet hobbies and private interpretations into Biblical prophecy, that you may perhaps have become disgusted with all prophecy, and suspicious of those who interpret it to suit their own ends. If you feel that way about prophecy, we can only sympathize with you, and ask that you hear us with an open mind, examine the claims and the interpretations we make, and judge for yourself whether the interpretations are reasonable in the light of history and the scriptural record.

Let us go back first to the second chapter of Daniel. Daniel was a captive in Babylon. The king of Babylon was Nebuchadnezzar. The king threw all his soothsayers and astrologers into a panic by demanding that they not only interpret a troublesome dream which he had, but first tell him the dream, which he had forgotten. The thing came to the ears of Daniel, and after he and his companions had made it a subject of earnest prayer, he approached the king, and not only told him his dream, but gave an interpretation of it. First, let us read Daniel's account of the dream or vision, beginning with the 31st verse.

"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."

Here is a clear, concise summary of world history, from the time of Daniel to the time of the end. Any student of history, with the help of his Bible, can interpret this vision. King Nebuchadnezzar, whose kingdom reached the pinnacle of wealth and power, was the head of gold. His kingdom was overthrown by the Medes and Persians, who were the breast and arms of silver—an inferior kingdom. Then the Greeks under Alexander conquered the world, represented in the image by the belly and thighs of brass. The Greeks were in turn overthrown by the Romans, represented by the legs of iron; the Roman Empire was divided, first into the two parts represented by the two legs of iron, and then into the several kingdoms represented by the toes of mingled clay and iron.

A companion prophecy, which must be studied in conjunction with this, is the vision of the four beasts in the seventh chapter of Daniel. We have not time to quote it complete, but ask you to read it for yourself in conjunction with the second chapter, and to note that this vision follows the same pattern as the vision of the image. The first beast represents Babylon; the second, Media-Persia; the third, Greece; the fourth, Rome. As the image had ten toes to indicate the division of the Roman Empire into ten kingdoms, so the fourth beast has ten horns, which Daniel says in a later verse (7: 24) "were ten kings that should arise."

The promise of the latter-day kingdom, represented in the first vision by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, was that in the days of these kings (that is, the ten kings or kingdoms which grew out of the Roman Empire) "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."—Daniel 2: 44.

WHAT IS THE TIME when these things are to be? By again combining our knowledge of Scripture with our knowledge of history, we can arrive at some highly significant conclusions. If we can arrive at a date when the fall of Rome was complete, and the subdivision into ten kingdoms under way, we have a point from which we can reckon time. The conquest of the Roman Empire was completed by the Lombards in the period from A. D. 560-570. With the secular power of Rome overthrown, there was nothing to hinder the papacy, which is represented in Daniel's vision by the "little horn," in Daniel 7: 8, and Daniel 7: 25, from exercising both temporal and spiritual power over all the nations of the earth, with neither temporal nor spiritual hindrance. This condition, Daniel saw, should prevail "until a time, and times, and the dividing of a time," that is, for three times and a half.

Let us turn next to the 12th chapter of the Book of Revelation. Here, if we could read for you at length, you will find John's vision of the woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. This woman, being in travail, gave birth to a man-child who should "rule all nations with a rod of iron," and the child was caught up to God to save him from the fury of the great red dragon which stood ready to devour him. The woman, also in danger, fled into the wilderness to a place prepared of God, where according to the 6th verse, she was to be fed 1,260 days. In verse 14, the time she is to remain in the wilderness is characterized in familiar language—if you remember the language of Daniel, it is to be "a time, and times, and half a time." When you take into account that in prophetic utterance one day often stands for one year, and the further fact that the ancient year according to the accounts given in chapters 7 and 8 of Genesis, consisted of 360 days, it becomes quite easy to ascertain the duration of the apostasy. Three and a half "times" or years, of 360 days each, equals 1,260 days—the time the woman was to be in the wilderness. Allowing one year for each prophetic "day," and beginning with the final conquest of the Roman Empire by the Lombards in A. D. 570, 1,260 added to that date brings us to the year 1830—the year in which the restoration of the gospel, the priesthood, and the doctrine and organization of the primitive church found their culmination in the organization of this church under the ministry of Joseph Smith.

Perhaps you discount that as pure coincidence and clever sophistry. But without going into the details because of the great time that would be consumed, and the intricate nature of the calculations, let us supply these further facts. If you take an era or a period of 37 years, from A. D. 570 to A. D. 607, as the period in which the Roman Empire met its downfall, and divide it in half, you arrive at the date 588. Then, if you reduce the 1,260 prophetic years to solar years of 365 $\frac{1}{4}$ days each, you get the figure 1,242, which added to 588 again brings us to A. D. 1830. Or if you take the closing date of this period, 607, and add to it the computation of lunar years of 354 $\frac{1}{3}$ days each, the answer will be 1,222 $\frac{1}{2}$, which added to 607 again brings us out at 1,829 $\frac{1}{2}$, or approximately 1830.

Strangely enough, the events which happened to Joseph Smith in 1830 and the years immediately preceding, were also foretold in another prophecy which Latter Day Saints very frequently quote. Revelation 14: 6 reads: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Note that it was not to be a new gospel, but the same old gospel which had been preached in previous dispensations—an everlasting gospel, but one which was evidently no longer found on earth, else it would not have been necessary to bring it again. Note that it was to be restored to earth by angelic ministry, and not by the efforts of men. Note that it was to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, as the stone which was cut out of the mountain without hands was to grow until it filled the whole earth.

Before concluding we should like to give you some of the opinions and hopes of other great and good men—some of the reformers who did what they could in their time to prepare the way for this restoration, but who recognized that their work was necessarily incomplete.

Martin Luther said, "I cannot tell what to say of myself; perhaps I am Phillip Melancthon's forerunner. I am preparing the way for him like Elias in spirit and power." John Wesley wrote: "The times which we have reason to believe are at hand, (if they are not already begun) are what many pious men have termed 'the latter day glory'; And yet the wise men of the world, the men of eminence, the men of learning and renown, 'cannot imagine what we mean by talking of an extraordinary work of God.' They cannot discern the signs of these times. They can see no signs at all of God's arising to maintain his own cause, and set up his kingdom over the earth."—Sermon 71. Charles Wesley penned the lines of the hymn:

Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,

And summon whom thou dost approve,
For messengers divine.

From favored Abraham's seed,
The new apostles choose,
In isles and continents to spread
The dead-reviving news.

Roger Williams, founder of the first Baptist church in America, said, "The apostasy of Anti-Christ hath so far corrupted all that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew." Alexander Campbell paid this tribute to the Reformation: "By the reformation of the seventeenth century, that dark cloud was broken in fragments," and then went on to qualify his praise by adding, "The primitive gospel in its effulgence and power is yet to shine out in its original splendor to regenerate the world." Similar light was looked for by John Bunyan, John Robinson, Sir Isaac Newton, and many others that we could mention. Their hopes and wishes, we believe, were fulfilled in the Restoration which came through Joseph Smith in the highly significant year of 1830.

To write a good letter you must approach the job in the lightest and most casual way. You must be personal, not abstract. You must not say, "This is too small a thing to put down." You must say, "This is just the sort of small thing we talk about at home." At the same time, you must not be over-personal. We enjoy the record of personal observation just as long as it is balanced by detachment. We like to see our friend moving across the scene he describes, but we don't want to see him bulking large in his own landscape.—A. G. Gardiner, Pebbles on the Shore, and Winifred Kirkland, The Joys of Being a Woman.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

Discovering Highways of Abundant Living

Goals for Youth: They Need to Find Society and Their Relationship to It

By Elizabeth Schall

It is January in my California garden, and the daffodils are bursting forth from the ground. The large fat buds will soon open into deep golden trumpets. To me those golden trumpets, which will blossom in an otherwise bare and lifeless garden, will be the promise of the summer sunshine to come—of the life that grows, buds, and blooms in service to others.

Working together, friend with friend, we are discovering for ourselves the true meaning of brotherhood—our place in society. Our hearts must be filled with courage and vision to enable us to work out the problems of today and the purposes of tomorrow. We dare not entertain any emotions of self-pity, fear, suspicion, or hate within ourselves lest we transmit them to others whom we contact and thus belittle the part we might play in determining the happier world toward which we are striving. Strength of soul, courage, and love must be ours. Regardless of the conditions we meet in our daily walk in life, we must strive to achieve these spiritual treasures. Remember there are social victories to be won and that it will take all the spiritual strength we can muster to win. There is so much of worth to win. May this thought quicken our courage and strengthen our purpose.

A prominent psychologist states, "We cannot live constructively, be sure of where we are going, or be dynamic in our drive toward our objectives unless we have standards; unless we love the good and spurn the evil. We must bring up a generation of men and women who believe that this world can be a much better place than it has ever been and that they are the people to make it so. The greatness and joy of America is that all such blessings are within the reach of every citizen who cares enough to claim them and to work for them." Here lies the challenge to the youth of our church; an opportunity to work within the community in such a manner that their own lives as well as the lives of others will be truly enriched. "Youth holds the key that will unlock tomorrow's treasures of freedom, democracy, and a stable and Christian condition."

1. In order to meet this challenge, it will be necessary for youth to make a study of God's will for human life as found in our three standard books. Doctrine and Covenants 85:36 states: "Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." God wants individuals to become Christlike characters so that mankind will be of one heart and one mind and dwell in righteousness. It will require intelligent thinking to bring about this condition—to direct our actions.

WHAT SORT OF MIND WILL BE NEEDED?

A realistic mind—a mind that faces life as it is, knows the facts, and understands that everything has its price.

An idealistic mind—a mind that dreams dreams of what might be, even though fulfillment seems intangible, and the goal seems far distant.

A flexible mind—a mind that can change its viewpoint if necessary when widening horizons give clearer vision.

A mind unafraid—one that will venture on new paths and thus create new grooves of endeavor in the brain.

A determined mind—a mind that acts with decision and promptness in matters of basic principles.

A co-operative mind—one that will work with other minds and share in co-operative thinking.

A mind that accepts the rule of love as a guide in all decisions.

A mind that believes that personal morality is necessary for worth-while life.

2. Then, too, youth will need to make a realistic study of the social problems of today. The hand that rocks the cradle may indeed rule the world but the voice that teaches youth determines the sort of world to be ruled. We have our present world and its conditions because "somebody taught a child." Recognizing this truth, youth must study and understand the past; look squarely and keenly at the present in the light of the past; and from this position, erect that which is worth building and preserving. Youth must learn perspective. During the war, it was considered patriotic to work; but it is also patriotic in peace for young people to equip themselves for citizenship and its obligations and responsibilities. Education will prepare them for their future in society as well as be a means for self-government. Careful guidance as well as education will be required in order that youth may adjust itself to small weekly earnings or allowances after the fifty-dollars-a-week wages received doing war work. It will be necessary to develop good consumer attitudes and habits. The young job seeker of today must sense the importance of such virtues as presenting an attractive personal appearance, being honest, sincere, prompt, and having the ability to get along with other people. Success itself in holding a job, or in any other phase of life, is largely a matter of habit—good physical and mental habits.

Lack of respect for law is causing many of the problems of youth today. Lincoln said, "Let reverence for law be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice." We find in Doctrine and Covenants 112:6, "to the laws all men owe respect and deference . . . human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man, and divine laws, given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker." Obedience to all laws brings greater freedom; and at times real courage is required to live by them. No civilized society can exist without them, and the sooner we learn to adjust ourselves to them, the easier life will be.

3. It is not always easy for youth, trying to live a spiritual life, to work and play with the youth of the world. A spiritual life is a courageous life, and youth needs courage in solving the social problems of today. This leads us to a consideration of the kind of role youth ought to play in society. Realizing that we function as a whole, that our moral and spiritual nature does not operate as a separate entity, we will mention several qualities of the spirit that youth should seek to develop in order to take its place in society.

(a) First, appreciation or understanding. It is only as we truly understand other people that we are able to appreciate their true value. Everyone or every group has something of value to give the whole. Too, we need an appreciation of God and the importance of religion in the lives of individuals.

(b) Faith is another quality of the soul to be developed. Faith in oneself; in one's fellow men; in one's country; in the future; in God. If our lives reflect a deep faith in these aspects of living, they will then be a demonstration of these values.

(c) "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men," brings the greatest message of good will the world has ever had. Good will is the answer to many problems today: good will among neighbors, among members of a family, among nations, among people of different creeds, among people of different economic interests; good-will in our branches, and toward the church as a whole. Young people must learn to overcome those things which interfere with good will, such as resentments, grudges, jealousy, fear, envy, hypercriticism, prejudices, greed. Surely this is a big order. It will take the diligence of all to bring this about.

(d) Honesty is the basis of three of the ten commandments. No matter how conscientious one may be, he cannot be truly honest until he knows the facts. The habits of alibis can become a subtle form of dishonesty; placing the blame on another and directing it from oneself is still another way of avoiding the truth. Do we keep our promises both as to pleasure and work? Honesty can become a habit if we will but let it.

(e) The simple quality of kindness is one that is overlooked many times—not only the kindnesses of everyday life but kindness in our attitude toward people. Caustic remarks and sharp retorts are keenly unkind. They are often used to cover up our own feeling of inadequacy. True kindness of the spirit involves a tolerant outlook on life.

(f) There are many things that can inspire us with reverence: Psalm 121: 1, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help," and Psalm 19: 1, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork," express the kind of outreach, the kind of reverence that will, if given a chance, keep the spirit from growing niggardly, squeezed, and mean. Not until we have glimpsed something of the infinite nature of God can we touch the deepest spring of reverence; the infinite love of God which is greater than all forms of human love from the beginning of time through all ages to come; "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," the wisdom of God which is greater than all the combined wisdom of all the great men of all time. No one can think of God in these terms without reverence. Youth must experience this deepest sense of reverence and spiritual faith.

(g) The function of courage is to give us power, both physical and mental, to turn purpose into action. We grow from the purely physical courage, which is the courage of the child, to the mental and moral courage of maturity. The reckless driver who menaces the public with the risks he takes has never grown beyond the level of physical courage and is still childish. Youth must learn to take the hard knocks of life without complaint, but must not expend its valor merely in "taking" them; it must attack their causes. If one cannot do this, his courage is still stunted.

Then, too, courage must enable youth to carry its highest values into action. When we are able to convert into action the highest ideals we possess, then we are brave on a mature level, and we are truly alive as a healthy, normal person is alive. If a morally courageous person is able to put himself in the place of another and view life from that vantage point, he is not likely to feel a strong incentive to run risks which might endanger that other person's well-being. Where there is no strong motive, there is not likely to be strong moral courage.

Both imagination and a strict kind of logic go into the making of mature courage. Each involves mental exercise; each requires self-discipline. H. G. Wells says, "The ultimate bravery is the courage of the mind." It is the most likely of all traits to reward us well. And quoting John Tyndall: "It is as fatal as it is cowardly to blink facts because they are not to our taste." In both the home and the church, we should learn that faith and trust in God have been a source of courage through all the ages.

4. Lastly, youth needs actual participation in the struggle for a more Christian society. There is no one of us but wishes to be popular—but popularity depends on one's ability to get along with other people. To do this requires a constant "give-and-take;" tolerance of others; an earnest endeavor to work and play co-operatively with those about you. In this greatest of arts and sciences—the art and science of living well with our fellow men—there is room for a great deal of improvement. Co-operation is the solution to the problem. Kingdom-building must be done upon lasting values. When we are busy doing something for someone, we have no time to be moody or to think of ourselves. Many of the problems of living together would vanish if the old-fashioned virtues—"modesty," "temperance," "sobriety," "courtesy," "self-respect," and "honesty,"—were practiced. When people truly co-operate, each gives his best in the service of the whole. It means making the particular contribution which each has to make to the group and appreciating what every other person has to contribute. If we could learn to do that, we would never have anger, jealousy, or bickering in any group; but each one thinking of the group as a whole, would contribute his best work to the welfare of all.

A Chinese philosopher once said, "The wise man does not lay up treasure. The more he gives to others, the more he has for his own." Jesus expressed much the same idea when he said, "Give and it shall be given unto you; with the same measure that you mete withal it shall be measured to you again." In our struggle for a Christian society, we must encourage generosity, not only in regard to material things but also in regard to things of the spirit. True generosity means giving a little more than is expected—a little more time, a little more enthusiasm, a little more patience, a little more thoughtfulness of the other fellow. It means thinking, not "What am I getting out of this?" but "What am I giving to this situation?" Giving is the very essence of living. Give with all the fullness of your strength, with all your heart, and affection and gratitude, Loyalty is another fine, upstanding quality of the spirit which we want to develop in our dealing with others. We must be loyal to ourselves, to our families, to our friends, to our work, to our country, to our church, and to our God. Loyalty leads to responsibility. Everyone has two great responsibilities: (1) to make the most of himself as an individual; (2) to make his finest contribution to society. In order to do this, one needs to know how to work and to work hard. Acceptance of responsibility means possession of strength, vigor, and power. The timid and fearful shrink from responsibility. The selfish and self-centered shun it. It is the mark of maturity to face responsibilities honestly and to accept them courageously.

For the difficult world that youth must face, faith in itself will be needed. Youth must become aware that while the appointments of civilized living are good and pleasant, there are certain things that are better, because they are fundamental to life itself.

2. Let us listen more than we talk. What people say to us is often more important than what we say to them.

3. Let us tell them, from our own or others' experience, of things that have been helpful to us in solving our problems. Let us get as near to a situation like theirs as we can, and keep to experience, not theory. Nearly all of us have had actual help from God in time of trouble, or from another human being, or from an idea or a book. We need not be preachy or censorious, but we can suggest better ways to handle a situation than they have been taking.

4. Let us spend real time in prayer for those we want to help. Prayer may be all that we can do for those who are not yet open, in whose life we have as yet found no place to land.

5. We must provide fellowship for people whom we help. One of the most useful things we can do for people under tension is to include them in our homes, letting them have part in real family life, not treating them too "specially."

None of us know enough about helping people, and amateur experimentation in this important field is not advised. But we do ask for those who will learn all they can from others, and then learn more from experience and from working with God, till they become at least better trained and more skillful in the all-important work of helping people.

The days grow shorter, the nights grow longer,
The headstones thicken along the way;
And life grows sadder, but love grows stronger
For those who walk with us day by day.

The final meeting of the day was also the concluding service of a series of illustrated lectures given by Elder Veit. For his closing lecture, he chose the subject, "Life After Death."

On Friday, February 22, the young people of the district met at the Pontiac church for the opening session of a two-day series of inspirational meetings. A banquet was served by the ladies of the Pontiac branch, followed by an evening of musical numbers, introductions, readings, and a talk by Elder Almer Sheehy.

Saturday morning the group met at 9:15 for a devotional service. At 10:15 and 11:15 classes were conducted by Elder Sheehy. Another class convened at 2 p. m., followed by a recreation period of two hours in the gymnasium of one of the city schools.

On Saturday evening a talk about Hawaii, illustrated with colored slides, was given by Elder Velt. Throughout the entire gathering, different young people of the district contributed greatly to the success of the meetings by their talks and musical numbers.

Much credit is due Sister Frank Feske of St. Clair, district leader of the young people, and Elder Clyde Young of Flint, for their untiring efforts in promoting this institute.

—L. O. BROCKWAY,
District President.

Our Departed Ones

ETZENHOUSER.—Emma Elizabeth, daughter of David and Elizabeth Winn, was born August 19, 1882, in Macon County, Missouri, and passed away at the Independence Sanitarium March 12. In early childhood she joined the Reorganized Church, of which her father was a minister. She received her education in Kansas City, and worked as a secretary before her marriage to Russell D. Etzenhouser on September 11, 1898; nine children were born to this union, eight of whom survive. For many years Sister Etzenhouser was superintendent of the primary department in Stone Church. Until recently she was an active member of the choir, and was one of the charter members of the Independence Music Club. She was known to many because of her efforts in securing free textbooks in the Independence public schools; her work in establishing the parent-teacher movement in Missouri brought her state-wide recognition. She was instrumental in organizing the first parent-teacher unit in Independence, and served two years as its president; a scholarship fund in her name was set aside last year by the council of the organization. She has ministered to thousands by serving as an obstetrical assistant to the late Dr. Charles Keown and Dr. Russell Etzenhouser. During the recent war, she responded to the urge to do her part in meeting the national emergency by giving many hours service in the Red Cross sewing room, and by assisting in the maternity ward at the Independence Sanitarium. Her family life was an expression of cheerfulness and efficiency. Her eight children united with the church and reflected in home life, professional services, and social affiliation fidelity to Christian ideals and the mission of the church which constituted eloquent testimony of her motherly ministry.

She is survived by three sons: Dr. Russell D. Etzenhouser, Jr., of Independence; David E. Etzenhouser of Sudbury, Ontario; and Commander Merrill W. Etzenhouser, U. S. N., of San Diego, California; five daughters: Dorothy Gunderson of Fort Collins, Colorado; Lucille Webster, Muriel Seroy, Margaret Shoop, and Emma Jeane Agee of Independence. She also leaves nine grandsons, five granddaughters, two sisters and three brothers. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church in Independence, Apostle John W. Rushton officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

EGAN.—David, three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Egan, Jr., of Salt Lake City, Utah, was hit by a truck and died February 14. Besides his parents, he is survived by his three brothers, Donald, Jimmy, and Richard. Funeral services were conducted in Salt Lake City with Elder Daniel B. Sorden officiating.

CLEMENTS.—Malissa A., of Mobile, Alabama, died February 15. Funeral services were held February 17 at 2:30 p. m. at the Reorganized Church in Mobile with Elders Franklin Steiner and Raymond Booker in charge. Interment was in the Magnolia Cemetery at Theodore, Alabama.

BURNEY.—Mary Elizabeth Dillon, passed away on January 29 at her home in Clarksville, Tennessee, at the age of ninety-six. She was a member of the Reorganized Church, having been baptized by Elder Hubert Case in Detroit, Michigan. She is a sister of Evangelist F. Ed. Dillon. Burial was in the family cemetery on the old homestead near Palmyra, Tennessee.

WHEN the sun disappears below the horizon,
It is not set; the heavens glow long afterward.
When a good and great man dies
The church and community are still luminous
With the influence of his beneficent life,
Although he may have passed out of sight.
Such may be said of our beloved, departed President.

* NO CONFERENCE DAILY HERALD will be published, on account of the paper shortage. A sheet of General Conference minutes will be issued to the delegates each day.

* MARGINALIA. Coming away from a church service, you will often notice that you have used the clean, white space on the margin of your program to note the preacher's main points, your reflections on them, or perhaps something subsidiary or unrelated. The preacher may put out a rich spiritual feast for you to share; but you benefit only by that part which you bring home. Sometimes what people have written in the margins of their books (and sometimes, alas, the library books, too) is more revealing than what is printed on the page. Friend, watch the margins of your life.

* SOUND EFFECTS. We sat on a seat near the front, where the choir would have to march by in the processional. At a point where all of them had to step was a weak board, and even though it was covered with thick carpet, it squeaked as each one went by. The strong boards did their work in silence. In every congregation it is the weak member who makes the most noise.

* THE WEATHER. Here is a weather prediction that will outmode all other weather predictions, that will fit every time, season, and place. It is a simple but universal statement: Eventually it will become either better or worse; there is always too much of some kind or other, but it can't last forever.

The General Conference of 1946

Our Present Concern

Still feeling the shock of the loss of President Frederick M. Smith on the eve of the conference, delegates, members, and church officers will assemble on April 6, the anniversary of the founding of the church, to carry on the work that must be done at this time.

We meet in an atmosphere of solemnity and concern, but not in one of discouragement or apprehension. Church officials are fully aware of all the problems that face us; but they know that all problems can be solved in due time, with adequate effort and preparation, if the people are united in spirit and purpose. The essence of effective organization is a concert of understanding, purpose, and method. If we do not allow ourselves to be diverted from the main things, all will go well.

Some have urged, with the best of intentions, that the conference should not be held at all, "out of respect to President Smith," but officials who are fully informed of the situation consider it best to go ahead with plans, making such alterations as seem really necessary. It would not seem a satisfactory gesture of respect to close the Sanitarium for a week or even for twenty-four hours, nor to dismiss Graceland College, nor to send our missionaries home for the rest of the year; and President Smith gave the better part of his life to promoting these church institutions. No more would it seem appropriate to cancel the General Conference on which they are all dependent, for it is at least as important as they are. Moreover, if the church is the work of God, as we believe it is, and not the work of man, it must go on. And, there is the important matter of establishing the new leader in his office, which is expected to be accomplished at this time.

The Needed Voice

Under these extraordinary circumstances, it was recognized that our people need someone to speak to them who could see the situation clearly and correctly. We need a voice that will bring comfort to our grief, assurance to displace uncertainty, and power to preserve the unity of the church for the work that is before it.

Fortunately, the church does not lack such a voice at the present time. Our Presiding Evangelist, Elbert A. Smith, was requested to occupy the Stone Church pulpit and deliver a message, not only to that congregation, but to all members of the church. The message was taken by reporters, and appears in this issue of our publication.

There are other strong voices in our organization, which will bear their respective messages in due time; but the voice we need at this moment is Brother Elbert's. It is one of his gifts to be strong when others are weak. He was never stronger spiritually and intellectually, never stronger in hope and reassurance, than he was in the hour that he delivered this message. It was very apparent that he had with him a strength that was greater than his own. We wish all the church might have shared in the ministry that was given on this occasion, the Sunday morning after the passing of President Frederick M. Smith. Brother Elbert's message gives us the leadership that is needed for this interval of days until the establishment of the new first quorum.

Our Leadership Is Unbroken

As to what course shall be charted for the church, we wait in hope and faith for the reorganization of the First Presidency. When this is done the church will have a leadership fresh in energy and, aided by divine guidance, ready to lead it forward.

In addition to these two lines of leadership, there are others. The Quorum of Twelve will contribute its important part to the task. And there is contained in the report of the Presiding Bishopric, which will be found in this issue also, the outline of leadership for the temporal affairs of the church. We ask the members of the church to read and consider carefully these two fine messages—one from the Presiding Evangelist, the other from the Presiding Bishopric.

Instead of being fearful, let us be thankful. Consider the lines of church leadership that are continuous: the patriarchal, the apostolic, and the episcopal. And the two counselors in the presidential line remain to carry on the functions of their quorum until the new quorum is established. It would take, indeed, a greater catastrophe than any we have known in our times to put the church in danger by the interruption of leadership. Ours is continuous.

Let Us Have Faith

The church has the strongest kind of government in the world—the democratic. The supreme authority of the church is the General Conference, composed of delegates elected by the people and of the local ministry everywhere in the church. In the fires of war, such government has proved invulnerable to the strongest attacks the enemy could bring against it. And the government of the church is strong enough and responsible enough to the will of the people, to serve all needs. Moreover, we have divine help and guidance in time of need.

We look forward hopefully to the work of this conference.

First Session of General Conference

From the office of the First Presidency comes the information that the first session of the General Conference will be held at 10 a. m., Saturday, April 6, 1946. This will be the business meeting for the organization of the conference, and a most important session. All who can possibly attend should make every effort to be present.

General Conference Housing

On March 27 there were a number of rooms available, due to the usual shifting of reservations to homes of friends and a few cancellations. Consequently it looks as though all who have applied for housing will be cared for, and if there are others who desire accommodations, write or wire and we will try to locate them. Persons coming without reservations in advance have no assurance of obtaining accommodations. We are not prepared for a last minute flood of applications, nor do we expect such to be made, judging by past years. The lack of housing facilities in Independence, Kansas City, and vicinity is still acute.

It is urgent that if any who have reservations are not coming, they should inform us by telegraph so that these rooms can be released to others. We have assigned 482 rooms, and visitors can see the importance of keeping us informed.

GENERAL CONFERENCE HOUSING COMMITTEE

Airplane Service for the Conference

Airplane service for visitors coming to or returning home from the General Conference can be arranged with a church member who is an experienced air pilot, and will be stationed at an air field conveniently near Independence, with a four-passenger (exclusive of pilot) cabin plane. Brother Robert Kirk has had eight years of experience, civilian and Army, as a pilot, and can assure safe passage. Rates may be learned by communicating with him at 1607 West Short Street, Independence, Phone 5136. Those who have had some emergency with travel reservations may find that he can offer a solution to their problems.

Conference Guide Service

For the benefit of visitors who are not familiar with Independence, we are pleased to announce that the Fellowship Class of Independence, under the leadership of Brother Paul Kelsey, has arranged to furnish guide service to your quarters. Representatives of this group will be on hand with cars April 5, 6, and 7, at the Auditorium to assist visitors, both in finding their abode and in transporting them there. So if you are in doubt about how to get around Independence, go directly to the Auditorium upon arrival.

Conference Housing and Reception Committee, by J. S. Kelley.

Public Stenographer

Public stenographic service for the General Conference will be maintained by the Secretarial Department of Grace-land College under the direction of Mrs. Verne Deskin and Mr. Jerry Runkle, at the special booth in the Auditorium. Nominal service fees will be charged. All who need this service at the conference are invited to make use of it.

"God Walks the Night"

God walks the night with silent tread,
Keeping to his breast this horror,
These—his children slain by cannon's roar.

His hands out-stretched, and his eyes
In pity behold these children of the dust,
'Mid shattered guns, red with rust.

His little ones! strewn on the earth
With upturned eyes to greet the dawn.
He pauses to note the slain—his children, gone.

Yea, Lo, He walks the night,
Sad, forlorn, with measured tread,
Sighing alone, with his countless dead!

—Desa Hartford.

The prosperity of a country depends, not on the abundance of its revenues, nor on the strength of its fortifications, nor on the beauty of its public building; but it consists in the number of its cultivated citizens, in its men of education, enlightenment and character.—Luther.

Speak Unto the Children of Israel That They Go Forward

A Sermon at the Stone Church in Independence, March 24, 1946

By Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith

IF I were to state a theme this morning, it would be in the language of prophecy, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." I have two texts: The first of them, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God . . ."

Most of you know the setting under which those words were uttered at a tragic time in the history of the early Christian movement. Christ and his apostles had met secretly in an upper room in Jerusalem. They had observed the Passover, and then he had served to them the bread and wine in the first sacramental communion service of our Lord. He was immediately to go into the Garden of Gethsemane. He was to be led away to trial, and he was to be crucified. He knew his followers would face confusion and grief and temptation; so one of the last things that he did was to talk to them in an address of comfort, and to a considerable extent it was built around these words, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."

If Christ were standing here today in my place, he might again repeat those words. I think that he is here by his Spirit, and he says unto you, "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in his Son."

OUR PURPOSE NOW

Some of you have had some days—and some of us, weeks—of emotional strain. Our prophet and president has been taken to his rest, and I use those words with conviction. I believe he was both president and prophet.

However, this is not a memorial service. I understand there will be a memorial service in the Auditorium the afternoon of the first day of conference, unless plans are changed. We are here today for a different purpose; we are here to compose our minds and discipline our emotions and organize our thinking as may need to be done under the present situation. In this connection I may remind you of some words that President Joseph Smith uttered in his last message to the church as he lay on his deathbed, and I heard him utter them. And these are the words that I refer to:

You of the priesthood all know how hard I have tried to get the church to understand that its life and work do not depend upon only one man.

We need to realize today that the life and work of the church do not depend on one man, or several.

We are here to make sure of our own spiritual footing; if need be, to scrutinize ourselves to determine what manner of people we are and what manner of people we ought to be. We are here, if we may, to find spiritual courage and strength; we are here to revive our own personal sense of responsibility, which too often we have permitted to die down within us while we have looked upon others to see if they were doing their duty. But the Lord has said to us that all are called according to the gifts and calling of God unto them; and in the light of that statement, let us examine ourselves.

WHY HOLD THE GENERAL CONFERENCE?

We have immediately before us the General Conference, only a short two weeks away. During the critical illness of President Smith, some of the general church officials discussed the question whether it would be appropriate, in case of his continued illness or death, to hold the conference at all, or if it should be shortened or changed; and I think the unanimous decision was that we should go on with the conference, with only such changes in some of the programs as might be appropriate. In other words, we would say to the children of Israel, that they should go forward.

There would seem to be several reasons for the conclusion reached. First, there is work that must be done. Secondly, we have no reason to believe that President Smith would want us to discontinue the work of the church or halt it in any way at all; he would want us to go forward with the work, including the conference, very much as planned. And thirdly, we have no reason to think our Lord and Master would want us to do otherwise. In fact, we have an appointment with Him at General Conference, and especially at the Communion Service of the Lord's Supper. We may well search ourselves to see what change we should make within ourselves in the way of repentance, if necessary, that we may meet Him on that occasion.

Lastly, there is to be considered the effect upon the people. I believe that the conference may be made to soften the shock that comes to the people. We here in the Center Place, most of us, had some little time to prepare ourselves, some more than others. Not so those abroad, some of whom have not yet heard the news, perhaps those overseas or who are in remote places. Some of us received the conviction from the very beginning of President Frederick M. Smith's illness that his work was done; and, in fact, looking back over some time past, though we did not know how badly his health had broken, watching him at work, we knew that his broken body and his pain-racked nerves and his burdened mind could not carry on under that burden.

The people abroad generally were not so prepared for this that has happened. I think the conference may soften that shock to them, and they may be caught up in its interests and activities, as they ought to be, instead of brooding; and that the spirit of sorrow may sanctify the conference so that the delegates may go back to the remotest places where there are branches (and some are coming from overseas) with the report that the Lord still lives and that his church is still going on. They may go back and say to the children of Israel that they shall go forward.

This is not by any means the first situation of the kind under which we have found ourselves. The Conference of 1915 met in Lamoni, and when it met, the president of the church had died the previous December—President Joseph Smith—and President Frederick M. Smith was very ill in the East with double pneumonia, and there was no positive assurance that he would recover. There was only one member of the Presidency to stand before the people. But we went forward, and though it was difficult, at the end there was light and unity and blessing, and the people went home with renewed courage, and shortly thereafter President Smith recovered and was ordained.

RUMORS—AND FACTS

It is natural, I presume, that under the present situation there should be forebodings in the hearts of some people. It is natural that there should be conversation. People are interested in the church, and they talk about it. We believe in free speech in the church as well as in the nation. But out of these talks there seem to have come some rumors, as is always the case, some of them fantastic. I have heard some missionaries who come to Independence who say that Independence is the worst place in the church for rumors. I do not know how true that is. It may be one of the penalties of being the church headquarters. I recall it used to be that way in Lamoni, when Lamoni was church headquarters, especially at conference time. But we have a bigger gathering here, so we have bigger rumors and more of them. On the other hand, I have been told that the people of Independence themselves have acquired a resistance to these rumors, and they are not too much disturbed.

An occasional rumor that is damaging, when we examine it, we discover that it is true, to our grief, or that it has a little truth in it. But over the years I have concluded that year after year these rumors are a poor grist for any man to run through his mill, hoping there will come out of it something to make into the bread of life. As a boy on the farm I used to take wheat to the mill to be ground that my mother might make bread of it. But I never did take a sack that was ninety per cent chaff.

EVIL EFFECTS OF RUMORS

Now I say that probably the most of these rumors are innocently started, but they grow; and we do have some rumormongers who are professional collectors and dispensers of gossip. And whether they do this only carelessly, or thinking they are doing God's service, or maliciously, to the extent they do that they tend to destroy the church. I have seen families turned aside from the church in sorrow, and missionaries turned back, and newcomers to Zion turned away, because these people do seek out those who come here and give to them the accumulation they have acquired over months of time. It is a sorry business, and the Lord himself expressed his opinion of it long ago when he said "Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among my people."—Leviticus 19:

16. Even then there were people going up and down, up and down, round and about, as talebearers, and the Lord condemned it. Let us be careful not to be dispensers of that which is even only partly true, or to give it too much credence.

A GREAT TASK AHEAD

Everybody knows that in the coming conference we face the task of the reorganization of the Presidency, and it is concerning this that some of these rumors, some of which I know to be without foundation, have been circulated. I might say that so far as I know, among the responsible general church officers there is no man seeking to climb up into the seat vacated by President Frederick M. Smith. There is a general and deep-seated desire to know the will of God in that matter and to do it; and, contrary to some things you may have heard, the Joint Council meetings—most of which I have attended, and the earlier sessions of which were presided over by President Frederick M. Smith, who was with us until absolutely stricken down—have been peaceful. There has been no division touching any matter of any great importance thus far. I speak as of today.

I feel quite sure in my own mind that whatever light the church needs will come, and will be supported by adequate testimonies. Remember this: the spirit of prophecy does not die when the Prophet dies. It is eternal in the will of God and his son Jesus Christ, and through the avenue and ministry of the Holy Ghost it may be brought to the church and the people of the church in time of need if they are worthy of it and willing to receive it.

Now in these words of encouragement I do not mean that we are not faced by a dangerous antagonist, adroit and powerful, who from the beginning of the Restoration work sought its destruction, first from without by mob violence, and then by slander which has never ceased to this day, and then also from within by division and discord. So we should be upon our guard.

HELP FROM THE LORD

My second text I had in mind was from the words of Samuel the Prophet: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us;"—I Samuel 7: 12—and I think it supplements the text, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God." "Hitherto"—up to this time—"the Lord hath helped us." You will recall the setting of this text. The Philistines were coming against the children of Israel in battle. They were disturbed—the children of Israel—and they besought the prophet to make a prayer and an offering, which he did. So the Lord was with the children of Israel, and the Philistines were driven away in confusion. Then Samuel erected a rock which he called "Ebenezer," and that means, I am told, "a stone of help." He erected it as a memorial, because he said, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us"—up to that time. And he believed the Lord would continue to help them.

Now as we look back over the church history from the beginning, if I had time I could cite many instances when the church might have erected a memorial and said, "Hitherto the Lord has helped us."

When six young men met in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr., April 6, 1830, to organize the church, they were young men without theological training, which was fortunate perhaps at the time and considering the schools of that day. They were without experience as church organizers and there was no other church on earth they could look to, to pattern after, because this was to be different. They met under divine command, and they could already say, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." The first great task given to the church had been accomplished. The Book of Mormon had been translated and published, they could recall that in the hour of need came Oliver Cowdery from almost nowhere, as it seemed, a schoolteacher, to act as scribe. After it was translated, and when more finances were needed, there was Martin Harris to finance the printing. With the Book of Mormon actually in their hands, they could raise a memorial and say, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us," and six in number they proceeded to organize the church, and as they proceeded in this experience the spirit came to them as they testified: "The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a great degree. Some prophesied while all praised the Lord and rejoiced exceedingly." So they could go out of that meeting and say, "Hitherto the Lord has helped us."

PROMISES FULFILLED

Coming down to the days of the Reorganization, at a time darker than the present by far, when the Prophet and Patriarch had been slain by mob violence and the Saints had been scattered, and some had gone away into iniquity and apostasy, and there were a few moving into the Reorganization, Jason W. Briggs reported a revelation received while out on the prairies of Wisconsin, near Beloit, which he was required to write:

Behold, I have not cast off my people; neither have I changed in regard to Zion. . . . Therefore, let the elders whom I have ordained by the hand of my servant Joseph, or by the hand of those ordained by him, resist not this authority, nor faint in the discharge of duty, which is to preach my gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, and the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants;

(And well may the elders of the church today take care to heed this; they were to go out and preach the things contained in the three books of the church. There are plenty of men to preach other things. But to continue the reading):

And they shall cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, and I will sustain them, and give them my Spirit; and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit.—Church History, Volume 3, pages 200-201.

Now there were commands there and admonitions, and three prophetic promises that no man could humanly know would be fulfilled. One of the seed of Joseph Smith was to come and preside over the high priesthood. At that time the youngest of those children was only seven years old, my father, and the eldest was only twenty, and no man could know that they would ever be inclined to this work. Also the promise was that the quorums would be reassembled, and there was little on the surface to justify that promise. The third promise was that Zion should be reinhabited after many days; and at the time there was probably not one family of Saints living in Zion, in this country, or in this region. But we know that all those promises were kept.

On the 6th day of April, 1860, under fulfillment of the promise, Joseph Smith came to the conference at Amboy with his venerable mother and was received of the church as its president and prophet. It is no wonder the congregation was in tears, and they could have raised a memorial and have said, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." I could go down over our more recent history and recite many such times when we could do that, so let us set our faces forward as we have been commanded to do.

OUR PRESENT RESPONSIBILITY

In the world everywhere there is confusion and violence and ill will, and we should be on our guard that it does not penetrate the church. We in the center place who sit here in the Stone Church, the very heart and headquarters of the church, are under as great responsibility as anybody on earth that we shall see that those elements of disorder, violence, and confusion shall not enter into the church; and it is upon us more than any other people when the

Tributes to Our Late President

Dr. Frederick M. Smith

The death of Dr. Frederick M. Smith removes an important leader from this community. Dr. Smith's influence extended beyond the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which he was president. He was a public spirited citizen, concerned in the progress of Independence and Kansas City.

A man of unusual ability and abounding personality, Dr. Smith was an impressive figure in any gathering. As a young man he was thoroughly educated for an academic career, with a doctorate of philosophy from Clark university. When he was induced to follow in his father's footsteps in the church, his interest in education continued. The church college, Graceland, at Lamoni, Iowa, always found in Dr. Smith a strong supporter.

His most impressive monument is the great domed church auditorium at Independence, one of the landmarks of the region. But beyond that he leaves a monument in the lives of those who came under his wholesome and inspiring influence.—Editorial, The Kansas City Times (the morning Kansas City Star), March 21, 1946.

"In Missouri Language"

In the death of Dr. Frederick Madison Smith, Independence loses a most distinguished citizen, and the church of which he was the leader has not the words to express the measure of bereavement. It was my privilege to know Saints come to conference to see that we are a stabilizing and strengthening force among them—a righteous people—that those who come here shall not by us be turned away by idle talk, but that they shall find here the spirit of revival.

One of the last revelations that came to us by President Frederick M. Smith said, "... be alert to keep out of the church and from its members those forces which make for disunity, and in harmony and Saintry accord be about the task of freeing Zion from her bondage" (the revelation of 1938).

May God bless you is my prayer.

IT SEEMS appropriate now to place in the record, so that future writers, students, and historians may know, the estimate which people of his own generation, who knew him well, place upon President Frederick M. Smith, who passed from this life on March 20, 1946. These are tributes which have been published, unsolicited, from the pens of leading people, some of them members of the church, some of them not. We are grateful for these words of appreciation from his friends, and are glad to present them for the inspiration they may bring to the members of the church.

—Editors.

Dr. Smith closely and to have been his associate in many missions throughout the state in which we were both vitally interested. I always found him to be of sound and splendid judgment. Dr. Smith was a man of many facets, and a man of many fine friendships which were by no means confined to the great organization of which he was the chief . . . He was the close confidant of many men and women who loved him and trusted him and whose trust he never failed to justify. He was a fine Christian gentleman.—The Independence Examiner, March 20, 1946, William Southern, Jr., Editor and Publisher.

President Frederick M. Smith

Today the church mourns the death of a beloved leader, President Frederick M. Smith, who served for thirty-one years as our prophet-president, and under whose leadership the church has grown from a membership of 72,899 to 132,545.

President Smith was an ardent student, and his quest for knowledge led him into fields of science, law, psychology, architecture, arts, sociology, economics, government, history, language, and many others. His breadth of knowledge and his keenness of perception often were causes of amazement even to those who had close personal contact with him.

His character being unimpeachable, President Smith set a high moral standard for his followers. Anything coarse or vulgar was distasteful to him. To the end of his life, he remained faithful to the memory of his wife, Ruth, who preceded him in death by twenty years. His frequent references to her and the allusions to his bereavement that he so frequently made in letters of sympathy to others bore testimony to the poignancy of his grief in her loss.

He was broad in his tolerance of the beliefs and opinions of others, and gave fair hearings to all who sought his counsel or his protection. His errors were more often on the side of leniency than of severity, and his arms were ever extended in forgiveness to those who sought reconciliation. His unbounded trust in men was at once his weakness and his strength. He opened doorways of opportunity to those who might have been cast aside by men of lesser charity. He gave men wide latitude in the expression of their own initiative.

He never lost his faith in youth, and constantly urged that even boys of early teen age should be charged with responsibilities in church work. The seeming near recklessness with which he placed young men in positions of great responsibility, many of them now serving in the highest quorums of the church, at times gave rise to apprehension on the part of his associates.

He had a tremendous capacity for work and remarkable facility in expressing his thoughts. Letters and reports, no matter how unimportant, and even Christmas cards, were always personally acknowledged.

President Smith was an incurable dreamer. With true prophetic insight, he thought in terms of principles and of the ideal. He was less concerned with the details of accomplishment, leaving these problems to others. He chafed under the obstacles and delays that continually blocked the achievement of his goals for the church. Often he would say "They are not ready for it now, but it will come."

With prophetic vision in early youth, he saw the glittering towers of Zion, and they never ceased to beckon him on. When advancing age robbed him of the energy of his youth, his eyes would still light up with enthusiasm when discussion centered in the realization of his ideals.

President Smith has gone from us, but his visions of things to come remain with us. To the clothing of those dreams with reality, we now set our hands as we turn our faces to the future.—Pastor's Notes, by Garland E. Tickemyer in The Stone Church Bulletin for March 24, 1946.

Memories of President Smith

I first met President Smith when we were fellow students at the University of Iowa. There he was a hard-working student, scholarly, and a good mixer. He was well liked and well thought of, few, however, appreciating the great future for him, because few university students know of the church and his important responsibility in it. After graduating at the university, I came to Lamoni as superintendent of schools and found Fred M. a senior in Graceland College from which he graduated in 1898, being the first graduate. During my four years here, I learned to admire his sterling qualities of manhood and leadership. Later he joined the faculty of the college where he rendered most efficient service in his chosen fields of mathematics and science. After coming into the presidency of the church, he served as a member of the board of trustees of the college for 10 years and was released at his own request in 1913.

As an alumnus, faculty member, trustee, and president of the church, the college and higher education were always among his chief interests. Probably he has been more instrumental than any other person in the church in encouraging the youth to secure the benefits of higher education, not only in our own college but in the colleges and universities of the land. Thousands of our youth will look back upon their acquaintance with him and everlastingly thank him for the encouragement and help he gave them in formulating their life program. He will be greatly missed. As Jefferson said when he was sent to France as American ambassador after the retirement of Benjamin Franklin, "I succeed him—no one can take his place." No one can take the place of Frederick M. Smith.—George N. Briggs, President Emeritus of Graceland College, in The Lamoni Chronicle, March 21, 1946.

The Passing of a Great and Good Man

Independence mourns the passing of Dr. Frederick M. Smith, President of The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who died Wednesday morning, March 20, 1946, at the

Frederick M. Smith

From the rough surface of the potter's clay
The skillful shaping of a master hand,
The holy fire that burned the dross away
Revealed, at last, the measure of the man.

How green the valley leading to the gate,
How bright the lodestar beckons ever on,
Where those, long gone, with open arms await.
We do not fear, nor weep that he is gone.

And now we bid a fond farewell to one Whose day is done—whose setting sun,
Has sunk in seas of gold, beneath the horizon.

Independence Sanitarium, after an extended illness. . . .

President Smith was always a devoted student, and probably the most widely read man of his church and community. As a result he could converse intelligently on a most wide variety of topics, ranging from the simple things of life to the technical sciences. He was a very interesting, absorbing, personal conversationalist. He has lived among us, and his character was unimpeachable. He has always been found on the side of civic and communal righteousness. . . .

One thing for which the church throughout the world will always remember President Smith was his indefatigable devotion to the increased education of the younger generation. Those who knew him best will vouch for his intense interest in the problems of youth.

His passing seems entirely too early. If we could have had our wish, he would have remained to see the fulfillment of more of his passionate ideals. But with bowed heads we yield to One who understands better than we. . . . —Editorial, The Pictorial Shopper, (Independence, Missouri), March 22, 1946.

President Smith

As a scholar and intellectual leader he took his place among men of the world as a man of letters. He always encouraged education in the church and Graceland College. "Study to show yourselves approved; a workman who needeth not to be ashamed," was a favorite saying of his. He believed that every outstanding scholar which the church produced was a living advertisement for the ideals of his people.

As a man who stood at the head of a people who are socially minded, President Smith always maintained that Latter Day Saints could not ignore the plight of the community or the world in which they lived, and he taught a gospel of brotherhood. He had a passionate longing to see Zion established and constantly reiterated the call to build that economic and spiritual brotherhood, which had been so dear to the heart of his father and grandfather.

His people need no legacy above the knowledge that the same can be said of Frederick M. Smith as was said about his father at the time of his death: "He was the Prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived; as such he died." . . . —The Lamoni Chronicle, March 21, 1946, Kathryn C. Metz, Editor.

It we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellowmen, we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten to all eternity.—Daniel Webster.

Last Rites for President

THE FUNERAL of President Frederick M. Smith who had passed away the preceding Wednesday, was set for Friday, March 22, 1946, at 3 p. m. in the Stone Church, Independence. Many inquiries were made, by telephone and in person, as to why the service could not be held in the Auditorium where there would be ample room for all who would wish to attend. At the same time, everybody realized that the Auditorium, in its present incomplete state, has certain handicaps in appearance, acoustics, and other features, for such an occasion. However, its use was offered, and it would have been made ready with seats and all available facilities, had it been accepted. For various reasons, the Stone Church, which provides a more beautiful and appropriate setting for such a service, long recognized as the church of the First Presidency, rich with historic associations, was preferred by the family.

Throughout the preceding day and evening, an almost steady stream of people visited the funeral home where the body lay in state, signing the accumulating sheets of the register, and viewing the body.

By noon on Friday the open casket stood before the altar in the Stone Church, and long lines of people filed past to look for the last time at the form of the departed President, many of them remaining to occupy seats at the sides of the church and in the balcony. The center was reserved for church workers, appointees and their families, with a special section at the back for the family of President Smith. The east transept was occupied by the stake presidents and the secretaries to the Presidency, who served as

A Tribute

Dear Lord, our shepherd's gone away;
He enters now thy home
In robes of immortality,
To seek thy grace alone.

His pathway has been steep and long,
Oh, blame him not for strife!
He ever held thy lantern high
To lead thy sheep to life.

He traveled near the chasms deep
And saw thy young lambs fall,
He wept in his Gethsemane
When sheep heard not his call.

Yet even in his darkest hours
He glimpsed a vision bright:
A Zion set upon a hill—
A kingdom filled with light.

Dear Lord, our shepherd's gone away;
We pray to know thy will,
Direct the Saints of latter days
This vision to fulfill.

pallbearers, and by President L. F. P. Curry, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Standing High Council, who were honorary pallbearers; and by members of the Laurel Club, and others, who were in charge of the flowers, and by members of the staff of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

People of all ranks of life were among those filing past the casket for a last opportunity to pay their respects to the departed President. Many groups of young people, still in their teens, were in the procession. There were aged church members who had known President Smith since his young manhood, and who, themselves, had not many more years to expect upon this earth. There were members from distant cities, and distinguished citizens of Independence. Some of those who came were apparently in prosperous circumstances, some obviously poor, but mostly from the middle class of citizens that make up the bulk of society. There was a place for all who desired to come, and apparently those who loved President Smith knew no barriers or distinctions of class.

Long before the time of the service, all unreserved seats were taken, and by three o'clock every space was filled by those who occupied the special seats. Also filled were the basement of the church and the annex, where seats had been placed, with electric speakers to carry the service to the people. Some hundreds were seated on the lawn and electric speakers set up for them.

A great and beautiful tribute of flowers banked the rostrum, extended into aisles, spread to the high panelling by the organ, and reached around the rail of the balcony, making a beautiful array of color in gladioli, snapdragons, roses, carnations, ferns, and growing plants. They represented local friends and church members, organizations, distant congregations on both coasts, and from various cities.

The service began with a beautiful selection from The Messiah rendered flawlessly by the Radio Chorus, led by Franklyn S. Weddle. Prayer was offered by the Pastor of Stone Church, Garland E. Tickemyer. The obituary was read by Glaude A. Smith, Pastor of Walnut Park Church. Robert Miller, who has served Stone Church as organist for more than twenty-five years, played the organ. The sermon was delivered by Apostle John F. Garver, who was deeply moved as he payed a sincere tribute to President Smith, and expressed the eternal hope that is in the gospel. The whole service was recorded electrically, and it is hoped that the entire proceedings can be transcribed for publication in our pages.

Henry W. Stahl, who has given distinguished service to many general conferences in organizing the large communion services, again made the church his debtor in managing the details of the service and heading the organization that handled the crowds. On this occasion he was generously assisted by George C. Carson, R. W. Speaks, and Henry Mitchell of Independence, Harold Echternacht of Kansas City, Kansas, and N. B. Langsford of Lees Summit, Missouri.

This day in Independence was beautiful with the light-blue sky of spring, and white clouds borne on a gentle breeze. A long procession moved slowly, as heavy traffic was detoured, out north of the city to Mound Grove Cemetery. Not far from the resting place of his father, President Joseph Smith, a canopy was spread over the open grave, and it was here that hundreds gathered as the last words were spoken, and the last prayer offered.

It was a solemn occasion, and the words of Apostle Garver, "A great man has died," seemed to express the thoughts of all.

It was not until six o'clock, when all the people had an opportunity to return home to shelter, that the rain began to fall, continuing on into the late night. Thus impressiveness was intensified by the elements in a quiet way, bringing the events of this long day to a close.

The people of the church feel a great and irreparable loss in the passing of President Smith at this time, almost upon the eve of the General Conference. Yet those who know of his physical suffering, and what it would have cost him in effort to try to live through it, either in attendance at the business and council sessions, or simply hearing it from his bed, understand that it was the mercy of Providence that he was spared the inevitable pain it would have imposed upon him.

We have faith to believe that God, who has preserved the church through many a difficult time for his own purposes, will still guide it and see that leadership is provided.

The Example of a Tree

BY
A. G. HOUGAS

ON the brow of a hill that overlooks a wooded valley, standing tall and majestic, is a great oak. Overshadowing smaller trees, high against the sky it holds its branches. Gnarled and rugged, buffeted by storms and the passing of many seasons, it stands a symbol of strength, solidarity, and firmness that bespeaks courage: the kind of courage that enabled Abraham to bind and prepare for sacrifice an only son; the courage that sustained Emma Smith in her midwinter journey across Missouri and the frozen Mississippi; the courage that led a strong man to give himself up to the mob and go to the Carthage jail, saying, "I go like a lamb to the slaughter." A spirit and courage we might well seek to emulate. As we look at its branches, many bent and twisted by rowdy winds, we seem to hear a voice saying, "I have seen many men come and go, but I still stand."

Tradition tells that the outlaws were wont to drink and water their horses at the near-by spring. As the trail past the tree is old, very old, we fancy we see the Red-man passing (we have found flint arrowheads near), traders, slaves, scouts, pioneers and their families are all in the cavalcade. As this trail is in Jackson County perhaps some of the persecuted "Mormons" stopped at the spring for a cool drink and to rest on their weary journey.

Today the old trail is gone, horses, cows, and sheep drink from the spring and rest in the shade of the old tree. The only travelers to pause 'neath the branches are the "old boys" from the Home for the Aged, not far away.

As we pause in our backward look with the great oak, we wonder what we could see if we were able to look ahead. Would we see the great city spreading out farther and farther, or will it still be quiet countryside? Will there be people living on the land who are guided and motivated by a law called stewardship? Will that community be part of a still greater community that is known as Zion? We wonder!

I once knew a man who said that when he was seeking the spirit and mood for prayer, nothing gave the inspiration that he got by looking at a beautiful tree.

Now as I look from my window and through the rain at that towering oak, a fourth of a mile away, I feel that I know what the poet was thinking when he said,

"Poems are made by fools like me,
Only God can make a tree."

The Church With a Future

By Donald V. Lents

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is unique in the concept of its role in the unfolding of history. In its three standard books is found the fullness of the gospel—the Bible, the word of God to the Old World; the Book of Mormon, the word of God to the New World; and the Doctrine and Covenants, the continuing revelation of the word of God to the Modern World.

Society as a whole knows that if the world of tomorrow is to be better than it is today, it must have some design or plan; it cannot be left to chance. The definite design or plan on which the world of tomorrow must be built is contained in the fullness of the gospel, and is known as the Kingdom of God. It is based on the brotherhood of man, the Fatherhood of God—all mankind living together in peace and harmony, working together in all things for the good of each other. The church of the future is the church that promotes the establishment of the kingdom of God—which is the purpose for the organization and continuing existence of this church. In the task of kingdom-building, the church can move forward only as rapidly as do the members which make up its congregations. It is important that each individual member keep progressing as a legitimate part of the church in making for its success in the opportunities of the future. To do so, our eyes must be steadfastly set on Christ.

There once was a young preacher who had been invited to conduct the service in a large, city church. In his small parish, a congregation of from thirty to fifty was a large group for him to minister to, and he had never before been in such a large church as a visitor, must less as minister. He accepted the invitation, however, and journeyed to the city the day before his appointment to look around. When he arrived at the church, he was almost overcome with nervousness as he looked at the rows and rows of pews and wondered if his voice would fill the church. He stood in the pulpit and practiced portions of his sermon for the next day to see if he could make himself heard in all corners of the large auditorium. During this time an old sexton was going about his duties, and he finally ventured to speak to the young minister—"If I may be so bold, sir, as to make a suggestion—I have been here for over forty years and heard many different preachers. I can see you are concerned about your voice filling our church. If you will stand squarely in the pulpit and look at that window over the rear door, directing your voice in that direction, you will be heard and your sermon will be successful." The young man thanked him and followed his suggestion, discovering that his voice carried more power, and he felt inspired as he looked at the stained glass window, which was a full-size picture of Christ. The lesson of the sexton's suggestion—if he kept his eyes on Jesus, his ministry would be blessed. The young minister learned a profound truth that day, not only for himself, but for all who desire to make a blessing of their lives.

There are two Scriptures, centuries apart, that speak directly to us today: The Psalmist said that as men looked unto their God, beheld his countenance, they were lightened; and years later the Apostle Paul counseled men to look upon Jesus that they might run with patience the race before them.

The basic reason for frustration that at times comes upon us as a church and as individuals is that we have simply lost sight of him. When we sin it is because we have stopped looking at Jesus Christ and have set our sight on some temporary leader or value. There is no need for concern when the church keeps its eyes on Christ through the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, sincere prayer, and the avenues of worship open to all of us. We need not just a casual glance, but a long and steady look. This is a church with a future—let us be a part of that church by keeping our eyes on Christ.

Returning Books

In one of the most charming books he ever wrote, Christopher Morley included this item on returning borrowed books in his volume The Haunted Bookshop (1919):

I give humble and hearty thanks for the safe return of this book, which, having endured the perils of my friend's bookcase and the bookcases of my friend's friends, now returns to me in reasonably good condition.

I give humble and hearty thanks that my friend did not see fit to give this book to his infant as a plaything, nor use it as an ash tray for his burning cigar, nor as a teething-ring for his mastiff.

When I lent this book I deemed it as lost; I was resigned to the bitterness of the long parting: I never thought to look upon its pages again.

But now that my book is come back to me, I rejoice and am exceeding glad! Bring hither the fatted morocco and let us rebind the volume and set it on the shelf of honor: for this my book was lent, and is returned again.

Presently, therefore, I may return some of the books that I myself have borrowed.

Lending books is a form of inebriation that the victim can no more resist than an alcoholic can resist a drink. Let a friend fix his eye, lighted by desire, upon your most precious volume and say, with a slight quaver of reverence in his voice, "I'd like to read that!"—and the owner is caught in the rut of a pattern reaction from which he has no chance of escape. In his heart he knows, despite his most serious injunctions, and despite his friend's most solemn promises, that the book will never be returned (and probably never read) until his widow, determined to rid the house of "all that trash" sends it back, if she does not donate it to the Goodwill Industries. If you lend a book, you have about a 43 per cent chance of getting it back.

March 21, 1946.

To the First Presidency and General Conference of 1946:

In consideration of the report that we are submitting herewith, covering the Conference period of 1944 and 1945, we wish to set forth in brief outline the fundamentals of our financial policy which have governed in past years and which, in our opinion, should be continued in substance in the present period and in the immediate future. The future can be evaluated in the light of our experience in the past.

For the last fifteen years, careful consideration has been given by the Bishopric to the development of policies which would give guidance and direction in the field of financial administration, that the objectives set forth in the program of the church can be realized. The aim and purpose of financial administration, therefore, is that of

1. Financing the church in its ministerial and departmental activities, giving due consideration to the need for an expansion of our missionary force.
 2. Moving forward the processes of the gathering.
 3. Financing its institutions.
 4. Extending assistance to the worthy poor, through use of the Oblation Fund.
 5. Assisting the individual to attain certain standards of stewardship.
 6. Developing a program of instruction for the Aaronic priesthood.
 7. Teaching the financial law.
 8. Improving our houses of worship.
- Consideration will be given to these policies in the order named.

1. Financing the Church in Its Ministerial and Departmental Activities

The first step taken in developing a policy which would look toward an expansion of our missionary endeavors was that of adopting the financial policy of 1932, which included the following points:

1. Arrest expansion
2. Liquidate assets
3. A balanced budget
4. Operate economically
5. Pay indebtedness
6. Create reserves

The whole outcome of this policy was dependent upon compliance with the financial law. The policy put into effect enabled the church to free itself from indebtedness and establish a sound basis of financial operation so that it became possible to fulfill the last point of this financial policy—that of creating reserves. It is, therefore, the continued policy of the Bishopric to set up reserves which are designated Ministerial Reserve Funds, and substantial sums have been placed in this fund to assure permanency of the status of ministerial appointments.

Other reserves have also been set up, including Operating Fund Reserves and Missionary Reserve Funds, the latter to permit appointment of men between conferences and to provide funds for the setting up of educational facilities for special training of young ministers. The use of this fund for this latter purpose is subject to the developing of plans by the Joint Council.

The results achieved through compliance with the financial policy of 1932 have been the strengthening of the whole financial structure of the church and the consequent provision of means for stabilizing our missionary efforts. The aim of financial administration as it relates to this phase of church work is to provide a continuous source of revenue to meet current needs and to rehabilitate reserves from time to time when economic conditions necessitate drawing upon those reserves. Continued adherence to this program is the policy of the Bishopric.

2. The Gathering

In the last two years surveys have been made in the stakes surrounding Independence, and certain centers have been chosen in and around which our people are advised to locate, the particular area depending upon the vocational experience of the individual interested in the gathering and the opportunities available in the area to be considered. Our stake bishops are well informed as to the possibilities within their stakes.

To assist families in gathering and, at the same time, to provide a way for compliance with the laws prescribed in the revelations to the church, the Presiding Bishopric has developed a questionnaire which is given to individuals or families interested in gathering. This questionnaire calls for certain information which will be helpful to the general church officers in determining whether or not the individual should make a change in location, and the extent to which such a move would affect the church.

ized and instituted as a part of the divine plan. Members should consider seriously the effect of their moving to the central areas, and should do so only after they have consulted the officers in their own branch and district, and taken the matter up with the general church officers. All applications are considered by the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric. In a number of instances individuals have requested forms, but have made moves before these forms could be considered and advice given by the general church officers. Past experience indicates the wisdom of care being exercised by those gathering, and moves being made only after due consideration has been given by the general church authorities and advice received from them.

The Bishopric is also very much concerned in conserving the interests of the church in those areas outside of the center place and the stakes. In our opinion the interests of the church and the individual are best conserved through the selective process of the gathering; for the work of the whole church must be carried on in all areas; therefore, it is essential that branches should not be depleted of working personnel. Through compliance with the steps just outlined, the best interests of the individual and the church can be safeguarded.

Considerable study has been given by the Bishopric to the forming of an organization for the purpose of mobilizing capital for land purchase. It is anticipated that this organization will be completed before many months, and that it will serve as an instrument to assist individuals in obtaining proper locations when moving in harmony with the law of the church. Delay has occurred in the forming of this organization due to the fact that investments will undoubtedly be made by individuals in various parts of the United States and Canada; the form of organization, therefore, must be such that it will comply with the laws governing the various States and provinces. Protecting the investor from inflationary trends which are now taking place is also a matter of grave concern.

Since the last General Conference, careful study and consideration have been given to the possibilities offered in the field of co-operative organization in furthering the work of the gathering. It is our opinion that the general run of such organizations do not lend themselves readily to furthering the work of the gathering. This does not preclude individuals who are so inclined and who receive certain benefits from such types of organizations, from participating in their activities; but it does seem that organization of them by the general church or by its officers is outside the scope of the responsibility of both church and officers. This is not to suggest that there are not occasions where official support can be given to such organizations or movements when they appear to be in the interests of the community. Our efforts can, in our opinion, be best directed toward the encouragement of our individual members to develop individual and group stewardships that can be carried out more fully in harmony with the law of the church.

3. Financing Its Institutions

It has been the practice of the general church, through action of the General Conference, to render financial assistance to its institutions, Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Throughout the life of these institutions, they have increasingly become a definite part of the church and have required expenditures of general church funds.

While there are some things to be said in favor of special drives to raise funds for special purposes, such as the needs of these institutions, it has been our policy to stress compliance with the financial law, to encourage individuals to make their contributions to the General Fund through tithes and offerings, this with one or two exceptions when special funds have been raised for pressing needs of these institutions.

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL

While the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital has been able during recent years to operate on a balanced budget, it has had need for appropriations from the General Church Funds for capital expenditures. Recommendations are being made to the Board of Appropriations for appropriation of additional funds to complete this project. In due time consideration could well be given to the raising of an endowment fund for this institution, but it does not seem practicable at present, or in the immediate future.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Graceland College has taken its place as an institution of service to the youth of the church. It has also become generally recognized that it is dependent upon the church for appropriations to meet expenditures above those provided for from tuition and fees. With the expanding of this institution, and with the increase in the number of students attending, the need for increasing the appropriations is obvious. It has been the policy of the Bishopric, however, to scrutinize very carefully the budgetary requests of this institution, and to work them out with the administrative officers of the college. In addition to the annual appropriation which is made for the college, interest on the Endowment Fund is paid to the college annually. The institution is, therefore, financed from the three sources: fees and tuitions paid by students; Endowment Fund interest paid by the general church; and appropriations from General Church funds. In addition to this, the annual College Day collection has provided funds in the past for student loans and, subject to action of General Conference, may be used for specific purposes.

While at times it has appeared desirable to promote drives for raising funds for the college, it has been our policy to keep such activities pretty well within the range that our general church interests seem to justify. As the general church grows in membership and its members in financial ability, there may come the time when special drives can be carried on without too great inroads into the General Church funds. In the eleven-year period from 1920 to 1930, inclusive, when there were special drives for the Graceland College Endowment and for the Auditorium, the church sustained an operating loss in approximately 8½ out of those 11 years. It would, therefore, appear obvious that special drives to raise funds for special purposes, requiring large amounts other than for the maintaining of the general church, have disastrous effect in respect to general church income. Because of this, we think it advisable to continue the policy of keeping these institutions financed on a parallel basis with the general church.

4. Extending Assistance to the Worthy Poor

In the Saints' Herald of August 29, 1942, a statement of procedure to be followed in extending aid to the worthy poor of the church was published. A revised re-print of this article is available from the office of the Presiding Bishopric upon request. Briefly stated, the Bishopric is desirous of having all members of the church contacted who are in need and worthy of assistance, their cases investigated immediately, aid given where necessary and reports made to the Presiding Bishopric or to the bishop or bishop's agent of the district wherein such individuals live.

Representatives of the Bishopric, such as bishops and bishop's agents, have been authorized to extend temporary relief up to an amount of $25.00; further assistance can be extended after report is made to the Presiding Bishopric and a complete record of the individual or family concerned is given.

The Oblation Fund has been segregated and is maintained for this purpose and for maintaining the Home for the Aged at Lamoni, Iowa, and the convalescent home, "Resthaven," at Independence, Missouri. The Oblation Fund may be used for the care of the worthy poor in any district or branch of the church, subject to the foregoing provisions.

5. Assisting the Individual to Attain Certain Standards of Stewardship

In recent months the Bishopric has given careful consideration to the setting up of stewardship standards for the individual. This, perhaps, is nothing new in the history of the church, as various efforts have been made at different times to present material which would be helpful to the individual, serving as a guide for him in the development of those habits and qualities which would be in harmony with the law of stewardships of the church. Our present attempt is, nevertheless, in our opinion, of sufficient importance to call it to the attention of the membership. While it is not to be considered as final, we trust it will prove helpful. A small pamphlet has been prepared by the Presiding Bishopric, which may be obtained from the office of the Presiding Bishopric, which sets up qualifications relating to personality traits, personal practices and habits, religious life, family and community life, economic qualifications, etc.

In studying the problems of economic organization incident to the establishment of Zion, we find that our most pressing and important problem is that of finding trained personnel with an understanding of what stewardship implies and with qualifications in economic and vocational fields. Our policy, therefore, must continue to be that of consistent instruction and guidance of our membership in the field of stewardship.

6. Developing a Program of Instruction for the Aaronic Priesthood

The organization of the Aaronic priesthood in quorum work for the purpose of receiving instruction is fundamentally a task imposed upon the Presiding Bishopric. At the request of the President of our church, Frederick M. Smith, this work was undertaken about two years ago and some progress has been made. The objective of this work may be said to be the training and developing of a corps of instructors in the following arts:

- a. A knowledge of the financial law, and developing the ability to teach it.
- b. To serve as counselors in respect to home management and matters pertaining to the home.

c. Assisting members of the Aaronic priesthood whose function it is to properly care for buildings; to train them in the art of discharging their duties of ushering, participating in the ordinances of the church, etc.

d. Developing techniques in searching out and caring for the worthy poor.

Utilization of the Aaronic priesthood throughout the entire church to more fully serve in the manner herein outlined would, in our opinion, result in greater and more efficient ministry to the members of our church.

7. Teaching the Financial Law

As a part of the financial policy adopted by the General Conference of 1932, there was emphasized the necessity for keeping the law. To keep the law, one must understand the law, and understanding will be in ratio to the extent that it is taught throughout the church. It will continue to be the policy of the Bishopric to teach the law and to emphasize the necessity for teaching it on the part of all members of the priesthood throughout the church. It is hoped that additional steps may be taken to give broader coverage in the teaching program emanating from the Presiding Bishopric. Studies are being made in respect to the facilities available to us in visual education.

The number of tithe payers is still far below what can be reasonably expected. It is our opinion that in many instances this is because of a lack of understanding on the part of the membership. We therefore recognize the imperative need for expanding our teaching program and of supplying materials for use of our priesthood.

8. Improving Our Houses of Worship

In recent years, along with the elimination of the debt of the general church, there has been considerable improvement throughout the entire church in respect to our houses of worship. Debt has been eliminated, and in a number of places new buildings have been built and branches have, in some instances, purchased existing edifices. We are still far short, however, of meeting the standard that our church should achieve in respect to our houses of worship. It is, therefore, our intention to recommend elsewhere that certain steps be taken to set up a revolving fund as a beginning effort on the part of the general church to express its interest in the improvement of our houses of worship throughout the church.

In outlining the foregoing, it is not our thought that we are in any sense overlooking some of the other major objectives relative to the establishment of Zion to which we have on different occasions made reference, such as the organization of the storehouse, provision for inheritances, and forming of stewardship organizations; but all that has been herein outlined is essential and basic to the attainment of these broader objectives.

The financial report which we are now submitting, covering the years 1944 and 1945, gives evidence of the results that have been obtained in compliance with the policies hereinbefore outlined, and we trust shows consistent adherence to these policies.

Our financial situation has shown excellent improvement during the period covered by this report. While general conditions continue to be somewhat chaotic, recent developments indicate the possibility of improvement in industry in the next few months. The recommendations that are being made elsewhere in respect to the setting up of additional reserves will, in our opinion, if approved by the General Conference, place our church in a relatively strong position financially to withstand economic declines which may be ours to experience following a few years of prosperity.

With the segregation of funds and reserves set up by the last General Conference, we were at the beginning of the realization of the objectives sought in past years. Continued recognition of this through the setting up of additional reserves will give us added assurance.

We are now experiencing an inflationary period which has caused our expenditures to rise and which will require larger appropriations than it was thought would suffice at the time of our report to the General Conference of 1944. A careful scrutiny of the various schedules which are a part of this report will be helpful in assuring us that it is within the range of our ability to carry the budgetary load that now seems necessary.

Keeping this in mind, we now make comment relative to the various divisions of our financial report under headings which are self-explanatory:

In our report to the General Conference of 1944, we showed income for a two-year period of $1,615,160.61; the income for the two-year period of 1944 and 1945 totaled $2,085,833.61. This is exclusive of income from real estate operations, interest received, etc.

The Christmas Offering for the two years totaled $102,330.81. Bequests for the two years were $50,081.40. While some additional amounts were received as Surplus, these were accepted contingent upon further understanding with the individuals who contributed them.

EXPENSES

A comparison of expenditures with budgetary appropriations for the two years under review is submitted in the following summary, which also shows the excess of income:

	Budget	Income
1944	$432,311.47	$1,047,719.57
1945	432,311.47	1,039,114.04
	Expense	Excess Income
1944	$412,660.91	$ 635,058.66
1945	429,637.56	609,476.48

Thus it is seen that in both years expenditures were kept within budgetary appropriations. It must be noted, however, that this was made possible in 1945 by drawing upon reserves from Ministerial Reserve Funds and from the Missionary Reserve Fund. The latter fund provided for the appointment of men between conferences; the replacement of the amount of $7,846.73 (which was the amount used from the Missionary Reserve Fund) will be brought to the attention of the conference elsewhere.

BALANCE SHEET

Assets

The current resources show substantial increase over previous years, the cash and Government bonds on hand as at December 31, 1945, totaling approximately $1,343,000.00. We have consistently followed the policy of spreading the maturity dates of our Government bonds over periods of time that would enable us to meet anticipated demands that might be made upon the church. This is true both in respect to the United States Government bonds and the Canadian Government bonds. Substantial sums have been invested in both instances in short-term maturities.

Real Estate Contracts Receivable have been reduced approximately $9,000.00. Accounts Receivable and Notes Receivable have increased approximately by $23,000.00. Changes in real estate valuations, showing a decrease of $35,000.00, are accounted for by the reduction in our real estate holdings through sales of properties.

All special funds have now been segregated so that future comparative statements of the General Fund Balance Sheet will more clearly portray from year to year the changes which take place in the General Fund; there should be little necessity for further adjustments.

The total resources as of December 31, 1943 amounted to $1,805,192.11, and for 1945, $2,032,493.12; but attention is called to the fact that resources totaling $783,787.13 were transferred by the action of General Conference of 1944 to Special Funds. Other changes in the Assets and Liabilities portraying more clearly our entire capital position are indicated in the Statement of Capital, Exhibit C, referred to subsequently.

Liabilities

Current liabilities are those which appear on the books as at the close of the year, and for the most part are made up of items due other funds, which had not been transferred at the time of closing the books, and of current accounts payable at the end of the year, but not paid until the following month.

Since the report to the Conference of 1944, the Endowment Fund has been transferred from the General Books to a special fund, to which reference will be made subsequently.

AGENCY FUND

It is our policy to try to keep this fund as small as possible, for the resources included therein represent deposits made by individuals with the church which, for reasons that to us seem adequate, have been retained by us as a service to the individuals concerned. The resources are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations of this fund is provided for.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

We are continuing the policy of segregation of funds which are received which entail liabilities present and future to individuals. These funds for the most part represent property consisting of cash, bonds and/or real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church agrees to meet certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual. It is our intent to keep this fund liquid and accumulations of capital will be left in the fund until it is obvious that there is more than enough to meet all obligations, at which time it will be permissible to transfer excess capital to the General Fund.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

This fund does not truly reflect the resources of the church invested in houses of worship. The auditor has called to our attention the necessity of having a survey made giving up-to-date values of church buildings owned by the church, used by the congregations of the church throughout the world. Due to the handicap of limited personnel, we have not been able to obtain current figures of the value of existing houses of worship; however, it is hoped that this will be accomplished in the next conference period, and we solicit the co-operation of all to whom questionnaires will be addressed asking for such information respecting houses of worship. The investments in this fund are kept liquid to enable us to meet the obligations owing to congregations. While these funds are recorded on the books of the general church, those that have not been definitely turned over to the general church are considered as trust funds, and so treated.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund now totals $397,876.34. Additional reference will be made to this fund and to the need for additional appropriations, when the matter of appropriations comes before the conference.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

Use has already been made of this fund in the past year, when it was necessary to draw upon it to enable us to make appointments of men that were not possible within current budgetary appropriations. The need for rehabilitating this will be discussed in connection with the report of the Board of Appropriations and further explanation made.

OBLATION FUND

While some additional demands are being placed upon us for assistance from this fund, the fund has continued to increase during the recent period of practically full employment. What the requirements will be ahead of us remains to be seen, but the amount of the fund should assure us of being able to meet, within reason, calls that may be made upon us for assistance; and in some instances, for rehabilitation of individuals, that they might become self-sustaining.

Attention is called to the written comments preceding the financial report wherein reference is made to the use of this fund.

OPERATING FUND RESERVE

The amount in this fund was the amount appropriated by the action of General Conference of 1944, setting this fund up as the beginning of a fund upon which we could draw when making appropriations for operating expenses. Further comment and reference to this fund will be made in connection with the report of the Board of Appropriations.

STEWARDSHIP ENDOWMENT FUND

This represents the value of the Atherton and Spring Branch Farm lands, which lands were hypothecated for the Graceland Endowment bond issue. This was approved by the action of the General Conference of 1944.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This represents the fund set up by action of the General Conference of 1944 to provide for the construction of a dormitory for Graceland College. This, too, will be discussed in connection with additional funds needed for this purpose.

STATEMENT OF CAPITAL

A careful study of the Statement of Capital (Exhibit C) will reflect the changes that have taken place as a result of the segregation of funds including the transfer of the Graceland Endowment Fund from the General Fund to a special fund. A consolidation of general and other funds, including all these special funds referred to, makes a total capital of all funds of $6,006,720.-61.

It is gratifying to submit this splendid report for the consideration and action of the General Conference. As we have witnessed the transformation of our financial position from one that was quite unfavorable at the beginning of the depression, to one that is now highly favorable, we have been filled with a sense of appreciation for the loyalty and devotion manifested by the members of the church, which has made this improvement possible. We are also aware that we have been highly blessed as a church, individually and collectively, and that we are deeply indebted to God for all that has been accomplished. Because of the help received from divine sources in the years that are past, we face these new years of crisis with faith in him and in the church, confident in the ultimate establishment of his kingdom.

Respectfully submitted,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By: G. L. DeLapp,
C. A. Skinner,
H. L. Livingston.

Money Wasted

The national Women's Christian Temperance Union reveals that in the United States the following sums are being spent harmfully: on gambling, $12,581,514,314; on alcoholic beverages, $7,100,000,000; and that crime is costing $15,000,000,000 a year. This makes a total, for three entirely useless and pernicious drains on the national income of $34,681,514,314.

Here is something that the WCTU didn't figure: Our national debt is now $300,000,000,000—a result of the war, the depression, and politics.

If we could divert what the nation wastes on folly and evil and beastly appetites into the national treasury, we could wipe out that terrible debt in nine years!

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORTS

REPORT OF

Graceland College

By A. R. Gilbert, Acting President

To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:

The following report, showing the activities since the last General Conference, including a condensed balance sheet, at a meeting of the Board of Trustees held at Independence, Missouri, on the tenth day of March, 1946, was adopted and made the report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College to the First Presidency and the General Conference.

Verne L. Deskin, Secretary.
March 10, 1946

To the Board of Trustees,
Graceland College

In these days, Graceland College, like all other institutions, is faced with conditions which arise from the ending of hostilities and an evolvement toward a peacetime pattern of operation. In such a period of adjustment, the services of the institutions of education should be of even greater value than usual to all persons and organizations who profit directly and indirectly from such services. It is our conviction that in these times when religion faces the challenge of an accentuated need of its ministry in the lives of all people, all of the church related colleges including Graceland College, have an increased opportunity and responsibility for bringing the influence of Christian religion actively to bear upon college learning and living. The provisions for financial aid which the government has made in order to make it possible for discharged veterans to return to school is one indication of the opinion which our leaders in government have concerning the values of the services of higher education. Through the facilities of Graceland College we want to make available the resources of college training under a church influence to the young people of our church.

Enrollment Data

The number of students enrolled at Graceland College the past 10 years is indicated in the following table:

From time to time during the year some of the students will terminate their enrollment in the college. The maximum number of students enrolled at any one time during the 1945-46 school year has been 365 students.)

Legislation passed by congress makes provision for financial benefits to discharged veterans who wish to return to school. The number of veterans enrolled at Graceland this year under each of these two laws is as follows:

	1st sem.	2nd sem.
No. attending under benefits of G. I. Bill, (Public Law 346)	15	76
No. attending under benefits of Rehab. Law (Public Law 16)	1	5
No. attending under Canadian Government benefits	1	2
Total number veterans attending under benefits	17	83
No. veterans attending, not taking Government benefits	4	10
Total number veterans enrolled	21	93

It is significant to note that of all the students attending Graceland College this year, 91 per cent are members of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. This is about the usual percentage of church members in the student body.

Implications of Enrollment Data

From the data presented, it is apparent that even before the war, the number of students enrolled at Graceland College was increasing consistently. Now that the war is over, there is a sudden and great increase in the number of students applying for admission to colleges throughout the United States. Many colleges and universities are finding it necessary to turn students away and to adopt policies designed to limit the number of those who may qualify for admission. It is likely that as many as 600 people will apply for admission to Graceland College in the fall of 1946.

Since the facilities of even the large colleges and universities are taxed beyond capacity, the question arises as to whether those turned away will not apply for admission to the smaller colleges and thus feed into the smaller colleges types of students who might not usually attend them. So long as approximately 90 per cent of the students attending Graceland College are members of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, we may assume that Graceland is servicing young people who may appropriately be expected to use her facilities.

The question also arises as to whether or not the present increase in enrollment numbers is not a "flash in the pan" which will pass in a year or two, leaving college enrollments about where they were previous to the war. There is little doubt that financial aid through government benefits will cause many to go to college who might not otherwise do so. Educational opportunities of young men and women will have been interrupted by war conditions for a period of at least five years. It is therefore entirely likely that enrollment in colleges will drop somewhat from the peaks of the "GI Bill years." There is every indication, however, that college enrollments will remain rather permanently at a figure substantially greater than the enrollments of the pre-war years.

Although it should be gratifying to all of us to note that young people are coming to Graceland College in increasing numbers, it is necessary that we give consideration to the financial implications of increased enrollments at the college. The financial structure of our school system in America is based on the postulate that education is an instrument of public welfare and that a large proportion of the cost should therefore be borne by the public. Financial income to colleges from fees paid by students is therefore sufficient to pay only a portion (roughly one

I have examined the balance sheet of Graceland College as of June 30, 1944, and 1945, have reviewed the system of internal control and the accounting procedures of the college and, without making a detailed audit of the transactions, have examined or tested accounting records of the college and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent I deemed appropriate. Detailed reports of examination have been made to the First Presidency.

In my opinion, the accompanying balance sheet presents fairly the position of Graceland College at June 30, 1944, and June 30, 1945, and the results of its operations for the fiscal years then ended.

and carried on under the leadership of President Emeritus G. N. Briggs.

It should be noted that the college is receiving a support of ever-increasing significance from the Alumni Association. During the past year, the association completed its project of publishing and sending to all of our men in the armed forces a newspaper known as the Duffle Bag. This little newspaper was a tremendous morale builder and is directly responsible for a part of the GI enrollment which we are now realizing. At this time, the officials of the Alumni Association are campaigning to raise funds with which to purchase a new Hammond electric organ for the college. In addition to this equipment, the association has sponsored the publication of a history of Graceland, written by R. A. Cheville, which will be presented for the first time during General Conference. They are also sponsoring a fiftieth anniversary souvenir booklet; a directory of past students; and a list of manuscripts, books, and theses which have been written by our students. Although these projects have been substantial and valuable, the most important work of the Alumni Association is located in the wide dissemination of influence which its members exert in innumerable ways as a reflection of the work and worth of the college.

THE FUTURE

The future of the college is always a matter of provocative interest. Proposals for development should be scrutinized to make sure they are in line with the purposes of the college and within the scope of its resources.

To accomplish what we hope to accomplish will require additions to our material assets in physical plant, equipment, and funds for operating expenses. Whatever our position in this respect, I am confident that Graceland College can make a contribution to the young people who come to her halls in providing a type of educational experience which will constitute a resource in the art of living peacefully and well with the men and women of this and other nations.

half in most schools) of the total expense of education. In ordinary commercial enterprises, it is usually considered that the more customers or patrons the business has, the greater is likely to be the profits of the business. With colleges, however, it is different. The more students enrolled in the college, the larger the total amount of money required from appropriations, although it should be expected that efficient operation of the college will result in a reduction in the total cost per student. Increased enrollments at Graceland will therefore mean that larger amounts will need to be appropriated by the church for the operation of the college. The church will probably determine its action concerning appropriation for college operation and capital investments in accordance with its policy concerning higher education, and the value which it calculates such services to be worth to its young people and through them to society and the church.

The vital part of a college is the educational program in which the students enrolled in the college participate. A sudden increase in student enrollment does not release the college faculty and administration from the responsibility of a high quality performance with respect to their work with students. During the second semester of the 1945-46 school year, courses were organized for entering veterans in such a manner as to enable them to end the year with completed units of work. The curriculum next year will include a reinstatement of offerings in Business Administration and Engineering. During the past few years, large numbers of students have registered for courses in religion. We plan to make such courses available to the larger number of students who will likely be at the college next year. Much of the value which comes to the student who attends Graceland is derived from participation in the activities of the "College Community." We expect the effective administration of student life on the campus next year to constitute one of our most serious problems, if the student body is increased materially in numbers. This will be due in part to the fact that it will take time to accumulate all of the added buildings and equipment made desirable by an increase in the size of the student body.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY COMMEMORATION

Graceland College is throughout this year commemorating her 50th anniversary. Events already held include a 50th Anniversary Convocation, Homecoming and Alumni School, College Day Meetings, and Religious Emphasis Week. The commemoration has been planned

REPORT OF

The Independence
Sanitarium and Hospital

To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:

We are submitting herewith a Comparative Balance Sheet of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital as of December 31, 1943, and December 31, 1945, which balance sheet has been attested to by Lloyd L. Bland, Church Auditor.

The balance sheet does not reflect increases in Net Worth covering construction work in progress but not completed at the close of the year. These increases will be included in the financial report for the next conference period.

Attention is called, however, to some changes in the Balance Sheet which indicate a favorable situation. Current Assets have increased $37,981.53. Increases in Net Worth have arisen out of Net Income for the years 1944 and 1945, totaling $39,848.75, and contributions totaling $26,791.32, or a total increase of $66,640.07, of which amount $29,554.21 was relinquished to the Plant Fund for the purchase of furniture and equipment and capital improvements, leaving a Net Increase to Net Worth of $37,085.86. Corresponding entries are reflected in Plant Funds.

The increase in Net Worth in both Current Funds and Plant Funds Accounts totals $71,955.51.

The Liabilities consist only of current accounts outstanding and paid in the ensuing month.

As a result of the grants from the government, contributions from the church and the community, the plant has been expanded until it renders increasingly better service to the community. Sincere appreciation is extended to these agencies which have enabled these splendid improvements to be realized.

Respectfully submitted in behalf of the Board of Trustees,
Independence Sanitarium and Hospital,

By G. L. DeLapp, Secretary.

REPORT OF

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital

By Gertrude E. Copeland, R. N. Superintendent

To the First Presidency and The General Conference:

In our message to the Conference of 1944, we reported that we had been using four floors of the new hospital building since January, 1943: the basement, which accommodates the dietary department, linen room, drug room and storerooms; the first floor, including the operating rooms, record rooms, and offices; the second floor, which is the surgical floor and has accommodations for thirty-seven patients; and the third floor, which is our medical floor and has accommodations for thirty-eight patients.

On June 1, 1945, the maternity patients from the east building were moved to the fourth floor of the new building. This floor accommodates twenty-nine post-delivery patients, and the nursery can accommodate thirty-four infants. This floor also has a labor room with four beds, two delivery rooms, a doctor's dressing room, a workroom, nurses' station, diet kitchen, and two utility rooms.

Also in June, 1945, the laboratory moved to its new quarters on the fifth floor of the new building. We feel that the new location of the laboratory is very adequate and luxurious. Instead of the one small room we formerly had, we now have three and considerable new equipment which makes this department very up-to-date.

Due to the slowness of X-ray equipment arriving, the X-ray department did not occupy its new quarters on the fifth floor until August 6, 1945. There are seven rooms to comprise this department, although they are not all at present completely equipped. Equipment for the genito-urinary room has been ordered but has not yet arrived. The treatment room will remain unfinished until funds can be secured and made available.

A new department on the fifth floor was opened in January of this year, 1946, the central supply room. This room will handle the dispensing and maintaining of sterile supplies for all departments of the hospital, except the operating rooms. This will greatly facilitate the service given to our patients.

We thought when we moved to the new hospital we would have plenty of beds for all patients wanting to come to us for care, but we found we were very much mistaken. It is not uncommon to have between thirty and forty patients on our waiting list. One day, during the tonsillectomy season, we had ninety-four on the waiting list, desiring service.

Last September, 1945, work was started on the sixth floor, and at the present time we are about ready to occupy this floor, when we can secure elevator doors, which we hoped to obtain some time in March.

The sixth floor will accommodate thirty-four patients. We intend to care for all our fracture cases on this floor, also eight children up to age of six years. The rest will be devoted to surgical patients.

After the maternity department, laboratory, and X ray were moved from the east building, the basement, second, and third floors were remodeled for student nurses. The basement houses the dietetic laboratory, nursing arts laboratory, science laboratory, lecture room, and two offices for supervisors. The second and third floors are now occupied by modern nurses' rooms and an enlarged dining room. The east building is now used entirely as a nurses' home, housing eighty student nurses, two supervisors, and one house mother. To facilitate quicker service at mealtime, stainless steel cafeteria equipment has been ordered, and we expect to have it installed sometime within the next month.

This report was submitted March 1, and we hope by the time conference convenes that we will be able to have the sixth floor ready for visitors to inspect, completely furnished, and occupied by patients.

The following are a few statistics for the past few years:

Daily average of patients	72	100	106	109
Patients admitted	3,308	4,371	4,360	4,633
Days care given	26,478	36,645	38,699	39,912
Babies born	721	804	757	792

We wish to take this occasion to thank the individual members of the church and also the many branches and groups for their generous contributions during these past few years. Their gifts and donations have helped greatly in furnishing rooms and in purchasing new equipment for our new hospital building.

REPORT OF

Department of Religious Education

By F. M. McDowell and J. R. Darling

To the First Presidency and The General Conference:

We are pleased to submit the following summary of the work of this department covering the two interconference years, 1944-46.

APPOINTMENTS MADE

Our report to the General Conference of 1944 and subsequent correspondence with the First Presidency and Joint Council contained certain recommendations. Among these were:

1. The filling of a vacancy in the staff of this department. This request was granted with the appointment of Elder John R. Darling of LaCrosse, Wisconsin, who joined our staff in July, 1945.
2. The appointment of an advisory board of Religious Education. This board now consisting of seven members has been so appointed and is serving this department most effectively.
3. Provision for an adequate budget to meet the growing needs of Religious Education throughout the church. The budget approved by the last conference has proved to be adequate.
4. Attention was called to the increasingly difficult task of providing adequate lesson materials for each age group of the church school. It was recommended that steps be taken by the Board of Publication to discover, train, and appoint age group editors to work with the editor in chief in the preparation of such materials. While no such appointments have as yet been made, the need is recognized, and results are anticipated in the not too distant future.

SUMMARY OF EMPHASES, PROGRESS, AND PLANS

The Church School

In our responsibility for promoting church schools generally, we are pleased to report a sustained emphasis and healthy progress as follows:

1. The establishment of standards for the guidance and evaluation of church school work.

2. Providing new and revised courses of study at various age levels. The gradual improvement of all curricular materials.

3. Providing church school and leadership training courses centering in home and church co-operation in the religious nurture of children.

4. The promoting of leadership training through: (a) The enrichment of our standard leadership training curriculum; (b) the production of leadership materials and aids; (3) the continued publication and improvement of Guide-Lines to Leadership.

5. The preparation and publication of worship service suggestions.

An outstanding experimental project merits special mention. In October, 1945, a State Conference of Religious Education was held at Flint, Michigan. The conference was attended by administrative officers and church school officials of seven districts and approximately thirty-five branches. The success of this conference anticipates a new day for field work by representatives of this department in the interest of our educational program.

Emphases for the coming biennium will include the following:

1. A consistent and sustained endeavor to improve the quality of religious instruction in our church schools, in harmony with the program set up in A Yearbook for Church School Workers.

2. Continued efforts to increase the use of the wealth of materials and programs now available. Co-operation with the district and branch administrative officers to that end.

3. Conducting systematic research with a view to planning and building a supply of distinctively Reorganized Latter Day Saint (church centered) materials for all age groups.

Zion's League

In spite of the world war and in many respects the even more disturbing postwar confusion, the work of Zion's League has made encouraging progress. It may be safely said that Zion's League—"The youth of the church united in action"—is now generally recognized and established throughout the church.

The two-year period has witnessed the following developments:

1. Regular provision, through the medium of the Saints' Herald, of program material for the use of the League, under the title "Adventures in Latter Day Saintism."

2. The preparation and publication of a manual entitled: Does It Make Any Difference?—a life-centered program for study, discussion, and action by our young people as they face the perplexing problems of the world today.

3. Attention should be called to the annual conferences held by the young people of Ontario. The attendance at the conference of 1945 was approximately six hundred. Of special merit, too, was the youth conference held at Graceland College in June, 1945. The findings of this somewhat unique gathering have been published in a manual entitled Does It Make Any Difference?

4. Regional, stake, and district young people's conventions, conferences, institutes, retreats, and camps have been held throughout the church with uniformly encouraging results.

During the coming two-year period it is our plan to:

1. Stimulate a rethinking of the entire Zion's League program, with a view to the preparation and publication of a completely revised Zion's League Handbook.

2. Encourage a far more extensive use of materials now available, with a view to the enrichment of the activities of the League throughout the church.

3. Make use of any and every opportunity to encourage our young people through the medium of Zion's League to share now, where they are, actively and creatively in the work of the church.

4. Continue to promote, using every means at our command, the discovery and training of qualified leaders of our young people.

Scouting

Our sustained attention and effort during the last two years have been given to the work of setting up and preparing materials for the God and Country Award program, which has been made available to us through the National Council of Boy Scouts of America and the Protestant Committee on Scouting. Our progress has been most encouraging.

Under this program Boy Scouts of America grants a special award in religion to the scout who complies with the requirements set up by his church. Accordingly, we have formulated and published a statement of such requirements for our church. These appear in The God and Country Award—a record book for boys, and in a new manual, Our Scouting Program.

Our program has not only received the approval of national scout headquarters, but has been repeatedly commended by our own administrative officers and by experienced scouters not of our faith. To date one hundred sixteen scouts have registered for the God and Country Award, and the first award service is to be held during this conference.

We are convinced that this new program marks a new day for the boys of our church, providing, of course, that materials and programs now available are widely utilized.

Since any Boy Scout anywhere, either member or nonmember, enrolled in any troop, is entitled to register for this special award and since adequate materials are now available for the promotion of this program, the problem is that of the extension of its use throughout the church. Our chief hope lies in the active co-operation of stake, district, and branch administrative officers to that end. We earnestly and urgently plead for such co-operation.

Our Girls' Program

The official activity programs for the girls of our church are the Blue Bird program for girls 7 to 10 years of age, inclusive, and the Oriole program for girls 11 years of age and older. Six hundred or more girls are enrolled and actively participating in the programs. The number is divided almost equally between the Blue Bird girls and the Oriole girls, with approximately half of these girls, in each case, active in Independence.

One of the outstanding activities of the local Oriole girls has been their camp at Excelsior Springs each summer since 1939. Here the girls enjoy one or two weeks' work, fun, and fellowship under consecrated leadership, inspiring and helping the girls to high church-centered ideals. This year, there will be added a two-day Blue Bird camp for the younger girls. It is estimated that approximately two hundred and fifty girls will participate in camp life here this summer.

The emphasis since last conference has been the promotion of these programs in the various branches of the church. Progress has been somewhat slow, but definite. A revised Blue Bird manual has been completed, combining the activity program, the leadership training course, and the study guide in one book, The Blue Bird Program. A fourth year has been added to the Blue Bird work. Embroidered insignia and rank emblems have been obtained. The Oriole program was quite extensively improved the previous year. The age limit in each program has been reduced one year, as will be noted. Shortly after conference, a revised Oriole Girls' Handbook and a new Leader's Handbook will be available. Other helps are planned for both programs.

A new phase of girls' work in the church is being initiated with a religious award program somewhat similar to the Boy Scout's God and Country Award program. By its use, the girls of national organizations (Girl Scouts, Camp Fire girls, 4-H Club girls, Girl Reserves, and others), along with Oriole girls, will be permitted to complete requirements set up by the church, covering a minimum of a year's work, entitling them to receive the final award known as the "Light of Life" Award. A pin with a design distinctly and uniquely representing our church will be presented each girl completing the work.

This new program will permit an initiation of a religious program for our church girls in national organizations and a revised and improved religious award program for Oriole girls. Much of the emphasis during the next two years will be the promotion of this program. The possibilities of this program herald a new day for girls' work in the church. A manual and other materials are contemplated in the near future.

Camping

In recent months we have witnessed a most encouraging development of our Camping program. This includes:

1. A systematic study of the nature, philosophy, and purpose of camping as an activity program sponsored by the church. Two "seminars" on camping were held, at which carefully prepared papers were presented and evaluated.
2. The publication of the findings of the above studies are in a special issue of Guide-Lines to Leadership (July, August, September, 1945).
3. Appointment of a General Camp Committee to co-operate with this department in providing general supervision of the camping program throughout the church.
4. A gradual but healthy extension of camping to various areas of the church. During the summer season of 1946, it is anticipated that camps will be held at Excelsior Springs, Missouri; Nauvoo, Illinois; Colorado Springs, Colorado; Brewton, Alabama; Columbus, Nebraska; Pawnee, Oklahoma; and Barnham, Minnesota.
5. Building a small but up-to-date working library of pamphlets and books dealing with the camping program.
6. Securing of membership by members of our staff in the American Camping Association. The director of this department is a member of the committee on Church Camping of that association.

During the coming years, we expect to continue the above emphasis with a view to making available to many hundreds of our young people the privileges of this uniquely helpful program.

We anticipate preparation and publication of a handbook of our own covering such camps. Attention will be given to the matter of discovering and training camp directors and staff members and to the possibilities of extending the privileges of camping to young people of the junior high age, as well as to older young people, young adults, and even families.

Publications

A major portion of our time and effort during the past year has been given to the planning and preparation of manuscripts for publication covering many important areas of the work of religious education. Among these publications are the following:

A Yearbook for Church Workers. Containing a statement of standards and goals for church schools for 1946-47.

Does It Make Any Difference? A workbook or manual summarizing the findings of the Youth Conference held in Lamon, Iowa, June 6, 1945. This manual provides materials for a year of study, discussion and action by Zion's Leagues throughout the church.

Junior Church Manual. An indispensable handbook for junior church pastors and leaders replete with source materials for every phase of junior worship.

Our Scouting Program. A manual which sets forth simply, yet adequately, the principles and practices of scouting under church supervision, especially as such applies to our own church. The material also contains a complete outline of the God and Country Award program as now in operation.

Let us Worship, by C. B. Hartshorn. A splendid new textbook on worship, usable either for leadership training credit or as a manual of reference.

Improved Teaching in the Junior High Division, by Eunice Livingston. A very worth-while addition to the church school leadership series introduced several years ago. One of the standard textbooks in leadership training. An authoritative source book for teachers and leaders of adolescent young people.

Noteworthy also are the following quarterly textbooks which have been published during the past two years:

Overviews of Latter Day Saintism. Four quarterlies covering church history, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the missionary message of the church.

Blueprint for Abundant Living. A series of four quarterly texts for young adults, covering the temporal, domestic, political, and educational aspects of life.

The Church and the Home. Four quarterly texts covering areas as "The Branch of Today and Tomorrow," "The Home for Today and Tomorrow," "The Church and Home in Mutual Endeavor," and "The Child Grows up in Home and Church."

Restoration: A Study in Prophecy, by Elbert A. Smith. A readable and informative study of the Restoration Movement in the light of prophecy and history.

Bible Studies, by Thelona D. Stevens. A well-balanced view of the main historical, theological, doctrinal, and sociological aspects of the Bible.

A Journey With the Church. Four quarterlies presenting church history in a form attractive to junior high ages, and older.

Telling the Gospel Story. Four quarterlies, distinctly church-centered, for juniors.

The Editor

This department and the church generally are indebted to Sister Lydia Wight for her outstanding work as Quarterly Editor during the years 1943-45. Sister Wight's wealth of practical experience and her devotion to the church and the cause of religious education produced abundant fruitage in a greatly improved quality of quarterlies and textbooks. When Sister Wight's health made it necessary for her to present her resignation, the Board of Publication was most fortunate in securing the services of Elder C. B. Hartshorn. Within a few short weeks, Brother Hartshorn as Editor of Church School Literature, has justified our anticipation of continued efficiency and co-operation in this vital field.

Leadership Training

Thanks to the devotion and perseverance of Sister Thelona D. Stevens and the many volunteer workers who have co-operated with her, leadership training has more than held its own during the two-year period. This is indicated by the following figures:

	1944	1946
Number of courses available	43	57
Study Guides	24	28
Number of students in classes	825	877
Number of classes	70	116
Total registration for courses since last report		4,152
Details of the Leadership Training

Curriculum are available in Bulletin No. 102.

Information it not available concerning the number of persons who have made profitable use of these courses, without registering for credit. Neither are we informed as to the number (which we have reason to believe is increasing rapidly) who have pursued leadership training courses offered by other organizations and denominations. Of this we continue to be certain: There is no greater need in the church today than for qualified local leaders and teachers. Our leadership training program is but one of the many avenues available to that end. We pledge ourselves to the continued improvement and promotion of this program.

Mention should be made of our plan to give special attention to parent education as a vital aspect of leadership training, this based upon the conviction that the home must again take its place as the "first school of religion." Several new training courses in this area are now available.

Visual Education

The two-year period has witnessed a renewal of interest in visual education.

1. Representatives of this department were in attendance at the International Workshop in Visual Education during the summers of 1944 and 1945.

2. A sixty-four page issue of Guide-Lines to Leadership was devoted entirely to Visual Aids in various fields of church work. This issue has received widespread commendation from those, both within and without the church.

3. The appointment to our staff of John R. Darling, whose training and experience qualify him to assume some measure of leadership in this field.

The best of current thinking available to us indicates the wisdom of a unification of three phases or aspects of this work.

1. Editorial—selecting and editing subject materials.

2. Production and mechanical aspects.

3. Publicity and distribution.

With some such procedures as are here indicated this department pledges its co-operation. We have barely begun, as a church, to capitalize upon the opportunities and possibilities available to us in the use of visual aids.

Guide-Lines to Leadership

The publication of Guide-Lines to Leadership has continued. Our staff has made a sustained effort to improve its quality and usefulness in every way, subject to the limitations of space and infrequency of issuance.

Two of the recent issues of this journal, the one devoted to the camping program, the other to visual aids, have been widely heralded as alone being worth the price of subscription. The subscription list, on the average, barely totals 1,400 names. This is disappointingly small. We continue to believe some such publication as Guide-Lines to Leadership to be indispensable to departmental workers. Again, we urge for it the united and sustained support of church workers everywhere.

Christmas Offering

The Christmas Offering sponsored by our church schools everywhere is worthy of note. The total income from this source over a period of years is as follows:

1945— 49,654.19

It should be observed that during the past two years no special promotional effort has been made, either by the office of the Presiding Bishopric or by this department. In spite of this, receipts have been consistently uniform. It would appear that the Christmas Offering habit is well established among our people.

Summer Vacation Church School

In the light of a widespread and growing conviction that the teaching work of the church must be greatly expanded if Christian civilization is to be assured, the development of the Summer Vacation Church School in Independence (and other church centers), deserves special mention.

In Independence alone, during the summer of 1945, the total attendance at fourteen such summer schools passed the 1,000 mark, utilizing the services of 190 volunteer workers. Much credit should go to the pastor, Garland Tickemyer, and his associate pastors in Independence for the genuine wholehearted co-operation and leadership in this good work. Once we can provide ourselves with uniquely Latter Day Saint curriculum materials and a corps of trained volunteer leaders and teachers, the Summer Vacation Church School program should spread to many other congregations throughout the church.

This department pledges itself to provide increasing support and leadership for this worthy movement.

THE ADVISORY BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

In harmony with a recommendation by this department to the Conference of 1944, the First Presidency appointed at that time the following named persons to constitute an advisory board of Religious Education:

Roy Cheville

E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

Harry Lorange

Wayne Updike

Ruby Williamson

In April, 1945, the membership of this board was strengthened by the appointment of Apostles F. Henry Edwards and Charles Hield.

Since last conference, the board has held five sessions, at which the problems and plans of the work of Religious Education were reviewed and informally discussed. Many timely and helpful constructive criticisms were offered.

Individual members of the board have been frequently and profitably consulted by our staff. We are assured of the increasing usefulness of this advisory group in the most vital and difficult task of mapping out and directing our educational activities. Three members of this board are to be appointed in 1946, at this conference, two in 1948, and two in 1950.

TWO MOST URGENT NEEDS

As we face the demands of new days ahead and contemplate the tasks of promoting the total program of religious education along the lines set forth in our report, we are met by two most urgent needs. These we now bring to your attention.

First, there is an increasing and evermore insistent demand for a distinctly Reorganized Latter Day Saint "core curriculum," this curriculum to consist of educational materials which are:

- (a) Uniquely representative of the distinctive message, mission, and goal of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.
- (b) Carefully graded; that is, suitably adapted to the needs, interests, and capacities of the various age groups to be served.

The need for such is becoming daily more apparent. Almost every phase of our present educational program is dependent upon them; i. e., scouting, girls' activities, camps, vacation schools, pre-baptismal preparations, children's work at reunions, etc.—all more or less mark time awaiting graded lesson units which set forth the minimum essentials of Latter Day Saintism. This need has been brought to the attention of the First Presidency and Joint Council together with the specific recommendations. The support of the church as a whole in this matter is earnestly solicited.

Second, an evermore effectual administration of the work of religious education as organic with the church. This will involve:

- (a) A clarifying of the goals of the church, both immediate and long-time, and of the peculiar place of religious education in the achievement of such goals.

As a means of clarifying our vision of our responsibility in relation to the total ongoing program of the church, we have filed with the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, and the president of Graceland College, requests for statements covering our program for the years just ahead and the part which religious education may be reasonably expected to play in its promotion. We expect to keep these statements before us constantly as we plan our work.

- (b) A more widespread adaptation and use of the materials and programs now available in each and all of the various administrative units of the church—stake, district, and branch. This, that we may multiply the reach and effectiveness of our teaching program. It would seem, for example, entirely possible, on an average, to double the number of children and young people served by our present educational materials, if we could but join forces in a sustained co-operative endeavor to that end.

Since the meeting of these two most urgent needs is a matter of growing mutual understanding and wholehearted co-operation, we wish to pledge the staff of this department to a sustained and prayerful endeavor that such may become increasingly our practice during the years ahead. Certainly anything less than this would brand us as unworthy of such a church as ours in such a day as this.

REPORT OF

The Church Architect

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

As far as possible I have attended to the many church-building problems which have been brought to my attention, and enjoyed the work. Because of my own professional duties, many of the details have necessarily been worked out by others. Every effort has been made to have the necessary architectural work done in the most economical manner.

It is gratifying to state that I find a growing appreciation on the part of those responsible for our buildings for more careful study of the details and appointments which are necessary for a satisfactory solution of the problems. A continued enlargement of our understanding of the art and science pertaining to building is essential for future progress.

Church Architect.

REPORT OF

General Council of Women

By Pauline James Arnson

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

Once again we are pleased to report the activities of the women of the church since the last conference assembled. We are gratified with the efforts which have been put forth by consecrated leaders, and feel that a good work has been accomplished in spite of difficulties which have constantly been present throughout the past period of years. During most of this period, in spite of the added responsibilities of home and community which were imposed upon them by the conditions existing in the world, they kept on faithfully doing their duty to the church program, thus they grew spiritually and were able to meet and overcome difficulties.

We meet this year with thankfulness for past blessings and for clearer vision, and also with hope, for we believe that to a greater degree, more of our women sense the importance of their part of the task in the building of Zion.

During the period of the war, the general council tried to help the women meet the changing conditions of the world, by suggesting material on the family in a world of war, marriage in war, the importance of keeping the home pattern intact, versus the lure of added financial gain which was attracting many. Many fine articles were printed in the Herald on this and other allied subjects. One article by our general council member, Dora Pankey Glines, entitled "What Price Work?" was especially timely for mothers, to assist them with the problems of juvenile delinquency.

Letters were addressed to Judge of the Juvenile Court, Ray Cowan, Judge Albert Reeves, and to Dr. H. A. Richardson, Director of Welfare in Kansas City, expressing our support of their program to assist youths, and the pamphlet "Who Is Delinquent?" a digest of the splendid book by Judge C. Kelley was sent to them and acknowledged gratefully by them.

Because of the let-down and lowering of ideals and the feeling of the futility of life, which spirit always accompanies a war-torn world, we emphasized the admonition given by the joint council last conference, by endeavoring to help church families maintain high moral standards in the home. In classwork, lectures, and in articles, the relationship of parents to children was discussed, for we feel that "we cannot lead or make the road safe for youth, unless we keep ourselves fit to lead."

Also the returning soldier was a topic of interest to mothers and wives, and this subject was presented to assist them in understanding some of the conditions he was meeting. A list of books on the subject of the returning soldier was prepared from library sources, and sent out to women's groups to help them in their search for knowledge.

Members of the general council conducted classes for women at several reunions. Other leaders, at our request, represented us, and district leaders taught the classes where no general church representative attended. From the programs sent in and the comments received, we continue to feel that reunions are a very important part of the religious life of the L. D. S. woman and family. Every effort should be made to take advantage of these sessions this coming summer, for in a marked degree, fellowship, strength, and renewed purpose to serve the master is engendered there, and these are most important.

The theme of the General Department of Women for the year 1944 was "Zion's Living." This thought was carried out in study suggestions, pamphlets, and reunion programs. A tentative program called "Blue Prints for Zion's Living" for reunion women's work was prepared and sent to all district leaders in April, 1945, which assisted the reunion workers to prepare a helpful program for the summer sessions.

A sheet on "Parliamentary Procedure at a Glance" was prepared, showing types of motions and actions; this was available for leaders to assist them in conducting their meetings in an orderly way.

Some splendid study courses in pamphlet form have been prepared especially for women. These are "True Values in Life Today," by Mrs. T. W. Bath, which has been well received; "Nutrition in Relation to Church Philosophy," by Alice V. Bolon, A.B., as well as a set of ten program lessons prepared by her with the assistance of the Davis City, Iowa, women's group. They have met a vital need for women. We anticipate several other pamphlet study courses in the near future on leadership, art appreciation in the home, and on our religious heritage.

The council co-operated with the Religious Education Department in preparing material on the subject of the "Latter Day Saint Home." It called a representative group of women together in the office to form research committees to discuss material that should be taught to our junior and young adults. These committees worked successfully and untiringly and assisted in selecting the norms which should be the pattern for L. D. S. homes. Sister Alice Burgess wrote the quarterly, The Latter Day Saint Home for Today and Tomorrow, and we feel that she has done a fine work.

The Home Column has appeared at intervals in the Herald, but not as regularly as we would desire. The paper shortage, as well as the fact that we have received fewer articles of general interest to women, contribute to this condition. We want to impress again upon the minds of our women writers, that we welcome contributions and ask that whenever good material is prepared for local use which might be of general interest, that a copy be sent to the Women's Department, in care of The Auditorium, and if acceptable, it will be used in the Home Column. We will also welcome the assistance of the pastors and other men of the priesthood. In the past, they have sent in papers which have been very fine.

The members of the General Council have worked well and faithfully. The return of Sister Blanche Mesley from Australia is eagerly awaited, and we also are glad to have this conference time in which to greet other council members who live away from the center place.

The council has lost by death one of its staunch women workers, Sister Charlotte Koehler. We will miss her mental and physical vigor, her enthusiasm and wise counsel.

Much thought has been given to the subject matter to be presented to the women's classes for conference this year. A request for suggestions was made through the Herald, and several good replies were received which presented the needs of the various districts. In addition, sincere petitions for guidance were uttered, and we feel that the subjects to be presented are in line with the forward progress of the church.

The work of the general as well as the local department of women is two-fold. It is concerned with the women's work as a department of the branch, helping all the women of the branch find a place to work, and as a group gives opportunity to serve by supporting the activities of the branch. To help the conference women see how this can be achieved, a class called "The Functioning Women's Department in the Branch" is being presented. In this class the following subjects will be discussed: Diversified Fields of Activity, the Work of the District Organization, Exchange of Ideas from large and small local groups, Food News, Management and Planning the Church Supper, Program Planning, Family Nights, etc., and the Outlook for Tomorrow.

The second phase of women's work, and perhaps the more important, is the development of woman herself, that she and her family may be prepared to make the contribution to the church of right and full living. To this end, the second class will discuss the subjects that will help the "L. D. S. Woman and Family Meet Today's Problems of Living." And the following discourses will be given:

"The Cradle of Democracy," building the quality of life for universal peace.

"Arming Our Youth," counseling to meet alien group pressures.

"Stewardship of Ourselves and Possessions," intelligent management of time and money.

"Building More Stately Mansions," new vistas of gracious living.

"Evangelizing 1946," up-to-the-minute technique for women in evangelizing.

"New Appreciations of Our Spiritual Heritage," revisioning the Restoration.

It is felt that the week-end institute for women of a district or stake is an effective method of unifying the efforts of women workers, as well as a valuable means of instructing them in department work and in the church program. How to plan such a meeting will be discussed at the women's class, and it is urged that these suggestions and others that will develop from this discussion and be adapted for local use.

The social amenities, so vital to growth, have been well planned by the women of Independence. A reception for all registered women will be given Tuesday, April 9. All visiting women are urged to attend to enjoy the fellowship.

We express appreciation to the committees and hostesses who so graciously accept this responsibility year after year.

The theme of the General Department of Women for 1946 and on, is, "Having the Courage of Our Religious Convictions." It has been felt that some have been affected by the condition of the war years which have had a tendency to draw them away from active participation in church work. In future planning, every effort will be made to revive interests by revisioning the gospel of the latter day and the Latter Day Saint heritage. Through study courses, an effort will be made to present distinct Latter Day Saint beliefs, many of which were unknown to the religious world in 1830, but which have acted as leaven since that time. Recognition will be given to the good men of the earth and to their work, but a plea will be made that we remain firm, making the choices that in the end will bring the greater rewards and benefits to the church and world.

Although we are not entirely satisfied with the progress made, we have great faith in the inherent qualities of the women members. Much encouragement and strength has come from the active participation of younger women.

This statement, "If coal had given up, it would never have been a diamond," should be encouraging, with the inference that although we may be in the rough or coal stage now, we have those qualities which when polished, with the aid of a loving Heavenly Father, will produce diamonds. To this end we bend our efforts.

REPORT OF

The Graphic Arts Bureau

By C. Ed. Miller

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

At the suggestion of President Smith that a department be organized by the amateur photographers of the church, a group of brethren met on the Temple Lot, April 12th, 1918, and again in the Stone Church, April 13, 1918. The name, Graphic Arts Bureau, was suggested by Sam Burgess and adopted.

Objectives: to provide visual aids in the way of lantern slides, charts, etc.; to collect historical paintings and photographs; and to gather material for illustrated lectures. These objectives are still in force.

Some years ago a commercial department was installed, the profits from which enabled the Bureau to purchase equipment necessary for providing visual aids in the way of projectors, slides, etc., as these were in demand for sale and for rental. The commercial department has been discontinued so more time could be devoted to meet the growing demand for the 2" x 2" Kodachrome slides.

Recommendations: That there be a production and circulating department and a continuation of the historical department; and that the Agfa system of processing colored film be installed, and a man be engaged whose time be exclusively given to producing one hundred additional sets of visual aids on subjects recommended by men of the ministry and others who have had experience in using slides and other visual aids. Such master sets and duplicates could be produced in a year's time.

The circulating department should have charge of filling orders for the slide sets, post cards, prints, etc., while the historical department would function as usual. Possibly the Herald management would consider handling the circulating department. No doubt, arrangements could be made with the religious education department and the Archaeological Society, to prepare typewritten and mimeographed lectures for the slide sets. The Bureau's historical department has a large and varied supply of material that could be used for the lecture sets. After adequate sets and lectures have once been prepared, keeping them up to date and replacements, would be a simple and inexpensive matter.

Various projectors consist of 150, 200 and 300 watt lamps. These 35 mm instruments have heat eliminating filters. There are instruments which project opaque objects and illustrations as well as glass slides. The small View-Master is a modern adaptation of the three-dimension stereoscope. It will be found ideal for fireside talks and for small groups. The pictures are very superior Kodachromes. We probably could have our own pictures made in the disc. The flannelgraph is becoming very popular.

The moving picture projector and film, in my opinion, is not especially adapted to our requirements on account of the great expense entailed, and the limited supply of desirable films. The rapidity of the action makes it difficult to use the films for effective lecturing purposes. I do believe however, we should engage the services of a professional movie photographer to make a technicolor film of our most colorful church history in both the 35 mm. and 16 mm. size film. This 35 mm. film would be of great historical interest if shown at every General Conference, and the 16 mm. on other special occasions. Possibly a copy of the Brigham Young film could be purchased and the unobjectionable features incorporated in our proposed film.

Sets of all of our visual aids should now be available to our foreign missions and congregations.

I believe permanent provision should be made for a historical art gallery. We have a considerable number of fine oil paintings and many enlargements of historical value. Some of these are on the upper floor of the Auditorium. We have several thousand pictures that reflect our church history over a period of a hundred years. These should be enlarged on sensitized canvas. Painting these in oil would be a fine project for the newly organized Independence Art Club. There are a number of very talented artists in this group. The Bureau today has catalogued 10,400 pictures. Possibly a large number of these will never be of any practical use, but many should be made accessible to the public, so a permanent place should be provided for exhibition purposes.

I now wish to be relieved of all responsibility in carrying on the activities of the Bureau except the care of the historical and lecture material. As long as I am able to arrange this matter in such shape that it will be readily accessible to the lecture department, I desire to give my remaining activities to a completion of this work.

Graphic Arts Bureau,
C. ED MILLER, Director

REPORT OF The Church Historian

By A. B. Phillips

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

Since the General Conference of 1944, some additional reference and other needed books and historical magazines have been added to our Historical Department. Also quite a number of loose volumes have been bound. Some that are incomplete will be bound when the missing numbers are completed, so they may not be lost. We have sought to acquire yearly files of magazines of state historical societies which would be of particular interest to the church because of its history or the location of its membership. It is hoped that in time the Historical Department may acquire a more complete collection of works dealing with community and allied social experiments, so that they may be available for such studies as may be desired and yield the food for thought which they contain.

OLD RECORDS DESIRED

Some old branch records of considerable interest and importance have been received, and others are being traced that we trust will in due time be sent for our use and for preservation with those on hand. It will be greatly appreciated if our district and branch authorities will call to our attention any such records known to them, which are no longer in use locally, with a view to having them filed with those already received. Also, those who know of old or rare books, documents, or letters of importance to the church, that we may need, will confer a favor upon us if they will bring the matter to our attention.

Members of the First Presidency, as well as some others, have forwarded material from time to time for our department files. Any such material that may be of future value and importance to the church and no longer needed locally might well be kept safe here for future reference. Past experience has shown that material often acquires added importance with the passage of time.

When library and other facilities are at hand, the work of grouping, accessioning, and indexing our historical volumes and other material will need attention. There is considerable material of this kind that may in this way be made more quickly available in research work in the interests of the church, and its general character can be noted in greater detail than heretofore.

WORK OF LOCAL HISTORIANS

A considerable number of district and branch historians, in addition to those previously reported, have been selected with the help of local administrative officers and local conferences. Some of these have not yet reported, but conditions brought on by the recent war have in many instances made work considerably more difficult. The situation will doubtless gradually improve in the course of time. Some of these historians have reported material that was greatly needed in our files.

Some of the Apostles in charge and associated officials have kindly caused records of new organizations to be made for the Historical Department and forwarded to us. Such records are very important and are appreciated. In some instances, years ago, such data failed to reach this department, making it quite difficult to obtain all that was desired for our use, and sometimes it has been impossible.

The value of history in the study of problems at hand or for the near future is quite generally recognized today. This is as true of church progress as of temporal affairs. Our historical material therefore should be as complete as possible and cover all areas and departments of the church. District and branch historians can perform a valuable work in their respective fields and greatly enrich the source material the church desires to obtain. In this way the work may be adequately done.

We desire additional data from some of the stakes, districts, and branches that have not made continuous reports covering all periods. Copies of our circular, Writing the Church History, have been sent to all local historians thus far appointed, so far as known, and any further aid we can give will be sent on request.

A. B. Phillips,
Church Historian.

Church Auditor's Report of Examination

By Lloyd L. Bland

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference.*

I have examined the fund balance sheet of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as of December 31, 1945, and the related statements of income and expense and capital for the two-year period ended on that date, have reviewed the accounting procedures of the church, and have examined their accounting records and other evidence in support of such financial statements. My examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances, and tests were made to the extent I deemed appropriate. The following comments apply to the balance sheet at December 31, 1945, and to the transactions for the two-year period.

General, Land and Inheritance, and Temple Funds

Cash in banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and reconciliation. Cash in the hands of bishops and agents was verified by reference to reports and was traced into subsequent bank deposits.

All bonds and stocks were examined. U. S. Government and Canadian Government bonds and securities are stated at cost. Other stocks and bonds are carried at nominal value.

Real Estate—Other Properties in the depreciated amount of $273,814.97 includes land, residential and business properties carried in the name of G. Leslie DeLapp as Trustee in Trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and in the name of the Central Development Association.

The Beneficial Interest in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund represents the difference between the value of Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands and the amount payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund.

Additions to furniture, fixtures, equipment, and libraries were examined and depreciation in the amount of $1,150.00 for each of the two years was charged to operating expense.

The amount of $40,457.65 titled Australasian Mission represents the net worth of the mission as of October 25, 1945, in accordance with a report received from the bishop's agent in Australia. The net asset is composed of cash, accounts receivable, furniture and fixtures as assets, and liabilities which cannot be paid due to international regulations. All Australian transactions in recent years have been recorded in the accounting records at the exchange rate of $3.90 U. S. to the Australian pound.

The assets, liabilities, and net worth of the Central Development Association and the Real Estate Department have been consolidated in the accompanying balance sheet and statement of income and expense of the General, Land and Inheritance, and Temple Funds.

Changes in the capital accounts are detailed in an accompanying schedule.

Agency Fund

The Agency Fund was created in the year 1942 to segregate from the General Fund and other funds all liabilities which for some reason could not be paid. It also acts as a depository for cash and bonds held for safekeeping for individuals and church organizations.

Cash was verified by direct correspondence with the depository and by reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost or nominal value.

Consecration Agreement Fund

The Consecration Agreement Fund was set up during the year 1942, to record the assets and liabilities relative to certain agreements entered into by the Presiding Bishopric and certain individuals.

These agreements arise out of a desire of the individual to make a contribution to the church and at the same time provide for themselves some security for the future. These agreements, as detailed in the accompanying schedules, are described as follows:

Class B: This class represents the type of agreement wherein the individual turns over to the church, cash, bonds, or other negotiable assets as a consecration, in consideration of which the church agrees to pay the individual a regular amount every year, with the possibility of additional amounts to be paid in the event of need. The total sum of such additional payments is not to exceed the amount of the original consecration. Furthermore, when such additional amounts are paid, the amounts of the annual payments are reduced proportionately. The regular annual payments do not reduce the maximum amount of liability.

Class C: Under this type of contract the individual gives cash, bonds, and in some cases real estate as a consecration. There is no provision for regular annual payments, but the additional amount provision, as in Class B, is included. Some of these contracts provide for the payment of last sickness and funeral expenses. Where real estate has been conveyed to the church, the contract and the asset have been recorded at a nominal value. The liability in such cases is limited to the amount which is realized from the sale of the property. These parcels of real estate are, however, carried on the Real Estate Department's books.

Class D: This represents contracts where there is a definite amount payable per month or per annum but no additional payments are required.

Class E: This class represents non-negotiable notes, payable to the individual, which contain a provision that they shall be canceled in the event of the death of the payee.

Class F: This class represents bonds payable on death to the church and both the liability and the asset are carried at nominal value.

Cash was verified by correspondence with the depository and reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined.

Notes receivable, none of which are past due, were examined. These notes arise out of the sales of real estate or formed a part of the original consecration.

Real estate investment represents the nominal values, plus additional costs of acquisition and improvements, of real estate consecrated under an agreement. Some of these consecrations of real estate provide for a life estate to the consecrator.

An asset in the form of an assigned, matured life insurance policy and the related liability are carried in the amount of one dollar.

Houses of Worship Fund

Houses of Worship Fund is divided into two sections. The Restricted Building Fund section consists of cash, accounts receivable, bonds, and other assets which have been acquired by contributions from local congregations or from the sale of houses of worship which were no longer in use. It has been the policy of the church to hold the receipts from the sale of houses of worship in this fund, restricting its use to the acquiring of property in the vicinity of the congregation from which it was acquired. If it is found inadvisable to utilize the asset in the immediate vicinity, it is to be used somewhere in the district in which the local was located.

Cash was verified by correspondence with the depository and by reconciliation.

United States Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

Accounts and notes receivable are in the most part due from local congregations. A large percentage of these receivables originated prior to 1932, and it is my opinion they are of doubtful value.

It has been the practice of the Presiding Bishopric to issue notes to certain local congregations covering contributions to the fund. These notes are shown as liabilities, but they differ from other receipts of the fund only in that a note payable has been issued as evidence of trusteeship.

The Real Estate Investment section represents the portion of the fund invested in buildings and grounds used for local congregations, reunion grounds, and properties having historical value in connection with the history of the church.

Auditorium building and grounds is stated at the amount carried in the General Fund at December 31, 1941, plus the cost of subsequent construction in the amount of $12,392.38, making a total value of $721, 946.99.

Chapel accounts A, B, and C represent church buildings, reunion grounds, and historical properties respectively. I was unable to verify the amounts stated as investments due to the inadequacy of the records. A reserve for depreciation in the amount of $38,500.00 to cover depreciation up to December 31, 1929, appears on the books but there have not been any additions or deductions since that date.

Mortgages payable in the amount of $2,204.10 represent the liability to the Real Estate Department of the General Fund.

Ministerial Reserve Fund

The Ministerial Reserve Fund was created in 1937 and has been increased in subsequent years by appropriations from the General Fund and by income on investments.

The requirements of this fund are computed by the Church Statistician and are based on the life expectancy of those appointees now covered. The assets of the fund are held to cover retirement costs, death benefits, and other contingent costs relative to appointees placed under appointment subsequent to 1935, and to the group whose ages were between 60 and 74 at January 1, 1944, and who were on the appointment list prior to 1936. This fund does not accrue for the benefit of any one minister or his dependents. The annual transfers of cash, although based on individual cases, build up a fund which can be used to provide the necessities of life to the appointee and his dependents after his retirement or after he has reached the age of seventy. The fund balances are carried separately on the books, according to the purpose for which each is intended.

Cash in the banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and by reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

A schedule of changes in the balances of the reserves is included in the balance sheet.

Family allowance expense for the year 1945 for those appointees who have reached the age of seventy was charged to the Retirement Reserve in the amount of $6,900.00.

The Unallocated Reserve represents the segregated reserves which had been accumulated for those ministers whose appointments have terminated.

The Graceland College Faculty Retirement Reserve was created in May, 1942, and is based on an appropriation of $333.33 per month retroactive to January 1, 1942.

Missionary Reserve Fund

This fund was set up in accordance with General Conference action of April 6, 1944. The purpose of the fund is to provide for the support of missionary endeavor in the years which are ahead; to provide funds for the appointment of men between conferences; for the maintenance of a school of instruction; and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

The family allowances and elder's expenses paid by the church for interim appointees has been charged against this fund in the amount of $8,587.53.

Cash was verified by direct correspondence with the depository and by reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

Oblation Fund

The Oblation Fund was created to record the contributions received as oblation subsequent to January 1, 1942, and to record the disbursement of these funds. This fund is restricted only to the extent that it shall be used for the benefit of "the poor and the needy."

Any surplus or deficit arising from the operation of Resthaven, Lamoni Saints' Home, and Liberty Home Farm increases or decreases the capital of this fund.

Operating Reserve Fund

This fund was created by General Conference action of April 6, 1944, the purpose being that of providing a fund of sufficient amount to permit the appropriation of operating expense from this fund rather than from the current year's income.

U. S. Government Bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

Steward-Endowment Fund

General Conference action of April 6, 1944, authorized the segregation of the Atherton and Spring Branch Farm lands as collateral for the bonds issued to the Graceland College Endowment Fund. The net difference between the real estate investment and the payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund is designated "Beneficial Interest-General Fund" and appears in the General Fund as an asset.

It is the expressed opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that "the net income from these lands is to be made available for improvements as may be necessary and required for the further development of the lands segregated." The capital account of this fund is the net earnings from operation of these lands.

The bonds payable to the Graceland College Endowment Fund mature January 6, 1946.

Subsidiary Institutional Fund

This fund was created by action of General Conference on April 6, 1944. The funds are held subject to disbursement in accordance with the requirements contained in the appropriation.

The amount of $50,000.00, appropriated for construction work at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital was disbursed to that institution.

In my opinion, the accompanying balance sheet and related statements of operations and capital present fairly the position of the Funds of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at December 31, 1945, and the results of its operations for the two-year period then ended.

Lloyd L. Bland,
Church Auditor.

One cool judgment is worth a thousand hasty councils. The thing to do is to supply light and not heat. At any rate, if it is heat it ought to be white heat and not sputter, because sputtering heat is apt to spread the fire. There ought, if there is any heat at all, to be that warmth of the heart which makes every man thrust aside his own personal feeling, his own personal interest, and take thought of the welfare and benefit of others.—Woodrow Wilson—Speech, 1916.

NOTE—A: Subject to approval by the Board of Appropriations and General Conference.

March 15, 1946: I have examined the records of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as kept by the Presiding Bishopric, for the two year period ended December 31, 1945. In my opinion, the balance sheet—Exhibit A, supported by Exhibits B, C and Schedules 1, 2, and 3, present fairly the position of the Funds at December 31, 1945, subject to the comments contained in the accompanying report of examination.

LLOYD L. BLAND,
Church Auditor.

REPORT OF

Southwestern States Mission California, Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico

By Apostle John W. Rushton

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

This territory includes the states of California, Arizona, Nevada, and New Mexico. The organized work is in the two former states, where we have in California two districts, northern and southern, each with about sixteen organized congregations, including missions at Vallejo, Dinuba, East Oakland, Bakersfield, Burbank, Venice. Some of these have been affected by reason of the cessation of the war and consequent shifts in industry.

Generally speaking, the work is in as encouraging a condition as could be expected, considering that our staff of workers is very limited. We have one appointee in the northern district, Brother A. C. Andrews in East Berkeley church, Berkeley; Brother John Blackmore in Central Los Angeles, and Brother Charles Fry in San Bernardino. Recently, Brother P. S. Whalley, who was transferred from England to the Southern California District, San Diego objective, arrived and for the brief period has been engaged in his pastorate there.

In Arizona there are four organized branches, Brother D. K. Larmour is the appointee in this field, who besides acceptable service in this state spent several months in missionary activities in the northern district, where his ministry proved to be very acceptable. To all of these brothers we are indebted for faithful work of excellent quality.

Again, we pay tribute to the fine services of our local brethren, who especially in district and branch offices and in the bishopric have been loyal and at considerable self-sacrifice have upheld the work.

For the years 1944 and 1945 the following statistics indicate the progress in this field: baptisms, 146; gains by transfer, 626; losses by transfer, 428; withdrawals, 3; deaths 71.

We renewed the annual reunion in the southern district last summer and had a spiritual time; also a young people's convention of the northern district at Colfax and the 75 campers received much benefit, which has sustained through the intervening time.

This mission has been very generous in its support of the general treasury in the payment of tithes and offerings.

We acknowledge the goodness and mercy of God in all the varying circumstances of life, and rejoice with all in the victorious conclusion of the war. We also are aware of the challenges which confront us in the establishment of world peace and recognize the responsibility of the church in giving effective leadership in humanity's quest for a new world which will approximate the kingdom of God.

During the interim between conferences we have sustained grievous loss in the passing of two good and faithful servants of the church: Evangelist Frank B. Van Fleet of Southern California district, and Gilbert J. Waller of San Francisco. These names will live in the hearts of many who have known them and been blessed in their ministry.

John W. Rushton

Van Nuys, California,

REPORT OF

West Central States Mission

By Paul M. Hanson

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

In the field to which, two years ago, I was assigned to labor, viz., Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, there are the following districts: Northwestern Iowa, Southwestern Iowa, Des Moines, Nauvoo, Northeast Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Central Nebraska, and Southwestern Kansas, in addition to the Lamon Stake. Throughout this field there has been a noticeable readiness to respond to intelligent spiritual leadership. There is an urgent need in a number of the branches and districts for general church workers.

Among activities in the missions have been missionary meetings, reunions, youths' camps and conventions, and priesthood institutes.

Roscoe E. Davey, Albert L. Loving, and Donald E. Harvey, of the Seventy, have labored with commendable zeal and efficiency; D. J. Williams, R. Melvin Russell, V. D. Ruch, and Frank A. Fry, of the High Priests, have diligently and effectively served as pastors. The local ministry are deserving of special mention for their devoted application to the church's welfare. From all these officers and from the members of the church, there has been praiseworthy co-operation.

The generous response along financial lines reveals a deep desire to advance the preaching of the gospel to the world and establish the cause of Zion.

The age into which we have been projected is one upon which the eyes of all the prophets were focused in joy and wonderment—the age in which the church, "clear as the moon and fair as the sun," was to come forth, never to be destroyed, in which the gospel would go to the nations of the earth, and Zion be redeemed. Satan's power would be great, but God would reign in the midst of his Saints.

The Lord's work, in the custody of the church, challenges all that is in us into worthy and active expression.

Paul M. Hanson.

REPORT OF

Southern Mission

By Charles R. Hield

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

The war over, the Saints of the Southern Mission are gladly welcoming their service folk back, and with new zeal all are attacking the problem of building zionic lives in their localities, and seeking to be of some assistance in the building of Zion.

This coming summer, reunions are to be resumed in the Kentucky-Tennessee, and Arkansas-Louisiana districts. For the first time in several years, reunions were held in Southern Indiana and Oklahoma last summer. This makes a possible seven reunions for the Southern Mission in 1946. The Gulf States Reunion at Brewton, Alabama; the All-Texas Reunion at Camp Ben McCulloch near Austin, Texas; and the All-Oklahoma Reunion at Pawnee are some of the largest and most spiritual gatherings in the church.

A most encouraging growth is noticed in the spiritual quality of our southern Saints. They have a clearer vision now of the need of being "fit workmen" in God's kingdom here on earth. Our reunions, district conferences, youth camps, rallies, priesthood institutes, and special-day gatherings have been well attended, and the Saints are most eager to learn God's laws and to seek to demonstrate them in their lives. We are proud of the increasing vocational skills of our southern Saints. They are also adding further culture to their homes, and more and more our churches are becoming places of beauty as well as places for education and worship. Some of our priesthood are taking night-school or college classes. Priesthood institutes have been well attended,

Our district officers are men of high caliber. The Gulf States district, with men like Maurice Draper, A. D. McCall, and Franklin Steiner; the Central Texas district with J. E. Wilder, Earl Moore, and C. W. Tischer; and the Central Oklahoma district with B. A. Howard, Ottis Stephens, and Leslie Kohlman are good examples of the typical excellent quality and devotion of our district leaders.

The Southern Mission has a non-resident pastor for each district. These have been most beneficial and have shepherded hundreds of our isolated Saints. Ralph Wilt of Western Oklahoma, Chester Metcalf of Southern Indiana, and Arthur Dixon of Central Oklahoma have been outstanding in their ministry to these scattered members of our church. Under advice and counsel, many of them are moving into organized branches where these good L. D. S. families may receive and participate in the ministry of organized congregations.

Because of the restrictions on building materials, only one new church has been built, and that at Marlin, Texas; where James Allen is the faithful pastor. Most of our congregations are now free from debt. Many of our church groups have large building funds and will build churches as materials again become available: such places as Pensacola, Florida; Louisville, Kentucky; Brewton, Alabama; Texarkana, Arkansas; West Monroe, Louisiana; Olton, Texas; etc. Among some who will enlarge their church or make additions to their present plant are Mobile, Alabama; Houston, Texas; San Antonio, Texas; Tulsa, Oklahoma; Escatawpa, Mississippi; etc. Some rural churches will be moved into nearby towns, or will otherwise improve their location: such as McKenzie, Alabama; Calumet, Oklahoma; etc. Many congregations have sizable building funds but whose building plans have not yet been decided upon are Memphis, Tennessee; Dallas, Texas; Bayou Labatre, Alabama; etc.

A mission for the colored Saints is maintained at Pensacola, Florida. The local priesthood and the general church missionaries are always welcomed by these faithful members. They too have a sizable building fund.

There is a growing interest in Texas to bring our gospel to the Spanish-speaking people. There are distinct opportunities among the Mexican families along the Rio Grande Valley in San Antonio, and at and near Houston, Texas. I was taken recently by the pastor and some of his zealous workers to the Mexican Mission near Houston, and had the pleasure of preaching for the first time in Spanish to that group.

Youth camps with general church personnel workers will be held in the Gulf States and in Oklahoma Districts this coming summer. Institutes for the youth are held in Southern Indiana and Arkansas-Louisiana District. Texas may attempt a youth camp also this year.

The ladies of the church must be given great credit for assisting in the growth of our church work. This has been particularly true during the war years. While their men were in war industries or in the armed services of the country, these devoted women have been most faithful. The corps of women workers at reunions is outstanding for quality, training, and culture. Their spiritual vision is also high. Sister Arthur Gage, Sister Aldon Utz in Southern Indiana; Sister Lucille Garrett, Sister Martha Alford in the Gulf States; Sister A. V. Arnold, Sister Albert Banta, Sister Burdette Root, Sister Earl Moore, Sister Clarence Wright in Central Texas; Sister E. F. Yerrington, Sister Ottis Stephens, Sister Leslie Kohlman in Central Oklahoma are but a few of the qualified and talented leaders among our women.

New missions and groups have been developed in Francisco, Indiana; Atmore, Alabama; Corpus Christi, Texas; Olton, Texas, etc.

We were very glad to have Apostle M. A. McConley associated with us in the field the first three months of this year. He is deeply loved by the people in this area, where he ministered years ago, and it has been a pleasure to minister with him to our people.

There are only four itinerant missionaries for all this territory, comprising most of the southern half of the United States. Seventy Maurice Draper is the missionary and district president of the Gulf States district (Alabama and parts of Florida and Mississippi); Elder Ammon Calhoun is the missionary for all the huge state of Texas (except the Panhandle) and the states of Arkansas and Louisiana; Seventy Glen Johnson has all of the state of Oklahoma and the Panhandle of Texas; while Elder Allen Breckenridge has the Southern Indiana district and the states of Kentucky and Tennessee. The states of Virginia, Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Florida has no missionary available at all, except as the apostle or the missionary from the Gulf States may visit in that area. We have several fine active groups at Tampa and Jacksonville, and the branch at Miami, Florida. There is a crying need for more appointees. For one missionary to try to cover the state of Texas (as large as several of the other states) and then also Arkansas and Louisiana, and minister satisfactorily to our people is impossible. The health of the missionary is being hurt attempting to spread his efforts over such a large territory. Full-time pastors are also needed in some of our larger centers to care for their churches and expanding missions. We only have one pastor in the mission, Elder Leslie Kohlman at Tulsa.

I am confident that the Saints of the Southern Mission should in the coming years make a distinct and profitable contribution to the growth of the church, and the building of Zion.

Charles R. Hield
Apostle to the Southern Mission.

REPORT OF The Hawaiian Mission

By M. A. McConley

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

Through this report I extend greetings from the Saints of Hawaii to the church throughout the world. The Saints of Hawaii testify that the Spirit of God has been with them through the difficulties which the war brought to their shores. And they look forward with hope to the day when the restored gospel can go to all nations, bringing to all peoples the joy of Christian fellowship which has been theirs.

PRODUCT OF THE "MELTING POT" REFINED

Hawaii has long been termed the "melting pot of the Pacific" because of the fusing of many races which has been taking place there. Through this war, the product of the "melting pot" has been further refined and put through the fires of adversity and testing. We believe it has stood the test.

Some groups in America have seriously questioned the ability and willingness of the many races represented in Hawaii, to appreciate the freedom and liberty which our flag offers, and to be loyal to that flag should trouble come between us and the land of their forefathers. In World War I, the test as to loyalties was not so definite, as Japan was our ally. This time was a real test.

We point with pride to the Americans of Hawaii with Polynesian, Chinese, Japanese, Filipino, and other racial backgrounds. Both at home and on the field of battle, they demonstrated their loyalty by their devotion and sacrifice. And today the people of Hawaii from all races can rightly sing, with pride and meaning,

My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty.

Land where my fathers died . . .

We hope that the day is not far distant when Hawaii shall be granted statehood, for we believe she deserves it.

SMALL BUT IMPORTANT

No one questions the value of Hawaii from a military standpoint. But we believe it is of even greater importance from the cultural and religious angle, as a steppingstone to Asia. If we will but continue to give sympathetic and understanding ministry, the future of the church in Hawaii is a bright one. And ere long we shall develop a strong base from which we can extend our work to the outlying groups of islands further west and also to the Philippines, China, Korea, and Japan.

The mission is still in its missionary stage, with its best days yet ahead.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS

A few years ago, our work was confined mostly to the Hawaiians, and though continuous effort was made to spread it among the Chinese and Japanese, the going was very slow and difficult.

Today we have able consecrated workers among the Hawaiians, Caucasians, Japanese, Chinese and Filipinos. And the war has brought a change in the attitude of Orientals toward Christianity, especially the Japanese. If we will but take advantage of this opportunity, important developments are immediately ahead of us.

CONDITIONS OF HAWAIIAN MISSION

On Oahu

Our work was greatly circumscribed by the war restrictions. Many of our prominent workers, both men and women, were greatly hindered in their ability to serve or even to attend church. In spite of this handicap, additions were made by baptism, and added maturity and increased ability achieved by workers who could participate.

The financial condition of the churches in Honolulu was greatly strengthened, and with war restrictions removed, greater progress should now be possible.

Elder H. F. Miller has lived in Honolulu and cared for the Mission while I was in the States in the spring of 1944. He has continued as district president and pastor during the inter-conference period, and since my return to America in August, 1945, has been in charge of the mission. His work was strengthened by his marriage in December, 1944, to Miss Eriel Fletcher of Toronto, who has proved a good helper in the mission.

The Work on the Big Island

Here the war pressure was less evident, and conditions more favorable for extending our work. Elder A. F. Gibbs and wife, appointed from last conference, have made their headquarters at Hilo. With the assistance of the Hilo branch and the missions at Halaula and Pahoa, progress has been made.

The missionary opportunities on Hawaii challenge us as never before.

THE MCCONLEYS

We arrived in Hawaii on this last trip on July 1, 1944. This was my seventh trip to the Islands. Though our labors were performed under some difficulty and handicap, yet we were blessed in our efforts.

Mrs. McConley's job as hostess at the mission house soon transformed it, giving it a "home touch" which was a morale builder to the hundreds of our service boys and girls and their friends who visited there, coming from 46 states. Brother Miller and I assisted more in the line of ministry.

To many of our boys, this was their last church contact before going into battle and their first contact after coming back, either whole or as patients in a military hospital.

The church in Hawaii was a revelation of international Christian fellowship to our service personnel and was a spiritual lifesaver in many cases. Some of our priesthood in uniform also rendered valuable ministerial service.

LOCAL WORKERS

To our local priesthood and their faithful associates, we express our thanks, and pray that their loyalty and devotion may continue.

NEEDS—VARIOUS

American Business and Professional

We need more business and professional men in this mission and suggest Hawaii as a fertile field in which local men (or women) engaged in business or professional work could render valuable service in spreading the gospel. Schoolteaching and civil service both offer splendid opportunity in this direction.

Equipment

Building programs are sponsored and have the money largely in hand for enlarging and improving present churches, and building where we have no church of our own.

In Honolulu, permanent servicemen's quarters should be erected as soon as practicable, and the general church should assist in making this possible.

Literature

The church should seriously consider carrying out the Lord's instructions in Doctrine and Covenants 125:11—"It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in Scandanavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portugese languages, and others, as the missions may require."

Tracts in Japanese are needed now for use in Hawaii and the way is opening for tracts also in Filipino. Translation of the Book of Mormon into Japanese should be commenced as soon as practicable.

OTHER LABORS

On my return from Hawaii in August, 1945, it was my privilege to labor briefly in Northern California, before going to Seattle for a visit. And by arrangement with Apostle Williams, en route from Seattle to Independence, I ministered at Portland, Boise, Hagerman, Salt Lake, Provo, Cheyenne, and Denver.

At the direction of the First Presidency I also made a trip through the Southern Mission. The privilege of renewing acquaintance with Saints in these fields was much appreciated.

FORWARD ALL

The world never needed our message more than now. What a challenge! What an opportunity! May we go forward with faith and confidence to the completion of our task is our humble prayer.

The cynic is one who never sees a good quality in a man, and never fails to see a bad one. He is the human owl, vigilant in darkness and blind to light, mousing for vermin, and never seeing noble game. The cynic puts all human actions into two classes—openly bad and secretly bad.—Henry Ward Beecher.

REPORT OF

The Northwestern Mission

By D. T. Williams

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

As a consequence of the appointments of the General Conference of 1944, I found myself in charge of one of the largest regional territories in the church. This territory, composed of twelve States in the United States and four provinces in Canada, is rich in possibilities for the progress of our work. This appointment has been, for me, one of the greatest challenges of my life. I have tried to respond faithfully to the demands made upon me under this heavy responsibility. I have, I hope, succeeded in doing so to the satisfaction of my Heavenly Father and my brethren who have imposed upon me this great task.

We have seen much in the territory by way of improvement in many respects within the last few years, and our experience, as we think, justifies us in looking forward to important achievements within the foreseeable future. The serious situation demanding a constantly enlarging attention is for more and ever more manpower to minister to the needs of our Saints' and to answer the increasing demands of our missionary work. Our missionary opportunities are ever on the increase, and it is a crying pity that we cannot do more than we have done in the past to match these needs with the necessary missionary staff. But this achievement is not to be realized through our lamenting the situation. We must be about the business of preparing men called of God for our increasing ministry. This demand is laid upon us by the Lord in sections 94: 3-5 and 85: 36-39 of our Doctrine and Covenants, not to mention a number of other items of interest in the revelations of God to the church along this same line.

Our branches are making preparation as best they can to provide the facilities for local missionary work by building new buildings, securing commodious buildings already built, or adding to the church structures they already have. Eighteen to twenty congregations in this regional territory have either established building funds or are in further degrees of preparation along these lines.

We have a number of young men who would like to take advantage of some opportunity which might be presented by the church for training with ministerial service to the church in view. There is a definite hope with a number that the church will provide some tangible evidence of concern along these lines. Certainly we cannot escape our responsibility in this connection if we pay heed to the advice and the counsel of the Almighty to his church in the past years since the Restoration Movement had its beginning.

I would like to urge upon the church the imperative need in this direction, and suggest that if we do not make a move in this direction soon, we will find our ministerial forces depleted and our people starved for spiritual bread. Perhaps we will have more to say concerning this condition to the conference at a later period. Please be assured of our continuing and vital interest in the deep and abiding things of the kingdom. We are always appreciative of your faith and prayers for our continued success.

REPORT OF

The Great Lakes Mission

By E. J. Gleazer, Sr.

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

I. TERRITORY

A. Organized Districts

This territory is composed of twelve districts, including some of the larger centers of the church. In Detroit alone, there are 2,500 members organized into 13 congregations. While Detroit is the largest branch numerically, it is followed closely by such branches as Flint, Port Huron, Toronto, and London. These in turn are followed by other city branches with a membership of about 400.

B. Rural Districts

Such districts as northern, western, eastern, and parts of central Michigan, together with Owen Sound, are composed mostly of rural communities. During the war, these districts were depleted numerically and thus handicapped, because so many of their members sought employment in the urban war centers. As a result of these factors, I have found it necessary to give the major portion of my time to the larger centers; and the shortage of manpower in the church generally has made it impossible for us to furnish missionaries and other ministerial help to the rural congregations. Again, our concentration in the urban centers has determined that the appointees sent to this field be largely concentrated in these centers.

II. MAJOR ACTIVITIES

A. Reunions

From the first of July to the latter part of August, reunion activities are in progress in some part of this mission. A total of six reunions, among the largest in the church, require the services of many of the appointees in this field together with general church officers from Independence. The ministry of these men is supplemented by trained instructors in the mission who volunteer their time in making an outstanding contribution in departmental work. This evidences a fine spirit of co-operation between general and local officers, and this spirit of co-operation is also in evidence by the fact that with one exception these are joint reunions, sponsored by more than one district. This has a tendency to break down district provincialism and unify our people and their activities over ever-widening areas.

B. Other Gatherings

Following and in addition to the reunions mentioned, several institutes are conducted in the mission each year, at which a valuable contribution is made by the Department of Religious Education. Special speakers are supplied by the general church and by Graceland College for these conventions. Here again, in these activities, we have endeavored to unify as many districts as possible, which insures a more representative attendance with equality in manpower and time.

III. FUTURE POSSIBILITIES

This mission, with few exceptions, has made another record toward general church finances. We have also attempted to engage as many of the local priesthood as possible in rendering a much-needed ministry of spiritual re-invigoration in these troublous times. We believe this can be best accomplished by enlisting our total membership in missionary endeavor, stressing the distinctive features of the Restoration Movement.

We have appreciated the contribution of all workers, both general and local, and without exception have received in our ministry wholehearted support.

REPORT OF Australian Mission

By C. G. Mesley

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

The tragic and ruthless pattern of world events presents a grim background to our conference gathering and to this Australasian Mission report for the years 1944-45.

The church is in this chaotic world, and all too often are we caught up in the maelstrom of its life and death struggle. Men cry "peace" but peace has been taken from the earth.

Against this lurid world background, our chronicle of the little events of our everyday church life often seem insignificant and futile. Futile it is if in the events and activities recorded we have not wrought in harmony with the eternal pattern of God. Progressively working in harmony with his divine law and blessed by his presence we may be in the process of making an indelible contribution to the development of his kingdom plan. That this shall be our experience in Australia and throughout the church is our major hope and constant prayer.

We had hoped to be able to present an eight-year Australasian report to the delegates and visitors assembled at conference, but the transportation priorities of service personnel are daily restricting our plans to attend the 1946 World Conference. Our report was planned in the form of a comprehensive exhibit, "The Church at Work in Australia." Most of the material for this exhibit is now in the U. S. A. but the designer and arrangers are very much left in Australia. In the meantime, we present the customary written report for your information and helpful understanding.

THE GENERAL CHURCH PERSONNEL

The general church personnel in Australasia are first listed with their appointments: Seventy A. V. Robinson, Lower Manning River area, in charge of Tuncurry, Wingham and Taree; Seventy H. Peisker, Sydney, acting mission president; Seventy W. J. Vaughan, western Australia.

Each of these three men have had to face and continue to face restrictions of services due to health factors but each of them continue valiant in the testimony of Christ.

High Priest C. A. Davies, Greater Newcastle branch; High Priest S. Jacka, Victoria district president; High Priest D. A. Alberts, mission bishop's agent.

These men are making their special contribution to the administrative work of the church in Australia.

Elder F. Potter, missionary to Adelaide; Elder A. R. Gunning, missionary in charge, New Zealand; Elder D. P. Mawby, pastor, John's River and youth leader, northern N. S. W. district.

In these men the church has an ever-increasing capacity and contributions of godly leadership.

High Priest A. J. Corbett, pastor to Isolated Saints; High Priest W. J. Hawthorn, active in secular work and in church interests; Seventy E. H. Davies, Westgarth.

Each of these three superannuated men is continuing to make a helpful contribution as time and energy permit. Their loyal co-operation is itself a benediction to all the Saints.

The contribution of the general church appointees in Australia is backed and made possible by the devotion and service of the local church leaders of districts and branches, without whose contributions and consecration, the church in Australia could not continue to progress. As we briefly chronicle their devotion, we express to each of them our appreciation for their fellowship of service.

MISSION HEADQUARTERS EXPANSION

High Priest D. A. Alberts now gives full-time efficient service to the work of the bishopric in the mission. This appointment, together with an ever-expanding service through mission headquarters, has compelled us to expand our staff there. Brother A. S. Frater continues to serve as mission director of religious education, statistician, managing editor of The Standard, and as manager of our board of publication. The board has employed Sister Valerie McLaughlin to publish and issue its splendid line of helpful brochures and care for all the sales, correspondence etc., in this department. Sister Valda Poole is employed as secretary and bookkeeper for the mission president and bishop's agent. Brother Paul Henricks serves as mission leader of young people and Sister Nance Parkes as mission leader of women in succession to Sister Blanche Mesley.

The tithes, offerings and oblations for 1944 represented the highest figure in mission history. The general church funds in Australia are ably managed by Brother Alberts, in harmony with the financial policy of the church.

STATISTICAL GROWTH

A considerable clearing through of our statistical records to set up an individual kardex system of statistical records has reduced our "statistical" or book membership, so that actual gains are not reflected in the total comparative figures of 1944-45, which were 3,228 and 3,269.

Our annual baptism averages for the past five years are 80. Of these, 44 per cent are children, 35 per cent young people and 21 per cent adults. The ratio of baptism to membership is 2.53 per cent which is the equivalent of the general church annual ratio.

Practically one third of our enrolled membership is on the isolated list on the un-attached file with a consequence of lowering baptism gains, tithe-paying, church attendance, etc.

SPECIAL EVENTS

The biennial mission conference of 1945 presented a splendid experience in spiritual and educational fellowship. It was the largest attended conference gathering and necessitated the hiring of the Drummoyne Astra Theatre to accommodate the crowds. All of the services of the conference were on a high level. The business transacted was extensive and concerned with the progress and welfare of the mission.

Tiona reunions for 1944 and 1945 each topped the previous reunions for attendance, finances, and extensive planning. High Priest C. A. Davies was in charge for 1944 and H. Peisker for 1945. Tiona Reunion Grounds, Ltd., the church member company that owns and manages the grounds, had the best years in their financial experience: There were over 700 campers on the grounds for the 1945 reunion. Every state in the mission was represented at this reunion, and three young sisters flew 1,400 miles from New Zealand to enjoy the reunion gatherings. A second mission reunion over the Christmas and New Year season has begun its concurrent session in Victoria. This year's successful meetings were held at Marysville up in the southern alps.

Youth camps and youth college activities are becoming firmly established in the mission. Brother Jacka pioneered with J. Y. P. whose youth camp study sessions extended for a month. Nairne, S. A. and the northern N. S. W. camps have followed, and this year "Wandell College" at Greater Newcastle held its first week of camp sessions for youth.

MISSION SURVEY

Beginning early in 1945, a mission survey was personally conducted by teams of mission officers. A carefully prepared and detailed questionnaire was answered by the priesthood and leaders of the various branches in the presence of the survey team. The facts and recommendations for each district were carefully compiled and issued as a pamphlet. Then the facts of each of the four survey areas were correlated and compiled to serve as a source of missionwide figures and recommendations. These were issued to all the priesthood as a stimulus and direction for future activity.

The salient information of the survey will go out to all the members in a special publication entitled, "Burning Facts."

The results of this exhaustive mission survey will be presented to the joint council for policy-building recommendations on the future of the Church of Jesus Christ in Australia.

MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL

This was held for seven months in 1944, with eight students in attendance. Brother Sorenson graduated from the school, and after six months in New Zealand has taken up his work as a general church appointee to Tahiti, with Sister Sorenson who is a trained nurse and Beth, their baby girl. A signal contribution of loving service and ministry has gone from Australia to Tahiti.

Don Swain and Ernie Walters left the school and enrolled in Graceland. Don Alberts serves as mission bishop's agent under appointment. Douglas Mawby serves as the two-year locally sustained appointee at John's River. The other three students serve in a local capacity. General church officers, Mrs. Mesley, and A. S. Frater were the faculty for this school.

GENERAL

Church buildings are planned in the immediate future at Bulahdelah, Guildford, N. S. W., and Carnegie, Victoria. Fremantle, W. A., has been organized as a branch and has established itself in the commodious building of historic Girton College, which it has purchased. Balmain branch has purchased a centrally located building site in Drummoyné for its future church home, and land has been donated at Port Kembla, and acquired at Laurieton, looking towards church buildings in these centers.

Seventy H. Peisker has been appointed acting mission president and will give the mission his capable and devoted leadership.

Our official farewells to Australia have been said. We leave the mission with many challenging tasks yet to be accomplished, yet with many good achievements as the result of the co-operative sharing of other leaders in an appointed leader's tasks; with many a heartache for the loved ones and friends from whom we must part, and with our lives enriched by the experience of service with Christ for eight years in Australasia.

Over 3,000 Saints join me in sending greetings to the conference, and with this report comes our prayers, theirs and mine, for a conference that again stands at the crossroads of our kingdom endeavor. May the way ahead be revealed and chosen in harmony with the great purposes of Almighty God.

REPORT OF

The European Mission

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

(Appointed in charge of European field at Conference of 1944.)

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

Since my appointment to Europe in 1938, there have been given to the succeeding conferences only brief reports touching the work to which I was assigned. I propose to give a more scopic report at this time which will bring report to the time I left the British Isles nine months after the appointment in 1944.

The present membership in the British Isles is 1,728. There has been a steady gain these last six years, although numbers which have accrued have not been very great. The average baptismal increase per year is about 30. It must be borne in mind that the war period has handicapped us very greatly and this increase has been made in a situation which is anything but favorable for missionary work.

In the realm of finances, amazing progress has been reported. The total income from all sources in 1938 was 503 pounds. In 1945 we shall have taken well over 3,000 pounds. It is to be understood that mere increase in amount of money is no sure index to spiritual growth. Bishop Trapp has not been able to analyze his reports so as to give us relative figures of the number of people participating in 1945 as against 1938, but it is certain that the number has doubled.

The general outlook of the people six years ago was vastly different from what it is today. The zionic ideal was not then so much to the fore as it is now. This growth in understanding of the purpose of the church is, I believe primarily responsible for the increase both in the numbers participating and in the amount of money contributed in harmony with the law governing temporalities.

Bishop Trapp has rendered to the people of the British Isles a dignified, courteous, and able ministry. Like every other man in the country, he has, during the war had a treble responsibility thrown upon him in his secular affairs, and although called upon at times to travel in extremely difficult physical conditions, he has done this without complaining. He has presided at trials which have been anything but pleasant, and I have appreciated his support and confidence.

In relation to personnel, the picture has also undergone a tremendous change. There have been some losses through death, other losses have come through other causes; but it is amazing to observe how these losses have been replaced and how young and consecrated servants have been found to fill the breaches which have been made by these losses. One feature contributing toward this has been the emphasis made upon training young men for ministerial responsibility. Seven priesthood institutes have been held during the period under review, and the numbers attending and the quality of these institutes have been enlarged each successive time they have been held. Over eighty-five young men and women have been called in the service of their country to work with the armed forces. Some of these young men hold priesthood responsibility, and it is earnestly to be hoped that they will return and give their strength in the respective branches where they reside. In addition to this, long hours of work have been imposed on those remaining behind, and this, together with the physical strain imposed by wartime conditions, has made it both unwise and wellnigh impossible to require what normally would be asked from these men.

The main activity of the church in England has been devotional. The shadow cast by the fearsome spectacle of Nazi tyranny has caused our people as never before to remember their devotions. While perplexity has abounded and in some places fear has dominated the heart and mind of the church, yet the gospel has proved to be a bulwark of faith and hope. Today our people are happy and grateful for the way in which they have been able to discern the hand of God moving to preserve both his church and what is worth preserving outside it.

INCREASE OF CHURCH BUILDINGS

Six years ago only one branch, Clay Cross, had deposited its deeds with the bishop or recognized the bishop in his stewardship in these matters. Coupled with this, the mission was heavily in debt. Farnworth owed 250 pounds; Beresford Road, 780 pounds; Enfield, 250 pounds; the building at Birmingham was a distinct liability, its being within the compound of the city's dilapidation area and was in line for being condemned. The buildings free from encumbrances were James Street Manchester, Sutton-in-Ashfield, and a small room at Warrington, the total value of which could be placed at 1,400 pounds. Today, the picture is vastly different. The mission is out of debt, all deeds, with the exception of James Street, are in the hands of the Bishop, and even here the bishop is one of the trustees; Gloucester has acquired a fine dwelling house and neat, serviceable hall valued at 850 pounds; the church at Enfield, valued at 2,500 pounds is clear of debt. At Nuneaton a brick workshop was bought, paid for, and converted into a church, and a fine vestry has been built. This property is valued at about 325 pounds. In addition we have acquired a mission headquarters valued at 1,500 pounds and have title to a property next door worth 900 pounds. In Manchester, the Beresford church has been freed from debt; and we have acquired at Wigan a large hall with seating capacity for 500, which also includes additional chapel accommodation and classrooms. This property is valued at about 650 pounds. At present the total value of these properties is in the region of 14,000 pounds. All this property is "Freehold." In addition to this, the church has acquired a modern bungalow at Sutton-in-Ashfield, the cash value of which stands at present in the neighborhood of 500 pounds. In Gloucester, London, Birmingham, Nuneaton, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Manchester, Wigan, and Farnworth we have properties which can be used, and should be used in all future endeavors as a basis around which constructive work can be accomplished. In regard to Birmingham, it is noteworthy that the people have at their disposal some 1,500 pounds which they are aiming to make into 10,000 pounds in order to erect a church which shall reflect our philosophy and idealism. As soon as possible after the war, work will be started on this project.

At Mission Headquarters I have endeavored to build up a suitable library which can be used by others of the general and local ministry as opportunity may permit. The library includes the 13th edition of the Britannica, the 26 volumes of the Historians' History, and a complete file of Saints' Heralds from 1874 until 1923.

Again there was no office equipment six years ago. Now we have all we need in way of office equipment, including a modern duplicating machine, typewriters, etc.

One feature of our work which has been most enjoyable and, at the same time, challenging, is the ministry we were called upon to render to the men and women from the United States and Canada who were serving overseas at the order of their respective governments. Apart from the physical side of this ministry—providing them with food and shelter—the spiritual aspects were indeed most uplifting. Over three hundred and twenty-five men came between 1940 and 1944. All of them behaved as gentlemen and what was most interesting was to observe how the zionic philosophy, its necessity as a redeeming feature of society to save the world from recurring wars, was being etched into their thinking. We made it an especial part of our approach to the European field to minister to these men, and consider it a privilege to have had the opportunity so to do.

During the period under review, we have acquired some printing equipment owned by the church and valued at 300 pounds and operated by Edward Parker of Nuneaton. He and his wife are very devoted to the church and are doing a splendid job in publishing the Courier every month, their labor being free, and portions of their home being turned over for the good of this work.

It is seriously to be entertained that someone with an M. A. degree be sent to Birmingham to preside over the Birmingham branch and also to assist in organizing a school for the young men of the mission and, in fact, appointees to Europe. He should be able to teach the German and Scandinavian languages, if such a one could be found, and although any beginning in such a venture would necessarily be small, the opportunity undoubtedly exists for this, and the equipment is available in Birmingham.

I can truthfully say that in every department of our endeavor the work in Great Britain is on a firmer basis than it was six years ago. The people are more Zion-minded, iniquity has been rooted out, the law governing temporalities has been more wholeheartedly complied with, standards of character and knowledge in the ministry have been pushed upwards. There remains the need that whoever shall occupy in Great Britain as the missionary in charge shall emphasize the evangelistic side of our work. The period under review has been one of reorganization and stabilization which have been in a large measure achieved. Younger men are in positions of leadership, and if the right lead is given, years of happy and fruitful labor lie ahead in the which will accrue to the church spiritual and temporal values.

The emphasis on the gathering must not be forgotten and has not been left out of account in our ministry; but unfortunately, between the years 1920 and 1930 what I consider unwise emphasis was made upon the gathering. People were told about the glories of America, its being a land flowing with milk and honey, about the advantages which would accrue to them if they moved from England, and consequently some men who otherwise might now be serving us as pastors, evangelists, and teachers in Great Britain are in America. While it is certain that if the emphasis before-mentioned is made, many families will be prepared for removal to the center place or the States, such a program of transfer should not be contemplated until there are at least five thousand members in Great Britain, and the removal of such families will not impoverish the work.

Of the work in Europe little is known. Letters have come from Holland and Scandinavia, but until the difficulties of travel are finally removed, a comprehensive report will not be possible.

I have appreciated the prayers and support which I know you have given me in my work in Britain, and the sympathetic consideration which you have extended to the various recommendations which have been made during the period of my stay there. I am deeply grateful also for the support of the good people of the mission, and express my gratitude for the splendid support given to me by my wife who, under trying conditions and in grievous circumstances and in the midst of sickness, never murmured nor complained, but with her prayers and encouragement enabled me to carry on. Above all, I am grateful for the support which I know has been extended to me by Him who called me, and shall ever be grateful for the opportunity of ministering under his Spirit in my native land.

Since April, 1945, I was, by action of the First Presidency, associated with Apostle F. Henry Edwards in the Eastern Central States Mission, comprising Illinois, Missouri, and Wisconsin. Conditions in this field will doubtless be covered in his report, and the conclusions which are therein I find myself happy to endorse.

REPORT OF

Herald Publishing House

By C. A. Skinner

To the First Presidency and
and The General Conference:

We are submitting herewith a comparative balance sheet as of December 31, 1944, and May 31, 1945, together with a condensed statement of the changes of the net worth to which has been attested the signature of the Church Auditor, Lloyd L. Bland.

The comparison of the short period of January through May, 1945, to the entire calendar year of 1944 is because of a change in policy affecting the fiscal year of the Herald Publishing House. On October 25, 1944, the Board of Publication voted to change the business year from the calendar year to a fiscal year ending May 31. To effect this change, the books were closed on May 31, 1945. The figures of the audit made at that time are the ones used in the attached comparison.

The unusual large net gain shown for the 1945 period was the result of the sale of the new Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures and other standard books which returned to the stock list in January after having been out of stock because of material shortages for most of 1944. After taking into consideration the unusual cause of this net gain in such a short period, the comparative figures still show that consistent progress is being made in the improvement of our financial status.

During the past two years we have been able to add several new books to our church literature, which has enabled us to improve our primary service to the people of the church; while at the same time, our financial condition is strengthened.

The net worth as of December 31, 1943, reported to the Conference of 1944 was $109,588.05; the net worth as of May 31, 1945, was $126,815.98, showing a net gain since last reported to the Conference of $17,227.93.

The publishing house has continued throughout the war to serve not only the people of the United States and Canada,

Balance May 31, 1945			$126,815.98

I have examined the balance sheet of the Herald Publishing House as of December 31, 1944 and May 31, 1945, have reviewed the system of internal control and the accounting procedures of the house and, without making a detailed audit of the transactions have examined or tested accounting records and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent I deemed appropriate. On October 25, 1944, the Board of Publication approved a change in the accounting period from a calendar to a fiscal year basis ending May 31, 1945. Detailed reports of examination have been made to the First Presidency for the two accounting periods.

In my opinion the accompanying balance sheet presents fairly the position of the Herald Publishing House at December 31, 1944, and May 31, 1945, and the results of its operations for the seventeen month period then ended.

LLOYD L. BLAND,

but to serve as well as possible under wartime conditions our foreign missions in England, Australia, and New Zealand. Due to the fact that money cannot yet be transmitted from these countries, we have sizable balances which are held in reserve by the bishops in the respective territories. Due to the uncertainty of transfer, these funds have been partially reserved on our books.

It should be noted that adequate cash is on hand for the payment of all liabilities, and liquid assets consisting of Government Bonds and Notes are being constantly increased to provide reserves for replacement of equipment and machinery as the need may arise.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION,

REPORT OF The Patroness Society

By Mrs. William Bath

To the First Presidency
 and The General Conference:

The Independence Patroness Society met Friday, January 18, at the Nurses' Home, 1215 W. Van Horn, and the report for twenty-one meetings shows that 850 pieces have been finished and 305 hours spent in the linen room at the hospital. The society contributed $300 to furnish Room 318. We have had very little new material the past two years but have made Mayo wrappers, lap sheets, tonsil wrappers, and large mattress pads from new material. Many pieces have been made over from used material, and kitchen aprons were made from large flour sacks.

We have lost in death three faithful workers: Mrs. E. L. Kelley, president emeritus; Mrs. H. L. Loosemore, president from 1918 to 1940; and Mrs. Vida Morgan, who spent many hours service in the linen room at the hospital.

Several letters and cards have been answered, and donations of money and linens have been sent to the hospital. We are hoping that material will soon be available for needed supplies.

We wish to thank all workers whose unflinching efforts help our hospital to answer the call for the care of the suffering.

Mrs. William Bath,
President.

REPORT OF

The Presidents of Seventy

By E. Y. Hunker and R. E. Davey

To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:

Since the 1944 General Conference, the Presidents of Seventy have been in the field of missionary labor and administration, in addition to their other responsibilities. We have maintained correspondence with the members of the quorum and have thereby endeavored to stimulate, encourage, and inform as best we could.

The Council of Presidents of Seventy felt a deep need to meet as a council at least once between General Conferences, and did so convene for a session beginning on January 5, 1945, concluding on January 9. Our deliberations were helpful and profitable to us and permitted our formulating a more definite program for the members of the First Quorum of Seventy for the 1946 General Conference. We likewise gave serious study to the matter of the work of the seventies and to the problems confronting us in the rehabilitation of the quorums.

The addition of nine new members to the quorum during the 1944 General Conference provided one of the more hopeful and helpful steps in beginning the rehabilitation of the seventy. The pressure of the war needs and the demand for and drain upon our young men throughout the country, as a matter of course drained the ranks of the church of many potential young appointees. Now, with peace declared and with the return of many fine young men of the church, we feel hopeful that there will be an increasing of appointees for the general ministry of the church. It is to this hoped-for group of men that the Presidents of Seventy are looking with expectation that the work of increasing the number of the Seventy will materialize through their qualification.

*As of January 1, 1945, the following changes were made:

Pleasant Hill, Illinois, branch, with a total enrollment of 57, was transferred from St. Louis District to Central Illinois District.

Fort William, Ontario, branch, with a total enrollment of 41, was transferred from Owen Sound District to Minnesota District.

Shawnee, Texas, branch, with a total enrollment of 232, was transferred from Central Texas District to Arkansas and Louisiana District.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District was divided into two districts, one to be known as Southern Michigan District, the other Northern Indiana District. At the close of the year 1944, the combined district had a total enrollment of 3,134. Of this number, 2,303 were enrolled on Southern Michigan District, and 831 on Northern Indiana District as of January 1, 1945.

This explains what may seem to be a discrepancy between the closing figures of 1944 and the beginning figures of 1945 for the various districts involved in these changes.

After much careful and prayerful study, the Presidents of Seventy feel that the only sound and safe method for rehabilitation of the seventy is clearly set forth in the basic law of the church as contained in the revelations accepted by the church in the course of the existence and experience of the Restoration Movement. We therefore earnestly request of the membership of the church their sincere and earnest support in prayer, labor, and a continuing and increasing of observance of the whole law of God, temporally and spiritually, that more laborers may be sent forth into the harvest.

It is with high hopes that we look to these times as the period when the church may be liberated from many of the hindrances that heretofore have obstructed our advancement and progress in the great and glorious work of preaching the gospel to the nations and moving rightly toward the building of Zion.

May the Spirit of God so permeate the entire church that we shall in unity and power promulgate the cause of righteousness the world so much stands in need of.

The Presidents of Seventy,
E. Y. HUNKER, President.

R. E. DAVEY, Secretary.

REPORT OF

The Church Physician

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Ph. D.

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference.*

It is with extreme regret that I realize that I shall be unable to attend the General Conference this year. A great amount of professional duties and unavoidable circumstances will prevent me from doing so. I realize that I will miss the joy of the personal contact with many of my co-workers in the Christian faith. Although I have given much advice to members and nonmembers of my church, have met many of them professionally and socially, and have answered many inquiries through the means of correspondence, yet, I always long to reach out to larger fields. Is it not wrong to judge that which we know not of? This thought has come to my mind as I review the many phases of life with which the church deals.

OUR HUMAN SITUATION

This world of ours has become a very specialized one. Affairs of science must of necessity be left to the scientists. The problems of education must be left to the educators. The economists and the bankers have their specialized departments. And so it goes all through the business, the educational, religious, and professional lives of our nations throughout the world. These divisions have many subdivisions and classes. Thus the church must also assume its role as a specialized organization and as such, it would be well for it to allot a very large subdivision to the church physician.

Never in the history of the church has there been as great a need for the church physician as to the present. I myself, have had a great yearning for the power to turn the minutes into hours, so that the time at my disposal which I devote to the work of the church might become lengthened indefinitely.

In these days when the world is striving to retain its hard-won peace, the question becomes of greatest importance: Why life and what is it for? Job says "life is wind." James declares it is a "vapour which appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." Is that all there is to it? Think of life first physically—how wonderful the human body; what honor God gives us. Let us straighten our frame and follow God's original injunction—"subdue the earth and have dominion over it."

Life is both physical and spiritual. It is God's great school wherein we are being fitted for an existence higher than this, and eternal. Christ said, "Life is more than meat. . . . I am come that you might have life and that you might have it more abundantly." The abundant life is spiritual. It is dedicated to God by choice and not by force. Moses said: "I set before you life and death . . . choose life." Jesus said: "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens beneath her wings but ye would not." He said again: "I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh unto the Father [life] but by me." . . . "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but have the light of life." Do we have that light?

DESTRUCTIVE FORCES

The destructive forces of the physical universe create a serious problem for many of us. A calamity like an earthquake or a destructive hurricane or a flood when thousands of helpless human beings are ruthlessly destroyed, raises serious doubt in many minds as to the goodness and justice of God.

There are also a number of ills which result from the failure of nature to respond to man's labor. For example, seeds that have been sown for food are destroyed by droughts, floods, or insects. A field of corn or wheat may be turned into a barren waste overnight by the flood waters of a mighty river or an army of grasshoppers. Or the destructive boll-weevil comes and turns into despair all hopes for a bountiful cotton crop.

Perhaps it would help a bit if we would remind ourselves that the very forces of nature which bring disaster are also among our most helpful educators. Man must study these forces in order to master them. The more he studies them, the more deeply does he enter into their secrets.

Experience teaches us that by far the larger portion of the sufferings that man endures at the hands of his physical environment are due to his own neglect, carelessness, or imprudence. They are due to a thousand causes which turn things preventable and innocent into things that are hurtful or even deadly.

After men have deliberately gone at cross purposes with an orderly world, would not divine interference be extremely harmful? Miracles worked to stay nature's destructive course would arrest the progress of mankind, and we would find ourselves amidst a static world. If the stormy sea were subdued every time the lives of men were threatened, we might never have any dreadful tales of shipwreck or other disasters of the deep, but just as surely we would never have produced ships like the "Normandie" or the "Queen Mary."

Many of the ills that man suffers result from acts of his personal will. They fall within the realm of man's deliberate choice. Sin is a deliberate transgression of the law of God. We transgress it when we treat others unjustly. The crimes and vices which besmirch human history must be reckoned with as deliberate transgressions of the law of God. Even war, and all the suffering and tragedy associated with it, comes within this category. If man had been created without the power of doing wrong, there would have been no ability to do right. Where there is no room for choice, there is no virtue to be attained.

Every person who becomes a parent faces the problem which God faced when he created the universe. Whatever justifies the responsibilities the parent dares to undertake when he becomes a parent, justifies God in making a universe of free moral agents. Through the exercise of his freedom of choice, man brings joy and comfort to himself and others, or he brings disaster and suffering.

HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY

There is still another group of ills which are even more perplexing. There are ills which result from pestilence and disease and which bring suffering and death to millions. Why is all this permitted in the world if God is really what we have been taught to believe that he is?

Before we attach too much blame to God, we should pause and see if God is really at fault, or if it is man's shortsightedness. Such ills are usually traceable to man's carelessness in permitting breeding places for disease germs. A milk supply or drinking water becomes contaminated through carelessness, and a whole community is swept with an epidemic of typhoid. It is quite apparent that most of our troubles in this category are traced directly to man himself. His disregard of the most elementary laws of health brings suffering upon himself and his fellows, though oftentimes he does not realize it.

We ought—all of us—to be using our bodies vigorously and healthfully because it gives us pleasure. But many of us have got so out of the way of that sort of thing that it is idle to approach them with a counsel of perfection. It has always seemed to me that there should be something to think about in the idea that diet, rest, and right living in general, can be looked upon simply as a business proposition, to be considered in terms of profit and loss. Let's try it from this strictly practical, utilitarian angle and see where we come out.

Let us regard health and longevity and vital energy as commodities—which nature hands us free of charge when we are born; but which she allows us to retain in later life only as we pay interest on the loan. Fall down on the interest, and Nature, looking out through a little grated window in the Bank of Health, is likely to foreclose. Usually, she does this slowly. She may do it through obesity, or slowly accumulating blood pressure, or slowly thickening arterial walls, or slowly degenerating heart, kidneys, or liver—the slow onset, in other words, of those degenerative diseases chiefly associated with middle age. Such slow cracking down is preparatory to foreclosure, but being slow, it gives the man time to wake up, come to his senses, and get busy.

Most of us are prone to eat as we please, drink as we choose, and defy all the laws which govern the human body; then when nature demands a payday in the form of sickness, the cry is, "I hope I am not going to be sick long;" "Get me out as soon as you can"—so that the cycle can be repeated.

PREVENTIVES OF ILLNESS

A generous use of dairy products is essential. Instead of half a pint of milk a day, which is the present average throughout the country, each of us should use at least a quart, either as a beverage or in foods.

There are dietary properties in the leafy parts of vegetables that differ entirely from the properties of potatoes and the root vegetables such as beets and turnips. Eating leafy vegetables in liberal quantities provides the body with invaluable substances, which it cannot secure in adequate amount from milled cereals, potatoes, and the muscle cuts of meat such as beefsteak, ham, and roasts. They are of great advantage also because they leave a bulky residue which aids the intestine to empty.

We must all eat frequently of raw vegetables and raw fruit to be certain of having in our diet the vitamins that protect against scurvy. Raw cabbage, raw tomatoes, and oranges are particularly valuable for this purpose.

After a man has provided himself with the minimum of these essential foods, he can make life pleasant by eating what his appetite calls for. The great danger now is likely to come from overeating. However, the minimum allowance of milk, vegetables, and fruit should crowd out of his meals a considerable part of the meat, bread, and potatoes he has been in the habit of eating.

THE FUNCTION OF PAIN

Why is physical pain permitted? It does not require a scientific mind to realize the beneficent ministry of pain. For one thing, pain is the body's danger signal. It is an indication that something is wrong and needs attention. A man develops trouble in his spine, and this causes acute pain. His physician sends him to the dentist. An X ray reveals an abscessed tooth, or sinusitis, one or both, and a specialist is consulted. The tooth is extracted and, with it, the source of infection is removed. Soon he is well again.

It is not always as simple as that, yet it is surprising how often prompt attention to these warning signals saves us from serious trouble. To ignore them may mean protracted illness, irreparable trouble, or even death. It is folly to blame God when indiscretion or failure to heed warning signals is at the root of our trouble.

CONSIDERING DEATH

Here is a man able in imagination to wing across the centuries long gone by, to fathom the problems of life today and to forecast the future and lay the foundations for a new world. Here is a creature able to think in terms of infinity who has had measured out to him a pitiful allotment of threescore years and ten. The awful tragedy of death is a hard matter to explain, especially when one is snatched away in the very blossom of youth. Mortal minds wonder why the young die.

But even when all of this has been said, why should death seem such an awful thing? Death enables us to realize the meaning of life. Time takes on new value; love becomes nobler; men think of themselves more worthily when they see that "the night cometh when no man can work." Friends and families live in a tender light when we know that the sun shines but for a season. Death bids men live in earnest. It adds glory and grandeur to life. "Oh, death, where is thy sting?"

We should always keep in mind that time and eternity are one. Life, its meaning, purpose and discipline, can never be understood purely on the basis of an existence which begins with birth and ends with death. That which appears to us now as an evil may appear, when the veil has been lifted and our understanding is more complete, only as a discipline better qualifying us for our immortality. An immortal life is so vast that the prelude to it may have either a joyful and happy setting, or be intermingled with the tragic situations of a mighty drama.

No burdened soul can stand long within the shadow of the Cross of Christ without making a grand and glorious discovery. When we come to understand the meaning of that Cross and see God working out his purposes of redemption on Calvary, then we come to know something of the heart of God and his attitude toward all the suffering and death in the world. "Thanks be unto God that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

PRACTICES THAT DESTROY HEALTH

Juvenal, in his Fourth Satire, said: "A sound mind in a sound body, is a thing to pray for." Thus we find that even the ancient philosophers knew the value of health. For thousands of years, however, man did little about the matter scientifically.

Yet even we moderns are singularly tempted to turn to untried nostrums instead of to a consideration of the laws of nature, where our bodies are concerned. Every hour of the day, and most of the night, we have dinned into our ears by the radio the merits of this nostrum or that cure. Some of the suggestions are little short of criminal. We hear radio announcers telling us to drink all the liquor we want, and eat all the indigestible food we can hold, then take a pill or a powder and forget all about it.

Such abuse of the body that God gave us, is sinful. We know that we should not overburden our digestive system, then numb its feeling and stimulate its activities by some chemical. Yet that is exactly what we are urged to do.

Even the beasts of the field know better, when they have eaten enough to satisfy their appetites, they cease eating. Man makes a glutton of himself, and then wonders why he is faced with the breakdown of his bodily functions before he reaches middle age. Let us learn from our animal friends. They eat in moderation, they live out of doors, they take plenty of exercise, they do not worry.

THE MENTAL FACTOR

Modern science tells us that most physical ailments are directly traceable to wrong thinking, that we can worry ourselves into insanity or a nervous breakdown, that we can envision some bodily disease until we actually develop it in ourselves. "Love thy neighbor," is an unselfish preachment, it bears rich dividends in the health of the individual. Look about you at the persons with disagreeable dispositions, are they healthy? By their own meanness, they have brought upon themselves the pain and discomfort they have sought to bring others. They will excuse themselves by saying that their afflictions make them disagreeable, that they suffer so that they cannot always be pleasant and cheerful. Yet we have thousands of illustrations in life of persons suffering from some accident, bedridden or confined to their wheel chairs, who are cheerful, filling the lives of all about them with joy and peace. Emerson said: "Give me health and a day and I will make the pomp of emperors ridiculous." This thought was expressed by

Gray when he said:

"Rich, from the very want of wealth,

In heaven's best treasures, peace and health." If you have health, conserve it, value it above wealth. With health you may achieve wealth; wealth can never buy health once it has been squandered. Isaac Walton said: "Look to your health; and if you have it and value it next a good conscience." And Sterne, in his Sentimental Journey, petitioned: "Grant me but health, thou great Bestower of it, and give me but this fair goddess as my companion and shower down thy mitres, if it seem good to thy Divine Providence, upon those heads which are aching for them."

The rules for healthful living are those of common sense. You know what agrees with you, you know how much sleep you require each night, you know how much exercise you should take without overtaxing yourself. You know that a burst of anger disturbs your digestion, you know that hate upsets your bodily balance, you know that worry not only causes loss of sleep, of appetite and weight, but also so disturbs the mind that it is incapable of solving the problem that is causing the worry.

Do you know the scientific explanation of the bodily disturbances that follow a burst of anger? Anger or fear causes the adrenaline glands to pour their fluid into the bloodstream, it is a powerful stimulus, enabling great feats of strength, amazing agility, for short spaces of time. But such exertions are inevitably followed by a reaction, depression sets in, the normal balance of the glandular functions of digestion, and of the mental processes are destroyed. Do you know dogs bite those who are afraid of them, but do not molest those who do not fear them; that bees sting those who are afraid, yet allow other people to put their hands in the hive? Again the answer lies in the adrenal fluid. Fear forces this into the blood stream, to animals and insects it has a powerful odor, and they bite or sting in retaliation for the affront that has been given their olfactory nerves.

LOSS OF RELIGIOUS STANDARDS

Today, as never before in the history of man, the fundamental institutions of his social life are being challenged. The home feels the impact of economics, the highly developed and overwhelming call to urban excitement, overcrowding, and family disintegration.

Many children are brought up to believe that there is no God, and that the Holy Bible is just another book of tales and lies. Their toys are anti-religious. The child's toy blocks have hideous cartoons of Christ, instead of pictures of animals, fruits, and flowers as are found on blocks children have in America.

The godless servants of Satan, their leaders, do not make any secret about their plans to destroy belief in God. They have declared over and over again that they will fight to the end to banish the name of God from the entire world.

Do our people in this grand country of ours realize that everything which they cherish—their Christianity and freedom to worship, their homes and children, their freedom of speech and literature, and last, but not least, their very health is being quietly devoured by this enemy which is scattered to all four winds, in every town and city in our nation and doing their work well under many disguises, and byways and means which the unthinking person does not suspect. Wake up, my beloved friends. The responsibility rests with you and you and You. Do not leave it for the other fellow!

PROTECTION OF YOUTH

Already the young of our nation are being taught not to worship God, to partake of the sexual demands of free love, spreading disease and sorrow in its wake. Are you parents awake to this fact? How little you know about your own children!—Do you not think that you might spare a little time from your clubs, your sports, your social activities, or your business to become acquainted with your boys and girls? Learn to like the things that THEY like! Forget YOUR own desires for a while.

Have you gone on any camping trips with them lately? Have you shared their favorite sports and games, not yours? And most important of all—have you thrown wide the door of hospitality in your home and let the teenagers crowd into it? What difference if they do make so much noise that your ears almost split? What difference if the place looks as though a cyclone had struck it? For the fun which they get out of having their own parties without grownups "butting in," they will gladly fix things in order when it is time to leave. Far better this than your not knowing what dive they may be haunting, what harmful company they may be in.

Oh, the joy and the honor that is yours, parents, in these grand citizens of tomorrow. It is you who need the reforming, not your children. Give to them the love, health, and wisdom that is theirs under a Christian government. Do not let them possess you, but you possess them.

While making out this report, I was hastily called in consultation with Dr. Charles Grabske and other members of the staff of the Sanitarium because of the serious illness of our dearly beloved President of the Church, Dr. Frederick M. Smith. I found that everything was being done that was humanly possible. Since leaving him, I have been saddened by a telegram informing me of his death. I treasure his memory as a friend and co-worker for Christ. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

During my brief stay in Independence, it afforded me great pleasure to visit the Sanitarium and see the many improvements. Sister Copeland took me through, and while it has been my good fortune to have visited some of the best hospitals in the United States, this institution compares favorably with the very best.

The nurses, Miss Copeland, and the staff of physicians treated me with the very greatest courtesy, and I found them attentive and capable while in their line of duty.

REPORT OF

Society Islands Mission

By F. Edward Butterworth

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

Detailed reports of the work of this mission have been forwarded to the Presidency each month. I have no doubt that they are delayed considerably by the congested conditions of the railway system in America and the scarcity of shipping here at Papeete, Tahiti.

MISSIONARIES ARRIVE

Brother and Sister Sorensen, with their little daughter, Beth, have arrived after eight days on the sea, having come originally from Australia and more recently from New Zealand. We anticipate with pleasure our labors together in this mission. They have been well received by everyone and are now giving their time to the study of the language.

MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITIES

Since the arrival of the Sorensens, we shall have more time to devote to the missionary work of the mission. Heretofore, the church has been the only source of activity in the low coral islands other than the dances. However, movements are now under way to build theaters on all of the larger islands. This will greatly affect the income of the church and what is more serious, the spiritual advancement in this mission, since most of the difficulties of immorality can be traced to the theaters. Therefore, we desire to lay plans to cope with this situation.

MISSIONARY NEEDS

This mission should be given consideration in respect to more native missionaries. These men can be self-supporting if necessary, but it is important that we have more help in ministering to the low coral islands in order that the Saints shall be kept in touch with the church teachings and that they shall be stimulated to remember their duties to the general church and to themselves. We find our desires for traveling in this mission limited by our incapacity to minister to all the distantly scattered islands.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP

The mission is fairly well supplied with new buildings, but we have plans for two more new buildings in the office now. One will be built at Avatoru, Rairoa, and the other at Kaukura. The full expenditures are carried by the local group under the direction of the mission representative. We have permitted these two branches to build since they are our largest and most loyal branches in responding to the needs of the mission.

BRANCHES

There are nineteen active branches of the church here. Some islands are only inhabited at certain periods of the year. When the people assemble at these islands for their work of diving for pearl shell or of making copra, a temporary branch is organized, only to be disorganized after their work is finished.

MEMBERSHIP

The total membership is accurately stated as 1,831, according to a recent survey. There is a steady increase throughout the mission. However, we are deeply concerned with the fact that it is mostly children who are being baptized. We are also making plans which we expect to increase the number of adult baptizms.

FINANCIAL STATUS

All necessary information is in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric and Presidency. We commend all the devoted Saints who have remembered their duty to the Lord. It is difficult to teach the natives our budget system, however, most of them pay a tenth of their earnings.

FUTURE OUTLOOK

There have been tremendous strides made toward the developing of these native Saints by the foreign missionaries who have so loyally given of their time and talent; however, we have laid the groundwork for a new endeavor which we shall attempt this next year. The order of our church school services will be changed so we may give more time to separate and intensive classwork. Class instructors will be appointed by the one in charge. In reality, we have plans of organizing the branches of this mission on the same basis as the church school activities throughout the church.

We shall ever be grateful to our Heavenly Father for having been sent to this challenging mission. We meet daily many problems which are too difficult for us to handle alone, but we find comfort and consolation when we petition our Heavenly Father.

May the direction of the Master be present in all the sessions of the General Conference.

REPORT OF

Archaeology Committee

The former Society for Archaeological Research was terminated by General Conference action in 1944, and a committee was chosen to take its place.

The committee seeks to carry on much the same type of work as the society did. (See the society's report in Saints' Herald, May 9, 1942.) In general we could say that the Committee is for the promotion of study and research in American Archaeology, especially as such has bearing on claims of the Book of Mormon. These objectives may be classified more in detail as follows:

1. To collect data (pictures, slides and movie film) of archaeological value, which may assist our priesthood and members in affirming the truths of the Book of Mormon.
2. To establish a select library for archaeological study.
3. To obtain and keep a file of trustworthy archaeological publications.
4. To keep informed about expeditions, discoveries and excavations in possible Book of Mormon areas.
5. As information from archaeological research becomes available, to prepare material for publication, providing proofs of the Book of Mormon.

It is in harmony with these aims that Apostle Charles R. Hield, and Roy Weldon of the committee, accompanied by Brethren C. Ed. Miller, of the Graphic Arts Bureau, and Walter Weldon, made a trip the early part of 1945, into Mexico. They visited many places of archaeological interest in the states of Hidalgo, Vera Cruz, Tobasco, Yucatan, Campeche, Chiapas, Oaxaca and Puebla. They were able to visit and take colored pictures of ruins at Tenayuca.

Tula, Papantla, Matacapam, Keban, Sayil, and Palenque—places where none of the members of the committee had been before. The committee is most anxious to obtain a full file on the various important archaeological sites in Mexico, Central and South America. An expedition was under consideration to Piedras Negras, Yaxchilan, and Tikal, but it has not been thought wise to go at present.

In the two years that have intervened between the conferences, we have given attention also to visual aid in the presentation of various aspects of the Book of Mormon as a record of the ancient Americans. An exhibit of the work of a number of the brethren who are active along this line will be provided in the room of the High Priest's Quorum in the Auditorium at this conference. Roy Weldon, of the committee will be in charge of the booth. Slide pictures (2 x 2), with lectures to accompany some sets of archaeological sites, may be obtained at low cost. Each week day, Monday through Saturday from 4:30 to 6:00 p. m., lectures with colored slides will be given in the choir room by Roy Weldon, Harold I. Velt, and Charles R. Hield.

The committee takes great pride in the publication of Apostle Paul M. Hanson's book last summer, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans. It is to be hoped that in the future, others of the church may qualify to write and have published additional works in the archaeological field.

A worth-while book appearing lately is The Origin and History of the Mayas, by Dr. M. Wells Jakeman. The extensive bibliography is especially valuable. Dr. Frank C. Hibben has published his report of the expedition sponsored by the University of New Mexico, in the Gallina River country in northern New Mexico. The article can be found in the scientific journal, American Antiquity. Other articles on this same theme by this writer have been printed in the Saturday Evening Post, December 9, 1944, and April 7, 1945; also the Reader's Digest for September, 1944. Two articles entitled "The Language and Writings of the Book of Mormon," by President Israel A. Smith in two October issues of the Saints' Herald, 1942, are well worth a place in one's library.

While deciphering of the Maya hieroglyphics may not be fully made in the life time of any of us, yet it is hoped that the committee may lend incentive to study and research, which may result some day in the deciphering of more of the many inscriptions that are available for study in the museums and among the ruins. We are confident some of these hieroglyphics when translated, will corroborate the Book of Mormon story.

The committee is most interested in accumulating all material that may shed light upon the probable locations of leading Book of Mormon sites. It is hoped that a Book of Mormon map may in time be prepared.

It is understood that part of the new library room in the Auditorium may be set aside to house books, magazines, pamphlets, etc., relating to archaeology. Here those who are interested in Book of Mormon archaeology may come and find the best that is available on the subject. It is hoped also to have publications on the Indian races of Mexico, as well as of North, Central and South America.

Any persons contemplating a trip to Mexico, or other archaeological area, and who wish to assist in the accumulation of our knowledge of the ancient cities, their religion, customs, etc., may be able to do the committee, and therefore the church, a service if they will contact the committee before they go. There are always new pictures and other information needed.

The committee desires to obtain bulletins from many of the foreign countries as they are published, which deal with possible Book of Mormon ruins. Also bulletins from such organizations as the Carnegie, Smithsonian, and Peabody Institutes, numerous State and private universities, museums, etc.

While it is impossible for our people to do original excavations, because of the cost and the time involved, yet we can keep closely in touch with what is done by various governmental and private institutions. Huge masses of ruins, like those at Matacapam, visited by our company in February, 1945, await excavation. Constant information bearing on these ruins should be maintained, so that when the expenditure of vast sums of money makes visible these cities, we may photograph and study them.

The committee was very deeply grieved to lose by death one of its number, Sister Inez Kinney, who died in July, 1945. She was an ardent Book of Mormon student, and had made trips into Mexico, Central and South America. This faithful and enthusiastic worker will be greatly missed.

Charles R. Hield,
Chairman
Louise Sheldon,
Secretary
Paul M. Hanson
Roy Weldon
Harold I. Velt.

REPORT OF

North Atlantic States Mission

By John F. Garver and G. G. Lewis

*To the First Presidency
and the General Conference:*

In reporting on our labors and conditions in the North Atlantic States Mission, we are happy to say the cordial relationship marking our association from the beginning has continued during the past two years, and we have reason to believe it has encouraged a like spirit among our confreres throughout the field of our labors. And there is in the main, fellowship among the Saints, and a growing determination towards strengthening of the church in its ministry for the salvation of mankind.

Need in a number of centers and districts for additional appointees to care for the interests of the church and its people has long since been apparent to many in these places, as to ourselves. We have, in consideration of the circumstances, endeavored to make it clear such demands can be met only as qualified men are available; and that other missions, as this one is, are under the same need, so that not all can be soon supplied. For the most part, so far as known to us, these good people and ministers are reasonable in their expectancy for themselves, and in many instances rendering a fine service to the cause "entrusted to all."

The cessation of hostilities taking from some centers, Cleveland in particular, Saints and workers laboring in plants theretofore turning out war materials, has in these places laid a heavy load on those who remain. All devoted ones free to do so, serve faithfully, however, and live in hope of a better day.

Too much can hardly be said for the few men under appointment and their families serving with us in this mission. Nothing other than diligence, good will, and Christian living have marked their life and characterized their efforts. And the support given them by Saints and friends has been on a like level. All this and these are appreciated, and each is commended in well doing.

The future is a matter of concern to many, as well may it be. Such look to the church for light, lead, and organization of its forces toward a functioning Zion, and its ministry in their life and in the life of their children. What shall the answer be?

J. F. Garver,
G. G. Lewis.

REPORT OF

The Order of Evangelists

January 1, 1944 to December 31, 1945

By Elbert A. Smith and A. V. Arnold

To the First Presidency and The General Conference:

Attached please find the consolidated ministerial report from the Order of Evangelists, for the two years ending December 31, 1945.

There are at this time 27 members, two of them being located in Australia, one in England, and one in Canada, the remainder being in the United States. Reports from 25 members show the following activities:

Two thousand two hundred forty-seven sermons preached; 8,618 services attended; 1,289 patriarchal blessings given; 4,479 pastoral visits made; 87 baptisms; 144 confirmations; 25 ordinations; 166 children blessed; 44 marriages performed; 3,363 administrations to sick.

In addition to the above, thousands of Saints have been counseled and ministered to, and many have expressed regret that they were unable to accomplish more.

We regret to report that since last General Conference we have lost through death, Gilbert J. Waller, born November 9, 1859, ordained an evangelist, March 22, 1933, and died in San Francisco, January 26, 1945. For many years Brother Waller was the mainstay of the work in Hawaii, and in recent years has rendered a fine service in California.

Also Brother Frank B. Van Fleet, born August 24, 1862, ordained an evangelist, May 13, 1934, died in Ontario, California, June 28, 1944. Interestingly, Brother Van Fleet was of the second generation to serve in the order, his father having been Patriarch Nelson Van Fleet. During his period of service as evangelist, Brother Van Fleet did a wonderful work in Southern California, ministering in a great many homes. We have also lost from the order, Brother William Patterson, whose resignation was tendered to the last General Conference in order that he might re-enter pastoral work. He is now president of Spring River district.

Additions to the order since last General Conference are: Brother Arthur W. Gage, born March 17, 1881, ordained an evangelist November 11, 1945. Brother Gage has served as pastor at Indianapolis for many years, and is continuing to work in that territory. Brother A. V. Arnold, born June 29, 1883, ordained an evangelist April 9, 1944, having served as pastor of the Houston branch at Houston, Texas. Brother Arnold is now acting as secretary of the Order of Evangelists.

The statistical report does not reflect all of the activities and ministry rendered by members of the order, who despite advanced years and other limitations have in their office as spiritual fathers, ministered to the people, counseling, comforting, and strengthening many as opportunity afforded. If time and space permitted, it would be interesting to incorporate letters from many of the brethren, reflecting their continued interest in the onward progress of the church and their faith in the ultimate triumph of righteousness and the establishment of Zion.

The momentous times now confronting the world call for greater faith and consecration of the Saints to that unfinished task which has been assigned us, the building of God's kingdom here upon earth, and it is our prayer that in a spirit of humility, meekness, and unity, we shall all labor together with God to accomplish his purpose in us.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH,
Presiding Patriarch.

A. V. ARNOLD, Secretary.

REPORT OF

The East Central States Mission

By F. Henry Edwards

To the First Presidency and The General Conference:

At the General Conference of 1944, I was assigned to Missouri, Illinois, and Wisconsin in association with Elder Clyde F. Ellis. A year later Brother Ellis was transferred to the Great Lakes Mission, and Elder A. A. Oakman joined me in the East Central States field. My association with each of these brethren has been pleasant and profitable. Brother Ellis was kind, wise, just, and able, and the deep and widely shared grief at his passing reflected the respect and affection in which he was held by the Saints of this area. Brother Oakman's many gifts and deep devotion have won him, also, the high and warm regard of the people of this field. His ministry has been one of light and power.

It has been our privilege to labor with a loyal and able group of appointees, and where these brethren or a sufficient number of experienced and devoted local ministers have been available, the work has gone forward very satisfactorily. This has been most notably true in the two major centers of this field outside the stakes, Chicago and St. Louis. Yet even here many opportunities have had to go unimproved because of lack of leadership. In other centers lack of appointee guidance and want of local ministerial power have placed the work in serious jeopardy. Indeed, the most insistent need in the central field, as in others, is for appointees and local ministers who can guide the Saints in the way of the kingdom and lead in planting the work firmly in old and new centers of endeavor. This need is mandatory.

The church has done well in raising the standards of the appointee ministry. But the needs of the field are so urgent that this emphasis on quality must be fully balanced by eager and continuing efforts to discover and train potential spiritual leaders.

We wish to restate the conviction, born of experience, that branches should be large enough for stability and small enough for intimate fellowship and widely shared participation. In harmony with the first of these needs, we have centered much of our appointee missionary effort in promising branches and missions in an endeavor to build them to the efficiency level. Because of the shortage of missionary help, this has reduced ministry in new openings to a minimum. In harmony with the second of these needs, we have made special efforts to build new branches where our local strength has permitted. The branch at Flora, Illinois, and the thriving mission at Maywood (Chicago), Illinois, are examples of this endeavor.

The metropolitan areas of this field are important. "Chicagoland" and the Fox River Valley, Greater St. Louis, Rock Island-Moline-Davenport; Peoria, Illinois; Springfield, Missouri; Milwaukee, the Joplin territory, and similar regions call for long-time expansion programs for which we shall need trained leadership. Scarcely less important for us are the more thinly populated regions where we have been struggling to maintain a foothold, and where our people have been steadfastly loyal despite our inability to send help during the past decade and a half. The work in Northern Wisconsin should be safeguarded through special efforts at LaCrosse and Eau Claire, and we should continue our attempts to stabilize the work in central and southeastern Illinois by special attention to Decatur, Taylorville, Springfield, Peoria, and Mount Vernon. Educational centers such as Iowa City, Iowa; Madison, Wisconsin; and Pittsburg, Kansas, also have special claims on our help.

No branch is fully organized until it has a church home. We have been very happy to note the steadily growing proportion of branches in this field who own their own church buildings and whose earlier holdings are being remodeled or extended to provide better worship, educational, and recreational facilities. The Rock Island district Saints have done specially good work in this connection. Sometimes, as at LaCrosse, Wisconsin, and Aurora, Illinois, the effort to secure a church home has been attended by a very considerable sacrifice. We feel that such sacrifice is fully warranted in the results ensuing. But we also feel that the general church must prepare to give more specific leadership in the houses of worship field. It is particularly desirable that the branches in this central region shall be well housed.

With a few pleasant exceptions, departmental work in the branches and districts of these three states is not as vigorously administered as we would like. This has been due, in part, to the absence of many young men and women and to the engrossment of others in war activities. We hope and expect to see this situation greatly improved in the near future.

The exercise of the spiritual gifts has caused us some concern in two directions. A marked lack of wisdom has sometimes been apparent in this connection, and, possibly because of this, we have found that men and women who might have brought rich spiritual blessings to the Saints have been slow to rise to their opportunities and responsibilities. There is need for wise and patient instruction and administration here. Scaremongering through "prophecies" of dire disaster must be held in check. Such "messages" center the attention on physical fears instead of enlightening the Saints concerning their rich spiritual obligations and privileges.

The work in the stakes will be reported through the stake officers, but we feel called on to make one basic comment on the work of the gathering. In our opinion, the very fact that Zion is the goal of all our earthly striving means that the process of gathering should show the church at her best. This has not been so. Despite frequent warnings and pleadings on the part of general officers from the beginning, there has been much indiscriminate rushing together, and the tempo of this unprepared physical gathering has been quickened in this region in recent months. Branches and missions which need help have been left to struggle unaided, while some of those gathering have permitted their unwise zeal to push them to almost certain disillusionment. We feel very strongly that the gathering should be highly selective, and that while the coming together of His people is evidently very near to the heart of our Heavenly Father, the Saints should be admonished with kindness and yet with firmness that this gathering should proceed in full harmony with the requirements for consultation laid down in the law.

It is a great privilege to be actively engaged in so great a cause. May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ fit us each and all for the work to which we are called.

F. Henry Edwards.

Visiting Our Church

My favorite interest is to visit the different branches of our church, and observe the form of services conducted in them.

Having been a member of the Central Church at Los Angeles, California, for twelve years, I am justifiably proud of the spirit of reverence prevailing there, assuring me that I come to the "House of the Lord" to worship.

When visiting the neighboring branches at Pasadena, Lennox, and San Bernardino, California, as well as when following the call to worship on the various reunion grounds, I experienced the same happy feeling of being at my own Church.

Last winter I visited my husband's family and friends in the states of Kansas and Missouri, and had the privilege of attending services at the Stone Church while in Independence. There also I recognized the sanctified and most hallowed spirit present in administration and the congregation during the morning service. During my visit to the Stone Church, I was shown the Sunday school and kindergarten classes in session. Their system is the finest I have seen anywhere, in schools or other churches, and worked out to the smallest detail.

I left Independence with the knowledge that we have the very best there is, if we care to make use of it.

At the present time I am making my home in Salt Lake City, Utah, and am pleased to find the same "good administrative" service spirit here. I was especially pleased some weeks ago, when young James D. Wardle, taking complete charge of the ten o'clock service, conducted it in a most able manner. Through his efforts and leadership, and the splendid co-operation of the young people, there is considerable activity in the music department, which is greatly appreciated by everyone.

I hope to have the opportunity of visiting many more branches of our church in the future and become friends with the Saints who worship there.

BULLETIN BOARD

British Columbia District Convention

The British Columbia district held a convention in Vancouver church on February 8, 9, and 10, with Apostle Williams in attendance. The convention was substituted for the previously announced church school institute.

On Friday evening the Daughters of Zion served a supper in the lower auditorium of the church. This was followed by a musical program sponsored by the Zion's League.

At 10 o'clock Saturday morning, Apostle Williams conducted a class study on "Missionary and Reclamation Work of the Church." At 3 p. m. he spoke on the "Responsibilities of a General Conference Delegate," and was again the speaker at the evening service.

Following the 9:45 worship service on Sunday morning, Apostle Williams delivered another fine sermon. Lunch was served at the church, after which members of the priesthood met with Apostle Williams, and the women met with Bishop Lassiter for special services. At 3 p. m. representatives of the district assembled for a business session. Five delegates to General Conference were elected, and the names of Floyd Butterfield, Chester Gregory, and Herbert Stanbridge were presented for ordination to the office of priest, Allan Coats to the office of teacher, and Jack Blain to the office of deacon.

In closing, a vote of thanks was given the Vancouver Saints for their hospitality to the visiting members.

* GOOD FRIDAY

What is good about "Good Friday"?

It is a memorial of the day that they crucified our Lord. To beat the race with the setting sun, the Romans were prepared to break his bones. But merciful death won the contest, so they left him with only a spear wound in his side.

There would have been no Easter without Good Friday. The great chasm between physical or mortal existence and eternal or immortal life would still be impassible. "Put up thy sword . . . if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight."

Good Friday—the birth pains of the kingdom of heaven.—C. B. H.

* IMPROVEMENTS IN THE AUDITORIUM

Since the last General Conference, there has been a careful and well-planned program of developing the office spaces of the Auditorium. In the northwest corner, second level, a group of rooms has been finished to provide offices for the Statistician, the Auditor, the Director of Farm Lands, and the Director of Church Institutions. To the visitor, these offices appear modestly and attractively arranged, providing comfort for the officers and security for their records.

Additional improvements have been made in the local church offices, northeast corner, third level (foyer), for the pastor and bishopric, with a general reception room, records rooms, and conference rooms.

* SERVING THE CONFERENCE

Experience has taught church officers much about their task of providing for the comfort and convenience of delegates and visitors. In spite of the furniture shortage, among many others, a considerable amount of furniture has been collected for the social center where many can rest between classes and meetings. In the pre-conference days, competent workers are busy with their carefully managed preparations. This conference will be as well served as any large gathering can be by a small staff. The regular employees will be supplemented by many volunteer workers of the organizations of Independence.

* CHANGES YOU WILL NOTICE

The most striking improvement the visitor will notice in the vicinity of the Auditorium will be found in the grading and landscaping that has been done on the two areas to the west and the northwest of the building.

First the big power machines moved in, "fulfilling prophecy" as one observer said, quoting Isaiah 40: 4—

"Every valley shall be exalted Every mountain and hill shall be made low."

They smoothed the earth out to make a foundation for a fine, gently sloping lawn.

Then the planters came, dug holes, and began putting in clumps of bushes and evergreen trees that have already effected a transformation. By the time another conference meets, the lawn will be established, and trees and bushes will be settled in their new home. It is a fine thing to have this pretty park here, in the center of the city, a refreshing bit of nature for the health of the people where nobody can run up another apartment building or hot dog stand. This is a much-needed step toward "Zion the Beautiful" of which President Frederick M. Smith wrote in his song.

* STABLE PRODUCT

Speaking of inflation and
The changes war can bring,
It seems to me religion is About the only thing
That hasn't been affected . . . it's Tax-proof 'n' ration-free,
And, although the cost of living
Has increased tremendously,
You can go to church on Sunday
—No priority required—
And listen to a sermon, and
Be just as much inspired
As you were before Pearl Harbor,
Yet the price is just the same,
You can give a lot . . . or nothing
And they'll still be glad you came.
If you're planning for the future
—When the war is over—let Me recommend religion as
The best investment yet.

Israel A. Smith Is New President of the Church

The Auditorium
Independence, Missouri
Saturday, April 6, 1946

By unanimous vote of the General Conference, delegates and ex officios voted at 4:04 p. m. today by a show of hands, and visiting members participated upon invitation of the presiding officer, without a single visible dissenting vote, to approve a motion calling Israel A. Smith to become President of the High Priesthood and President of the Church.

The representatives of the church, visitors, and friends sat in a body approximately five thousand in number as Israel A. Smith formally announced to the General Conference, as required by church law, the death of President Frederick M. Smith, the completion of the prescribed duties of the Quorum of the First Presidency by its remaining members, and relinquished the chair of the conference to the Quorum of Twelve as the Second Presidency of the church, represented by Paul M. Hanson, President of that quorum. This action was taken to provide an officer to be in charge of the conference during the selection of a new president of the church. Brother Israel then retired.

Apostle Hanson called Elbert A. Smith, the Presiding Evangelist, to the stand to deliver a message to the church. The Presiding Patriarch (an alternative title) is authorized by the law, under such circumstances, and is qualified spiritually, to receive such a message and to deliver it to the conference. On March 20—the day of the decease of the late President F. M. Smith—

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Brother Elbert had received a message making known the will of God to the church and designating Israel A. Smith as the one intended to succeed to the vacant office. The text of this message will be given to the church when it is officially released as a part of the conference minutes. It is a document containing wisdom and counsel for the church and all its members.

Apostle John W. Rushton was presented, and reviewed the bases of succession in the church, and in consequence of the message, the church law, and other considerations, nominated Elder Israel A. Smith to be designated and ordained as President of the High Priesthood and President of the Church.

Apostle John F. Garver was called to the chair, and introduced a group of high officers of the church who seconded the motion. The officials so speaking were: E. Y. Hunker, Senior President of Seventy; Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve; R. E. Davey, of the Council of Presidents of Seventy; Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp, President of the Aaronic Priesthood; Ward A. Hougas, President of the Quorum of High Priests; Apostle M. A. McConley, representing the church in the Pacific Ocean areas; and Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, representing the European Mission. During all these addresses, the auditors received a tremendous impression of the power and unity of the General Conference and the church. Apostle Garver then recognized the following members from the floor, who also spoke in support of the motion: Elder Garland E. Tickemyer, pastor of the Stone Church and assistant to the Presidency; Elder J. E. Vanderwood, a veteran missionary of the church; and Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, formerly President of the Quorum of Twelve.

Apostle Garver put the question to the voting body of the conference, and then to the visitors. In both instances the response was unanimous. Brother Garver declared Brother Israel Smith to be elected President of the Church.

Apostle Hanson then resumed the chair and named the following officers to escort the president-elect, who had retired to his office during these procedures, to the chair: M. A. McConley, G. L. DeLapp, Ward A. Hougas, and Percy E. Farrow. As they did so, the conference rose to its feet to honor the new President. As President Israel approached the stand, Apostle Hanson asked him if he had a message; he assented, and delivered a short address. At the close Apostle Hanson announced that the ordination of Brother Smith would take place Sunday morning at 9:30. L. L.

CHALLENGES

HAVE YOU EVER envisioned the "upper room"? There thirteen men had met for a purpose which only one fully understood. Yet, for each it was a solemn occasion. They could sense the importance of the hour, for Christ's words made them realize that something vital was about to occur. From the first, the meeting was Christ-centered, and we find the message recorded in the Gospels. They were given a new rite to follow, and the ritual was fraught with the silence of humility. That first communion was shared in the quietness of kindred love.

Our sacrament of communion was designed to perpetuate that original meeting in the "upper room." But look at the atmosphere—pages of hymbooks turn, whispers are heard, the Sunday school paper or quarterly rattles, and everyone watches his neighbor as he is served. Sometimes it is necessary to remove the chewing gum in order to taste the wine. In such circumstances it is probable that few people are actually in communion with God or their fellow men.

The ritual of communion has become so much a habit with most individuals that they have lost the original meaning. After all, the communion service is only a symbol of what one should feel the whole month, not just the first Sunday. If one attends only this service, it is sure he does not realize its value, for true communion goes on all the time among God's children.

Next communion Sunday, make it a period of real communion between God and yourself.

I guess I'm word conscious. Words, their meanings, and how to use them, intrigue me. The other day I was thinking about words which give a feeling of inadequacy and failure, and I made the discovery that many of these words begin with the letter "d." Notice: dirt, disorder, discord, desecration, doubt, difficulty, danger, deceit, dread, destruction, drink, debt, despondency, delinquency, disbelief, disease, divorce, death, and damnation.

These words are linked together not only by their beginning letter, but by a common gender of meaning. If one of those conditions is present, it seems to beget another. Dirt and squalor may easily bring disease. Difficulty and discord often bring divorce. Doubt and disbelief may even lead to final damnation. All of these are negative words, conditions from which men should go. The positive ideas would include the "h" words, as: harmony, hope, honor, honesty, humor, humanity, humility, home, health, happiness, and heaven.

Children's prayers are heartfelt, and a child does not seek to prepare high-sounding phrases. Little Sue was speaking, "Dear God, I thank you for the grass, and flowers, and trees—and, oh, I just don't know what else, but we do thank you."

Each Sunday at junior church these children pray. One day they held special prayers for an invalid woman, and that day she walked for the first time for many years. Coincidence possibly, but those children are persuaded that their prayers were answered, and they pray in the faith that whatever they ask will be done. This is childlike faith.

When Joe said, "I don't think God will listen to me," he knew that he had not been a good boy and that he did not deserve an answer to his petitions.

If a child learns when very young to pray his true feelings, not some prepared prayer, that child will continue to pray through the years. Margaret said, "I like to pray because it's just like talking right to God."

I was doing a little actual shopping and more window shopping, and I had stopped to gaze at a display of shoes displayed in a store. Just then I heard animated voices and looked up to see three men passing. Nothing unusual about three men walking along the street: Well, one was a Negro, the second a Chinese, the third a Jew. They were arm in arm.

What a wonderful thing it will be when the nations represented by these men are also arm in arm. And certainly our country is the spot where such friendship should start.

We, of the United States, are: one third of a million Indians; one third of a million Oriental, Filipino, and Mexican; sixty million Anglo-Saxon, ten million Irish; nine million Slavic; fifteen million Teutonic; five million Italian; two million French; four million Scandinavian; thirteen million Negro; one million each, Finn, Lithuanian, Greek.

I've seen giant grapes from Oregon, giant peaches from Missouri, giant gardenias in Mexico, giant pansies in Ohio. All of these were grown by special processes, and resulted only after long months of tedious trying for perfection.

Great results always come only after such hard work. Often discouragements and utter failure threaten success, but success does come and with success, recognition.

What Is Religion?

By Chris B. Hartshorn

[T HAS BEEN OFTEN said that "man is a religious animal." Another variation reads, "Man is incurably religious." This generality deserves some further thought, lest we jump to wrong conclusions.

What does a man have to believe or do to be religious? This leads directly to a definition of terms. After consulting many authorities, we have evolved that which seems to us a satisfactory definition. Religion is "a system of beliefs and practices by which man recognizes a supreme power in the universe which is higher than himself, and with which he tries to establish favorable relations."

This definition puts the entire emphasis on a relationship between God and man. The history of religions shows that mankind has always recognized this higher power and through various means endeavored to please and obtain favor from deity. The way men regard the supreme power in the universe, and their concepts of what is required of them in their efforts to please him, gives rise to and perpetuates many religious groups and denominations.

Growing side by side in the world today are eleven great religions. All but two were personally founded, and all but two were in existence before Christianity. The oldest organized religion still living is Judaism, which was founded by Moses who lived 1290-1170 B. C. It was the religion under which our Lord was reared in Nazareth. Its sacred literature is still largely accepted by Jesus' followers. The major part of our Bible is the gift of Judaism.

A Christian View of Religion

James, the Lord's brother, gave an excellent definition of the term, religion:

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." —James 1:27. This is a religion of doing kind things and of self-discipline. Social morality, which is the essence of the gospel of Jesus, is entirely foreign to five other great religions. Most all people respect the ethics in social relations which enable us to mingle in civilized groups, but these ethics are not inspired by their religious teachings in many instances.

Dr. S. M. Zwemer, an American missionary and faculty member of an Arabian university, discussed this phase of religion in a chapel lecture in Drake University. He said that the three cardinal virtues of the Mohammedans, corresponding to the Christian virtues of truth, honesty, and morality, are these: 1. courtesy—they must be polite and say pretty things to their guests or associates. 2. patience—to show anger or other forms of impatience is very bad. It is difficult to insult them so that they lose their composure if they are at their best. 3. hospitality—this code requires the Arab to entertain the guest or even the stranger who comes to his dwelling. However, there is a three-day limit on such hospitality. At the end of this time he may graciously bow his guest away, then mount his camel, overtake, and rob him. Such conduct would not violate his religious scruples.

The fact that some of our traders and business men, claiming to be Christians, have done similar things, though in a neater and more dignified way, has adversely affected missionary work in foreign fields. It is regretfully true that every religion has its Judases. However, judged by its fruit as well as by its teachings, Christianity stands head and shoulders above the other ten religions.

The Oriental Religions

One admirable quality of the Oriental mind is its ability to endure self-discipline for the sake of its religious principles. Hunger, poverty, and even physical torture are submitted to with complacency. Here we are apt to find men struggling with ideas rather than things or human relations.

The Taoist says, "Only quiet nonstriving is successful."

The Buddhist says, "All suffering will cease upon suppression of desires."

The Jain says, "Knowing patience is the highest good, a monk should meditate upon the law."

The Hindu religion teaches that by bringing oneself and his desires under complete control, he may overcome the consequences of all error and be rewarded by advancing into a superior state at death. To him the idea of salvation is synonymous with annihilation; the final absorption into the cosmic spirit.

Buddha declared, "Those whose minds are disgusted with a future existence, the wise who have destroyed the seeds of existence, and whose desires do not increase, go out like a lamp."

Some may question that these are religious concepts. True religion is not a matter of getting people to believe as they did not formerly believe, but of getting people to behave as they do not now behave. From the Christian point of view that argument is sound, but it rules out nearly two thirds of the God-fearing peoples of the earth. We must not do that. It is our duty to understand them and to help them to see light in our light, and truth in Christ's Conference Sunday Morning

The Ordination of President Israel A. Smith

Israel A. Smith was ordained as President of the High Priesthood and as President of the church in the large conference room of the Auditorium, Sunday morning, April 7, before an audience that filled to its limits the seating capacity of seven thousand for which it was designed, while hundreds unable to find seats were standing in halls and doorways.

The service began promptly at 9:30 with Dr. Roy A. Chevillie in charge of congregational singing, and President L. F. P. Curry, who read the call to worship, in charge. The invocation was given by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and the Scripture reading was by Apostle John W. Rushton. Apostle M. A. McConley made the announcements.

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman sang with power and spiritual feeling the hymn, "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

The charge was given by the Presiding Patriarch, Elbert A. Smith, who made it a kindly, wise, comforting message.

Apostle M. A. McConley announced that the ordination would be performed under the hands of Paul M. Hanson, John W. Rushton, Ward A. Hougas, and G. L. DeLapp, with Apostle Hanson acting as spokesman for the group. The ordination prayer began about one minute after 10 a. m.

President Israel A. Smith was then invited to address the huge gathering, and made a brief statement of his desire to obey the will of the conference, and of his knowledge that the call to the office was divine.

The service of ordination was concluded at 10:15 a. m. and the congregation was invited to remain in order for the communion of the Lord's Supper which was to follow immediately.

The Communion Service

In an atmosphere of quiet rejoicing, the people remained in their places for the communion service. Not far away, the Stone Church was also filled to overflowing with a crowd gathered for a similar service, and there were hundreds between the two buildings, on the sidewalks, and in the foyers who were not able to enter.

President Israel A. Smith was in charge of this service. L. F. P. Curry gave the call to worship, Elbert A. Smith the invocation. The oblation prayer was by Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and President Curry made the talk on the sacrament. Apostle Paul M. Hanson pronounced the prayers of blessing on the emblems.

A beautiful feature of this service was the choral music rendered by two groups, the main choir in the loft at the south end of the conference room, directed by Franklyn S. Weddle, and the echo choir in the balcony at the north end of the room, directed by Paul N. Craig.

A large body of the local ministry participated in the serving of the bread and wine to the huge congregation, and accomplished their work with splendid dignity, quietness, and order, a difficult task under any circumstances.

The pastoral address was given by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and the benediction was by Frederick A. Smith.

Outside, the weather was perfect, the day beautiful, and the many people assembled seemed very happy, thoughtful, and quiet. To see all these fine people, realizing that they have the same faith, the same ideals, even though one does not know all of them personally, creates a great feeling of fraternity and respect. One is grateful for the church that gives them a common bond.

Already it seems that the Auditorium is too small for the great throngs that wish to gather into it on conference occasions, and one cannot help wishing that in the days when it was built it could have been made to accommodate the ten thousand for which it was originally desired. Yet church people are thankful that we have it as it is, so useful on these occasions when no other building could serve our needs.

Further report of the later procedures of the Conference will be given in our next issue. L. L.

An Expression of Thanks From the Family of President F. M. Smith

Since it is impossible for us to express our thanks to all who remembered our father, President Frederick M. Smith, in their prayer, or to the many who sent us expressions of sympathy after his passing, we are making this general acknowledgment of our indebtedness, and trust that every individual and group who stood by us so loyally will accept this statement as voicing our deep personal gratitude.

Admonition to Great Men

If the great man who, from the pulpit,
Stirs us into thoughts of better things,
Fires us with a zeal to forge ahead,
Sets bells to ringing in our hearts,
Is not himself a paragon of virtue,
Or human, stoops to laugh—or pray—with us,
Not in high sounding phrases which bounce
With a loud clatter from the sounding board
Of heaven,
But praying with a simple humbleness of heart,
If he smiles not, with patience, on the little people
Who are his church—nor wins them to his way
With friendly evidences
Of his shining, glorious doctrine of Truth,
Knowledge, and Happiness
Applied to every day,
Then he has failed, and bitter disappointment
Lies, galling, on our tongues.
He had better have been like us, the little people,
Common and unheard,
Than great and magic-tongued,
With feet of clay.

Remember Now Thy Creator

A Message for Young People

By Ernest E. Crownover

DURING YOUTH, life is so full of joys and disappointments, of learning and doing, of such exciting activities which are so interesting that the teen-ager is breathlessly busy each day from arising to retiring. Life is a really thrilling thing, and must be lived with youth's gusto or it is not fully savored. No one would be so cruel as to rob youth of its rich joys, and those who have lost their youth beckon again and again to memory those fond recollections of days which can only return in images of the mind.

Boys and girls are tremendously busy learning how to live within and with others. The lessons come hard upon each other. Readjustments to new ideas are often necessary before the last lesson is fully grasped. Youth is like a tree in full bloom, and it does not yet appear what the fruit shall be. Youth take their ideas from parents, teachers, books, and friends. And like a fish-net, impressions of all kinds are likely to be captured and many both good and bad retained.

FORTUNATE INDEED is the boy or girl with wise and thoughtful parents who have, themselves, retained a youthful zest for facing life's problems and opportunities. Such parents can lend essential understanding to the venturing youth. As the young venture out into life, it is well that they select their course under wise guidance from parents, teachers, and pastor. Now let us discover the fields wherein each of these three are peculiarly fitted to advise.

First, the parents. Parents are mature—the drives and passions of youth are under control and have been given thoughtful direction into chosen channels. Unfortunately there are some parents who tend to become impatient that their sons and daughters delay such maturity. Parents, once having been themselves young, and now having gained maturity, are one important step ahead of the teen-ager, and have added the sometimes unpalatable lessons of experience which youth lacks. Parents are in position to advise with knowledge at least in the field of how best to grow into maturity and select certain traits of character along the way. And since they love their children with a boundless love, they will most certainly give the best of advice. So it is well to give careful consideration to parental counsel about choice of friends, suitable or unsuitable means of entertainment, hours of arising and retiring, choice of leisure-time activities, and be amenable to their general ideas of deportment. The clothing and food they lavish upon you, the shelter they provide, the time and care and concern they invest in you, and the life they have joined to give you, are all the guarantee you need to be sure they will not mislead you. Rather, that they are determined you shall have life's richest and most priceless treasures; and you may depend upon it, they will be working and rejoicing, sorrowing and praying to that end. So heed your parents, for they love you too much to give you anything less than all of the best they have.

Your teachers by training and experience are best equipped to guide you into academic and vocational skills, and to assist you to prepare for life's cultural and economic demands. Teachers are familiar with the theory and practice of preparation for and achieving the more successful life, and are sincere in the desire to develop youth's best qualities. Your teachers are your friends, not your taskmasters.

Your pastor stands between you and God, but will step aside as quickly as he gets your attention upon God. Your pastor is called of heaven to minister to you the gifts of the spirit and the blessings of the gospel. Take to him your moral and spiritual problems. He has knelt at the throne of grace, and been given an answer to your needs. And more than that—he it is who can show you how to take parental and school counsels, and add to them the character and nature of a divine being to gain for yourself a type of life which by its very nature is undying; is eternal. Your pastor is your ever-dependable liaison with your Savior. God has authorized him to minister His spirit and His life to you, and has blessed him to that purpose. Ask your pastor about the path to God's throne of mercy, forgiveness, and salvation. He can tell you about it, for his steps have worn deeply the way.

One more thing. Under your pastor's guidance, meet God for yourself. You are entitled to a personal experience with your creator. He awaits the opportunity to grant you his spirit. While you are young—while life's full measure of opportunity is before you, remember that God made you and gave you life, and that by his grace only you retain it. Consecrate the boundless qualities of your youth to the purposes of eternal right. Dedicate your soul to those things which are clean,

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

THE EVENTS of the Restoration are inseparably bound up with the experience and life of one man—Joseph Smith, the nineteenth century prophet. Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805, in Sharon, Vermont, and was given his father's name. While in his tenth year, he moved with his family to Palmyra, New York, and some four years later, moved again to Manchester, New York. During the second year of the residence at Manchester, or the 15th year of Joseph's life, the events leading up to the Restoration began.

In the spring of this year (1820) the several churches of the community of Manchester united in a great revival service. This was a period of great and deep religious feeling. Revivals were common and popular all over the nation, and religion was a much discussed subject, the source of endless argument and debate and discussion. This revival stirred the feelings of young Joseph. He desired the fellowship of some religious body. His family was divided, some of them preferring one sect, and some another. If the friendly, co-operative spirit of the revival had continued after the meetings were closed, it is possible that Joseph might have joined some church, and been more or less happy therein. But when the meetings closed, and it came time to divide up the converts, all manner of strife, and bickering, and argument, and dissension arose over the division of the converts who had confessed Christ in the union meeting. Each minister, and each sect freely criticised every other minister and sect, and attempted to prove by every possible sophistry and argument that everyone else was wrong.

In the midst of such confusion and dissension, it is small wonder that a boy not yet fifteen and totally inexperienced in religious matters should be confused. Even his own family was divided. The ministers he knew offered small help, for each by using his own interpretation of Scripture could prove that his doctrine and his church were right. What could an inexperienced lad of only fourteen do?

IN HIS PERSONAL ACCOUNT of those days, written later in life, Joseph Smith tells us that while laboring under these difficulties, he was one day reading in the first chapter of James, when he came to the fifth verse: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not: and it shall be given him." Those words appealed to him with such emphasis that he resolved to test the promise, and see whether it was true. Certainly his own wisdom was insufficient to solve his problem. His family could not help him; the ministers to whom he had talked only confused him more. Accordingly, on the morning of a bright spring day, he went into the woods near his father's home, and for the first time in his life attempted to pray vocally, stating his need in simple, boyish language, straightforwardly, and with naive faith that he would be heard.

As he prayed, a pillar of light appeared directly above his head, which descended until it rested upon him. Above him in this shaft of light, he discerned two personages, whose brightness and glory defied all description. One of them spoke, calling him by name, and turning to the other, said "This is my beloved Son; hear him." Joseph again put the question which had brought him to this secluded spot: "Which of the sects is right? Which one shall I join?" The answer astonished him, for he fully expected to have one or the other pointed out to him. The reply was, "Join none of them, for they are all wrong; and their creeds are an abomination in my sight."

Joseph further displayed an absolute simplicity and naivete by telling his experience to one of the ministers whom he had previously consulted. Then a very strange thing happened. The several ministers of the community who had previously been engaged in a very bitter attempt to prove each other wrong suddenly became very much aroused at the insignificant lad of fourteen who claimed that Christ had told him they were all wrong, and they united to persecute him—just as the religious leaders had united in persecuting each new reformer and each new sect which had arisen since the 16th century, when those reformers asserted that old religious forms were wrong.

Joseph joined none of the churches, and continued his daily life as normally as possible until September 21, 1823. During this time not a single person made a kindly attempt to reason with him, or to convince him of the error of his ways. He was shunned, ostracized, persecuted. The pious desires of nearly four years before had been partially forgotten, but nothing could dim his memory of that heavenly vision. On this September night, he felt the desire to pray, and to receive from God some assurance of his standing with him. As he prayed from his bed, a light appeared in his room, growing brighter and brighter until a glorious, glowing personage stood just above the floor beside the bed. This messenger said that his name was Moroni. He told Joseph that God had a work for him to do; that his name should be had for both good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues. He told Joseph of a book—the Book of Mormon—written on golden plates, giving an account of the ancient inhabitants of America, and in vision showed him the hiding place of those plates. He quoted Old Testament prophecies, including the third and fourth chapters of Malachi, the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, and a portion of the second chapter of Joel.

After a rather lengthy period of instruction, the messenger departed, but returned later a second and a third time to repeat the same words as before, so that there should be no mistake about the way they were impressed on Joseph's memory. When the messenger left the third time, daylight was beginning to enter the room. That day Joseph told his father of the experience, and received his opinion that it was of God. He went to the hill which had been shown him in vision, and opened the stone box in which the golden plates were hidden, but was told that they should not be taken out until he had waited and proved himself.

In 1825, Joseph Smith went to work by the day for a Mr. Josiah Stool, who was trying to locate a mythical Spanish silver mine. While engaged in this task, he boarded at the home of Isaac Hale, where he met and married the daughter of the family, Emma Hale, rather against her parents' opposition, on January 18, 1827. On September 22, 1827, the anniversary of his first visit to the spot, he was permitted to take the Book of Mormon plates from their hiding place, and to begin their translation with the help of his wife, Martin Harris, and Oliver Cowdery.

AS THE STORY of the Book of Mormon unfolded, Joseph Smith came to a passage concerning baptism for the remission of sins. In an attempt to find out exactly what was required of them, he and Oliver Cowdery again repaired to the woods to pray. While they prayed, a messenger from heaven again descended in a cloud of light, laid his hands on them, and conferred upon them the priesthood of Aaron, which carries with it the authority to officiate in baptism and other outward ordinances. The messenger said that he was John the Baptist, and that he was acting under the direction of the apostles, Peter, James, and John, who would shortly provide for the conferring of the higher or Melchisedec priesthood. He then instructed that Joseph should first baptize Oliver, then Oliver baptize Joseph; and then each should ordain the other in the same manner. It was a new and supremely joyful experience.

These two collaborators now found that their minds were enlightened as to the interpretation of formerly baffling passages of Scripture. They discussed their interpretations with their acquaintances and friends. Joseph's brother, Samuel, came to visit, remained to discuss religion, and was baptized. The next month, another brother, Hyrum Smith, and David and Peter Whitmer were baptized. Many others came to inquire and to dispute religion, and some found their interest leading them to baptism. All were anxious to experience the promise of John the Baptist that the higher, or Melchisedec priesthood should be conferred, and again it was made the subject of special prayer in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr. The word of the Lord came to them again, instructing them that they should ordain each other as before—but not until the church had been formally organized, and their ordination approved by the common consent of the body they were to serve. In this meeting they observed the communion of the Lord's Supper.

ON Tuesday, April 6, 1830, six young men met in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr., at Fayette, Seneca County, New York, for the purpose of formally organizing the new church according to law. The date for such organization had been set in a revelation given several months before, which also gave instruction concerning the form of organization, the duties of the several officers, and the manner of observing the ordinances and sacraments in the church that was to be. Provision was made for a quorum of twelve apostles. Duties were outlined and specified for elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and provision made for regular conferences—and all this, remember, before the church was even formally organized.

At the organization meeting on April 6, 1830, the assembled baptized members were asked whether they would accept Joseph Smith as first elder, and Oliver Cowdery as second elder in the church. With the consent of the body, and in obedience to the divine command previously received, they ordained each other in the same manner as they had conferred the Aaronic priesthood before. The Lord's Supper was served, and then Joseph and Oliver laid hands on each of the other members for the gift of the Holy Ghost, which came upon them in power. The Spirit pointed out others who should be called and ordained, some of whom were not even present at the meeting. And thus was begun the church which was formed not by the hand of man, but at the command of God, through the ministry of an angel as foretold in the 14th chapter of Revelation. By the following June, there were 30 members who met in the first semi-annual conference, and the church entered upon a period of expansion and growth.

Let us note what was restored by this series of events, and check it with the things which had been lost in the apostasy. First, there was restored the authority of the priesthood, which had been lost because of transgression. Second, although the organization was as yet incomplete, there was restored the complete pattern of church organization as it was found in the New Testament church, with apostles, prophets, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, etc. There was a restoration of doctrine in its original purity, as a result of new interpretations of Scripture, and new light thrown on old doctrines by the teachings of the new Book of Mormon, which had been printed the month before the church was organized. The simple, but meaningful ordinances and sacraments of the church were restored.

We wish to call your attention to one more point—namely, that whenever God has been about to begin an important work, he has used angelic ministry to announce and to initiate that work. When Moses was called to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt, it was through angelic ministrations. When God was ready to prepare the way for the advent of Christ, an angel foretold the birth of John the Baptist; another angel made the annunciation to Mary that the Messiah should be born to her. In the light of John's vision of another angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to earth for the last time, and in the light of Daniel's vision of the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which should break in pieces all earthly kingdoms, and grow until it filled the whole earth, we believe it reasonable to accept Joseph Smith's story of the Restoration, which came to him through the ministry of angels, to complete the work of the reformers, and to set up the kingdom of God on earth in the latter days.

What Is Religion?

truth. In any conflict of ideologies, truth will always ultimately win over error.

In the early existence of Jainism, Shinto, Taoism, and Confucianism the records show that they recognized no supreme deity, but have since accepted one or more gods. Hinduism, Sikhism, and Zoroastrianism worship many gods and other objects. Not one of these religions holds out the hope of a future life beyond the grave. We concur with the Apostle Paul, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all creatures most miserable."

The founding of three of the great Oriental religions is credited to men who had no idea of starting such movements. Confucius thought of himself only as a teacher and political reformer. Mahavira, founder of Jainism, like Luther and Wesley, died in the communion which he sought to reform. Lao-tse, founder of Taoism, was known as a philosopher. It took 600 years for his disciples to venerate and elevate him to saintly rank.

The Divinely Revealed Way

tures. Each of the other ten has one or more books which it accepted as sacred and to some extent divinely inspired. Much of it grew up centuries after the death of the founder. Mahavira, Gautama, Lao-tse, and Nanak, founders of Jainism, Buddhism, Taoism, and Sikhism, respectively, are by the sacred books of their own faiths, associated with miraculous births or other supernatural events. But these claims are made only in their later literature written hundreds of years after the alleged events.

We do not commonly associate the ideas of war and physical violence with religion. Yet in the scriptures and practice of five of the world's living religions we find warfare lauded. Chief among these is Mohammedanism. In the Koran we read, "Verily God loves those who fight in his cause." "Fight strenuously against the misbelievers and hypocrites, and be stern toward them." Judaism, Zoroastrianism, Sikhism, and Shinto have similar teachings. Contrast this with Christ's teachings: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."—Matthew 5:39. "Put up thy sword . . . if my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence."—John 18:11, 36.

Soon the drama of the first Easter will be relived in song and story. No other teaching affords so much of hope and comfort as the doctrine of immortality. In our sacred Scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants, God declared, "This is my work and my glory to bring to pass the immortality and the eternal life of man." This is in harmony with the teaching of Saint Paul, "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23.

Contrast this with "The Law of Karma" which involves the doctrine of reincarnation. As a penalty for sin and fleshly desires, men's spirits are reborn and sent to earth to suffer through another existence. This may be in the form of man or beast depending on the upward or downward trend of the previous existence. The only release the Hindu, Jain, and Buddhist can see from this endless cycle is to finally suppress the evil inherent in them and be worthy of the annihilation of the spirit, which is man, or to lose all conscious identity in the cosmic spirit of the universe.

Today suffering Asia needs food for its war-starving millions. But it also needs the hope of religion, the hope of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

wholesome, constructive. Accept the responsibility, not only for individual righteousness, but also judiciously and with discretion influence others for good. Here indeed can youth find a zeal and satisfaction in life which is the essence of what youth really desires.

Now, while the morning sun shines full upon you, take the light of His spirit into your soul and march unafraid into the limitless vistas of constructive living, of soul saving, of laying hold upon eternity. His spirit will lead you through each day.

It is harder to avoid censure than to gain applause; for this may be done by one great or wise action in an age. But to escape censure a man must pass his whole life without saying or doing one ill or foolish thing.—Hume.

Experiences Among the Indians

By Hubert Case

BROTHER P. R. BURTON and I held cottage meetings among the Omaha Indians for three months at one time about the year 1919. At the closing Sunday session of that great series, we baptized twenty-five and blessed twenty babies, the last two being little boys about five or six years old who came forward and knelt at our feet to be blessed. I never saw a more beautiful ordinance. Then at 2:00 P. M., while near the water's edge, we administered the Communion to about four hundred Indians, to many of them for the first time.

A GOOD CUSTOM

Another event worthy of emulation by all people was a custom among the Indians in their council meetings that I have attended. These Indians never make a negative speech; nor do they even refer to a speech another has made. All are affirmative. Each man who speaks tells what he believes. I would to God that our people could learn this lesson and speak affirmatively in our conferences. As I heard Brother Joseph say one time, there were no negative speeches in the School of the Prophets.

Another interesting custom among the Indians is their inviting the ministers of the various churches who labored among them to meet at Watonga, Oklahoma, once a year and tell from an affirmative standpoint what their respective churches believe. Then they would ask the ministers why they could not agree when they believed in the same Bible and the same God, and why they could not unite. General U. S. Grant, at the close of the Civil War, said to the churches, "Send your missionaries to the various tribes, one church to each tribe, as a means of ending Indian wars," and this certainly worked, for we had very few Indian wars after that. Only occasionally an outbreak occurred against the white people for breaking the Indian treaties and killing all their game. That is where the buffalo and all the game the Indians prized so highly as a means of livelihood disappeared.

Another interesting fact is that they have been taught and trained by key men to follow the leader. The first great Indian I ever baptized was Leonard Tyler, the leading medicine man or spiritual advisor of five thousand Cheyennes. He asked me not to baptize any Indians until the leaders heard the gospel, prayed over the matter, and decided to join the church. He had heard me preach one sermon and said he had gone to that little church over on the hillside for thirty years, but the first time he had ever felt the Spirit of God burn in his heart was when he heard me preach that sermon. He said, "I am going to join this church because God has shown me it is true." Also, he said that I should not ask him to be baptized until he had taken time to pray over the matter. Two years later I baptized him and one of the leading chiefs and his wife, and the next Sunday I baptized nine more. This continued for several years, until I had baptized one hundred and fifty of them.

The Indian agent told me the reason these Indians thought so much of me was that I was the only missionary who had ever gone into their homes. He also said the biggest mistake the missionaries ever made among the Indians was to display their oratory; for the Indians were the best orators he had ever heard. Permit me to say here, the best orator I ever heard in my life was a fullblood Indian of the Choctaw Tribe, United States Senator Robert L. Owens. When he was running for the Senate, Ex-Governor Haskell was running against him. Haskell spoke for an hour and thirty minutes in the courthouse in Kingfisher, Oklahoma, and harangued his opponent all the time he was speaking. Immediately following, Mr. Owens arose' greeted his audience, spoke about forty minutes and never referred to his opponent but told what he himself stood for. He won the whole country and was elected by the greatest majority a United States senator ever had in the State of Oklahoma.

The simplicity of the gospel in power and the demonstration of the spirit will captivate the Indians anywhere. Using their own language, they say, "We are starving to death for the Comforter." So the blessing of their children and the healing of their sick, and the outpouring of the spirit among them in some of these great meetings has done more good than anything else in their lives. For all of their spiritual advisors like Leonard Tyler, who have held the sacred traditions of their tribes, have told them that there was a time when they had prophets and seers among them as the Bible describes, and that is the reason the Book of Mormon, giving a full history of God's dealings among them through their prophets and seers, completely tallies with their traditions. For their traditions state that they once had a sacred book among them which was buried.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

These Things We Can Do in Our League

The Intrinsic Values of an Education

By Raymond E. Troyer

"I will study and get ready and maybe my chance will come."—Lincoln.

EDUCATION is an investment that is the most important and the most secure of all investments. Too often young people are anxious to leave school and demonstrate their independence by earning their own way. They fail to look into the future and see what is in store for them when economic crises come as they are sure to do. They also fail to recognize that material possessions will perish and that those characteristics of the soul which can be developed through education are eternal.

Young Latter Day Saints have imposing reasons for continuing their education and training. They need to prepare for a life of service to their families, their church, and zionic communities. Founded upon ignorance, Zion will never grow or even survive, hence the church depends upon you for the development of your mind, your training, and your knowledge. It depends upon your abilities and consecration to its service for greater progress.

Last year, adult education classes in Milwaukee were conducted on a 24-hour a day schedule. Hundreds of people were going to school at two, three, and four o'clock in the morning, trying to become more efficient at some task. The demand for an education, even at this sacrifice, was so great that a waiting list had to be kept. In most cases, those people were obtaining a better education for somewhat selfish reasons. How much greater should be the motivation of the children of God for an education, so that they can help in the realization of his purposes in mankind.

TOPICS FOR TALKS OR DISCUSSION

1. The process of becoming cultured is the process of becoming educated.
2. A comparison of the process of culture among plants in the garden and the process of culture among Christian people.
3. The effects of education upon our social, economic, cultural, and religious life.
4. An education that provides personal enrichment versus an education that develops complacency, self-centeredness, and inconsistencies.

5. Ways that the local church can help in the education of its members.

6. Our particular need for an education to serve the church. The kind of an educational program needed for the development of Zion.

PROJECTS

1. A panel discussion can be held on the topic: The educational needs of the people of Zion. The church cries for young people whose minds have been filled with knowledge that does not become antiquated with the latest advances in technology and science, whose originality has been encouraged, whose imaginations have been cultivated and whose intellects have been trained in painstaking thought. It calls for those whose minds and spirits and characters have been enriched by an intimate contact with man's richest inheritance, truth, wherever it may be found.

2. Every Zion's Leaguer would profit by study of the booklets, Investing in Yourself, by Ruth Strang, and Time on Your Hands; Choosing and Using Recreation. Each sells for twenty-five cents, and may be purchased from the National Education Association, 1201 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

3. The Saints' Herald for January 5, 1946, contains a number of excellent articles on education which can be studied or reviewed. This material could well form the basis for a good panel discussion.

4. Have each member write on a sheet of paper, "The Things I Would Like to Get Out of Life." Read and discuss these. See what part education must play in attaining the values and goals expressed by your Zion's Leaguers.

5. The following 16-page Personal Growth Leaflets are valuable sources of help. They may be obtained for one cent each from the National Education Association (Minimum order, 25 cents.)

- (1) Your Life in the Making.
- (2) Your Mind in the Making.
- (7) Your Personality in the Making.
- (9) The Planning of Your Life.
- (11) The Tenth Generation.
- (31) Shall I Go to College?
- (32) Shall I Attend a Junior College?
- (33) The College of the Future.
- (35) How to Study.
- (58) Education to Promote the General Welfare.

6. Have someone borrow a copy of Education—an Investment in People from your local chamber of commerce and make a report on this study which was made by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

7. An interesting discussion could be built around the theme, "The Education Needed by the Zionic Homemaker."

8. A pamphlet, American Education in Transition, should prove valuable. This may be obtained free by writing to Education Department, The New York Times, New York City.

THINKING ABOUT COLLEGE

Members of your League are living in the most astounding period in the history of mankind. The role each plays in this period will be determined by himself—his philosophy of life, his vision, his capacity to work and understand, and his motivation. He alone will determine if his service will be best because of extensive preparation or only an inferior product.

Chancellor Wilbur of Stanford university recently challenged a graduating class with this statement: "It will take all of our men and women of training and good will and of understanding to get the human family out of the mess that it is in."* The problems in this generation will continue to be more complex and more crucial than man has ever faced before, and the greater will be the opportunity for a practical application of zionic living.

Abram S. Hewitt once said: "If I were to have the choice of $1000,000,000 or the pleasure I had in my college days and the pleasure I have had as a result of my education, I would quickly choose the latter." I have heard similar statements made by hundreds of Gracelanders, and others, who have continued their education. They value those college years above anything else that is within their imaginations.

TOPICS FOR TALKS OR DISCUSSION

1. The increasing importance of a college education. This might include a comparison of education needed for success by our grandparents, our parents, and those of our own generation.

2. The determining factors in deciding if one should attend college for four years. It is generally agreed that not everyone should attend college for four years. However, many who should attend do not and others who could more profitably spend part of the time in other types of training, take a four-year college course. This deserves serious consideration.

3. Scholarships available in institutions of higher learning. There are many scholarships awarded every year on the basis of student need, scholastic and achievement ability, competition, and recommendation by school authorities. Information about these can be obtained from your high school principal or guidance officer.

4. The advantages of a large school and those of a small school.

5. The advantages of living in dormitories while attending college, and those of living at home or with relatives.

PROJECTS

1. Members of our Zion's Leagues should be like the mountain climber, choosing the surest and most direct path that leads onward and upward. As he receives help from the ones who have gone on ahead, so we can profit from advice of people who have made a success in life. Invite your high school principal or some business person to talk to your group about education. A program of several numbers can be arranged, with the parents invited as special guests for that night. Refreshments can be served, or better yet, the topic is important enough for a well-planned banquet, either for the local Zion's League or for the district.

2. Find out what colleges and universities are located in your state and the fields in which they are especially noted.

3. See what information your library or school offices contains about colleges and universities.

4. Have someone from a Veteran's Service Bureau tell about the provisions for education of the returning service people.

5. Have some college student or graduate tell about his or her school.

6. Have some members visit a nearby college, business school, or trade school and report their experiences.

LETTERS

The Faith of a Little Child

We moved to Weskan, Kansas, from Goodland in September. The ranches are large here, and homes are rather far apart. Our nearest neighbor is two miles from us.

One day in late October my husband went to Goodland in the truck to get another load of things and on the way back the fan went through the radiator. He borrowed a car to come home. The following morning it was necessary for me to drive our car while he took the other, since we didn't know whether or not repairs could be obtained for the truck.

Jared, our eight-year-old son, goes to a consolidated school. The bus brings him home at 4:30, and I told him we would be home by then.

When my husband began working on the truck, he found he could get everything he needed and it would not take long to fix it. We wanted to come home together because it was snowing and the tires were bad. By mid-afternoon, however, I thought I'd better start, so our little daughter, Jewell and I left in the car.

Kenneth said he should be able to leave in an hour. The snow covered the windshield so fast I had to go slowly. When we got to Kanorado, which is twenty-two miles from home, the road had become so slippery I decided to go to a filling station and call the Weskan school to have them leave Jared at the neighbor's. I could not get through, neither could I call back to Goodland. It was dark when Kenneth came by. He left the truck there, and we made our way slowly toward home.

In the meantime Jared came home and found a cold house with no one there. He started to cry, but thought that wouldn't help matters any so he did his chores, and since it was beginning to get dark, he decided he wouldn't stay there. He put on extra clothing, tied a handkerchief over his mouth because it was snowing and the wind was cold, and, saying a prayer for protection, left the house.

When he got to the end of the grove of trees a quarter of mile from the house, he felt someone was with him, and he knew it was his guardian angel. From then on he felt no fear. By the time he had gone half way it was very dark. The moon hadn't come up and the clouds were heavy. Suddenly a light shone above and a little behind him. He looked up quickly, thinking at first it was the moon breaking through the clouds. The road was no longer dark, since the light extended to the edge of the road, a little behind and a little ahead of him. He could easily see his way uphill and down. There was nothing but fences and prairie on either side. He saw the long shadows of a coyote on the bank. He shouted at it and it ran away. The light brightened the road until he saw the neighbors' light from the window.

"What did you think the light was?" we asked. "Oh, I just thought it was the light of my guardian angel," he said.

The neighbors took him in and gave him his supper, and in about half an hour we arrived. We had been hoping and praying he would go there. I was nearer tears than he was. He had walked two miles in the storm. We shall always be thankful for the protection he had.

A Comparison

I have heard much concerning the mechanism of railroad engines, and have often marveled how the individual parts are designed to work together. This morning I began comparing the Saints to the various parts of a locomotive. It has always fascinated me to see the engines as the trains come in; sometimes two are used to pull a long line of cars. A few years ago when my husband was studying to become an engineer, he met with others in a class to discuss the mechanism of the locomotives which he knew someday he must be able to control. He soon learned the importance of keeping all parts in working order so that performance could be perfect.

The church must be maintained the same as an engine. As mechanics strive to keep a motor operating efficiently, so must the priesthood strive to keep the membership from becoming wayward and weary. If the fireman fails to keep the steam up, the train is delayed; so it is with the church if its membership becomes slack in its work. If we are in tune with the Master, we can be warned of dangers that lie ahead—a warning which may save the entire train. Each small part of the engine must work with the other parts; so it is with the church. Each member has a job to do, even to caring for the hymnbooks and dusting the seats.

The Saints at Chillicothe feel that God is with their leaders. They ask the prayers of others that they may continue to work together in harmony and someday have a church home in which to worship.

General Conference Reports

REPORT OF Far West Stake

By Emery E. Jennings and Earl T. Higdon

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

We are happy to be able to make a report of the many accomplishments that have been achieved in the church work in the Far West Stake for the two year period of 1944-46. These attainments were made possible through intelligent planning, hard work, and co-operation of the stake presidency, stake bishopric, stake high council, stake evangelist, pastors, supervisors, and scores of leaders, plus a fine response from hundreds of Saints who reside among the twenty-four congregations in this area.

In making any report, we recognize there is always the danger of overstating what actually has been done, and, therefore, we shall be conservative in describing our activities for the last twenty-four months.

STAKE PRESIDENCY AND HIGH COUNCIL REORGANIZED

The Joint Council and General Conference of April, 1944, appointed Emery E. Jennings to Far West Stake as stake president, which necessitated a reorganization of the stake presidency and stake high council. This was done at the fall stake conference of 1944. James F. Bowman and Orville L. Moffet were asked to serve as counselors in the presidency, and the following high priests were asked to serve as stake high councilmen: Robert S. Farnham, Archie B. Constance, David W. Gamet, Robert P. Hampton, Alec Jensen, James A. Thomas, William E. Twombly, John Ruoff, and Garland Snapp. Immediately the reorganized quorums assumed the responsibilities that are imposed upon such officers.

SURVEYS MADE AND OBJECTIVES DETERMINED

In harmony with General Conference action of 1944, we made intensified studies and surveys of the congregations and areas which are most likely gathering points, namely; Stewartsville and Maple Grove, Cameron, Bedison, and Guilford.

The information amassed from these surveys and from other studies, clearly showed that we needed to give our attention to a well-planned immediate and long-time stake objective program, around which we could formulate a worth-while program for the priesthood, departmental leaders, and lay members. Therefore, early in 1945, the stake quorums and councils for the various departments met again and again in prayer, study, and discussion, in developing objectives for their respective departments. The stake presidency and stake bishopric, department of religious education, department of women, young adults, and Zion's League, completed their work and a "Five Year Program" with pertinent objectives, which were presented and unanimously approved by the stake quorums, and unanimously supported by the stake reunion conference of 1945. Subsequently, the objectives for each department, with suggested ways and methods to achieve them, were printed in booklets and made available to our people to be used as guides for the next four years. Undergirding the departmental goals, are the administrative objectives, which give unity and strength to the complete five year program.

EVANGELISM AND RECLAMATION

Missionary work and the reclaiming of indifferent Saints have been united in one general program. Our conferences, rallies, retreats, and reunion programs have given a great deal of emphasis to these needs, and the general results have been favorable. During the year of 1944, we baptized 92 persons, and in 1945, we baptized 76 individuals. Our church attendances have steadily increased in most of our congregations for the three main Sunday services, and weekday prayer meetings. Cottage meetings were held; series of gospel sermons were presented. We have stressed the need for our people to intelligently and boldly bear personal testimony of the divinity of our work, and we have encouraged our Saints to utilize every missionary opportunity.

FINANCE

The teaching of the financial law has been regular and consistent. The law has been stressed from the pulpit of each congregation every three months; a gift service has been planned in most of our congregations each December; and a Stake Inventory Day has been set aside each January. The priesthood have been encouraged to comply as well as the laity. Consequently, the results have been gratifying. For the two years, 1944-45, the Saints of Far West Stake have contributed to the general church in tithes, offerings, and oblations, $64,527.33. This sum represents the highest amount ever contributed from the Saints of Far West stake for any two-year period.

In 1945, seventeen and eight-tenths per cent of our people filed inventories and statements, while twenty-six per cent of the Saints were tithepayers. This showing is considerably better than 1944, and indicates a steady growth in understanding of, appreciation for, and compliance to the financial law.

BUILDING PROGRAM

Two church buildings have been purchased, one at Osborn, Missouri, and one at St. Joseph, Missouri. The building at Osborn is of frame construction, and has a seating capacity of one hundred and twenty-five people. The St. Joseph building is of brick construction and will seat three hundred persons. It has several good classrooms, large lower auditorium, and a very fine parsonage that is attached to the main building. The Third St. Joseph, Missouri, congregation will worship here.

The church building for the Second St. Joseph congregation was destroyed beyond use by fire in February, 1945. Plans have been completed, and the Saints of this congregation have begun the erection of a new building. It will have a seating capacity of two hundred and twenty-five. It will be of brick and masonry construction with adequate classrooms, a full lower auditorium, and an up-to-date kitchen.

Also, the congregation at Hamilton, Missouri, has purchased one-half block of ground and has plans almost completed to start the construction of a church that will have a seating capacity of one hundred and twenty-five.

Other groups are setting up building reserve funds, looking forward to the construction of new edifices.

ORGANIZATION OF MISSIONS

We organized two missions in 1945, one at Kearney, Missouri, and one at Osborn, Missouri. The Saints living in and around Kearney worship in a school building near the small town. We believe that in a comparatively short time, this group will develop into a good-sized congregation. We were fortunate to purchase a church building at Osborn. For several weeks, the Saints in this community have been repairing the building, and it will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks.

YOUNG ADULT GROUP ORGANIZED

Our surveys strongly indicated the need for an organization that would give direction to our young adults from the ages of twenty-five to forty, approximately. A stake young adult supervisor and a council of ten members were elected. This council with the assistance of the stake supervisor and stake presidency, developed a five-year program with objectives. This program was printed in a booklet and made available to the young adults of the stake. Two rallies have been held. The response has been good, and this organization is providing inspiration and leadership to a very large percentage of our membership.

RECORDS

During the two-year period, a consistent effort has been made to bring the membership records in each branch throughout the stake up to date. Our decrease in stake membership, as shown by the statistical report, is the result of a general cleaning out process of our stake records of old deaths and transfer outs.

THE GATHERING

The work of the gathering has continued at a rather steady rate. During the two-year period, approximately eighteen (18) families have moved in to the stake. We have been made happy as we welcomed these newcomers, and introduced them to the work of the church under a stake form of organization. We believe for the most part, these incoming Saints have become fairly well adjusted to their new environment, and are happily engaged in church and community activities.

It is possible for the work of the gathering to be accelerated, and yet remain within the boundary of sound assimilation. We are mindful of the instruction given to the church by revelation, that only those who meet certain qualifications are to gather, and those, not in haste. One of the stake objectives is to develop an appreciation of the problems related to the gathering, and set up the means whereby those who gather may be instructed, cultivated, and assimilated in the activities and program of the stake.

REUNION IMPROVEMENTS

The financial operations of the two reunions during 1944 and 1945 were very satisfactory and in line with the established policy of reunion operation, the net gains were transferred to the reunion building fund. We have made a substantial increase in the reunion building fund during the two-year period, bringing the total of that fund to an amount of $14,139.19. Our building plans are completed, and as soon as materials and labor are available, we shall start building on our new reunion grounds.

LOOKING AHEAD

Our stake has been objectified; our priesthood, supervisors, leaders, and workers are being trained. We have a stake five year program, our 1946 schedule is complete, and plans for priesthood, women's conferences, Zion's League, and young adult activities, stake-wide preaching services for the several departments, financial days, council meetings, reunion dates, and other activities.

We have administrative machinery to assist financially and to supervise eligible and worthy Saints as farm tenants and in vocational enterprises and in securing an education. These are the initial steps, and will give us needed training and experience to better and more intelligently administer future zionic undertakings.

We look toward the day when we must come to grips with the problems of economic stewardship, the organization of the storehouse, and the consecration of surplus, whenever the general church deems it advisable to actually begin.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION

We have enjoyed laboring with each other, with the priesthood and lay members of the stake, and with the general church officials. We have achieved many fine and worthy goals. We have seen and felt the presence of the Holy Ghost in our council sessions and worship services. We are appreciative for the time, money, and effort that scores of good individuals have given in service the last two years.

We know these are times of vital issues which must be faced with confidence and faith in one another, in the power of the Holy Ghost, and in the love of our Heavenly Father.

REPORT OF

Lamoni Stake

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr., and Lewis E. Landsberg

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

Any purposive activity is directed toward something. It soon became apparent to those selected to provide the leadership for this stake that for their own good, as well as the interests of the membership in general, a study must be made of the purpose and function of stake organization. High Council committees brought their findings to sessions of the council, presidency, and bishopric to which other men were invited who had a background of stake experience. A study of stake history against a background of current conditions resulted in the preparation of a document setting forth, as far as the work in this part of the church is concerned at least, a definition of stake organization, and requisite conditions for stake functioning—social, economic, personnel, organic structure, etc. President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp approved the final draft of the document in an all-day conference with the stake officers, January 28, 1945.

A comparison of the ideal stake or the "pattern" for a stake with existing conditions soon made evident a difference. That "difference" became the long-time program of development for the stake.

BUILDING A UNITY OF EFFORT

Stake organization presupposes a unity of effort and harmonious relationship of its congregational units. These measures have contributed to this end:

1. Stake Sundays—Members of the presidency, bishopric, and high council have visited every branch in the stake at least once a month during the two-year conference period. Stake officers profited by learning to a greater extent the needs and problems of the branches, and the branches came to see that they were integral parts of the stake. This activity will continue.
2. A Stake Newspaper—The Stake Record has been published for two years for the purpose of informing all branch members and nonresident Saints of stake activities. Twelve hundred copies of the paper are mailed each month to the homes of all church members in the stake. The paper is financed through the stake budget.

3. Quarterly pastors' Meetings—Pastors of the sixteen congregations have met every three months for a day of study and planning. Not only has there developed a fraternity among the brethren, but out of a co-ordinated study of the stake and its needs, a unified program has been made possible. Quarterly meetings have now been superseded by the Lamoni Stake pastors' and priesthood school which meets semi-monthly.
4. Regional Meetings—The value of interbranch visitation has been recognized. At least twice a year arrangements are made for a congregation to meet with one or more other congregations in an all-day meeting. Cultivation of better farm-village relationships through such meetings led to nationwide publicity through one of the popular farm magazines. As an annual event, Lamoni branch members visit in an organized way seven neighboring rural congregations. The following Sunday the seven rural branches participate with the Lamoni Saints in a Harvest Festival service.
5. Stake Reunion—The reunion is looked upon not as an isolated unit in the year's work but as a part of a larger year-around program of education, evangelism, and fraternity. Generally, therefore, the reunion is concerned definitely with the work of the stake and representation from every branch is sought for. For the past three years the locale of the reunion has been the beautiful campus of Graceland College and the inspiration and skill gained under the tutelage of general church and stake officers has made its influence felt in every congregational unit.
6. Stake Budget—Another step toward building an integrated stake was taken with the establishment of a stake budget. The expense of transportation on stake Sundays, the stake newspaper, certain missionary expenses, and much of the cost of the reunion is met through the annual budget with branch allocations which are approved by the conference.

EDUCATION FOR THE GATHERING

The influx of nearly one hundred fifty persons from fifteen States and Canada during the two-year report period clearly emphasizes the need for educational work designed to make the period of adjustment a short one and the transitional experience a happy one. Accordingly there has been incorporated into the program of the stake a semiannual series of four class sessions for all persons who have "gathered" during the preceding six months' period. Class topics include:

1. History of the stake
 2. Purpose and function of the stake
 3. Immediate and long-time objectives
 4. A picture of the stake with introduction of personnel
- Seventy per cent of the newcomers to this area have been participating in the classwork and as a climax to their studies have been publicly presented to the Lamoni community.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

In the organization of the educational phase of stake activity there have been these developments:

- a. A high council committee was appointed to initiate a program of religious education for the stake. This committee's report was called "A Compilation of Quality for the Schools of Lamoni Stake" and was published in the stake paper as a basis for further steps to be taken. Among those steps have been the appointing of a board of religious education for the stake, the purchasing of a library of all current materials published by the Department of Religious Education, and the holding of an institute in every branch for the purpose of strengthening the church schools.
- b. The vocational agriculture instructor of the Lamoni schools has been appointed agricultural education chairman for the stake and has assisted in the development of demonstration plots and in building up a file of study materials pertinent to the agricultural industry of the stake. Provisions have been made for a close working relationship with the Lamoni Fair committee in exhibiting the youth projects of crops and livestock at this annual event. Organization of Four-H clubs has been encouraged in several rural communities. An adult school, which is to become an annual affair, has been organized through church support and under the auspices of the Lamoni public school.

PRIESTHOOD ORDINATION AND TRAINING

During the past two years several men have been ordained to the priesthood. The year 1945 included in its activities twenty-four study sessions for stake priesthood as well as a four-day institute, reunion classwork, and a week-end Yuletide Conference. Included in subjects for consideration have been techniques of pastoral work and personal counseling, ministry to various age groups, stake organization and purpose, and the distinctive responsibilities of Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthood offices. This program of education formed the foundation for the stake pastors' and priesthood school which was set up in the early months of 1946.

CHURCH BUILDINGS

Most of the church buildings in the stake are in good repair, and several branches have begun funds for basements or other improvements. Lamoni's building fund continues to grow, and other steps have been taken toward the day of construction. With the general church appropriation of $30,000.00, there is now on hand more than $92,000.00. A contract was signed with the architectural firm of Bloomgarten and Frohwerk of Kansas City, and plans are developing toward the blueprint stage. The Lamoni branch maintained a high level of general church contributions while also raising $27,000.00 for building purposes.

FINANCIAL LAW ADHERENCE

A growing understanding and desire to comply with the financial law has been observed. Inventories and tithing statements have increased by one hundred per cent in the past two years. Sixty-five per cent of priesthood members are complying with financial law as contrasted with forty per cent at the time of our last report.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENTS

The membership of the stake, especially in the Lamoni region, have given their support and direction to a number of projects which are yielding economic returns. March 1, 1945, marked the date for the launching of a cattle improvement program which includes not only educational measures, but participation in an Artificial Breeding Association. More than eighty farmers are co-operating in this program. A community cannery has been developed in Lamoni. Hospitalization has been made possible on a community-wide basis under the Blue Cross plan and through the sponsorship of the church. Several hundred individuals are included in the plan.

EVANGELISM

A study group has been organized at Leon which meets semimonthly. A new mission promising sustained growth is the Riley Center mission seven miles west of Lamoni. However, though the opportunities are excellent, capable missionary personnel is limited, and the demands upon the time of the two full-time appointees to the stake, the bishop, and stake president are such as to limit extensive evangelistic operations by them. It is hoped that the training of priesthood and the appointment of another full-time worker to the stake will result in a stronger missionary program.

OUTLOOK

Stake presidency and bishopric, the high council, sixteen pastors, and departmental workers have served in an atmosphere of congeniality and with full support from the membership of the stake. The responsiveness of those they lead heightens the seriousness of leadership tasks for those upon whom this stewardship rests. It is their hope and intention to build a take of Zion representative of the One who leads us all.

REPORT OF

Kansas City Stake

By Blair Jensen and L. Wayne Updike

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

During the interconference period, Kansas City Stake has moved along as have other stakes and districts in the church quite in line with conditions forced upon us by the war economy. With the Saints everywhere, we rejoice in the termination of conflict and the return of our boys to us. (We were fortunate in-so-far as the loss of life in consideration of the number of our men in service.) Nevertheless we are aware that every gold star anywhere is symbolic of the deep grief and mourning of many relatives and a host of friends. It would seem that out of such harsh experiences we would be more diligent in telling the story of the gospel, but the fact remains that during the past year in Kansas City Stake, our baptisms were lower than the preceding year. Our pastors join us in this feeling of urgency, and we believe that there are signs of awakening sufficient to warrant the conviction that baptisms will be increasing.

The income of the stake has generally followed the economic conditions extant. In 1944 the total of tithes and general church offerings was $36,826.61. In 1945 this increased to $44,101.71. In addition the college day contributions amounted to $789.97, of which $436.85 was for furnishing the new dormitory. Our principal effort has been directed toward the necessity of keeping the law. In 1944 the number of people who complied with the initial step in stewardship accounting was 351. In 1945 this number increased to

469. While there are still a great many who evidently have not been converted to this primary aspect of stewardship, yet we are repeatedly impressed by the spirit of consecration and devotion which motivates a large part of our church membership in the stake.

In local funds the income of the stake was $22,386.15 in 1944 and $25,091.53 in 1945. In the disposition of these funds, we have attempted to strike a balance between our desires to increase the building fund to a consequential amount and our interest in improving our houses of worship as rapidly as prices and availability of materials would permit.

In 1944 the addition to the building fund was $10,005.21. In 1945 the amount was $12,334.92. During these same years the expenditures for building maintenance and equipment were $2,045.57 in 1944 and $2,962.40 in 1945. Our places of worship include nine churches and one building which has been remodeled for use as a church. The Marlborough and Van Brunt congregations each meet in a rented building.

We are not unmindful of the fact that some of our stake income has been attributable to the war-born prosperity, but we also feel that the attitudes and quality of life which direct this money into the church are indications of a type of strength which is more important than monetary and which is essential in an ever-widening range.

During the interconference period, a sizeable number of Saints moved into our area. Many of them are planning to stay, and to this end are doing all in their power to secure jobs that are permanent. Those who have been interested enough to make themselves known to the congregations have been a very fine class of people. Their contributions have been appreciated very much. Many others evidently were members in name only in their home areas, and they have been members in name only in our stake.

We note also a trend evidenced by many of our families to move out into suburban areas on all sides of Kansas City and buy homes. This concentration is noticeably strong in North Kansas City, Missouri, and in Johnson County, Kansas. In such fields there exists the opportunity for evangelism which should result not only in gaining new members but in building up new congregations as well. In spite of the fact that many families reside a greater distance from their church home, we find that the past year has been one of increased attendance at Sunday morning services. To date, in 1946, this trend is definitely continuing. It undoubtedly is to some extent influenced by returning veterans who not only attend themselves, but their presence makes it possible for members of their immediate families to be in attendance. These brethren, who were active when they went away to the wars, have continued their church activity immediately upon their return. A goodly number, who were mere boys when they left, return to us now as men and are giving themselves immediately to church responsibility with an interest and maturity beyond reasonable expectancy.

To the Saints of the general church everywhere, we can pledge the Saints of Kansas City Stake as a group devoted, dependable, and willing at every turn to assist in any way indicated the forward movement of the church of God.

REPORT OF

The Quorum of High Priests

By Ward A. Hougas

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

We present herewith our report of the quorum activities for the Conference period now drawing to a close.

The Conference of 1944 saw the introduction of a number of topics in the quorum discussions which opened fields of study and research. At the close of the Conference four committees were appointed which have labored in the interim, collecting data and developing their thought in such a way that the program for the present conference rather automatically resolves itself into further consideration of these important questions.

Added to this is the interest in such fields of activity as the adaption of evangelistic methods of present-day needs, the matter of ordinations, and so forth.

The Conference period has not been marked by any particular development other than that of the development of our program for this Conference. Elder Blair Jensen, one of our counselors, has continued to live in Kansas City and has been available for consultation. Likewise, Brother Emery Jennings, our secretary, has been in St. Joseph, and we have maintained considerable contact with him. Brother Sheehy, our other counselor, has been far removed, and thus has not been available for consultation.

We have had correspondence with many of the members of the quorum and have attempted to assist where we were able to.

We note that our average age is becoming very high which means that our ordinations are not keeping the pace with our advancement in ages.

It is the desire of the quorum to function in such a way that it may truly make a worth-while contribution to the work of the kingdom. Whether or not our understanding of this responsibility is complete enough to make this possible is at times questioned, and we are, therefore, giving considerable time and attention to the matter of the place of the quorum in the general church setup.

We expect to maintain a booth this year, as usual, which, we trust, will serve as a headquarters for the quorum and will, also, be something of a service center to many others who may need such help as the members of the quorum may be able to offer.

Our members stand in important positions all over the church. This gives added responsibilities, and it is our hope that in some way we may serve them in such a manner as will bring them not only encouragement but practical help as well.

The grim reaper continues to exact a heavy toll from our membership each year, and the passing of these noble warriors of the kingdom brings to us something of a sense of challenge that we, too, may as efficiently and willingly continue in service.

We are hopeful. We believe that we see possibilities before us which are worthy of the best that we possess.

We face this Conference solemnly and, yet, expectantly, desiring that steps may be taken which will definitely offer encouragement to every laborer in the kingdom.

WARD A. HOUGAS,
President of the Quorum.

It is not work that kills men; it is worry. Work is healthy; you can hardly put more upon a man than he can bear. Worry is rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery, but the friction. Fear secretes acids; but love and trust are sweet juices.—Henry Ward Beecher.

All the means of action—the shapeless masses, the materials—lie everywhere about us; what we need is the celestial fire to change the flint into transparent crystal, bright and clear.—Longfellow.

REPORT OF

First Quorum of Seventy

By Maurice L. Draper

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

At the General Conference of 1944 the number of the first Quorum of Seventy was increased by the ordination of nine excellent men. They have added in a great measure to the missionary effectiveness of the quorum, and carry a high percentage of the statistics here reported on their reports to the quorum. We are hopeful that the strength of the quorum will be further increased through the call and ordination of many more such fine ministers.

As of the date of this report, 26 of the 52 members of the quorum are serving as General Conference appointees, many of the others are taking advantage of the abundant opportunities to do work locally in branches and districts, and 6 are retired or superannuated. This latter group renders yet a most valuable missionary ministry. As stated by Brother Hubert Case, superannuated at the last conference, and now laboring as conditions of health permit, "Independence is my best field so far." He has demonstrated this by baptizing 49 during the past two years, although almost half of that time was lost because of a heart attack. This same spirit is characteristic also of other superannuated ministers.

Of the entire number of 52 members and 6 superannuated and retired ministers, 40 of the regular members and 5 of the superannuated and retired men have reported. These reports indicate that the men under appointment are not only serving as missionaries, but when occasion requires it they serve also as pastors, district presidents, and assistants to the apostles in charge of their fields. Sometimes these duties, particularly those of presiding work, become necessary because of a shortage of personnel in all branches of the appointed priesthood. We share with all the quorums the hope that the time will soon come when our ranks will be sufficiently filled with men of all callings so that the men of the seventy can give increasing attention to the first duty of the office—that of directing and conducting the missionary functions of the church.

Among the superannuated men there are some who are serving as guides at the Auditorium and at Nauvoo. There are also men of the regular quorum membership who are serving the church in these places by receiving our visitors and telling them the story of the Restoration as they come to Independence, Nauvoo, and Kirtland.

Special activities of the seventy in addition to their regular work are noted from the reports of the men. Some of these activities are: Church school teaching, Boy Scout committee work, reunion committee work, indexing the Saints' Herald, correspondence regarding "Mormonism," selection and production of literature on special subjects, presiding over men's clubs, directorship of credit union, directing radio programs, religious education in the public schools of the Territory of Hawaii, guide work at the Auditorium, Nauvoo, and Kirtland, and in many incidental activities too numerous to mention.

The First Quorum of Seventy joins the rest of the church in prayers for a General Conference rich in spiritual blessings, and great in prophetic power, and that the cause of the kingdom may be advanced, we pledge ourselves to the service of Christ.

MAURICE L. DRAPER, Secretary

REPORT OF

Central Missouri Stake

(Formerly Holden Stake)

By Ward A. Hougas and Theodore A. Beck

*To the First Presidency,
and The General Conference:*

Our report is given this year under a new name—that of Central Missouri Stake. This action was taken by the Stake Conference held on March 1, 2, 3, 1946, after having been approved by the First Presidency. Such new designation seemed wise in view of the fact that headquarters have not actually been at Holden for many years. The territory has been enlarged, also, to the point that any name other than one of general designation would be ambiguous. It was the unanimous decision of the conference that such change should be made.

The activities of 1945 marked, in many ways, the beginning of a new era for the stake in that general appointees were able to give full time to the tasks of both the presidency and the bishopric. During the latter part of the year, we also had the services of a general appointee missionary. From this combination the stake had a right to expect a measure of increased activities. In this anticipation we do not believe that the stake has been disappointed.

Besides the full-time appointees much strength of ministry has been forthcoming from the local ministry. Especially is this true of the high council, now composed of eleven members, and the group of loyal pastors and others throughout the stake. Some have given service in a way which challenges the respect and admiration of all.

The average attendance at the various services increased nine per cent during 1945. This increase was especially noticeable in the midweek prayer services—a factor which may point towards increased strength in all activities in the future.

Baptisms increased about 300 per cent during the year. This total is still very low and should be increased very materially during the present year. Sixty-seven were baptized last year, and have been credited to the groups as follows:

Bates City, 11; Warrensburg, 9; Harrisonville, 8; Marshall, 7; Knob Noster, 6; Atherton, 5; Lee's Summit, 5; Buckner, 4; Cross Timbers, 3; Blue Springs, 3; Holden, 3; Post Oak, 3.

Five congregations had no baptism. More work needs to be done in the near future, looking towards the programming of a more continuous schedule of activities for the various congregations. Individuals need to be enlisted in the active work of contacting both members and nonmembers as a forerunner of intensive missionary efforts by the stake missionary and qualified local men. Brother James C. Daugherty, our stake missionary, is doing good work but needs more local support on the part of both officers and membership. Brother E. P. Darnell, of the stake high council, is serving as missionary supervisor for the stake and carries the major portion of the responsibility of the work of directing these forces.

During the past year a new congregation was organized at Buckner. After less than a year of organized life, they are developing into a fine congregation with an average attendance crowding towards the half-hundred mark. The group at Clinton was also added to the stake, but no organized movement has begun there. They are, at present, worshipping with the Post Oak congregation fourteen miles distant. The Cross Timbers group in Hickory County was also added to the stake and are functioning nicely under the direction of Elder Roy Tilden, as pastor. The group at Osawatimie, Kansas, was given to the Kansas City stake and is now functioning with them.

Group activities in nearly all congregations have shown a definite increase during the past year and contributing to the rising interest that is becoming apparent at most all points.

In January of this year, a series of priesthood consultations was held by the stake presidency assisted by two members of the stake high council. One hundred thirty-four men were contacted, and a very fine series of interviews developed.

GENERAL FUNDS

There was a very pronounced trend upward during the years of 1944 and 1945 in the income of tithes, general, and special offerings to the general church and its affiliated institutions, such as Graceland College, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, the Oblation Fund, and Bequests.

The last five years—the years of war, higher wage and higher prices for farm products—have reflected in the definite increase in income each year, 1945 reaching an all-time record for Central Missouri stake of $30,927.57. In fact, the 1944 income of $18,954.37 was an all-time record up to that date. The low year during the last seventeen-year period was 1935 with an income of $3,383.69 which was in the midst of the depression and drouth years. The average income for the past seventeen years was $9,081.06, while the average income for the last two years was $24,940.97.

There has also been a marked increase in inventories filed in the last two years, nearly 100 per cent increase.

STAKE FUNDS

The stake activities are financed on a budget basis, each congregation contributing its share. The reunion and young people's activities were self-supporting. There was a balance on hand December 31, 1945, in the Stake Funds of $2,179.81. Out of this an amount of $1,000.00 has been paid toward Central Missouri Stake's share of the Gardner Lake Project.

BRANCH FINANCE

In addition to the fine record that the Saints of Central Missouri Stake have made for themselves in the past two years, in contributions to the general church and toward stake activities, without an exception, there has been definite improvements made in their local situations. The following will not give in detail everything that has been done, but it will give an overall view.

Blue Springs, Buckner, and the Pleasant Hill-Harrisonville congregations have each purchased new buildings in which to meet. Lee's Summit, Post Oak, and Sedalia have made real improvements to their buildings, both inside and out. Marshall, Lexington, and Warrensburg have either redecorated or made other extensive changes on the interior of their buildings. Grandview (Missouri), Atherton, Bates City, and Knob Noster are working on plans and some have already started to improve their buildings. Jefferson City, Bates City, and Warrensburg are raising funds to buy or build. Jefferson City sold their building. The building funds on hand, looking toward improving the facilities for church and church school in several of the congregations, will range from $500.00 to $5,500.00.

Another improvement which we think should have recognition is that each congregation in the stake has, in the last two years, started operating on the budget system, which has helped to create balances on hand ranging from $50.00 to $800.00.

THE GATHERING

There has been a large influx of families into the stake in the last two years. Some have started in businesses, others placed in employment, with the majority having settled on farms. It has been encouraging to see a number of our returned servicemen with their families settle in the stake and enter into the

News OF THE CHURCHES

NOTICE

Many correspondents are expressing the regret of their congregations over the passing of President Frederick M. Smith. We appreciate these kindly memorials, but lack of space will not permit us to publish all of them.

Detroit, Michigan

City Pastor, D. O. Chesworth

The Detroit branch, representing eighty-three and one-third per cent of the Detroit-Windsor district in membership, operated the thirteen congregations throughout the metropolitan area in 1946 registering increases in attendance despite a seven per cent decrease in branch enrollment caused by the postwar exodus and loss of unknown members through transfer.

A number of the ministry has turned in annual reports of priesthood participation. This procedure has been resumed after a lapse of seven years. Priesthood quorum sessions in the district have created much interest among branch members.

Departmental activity has increased splendidly; six active young adult groups have been organized, with plans being made for the seventh. Most of the congregations and missions have organized Zion's League groups; two have senior Leagues caring for the needs of the older young people. Orioles and Blue Birds are now functioning under the city-wide direction of Gertrude Gault.

The men's club of Detroit has continued to grow under the capable leadership of Roland Arnold and his committee; average attendance is approximately 125. The men and boys attending the father and son banquet greatly enjoyed the address by Elder John Sheehy of Toronto.

While in Detroit, Elder Sheehy was guest speaker at various young adult meetings and at several of the congregational services.

The women's department continues to make a splendid contribution under the direction of City Leader Ena Slasor and her corps of assistants.

Detroit branch contributed $38,815 to the general church in 1945. The local income totaled $26,697; the two figures combined not only show an increase over 1944, but are the highest on record.

The colored Saints of Northfield Mission have registered an increase in attendance at the February preaching services of over 100 per cent as compared to last year. A choir has been organized to sing at the Sunday morning services, which are held at the Dean home, 15459 Log Cabin, in Detroit.

Without exception every congregation and mission show promise for the future. During the past four years, Lola Valley congregation has led in missionary participation. Eighty-six people have been baptized in this mission; they are now preparing a study for future reference.

An inspirational worship service was presented at a combined meeting of the women's groups of Lola Valley and Plymouth held February 28. City pastor D. O. Chesworth addressed the group in a sermon on the home.

Union prayer meetings are held every three months in the three areas of the city; they have proved very successful. The most recent one was conducted at Down River.

Detroit Saints were blessed by the ministry of Apostle E. J. Gleazer in his participation in the Detroit-Windsor district conference.

March 8, 9, and 10 are the dates set for the activities of the Zion's League convention to be held at Central Church. Under the direction of Elders Richard Wood and Arthur Karpeles, League activities have been greatly promoted, and an increasing interest is being manifested by the young people.

Harold McAllister has been assigned pastor of the Royal Oak congregation.

Baptisms for the year totaled seventy; one member was reinstated. Although this is a decrease as compared to the previous year, the adult quota was maintained; the absence of children of baptismal age is responsible for the loss. A recent survey of the last 500 members to be baptized shows that one per cent has passed away, twelve per cent have moved, and sixteen per cent have become inactive. Thirteen per cent of the children and twenty-one per cent of the adults are reported as inactive.

The Detroit branch "Bulletin" is edited each month by Merle Boyd, secretary of the branch. She has a representative of the branch contribute an editorial for each edition. The sale of church literature in Detroit has increased noticeably with the advertizing sponsored by the "Bulletin."

Cadet Nurse Phyllis Sharp, home on vacation, and Russell Keen, discharged veteran, were honored at a party recently. The evening was spent in playing games; sandwiches, cake, and fruit salad were served as refreshments.

Leora Hoffman, young people's leader, was hostess at a waffle supper held February 17 honoring Jim and Jack Braby who have since moved to a different community. Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Braby were given a surprise party by their friends on the evening of February 25; fifty were present to bid them farewell.

The women of Oland congregation held a food sale on Saturday, February 23; the money cleared on the project will be added to the basement fund.

The children, under the direction of Mrs. F. J. Sharp, presented the worship service on Sunday morning, February 24. Harry Lorange gave the 11 o'clock sermon; Kathryn Tabor and Roy Kopp sang a duet.

Enfield, England

Pastor, D. A. Oakman

An outstanding prayer and fellowship meeting followed the December Communion service. Many inspiring testimonies were given, especially by the young people, and the Spirit of God was felt by those present.

On the evening of December 23, Pastor T. E. Worth planned a lovely service, including carols, appropriate scripture readings, a short address, and special music. A Christmas party for the entire branch was held the last of December; many were present to enjoy this event.

The announcement made by Pastor Worth at the end of November that he had been appointed to the American mission field for two years came as a surprise to most of the Enfield Saints. Brother Worth and his wife will most certainly be missed for the many ways in which they have ministered; the branch has been greatly benefitted as a result of their labors. The annual business meeting was held on Saturday, January 19, at 3:30 p. m.; Elder F. O. Davies and J. H. Coggan were present, with T. E. Worth in charge. In his pastoral report, Brother Worth stated that the past year had been one of steady progress, and much good had been accomplished. In other reports, a note of hopefulness was sounded that, with increased opportunity of planning activities made possible by the cessation of war, the coming year would be one of even greater progress.

The most important item on the agenda was the election of a local minister to act as pastor. At the beginning of the meeting, the Saints were reminded of their responsibility to choose for the welfare of the work in Enfield. Four nominations were made, but two nominees declined. On ballot the result was in favor of Elder D. A. Oakman, a lifetime member of the branch. All other officers were sustained for the ensuing year as follows: Sister R. Worth, secretary and recorder; Sister L. Oakman, publicity agent and librarian; W. Sykes, historian; Dover A. Judd, director of music; Sister N. Wicks, women's leader; Sister V. Worth, director of religious education; W. Lawrence, treasurer; Sister R. Worth and F. W. Judd, auditors. At the end of the meeting, the new pastor presented the retiring pastor with a monetary gift on behalf of the branch.

On the following Sunday morning, Elder Davies spoke on the coming forth of the kingdom of God. The evening service, besides being the occasion of the farewell address of Brother Worth and induction of Pastor Oakman, was in commemoration of the forty-third anniversary of the organization of the branch. In his address, Brother Worth paid tribute to the stalwarts of the early days, and to everyone who had contributed to the work in Enfield. He also thanked the members of the branch for their co-operation during the three and a half years he had labored in Enfield, and for their gift to him. He urged a rededication to the work of the church that the desires of the pioneers of forty-three years ago might be realized. Elder Oakman, when called upon to speak, said that the pastorate was a position he had not sought. His desire was that unity of the faith might be attained and the major objective accomplished, which, in his mind, was the leading of those outside the church to the work of Christ.

Three forum discussions have been held; Elder Dover Judd led the ones on "Healing the Sick" and "Truth as We See It." Elder F. O. Davies was in charge of the discussion on "Revelation." These forums have been highly educational.

At the business meeting held by the women's department, Sister N. Wicks was sustained as leader. The blessing of improved health which she received last year has enabled her to minister more fully in this office. Activities scheduled for the department are as follows: a monthly study of the Doctrine and Covenants; a monthly study of Old Testament prophets; reading of books; general meetings including worship services, poetry, music appreciation programs, and the singing of favorite hymns. At one meeting Sister Wicks gave an illustrated lecture on "Made Do and Mend." As clothing coupons are still a problem, this lecture was of great interest.

Much good is being accomplished through the work of the church school. The older scholars were taken to St. Paul's Cathedral for their annual treat last year. An award service was also held, at which prizes for good attendance were presented. Children who were evacuated from London continued corresponding with those who stayed and upon their return began attending classes. Several of the children, although not of Latter Day Saint parentage, are interested in becoming members. Sunday morning classes are now an established feature of the religious education program.

In spite of war difficulties, members of the Zion's League continued to hold varied and interesting programs throughout the year. These included social evenings; a series of Book of Mormon character studies, talks from visiting speakers; picture appreciation services; a ramble; literary and musical programs; group discussions; and an illustrated lecture on "Old Enfield." Special speakers during the year were J. Barrington from Manchester who spoke on the building of Zion; John White, U. S. A., who spoke on Grace-land College; and James Renau whose talk was on his experiences in the Army.

The following officers were elected at the League business meeting held in February: Rose Worth, president; William Judd, vice-president; Lillian Carr, secretary; and Francis Castle, treasurer. Frank Judd had served as president since the inauguration of the League at Enfield, but last year reached the age limit for membership; a letter of thanks was sent to him for his willing and devoted services. Rose Worth served as vice-president for a number of years. Only once were League services canceled during the war. Now that the "black-out" has been lifted, meetings are held every Thursday evening during the winter months.

Although at the beginning of 1945 scheduled programs were considerably hampered by war conditions, the Orioles, under the leadership of Sister M. Maloney, participated in various activities during the year. In early June they did an excellent piece of catering work at the Arts and Crafts Exhibition, turning the small schoolroom into a cafe, appropriately called the "Oriole Nest." The girls decided to bear all expenses incurred, and the total intake netted over seven pounds. This money was handed over to the main fund.

When the branch librarian asked for volunteers to clean the library in preparation for the district conference, the Orioles willingly offered their services. Under the direction of the librarian, they sorted and covered the books. At the conference, they were asked by the women's department to help with the catering. This they did by preparing tables, serving, and clearing up after the meals, and helping wherever they were needed. A thanksgiving party was held after VJ-day; a brief service preceded the social part of the program which enabled the girls to enter into the fun and games with hearts made glad by worship.

Several new girls have attended since summer and were initiated into the group during October. Badges for handcraft, knitting and cycling were presented, together with several armlets for first rankers. Attendance at this group now averages sixteen each week. In two and a half years the girls have raised over 1,000 pounds (approximately $4,000) for war savings.

The Blue Bird group in Enfield is also progressing. Betty Worth has served as leader of the group for some time. Twelve girls attend regularly and show much enthusiasm in the activities, which include practical lessons in homecraft, the study of a children's "Life of Christ," learning hymns, dramatic work, and educational recreation. Parents are contacted, and their support of the work in the homes is encouraged. The most recent activity was an initiation service, during which the director of religious education gave a talk. —Lily E. A. Oakman, reporter.

Cash, Michigan

Pastor, Eldon C. Winters

The church building, which was in the process of being remodeled, was destroyed in a windstorm on April 4, 1945; the loss was covered by insurance. A special branch meeting was held immediately in which plans for a new church home were drawn up by the building committee and presented to the general church officials for approval. Work on the new church began in July, and should be completed by spring. The new building is to have some definite Latter Day Saint features; the large front window will contain the church seal; a baptismal font will be on the main floor, and the three church books will be on the altar. While the new church is being built, meetings are held in an empty house loaned to the branch by Brother Frank Fetting.

Elders D. O. Chesworth, John Booth, and Aubrey Murray were present at several priesthood meetings held during the year to give advice and answer questions arising in the group. Many attended the priesthood clinic held in Port Huron under the direction of Apostles E. J. Gleazer and F. Henry Edwards.

On September 9 the church school held its annual election of officers. Harvey Maedel was re-elected leader. The branch business meeting was also held in September; Eldon Winters was sustained as pastor.

Chatham, Ontario

Elder Harry A. Engle, Pastor

On Sunday evening, January 20, Chatham Saints had the privilege of having as their special speaker, Frank Shuefelt, of Detroit. Brother Shuefelt gave a very interesting illustrated sermon on church history, and Sister Shuefelt, who assisted him by handling the slides projected on the screen, sang a very beautiful solo, "The Garden of Prayer." This visit from Brother and Sister Shuefelt was much appreciated.

An all-branch pie social was held Thursday evening, February 24, and proved to be a success. The evening's activities opened with a song fest; Marnie Neal was at the piano. "Dr. I. Q." Wayne Gibson and his able assistant, Gordon Pritchard, conducted a very lively quiz contest, the jack-pot question being won by V. E. Pritchard. The colorfully wrapped pies, baked by the ladies, were sold by William Tucker, a very capable auctioneer. The proceeds from this evening of pleasant fellowship are to be used in purchasing paint for the exterior of the church.

On Sunday, February 3, Bishop J. C. Dent of London preached at the 7 p. m. service; Chatham Saints welcomed this fine speaker again to their church home. Bishop Dent chose for the central thought of his evening sermon "Let all these things be done in order."

A valentine party was held Wednesday evening, February 13, by the junior Zion's League in the church basement. Active games and contests followed by a distribution of valentines and lunch provided an excellent social evening for February.

On Thursday, February 14, a valentine "hot supper" was sponsored by the women's department of the branch; many of the Saints took advantage of this splendid opportunity to eat a delicious, home-cooked meal. The ladies worked diligently to make their contribution the success it was. Under the leadership of Margaret Dent and her assistants, Margaret Rapley and Helen Kelly, the women have been holding their meetings regularly twice a month and have been enjoying special lectures on "Planning the Zion Home," given by the Pastor.

"Study" was the theme used by the junior church for the month of February; Elder Engle also used this theme for the text of his sermon on Sunday evening, February 24. As requested, junior church and junior high age groups were represented at this service. John Bowan is junior supervisor.

On January 27 an inspiring prayer service was held at which spiritual and prophetic words of guidance were given through the pastor to those who gathered that Sunday morning to worship God. This spirit prevailed at a special ordination service held Friday evening, February 22, when Brother J. V. Dent was ordained to the office of elder. A music prelude was played by Marnie Neal, and the invocation prayer was offered by Elder D. O. Chesworth, Detroit city pastor. Apostle E. J. Gleazer then read from the eighty-third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and spoke regarding the ordination of Brother Dent, giving a personal testimony concerning the evidence of the divinity of this open call which came to the local Saints during the prayer service of January 27. Bishop J. C. Dent of London, elder brother of J. V. Dent, gave the charge to the congregation. Brother J. V. Dent then approached the altar, and Pastor H. A. Engle delivered the charge to him. Brother Dent signified his desire to accept the call to the office of elder and took his place on the rostrum for ordination by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, assisted by Bishop J. C. Dent and Elder H. A. Engle. Bishop Dent then welcomed Elder J. V. Dent into the priesthood of the Melchisedec order. Direction of the campaign was placed in the hands of Maben Speer; with the help of a volunteer committee he has set the pledge system in action. Calendars with an architect's sketch of the proposed new church were given to every family to serve as a reminder in making payments promptly. Most of the activities of the departments of the branch are motivated by the building fund drive.

Each Friday evening is family recreation night at the annex, and offerings dropped into the "grub stake" can be added to the fund.

The women again deserve much credit for the work they are doing. The plan was to buy a $25 series "F" bond for the fund each month, but the response was so encouraging that the number has been doubled. The women have also purchased dishes to add to the cupboards.

Top honors go to members of the junior church department, under the leadership of Keiso Tsuji and Lellia McLees, for the very fine banquet they planned and served in observance of their second anniversary on February 15. The net profit from the project was over $56. The juniors sold and collected tickets, and helped serve the meal.

The Leaguers must be given credit for part of the success of the banquet, because of their gift of a new steam table with pans, which made the serving much easier. The League continues to be very active; at present the Doctrine and Covenants is being studied each Sunday evening. Pastor Paul Bear is supervisor of the class, but the lessons are presented by the members themselves. One person tells the historic background of the revelation under study, another gives the high points of it, a third summarizes it, and then all discuss what it means to present-day Saints. A prayer service is held every third Sunday of the month. These meetings are well attended and participation is very good; many of the younger children attend and take part.

The return of John Senter, Jr., from the Army has added another active member to the League. Albert Barrington and Elwood Smith, now in the Navy, are expecting discharges soon. The four Leaguers at Graceland are Leonard Speer, Elva Barrington, Donald and Basil Higginbotham.

Special music was provided for the services by Inez Rich, Zion Steede, Romaine Lafferty, and Donnabelle Atwood. Elder Hunker officiated at the blessing of Jackie and Joyce Lamoureux on Sunday, July 22.

Lyle Steede, SK 3/c, who served eighteen months in the south Pacific, and Pfc. Darrell Lafferty who served in France, Germany, and Austria, were home on furlough recently. Another member of the congregation, Harry Steede, Jr., is now in service; he has just completed his basic training at Great Lakes.

Lorraine Lewis, who has been serving as group treasurer and solicitor, has moved with her husband, recently discharged from military service, to Forrester, Illinois.

Brother Hunker was a welcome visitor again in January. He delivered four sermons and was in charge of the January Communion service during his stay.

Howard Steede has returned home and is serving the congregation as church school director.

Members of the women's department meet twice a month and are studying An Introductory Study of the Book of Mormon by C. B. Woodstock and Sylvia McKeage.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Ihde and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Rich are enjoying an extended wedding trip in the southern states and Mexico.

Fort William, Ontario

Pastor, Anson A. Miller

The Fort William Saints are quite encouraged with the results of their efforts in establishing a building fund. Although there are only forty-one members enrolled, $740 were contributed in 1945, making a total of $2,000 to be invested in Victory Bonds for the fund.

Ada Carlson of Barnum, Minnesota, was at the Lakehead from December 30 to January 1 in the interest of the Zion's League. Her visit was greatly appreciated.

Missionary J. H. Yager was in charge of the evening's activities at the annual branch dinner party held January 22 at the pastor's home. Brother Yager conducted a series of cottage meetings from January 22 to 30, speaking every night except Saturday.

various stake activities.

As we look into the future of the Central Missouri Stake we are encouraged with the prospects for continued growth and development in all fields of activity.

"General Progress" is probably the term which should be applied to the work of the stake at large. This is due very much to the fine response on the part of the people to the leadership of the official personnel.

We humbly acknowledge the fine support of the Saints to all the activities in the stake and pray for guidance for the tasks before us.

REPORT OF

The Music Department

By Franklyn S. Weddle

*To the First Presidency
and The General Conference:*

Our work as appointee to the Music Department of the general church began July 1, 1944. Before this appointment and before assuming the duties of General Music Director, we assisted in the music for the Church of the Air broadcast in the early spring of 1944 and also assisted in arranging the music for the 1944 General Conference as well as preparing the performance of the Mozart Requiem at that conference. We also prepared and conducted the 1943 Messiah performance. Immediately following Conference in May, 1944, we had a May Festival at which time the Requiem was repeated.

One of the first activities of the Music Department was to establish a mailing list of local and district choristers and send out a suggested list of anthem material for use in the local branches. A later and more comprehensive list was sent out again last fall. The list contains suggestions for all grades of choirs and for all kinds of choirs, from the regular mixed choir to a ladies' choir, and for junior choirs. This list is available by request to those whose names are not yet on our mailing list.

We have appeared a number of times as lecturer on various subjects musical, and gave a series of lectures sponsored by the Department of Music.

We have assisted at two music institutes at Graceland College, and attended two reunions this past summer.

We held a Choir Directors' Clinic in January, 1945.

The music for two years of campus meetings was provided and arranged by us.

The Independence Little Symphony Orchestra was organized as an outgrowth of the orchestra assembled for last Conference, and has grown considerably since then. On that occasion we had 14 out of 30 players, and 16 were hired from Kansas City. Now we have 37 players and are hiring only one for our performance this conference. The quality of work is improving as well as the size. The orchestra accompanied the Messiah in 1944 and besides gave a concert in the May Festival. This season, 1945-1946, we are playing four concerts besides the Messiah accompaniment last December, and this year's Conference appearance.

The Messiah Choir gave the Messiah again last December, two performances, one at the Auditorium, and a broadcast over the Columbia network from KMBC. We received many fine letters from all over the United States following the broadcast.

We held another May Festival last spring, at which time it was augmented to four concerts. The Independence Music Club, the Chorus, the public schools, and the orchestra were the performing organizations. At this time the Community Music Association of Independence was organized. This is a community organization and is already making its influence for a higher culture in music felt in our community. We feel that the church should support a community effort such as this, so we are assisting it in every way possible. The association is sponsoring a May Festival again this year. The Independence Music Club, the orchestra, the public school music department, a piano ensemble concert through the assistance of the piano teachers of Independence, and a church choir festival will feature this year's festival.

In the fall of 1944, we instituted instrumental class lessons. The response was disappointing, only 15 boys and girls availed themselves of this opportunity. We were unable to find teachers, so had to do it personally. We have tried to induce the public schools to make class lessons available to 4th, 5th, and 6th graders and are hoping this will be possible next fall. If not, we are going to try it again, this time we will have more teachers available and will expect a bigger enrollment because we can now secure greater publicity for the project.

We have spent considerable time on the Stone Church organ project, and a very fine instrument has been secured. We were very materially assisted by Evan A. Fry, Bethel Davis, Robert Miller, Irene Wolfe, and Paul Craig.

The music for the past two Nauvoo Memorial Services was arranged for by this department.

We have helped secure musical instructors for the various youth camps for the Religious Education Department and help at the Zion's Religious Education Institute in 1944, as well as the Kansas City Stake Institute in that year, and again last year.

We have also held institutes in church music at Des Moines, Iowa, and Springfield, Missouri.

We have endeavored to assist by correspondence, a great many people throughout the church who have written in regarding musical needs and problems.

Looking ahead, we hope to continue our activity in community music. There is a wonderful opportunity for making Independence a better place in which to live through this medium.

We are planning, with the help of some of the organists of the church, to issue a list of acceptable organ music for use in the church, with the view of improving that phase of our music.

The anthem lists will be improved and extended from time to time and more material for junior choirs made available.

The church has a need for a young people's hymnbook, a project which we hope we can get under way very soon.

We are gradually accumulating material for a new Saints' Hymnal which we hope will more adequately meet our needs, and which will include hymns in some of the categories that are rather meager in the present book, i. e., Palm Sunday, baptism, confirmation, ordination, the Lord's Supper, blessing of children and others.

We envisage a continually improving quality in the music we use for worship as a result of the efforts of this department. We desire to serve to the best of our ability and urge the co-operation of the Saints and pastors in the accomplishment of our joint endeavor.

Franklyn S. Weddle.

Morality without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning,—an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have run, but without any observation of the heavenly bodies.—Longfellow—Kavanaugh.

Northeastern Illinois District Religious Education Conference

The two-day religious education conference of the northeastern Illinois district was held at Plano, Illinois, on March 16 and 17. Activities and services were planned by Roberta Gregory, district director of religious education, assisted by other officers of the district. Leaders worked together to achieve a constructive and unified program on the theme, "This We Could Do."

After a brief assembly period, the first scheduled activity took place at 2:15 p. m. Saturday. Following the opening hymn and invocation, Roberta Gregory told of meetings planned and goals to be attained, after which classes were held. Those interested in children's departmental work assembled in the lower auditorium. Irah Nelson, supervisor of children, discussed the importance of education through visual aids.

Elder Marion Blakely, supervisor of Zion's League, addressed the young people following a short worship period and group discussion. Roy Settles presided at a sample League meeting, after which a program was presented by his group. Matters of interest to young people were then discussed.

A class for the women's department was held under the supervision of Vida Rogers. Topics discussed were organization, officers and their duties, procedure during meetings, helps for program planning, and study materials. Ione Sanderson gave a talk on financial activities to be sponsored by women's groups, and told of some of the achievements and goals of the Aurora group. Magzona Fewell and Celia Olsen gave reports on social activities in the women's department, citing varied and successful activities held in Mission branch during the past year. Group discussion followed, after which items were displayed which typified projects and activities promoted by the women of several branches.

An elaborate and comprehensive display of materials and aids to better teaching was shown in the lower auditorium.

After an excellent supper provided by the Plano women, Elder Martin Blakely showed slides of points of interest in the westward journey made by early Saints; a program followed. Elder Arnold Settles led the group games in the lower auditorium, the last feature of a busy and enjoyable day.

Sunday's activities began at 9:30, the first service being a devotional. Elder Russell Rogers gave the talk, using "The Call to Learn" as his theme. At the service which followed, Mrs. Mabel White conducted a class demonstration period in which she explained the value of visual aids. The requirements of good teaching were elaborated upon at the discussion held at the end of the period.

Church school was conducted at 10 o'clock in the lower auditorium for the junior department. A junior church service followed with Irah Nelson in charge. A short talk on the gospel ladder, stressing the first principal, faith, set the theme of the hour. The service was worshipful and enthusiastically participated in by the children.

At 11 o'clock Dr. Dwight Davis delivered a message on the subject, "No Respector of Persons."

The conference reconvened at 2 o'clock with a beautiful and inspiring musical service. Mrs. M. Malmberg, guest organist, and Bernice Blakely, pianist, presented a half-hour recital. The selection of music and its rendition helped to create an atmosphere of reverence for the service which followed, the theme of which was "Behold An Open Door." After various musical selections and readings, Dr. Davis presented the talk.

The conference gave to all who attended a storehouse of ideas, and the realization of a common purpose. A feeling of unity and the desire to achieve the benefits of consecrated action toward the goals outlined for the church keyed each service.

Our Departed Ones

CHUNING.—Anthony Leroy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy W. Chuning, was born February 24, 1939, at Fortescue, Missouri, and passed away in the Missouri Methodist Hospital in St. Joseph on November 30, 1945. His babyhood was spent on a farm near Fortescue, after which he went with his parents to Wichita, Kansas, returning to Fortescue just before he entered school in 1944. He was in his second year, an intelligent and friendly student, when death came. Among his relatives and playmates he was known as "Tony." During his last severe trial, when the days and nights were filled with intense suffering, the doctors and nurses who cared for him said that Tony was one of the best patients they had ever had.

Besides his parents he leaves his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Chuning, and Mr. and Mrs. Marion Cooper, and his great-grandmother, Mrs. Sadie Chuning. Funeral services were held in the Methodist Church at Fortescue, Elder Milo Burnett of St. Joseph officiating. Burial was in Catron Cemetery near Fortescue.

MCDONALD.—Lawrence Walter, was born in Dawn Township in October, 1887, and died February 4 at Petrolia, Ontario, of a heart attack. As a young lad he was employed in a saw mill and had the misfortune of having his left arm caught in a saw which amputated it just below the elbow. In spite of this handicap, he was able to work almost as well as anyone with two hands. For twenty-four years preceding his death, he was sexton of the Hillsdale Cemetery; he was active in sports events and always willing to give assistance to any good cause. He was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church. In 1911 he and Nancy Thorpe of Chatham were united in marriage.

He is survived by his widow; three sons: Walter of Detroit, Lloyd and John of Petrolia; two daughters: Mrs. John Taylor of Petrolia, and Mrs. Wilfred Hunter of Ingersoll; three brothers: Albert and George Scott of Beekton, Alberta, and James Scott of Hudson, Michigan; two sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson of Penticton, British Columbia, and Mrs. George Kilgus of Detroit, Michigan. Services were held at the McDonald home conducted by Elder Stanley Phillips, assisted by Elder A. W. Freer. Interment was in the Hillsdale Cemetery.

MUCEUS.—Peter, was born at Porsgrund, Norway, on July 6, 1871, and died February 5 at Lamoni, Iowa. He came to Chicago from Norway when he was twenty-one, later moving to a farm in Wisconsin where he first heard the gospel. He was soon baptized, and held in succession the offices of priest, elder, and seventy. On one of his Wisconsin missions, he met and later married Emma Shaver. In the summer of 1901, he and his wife were sent on a mission to Norway, where they remained until the fall of 1916. During this time he was editor of the Sanhedren's Banner (Truth's Banner); he, with the able assistance of Apostle Peter Anderson, translated the Book of Mormon into Danish. He and his wife and five sons settled in Lamoni after their return to the States; here he did local church work and taught religion and Norse at Graceland College. Two of his better-known students are E. Y. Hunker and V. D. Ruch. He went as a missionary to Scandinavia two different times, and returned from the last mission with impaired health. His disability slowly increased, and death came after many years of illness.

He leaves to mourn, his wife; four sons: J. E. of Lamoni; H. S. of Provo, Utah; B. K. of Dayton, Ohio; and F. K. of Sedro Woolley, Washington; seven grandchildren, and many friends. One son, John, preceded him in death in 1934.

FREEL.—Mabel Edith, daughter of Fred and Nettie Tingle, was born in Runnells, Iowa, on April 3, 1905, and passed away at her home in Des Moines, Iowa, on December 5. Her mother and a brother, Forrest, preceded her in death. She was united in marriage to Ralph L. Freel on November 26, 1925; to this union two children were born. On August 5, 1917, she became a member of the Reorganized Church.

She leaves her son, Ronald, and daughter, Jean, of the home; her father and stepmother of Runnells; two sisters: Mrs. Gladycie Parks and Mrs. Harriett Sellers of Des Moines; and one brother, Everett Tingle, of Runnells.

ROGERS.—Joseph, son of Frank and Eran Rogers, was born August 28, 1867, at Vancleave, Mississippi, and died March 16 at the home of Walter Mansfield, Pascagoula, Mississippi. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 28, 1892, and attended the Vancleave branch for fifty-three years.

He is survived by six daughters: Irene Cunningham of Moss Point, Mississippi; Ila Mansfield and Fannie Ladiner of Pascagoula; Daisy Scott and Iola Brown of Mobile, Alabama; and Alice Lavanhouse of Texas; two sons: George of Bilotti and Roth of Mobile. His wife, Nettie, and two sons, Ratliff and Lee, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Vancleave church with Elders A. N. Barnes and A. G. Miller officiating. Burial was in the Ward Cemetery.

ROGERS.—George Watson, son of Frank and Eran Rogers, was born November 3, 1871, at Vancleave, Mississippi, and passed away March 14, at his home in Gulfport, Mississippi. He united with the Reorganized Church early in life, and was ever a faithful, conscientious member.

He leaves his wife, Donna; one son, Walter E. of Gulfport; and two daughters: Olive Newport of Fairhope, Alabama, and Mildred Clark of South Carolina. Services were held at the Raymond Funeral Home in Gulfport. The sermon was given by Elder A. H. Miller, assisted by A. N. Barnes. Interment was in the Colville Cemetery.

GOODE.—Stella Emma, died at her home in Independence on February 13 at the age of sixty-three. She had been ill for several months. A faithful member of the church, she also belonged to the Home Beautiful Club, and was a charter member of the Laurel Club. She is survived by her husband, Andrew H. Goode, of Independence; one daughter, two sons, two brothers, and a sister.

Our most successful methods of working with the Indians were cottage meetings, giving them a chance to ask questions and to talk. Besides that they are greatly honored when a white man comes into their home to visit and teach them God's way, the better way of life. They love pictures and charts. The very simplest means of teaching they want to see and hear. They love to hear Bible stories and they love dramatization, especially if they can take part in acting those lessons of life. I am convinced these methods are best for any people. The South Sea Islanders are so like the Indians in that they are very happy when we can have an entertainment in which they take part to dramatize the story. We had a very fine example in Coleman, Michigan, of the effectiveness of the story type of teaching. Brother Burt Turner, our pastor there, told Bible stories for one year instead of preaching. At the end of the year, a vote was taken to see whether to continue the Bible stories or preach, and the vote was unanimous for him to continue the stories; for he filled the house—something that had not been done for years. While I was in Detroit, we had such small Sunday night crowds, and I asked that every Sunday night for a year a story be dramatized taken from the church history. We filled the house to the standing room and did a work never to be forgotten.

LETTERS

Lest We Forget

Many times we forget the commandments of God and go astray. Many times, also, we forget to thank him for the blessings he bestows, yet we know that if it were not for him we should be as nothing. When the Israelites forgot God and his commandments, they suffered much; the same can happen to us. All that we have gained may be lost through disobedience and ungratefulness; this is explained in Psalm 100. We should "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name. For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations." FRANKIE CLARK.

A Testimony of God's Love

I was born February 12, 1877, in Leinfeld, Germany. I was baptized as an infant into one of the prominent faiths, and confirmed in 1891. In 1892 I came to America and made my home in Ann Arbor, Michigan, continuing in the faith of my fathers. In 1908 I became a victim of tuberculosis; I was not much enlightened about the dealings of God, and since I had been taught that the age of miracles had passed I went to the doctor for treatment. In the spring of 1909 I became very much depressed about my condition, but God sent a messenger who told me that I would be well again. New hopes arose, and soon I was able to do light work. In 1926 something happened which caused me to depart from the faith to which I had sworn allegiance. I was a teacher in the church, but one day the minister said "Miracles are past," and I asked him how he could say that when the Bible proved that they were not. (Mark 16: 16-19). I asked him if he did not believe the Bible, and he replied that I could no longer teach for him because I was teaching another doctrine. I became acquainted with other faiths, but they also had doctrines which were unsound, so I refrained from joining any of them. One day as I was working in my yard, a man approached and asked if I wanted a telephone; I talked to him about the gospel, and he told me about the Reorganized mission that had been holding meetings on Main Street. I began attending them, and Elder W. E. Leland gave me the church books to read; I read them and thought they were marvelous. I was baptized on August 13, 1933, and consider it a great privilege to belong to the church that Christ restored in the latter days. I am thankful for the hope of a Zion that will be established because God has said it would be. I know that Jesus lives, and that Frederick M. Smith is the true leader of his people. Last summer I had to undergo an operation; there was not much hope for my recovery, and no elders were present to administer to me, but I dreamt that I received administration and immediately began to get better. I am now able to work. I have felt that I should write this letter of God's love for me.

A Member for Sixty-three Years

I have been a member of the Reorganized Church for sixty-three years, and have never doubted that it is the true gospel of Christ. In my younger years I was isolated from church privileges, but I attended meetings of my faith in my dreams at night. Another spiritual experience I was permitted to have occurred one Sunday morning while I was preparing for church. Wondering if I were worthy of worshiping with the Saints, I knelt and asked God; at that very moment the Spirit came upon me and seemed to raise me to my feet. I was so happy that words cannot express the joy I felt. I was healed of pneumonia through prayer, and have been blessed many times. I am not able to attend church anymore, but would appreciate visits from any of the Saints who might care to call on me. I live eight miles from Carrollton, Ohio, with my son, Ollie Richards. Words of Encouragement

Referring to the editorial in the Herald of March 2, Brother Irby Mundy, 2439 Cleveland, Kansas City, Missouri, writes this encouraging message: "I'd hate to think that your efforts and mine, and those of many others, haven't brought fruit in bringing about Zion. You see and hear the things your ears are in tune to hear, etc. Independence is Zion to me. It is by far the most spiritual and most religious town or city I have visited. Thanks a lot for the article."

Brother Mundy's work has taken him into all parts of the country, and he has had an opportunity to see the way people live in different places. He is a good observer, and we are thankful for his message.

I would like to tell of one trial of my life and then how the comforter came to me. I was facing the task of laying away in the grave a little daughter. It was the third little grave holding flesh of my flesh. My sorrow was so great I felt I could not go through it.

I said to my father, who was with me as in all my trials, "Dadda, I just cannot go through this without help." He answered, "I am here with you." "Yes," I said, "I know, but I must have more than human aid." At that time I was very bitter. I could not see why I must yield up my only one when I saw so many children not even wanted, well and full of life, while my little darling lay cold and still, her blue eyes closed. I felt to rebel against God's rulings. Yet, as I said those words, "I must have more than human help," I felt a presence by my side. From that moment all through the funeral of my child I felt that peace, and for days after when I awoke in the morning and when I lay down at night, it continued to be with me.

I can truly say that Jesus sent me a comforter.

Many times I have rejoiced in the gospel of Christ. The years have passed, and now I have lived my allotted time. I have found one can rely on the promises of God. If we seek to know his way and walk therein, riches greater than this earth can give are ours. To be able to see God's hand in all things and have faith to believe that the light will break through the darkest cloud, and to know that joy will come with the greatest trial, to know that God rules, is greater than earthly riches, and we can have this faith if we try to increase our faith until we can know that God is, and that his Son will send us the comforter.

I hope I can do something to help those who are striving to find strength and comfort in this great church.

Your sister in the gospel bonds,
EMMA SMITH KENNEDY.

Importance of the Book of Mormon

I am truly rejoicing in the light of the great Latter Day gospel. I was baptized at the age of thirteen, and purchased a Book of Mormon when I was still a very young man. I had always been fond of western novels, and when I started reading the Book of Mormon, it seemed another such story to me. It was not until I had reached the age of fifty-two that my eyes were opened, and I came to understand fully what the message of the Book of Mormon was. If others desiring to know of its truthfulness will seek the Lord in earnest prayer, he will give them a testimony. Many church members do not appreciate it as they should. God has given it to us as the new covenant; it contains the fullness of the everlasting gospel. My prayer is that everyone will someday read and understand it as I have been permitted to. W. W. SNELL.

On Obedience

My testimony is that God will come to the aid of those who humbly petition him for help, but they must first do all they can for themselves. There are many, however, who give little heed to his counsel, and therefore fail to receive the needed blessing. He has said, "When ye do what I say, then I am bound; if ye do not, ye have no promise." To obedience, we must add sincere faith and repentance.

In view of the fact that conspiring men in the last days will adulterate that which passes through their hands so as to make it injurious, it would be well to watch all that we buy. If, however, we do become ill, we do not need to remain that way. Many Saints can testify that they have been healed. Even the destroying angel will pass by all who have made themselves worthy of such a great and wonderful blessing. God does and will fulfill every promise he has made to his people.

The Meaning of Easter

By Ernest E. Crownover

Christ Is Risen

Christ is risen, Christ is risen,
Angels sang the glad refrain.
Telling news of life immortal,
O'er and o'er, and o'er again.

Through the years and down the ages,
Ring the echoes of that song;
Bringing joy to saint and sinner,
Those who would to Christ belong.

Bringing comfort, peace, and healing,
To the souls who lost their way;
Now they sing the song revealing,
Christ the Lord arose today.

Your Life for the Christ

(Dedicated to the memory of our late, beloved Prophet, President Frederick Madison Smith.)

"Straight is the path," the Lord hath said,

"And narrow is the way;"

And few there be that wish to tread,
And turn their hearts away.

Oh, let not thou be one of those,
Whose only thoughts be sin;
For surely as the Christ arose,
Your heart he wants to win.

Oh, let him come into thy life,
And free thy soul from sin;
No longer then can evil strife,
Hold tight to thee within.

The bonds of Hell are now cast down,
The Devil's pow'r destroyed;
Upon thy head a jewel crown,
And ways of the Christ employed.

* EASTER

The robins proclaim: "He is risen!"

The cardinals sing: "We agree!"

Then a chorus of birds, from all places is heard:
"Let us rise; let us fly; let us see!"

A message of peace comes from heaven
To earth's nations distressed since the war,
Resounding aloud to the meek and the proud:
Lift Him high, let Him draw from afar!"

—R. E. HUBRICHT.

* THE BIBLE still inspires men and women to the greatest deeds of valor, generosity, and Christian kindness.

Mrs. Aaron Engle of Santa Ana, California, a fine faithful member of the church, spent part of a visit here as a patient at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and like most others who have the privilege of going through a sick-spell there, was very grateful for the excellent care given, and wanted to do something for the nurses. Having so strong a love of the Inspired Version of the Bible, and having received such great comfort and help from reading it, she thought nothing would be better than to present to each student nurse a copy of it.

Imagine the pleased surprise, the lifting of eyebrows, in the offices of the Herald Publishing House, when Sister Engle's order for one hundred copies, leather bound, thumb-indexed, at $6.25 per copy, was received! We have been used to passing them out one at a time, or at most in twos or threes for a family. But a hundred! This was a new experience.

The presentation of the Bibles to the members of the student nurses' class took place Wednesday evening, March 27, in the beautiful reception room of the Nurses' Home (the old Sanitarium building). Elders Vaughn Bailey and Jess Holsworth, who had helped Sister Engle in deciding on the gift, participated in the service. A quartette of nurses contributed special songs.

Sanitarium officials, Miss Gertrude Copeland, Superintendent, and Nelle Morgan, Director of Nurses, were present. Chaplain R. V. Hopkins gave a talk on the Inspired Version. Sister Engle had written each nurse's name in a book and autographed it. Some who already had copies of the Inspired Version chose other books, and every nurse received a gift. It was a fine and notable occasion.

Unfortunately, Sister Engle could not be present. Her son, Dr. Roger Engle, had just ten days' leave before he had to embark on the west coast for service in the Philippines. It was her last opportunity to be with him, and so they drove west together. She will return for the conference. She is a member of the family which gave Glauud Roger, the early missionary to Australia, to the church.

It was a pleasure to participate in this meeting, which will be long remembered at the Sanitarium as well as at the Herald Publishing House.—L. L.

The First Presidency Is Completed

Apostles Garver and Edwards to Presidency

A revelation given to the church through President Israel A. Smith, given first to the quorums of the priesthood for consideration, and after approval by them presented to the General Conference on Wednesday, April 10, called two members of the Quorum of Twelve to be counselors to President Smith: Apostle John F. Garver and Apostle F. Henry Edwards. The full account of this procedure will be contained in the conference minutes, which are expected for publication in next week's issue of the Herald.

The revelation was unanimously approved by the conference, and the conference directed that it should be incorporated into the law of the church and published in the Doctrine and Covenants.

In the same message, D. Blair Jensen, of the High Priests Quorum, was called to be a member of the Quorum of Twelve. When the business session was closed, an ordination service was held immediately, and the ordinations were effected.

Brother Garver was ordained by Apostles John W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis, Ward A. Hougas, President of the High Priests, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp, President of the Aaronic Priesthood.

Brother Edwards was ordained by Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer, Ward A. Hougas, and G. L. DeLapp.

Impressively the two counselors were conducted to the presiding officer, Israel A. Smith, who welcomed them warmly and invited them to be seated in chairs beside him, thus entering them immediately into their duties.

The ordination of Brother Jensen was performed by Apostles D. T. Williams and Charles R. Hield, who then escorted him to section of the platform where the Twelve are seated, where he was welcomed by the members of the quorum, and took his seat to begin his service with them.

Thus is brought to completion one of the most important actions of the Conference, which began on Saturday, April 6, with the election of Israel A. Smith as President.

Both Presidents Garver and Edwards had served in the Quorum of Twelve since 1922, and had given years of service in the ministry before that. Recognized, according to the statements of their brethren of the Twelve, as two of the ablest in that quorum, they bring with them the promise of excellent service in aiding President Israel A. Smith in his work.

The New President

A few words about President Smith will be welcomed by the many church members who have not had an opportunity of meeting or seeing him. Older members, whose experience enables them to judge, say that he resembles his father, Joseph Smith III, who was President from 1860 to 1914. This comparison is the highest of compliments and promises well for the peace and welfare of the church under his administration.

Years of experience in legal work, as well as in church work with his father and with others, have developed in Brother Israel a friendly manner in getting along with people. From personal observation in working under him since his coming into the Presidency as a Counselor, we have found him always kindly, pleasant, and reasonable; ready to listen, quick to sympathize, and ready in helping where help is needed. It is Brother Israel's habit to confer much on questions, to accept competent counsel, and to make judicious decisions without undue delay. We believe that the administration of church affairs will proceed upon the principle of "common consent" which is a basic part of the church law, and which operated from the beginning of the organization.

The Future of the Church

The position of the church at the present time is most promising. It seems likely to the observer that no good work that has been begun will be allowed to lapse. With increased strength and vigor, as well as unity of spirit and understanding, the administrative detail of church work will be conducted in an expeditious manner, and many things that, because of unavoidable circumstances, could not be accomplished heretofore, will be done.

The church has every reason to be grateful for its new administrative personnel, and to be hopeful that much good will be realized.

It seems also to this observer that the people of our church today have broader intellectual horizons and, among many, deeper and stronger spiritual foundations than at any previous time in the past twenty-five years. Those who go into the homes of the people, who engage in pastoral work, and thus meet conditions at firsthand, know this to be true. The desire and demand for progress in the direction of fulfilling the social and economic ideals of the church, as well as the spiritual and ecclesiastical objectives, is also very strong and growing stronger. The church will take note of this trend.

Impressions of the Conference

Thousands of People

Ten thousand people. Happy. Pleasant. Most of them smiling. Well dressed, too, with neatness and substantial quality in their clothing. A fair mixture of young and old, parents and little children, like a community, with not much segregation according to ages. You can say "hello" to almost anybody, and get a smile and a greeting in return. It's like a reunion, only there are more people—many times more—and the tent is huge and made of brick, steel, and concrete. These are healthy, clean, wholesome folk, the kind you would like for neighbors and friends the year around.

Crowded classes, crowded meetings. There isn't space enough for them. Classrooms are too small, the Auditorium is too small, the streets are too small. Try to go a hundred feet in any direction, and you must stop to greet at least four old friends, besides dodging to keep from bumping, or getting bumped into, by some pleasant stranger who looks like a person you really ought to know.

A Negative Virtue?

The city person who is used to encountering tobacco smoke wherever he goes, finds this crowd refreshing and pleasant. Ten thousand people, and no cigarettes! No clouds of smoke, no litter of butts about the door, no ropy cigars, no reeking pipes. No smell of liquor. No jaundiced eye and dead-pan expression as a man tries to get a "lift" out of his smoke—and looks as if he needs it!

Are these negative virtues, and therefore condemned by your intellectuals? Think of the clean air, the clear floor, the pleasant surroundings. If these are negative virtues, they are good ones and happy ones. In fact, it seems to us that the positive virtues do not have a chance until the negative virtues have cleaned house for the soul. There must be some things a man will not do, before what he does can amount to much. Negative virtues are like your supplies of anti-septic, gauze, and plaster in your bathroom. They are your first-aid kit of character! This conference is well supplied on that score.

The Mood

This conference began under the shadow of the death of President Frederick M. Smith so shortly before it began. But it did not remain in the shadow. Fortunately the remaining leaders chose to go ahead with the plans, as "Brother Fred" would have wanted it. It was no disrespect to the dead; rather, it was respect to his living principles.

There was no tension, no fear at the beginning of this conference. It was peaceful—a natural peace, because there was no background of difficulty and difference. Sorrow had united us. Our people have plenty of individual opinion, as one can learn in a few minutes of conversation. But when the vote is taken, they consider the matter settled, and the minority pitches in and helps the majority with its work. Why not? Tomorrow, minority may be the majority, and the help will be reversed.

The mood of this conference was probably expressed best in the prayer offered at the beginning of a business session—"O Lord, we are very thankful for the great blessings already received, and we pray Thou wilt prepare us to make the best use of them, and to be ready for those that are yet to come."

Ready

This conference is ready with faith and confidence to accept the new leadership, and to undertake whatever plan or work may be offered. The people are ready and willing to go forward. They are anxious, but not impatient. They are serious, but not impassive. There has not been a better opportunity in many years for the church to go forward with the power of a unified people.

Tolerant

Here is something that is symbolic. A noted preacher used the phrase, "The divine principle of evolution." Ten years ago it would have been provocative. Twenty years ago it would have caused trouble. Thirty years ago it divided other churches, and greatly worried the people in ours. But tonight, the people sat and heard it, understanding it too, without a flicker of disturbance. Of course they know that the principle of evolution is a part of the natural order, but that it is only one of many, and that there are others equally important, and some more important. You can't make a fight over evolution today. People have grown up. You can't put a person out of the church for an idea, but you can certainly have a lively and interesting time discussing it.

Perhaps we are too tolerant, especially of the wrong things. But tolerance has kept many fine people in the church, and has kept them working together.

"Look for the good things, not the faults. It takes a good deal bigger-sized brain to find out what is not wrong with people and things, than to find out what is wrong. The little man often actually rates his capacity by the number of things he can find the matter. The valuable fellow is the one who finds what isn't the matter and gives it a pat on the back."—Gold Nuggets of Thought.

The Meaning of Easter

By Ernest E. Crownover

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD has come to regard Easter as an occasion for fashion parades, gentle rabbits, and rousing hunts for rainbow colored eggs. No longer a holy day, it has deteriorated into a holiday. The children are delighted by the day's festivities, and the parents are glad to spend a day in casual affairs.

It was not this way that first Easter morning when the gates of death were opened for all humanity, and the ascendant star of some previous thirty-three years became an incandescent sun holding all human relations with each other and with God in orbit by the power of one law, the law of right. No, it was different that first Easter morn, for after the three days of dark and smothering doubt, the dawning of truth began in the minds of the disciples when Jesus stood before them. This was not the Jesus of prophecy, but the Jesus of fulfillment. And in the resurrected Jesus, now ever living, the gospel of life should never die. The supreme achievement of creation, man, wrought in the image of God, had long been spiritually dead. When Jesus came forth from the grave he brought forth with him a vast concourse of sons and daughters begotten into life—purposefully begotten, brought forth into the opportunity of unity in a household of faith, Jesus himself the chief cornerstone. Now men might not only appear in the image of God, but grow also into his likeness.

AS COMPREHENSION began to stir in the minds of the disciples as a result of the receiving of a new gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost, they began to grasp the purposes of God and his Son. In the remembrance effected by this gift, they saw from the vantage point of new spiritual heights that Christ had set an objective before mankind, and had charted the course for its attainment. Eternal life is the goal, and obedience to Christ through the gospel is the only pathway.

This was acceptable to his followers, and they marched through the disagreements and failures of the following decades to such success that ten of the original twelve apostles met death by violent hands, so like Christ's was their ministry, and so alike the general reaction of the people to it. Whereas before this time men died without hope, being under the law, they now died in Christ. And they came to see death as but a doorway—the entrance to an enlarged sphere of existence and activity.

THE FIRST EASTER called men to the assumption of a new life—a life glorious in concept, practical in all aspects, and divine in nature. God has "gone all out" in his plan to effect man's salvation. The book of life is open. It is a publication of glad tidings. The publisher is God. The copyright is in the name of the cross, and the flyleaf states that the work is dedicated to the proposition that all righteous men, by the grace of Calvary, shall be transformed into newness of life.

At this new Easter season, we, too, would see Jesus. But if we would see Jesus, we must see him through the eye of the soul, and soul-vision comes after the tempest of storm, after the scourge of fear, after the whip of despair. Soul-vision comes only to the worthy, and the finite veil is drawn away not after the first hour of prayer, nor the second hour, but the hours which follow after. Jesus is seen by a light which is inside the soul, and the love we hold for our fellow man is the fuel of this lamp. The flame of the lamp of righteousness cannot be extinguished; its fuel flows forever from the bosom of the Son of God. No man who carries this lamp in the one hand, may carry sin in the other hand, for sin gives off a deadly fume which darkens the soul and blinds the eye, and stills the still small voice of hope.

HE WHO WOULD SEE JESUS must look upward to the high cross, for this generation has again lifted him up; again he wears the crown of thorns. And before he may be seen on his tree, the seeker must bear with him the means of taking the Savior down, and must bear for him a new crown of authority. For he cannot be seen unless given authority to rule in the finder's life. Neither may he be observed if the seeker stands before the cross alone, for somehow he may be discerned only when the seeker has brought his brother to stand by his side.

And where may his cross be found? Out by the highway, or perhaps near the byway. Mayhap just next door. Certain it is that he is close by—and he has been nailed there so long! Who is too busy to go find him? Who will have more time tomorrow, and will explain to God's son that today held too many other things for time to be found to wait upon him? Nay, his was a personal death—he died for you. And his was a personal resurrection—he returned from the grave that you might live again. Today is a day for taking down crosses; tomorrow another will have taken him down, and your life will be left desolate. Then fly to the cross, he awaits you there.

EASTER means for all that the principles for which Jesus died became eternal with him. Under his supervision, mankind may proceed into newness of life. He will grant to the worthy the spirit of heaven which leads into all truth, and gives the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, and understanding of his law. His gospel is the power of God for our salvation. Let it take hold; nowhere may such happiness be found as in the temple of the holy one. The blessings of the gospel and the gifts of the spirit minister to every need, and give us power to become the sons of God. When the angels rolled the stone away from Jesus' tomb, the light of God's heaven flooded that sepulcher, converting it into a cradle of new life for all men. God took heaven's greatest disaster and turned it into creation's climactic victory. Every day is Easter to the spiritually awake. Man was born out of the heart of God, and his home shall be with God forever.

Yes, Easter means all this. Easter is at the center of our being. Today is a day for hunting Easter crosses. How busy are you today?

Acquaintance

John Wesley, restless in his spiritual night,
 Prayed devoutly for a sweet surcease,
 And Jesus grasped his hand.
 Illumined with ageless love,
 Transcendent in his Christian age,
 He crowned the concept of fraternal power,
 Attained to godlike lineage,
 And said, this is enough for me,
 This dear companionship with Christ
 Full answer to my prayer.
 Someone fashioned differently
 A larger vision could contain.
 I pray for peace, and thank thee, Lord.
 Spare the nobler pain.
 And Wesley sang with melody released
 From Heaven's home.
 The sanctuary of song gave up
 Its secrets to the Wesley men.
 Pure remembrances of Christian hope
 They fanned from its residual spark.
 Man and brother caught on fire
 A sickened world, and stabbed to strife
 The hopeless pilgrim mind.
 Crusades awoke within the private heart.
 The Wesleys rang a deeper, richer note,
 And set their hands to mold at earthly clay,
 Heaven's vital warmth pulsing
 Their glorious day.
 None since Luther knew so bright a light.
 John Wesley knew, as none
 Since John Beloved
 His Christ for brother.
 And yet his song and word revealed
 A greater knowledge of the Christ
 He would not know,
 But yielded to another.
 After him would come, he said,
 Someone who would further dare
 And greater Christian wisdom share. . . .
 Someone like Joseph Smith,
 Of restless soul,
 Who on Cumorah's lonely hill,
 Would take the Christ
 For comforter and friend,
 Embrace Him too for guide.
 His task assigned,
 Walk with Jesus hand in hand,
 But travel in travail,
 Misread, maligned. —Cleo M. Hanthorne.

The General Conference

Recapitulation

WITH THE PAPER shortage preventing the publication of a Conference Daily Herald, we are condensing the story of General Conference for use in our weekly publication. Last week's issue told of the opening of the business sessions on Saturday morning, of the election of Israel A. Smith as President of the Church on Saturday afternoon, of his ordination on Sunday morning, and of the great communion service throughout the rest of the morning.

Sunday, April 7-14 Concert

The afternoon activities began with a half-hour concert by the Little Symphony Orchestra of Independence, directed by Franklyn S. Weddle. The first number was the beautiful "Concerto for Two Pianos, in E flat," by W. A. Mozart, with Pauline Turner and George Miller as guest artists. The second part was a group of three seventeenth century Dutch tunes. The Little Symphony Orchestra includes musicians of all groups of the city, and is achieving a reputation for its excellent performances.

Memorial Service

Following the concert, a memorial service was held before a huge gathering in tribute to those who had died in the inter-conference period. A moving, sincere tribute was paid to the late Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, by Apostle John W. Rushton. Memories of the late Apostles J. A. Gillen and Clyde F. Ellis were related by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Apostle D. T. Williams read a resolution in honor of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, prepared by a committee under the direction of the General Conference. Former Apostle J. F. Curtis read a statement prepared by another committee in honor of former Apostle J. A. Gillen.

Apostle J. F. Garver read a statement, which will appear elsewhere in our publication, in honor of the late President Frederick M. Smith.

To this service the Stone Church Choir contributed three appropriate and beautiful selections, "Tenderly, Tenderly," by N. W. Smith; "Remember Now Thy Creator," by Adams; and "There Is a Land Beyond the Setting Sun," by Smeeton.

Evening Concert and Preaching Service

There was an evening concert from 7:30 to 8:30 at the Auditorium, which featured a vocal solo by Josephine Mader, violin selections by H. Neil, and anthems by the Walnut Park Choir.

Afterward there was an evening preaching service, in which Apostle John W. Rushton was the speaker, taking for his text, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, and then shall the end come." Brother Rushton examined the meaning of the word end in this usage, as to whether it referred to a catastrophe caused by convulsions of nature, or a catastrophe brought on by the sins and transgressions of men. Salvation will be found in man's reach for God, and God's reach for man—"God and man have business with each other."

Monday, April 8

Monday forenoon established the pattern of classes, lectures, quorum sessions, and departmental meetings in which the principal educational and leadership work of the Conference is conducted. Many of these meetings are related to some of the fine displays and educational exhibits for which conferences are now noted. Details cannot be given, except as various groups make post-conference reports and findings on their work.

The business session for Monday was very short. The reports to the General Conference in the Herald for April 6 were received and spread upon the minutes, subject to the further action of the conference. Explaining that the quorums had urgent work, President Israel A. Smith brought this session to an early close. A feature of this program was a vocal solo "Great Peace Have They," (Rogers) by Hazel Scott (Mrs. J. Adelbert) Withee.

The evening service at the Auditorium consisted of the graduation exercises of the class of 1946, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, with Bishop G. L. DeLapp as the speaker.

Tuesday, April 9

At the business session this afternoon, Bishop G. L. DeLapp read a letter from Arthur H. Gibbs of the seventy, who is located at Hilo, Hawaii, where the recent tidal wave caused great destruction. Brother Gibbs reported that there was no loss of life among church members, and no very serious injury. Property damage is small, though about thirty persons are homeless. Brother Gibbs indicated the help that is needed, and Brother DeLapp added the comment that steps are being made to furnish it. In Waikiki there was damage to the church school.

President Israel A. Smith, who was in charge of the meeting, presented a recommendation from the Presidency for the ordination to the office of Evangelist the following men: John R. Grice of Port Huron, Michigan; John E. MacGregor of London, Ontario; Benjamin H. Hewitt of Toronto, Ontario; and Richard Jones of Chatham, Ontario. A number of church and local officers spoke in favor of the men recommended, and they were all approved by the vote of the Conference. Brethren Grice and Jones were present, Brethren MacGregor and Hewitt not at the Conference.

Pays Tribute to President F. M. Smith

NOTE: The following is the text of the statement prepared by a committee appointed by the Presidency under the authority of the General Conference, expressing the tribute of the conference to the late President Frederick Madison Smith, and read before the General Conference at the memorial service in the Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, April 7.—Editors.

To the General Conference of 1946:

In obedience to the charge which you have given us, your committee appointed for the purpose of preparing a memorial tribute to our late beloved President of the Church, Frederick Madison Smith, and for the purposes of expressing our common grief at his passing, beg leave to present this statement:

We express our gratitude for the many years that President Smith served the church. From the date of his baptism on July 20, 1883, he held membership in the church sixty-two years and eight months. From the date of his ordination as elder on July 12, 1897, he served in that office forty-nine years and eight months. From the time that he was ordained as his father's counselor on April 18, 1902, he was identified with the First Presidency for a period of nearly forty-four years. His service as President of the Church lacked but a few weeks of completing thirty-one years. These milestones in his life help to remind us of the debt of gratitude that we owe to him.

Of all his many labors in behalf of the church and its people, of his many acts of kindness and consideration for people in all walks of life, in and out of the church, from the humblest members as well as officials, it would be impossible to give an account here; for in addition to all those benefactions that are known, there are countless instances locked in the memories of individuals, some of whom, like him, have passed to their eternal reward. It is well known that he inspired in multitudes of people, and especially in the minds and hearts of those who were privileged to serve with him and under him, an enduring personal affection and an everlasting gratitude.

In the midst of our sorrow at his passing, we take comfort in remembering the principal works which he performed for the church; and as time goes on, and as smaller and less consequential matters are forgotten, his contributions will stand out in bold relief against the great background of the history of the church, enduring as a living monument to his memory, imperishable in the minds of men.

President Smith made a valuable contribution to the present and the future of the church in preparing it for the needs and the duties of the modern age. He foresaw the necessity of training and education for the young, and particularly for the ministry of the church. He freed the young from restrictions that often impeded them in their efforts toward progress, and encouraged them to prepare themselves for greater service to the church and to society. He saw the importance of dignity and beauty in our church buildings and in their services, and he labored long in behalf of the improvement of church work, church institutions, and church buildings. It may be truly said, that he freed our minds and lifted our eyes to the far horizons of knowledge, and that he set before us goals for the achievement of which another generation may be occupied in attaining.

While much that he hoped for was not accomplished in his life time, he set our feet upon a path from which there is no turning back, and upon which we shall continue to go forward in time to come. Among the greatest legacies he left us must be counted the splendid tasks and purposes upon which he set us to work.

Although these tasks are unfinished, there is a sense in which his own particular work was complete. He had worked until he could work no more, until the fires of his tremendous energy had burned low, until his rugged frame and his indomitable spirit were broken. He had given until everything he had was exhausted. And in his passing the church witnesses the end of an era, and the beginning of a new one.

How often his voice, ringing strong and clear, gave fresh hope and courage to this people, in the Conference, in the pulpit, and through his pen. How often when our attention was diverted, he pointed us again to the great ideals; how often when we forgot, he reminded us of the first things which are meant eternally to be first!

We extend to the family of our departed President our most sincere and heartfelt sympathy; we extend to the church at large our concern and our care; and to the kind friends and fellow citizens of this community, our thanks for their sympathy and understanding in this time of trial.

Let us remember the great words that he gave us—words that will never die: "Our program is to zionize the church, and evangelize the world. Let us go forward." And we, our children, and our children's children will sing his words, "Zion the beautiful beckons us on."

Our grief is assuaged by the faith that he shared with us, the trust in an eternal hope, and in a Heavenly Father's love. To God we commend his soul, and to this people a faithful and imperishable memory.

THE COMMITTEE.

The Ordination of President Israel A. Smith

Transcripts of the Charge, Ordination Prayer and Response

At the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri
Sunday Morning, April 7, 1946

Charge to Israel A. Smith

By Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith

IN GIVING THE charge to Brother Israel, who is about to be ordained to the Presidency of the Church and the High Priesthood, my mind reverts to the statement made in the Book of Covenants, Section 122, "The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors."

Brother Israel, that statement might sound ominous—the burden of the church is laid on you and those who are or shall be called to be your counselors—were it not that you have associated with you, to help carry that burden, the various quorums and orders of the church throughout the standing ministry and the general church officers, beginning with the second presidency, the Quorum of Twelve; and it will be one of your responsibilities, and a task for which you are fitted, to endeavor to unite all the body of the ministry to help you carry that burden, that they may be united in spirit and so far as possible, in unity of understanding and of purpose.

It has pleased God to call you to this office which puts you under commitment to him; and the church, represented here by the Conference, by a wonderfully unanimous voice has approved that call, and their confidence puts you under commitment to the church in the presidency of the church. This warm responsive love that goes out to you, which will increase, should be a source of real satisfaction to you. As you understand the work of the presidency through study and observation and by experience, it is unnecessary to give you a charge in detail, but these two things I would stress; that you should maintain your contact with God and move out with dignity in this office, being guided by his Spirit, and when necessary give to the church the word of revelation. This is your right, and you may seek and you shall find; you may ask and it shall be answered. The second admonition is to maintain your touch with the people, first with the priesthood with whom you must work and upon whom you must depend, but also with the body of the church, the common people, walking among them and ministering to them in the spirit of kindness and patience, as well as firmness.

And may God bless you, is my prayer.

The Ordination Prayer by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, assisted by John W. Rushton, senior Apostle of the Quorum, Elder Ward A. Hougas, President of the High Priests' Quorum, and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, President of the Aaronic priesthood.

Brother Israel, as servants of Jesus Christ, we lay our hands upon your head and ordain you President of the High Priesthood and the Church of Jesus Christ.

The age in which you have been called to so occupy is one upon which the eyes of the prophets even from very ancient times were focused. They saw the present latter days—gross darkness covering the minds of men; God exiled from life; distress of nations with perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth and desolations upon Babylon. The church has never existed in a period of time when the ministry belonging to your calling was more needed than in the present age.

The Lord's work, inaugurated through the Prophet Joseph Smith and others, remains to be carried forward to a glorious consummation. The prophets of old saw God moving in his pavilion and bringing forth his church out of obscurity and out of darkness, "clear as the moon, and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," as it has been brought forth in our age. That work remains to be executed until all that was intended by the Lord's proceeding to do such a marvelous work shall have been fulfilled. And they and others have sensed that the work so divinely started, would go forth even as the stone cut out of the mountain without hands would roll forth until it filled the whole earth.

As God was accessible to your predecessors in the office to which you are now being ordained, so, if you incline your heart in faith and humility to him, the way will be opened for the forces to be expressed leading to the church performing its work as divinely destined.

In a day when there was much to discourage, after iniquity had entered the church as a flood, your father found God accessible and received from him special directions resulting in a reorganization of the church and an unfurling of its banner afresh and unstained to the world. As, without an exception, all who have presided over the church of the living God have found him ready to bless and guide, so, as you seek him, your experience shall be of a like kind, and the joy resulting from such relationship will overflow from your heart and life to many, even in remote parts of the earth.

Heavenly Father, may the gifts from heaven, belonging to the office of President of the High Priesthood be thy servant's, richly to enjoy, qualifying him as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator in presiding over the whole church. May thy servant be in possession of the spirit of wisdom; may there be a continuing deepening of understanding of thy will relating to the church and its welfare. Touch his heart with thy power, inspire his mind, and may his ministrations be attended by divine grace.

Lord, during his presidency may peace come to the church as a cherishing fountain, an era of uninterrupted progress, all ranks of the ministry greatly blessed spiritually; and wherever there may be those who hold covenant relationship with thee who have become weary in seeking to be courageous, may there come to them the joy of their early salvation.

Brother Israel, in the moving of the providential hand of God in your life, we pray there may come to you all needed physical strength.

We ordain and set you apart to the office that has been designated, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Statement by President Israel A. Smith, April 7, 1946.

I do not know that there is much that I could add to what I said on yesterday. I do not know that there is anything I should add to that, except to say again that I appreciate and thank you for your confidence and support. I realize the significance of the charge which has been made by Brother Elbert, and I trust that God will give me strength to continue faithful. Up until now I have, as it were, been feeling my way. I believe now that I can go forward with more assurance.

In order to clear some possible doubt as to the statement which I made on yesterday with reference to acceptance of the office, I wish to add something this morning which is as follows, and I trust it will clear away any doubt that any may have with respect to my position:

The appointment and call which were made the basis for action by

President Israel A. Smith

A Biographical Sketch

President Israel A. Smith was nominated and elected as President of the Church on Saturday afternoon, April 6, 1946, at the business session of the General Conference. He was ordained, as noted in our previous issue, on Sunday morning, April 7, in a special service at the Auditorium, before a great throng of church people. The following biographical notes, which were prepared for use by the newspapers, and were checked by Brother Smith, will be of interest to our readers.

ISRAEL A. SMITH was for many years a practicing attorney in Independence, Missouri, conducting legal business for his church as well as his private practice.

From April 14, 1940, he was counselor to his brother, Dr. Frederick M. Smith, President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, until the latter's death on March 20. He had served the church for many years, and was the General Secretary of the organization from 1929 until 1940.

During this time he also served the State of Missouri as a member of the Constitutional Convention that convened September 21, 1943, and continued working for a year.

the General Conference on yesterday came through regular channels. I have submitted to ordination and desire to record again my acceptance. I believe the call is divine and I know that I must accept the office which, under the motion, is that of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church, to exercise the functions of such office in harmony with and agreeable to the mind and will of God as revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which are accepted by the Church as the standard of doctrine, ethics and spiritual truth.

In this work he served as Chairman of the Committee of Public Health and Public Welfare, and Federal Relations. Also in 1943 he was elected President of the Iowa Pioneer Lawmakers Association, and still holds that position.

Israel A. Smith was born at Plano, Illinois, February 2, 1876, the son of Joseph Smith III (then President of the church), and two years younger than his brother, Dr. Frederick M. Smith, the President of the church who died March 20. He moved with the family to Lamoni, Iowa, and attended school there, and also Graceland College. He gave a period of political service to the state as a member of the 34th General Assembly of Iowa. He was admitted to the Iowa Bar in 1912, and to the Missouri Bar in 1913.

His early church work included service as Associate Editor under his father, of the church paper, the Saints' Herald, from 1908 until his father's death in 1914. He was also his father's companion and private secretary, particularly during the four years of blindness that preceded his father's death, and arranged his Memoirs from diaries and dictated material.

From 1920 to 1925 he served as counselor to the Presiding Bishop, the late Benjamin R. McGuire. Since becoming his brother's counselor in the Presidency, he has again acted as Associate Editor of the Saints' Herald.

Israel Smith was married on March 14 1908, to Miss Nina M. Grenawalt, daughter of John and Fannie (Robinson) Grenawalt in Lamoni, Iowa. They had two sons: Joseph Perrine Smith (born 1912, and died March 2, 1936, while attending the University of Missouri); and Donald Carlos (born 1916), who served in the U. S. Navy from July, 1940, to December, 1945, and left the service with the rank of Lieut. Commander.

The passing of President Frederick M. Smith was uppermost in the minds of all who assembled for the Wednesday evening prayer service on March 20. Elder J. C. Page, who was in charge of the service, suggested that it be the theme of the meeting, and a number of fine tributes were paid to the memory of President Smith. Wednesday evening prayer meetings held at the homes of the members during the winter months have been well attended. Thirty-two were present on the evening of April 3, half of which were young people.

The branch is glad to welcome the Arnold Ourth family, formerly of Kirtland, to Nauvoo. The Zion's League met at the Ourth home for a St. Patrick's party. Games suitable for the occasion were played, and refreshments served. In February the League held a George Washington party at the Klingelmueller home.

Los Angeles, California

Central Congregation

Pastor, John Blackmore

A service long to be remembered by the Saints of Central Church was the memorial service for President F. M. Smith held March 24, and the visit of the Hawaiian delegation to General Conference. These Hawaiian Saints joined in the tribute paid President Smith by singing several hymns in their native language. Elder Howard Miller gave an inspiring talk.

Local members were hosts to the Hawaiian delegates over the week end, entertaining them in their homes, taking them sightseeing, and sponsoring a social hour at the church on Friday evening.

A full program of activity for all age groups has been carried out during the first quarter of 1946. A new group of the women's department has been organized to meet in the evenings; Sister LaVerne Clark was elected president.

The Kiara Club met on February 5 in the recreational hall for an evening of fun and fellowship. Group songs were led by Blaine Bender. Mr. and Mrs. William Meador were elected president and assistant, and Nell Crum was sustained as secretary-treasurer. A vote of thanks was extended to Harold Motters who had served so efficiently since the club was organized last year. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The club meets the first Tuesday of each month. Another enjoyable time was had on the evening of March 5.

The district conference was held at Central Church on February 9 and 10. The Saints were happy to welcome Elder and Mrs. Peter Whalley to southern California after their long stay in England. Brother Whalley has now assumed his duties as pastor at San Diego.

On February 17 the young people sponsored the evening forum with an illustrated lecture by W. W. Powers on South American archaeological discoveries. The lecture was continued the following Sunday.

Council Bluffs Holds Successful Building Fund Dinner

On Friday evening, March 15, a five-dollar-a-plate building fund dinner sponsored by the women's department of the Council Bluffs branch was held in the fellowship hall of the Broadway Methodist Church. Three hundred people attended. Elder E. J. Gleazer, Jr., of Lamoni, Iowa, was the guest speaker and brought a very inspiring and instructive address. Other numbers on the program were a male quartette composed of Leslie Hale, Homer Doty, Merle Spence, and Earl Hirst; a humorous reading by Grace Doty; a violin solo by Ruth Hale; and a vocal solo by Jacqueline Moser. Lela Ranney directed the community singing, with Joyce Radtke at the piano. Elder V. D. Ruch was toastmaster. Grace Kellogg, supervisor of the women's department, was ably assisted in planning and carrying out the details of the banquet by Mable Davey. Table decorations were arranged by Eunice Moser and Florence Rasmussen, while Emma Spanswick was in charge of table service. A total of $6,500 was added to the building fund. This amount was made up from the net profit of the dinner, liberal donations by many people, talent money earned by several women, and the contents of boxes in which families had been saving their pennies. Plans for the dinner were started last October, and many of the women have worked diligently at making and selling various articles and serving luncheons to build up a talent fund to be turned in at the dinner. The fund now contains $24,000, and it is hoped that a new church can be built within the next two or three years. The Council Bluffs slogan is, "A New Church by 1950." The present membership totals over 1,100 people. The church school is so crowded that the teachers cannot work properly and there is no room for expansion. The new church should be one that will be representative of the historical background of the Latter Day Saint movement in Council Bluffs, and one that will care for the needs of so large a congregation. Such a structure will probably cost $100,000. The membership are very enthusiastic about the movement and are co-operating in a marvelous manner to increase the building fund as rapidly as possible.

Kennett, Missouri

Pastor, H. H. Wiggins

As a result of the efforts of Missionary Eugene Theys, several new members have been added to the group through baptism. District President D. E. Sellers and Arlon Phillips, district church school director, were recent visitors at Ava.

The Saints at Kennett held a special business meeting on March 3 to elect delegates to General Conference.

Members of the Zion's League are studying the Story of the Church by Inez Smith Davis; Arlon Phillips and Lois Hawkins are the sponsors. Senior League activities for March consisted of an evening of music appreciation, Bible charades, and try-outs for a play.

For their morning study class, the women are using 100,000,000 Guinea Pigs. In the afternoon Hattie Bishop reads to them from the book, An Indian Family. On March 22 they sponsored a box supper, the proceeds of which were sent to the district fund for the new reunion kitchen. Preceding the auction, the locally talented burlesqued a radio-television broadcast in which Frank Sinatra, Tom Brenneman, Walter Winchell, and other popular stars appeared.

Montrose, Iowa

Pastor, O. I. Miller

Montrose branch is one of the oldest in the church. It is located directly across the river from Nauvoo and, like Nauvoo, is important in church history. Warren L. Van Dine recently compiled a history of it, which was read at the 11 o'clock service each week, with the exception of Communion Sunday, until completed. A prayer service is now held at the morning hour, and the Spirit of God is always present, although the Saints are few in number.

The women's department has chosen the beautifying of the church lawn as its spring project. A potluck supper and party is held the first Thursday of each month for the members and their families. Business meetings are held on the second and fourth Thursdays. The proceeds of a recent food sale and white elephant auction helped to finance bundles of food and clothing for the needy Saints in Norway. The women have also given food showers to several of the older members who are no longer able to attend meetings. The group is now known as the Emma Burton Circle.

A copy of Paul M. Hanson's book, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, was donated to the public library by the women.

Dale Carter, James Pruett, Wendell and Raymond Smith, Jr., of the Army, and Marilyn Smith of the Waves, have received their discharges.

Montrose branch joined with the other churches of the city in observing a week of prayer in January. Elder O. I. Miller, branch president, spoke in the Methodist church on "The Bible Speaks to This Generation."

During the two weeks' series of services conducted by Elder Don Harvey in Fort Madison, several cars of Saints from Montrose drove to the neighboring city to attend.

With the return of several families of Saints to Montrose, Sunday evening services are again being held. Instead of regular preaching services, some one person or group is in charge, choosing whatever form of worship they desire. So far this plan has proved successful and many fine services have been presented.

Extensive redecorating is being done on the church. The Saints are grateful to all former Montrose members who have helped finance the project.

A special prayer service was held for President Smith preceding his death. Since he was not spared, Montrose branch joins with the rest of the church in willingness to support his successor.

A grand piano has been purchased for the main auditorium to replace the one which was loaned to the church for the Christmas presentation of The Messiah.

The church school is growing under the able supervision of Ernest Miller. Because of the increased attendance of the young people's class, the group has been divided in two classes; one for the Zion's League, and one for the older young people.

The Christian Action Group (adult division) is growing in attendance also, as a result of a visiting campaign designed to encourage non-members and those of the group who have not attended regularly to come. The meetings feature a potluck dinner followed by an evening of social activity.

The Zion's Leaguers are rehearsing an Easter play, For He Had Great Possessions, written by Dorothy Park Wilson. These young people hold a fireside meeting and round table discussion each month. Elder Floyd Engstrom told of his visits to the old cathedrals and churches of various countries in Europe on January 13 at the League service. Elder Engstrom returned to the States early in January after eighteen months overseas service as chaplain with the 26th Division.

A number of Saints from Colorado Springs attended the district conference in Denver on January 26 and 27.

Study classes are held each Sunday evening at the church. Pastor J. D. Curtis is teaching lessons from the Doctrine and Covenants. The Zion's League, with Ray Ebeling as teacher, is studying Beliefs of the Church.

A regional convention was held in Colorado Springs on February 23 and 24. The theme of the convention was "We Follow in His Steps."

Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Brown of Kansas City, Missouri, will move to Colorado Springs to take the place of C. A. and Lona Ralston, caretakers of the reunion ground. The Ralstons are leaving for Lamar, Colorado.

The annual financial observance service of the Des Moines district was held in Des Moines on January 12 and 13. The first activity was a banquet for the solicitors of the district and members of the priesthood held Saturday evening. President Frederick M. Smith gave the main address; short toasts were given by District President Frank Fry and Bishop Henry L. Livingston. Stephen Robinson, district bishop, presided over the banquet, and Wilbur R. Chandler led the singing.

On Sunday morning both President Smith and Bishop Livingston spoke to the congregation; financial statements and inventories were filed by members of the district at this time. The report for January revealed that $4,955.11 had been taken in—the largest amount ever received in one month in the history of the branch.

Bishop Livingston delivered a sermon at 2:30 in the afternoon, and assisted President Smith in leading the forum discussion held at 6:30. Brother Smith gave the final message of the day, emphasizing the need of the church for Zion. He restated his belief and faith in the zionic program, challenging the Saints to fulfill their God-given assignment.

It was evident at the conclusion of the morning service that President Smith was ill, but he did not wish to be relieved of his evening assignment since many throughout the district had come to hear him, and he would not have them go home disappointed. It was an inspiring sermon, and the last to be delivered by the president. He remained in Des Moines Sunday evening, returning to Independence the following afternoon.

It was with profound sorrow that the Saints of Des Moines district received the news of Brother Smith's death, but they join with others throughout the church in willingness to support his successor, that the purposes of the church might be established.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Pastor, Charles V. Graham

The February Communion service was an uplifting, spiritual experience. The Sunday evening missionary series has continued, all sermons being based on the book, Restoration—A Study in Prophecy. Recent speakers have been Ira Humes, Sr., E. A. Lewis, Paul Radelow, John Cumming, Norman Preusch, and Adolph Edwards.

Marion Shaeffer was baptized on Sunday evening, February 17, by Thomas Freeland. She was confirmed by L. A. Kuhn and C. V. Graham.

The New York-Philadelphia district conference was held February 9 and 10 in Philadelphia. The theme of the conference was "Let Us Go on Unto Perfection." Apostle G. G. Lewis and Newman Wilson, president of the Maine district, were present. The first activity of the conference was a prayer service held Saturday afternoon. Another such service was held Sunday morning, followed by Apostle Lewis' sermon at 11 o'clock; 305 people attended this meeting. A musical program under the direction of Ethel Graham, was presented at 2 p. m., after which the district business meeting was held for the election of delegates to General Conference.

An ordination service was held on March 10 at which Philip Haynes Beckmann was ordained an elder, and Franklin Van Lenten, a deacon. E. LeRoy Squire, C. V. Graham, A. R. Bacon, and Samuel Worrell were the officiating ministers. Later in the service, Philip Haynes Beckmann, Jr., was blessed by Elders Graham and Worrell.

Classes in public speaking and sermon construction are being held for members of the priesthood.

The attendance and spiritual quality of the Thursday evening prayer services continue to grow. Many have come to know that to miss this important meeting is to miss the acme of fellowship afforded by the church.

Members of the Zion's League are in charge of the Sunday evening services from time to time. Each week basketball and volleyball games are held at the Kensington Y. W. C. A., and a League-sponsored skating party is held monthly. These recreational features are gaining many new friends for the League.

The young adults meet once a month for a period of instruction regarding the church and its principles. After the business meeting and class session, they remain for a social hour. This group sponsored a bowling party on March 2, to which all members of the branch were invited.

Henry Beers, assisted by Jo and Bill Piedimonte, provided the entertainment at the February family night gathering. A party was held especially for the veterans of World War II on March 15, which took the place of family night.

A memorial service for the late President Frederick M. Smith was held at 11 o'clock on Sunday, March 24. Purple and gold flowers intermingled with greenery banked each side of the altar. Lighted candles burned throughout the service. Elders Elmer Larson, Earl and Leonard Hoisington were in charge. Traditional Latter Day Saint hymns were used as a prelude. Leonard Hoisington offered the devotional prayer, and Mrs. Gerald Moore sang President Smith's "Come, Sweet Comforter."

A biographical sketch and eulogy were read by Elmer Larson. Excerpts from the book, Frederick Madison Smith, which was written by Ruth Lyman Smith a few years before her death, added a personal touch to the service. Material from Joseph Smith and His Progenitors was also used.

Homage was paid the deceased leader for his mental capacity, his far-sightedness, and his hope of establishing Zion. A poem, "The Rose Beyond the Wall," was read by Earl Hoisington at the close of the hour.

An afternoon baptismal service was held at 2:30 by the Saints of the Southeast and Central Eastside congregations at First Church. Dale Wheeler and Robert Snively were baptized by the missionary in charge, Phillip Moore; Edwin Dewey Schulds, Richard LeRoy Darby, and Jerome Simpson were baptized by Clifford Bryson. A confirmation service followed immediately in the upper auditorium. Those officiating at this service were Elders Phillip Moore, Mark Yeoman, Earl Hoisington, Elmer Larson, Albert Nelson, George Hager, Leonard Hoisington, and Clark Livingston. Missionary Phillip Moore gave the welcome and charge to the new members and the congregation.

The evening sermon was delivered by Evangelist Walter H. Barker. He spoke on the need of charity and humility in the world today. —Carolyn H. Larson, reporter.

On President Smith's Death

I heard the report of President Frederick M. Smith's death on the 12 o'clock newscast yesterday, and my heart went out in sympathy to his loved ones. My prayer was that the Saints might be comforted in this dark hour and be granted wisdom in the selection of a new leader.

I feel that I have been sitting back letting others do the work assigned to the church. I am glad to hear that, despite my negligence, much progress is being made. If we who are indifferent would set our hands and minds to our individual duties, Zion could be realized much sooner. M. B. OLIVER.

Wishes to Contact Saints in Canal Zone

My home is Mobile, Alabama, but for the past eight years we have been living in the Canal Zone where my husband is employed by the government. I miss the church privileges of my own faith, but attend the services of the Union Church where all denominations may meet and worship. I feel that my time is better spent if I engage in some active church work, although not of my own belief, than to sit idly by and not participate in anything. I was brought up in the church environment in Mobile, and have always been active since a very young girl.

From January to December last year I was at home in Mobile trying to improve my health, but since I was not getting better my husband insisted that I go to the Mayo clinic for diagnosis. After suggesting a simple treatment the doctor dismissed me; I have followed it and good health has been restored to me. I feel that I have received this truly great blessing from our Father, for I prayed to have my health restored and was administered to in Mobile before I went to Mayo's. My husband and I both feel that it was through prayer and faith that I am now enjoying the blessing of good health.

We receive the Herald and always enjoy reading it. I have a sister living here in the Zone also. If there are other Saints near here that we do not know of, we hope they will try to contact us. Our home address is 1419 B Carr Street, Balboa, C. Z.; our post office box number is 976. My sister Mrs. W. F. O'Donnell, lives in Pedro Miguel; her telephone is 4-192. Anyone passing through the Canal who desires to contact us may do so by telephoning her, or calling on us at our home.

Value of Prayer

I am thankful that I had a praying mother. As children, we were taught to pray as soon as we could talk. I have been helped many times, when burdened with life's trials, by going to the Lord in prayer. He always came to my aid and gave me sufficient strength to bear the trial. Several times, when I was near death's door, the Saints have met at our home and prayed for me; through their prayers and administration I was healed.

God has been good to me and my family all through our lives. I do want to do the things he wants me to. A year after my son had joined the Navy, a voice (not audible) spoke to me saying, "Go to your bedroom and pray for your son; he needs your prayers." I left my work, went to my room, and poured out my heart to God, asking that my son be protected from whatever danger he might be in. I found out later that his ship had been torpedoed by a German submarine, but all the men were saved.

I am so glad we moved to Lamoni to live; the people here are always friendly and willing to help each other in any way they can. A number of projects are being started, and Lamoni is growing steadily. We have able leaders who are striving to bring their people closer to God. Last week our group pastor asked us to come fasting and praying to the midweek prayer service; we complied with his request and were well repaid for the effort we had put forth. God's Spirit was with us in abundance, and we were made to feel that under his spirit we could do a greater work for him. Our hearts were filled with love for Christ, our brothers, and sisters, and for the peoples of the world.

A Letter of Gratitude

Last November I sent in a request for prayers. I wish to thank all who prayed for me, and to say that God in his goodness saw fit to give me the blessing for which I asked; I was healed of my affliction. Ten days after being told by two doctors that I needed an operation, another reliable physician said I was in excellent health. I have been healed many times. In my blessing I was told that God had given his angels charge concerning me; I know this to be true, for many times, even before I became a member of this church, I had experiences which plainly showed me that he cared for me. I thank God every day that I have been permitted to hear and obey the gospel call.

I should like to ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my family, and especially for my daughter who will soon undergo an operation.

With God's help, I sincerely desire to go forward in the work of the kingdom.

MABEL E. LEONARD.

If I attend conference this year, it will be the 50th anniversary of my first conference. I was baptized at that time by Brother Joseph Smith, and still treasure the letter he wrote me afterwards. I have never regretted becoming a member of this church, for it has brought strength for every trial and an appreciation for all my blessings. While Brother Glaude Smith was pastor in Los Angeles, I have heard him say many times, "The gospel of Christ does work in the lives of men." This has been proved to me many times.

Just three days before Christmas I was struck by a "hit and run" driver. Hospitals were full, and I was taken to my home. Six hours later a doctor came and found a dislocated knee, fractured shoulder and ribs, and a blow over the left eye that discolored that whole side of my face. Pastor John Blackmore came and administered to me, and before he left the house my knee had slipped back into place and my shoulder had begun to heal. Twenty-three hours after the accident I was taken to the hospital, and the X-rays showed nothing wrong with the knee, and they reported the shoulder as an old break. In two weeks I dressed myself, went to church, and sang in the choir. In three weeks I went back to my work and have not been absent a day since then. I did not see the car that struck me and did not feel the blow; so, I go my way without fear, and ride the crowded busses with no unpleasant memories. I am past sixty-six years of age and I thank God that he is able to heal old bones as well

Lt. Kenneth Hunt

Lt. Kenneth LeRoy Hunt, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hunt of Bellingham, Washington, was reported "killed in action" February 25, 1944. His family was notified March 19, 1944, that he was missing, but did not receive final notice until July 7, 1945, after three survivors of his crew had been liberated from German prison camps and could tell what had happened.

Lieutenant Hunt was born in Missoula, Montana, on August 10, 1920, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when he was eight years old. He attended the church in Bellingham, and was active as Zion's League leader when he joined the Air Corps on March 9, 1942.

He received his basic training at Santa Ana, California; flight training at Hemet, California; was graduated from navigation school at San Marcos, Texas, receiving his wings and commission on July 15, 1943. He was assigned to a Liberator bomber as navigator, and had several weeks of heavy bombardment training at Lincoln, Nebraska. He and his squadron left for Italy with the 15th Air Force on December 1.

On their ninth mission, they unloaded their bombs over Regensburg, Germany, but on the way back to their base, they were attacked by four enemy fighters and shot down over Cilli, Yugoslavia. Three members of the crew were able to bail out when the oxygen tank exploded, but Lieutenant Hunt and six others went down with the plane. They were given a military funeral, and buried in the civilian cemetery in Cilli. Kenneth was awarded the Air Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, a Presidential Citation, the European Theater Medal with three battle stars, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Good Conduct Ribbon, and the Purple Heart.

He is survived by his parents; three sisters: Rosalie, Patty Joy Haveman, and Dallas; and his maternal grandmother, Mrs. G. E. Ward, all of Bellingham.

as young ones. Through his mercy and the prayers of the Saints and not because of my own worthiness, he has healed me.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Canadian Customs for Saints' Herald Publication

During General Conference, many Canadian Saints have advised us that they are still having difficulty in getting books published by the Herald Publishing House across the Canadian border without the payment of duty. Because of this, we wish to once again call to the attention of all of our Canadian people the fact that all publications of your church publishing house are officially exempt from Canadian duty. Furthermore, all publications used directly in the promotion of religion are free from excise and sales tax. In this classification, we particularly refer to the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, all textbooks and church school study material. Other publications are free from duty, but not from sales tax.

If customs officers should advise that duty must be paid, refer them to Tariff Item 172 of the Canadian Customs Regulations. If further difficulty is had, refer to File 4185-22 of the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise Division, Ottawa, Canada. This latter is the Herald Publishing House file in which we have been specifically advised that our publications are duty free.

* CONFERENCE NOTES

The Laurel Club served about 30,000 meals to conference visitors this time. This required a staff of 210 persons, all of them volunteers except 22 boys and helpers who were paid.

The Sanitarium booth established a book bank for the benefit of the nurses' library, and received donations for 88 books, at various costs. These scientific books are often expensive. Susie Chase, the perennial patient, a rubber doll with which the student nurses practice, had about 600 visitors. They found her charming, but looking a little sad, after all she has been through.

The First Aid Booth was maintained by the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, which furnishes the supplies free, makes no charges, and gave treatment to 109 cases. It was in charge of Mrs. John W. Chapman, formerly of the Sanitarium staff. Twenty-eight graduate nurses gave volunteer service during the conference, and it was necessary for the Sanitarium to send only one nurse from its staff. Miss Margaret Wiley, a graduate, now a physical therapist and nurse at the Delano School for Crippled Children in Kansas City, has given fine service.

At the canteen, conference people ate 5,880 ice cream bars, drank 10,800 bottled soft drinks, and bought as many candy bars as could be obtained. Conference apparently cultivates a sweet tooth and a terrible thirst.

Spice from Apostle Hield's sermon: "I hope you will look at your watches now as well as later." (It was 8:40 before the preliminaries were done so that he could start.) "Man has conquered all nature except human nature." "They promised us two cars in every garage, but when they got through with us, there were two families in every garage." "A chewing gum religion—a lot of jaw action."

* THY PROPHET, LORD

"Nearer My God to Thee"
Swells on the air,
While joyous men declare
Thy presence fair.

Thy power surges and Fills every heart,
Whispering, "Children come
"Do now thy part!"

Israel, thy prophet, Lord
Now stands to lead;
We are in readiness
His voice to heed.

Together we hear him
Answer thy call,
Together we pledge him
Our prayers, our all!

—FRANCES HARTMAN.

If the borrower sees this note, will he kindly return the book soon so that it can be used in the missionary work. The kindness will be greatly appreciated.—L. L.

A Message From the First Presidency

To the Saints throughout the world:

As we enter upon the responsibilities of our calling as presidents of the high priesthood and of the church, we feel led to extend to you this word of greeting, of admonition, and of promise.

Today, as always, the church is confronted by the desperate need of the world. This has been both the experience and the message of the prophets since the world began. It has been a dominant note in the experience and the message of the prophets of our dispensation.

There is today a pitiful need for bread, and to alleviating the dire distress of men and women and children the world over we should give our most serious and sacrificial attention. Wastefulness is always sinful. In view of world needs it is today a flagrant illustration of the unbrotherliness which lies at the root of all our personal and social and international ills. The Saints should daily "carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants" with a careful and discriminating insight born of a real sense of brotherhood in time of need.

But while we acknowledge and share this responsibility as members of the world community, the prophetic word carries an even deeper note, and to this we call your most serious and sober attention. "Behold the days come," said the Lord through his servant Amos, "that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." The day which Amos foresaw is upon us.

Confronted by the desperate need of humanity, this hunger for the word of God preached in power and with the authority of example, we therefore renew the call so many times repeated for a strong missionary testimony merging into and re-enforced by a rich quality of kingdom life: Let the quorums and councils of the church be united and strong. Let the members of the priesthood, in their several places, learn their duty and do it with their might. Let the Saints be valiant in witness and in service. Let the young dedicate their powers in intelligent and prepared heartfelt sacrifice. Let the stakes and districts and branches stand forth as centers of godly experience and testimony. And let all this be done to the praise and glory of the Lord who has redeemed us, and to the end that his kingdom may be established.

We feel the assurance of the Spirit that as we go forward together, each contributing according to his abilities, the church will be strengthened and liberated and confirmed.

May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ attend you.

Your servants for his sake,

ISRAEL A. SMITH,
J. F. GARVER,
F. HENRY EDWARDS.

By the Renewing of Your Mind

A sermon given January 2, 1944, at the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania Branch

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.—Romans 12: 1, 2.

The glory of God is intelligence.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

VENTUROUS LIVING demands of us increased searching for a more complete understanding of the intelligence of God. Some ask, "Why understand it?" Others ask, "What is the need for understanding divine intelligence?" While still others desire to know, "How must I search to understand God's laws?"

As man goes through the growing stages of life, he finds the mysteries of the universe to be many and even numberless. But the mystery of mysteries is life itself. Today the world is at a loss, striving to conform to the ways of man, without first seeking the ways of Deity. World War I brought people closer to God through the necessity of self-preservation and the desire for military victory. The Armistice brought military victory, but also a declining realization of the need of God. Today again, we fight for peace, we cry for peace, but we must become cognizant of the laws and price of peace or our next generation will have to fight again. The processes of peace are attained only through knowledge of and application of divine ways. Gods laws must be a dominating part of our lives.

GROWTH OF KNOWLEDGE

In time of war people find greater need for knowledge of all things. Through the Selective Service Act more than 750,000 men between the ages of 18 and 38 were rejected because of illiteracy. Fifty whole divisions of otherwise able-bodied men were rejected because they could neither read nor write their own names. Thus, Uncle Sam was forced to turn schoolteacher and provided a thirteen-week course in reading and writing. The surprising results showed that these men had a desire to learn and increase their knowledge of better things. More than ninety-five per cent of the students passed their courses. Through Uncle Sam's desire to afford greater opportunities, more than 20,000 men learned to read and write in the year 1934. Many of these men were formerly farmers, miners, barbers, circus men, a professional baseball player, etc. One truck driver, when asked how he read the signs along the highway, said he employed a small boy to read them for him.

In order to bring earthly peace, we must seek a greater and growing knowledge of the spiritual principles of the kingdom, which are the spiritual qualities of life. The assimilation of the knowledge of these qualities in our lives creates the desire to dedicate our lives to the ways of Christlikeness. Through such action we present our bodies a living example and testimony of his way. Through the renewing of our minds, we shall be transformed from our past ways. We shall see the vision of the kingdom through which our homes shall shine with a glowing protection of the abiding Comforter. This Comforter is the Spirit of Christ. The application of this growing knowledge in everyday life will bring forth the establishment and redemption of Zion. To produce the proper and perfect execution of any task in life, we must assimilate these spiritual qualities of the kingdom. Thus Zion may become a reality.

GROWTH THROUGH TRAINING

The assimilation of knowledge into our lives comes through training. A civilian adjusts himself to life in the armed forces. He soon recognizes the necessity for training. Each man in his branch of service must be trained for his specific duties. The seaman being trained for submarine duty is subjected to the changes of atmospheric pressure that will be found when in action on and under the sea. If his body cannot stand up under this basic training, he is transferred to another branch of the service where he will be more valuable. Today, members of the air corps are no longer expected to be content with verbal instruction on methods of abandoning their plane if forced down in the open seas. Rather they are given actual training by being dropped in a dummy plane into a large tank of water. Thus they learn to protect themselves should they ever face a crash landing in the ocean. In commando tactics the trainee is sent through unrehearsed maneuvers with "live" ammunition so that he may learn to successfully react to the circumstances. Through this training, he produces that split second action which is so necessary in this particular type of warfare in actual combat. On the home front, those taking standard and advanced first-aid training offered by the American Red Cross also must pass required examinations. These examinations are given only after each and every member of the class has completed that period of training. He himself must demonstrate his ability to apply the proper bandages and medical attention that a "first-aider" will be expected to perform. Regardless of the type of life and work we choose, we must have proper training in order to make our lives more abundant.

With right inculcation of religious attributes in our lives, we soon become cognizant of the needs of those round about us. Jimmy Yen, who today has proved to be one of the most dynamic educators of our generation, caught a glimpse of the need of helping people to help themselves. He, although a highly educated Chinese scholar who could have stayed in his own class of scholastic association, is dedicating his talents to help those less fortunate. He would teach them to free themselves from the bondage of ignorance. Working with the coolies, he found them desirous to grow, but that they lacked the opportunity. Jimmy Yen provided this opportunity by reducing the vocabulary of over 40,000 characters, which only the wealthy were given the opportunity to learn, to a vocabulary of about 1,000 characters. With these he taught the coolies how to read and write. He had them studying aloud through practical training, and has become perhaps the greatest mass educator of our time. No nation, no great body of people, and no religious organization can rise higher than its masses. We may cry for peace and Zion, but these shall never be, until God is more powerful in the hearts and minds of the masses.

As we press toward the mark of the salvation of the soul of man, we must understand those preventive measures, which are conditional factors, in the process of saving the soul. With the problems and adversities of life always active in our mind's eye, we must see the necessity for training. Divine guidance must be a dominating part. Leadership of qualified teachers is imperative. Religion cannot be extemporized. Individual reaction to any problem in life needing religious decorum can only be accomplished through trained understanding. One who attempts to extemporize feels the inward realization for the need of personal training.

ADAPTATION TO CONDITIONS

Modern warfare is teaching personal and group defense through the methods of camouflage. Servicemen on all battlefronts, whether it be the jungles, the snow covered sectors, or on the high seas, are being taught how to protect themselves through the ever-changing and more successful methods of camouflage. The more realistic his disguise is to the surrounding area, the more readily he can protect himself. Our coastal defense is often unnoticed by the naked eye, due to the expert concealment of heavy artillery by camouflage blended with near-by scenes. From the air, the seemingly small village may actually be a booming and active defense plant. Science is continually experimenting to produce better ways to protect our materials.

To build our bodies as living temples of God, we must continually change to better methods as our understanding of eternal laws increases and as our faith becomes knowledge. To live toward the perfection of Christlikeness we must be ever changing. We today are living in a period of transition. We must continually adapt ourselves to present and future conditions. Our present period shows a marked increase in juvenile delinquency. The solution of this crime wave will come when we adapt ourselves to present need. The teen-agers are not wholly to blame, nor is the war entirely responsible for the delinquency wave. These statements are based on a recent survey of one of our typical large boom cities. Out of 452 cases of delinquent youngsters in that city, only three had fathers in the armed service and only nineteen had mothers working in war plants. In the solution of this problem, we will find the core of the trouble to be in the home environment offered the children. Young people themselves must recognize the need for preparation and training in order to prepare for future responsibility in the homes of America. The recognition of this all important principle of democracy must first come through the proper training of their parents and all community endeavors. The young men and women who have felt the tension of actual combat overseas sense deeply the emensity of the responsibility which has been placed upon them. This responsibility causes them to seek and find a greater power than man. Today we read that there are no atheists in the air as well as in the foxholes. These young people are truly finding the necessity to adapt themselves to changing conditions.

As we render our reasonable service to God through making our vision of the kingdom a dominating part of our lives, we shall help each other to develop to a higher level. The object of Zion is to convert the world to righteous living. This will lead to the goal—the salvation of the soul of man (not food and wealth). With the divine assistance of God, we must be attuned to the needs of all people.

We will never see Zion except through a peaceful people.
We will never see a peaceful people except through good people.
We will never see good people except through good communities.
We will never see good communities except through good homes.
We will never see good homes except through righteous individuals.
We will never see righteous individuals except through the knowledge and application of the laws of God.

May we be transformed by the progressive renewing of our minds to a greater and more profound conviction of the Christ in this cause which we are sure is also his cause! May we in the process of presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, prove to the world as did the Christ, what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God!

Life is a mission. Every other definition of life is false, and leads all who accept it astray. Religion, science, philosophy, though still at variance upon many points, all agree in this, that every existence is an aim.—Mazzini —Life and Writings.

A desire of knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind; and every human being whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has to get knowledge.—Samuel Johnson.

What We Have Learned

About the Conference

If there were any serious doubt of the wisdom and propriety of holding the recent General Conference, following the death of President Frederick M. Smith, it was dispelled in the first day of the meetings. As the conference continued, the judgment of leading church officers was abundantly sustained by the benefits both spiritual and legislative that accrued. The church is stronger, the people more confident and happy, and the officers are encouraged by the expressions of unity and trust manifested in the sessions, to go forward in their work, conscious of the support of the membership.

It was a happy and hopeful experience to attend this conference. For the people, there were practically no tensions. The few uncertainties vanished as their spontaneous will to go together in one direction became increasingly evident. From the first Saturday afternoon onward there was no doubt, no apprehension among the people who were doing the voting.

The organization of the conference was not easy. Many decisions had delayed, many plans left incomplete, due to circumstances that were beyond the control of those in charge. Yet at a late time when the plans came out and the people went into action, there was a total impression of peace, order, and harmony. From the visitor's viewpoint, as from the viewpoint of the head-quarter's church worker, everything was working well.

About Our Government

The people of this conference had an opportunity not heretofore known in many years of seeing the importance of the "Second Presidency" which is a part of the church law and structure, found in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9. Through the years we had heard and read much of the First Presidency, which is normally in charge of much of church administrative work. But when the First Presidency is to be reorganized the Second Presidency takes charge.

This feature of our church government, along with others mentioned in that section and elsewhere, gives stability and strength to the church, assuring the people, through the broad base upon which our government is founded, that it will always remain representative of the people.

About the People

The conference revealed again, with increasing emphasis, the desire our people have to meet, to visit, to enjoy the fellowship of other members of the church. This was strongly evident in the applause that greeted the recommendation of the First Presidency that the next conference should meet in 1947 instead of waiting the two-year period that has been so customary during recent years. Our people like to gather and visit at the General Conference. For many of them it is a reunion time.

Such meeting has definite values. Businessmen recognize them. They know that there is a limit to what can be accomplished by letter, telegram, and telephone. In the final phases of all co-operation, "personal contact" is indispensable. People have to meet face to face for complete understanding. You never really know a person by correspondence; acquaintance is established in personal contact.

In church work, where so much is dependent upon complete understanding, harmony, and good will, the conference meetings are of incalculable value.

About the Priesthood

One could not help being impressed, and deeply so, during the ordination services of the conference, at the high quality and the fine appearance of the men being thus set apart to the higher offices of our organization. Knowing many of them personally gave all the more assurance that the impression concerning the whole group was correct. A splendid body of men were put in places of greater responsibility. And, we are sure, there are many more of this kind and quality where these came from.

A friend not a member of the church took occasion to say, toward the end of the conference, "I have heard several of your leading men speak, and they seem to be very well informed in their fields, and interesting to hear."

The Housing Problem

Most thought had to be given to finding places to house delegates, ex officios, and visitors. That problem is not likely to be easier next year, for there is no possibility of a rapid increase in the amount of local housing.

But when that problem is solved, we will face another. It was already apparent at this conference: that is, how to find the space for those who wish to attend the meetings. We have nearly enough people in and around Independence now to fill the Auditorium. The young people were badly crowded; scores who wished to attend the prayer meetings could not get in; Stone Church is too small, and the Auditorium itself, a vast place, had even the gallery well filled for most services. For the communion service, it was insufficient.

For the presence and the interest of all these fine people we are indeed grateful. They must have been disappointed at times when they could not find room. The increasing numbers of our people, their keen interest in church work, and the conference will soon present our leaders with problems they had not hoped to meet so soon.

To The General Conference:

We, counselors to the late President Frederick M. Smith, since March 20 have under the law constituted the First Presidency. We now respectfully report that the General Conference, now in session, is legally constituted and organized.

Therefore, in conformity with church practice and precedent, we officially notify the Conference of the death of President Frederick M. Smith on March 20, 1946, the date above mentioned. This creates the necessity for the church in conference assembled to select or appoint a successor in the office of President of the High Priesthood and President of the Church.

Independence, Missouri
April 6, 1946.

Continuing, the chairman said: "In harmony with the law and precedents of the church, at this juncture we turn the Presidency of the Conference over to the Quorum of Twelve in the person of President Paul M. Hanson." He then relinquished the chair to Apostle Hanson and withdrew from the assembly.

Apostle Hanson requested that Apostle John F. Garver be associated with him in presiding over the Conference.

The chairman then addressed the assembly as follows:

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT OF PAUL M. HANSON

In the emergency which the passing of our late president, Frederick Madison Smith, has created, the law of our church provides that the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, as the second presidency and the regulating authority of the church shall assume this position during the choosing of a successor in the First Presidency.

This act is not to be interpreted as an assumption of position or authority which invades the prerogatives of any other quorum or officer. But with humility and reverence the quorum stands in the appointed place which the constitutional law as well as the traditions of the church have designated, for guidance of the body in the way that has been outlined in which the present emergency should be met.

We are grateful that the requirements of the law seem to have been met in a manner that is satisfactory.

Although there is evidence of President Frederick M. Smith's expectation as to who would succeed him in the prophetic office, the brethren of the Twelve thought it wise to make assurance doubly sure in this vitally important matter by asking the Presiding Evangelist to seek the mind of God while we sustained him by our confidence, faith, and prayers. This Brother Elbert A. Smith consented to do, he having already felt some leadings in the matter. He will now present the light which he has received for the information and guidance of the Conference.

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith presented the following message to the General Conference and the Church:

A MESSAGE TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AND THE CHURCH

By the Presiding Patriarch

Wednesday forenoon, March 27, a committee of three Apostles from the Quorum of Twelve waited upon me to inform me that the quorum had by unanimous action decided to request me to seek divine guidance to present to the General Conference in regard to the choice of successor in the office of president. Came also a letter signed by the president and secretary containing this statement, "Our council, severally and as a group, assure you of our support and sincere prayers." The letter also gave the text of the resolution adopted by the quorum:

Whereas, in the death of the late Frederick Madison Smith the church has sustained the loss of its president, president of the high priesthood, prophet, seer and revelator, be it resolved, it is the sense of this council that Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith be requested to seek the will of God in the matter of a successor in this office.

Obviously it is the right of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles as the "second presidency" in the church to concern itself with this matter in the present emergency, and their unsolicited and unanimous action encouraged me to undertake a task that already weighed upon my mind by day and night.

The forenoon of March 6, Brother Israel A. Smith and I visited President Frederick M. Smith at his home and found him very ill; but he made no complaint, as was his habit, and the physician had not yet arrived, so we did not know just how serious the situation might be. However, after we had returned to the Auditorium and while I was alone in my office in prayer, a most profound conviction of the Spirit came upon me that the time had fully come for the end of the ministry of President Smith. Thereafter I was not under liberty at any time or place to pray for his recovery. It was not to be.

Subsequently at different times there was a recurrence of spiritual light, particularly the forenoon of March 20. This was during the hours immediately preceding the passing of the president. I was again in my office and was conscious of the presence and power of the Spirit of the Lord, and was directed presently to formulate a message to the Conference and the church, not as commandment or law, but by way of testimony, counsel, and comfort. This I have done and now submit the following:

I was strengthened by the assurance that the spirit of prophecy does not die with the prophet but is eternal with the Father and the Son, and through the ministry of the Holy Ghost, it is brought to the church and to individuals.

The testimony was again renewed with great clearness that Jesus is the Son of God and that his gospel is the power of God unto salvation. It is the responsibility of men of the priesthood to witness for him. They are to preach the principles of his doctrine. They are to officiate in the ordinances and sacraments of his church and to administer its affairs, both temporal and spiritual, in his spirit. They are counseled to teach his way of life and themselves to walk in it as leaders and exemplars.

The arm of the Lord our God has not been shortened. The havoc of war on earth has not shaken the foundations of his throne nor altered his plans for the reign of peace on earth, in his own due time, and under the rule of his Son. The Saints should not become impatient nor feel frustration when their dreams are not all realized upon the date that they themselves have marked on the calendar.

The Lord has not changed regarding the great work of the Restoration. Neither has he turned from his people, though some of them have turned from him. Some have been lulled to sleep and inactivity by the spirit of indifference and carelessness. Some have turned away because of trivial offenses. Some have fallen away and been overcome by the grosser sins of the world: the spirit of revelry and wanton living, of drinking and fornication and adultery. All such are counseled to repent with heaviness of spirit while there is yet time, and to renew their covenant that they may again be clean men and women and find peace.

Those who have been devout and faithful and have rendered a sacrificial service, according to their ability and opportunity, may take new courage and press forward in the work entrusted to us all. There is no one of that spirit so humble or in so obscure a place that he or she shall be forgotten of our Lord.

The men of the ministry are counseled to cry repentance to this generation; to give themselves as men under a divine commitment to the task of warning the world through evangelical and missionary work and to the pastoral task to nurture the Saints in the spirit of love; to feed the sheep as commanded and forget not the lambs of the fold. They are admonished to work together in unity with that charity which suffereth long and is kind. Let the ministers of the Lord in every grade and station stand before the people in a demonstration that the law of reconciliation is observed among them, that their admonitions to the Saints to dwell together in peace may have weight.

This counsel is of great importance, because there remain other times of change and a time of crisis difficult to meet, and the men of the ministry should be prepared to meet such a time with wisdom, patience, faith, and under divine guidance which will be given to a united people—united in righteousness.

Let the people be comforted. The prayers of the Saints for the recovery of President Frederick M. Smith went not unheeded; but the time of his departure was at hand. He was spent and weary in body and mind—but there remaineth a rest—and consolation.

According to historic precedents of the church, based on law, and always observed hitherto, the president and prophet of the church, when inspired so to do, may indicate his successor. There is evidence that the late president did will so to function. At a joint council meeting of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, October 20, 1938, there was under consideration the appointment of Israel A. Smith and L. F. P. Curry to act as counselors in the presidency, subject to action of the next General Conference. At the time President Frederick M. Smith made a statement to the council which is referred to in the official minutes of the meeting as follows:

Citing the letter of instructions issued by his father, he called attention to the fact that in the event of his passing, Israel would be in line for the office of president, and would have the advantage of the additional experience which this appointment would give.

Subsequently the late president assured the church that at that time he was moving under "inspirational impulses"; this assurance was embodied in a revelation given to the church at the Conference of 1940 which was approved by the church and published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as section 138.

The Conference is counseled to consider as valid and basic and in accord with our historic precedents the statements referred to and to give them due consideration in reaching a decision. Time has demonstrated the foresight expressed therein: years of experience in the presidency have been advantageous to Israel A. Smith, and in them he has gained in the confidence and esteem of his brethren.

To this matter I have given earnest prayer and thought, with an increasing conviction that it is in harmony with the spirit of wisdom and revelation that the choice indicated by the late president should be approved, and that without unnecessary delay Israel A. Smith should be ordained president of the high priesthood and the church and prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. I am persuaded that this also will find confirming witness of the Spirit in the minds of numerous people.

If it be the will of the church that he should thus be ordained, he is counseled to enter upon that work in quiet strength, with firmness in decisions, yet with that spirit of kindness and justice that was with his father in that high office before him.

There are hazards and uncertainties of life and health involved in the putting of such a burden upon one well past the meridian of life that may cause apprehension. I have sought earnestly for light on the questions, Will this man's ministry be for a considerable time, as we pray may be the case? Or will it be very brief? No assurance has been given. But the needs of the immediate hour are great—and we must oftentimes move by faith as did the fathers and founders of the church.

May peace and blessing abide with the church, and the men of the priesthood be reminded again that the Lord has said to his ministry: "Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end."

Respectfully submitted,
ELBERT A. SMITH.

April 6, 1946.

At the request of the chairman, the message was again read by Secretary Frank McDonald.

The chair recognized Apostle John W. Rushton, senior member of the Apostolic Quorum, who presented the following statement and motion:

Mr. Chairman, Fellow Ministers and Delegates:

The sorrowful event under which we meet in Conference at this time, namely the passing of President Frederick Madison Smith, who for thirty years as prophetic leader won our esteem and affection, has incapacitated the quorum of the First Presidency of the church and imposed upon the Quorum of Twelve as the second Presidency of the church, the solemn task of supervising the carrying out of the law regarding the election of a successor.

Within the framework of the law governing this peculiar crisis we recognize five steps which must be taken as follows:

1. The right of the incumbent to name his successor.
2. The recognition of the law of lineal descent.
3. The need of revelatory authentication.
4. The voice of the church as expressed in free assembly by democratic vote.
5. The solemn setting apart of the candidate by the laying on of hands and the prayer of ordination.

As representative of the Apostolic Quorum, I can witness that this duty was undertaken in deep concern and fervent prayer. We are fully aware that the church is the instrument through which God continues the ministry of the incarnation. This is the "manifestation of God himself in flesh" and through which instrument his mind and will are continually revealed. Also, through which his purposes in the saving of souls and the building up of the kingdom are achieved. Consequently, the church must be "compacted together," according to Saint Paul; which means that the human and divine elements of the church must be well knitted together as the body, built, planned, and organized, to the end that the purposes of God as revealed and interpreted by Jesus Christ can be practically applied through the ministries of the church, which is the stewardship particularly of the priesthood.

In the minutes of the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric for October 20, 1938, it is recorded that the late President Frederick M. Smith definitely appointed his brother, Israel

A. Smith, to take his place in the First Presidency preparatory to his being selected to succeed him.

The specific law which emphasizes lineage, or the law of heredity, is recognized in our brother's appointment as the successor. We believe that emphasis must not be placed unduly upon the biological strain; but, equalized in the recognition of moral and spiritual qualifications. The "gifts and callings of God"; the injunction "Be ye clean, who bear the vessels of the Lord," are of necessity qualities we have the right to presume are safeguarded along with the hereditary principle.

Nor can we treat lightly the clear implications of the sacred writings that the "inheritance of the kingdom of God is not in flesh and blood," but "in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Our Lord strongly insists, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." And in the communication through Joseph Smith in calling his son, our late President, to succeed him, in 1906, in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 127, worthiness in stability and fidelity were especially stressed.

Therefore we must interpret this law in the light of spiritual qualifications as well as recognizing racial and family prerogative.

The desirability for inspirational attestation is met in the message of the Presiding Patriarch, which in the absence of any direct instrument of the late President supplements the presumption felt on the occasion of the communication by President Frederick M. Smith which represented what he spoke of as "pervasive inspiration."

The law also requires approval in open Conference, according to Doctrine and Covenants 17:17, which reads: "Every president of the High Priesthood is to be ordained by direction of a High Council or General Conference."

In view of these regulations which converge in the arguments and evidences herein presented and authenticated in the law and traditions of the church, pointing to our Brother Israel Alexander Smith as the one to take his place in the First Presidency in succession to the deceased President; therefore it is moved that Elder Israel A. Smith be recognized and approved for ordination as called of God to preside over the High Priesthood and the church, to exercise the functions of such office in harmony with and agreeable to the mind and will of God as revealed in the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which are accepted by the church as the standard of doctrine, ethics, and spiritual truth.

Elder E. Y. Hunker, Senior President of the Seventies:

Mr. Chairman, members of the Conference, it is truly a privilege to support the motion just presented through the properly authorized and delegated representatives of the church at this memorable conference. In so doing I feel that I bespeak the deep conviction of the membership of the church that God has been and is directing his people, and that their action to approve of Israel A. Smith as the rightful successor to the late President of the Church is in harmony with past revelations of God and usages of the church deal with this matter, accepted as law and still in force today. I am happy to second the motion.

Apostle Hanson relinquished the chair to Apostle Garver, who placed the motion before the Conference for discussion, stating that in order to secure a general coverage of the matter, there being no objection, the chair would call to the tribune a few men representative of the quorums and areas of the church. Accordingly, the following at the request of the chair addressed the assembly: Paul M. Hanson, President of the Council of Twelve; Roscoe E. Davey, senior by ordination of the Council of the Presidents of Seventy; Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp, President of the Aaronic Priesthood; Ward A. Hougas, President of the Quorum of High Priests; Myron A. McConley of the Council of the Twelve, representative of our Australasian Mission and Pacific Islands; Arthur A. Oakman of the Council of Twelve and representative of the European Mission. Elders G. E. Tickemyer, John E. Vanderwood, and Gomer T. Griffiths also spoke in support of the motion.

The vote was then taken on the choice of Israel A. Smith for president of the High Priesthood, and of the church, and prevailed unanimously. The courtesy of voting was also extended to the visitors present, who expressed unanimous approval. The chair then stated that the motion prevailed, and Israel A. Smith hereby declared unanimously chosen to serve us as president of the High Priesthood and of the church.

At this juncture Apostle Garver resigned the chair to Apostle Hanson, who appointed M. A. McConley, W. A. Hougas, Percy E. Farrow, and G. L. DeLapp to escort Brother Israel A. Smith into the assembly. Hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," was sung, and the congregation stood in tribute while President Smith was escorted to the platform. Receiving official notification by the chairman of his selection, President Smith addressed the Conference as follows:

Brother Chairman and Saints:

I beg your indulgence for a statement, which naturally will be more or less personal in its nature.

Yes, a sturdy Oak has fallen; a strong leader is gone; but the church goes forward. Thus is the history of our crises epitomized.

Having been reared in the church, having long known the law and the traditions and the precedents of the church, having been son, editorial associate, and secretary of the late Joseph Smith, and brother and counselor to his successor, I would not have been human if I had never contemplated, especially within recent years, that at some time the church might face the necessity of selecting a successor to President Frederick M. Smith.

And I would be disingenuous, indeed, if I were to say I had not anticipated the probability of the action you have just taken.

I do not, however, from your selection, take any honor unto myself. You have honored the law; you have honored God, if that law is divine, as we believe it is. I in no way minimize the sacredness of the office: It is desirable, indeed, to be honorably engaged in a high and holy calling with the honorable men and women of the church.

There are those who have questioned the desirability of a continuation of the rule as to succession; they would abrogate it, and recede from the precedents followed in a like situation in 1860 and 1915. I accord to them entire honesty of conviction. Modesty forbids any advocacy of the rule on my part. And most assuredly, respect for the traditions of the church and the interpretations of revered and inspired leaders, suggests the un wisdom of attempting any apology. The rule has long been established—long before most of us here were born.

If any lack confidence for personal reasons, may they withhold their final judgment, without prejudice. I shall do my best to win a place in their good graces. My father, who came to be universally accepted, was more or less unknown at the beginning of his ministry. When Frederick followed, he was overshadowed, to a degree, by his father's standing as a leader. Time will be required, and time is respectfully asked. That, I am sure, will be granted.

Many years ago, my father frequently suggested to me the possibility of a call to the priesthood and official responsibility. And I, as often, told him that if that should happen, I hoped I would be considered worthy of service. Later on, at such times as I have seen in prospect what we here witness, the burden of my prayer has been that should the exigency ever arise, which has now confronted the church since the 20th of March, my associates in the advisory councils of the church would believe me worthy of their confidence. That these fellow laborers have so largely accepted me is evidence—to me at least—that my prayer has been answered.

So it is with gratitude I acknowledge their generous support, and I thank you for your vote of confidence; for I feel very humble indeed and quite inadequate of myself to carry the grave responsibilities of the office. I shall require their help. And I shall need your prayerful support.

We have often heard the expression, "big" men, "strong" men; but I long ago concluded that nobody is strong enough or big enough in and of himself to discharge properly the duties devolving upon the men in our leading quorums.

How certainly true this must be of the presiding head of the priesthood of the church!

Yes, a strong Oak fell on the 20th day of March, but he was strong, as his predecessors were strong, only as and to the extent that their powers were augmented by the divine mind.

My brethren, the world is in confusion because the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been sufficiently taught and received among the peoples of the earth. The primary objective of the priesthood is to bring the body of Christ to a unity of faith and action when this desirable world ministry may be accomplished. It is one of the challenging duties of the presidency, both the first and second presidencies of the church, to bring about complete harmony and unity among the quorums and councils of the church.

Every good and desirable thing, all our hopes, and the blessings of heaven await the faithful discharge of these responsibilities. I trust I may be of assistance in securing this unity.

My father on his deathbed reminded those about him that he had always tried to impress on the church that it did not depend on any one man or any set of men: "And," he added, "I bequeath to the church the ministry of the church." And what a legacy that was! With over three hundred under General Conference appointment at the time.

So we take stock of our present inheritance, and I am greatly encouraged to observe the very able and experienced brethren of the Quorum of Twelve, men of wisdom, statesmanlike in their desire and ability to move forward under the law; the Seventies, fewer, indeed, than we wish, but growing in effectiveness; the Presiding Bishopric of proved stability and capacity in times of stress; our splendid corps of stake and district officers, the standing ministry in general; and growing numbers of evangelical ministers under the able presidency of one whose spiritual stature was never greater than today. And, last but not least, a membership growing steadily in numbers, earnestness, and consecration.

It is indeed a high privilege to serve the church in collaboration with these men of the ministry, and I think I can justly point to them and say, "Here is the legacy of our departed president."

And I have promised myself and here avow that I shall never permit myself to become jealous or envious of their many excellencies and fine achievements. I shall continue to be proud of them.

I should be presumptuous, perhaps, on almost the instant of my selection, as it were, to mention policies. The commitment of the church to carry the gospel to the nations is uppermost in my mind at the moment. The chief missionary quorum of the church is even now preparing a restatement of our missionary program. The desirability of keeping our eyes raised to the level of zionic ideals is of paramount importance. To these well-known ideals, I give my full allegiance.

If any pledge be required or should be deemed advisable, or expected, I could make no more fitting pledge than that made by the late Joseph Smith at Amboy, Illinois, eighty-six years ago today, when he said—and I adopt his words as expressing my earnest intention:

"I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals." And again when he said, "I propose that all shall be dealt with in mercy."

Like him, I come not of my own dictation to this sacred office, but, as you have this day witnessed, by a call of heaven through regular and appointed channels. I accept the call to service.

In addition, I pledge that all my powers of body and mind shall be spent in the line of duty.

We abide in faith. God will bless us if we are united. United we must be. Division in our ranks must not be permitted. Full and firm reliance on the power of God is our only salvation.

My prayers, in the Master's name, are for your well-being, your prosperity, your individual and collective salvation, for the success of this General Conference, and the ultimate triumph of the kingdom of God on earth.

And now, Mr. President, as a servant of the church, I await the further direction of the Conference.

Apostle Hanson announced that the ordination of Brother I. A. Smith would take place in the Auditorium at the 9:30 A. M. service on Sunday.

Announcements were made, hymn, "Where Wilt Thou Put Thy Trust" was sung, Apostle McConley offered the benediction, and the Conference adjourned at 4:30 P. M. subject to the provisions of the Official Program.

Ordination of Israel A. Smith April 7, 1946

Pursuant to action of the General Conference on Saturday, April 6, 1946, and in harmony with announcement on that occasion of the President of the Quorum of Twelve, Paul M. Hanson, the ordination of Israel A. Smith to the office of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church took place at the ordination service Sunday morning,

April 7, held in the Auditorium, the procedure being as follows:

"Israel A. Smith, after receiving a charge delivered by Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, was ordained to the office of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church by the President of the Quorum of Twelve, Paul M. Hanson, assisted by John W. Rushton, senior apostle of the Quorum of Twelve, Ward A. Hougas, President of the Quorum of High Priests, and Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, President of the Aaronic Priesthood."

Following the ordination President Smith made the following statement:

April 7, 1946

I do not know that there is much that I could add to what I said on yesterday. I do not know that there is anything I should add to that, except to say again that I appreciate and thank you for your confidence and support. I realize the significance of the charge which has been made by Brother Elbert, and I trust that God will give me strength to continue faithful. Up until now I have, as it were, been feeling my way. I believe now that I can go forward with more assurance.

In order to clear some possible doubt as to the statement which I made on yesterday with reference to acceptance of the office, I wish to add something this morning which is as follows, and I trust it will clear away any doubt that any may have with respect to my position:

The appointment and call which were made the basis for action by the General Conference on yesterday came through regular channels. I have submitted to ordination and desire to record again my acceptance. I believe the call is divine and I know that I must accept the office which, under the motion, is that of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church, to exercise the functions of such office in harmony with and agreeable to the mind and will of God as revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which are accepted by the Church as the standard of doctrine, ethics and spiritual truth.

Business Session, Monday, April 8, 1946, 2:00 p. m.

The Monday business session of the General Conference was called to order by President I. A. Smith.

Elder R. A. Cheville led the congregation in singing, "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel." Mrs. Edna Ehlers was at the organ, and Mrs. Florence Campbell accompanied on the piano.

Apostle John W. Rushton offered the invocation.

A solo was rendered by Mrs. Hazel Withee, "Great Peace Have They Which Love Thy Law," by Rogers. She was accompanied by Mrs. Florence Campbell.

Minutes of the business session of Saturday afternoon and the ordination service of Sunday morning were read, Apostle Garver called attention to an error appearing in the printed minutes as distributed for April 6, page 3, column 3, second paragraph from top, 8th line, where the word orders should be "areas." Stake President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., requested that Miss Thea Leonard be corrected to read Mrs. Thea Leonard. The minutes were approved as corrected.

REVELATION TO THE CHURCH

At the request of the chair, Secretary McDonald read the following communication:

Independence, Missouri
April 9, 1946

To the Quorums and
To the General Conference:
Beloved Brethren:

Realizing our urgent need to receive light and instruction in order that the quorums might be filled, I have wrestled in prayer to God in my weakness, on behalf and in the interest of the church, sensing deeply that it has been but a few hours ago when the burden of the church was laid upon me, yet in confidence and faith that God will not fail the church when called upon.

In the early hours of yesterday and today I was blessed by the Spirit in power and assurance such as I have never before experienced. The mind of the Lord was manifested to me, and in the order named my brethren have been presented to me, as follows, and accordingly I have written:

"It is my will, saith the Spirit, that my servants of the Quorum of the Twelve, John F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards, be ordained and set apart to be counselors to my servant, the president of the church, and to be presidents in the Quorum of the First Presidency. They are my chosen vessels and are qualified by experience. Their apostleship is extended in presidency, and if they will go forward in loving service, their ministry will be very effective.

"To fill one of the vacancies in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, I have presented to my servant the name of D. Blair Jensen of the High Priests Quorum, who is called and chosen to this office, and should be ordained and set apart as a special witness in the Quorum of Twelve."

My heart has been made to rejoice, as I feared that through my weakness and inexperience, the work of the church might suffer loss. I present this word to you soon after its reception, and, as I write, it is confirmed again unto me.

May God bless you in your deliberations; and if the quorums and the body shall have this message confirmed unto them, I shall rejoice, and I have faith that the church thereby will be blessed.

Your servant in Christ,
ISRAEL A. SMITH,
President

Elder Percy E. Farrow moved with the support of Elder Perry L. Hiles that this document which has been presented to the quorums and General Conference by President Israel A. Smith be approved as a revelation of the mind and will of God to the church, and that provision be made for the ordination of the three brethren named.

Reports from the various quorums touching this document were read as follows:

April 10, 1946
To President Israel A. Smith and the General Conference Assembly:

The Elders' Quorum in regular session the 10th day of April, 1946, after prayer and deliberation, passed the following resolution relative to the document presented to the quorum on April 9th:

Apostle John F. Garver, on invitation of the chairman, addressed the Conference, expressing his feelings and his willingness to serve as indicated.

He was then escorted to his place with the Quorum of Twelve where he was welcomed by members of that body.

A vocal solo was rendered by Elder Herbert S. Lively, accompanied by Miss Anway.

Announcements followed, hymn, "This God Is the God We Adore," was sung, and Apostle Hield pronounced the benediction. The Conference adjourned at 4:30 P. M., subject to the usual order.

Business Session, Thursday, April 11, 1946, 2:00 p. m.

At one o'clock p. m., Mr. Don Rey of Hollywood, California, presented a program of organ music. Mr. Homer D. Gatchett, of Berkeley, California, rendered a vocal solo, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Gatchett.

President Smith stated that before proceeding with the more serious business of the afternoon, he wished to read a statement with respect to the oldest living minister in the church, Elder Levi Gamet. He then read the following:

Brother Levi Gamet was born on June 3, 1848, in Pottawatomie County, Iowa. He was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, December 1, 1861, at Little Sioux, Iowa, by Elder S. W. Condit.

He was ordained to the office of Priest by Elder D. H. Bays in 1865, and to the office of Elder by Elder J. C. Crabb, June 6, 1880, and was ordained to the office of High Priest, April 15, 1920, by Apostles U. W. Greene and J. F. Curtis.

About 1898 Brother Gamet went under general church appointment and labored continuously as an Elder and Seventy until he was superannuated in 1922.

On the third of June, 1946, Brother Gamet will celebrate his 98th birthday. His continuous ministry as a representative of the Restoration movement is about 81 years.

We feel that God has been very good to extend the life of this goodly brother over these many years.

In appreciation of the rich ministry which he has given over a period of 81 years, and which has reached into the lives of many people of practically every generation of the Restoration movement; BE IT RESOLVED, that this General Conference pause for a few moments in its deliberations and stand silently and pay tribute to this faithful brother for his long and efficient ministry in the church.

CHARLES V. GRAHAM,
BLAIR JENSEN.

The resolution was moved by C. V. Graham and D. Blair Jensen. As the congregation arose, Brother Graham escorted Elder Gamet to the tribune.

Brother Gamet addressed the assembly, expressing his appreciation of the gospel and for the many evidences that God has given to his people. He expressed his gratitude for the privilege of association with the church all of his life, and bore testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel.

By standing vote the resolution was unanimously adopted. The congregation stood in silent tribute.

Business session was opened by singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," under the direction of Elder R. A. Cheville, with Oliver Houston at the organ, and Mrs. Lois Moore at the piano.

President I. A. Smith was in the chair, and prayer was offered by Bishop M. C. Fisher.

Mrs. Wm. Nichols sang "Rest in the Lord," by Mendelssohn, accompanied by Mrs. Moore at the piano.

The minutes of Wednesday, April 10, were approved as read.

PRESIDENT CURRY

The following statement from President Smith was read by the Secretary:

To the Conference:

For the last seven and more years I have been thrown into close contact with President Curry. At the time this association began, he had completed several years of service as Presiding Bishop. His record had been made through those dark years of the depression. He and his quorum had battled manfully and successfully to lift the church out of the slough of debt and despondency.

Brother Curry brought into his work his great ability to organize the affairs of the office. He was untiring and assiduous, and his tenure as a member of the Presidency is marked by some significant achievements, notably the Clinic on Evangelization in 1941. The effect of his work has never been and probably will never be known, but it was and still is far-reaching.

The action of the Conference in ordaining me as a successor to President Smith marked the termination of his presidency, and ere we get very far past events of the Conference, I must record my appreciation of his ability, his friendliness and gracious personality. He has ever been the perfect Christian gentleman, and I have a real affection and love for him.

It was manifested to me that the Lord has accepted his work, and his reward is sure. His rare gifts are at their best, and the way will open soon for him to make further contribution to the cause, as soon as the appointing powers may have time for due consideration, assuming he desires to carry on.

When the President passed to his reward, Brother Curry took hold of the work thrust upon us and in a very large degree, credit for the success of Conference arrangements belongs to him.

I make this personal acknowledgment of my gratitude to him, and my best wishes for his success are heartily extended.

Sincerely,

I. A. SMITH.

April 10, 1946.

It was moved by President F. H. Edwards and Bishop G. L. DeLapp that a committee of four be appointed to express the feelings of the Conference and the Church with reference to the extended service of President Curry.

The motion prevailed unanimously, and the chair appointed F. H. Edwards of the First Presidency; Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve; Ward A. Hougas, President of the High Priests Quorum; and E. Y. Hunker, President of the Council of Presidents of Seventy to serve as this committee.

GAVEL CEREMONY

In a fitting statement President Smith presented to each of his colleagues a gavel as a symbol of Presidency, in which in most things coming under the jurisdiction of the presiding quorum equal responsibility is shared. He presented to Brother Garver a gavel which had been a possession of the late President Frederick M. Smith, out of consideration of the long time friendship of these two brethren. To President F. Henry Edwards he presented a gavel which for many years was a prized possession of Elbert A. Smith, then a member of the Presidency, and which was presented to President I. A. Smith in 1940. He stated it was to be held by President Edwards in trust during his tenure of office.

Brethren Garver and Edwards each made appropriate response in acceptance of the gavels, pledging their efforts to use these symbols of authority for promoting the rights and privileges of all.

The following communication was read by President Smith:

To the General Conference, Greeting:

We beg to submit for your consideration the recommendation that when this Conference adjourns, it does so to meet April 5th to 13th inclusive, 1947.

Very respectfully,

PRESIDENT CURRY

The committee appointed to draft resolutions of tribute to Brother L. F. P. Curry reported as follows:

Elder L. F. P. Curry,
Independence, Missouri,
Dear Brother Curry:

Under appointment from the General Conference, and on behalf of the Church we wish to express to you our sincere and deep appreciation for the contribution which you have made to the church throughout the long years of your ministry and, particularly, during the years when you served under appointment as a member of the First Presidency.

After many years of devoted service as one of the local priesthood, as Teacher, Elder, High Priest and Bishop, you came into general church service at a time of desperate need and as counselor to the Presiding Bishop and, later, as Presiding Bishop of the Church, joined with your colleagues of the Presiding Bishopric in giving to the church such strong, wise, and vigorous leadership in the field of temporalities that by the time your service in that department was terminated the church was well on her way to financial health and soundness.

Called from the Bishopric by the need for your services as a member of the First Presidency, you came into the field of full-time church service in 1940 at considerable personal sacrifice in which we have reason to know you had the loyal and affectionate support of your gracious companion. Here your gift for organization and your recognition of the importance of building according to sound principles were particularly valuable, especially since these stronger qualities were firmly wedded to kindly courtesy and friendly humor.

Your deep interest in the culture and welfare of the Priesthood of the church in many ways has been an inspiration to all of us, and we express to you our continued confidence.

Now that the reorganization of the First Presidency of the church has freed you of burdens which you bore at such great cost, even though you also bore them with such marked distinction, we extend to you our congratulation and thanks for work well done, and our heartfelt good-wishes for your continued happiness and success in your future ministry.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

F. HENRY EDWARDS, for the First Presidency
PAUL M. HANSON, for the Quorum of Twelve

E. Y. HUNKER, for the Quorum of Seventy
WARD A. HOUGAS, for the Quorum of High Priests.

Approved by General Conference,
April 12, 1946.

Apostles J. W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis moved to adopt the report.

Apostles J. W. Rushton and G. G. Lewis and Evangelist G. T. Griffiths took the tribune and expressed appreciation of the labors of Brother and Sister Curry in behalf of the church, and paid a splendid tribute to the qualities and virtues which have endeared them to the Saints throughout the church.

The motion prevailed unanimously.

President Smith then relinquished the chair to President Garver.

APPROPRIATIONS REPORT

Attention was called to the "Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric and a Statement of Policy" by the chairman, the report beginning on page 13 of the Saints' Herald of April 6.

Apostle J. W. Rushton and Elder L. G. Holloway moved that we approve the report of the Presiding Bishopric and adopt the report of the Auditor thereupon.

Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp took the tribune and discussed the report of the Presiding Bishopric.

The motion then prevailed by unanimous vote.

The chair called attention to the report of the "Board of Appropriations" which was distributed to the Conference on yesterday afternoon, and stated that it would be received and spread upon the minutes subject to action of the Conference.

Report of the Board of Appropriations to the Conference

April 10, 1946

Report of the Board of Appropriations to the General Conference, Greeting:

The Board of Appropriations, consisting of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and the Order of Bishops, met on Friday, April 5, Monday, April 8, and Tuesday, April 9, and beg to submit for the consideration of the Conference schedules and recommendations of appropriations which have been approved by the Board of Appropriations to cover the years 1946 and 1947. The recommendations cover estimated needs and the figures are the same for both years with the exception of the amount required for Ministerial Inactive Family Allowance, the amount being less for 1947 than for 1946.

The Board of Appropriations submits an additional schedule which has been approved, covering the appropriation of Accumulated Funds.

Respectfully submitted,

BOARD OF APPROPRIATIONS,
By I. A. Smith, Chairman.

April 5, 1946.

To the First Presidency and the Board of Appropriations:

It is to be noted from the General Fund Balance Sheet that cash in hand and United States Government bonds and securities total $1,345,118.37. This figure includes cash in Canadian banks and Canadian securities, but from this figure the exchange has been deducted, leaving the total cash and bonds at par in United States funds.

The following allocation of these funds is hereby recommended to the Board of Appropriations: (Explanatory statements follow in sequence.)

1. Missionary Reserve Fund $58,383.73

Reference has been made in our Report to the General Conference to the fact that use has already been made of this fund in the past year, when it was necessary to draw upon it to provide funds for the appointment of men not provided for by the previous budgetary appropriation. The amount so drawn is $8,383.73, and we are recommending the setting aside of an additional amount of $50,000.00, which would leave in this fund the amount of $150,000.00.

It should also be kept in mind that this fund may be drawn upon for the establishment of a school for the ministry, subject to the action of the Joint Council; and also may be drawn upon to provide tracts, subject to the action of the Joint Council; it also serves as a backlog to provide for the support of missionary endeavor in the years which are ahead. From this fund it will also be possible to provide for the preparation of the translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

Action herein recommended is that which was suggested in our recommendation of policy to the General Conference of 1944.

2. Operating Fund Reserve $250,000.00

In our report to the General Conference of 1944, we stated that the Operating Fund Reserve goal was set at $500,000.00, or approximately the equivalent of one year's operating expense. The General Conference approved at that time an appropriation of $250,000.00; we are now recommending the appropriation of an additional $250,000.00 to make the total $500,000.00.

3. Ministerial Reserve Fund $155,440.12

Appropriations have already been made to this fund totaling $397,876.34. The appropriation now recommended of $155,440.12 completes our accrued liability on all of our ministerial appointees up to the end of December, 1945. Current appropriations will have to be made for additions to this reserve on the basis of annual accruals. It is to be noted that during the last few years we have provided for the accrued liabilities that should have been met in past years. This has thrown a heavy load upon the church to make up in a short period of time that which could well have been spread over the years that are past. It will now be possible, however, to meet these requirements on a current basis without working undue hardship upon the church. The total amount in this fund, with the appropriations now recommended will be $553,316.46.

4. Houses of Worship Revolving Fund $300,000.00

During the period of debt payment, it was impossible for the General Church to allocate back to the districts and branches a proportionate amount of contributions of tithes and offerings made to the General Church by way of ministerial personnel and financial assistance in building houses of worship. With the action now recommended relative to appropriation of funds to build up reserves, the church has reached a position where it can recognize the obligations to individual districts and branches, at least in a small measure.

Increases to our ministerial list are being made and will continue to be made as men are available for appointment. The action recommended to set up a revolving fund in the amount of $300,000.00 is a step in the direction of assisting branches by way of loans for the construction of houses of worship at a nominal rate of interest. It is anticipated that a substantial portion of funds needed for the construction of church buildings will be provided by the local congregation, the General Church granting a loan for an additional sum to be amortized over a period of years. It is also anticipated that this fund should be enlarged as funds in the General Church are accumulated.

5. Graceland College $150,000.00

Consideration has already been had by the Joint Council of the problem facing us in connection with Graceland College, because of the increased enrollment in that institution; over 500 applications have already been received for enrollment for 1946-47. Students are being placed in temporary quarters, but it seems imperative that a dormitory be constructed at the earliest date possible, which will still leave it necessary for many students to find quarters elsewhere in Lamoni. The college administration is, therefore, recommending the building of a dormitory to house 150. It is estimated that with the appropriation already made (for which funds have been set aside in the amount of $100,000.00), an additional $150,000.00 will be required.

6. Independence Sanitarium and Hospital $150,000.00

The sixth floor is now practically completed, with the exception of the elevator door and one or two other important items which it is necessary to have before use can be made of that floor. Every effort is being made to obtain this material. It is quite apparent that, despite the completion of the sixth floor, the demands upon the institution are so great that the additional floor space now made available will not be sufficient. It is also to be remembered that this floor was completed by the contributions of the community, with the understanding that the church would recommend the completion of the building.

Estimates received indicate that the cost of completion of the seventh floor and transfer of the operating rooms from the first floor to the fifth floor will cost approximately $100,000.00. The seventh floor is now used as a shop; it will, therefore, be necessary to build a shop, and also a receiving room. A laundry is also needed, bringing the total appropriation needs to $150,000.00. This will provide for the completion of this project.

7. The Auditorium $200,000.00

The most important consideration for the expenditure of money for this building is that of its preservation and for acoustical treatment. The figures obtained for covering the dome with copper, completing the walls with finish stone (Bedford limestone) supporting the dome, and roofing the flat deck of the whole building, amounts to $190,000.00 This is exclusive of installing the skylight, it not being considered essential to make such an installation at this time. Bishop T. A. Beck and Apostle A. A. Oakman moved to adopt the report.

Bishop DeLapp directed attention to some corrections which he stated would be made in the published report, and discussed the recommended appropriations for the years 1946-1947, and answered questions by Bishop J. A. Koehler and Elder Harold Tabor. Elder G. E. Tickemyer discussed items appearing in the budget.

The vote was then taken, which the chair ruled would be on the schedules set up for 1946 and 1947. The motion to adopt carried unanimously.

Bishop DeLapp then discussed the "Missionary Reserve Fund," whereupon the vote was taken and the recommendation unanimously approved.

The "Operating Fund Reserve," after a brief discussion by Bishop DeLapp, was approved.

Vote on the "Ministerial Reserve Fund," following explanation by Bishop DeLapp, was also approved.

The "Houses of Worship Revolving Fund" was discussed by Bishops DeLapp and J. S. Kelley and Apostle D. T. Williams. The recommendation pertaining to this fund was unanimously approved.

Following Bishop DeLapp's analysis of the Graceland College item, it, too, was approved.

The Presiding Bishop discussed the appropriation for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and the vote was unanimous in approval.

The proposed appropriation for the Auditorium was given consideration by Bishop DeLapp, and the recommendation was approved unanimously.

The various items under the heading of "Other Special Appropriations" were explained by the Presiding Bishop and the expenditure also approved.

The document as a whole was then adopted unanimously by standing vote.

The following recommendation from the Board of Appropriations was read:

April 11, 1946
To the General Conference, Greeting:
The Board of Appropriations had under consideration a request from the Graceland College Board of Trustees from which we quote, as follows:
"An enrollment of upwards of 500 is anticipated for the year 1946, 1947, and thereafter for some time at least, if not for an indefinite period. Such increase in enrollment will effect a situation beyond the ability of the College to meet, with the efficiency heretofore characterizing its contribution to the life of our youth, and calling for such adjustments as may be made. In this approach we deal with one of these, namely the need for an additional building that as anticipated could be made to serve a number of purposes, and meet more or less adequately a number of needs, such as for additional classrooms, assembly hall, recreation, and in the social and spiritual life of the school; and it is to these latter interests we in particular address ourselves.
"The Board has further by formal action expressed the hope that in the event approval is given for such a project, the College Day offering may for the time necessary be appropriated towards the construction of the said building at an estimated cost of fifty to sixty thousand dollars."
The action of the Board of Appropriations on this recommendation was as follows:
"That we look with favor upon granting this request, its not being out of harmony with the policy we have adopted for the enlargement of the College to accommodate an enrollment of approximately five hundred students."
We respectfully submit this matter to the General Conference for consideration and action.
For the Board of Appropriations. I. A. SMITH, Chairman.
Brethren Alexander Klein and E. E.

Closson moved its adoption. The motion prevailed.

RIISING COST OF LIVING

The following document from the Order of Bishops was read:

April 11, 1946

Whereas the rising cost of living has made the present maximum for General Church appointee families inadequate, therefore

BE IT RESOLVED that the annual maximum regular family allowance shall be $1,800.00, adjusted by the official Consumers Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics as of June 15 of each year, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the maximum for personal and traveling expenses of any general church officer or Conference appointee shall not exceed $1,800.00 in any one year, provided, however, that emergency payments in excess of the above maxima for either elder's expenses or family allowances shall be reported by the Presiding Bishopric to the Joint Council of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve and the Presiding Bishopric.

Respectfully submitted,
THE ORDER OF BISHOPS,
By W. N. Johnson, Secretary.

On motion of Bishops J. S. Kelley and T. A. Beck resolutions were unanimously adopted.

MEMORIAL TO PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH

The secretary then read a communication from the Order of Bishops, which the chair stated would be received and spread upon the minutes subject to action.

April 11, 1946

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

At a meeting of the Order of Bishops held April 10th, the following resolution was moved and unanimously adopted, and it is hereby presented to the General Conference for its consideration and action.

RESOLVED that, inasmuch as there have been a number of suggestions relative to providing a suitable memorial for our late President Frederick M. Smith, and, further, as any undertaking to provide such a memorial should be well thought through and carefully studied, it is the consensus of the Order of Bishops that the best interests of all concerned would be conserved through the appointment of a committee at this General Conference to consider the matter thoroughly and report back to the next General Conference with recommendation relative to that which would be most appropriate and fitting.

Respectfully submitted,
THE ORDER OF BISHOPS
By G. L. DeLapp.

On motion of Elder G. A. Smith and Bishop T. A. Beck the resolution was adopted unanimously, and the chair stated that the committee would be appointed at tomorrow's session.

Wayne Updike spoke in support of Bishop Johnson. Elder O. Salisbury spoke in commendation of Bishop Skinner and his excellent services given the church. The report and recommendation were adopted unanimously.

1. That the purchase, preparation, and distribution of visual aid machines and materials be recognized as a function of the Herald Publishing House.

2. That the editorial preparation of visual aid materials be referred to an Advisory Committee on Visual Aids, whose members will represent the major activities of the church and will work in close collaboration with the First Presidency, and

3. That the surplus of $3,121.71, accumulated to the credit of the Priesthood Journal account and held at the disposal of the First Presidency by the Herald Publishing House, be made available to the advisory committee for financing their activities, its being understood that thereafter visual aid projects will be self-sustaining.

TEMPERANCE

The following resolution was sponsored by Apostles Rushton and Williams and was adopted:

WHEREAS, the increasing indulgence by our nation in intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, costing, it is estimated, many billions of dollars directly and indirectly in lowered productivity industrially and commercially; and

WHEREAS, the increased delinquency resulting from this evil of drunkenness especially among the youth of the nation, polluting the stream of life at its source, creates consternation among all who are concerned with the moral integrity of our nation; and

WHEREAS, increasingly it is recognized that this country is becoming the most influential among the nations of the earth financially, politically, culturally, and morally, and hence the nation of destiny, we owe it to the world to set the standard of sobriety and cleanliness of life; and

WHEREAS, we see in the increasing number of cocktail bars and beer taverns, which constitute an increasing menace to the moral stamina and spiritual ideals, which are our national inheritance; and

WHEREAS, this manifest deterioration in the moral and social standards of our life not only sullies the name and honor of our citizenry whose constitution and code of ethics derive from the Christian philosophy of life, but also betrays the promise and pledge solemnly made when the 18th amendment, which prohibited the use and traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage, was revoked—therefore, be it

RESOLVED; that this Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints respectfully call attention of the Hon. President of the United States of America, the Senators and Congressmen, to this growing evil which menaces the welfare of the nation; and, request that such measures be taken as will bring this dangerous traffic under control by stricter application of existing laws, and the enactment of new legislation for the safeguarding of the men and women and boys and girls of our communities.

Apostle Rushton suggested that copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to Congressmen. The chair stated this would be done.

Announcements were read, hymn, "This God Is the God We Adore," was sung and benediction was pronounced by Apostle G. G. Lewis.

The Conference adjourned at 4:45 p. m. subject to the usual order.

Secretaries.

Business Session, Saturday, April 13, 1946, 2:00 p. m.

Prior to the convening of the Conference, the Blue Bird chorus rendered three numbers under the direction of Mrs. Louise Wrigley.

The business session opened with President I. A. Smith in the chair. "Tell Me the Story of Jesus" was sung by the congregation, led by Elder Cheville, accompanied by Mrs. Edna Ehlers at the organ, and Mrs. Lois Moore at the piano.

The invocation was offered by Apostle M. A. McConley.

A cello solo was rendered by Mr. Milford Nace, accompanied by Mr. George Miller at the piano.

The minutes of Friday's business session were read. Apostle Oakman stated that vote on the resolution on intoxicating liquor was not unanimous as stated in the minutes, he having personally observed a negative vote. The chair stated the correction would be made. With this exception the minutes were approved as read.

PRESIDENT CURRY SPEAKS

The chair recognized Brother L. F. P. Curry, who came to the tribune while the congregation arose in tribute. Brother Curry addressed the Conference expressing his appreciation of the resolutions adopted, and for the opportunity of making a statement before the Conference.

President Smith, Delegates, Friends, Officers of the Conference:

I would much prefer that you had not risen a moment ago because you touched my heart at a time when I would like to be perfectly untouched by an emotional reaction to a situation which you thus acknowledge. But I do appreciate your voluntary rising. I appreciate your applause. I appreciate the resolution which has been adopted, and the statement of President Israel. I am glad to have the opportunity for just a few moments to tell you what is in my heart.

In 1931 I came very reluctantly into the general church work. The problems which faced the church, growing out of overall policies of 1920 through 1930, were such that as a financial man I could see threatened the church's very existence. I had seen these overall policies persisting for a number of years, and their upholding under conditions which appeared to make almost impossible correction of the trend and remedy of a situation which might prove fatal. I think I would not under any circumstances have undertaken the task except for divine light received the night of January 13, 1931, in a period extending from midnight to 6 o'clock the morning of January 14, during which I was fully awake. The condition of the church passed through my mind. I re-analyzed the balance sheets and statements issued by the church. As a result of that review and experience, and also, I am positive, the presence of the Spirit of God, there came to me a series of seven steps which were needed to bring the church back to health. At that moment I did not conceive that I should have any part in carrying out such steps, the light given being regarded as personal. However, during the previous December an impression had come to me that my church work in the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, area, where I labored as a local bishop, was finished. Furthermore, two urgent personal requests were received from President Smith to attend the Board of Appropriations meeting when held.

Taking advantage of an unexpected business trip to California, I came to Independence, en route, about January 25, looked at the books and statements, and talked to the president. It was arranged at that time that a meeting should be called of the Board of Appropriations for February 12, 1931. I again reached Kansas City the evening of February 10, and that night in his Kansas City home, handed to President Smith, the seven points that had come to my mind through the night of January 13. The seven points constituted the financial policy of the church. He added some words of introduction and conclusion, changed a word or two, such as a that to a which, perhaps, but the basic elements were exactly as given to him and were printed in the Saints' Herald of February 25, 1931, March 18, and October 28.

Subsequent to that time I had opportunity to be associated with members of the Twelve, of the Presidency, and with those who stood at my side in the Presiding Bishopric; and I am glad to acknowledge here today, that although there were times when, perhaps, we did not all see alike in the solution of problems, yet, on the whole, the men of the church stood together, and you know the result.

One conclusion was reached in those first days of 1931, attested by reason and affirmed by the Spirit of God. That was that if I came into the work full time I would not be able to exert the influence which would be possible and necessary. To that course I clung in spite of the fact that there were those who said I did not come in because I was afraid the church was going to fail. My first sermon in the Stone Church, as a member of the general official body of the church, April 6, 1931, declared my faith in the outcome, for the text was, "The Foundation of God Standeth Sure." The only reason I did not come in was that I saw I would not be able to labor as it was necessary to labor for the salvation of the church through those years. Events justified the stand taken. In 1938, then believing I should take up full-time work, I resigned my position in Dallas. The resignation was refused. I renewed it again in 1940 and it was accepted. I came here with an understanding as to the work of the Presidency agreed to by the President, and the joint council of March or April, 1940, giving myself wholeheartedly to the work of the church. Of course, it meant sacrifices, some of which I should not have been required to pay. One of these was the turning away in the Presidency, in 1943, from the understanding of 1940. But whatever may have been met, I have given what I could gladly for the sake of the church, and others were making their own sacrifices with me. I have tried to work constructively, and in the light of my first text, that the kingdom of God could not be established on any other basis than the laying of a sure foundation. I have tried to help lay that sure foundation in a sound financial condition, and the building up of a balanced, comprehensive program of missionary and pastoral endeavor. The result I leave to the people of the church.

The men who now come into the Presidency have my best wishes. My feeling toward them is that their burden, of course, will be heavy, but if they labor constructively, in accordance with the will of God, they shall ever have my faith and help. To those who labor in other offices I can say exactly the same thing. To the new member of the Quorum of Twelve this goes just the same as for the other men. I shall miss seeing in his former place of responsibility Brother Skinner. I have learned to love him very dearly for his qualities of heart and mind, and his abilities. The new member of the Presiding Bishopric, likewise, has my affection and esteem.

As I close, I shall say this one thing of Bishop DeLapp, who bore the brunt here of active office work in the administration of the financial policy during the "thirties," and continues today: I have an affection and appreciation for him, which no matter what may have intervened, or may intervene from this time to the end of my days, remains. For Bishop Ray Carmichael, who also stood staunchly in those trying times, there is the same like affection, appreciation, and esteem for his character and contribution. For the other brethren I have much the same feeling. We have come through the fight together, and this leaves a sense of enduring fellowship.

As for me, the ordination of President Israel last Sunday morning terminated my official responsibility. With this termination I felt a load lifted from my shoulders, and that I had been true to my trust to the church. I feel more like a free man today than I have felt since 1931. I thank you.

The following committee report was read:

Independence, Missouri
April 13, 1946

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

The committee appointed by Conference expresses to Bishop Skinner its deep sense of gratitude for the service he has rendered to the church. In 1928 he entered the full-time ministry as Bishop of Kansas City Stake and served in that capacity until he was asked to accept the responsibility as counselor to the Presiding Bishop in 1940. For the most part, Bishop Skinner's ministry to the church has been rendered during the very trying times with which we are all familiar. He has met the responsibilities with diligence and devotion. The good effect of his ministry is not only observed by the church but is projected into the lives of many people who have been privileged to know him.

In the church today there is an urgent need for a teaching ministry. Bishop Skinner, now laying down as he does the administrative responsibilities in connection with the Presiding Bishopric, shall be free for the fine teaching ministry of which he is outstandingly qualified. His broad understanding and maturity of judgment as well as devotion will enable him to teach and to counsel individuals and families as well as branches and groups respecting their stewardship obligations. This is particularly true in the matter of the management of finances.

We anticipate that Bishop Skinner shall have full opportunity to continue his ministry. We extend to him our very best wishes and support that he may be blessed abundantly for his continued responsibilities.

Respectfully submitted,
By J. F. GARVER,
H. L. LIVINGSTON
D. T. WILLIAMS.

On motion of Stephen Robinson and J. S. Kelley the report was unanimously adopted.

SCOUTS HONOR F. M. SMITH

Letter from Brother L. F. P. Curry, transmitting a resolution from the Kansas City Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America, was read as follows:

April 11, 1946

REPORT OF QUORUM OF TWELVE

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

Dear Saints:

We greet you at this critical time in the history of the world and of our church in confidence born of our common faith and of the "exceeding great and precious promises" we share together. May "grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord."

The Conference has already received official report of the passing of our fellow minister, Elder Clyde F. Ellis, whose death occurred at Independence, June 21, 1945. Our brother shared the spirit of apostolic testimony in rich measure. He bore faithful witness throughout this country, in Canada, Australasia and in the Society Islands Mission, that in Christ Jesus our Lord we live and move and have our being and that without Him we can do nothing. We pay heartfelt tribute to the work and memory of Apostle Ellis.

Apostle A. A. Oakman completed his difficult war-time mission to Europe near the end of 1944, and we have been happy to work with him in the domestic field and in the councils of the church since that date. We had hoped that Apostle C. G. Mesley would also be with us at this time, but transportation difficulties have made this impossible and so Brother Mesley is continuing his work in Australasia. There are at this time nine members of the Quorum present at the conference. With the war ended, Apostle M. A. McConley is liberated from his assignment to Hawaii, to resume labors on the mainland.

We give our heartfelt thanks to our Heavenly Father that the holocaust of war has now passed over, and that we can face the future with a reassuring sense of an overruling Providence who treats us as persons of dignity, responsible and free, and yet does not abandon us either to our willfulness or our waywardness. We are particularly happy that so many of our young men and young women have come back to us well and strong and clean. We welcome them to our hearts and our homes and our churches. We pay silent tribute to those who will not come back, and sympathize with those who must carry the scars of war in their own bodies for the remainder of their lives.

The church is emerging from an extended period of successive difficulties which have distracted us from our major tasks for many years. We have felt the restrictions of our times resulting from war, debt, depression and internal readjustments, all of which have cast many obstacles in the way of effective missionary endeavor. As a consequence, the missionary spirit has burned low in many hearts and in many places. The pressure of social and economic need has caused some to set up a false antithesis between the building of the Kingdom and the warning of the nations; where in reality these two aspects of the total tasks are so intertwined that each is fully dependent on the other for its own fulfillment. Our faces are again set forward. The return of our young people, the release of old and young from the strains of fear, worry and overwork; the newly-won financial strength of the church, and—above all—the multiplying evidences of the patient love and guidance of our Heavenly Father, call us to new endeavors and new expectations. The future is rich with hope and promise.

During the biennium now closing the members of our quorum have been in close touch with the practical realities of the Work in the field. From this we came together about a month ago under a feeling of inner compulsion to revise our missionary policy seeking to adapt it to the growing experience of the church and the changing demands of the times. This we have done carefully and prayerfully, with a sense of divine guidance. Therefore we commend attention, particularly to the attention of the priesthood, the major outlines of our missionary policy which we here present:

I. Build stable branches and districts: The souls of all men everywhere are precious in the sight of our Heavenly Father. Every opportunity to witness for Jesus Christ should be sought and improved upon. Salvation is wrought out in fellowship, not in isolation. Members of the church who are living in contact with good and stable branches should give and receive richer ministry than those who are isolated or whose home branches are handicapped by lack of numbers or equipment. Our most urgent missionary objective is to build up such branches as are below the level of spiritual efficiency. We hope and expect to do this by quickening the spirit of testimony within and among the branches as well as by assigning our appointee missionaries to the best possible advantage.

It is possible for branches to become too large for major effectiveness. When this happens, the proportion of priesthood and members constructively engaged decreases steadily. Experience shows that a congregational unit of 350-400 is a challenge to an effective ministry. Because of this, we shall continue to encourage the development of mission groups leading to the organization of branches from among our larger congregations, and in particular we shall presume that any branch large enough to require the services of an appointee is also vigorous enough to sustain lively missions in the nearby territory. Our districts should become more and more compact, with every branch supporting every other branch of the district.

II. Proselyte to fundamentals: The continuing life of the church depends on our sustained cultivation of the faith and experience gathered up in the doctrines and ethics of Christianity, and in our constantly enriching individual and joint worship experiences. To these all other matters are secondary. We intend to give special care to a constant clearer presentation of the fundamental faith of the church, and we shall gladly co-operate to this end with the other quorums and departments concerned.

III. Train the Priesthood: This quorum is under special responsibility to "build up the church" and to "ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church." We feel that this is to be done through others who share priesthood responsibility with us, each according to his calling; the Twelve thus being freed from the details of local administration. Yet we feel and acknowledge special responsibility in preparing the priesthood for the work which falls to their lot. This is particularly true in relation to ministers under appointment. Appointee institutes have already been held, and we expect to join with other quorums concerned in pushing toward the early establishment of systematic courses of instruction for appointees and other ministers.

IV. Use Modern Methods: Series of missionary meetings still constitute an effective means of winning men to Christ. This is particularly true when such meetings form part of the carefully planned program of the branch and fitted into its total activities and follow sustained and systematic personal evangelism on the part of the Saints. Such meetings should be held by appointees and also by able local ministers. Some should be maintained in almost constant operation in cottage meetings connected with our branches. But the ministers responsible for these meetings should utilize to the full available resources of music, visual instruction and literature, etc.

QUORUM OF TWELVE EPISTLE

Apostle G. G. Lewis read the following report from the Quorum of Twelve.

It is our deep conviction that the church can use and finance as many of the brethren who in the judgment of the appointing authorities are called of God to a full-time ministry and who are willing to make the necessary preparation, in order to exercise their ministry with insight, understanding, and power. This preparation is first of all spiritual involving heart and mind and conscience. It is then intellectual and professional, requiring study and experience.

V. Missions Abroad: The work in Australia and the British Isles is healthy and growing, although additional appointees are urgently needed in England. In the Society Islands Mission good work continues to be done, but leadership is handicapped because of language difficulties. At least one other appointee will be put in training for this important field as soon as opportunity permits. We are happy to note that Elder V. C. Sorenson, who is at present laboring in the Society Islands with Elder F. E. Butterworth comes from the Australasian field.

In the Hawaiian mission the work moves forward under Elder H. F. Miller's direction, with splendid missionary opportunity.

The work in continental Europe has been almost completely disrupted by the war, and it has not been possible to do much of the necessary rebuilding, although Elder F. O. Davies is making contacts which should be helpful.

It is our hope and expectation that the work of the church in each mission abroad shall be placed as nearly as possible on a comparable basis with our work in the United States. We are undertaking studies to determine the appointees and finances necessary to bring each mission to the point of permanent stable contribution. As information and appointees are available, and the necessary basic literature provided, the program for missions abroad should be underwritten by the church and then pushed as aggressively as other commitments permit. We are moving toward the time when the work in each of our major centers can provide the foundation for development of other missionary fields, and when work among the peoples of distant lands can be correlated with work among their nationals who now live in the United States. The tasks before us are great and many. We believe they can be successfully met if approached in the Spirit of the Master, with aggressive devotion, and with intelligent regard for our advancing experiences.

Although world conditions are causing sober reflection these should not unduly alarm nor precipitate hasty gathering to Zion. The advice and counsel of the Presiding Bishopric together with responsible officers should be sought and heeded. In God we trust. This means that we seek to do His will with joyous self-discipline and confidently leave the larger issues of life and death in His hands. It means also that we who sincerely trust our Heavenly Father and His purposes for us, seek to "rid ourselves from the blood of this generation" by maintaining our testimony in the places where we are most sorely needed.

God is still with His people.

In the passing of President Frederick M. Smith we join with the whole church in expressing our appreciation of his ministry and mourn his demise but we welcome the new presidency and pray God to bless them with his grace and inspiration as we carry on according to His will and purpose.

Let us press on in faith, hope and courage, in the assurance that we shall find God's promises will not fail.

Your servants for Christ's sake,
THE QUORUM OF TWELVE,
By Paul M. Hanson, President.

A motion to approve by Bishop H. L. Livingston, duly seconded, prevailed.

DR. GRABSKE, CHURCH PHYSICIAN

Communication from the First Presidency concerning Church Physician was read, as follows:

April 13, 1946

To The General Conference:

After giving consideration to the matter of Church Physician, we are of the opinion that the whole question should be carefully reviewed by us before the next General Conference when we can bring recommendations to the body. We suggest the matter should be left with the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric.

However, since the articles of incorporation of the Sanitarium provide that the Church Physician is ex officio one of the trustees of that institution, and Doctor A. W. Teel, the present Church

Physician, resides in Los Angeles, and so has not been able to attend meetings of the board; and whereas Doctor Charles F. Grabske, his assistant, lives in Independence, and, although he has no vote, he has been very faithful through the years in attending meetings, and has given the board much assistance;

We, therefore, recommend that Doctor A. W. Teel be released as Church Physician and that office be conferred on Doctor F. Grabske pending the outcome of the review referred to.

In doing this we acknowledge our sincere appreciation of the long service given the church by Doctor Teel and suggest a committee be appointed to draft resolutions concerning him and his labors on behalf of the church.

In bonds,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
By I. A. SMITH.

On motion of Bishops G. L. DeLapp and T. A. Beck the recommendation was approved.

These associate members to be those of our church membership who have demonstrated in the executive committee's opinion a lively grasp and interest in Book of Mormon Archaeology. The Associate members are to have no vote on society policy.

April 13, 1946

To The General Conference, Greetings:

Since we are unable to give due consideration to the personnel problems involved, but there is nevertheless necessity for reorganizing the work of the Kansas City Stake because of the ordination of Brother Blair Jensen to Apostleship, and for placing the work in Independence under the supervision of a High Priest or High Priests, we request that the Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric be authorized to effect these reorganizations at their earliest convenience.

Sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Also, that we authorize the First Presidency of the Church to notify the proper officials in the form of a letter of our deep appreciation for this splendid co-operation.

I. A. SMITH,
G. L. DELAPP

President Edwards yielded the chair to President Smith.

The chair recognized Brother C. G. Closson, who came to the tribune and in a brief statement suggested that this Conference take just a moment in tribute to the memory of those in our armed forces whose lives have been lost on the altar of freedom, requesting that this Conference pause in humble silent tribute.

The future work of Brother L. F. P. Curry as a minister of the church is being taken under advisement by the First Presidency, in appreciation of his many fine qualifications, with a view to his engagement accordingly in agreeable service.

On motion of Presidents Garver and Edwards, the appointments were approved.

It was then moved by Elder Howard W. Harder and seconded by Apostle John W. Rushton, that as an exception to our rule and practice of not including in the official minutes of the Conference all of the speeches made on the floor of the Conference or before the tribune, we make an exception of the talk of Brother Curry on yesterday, and include it, with any extension he desires to make, in the official minutes of yesterday. The motion prevailed.

The Cantanina Chorus rendered a selection under the direction of Mrs. Westwood.

President I. A. Smith addressed the Conference with particular reference to the representatives of the church under General Conference appointment.

The minutes of the 9:30 o'clock Ordination Service, and the minutes of this session were read and approved as read.

Announcements were then read, and hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," was sung. The closing prayer of the Conference was offered by Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, followed by the singing of the Doxology.

THE DATE OF NEXT CONFERENCE

President I. A. Smith called attention to the time set for the next Conference, and declared the General Conference of 1946 adjourned sine die.

The preaching and devotional services were carried out essentially as set forth in the Official Program, as was also the educational and quorum work. The Official Program together with the Saints' Herald of April 6, April 13, and April 27, will constitute the official record of the Conference.

Our Departed Ones

WELLS.—Richard Robert, son of Edgar and Amanda Wells, was born July 16, 1890, at Hawthorn, Iowa, and died at his home in Springfield, Missouri, on March 20. He was married to Sarah Amanda Peterson on July 18, 1915, at Strand, Iowa; seven children were born to this union. A daughter, Daphane, died as an infant. Brother Wells, his wife, and five children were baptized members of the Reorganized Church on August 20, 1933, at Ava, Missouri. They moved to Springfield in November, 1943.

Surviving are his widow; two sons: Richard, Jr., and Frederick of Springfield; four daughters: Mrs. Harold Frottscher, Farnhamville, Iowa; Mrs. Roland Gibson, Jolley, Iowa; Mrs. Joseph Cervinka, Chicago, Illinois; and Mrs. Richie Asalaan, San Francisco, California; one sister, Mrs. Nell Krug, Farnhamville, Iowa; two brothers: Bert Wells, Kansas City, Missouri; and Bill Wells. He also leaves three grandchildren. Services were conducted from the Thiene Funeral Home in Springfield by Elder Joseph Breshears. Interment was in Eastlawn Cemetery.

PICKARD.—Abram Alanson, was born December 21, 1878, in Jordan, New York, and passed away November 2 in Muskegon Heights, Michigan. He became a member of the Reorganized Church on May 14, 1922.

He is survived by his wife, Ella, and three sons: DeWayne and Earlton of Muskegon Heights, and Glendon, now serving in the armed forces. Funeral services were conducted by Elder George Lalone of Three Oaks, Michigan. Interment was in Mona View Cemetery.

ROSS.—Robert K., son of Robert and Jane Bird Ross, was born in a log cabin at Ross Grove, Missouri, November 26, 1852, and passed away March 31. He grew up in the Mound City community and knew it from the days of the open prairie and covered wagons through the span of four wars and the advent of the scientific age. He was a farmer; his knowledge was gained through life's experiences, with the background of district schooling. At the age of twenty-two he journeyed to California to visit his brother; he was one of a family of fifteen children. In March, 1877, he was united in marriage to Mary Wehrli; nine children were born to this union, five of whom preceded him in death. Mrs. Ross died on May 29, 1938. A life-long member of the Reorganized Church, he was ordained an elder and served as bishop's agent in the Nodaway district for several years, and as pastor of the Pleasant Hope congregation. He is remembered for his jovial spirit as leader of the early-day singing school societies. He was a tolerant, religious man whose Christian influence will long be felt in the community where he spent most of his ninety-three years.

He is survived by three sons: Isaac M. and Roscoe P. of Mound City, and Earl L. of Fayette, Missouri; a daughter, Mrs. Verna McConnell of Phoenix, Arizona; fourteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Pettijohn and Crawford Funeral Home, Brethren O. Salisbury of St. Joseph and L. L. McWhorter officiating. Interment was in North Bethel Cemetery.

HORNE.—Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick and Idelia Campbell, was born on May 6, 1861, in Michigan. She passed away on March 19 at Independence, Missouri. She and her family were among the first to move to Independence after the reorganization of the church. She was baptized early in life and remained a faithful member until her death. On September 18, 1887, she was married to William F. Horne; six children were born to this union. Mr. Horne died in 1932.

Surviving are two sons: Melvin A. of Toledo, Ohio, and Fred E. of Independence; a daughter, Mrs. R. J. Chappelow of Independence; one brother, Ralph Campbell, Independence; and two sisters: Mrs. Maude Halley of Springfield, Ohio; and Mrs. Hattie Brownfield of Independence. She also leaves nine grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren.

Worship Suggestions for May

By Katherine H. Wilson

(These thoughts are suggestive only and in every case should be adapted to the local needs, according to the various age groups which may use them. Make use of only the materials which may stimulate the spirit of worship, enlarging upon or simplifying them according to the need.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH:

"WHAT IS GOD DOING?"

May 5, 1946

"GOD IS HERE NOW HELPING"

Prelude: Meditation from Thais, by Massenet.

Call to Worship:

"Canst thou by searching find out God?"—
Job 11: 7.

Response:

"If a man loves me, he will keep my words and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."—
John 14: 23.

Thoughts About God and Us:

When thinking about God, we experience the sensation of trying to comprehend something far beyond our understanding, of trying to reach that which is always just beyond our reach, of feeling that the truth is with us, yet mysteriously elusive. We feel that God is, yet when we try to personify God and make him real to us, we find ourselves lost in wonder.

The only way we can come to know God is to meet him in the person of Jesus. Paul spoke of him as the "image of the invisible God" (Colossians 1: 15). As a son shares the nature of his father, Jesus shared the nature of divinity. All of us at times are like our Heavenly Father, but our difficulty is in retaining his likeness. Jesus did so. We see him always as a faithful picture of what God is like. To avail ourselves of the "power to become the sons of God" is our duty to God and ourselves. Through belief in God and obedience to his words, we will overcome and inherit all things, and he will be our God and we will be his sons (Revelation 21: 7). To inherit all things is to know all things, yes, even to know God.

The Father never left Christ alone, because Christ always did those things that pleased the Father. Through Christ, the same promise is to us. We, like Christ, can always have the Father with us.

Suggested Hymns:

"Tell Me the Story of Jesus," 153.

"My God, How Wonderful Thou Art," 133.

"Our God, Our Help in Ages Past," 115.

"They Who Seek the Throne of Grace," 117.

Scripture Readings:

"As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Romans 8: 14.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."—John 14: 12.

"Sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him, for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18.

"And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

"Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you, my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1.

Inspirational Poems:

THIS MOMENT

He's helping me now—this moment,
Though I may not see it or hear—
Perhaps by a friend far distant,
Perhaps by a stranger near.
Perhaps by a spoken message,
Perhaps by a printed word;
In ways that I know and know not,
I have the help of the Lord.

He's keeping me now—this moment,
However I need it most—
Perhaps by a single angel,
Perhaps by a mighty host,
Perhaps by the chain that frets me,
Or the walls that shut me in;
In ways that I know and know not,
He keeps from harm or sin.

He's guiding me now—this moment,
In pathways easy or hard—
Perhaps by a door wide open,
Perhaps by a door fast barred,
Perhaps by a joy withholden,
Perhaps by a gladness given;
In ways that I know and know not,
He's leading me up to heaven.

He's using me now—this moment,
And whether I go or stand—
Perhaps by a plan accomplished,
Perhaps when he stays my hand,
Perhaps by a word in season,
Perhaps by a silent prayer;
In ways that I know and know not,
His labor of love I share.
—Annie Johnson Flint.

I took a day to search for God
And found him not, but as I trod
By rocky ledge, through woods untamed,
Just where one scarlet lily flamed
I saw his footprints in the sod.

Then suddenly, all unaware,
Far off in the deep shadows where
A solitary hermit thrush
Sang through the holy twilight hush,
I heard his voice upon the air.

And even as I marveled how God gives us heaven here and now,
In stir of wind that hardly shook
The poplar leaves beside the brook,
His hand was light upon my brow.

At last with evening, as I turned Homeward and thought what I had learned
And all that there was still to probe,
I caught the glory of his robe
Where the last fires of sunset burned.

Back to the world with quickening start
I looked and longed for any part
In making saving beauty be;
And from that kindling ecstasy,
I knew God dwelt within my heart.

Every other; He moved the gate of heaven apart
And gave to earth a mother!"

Golden Rule for Mother's Day:

"Whatsoever ye would that others should do for your mother if she were in need in body or in soul, and whatsoever your mother would do for others if she had an opportunity, do in her name and in her honor for other mothers and their children."—Graceland Chapel Bulletin, May 14, 1944.

"God Is Love," 127.

"Love Divine," 131.

"Sing of His Mighty Love," 123.

"O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go," 285.

Prayer Poem:

MOTHERHOOD

Dear Lord, we turn to thee
Upon this hallowed day
And thank thee that our mothers' God
Has led us all the way.

We hold their memory blest
Their lives of love so rare,
Their patience, which endured the test
Of childhood's constant care.

We thank thee for their prayers,
Ne'er failing night or day;
Their faith throughout the years
When oft we went astray.

Oh, help us to express
The love they freely spent.
May children's children live to bless
Their lives from heaven spent.

May motherhood retain
The sacredness of home
That heavenly love may e'er remain
Until Thou sayest "come."

"GOD IS HERE NOW SUFFERING"

Prelude: "Berceuse," Godard.

Worship Center:

Picture, "Christ on Gethsemane," by Clementz, lighted with candles.

Call to Worship:

"Be still and know that I am God."—
Psalm 46: 10a.

Leader's Comment:

In the friendly silence of this Sabbath Day, let us make these moments of meditation such an act of worship as will help us through the days ahead. Meditation is not reasoning or quiet musing or preaching a sermon to ourselves, but a spiritual act as definite and purposeful as a pledge of friendship or a solemn understanding.

Period of Silence and Meditation.

Picture Appreciation:

Have you ever felt for a few moments that you were with God? Remember the most beautiful, the most truly good moment in your life, then let us think about this great moment in Jesus' experience.

The picture, "Christ in Gethsemane," is one of loneliness and sorrow. Let us meditate, not on the message of sorrow, but the message of its application to us. Jesus had just left eight of his disciples at the gate of the olive garden and later parted from Peter, James, and John, also. "Could ye not watch with me an hour?" he asked. One is silent and crushed by the evident need of the Master here depicted, for one willing to go "a little further" — "the second mile." Here it is that Jesus said, "If it be possible . . . yet not my will, but thine be done."

The challenge, then, to us remains "to go a little further" in our love, our understanding, our loyalty, our appreciation, our service! (Matthew 26: 33-43, Inspired Version).

Hymn: "'Tis Midnight and on Olive's Brow," 163.

Inspirational Poems:

I MET THE MASTER

I had walked life's way with an easy tread,
Had followed where comforts and pleasures led,

Until one day in a quiet place
I met the Master face to face.

With station and rank and wealth for my goal,
Much thought for my body but none for my soul,

I had entered to win in life's made race,
When I met the Master face to face.

I met him and knew him and blushed to see
That his eyes full of sorrow were fixed on me;
And I faltered and fell at his feet that day,
While my castles melted and vanished away.

Melted and vanished and in their place
Naught else did I see but the Master's face,
And I cried aloud, "Oh, make me meet
To follow the steps of Thy wounded feet."

My thought is now for the souls of men,
I have lost my life to find it again,
E'er since one day in a quiet place
I met the Master face to face.

—Author Unknown.

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though clouds shut out the light,
Though ghoully specters stalk,
And all is night.

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though Mars lifts flashing stell,
Untamed and proud.

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though men with reckless waste
May seek they know not what
In feverish haste.

Be still and know
That God is in his world;
God speaks, but none may hear
That voice except he have
The listening ear.

Scripture Readings:

"For, behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.

"GOD IS HERE NOW SEEKING"

Prelude: "Largo," by Handel.

Call to Worship:

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do his work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men how he died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to his side.

What if our hands are busy
With other work than his?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things his lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help him
Unless from him we learn?
—Annie Johnson Flint.

Response:

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As thou hast sought, so let me seek
Thy erring children lost and lone.
—Frances R. Havergal.

A pledge that may be spoken in unison:

I am only one
But still I am one;
I cannot do everything,
But still I can do something;
And because I cannot do everything
I will not refuse to do the something
I can do.

Story:

I HAVE NO OTHER PLAN

There is an old legend which tells of a conversation between God and Jesus after the latter's return to the presence of God. Jesus had been called into the presence of the Father to tell of the success of his mission among men. He told how he had lived among men, teaching them the way of love, and demonstrating it through his healing of the sick, his feeding of the hungry, and his many other acts of compassion. After he had completed his story, God asked him, "What provisions did you make for the continuation of your work?"

Jesus answered, "I selected certain men as my apostles. I kept them with me during the period of my active ministry. I shared with them my hopes and dreams. I taught them the truths I had learned through my fellowship with thee. I encouraged them with the promise that they would do even greater things than they had seen me do. To them I entrusted the continuation of my work. They are to teach others. They are to demonstrate the way of love. Those they win to the way are to lead still others to the acceptance of love as the Way of Life. And so my work will go on."

Then God asked, "What if your followers fail? How then will your work be forwarded?"

Jesus replied, "I have no other plan."

Inspirational Poems:

"I worked for men," my Lord will say
When we meet at the end of the King's Highway.

"I walked with the beggar along the road;
I kissed the bondsman stung by the goad;
I bore my half of the potter's load
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
"As you traveled along the King's Highway?"

"I made life sweet," my Lord will say
When we meet at the end of the King's Highway.

"I smoothed the path where the thorns annoy;
I gave the mother back her boy;
I mended the children's broken toy,
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
"As you traveled along the King's Highway?"

"I showed men God," my Lord will say,
"As I traveled along the King's Highway.
I eased the sister's troubled mind;
I helped the blighted to be resigned;
I showed the sky to the souls grown blind;
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
When we meet at the end of the King's Highway.

—G. Walter Fisher.

I WALKED WITH GOD

I walked with God in the twilight hours,
And he spoke to me through the language of flowers.

I walked with God and he called to me,
But his call came through the birds in the trees.

I walked with God when I looked at my babe,
And his voice was only the smile that she gave.
I walked with God by my children's side,
And we waded the ocean, and felt the tide.

I walked with God in the evening hush.
When the moon stood still, I heard a thrush.
I walked with God in the busy street
With sweat-stained men turning homeward feet.

I walked with God on the tennis court,
And he was there as a good clean sport;
And all around he seemed to say,
"I live and I laugh and I love to play."

"The Christ is risen, indeed," they said,
But to me he was never dead;
For even if skies are dark and dim,
If I only look up, I am walking with him.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Opportunity for Church Woman in Dentistry

A visitor to the recent General Conference was Dr. Edith Davis, 1004 Hume Mansur Bldg., Indianapolis, Indiana, who has been honored by being appointed to the faculty of the school of dentistry of the University of Indiana.
 She will devote part of her time to clinical instruction in periodontia, according to an article that appeared in the Indianapolis News, following an announcement by Dean Maynard K. Hine. Dr.
 Davis is a member of the church, an active worker in the church and church school at Indianapolis.

Dr. Davis has an opportunity for a well-qualified experienced person, preferably a woman, who is a church member. For the right person the position can be permanent. Any members who are interested and who qualify should correspond with Dr. Davis before making any move.

* FOR PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH

Those who attended the Graceland College program at the General Conference saw the beautiful floral arrangement that was presented in tribute to the late President Frederick M.
 Smith. It was given by a group of Graceland friends. After the service, Dr. R. A. Chevillie entrusted it to Mrs. J. F. Frazier, for many years a friend of the family of President Smith; she cared for it over night and the next morning placed it on the grave where many visitors saw it.

* HOBBIES

Those who have read the articles of Bishop
 J. A. Koehler may think that all his interests center in economics and church social planning; but he is a man of many and varied interests. He located his home in the country on a bluff overlooking a majestic bend of the Missouri River. He took over a rugged piece of scenery that in its original state would have been called a gulch, and transformed it until from every viewpoint it is a place of beauty.
 Fine trees, flowering shrubs, the best qualities of blooming plants, bulbs, perennials and annuals, cover the slopes of that now enchanting glen. Paths wind about from place to place, and garden seats invite the visitor to rest and contemplate. Every view presents change, variety, and movement as one follows the paths.
 The cottage is the visual center, covered with English ivy. For years he has given his leisure time to this labor of love. He plans his articles while doing this work, he says, so no time is lost, if time so spent could be called lost.
 A few hours' visit there with the host, who knows every plant by its botanical name, its cycle of life, and how best to care for it—a few hours' conversation—is medicine for the fatigues of body and soul. Here is one who has given years of his life to thinking about the practical arrangements for "Zion the Beautiful" and who has not neglected his work of providing an example of it in his own home.
 Out of this garden he brought a large amaryllis, a flame of crimson glory, for our office window. Less hurried folk, not completely the slaves of business, pause to admire it.

* THE DANDELION holds its little golden flower modestly in the grass, for a single day.
 Then it closes for the night. When it opens again in the morning, a fragile ball of gray seeds has replaced the bloom. Then, the stalk is miraculously lengthened, and the dandelion rises to its greatest height as it makes its offering to the future. The first duty of every species is to perpetuate its own kind; that is the inexorable law of nature, or everything would perish. . . . So it is with people, that they rise to their greatest spiritual and moral heights when they make their gift to the future in helping the young.

* A YOUNG SAILOR who had been at sea for eighteen months was making his way homeward in stuffy coaches. Escaping from Union Station during a few hours between trains, he saw a pretty expanse of green lawn, and an aged caretaker puffing his way around behind a hand mower. Nostalgia touched the heart of the young tar, and he asked for permission to push the mower. He whipped around at a brisk pace, with or without his "sea legs," cutting fancy figures and trimming it up nicely.
 With a glow of pleasure, he made his way back to the station. . . . When you tire of your lawn, remember this story, and be thankful you have one. There are so many people who do not.

Youth and the Future World

National Youth Week

April 27 to May 4 has been selected as National Youth Week. It seems appropriate that some special recognition should be given to the young people in the church, as well as in the nation. During the war, when young men were gone, and when their sisters and sweethearts were in the Wacs and Waves, or helping in the war industries, the home front in these United States was a dismal place. Our streets seemed deserted. We were not very happy, certainly not bright, and far from interesting. Now that they are back again, we fully realize that God confers some of his finest blessings in the presence of all children and young people. It is good once more to see their smiles, to hear their friendly laughter, to be given a lift by their spontaneous good spirits.

Grant it all—some charges are probably true—they get us up in the morning; they break up the afternoon siesta; they keep us awake at night; but with all these, they give us whatever we have in this world of exuberance and beauty, of variety, happiness, and hope.

Youth at the Conference

This happened one morning when we left office duties to take a look at the educational activities of the conference. There was a sound of earnestness and importance from the big convention hall in the Auditorium. We looked in. It looked like an extra business meeting, but it couldn't have been, because it wasn't scheduled. Dr. Roy Cheville was in charge. And telling them. Then we looked at the crowd. Young people. Thousands of them. A few random gray heads around the edge, like foam on a mill pond. But most of them were young. They were listening intently to something very serious about the church and its work. Why? Because they, too, are the church; and they, too, are helping to do its work. Youth at conference, not asking for a chance to play or be entertained, not quarreling or whining because smoking and dancing are forbidden, not sympathizing with themselves. Youth at conference, getting ready for work. It was a sight to give any tired mind and heart a lift.

Or take a scene when new church workers and leaders were being nominated. Many youthful faces, slender figures, young and earnest voices. Their words of conviction ring true, their promises of dedication contain energy and fire. They bring something vital and stimulating to the conference. And, to admit the truth, it would have been only half a conference without them. In our church, youth has worked its way to the center of things, and the time is coming when it will be up near the front, helping to lead.

The Voice of Youth

Listen for the voice of youth. It is speaking in new accents since the close of the war, since the fatal falling of the atomic bomb upon the consciousness of the world. Listen to the voice of youth, for it has something to say. Listen to youth, not merely for the sound of a new voice, but for the impact and concussion of new ideas.

We who are turning old, and will soon be older, think we have seen about everything and know most of the answers to life's questions; in our complacency we think there is not much that the young can tell us. But, if we are honest, we admit there are certain areas of life that baffle us: there are some problems for which we have found no solutions, some questions for which we have no answers. And because we have found none, we think there are none. Now we must observe that it is in exactly those areas that youth is beginning to operate. They will not conquer everything, any more than we did in our time. But they will make some advances. The reason is that we, in some respects, are defeated; youth is not. In some things we have given up; youth has not.

Up in the front of the world's struggle, where age hesitates and gives way, youth steps forward, a young voice gives the battle cry, there is a surge of power, and ground is taken away from the ancient enemy of the race. It will not be lost again. Youth has moved in. It will hold the position.

The Future World

Let's keep a few things in mind—some very important things. For so brief a space of time, people of our generation have been the masters of the world. The sands in time's hourglass run out quickly, and our duty will soon be over. The world of the future will belong to the young. They will walk its streets, drive its cars, administer its business affairs, teach the children, combat the diseases, bind up the wounds. We have only a little while to help them and train them for their tasks, which now belong to us. If they are to be ready for their work, we must begin at once.

Prayer

Dear Father:

For the love that overflows our hearts
Our thanks to thee we give Help us to show our gratitude
In the kind of lives we live.

May the impulse now in our hearts
Divine expression find
In working out thy plans, O Lord
For salvation of mankind.

So onward, forward let us go
Let each of us so live
And dedicate our all to thee—
Our best to Zion give.

—G. RUTH HARPSTER.

We are from time to time printing verbatim official documents from Missouri archives relating to the so-called "Mormon War" in 1838. In our Part One we published a petition of William Dryden and order of Governor Boggs directing the adjutant general to mobilize the Militia. We now present an address to the citizens of Howard County, dated October 7, 1838, and a report of Brigadier General H. G. Parks to Major General D. R. Atkinson, dated October 7, 1838.—I. A. S.

"Camp near Dewitt
7th Oct. 1838.

"To the Citizens of Howard County.
"Gentlemen,

"This County is the Theatre of a civil war, and will soon be one of desolation, unless the citizens of the adjoining counties lend immediate assistance. The infatuated Mormons have assembled in large numbers in Dewitt, prepared for war, and are continually pouring in from all quarters where these detestable fanatics reside.

"The war is commenced: blood has been shed they shed it; They waylaid and fired upon a body of the Citizens of Carroll County, & wounded some. They are the aggressors, They have been guilty of high treason; They have violated the laws, and shed the blood of our citizens, and we think This one of the cases of emergency in which the people ought to take the execution of justice in their Own hands. Speedy action is necessary, the progress of their imposition, insult and oppression Ought to be checked in the beginning. The people must act together, they must act energetically.

"It is now twelve O,Clock at night, the Mormons are lurking around our camp, and making preparations to attack us before day, Our number is much less than theirs, and we will have to act on the defensive until we procure more assistance.

"About two hours ago the Mormons were re-inforced by 62 mounted men well armed from far west, They are arriving every night; two nights ago it is thought One hundred came to Dewitt, for the purpose of making war upon the people of this County. Under such circumstances, you cannot fail to come forward immediately, Can you not be here by Sunday or Monday at the farthest? Come by fives and tens, if you cannot come in companies, bring all you can; This is no false excitement, or idle rumor; it is the cold reality too real. We will anticipate you immediately, and I shall expect your Co-Operation & assistance in expelling the fanatics, who are mostly aliens by birth and aliens in principle from the county We must be enemies to the common enemies of our laws, religion & country.

"Your friends & fellow citizens.

"P. S.

"Our guard was just now fired upon by the Mormons; they have become emboldened by their recent re-inforcements, and we will have to act on the defensive; until assistance arrives

"Brigade Headquarters, 5 Miles from Dewitt, in Carroll County October 7th, 1838.

"Major Genl D. R. Atcheson

"Sir

"Immediately after my express to You by Mr. Warder was sent, I proceeded to this place which I reached Yesterday with two companies of mounted men from Ray. I ordered Col Jones to call out 3 companies from this county to hold themselves in readiness to join me at Carrollton on the 5th Inst. which order has not been carried into effect. None of the Carroll Regiment is with me. On arriving at the vicinity of Dewitt, I found a body of armed men under the command of Doctor Austin, encamped near Dewitt, beseiging that place to the number of 200 or 300, with a piece of Artillery, ready to attack the town of Dewitt. On the Other side Hinkle has in that place 3. or 400 Mormons to defend it, and says he will die, before he is drove from thence.

"On the 4th Inst. they had a skirmish 15 or 30 Guns fired on both sides, one man from Saline wounded in the lip. The Mormons are at this time too strong, and no attack is expected before Wednesday or Thursday next at which time Dr. Austin hopes his forces will amount to 500 men, when he will make a second attempt on the Town of Dewitt, with small arms & cannon.

"In this posture of affairs, I can do nothing but negotiate between the parties until further aid is sent me;—I received your friendly letter of the 5th Inst. by Mr. Warder authorizing me to call on Genl Donephant, which call I have made on him for 5 Companies from Platte, Clay, and Clinton, with two Companies I ordered from Livingston, of which I doubt whether these last will come, if they do, I think I will have a force sufficient to manage these Billigerents. Should these troops arrive here in time, I hope to be able to prevent Bloodshed Nothing seems so much in demand here (to hear Carroll County men talk) as Morman Scalps, as yet they are scarce. I believe Hinkle with his present force and position, will beat Austin with 500 of his troops, The Mormons say they will die before they will be drove Out &c. As yet they have acted on the defensive, as far as I can learn. It is my settled opinion, the Mormons will have no rest until they leave; whether they will or not, time only can tell: I assure you I never felt more rejoiced than when I received your letter, to call on General Donaphant's Brigade, for this mark of Your confidence and friendly approval of my action, I do feel under renewed Obligations to you, and hope to shew the necessity of making the call on D,s Brigade. I have also sent an express to Doniphant to come in person if he can. I want his aid & advice. I will keep you advised from time to time of the State of affairs here. it would relieve me much if you would request the Governor to make his appearance here among the Carroll boys he need not order out any forces, those already Ordered by me, I deem sufficient, you know a word from his Excellency would have more power to quell this affair than a Regiment; Should he come which I hope he will for this is no little affair, he will be able to take such steps as may be deemed by him right and necessary to Settle this matter.

After Death—What Then?

By Maurice L. Draper

President of Seventy

From a radio address delivered over Station WALA, Mobile, Alabama

Part I

ONE OF THE most provoking questions known to man was once asked by the Prophet Job. It has since been asked by thousands of people, and is asked over and over again by thousands who now live. It grows out of the basic need of man to know that the frustrations of this life are not permanent obstacles to the achievement of the best that is in him. It is a primary question, the answer to which will do more to control the actions of the individual person than all the persuasion and force that can be brought to bear upon him from the outside. That question, as voiced by Job in 14: 14, and repeated in the hearts and minds of millions is, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Another way to put the same question is, "After death—what then?"

The way this question is answered is important, even to those who think it isn't an important question. To ignore it is to confess a belief that after death there is nothing, or that life is without meaning. To answer it as so many do, that death is a long sleep from which we shall never waken, or to say that it is the time when a vengeful God will punish all those who have enjoyed the pleasures of this life, is not very encouraging. Indeed it may lead to a denial of all that is good and lawful, because such an idea is too contradictory to that which we consider just and merciful. Very important, therefore, is how we answer that question.

First of all, it should be understood that no one can describe the experience of death and the conditions following it. Every effort to do so has been discredited either at its source or by comparison with known facts of life. The best we can hope to do is lay hold of the principles revealed by divine revelation, which are supported by good reasoning and the definitely known truths of life. Yet, this is enough, for a knowledge of the principles of immortality, if such there is for man, is sufficient to enable us to plan our lives intelligently with these principles as the guidelines.

IS MAN IMMORTAL? We are tempted to answer immediately in the affirmative, then quote a number of Scriptural passages to "prove" the point. But many of the ones to whom the answer to this question may be the beginning of serious religious thought may not now accept the Scriptures as authoritative. Besides, those who believe in the authority of the Scriptures already believe that man is immortal. So it may be better for us to draw on the knowledge available to us from science and good reasoning to answer the question.

By so doing, the first fact that meets our curious minds is that man is obviously a dual creature—that is, dual in the sense that there is more to his life than the body. We know, for instance, that there are certain chemicals in the body of man—about ninety-eight cents' worth in the average body, which are just the same chemicals as are found in plants, other animals, or even inert in the soil. The mass of these chemicals is not changed at death. Their more obvious structural organization remains the same. The appearance, so far as shape and size are concerned, is unchanged. Yet, beyond doubt there is a tremendous difference between a body just before death and after death. While alive the body is capable of many functions, even though unconscious, which are impossible after death. Then, the difference between conscious living bodies, and those same bodies after death is too great to require discussion. Now, what is the difference? Something is gone! Call it the cause, life, electricity, intelligence, the life-force, the spirit—so long as we can agree on what we are referring to, the name is not important. We are talking about that peculiar, unknowable power—that something beyond description—which gives the body its peculiar characteristics which disappear at death. The power to function, to move voluntarily, to think, to react consciously to stimuli of various kinds, to maintain bodily organization—all these things become impossible at death, because something is gone. For lack of a more descriptive name—we shall call it the spirit of man. Now the Scriptures indicate most clearly that man has a spirit. And we haven't even had to resort to technical knowledge to show that this truth is obvious. All our experience bears testimony to its existence.

THIS SPIRIT of man departs from the body to a destination unknown. Whence did it come? It must have had a source. Something as marvelous as the spirit of man which gives the intelligence of an Einstein, the artistic touch of a Da Vinci, the spiritual insight of a Moses, could not just happen, and that so many times that mathematicians would say that the very idea is absurd. Whence, then, did it come? What was its source? The only answer can be "From God, who gives all men life and breath, and being." Its purpose in the body being fulfilled, what is its destination? Since God sent it forth, and wedded it to the body until its purpose was achieved, we should expect that it should return to God, who gave it, to do with as seems best to him. It is no surprise, therefore, to learn that an inspired man years ago answered this part of the question by saying, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7. The first part of this statement we know to be true by experience. The second part we believe to be true, because it is the only logical explanation in keeping with the known facts of life.

But just as the divine intelligence assigned the spirit of man to an abode in the earthly body for a time, it has for man other experiences which are part of the plan to make of him a creature fit for eternity. What happens to the spirit upon its return to God? We have learned in this life that obedience to law results in pleasing conditions, while disobedience brings pain and sorrow. There are some laws which we still deny, such as the brotherhood of man, and we still suffer because of the denial. But in the field of physical health, especially, we have learned that there are some things we cannot do without suffering, and some other things which will give pleasure. And up to now, the most intelligent scientist has failed to find any contradiction to this principle—that obedience to law will give pleasure, while disobedience inevitably causes pain and misery. Why should we expect anything different with respect to the future of man? It is entirely in keeping with our observations about life, and logical reasoning based upon these observations, therefore, that we accept the teachings of the inspired men who declared that they were given to know by the Spirit of God that obedient persons may expect their spirits to be received into a condition of pleasure and happiness, while rebellious, antagonistic persons can only expect strife, confusion, pain, and misery. In the words of the Scriptures, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Revelation 2: 7. And, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalm 9: 17.

"I Am" and "Ye Are"

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

"I am the light of the world."—John 8: 12.

"Ye are the light of the world."—Matthew 5: 14.

A PARADOX IS "an assertion seemingly contradictory, but which may be true." The above statements of Christ really are paradoxical in character. The sun lights the world, yet the moon by reflecting the solar light also illuminates our sphere. One tiny candle before a large mirror may serve to light a room. The infinitesimal beam of that taper is the primary source, but the flat and polished mirror so reflects each illuminating ray that the original spot of light is magnified many times its former brilliancy.

When the Savior said, "I am the light of the world," he meant no reference to actual illumination except that his light was reflected by the hearts, intellects and souls of those who saw that light. Multitudes of people could have intercepted and in turn radiated that light, but they either failed to see it in its brilliance, or ignored it entirely. A light in a vacant room is useless. Likewise, I can enter a room where a large central light is available, and then hunch down into a corner, away from the light source, forcing myself to do the necessary tasks in the dark. I firmly believe that there were literally thousands of individuals living at the time of Christ who gladly would have grasped his message if it had been available to them.

There are, however, many misconceptions about hell, final judgment, and the eternal life into which Christians believe we shall some day be received. The most glaring misconceptions are about hell, and we can perhaps best arrive at the truth about hell by studying some of these misconceptions. Next week we shall study together the teachings of the Scriptures about hell, against the background of the facts of life, and the assurance of the fatherly kindness of our Heavenly Parent.

Because of the nature of Christ's manifestation, he came to a "chosen people" with his light, shared this light with them, and then expected them to carry it on. Thus he then gave the commission, "Ye are the light of the world." He easily might have said, "I am the light of the world, and ye are my reflectors." Or "I am the light of the world and ye may develop the light in your life to such a brilliance that it too may light the sinful crevices of the world."

LIGHT IS A curious phenomenon, described by many as the absence of darkness. Yet the life without sin would not necessarily be a light unto the world. There are other familiar passages which give strict admonition—"Let your light so shine"—and the old favorite concerning the hiding of the light under a bushel. Remember there are very few substances which are not at least partially opaque, even though not transparent. A light which is strong and purposeful would show forth in spite of that bushel. The light of a human soul will continue to gleam even though black hardships and discouragements try to extinguish it or surround the primary source of light.

My honest opinion, in spite of the proof of physicists, is that light is more than mere absence of darkness. I believe the light of God is a powerful force whose current is available to all men, but which does not automatically flow into the darkened spots. As we must make an effort to turn on the switches, renew bulbs, and maintain the proper wiring of an electric system, so must we put forth the necessary effort to receive and continue reception of God's light.

THERE ARE STILL MANY methods of illumination in the world. You may choose to light kerosene and oil lamps, or you may use the daylight features of modern fluorescent fixtures. A near-by city whose factories, homes, and schools are lighted by electricity still partially lights its streets with gas, and a man must make his round each twilight to light the mantles of each lamp. Some neighbors think the custom quaint, but those who are used to brighter light find it hard to traverse the darker ways. Some people ignore God's light also, because they think it distinctive to so do; and besides, they can always get the better light! But, as electricity cannot flow through those gas lights, there must be changes in the individual's life before he can reflect the greater light. And, just as a strong wind may extinguish a flickering flame, the weakest light will be the first to go out.

Recently I was using my projector and the colors of the Kodachrome pictures seemed dull and lifeless. I found that I had neglected to clean one of the lenses which was hard to reach. The bulb was as good as ever, the pictures had not changed, but tiny grains of dust on that inner lense had lessened the effectiveness of projection. Thus, too, in human lives, the effectiveness of God's light in us may be nullified by allowing ourselves to be sullied by the dust of iniquity always around us.

Not just any ordinary piece of glass will magnify light adequately. The finest lenses are ground with minute precision, for a tiny defect may cause improper refraction. You've seen the many sided prisms which are beautiful ornaments because of the spectrum colors they reflect. But they remain mere ornaments because any light which passes through is distorted and the vision blurred. The life which is clear and straight-forward, well-grounded in fundamentals, is the life through which God's light shines brightest.

We have an electrical engineer in our office who supervises the changing of position of any desk. He carries a small gadget called a "light meter" with which he measures the intensity of the available light in any given spot. His word is final, for we know that if we are too far or at a peculiar angle from the light source we will be subject to eye-strain and its kindred ills. How much clearer our spiritual sight would be if we would constantly be alert to the distance and direction we are from the original source of God's light.

A well-known artist has portrayed "The Light of the World" with the only source of illumination as a lantern. An equally famous character, Diogenes, began his search with a lighted lantern. When I was just a child I often walked down the hill to meet my father as he came home at night. Mother would light an old railroad lantern, and I would start down the path. I was not afraid for that lantern was my protection, nor did my mother worry as long as she saw the lantern swinging down the way. It does not take a very big light to be a help.

There are creatures that live without light. In the deep caverns of Mammoth Cave I saw fish without eyes, bred through generations of finny folk who were never exposed to light except from the occasional lantern of the sightseer. I can see how families might so live until their faculties for receiving God's light were almost entirely absent.

Light performs many functions. It may serve as a beacon to a ship at sea, point out enemy planes, transmit messages, and many other things. Certain types of light rays, emanating from varied sources, may take X-ray pictures, cure malignant growths by radium, aid photography with black light or duplicate the sun's vitamin potency through the ultra-violet ray.

Children soon learn to prefer light to darkness, and their songs of "I would be a little sunbeam," or "Brighten the corner where you are" show their early understanding of the value of their reflecting God's light.

Two ordinary sentences, both short in structure, but they reveal a gamut of meaning. "I am the light of the world," and "Ye are the light of the world."

Spiritual Food

By Paul A. Wellington

Many times in my few years in the Army, I have had the opportunity to watch many, many formations. And usually the soldiers display their intense dislike for them. Retreat, reveille, K. P., etc., are shunned always.

However, this is not true in reference to one particular formation. That one is the "chow" formation. Everyone does his best to get in the line first. Several columns over a block long form at least a half-hour before the meal is served.

You've probably noticed a similar situation in your own home. Just let Mother announce "Dinner!" and the chairs are filled immediately. No second call is necessary.

But when we really have a chance to feast and be filled with good lasting food, we so often shun the dinner. Our God gives the "dinner" call—but we act as if we don't hear it. So, we continue our daily work on empty spiritual stomachs.

In the Army, we have found that one can miss the chow line and go to the P-X and get a little tidbit. But one is not filled. Also we have found that one can gain a "tidbit" spiritual experience here and there in our busy worldly life, but we are not filled. A full spiritual feast (which can be gained only by participation in prayerful and worshipful services) is all that can satisfy us.

But just going to the table does not fill us. Only by taking bites of the food that is before us on the table can we gain a satisfaction over our physical hunger. Neither can we expect to be spiritually filled by just going to the table of the Lord—unless we "take bites." And we need not worry about eating of the food that others might need. There is plenty for all. There is no end to the supply of spiritual food to be found at the table of the Lord.

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

IN OUR LAST article we gave you a brief account of the restoration of priesthood authority to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by angelic ministration, and the subsequent organization of the church on April 6, 1830, with six members. We noted, too, that although this new organization was very small in number, the plans had already been formulated by means of revelations to the prophet, for a very much larger church organization, including apostles, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, bishops, etc., and that these places were ready to be filled with suitable divinely chosen men, as soon as they should be added to the church. This time we should like to detail to you some of the romantic story of how the church launched its first missionary ventures in the days when there were no railroads, few highways, when Independence was on the western borders of the United States immediately adjoining Indian territory, and when even Ohio was considered an outpost of western civilization.

Immediately after the organization of the church, the men who were ordained or designated for ordination at that meeting, began to preach and tell the story of the Book of Mormon and the Restoration among their friends and neighbors. It was a time of great interest in things religious, and the preachers usually found attentive audiences. From neighbor to neighbor, from friend to friend, and by means of little gatherings usually held in the homes of believers or interested investigators, the story of the Restoration spread, and men and women offered themselves for baptism.

ONE OF THESE early converts was Parley P. Pratt—a most interesting character. At the age of nineteen he decided to spend the remainder of his days in the solitudes of the great west—thirty miles west of Cleveland, Ohio. Here he built a solitary log cabin, and brought his bride, and here he made contact for the first time with Sidney Rigdon—a preacher of amazingly magnetic personality, who was a sort of reformed Baptist, and who was later associated for a time with Alexander Campbell. Aroused by Rigdon's preaching, Pratt returned to the East where he began preaching, warning the world to repent. Purely by chance, on one of these preaching trips, he found a Book of Mormon in the home where he was staying, and spent a whole day reading it. Resolved to find out more about it, he walked the thirty miles to Palmyra, New York, the address given in the book for Joseph Smith—only to find that he had moved to Pennsylvania. He did, however, converse with Joseph's father, and with his brother, Hyrum, and from them procured a copy of the Book of Mormon. Subsequently he was baptized and ordained by Oliver Cowdery.

We have given the background of Pratt's life in some detail, because he was seemingly the leader in the first great missionary journey undertaken by the young, newly organized church. At the second conference of the church, held in the September following its organization, Joseph Smith proposed a mission to the west, with the primary purpose of telling the Indians of the new Book of Mormon, which was a history of their ancestors in America. Four men were chosen for this first mission—Parley P. Pratt, Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson. Before the end of October, they were on their way. On foot the men left Fayette, New York, and made their way to Buffalo, where they preached with little success to a tribe of Indians, only a few of whom could understand English. But Pratt had other plans for this mission. He thought of the great preacher, Sidney Rigdon, who had changed the course of his life before he heard of Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon, and resolved to try to convert him to the new gospel. It was two hundred miles to Mentor, Ohio, in the Western Reserve, where Rigdon had his church and his home, but this was no obstacle to men as determined as Pratt and his companions.

RIGDON'S WAS the first house they entered in Mentor. They exchanged greetings, and Rigdon was presented with a copy of the Book of Mormon. He received it with prejudice, saying that he already had one Bible which he believed to be of God, and that he saw no need for another; but he promised to read the book and reserve final judgment until he had completed it. The missionaries requested the use of his church for preaching services, and their request was granted. Rigdon listened attentively, and at the close of the first service advised his congregation to investigate this new movement carefully before they decided against it; to prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good.

About two miles from Rigdon's home was a little group of members of his church, living in a community with all things common. Seven miles up the Chagrin River another group of five families was just on the point of joining the original group, but were planning to stay where they were because of their investment in farms and mills. The next stop of our four missionaries was at the home of Lyman Wight, who had his wagon all loaded in preparation to visiting the new colony to effect a union of the two groups. Wight's curiosity was aroused, and he delayed his departure to listen, thinking that by the time he returned the four men would be well on their way to Missouri. But when he returned from his journey, they were still there, preaching from house to house. Wight heard more, and on November 14 he and Sidney Rigdon were baptized—the first of 127 people from Rigdon's congregation to join the new church as a result of these meetings. From this little group came many of the officers and leading men of the early church, giving this little stopover on the first missionary journey more than ordinary significance.

WINTER WAS CLOSING in, however, and the four missionaries were still far from their goal—which was the Indian territory west of Missouri. They walked to Cincinnati, Ohio, and took a river boat for St. Louis on December 20. At Cairo, Illinois, the boat was forced to abandon the trip because of ice jams, and the four men set out to walk the remaining 200 miles to St. Louis. The coldest winter in the history of America had begun. But the missionaries were not to be dissuaded from their journey.

At East St. Louis they waited for a break in the bitter winter weather. One severe snow and rainstorm was followed by another, until there was four feet of snow on the prairie. Their destination was still three hundred miles away. Finally they decided they could wait no longer, so they plunged out into the snow in early January, to walk the trackless 300 miles from St. Louis to Independence.

Pratt passes over this journey with only a brief paragraph in his diary, but it is nothing less than a miracle that the men ever lived to reach Independence. Many wayfarers were frozen to death that winter, not to be discovered until the spring thaw. Some established settlers perished for lack of fuel and provisions, unable to get out of their cabins. Deer, buffalo, and elk, who were heavy enough to break through the crust of snow and flounder in the deep drifts, were easy prey for the starving wolves who ran easily along the glassy surface. A wind blew unceasingly out of the northwest, right in the faces of Pratt and his companions. For days, and sometimes for weeks at a time, the thermometer never rose above twelve below zero, and the sun seldom shone. Mail deliveries and newspaper publication were suspended. Our weary travelers plodded on, sometimes never seeing house or fire for days on end, eating frozen bread and pork, heading into the northwest wind, and carrying all their goods on their backs. Pratt concludes his short paragraph about the journey with this superlative understatement: "After much fatigue and some suffering, we arrived in Independence."

IN INDEPENDENCE, Peter Whitmer promptly opened a tailor shop, and received as one of his first customers a tall Kentuckian from Lexington, Alexander W. Doniphan. The church in Missouri was later to have cause to be grateful for this friendship, so soon established. While Whitmer and one companion made the living in the tailor shop, the other two pressed on westward and preached to the Shawnee and Delaware Indian tribes in the Indian territory of Kansas, until they were forced to leave by the Indian Agent.

The men had reached their objective, had begun their work, and had exhausted their supply of the Book of Mormon. It was thought wise to send someone back to report progress, and to arrange for a new supply of books. Pratt was selected to make this journey when the snow began to break up in the spring. After he left, the remaining men continued to preach, making short trips out into the territory surrounding Independence. They heard stories of the Indian tribes to the west, stories brought back to Independence by men who traveled the Santa Fe trail, and were particularly intrigued by stories of the Navahos and their blankets.

Pratt made the trip to St. Louis on foot in nine days, where he again stopped with friends in East St. Louis. A steamer took him from St. Louis to Cincinnati, from which he walked eastward, with his objective the little village of Kirtland, where Rigdon and his followers had settled. At Strongsville, Ohio, Pratt was laid low by a particularly severe attack of measles, augmented by his exposure and hardship, but thanks to good care by friends, he recovered and pressed on towards Kirtland on a borrowed horse.

IN KIRTLAND he found that the little group he had left behind had grown to more than a thousand members—more than were then in the original group back in New York. He heard that the church in New York was planning to come to Kirtland in a body a little later in the spring, and among them his young wife whom he had not seen in six months. Lyman Wight, one of Pratt's first converts, had traveled six hundred miles in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and had baptized 393 persons. He heard the story of Simeon Carter, in whose home he had left a Book of Mormon several months before. Carter had read the book, and then traveled the fifty miles to Kirtland for baptism and ordination; since then he had been preaching and baptizing too.

Another man, who deserves special mention, had joined the church at Kirtland during the absence of these missionaries. He was Edward Partridge. He was more conservative than some of his fellows, and though he had listened to the missionaries on their first visit the preceding fall, it took a personal trip back to New York State and a personal interview with Joseph Smith there to convince him that he should join the new movement. He was a hatter by trade, and had never joined any church, being unable to reconcile the wrath of God as taught by the popular preachers of the day, with his idea of a God of mercy and love.

From this first missionary journey, then, the new church gained its principal increase in membership. It gained a member of the first presidency in Sidney Rigdon; a member of the quorum of twelve apostles in Lyman Wight, and a presiding bishop in Edward Partridge. Many other people, whose influence was great in the early church, were either directly or indirectly brought to the church through the ministry of these four young missionaries. They had not only opened up the Western Reserve to the new religion, but they had pressed on and laid the foundations for a settlement of their coreligionists in Missouri. The church which had been organized with only six members had grown by leaps and bounds in only a few months, bringing promise of even greater growth in the years to come.

A Tribute to J. A. Gillen and Clyde F. Ellis

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

(An Address to the recent General Conference Memorial Service.)

James Arthur Gillen was one of four men called to the Apostolic Quorum in 1913. The names of the others were James E. Kelley, William M. Aylor, and Paul M. Hanson. Your speaker is the remaining member living of those four. Brother Gillen served as President of the Quorum of Twelve from October 15, 1922, to April, 1934, which position he held until he retired because of failing health.

It is a pleasure to me to express at this time my appreciation of the ministry he gave to the church without reserve. Our brother's ministry also included several years of local work, during which he served as pastor. Brother Gillen's preaching was of an elevated quality, eloquent and rich with a wide knowledge of scientific reading and enthusiasm which brought conviction and comfort to his hearers.

In the sessions of the quorum, and especially as President, he was kind and just, always concerned with the welfare of the cause of Christ and the dignity of the calling he represented. We cannot speak of him without directing attention to his love of family and home and the constant care and patience his loved ones exhibited during the long months of his incapacity. To them and his friends our sympathy is extended.

One of the achievements of the scientists of our time, most difficult for most of us to understand is television. To me it is wonderful—broadcasting a scene here through the air by invisible forces, to be seen at a more or less distant point. But is there not what we may call television that is taking place in our minds?

For instance, now, I move a little something in my mind and there is broadcast in my mind a scene in the Tuomotuan Archipelago, in the South Seas of thirty years ago. These islands, consisting of a narrow strip of land half a mile, perhaps one mile wide, covered with coconut trees, extend twenty to thirty miles in circular or elliptical form. The ends of the land do not come together. Here is the pass through which the tides ebb and flow, the ocean moving in and out. Inside of the land is the lagoon. Such is the character of nearly all the islands where our church carries on its work in these islands.

I now broadcast on the wall of my mind a church on the island of Kaukura—long and narrow; the natives prefer that kind of architecture. The men are on one side, the women on the other, most of them are barefoot, but we are in the tropics. All are dressed in clothing that is immaculately clean. Things just seem to be as they ought to be. Then I sense myself preaching, and at my side is Clyde F. Ellis, a young man twenty-four years of age, interpreting.

I again move a little something in my mind and another scene appears, a company going from one island to another. On the little boat is a mast about as large as my wrist—no railing except a few inches above the side of the boat. On board are Brethren John W. Rushton, Alva Christiansen, A. V. Karlstrom, Clyde F. Ellis, myself, and two native brethren.

A mistake was made, unpardonable for a sea man, but no compass had been taken. A storm such as is common in the South Seas suddenly arose, and in the darkness we could not see the direction we were going. The seas were running high. No one was speaking. I know what thoughts went through my mind. The wonders of television of the mind! We not only see, but sounds come back, the swishing of the waters, great waves smiting the little boat. At times the mast seemed to be almost horizontal in position.

One of the natives, a very big man, as I remember about six feet tall. I saw him repeatedly go to the side of the boat, take hold of the mast to hold the boat from being thrown over when the sea struck. No one said a word, but here were some of my thoughts. I speak of this so you may know of the things that entered into the life of Brother Ellis. He was a man who, by suffering and various experiences that in the providence of God had been permitted to come into his life, was placed in close touch with the throbbing heart of humanity. Those of you who knew him, the background of his life, will appreciate why he was sympathetic in counsel, his disposition being to sacrifice himself to bring help to others. We did not know but what the little boat would go over. I thought, "Well, is the great adventure to take place here in the South Seas and out of the pathway of steamers? What an awful thing! There are Brethren Rushton, Karlstrom, Christiansen, Ellis, and their families. What a terrible thing for this to take place, and the church not even known how the end had come. Sunk into the ocean, no ships going that way, and the church know nothing about it! That scene comes to mind. What a wonderful thing is television of the mind.

Brother Ellis's passing was a distinct loss to the ministry of the church. He was skilled in the language of the Society Islands. His death was a great loss to the Society Islands Mission, and to the Apostolic quorum, as well as to his family and many friends.

When he made a speech in the meetings of the Twelve, he was listened to with appreciation. He was sincere. He was sober minded, and felt the cause of Christ was worthy of the best that could be given it.

Brother Ellis was very deeply devoted to his home and family. Now there are many others whose passing to their sure rewards could be mentioned by name. We are certain that so far as heroes that might appeal to many in the church and out, those who are great in the eyes of God are not always those in the public eye. There are others, mothers, whose tears are not known to others, but anxious about the members of their families. There are men who are honestly toiling, making their living, and giving service to mankind. And others there doubtless may be that we might think will stand in foremost places in the kingdom of God will be found occupying below some, with whom we perhaps were not well acquainted.

We read that angels conducted Lazarus to his eternal rest, and may it not be that a similar sort of procedure has been followed concerning those we have mentioned, and will be with many others whose names could be mentioned who have made most excellent contributions to the service of Christ and consequently to the world.

A Tribute to Benjamin R. McGuire

(An Address to the recent General Conference Memorial Service.)

I am grateful this afternoon to have this opportunity and rare privilege of paying tribute to the memory of our late brother, a former Presiding Bishop of this church. One cannot be associated with men for years in the most sacred calling which God extends to human beings without developing a profound affection, a deep understanding, and a bond of relationship which death itself does not break. As these, our brethren, fellow crusaders for the kingdom, are transferred from the church militant to the church triumphant, we like to think of the contribution which each one has made to the enrichment of the whole.

My experience with Bishop McGuire goes back to the year 1902. Years have multiplied much more rapidly than most of us like to think, and we remember the many whom we have known who have served with us, have suffered and have rejoiced according as the fortunes of the kingdom of Christ have changed. Each one of us more or less immortalizes the ministry of those with whom he has been associated, and though they are dead and gone, their testimony and the peculiar strains of their ministry which may have affected us, continue, for death is not capable of destroying such memories as these. "Though dead they yet speak." If we do not believe in personal immortality we have to believe that life is like a never-ending stream, flowing like a river, and catching up in the course of years all of those values which make for goodness and virtue and worthwhileness in human life; and find expression in other lives in a variety of character and personality.

So, this afternoon I speak reverently and affectionately of one of the servants of the church who was called in the early years of our late President through an inspirational message to occupy in this position. It was the first of such messages which President Smith gave to the church, and I still recall the feeling of approval and of satisfaction and of endorsement which filled the hearts of the men of the Twelve as we sat in a room in one of the old buildings in this town, and President Smith communicated to us the name of the one who should be the successor to the late Bishop Edmund L. Kelley. Quietly the message was received, but from our hearts there went forth a warm conviction of the rightness of the call that encircled the entire church-world, and from different parts of this fellowship of the Spirit there came the consciousness that this call was of God.

From 1916 until 1925, our Brother Benjamin R. McGuire served the church and brought to his ministry a dignity, a kindliness, and the habitual hospitality which has always been one of the traditions of our church, and through the vicissitudes of life and of office, whether in times of stress and diversity, or whether in times of prosperity and joy, Brother McGuire always maintained his poise and his courtesy. I think it can be said of him without any exaggeration that he was one of the products of the church we like to classify as a Christian gentleman.

The time came when he had to relinquish his active service for the church, but through all of these experiences never did I hear one unkindly criticism, one bitter word, nor one sentence spoken in condemnation of any one person, or of anything which had been done in an official way. Those of us who have been privileged to be on the inside of his heart and enjoy intimate friendship with him, learned to love the man for what he was, and for what he did. When his call came to leave this earthly scene, as it did so suddenly and unexpectedly, a vacant place was left in the hearts and minds of those who knew him, and he will always be a fragrant memory as we look back and think of him whom affectionately we called Brother Ben.

We pray that God may bless his widow and his family, and may the memory of his kindly services and tender and constant affection be to them a source of comfort and of solace in these lonely hours.

Know the true value of time; snatch, seize, and enjoy every moment of it. No idleness, no laziness, no procrastination; never put off till tomorrow what you can do today.—Lord Chesterfield.

IN MEMORY OF

Frederick M. Smith

OFFICERS of the Herald Publishing House wished to put in permanent printed form, as beautiful as they could make it, a brief record of the life of President F. M. Smith and of the tributes paid to him at the time of his passing.

Newspaper clippings will turn yellow with age and tributes contained in periodicals soon become lost under an accumulation of later publications, but this beautiful memorial booklet is something of a convenient size which can be kept by itself as a permanent part of each member's library.

And so it was that we prepared these memorial booklets and presented them for sale in our booth in the Auditorium during General Conference. We believe these booklets to be one of the finest pieces of workmanship that it has ever been our privilege to present to the church. You will enjoy sending them as gifts to your friends. Each one contains a picture of President Smith, is printed on heavy, enameled paper and is enclosed in a white envelope ready for mailing.

Price, 50c each.

Also available, and especially designed for framing, is a large printed photograph of President Smith, in black ink on glossy light paper. A suitable margin is allowed and the size is approximately 10¼ by 12¼ inches, over all.

Price, 10c each.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Central Missouri Stake

(Formerly Holden Stake)

Upon approval of the First Presidency, action was taken at the March conference to change the name of Holden Stake to Central Missouri Stake. The stake headquarters have not been at Holden for many years, and since the enlargement of the boundaries, the term seemed quite ambiguous. Headquarters are now located at Warrensburg, but it was not thought advisable to name the stake after any town or city; the territory can be described much better by a general term such as the one selected. The change in name has not affected the organization or boundaries of the stake in any way.

Warrensburg, Missouri

Pastor, Ward A. Hougas

Fourteen new members were baptized after six weeks of intensive missionary work. This includes three families not formerly connected with the church, and completes three other family circles. James C. Daugherty, missionary, held cottage meetings for four weeks, closing with a one-week series of services. Preliminary work had been done under the direction of Elder E. P. Darnell, stake missionary supervisor. Local men will continue to carry out the program.

The baptismal service was held at Knob Noster on Sunday, March 31. A confirmation service followed immediately in the main auditorium. The Knob Noster Saints graciously provided for the baptisms, and assisted in the services.

Elder Perry Hiles of Bates City was the guest speaker on January 27. Otto Biell gave the Communion address in February. Present at the service were Mr. and Mrs. William Burton of Independence.

Topeka, Kansas

Pastor, E. C. Christenson

The young people have had two outstanding activities recently. On Sunday, March 24, a group of Leaguers from Liberty Street Church in Independence came to Topeka to present several services. Eugene McConnell was in charge of the worship service at 10 o'clock, the theme of which was "Diligence." Carl Holsworth gave the call to worship; Leslie Allen offered the invocation; Frank Tuttle sang, "My Task," and a talk was given by William Tignor.

Elder Cecil Walker was the speaker at 11 o'clock, his subject being "New Frontiers for Youth." A special musical number was given by a girls' trio composed of Helen Holsworth, Frances Tuttle, and Kathryn Thompson.

At noon the women of Topeka served an excellent meal in the church dining room; the young people then divided into groups and went sight-seeing until time for the afternoon meeting. At 2 o'clock a play, "The Truants," was given by the visitors. This was followed by a candlelight service presented by six young people, with Carl Holsworth in charge.

Topeka group is indebted to the Holsworths for bringing the Leaguers to their church.

Cecil Crooker, young people's leader in Topeka, was largely responsible for the arranging of a young people's rally held March 30 and 31. There were League members from Lawrence, Kansas City, Leavenworth, Atchison, and other near-by places in attendance. At the banquet on Saturday night, Edwin Browne of Lawrence served as toastmaster; Bishop Walter Johnson was the speaker. Brother Browne planned an entertaining program with appropriate stories, jokes, and songs. The menu consisted of roast turkey (donated by Pastor E. C. Christenson) and the usual trimmings. The delicious meal was served by the women's department.

At 7:30 Sunday morning the young people went to Lake Shawnee for a fellowship service. The peaceful surroundings on the banks of the quiet lake were ideal for the inspirational service. A breakfast was served by several mothers following the meeting. Charles Sheets and Hubert Ellithorpe did their share by keeping the fire going.

The group was back at the church in time for the 11 o'clock service, at which Bishop Johnson was the speaker. His subject was "Assets of the Church." He brought out the fact that, although the church had material assets—money, buildings, institutions, etc.—its most valuable assets were its people. Joy Browne had charge of the music.

A cafeteria lunch was served in the church dining room at noon. A round table discussion, in charge of Edwin Browne, Bishop Johnson, and Wendell Kelley, was held in the afternoon. Thought-provoking questions were discussed by the young people, and helpful suggestion given by Bishop Johnson.

Although the young people of Topeka branch are few in number, they are devoted workers. They helped clean the lawn, washed the church windows, decorated the dining room, served as a reception committee, and in other ways did their part in making the two events successful.

Celebrate Golden Wedding

The fiftieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Shalley of Nevada, Iowa, was made a happy occasion when their children and grandchildren presided over an open house in their honor. Their home was decorated with roses, jonquils, carnations, and other flowers which were the congratulatory expressions of relatives and friends. Centering the dining table was a beautifully decorated three-tier wedding cake trimmed with gold and topped with a miniature bridal couple.

During the receiving hours the children and grandchildren assisted with the welcoming of the many guests who called to extend congratulations. Among the guests were a number who were present when Cora Ella Huhn became the bride of Jessie Edward Shalley on March 18, 1896.

For many years the Shalley home was on a farm near Nevada, but for the past several years they have lived at 1235 Fifth Street in Nevada. The children, all of whom were present with their families, include Earl Shalley of Kansas City, Chester and Ivan Shalley of Nevada; and Viola Shalley Smay of Coggin.

A dinner, in honor of the occasion, was held in the evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Shalley.

The floral display which surrounded his bier spoke of the high esteem in which he was held by his many friends.

He is survived by his wife; five daughters: Mrs. Edith Braman, Buffalo, New York; Mrs. Vera Carlisle, New Philadelphia, Ohio; Mrs. Leah Ries, Mrs. Helen Ducker, and Mrs. Alma Thomas, all of Wheeling; three sons: Chester and Elbert of Chicago, Illinois, and Louis, Jr., of Melbourne, Florida; one sister, Mrs. Carrie Akerley, Bridgeport, Ohio; two stepsons, twenty-four grandchildren, and eleven great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Bertchey Funeral Home, in charge of Elder Arthur Schonlan of Moundsville, West Virginia, assisted by Elder O. J. Tary of the home church. Interment was in the Greenwood Cemetery.

KNOWLAND.—Lucy A., was born in Washington County on February 6, 1869, and passed away April 7 at Borden, Indiana. She was married to Lyman T. Knowland on August 21, 1901; two children were born to this marriage. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church several years ago, and was a devoted worker the remainder of her life.

She is survived by her husband; one son, Elijah F. Knowland, New Albany, Indiana; a daughter, Mrs. Mary Jane Saltgaver, Millstown, Indiana; a brother, Sherman Sheppard of Rego; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were in charge of William G. Maymon; burial was in the Borden cemetery.

The Preacher's Wife

There is one person in your church
Who knows your preacher's life;
She wept and smiled and prayed with him,
And that's your preacher's wife.
The crowd has seen him in all his strength,
When glistening with drawn sword,
As underneath God's banner folds
He faced the devil's horde.
But she knows deep within her heart
That scarce an hour before
She helped him pray the glory down
Behind a closet door.
She's heard him groaning in his soul,
When bitter raged the strife,
As, hand in his, she knelt with him—
For she's the preacher's wife.
You tell your tales of prophets brave
Who walked across the world
And changed the course of history
By burning words they hurled.
And I will tell how back of them
Some woman lived their lives,
Who wept with them, and smiled with them,
They were the preacher's wives.

Religious Experiences Wanted

Mrs. Carrie Baird, 1123 North Main, Independence, Missouri, would appreciate receiving accounts of religious experiences which could be written up in story form for use in junior worship services.

* SANITARIUM ISSUE

When the special issue for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital was planned, we fully expected to have thirty-two pages. The paper crisis (now apparently chronic) has cut us down to half, and our sixteen pages simply will not go far enough for our purposes. So we shall have to divide the material and present some of it in the next issue. We're sorry, but it can't be helped.

* COVER PICTURE

We tried several good photographers over a period of years, to get the right kind of picture of the new Sanitarium building. There were some good photos, but they didn't catch the quality we needed. We wanted something to show the spiritual quality of the institution, the service that never ceases from one year to the next. We finally talked to Brother Marvin McDole, said it should be taken at night, that it should show the beautiful entrance, and the light on. He got the idea, and made the fine picture we have. We're proud of the result, and of him!

* NEWS POLICY REVISED

Sixteen pages intrude again. Necessity forces us to reduce the amount of space for news. We can't tell how long our shortage of space will continue. So we are asking our news editor to take only the briefest and most important items from your letters for presentation. Letters already prepared and on hand will be published, but from this date new material will be condensed. We hope you will understand our problem, and realize that we don't like it any better than you do.

* EVAN A. FRY, your radio pastor and director, is still at home, recuperating steadily, and hoping to be out and about his work soon. It is very surprising to his friends that one who did so much, seeming so inexhaustible in energy, ideas, resources, and ability, should have the misfortune to be ill so long. You and the church had asked him for so much, never thinking that it might be too much for him, or that he would wear out. He never knew how to say "No" to a request for help. When he comes back to work, let's be more careful of him. We'd like to keep him a long time . . . The articles of his that we have been using are all radio talks that he prepared and used before his illness.

Post Conference Joint Council

Changes in official personnel effected at the recent General Conference gave rise to the need for other personnel adjustments which could not be given the careful consideration which they merited while the conference was in session. For this reason, among others, a post conference council of the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric was called for Tuesday, April 23, 1946.

PRESIDENT OF GRACELAND COLLEGE

The first matter of importance coming before the council was a communication from the First Presidency recommending that the council grant the request of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College that Elder Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., be released from ministerial appointment in order to become President of Graceland. The request was discussed freely, many fine tributes being paid to Brother Gleazer, and was then unanimously approved.

PRESIDENTS OF STAKES

To fill the vacancies in the stake presidencies occasioned by the ordination of Brother Jensen and the transfer of Brother Gleazer, Elder J. D. Anderson was nominated for President of the Kansas City Stake, and Elder Robert S. Farnham was nominated for President of the Lamon Stake. These nominations were approved, subject to the approval of the respective stake conferences.

OTHER APPOINTMENTS

Appointments referred to the council, and others affected by the changes already mentioned, were given careful attention and the following assignments were made:

Thomas R. Beil to Chicago district, Central Chicago Branch objective.

John Blackmore to Northeast Nebraska district, Omaha objective, effective September 15.

W. E. Haden, Jr., to Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana.

Donald E. Harvey to Des Moines and Nauvoo districts.

John L. Nutgrass to Des Moines and Nauvoo districts.

Arthur Rock to Spring River district, Joplin and vicinity objective.

R. Melvin Russell to Far West Stake, St. Joseph objective, effective September 15.

Elder David K. Larmour, honorably released on account of ill health.

Elder Ammon Calhoun, honorably released on account of ill health.

The assignment of Elder Carl Muir was deferred, pending the working out of some administrative details.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT BOUNDARY LINES

Changes in district boundary lines were authorized as follows:

Detroit-Windsor District: Detroit area bounded on north by 18 Mile Road to the west line of Wayne County; western boundary Wayne County line to southern border of Washtenaw County, then Highway No. 23 to Highway No. 50; thence Highway No. 50 to Lake Erie. Canadian portion of District comprised of Essex County, Ontario.

The effect of this change will be to extend the boundaries to include Mt. Clemens, Big Beaver, Carleton, and Azalia.

Spring River District: The boundary line between the Spring River District and the Southern Missouri District to be changed so that instead of passing down the eastern boundary of Green County and then directly south to the state line, it shall run down the eastern boundary of Laclede, Wright, Douglas, and Ozark counties. The effect of this change will be to transfer to the Spring River District the Ava branch and groups at Seymour and Mansfield, as well as a few nonresident Saints.

Northern New South Wales District:

North, Parallel 29.5

South, Parallel 32.5

East, The Pacific Ocean

West, Longitude 152 between Parallels 29.5 and 31.3, then following the Northern Coast Range and Barrington Tops to Parallel 32.5

Southern New South Wales District:

North, Parallel 32.5

South, Parallel 35

East, The Pacific Ocean

West, Longitude 150

A fine spirit of fraternity was enjoyed throughout the sessions, and the brethren of the Twelve left for their fields with the full confidence and good wishes of the other members of the council.

Warning

We are compelled to warn the Saints against one Wilton H. Ban-yard, who has imposed on members at Springfield, Missouri, and elsewhere. This man represents he is a member and claims residence at Omaha. Our records do not disclose present address.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

A new grip on life and a new confidence in yourself as the years pass by should come to you as a result of a recent discovery by Dr. Irving Lorge, young psychologist of Teachers College, Columbia University. Dr. Lorge has found that, barring accident and disease, your general mental powers do not decline with age.

This means that whatever hard mental tasks you could do well at twenty or twenty-five you can still do equally well at sixty or seventy, and possibly at an even greater age. These statements are revolutionary. From numerous mental tests given to millions of Americans in recent years, it had been assumed that normal people reached their peak of mental power somewhere between ages sixteen and twenty-one. From then on to about age twenty-seven people made almost the same scores; but after that the scores gradually declined at about one per cent each year. In general, then, these tests had left a very strong inference that in the twenties the mind reaches its limit of efficiency as a thinking machine, and thereafter begins to decline.—Albert E. Wiggam.

IN MEMORY OF

Frederick M. Smith

OFFICERS of the Herald Publishing House wished to put in permanent printed form, as beautiful as they could make it, a brief record of the life of President F. M. Smith and of the tributes paid to him at the time of his passing.

Newspaper clippings will turn yellow with age and tributes contained in periodicals soon become lost under an accumulation of later publications, but this beautiful memorial booklet is something of a convenient size which can be kept by itself as a permanent part of each member's library.

And so it was that we prepared these memorial booklets and presented them for sale in our booth in the Auditorium during General Conference. We believe these booklets to be one of the finest pieces of workmanship that it has ever been our privilege to present to the church. You will enjoy sending them as gifts to your friends. Each one contains a picture of President Smith, is printed on heavy, enameled paper and is enclosed in a white envelope ready for mailing.

Price, 50c each.

Also available, and especially designed for framing, is a large printed photograph of President Smith, in black ink on glossy light paper. A suitable margin is allowed and the size is approximately 10 1/4 by 12 1/4 inches, over all.

Price, 10c each.

Religious Education Emphases of the Conference

By Chris B. Hartshorn Editor of Church School Literature

According to the official program, "Religious Education Faces a New Day," Dr. F. M. McDowell and his co-workers were quite willing to face it with the group of workers which poured in and overflowed the annex and other assembly rooms each day of the General Conference.

From Nova Scotia to Southern California, delegates and visitors wanted to know about this "new day" and the best methods of doing the job which confronts the church. Teachers and administrators who had the answers, those who could furnish solutions or even helpful suggestions for the local problems of the workers were listened to eagerly.

THE WORKSHOP PROGRAM

Each morning started off with a demonstration and discussion session which covered the entire field of religious education in the course of the week. The first ten minutes consisted of a worship service by the writer assisted by Mrs. J. R. Darling at the piano. The worship themes, taken from his new manual, Let Us Worship, supported the subject of the workshop for each day.

The church school had its presentation on Monday. After Brother McDowell spent a few minutes in introducing the subject, he called on six workers to discuss special phases of the church school work. "How to Use the New Church School Yearbook" was explained by E. V. Osborn, Dearborn, Michigan, and by Elsie Garlick, Evanston, R. I. "My Ideas for Improving Church Schools" were presented by Glen E. Holmes, Compton, California, and John Wiley, Mt. Pleasant, Michigan. "How the Church School and Home May Co-operate" was then discussed by Olive Mortimore, Lamoni, Iowa, and by Mrs. Dean Holder, Wichita, Kansas.

The activity programs were discussed on Tuesday. John R. Darling gave the introduction for the Boy Scout program and presented the new manual which had just come from the Herald press. "Shop-talk" which followed emphasized the "God and Country Award." E. J. Gleazer, Jr., presented the subject as the pastor sees it. Byron Yarrington, Lamoni, Iowa, next explained the parent's point of view. His son, Rodger, a winner of the award, gave the Scout's version of the program.

Edna Easter, General Supervisor of Girl's Programs, introduced the "Light of Life Award for Girls." Byrna Zerr, Elna Worts, and Mrs. Francis Bishop then discussed the Oriole, Girl Scout, and Camp Fire programs respectively.

The third inning found the Zion's League knocking the ball around on Wednesday morning. Dick Woods, Royal Oak, Michigan, talked on the theme, "Our District League Is Going Places." He was followed by Jayne Fout, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, who gave us "Three Ways to Improve the League Program." Mary B. Hill then presented "A New Program from Canada."

On Thursday morning an enthusiastic panel presented the merits of camping as an educational and growth program for youth. Joseph Baldwin, Ray Carmichael, Jeanne Hulmes, Roy Cheville, and Lloyd Adams intensified the group interest by their testimonies. How does a camp differ from a reunion or an institute? asked chairman McDowell: The group to be served must register and pay in advance; the number to be served is limited strictly with no visitors allowed. Age limits are considered in accepting applicants. The entire day is planned for growing experiences in character building. Camp leadership is a job for experts, or at least for those who are well prepared and trained.

Visual Aids came to bat on Friday. Hattie K. Bell, Chicago, Illinois, demonstrated the use of flat pictures, flannel-graphs, graphs, and charts. The exhibits were on strings, tables, and easels. The time was entirely too short to have all thoroughly demonstrated, however, much of suggestive power was crowded into the few minutes available.

Thelona Stevens, Director of Leadership Training, demonstrated the use of objects in teaching. Many simple articles of everyday use were introduced into classroom techniques. The adult group was as interested as most classes of juniors could be.

Several ways in which slides can be used to serve the branch program where a projector is available were discussed by the writer. Commercial glass slides and film slides can be easily obtained for presenting religious subject matter. Homemade slides offer much in promptly meeting teaching situations.

To meet the educational needs of our armed forces, much advancement has been made both in improved equipment and teaching methods in the last five years. It has been found that two equal, or matched, groups can be given the same material in classroom situations. The group which has full advantage of visual aid methods will learn approximately two thirds more in one third less time than by the traditional methods. Church school leaders who complain of insufficient time to do the job should take note of these data.

The leadership program was in there pounding out home runs on Saturday morning. Glen E. Holmes told "How I Secure Registrations" for leadership courses. Hattie K. Bell answered the query, "Is the Struggle to Get People to Study for Credit Worth the Effort?" Esther Heller, Pittsburg, Kansas, presented "Improvements We Have Realized Through Credit Study." Then the obverse side of the subject was presented by Roberta Gregory, Aurora, Illinois, who maintained that "Study Can Be Just as Effective Without Credit."

CLASSES IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Eight classes on the general theme, "The Home and Church Work Together," got under way each morning at ten o'clock. In spite of the fact that quorum sessions, the program of the Council of Women, a "Health" class, and the general prayer service were all competing at this hour, all of these classes were large. The conference was made more profitable and happier because of planning for the diversified interests which were evidenced by these many choices. Had all preferred the prayer meeting or a particular class the good will and unity so common among us would have been overcome by dissatisfactions.

"The Church's Opportunity in Adult Education" was considered by the class taught by John R. Darling, Associate Director of Religious Education. It was pointed out that mental growth should continue throughout the life of the well-adjusted Latter Day Saint. The tree has its growing edge in its cambium just under the bark. Our growing edge is the point of our chief interest. The extent of that growth depends on the intensity of our interest plus the direction and application of that interest. Adults do well to seek counsel and follow guidance rather than impulse.

It is frequently observed that adults will seek more of that field of knowledge in which they are already most proficient. Of course, there is need for specialization in chosen fields. There is also need for balance in our intellectual development.

Specialists in primary education, or in music, for example, will get little help from a short, overview course; but they will feel at home and have a chance to shine on favored occasions in such classes.

Four reasons were advanced why adults do not grow:

1. The lack of ability to learn along certain lines—poor choices.
2. Desire to concentrate is not strong enough—do not respond to the point of action.
3. Their leaders and instructors have not made inspiring demonstrations.
4. Unwillingness to give up faulty habits and ideas for new ones.

DOES IT MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE?

The largest class was taught in the annex by James Daugherty. Many of the pertinent decisions which youths are required to make and which vitally affect the direction of their lives were here brought under scrutiny. The instructor's approach was made with frankness and understanding. Traditional views on pat answers to youth problems were given no sacred standing. It makes a tremendous difference what one thinks. In one sense, it is more important than what one does. That which a youth does today may just be experimental and never be repeated. What he thinks is the basis of all future judgment and action. The groundwork of youthful decisions is laid in childhood.

GUIDING THE GROWTH OF CHILDREN

The class dealing with this field was taught by Florence Freberg. In answer to the question, "Has your own life or thinking been changed and by this course?" one young mother said, "I now realize that the neglect of the child and home even for church work is not justified. I can now see that humiliating a child who has reacted in an unconventional way is wrong. The child wants to feel important, to have dignity; and fear of punishment, or belittling, leads him to use the escape mechanism of telling lies. Forcing a child to repress his feelings is rarely effective in obtaining desirable traits."

THE PASTORAL PROGRAM FOR SAFEGUARDING MARRIAGE AND THE FAMILY

E. J. Gleazer, Jr., the teacher of a group studying the subject given above used his quarterly, Planning the Zionite Home, as the basis for the course. It was pointed out that the home has undergone an important economic evolution in the last two or three centuries. In the handcraft era the same building which served for the family shelter was usually the place where the labors of the tradesman were carried along. He might even have one or more apprentices who worked and boarded there. Now nearly everything goes on outside the home. The basis of happiness in the modern home must be spiritual. It calls for more intelligence, understanding, and adjustment.

This situation gives rise to the greater need for pastoral ministry. Many of the needs of the modern home can be met only by the minister who is broadly prepared and guided by divine wisdom.

GUIDING THE ADOLESCENT IN THE FAMILY

This was the title of the course taught by Eunice S. Livingston. The junior high age has too long been associated in our thinking with the problem child instead of the age of growth and opportunity. Individual differences must be recognized. The adolescent should not be expected to conform strictly to the pattern set by his brother or sister, and much less to our own adult pattern. Accept the fact that his inherited characteristics are different from those of other children. The task of the parent and teacher is to make the best of these traits and to help the youth modify and direct them into desirable channels.

YOUNG ADULTS AND ZIONIC HOMES

The importance of the contribution of this age group to the church and community was stressed by Jerry C. Runkle, the teacher of this course. That sector of our lives from age twenty to forty encompasses the span of marriage, child rearing, economic independence, or the reverse. Church responsibilities are assumed or shunned, community loyalties are developed, etc.

It was not just teacher enthusiasm, not just love of the superlative which led to emphasizing the needs for ministry to this group. The hope of the church and of the world is wrapped up in the attitudes, the devotions, and the contributions of this age. Zion's redemption largely awaits their pleasure.

THE CHURCH AND HOME IN MUTUAL ENDEAVOR

This course, taught by Almer Sheehy, used the quarterly of the same title as the basis of instruction. It was emphasized that the child, rather than the parents, was the most important person in the home. As wise parents devote themselves to building the lives of growing children according to Christlike patterns, they come to realize their own best achievements and happiness. The church is a laboratory, a co-operative fellowship to develop personality traits of zionic quality.

The successful home, it was maintained, was one which:

1. Had daily worship
2. Had constant courtship
3. Could make daily adjustments
4. Destroyed selfishness

THE LATTER DAY SAINT HOME

Thelona D. Stevens used the quarterly, The Latter Day Saint Home for Today and Tomorrow as the basis of her course. The quality of our homes will determine the nearness of Zion, it was urged. This quality can and must be improved. The social and worship habits of the family need to be constantly reviewed in the light of divine instruction to the church. "Parental authority in the Latter Day Saint home should never degenerate into tyranny or autocracy, but develops self-control personalities with the power to make choices. As children grow, the authority becomes more distributed, and decisions are made within the family council."

One young mother who attended this class declared, "I am going home to set my house in order."

THE YOUTH ASSEMBLY

At eleven o'clock each morning, a doers' program was presented under the direction of Roy A. Cheville. The very first morning the crowd overflowed the annex. The next day they met in the auditorium. When the crowd wishing to attend the preaching services at the same hour could not all get in the Stone Church, an exchange was made on Thursday morning and Roy's group found themselves at the Stone Church.

Various aspects of a Zion's League program were discussed and later demonstrated. With the help of Graceland students in religion, we got a better understanding of how the League is organized and administered. A mock cabinet meeting was held on Monday. Fellowship was the Tuesday theme. Methods of giving every member a "sense of belonging" was emphasized. The study program with a purpose was enacted on Wednesday after showing the results of the haphazard type which is altogether too familiar. Thursday was recreation planning day. Cheville emphasized that recreation alone will not do it, but you can't get along without recreation." Social service and devotions were stressed on Friday and Saturday, respectively. Youth wants to serve, and the League is an important part of the total branch program. Through intellectual planning it is possible to put our Leagues on a

Independence Sanitarium

By Grace Pennell Tousley

THIRTY-SIX YEARS of being pushed around by its own housing problem have ended for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing. It is now at home in its quarters on the ground floor of East Building, formerly the old Sanitarium which also houses the Nurses' Home and the Sanitarium staff dining room and kitchen.

Since January, 1910, when the school was opened, until now, it has been shifted from one temporary location to another, as the growing patient load of the hospital demanded. The opening of the new hospital in January, 1943, and the school's affiliation with the United States Cadet Corps in July of that same year, made it both possible and imperative that permanent quarters for the school be provided; planned and equipped for the very special requirements of a school where the science and art of nursing are taught.

The school is owned and operated by the Sanitarium, with a policy-making nursing school committee as the governing body. This committee is composed of the following members: Chairman, Nelle Morgan, R. N., director of nurses; Vida E. Butterworth, R. N., B. S., M. A., educational director of the school; Gertrude E. Copeland, R. N., superintendent of the Sanitarium; and G. Leslie DeLapp and Henry L. Livingston, hospital board representatives.

At this time, Miss Butterworth is absent on a six month leave, attending Teachers College, Columbia University; and Edith Davey, R. N., B. S., an instructor in the school, is acting educational director.

In her position as director of nurses, Miss Morgan plays a dual role: that of director of nursing service in the hospital and that of director of the school of nursing; she is also a member of the faculty. Other faculty members are Shirley Butler, R. N., Eula Allen, R. N.; and Mable Faulkner, R. N. Nursing supervisors do no formal classroom teaching, but they do have a definite in-high plane of spiritual experience.

As we view the week's religious education program of the 1946 General Conference, we see greater possibilities ahead than the church has yet realized. There are hundreds of leaders and potential leaders among us who will be heard from in ways that will be felt throughout the church. Some of these are young and inexperienced now, but give them a hand or give them room.

The School of Nursing Marches On!

structional function in the day-to-day supervision of the student while she is on duty in the hospital.

Specialists in various fields related to nursing serve as lecturers: psychology, Alice Chase Burgess, M. A.; diet therapy, Vera Goffe, B. S., Dtn.; nursery, Ina Hattey, R. N.; first aid, Cleo M. Salisbury, American Red Cross; public health, Lucille Webster, R. N., Jackson County Public Health Nurse; medical and surgical diseases, Charles F. Grabske, M. D., and Vance E. Link, M. D.; eye, ear, nose, and throat diseases, Stanley L. Green, M. D.; obstetrics, Russell D. Etzenhouser, M. D.

WHERE NURSING STUDENTS LEARN TO NURSE

The space occupied by the school is divided into offices for educational director and instructors, a lecture room, and three laboratories. The decor of the offices and of the lecture room are very much alike—light green walls, darker green-and-brown linoleum floors, and blonde modern furniture. The science laboratory's maize walls, brown marbled linoleum floors, blonde wood furnishings, and excellent laboratory equipment add up to beauty and efficiency.

In the dietetics laboratory the students learn to cook; first, for well persons, and then for the sick. They learn to set a patient's tray attractively, and to apply the principles of diet therapy. Once during the term the dietetics class plans, prepares, and serves luncheon or supper to the school personnel, learning in the process how to feed large groups, and something of the techniques of entertaining. The walls of this long room are cream color; the cabinets built in around the sink are snow white, as are the three large, open cupboards which are dramatized by scalloped framing around the openings and by the gay Fiesta ware arranged with precision on the shelves. An electric refrigerator, three apartment-size gas ranges, and four long, linoleum-topped worktables complete the large kitchen equipment. The dietetics course is both a lecture and laboratory course.

The door lettered "Nursing Arts" opens into what appears to be a cheerful hospital ward. This is the nursing arts laboratory. It, too, is a long room; the walls are maize colored; the floor of green-and-tan linoleum. Ranged down the west wall are nine regulation, greyenameled hospital beds, each with its brown-and-beige woven spread, and bedside stand; and separated from its neighbor by a screen. Susie Chase, perennial patient, occupies one of the beds. Susie is the life-sized manikin used by students for the practice of nursing techniques. (Students also practice on each other in this laboratory.) One corner of the laboratory is screened off and furnished as a hospital private room. Duplicates of the service rooms on a hospital floor—utility, medicine, linen, and kitchen—are built into the north end of the room. The nursing arts laboratory presents learning situations parallel to nursing situations found in the hospital.

Co-ordination of classroom teaching and clinical experiences is carried on by means of ward clinics on a patient conducted by Miss Davey, or by individual instruction given by Miss Butler or another faculty member. By this means, the hospital becomes an advanced nursing arts laboratory, with the student giving nursing care to patients under exacting supervision.

Clinical facilities, beyond those afforded by the hospital, are provided by the school's affiliations in the following fields: pediatric nursing at Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri; psychiatric nursing at City Sanitarium in St. Louis; and health and community nursing with the Visiting Nurse Association in Kansas City. The student chooses one of the two latter affiliations; Mercy Hospital affiliation is compulsory.

THE NURSING LIBRARY

The nursing library, serving both the school and graduate nurses, is located on the first floor of East Building, west of and adjacent to the student nurses' lounge. Three rooms comprise the library suite: study, browsing room, and office. The rooms are well lighted through north, west, and south windows; fluorescent lighting assures eye-saving light for night study.

Although standard library equipment specifications and practice are followed, there is nothing of a musty library atmosphere here. Cream-color walls, dark green-and-red linoleum floors, and honey-toned maple shelves and furniture extend an invitation to learning. The book collection is not large, but every volume is of current value and well-exploited by catalogueing, or is one of the precious items in the historical collection. There are over 600 volumes belonging to the library, plus a loan collection of over 160 volumes from Miss Butterworth.

The books are classified according to the National League of Nursing Education decimal system, devised in 1936 especially for nursing libraries. All books are catalogueed, being listed by author, title, and subject. The divided catalogue is used, having an author-and-title index, and a subject index. Thus filing and finding are both simplified.

Periodicals dealing with medicine, nursing, and social science are received regularly; also periodicals for recreational reading. A vertical file in which are housed the Triadex of clippings, pamphlets, tear sheets, pictures, and package libraries is the answer to the perplexing question: "What shall be done with the flood of 'fugitive' literature received; so valuable because it brings the latest news of medicine and nursing; valueless unless conveniently available?"

Many ways of promoting the use of the library material are used. A one-hour library orientation lecture is given each entering class. Book talks to faculty and supervisors introduce new books; bulletin boards in the library suite carry timely and dramatic displays of book jackets and posters which are changed weekly; the Student Library Activities Committee is the link between student body and library.

A library orientation manual, "Nurses! This is YOUR Library," has been prepared and is supplied to each borrower; a monthly library news letter has been planned for midsummer publication.

The nursing library is a system of libraries, as branches stem from the main location to various places in the school and hospital. Each nurses' station on the hospital floors has its branch library; so has surgery, medical record library, and so on. Books in branch libraries are for reference only.

Mrs. George H. Tousley is the director of the library; Mrs. Vinnie G. Hatch, housemother, is the assistant in charge when Mrs. Tousley is not on duty. The library is open from 7 A. M. until 10 P. M.

A sub-committee of the nursing school committee has been named to act in an advisory capacity in library matters. Members of this sub-committee are named by position and at this time, are as follows: Educational director, Miss Butterworth, chairman; director of the library, Mrs. Tousley, secretary; superintendent of the Sanitarium, Miss Copeland; director of nurses, Miss Morgan; assistant to director of the library, Mrs. Hatch; president of Independence Sanitarium and Hospital Nurses' Alumni Association, Miss Faulkner; representative of hospital board, L. F. P. Curry; representative of nursing school committee, Bishop Henry L. Livingston; representative of student body, Iola Tordoff; representative of community, Leonard J. Lea, managing editor of Saints' Herald. Two rotating memberships provide adequate representation of the nursing supervisors and the faculty. A different member of each group is invited to each meeting of the committee.

THE BOOK BANK

The most ambitious project of the library committee was the recent establishment of the Book Bank with Dollar Donors. The committee was faced at the outset of its career with the same problem which perplexes all libraries: that of financing the purchase of library stock. The committee considered several ways of securing the necessary amount of money. It finally decided that since hospitals have blood banks, eye banks, nerve banks, skin banks, and so on, that a Book Bank would be a suitable means of securing money for a nursing library.

Many persons who would like to contribute to the library might refrain because they feel that a dollar or so is of small value. The library combines these dollar donations to buy the expensive books which are needed and which must be replaced frequently, if the library collection is to be kept up-to-date in the medical and nursing sciences.

Dollar Donors are not limited to gifts of one dollar, of course. And the library committee hopes that Dollar Donors repeat their gifts each year, for the library cannot stand still so long as medicine and nursing advance. A gift index is kept in the library office and each gift is indexed under the donor's name.

The library has a good beginning in recreational reading book stock and church literature, and will receive additions constantly, as a certain percentage of the Book Bank funds must be spent for nonprofessional reading material. It is also planned to purchase audio-visual aids from Book Bank funds.

STUDENT HEALTH PROGRAM

Miss Butler is in charge of the student health program; the committee of medical advisers is Lawrence J. Comboy, M. D., Stanley L. Green, M. D., Fred W. Hink, M. D., and Vance E. Link, M. D. All students have a physical examination when entering the school, another during the second year, and a third at the end of the course. All health care, excluding dental care and glasses, but including hospitalization, medical attention, and medicines, are furnished the student free of charge.

Miss Butler makes the time charts for students, to be sure that each girl has only eight hours of work, including classes, each day, and that she has one free day each week. If a student has to spend some time in a class on her "all day," that time is deducted from a day on duty. Such free time is considered as much a part of the health program as is any medical care given to the student.

NURSES' HOMES

Two homes are needed to house the student enrollment. One, at 1215 West Van Horn Road, is allocated to the pre-clinical students. Mrs. Emma Beadnall is the housemother. The other home is located in East Building and occupies three floors. Mrs. Hatch is the day housemother; Mrs. Victoria Thorburn at night. Mrs. Josephine Reese serves as relief.

All through the East Building home it is evident that much thought went into the remodeling to provide attractive and comfortable living quarters for the girls. Bedrooms are furnished in modern fashion; the bathrooms on each floor are large, with terrazzo floors and gray marble interior partitions; full-length mirrors are variously located. A secluded music room is available for practice; in the lounge the grand piano, numerous sofas and armchairs, and structural glass in the curving interior wall provide the smart atmosphere of an up-and-coming women's club.

The dining room, about 50 feet in length, is located on the third floor. Its walls are covered with a fabric having a soft-grey background and design of immense yellow blossoms almost twelve inches in diameter. An acoustical ceiling assures comparative quiet—a thoughtful touch since 95 per cent of the diners are women. Meals are served cafeteria style. The menus made by Miss Goffe, hospital dietitian, are well-cooked, attractively served, and the portions are generous. (Your reporter speaks from experience; she eats one meal a week in this room.)

Indoor sports are provided for in a recreation room with snack bar; outdoor sports by a tennis court. Indoor and outdoor swimming pools are available in Independence and Kansas City.

STUDENT ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Adjustment to the student's personal, economic, social, and professional situations begins on the first day of school and continues until the last day of the course. A conscious effort is made by the administration and the faculty to focus the student on nursing without narrowing her to nursing.

The Student-Faculty Association is perhaps the greatest factor in preparing the student to meet adequately the demands of in-school and after-school life. It was organized in line with modern trends in nursing education, and meets quarterly. The present officers, all students, are: Leola Brady Wight, president; Emily Easter, vice-president; Mary Lou Denman, secretary; Christianaine Torsch, treasurer; and Dorothy Buck, chairman of activities committee. Standing activity committees are eight in number: art, education, library, music, publications, social, sports, and worship. Each committee is headed by a sponsor who is a faculty member, chosen by the students.

Once a month the student body sponsors some kind of social activity; it has its own fellowship service, and its present big project is the obtaining of the rest of the money needed for the purchase of a radio-phonograph.

A student council manages the affairs of the Student-Faculty Association. It is made up of the officers of the association, two representatives from each class, the educational director, and a representative from the faculty chosen by the students. The council meets bi-weekly, and decides the plan for each committee to follow.

Miss Morgan teaches classes in nursing ethics and professional adjustments, which subjects cover almost every situation in which a student or graduate nurse will find herself. And yet, there do arise problems which require individual consultation between the student and an older person, and for these the counseling program has been planned. Each faculty member is assigned a number of students, and she is available for informal counseling; two members of the nursing supervisory staff sponsor each class and also act as counselors.

The Big Sister program, which functions chiefly during the opening weeks of school, helps the new student to orient herself quickly in her new location. As the new class enters, a member of the preceding class selects her Little Sister, and introduces her to the accepted ways of doing things.

The O. K. Club was organized more than ten years ago for the purpose of "adopting" nursing students to make them feel at home in Independence. It is a Graceland College alumni group, composed of the Independence members of the OOH and K clubs of Graceland. Mrs. Franklyn Ebeling is the president; Mrs. Harold Kelley, secretary; and Miss Davey, of the school of nursing, is treasurer. These "town mothers" entertain each new class with a large party, after which each member of the club draws names of out-of-town girls for "adoption." Girls are entertained individually in the homes of their "mothers," and they feel free to call upon them whenever they feel the need of a vacation from the necessarily regimented life of an institution.

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES

The Worship committee, under the sponsorship of Miss Faulkner, and working with the hospital chaplain, Elder Roy V. Hopkins, plans the morning chapel services and is responsible for one service each week. Communion service is held once a month during the regular chapel period. A fellowship meeting is held once a month in the student nurses' lounge. Being near to the Stone Church, students find it convenient to attend many of the regular church services held there.

PROGRESS FROM "PROBIE" TO PROFESSIONAL

The first step on the way up from probationer, or "pre-clinical," is the capping service, which takes place at the end of six months probation in the school. The successful candidates for further nursing education receive their coveted caps at an impressive and beautiful service. This year, it was conducted in the Stone Church on Sunday evening, February 24, and twenty-nine students who had entered the school in September, 1945, were capped by Miss Morgan. Miss Copeland lighted the candles for the candlelighting ceremony, and Mrs. Allen spoke on the significance of the nurses' caps. Bishop Walter Johnson gave a sermonette preceding the service.

The second step—a longer one this time—is graduation, when the nurse receives her diploma and hospital pin. She is then ready to take the Missouri State Board Nurse Examinations. If she passes, she has the privilege of using the title, Registered Nurse (R. N.) after her name.

From then on she is on her own, a professional nurse. But she need not be alone. She can join her school alumni organization; the district, state, and national nursing organizations, and have representation in the International Council of Nurses; she is eligible to enroll in the American Red Cross Nursing Service.

THE INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL NURSES' ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The association was organized in 1915 with five members. Today it numbers 153 members, and is a force in keeping the graduate nurse in step with the rapid advances in medicine and nursing. It meets five times a year, and its programs provide speakers who bring news of vital importance to the profession, such as that concerning nursing legislation and medical discoveries. The association sends delegates to district and state nursing conventions. Once a year it entertains the graduate class of the school of nursing and is alert to urge the graduates to ally themselves with this, "the basic unit of organized nursing." Ninety-five per cent of the graduates do enroll.

The association furnished a patient's room in the sanitarium a few years ago; it has also furnished the graduate nurses' lounge in the new hospital; contributed to the fund for the hospital's service plaque, and helped to pay the expenses of the school's 35th anniversary observance in January, 1945.

Present officers are, president, Miss Faulkner; first vice-president, Ruth Jones, R. N.; second vice-president, May Crenshaw, R. N.; secretary, Edith Ehlers, R. N.; and treasurer, Donna Holmes, R. N., a graduate of the class of '45.

THE "PLUS" IN THE INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL SCHOOL OF NURSING

"What does this school have that other schools do not have?" was the question put to Miss Butterworth before she left for Teachers College in January.

"There is a closer personal contact than usual between faculty and students," she replied. "Each member of the teaching staff has an individual knowledge of, and interest in, each student. The girls selected as students are of the highest moral character, and thus each one exerts a good influence on all of the others.

"Another advantage is the fact that there are no internes in the hospital. The student, as a result, becomes more skilled in a greater number of nursing techniques than if she had to share learning experiences with interning physicians.

"The enrichment of the girl's whole personality, through her learning experiences, both professional and extra-professional, is the aim of the school," Miss Butterworth continued.

"To members of this church, the school offers church contacts among students, faculty, patients, and local church members. The girl becomes personally acquainted with the church officials, of both local and international importance. It is a great event to the student when she meets and talks with the men responsible for execution of the will of the church body, or with those

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

IN A PREVIOUS article we described for you the hardships and determined zeal of the first four missionaries of the church who set out on a mission to the Indians, with the Kansas Indian territory as their objective, but who stopped off at Mentor, Ohio, to convert Sidney Rigdon and his congregation, and again in Independence where two set up a tailor shop as a means of livelihood and a base of operations. They had left a small but growing church in New York State, with an even larger group centered at Kirtland near Mentor, composed mostly of the converted followers of Sidney Rigdon.

While these four missionaries were in the West, the church in New York state was planning to move in a body to the great Western Reserve in Ohio, to join forces with the larger group at Kirtland. At a conference held on January 2, 1831, attended by about seventy members, plans were laid to make this move as soon as the weather should be open and suitable in the spring. Joseph Smith, his wife, Sidney Rigdon, and Edward Partridge left at once for Kirtland to prepare the way. The church had been promised in revelation that the law to govern the church in its economic and temporal affairs, as well as spiritual, would be given in Ohio after the move.

When Joseph Smith arrived at Kirtland, one of his first acts was to correct some of the communistic ideas held by the community under Lyman Wight, which had joined the new organization almost intact. They women who serve the church so untiringly in their sphere. Such contacts with the church cannot help but be a cement, to bind the student closely to her church. For the girl who is not a member of this church, such contacts can only do her good, all the while leaving her complete religious freedom."

were holding all things common, but under Joseph Smith's instruction agreed to modify some of their practices until the full church law governing temporalities should be given. Edward Partridge was called by revelation to be presiding bishop of the church, in charge of its temporal and financial affairs.

BACK IN NEW YORK state, the little group of Saints gathered in the early spring at the settlement of Waterloo, and prepared to make the journey to Kirtland. By more or less tacit consent, Lucy Mack Smith, Joseph's mother, assumed responsibility for the group. "Mother Smith" as she was affectionately called, ascertained that the price of travel on a canal boat was too high for her group—about two and a half cents per mile, plus board. Accordingly they decided to charter a boat, and do their own cooking to cut down expenses. The boats were small; the canal only an average of four feet deep. Often a portion of the side wall which confined the canal water would give way, emptying the canal of water, and stranding the boat until the break could be repaired and the canal refilled with water. These unavoidable delays were made the occasion for many preaching services in the countryside adjoining the canal, for preachers of the strange new sect were always in demand. It took five days to make the trip from Waterloo to Buffalo, on the shores of Lake Erie, where they intended to take a lake vessel for the vicinity of Kirtland.

Here a new difficulty arose. Although the shallow water of the canal was open, the deeper water of the lake was still frozen, and all water traffic was at a standstill. The town was so full of people waiting for the shipping season to open that there was not a room available anywhere—and Mother Smith had seventy people on her hands who had to be sheltered somewhere. She thought of an old lake captain who had once been in partnership with an older brother of hers, and wondered whether she could find him in port. By a very lucky coincidence, he was, and invited her to bring her group aboard the ship to wait until the ice should clear. In gratitude, the little group knelt on the deck of the ship, and asked that the way might be opened so that they could complete their journey. The ice opened, and their boat sailed out, the first vessel of the season to leave the port of Buffalo. But it met with storms and foul weather, and was reported lost before it finally pulled to the shore at Fairfield, eleven miles from Kirtland, to disembark its passengers, who found a ready welcome among their friends and relatives who awaited them there.

THOUGH THE church had removed from New York thus early in its history, that state continued to be a fertile mission field for many years thereafter. And although the Saints were happy and contented at Kirtland, they still regarded it as only a temporary stopping place on the road to Zion, which should be somewhere in western Missouri. Accordingly, a conference was held on June 6, 1831, and fourteen pairs of men designated to go west by different routes, met in Missouri, and received instruction as to where Zion should be. On the way, they were to preach and baptize, gathering such converts as they could for the new church and its restored gospel. This was an eminently practical and sensible plan, for fourteen pairs of men could pretty well cover all the main routes of travel and the main settlements between Ohio and western Missouri. At this same conference, a congregation or branch of the church from Colesville, New York, which had come as a unit from New

7. Westward Expansion

York to Kirtland, decided to press on as a body to Missouri.

Among the first elders to arrive in Missouri were Joseph Smith and five companions, including W. W. Phelps, who was a last minute convert before the party left Kirtland. These men were pleased with the fertility and beauty of the country they found in western Missouri. They saw that there was great need of better strains of seed and of stock; also of better implements, schools, and churches. The first sermon of the new faith to be preached in Missouri was delivered by W. W. Phelps to a mixed audience of negro slaves, Indians, and white settlers.

Late in July, 1831, the Colesville Branch arrived—about 60 in number—and camped near the Santa Fe Trail. There are no records that enable us to locate their settlement beyond the shadow of a doubt, but it is believed to be near an old spring approximately where 35th and Paseo is in Kansas City today. Here they erected a log building to use as a meeting house and a school, and established the first free public school in Jackson County. Early in August, eight elders and Joseph Smith pledged to each other and to God that they would keep the laws of God on the land which He had chosen to be their inheritance, and proceeded to a spot west of the Independence square where they dedicated a plot of land as the site of a temple. It was not until many months later that Edward Partridge bought this and surrounding land as trustee for the church, but these men were acting on faith, and standing on the promises of God as they believed they had been revealed to them.

ON AUGUST 7 occurred the first Latter Day Saint funeral in Missouri, as Polly Knight, wife of Joseph Knight, Sr., was laid to rest in the land she had so earnestly desired to see before she died. On this day, too, Joseph Smith received a revelation giving the church instructions concerning Sabbath observance, for Sunday was much like any other day among the early settlers of Missouri, and it shocked the religious propriety of these new settlers from the New England states where the church steeple was the central landmark of every town and village. On August 9, 1831, a group of eleven elders started the return trip to Kirtland, their mission accomplished.

The group left behind here in western Missouri was confronted with many problems and adjustments and difficulties. Understanding just what these were will help a great deal in our efforts to understand the events which followed in the next two years. First of all were the difficulties imposed by nature. The summer, following a most unusually hard winter, was cold and wet, with devastating floods in many places. In August, a heavy frost killed the corn before it was ripened, making this staple article of diet very scarce and expensive. Meat was plentiful in the forest, or starvation might have been a problem to be faced in all seriousness. All during the late summer, more of the fourteen pairs of missionaries straggled in, bringing reports of their baptisms and conversions by the way. Lyman Wight returned, borrowed a horse, and went back fifty miles for his traveling companion who was too ill to walk any longer. He reported great success in Pontiac and Detroit, Michigan, where he had made contact with the family and widow of Stephen Mack, elder brother of Lucy Mack Smith, Joseph Smith's mother. Seventy baptisms resulted from this opening. The inclement summer was followed by another bitter cold winter, which came so soon that some families had had no time to provide shelter. Ten families lived that winter in one log cabin without finished doors or glassed windows.

IT WOULD BE WELL at this point to examine, though briefly, the conditions which prevailed in the United States, and particularly on the Missouri frontier, in this year of 1831. It was just between two eras or epochs in our national history—the time of deepest darkness before the dawn. There were no telephones, telegraph, phonographs, electric appliances, gas lights, or farm machinery. The railroad had just been invented, but was not yet in use. Homes were lighted by candles, or in the case of poorer dwellings, a bit of tallow or lard into which a piece of rag was dropped for a wick. Furnaces were unknown; stoves were found only in the very best of eastern dwellings. Coal was unknown; the universal fuel was wood. Clothing, candles, flour, shoes, and furniture were made at home. There were no schools, no colleges, no high schools, except in rare instances when someone started a private grade school as a commercial venture. The United States had only ten million population, distributed through 24 States. All west of the Rockies and south of Washington and Oregon belonged to Mexico, as did also considerable territory east of the Rockies. The country had no gold or silver to speak of, no glass for doors or windows, no wheat except in the east. Missourians made their bread of corn meal which was ground in a hollow log by pounding it with an iron wedge fastened on the end of a stick, or ground between two soft limestone rocks which left the meal full of grit.

It was not unusual in Independence in 1831 for whole families to be dressed in animal skins, or in a cloth made from the fibers of wild nettles. Tree stumps still stood around the square. Many of the best citizens, including even some of the circuit judges, could neither read nor write. Kansas City was not to be established until some eight years later. Everybody drank; everybody gambled; everybody was interested in horse racing and cock fighting. Personal differences were settled with the fists, and not to fight was considered cowardice. Sometimes all the young blades in a certain town would march over to a neighboring town, engage in a grand free-for-all in settlement of a real or fancied grudge; then shake hands all round, roll out a barrel of whisky, and part friends. Most of the settlers of Missouri were southern in birth and persuasion. They spoke a different dialect and use a different vocabulary than these newcomers from New England. Even the monetary system was different—for the Missourians were using the Spanish system of gold coinage with its dollar divided into eight bits, while the New Englanders thought in terms of shillings and pence. The Saints from New England did not drink, gamble, race horses, or indulge in profanity. They were accustomed to settling differences without the use of fisticuffs, and did not think it cowardly to evade battle if possible.

But the most prolific source of trouble, both in 1831 and in later years was the question of slavery, which rose up like a specter between the older inhabitants of Jackson County and the newcomers from the east. Slaves constituted the principal property of the Missourians. By consulting bills of sale and itemized lists of the estates and bequests of the day, we can find out some very interesting things. In one such list, a crippled slave is listed at a value of $100; one in the prime of life at $464; a good horse at $25; and a sow and pigs at $1.50. Is it any wonder that the people of southern sympathies tried to protect such valuable property, and keep control of it? During the stormy years which followed, and continued until after the Civil War, abolitionists were driven out of more than one county in Missouri and their homes burned. More than one abolitionist newspaper was destroyed or its type thrown into the river. More than one abolitionist editor was tarred and feathered for his views. Humphrey Smith, founder of the town of Smithville, took more than one beating for his views, but for some reason refused to be run out. George S. Park, founder of Parkville, had his printing press thrown into the Missouri, and he himself banished from the state. In Illinois he made a modest fortune, and returned to establish Park College after the Civil War.

All these things added up together, spelled trouble for the new settlers in Missouri, who differed from their neighbors in so many irritating ways, and in addition espoused a strange new religion.

If God Were Editor

By Naomi Russell

NO NEWSPAPER ever carried a thirty-point headline which read "Soul Is Saved by Kind Word to Stranger," or "Friend's Prayer Averts Attempted Suicide," yet it might be well if such incidents were publicized in preference to much that is. It does happen: someone somewhere speaks a timely word and changes the course of a life; someone somewhere else feels the urge to pray and later finds his prayer has staid the hand that toyed with a bottle of cyanide. Whether it is the Almighty that intervenes at the opportune moment to put words in the mouth of one who is in a position to save, or the result of sheer human kindness, is a matter debatable.

Divine inspiration works best when mixed in equal portions with personal initiative. Pity the man who prays, "Lord, if there are souls in this city to be saved, please point them out to me," and then waits for further revelation before beginning his philanthropical campaign.

KINDNESS should be a part of daily routine. While few people can add a "P. S.—I saved another soul today," in their church diary each night, anyone can pen a "Wrote to the folks and sent Aunt Martha a get-well card." Little remembrances—a few sincere compliments—a much-needed "of course you can do it" may do more for the morale of a man who's given up hope and is ready to end it all, than a week's series of sermons on faith.

SUCH seemingly insignificant things can do the trick. The "plain" girl who would rather be dead than undated is complimented on her singing by the person who sits next to her in church. She smiles and silently asks herself, "Do you suppose I really have a voice?" and then make an appointment with a vocal instructor. Soon she becomes so absorbed in her new interest that she forgets her complex; the plainness becomes unaffected charm, and she is admired and popular—all because someone said, "You have a nice voice . . ."

People who have suffered long and believe themselves incurable, when shown the importance of living, often make miraculous recoveries. Invalids who lapse into a chronic state of melancholia from too much pity, when given a job to do, develop brilliant personalities that put the able-bodied to shame. Men with scarred features, cork legs, and warped thinking forget to be bitter in the presence of those who see them as an essential part of a potentially better future, instead of a sore thumb inflicted on society by an unforgivable past. The man who has messed up his life by drinking too much and believes he can't stop, whose friends are through with him, whose job and self-respect are gone, and whose only philosophy is "what's the use anyway? make it another straight rye," when shown a purpose in life more appealing than alcohol is quite apt to reform.

BLESSED are they who remember the aged and lonely. Pathetic—the withered hands that search an empty mailbox for some word from one their heart holds dear. Pathetic—the eyes that fill with tears when week upon week fails to bring a visit from the child or grandchild they have idolized since birth. A letter, a card, an inexpensive gift, an hour's conversation can brighten many a day and remain a cherished memory for the elderly.

Kindness is a natural virtue and one which is easily cultivated. Those who say the "right thing at the right time" do so because it is as much a part of their lives as the conventional hellos and goodbyes. They pay a compliment with ease and sincerity, because they mean it and believe it should be said. They write letters and send gifts and go visiting because they enjoy the results; they like seeing others happy, and they like the warm feeling of satisfaction they experience themselves by being kind.

If God were the city-editor, there would be headlines in boldface Bodoni for the people who are kind.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Ft. Collins, Colorado

Pastor, K. G. Broliar

A memorial service for President Frederick M. Smith was conducted on Sunday morning, March 24, under the direction of Pastor K. G. Broliar. Elder Freeman Bullard delivered the sermon, which included personal reminiscences of President Smith. Priest Clifford Cable read a biographical sketch, and Elder Broliar sang "Come, Sweet Comforter." Remembering Dr. Smith's contribution to the cause of Zion, the branch now looks forward to continued progress under the leadership of the newly appointed prophet, Israel A. Smith, and pledges wholehearted support to his leadership. President Israel Smith visited Fort Collins on June 24, 1945, when the new church home was dedicated, and gave the dedication address. This occasion marked a high point in branch history and will be long remembered.

Steady progress has been made during the past year. Attendance at all services has increased, and thirteen new members have been baptized. A class on the fundamental doctrine of the church was conducted by Pastor Broliar for several weeks prior to these baptisms. Dr. W. E. Gunderson and four of his children, Mary Elizabeth, Margaret Ann, Walter Junior, and David, were baptized January 20. On the same day Nona Joyce, Lily Lorraine, and Orvilla Olive, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Harbison of Loveland, Colorado, were also baptized. On March 17 five brothers, Hubert Wesley, Buell Dale, Kenneth Ray, Leslie Wayne, and Buddy Ross, sons of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Jones, united with the church. These were all confirmed under the hands of Elders K. G. Broliar and W. E. Connell.

Four babies were blessed during the past year. On April 22, Marilyn Susan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lloyd Jones, and Loren Eugene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Plumb were blessed. Other blessings were given to Cheryl Lynne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lee Davis, on November 4, and Harl Joseph, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Kitchings on March 17.

The Zion's League has taken on new life with the return of several members from the armed forces, and the addition of others who have moved in during the year. Under the leadership of Mary Gunderson, president, and Mrs. W. E. Gunderson, branch young people's supervisor, the League meets regularly each week for worship, study, work, and play. A group of Fort Collins young people visited the Denver League one Sunday last fall; after the morning services, a basket dinner was held in the city park. The Denver Leaguers returned the visit on March 31. Following the morning services, both groups drove to Claymore Lake for a basket dinner, boating, hiking, and a fellowship service led by Elder W. E. Connell, district young people's supervisor. The League recently covered the windows of the chapel with appropriately designed stencil paper.

A regional convention will be held at Ft. Collins on April 27 and 28 under the direction of the district presidency.

Hilo, Hawaii

Pastor, Miguel M. de la Cruz

Hilo branch observed its second Rally Day on September 16, 1945. Visitors came from Pahoia and Halaula missions, as well as from Waiakea-kai church school. After the 9:45 worship service, two young women from Pahoia, Masue Muraoka and Yoshimi Nii, were inducted into the kingdom by Elder Masayuki Nii, who is in charge of Pahoia mission. Following lunch served at noon, the annual business meeting convened with District President Howard Miller in the chair. Elder Miguel M. de la Cruz, who was chosen pastor, selected as his counselors Priest Charles Aki and Elder Masayuki Nii. Clara Camara was sustained as church school director, Evonne Leialoha as Zion's League leader, Etsuko Yamamoto as branch secretary, and Raymond Yasukawa as treasurer. Other officers elected were Bernice Kahanamoku Lee, music director; Ludie de la Cruz, woman's department president; Lillie Jennings, publicity agent; Hatsumi Ishikawa, librarian; and Asao Ishikawa, auditor. The present bishop's agent, Charles Aki, was sustained.

At Hilo's first Rally Day, May 6, 1945, eleven service boys were present. Since most of the boys were moved away after VJ-Day in August, none of those formerly stationed on the Island were in attendance at the last two rally days. However, Dr. Sidney Barrows of Lamoni, Iowa, arrived in time to enrich the musical program on the September special day with violin and vocal solos. Other servicemen visiting since September have been Jason Woodside, Howard Cook, and Wayne Holmes of Independence; Kenneth Walker of Michigan; and Ernest Dobbins of Massachusetts. All, when asked, have freely shared their talents and helped in the work.

Another service boy, Nephi Leighton of Springfield, Missouri, assisted a teacher of Halaula mission to care for some thirty children on a picnic.

The mission work, both at Halaula and at Pahoia, has been faithfully supervised by Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs and his wife Dorothy. Besides his work in Hilo, Elder Gibbs has held cottage meetings in both missions and given slide-illustrated lectures. High Priest Howard Miller has also visited the missions. Masao Fujio of Pahoia was baptized in August. She was the first young woman of that mission to respond to the gospel call since Elder Gibbs began his work in Hawaii. (Two other young women from Pahoia have already been mentioned as joining at the September Rally Day.) At Halaula mission, two Uneda girls as also Faith Nellie Cachola and her father have been baptized. Little Arthur Kong, Jr., was blessed during the confirmation service. Recently Halaula was made happy to welcome back two servicemen returning from a Japanese prison camp in Shanghai; they are Sing Won Kon, brother of Olive Kon, and Henry Kong, brother of Pastor Arthur Kong.

Edwin Kaaihui, now released from military service, is attending church in Hilo. Zion's League held a reception in his honor.

On Sunday December 23 a play, "The Empty Room," by Dorothy Clarke Wilson, was presented under the capable leadership of Leilani Yasukawa. In the cast were Clara Camara, Etsuko Yamamoto, Pearl de la Cruz, Arthur Gibbs, Asao Ishikawa, Tetsuo Yasukawa, Gilbert de la Cruz. Hilo Choir, under the direction of Bernice Lee, presented a beautiful rendition of Christmas music.

March 3, 1946, the date of Hilo's third Rally Day, proved as popular as previous ones. During the morning session Mrs. Christine Huddy, matron of King's Daughters' Home, and Margaret Wagner, daughter of Mrs. Carrie (Rhinehart) Wagner, were baptized. Maureen Chong and Patricia Michiko Hashimoto were blessed at the 11 o'clock service.

Hilo's building program includes the raising of $10,000 for a new church. Of the $1,000 expected to be raised in 1946, $600 is already available.

On April 1 the waterfront area of Hilo was devastated by a tidal wave which caused the loss of millions of dollars of property and the deaths of numerous people. None of the Saints lost their lives or had property greatly damaged. Following the April 7 Communion service, opportunity was given for prayer and testimony. Helen Puuohau, who lives nearer the water than any of the other Saints, bore testimony to the goodness of God, for she and those in her house were miraculously spared on the day of the disaster.

God has been mindful of the needs of his Saints in Hawaii, and all wish to rededicate their lives to forwarding the cause of Zion.

Recent visiting speakers have been Evangelist H. A. Higgins, and L. B. Moneymaker of the stake presidency. Members of the local priesthood have presented inspiring sermons also.

The old residence purchased for a church home is being remodeled. Present plans include the painting of the outside, and the installation in the kitchen of cabinets and a stove. The Leavenworth Saints are deeply appreciative of the co-operation extended them by the stake presidency and the bishopric.

Phyllis June Odom, eleven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Odom, who has been seriously ill in Cushing Hospital, is improving rapidly. Phyllis received administration consistently through the crisis of her illness.

There has been a noticeable increase in attendance at the various meetings in past months; several families have moved in and settled near the church. A higher grade of spiritual fellowship is prompted by the increased attendance. Several members have been ill during the winter months, but most of them are now able to come to church again.

On January 14 members of the stake women's council met at the home of Mrs. Wayne Eckard for luncheon and a business meeting. The Elmer Hess family has returned to Rock Island from Thomson, Illinois. Mrs. Myrtle Simms is back in Davenport after undergoing an operation at Iowa City. Her stay at the hospital was brightened by the kind attention of the Iowa City Saints.

An error was made in reporting the blessing of Mr. and Mrs. Howard's infant daughter in the previous news letter. The name should have been Cynthia Sue instead of Patricia Lee; Patricia is the daughter of Mrs. Steinecke, and was blessed March 24 by Elders F. C. Bevan and L. A. White.

The project proved successful, and the quarter ended with a party and prize for the winner. After the party the entire group was taken to the woods for an outing.

The women's class has just completed a study of "The Home Beautiful" with Margaret MacDonald as the teacher.

A banquet for the branch was held in January, and a St. Patrick's supper in March. Boxes of clothing were packed and sent to the Saints in Holland during the recent drive.

Several contributions have been made to the basement fund. A stove and other utilities have been purchased for the kitchen, which should be ready for use in the near future.

Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

* GRACELAND'S NEW PRESIDENT

Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., son of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, will be installed as the new president of Graceland College at a campus ceremony on the afternoon of May 31, during the commencement week activities, according to an announcement from church headquarters. His selection to fill this office was previously announced by the Board of Trustees of the College. This is the first time we have had this new picture of him to present to our readers.

Brother Gleazer's career and service to the church have been excellent, and it is believed that he will give Graceland a splendid administration, resulting in growth and recognition. Our best wishes go to him, to Graceland, and to all members of the faculty and personnel.

* BOOK BANK

At the Sanitarium, they are very happy about the success of the "Book Bank" idea, which is helping to provide necessary funds for the Student Nursing Library. When expensive medical reference books cost from five to twenty-five dollars, not everybody feels like giving one of them. But almost anybody can donate from one to five dollars; and many people donating small amounts can do much good. Last week a grateful patient bought and sent a book, giving her name but no address; the Sanitarium people, always grateful for help, would like to say thanks, but don't know where to write. This week, another friend gave fifty dollars to the book bank. There is nothing finer than appreciation; and this is a form of it that does good in many ways.

* THE MAIN THING

An able and faithful church officer had reason to write us a complaint about a certain troublesome mistake. His conclusion is worthy for all church members to consider, especially in times when they are unhappy with their fellow members. He says: "However, I have not as yet felt inclined to leave the church and go out and build another." Every minister probably has to decide at some time in his life whether he would do better to try to improve the church he is in, or go out and start a perfect one. There are problems and trials in both courses. We believe that more good is done by those who keep working with the organization.

* THOUGHTFUL

The Mg. Ed's office opens into the bookstore, and anybody can get in, as everybody frequently does. One day a mother, accompanied by two very small sons, was shopping.

"Hello," said the youngest, and I turned to my door and saw him, childish charm at its best and loveliest. I couldn't understand all his words, but I understood him, and we got along happily. A child likes a present, so I gave him a little book—one of the Graceland souvenir books for Conference, hoping that he will someday go there.

He was pleased with his gift, but it seemed incomplete to him, and at last I understood his lisp, "Something for David." Then his older brother, David, appeared. A pencil satisfied the need.

How sweet it seemed that a child so young had learned the lesson that he alone could not enjoy a gift. "Something for David" was required to make everything just right.

* SUMMER CRUISE

Uncle Ed is trying to get ready for a summer cruise. The war kept him at home for several summers, which fretted his gypsy heart. The family vehicle, a dry-land cruiser, is a mystery to all who behold it; it contains practically everything and has room for nothing. Under necessity, this ancient carrier is a portable office, kitchen, hotel and box car. A friend, seeing it packed for travel and its occupants in the front seat, asked, "How are you?" Aunt Molly's answer was brief: "Crowded." Because Uncle Ed can't go anywhere without taking some manuscripts and writing equipment along, and because all editors are referred to in the trade as "ink-stained wretches," he has named his vehicle the "S. S. Inkspot." If it doesn't look much like a steamship, watch the radiator some hot day, puffing and gurgling like a tramp freighter. The "S. S. Inkspot" is due for some trips this summer, if it can be held together and made to run. Certainly it will reach some of the branches on week-end trips; and perhaps a reunion or two. If you notice a strange item in the motor car row of your church, look sharp. It may be the "S. S. Inkspot" making a visit.

* SNAFU

If we are not incorrectly informed, this word, which has been appearing in the papers lately, originated at an emergency repair center of the air corps, with the battle zone not far away. If some reader has better information, we would like to receive it. But the origin does not affect the value of the story. A message came to this isolated spot asking, "Report on your situation." Back came the answer, with a mixture of humor, pathos, and frustration: "Situation Normal; All Fouled Up." And from the initial letters the word "snafu" was formed.

How it fits the civilian, as well as the military life. Most of us labor along in a normal state of confusion, family life, branch life, and business affairs—all muddle along somehow, miraculously producing some kind of results, and nobody knows how. We're all more or less "snafu."

God Never Gives Up

The Time Element

The time element enters into all our considerations. Our lives are short in comparison with the long reaches of history, the growth of institutions, and the vastness of eternity. We not only want something to happen: we want it to happen now, or very soon. So it is that many church members expect Zion next year or the year after, and they will be disappointed if somebody doesn't produce it for them. They expect erring individuals to reform, change their lives, and create new careers, immediately. Later would be good, but much less desirable.

Delays cause unhappiness in our too brief schedules. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," says the Scripture. "Time is of the essence of things," says a philosopher, adding that things have their existence both in space and in time. "There is a time for all things," says Ecclesiastes. There is a time when we are ready for love and home, and too long delay causes us to languish; children must come to people at a certain time, or they do not come at all. There are definite years, days, or hours when body, mind, and spirit are ready for prescribed experiences, and not at other times. If they are delayed beyond those times, it is the same as missing them. "Justice delayed is justice denied," says a legal proverb.

Learn to Wait

It is the shortness of our life that makes human beings so. We are impatient, in a rush, because our time is so brief upon the earth. It is hard for us to take the viewpoint of God, who has all the time there is, who does not change nor grow old, and needs never hurry.

This poverty of time breeds an impatience in people that makes them rash and not altogether reasonable. It makes them expect too much and too quickly, defeats their good purposes, makes them quit the planting and lose the harvest, and prevents them from enjoying now the privileges and the happiness that could and should be theirs. Some people sell out too cheaply for a little time, or make sacrifices because the long evolution of society does not operate more rapidly.

There are some things in which we must learn to wait, to share the eternal patience of God, to take his viewpoint toward changes, development, progress, and realization of ideals. This is especially true wherever we deal with people. They do not grow by seasons. Mind and spirit operate in a climate that is not related to summers and winters of the earth.

Remarkable Cases

Many remarkable examples come into the experience of almost every pastor and church worker of reform, conversions, and acceptances of the church, long after most of the people who had worked on these so-called "hopeless cases" had given up. In many of these cases there appears to have been some power that kept working when the people had quit. To describe any of them in detail would be to identify them, which would be undesirable. It is necessary to describe the examples, if at all, in general terms.

Young People

Young people in their student days are sometimes so thoughtless and irresponsible that they seem in daily danger of falling into sin and wrecking their lives. We see many examples of this day; they are like such examples a generation ago, and probably like those of generations before. Today we remember some were young twenty-five years ago. Most of the student body that we knew then were fine young people. They tended to their studies, behaved themselves, and met their responsibilities. The church could well be proud of them, and was. At the same time, there was a small clique of rebels who laughed at authority, broke the rules, stayed out after curfew, and did things of which the authorities sternly disapproved. They were given up almost as hopeless cases. Some of them did indeed fall into sin and disaster, as predicted. But most of them recovered from their folly, married and established homes, and today are supporting the church in many ways. It is amusing when they complain of the conduct of their children. They cannot imagine where the youngsters get their dispositions. These parents cannot remember that they, too, were "wild."

Although some people gave up the effort to save these young people, it is apparent that there was some Power that did not, but kept working for them until the end. God has a lot of care for people. He never gives up.

The Older Cases

Not all the problem cases are among the young. Not even the worst cases, nor the most difficult problems, are among them. Folly and intransigence are not the exclusive faults of youth. People hold out for years, resisting what they know to be good, refusing to yield, standing on their agency, resisting God as well as man. Of course they often pay a price for this, and make others share their suffering unwillingly. When a person is of a mind to be unreasonable, he does not consider what it costs others.

Being human, we tend to become discouraged, quit our efforts, and give up as hopeless and lost the person we are trying to save. We are told that "God will not always strive with man," but experience shows us that God continues the effort for years after we have quit. His patience seems endless, his love boundless. Twenty or thirty years mean nothing, if the individual is brought around in the end. We give up too easily. We must learn patience from God.

Concerning Zion

Our greatest hunger and longing are undoubtedly extended toward the ideal of the kingdom of God, and the hope of Zion. We see world conditions, and we want it now. We even fail to remember the blessings foreshadowing Zion that we are enjoying now, and are not thankful for them. Because we cannot have our desires fulfilled immediately, we are ready to quit and give up. In such times, when dark temptation fills heart and mind, we need to consider our great example. God never gives up. He does not quit. All his purposes will be fulfilled. Let us share his patience and endurance.

From the Presidency's Office

AMONG the many letters which continue to reach the Presidency from those who have felt a deep sense of personal loss in the passing of President Frederick M. Smith, is one from Elder Hermann Peisker, Acting President of the Australasian Mission, whose comments we feel will be of interest to the readers of the Herald:

Services of appreciation and in memory of President Smith have been held in many of our churches, and others have been arranged for April 7. In all these services the needs of the church, prayers for guidance in the choosing and setting apart of the successor, and God's blessing upon all pre-conference councils, and conference sessions are being made.

We feel that we are blessed in having Apostle Mesley at our service to deliver an address of appreciation in the Balmain church, and believe it not only brought comfort to many, but gave the assurance that the men God has called to lead and be "Prophets, Seers, and Revelators" to the church, are fulfilling their destiny.

We feel certain that the church has made great progress under the leadership of our late President, and that we are nearer our goals today than at any previous period. In the light of past experiences, we are assured that the foundations laid in his lifetime will remain and form the basis of rapid expansion in our "World Evangelization" and "Zion-Building program" during the hastening time.

Motions have been passed in branches, Sydney Men's Club, and other departments of the work, expressing heartfelt sympathy with the loved ones who have been bereaved. These will reach headquarters, together with personal letters in due course. I would like, however, on behalf of my family and myself, to convey to you and through you, to all relatives of our brother and leader, our deepest sympathy in their time of bereavement. May the Comforter give you all peace and the certainty of the sure reward to which our brother has gone after his years of consecrated devotion to the cause of Christ and the church.

Our great regret is that circumstances prevented us from becoming personally acquainted with the President during his lifetime, and that it was never possible for him to visit the Australasian Mission. We hope it will be possible for the incoming president to visit this distant mission before he has occupied long in office, and can assure him of a warm welcome. I feel it would be in the best interest of the work here. It would unite us to the general church with stronger ties than ever, if a member of the Presidency were able to visit this land. Many others of our leading men feel the same.

Children's Day--June 9

The Department of Religious Education calls attention to the fact that Children's Day this year will be observed on June 9. Here is an opportunity for the church at large to turn its attention, in every congregation and family of the church, to the importance of the spiritual life and membership of each child. The training of our children, so strongly urged in the Doctrine and Covenants and so important to the present and future welfare and strength of the church, should be given care and attention throughout the year. As a result of this work, Children's Day should see many of them ready for baptism and confirmation. The day can be made memorable and beautiful, an experience to be treasured through life, by the young who are affiliated with the church at this time. Let our church officers, teachers, and parents give attention to the necessary preparation and planning of programs for the event. The Department of Religious Education has promised program material to be

Alcoholic Personality

While all authorities are probably agreed that certain personality types incur a greater risk in the use of alcohol than others, no completely convincing effort has yet been made strictly to define the types. In fact, so confusing are the suggestions that grave doubt may arise whether there is any person who may not have some trait which might easily result in alcoholism.—Dr. Albion Roy King, The Psychology of Drunkenness.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital An Institution of Service

Address at the Graduation Exercises of School of Nursing at General Conference, April 8, 1946

THE INDEPENDENCE Sanitarium and Hospital was incorporated and the articles signed on the 26th of July, 1909.

The purpose in the founding of the Independence Sanitarium in 1907 is revealed in the first paragraph of the section just read. It was established as a "place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted" and for furnishing proper care to all unfortunate and needy invalids who might desire to avail themselves of its benefits.

In harmony with the admonition given, the buildings were neither too large nor too expensive, but provided, in the time in which they were built, a refuge for individual members of the church and for individuals of other religious affiliation. Up to the end of 1910 there had been 107 patients admitted, 57 of which were Latter Day Saints; the others were from ten other denominations and some without religious profession.

The growth of the institution is reflected in comparative figures for the year ending December 31, 1945, when a total of 4,633 patients were admitted, 780 of whom were Latter Day Saints and 3,853 of other denominations, including those expressing no religious affiliation. The latter figures indicate a ratio of approximately one Latter Day Saint to five nonmembers.

At the annual conference of April, 1909, a report made by the committee on building is most interesting.

There had been gathered and expended by the church altogether the sum, in buildings and grounds of $52,854.28. The offerings that were made directly for this purpose amounted to $34,323.38. The income brought in by the sale of certain timber that was cut on the land here and the sale of bricks, etc., material that was left over, amounted to $437.34, making a total of $34,760.72. This, to-

By Bishop G. L. DeLapp

It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant Joseph Smith has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay. The presiding bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 10.

gether with the church furnished directly, paid for the institution, so there is not one cent of indebtedness on the building nor upon the grounds. There has been donated the present year, in addition to this an offering for the purpose of furnishing this institution, the sum of $2,345.43.

Since that time the institution has made consistent progress in developing new facilities from year to year and in enlarging its physical plant, until today it functions in an outstanding way, not only to serve the church, but to serve the community and the entire area surrounding Independence and Eastern Jackson County.

The investment in the plant and equipment, originally amounting to $52,854.28, as recorded in the minutes, has now raised to an amount of over $800,000.00. $360,000.00 was contributed by the United States Government, approximately $130,000.00 by the community, and the balance from within the church—over $300,000.00, including the original plant. Thus the institution has grown in its physical structure to a size which makes it a most valuable asset to the church and to the community, not in the amount of money invested, but rather in the service that is now made possible to both church members and to citizens of the community.

THE SCHOOL OF NURSING

Another evidence of the growth of this institution is reflected in the records relating to the establishment of a School of Nursing for, from the very beginning, the institution was concerned not only in rendering service but in developing a trained personnel that could render increasingly more efficient service. It is to be expected that the institution, reflecting the same spirit motivating its parent body, the church, would concern itself in education and in providing facilities for such training, and it is in consideration of this school of nursing that we are assembled here tonight.

From 1912 to 1946, the School of Nursing had 278 graduates. Tonight we see this splendid class of thirty-one graduates, making a total of 309. Graduates from the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing are serving in a great number of capacities, in many different places. Ten graduates are serving our institution as supervisors, eight are serving as assistant supervisors, seven are serving as general duty nurses. In the war, we had 38 graduate nurses in the service, and there are 17 still in the military service of our country. Other graduates are serving in hospitals in other sections of this country and Hawaii; in public health work, in industrial work, in public school nursing, and in the state health department. The fields for service are almost unlimited.

In your General Conference program, attention is called to the need for additional personnel in the various departments of the hospital.

PERSONNEL NEEDS

All of the foregoing speak well for the record made in past years, but real progress necessitates a constant and searching view of the future. It has been stated that the purpose of this institution was that of "a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted." This has been accomplished only in part. The limitations still confronting us may be put in two classes: first, defining more clearly our policy of utilization of this institution to the accomplishment of the purposes for which it was established; secondly, the most pressing problem is that of drawing to the institution, both in respect to the medical staff and the administration and nursing service those individuals who are motivated with the desire to serve and to fulfill a stewardship responsibility in service to the institution and to the realization of the goals of our church.

THE MINISTRY OF SERVICE

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is the health center of the church. Enlargement of the medical staff is a requisite to the attainment of a broader service. The establishment of a clinic that will make possible a service to individuals needing and desiring medical care is highly essential.

As one views the possibilities of the missionary work of the future, it would seem highly advisable to think of missionary work not only in terms of the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but of giving expression of that gospel in practical service, for it is on the basis of practical ministry that one must build if he is to inherit the kingdom, for it was Christ who said,

For I was an hungred and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in, naked, and ye clothed me; sick, and ye visited me.

Christ gave particular attention in his ministry to the healing of the sick, those who were sick both in spirit and in body. Healing and ministry to the sick, therefore, is of extreme importance in giving expression to those principles which Christ taught.

With the growth of science and the development of skills and technical knowledge, ministry to the sick is given more efficiently and more broadly than at any time in our world's history. Agencies of service and ministry in the form of hospitals and clinics, manned by trained physicians and nursing personnel, have come to be a vital part of our social economy. It is, therefore, fitting that we have such an institution and that we utilize it as an agency to minister, to heal, and to develop a trained personnel for broader service.

The growth of such an institution should be parallel with the growth of the church. This seems obvious as we study the normal course of progress which we experience within the church.

A group of people are converted to the church; the next step is that of the organization of priesthood to give sustained ministry. As the group becomes strengthened and enlarged, there is need for a full-time pastor and a sustained pastoral ministry. These agencies, along with our institutions, serve in the development of individuals unto the more perfect state to which the ministry of the church pointed, as expressed in the words of Paul:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

We should anticipate that at some time in the future, in foreign as well as in domestic missionary work, a sustaining ministry may be augmented through the development of public health or nursing service aimed to assist individuals in all aspects of life.

Those individuals to whom the gospel will be sent and who will need not only spiritual and educational guidance, but will need a demonstration in a practical way of blessings that can be bestowed upon those who are sick and in distress, through the trained professions of nursing and medicine.

THE PATIENTS

There is also opportunity which exists immediately at hand. While it has not been our policy or practice to proselyte those who are in our institution as patients, it is nevertheless one of the greatest missionary opportunities that we have available to us in the church. For 3,853 patients, nonmembers, have received the benefit of hospital ministrations during the year 1945. It is recognized that this is an institution of the church. The service which is given there is reflective of the church and leaves impressions upon the individual, either good or bad, of the church, such impressions arising out of the type of ministry given by the nursing and medical personnel.

If this is an opportunity that has been to some extent overlooked insofar as missionary possibilities are concerned, it is one which nevertheless offers us a great field for study and the application of the Christian principles which motivate the church in all of its activities.

We meet now especially to honor these graduates, to commend them for the consistency of their work which has resulted in having acquired the necessary credits for graduation. They stand, however, not only as students who have attained their place in a great profession, but who have also acquired a knowledge of the practical art of ministering to the sick. This professional training will fall far short of that which the institution stands for unless there is exemplified in the life and the conduct of the individual the basic principles upon which the institution was founded and for which it has stood since that time; these are the principles of Christian fellowship and efficient service.

To discuss the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital without due consideration of its importance in the center place, which is the focal point of the gathering, is to overlook one of the great and fundamental principles upon which the Restoration Movement was founded; for the ultimate objective of the church is to bring about the establishment of Zion through the process of the gathering. When we think of it in this light, it is taken out of the realm of a local community service institution, and we can envision it as a center around which a health program and a health service can be established to make its contribution to the gathering process.

One of the finest illustrations recorded in the Scripture of practical ministry is that told in the tenth chapter of St. Luke, which we have come to refer to as the story of the Good Samaritan.

Jesus was instructing the apostles:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also and sent them two by two into every city and place where he himself would come.

and included in those instructions to the seventy:

and heal the sick that are therein, and say, The Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

And the seventy went out as commissioned and returned again with joy, saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject to us through thy name." And in further instruction, the Lord turned to his disciples and expounded the law and uttered the great commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Then follows the story of the Good Samaritan:

A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance, there came down a certain priest that way; and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side of the way. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked upon him, and passed by on the other side of the way; for they desired in their hearts that it might not be known that they had seen him. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him, he had compassion on him. And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

And Jesus raised the question, "Who now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him who fell among the thieves? And he said, He who showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go and do likewise."

Upon another occasion, as recorded in the ninth chapter of Matthew, there was one brought to him sick of palsy, lying on a bed; and Jesus, knowing their faith, said to the sick of the palsy, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee; go thy way and sin no more."

Following this Jesus mingled with the publicans and sat at the table to eat with Matthew, and the Pharisees raised the question of the disciples, "Why eateth your master with publicans and sinners?" and Jesus announced that "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

LETTERS

Of Babylon and Zion

I had been ill and was spending the day in bed, meditating, meanwhile, on the things of the kingdom. I lifted my eyes to the wall and there on it, seemingly, was a large sheet of paper. On the paper was pictured a beautiful building, which looked something like an old world cathedral with all manner of complexities of structure and adornment. The spirit of knowledge informed me that it represented the world, Babylon. As I admired it, I thought, "Zion will be even more wonderful. I wish I could see it."

Then I did see it. It was on another paper a little to the right, so that I could not see both buildings at the same time. Frankly I was disappointed in the Zion represented. It was only a tower similar to a lighthouse. It rested on a sure foundation and was built of roughly hewn white stones firmly cemented together—no adornment, no cunning workmanship. In my disappointment I thought, "But Babylon is much more desirable," and I turned my eyes to the first paper.

Then I was shown the weakness of Babylon. There was no stability in it. The stones were just lodged, not cemented; large, heavy stones often rested on weak, broken ones which were crumbling away under the pressure that was bearing down on them. Then, because I realized that Babylon must fall, I turned again to Zion. The tower seemed to have become more beautiful and polished. As I stood observing this change I heard the fall of Babylon; it was destroyed and all the stones were broken, but Zion stood firm and shining.

I have often thought that the minds of most of us have, in the past, clung to Babylon's ideas and ideals, regarding the hope and plans for Zion with unbelief, disappointment, and disdain. For over a century Zion has been considered vague and visionary, not worth the trouble of constructing. Now, however, with the atomic bomb revealing so clearly the coming fall of Babylon we are fearful. The "miry clay" of our social structure is so evident that in our fear and need, our hearts turn to the idea and ideals of Zion. We are being convinced, at last, that the law of the Lord really is perfect, that keeping the whole law of the kingdom is obligatory for good citizens. Such naturalized citizens, faithfully keeping all the laws of the King would bring about the kingdom. This condition, or organization, which would cause Zion to be established was commanded as far back as 1929. (See Doctrine and Covenants, sections 10: 3; 11: 3; 6: 3). The structure may seem roughly hewn at first, but, according to the law and plan of God, it will cause the development of the condition of which is said, "And he called his people Zion because they were of one heart and one mind and dwelt in righteousness."

Let us sever the cords of unbelief and hardness of heart, and through faith and obedience become the citizenship that will establish Zion.

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

IN SEPTEMBER, 1831, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon temporarily left Kirtland, where there was a constant succession of callers to interrupt, and moved to Hiram, Ohio, in order to find seclusion while they engaged in the very important work of revising the Scriptures. They were quartered in the home of John Johnson and his wife, who from the standpoint of the church, at least, were to become quite a famous family. Earlier in the year, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson had visited Joseph Smith at his home in Kirtland. Among the callers who were there at the same time was a Reverend A. S. Hayden, a minister for the Disciples of Christ, who has left us an account of what happened there in his History of the Western Reserve. Mrs. Johnson had long suffered with a stiff and rheumatic arm, which made it impossible for her to lift her hand to her head. Under the hands of Joseph Smith she was instantly and completely healed—only one of many such incidents which were effected not by Joseph Smith alone, but by many of the other elders as well. The Johnson family contributed two of its sons to the church as members of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and a daughter became the wife of another member of this quorum.

October, of 1831, found Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon at work on their revision of the Bible, interrupted by frequent conferences, councils, and short missionary journeys. At one of the fall conferences, it was decided that the church should immediately begin to publish a paper from Independence, Missouri, which was to be called the Evening and Morning Star. Such a periodical was needed to carry news of the church to the several scattered communities in New York, Michigan, Ohio, and Missouri; and to supply a medium for the circulating of authentic copies of the several revelations which had been given to Joseph Smith from time to time, as need arose or occasion demanded. Accordingly, W. W. Phelps was authorized to purchase a press and type at Cincinnati on his way back to Missouri. During the first two weeks of November, 1831, the work of revising the Bible was laid aside temporarily, while Joseph Smith and assistants hastily compiled and corrected the revelations. In later years they felt that their work should have been done more slowly and more accurately, but nevertheless the manuscript was entrusted to Oliver Cowdery and John Whitmer to carry to Missouri. When they left, about mid-November, the work of revising the Bible was resumed.

MEANWHILE, BACK in Missouri, Bishop Edward Partridge was busy at the task of buying land, on which to settle the people of the church who were desirous of "gathering" to Zion. As trustee for the church, he acquired various parcels of land, most of it by "original entry" from the government, amounting in all to some 2,000 acres. The abstracts of hundreds of pieces of property in the western and southern portions of Independence even today will show Edward Partridge as the first owner to receive title from the government. His most important transaction, however, was the purchase of a very high and sightly tract of land for $130—the tract designated some months before as the site for a temple. On the northeast corner he built his own log cabin, where meetings were often held in inclement weather.

In the summer of 1831, many of the Saints migrated from Kirtland and New York to Independence. They arrived late in the season, but they planted a few grain crops, and harvested tons of prairie hay. Last week we described the suffering of the very rigorous and early winter of 1831-32, when as many as ten families lived, on very meager rations, in a single-room cabin without glassed windows or finished doors.

On February 10, 1832, while in Kirtland, Joseph Smith received a vision which did much to settle for his followers the question of salvation, reward, and punishment after death. A complete explanation of this vision would take two or three sermons; briefly, the substance of it was this: that Christ lives, and that he is the only Begotten of the Father; that Christ came to save all men, even the sons of perdition, or those who, having once received the witness of the Holy Spirit, then rejected it; that those who are "saved" shall not be subject to the second death in the lake of fire, but rather shall receive their reward in a glory commensurate with their spiritual growth, and their works done in the body. Certain classes are to be rewarded with a celestial glory in which they have the presence of both God and Christ. Others are to receive only a terrestrial glory, in which they will enjoy the presence of Christ, but not of God. Still others will receive only a telestial glory, where they enjoy the ministry of the Holy Spirit, but "where God and Christ are, they cannot come, world without end." These three glories are often likened to the glories of the sun, the moon, and the stars, described by Paul in the fifteen chapter of I Corinthians.

On March 25, 1832, while both the Smith and the Rigdon families, were again at Hiram, Ohio, and the children of both families were down with a virulent form of measles, a mob led by the minister of another denomination broke into the house in the middle of the night, and carried away Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon to be tarred and feathered. In a trundle bed in the same room with Joseph and his wife were twin babies, not quite a year old. When their own twins had died at birth, Joseph and Emma adopted the twins of a family named Murdoch, who were born on the same day, and whose mother died at their birth. Both twins were very ill with measles, and the exposure of that night resulted in the death of one of them. Though bruised and lacerated, Joseph Smith was not seriously injured; he preached the next night. Rigdon was delirious for several days, as a result of being dragged along by his heels, with his head on the frozen ground.

On April 1, 1832, Joseph Smith and four companions set out with two objectives on another journey to Missouri. First, they must secure the ratification of the members in Missouri to the action of an eastern conference, authorizing the ordination of Joseph Smith to the presidency of the high priesthood. Secondly, they were to take with them a stock of paper for the new printing press in Independence. They bought the paper at Wheeling, West Virginia, and loaded it on a river packet. That night, before the start of the trip, the boat was damaged by fire, but managed to proceed to Louisville, where the passengers transferred their baggage and their paper stock to another boat, and completed the trip to St. Louis. There, since he felt that speed was imperative, Joseph Smith took a stagecoach for Independence, carrying with him the precious stock of paper. It was a matter of some pride to him that he had made the trip from Kirtland, Ohio, to Independence, in exactly twenty-four days!

The special conference convened in Missouri on April 26, ratified the action of their eastern brethren, and accepted Joseph Smith as president of the Melchisedec or high priesthood. Joseph journeyed twelve miles westward, to pay a visit to his old friends from the Colesville branch, who had settled in what is now southern Kansas City. On May 6, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Newel Whitney began the return trip to Kirtland. Near Greenville, Indiana, Bishop Whitney tried to jump from a stagecoach, caught his foot in the wheel, and was delayed four weeks with a broken leg; Joseph Smith stayed with him to nurse him back to health.

In June, 1832, the first issue of the paper, The Evening and Morning Star appeared in Independence—the first periodical to be issued by the church, and the first paper of any kind to be published in Jackson County.

On November 6, 1832, a son was born to Joseph and Emma Smith at Kirtland, Ohio, who was named Joseph after his father and grandfather; he was affectionately known as "Young Joseph" for most of his life, to distinguish him from others of the same name. It was he who was called to his father's place as head of the church many years later, in 1860.

It was in November of 1832, also, that two other men, who were to have a great influence on the fortunes and destinies of the church, paid their first visit to Kirtland. Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball—later to be called to positions in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles—had been converted with several others at Mendon, New York, by Eleazer Miller.

The following March (1833) Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams were called to be counselors to the presidency of the church, and ordained on March 18. One by one men who were to occupy in official positions in the church were being added to her list of converts, taking their places in the ecclesiastical structure which had been outlined at a time when there were only six members in the church.

On February 27, 1833, a unique and startling document was given to the church by Joseph Smith. This revelation is commonly known as "The Word of Wisdom." It condemns the use of alcoholic drinks, tobacco, and "hot drinks," prescribes a sparing use of meat in summer, and a wholesome use of grains and vegetables. The advice in this document was far ahead of its time, for in those days most respectable people drank heavily, used tobacco, and in making their tea and coffee boiled it until it achieved a poisonous strength. It was not considered improper at all for the minister to have a cuspidor alongside his pulpit for the accommodation of his chewing tobacco.

It had always been understood that Independence was to be the eventual gathering place of this people, but in the spring of 1833 a revelation was received, commanding that a temple be built in Kirtland, and a permanent supporting organization or "stake" to be established there. This made for a rapid development of Kirtland, which was simultaneous with the development of Independence.

In line with the beginnings of the whole movement as a result of revelation, the church taught that revelation was continuous—that God still speaks to prophets, and will continue to do so. The elders and missionaries bore fervent witness to the fact that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Savior of the world; and they added to the testimony of the Bible, the witness of the Book of Mormon for this belief. They believed in the near approach of the second advent of Christ. They believed that a part of their task was to prepare a people or a society worthy to greet him. They taught the "first principles" of the gospel, as listed in the sixth chapter of Hebrews—namely: faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of

Theme for the Month:

WHAT AM I DOING?

JUNE 2, 1946

Theme: My Choice.

Challenge: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."—Joshua 24: 15.

Scriptures: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them . . . Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8; 83: 21.

"Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord."—Colossians 3: 20.

"Nevertheless thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee."—Genesis 2: 21, Inspired Version.

Suggested Stories:

Christ's return to the temple. "Know ye not that I must be about my father's business."—Luke 2: 40-52.

The story of Joseph Smith, who, when a young boy, read in the Bible, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." He asked, and the choice he made, because of the answer given, has affected the lives of thousands of people hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. As a means to their ideal social state, or Zion, they taught individual stewardship over both temporal and spiritual things. As they believed in continued revelation for the body of the church, they believed in the spiritual gifts of the twelfth chapter of I Corinthians as the individual manifestations of the spirit to those whose hearts were cleansed and worthy. They believed in a literal restoration of priesthood authority—that men had to be called to this responsibility by revelation from God.

During all this period of great expansion and comparative prosperity, a storm of trouble was gathering on the horizon, which was shortly to break in its fury on the heads of these new religionists, and which was to continue at more or less frequent intervals for the next ten years until it culminated in the death of the prophet and leader, Joseph Smith.

Samuel the child, answering the call of God. (I Samuel 3.)

Theme Talk: (May be developed from some of these thoughts.)

Choosing makes it necessary for one to have a goal from which he must work.

The results of choices are certain, and he who fails to choose has in reality chosen.

Choosing is a test in self-management—the ability to manage one's spiritual life well in relation to those about one results in a perfect symphony or orchestration of life.

Pleasure is momentary—joy and happiness are lasting.

"Be not simply good, be good for something."—Thoreau.

YOUTH'S CREED

To every man there openeth

A high way, and a low

The high soul climbs the high way

The low soul climbs the low.

While in between, on the musty flats

The rest drift to and fro.

To every man there openeth

A high way and a low

And every man decideth

The way his soul shall go.

Theme: My Preparation.

I have chosen to follow the "upward way,"—now I must prepare myself to carry out this goal.

Call to Worship:

Lord speak to me, that I may speak

In living echoes of thy tone;

As thou hast sought, so let me seek

Thine erring children, lost and lone.

Oh, teach me Lord, that I may teach

The precious things thou dost impart;

And wing my words, that they may reach

The hidden depths of many a heart.

Oh, use me Lord, use even me,

Just as thou wilt and when and where;

Until thy blessed face I see,

Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

"Walk in the Light," 320.

Theme Talk: (May be developed from some of these thoughts.)

The statement has been made that "Education is not a destination, an end in itself, but rather a journey on which we are always enroute."

After making a wise choice as to how we shall best serve Christ, we must prepare through study and opportunity. (II Timothy 2: 15.)

"But to be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God."—II Nephi 6: 61.

Suggested Stories:

Dr. George W. Carver, although he knew that his race was one that was looked upon somewhat with derision, prepared himself so that when opportunity came, he was able to help his people and make a real contribution to society. The discovery of products that could be made from their crops, along with crop rotation, gave them a market for their products, and raised their standards of living. During all his preparation and work he was always humble, asking God for guidance and help.

Theme: MY DUTY.

I must now find how I can best serve with the ability I have, and am capable of developing.

Call to Worship:

Lord, we thy presence seek;

May ours this blessing be;

Give us a pure and lowly heart,

A temple meet for thee.

—F. Keble and E. Osler.

Scriptures:

"And the members shall manifest before the church . . . by godly walk and conversation, that they are worthy of it . . . walking in holiness before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18.

"And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and walk and not faint."—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3.

Suggested Stories:

Antonio Stradivarius, as a child, loved music more than anything on earth, but could not sing. Listening to his companions with longing, he also had a great desire to produce beautiful tones. He discovered that he could carve wood expertly, and through the making of some of the most perfect violins in existence, released the melody in his heart.

Prayer:

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.
Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.
Teach me thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong;
In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only thou canst give—
With thee, O Master, let me live.

Theme: MY RESPONSE.

(This service may be handled as one of dedication. A candlelight prayer service would be appropriate.)

Special Number: (Sung by quartet.)

(This song is sung to the tune of "Under His Wings.")

Here we have come at the Lord's invitation
Praying for pardon and seeking for power,
Meeting with him who has promised his children

Strength through his spirit for every hour.
Grant us thy grace! Grant us thy peace!
Thou who art able and willing,
Then shall we go, endowed and renewed,
Our saintly mission fulfilling.

Not by the word of some far distant scripture

Are we sustained for the day's common task,

But in the gospel restored at Palmyra
Thy guiding Spirit is for those who ask.
This is our hope! This is our strength!
That not in formal word only,
Power has come to the saints of our day:
This is our sure testimony.

Let us arise, in this promise confiding
Go forth and tell the good news to a friend, Offering a place in the work of redemption,

Building a Zion that never shall end.
This is our call! This is our hope!
This is our wondrous endeavor.

Let us go forth assured that our God
Amplify endows now and ever.

And pray our hearts may loyal be

But we are thine with heart and hand,
To serve thee evermore.

LIFE HAS LOVELINESS TO SELL

Life has loveliness to sell—
All beautiful and splendid things;
Blue waves whitened on a cliff,
Soaring fire that sways and sings,
And children's faces looking up
Holding wonder like a cup.

Life has loveliness to sell—
Music like a cure of gold,
Scent of pine trees in the rain,
Eyes that love you, arms that hold;
And for your spirit's still delight
Holy thoughts that star the night.

Peter and Judas made the same mistake—that of betraying Christ, one for material gain, the other by spoken word, but the action following their erring was what counted. Response:

He who is clear of sight goes forth
And does a kindly deed,
He the thrill of true joy knows—
His example we should heed.
He boasts not of his noble act,
He asks not for reward;
But in his own heart, all intact,
His happiness is stored.

—Carves.

Benediction:

THE LARGER PRAYER

At first I prayed for Light
Could I but see the way,
How gently, swiftly would I walk,
To everlasting day.

And next I prayed for Strength;
That I might tread the road
With firm, unflinching feet, and win
The heaven's serene abode.

And then I prayed for Faith;
Could I but trust my God,
I'd live enfolded in his peace,
Though foes were all abroad.

But now I pray for Love;
Deep love to God and man,
A living love that will not fail,
However dark his plan.

And Light and Strength and Faith
Are opening everywhere;
God waited for me till
I prayed the larger prayer.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Chicago, Illinois

First Chicago Congregation

Pastor, Lyman Jones

In observance of the Lenten season, the theme for March was "Preparation for the Garden." Elder D. M. Wiesen gave the pastoral address, and Elder A. O. Skinner the sacramental message at the March 3 Communion service. An anthem, "'Tis Midnight and on Olive's Brow," was sung by the choir.

The Leaguers were hosts to the congregation in the evening. A pancake supper was served, followed by a brief period of entertainment. Despite the fact a new griddle, purchased especially for the event, caused suspense prior to the supper, everything worked out nicely and the evening was greatly enjoyed. Al Wilcox acted as master of ceremonies.

The district prayer service held at First Church on March 10 was well attended; "Launch Out Into the Deep," was the theme.

The Ssenippah Guild sponsored a party at Kilbourn Park Field House on Tuesday evening, March 19. A song fest, games, a novel skit by Hans Behnke and Dave Wiesen, Jr., and a solo by Mrs. Ruth Wiggins composed the program.

Prayer services were held at the church and at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Chandler during March. The study class was held at the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Behnke and Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Gunderson.

Mrs. Maxine Schultz was hostess to the Ssenippah Guild. The North Side Circle met at the homes of Mrs. Betty Behnke and Mrs. Harry Striblen. The Friendship Guild met at the homes of Mrs. Fern Barrows and Mrs. Sally Anderson.

Ralph E. Hastings was recently discharged from the Navy after serving eighteen months overseas. His brother, Larry, is attending Graceland. The Saints were also happy to welcome home veteran Erich Rathman.

On March 30 and 31, beginning at 6:30 p. m. Saturday, the Leaguers of Chicago district met at First Church for the Chicago young people's apologue of General Conference. On Saturday evening, three-minute biographies of Dr. Floyd McDowell and members of the First Presidency, Bishopric, and Quorum of Twelve were given. Elder Joseph Baldwin, Ray Zinser, and Paul Frisbie presented half-hour sessions on the setting and mechanism of a conference. Bob Pawley had a Herald display; Ray Zinser sponsored a Graceland booth.

On Sunday morning the apologue began at 8:30 with group singing led by Tom Beil. A fellowship meeting followed, after which the conference business meeting was held. Three were selected to represent the district League, and report actual General Conference meetings. A committee was appointed to investigate a beneficial district project for the Leaguers. Joseph Baldwin preached the 11 o'clock sermon. League leaders and officers were called forward to renew their charges. These services were inspiring and informative, and all present enjoyed them.

Speakers for the month of March were Elders D. M. Wiesen, A. O. Skinner, Roy W. Smith, and Lyman Jones. Soloists were Paul Deaver, Edna Stone, Donald Mee, and Sally Anderson.

Fisher, Arkansas

Pastor, A. E. Ziegenborn

The Saints of Fisher are thankful for the success they feel they have achieved since the beginning of the new year. Although attendance has been small during the winter months, spring brings an increase at both the church school and preaching services.

Two series of sermons were held in January and February. The first was held by Ammon C. Calhoun, director of home missionary work in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas. Warren Chelline took over in Brother Calhoun's place when he became ill during the series. Dora Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Jackson was baptized by Elder Chelline on Sunday, February 3.

A district conference was held at Fisher on February 16 and 17. Apostle M. A. McConley was the speaker; on Sunday evening he gave an illustrated lecture of his work in the Hawaiian Islands. A basket dinner for the group was served Sunday noon. T. B. Sharp held a series of meetings the following week.

Cynthia Sue, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Huntsman of Stuttgart, Arkansas, was blessed Sunday, February 24, by A. E. Ziegenhorn and Ralph Ziegenhorn.

Whitt Wilson, James Doty, and Gene

Lilley are back after receiving discharges from military service.

Two carloads of Saints from Fisher attended the District Conference held at Bold Knob last fall.

Roy Jackson is the new teacher for the intermediate class, taking the place of Mrs. George Gorden, who has been assigned to another class. Mrs. Dan Foster has been selected teacher for the primary division.

Mt. Vernon, Ohio

Pastor, C. H. Wolf

During the past two years the sixteen members of Mt. Vernon mission have been faithfully served by C. E. Armstrong and C. H. Wolf. These men have been assisted by the following ministers from Columbus and Dayton: Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, District President Floyd T. Rockwell, R. M. Gray, W. P. Vickroy, H. J. Hoffman, E. J. C. Swanson, and R. J. Miller.

Priest C. H. Wolf is now acting as pastor of the group; he receives the same loyalty and enthusiastic support Elder Armstrong had before ill health forced him to give up the pastorate.

Meetings are held at the Armstrong home. Sunday services consist of church school and preaching in the morning, and a sermon in the afternoon. A prayer service is held every other Wednesday evening.

Since July 1, 1944, there have been four baptisms: Beverly Armstrong, James Wolf, Ellen and Elaine Chambers (twin sisters).

Through rummage and food sales sponsored by the women of the group, and free-will offerings, approximately $800 have been raised for the building of a chapel.

Pastor Wolf and his family drive from a farm near Walhonding—a distance of twenty-three miles—to attend services; Mr. and Mrs. Dean of Mansfield drive nearly the same distance.

The work in Mt. Vernon began in the fall of 1921 when Brother Stowell called Elder Charles Shaffenberg (now deceased) of Columbus to administer to Mrs. Delee McCartor's son. When he arrived the child was dead, but in its passing a new work was begun. Brother Shaffenberg stayed to preach the funeral, and later returned with Elder Gershom Myers of Columbus to hold services in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Dean. At the close of the meetings, eleven new members were added to the group through baptism.

On January 2, 1923, Elder C. E. Armstrong was sent from Columbus to take charge. The work progressed slowly, some members moving away and others losing interest. In October, 1929, the Armstrongs moved to New York and the mission, left without a pastor, was discontinued. Elder and Mrs. Armstrong returned in 1932, and services were again held in the home of some friends near Mt. Vernon.

In 1934 Clyde Wolf and family, formerly of Akron, called on the pastor and had their baby blessed. On that occasion arrangements were made to go to the Wolf's home in Brinkhaven for Communion service and church school. Following this meeting the work was organized and all members and friends were notified that services would be held weekly at the Armstrong home in Mt. Vernon. For nearly two and a half years a hall was rented, but was given up because of the burden of rent it imposed on the few families.

The present outlook for the little mission is encouraging, and the Saints are looking forward to having their own church home soon.

Australia

General church moneys received during 1945 reveal that the highest amount paid in relation to branch enrollment was approximately six pounds (twenty-four dollars), and the lowest about one pound. Unattached members paid an average of seven shillings. The general average for the whole mission was one pound, twelve shillings. The entire amount received, which includes oblation, totaled 1,500 pounds, a sum of 730 less than was taken in last year, when several large individual contributions were received. Allowances and headquarter's expenses were 4,644 pounds; 432 pounds were placed in the reserve fund. Figures show an increase in the number of tithe payers, and in the number of members filing inventories.

In recent weeks the church in Australia has lost several well-known workers through death. Elder Ernest Wright, pastor of Tuncurry branch, northern New South Wales, died January 23 after a long illness. He was the dean of Australian pastors, serving thirty-four years in the ministry. Another recent death was that of Evalina Griffiths. She was one of the few remaining ties with the early church, being born in 1868 and joining the church in 1877. The passing of Will Henricks marks the loss of a devoted Saint and talented musician. Brother Henricks was organist of the Balmain congregation.

Some interesting statistics from the recent mission survey have been made available. At present Australia has ten missionaries (one of them locally sustained), 271 active, and seventy-eight inactive members of the priesthood. The active group includes one apostle, eighteen high priests, three seventies, ninety-eight elders, seventy-four priests, thirty-two teachers, and forty-five deacons. There are twenty-seven branches fifteen of which are fully organized, and eight groups. Five pastors in Australia have been in office twenty-one or more years; they are Elders G. Eden of Gippsland, Victoria, twenty-nine years; C. H. Ivers of John's River, twenty-five years; A. F. Robinson of Wallsend, twenty-two years; H. Jacka of Eureka, and W. Kippe of Hastings, twenty-one years. Elder Jack Grayden has served as pastor of the Phillip Island congregation for twenty years.

Former district presidents who have given long periods of service are High Priests G. H. Parker, twenty years; A. J. Corbett, thirteen years; and Elder S. L. Harvey, eleven years.

Elder Walter J. Haworth holds the mission record for priesthood service. Beginning with his ordination as deacon in 1888, he has served fifty-seven years. He also holds the record for the longest general church appointment in the mission.

Weyburn, Saskatchewan

Special services were held in the church on March 28 and 29 with Elder J. Menzies as speaker.

Mrs. E. Jensen, Mrs. F. Ireland, and Elder Menzies attended General Conference.

The junior church school presented an Easter program on Sunday morning, April 21. Elder J. Menzies delivered the evening sermon, after which the Zion's League gave an Easter pageant, "His Holy Hills." These services were well attended and enjoyed by all.

The Daughters of Zion are holding a May Day tea at the home of Mrs. J. R. Dickson on the afternoon of May 1.

Mr. and Mrs. J. K. McPherson and family have returned from Vancouver, British Columbia, where they visited for two weeks.

Alvin Blakely has received his discharge from the Navy, returning home from Winnipeg.

—Belva McMann, reporter.

Galesburg, Illinois

Pastor, Ambrose King

The Galesburg church has been re-roofed and painted since last spring. A sign has also been added to the outside. The pews were remodeled by Pastor King and his crew of helpers, and the inside has been painted a soft shade of peach. Venetian blinds were provided for all the windows by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mitton of Monmouth, and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hendricks.

District President Leonard Steigal of Rhode Island was the speaker on Easter Sunday; his sermon was on the death and resurrection of Christ. Beautiful spring flowers, donated by various members, graced the table and rostrum. Mrs. Harry Mitton sang a solo.

The women's department, under the leadership of Eunice Snow, meets once a month to study Famous Women of the Bible. Rummage sales have been sponsored by the department to raise money to beautify the church.

The young people are establishing a fund to complete the basement so that it may be used for social and recreational activities. Clifton Snow is leader; Earl King is secretary-treasurer.

—Mildred Garrard, reporter.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Pastor, Noman Morrison

The recent British Columbia district convention was held in Vancouver with Apostle D. T. Williams in charge. Assisting Apostle Williams were district officers Sam Clark and Monte Lasater. Alma Johnson, president of Seattle district, was also in attendance. These men were the guest speakers at a banquet held for members of the priesthood and their wives. The young people served as caterers for the banquet.

The infant sons of Mr. and Mrs. Ouston, and Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Foss, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Spargo were blessed at a recent service. Officiating at the blessings were Elders Edwin Spargo, C. C. Taylor, and Noman Morrison. Johnny Taylor and Laurette Shrank were baptized by Chester Taylor, and confirmed by Edwin Spargo and Noman Morrison.

Elder G. E. Metter of New Westminster was a recent guest speaker. Present for the ordination of Chester Gregory to the office of priest was Brother S. Clark.

Vancouver branch is growing with Sunday morning attendance averaging 100. The evening services are also well attended.

Two splendid plays were presented by the Zion's Leagues of New Westminster and Vancouver.

 NOTHING FREE

There is nothing free of cost. If you don't pay for what you get, somebody else does. Neither the church nor the government, nor any other agency, can provide anything free of cost. Always there is somebody or some organization that meets the bill. And when they quit, the service ceases.

In government, it works about this way: You want something that costs, perhaps, about a dollar. So when the government decides to get it for you, it takes about two dollars out of your income. You get a dollar back. The other dollar goes for administration; that is, for the man who takes your application for the dollar and gives it to you, and for the man who bosses him, and for the other man who checks up on both of them, and for the red-tape people right up to Washington, D. C., who plan the whole business. You could have borrowed it from the bank, interest and all, a lot cheaper. And the bank could make a little profit on the transaction, while your government, charging more and working less efficiently, loses money—your money, incidentally. So it pays to be careful what you ask the government to do for you.

Some people think the church should provide many things and services to the members free of charge. But there is no freedom from charge. Somebody has to pay. It must come out of tithing and contributions—generally, your contributions.

Some people are entitled to help free of cost: the aged, the crippled, the helpless, the incurable. Other people who are well and strong, and able to pay, should help them, or pay for helping them. This is an obligation of Christian mercy.

Then there are the nonprofit activities that must be sustained: missionary work, church administration, and many special services. These cost money, but cannot make any. The contributions of those who are well and able must maintain them if they are to give their service, which we consider important.

A few are entitled to something free. The rest of us should pay our own expenses.

There is a tendency for people to alter their regard for a thing according to what it costs them. Some good things have been made available to our people without cost, because others paid the expenses. Unfortunately, the recipients did not appreciate what was done for them, and lightly regarded the donation.

You appreciate more what you pay for; you value something that has cost a sacrifice. Getting things free may be very bad for you; it undermines your sense of values; it may even deteriorate your character. In this case you pay a high price for something that is "free." So it costs you anyway.

NEIGHBORS

Good neighbors seek the wide back door
When they are coming here to call.
And if the step's not swept quite clean
They never seem to mind at all.

They bring a recipe or two,
A fresh baked fruit or berry pie,
Or from the garden 'cross the way,
Come salad green to tempt the eye.

Or maybe they just bring a word,
A friendly "join us Wednesday night"—
To know my neighbors think of me
Makes my whole day exactly right.

—Louise Wrigley.

* INDEPENDENCE HOMES have a number of worthy retired gentlemen, early risers all their lives, who declare that they "can't sleep a wink after four o'clock in the morning." The way they work it, nobody else does either.

Which reminds us how Aunt Bitsy solved that problem many years ago. Grampa took long morning and afternoon naps, and went to bed early. Then he spent a good part of each night wakeful and prowling around. Aunt Bitsy got tired of that and took drastic action. When she saw Grampa sit down, she gave him some churning to do. When he tried to take a nap, she sent him out to the woodpile. All day she trailed him, so that he didn't get any rest. When night came, he fell into that dreamless sleep which is usually ascribed to the young and innocent. And there was no "four o'clock" business the next morning either.

It is well to remember, "Take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind," which doesn't mean all day; and it is also well to remember, "Cease to sleep longer than is needful" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9; 85: 38).

There is no virtue in arising early unless you do something good with the time. It is as bad to be idle at five in the morning as it is at twelve in the evening.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, celebrated a fiftieth anniversary recently. It was on May 24, 1896, that he entered the ministry of the church by his ordination as a priest. He became an elder in 1902, and also a seventy. He was ordained an apostle, April 19, 1913, and became President of the Quorum of Twelve, April 15, 1934.

Two eminent contributions stand out among the achievements of Brother Hanson. He has traveled widely for the church, representing it in most of the more important parts of the world, giving what ranks as high diplomatic service, and in a true sense has been an "ambassador of Christ." His other important work has been in the field of scholarship, in which he has given years of study to archaeology and antiquity, especially to American origins, and is without doubt the best-informed man in this field among our church people today.

Brother Hanson is held in high esteem, love, and respect by many people, both within and outside of the church. At Crescent, Iowa, there was recently a celebration in honor of his long service, of which we do not have details now. We congratulate Brother Hanson, and gladly join with those who have honored him.

The Organized Class

"I know a lot of young people drifting about, not doing anything in the church," said a young woman, "fellows back from the services, girls with nothing to do. But there isn't a class in the church school I can invite them to attend. What can we do about it?"

Organize a class for them, we told her. See your pastor and get permission. Call up some of these young people and try your idea on them. If enough are interested, get a teacher, a place to meet, and organize your group. . . . They did all this and more, and today, a few weeks after the first inquiry, they have a fine group of young people, all enthusiastic and happy with friendly association, some common projects, and a good program of activity.

More than twenty-five years ago, a class was organized here for the young people. They worked out an interesting program, and their activity has gone along the lines of the original plans ever since, with slight modifications. Some members moved away, but new ones came. Some have died, but the class has grown to the maximum size it can accommodate.

Significantly, it is not now a young people's class. As members grew older, the character and interests of the class changed. Some who were in the courtship stage then are grandparents now. Some officers thought that when members reached a certain age they could be pushed out and replaced by younger folk, keeping the class one for distinctly young people. But it hasn't worked that way. The old ones don't like to go out, leaving their friends; new ones don't like to come into an old setting. They like to organize something for themselves.

Perhaps this is the best idea, after all. Let the class grow old together. Let friendships ripen, attachments deepen, and love for the church and its people mature. And when a new generation of youngsters appears, help it to get started, organizing its social life within the broad protection and sponsorship of the church. Where congregations are large, individuals love the church, but find it impossible to be intimate with all members. The small class or study group then calls persons of like interests together, and they work and serve in their own special way.

Perhaps there are young people back from the war in your congregation who have no class or group. You may be in danger of losing them. A little leadership and friendly counsel, giving them the right start, may do much good. There is a chance to do something for them if you begin now.

Faithfulness Makes the Headlines

A beautiful story of faithfulness in marriage appeared in our paper on a very recent morning. Major Hans G. Hornbostel, U. S. Army, and his wife were in Manila, where he was an executive in publication work. The Japanese came, and they went to the dreadful Santo Tomás prison together. On starvation diet, forced to live in filthy surroundings, he lost more than eighty pounds, she more than sixty. At that time a serious skin affliction attacked her. They were liberated by American troops. Back in this country, it is found that her disease is leprosy, and that she will have to go to the leprosarium in Louisiana. The law requires that the couple be separated, regardless of what either may wish, unless he also should become infected. Major Hornbostel, aged 65, is asking for permission to go with his wife. "I have had my chance in life," he says, "and I want only one thing now—to be with her." Government officials will do all they can to have his wish granted.

Knowing the consequences, the suffering that must be endured before the period of numbness sets in, this man is making a brave choice. Here is an inspiring story of love and faithfulness. Love is greater than death. Undoubtedly this couple shares a fine courageous happiness in facing danger together.

Divorces are cheap. In the papers they go into the smallest type. Unless connected with some terrible or sordid scandal, they receive little attention, and then only small stories. But faithfulness is still so wonderful that it makes the headlines. And publicity is not the only result, for faithfulness has great rewards of its own, known best to those who practice it.

I would have every minister of the gospel address his audience with the zeal of a friend, with the generous energy of a father, and with the exuberant affection of a mother. — Fenelon.

From the Presidency's Office

ELDER V. D. RUCH, our able pastor at Council Bluffs, Iowa, concludes his report for April, 1946, with a paragraph which will be of interest to the Saints, and which we quote:

The branch is moving along nicely. Easter Sunday morning we had to turn people away by the scores. Just couldn't find standing room in the building. Had over 70 men at our Men's Club meeting on the first Tuesday. A young people's prayer meeting on Easter Sunday morning attracted about 50 young people from Omaha and Council Bluffs.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH was deeply interested in the work of the Kansas City Tuberculosis Society, of which he was second vice-president. At the meeting of the Society held April 25, 1946, the following memorial resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, Dr. Frederick M. Smith, who so loyally served for eighteen years as a member of the Board of Directors of the Kansas City Tuberculosis Society, was on March 20, 1946, called to his eternal home;

And Whereas, Dr. Smith served not only the local Society, but also for six years was a member of the State Board of the Missouri Tuberculosis Association;

Therefore, Be It Resolved, that the Board express to the family, and to the many friends of Dr. Smith the deep sympathy of the members of the Board in the great loss which they have suffered in the passing of Dr. Smith. His death is a great loss not only to his relatives, but also to his church and to the entire community;

Be It Further Resolved that a copy of these Resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Society, that a copy be sent to the family of Dr. Smith, and that a copy also be sent to the officers of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

If a man empties his purse into his head, no one can take it from him.— Franklin.

I have not so great a struggle with my vices, great and numerous as they are, as I have with my impatience.— Calvin.

Mary Harragarra, Otoe Indian and Church Member

Chaplain for Oklahoma War Mothers

From the Ponca City News (Oklahoma), Brother Hubert Case brings us a clipping that appeared in the issue of February 17, concerning Mrs. Mary Harragarra of Red Rock, who was the first president of the Otoe Indian War Mothers chapter, and is a full-blooded member of the Otoe Tribe. For two years she has been chaplain of the Oklahoma War Mothers. Brother Case informs us she is a member of the church, well-known to our people and to citizens of her part of the country.

At the national convention of War Mothers in Kansas City the week before last Christmas, "Mother Mary" as she is known, offered a prayer that has been widely reprinted, and appears in the article from the Ponca City News:

Our Heavenly Father, we come before thee at this hour, asking thy blessing upon these that are here. Heavenly Father, we come asking forgiveness for our sins and shortcomings.

O God, we thank thee for the group of these wonderful mothers who gave their all in our nation's behalf, that we may live in peace.

Our Father, we thank thee, and give thee all the praise for world freedom which we now enjoy.

I thank thee, O God, for the privilege to come here, to speak and pray the great and precious promises of thy Word, in thy holy name. May the Spirit bring them to our heart and minds. . . .

Give us a new understanding of our responsibility as members of the World War's family, when we pray, O God, who hast made man in thine own likeness and who dost love all whom thou hast made. Suffer us not, because of the difference in race, color, or condition to separate ourselves, from other and thereby from thee. But teach us the unity of thy family and universality of thy love.

Our most gracious Heavenly Father, bless especially our gold star mothers. Bless them, be close to them, give comfort, happiness, and health, strength to overcome their sorrow. Their loving sons will never, never come home. Their sons are like the beautiful Morning Star that shines above everything. They are in God's care now, for their memory is here with us, for we know they are a part of our flag that waves o'er this free land, the patriotic songs we sing are part of them, the deeds they have done will never be forgotten day after day in time to come.

O Lord, our silver star mothers, bless them, give them what they need to sustain them.

Bless our boys that are far and near, bring them home safe. Care for them while coming home on the deep seas.

Lord, at this Christmas season let us realize the importance of the occasion of the birth of the Savior of the world. May the Spirit of Christ move in the hearts of us all, that thy kingdom may come and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Peace to all the world. Amen.

The Gospel Rests on Facts

(A transcript of lectures delivered before a group of church appointees in Chicago, during December, 1945.)

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

EVERY great philosophy has its rise in objective happenings authentically accredited by competent witnesses. The reality of facts thus experienced gives rise to thought which in turn interprets the experience. Further, as meaning is conveyed to those so interpreting, they, too, experience the reality which gives rise to the philosophy.

The religion of Jesus Christ is no exception. It is grounded in certain facts which were experienced by men and women who testified of their experience and left their record for the sole purpose of expressing what the facts meant to them.

Christianity rests upon what God has done for man. I shall propose in this first lecture to select four basic facts or series of facts which should provide the pillar and ground of our ministerial witness, thus:

1. The fact of a unique literature in Hebraic history:
2. The fact of the life and ministry of Jesus Christ:
3. The fact of apostasy from the society founded by Jesus Christ: and
4. The fact of restoration, both as it sought to correct the abuses fostered by apostasy and as it sought to extend logically and to develop the life and ministry of Christ.

I.—THE FACT OF A UNIQUE LITERATURE IN HEBRAIC HISTORY

Whether the Old Testament is in the main creditable history, and whether it can all be trusted from the historian's point of view as reliable, may be open to question. It would appear that what we have in the Pentateuch is a collection of myths and legends concerning the creation as they were corrected and refined by the spirit of inspiration. This statement should not cause us concern, for some concepts are best expressed in imagery, symbolism, and figurative language. Primitive races embodied their culture in myths which were handed down orally from father to son, and it would not do violence to our understanding of divine revelation if we affirmed that there was present in the consciousness of Moses certain of these myths and legends. They may have been derived from Egypt. But whether they were or not, they were refined and corrected through his contact with Divinity.

Whether all the Psalms were written by David, whether there were one or two Isaiahs, whether the Book Daniel was written before or after the captivity, does not make any difference to the fact that this literature existed many years before the coming of Christ in substantially the same form as we have it now. Further, this literature contains a certain type of utterance known to us as prophetic. The relation of man to the world and to his fellows is progressively revealed and refined under the inspiration of a long succession of outstanding spokesmen. Again, this literature contains certain propositions about God, about man, and about the ideal coming kingdom which was to be enshrined in Israel as a nation. As one examines these propositions, he must credit to the Jews an exceedingly simple yet lofty conception of one righteous God, the God of the whole earth. The idea of Jehovah may have been mixed earlier with superstition borrowed from Egypt, and the earlier prophets, and the sons of the prophets, may have been guilty of regarding Jehovah as one of a number of rival gods. But under the guidance of the great prophets, these misconceptions were dissipated, and the conception is clearly brought forth that Jehovah is God of all existence, that there are no local restrictions to his jurisdiction, there is no rival God or co-existent matter which might serve as the root of evil. He is the absolute creator of all visible and invisible entities, of things material and things spiritual. There is no dualism in their conception, no antagonism between spirits and bodies.

The prophets also say that Jehovah is righteous and demands righteousness from his worshipers. No costly sacrifice, no magical apparatus will cause him to deviate from his righteous judgment on sin. But while he slays the soul that sins, he has no pleasure in the death of the sinner. He loves too much to be vindictive.

The supremacy and righteousness of Jehovah have their inevitable corollary in the fact that his ideal for mankind will eventually triumph. This ideal is a kingdom of righteousness enshrined in Israel, the nation. It is erroneous to say that the idea of the kingdom of God, which seems first to appear in the Scriptures, means merely the sovereignty of God. It means his sovereignty as it is finally to be realized in righteous Israel, the nation; and through Israel in all the world. This rule of God in Israel is to center in the New Jerusalem.

This brief summary of the contents of the prophetic faith is but a sketch. But it cannot be denied that this conception was a fact and that it centered in the minds of those who were responsible for giving us the literature. It is further to be observed that these principles and this prophecy of the kingdom seem to point to a divine superintendence in and over history. It reveals purpose slowly taught to men and even more slowly apprehended and incorporated into their lives.

II—THE FACT OF JESUS CHRIST

The historicity and trustworthiness of the New Testament. We may freely take for granted the fact that Jesus Christ actually lived as a person on earth in form like as we are and in nature comparable to our own. But there have been some who thought he was a ghost and that his body was not subject to the laws of gravity. This view grew out of the idea that matter was essentially impure, a view which was refuted by the prophets of Israel. Those who thus believed denied, of course, the crucifixion, resurrection, and ascent into heaven. Already in the days of the first apostles the conviction of the absolute holiness of Christ had given rise to speculation along this line, and so John feels constrained to write, "Every spirit." John's conviction of the humanity of Jesus is confirmed by the vast majority of competent historians even though they may not agree with John's interpretation of Christ's person. The historian's confirmation may be fairly summed up in the language of H. G. Wells. "All four Gospels agree in giving us a picture of a very definite personality. One is obliged to say 'Here was a man. This could not have been invented.'"

One may, I think, accept this statement and say Jesus was a historical figure. But in order to gain a hold on his life and to understand his teaching, we must of necessity inquire as to whether those documents which tell of him are authentic. Can they be trusted? Are they on a par with any other biographical effort? Can the testators be creditable and competent witnesses? We need not ask for verbal innerancy nor need we believe that every word in the Gospels was dictated by the Holy Ghost. But we ought to be reasonably sure that they are veracious in their main parts, and to be sure of this we will have to briefly summarize the evidence.

The Gospels

The main facts about the life of Jesus are recorded in four brief biographies, incorporated in the New Testament as the books or testimonies of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. These accounts are honest attempts by plain men to give us a true picture of his doings and sayings. They are not supposed to be history textbooks. They are portraits—thumbnail sketches if you like—written by a group of devoted followers. They should be read precisely as any other biography is read, and their subject should be made to leave his own impression upon us.

Many people are skeptical of the New Testament. Some are honestly so, since the discovery of the reign of law seems to discredit the miraculous. The Gospels are full of miracles. But if we have any scruples on this subject, let us lay them aside for a moment. We have to give credence to well-authenticated testimony or evidence, however improbable it may seem. If we can be reasonably certain that the records are true, then we must respect what they say. And, it must not be forgotten that the teachings of Jesus Christ are as miraculous as his doings. We cannot ask for verbal infallibility, and we shall not be too concerned about minor discrepancies. All we ask for is a fairly concise and sane record, and that is just what we have.

Mark. Mark, who is the earliest writer, made up his account from the preaching of Peter. This is very evident as we see the note of action which runs through his narrative. Peter was a man of action.

and so the words straightway and immediately are much to the fore. For a number of years Mark was Peter's traveling companion, and doubtless recorded his narrative from Peter's fund of knowledge as the ministry of the word went forward, and he sought authority for his doctrine by reciting, in public address and private intercourse, the deeds of the Savior.

Luke, who also wrote the Book of Acts, was more careful of the order of his chronicle. He made strenuous attempts to "set forth in order" those things "which we had amongst us," because he had a "perfect understanding" of them (Luke 1:1-3). He doubtless had access to what John Mark and others had written. His testimony is a cultured effort. A deep sense of sympathy for the sick and infirm runs through it, and the constant reference to the "company of women" (24:22) and also to certain individual women, suggests one source from which the "beloved physician" (Colossians 4:14) drew his facts. Scholars have discerned that both Luke and the writer of the first Gospel had access to another document known as "Q" (the first letter of the German word Quelle meaning the "source.") In this fundamental literature were some of the sayings of Jesus and the historical settings for them.

Matthew's account is different from Luke's in some respects. For instance, the record of the birth of Jesus is, in Matthew's testimony, evidently from the side of Joseph, while in Luke's it is unquestionably from the side of Mary. The two chronologies represent two attempts to reconstruct a genealogy, showing how Jesus was of the lineage indicated in Old Testament prophecy. Matthew seems to be more of an editor, and arranges the "logia" (sayings) of Jesus from various documents at his disposal, supplementing these with memories of his own.

John's testimony is different altogether from the other three. It is more of a philosophy of Christ to interpret the life and ministry of our Lord which will portray him more acceptably to the mind of the Greek and that of the churches in Asia over which John had supervision. His view is not contradicted by the others, but it is not emphasized to the same extent by them. He tries also to supply some incidents which the others omit. For instance, there are no parables in John's record; but there is the story of the woman at the well, some miracles (notably the raising of Lazarus) and other happenings which are not included in the Synoptics. John also wrote much later. After a rich and full ministry in contact with Greek as well as Jew, mature in love for his fellows, we suppose that John undertook to reveal the light, the life, and the love of our Lord.

How infinitely poorer we, and the generations before us, would have been had we and they not received these four testimonies!

Their Authenticity

The early church expected the immediate return of Christ in person to rule and reign in glory. It probably never occurred to them, therefore, until a long time had passed, to write their experience of Jesus. Only when time forced them to admit they had misjudged the timing of his prophecies concerning his second advent did they undertake to make the Master live in the written word for their posterity. Thus, perhaps, many incidents are lost to us. Those that remain, however, bear the unmistakable stamp of truth.

Evidence. Whoever wrote the Gospels must have had an intimate knowledge of the details of temple life at Jerusalem. In A. D. 70 this was obliterated, and the temple itself destroyed along with the whole cultus of the Jews. Anyone coming an appreciable time after this event could never have faithfully reproduced, recaptured, and recorded the atmosphere prevailing there in Jesus' day. But in the New Testament there is no uncertainty. It is all reproduced in detail. This means that there is more reason for supposing the Gospels were written by the people living before A. D. 70 than after. Again, never once does Luke either in his testimony or in Acts make any mistake about naming the local and provincial officials in the Roman Empire. He speaks of the rulers of the synagogue and first men of Antioch in Pisidia; the Priest of Zeus at Lystra; the lictors and jailer of Philippi; the politarchs of Thessalonica, and others.

Adolph Harnack (b. 1851) the greatest of all scholars of early church history, sums up the position with reference to the trustworthiness of the Gospels and the New Testament generally, with these words written in 1897:

There was a time, and the general public is still at that date, when it was considered necessary to hold the most ancient Christian literature, including the New Testament, as a tissue of deception and falsehood. That time has now passed. For Science it was an episode in which she learned much, and after which she has much to forget. The results of my investigations go in a reactionary sense far beyond what one might call the moderate position in the criticism of today. The most ancient literature of the Church is, on all chief points, and in the majority of details, veracious and worthy of belief, from the point of view of literary history.

We can depend upon the Gospels, then, as supplying us with a sure hold upon the life and ministry of Jesus Christ. They testify of him.

CONTEMPORARY HISTORY

References to the life of Jesus, other than those recorded in the New Testament are very scanty. There are two statements, however, which suffice to show Jesus actually lived. Tacitus, writing A. D. 115-117, tells about the origin of "Christianity" as coming from Christ, who was sent to execution under Tiberius; "but in spite of this," he says, "the execrable superstition [Christianity] repressed for the moment, broke out again, not only in Judea, the home of this plague, but also in Rome."

Josephus, the Jewish historian, gives some account of John the Baptist and Herod's reason for beheading him. He also mentions that James, the "brother of Jesus who is called Christ" was put to death by the high priest. In the text there is also a paragraph about Christ himself. But scholars believe this an interpolation by some later Christian. But whether it is or not, we have ample evidence that Josephus knew something about him. He may have been silent for reasons which would make the Romans favorable to the Jews. This is scanty evidence indeed; but it is not surprising, for, as Platnauer says, no Roman historian, from Tacitus to the scandalmongers of the fourth century, ever wrote imperially. "Their outlook was confined strictly within the walls of Rome." They did not care to know much of the provinces. It was in one of the provinces that Jesus organized and equipped his movement.

Thus we may be sure that the documents attending the life and ministry of Jesus Christ are trustworthy—and that he actually lived. We turn now to a very brief examination of his teaching.

Night Clubs

If the men and women who pour out of the country's night clubs after 11 o'clock in the evening were compelled to submit to a blood test, there is small doubt that at least half of them would be found unfit to drive motor vehicles. Nevertheless, they take their places behind the steering wheel and immediately become a menace to the lives and property of all other citizens.

Why is the right of a night club to make money by selling an irritant, depressant, narcotic drink superior to your right and the right of your wife and other loved ones to live?

Children's Day Observance

(Re-print from Guide-Lines to Leadership, April, 1943.)

Mention Children's Day and ask for words usually associated with it, and you will probably get "program" and "baptism." Traditionally, Children's Day is supposed to have a program with recitations, songs, etc. And parents are expected to come to see their children march to the platform and "speak a piece." All this can have a profitable socializing and expressional function. Yet more than this can be visioned. It is not enough to have a program—the kind of program makes some difference.

WHY CHILDREN'S DAY?

One principal reason for observing this day is to remind us that "there are children in the branch." For this period we are calling this to the attention of the church. In this light the day calls for more than a program; it asks us to do these things:

- to examine what we are doing for and with our children.
- to offer opportunity for child participation in church life.
- to admit qualified children into church membership.
- to rededicate ourselves to promotion of healthy child life.
- to develop in children a happy awareness of God's care and presence, and to pattern life accordingly.
- to sense God as the father of all children all over the world.

WHAT TO DO?

Possibilities are legion. Here are a few that have been tried—ten of them:

- A general service with families sitting together with an order of worship suited to child interest, spans of attention, etc.
- A baptismal service with the baptisms coming at the close of the meeting.
- A program depicting the services of the church to the child—blessing of babes, administration to the sick, instruction, tithing, etc.
- A service of singing by children, telling the life of Jesus as it touched children.
- Tableaux of children of all over the world.
- A program of children's stewardships of health, time, conversation, money, etc.
- A Commencement service for preparation school, giving exhibits, demonstrations, etc.
- A program of "children through the ages"—from the boy Samuel to children in the local branch.
- A testimony and storytelling meeting with seniors telling of their childhood days and their entrance into the church.
- A festival of flowers or child's garden of life service.

OUTLINE FOR A CHILDREN'S DAY SERVICE

NOTE: No one service can be outlined for the many branches of our church. They differ too widely in places of meeting, numbers, staff, etc. The following can be adapted to local situations. For instance, some may not have a font in the main auditorium, making it difficult or impossible to include the actual baptism. In this case, the ceremony can only be suggested. The text is very simple—it may be extended and elaborated at will.

MUSIC: "The Church's One Foundation."

THE CHURCH (Lady in conventional drama costume of white):

"I am the voice of the Church of Christ. I speak for him who came to bring abundant life to men everywhere. Today I bring you a particular message for the children of my charge. One day He who commissioned me counseled his disciples to take thought for them. 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'

"Today I bring you a procession of a few of the services I provide for these younger members of the church's fellowship. I invite you to see and share in making them vital and adequate for the child in your midst. Christ has no hands but your hands, no voices but your voices to do this work of nurturing and companioning in his Spirit. Your church calls you today to accept this stewardship as a happy welcomed and common responsibility. This is the invitation of Children's Day."

MUSIC: "Gather all the Children In," from Zion's Praises.

THE CHURCH:

"I, The Church, make formal acceptance of her part in fostering a spiritualized child life in the blessing of the babe. Parents who bring a child before the congregation silently promise to co-operate with God and his people in developing a life that accords with God's plans and purposes. Otherwise, they can expect no blessing. And the congregation likewise accepts the charge of providing the kind of social relationships and instruction that will conduce a life for promoting and living in a zionic order. On these conditions God, the Father, enters the covenant to work with us all.

"After the pattern of Jesus, the elders, in his stead, take the babe in their arms for the sacrament of blessing."

MUSIC: "This Child We Dedicate to Thee."

The elders and the parents of a babe or babes take their place during the singing of the hymn. Then follows the blessing of the babe or babes.

THE CHURCH:

"I provide ministers to go into the homes of her people, to instruct, to invite, to commune. This ministry is not for adults only. Youth and children are to be known and visited. The Greater Teacher knew and loved children. He was at home with them. That is still a test of an effective minister. Two priests go to a home of my people. Father and mother and children gladly greet and happily converse with these men who bring testimony, friendly concern, and benediction."

MUSIC: "Home, Sweet Home."

Parents and children are seated in a home setting by the time the music is finished. One of the priesthood tells a personal experience with narrative that appeals to the children. They and the parents may ask questions or make comments. The other priest tells something of the general church's or local branch's program and invites the family, children included, to participate in it. For a moment they bow as "O Lord! Around Thine Altar Now" is sung. They retire as the piano plays a stanza.

THE CHURCH:

"I offer healing to my children. Many a child remembers through life the experience of administration to himself or to one of his family. Wise parents and ministers have taught the necessity of keeping the laws of God in matters of physical and mental health. They have also taught that when illness comes, there is the invitation to go to the Great Physician. The children of my fellowship have a treasury of choice experiences when God has been near."

MUSIC: Third stanza of "Let Us Pray for One Another."

Two elders approach a father and mother as the mother holds a child of four or five. One elder tells how we are told to call the elders and pray in faith, explaining the sacrament to the child. A chorus hums a stanza of a hymn, as the elders place their hands on the head of the child. As the humming proceeds the Church speaks the familiar quotation, "If there be any sick among you." The chorus sings a second stanza as the scene retires.

THE CHURCH:

"I am to teach my children. You are my teachers. I call you to help parents in this God-given task. Many consecrated ministers and teachers give hours of time to this stewardship. I only wish their offering might be more charged with high professional qualifications and spiritual power. Today, however, let us pay tribute to the indispensable corps of volunteer workers who teach and live with my children."

MUSIC: Two selected stanzas of Saints' Hymnal, 215.

A scene of children in a preparation school is enacted.

THE CHURCH:

"Then, my children come to an age of accountability. If they have been well taught they have learned of Christ, of the restoration of his church, of the duties and privileges of children who enter, of the means of entrance. These boys and girls come to their pastor and request baptism. He and their parents confer. It is a happy association of parents and teachers and ministers and children—and God—who come on Children's Day to celebrate the formal entrance of the child into the church.

"To the child let this be a covenant, a pledge to be renewed through the Lord's Supper and to be sustained by the Holy Spirit invoked in confirmation. To the congregation it is the reception of boys and girls who are to grow in participation in the life of their spiritual fellowship."

MUSIC:

A baptismal hymn, as the service proceeds into the ceremony of baptism of children. A brief talk of instruction and welcome may be made by the pastor. It is essential that this part be continued without break in the service.

THE CHURCH:

"Today we rededicate ourselves to the stewardship of living with and for our boys and girls. There is no holier call, no more solemn responsibility, no more satisfying returns than in leading children in the way of the old, old path of the gospel."

Hymn and Benediction.

Lord Jesus, thou hast known
A mother's love and tender care,
And thou wilt hear while for my own mother
most dear
I make this Sabbath prayer,
Protect her life, I pray,
Who gave the gift of life to me;
And may she know, from day to day, the deepening glow
Of joy that comes from thee.

I cannot pay my debt
For all the love that she has given;
But thou, dear Lord, wilt not forget her due reward,
Bless her in earth and heaven.
—Henry van Dyke.

SAVIOR, LEAD THY CHILDREN

Tune: "Savior, Like a Shepherd."

Savior, lead thy little children
As they work and as they play
May their days be bright and happy
As they try to do thy way.
Bless the children, all the children
Keep them ever by thy side.

Growing always in thy service,
May they in thy love abide.

Savior, guide the willing parents
As they teach thy children here.
In the hours when light is needed
May they feel thy presence near.
Bless the mothers, bless the fathers,
May they e'er thy purpose see,
That the fruitage of their labors
May to thy good glory be.

A CHILD'S PRAYER

Dear God, our Loving Father, we thank you that you love us and that you are the friend of children everywhere. Amen.

First Things First

By Betty Jane Suttner

A GOOD Christian wants an eye that's sharp, clear, quick, sees everything, misses nothing. It has its pupil centered squarely on religion; sees red at sin, hatred, and war; opens to plans of a better world; shuts to cruelty and rumor; looks for work; never falters at the size of the task; is sympathetic to others' troubles; is not blinded by its own; is never green with greed, salty with foolish tears, or cold with unresponsiveness.

We are standing on a breath-taking peak of history. Then from this almost unimaginable eminence, those huge considerations, I come plunging down, narrowing my eyes to regard that pin point, me. How can I deport myself best as a tiny but very proud part of that history? Well, for one thing, I will try to be the Christian that God wants me to be. I won't whine about what I can't have. I'll revel with a new sense of privilege in what I can have. I'll try my best to be a good Latter Day Saint. A good Latter Day Saint has to make sacrifices and plenty of them, but the first ones are always the hardest.

You should know that our religion is the hardest to live by but the easiest to die by. I would like to repeat that if I may, Our religion is the hardest to live by but the easiest to die by.

OUR RELIGION brings a new hope of courage, of faith, of triumph. It echoes a challenge for the preservation of truth, justice, and freedom. It promises a sustaining inner strength to all who defend its rights so that Zion will bring a new beauty of simple living to a peaceful world.

The great majority of our members think we will have our golden opportunity of establishing Zion now that World War II is over. Whenever we want to start founding Zion, we know that God is on our side, and I don't think it is necessary to wait around for a golden opportunity.

We made a promise with God when we were baptized into this church that we would do our part in the establishment of Zion. Honestly, have each and everyone of us done as much as we could have? God gave us life for that purpose. Shall we just thank him for our presence here on this earth and let it go at that or are we going to do something to pay our debt? Don't you always get sort of a smug feeling when you've done something well? Well just think how smug our church could be as a whole if we founded Zion. We are going to need Zion as a place of refuge. If we let the people down, in a way we are admitting defeat.

Let's get started on the road to Zion. "First things first" will be our motto. Let's take an inventory of ourself and see if we are going to operate with a maximum amount of success during the year ahead.

PUBLIC RELATIONS: More friendly than last year. More service to others, more reorders for your special brand of understanding.

MAINTENANCE: Plenty of vitamin and mineral fuel going into the old boiler, good steam up, total tonnage about right, no sign of stress or strain in any department. The clock operating properly for sleep, work, and play.

READY TO WEAR: Is it?

If each checks off you can be pleased and proud to vote yourself a bonus and get down to the important and creative job of planning. This year is a clean sheet of paper with a sharpened pencil.

Last of all but not least, pray—say a prayer each night. Say it to God, if you know God. But say it yourself . . . and say it for others, so that our desires will come true. Say . . . "I will work at the well-chosen job of building Zion, hard and long. I'll try harder than ever before, and I'll try to encourage others to increase their efforts too—for all of us are thinking, doing, working, and praying . . . for the fulfillment of our ideals."

"Deserve, then desire."

Learns Song Through Spirit

A short time ago I had a wonderful and inspiring experience. I had just received a new edition of the Saints' Hymnal, and as I stood by the library table looking through the book, I came to the hymn, "Tell Me the Story of Jesus." I wished so much to know the tune, that I asked the Lord if he would teach it to me. Suddenly I felt a heavenly personage near—so near that it touched my arm. Then all at once I heard my voice being carried over the lines of the hymn, falteringly at first, and then confidently. I was so happy to know the melody to that beautiful hymn, I immediately thanked God for his blessing; I'm sure I shall never forget it.

9. Violence Flares in Missouri

By Evan A. Fry

IN DISCUSSING the early history of the Latter Day Saints in Missouri, we have pointed out several factors which if understood in the background of our thinking, will help us to understand the many conflicting cross currents which swayed public opinion during these troubled years. Missouri in 1833 was the far western frontier of the United States. The forces of law and order were somewhat imperfectly organized. Although many of the Missouri citizens were of a high type—good farmers, substantial propertyed men, college graduates—yet it should be remembered that the frontier also attracted the lawless, the irresponsible, the illiterate, the unrefined, and uncivilized. We should bear in mind the already-enumerated differences between the Saints and the Missourians who resented their presence here. The Saints, traditioned in the Puritanism of New England, settled their difficulties peacefully and legally; the Missourians often resorted to fists. The Saints condemned horse racing and gambling—two of the most popular diversions of their neighbors. The Saints were teetotalers, and in Missouri a man was not a man unless he could take his whisky straight. The Saints were shocked at the lack of schools and newspapers, and proceeded to establish both. They advocated and practiced a straight and strict type of Sunday observance. Among them were millers, carpenters, and other craftsmen from the East who felt superior to the native Missouri craftsmen. Even the coinage and the vocabulary of the two types of people differed. But most important of all was the fact that the Saints, of New England origin and sympathy, were rabid abolitionists, while the Missourians were equally rabid in their defense of the institution of slavery.

With all these differences, seen from the perspective of a hundred years and more, it was almost a foregone conclusion that the colony or settlement planned by the Latter Day Saints in Missouri should have been doomed from the start. There were too many differences, and according to the spirit and nature of the times, they were irreconcilable. The Missourians feared that the Easterners with their leaning towards abolition would vote as a block and carry the elections. They despised them for their differences and peculiarities and for their strange religious beliefs. They were jealous of their large land holdings, most of them obtained by original patent from the government. A study of the early land plats shows that the names of Edward Partridge, who as presiding bishop bought much land in trust for the church, and Lilburn W. Boggs, who later became lieutenant governor and governor of the state, often appeared side by side in connection with large and choice plots of land in Jackson County. And further, as is so often the case, persecution, not only failed to convince the Saints that they were wrong, but it made them more certain that they were right.

IN STUDYING the troublous days of 1833 in Jackson County, it is well also to remember that this was a lawless period in many parts of the United States. The war of the colonies against the mother country was only a little more than fifty years away, and in the days of the Revolution, defiance of law was often the mark of a brave and a noble patriot. Many of the great fortunes of New England were established during the colonial period by professional smugglers, who thought it not un-Christian or disloyal to ignore such laws as they did not like. It was also a period of high feeling and frequent mob violence. Newspaper editors were frequently the objects of mob violence, especially if they dared to take the unpopular side on the issue of slavery. More than one press and font of type were dumped into the Missouri River by a mob during this period. Even in the usually sedate East there was extensive persecution of the Catholics in the early 1830's, which extended even to the burning and sacking of convents, schools, and churches. Race riots flared in Philadelphia, and the usual treatment for any individual who differed with the majority was tar and feathers and a ride out of town astride a rail. The persecutions of the Latter Day Saints in Missouri were part and parcel of this general or nationwide trend of the times, and though the injustice of them still rankles at times, we have long since ceased to feel that our ecclesiastical ancestors are any more entitled to be known as a special brand of martyrs than many other peoples who suffered in similar ways. It is in that spirit, then, that we proceed to recount some of the troubles of 1833.

As early as April, 1833, a mob formed in Independence for the avowed purpose of driving the "Mormons" (as they had been nicknamed) out of the state. But the mob made the mistake of breaking open a keg of whisky before they attacked, instead of after their work was completed; and as a result their plans were temporarily forgotten. The July, 1833, issue of the Saints' paper, the Times and Seasons, unwittingly supplied the spark that set off the explosion. This paper contained an editorial entitled "Free People of Color." If we were to read it today, it would seem quite mild and sane and sensible. It advised the Saints not to take sides on the slavery issue—not to proselyte among the Negroes under existing circumstances, and quoted in support of that position the state law regarding "free people of color." But the Missourians operated on the principle that "he who is not with us is against us." They would recognize no neutrality. They looked upon this editorial as an invitation to free Negroes to settle in the slave state of Missouri.

On July 20, 1833, some of the leading citizens, most of whom deplored mob violence and feared that more was coming, signed a petition asking that the Saints leave Jackson County. But such mild action was not to the liking of some hot-heads, who seized the reins, called together a mob, wrecked the printing office of the Times and Seasons, threw the press into the river, and scattered type and half-completed printing through the street. They raided the store owned by Gilbert and Whitney, two prominent Latter Day Saints, and dragged the bolts of cloth through the streets like schoolboys celebrating a football victory. A blacksmith shop owned by one of the Saints was also wrecked. And to finish the day, Edward Partridge and Charles Allen were tarred and feathered.

SAMUEL WESTON, a blacksmith and Justice of the Peace, in describing these troubles in later years, asserted that the members of this mob were the lawless, good-for-nothing element, and substantial citizens such as Alexander Doniphan, who later befriended the Saints at considerable personal danger and expense, corroborated this view. But there are other historians who are not so sure that it was only the good-for-nothing people of the community who participated. Lieutenant-Governor Lilburn W. Boggs said, "Mormons are the common enemies of mankind, and ought to be destroyed," and not many years later, acting as governor, Boggs issued his infamous order which said that Mormons were to be exterminated, or driven from the state. So, in any event, the good-for-nothing element had the encouragement and tacit approval of some highly placed citizens in Jackson County and in the state of Missouri. One historian, Warren Watson (not a Latter Day Saint) says that Boggs originated the method so frequently used during the next ten years—promising protection of the law, demanding the surrender of the Saints' weapons in the name of law and order, and then attacking them when they could not fight back.

On July 23, a treaty was signed under duress, in which the Saints agreed to leave Jackson County—half of them by January 1, 1834, and the other half by the following April. Though they had been forced to sign this document, the Saints sent a delegation to Governor Dunklin, appealing to him to protect them in the exercise of their religious and property rights. Dunklin referred them to the regular law enforcement officers, and suggested that warrants be sworn out before a justice of the peace, and presented to the circuit judges for prosecution. Legally, this was the thing to do. As a practical method, however, it was futile. All justices of the peace in the county belonged to the opposition, and they simply refused to issue any warrants against their friends.

October 30, 1833, violence flared anew. A party of men visited the Whitmer settlement west of Independence, on the Blue River, and committed serious depredations and destruction of property. On the following Saturday night, November 2, some more drunken ruffians sallied forth for a Saturday night lark, unroofed a house, beat several people, and inflicted a serious scalp wound with a pistol shot upon a man who was too ill in bed to escape them. Some of this man's neighbors came to his defense, and in the ensuing melee one of the mobsters was shot in the thigh. Like wildfire then the word spread through the county, "The Mormons have shot a man."

Sunday night was quiet, and the Saints made use of the day to dispatch messengers to Circuit Judge Ryland, whose court was then in session in Lexington. Monday, November 4, more depredations were committed in the settlements near the Blue River, and hearing rumors of this trouble, nineteen unarmed men from the Colesville settlement west of the Blue started east to offer their help to their distressed brethren. They found all quiet, and turned back home again, but not before some small boys had seen them, and reported to the mob that the Mormons were on the march. The mob then pursued and overtook them near the Christian Whitmer home. Since the Colesville men were unarmed, there was little they could do, while the mobsters trampled down the Whitmer corn, shot wildly into the air, and beat the bushes to find stray fugitives.

Over in the Colesville settlement, the sound of the shooting was plainly heard, and a body of armed men was despatched to investigate. They were fired upon by the mobsters, and the fire was returned, with the result that two of the mob were killed, and one of the Saints died the next day of wounds received. Now there was a perfect frenzy among the mob element. They spread lurid stories of an "armed uprising among the Mormons." They mustered out the militia, which was largely composed of the same men who had formed the mob, and in the name of the law demanded the arms of the "rebellious" Saints. The Saints, still trusting that the processes of law would somehow operate to their protection, surrendered their arms. Armed riders of the mob—or the militia (no one could tell who was which) rode about the county, terrorizing the stragglers and fugitives. The settlement on the Blue was given two hours to get out, on pain of death, and men, women, and children were turned out onto the open prairie in a November rain which soon turned to sleet and snow, without household goods, or crops, or destination.

The largest group of the Saints congregated under the drizzling November skies on the Temple Lot, near the home of Bishop Partridge, where they camped out for a time. Then on November 7, through snow and freezing rain and sleet, they made their way northward along what is now River Boulevard, and thence down the river bluff road to the Wayne City ferry landing, near the present site of Cement City. Crops, homes, livestock, household goods were either destroyed or left behind. Families were separated. There was no shelter from the cold fall rain. Women gave birth to babies that night down on the river flat, warmed only by an open fire, and protected only by rag carpet held over their heads by friends. And at 2 A. M. that night, there occurred the most brilliant and spectacular shower of meteors ever to be seen in the Northern Hemisphere, convincing the Saints that the end of the world was near.

These stricken people found temporary shelter across the river in Clay County, and though their hopes of Zion were temporarily shattered, their dreams and their ideals remained. Joseph Smith saw the spot he had selected for a temple site only once again before his death, and then secretly, under cover of darkness. The light of hope in the breasts of these people was dimmed, but not quenched.

Prayers Are Appreciated

I am writing in regard to my friend, Mrs. Edgar Hawley, for whom I requested the prayers of the Saints before she entered the hospital. She passed away following the operation because of a weak heart. I wish to thank all who prayed for her. I know she would have expressed her gratefulness, too, had she lived.

The Women's Program for Conference

The classwork for women during conference week was a success. Large crowds filled the lower auditorium of the Stone Church; during the first three days many could not find room, but a constant number attended all the sessions.

Prayer and thoughtful work went into the planning of the program, and each person who had a part brought her best in preparation and material to the audience.

The first hour was devoted to discussing the many phases of the work of a functioning women's department in the branch. The second period, a study in the development of the woman herself, presented helps for problems in living, which women and families must meet today.

At the first session on Monday morning Dr. Roy Cheville offered a prayer for the week, petitioning the Heavenly Father's blessing on all that would be done in his name.

A count of those who were present from different States of the union, the provinces of Canada, the British Isles, and the Australasian mission, showing representatives from almost every place in the world, made one realize how far reaching the gospel of Christ is.

The topics discussed in this class were as follows: "Women's Opportunity for Service," "Young Women's Work in Independence," "The Work of the District Organization," "How to Unify the Program and Planning the Week-end District Meeting and Institute," "The Work of the Local Department in the Branch, How to Build Nonboring Programs," "Presenting an Outline for a Good Book Review," and "Food News and Recipes for Quantity Cooking for Church Suppers." The week's work closed with a consecration service of rededication.

A lovely musical offering opened the second period each day, providing a fine setting for the splendid discourses which followed. Familiar subjects were approached with new viewpoints, and the speakers brought much vital instruction and inspiration to the listeners. Discussion themes were as follows: "The Cradle of Democracy—Our Home," "Arming Our Youth," "Stewardships of Ourselves and Possessions," "Building More Stately Mansions," "Evangelizing—1946," and "New Appreciations of Our Spiritual Heritage." It will be of interest to readers to know that a pamphlet containing most of the class material is being prepared as quickly as possible. Orders may be sent to the Women's Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. When ordering state the number of pamphlets desired; they will be mailed when ready. The price is 25c each.

The ladies of Independence had an opportunity to offer their hospitality to visitors at the lovely reception given Tuesday afternoon at the Memorial Hall. A friendly informality prevailed, and many had a chance to chat and become better acquainted.

Although weary from a full day's program, about 100 ladies assembled at 4:30 Thursday afternoon to see a display of lovely bouquet arrangements that had been made up for them, showing how everyday articles and utensils could serve for containers.

Daily too, in the women's booth, tables were set appropriately for different occasions, such as an informal luncheon, breakfast, child's party, etc.

Much time and thought are required in planning an adequate conference program, but the expressions of appreciation from the visitors, and the opportunity to mingle with devoted Saints from other places renews our minds and spirits, and we join our efforts with theirs that the coming year may see great progress in the Master's work.

The Blue Bird Program

By Ruth Lewis Holman

The Blue Bird Program is a church-centered weekday activity program for girls between the ages of seven and ten.

The purpose of the Blue Bird program is to create, through simple activities and worship services, an atmosphere of joy and happiness which will develop within the girls a desire for continued and active participation in church work. This purpose is stated in the Blue Bird promise:

"I promise to try always to be kind and helpful, to be happy, and to help bring happiness to others."

Four years of purposeful, happy work are provided through rank progression. General Objectives are good will, comradeship, helpfulness, good citizenship, good health, reverence, self-control, thoroughness, neatness, courtesy, stewardship, and a familiarity with the doctrine of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In the required activities, the girls are given opportunity to develop these qualities and make them life habits.

News OF THE CHURCHES

The activities suggested in the Blue Bird program are varied. There is directed play: games—sometimes just for fun, and other times used to teach a story from church history, nature studies, home-centered work: sewing, cooking, housework; handcraft, music, and drama. Health is an important factor, and each girl must keep a health chart. Regular attendance at church and church school is required.

Blue Birds learn to see God through all his handiwork, and to understand and appreciate his great love for all persons. Recognizing this divine love, they are led into paths of service for him.

Four girls may be organized into a Blue Bird band. For further information write to the Girls' Headquarters Committee, Religious Education Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Independence has eighteen Blue Bird bands, which include almost 200 girls. A chorus of exactly 150 girls from the various bands, directed by Mrs. John Wrigley, sang for the General Conference on Saturday afternoon, April 13.

Mrs. Mark Holman is the general church Blue Bird leader, and Mrs. Vance Link, the Independence supervisor.

Leaders in Independence are as follows: Stone Church: Mrs. Verda Bryant, Mrs. Margaret Anderson, Mrs. Evelyn Weeks, Mrs. Alberta Davis, Mrs. Adelle Douglas, Mrs. Mildred Andes, Mrs. Velma Pinson, and Mrs. Marjorie Kinzey; Walnut Park: Mrs. Enid O'Neil, Mrs. Ruby Smith, Mrs. Ralph Remington, Mrs. Floyd Smith and Mrs. Vernon Blackburn; Englewood: Mrs. Bessie Karlstrom, Mrs. Martha Bruce, and Mrs. Rosie Carter; Enoch Hill: Mrs. Mildred Thompson and Mrs. Myrtle Louderback; Liberty Street: Mrs. Ida Fye; Slover Park: Mrs. Marie Fields and Mrs. Mary Lou Paul; Spring Branch: Mrs. Margaret Reiff; East Independence, Mrs. Vida Heidi, and South Side: Mrs. Delores Fowler.

St. Louis, Missouri

Pastor, Frank McDonald

Elder Paul Counts was in charge of the work of the branch while Pastor Frank McDonald attended General Conference.

The 11 o'clock sermon on Palm Sunday was presented by Elder Clarence Archibald.

The women of group number two, with Myrtle Lloyd as leader, held their meeting April 16 at the art museum in Forest Park. Dinner was served in the basement of the museum, after which the sixteen women assembled in a room on the first floor, and those who were not privileged to attend General Conference listened to many interesting reports given by those who did.

Harvey Collins, David Lewis, and Kenneth Coumerilh have received their military discharges.

The young adult group recently enjoyed an old-time wiener roast and steak fry in Forest Park; thirty were present. The evening of fun and fellowship was cut short by rain, however.

One of the outstanding events of the church year was the Good Friday service of music and tableaux depicting ten scenes from the life of Christ. Forty-six people participated in these tableaux, assisted by several committees in charge of staging and lighting the performance.

The church school worship on Easter Sunday was in charge of T. S. Gough and Russell Archibald. Helen Counts read a poem entitled "The First Easter" written by Tommy Woods; Rosaleene Coumerilh and Ernest Ebsworth sang "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." Pastor Frank McDonald presented the 11 o'clock message. T. S. Gough sang "A New Commandment," and the choir, under the direction of Frances Neff, sang the anthem, "God So Loved the World"; Grace McCutcheon was the accompanist. The auditorium and church parlor were filled to capacity.

Kirtland Temple

Pastor, John W. Banks

One hundred four persons were served Friday evening, March 1, in the auditorium at the five-dollar patron dinner given by members of the women's department and Zion's League. A program of music consisting of violin selections by Virginia Warner; accordion numbers by George Marsh; vocal solos by Dorothy Buck, Jeanne Davidson, and Robert Traxler; a musical medley by Kathryn Moore, Ruth Burt, and Scott Liston; and group singing, led by James McMahan, provided the evening's entertainment.

Proceeds from the dinner and contributions sent from friends throughout the district netted $520, which proved to be more than enough to complete payment on the new Hammond organ installed in February. A dedication service was held the following Sunday morning, at which time the congregation assisted in the dedicating of the organ to the service of God in his temple. Elder Donald Lents, city pastor of Columbus, was the speaker at the evening service. On March 17 Elder Charles Brockway, district young people's director, occupied the temple pulpit.

At the junior church service on March 10, Elder William Webbe gave an illustrated talk, using small doll replicas of Joseph and Emma Smith, telling of their work in connection with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Dorothy Davidson, junior church supervisor, reports that the children are drawing maps following their travels as they study the Book of Mormon.

On Thursday, March 28, in place of the usual evening of recreation, the Zion's League sponsored a volleyball tournament at the high school; teams were made up of returned veterans, high school students, and members of South Church and temple. Proceeds from the tournament amounted to $185, and were contributed to a benefit fund.

In connection with their study of "Comparative Religions," the League had as its guest the Reverend E. W. Schnedler, minister of Willoughby Lutheran Church, who gave an enlightening discourse of the origin, doctrine, and organization of his church.

On Thursday afternoon, March 21, members of the women's department gathered at the Chestnut Room for a tea in honor of Sister Eben Curry's eighty-sixth birthday anniversary.

Port Huron, Michigan

Pastor, Jack A. Pray

January 13 to 27 the Port Huron Saints enjoyed a series of illustrated lectures on "Jesus in Ancient America" by Seventy H. I. Velt. There was an average attendance of two hundred thirty-eight each night; both young and old participated in making the series a success by distributing over 6,000 handbills advertising the services. Four persons were baptized at the conclusion.

Elders John R. Grice, Stanley Phillips, Virgil J. Billings, Ernest Ledsworth, and John Booth were guest speakers during the last three months.

The branch choir, under the direction of Richard Whitford, has increased its membership by the addition of several young people. To the musical department has lately been added an orchestra, reorganized and directed by Harry Mal-tas. The first concert in many months was given March 31.

Zion's League has been having splendid attendance at the weekly meetings. On February 1 fifty Leaguers and their friends journeyed to the Maxwell home in Carsonville, Michigan, for a hay-ride. At the devotional hour, March 12, Pastor Jack Pray was in charge, assisted by Russell Loeding. The theme talk, "Listen, the Master Speaks," was given by Elder Allan McLane; Vida Grice and Shirley Pratt sang "Zion Builders." with Joan Koehler accompanying. One meeting each month a member of the priesthood is selected to talk to the group. A League member presents a special number in harmony with the theme at the evening service.

The branch has approved the raising of $15,000 for expansion of the church building to provide extra classrooms. Each department will contribute to this project.

The Young Matrons Club held a "country store" in the basement of the church. As a result $150 was added to the building fund.

On March 28 a Communion service for members of the priesthood and their companions was held in the church basement. Tables were set in the form of a "U"; Elders John R. Grice and Jack Pray were in charge.

Young Joseph Barrett, Patricia Ann Paton, Charlene Ann Loeding, David Lee Smith, and Michael Dell were blessed by Elders J. N. Muir, J. R. Grice, Jack A. Pray, T. P. Summers, and Frank Bailey, on March 31. Flowers for the occasion were donated by parents of the children being blessed.

Recent additions to the branch by baptism are Douglas Muir, Renee Muir, and Francis Ledsworth. A beautiful candlelight service was the setting for the confirmation service the evening of March 31.

The 11 o'clock service Sunday morning, March 24, was devoted to the memory of Frederick Madison Smith. His picture was given prominence in a setting of lighted candles and beautiful white flowers. Pastor Pray was in charge, giving an appropriate talk for the occasion. A poem, "A tribute to our President," written by Delores Breckon, was read.

San Leandro, California

Pastor, William Hall

The San Leandro mission is the youngest mission in northern California; it was organized March 24, 1946.

Several years ago a thriving mission existed in east Oakland, but it was discontinued when the Berkeley church was built. Since then several Latter Day Saint families have moved into east Oakland, San Leandro, San Lorenzo, and Hayward. Many could not attend church at Berkeley during the war because of gas rationing, and the need arose for a central place where prayer services could be held. At the request of the East Bay pastor, the Saints began meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Holden on Wednesday evenings. Through these meetings several other families were located, and Sunday morning services were held. By January the group had grown so that the Holden home proved inadequate as a meeting place. An available hall was found and rented as a temporary church home.

The February 3 Communion service was the first meeting to be held in the new location; Roy Weldon was guest speaker on that occasion. Apostle John Rushton approved of the progress being made by the group and arranged for its organization as a mission. William Hall was elected pastor, with Everett Smith and Mark Fonda as counselors. Other officers are as follows: Everett Smith, director of religious education; Brother Holden, leader of adult group; Brother Carter, older young people's leader; Paul Stanfield, leader of high school group and Herald representative; Sister Hall, children's leader; Mardel Holden, publicity agent and women's supervisor; Laroni Read, director of music; Brother Read, auditor; Nellie MacDougall, secretary and historian; and Orral Hartwig, treasurer. A finance committee was also appointed.

On the first and third Tuesday of every month, Alma Andrews, pastor of the East Bay congregation, holds missionary classes; much good is being accomplished through his work.

Recent guest speakers have been William Dungan of San Francisco, William Hayden and Russell Ralston of Berkeley, and Roy Weldon of Warrensburg, Missouri.

—Mardel Holden, reporter.

Montgomery, Alabama

Pastor, George Hall

The church school is progressing commendably under the supervision of Priest Erbydean Dixon. Brother Dixon was ordained last August; his wife was baptized two weeks later. Both are making a fine contribution to the church.

Services are held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Wellers, 810 Goode Street. Membership has increased so much that cottage services are becoming crowded. The Saints are hoping to have a church soon in which to worship.

Mrs. Sellers is in charge of the women's department. A chicken dinner was sponsored at the U. S. O. club on March 15, at which $82 was cleared for the building fund. Other projects have also been supervised by the women to add to the fund. Plans are now being made for the purchasing of a site for the church.

Apostles M. A. McConley and Charles R. Field were recent speakers; Brother Field presented an illustrated lecture on ancient America. Montgomery offers an excellent field for missionary endeavor, and the visits of these men were greatly appreciated.

Independence, Missouri

Liberty Street Church

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

On March 4 the Boy Scouts sponsored the picture, "North Star," which was shown in the lower auditorium of the church.

Steven Leslie, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Beem, was blessed at the 11 o'clock hour on March 31 by Elders Cecil Walker and John Zion.

The regular Wednesday evening prayer service, March 27, was given over to a special business meeting. At this time the building committee, members of the Liberty Street congregation, Bishop Kelley, and representatives of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric met together to discuss proposed sites for the new church building. Several suggestions were presented, but as yet no definite location has been decided upon.

The junior department, eager to do its part in helping to raise money for the new church, is working to reach its goal of $250. Several weeks ago the juniors organized a paper drive, and a contest is being held to make the work more interesting. A penny drive is also in progress. Already they have collected 10,000 pounds of paper ($50) and $16.60 worth of pennies, making a total of $66.60. Other projects are being planned, and the department feels confident that it will reach its goal by September.

The children of the primary department are co-operating too. They are saving their pennies for the new church, and now have a total of $13.39.

The Zion's League enjoyed an excellent musical program Sunday evening, March 17. On March 24 the Leaguers went to Topeka. They had complete charge of the day's activities, and report an enjoyable and successful trip. Everyone was invited to attend their Sunday evening service on April 21. At this time Joseph Frick showed the picture, "Kansas City, U. S. A.," depicting the growth of Kansas City. Each Tuesday evening the young people meet at the home of League Directors, Earl and Mable Holsworth for class study. They are studying the book, What Difference Does It Make?

Ruth Marie and Patricia Ann, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stephenson, were blessed at the 11 o'clock service on April 28. Elders Cecil Walker and William LaGrece officiated.

Speakers for March and April were Cecil Walker, Howard Timm, Clair Green, C. A. Skinner, C. W. Clark, Ray Whiting, Ernest Roberson, John W. Rushton, R. V. Hopkins, Harold Velt, Arthur Rock, E. A. Ledsworth, and M. A. McConley.—Ethel Hart, reporter.

Sioux City, Iowa

Pastor, C. E. Burnett

Members of the priesthood have been very active in their attempt to reinterest the Saints who have quit coming to church. On the first Sunday of each month a priesthood meeting is held, at which time improvements that could be made in branch activities and procedure are discussed. A study period is held every third Sunday. On Monday nights members of the priesthood assemble at the church before leaving, two by two, on priesthood visits.

Prayer meetings are held the third Wednesday of every month at the church. There has been an increase in activity, and in the number present at the services.

The women's meetings have been very well-attended, and a great deal of interest has been shown in the lesson study. Mrs. C. E. Burnett presented a thought-stimulating lesson on "The Church in Your Home." Mrs. Irwin Field brought out the responsibility of Saints in a lesson on "Members, One of Another." On April 25 an evening meeting was held at the home of Pastor and Mrs. C. E. Burnett, a which time Elder Burnett addressed the women. He spoke on the part women can play in working with the priesthood of the branch.

An inspiring sermon on "Sharing" was recently given by Elder Arthur H. Thompson. Other speakers have been C. E. Burnett, C. J. Smith, George M. Vandel, C. A. Evans, Herbert Floyd, and Lloyd McIntyre.

On Palm Sunday two young men, Irwin Field and Lawrence Jones, and Priest Arthur Walbeck gave sermons.

Easter Sunday was one of the most beautiful in many years. It seemed even nature was set to commemorate the occasion. A sextet sang two numbers, "Lift Thine Eyes" and "Were You There?" Raymond Smith sang a solo "There Is No Death," and Elder C. E. Evans presented the sermon.

In the evening a play, "The Resurrection," was given under the direction of Bernadine Kudrle. The cast included Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Gunlock, Mrs. Irwin Field, Elaine Burnett, Kenneth Smith, and Lawrence Jones. Raymond Smith, accompanied by Mrs. C. E. Burnett, sang a hymn back stage. Following the play a memorial service in honor of President Frederick M. Smith was held. "Come, Sweet Comforter" was sung, and a talk on the life of President Smith was given.

Richard Lee, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard McPeck, was blessed by Elder C. J. Smith and George M. Vandel.

The Saints of Sioux City extend their sympathy to Mrs. Ellsworth Bryant and daughter, Alma, in the recent loss of their husband and father.

Two servicemen, Ronald Brady and Raymond Smith, have received their discharges from the army. Ronald was stationed in the south Pacific thirty-two months, and Raymond served twenty-six months in the United States.

Mobile, Alabama

Pastor, R. L. Booker

The theme for March, "This, too, Shall Pass Away," was presented at the Communion service. On the following Sunday, members of the Zion's League took their lunches and cameras to the bay front, and enjoyed an all-day outing. They held a meeting for the election of officers to serve the next six months; Those elected were Glen Barlow, president; Barbara Peavy, vice-president; John Holland, Jr., secretary-treasurer; Melgwin Miller, recreational and social chairman; Carl Carroll, project chairman; and Dorothy Smith, worship program chairman.

The theme for April was "Let Your Light So Shine." Young Judy McCurley was blessed on Sunday, April 7. Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Todd's baby was blessed on April 21. A beautiful Easter vesper service was held in the evening.

Recently discharged servicemen returning to Mobile branch are James and Russell McGuire, Aurelius Peavy, George Layman, Aubrey Miller, R. C. Smith, and Milon Day.

The Communion service on April 7 was well attended; Pastor C. Beemer was in charge. Sympathy is extended the family of Ruby McCurdy, who died April 2.

Emerson Beemer has returned from overseas after four years of service. Edwin Pearson is another returned veteran, having spent four and a half years in foreign service.

District President A. W. Sheehy of London, Ontario, visited in Corinth on January 13. Other visiting speakers have been Elders J. Winegarden and A. Hodson of London, Elder A. Hewitt of Bothwell, Elder Cameron of Toronto, and Elder Archer of Woodbridge.

Beyond the Mist

*When I had lived—
Yet lived, it seemed, in vain,
And I was weary from the watching of the shore—
I drew apart from shadows, misty with my light,
And sent the lantern beams soft falling in the night.*

*'Twas then I knew
He waited on the ridge
Safeguarding me from dangers lurking near;
And knowing that the power of His love
Would lead me to His shelter safe above.*

Notice

Due to the shortage of space, our news section must be reduced to an absolute minimum until more paper is available. For this reason, we are "briefing" all news—that is, we are using only the most important items for publication, rather than editing accounts of branch or stake activities in their entirety. We shall appreciate the co-operation of reporters during this crisis; only news-worthy achievements, special services, projects, and improvements should be written up. Baptisms and ordinations will be printed in the "Bulletin Board" section.

—The Editors.

* THE TEMPLE LOT is being restored, as far as possible, to its former condition as one of the beauty spots on the west side of the city. An earthmover is filling the big excavation and smoothing the top over with the dark loam soil that was formerly there. Lawn and landscaping, it is anticipated, will be maintained. The city needs such spots where citizens can see green grass and shade trees, and enjoy the sunshine and fresh air. This improvement will be greatly appreciated by all who have worshiped in the neighborhood. Credit should be acknowledged. Last December, June A. Short, a member of the City Planning Commission and of the City Council, proposed the possibility of this improvement in a letter to officials of the Church of Christ. A favorable response was received, their general conference approved, and a committee was appointed to work out details. Everybody will thank those who are responsible for this fine work.

* WISDOM LITERATURE is not something found only in the Scriptures. It is being written today. Not very much of it, certainly. But a little, by some good people.

Since that very fine, friendly book, "On Memory's Beam," by Brother Elbert A. Smith, came out, we find ourselves referring to it, marking pages, and putting notes in the back on where to find the important passages. Looking it over frequently, finding now one good bit and later another, we feel that here is wisdom—kindly, thoughtful, pleasant, and easily understood.

They say that you can buy any book in the world, but that it doesn't really belong to you until you have read and understood it, marked the parts that are especially helpful to you, and thought about it. . . . If you have bought this book, admired it, and put it on the shelf to be read at "a more convenient season," you are making a mistake. It is waiting there to help and cheer you now, if you will open its pages and read them.

* SOME PEOPLE SAY that things would be different in church if members of the congregation were allowed to have their turn at the preaching. Now it happens that the church has a special service for that sort of thing. It is the prayer and testimony meeting. Long sermons are not permitted, since there isn't time. Our experience has been that many fine, inspiring, and thoughtful statements have come from both men and women, sometimes from little children, and often from unordained men. The prayer meeting is a service both by and for the people. As such, it should be better attended. Of course, it has its dull times, just as some preaching services do. Probably prayer meetings would be better if people would speak sincerely and sensibly what is in their thoughts, instead of the formal testimonies that they give because they think such things are expected. Formality will give dignity to any meeting at first, but after a while it suffocates the spirit, because it gets in a rut.

* IF YOU THINK you have made an important speech, just remember all the good people who didn't hear it, but who will go right on living in a sane and intelligent manner, avoiding sin and doing good works. This thought will help you to settle down to a comfortable normal condition again.

* YOU BEGIN TO GROW UP when you discover that all life's problems cannot be solved by a permanent, new dress, and nylons, and a heavy date.

EDITORIAL

The "Herald" Again

When the writer bowed off the editorial staff of the Saints' Herald, issue of May 31, 1916, after three years of service as Assistant Editor, it was thought this was all for him so far as editorial work with the official organ of the church was concerned. Thirty years have passed, and here he is again.

No years spent under appointment of the church have been more fruitful in our maturing ministry than those engaging us on the Herald, and the intervening three decades of experience have added thereto. Yet we can but feel that in consideration of these times, calling as they do for so much more than did those of a third of a century ago, we are no more adequate to the challenge than when first coming to work on the Herald; nor are we so sure of ourselves as we were in the long ago, and thanks be for that. Such as we have, however, we yield to the current assignment, and shall put it to the best use of which we are capable.

Danger Points

A Strike-Bound Nation

An old friend was picketing a strike-bound plant in the neighborhood this morning. Back and forth he was going on a pilgrimage that led nowhere, wearing one of those double-bitted bibs, mounted fore-and-aft on his shoulders, stating that this place is unfair to organized labor according to local union number, etc., etc. I was glad this union was wise enough to use a good clean local employee instead of importing thugs and bums from the North End as unions sometimes have done. It makes a much better impression on the public.

What my friend had to say was significant: "I hope this strike can be settled soon. We are running short of money, and we can never make up the loss, no matter how big an increase we get. Anyway, there are too many strikes. They could ruin our country."

That comment from the inside may represent the opinions of more striking workers than we know. We wish that the rank and file of union members had more to say about what is done.

Democracy

Although our nation is a republic, and its political affairs in general are conducted in a democratic manner, there are two great areas of our national life that are run by dictatorship. It is true that there are some splendid exceptions in both areas, but dictatorship exists in a majority of cases. These areas are business and labor. Too many businesses are still run as if only money and management had any interest or concern in conditions. Money and management alone cannot make a business. The human factor is indispensable; people suffer when things are wrong; they have rights which are equal at least to the rights of property. Government has established some strict controls for business, so that many of the old abuses have been abolished. Others will be controlled in time.

But dictatorship still exists rather largely in the field of labor leadership. This is very unfortunate for the working man, for the nation, and for business. We are far behind in establishing good and effective controls for labor organizations. They should be subjected to equitable regulation as other corporations are.

Government Seizure

President Truman has been very wise to resist the pressure to make the government seize the strike-bound industries. Even when he has authorized seizures, he has not taken drastic steps. He doesn't want dictatorial action. He wants the processes of democracy to work out the problems if that is possible. This is the slower, more painful, less convenient way. But in the end it will be the best way. Government seizure could so easily lead step-by-step, and rather quickly, to a breakdown of representative government and to dictatorship. This nation, at the present time, could easily become a victim of a fascist movement, if some strong colorful leader were to take a hand in it. Very fortunately, our great leaders—President Truman, General Marshall, General MacArthur, General Eisenhower—have no inclinations whatever for it.

Future Remedies

It seems clear that if democracy is to be preserved in our country, political democracy cannot survive by itself, while dictatorship reigns in business and labor. As it is, the dictatorships create the problems, and the democratic political organization has to clean up the messes. Lincoln once said, "This nation cannot survive half slave and half free." It is time for that statement to be made again.

We have made quite a bit of progress in freeing the slaves of the industrial barons in the last fifty years and more, and more progress there needs to be made. But we have done practically nothing to free the slaves of the labor czars.

Principles

We need to remember that governments derive their "just powers from the consent of the governed" according to the words of an immortal document. We need the faith and patience to work along with our regular legal machinery to accomplish our purposes. We must renounce the use of military force to achieve political ends in America, as we destroyed it in Germany, Italy, and Japan.

Power always offers a short cut to the desired goal. But those who resort to it always discover that it leads somewhere else, farther from the desired goal than ever.

From the Presidency's Office

President Truman

WE ARE IN receipt of a letter from the White House as follows:

May 10, 1946

Dear President Smith:

I find that in the pressure of work in these strenuous days, I have not sent you a message of condolence in the bereavement which you sustained in the death of your brother. He was my faithful friend through many years, and his passing brings me a deep sense of personal loss.

Please accept for yourself and for all who mourn with you this assurance of heartfelt sympathy in which Mrs. Truman joins.

Very sincerely yours,
Harry Truman

President Israel A. Smith,
Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,
Independence, Missouri.

While Mr. Truman was Senator, Doctor Smith had frequent correspondence with him, and he rendered outstanding service to us in helping to secure Federal assistance in completing the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

President Truman's career from County Judge, through the United States Senate, and now our Chief Executive demonstrates throughout that he is a faithful public servant. With him public office has been a public trust.

We commend him for his earnestness and manifest sincerity, and trust he will be blessed with necessary physical strength to carry on in these most trying times. No President of this country ever fell heir to so many and grievous ills and dislocations as President Truman.

We in Jackson County are proud of our President and his estimable family.

ISRAEL A. SMITH,
President of the Church.

IN MEMORY OF

F. M. Smith

OFFICERS of the Herald Publishing House wished to put in permanent printed form, as beautiful as they could make it, a brief record of the life of President F. M. Smith and of the tributes paid to him at the time of his passing.

Newspaper clippings will turn yellow with age and tributes contained in periodicals soon become lost under an accumulation of later publications, but this beautiful memorial booklet is something of a convenient size which can be kept by itself as a permanent part of each member's library.

And so it was that we prepared these memorial booklets and presented them for sale in our booth in the Auditorium during General Conference. We believe these booklets to be one of the finest pieces of workmanship that it has ever been our privilege to present to the church. You will enjoy sending them as gifts to your friends. Each one contains a picture of President Smith, is printed on heavy, enameled paper and is enclosed in a white envelope ready for mailing.

Price, 50c each.

Also available, and especially designed for framing, is a large printed photograph of President Smith, in black ink on glossy light paper. A suitable margin is allowed and the size is approximately 10½ by 12½ inches, over all.

Price, 10c each.

The Gospel Rests on Facts

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

HIS TEACHING

At first Jesus made a wonderful impression upon his contemporaries. He evoked enthusiastic faith because of the miraculous healing power which radiated from him. But this early faith was not deep enough for his purpose. He made few real disciples in spite of the multitudes which followed him.

Against him were the wealthy and powerful Sadducean high priestly family at Jerusalem and the Herodians in Galilee, because he openly denounced pride and selfish power and the acquisition and use of wealth which fostered these impulses. The Pharisees also had a quarrel, since Christ refused to countenance ritualism which did not minister to equality of opportunity for all. But perhaps, even more than the opposition of the classes, it is important to observe that Jesus persistently refused either to use force himself or to countenance its use by his disciples in the interest of furthering his religious ideals; and so that there were also set against him all the patriots or fervent nationalists, who, since the rebellion of the Maccabees, had looked for deliverance by a militant Messiah who would call the nation to arms. They would have come by force and made him King. But his kingship was not of that kind. Jesus turned his back on the zealots. He taught by precept and by example the absolute supremacy of the love of God. He was a virtuous philosopher, an eloquent teacher. As such alone he might have passed a tranquil life. But he persistently claimed to be a King—a King indeed, who would neither hold court nor lead an army, a King who would not use force to compel obedience to his mandate and who persisted in homely poverty to interpret the Mosaic Law. The Jews could abide a philosopher. They could abide a king—but they refused to endure a king in the garb of a philosopher, and they sent him to his death.

We tend here perhaps to digress a little from the teaching of Christ and touch upon some of the forces and powers making the history which eddied around him. But the two are really inseparable, and we are here concerned to point out that Jesus taught a dynamic which impelled men out of their sense of obligation to serve him and that he based his kingship on this, rather than use force in the construction and extension of his society. The third temptation rightfully belongs at the beginning of his ministry, for in it the kingdoms of this world were presented to him, no doubt, and had he used his miraculous power to compel allegiance he could have sat in Caesar's seat. But turning from the spectacle, he set his mighty powers within the supremely intelligent limits of a mighty restraint which had regard to the needs of mankind. Again, while the common people heard him gladly, and while they followed him for the "loaves and fishes," so engrossed were they in getting a livelihood, that they had neither the time nor the inclination to respond to the deeper moral claim his teaching consistently presented.

The teaching of Jesus was set in the context of the nature of God. "God," he said, "is your Father." As such he loves each equally, and while he will not tolerate sin or take an obstinate soul into fellowship with him, he will do his utmost for his sons. Thus the teaching of Jesus is based upon the fatherhood of God, and the right of all men to fellowship with him and with each other upon terms laid down in the gospel. We have, in the Sermon on the Mount, the law of the kingdom of God. We have not the time here to analyze its constituent elements, except to say that the great dynamic, love, is taken from the realm of the emotions and placed in the will. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even unto them." The inevitable result of such teaching would be, of course, equality of opportunity for all, and the unity of spirit and purpose which such equality presupposes. Christ takes the family as the archetype of kingdom relations, and uses this as an analogy to explain the kingdom spirit. Nothing is so abhorrent to God as that which keeps men one from the other. Distinction ought to be made between respectable sins and disreputable sins. Jesus assumed the publicans and harlots of ready forgiveness upon their repentance; but the respectable sins, practiced by those "who needed not a physician" he saw as insurmountable obstacles to his kingdom. Pride, avarice, the pursuit of worldly gain, the "holier than thou" attitude, the spirit which impels men to "lord it" over their fellows, he denounces. Humility of spirit, faith, diligence in keeping the commandments, stewardship of temporal possessions, he indicates are the characteristics which will restore the true glory to Israel.

SUMMARY OF CHRIST'S TEACHING

"Jesus of Nazareth, who claimed to be the Christ who was to come, set himself to proclaim the promised kingdom of God and to organize the community of those who believed in him to be the New Israel. It was to be a community—in the world but not of it—based on the fullest recogniton of brotherhood under the fatherhood of God, to the exclusion of any selfish claim for a privileged position, and on the acknowledgment in every single soul of an equal and infinite worth. At the same time Jesus wholly refused to take men into his community as he found them. The moral claim he made on men for absolute self-surrender was extreme. The community which was to be the kingdom of God on earth was to constitute a sort of spiritual aristocracy—but one open to all men without regard to position or special qualification, and without regard to their past, on the sole condition of surrender to God and faith in his word. So the new community, the true Israel, was to go out into the world—poor and defenseless but triumphant and joyful—in happy fellowship, divine and human. It was thus quite right of Seeley to declare that the keynote of the teaching of Jesus was 'the enthusiasm of humanity'—of humanity, that is, or it ought to be and may be."—Charles Gore.

THE FACT OF THE RESURRECTION

There can be no reasonable doubt that Jesus lived, was killed, and buried in a stone chamber. There can be no reasonable doubt that he rose again and burst the fetters which held him. There is general agreement as to the main facts among the four biographies in the New Testament. Any language used in connection with the resurrection of our Lord, which gives the impression that his physical body did not come forth from the tomb is fundamentally false and misleading. It was attested to by ordinary, matter-of-fact men and women. They were not mystic, neither were they idealists. They were drawn from the ordinary folk who formed the backbone of stable society.

Let us lay aside for a moment any attempt at scientific or philosophical explanation as to the nature of matter and spirit. Let us forego the temptation to visualize the possibility that the life of the Master so transformed the elements of common clay from which the physical body is composed, as to enable those elements to be transmuted into spiritual realms. Let us think merely about the tremendous impact which the fact of the resurrection made upon the disciples, and upon the church. We see them at the death of Christ, weak, cowardly, and vacillating, as we are all naturally tempted to be in the face of this great mystery. Let us view them upon the resurrection morning. First, the incredulity when the story of the women was told them. Then the rising hope mingled with apprehension. Finally, the exaltation conveyed in the certain irrefutable evidence which Jesus himself supplied by his appearance unto them. The whole scene was changed from death to life. For the early Christians one argument alone sufficed, "Christ is risen." This was their salutation when they met. This was their never-ending source of peculiar joy. It was the spring from which the cleansing river of Christ's ethic flowed to irrigate and beautify the arid wastes of the Roman dictatorship. The completeness of the belief held by the disciples in the resurrection of their Lord is shown, furthermore, by the fact that nowhere in the subsequent history are we told that they looked back to the days of the personal ministry of Jesus as if he were then more truly present with them.

It is said that a young critic of the church once asked a French bishop how he could start a new religion which would give life and power to the French nation. The bishop replied "Preach your gospel, get yourself killed for doing it, and then three days after rise from the dead."

The whole religion of Jesus, its ethic, and its ideal, implies the resurrection fact, even though institutionalism has marred his visage through the years. To the disciples of Jesus his words are much more than propositions about life. His words transcend the maxims of philosophy. To a believer and a disciple the words of Jesus have the power to awaken his own likeness which is imprisoned under the gross, misshapen image of God which the sinner has made of himself. Perhaps we ought to say this more simply. All of us are impressed with the image of divinity in our creation. And as part of that equipment, we have latent possibilities for godliness which are crushed by our sinning. It is to these latent possibilities that the words of Jesus fasten themselves. And so Christ becomes the conscience of all true believers. This is what happened to his early disciples. Christ echoed to them their own highest aspirations, to which they had hitherto been blinded, and which their sinning had debarred them from achieving. His words had a certain haunting authority, which would neither let them go nor yet leave them content. The gospel of the kingdom of God which he preached, they recognized as the ideal state for which they were made. When, therefore, Jesus was crucified, all the hopes and longings which he had stimulated in them for righteousness, for peace, and the glory of the kingdom died within them. So Peter said, "I go a fishing." And he fished and caught nothing until he again heard the words of Christ upon the seashore after fruitless toil in the darkness. The disciples also on the road to Emmaus with bitter disappointment told the inquiring stranger, "We had hoped it should have been he who would have redeemed Israel." The crucifixion of Jesus was a tragedy for them.

But behold their extraordinary enlivenment when they were sure that death could not hold him. Let us try to reconstruct their thinking. We shall do it imperfectly, but perhaps it will be good for us. What they thought was, "An extraordinary man, our friend. He stirred in us the sublime longing for nobler things. He was taken by his enemies, wicked men, and foully done to death. But he is with us again. He is risen. And because he lives now, he has power over death. Because he has power over death, he need not have died except it was to show us that, by living his way, we have no need to fear death. If he has died to show us this, how much he must have loved us." The wonder and the glory of this astounding identification of love and immortality never left the apostles. It saturated all they did. They felt a yearning, an insatiable longing, to tell all sinners, how they themselves had been redeemed, and how the love of God was the great fundamental dynamic which undergirded his kingdom. So much did this conception of love and immortality coalesce in their thinking that John could truthfully say, "We know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

THE FACT OF APOSTASY

MORALS

The great strength of the early Christian church lay in its moral appeal. There was, in those days of the church, strength in being clean. This moral code was a direct result of the teaching of Christ and of his apostles and a fruit of the Spirit which accompanied their ministry. So it continued for more than two hundred years. The penitential discipline of the church was maintained and a high standard was required of the novitiate. But after the Edict of Constantine (A. D. 314) a change began to take place. Before that time it was dangerous to be a Christian. Subsequently it became dangerous to be anything else. Eusebius, a bishop and an ardent supporter of Constantine, laments at the "unspeakable hypocrisy" of those making spurious professions of the Christian name in order to curry favor with the emperor. Other prominent church officials complain in similar language, and it is evident that soon after the Constantinian Edict, the public penitential discipline of the church utterly disintegrated.

It is not without great significance in this connection, that the Monastic movement began and gained great headway during this period. This movement was, at root, a protest against the worldliness of the church. It was a magnificent protest, but not without serious limitations. Large numbers of people renounced all that was enjoyable in life in order to pursue quietly and without distraction, that union with God which they conceived as blessedness. Benedict (6th century) it was who gave direction and character to this movement, by publishing his famous rule, which enjoined strict obedience to God, communistic holding of temporal possessions, and hard labor with strict frugality. It made a tremendous impression upon a wild world, when these simple monks with no weapon but the awe which they inspired among the wicked, lived their lives and did their service to God in their appointed places. Unfortunately it was conceived that the true life could only be lived on a basis of celibacy, and one must suppose that this conception grew out of certain Gnostic tendencies which affirmed sin had its roots in the material world and in the flesh. The high moral plane on which the monks lived in those earlier times, coupled with their deprecation of the whole function of sex, led to a dual standard of morality which was certainly at variance with the teachings of Christ.

Gradually the emphasis shifted in the Christian world from the life to be lived toward a certain doctrine to be believed. Confession became corrupt. Theological dispute took the place of righteous living. The officials of the church shifted their attention from the relations existing in society among members to the intellectual questions raised by apostate bishops.

USE OF FORCE

Again it appears more and more, as time goes on, that the church became almost a department of state. Compulsion was used in matters of doctrine, belief, and practice. Spiritual liberty and self-government were taken away. When the emperors sought to bring unity in the church, they were permitted to use imprisonment and banishment as instruments to put down unorthodoxy. When the church appeared about to pass under the theological domination of one who believed Christ was a creature, and was not fully God, (I refer to Arius) it was the conversion of Clovis and the Franks to the orthodox view that saved it. And there is no question but that the Bishop of Rome encouraged Clovis to use the sword to further the orthodox theology. The "Barbarians," says Stanley, "were baptized in platoons." When Constantine accepted Christianity (at the battle of Saxa Ruba in A. D. 311) it was on the basis, as Hobhouse says, that the Christian God is the "god who giveth victory in battle." Two centuries later when Clovis joined the church, it was on the same basis. A bishop informed him "Your faith is our triumph: every battle you fight is a victory for us."

What could be more removed from the Spirit of Him who would rather go to the cross than force men to give him their allegiance? Almost the last admonition to a member of the twelve before his crucifixion was, "put up thy sword" and before Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my disciples fight" that is, use force. In Clovis, as indeed in the spirit that accompanied Constantine the Great, we already have the prophecy of the crusades. If any proof were needed of apostasy, we have it right here. Christ consistently refused to employ force as an instrument for the propagation of the gospel. He even refused to use his miraculous powers to awe and crush the minds of men. Those who were claiming to follow him a half a millenium later certainly were not of his Spirit.

If we need any authentic confirmation of the position here taken, we have only to turn to Lord Acton, one of the outstanding historians of all time. He says, when writing to Lady Blennerhasset, who is a Catholic

THE RESTORATION

10. Settlements of Ray and Caldwell Counties

By Evan A. Fry

THE SAINTS who had sought new homes in Jackson County, Missouri, camped in a drizzling rain and sleet on the banks of the Missouri River north of Independence, awaiting the ferry which would take them across the river to Clay County. They had been driven out of their homes at the beginning of the winter, without time to save their crops, or, in some instances, even to collect their belongings. The lands they had cleared, the homes they had built, the livestock they had raised, were either destroyed or appropriated by the mob which had expelled them from their lawful habitation.

Slowly and sadly these exiles crossed the river by ferry, and found a sympathetic, if not always a warm reception, among the citizens of Clay County. It was too late in the season to plant any crops; most of the Saints were too poor and im-historian:

"The accomplices of the Old Man of the Mountains (the classic assassins of history) picked off individual victims, but the Papacy contrived to murder and massacre on the largest, and also on the most cruel and inhuman scale. They were not only wholesale assassins, but they made the principle of assassination a law of the Christian Church and a condition of salvation" (selection from the correspondence of the First Lord Acton, 1917, Volume I, page 55).

It can truthfully be said, as Dean Milman comments, in his History of Latin Christianity, that, "Rome . . . so secularized her own spiritual supremacy as to confound altogether the priest and the politician, to degrade absolutely and almost irrevocably the kingdom of Christ into a kingdom of this world."

poorished by their misfortunes to pay their way; consequently many of them survived the winter only by reason of the outright charity of the people of Liberty and Clay Counties. During the winter they started their long-continued, and quite unsuccessful efforts to obtain some redress for their wrongs, a peaceful enjoyment of their homes, and their rights as American citizens.

Their first step was to retain a Liberty firm of lawyers to represent them in trying to regain their rights. This firm was composed of Wood, Reese, Doniphan, and Atchison. There is a special significance in the fact that this firm was willing to undertake such a case without a cash retainer, and that its two leading lawyers, Atchison and Doniphan, were both Kentuckians and confirmed Democrats, sympathetic to the southern opinion on the slavery issue. Nevertheless, they loved justice, and were willing to risk their own popularity and their chances of being paid, to see that men of another political faith got what justice it was in their power to give.

There followed a long period of legal sparring, delay, and fumbling, which produced very little in the way of results. First, Attorney Doniphan went to consult Attorney General R. W. Wells about the case, and from him received the advice that the "Mormons" should proceed to organize themselves into companies of state militia, and apply for an issue of state arms. Then, acting in their legal capacity as state militia, they could go back to Jackson County, establish order, and take possession once more of their property and homes. This advice coincided with Doniphan's personal wishes in the matter, for, being of proud southern blood, he deemed the compromising and conciliatory attitude of the Saints to verge on the cowardly. Reluctantly, his clients followed this advice and organized themselves, but wisely refrained from demanding an issue of state arms, lest it arouse the excitement and apprehension of their enemies. Instead, they pinned their hopes on the recovery of the fifty odd muskets and guns which had been illegally taken from them on the preceding November 5 by Colonel Thomas Pitcher.

Circuit Judge Thomas Ryland, to whom the Saints had also appealed, expressed his willingness to hold a court of inquiry into the happenings of that first week in November. In this he had the approval of Governor Dunklin, who had written to the Saints expressing his approval of their military organization, questioning the legality of the previous seizure of their arms, and stating that it was not only their right, but their duty to possess and bear arms in protection of their lives and property.

On February 24, 1834, the Liberty militia, known as the Liberty Blues, accompanied certain witnesses from among the Saints, as they ferried back across the river to give evidence in the case "The State of Missouri vs. Colonel Thomas Pitcher." The militia was sent for the purpose of giving protection to the witnesses, and they performed this function without reproach. But in Independence, at the place of the trial, a mob formed and so intimidated the judge that he sent word to the Liberty Blues that their presence was no longer needed or desired. Whereupon they turned and marched back for the ferry and home; and since it was manifestly unsafe for the witnesses to remain without them, they continued in their company back to Liberty and Clay Counties. No court was held that day—nor was any opportunity ever given for these witnesses to be heard.

Resolved to leave no avenue of possible redress unexplored, the Saints, through their representatives, appealed to the President of the United States, who of course had no jurisdiction in what was legally a state affair. On April 20, Governor Dunklin advised the Saints in a letter that they were in the right, and that they should be very careful to remain in the right, that public opinion might remain on their side, and eventually bring them the relief they sought. Those were welcome words, but they did not bring about the return of either the arms or the homes or the property of the exiled Saints. They, therefore, wrote the governor on April 24, inquiring as to what disposition had been made of the state's case against Colonel Pitcher (in which he was charged with unlawful seizure of the Saints' arms on the preceding November 5) and advising the governor that they had organized in companies of militia in accordance with his previous advice. They said they thought it best not to apply for state arms, but rather to leave it to the executive of the state to put them in possession of their homes.

On May 2, Governor Dunklin wrote that he had become impatient at the delay in Colonel Pitcher's case, and had demanded a report on it. The report then having been received, the governor enclosed also an order on Colonel Samuel D. Lucas for the return of the fifty-two guns and one pistol confiscated from the Saints on November 5. This order was presented to Lucas, but was ignored. On June 6, Dunklin replied to a letter from Colonel J. Thornton, declining to act as arbitrator in the dispute between the Saints and the residents of Jackson County, lest it embarrass him in case he later had to act against one side or the other in pursuance of his duty as chief executive. He asserted again, however, that "a more clear and indisputable right does not exist" than the right of the Saints to return to their homes. He advised that representatives of the two factions try to compromise, either on the basis of buying up all the Saints' property, or establishing segregated districts where each side could be allowed to dwell in peace. He warned that neither side had any right to "levy war," which right remained with the state alone.

On June 9, Governor Dunklin sent another executive order for the return of the Saints' arms. To evade compliance with this order, Colonel Lucas had pocketed it, resigned his commission, and left the state and county. Colonel Pitcher, next in command, also ignored the order, and was never brought to trial for his disobedience—nor were the arms ever returned. Indeed, it is doubtful whether they could have been, for immediately after their confiscation on November 5, they had been distributed among the mob, and were untraceable.

Judge Ryland, the circuit judge of that jurisdiction, tried to bring the parties together in compromise, suggesting that one side or the other sell out. A committee of ten Jackson County citizens signed a petition offering to buy out all the Saints' lands if they would relinquish their claims on Jackson County, and give up their plans for settling there. This, of course, the Saints refused to do, because of their belief that Jackson County was to be the center of their gathering and their experiment in a new social order. A meeting was called at Liberty to discuss the proposal, however, and the meeting was attended by a delegation from Jackson County. There was some apprehension manifest at this meeting about the reported approach of a body of two or three hundred Saints from the east, who were reportedly coming to join forces and fight their way back into Jackson County. As a matter of fact, many of these men had planned all during the previous summer to emigrate the next spring, and though they were bringing material aid to their dispossessed brethren in Missouri, their intentions were peaceful. The Jackson County men were so frightened, however, that they all crowded aboard the ferry at once on the return trip, though half of them should have waited for another trip. As a result, the overcrowded ferry sank just short of the Jackson County shore, and two men were drowned. In some way, the Saints were blamed also for these two deaths.

The governor's message to the legislature that fall reported on the difficulties in Jackson County, and admitted, "under our present laws, conviction for any violence committed upon a Mormon can not be had in Jackson County."

Meanwhile, in Clay County where the Saints had found temporary refuge, the situation was becoming more and more tense. As temporary fugitives they had been welcome. But as weeks lengthened into months, and the hope that these people might be returned to their homes grew dimmer and dimmer, the people of Clay County began to wonder what would happen at their elections if the Saints decided to stay. Clay County was solidly southern and democratic. There was only one Yankee in the county before the Saints came. But now there were enough Yankee votes to control any election. It was only natural that there should be such fears, though it should be said that the Saints, regarding themselves as transients, never attempted to vote in Clay County during this period.

On June 29, 1836, the citizens of Clay County drew up a petition asking the Saints to leave. They freely admitted that they had not the slightest legal basis for such a request, but suggested that both parties would be freer and better satisfied if the Saints should settle—say in Wisconsin. But again Alexander Doniphan stepped forward with what he thought was a practical solution. Now a member of the state legislature, he sponsored a bill to create two new counties out of unoccupied prairie land a little farther north, and turn those counties over to the Saints for their occupancy. They would be allowed to have their own courts and county officers, and a representative in the state legislature. The measure passed the legislature, found favor with both parties, and accordingly in the summer and early fall of 1836 the Saints moved into the new counties of Ray and Caldwell. They bought out the few settlers who had preceded them, and took up other land on original patent from the government, paying sometimes as much as $1.25 an acre for what most of the old settlers to the south considered worthless prairie.

They laid out a new town for a county seat, and named it Far West. Its main avenues were 132 feet wide, and at the center of the town was a huge public square on which they planned to build a temple. Other smaller settlements dotted the countryside. Homes, mills, schools, shops, and stores were established, and a county government set up. A regiment of state militia was formed, and Governor Boggs commissioned Lyman Wight as its colonel. The prairie proved to be immensely fertile, and crops were abundant. Land which had been bought for $1.25 was held to be worth $10 per acre. Incoming converts from the east and south soon filled both counties, and by purchasing homesteads from the older settlers, they began to spread into Daviess, Livingston, Clinton, and Carroll Counties. It seemed for a time that they had found peace, but other troubles were already in the making, which were to drive the Saints still further, and again rob them of their homes and the fruits of their labors.

Healed Through Prayer

I have great faith in the ability of prayer to heal the afflicted. Several years ago I suffered from an ailment which the doctors believed to be cancer. An operation was suggested as a possible cure, but I did not feel equal to it, and began praying that I might be healed without surgery. A year later the doctor asked me how I felt, and I told him that I was never bothered anymore.

Report of a Conference Hostess

I Went to General Conference

By Verda E. Bryant

GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1946, was my first, although back in 1930 I "looked in" on the one celebrating the hundredth anniversary of our church. No one who has come to conference for but one day, or even two, can really say he has been to conference; one cannot get his finger on the pulse of the assembly by attending just a meeting or two.

My visit of April 6, 1930, in a strange town, among a host of strange people, leaves only a haze of confusion within my memory—a maze of people in a large building reminding me of a huge anthill with thousands of swarming ants traveling up and down, back and forth, here and there in a seemingly aimless fashion.

How different was Conference, 1946! Thousands were milling up and down the ramps of the huge (yet far too small) Auditorium, but there seemed to be a sense of direction—a purpose—because I knew what was going on.

CONFERENCE PREPARATIONS started for me that day back in January when we received a letter from an Ohio friend, asking if we had room for them to lay their heads during conference. From that day on there was the excitement of planning: finishing our remodeling, making new curtains, cleaning house, answering letters from folks who wanted to come and had no place to stay, trying to arrange to make room for "just one more," and wondering how it would be possible to stretch the available bedding, because I had promised to find room for thirteen guests in our seven-room home.

During all these preparations there was the usual furore of conference rumors, and the wondering of just how much truth was in each. A single phrase from the unsuspecting lips of one might cause an avalanche of gossip and rumor. And when you find those near to you in the overwhelming force of rumor, it becomes thrilling and adds to the suspense.

Then the death of our prophet and president brought a blanket of gloom over Independence, brightened only by the knowledge that the Lord is even more interested in the work of his church than are we, and we must believe that he knows what is best for his people. This, together with the realization that if President Frederick M. Smith had to pass on it was better that he do so at the time he did rather than a little later, was a comfort to the people.

For three weeks before the opening of conference, the weatherman did his best to give us the rain we needed. Almost daily he predicted "showers and thunderstorms," but only the loveliest of spring weather greeted us day by day. Then, perhaps realizing we would like a continuation of that weather for the conference week, he again tried his best, and on Thursday (the day my first guests arrived) he predicted "continued fair and warm," but Friday two new umbrellas appeared among the belongings of our guests as Independence was physically washed clean ready for conference.

I stood on my porch and watched the rain, thinking how wonderful it would be if Zion could be washed as clean as Independence was in the process of being; if the soil in the lives of God's people could be washed away as readily as the little pile of dirt in the driveway that I neglected to sweep up after having dug some dandelions the previous day; if the undesirable buds in our hearts could be washed away as had been those buds which invariably fall in the spring from the big maple tree in our front yard and make our sidewalk messy; if we would only let the living water of Christ's gospel perform its intended cleansing action.

Sometimes I think we mortals are too disgustingly human to be washed by a shower of Christ's living water, and we huddle under the umbrella of that humanness which sometimes so thoroughly protects us that we find it impossible to even get our feet wet. Ofttimes we intend to "walk in the rain" but look up and find the "umbrella" is being held over our heads by the invisible hands of Satan, and it is an awful struggle to get out from under it.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON there wasn't much activity at the registration booth, so I registered, and (thinking each must register himself) found out cost, etc., for the registration of my family. The next day when there were hundreds registering, I learned that I could have registered them all at once; and before we finally got the task completed, we found that our son had been registered twice. Ah, well, it is "live and learn." Next time I'll know better.

After putting the finishing touches to our Blue Bird booth, I went about greeting old friends. When one has lived in four States he soon learns that General Conference can become "Old Home Week." I met many of my friends, met folks who know my friends who didn't get to come, and made many new ones.

One of the nicest compliments I ever received was unconsciously given me when I ran into the man who is now president of the district in which I lived for two years, several years ago. He probably hadn't seen me more than half a dozen times, and those were the days long before I ever dreamed of putting my thoughts into writing. I greeted him by name, then without hesitation, without even a glance at my name badge, he turned to his wife and said, "I want you to meet Verda Bryant." To think that he should have so readily remembered me gave me a real lift.

Friday came and went, but I noticed some new flat-heeled shoes appeared among my guests, and the shoe trees stayed in my own new shoes through the entire conference. Those ramps in the Auditorium do things to your feet, and "comfort before looks" is my motto.

SATURDAY dawned beautifully, and it looked as though the new umbrellas would be so much excess baggage. More guests arrived and new friends were made. With the bedding they brought, my mind was a bit more at ease, because I had worried what I would do if it should happen to turn cold. Of course, I had reasoned, I could always leave the thermostat up to 75 degrees during the night, if necessary.

Saturday afternoon conference officially began with the singing of that grand old hymn, "Redeemer of Israel." Then came the business of calling and electing the new prophet and president of the church. Certainly one of the high points—one of the most inspiring and spectacular peaks of the conference—was that moment when the standing congregation sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee" as the new prophet was escorted to the platform.

Sunday morning we were only forty-five minutes early for the 9:30 ordination service; hence we found room only in the halls. Many had arrived as much as two hours early to get seats. We waited until the ordination service was over, though we could hear hardly a word that was spoken. It was then announced that the overflow was being taken care of in the Stone Church for the communion which was to follow the ordination, and would start in about twenty minutes.

We decided that we wouldn't get served where we were, so we would go to the Stone Church; but upon arriving there found that it had been filled to overflowing, upstairs and down, for half an hour, but if we would wait until the choir left the radio room, where there would be room for about a hundred, we could hear the service via loud speaker there. We looked at the crowd waiting, those milling up and down the streets, the steady stream still coming in the distance, and decided to give the visitors our places, and went home. Every Latter Day Saint in Independence, Kansas City, and 'round about must have come for this service.

It is my guess that they will have to push out the walls, put in that second balcony the Auditorium guides say can be safely added, or perhaps it would be simpler if they would just have two Communion services in the Auditorium, to accommodate the conference guests. And I might add that we're going to have to have more room for classes, prayer services, etc., during conference. We just about burst our seams this year.

Sunday afternoon Memorial Service found a new use for the conference programs—it seemed as though they would be used more as fans than as programs. Those little yellow books seemed like thousands of flitting butterflies in a field of clover, and I wondered if it wouldn't be much more comfortable if it would rain. At least you'd be more comfortable when inside. However, it did cool off, and we had a day or so of rain, but the weatherman was kind enough to provide most of it after all good folks were in bed asleep.

MONDAY MORNING was a time of decision. I wanted to take in the classes of the Department of Religious Education, which meant that I wouldn't be able to take in the prayer services. However, I did get to the early Sunday morning one at the end of the conference. During one hour the Department of Religious Education had scheduled eight classes simultaneously, and I wished I could have cut myself into at least four parts. But we all had to make a decision, and I was torn between two. Should I take the one on children for the benefit of my Blue Birds, or should I take the class on adolescence, the age into which my own two children are developing? After careful deliberation, my kiddies won out. I figured I did know something about children, but I didn't know anything about adolescence, so I spent my time there.

I skipped the 11:00 o'clock class on Monday and dashed home to get at least part of my laundry out of the way, and by the time those who were occupying our recreation room in the basement arrived home at 12:15, I was just emptying my tubs. The sun shone beautifully and I had them all hung, lunch over with, and was back to the Auditorium for the business session. Wednesday morning I skipped the 8:30 class and did what ironing was necessary for my family. These two classes, and one evening preaching service (I was completely fagged out) were the only things on the program I missed. I attended every business session, because I wanted to see what makes our church "tick," but I found out you have to be an elder to learn what really makes it "tick." Most of the actual business is done by the quorums.

At the Wednesday business session, Blair Jensen was called to the office of apostle. I sat back and contemplated the life of this man for whom our son was named. I reiterated the thoughts of fourteen years ago when we conferred the name "Blair" upon our son, that surely a boy of ours could have no better human example to follow than that of Blair Jensen, but now I'm hesitant to continue to express the desire that our boy follow in the footsteps of his namesake. It was with a bit of pride that I realized we had recognized the sterling qualities of this man so many years ago.

A SPIRIT OF UNITY prevailed during the entire conference. The manner in which the hands of the delegates were raised as one when a vote was called was an inspiration to anyone. The drastic changes that were made, the juggling of officers, the switching of appointments, the presentations of new ideas, all might have caused dissention, but the oneness of the whole assembly was a delight to behold. The one announcement which was heartily—almost hilariously—received was that which proclaimed that the next General Conference would be held in 1947.

My guests were a delight. Everyone was congenial and did his share toward keeping the household running smoothly. If someone should tell you that thirteen guests are unlucky, just say it isn't so. Even though many of those who shared our home were strangers upon arriving, there was not one who didn't know someone that someone else in the house knew. One of our guests had gone to college in the town in which we once lived and knew all the folks from the little branch there. Another was from the town where some friends of ours have moved. Another went to Graceland with a friend of one of the other guests. I could go on and on, but we learned definitely that even though our homes were in the four directions of the globe, our friends are their friends, and we still have a common bond which is almost as thick as blood—the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Where ever there are guests, I suppose there are inevitably the "left-behinds." Those that I have collected and don't know to whom they belong include: A camera, a brown rayon sport shirt, a pair of sunglasses (probably 10c variety), a comb, three-quarters of a tube of popular brand tooth paste (now completely used) tooth brush, two handkerchiefs, and one half of two pairs of socks. Owners may have same by writing and letting me know what belongs to them.

It was on the last Sunday morning that I received one of my greatest thrills. (Might I hold the umbrella of humanness over me for a moment?) One of my conference guests presented me with a pair of nylons—my first nylons since right after the war started, and my first pair of new hose since last summer. She had decided that if she got through conference without an accident to the ones she had that she would give the new ones to me.

I saw only one cigarette during the entire conference. Just because a group of young folks were walking along the street between the Auditorium and Stone Church, one girl with a cigarette in her fingers, doesn't necessarily mean they were going from the class in the Auditorium to the classes in Stone Church, does it? It is a free country and other folks can walk that sidewalk, too, can't they? I hope so.

Gems I gathered at conference:

"The power of the devil may rule today, but Christ will reign tomorrow."

"Growth is the only way to become what we want to be." To which I mentally added, "Grow and push through our umbrella of humanness."

"'Crisis' in Chinese is two symbols—opportunity and danger."

"The church needs the help of the three P's: Pastor, Priesthood and Parents."

"Measure your success by what your community asks you to do."

"Many men have been made great by living up to what others expect of them."

Yes, I'm glad I went to General Conference, and I'm going next year, too; but if I expected to rest after this one was over I thought wrong. Immediately I find myself up to my eyebrows in Vacation Church School, with never a moment to catch up on lost rest, to give my house a good going over, or to take a deep breath. They say there is "no rest for the wicked." There can be no rest in Zion, there is something always next to absorb our time, energy, and thoughts; and we carry on in the spirit of unity we absorbed from Conference, 1946.

Obeys the Word of Wisdom

I am glad I answered the beautiful gospel call years ago, and I thank God for having spared my life so far that I might enjoy the blessings known to those who serve him.

I am grateful that there is a God in heaven who hears our prayers and forgives our sins. In an unguarded moment, I frequently say things that are not pleasing to him; afterwards, when I am sorry for my hasty words, I ask to be forgiven.

My desire is to live a good Christian life, so that others may see the joy and peace which come from serving Christ. The dark clouds of life have threatened to settle over me in the past, and it was difficult to live as I knew I should, but I prayed for strength, and my prayer was answered. There are many pitfalls in the pathway of God's people today; they can be overcome by putting Christ and his church first.

We may be strengthened by reading the three standard books and by keeping the word of wisdom. I used to think I couldn't go through the day without tea or coffee, until my husband was taken to the hospital with a cancer on his lip. I promised God if he would heal my loved one I would quit the forbidden drinks unless they were served to me at someone else's home. I kept my word, and not only was my husband made well, but I also began to feel better.

It is my desire to be a Latter Day Saint in deed as well as in name. It does not matter what others say about me, but I pray that I may never say anything to offend others. I need the prayers of God's people, and my prayers are for all.

Appreciation of Friend's Life

I should like to dedicate a few lines of my letter to Alice Wiggins who passed away February 19. She lived a Christian life and was always willing to lend a helping hand in any way she could. Such she lived; such she died; as such she will be remembered by all outside the household of her faith, among whom she lived and labored so many years. She was kindly, cheerful, loyal to every true friend. She became a member of the Reorganized Church early in life, and remained faithful to it always. I hope I may live my life as worthily as she lived hers.

I am a shut-in, under the care of a doctor. I hope the Saints will pray for me that I might be healed. I shall be glad to hear from any who care to write.

On Fortunetelling

There was a time when I went to fortunetellers, but I always had a fear of hearing something that might worry me, so before the teller began I would say, "Now if you see any trouble, don't tell me because I do not want to be worried over it."

My father warned me that fortunetelling was of the Devil, but I could not see it that way. I did, however, begin to feel doubtful as to whether or not it was right. One day I came across this verse in the Bible: "And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her master much gain by soothsaying; . . . And this she did many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour. And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers."—Acts 16: 16, 18, 19, Inspired Version.

A few years ago I had a dream which I remember as plainly as if it were now. In the dream I was standing in the doorway of a room in which a woman was sitting on something low, with cards spread out before her on a box, telling fortunes. She invited me to come in and have mine told, but I refused. All the time the power that was trying to force me to have my fortune told became so strong that I felt as if an invisible person was actually pushing me into the room, and I had to hang on to the casing to keep from being forced in. At this point I said to the woman, "No, I won't!" and that very instant the forcing power left me, and I was free to run from the house.

I think this dream had a meaning, not only to discourage fortunetelling, but to warn that evil is always present for us to fight against, and the more we hesitate to do right, the stronger the opposition becomes.

While writing this the following verse comes to my mind, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."—James 4: 7. This has been proved to me in the above dream, as well as other instances, that evil influences lose their power when confronted with an absolute refusal to heed them.

LAMONI STAKE

PASTORS AND PRIESTHOOD SCHOOL.

—The opening of the Lamoni Stake Pastors' and Priesthood School on Sunday, March 3, brought to a focus more than two years of preparatory work among stake leaders. Class outlines are planned in advance for two meetings a month for a two-year period. More than one hundred men of the priesthood of the stake reported for the first session. The attendance record has been sustained at subsequent meetings.

PRE-CONFERENCE MEETINGS.—Two evening sessions held Sunday, March 31, and Wednesday, April 3, were devoted to preparing the membership for General Conference. Counsel was based on the "Letter of Instruction of 1912." Lamoni Stake's report was subject for discussion. Simulating the General Conference business sessions, an issue was brought to vote on the floor in the Sunday evening church session. Conference appointments "in little" were enacted in the call to Lamoni group pastors and workers who would take their new appointments at the beginning of the church year after General Conference. The Wednesday evening meeting was keynoted in prayer for the guidance of the conference, and the declaration of individual intentions.

LAMONI'S NEW CHURCH.—Lamoni's need for a new church is not merely a local problem. The need is particularly apparent during the college school year, but in Lamoni itself, church attendance is on the upswing. On Easter morning when the college group met separately in the chapel on the hill, the deacons reported that after all available seating space in the Coliseum was taken, about seventy persons were turned away. PROJECTS.—The stake Zion's League Council met in May to discuss a League program for the coming months. The entire council was present, and discussion was centered around the setting up of regional work. The stake has been divided into three regions, each having a director and council. These regional activities are to supplement the stake activities and form a closer relationship with the various groups of young people in the stake. Plans for the barn rally to be held June 15 and 16, the reunion, and other activities were also discussed.

The newly organized young adult movement has met on two occasions to formulate plans for the young adult retreat scheduled for June 8 and 9 at Gardner's Lake.

Stake departmental leaders met at the home of Stake President Ward A. Hougas in Warrensburg on the evening of May 9 to discuss plans for the coming reunion to be held at Gardner's Lake, August 3 to 11. Details for programs and activities were worked out.

The young adults are studying The Enduring Word by Christiana Salyards; four different teachers take alternate turns in presenting the lessons.

Smith during the party. Upon opening the socks a total of $67.67 was obtained for the fund.

MAYWOOD MISSION.—A branch institute was held on March 17 with District President Joseph Baldwin in charge. Lunch was served at noon by the women, after which a prayer service and round-table discussion were held on the theme, "What Can We Do to Improve Our Mission." Our Departed Ones

SHARP.—Leavinia Vincent, was born March 29, 1875, at Brazil, Indiana, and passed away April 4 at Springfield, Illinois. She became a member of the Reorganized Church early in life, and remained loyal to her covenant until death. She was married to John Sharp at Higbee, Missouri, on June 25, 1891; two children were born to this union. After the passing of her companion some eight months ago, her health began to fail. At times her suffering was intense, yet she bore her burden with faith and Christian fortitude.

Surviving are a son, William Sharp, and daughter, Mrs. Goldie Lemke, of Springfield, Illinois; two brothers: William Vincent of Jacksonville, Oregon, and Joseph Vincent of Los Angeles, California; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted from the Bisch Memorial Home in Springfield, Elder F. T. Mussell of Des Moines, Iowa, officiating. Burial was in the Oak Ridge Cemetery.

SPRAGUE.—Amelia Ellen, was born October 4, 1865, at Omaha, Nebraska, and died at Nevada, Missouri, on April 28. She was the last surviving child of George and Mary Sylvester, nine brothers and sisters having preceded her in death. She was baptized at Omaha in 1886, and was married the following year to Frederick M. Sprague; six daughters and one son survive. She was an active worker for the church as long as she was able; her church was the joy of her life.

Surviving are her daughters: Blanche A. Carpenter, Independence, Missouri; Hazel E. Baer, Riley, Kansas; Mary Janette Moore, Los Angeles, California; Alice A. Beedle of Pasadena, California; and Ethel L. Davis, Kansas City, Missouri; a son, Frederick A. Sprague, also of Kansas City; six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. Frederick A. Smith was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

OLSON.—Thomas, was born in Norway on August 20, 1866, and died in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, on March 1. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 22, 1933. In the same month, he was united in marriage to Gale Hays, who preceded him in death exactly three months to the day. He became a citizen of the United States, as well as a citizen of the kingdom of God.

No immediate relatives survive, but he leaves a host of friends to mourn his loss. Services were held at the Pierce Mortuary in Los Angeles, California, Elder Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in the Inglewood cemetery.

Announcements

Reunion notices will be found in the Bulletin Board department at the back of this issue.

News Briefs have replaced the former department News of the Church, as an emergency measure due to the shortage of paper and reduction of pages. We shall be glad to hear from readers as to how they like the new form.

Some readers have offered the suggestion that, because Herald issues are so much smaller, the price should be lowered and a refund made to subscribers. There are two reasons why this will not work. First, we plan to return to thirty-two pages as soon as possible. Second, if we were able to put out all thirty-two page editions, we would be under heavy pressure to raise the subscription rate on account of increased cost.

* EVAN A. FRY. Friends will be sorry to learn that Brother Fry, our Radio Director, and author of many articles for our publication, is back in the Sanitarium in an effort to complete his recovery from the respiratory trouble that has bothered him during the past few months. His condition is not dangerous, but uncomfortable. He is cheerful and able to receive company. We believe that he should be able to effect recovery this time. . . . It had been our plan to present his articles on "The Restoration" continuously, and regret that the continued paper shortage makes it necessary for us to have only sixteen pages, so that a brief break in the series is unavoidable. After this week, we hope to continue them in the next issue.

* NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL, our popular author of "Challenges" and many other articles, sends us a picture post card from Cholula, Mexico. With her family she is visiting in Mexico City, and writes: "Greetings from Mexico once again. It seemed like home to be getting back. So many things have changed in only one year's absence." Norma Anne has been a student of Spanish for a number of years, and is able to talk with the people in it. She has made a number of trips to Mexico, is interested in archaeology, and visits the remains in which the country there abounds. It seems to us she has picked a great and fascinating hobby. Probably we shall hear something of her experiences in future articles.

* NEW PENS

Up from fascist Argentina came a radical new idea in fountain pens: oil instead of water as a base for the ink, and a ball bearing instead of a writing point. American manufacturers, like the Japanese, are good imitators, and already two companies have models on the market.

The number of people sporting these glamorous new pens reminds us of John Common, the perpetual student, in our college days. John always had a pocketful of pens and pencils. He was ready for any literary problem that might arrive, but he never had anything to write. No ideas ever troubled him; but if they had, he would certainly have been ready for them!

Writers' magazines never tire of the amusing story of rich dilettantes who furnish elaborate and luxurious studios, with electric typewriters and latest equipment, only to discover that they have nothing to write, while the genius who has something to say may be found scribbling it out with the stub of an advertising pencil, recovered from a wastebasket.

Uncle Joe has found that no matter how good a pen he buys, his writing remains bad—just the same old hen tracks.

What the American people need is not better pens, but better penmanship. When somebody has that for sale, he will find a large and eager market.

* "IN THE GROOVE" is just a rut that has been laid out with a chalk line and smoothed down by somebody else.

* ONE IS IMPRESSED by the number of sinners who are willing to forgive but not to repent.

Signs of the Times

From the inception of the Restoration Movement there appeared prophetic indications of a "great and dreadful day of the Lord." Joseph Smith said his angelic visitor quoted the third chapter of Malachi, with certain and significant changes, that before that day priesthood would be restored by the hand of Elijah. He also quoted another verse, suggesting universal destruction of the human race at his coming except among those in whose hearts should be planted the promises made to their fathers.

In the Lord's preface to the Doctrine and Covenants, the Saints of this day were told because of "the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth," he had commanded Joseph Smith and others to proclaim "these things unto the world"; that soon peace would be taken from the earth, and the Devil would have power over his own dominion.

One who believes in the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith would be naïve indeed who could review present conditions and fail to discover the imminence of the events foretold by Malachi. The present dispensation rapidly approaches—what? Either a Utopian world or a condition of chaos and anarchy never before witnessed. How should we resolve it? Shall we out of wishful thinking believe there will be the universal peace attempted through the United Nations? or shall we recognize as almost immediately threatening the terrible conditions foretold by the prophets of all dispensations?

The undersigned inclines strongly to the belief that our duty is to continue to "warn" the world. We do not do so under the impulsion of a hopeless pessimism; but with the belief in the divine mission of the church because, first, the gospel which was taught to Adam, and which was decreed should be in the world until the end thereof, has been restored. The promises made to the fathers have again been planted in the hearts of the children of men; and concurrently with this planting—this restoration of the gospel, the priesthood has been revealed or restored.

Therefore, in full faith in the divinity of the church and the authority of the priesthood of the church, by a careful observance to do the will of God, we have the institution through which and through which only the Lord's salvation can be fully operative and effective. Let us carry on, first, to hold out the warning voice—preaching of the gospel, seeking the perfection of the Saints to the extent of our ability, in order that we unlike many of the peoples of the earth, shall not be "wasted at His coming."

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

A Stimulating Challenge

As will have been anticipated, many congratulatory messages have been received by the First Presidency since adjournment of General Conference, with an occasional challenge. The congratulations are warming, the challenges stimulating, and at the same time humbling.

Among the latter none have been more searching than the following, from one of our clear-headed associates in the general church ministry:

In the portentous times which surround us and face us in the immediate future, you have been designated and chosen to lead the Church of Jesus Christ. In this grave responsibility and onerous task I give to you the pledge of my daily prayers, my co-operative support, and brotherly loyalty.

Today is a crucial day in our church life. The forces of evil are rampant without and within the church. The procedures and endeavors of the past may have brought us nearer the realization of the kingdom; but it is evident that they call for your critical review and constructive recommendations. It may be that we have lost sight of some eternal truths and fundamental procedures, and stand in need of a continuing restoration. It may be that the insidious process of apostasy is at work within us. It may be that our ideals are so glamorous that we fail to undergird them with tested realities, so that each piece of construction brings us nearer the realization of our goals.

Yours is the primary task to bring experience and insight to the present—with incisive candor. Yours is the responsibility to give prophetic leadership to the future—with practical vision. Yours is the joy to infuse through the church the spirit of power with deepening assurance and conviction.

In these challenging responsibilities the Twelve, the Bishopric, the high priesthood, the ministry and the people each must share. Help them to see clearly the path you travel, that we all may be comrades with you on the way upward.

We bring you our congratulations and greetings with the deep assurance of our willingness to share the load with co-operative endeavor.

To put it bluntly, our fellow minister, observing that we as a people have not attained to the purposes of the Restoration, asks why, and presses the question pointedly and insistently.

Is it that whereas in our ideals we should have been practical, we have been visionary?

Is it that we have lost sight of some fundamental procedure basic to implementing the truth in our life? Or of some truth itself, which ought not thus to have been held as if for a time only, when all truth is eternal? Who stand in need now as at the first, and ever shall be in need of a continuing restoration? Continuing in the sense that in the measure attained the power of the truth is to be maintained, indeed increased, as understanding of its significance in our life expands, and demands it.

Or, is there at work within us some insidious force of apostasy?

What a challenge is this! And let no one of us draw back from the word apostasy: for any lapse from light that has been ours is in its very nature apostate; and any failure to rise to the full light of the latter-day evangel leaves us by that much yet in the apostasy.

Nor can we lay claim, anyone of us, or the group of us, as having attained to the whole of the truth, either in life or in procedure; who are as yet in bondage of evil, our Zion unrealized, our people scattered and in want in many lands, our testimony feeble, and our ministry inadequate for the demands in, as well as outside the church.

And there is no question but that we have been in some considerable measure visionary, when we ought to have been practical, both in concept and implementation of the gospel as the power of God unto the salvation of mankind.

Now our good brother is to be sustained in placing squarely on the shoulders of the Presidency responsibility for prophetic leadership, with a view to delivering our cause and people from the inadequacy that has held them and it from the achievement of the purposes of the Restoration. And this responsibility we acknowledge, and in earnestness shall endeavor to discharge to the good of all.

Nor are we left to work alone; for as indicated, "In these challenging responsibilities" towards the ends desired, "the Twelve, the Bishopric, the high priesthood, the ministry, and the people each must share."

For this clear vision we are grateful. By its challenge we are made alert for the tasks ahead. In association with our fellows, we are hopeful. Of the blessing of God, we are assured. And it is our determination to go forward as we have the light to see and the strength to carry on.

J. F. GARVER.

It is much easier to be critical than to be correct.—Disraeli.

Members for Society of Archaeological Research

The Society for Archaeological Research, through its executive committee, was authorized by the last General Conference to select up to twenty associate members. The executive committee is, therefore, interested in obtaining the name, address, and information about anyone who is a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints who would like to qualify as an associate member. We would like to have such write the society in care of the Auditorium, giving us information as to what they have done in the past in archaeological research, and what contribution they think they could make. An associate member should be one who can and will devote time and effort to making a contribution. We would like to have associate members, for instance, be expert in some one field, such as hieroglyphics, or accumulate information and be the best informed in the church, and thus make available for the library of the society facts on some specific site or ruin such as Palenque, Piedras Negras, etc.

Good Newspaper Publicity for Churches

Elder William Patterson, in charge of the work in Spring River and Rich Hill districts, sends copies of pages of the Fort Scott Tribune (Kansas) for May 14, 16, and 17, giving fine front-page publicity to the church young people's two-day regional convention in that city. Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Religious Education for the church, was a featured speaker, and Franklyn S. Weddle made an important musical contribution in bringing the KMBC radio choir to the convention. Miss Rosalie Martin, publicity director for the meeting, and one of our young people's leaders of Fort Scott, did an excellent piece of work in these newspaper articles.

We have received from a number of cities examples like this of fine publicity for the church and its activities. As more of our young people, returning from Graceland College and other institutions of higher learning, with the training that helps them to know how to handle these matters, enter into local church work, better results are obtained.

In years of experience and observation, we have noted some measures that any congregation can take for obtaining better publicity for the church. They are as follows:

1. Improve the local public relations in every way possible. When asked to co-operate with other churches, service clubs, and civic organizations, do so as fully as possible. Prove your interest in the city and efforts of others to do good. Be sympathetic and interested in others, and when you need help, they will help you. This will produce results over the years, but you cannot expect great results in the first week or month.

2. Advertise your meetings and activities in the local paper. If possible, let your church advertise its meetings every week. When you buy space in the paper, give it your support, and urge your congregation to look for publicity and announcements there, you may be sure that the editor will know you are interested in his paper and in the city. Then when you need publicity for special occasions, he will know you and be friendly. "If you want a friend you must be a friend," applies to newspapers too.

3. With this background, when special occasions and programs come, you have already established good public relationships. Announce your special meeting with a paid advertisement. Then get in touch with the editor or reporter, and give him all the basic information and be ready to answer any questions. Leave it to him to write the article, if he prefers it that way. You can have the main facts in written form so that mistakes will be avoided. Or, if the editor prefers, be prepared to write the material yourself. If so, observe the following rules carefully.

4. Leave out propaganda and history. Leave out any controversial matter, unless the editor is interested in the history and asks for it. Then be prepared to give it.

5. Take the local viewpoint. The editor is interested in the local people, their names, and what they are doing in the program. In general, our church headquarters mean little to him. Local names and local people give his paper its support. Keep your mind on the local angle. Play up the visiting speakers and leaders, but emphasize what they are doing locally.

6. Condense your material to the essential information. A short story may make the front page where a long one will be pushed to the back, cut down, or omitted entirely when a hurried editor just can't give time to it. Leave out all flowery language, long eulogies, and excess.

7. Be appreciative. Get your people to read the material. Express your thanks to the editor if yours is a small city and you meet him personally.

8. Remember that a newspaper is a business, and that it has to survive by local good will and support. When any group of people give it their support, and help the editor and his reporters to succeed, he and his staff will be grateful and co-operative.

The Church Moves Forward

A sermon delivered to the General Conference, April 14, 1946

Jesus said unto him, Thou has said; nevertheless I say unto you hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven.—Matthew 26: 65.

IN THE SCRIPTURE reading, we find one of the most tragic experiences of our Lord and Savior, out of which came one of the most important pronouncements—that referred to in my text; it pointed to the ultimate accomplishment, the final consummation of his ministry; for he was to overcome death through the resurrection, and sit on the right hand of God.

When this statement was made, the betrayal by Judas—the betrayal with a kiss—had just taken place. But despite the frailty of humankind, despite the loss of friends and even of his disciples (for it was here also that Peter denied his Lord and Savior)—despite this, he moved forward in the fulfillment of his mission.

Had God so willed, all of this could have been accomplished without the difficulties encountered in the training and development of the human soul. But it was his great purpose to teach, to train, and to develop man into the eternal and immortal state which would result in companionship with him.

We are reminded of the eternal purposes of God as we approach the anniversary days of his crucifixion and resurrection. We are reminded of the example that he set for us in respect to the agency which he imposed upon himself and which he likewise imposed upon us; for just prior to his crucifixion, and soon following the hour of his betrayal, when he was spending time with his disciples attempting to convey to them the great purpose of his ministry, there must have come the human impulse to call upon that power which would have preserved him from his enemies, and from personal destruction. We find him conscious of this power, for he questions, "Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels."

However, drawing upon that spiritual strength available to him from his Heavenly Father, he was able to withstand and to suffer that which must be for the fulfillment of Scripture. And there came later the pronouncement, "Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven."

HE PROPHESED of his ultimate triumph and, as the records bear evidence of this having come to pass, there should also come the assurance to us that the establishment of his kingdom will be realized: "and again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto the nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."—Matthew 24: 32.

There came the revelation of the "great and marvelous work" which was "about to come forth," recorded in Section 11 of the Doctrine and Covenants, and in harmony with the commandment given in Matthew 28: 17-19, that his disciples should go forth teaching all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he commanded them, with the promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

IT IS IMPORTANT, as we come to the closing hours of this conference, for us to evaluate what has been done in the light of the great and eternal purposes of God. We have experienced, during this conference, an abundance of the assurance of

Presiding Bishop of the Church

God's presence, and we have been reminded of the fulfillment of his promise, "Lo, I am with you always." We have been made conscious that we are entering a new era of immense responsibility for teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ; and our endeavors have been centered on the broad objectives that were so clearly pointed out by our great leader, the late President Smith, for he saw clearly the larger goals ahead of us, as was pointed out from time to time, manifested some impatience in respect to our seeming inability to make the desired progress. But to the goals of evangelization and of the establishment of Zion he was constantly committed.

He also expressed his faith in the ultimate accomplishment of these goals by the church, irrespective of temporary setbacks and a temporary lack of individual contributions of time and talents. Upon one of the rare occasions when we were commiserating, one with the other because of the burden of the loads carried, he turned to me saying, "Leslie, I am sure the church will move forward, without either of us, for it is the work of God. It is our responsibility to adjust ourselves to it and to make our contribution." This was one of those times—few in number, but deeply appreciated—when he spoke to me—as would a father to a son.

And so it is with each of us, the greatness of the work makes apparent our subordination to it, and our responsibility to contribute to the best of our ability. This is essential because of the many tasks yet to be done, incident to the establishment of the kingdom; we therefore face the new period wherein there must be co-ordination of effort to the end that these goals may be realized.

THERE ARE the unfinished tasks which are apparent as we review the law and commandments given to us as a church:

It must needs be necessary that ye save all the money that ye can . . . to make a commencement to lay the foundation of the city.—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.

In this revelation we have a record of the instructions given to the Saints of the early Restoration Movement to make a commencement to lay the foundation of the city, to begin the gathering of the families according to circumstances and as appointed by the Presidency and the Bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments.

This establishes the premise upon which the foundation was to be laid, and the superstructure of Zion erected. It is quite in contradiction to the theory that has been expressed by some individuals that the work of building the kingdom was to be largely left to the manifestation of divine power, rather than to the placing of responsibility upon individuals and upon the church. It is in harmony with the divine will that men shall create, shall build, shall organize, thus giving expression to that spark of divinity which is resident within man, which makes him like God, his Father, the great Creator, the great Builder.

THE PROCESSES by which Zion was to be builded have been quite clearly outlined, the blueprint laid out, and the framework started. The objectives to be attained were those clearly presented in the revelations which came to the church; in their general aspects these have to do with the gathering of God's people and the organization of their economical life, giving major consideration to the development of a social, cultural, and spiritual life that would be reflective of the divine intellect.

Incorporated within organizations were to be the provisions through which could be expressed the love of men, one for another; accountability to God; the management of temporal possessions as a stewardship, recognizing the ownership of God, while at the same time being conscious of the right of individual agency.

In Section 42: 2 we find reiteration of the specific goals which challenge us re-emphasized in latter-day revelation—and ye shall go forth in the power of my spirit, preaching my gospel two by two, in my name; lift up your voices as with the voice of a trump, declaring my word like unto angels of God. And ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

This is still the great missionary task of the church, and one to which we must give constant and intelligent attention.

THE IMPORTANT STEPS needed to be taken are those of making plans and developing a program of training for our ministry, both general church appointees and local. A continuation of our present policies (those policies which emanated out of the constructive thinking and pervasive light that came to the councils of the church when faced with the crisis of 1931) having to do with the financing of the church and the application of funds to provide for the training and full-time appointment of men, should, from this point forward, speedily increase our numerical strength, for the foundation has been laid, and upon this foundation we can build safely and surely.

There are also other objectives. The gathering of our people must be related to the work of preaching the gospel. Branches must be established, pastors trained, the priesthood developed, and a teaching program of the law, as well as methods of application. All of these processes must be unified and the gathering procedure stabilized in accordance with our ability to draw from outlying points, and not to make that withdrawal of such character as to weaken our outposts. It is, therefore, highly essential that the individual relate his own movements to those of the church and conserve the interests of both.

Other fundamentals of the law are to be compiled with more fully than has been our experience in the past. The commandment to remember the poor is to be realized to a greater extent than ever before: this, due to the fact that the segregation of oblation funds has created a resource which will make it possible for the church to minister efficiently, and in a broader way than ever before. Some evidence of efforts being put forth in an organized way was seen in the picture which portrayed the work of the Campus Shop, a fine demonstration of the results that can be attained when a group of our people work together in the interests of those less fortunate than most. The work of this group of women is commended most highly.

We have emphasized during the conference the need for the individual to stand in the place of his stewardship, and to qualify himself for greater service, both in his temporal and economic affairs, and in his contribution to the church as well; but there is still too large a number not complying with the elementary steps of the financial law. The keeping of the law is still of primary importance.

THE PROGRAM for the acquisition of land areas is still one largely of the future, but one, nevertheless, that is receiving the constant and careful attention of the Bishopric. Related to it, and to the gathering, is the establishment of the storehouse. While it would be encouraging and stimulating to suggest that this is an immediate possibility, the facts do not permit such a statement, for we are becoming more and more aware of the limitations imposed upon us because of the deficiency of our numerical strength and the availability of trained personnel. Establishment of the storehouse is dependent upon the consecration of surplus, and will require an increase of economic strength on the part of our members. Despite our limitations, however, the opportunities are greater than ever before in our experience, and it is within our power to make great progress in this new era.

This is a period which must be marked by a revival of missionary interest, while at the same time the techniques of spiritual ministry must be improved to such an extent that individual members are guided into those avenues of service which will make their work count for the most possible.

Hence, our task is one of expansion of endeavor, and one of assisting the individual member to make a more perfect contribution. It seems safe to say that this new era is to be marked by greater emphasis upon our missionary endeavors. The reorganization of the Presidency indicates this. Such is essential to the very life of the church.

The foundation of the city requires the gathering of families, the accumulation of resources, the purchasing of lands—all according to the laws and commandments received; but basic to all of this there must be compliance with that commandment "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

And in addition to this, there must be as never before a renewed dedication and consecration on the part of each of us to the building of the kingdom of God. When we look at our own contribution in the light of the supreme sacrifice made by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, these sacrifices of time, energy, finances, of all those things which make life pleasant and enjoyable sink into insignificance; and the great needs of humanity throughout the entire world, so stupendous in size and so apparent to all, present to us the challenge that places our individual desires and ambitions in the background, and calls for a moving forward to the attainment of the great goals of the church. If we will but remember the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway," there shall come assurance of God's Holy Spirit and evidence of his divine power. Then we can envision Christ sitting on the right hand of power—of God still in control, and still directing the destiny of his church and of his people.—The church moves forward.

God's Handwriting

A Testimony for President
Israel Smith

By James F. Keir

Onetime Member of the Presiding
Bishopric.

ON ACCOUNT OF the illness of my aged mother I was unable to attend the opening session of the General Conference when Brother Israel Smith was selected to be the President of the Church.

For the benefit of the present and future generations I will relate that this is the fulfillment of a dream that Brother Israel told me, over twenty-five years ago, that he had. He is a modest man, and would hesitate to speak out in public to relate things in support of himself.

God sometimes uses a dream as a medium to point out future events to men. Joseph of old was warned in a dream to take the Christ child to a place of safety as there were those who sought the young child's life. Psychologists may state that some dreams are only the projection of our own thoughts. But when the dream is fulfilled with no initiative of the dreamer, but by the unanimous decision of the representatives of 130,000 people, we can choose to believe in the divinity of the dream.

In the dream Israel saw himself standing looking at Frederick M.

Smith's picture on the wall, when suddenly his own picture was moved up from below and placed beside that of the late President.

Israel related this dream to Fred M., who then asked, "Was Elbert's picture there also?" Apparently the question in Brother Fred's mind was, "Does this indicate that he is to be a counselor or a successor?" To this Israel replied, "I do not know."

At the time that Israel related this dream to me, I felt confident that it portrayed his future work as President.

How happy we should be to have a man of such sterling character, spiritual excellence, and humility to fill this important station in carrying forward the banner of Christ.

From an Isolated Saint

I enjoy the Herald very much and would be lost without its fine sermons and testimonies. Being isolated from the Saints, I always find spiritual food in reading church literature. One must have something in which to believe when the world is in such a tumultuous condition. I know this work is true; I have belonged to the church forty-two years and do not regret a minute of it, still I feel that I need the prayers of the Saints. God has been good to me; he has blessed me financially so that I have been able to pay my tithes and make frequent offerings. My testimony is that if we are obedient, God will bless us abundantly.

I am writing to thank all those at General Conference who so kindly remembered me in their prayers. I have had many wonderful blessings through prayer and fasting, which I have done going on five years, three times a week. I have had many trials, but have always found many comforting moments reading my patriarchal blessing. I am glad to belong to a church in which Christ's Spirit is among his children. With the help of God and the prayers of the Saints, I sincerely desire to go forward in the work of our Heavenly Father.

The Gospel Rests on Facts

DOCTRINE

Enough, perhaps has been said upon this point. But there is also the question of the corruption of doctrine. The Roman Catholic position is that the church is the repository of truth, and the Christ equipped it with such powers as to make it infallible, when he said, "Upon this rock." According to this view, he made the church, for all time, absolutely uncorruptible. Further, there was a deposit of tradition, unknown to the laity, which admitted of development, and every doctrine subsequently defined and recorded was incipient from the days of the apostles. Cardinal Newman stated this position thus: "Every Catholic holds, that the Christian dogmas were in the church from the time of the Apostles; that they were ever in their substance what they are now; that they existed before the formulas were publicly adopted, in which as time went on they were defined and recorded."

Thus the doctrines of papal infallibility—which certainly restrains conscience and crushes free inquiry—Immaculate Conception—purgatory and transubstantiation were all promulgated as developments of what was forever in the deposit of Christian tradition. False credentials were forged to prove the primacy of the Bishop of Rome. We do not have time, of course, and neither does the scope of these lectures admit of the right to investigate and refute these doctrines. We are simply pointing out that new elements were unquestionably introduced in the doctrinal field which served to substantiate the Roman practice. Of these, Charles Gore says:

There was demonstrably nothing implicit in that tradition to the effect that the primacy of Peter among the apostles was inherited by divine right by the Bishop of Rome—still less that he was endowed with monarchical authority or infallibility. Such a doctrine was there neither in terms nor "in substance." The Greek-speaking Church neither recognized this as tradition nor ever came to acknowledge it as a legitimate claim. Nor does Scripture suggest it. This is as certain as history can make it. So, again, there was no tradition about a purgatory in the intermediate state and really nothing in Scripture about it. Again, though the Church always believed that the bread and wine in the eucharist became the body and blood of Christ in some real sense, there was nothing in Scripture or tradition to suggest that the substance of bread and wine ceased to exist by the consecration of the elements, and on the other hand, there was a strong tradition in the contrary sense. Finally, there was nothing even remotely suggesting that Mary was immaculately conceived. Accordingly it is a certain conclusion that, if all that the Church has the right to do is to make explicit in language what has always been substantially present in the tradition from the days of the apostles, the Roman dogma concerning transubstantiation, and the dogma affirming purgatory under anathema, and the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, and the dogma concerning the Bishop of Rome, are as dogmas certainly illegitimate.

INEQUALITY

One more point is to be observed as touching the fact of apostasy. Every creditable historian states that in the church of the early middle ages abject poverty existed alongside lavish wealth. Ignorance and superstition constituted the fertile ground in which oppression of mind and persecution of body grew and flourished. In theory the Church of Rome held that it was the kingdom of God on earth. In actual practice, it denied its claims by the ungodly conditions which followed its rule. Even when the conscience of men was aroused sufficiently, and when the rediscovery of ancient cultures in the Renaissance and the voyage of Columbus opened to men the New World and precipitated the Reformation, the church, or I might say, the churches, were content to go about upon the industrial battlefield with an ambulance cart, and a signally inefficient ambulance cart and nally inefficient ambulance cart at that, and try to pick up the wounded. It did absolutely nothing to reform the spirit in which business was done. Business and religion had nothing to do one with the other. Thus in the field of social relations the church lost the spirit of the Master. And, we have only to point to the two great wars to see the fulfillment of the prophecy of Nephi, "that the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots."

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

I have not attempted here to fix dates, times, or seasons. In the last generation this was attempted by Elder McGregor and by others. Whatever merit such approach may have, it has never appealed to me as convincing. What does seem to be irrefutable is that men who came into the church, and who gradually gained control of its machinery so far departed from the Spirit of the Master in ways clearly pointed out in the foregoing, as to make absolutely necessary a fresh revelation from heaven—a restoration. In doctrine, in practice, in authority and in the results of their endeavor, the Roman Catholic Church has, beyond all shadow of historical doubt, passed into the night of degradation and is now undergoing and awaiting the further inevitable judgments which apostasy always brings.

THE FACTS OF THE RESTORATION

We come now to the last phase of our brief survey.

There are two ways in which the life and ideals of great leaders may be perpetuated. One is by the creation of literature in which such ideals may be embodied—the written word; and the other is through the formulation of a society which shall be equipped to carry forward lives and their purposes. We have seen that ancient Israel produced a living literature, and that the kingdom ideal, which this literature enunciated, was to be embodied in the nation, as the elect through whom Jehovah was to bless other peoples. So far as we know Jesus only wrote once, and that writing was in the sand; it was washed away by the first tide thereafter. But Christ did found a society, by training special witnesses of his name, into whose very nature he wrote his own testament, by engaging and stating certain definite ordinances—baptism and the Eucharist, and by equipping his followers with a divine spirit which was to be the harbinger of the new life to come, and conformity to the demands of which was to ensure the right kind of perpetuation of his ideals and of his purposes. After all, revelation, as we have seen, is much more than word. It is not lawful to utter the inner secrets of the sanctuary, even though one might be exalted through his personal righteousness to receive the secrets. And so Jesus trusted to the provisions which he himself made, which were gathered up in the great prayer, "I pray for those that thou hast given me out of the world, Father, that they might be one, that the world may know that thou hast sent me."

But, as we have already seen, later generations were not true to the demands of the spirit, and they altered the ordinances, and substituted in the place of the divine order of the church, an approximation of the Roman Empire, both its form and its spirit.

And so, when the arbitrament of time revealed the inadequacies of what men had done and so soon as the movement of history made possible the restoration of man's agency, God moved again to commit to earth what had been removed, or what had departed from the ken of mankind. What facts do we have to support the great claims of this church? The answer is twofold. The production of a sacred literature, which, based upon the principle of the renewed operation of Christ's Spirit among men, is not yet complete, and secondly, the approximation by men in these last days of the forms and ordinances of the divine society, which divine society is to be the organ of Christ's Spirit to reveal his testimony to men, as formerly the nation of Israel was to be the custodian of the divine ideal of society so many years ago. Indeed, the church of these last days is designated as "Israel, mine elect . . ."

Let us turn then, to the literature first. I was talking some years ago to the Honorable James R. Wilkinson, now Consul-General in Dakar. Our conversation drifted to a discussion of the mission of Joseph Smith, and he said in effect, "You know, Oakman, many explanations have been given of the origin of the Book of Mormon; but none explain it so fully as the one given by Joseph Smith himself. The scope and breadth of that work, together with the historical perspective it enshrines, are beyond the ordinary intelligence." These are not his exact words, but the import of what he said is in them. I think we may take for granted that many of the theories such as that which grew up around the Solomon Spaulding Romance are now rejected by all competent historians. And as we turn from the speculations rife outside the church, and listen again to the testimony of the witnesses we are assured within our souls, that here, as in the testimony of Christ's resurrection, we are in the presence of reality.

I ought to read this testimony to you.

THE TESTIMONY OF THREE WITNESSES

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

AND ALSO THE TESTIMONY OF EIGHT WITNESSES

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of this work, has shewn unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shewn unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world, to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

"We have seen the plates."

"We have seen the engravings which are upon the plates."

"We declare—with words of soberness—that an angel of God came down from heaven."

"We have seen and hefted."

I like that word hefted. Here is Webster on the word:

1. The act or effort of heaving . . .
2. Weight, ponderousness . . .
3. The greater part, or bulk of anything . . .
4. To PROVE or TRY THE WEIGHT OF, by raising.

To get the meaning of that fully, we should have to illustrate. These men handled the plates, and hefted them—that is—they "proved" or "tried" them by "heaving them up and down." They wanted to be sure of the reality. I think we may accept their testimony as fact that the plates existed, were in the possession of Smith. As to the divinity of the record, and the exactitude of the translation, we shall have to go to the Book of Mormon itself. The miraculous events recorded here may give presumptive evidence of the validity of the claims of Smith—but the only final proof is in the testimony of the Spirit which is embodied in the literature itself, and flows, as we can by experience prove, to all those who approach it with an open mind. The fact of the Book of Mormon is a base or a cornerstone on which our edifice is erected. I do not care to go into the various Scriptural proofs, the archaeological evidence, and the internal prophetic validity of the book. I am here concerned alone to point out that the very fact of its existence is of first magnitude in the presentation of our message; and we have, in fact, suffered lamentably because of our neglect of it in our ministrations abroad.

Secondly, there was organized, upon the sixth of April, 1830, a church. Already two men had testified to the restoration of divine authority to perform the ordinance of baptism again, and nine people had, presumably from the historical evidence, come under this covenant. The law of the State of New York required that there be six in number, and so this number was assembled upon the stated day. Already fourteen or fifteen documents had come from the pen of Smith claiming to be inspirational in import, and thus we see, another body of literature was in process of gestation. This later became known as the Doctrine and Covenants, which is the body of doctrine and covenants and the discipline of the church.

This book is peculiarly the property of the church, and its emergence presupposes church organization. It is at once the guide to the expansion of the church, and the property of the church. The organization which produced this literature has been called into existence to bring forth the kingdom of God. The principles which are outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants are essentially those which were presented by the early prophets of Israel, and here they are explained, broadened, and interpreted into modern language. The fact of the Doctrine and Covenants and the fact of the church which has produced it are facts upon which the gospel is based; in addition to this, there is the testimony of a great company of people who live in the light and work for the coming kingdom.

In another peculiar sense, the Holy Scriptures have been re-evaluated in the light of the spirit and inspiration, and the Reorganized Church has this version as an added testimony of the divinity of its calling. One great fact about this book should be observed as attesting to the inspiration which was responsible for its coming forth. Up until the late 1860's, the book "Song of Solomon" in the authorized edition of the Old Testament was regarded as sacred literature and was interpreted as being an allegorical statement of Christ's love for his church. This book was entirely omitted from Joseph Smith's Inspired Version. It was omitted in a day when the evaluation which I have just stated widely prevailed. Since 1860 scholars have been to work on the foundational literature of Israel in relation to the historical background, and they have come to the conclusion that the Song of Solomon represented nothing more than a sentimental love letter written by Solomon to some illegitimate love in the northern part of his kingdom. This may, of course, only be a straw in the wind, but it is a substantial one and it does indicate which way the wind blew.

We shall do well to take our stand as preachers and as ministers upon the facts which can be authentically substantiated in history, and preach our gospel, testifying of these facts, and the reasonable inference which can be drawn from them and which can be carried forward prophetically, to confirm the hope of those who come under the sound of our voices.

The gospel rests on facts.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the concluding installment of the present article. It will be followed by another article in the series, which will be entitled, "The Nature of Revelation." L. J. L.)

Misery is so little appertaining to our nature, and happiness so much so, that we in the same degree of illusion only lament over that which has pained us, but leave unnoticed that which has rejoiced us.—Richter.

What's Next for Camping?

By F. M. McDowell

(Reprinted from Guide-Lines to Leadership for April-June, 1946.)

A BIT OF HISTORY

"Camping," someone has reminded us, "is an ancient art, almost as old as mankind." Associated with camping in our thinking are the Indians, the pioneers, and frontiersman. Perhaps this explains in a large measure the deep-seated appeal of our organized camping program to the youth of this day. At any rate, there are many who testify that camping meets certain fundamental interests and needs. To such, the camp is both a place and a means for the development of "sturdy roots of living" be they personal, social, cultural, or religious.

A recent issue of The Camping Magazine reports a camping program established as early as 1861, and others in 1881, 1892, 1903, and on up to the present time.

It is now estimated that during the last season six thousand camps were open in the United States alone. This represented property investment of $250,000.00 and served approximately three million persons.

These dates are, perhaps, not as interesting or as important as is a portrayal of the shifting emphases of the succeeding decades of camping. For example, note the following:

1. Out-of-door living "for the fun of it."
2. Recreation with health and personality growth as goals.
3. Emphasis on progressive educational methods and practice, with program fitted to the needs of the camper.
4. The social stage, which puts a premium upon the development of social qualities and citizenship.
5. The present tendency seems to be that of recognizing all of these features and objectives, i. e., to keep the fun, freedom, and recreation; and yet point all of such toward the acquisition of knowledges, skills, and appreciations in matters of health, social graces, citizenship, religious living, human brotherhood, etc.

IN OUR OWN CHURCH

The story of camping in our own church is brief but significant. Our first youth camp was held at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1928. In spite of many handicaps, camps were held each summer until the outbreak of the war. By 1939 a genuine story was beginning to unfold.

As not infrequently happens with such worthy endeavors, this project was launched by a few individuals who were devoted alike to the interests of youth and interests of the church and were willing to pay the price of pioneering. Without funds, with very little experience or equipment, with few resources other than the splendid geographical and historical setting of Nauvoo and even without official recognition (at first) they set to work and remained undaunted in the face of difficulties and discouragements that only a few will ever understand.

Today, sponsored by the General Camp Committee, recognized as a definite and vital part of our religious education program for young people, having won the support of additional qualified leaders and lovers of youth, and, last but not least, having received the enthusiastic endorsement of those hundreds of young people who now know whereof they speak, Nauvoo Camp is definitely established. —Saints' Herald, March 18, 1939.

During recent years a series of Oriole and Youth camps have been held near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. During the summer of 1945 the camp was re-established at Nauvoo and new ones set up at Brewton, Alabama, and Columbus, Nebraska. Prospects point to several others for 1946.

TRENDS IN CAMPING GENERALLY

Throughout the United States, as a whole, we may observe the following trends in camping:

Rapid expansion of facilities for camping, camp grounds, camp equipment, etc.

Rapid growth of the number of persons served.

A never-ending variety of types of camps, i. e., work camps, farm camps, church camps, family camps, inter-racial camps, co-educational camps, camps for crippled children, summer camps, winter camps, day camps, etc.

Emphasis upon leadership qualifications and training.

Establishing and maintaining of high standards of camp administration, i. e., in the fields of health and sanitation, food, water-front activities, etc.

TRENDS IN OUR OWN CHURCH

Increasing interest in the camping program evidenced by inquiries and by the organizing of camps in various districts.

A definite recognition of the camping program as a part of the program of religious education.

Development of a philosophy and pattern of camping for our church.

Training of leaders.

Procuring, preparing, and distributing literature on camping.

Establishing standards for camp administration.

Provision for general church direction and supervision.

WHAT'S NEW?

Two camp seminars were conducted during the winter of 1945. Papers were presented, and the discussions which followed made possible a veritable handbook on camping. (See Guide-Lines to Leadership, July, August, and September, 1945.) This, perhaps, represents the most significant development in our camping program. Recently members of the staff of the Department of Religious Education have become members of the American Camping Association, actively participating in the Missouri Valley Section. The church was represented in February at the annual meeting of the American Camping Association held in Boston.

The Director of the Department of Religious Education is now a member of a National Committee in Church Camping.

The Department of Religious Education has a small, but well-selected working library of books, pamphlets, and magazines in the field.

New camps already established and in prospect for 1946 season indicate the rapid expansion of the camping program.

WHITHER NOW?

The future of camping? What do you think?

To some:

Camping possesses many deep-seated appeals.

Camping is based upon a sound philosophy of religion and of education.

Camping is a glorious opportunity for the church in its ministry to youth.

Camping is an essential part of our total educational program.

THE FUTURE OF CAMPING

That depends upon:

How clearly we think about what it is and what it is not.

How concerned we are about such matters as—

Sound business management

High standards

Sound preparation

Sincere leadership

Genuine at-homeness with youth

AREAS TO BE EXPLORED IN THEORY AND PRACTICE

The major issues of camping:

YOUTH

Is What You Make It

Author is one of our fine Canadian young people; former campus leader, and graduate of Graceland College; now a social service and child-welfare worker in Saskatoon.

"'Tis worse," accused age. "It isn't either," replied youth; as they verbally heaved about the pros and cons of youth's goodness. They were both right. They were both wrong. . . .

I SAW YOUTH buy a sweater. "It's too big, doesn't fit you at all," remonstrated mother. "But, mother, it's not supposed to," answered youth, as the clerk took the money, and youth walked out in a "sloppy Joe." I heard youth sigh, "I'll be glad when it's over, so I can eat again," as the prognosis of first puppy love was proving more agonizing to the stomach than joyful to the heart. I saw youth skate in an open-air rink on a clear winter day, breathing into his lungs the good clean air. I saw him dodging snowballs and throwing them. I heard youth swear and take God's name in vain as he changed his skates; I heard him use clean language. I saw him smoke and desecrate the

The problem:

Extension of opportunities of camping to various age and social groups and to additional areas of the church.

Bases for establishing new camps:

- a. Assurance of local and general administrative support.
- b. Local demands, peculiar needs, physical equipment available, etc.
- c. Availability of adequate and qualified leadership.
- d. Assurance of close supervision on the part of the general committee or its representatives.
- e. Approval of additional camps by the administrative officers concerned and the formal action of the general camp committee.

The Future of Camping? Well, that depends.

By Elaine Carson

same lungs that a minute before he was treating to cleanness and health; I saw him refuse to smoke, pronounce it silly and wasteful.

I saw youth in church. He sat back; called Darwin "old-fashioned" but in the effrontery of new-found knowledge and in the best "Freudian unsuppressfulness" proclaimed that "God was not." I saw youth accept the responsibility of teaching a class, of singing in the choir, of preaching his first sermon. He earned scout awards; he ushered in the congregation; he wrote receipts as branch solicitor. He planned the "Vesper Hour," challenged the congregation to a better way of life.

I met youth in my work—clean-speaking, conscientious stenographers; socially-minded youth organizing a district with a view to preventative and remedial projects for the cessation of delinquency and disease. I saw youth diseased; morally adrift; thrusting on society the fruits of sin in the form of little children—branded "out-of-wedlock," some diseased and some deformed; all of them innocent but being visited with the sins of their fathers and mothers.

I saw youth go to war—smartly uniformed, keen to prove himself, to do his duty as a citizen; I saw him give his life in the struggle for freedom. I see youth returning from war—some more rattle-brained, drunker—some disillusioned, bitter—some wiser, older, God-conscious, determined that there shall be a better world.

I saw youth united in marriage; after a week-end "pickup"—wartime separation, headed for infidelity and the divorce court; after a rich, endearing friendship—engagement and marriage with the sure knowledge that together they will build a good home, from which will come strong, useful citizens. I saw youth selfishly, thoughtlessly living from hand to mouth—spending all, saving none—"tomorrow the deluge." I saw youth, the good steward—keeping accounts, paying tithes, happily, usefully developing a rich personality. I saw youth choose between potential material wealth, probable fame, and the nonspectacular but God-given privilege of doing full-time missionary work for the church.

AND AS I LOOK at youth, I cannot say with accusing age that it's bad. I cannot say with impulsive youth that it's good. Youth generally is both. The point is this: Latter Day Saint youth should be good. Youth imbued with the idealism of the gospel and guided by the Spirit of God cannot be otherwise. And we so imbued and so guided? Goodness is a quality of living—co-operative; clean, physically and spiritually; cheerful; kind; considerate; honest; leading or following in every field of worth-while endeavor; reading and studying to develop insight, discernment, and vision.

Numerically we are a minority group, but so were Christ and his apostles. They changed the course of world history. We are engaged in the same kingdom work that occupied and cost the life of Christ and his followers, and we cannot accept too lightly the challenge of our circumstance. There is a danger that youth sees its lightheartedness, its fun, its laughter, its "Yankee Spirit" as one Herald writer named it (I don't know what it is termed in Canada), as an end in itself, instead of the budding into a beautiful and useful life.

Whether we like it or not, whether we recognize it or not, we are inescapably the parents, the lay members, the elders, the apostles, the leaders of tomorrow. We are the future, and the quality of our youth is determining the future of the church and of the world.

BOOKS

Life of Elbert A. Smith

On Memory's Beam, the autobiography of Elbert A. Smith. Herald Publishing House, 1946. 350 pages. $2.50. Illustrated.

We were planning a review of this story of the life of our Presiding Evangelist, Elbert A. Smith, when we read a very fine review of it in the Independence Examiner for April 25. It suited our needs better than anything we could write. This paragraph appeared in the leading column of this daily paper, "In Missouri Language," by William Southern, Jr., the Editor and Publisher. We quote it in full:

I have on my desk, courtesy of The Herald Publishing House, a little volume entitled, "The Autobiography of Elbert A. Smith." While the story of the life of Mr. Smith, told so charmingly, is of primary interest to members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, it was of special interest to me because I know Mr. Smith well and admire him greatly. There is a touch of humor which flashes here and there, and the story itself is typically American. A boy on the prairies of north-west Iowa, called for a life work, educating himself under circumstances and never dodging responsibility, a love story in real life, all stand out as a pattern for independent young Americans. Mr. Smith believes in honesty, thrift, and hard work and has followed those principles through a long and useful life. The volume is also a firsthand history of the Reorganized Church, which has headquarters in Independence, by one who had an important part in that history. Mr. Smith served for years as a member of the First Presidency and is now Presiding Patriarch. This board has charge of the missionary work of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Smith live in their own home in Independence.

Immortality

The Secret, by Margaret Lee Runbeck. D. Appleton-Century Co., 1946. 56 pages. $1.25.

Three little stories of families broken-hearted by the death of loved ones, who later find comfort in a communion with something divine in the universe that gives them the feeling that death does not have the final word after all. Death is not something that can be met with an argument, nor with a supposed set of "facts," but with an experience of life. We can find what has been lost, and a way exists in which it can be found. These stories are about people who found the way. They are somewhat similar in trend to the beautiful book, Upon This Rock, by Emile Cammaerts.

The Runbeck books are not to be estimated quantitatively. Buy this one, not as you would buy bread, but a precious stone. Her works have steadily built her reputation: Our Miss Boo is a lovely exploration of childhood; Time for Each Other, a pattern of family life in war's anguish; The Great Answer, an anthology of faith in life; and now The Secret, implications of immortality. Of late, this author has appeared frequently in the Christian Herald, a publication for families and homes.

David in Love, War, Politics

David The King, a novel by Gladys Schmitt. Dial Press, 1946. 631 pages, $3.00.

David The King is not an enlargement of scripture; it is a story in itself. It covers the life of the psalmist and ruler of Israel from the days of his sheep-herding, when he was a handsome, egotistical lad of seventeen, to the hour of his death. It is the story of all men of all ages—their lusts, their pains, their pleasures, their battle for recognition, their search for God. Few writers have the ability to catch the fervor of an emotion and put it in words. . . . Miss Schmitt does this so expertly that the reader cannot fail to live the high points of the narrative along with the characters. Especially vivid is her treatment of Saul's madness, Michal's defeated love, Noi's devotion, Amnon's temptation, Rizpah's vigil at the tamarisk, and David's many personal battles with desire, love, hate, and agnosticism.

There is a balance of good and bad, tenderness and rage, peace and war. There are fiendish murders and wedding feasts; there are passionate heroes and righteous prophets; there are gory battles and quiet, pastoral scenes. The closing chapter presents the finest in philosophy—an explanation of God and man's relationship.

David The King is a picture of life and death painted by a gifted artist.

A Missionary Book

Winning Men, by John Timothy Stone. N. Y., Revell. 1946. 108 pages. $1.50.

A vibrant, stimulating book, filled with enthusiasm, conviction, learning, and ideas is this volume by a famous Presbyterian scholar and leader. While it is written especially for ministers of that faith, it contains much that will be valuable and helpful to men of our church, and particularly to those who are engaged either in full-time missionary work, or those pastors who feel the responsibility for building their congregations. This book is like a warm fire, well supplied with fuel, for thawing out frozen hearts and souls. It contains both the evangelistic appeal and a fund of practical suggestions for the minister and his program.

The author also dissertates on social changes which were effected by Bib-

She also leaves eight grandchildren and two sisters: Mrs. Amos Guy of Alpena, and Mrs. Etta Fisher of Pontiac, Michigan. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Onaway, Elder Ernest Burt officiating. Interment was in the Towar cemetery.

RIDGWAY.—Herald E., son of Bryant and Grace Crosby Ridgway, was born in Frankfort, Wisconsin, on November 9, 1900, and died April 30 at a hospital in Red Wing, Minnesota. He spent most of his life in Porcupine Valley, where he attended school and church. He was baptized by Elder Leonard Houghton at Frankfort. His parents passed away several years ago, after which he made his home with friends and relatives.

He is survived by two sisters: Mrs. Dewey Baskin, Elmwood, Wisconsin; and Mrs. Clarence Kindred, Wing, North Dakota; three brothers: Ben C., Hemaraka, Canada; Dale C., Maiden Rock, Wisconsin; and Dean E., Twin Falls, Idaho. Services were conducted by Elder Clive Metcalf at the Goodrich Funeral Home in Durand. Burial was in the Round-hill Cemetery.

MYERS.—Dorothy Lentell, was born February 25, 1913, in Kansas City, Missouri, and died April 20 at St. Mary's Hospital in Kansas City. She was baptized at the age of eight in Mt. Washington. On November 4, 1934, she was married to James R. Myers; one son was born to this marriage. Until ill health forced her to resign, she was president of the James School P.-T. A.

She is survived by her husband; a son, James R., Jr.; a stepson, Raymond; her mother, Mrs. Lula Terrell; her father, Thomas C. Lentell; and a brother, Robert Lentell, all of Kansas City, Missouri. Services were held at the Carson Funeral Home in Independence, Elder Garland Tickemyer officiating. Interment was in the Mt. Washington Cemetery.

In Appreciation

Mrs. Lula Terrell wishes to express her appreciation to the friends who were so kind in the hour of sorrow when her daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Lentell Myers, passed away. She especially wishes to thank Pastor Garland Tickemyer who officiated at the funeral.

Report on Paper

This issue comes to you on a new paper, more smoothly surfaced, more expensive than we have used before. Readers may think this is extravagance. But conditions are such that the manufacturers are no longer making the less expensive grade of paper we formerly used. We have to take this or none. This is the information given to us by the management, who have to deal with the situation.

We have just a little of the old paper left, enough for two small issues; whether it will be used for our publication or another has not yet been determined. The new supply of paper is rather small, and we do not have sufficient to resume the full standard size of our issues. If we did, the cost would be more than you are paying for your subscriptions. The present issue has thirty-two pages, which is now allowed us to permit us to include service material for the branches.

* DO IT NOW

If with pleasure you are viewing
Any work a man is doing;
If you like him, or if you love him,
—Tell him now.
Don't withhold your approbation
Till the parson makes oration,
And he lies with snowy lilies
O'er his brow.
For no matter how you shout it,
He won't know a thing about it;
He won't know how many teardrops
You have shed.
If you think some praise is due him,
Now's the time to slip it to him,
For he cannot read his tombstone
When he's dead.

More than fame and more than money
Is the comment kind and sunny,
And the hearty, warm approval
Of a friend.
For it gives to life a savor,
And it makes you stronger—braver,
And it gives you heart and spirit
To the end.
If he earns your praise, bestow it;
If you like him, let him know it;
Let the words of true encouragement
Be said.
Do not wait till life is over,
And he's underneath the clover,
For he cannot read his tombstone
When he's dead.

—Will Russell.

* REFERENCE WORKS. As one grows older, he loses interest in the general run of fiction and imaginary romance literature. He gradually finds that life itself, and the facts about it, are so much more fascinating. So, he invests more money in reference books, history, biography, science, and philosophy. These books, too, are of more permanent value, and are not forgotten so soon.

The Editors have been fortunate to obtain a new edition of "The Encyclopedia Americana," the latest revision, including postwar information. Beautifully printed and bound, it will be a fine piece of working equipment in the library.

* DICTIONARY. Look up almost any difficult word in your unabridged dictionary, and you are almost sure to encounter some other word that you have never seen before, or with which you are insufficiently acquainted. You look up that word, and it leads you to others, and they to others. It becomes a pastime, a game, from which you reluctantly turn back to the real work at hand. But meanwhile you have been learning, and this knowledge will be useful to you at a later time. While it is completely casual and unplanned, it has the advantage of bringing you into contact with knowledge that no plan of yours would ever have brought you—a sure mark of the limitations of all plans. Chance and accident are great educators too, as well as plans.

* SOME OF US have tact; some, tacks. The latter are in the great majority. The church and the world, and most people in them, could use a good text or study course on the subject, "Tact and Diplomacy, and How to Use Them." Would some brave author like to step up and try to write such a book? He would have to go into seclusion afterward, migrate, or change his name; because all his friends would be sure to say, "Since when did YOU become an authority on that subject?" We have our money ready for a copy of the first edition.

Insurance on Your Home

Kinds of Insurance

You probably have insurance on your home, against fire, hail, tornado, lightning, and other so-called "Acts of God," which should be called "Acts of Earth," if anything. But do you have insurance against the "Acts of Man"? Your home is in far greater danger from human frailty than from natural violence.

It is within the memory of fairly young people that we were appalled when the national rate went up to one divorce for every six marriages. How quaint that excitement now seems! Then there was one divorce to four marriages. Recently somebody reported that it is two divorces for five marriages, and in certain cities, the mortality rate is now one in two.

If all this divorce made anybody happy, there might be some argument in favor of it. We have never seen anybody that looked happier after a divorce. In marriage one has something to live for, or at least someone to fight with; the divorce leaves a person lonely and miserable, resentful against the universe, and nobody to talk to. Divorce robs adults of dignity and decency, and puts most of them back on the marriage market in a worn, used condition, fit only for the bargain basements and pawnshops, to use a comparison.

And what of the divorced children? Yes, the child is a victim of divorce, too. He is divorced from his home, from his confidence in life, from his security, and from one, or both of his parents. They run off to make new marriages, and leave him stranded. Divorced children so often have wan smiles, nervous tension, and a look of deep and lasting hurt in their eyes.

Some strong insurance is needed against divorce.

Bad Medicine

People are always dosing their bodies with bad medicine—quack prescriptions, something they have seen or heard advertised, pills or nostrums, and what not. But this is nothing to the way they dose their minds with bad ideas and, more dangerous, bad feelings.

Turn on the radio and listen to the average soap opera, the gulp-and-gasp drama, and what do you hear? This is the kind of stuff that is ground out by the radio all day long in many homes. Two people quarreling, likely, until they blister their tonsils. If it's a woman, she's going to have a baby, often out of wedlock. If it's a man, he is having an affair with "another woman," whether he has one, two, or three already on his list. And the prevailing mood seems to be angry, hysterical, or demoniac. It is a dangerous mood, because it seeps over into the mind of the listener. She makes comparisons with her own life, and as she turns off the switch—if she has the little necessary remaining sense to turn it off—she goes back to her home and family life in that frame of mind.

It isn't much better if she turns to the popular magazines. The moods are the same, and they are infectious.

So many people of our nation never read a good book, never attend church, never hear a program of good music over the air; they dismiss all these things as "corny." Well, after a time they turn out to be corny too, and their home life goes to pieces as a result of what they feed into their minds. This stuff is bad medicine—very bad medicine. Poison, in fact.

Good Medicine

There are many good books, magazines, and radio programs, if one will look for them. They are easily found, too. All one needs is the desire for better things.

People need some source of good ideas. They need the help of others to bring them sane, reasonable, noble thoughts, good feelings, right attitudes. The nature lover who declares he can worship God in the outdoors is deceiving himself. What great moral or spiritual idea did anybody ever get from a tree, or a cloud, or a squirrel? Granted, we need nature to refresh the senses and relax the body. But we need something for the mind too.

And where can we get those good ideas? In church—meeting with church people, who believe in holding their homes together, being faithful, and living decently. The only institution in the world dedicated to the business of helping people make their lives better in a moral and spiritual way is the church. Fewer than half of American citizens have their names on the church records. And fewer than half of them attend regularly. Three-fourths of the people never have a chance to learn anything good or helpful. Is it any wonder homes go to pieces?

Examples

Some years ago, a young couple felt their home going to pieces. In fact, they anticipated it, and one kept clinical notes on the disintegrating processes. Every morning they had to consult their feelings to see whether they still loved each other! Love died on such spineless support. Love needs some determination to help it. A young couple were married by a church officer, and that was the last the church saw of them, until they came back in distress, ready for a divorce. They hadn't built their home life around religion. Bad movies, bad reading, bad advisors who themselves had failed in marriage—these wrecked their home. There was nothing constructive in Graceland College Installs Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr. as President

It was the privilege of representatives of the general church to be present at the installation of a new President of Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, on Friday, May 31. Representing the First Presidency were all three members of the quorum: Presidents Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, and F. Henry Edwards; representing the Presiding Bishopric: Bishops G. L. DeLapp and Walter N. Johnson; representing the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital: Superintendent Gertrude Copeland, R. N., Nelle Morgan, R. N., and Mabel Faulkner, R. N.; representing the Herald Publishing House: Kenneth L. Graham, Manager, and Leonard Lea, Managing Editor.

The graduation exercises were held in the forenoon, with President Israel A. Smith as the principal speaker of the occasion, and Acting-President A. R. Gilbert presented the graduates with their diplomas.

The Graceland College campus was never more beautiful and inviting than it was on that perfect day. It was a scene of happiness, except for some of the students who were parting from their friends to return to their homes in widely separated parts of the country. Some were determined not to be separated, and there were several weddings in the chapel during the last week and especially on the last day.

The afternoon service of installation was memorable and beautiful. Choral numbers were furnished by Herbert Lively and the Graceland A Cappella Chorus. Roy Benson played the processional march and other musical features on the Hammond organ. Invocation was by Bishop Walter N. Johnson. President J. F. Garver, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, was in charge, directed the ceremonies, and presented President-Elect Gleazer. Bishop G. L. DeLapp delivered the charge. All present participated in a series of responsive readings. President Garver administered the oath, and President Gleazer responded. The faculty and audience participated in pledges of support. Presidents Garver and Smith gave the official welcome, and President Gleazer gave his installation address, which contained an inspiring message, auguring well for the college. A. R. Gilbert, Dean of the College, and retiring Acting-President, President F. Henry Edwards, and Leonard Lea gave "Testimonials of Common Endeavor." The prayer of blessing and benediction was by Dr. F. M. McDowell of the Board of Trustees.

President Gleazer brings a broad experience, for one so young, to his work. Besides his academic preparation in several distinguished universities, he has had missionary, pastoral, and stake presidency work. Under his leadership it is anticipated that Graceland College will enter a new era of wider co-operation with the general aims and objectives of the church, and with other church departments. Over the years a great effort has been made, very successfully too, to make the church conscious of Graceland and of its obligation to Graceland. Under President Gleazer, there will be an opportunity for Graceland to broaden its foundations and extend its service to the church, and in co-operating with other departments of the church. It is certain that Graceland will be stronger and greater as this development takes place.

When one considers the great development and improvement that have taken place at Graceland under the leadership of President G. N. Briggs, who was present on the platform during the installation ceremony, it seems that anything is possible for those who will hope and work and not give up. We have great reason to be proud of Graceland College today. It is doing a wonderful work for our young people. We believe that the time will come and must come when, as her resources are increased, Graceland will be able to provide our older church people as well as for the young an increasing and enriching cultural and intellectual leadership that will produce great benefits.

The old graduate always returns to the Graceland campus with a strong surge of feeling of gratitude and happiness. Here one received an opportunity, kindness, and consideration not available anywhere else in the world. What the college faculty can do for young people, and are willing to do for them if the young will give them a chance, is wonderful. Some of them have been serving for many years, and are as alert and up to date in their work as they were in the beginning, with the advantage of experience to strengthen them.

There are one-story intellects, two-story intellects, and three-story intellects with skylights. All fact collectors, who have no aim beyond their facts, are one-story men. Two-story men compare, reason, generalize, using the labors of the fact collectors as well as their own. Three-story men idealize, imagine, predict; their best illumination comes from above, through the skylight.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Nature of Revelation

I. REVELATION IS HISTORICAL

(The second of a series of lectures delivered before a group of church appointees in Chicago, during December, 1945.)

EWARD SAYS that the "all absorbing quest of Israel was religion and the good life based thereupon." Athanasius (c. 325) affirms that Israel was, through the prophets, "the sacred school of the knowledge of God and of the spiritual life for all mankind." I think we must recognize that various nations have fulfilled distinctive missions in history. Thus, we remember the Greeks for their artistic and philosophic genius. In art not only were they pre-eminent among ancient peoples, but their artistic sense dominated their whole life; and this fact is the secret at once of the strength and of the weakness in the Greek ideal of life. They saw everything in terms of beauty. Their religion was a religion of beauty, and their ethics partook of the same character. Naturally, they saw life from a subjective point of view. And their ethics were individualistic and subjective in character. As Ellwood says, "Almost from the first, Grecian civilization was corrupt, and at length in certain of its features it became degraded beyond belief." However, in spite of this, we owe to the Greeks our artistic and intellectual traditions. Fisher says, "We are the children of the Hellas."

The Romans were primarily a military and warlike people, and their standards in ethics and religion were not philosophic and were not very much above the level of barbarism. But they had genius for political and legal organization, and laid the foundations for all modern government. The keeping of standing armies was first advocated in modern times by Machiavelli, in the sixteenth century, because he admired the methods of ancient Rome. Rome was a militant conquering nation, aiming at the domination of the world by force, and while many of the unfortunate tendencies in our civilization have come from Rome, we have greatly benefited by their genius for law and organization.

Still another ancient people contributed to our present life, the Teutons. They brought to us a strong tradition of individual liberty. So we must recognize, as we have said, that certain peoples have been the channels through which various aspects of reality have come to us.

But, supreme among these contributions, is that of Israel, whose concept of God and whose ethic lies at the very heart of all that is enduring in our present civilization. In their literature and in their history they have evolved a monotheistic religion under the tutelage of the prophets and developed the conception of the ethical fruits thereof.

A study of religions comparatively will not alter this fact. We may freely admit that Zoroaster (c. 800 B. C.), or Mohammed, (A. D. 570-632), or Confucius, (551-478 B. C.), or Socrates, (469-399 B. C.), were to some extent inspired by the Spirit of God. In admitting this we shall simply validate the Scripture which says "the light of it lighteth every man that cometh into the world." This will not prevent us from accepting the thesis that in Israel we see a special movement of God towards man, gradually enlarging and refining itself in the measure of man's adjustment thereto. This divine revelation has its roots in the history of Israel, and if we are to understand it, we must see it at work among this people. We have, then, between the year 760 B. C., the time of Amos, to about 400 B. C., the time of Malachi, a succession of men who claim that in a special sense the mind and will of God were impressed upon them. I do not think it is necessary for us to argue this point, since the most hostile critic would be prepared to concede that the language these men use admits of no other interpretation but that they claimed to be in touch with God.

Many had come before them, and I am not ignoring the fact that the Old Testament speaks of Moses and of Elijah and of others. But it is generally recognized that within the historical limits set, 760-400 B. C., we are on solid historical ground. Further, we cannot doubt but that the conceptions of God and of human duty were, before the days of Amos, mixed with much superstition borrowed from neighboring nations and tribes. Then, the worship of Jehovah was corrupt. Consequently, again and again the prophets, even of olden times, accuse the people of thinking wickedly, in that God was "such a one" as they were. From Amos to Malachi we see emerging against the background of the mists and shadows of antiquity a clear conception of one God, who is God of the whole earth, who has called Israel for a special mission, because he has regard to the welfare of all men. And these prophets are insistent in demanding righteousness, in calling for equality.

In analyzing their own explanation of the experiences from which their utterances stem, they say without equivocation, "Thus saith the Lord." At times they appear to be reasoning with Jehovah, and are at some pains to excuse themselves from the commission to which they have been called. But they are constrained to yield to an overmastering sense of the Divine which takes possession of them. Let us listen to some typical utterances:

I was no prophet, neither was I prophet's son; but I was an herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees; and the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. Now, therefore hear the word of the Lord.

But I truly am full of power by the spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

Mine heart within me is broken, all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome; because of the Lord, and because of his holy words . . . Is not my word like as fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

We notice that they are acutely conscious of the contrast between their own feelings and ideas on the one hand, and on the other the purpose and mind of God who constrains them. This is vividly presented where the prophet holds conversations with God, represents to God his own feelings, questions, and complaints, and is answered. These prophets are clearly conscious of two distinct overmastering pressures of God who possesses them, making his mind and will articulate to them.

Such passages recur constantly. The prophets, then, because they are conscious of being thus even violently dealt with and possessed, claimed to utter with supreme authority a word message from God to man. The content of this message is, on the whole, quite clear in its final outcome. It is a message which proclaims God as intensely personal and moral, as the one and only God, the absolute creator and sustainer and judge of all that is, almighty in the sense that no other God or external power exists to restrain Him. It proclaims him in unmistakable terms for a practical purpose; not, that is, with a view to the satisfaction of metaphysical inquiries; but for the sole purpose of making his people understand that there is no manner of fellowship with him possible except by conformity to his character, that is, by goodness, social and individual, by "doing justly, and loving mercy, and walking humbly with God." It proclaims the responsibility of man as a free being, and his awful power to thwart God by his pride and willfulness, and to throw his world into confusion—in Isaiah's tremendous phrase, "To make God serve with his sins." It assumes that God does not, over the long course of this world's history, intend to remove man's liberty thus to thwart His purpose; but it declares God's intention to judge and overthrow one by one every structure and device of human pride and willfulness, and finally to vindicate himself in his whole creation. That is "the day of the Lord." Meanwhile, his prophets are his mouthpiece to make his character and will and purpose known, and to call on those who have ears to hear to correspond and co-operate with him, that is, to stand for righteousness and truth in evil days.

When one studies the process of revelation in Israel against the background of history, he is amazed to find how clearly the prophets saw into and beyond the social situation in which they lived. While they had a word of God for specific times, and from peculiar vantage points, yet they state principles which have endured and which have come down to us, and we today recognize them, at least nominally, as the foundation of all stable and enduring society. When we turn from the prophets to Jesus, we find him taking his stand upon their message, but greatly enlarging and intensifying it. The more we study the sayings of the Master, the more we are driven to the conclusion that he is more than the subject of their prophecies; we feel that he is the author of them. Whatever greatness they had, we feel, was made possible by him. And so, as we steep ourselves in his ministry, we conclude that when he said "before Abraham was, I am," he was merely speaking the truth.

Christ does not attempt to argue or philosophize about the existence of God, he sets himself the task to reveal him. The teaching of the prophets about Jehovah is outdistanced by Jesus, and emphasis is laid upon the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Another thing we find germane to our discussion of revelation is that the words of Jesus seem to possess the power of attaching themselves to the conscience of mankind; and thus they correct and enlighten the spirit of truth "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Again the Apostle Paul, who was a Jew, skilled in the Hebraic theology and who believed in one God beside whom there was no other, finds no confusion in his mind in ascribing to Jesus the attributes of God. It does no violence to his monotheism when he worships the Lord Jesus. Christ was, and still is, the final and supreme revelation of God, in what Brother Koehler calls, The mode.

The revelation of Christ about God and human duty can be summed up in the commandment which admonishes men to choose God as their Father; and which tells them to act toward each other upon the basis of dynamics which his voice liberates within them. Again, material things, says Christianity, and indeed the whole material world, must be used by man as a stewardship. This stewardship implies that things shall be used to promote equality and fraternity among men, and whenever things are permitted to stand between them, ritualism and formalism become superstition.

In modern times we find the revelation of the prophets in direct historical continuity with the ancient prophets and with Christ. Modern commandments were given in the manner of language used today.

We find the same notes of universal fatherhood, and human brotherhood in the utterances of Joseph Smith which have been endorsed by the church. We find, too, a great deal of attention is given in the prophetic utterances to the certainty of coming judgment and the inevitability of the day of the Lord and the world to come. All this apocalyptic literature is given as "history written before time" (to use Bishop Butler's great phrase).

to confirm the hope and sustain the brotherly relations which should exist in and between members of the church. Modern revelation carries forward the kingdom ideal, and gives an interpretation and a philosophy of the natural world which testifies of Christ and of his centrality in the whole created order. I shall have a word to say in a moment or two about this interpretative philosophy of nature.

When it was necessary to conserve and save the institution, to reorder its quorums, and to re-enunciate the principles of administration, between the years 1860 and 1900, such revelation as came to the church was clearly in order to inspire, to promote, and to extend the spirit of brotherhood. When institutions were conceived in this period and when the relations between quorums were defined, it is always with a view of promoting brotherhood.

II. REVELATION—ITS ORGANIC UNITY AND CONTINUITY

Revelation, then, is historically an organic whole. These latter days in which we live are the days for which the former days were made. We enjoy the same promises latterly as were given formerly. The Inspired Version of the Scriptures is of remarkable value to us in this connection, and I cannot too strongly emphasize that in matters of doctrine and in matters of discipline the Inspired Version of the Scriptures is much more to be desired in our work than any other version extant.

Revelation is not only an organic whole throughout history, but it is progressive. Jesus said he had many things to say to his disciples but they could not bear them. The same thing might be said to us, and with truth we can see that revelation is limited by the capacity of mankind to assimilate the mind of God. Further, man has no celestial language, and thus some things are not lawful to be phrased. And the reason for this is quite apparent. The spirit of revelation beckons us forward and inspires to explore in elysian fields, where truths are perceived for which no human language is adequate. Indeed, such truths would be distorted and degraded were we to attempt to put them in a vehicle of expression which has been made sordid by human commerce. As Oliver Cowdery said of the visit of John the Baptist—he could only gaze, admire, and wonder.

III. REVELATION AND CONSCIENCE

We must also realize that divine revelation appeals to the conscience of man. While the prophets claim that the word of God is given to them and is not created by them, they assume that there exists in mankind as normally constituted, a faculty for recognizing the authority of their message. Conscience is the "daughter of the voice of God." "Man's conscience is the lamp of the eternal, flashing into his inmost soul." Seneca speaks of conscience as "A Holy Spirit residing in us, the guardian and observer of our good and evil deeds." Conscience and reason alike conspire to render man able to apprehend the voice of God when it is uttered. A friend of Socrates was talking about immortality, and emphasized the stern duty of man to use his reason to the utmost. I quote from his statement:

Well, Socrates, then I will tell you my difficulty. . . . For I dare say that you feel as I do, how very hard or almost impossible is the attainment of any certainty about questions such as these in the present life. And yet I deem him a coward who did not test what is said to the uttermost, or whose heart failed him before he had examined them on every side. For he should persevere until he has obtained one of two things: either he should learn or discover the truth about them; or, if this is impossible, I would have him take the best and most irrefragable of human words, and let this be the raft upon which he sails through life—not without risk, as I admit—if he cannot find some word of God which will more surely and safely carry him."—Plato, Phaedo, 85 (Jowett's translation, slightly altered).

Thus while reason may not find God, it does have within it the power to recognize God when he is revealed. The ancient scripture which says that "Adam heard the voice of God from the Garden of Eden" illustrates the truth that while we have been cast out from his presence we do retain, by our constitution, a racial memory of times when we were in his presence. "Ye were also in the beginning with the Father." This fact constitutes at once both the possibility of salvation and of condemnation for all mankind. Jesus said, "this is condemnation that light has come into the world and men love darkness rather than light."

The 19th century prophet has given an exposition of the same truth in Section 83, paragraph 7, Doctrine and Covenants:

And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and everyone that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world; and the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth under darkness and under the bondage of sin; and by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin, because they come not unto me; for whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin; and whoso receiveth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me; and by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groaneth under sin and darkness even now.

IV. REVELATION AND INSPIRATION

As we pursue further the question of the nature of revelation, the following facts which will distinguish between inspiration and revelation appear to me to be quite apparent. And it is well to make a differentiation between inspiration and revelation.

We in the church have plenty of evidence for the view that God, by the Spirit, is "in all things, and through all things, and is the law by which all things are governed." No one can read Section eighty-five without profound gratitude for this conception which convinces us that no particle of the universe goes ultimately beyond the divine control. We believe in divine immanence.

No finer expression of the work of God in nature is to be found than that given by Wordsworth in "Tintern Abbey":

I have learned
To look on nature not as in the hour
Of thoughtless youth but hearing oftentimes
The still, sad music of humanity, Nor harsh nor grating, though of ample power
To chasten and subdue. And I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply inter-fused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting
suns,
And the round ocean and the living
air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man;
A motion and a spirit that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.

Through the ages the "sense sublime" has deeply impressed the human heart. In fact, the worship of nature played a large part of the activities of primitive man. The book of nature is rich in evidences of the divine mind. It has inspired countless numbers—poets, seers, philosophers, musicians, sculptors, and painters, as well as the lowly peasant. In learning more about the world around us, we are learning more about God.

Our Heavenly Father has been at work in history, in the lives of men of good will, in every age and among all people. The prophets, especially, were souls specially illuminated to give light to a darkened world. The profoundest ministry was, of course, in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. Great inspiration is still to be had by studying history, or by striving to appreciate the principles uttered by the prophets, and by dwelling in awe upon the superlative light of Christ. Inspiration still flows from Nazareth. Men are forever discovering new wonder as they look at the record of the life of Christ. This record is given in the New Testament and in the history of mankind since his day, a record still bearing fruit in a thousand different ways. The reason in decent men responds naturally to the order of God revealed in Christ. But the church of Christ means much more when it speaks of the transcendence of God and his revelation.

Try to imagine all the riches of culture and grace, of law and order, and of goodness which humanity has gathered up through the ages by looking at God's handiwork. One would indeed be rich were he able to possess them. But if he could, he would still fall far short of what we mean when we speak of the process of revelation. For, by looking at God's handiwork, including man, one is simply reflecting the divine light. We do not despise such reflection. It has always been and still is, of inestimable worth to us. It lightens our darkness. But no amount of such inspiration as we have been describing can alone regenerate humanity in and of itself. And in this lies the cardinal difference between inspiration and revelation. We believe in divine immanence but more—that revelation conveys a spirit, a gift, which is part of God himself.

In a paragraph by itself, to emphasize its importance, we put the following proposition. It is one thing to live your life in the light of Christ, and another thing to surrender your life so that Christ can live in you.

We in the church are in danger constantly of placing our greatest investment in the second best. If we mistake the reflection of the light of Christ for the possession of the gift of God, we shall go to our ruin. For the worst enemy that the best has is not the worst, but the second best. What the world needs today is a new revelation of Christ, not a reflection of his life lived centuries ago and distorted through the faulty spectrum of human personality. This new revelation of Christ must be made by himself, upon his own terms, and in his own way. What other construction can we put upon the language which says, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me"? What else did Paul mean when he uttered the great secret of his power, "It is not that I liveth but Christ who liveth within me"?

We Move Too Fast

It is no accident that we so often speak of grace as languid. One of the first lessons the movie directors learned was that the actors must move to a slow, steady tempo. Count off as Garbo moves about the screen and notice how long it takes her to remove or put on a wrap, to come through a door and close it behind her—yet every foot of film is costly. That's why home movies are jerky, often ridiculously so. We move too fast. A graceful woman, a well-poised man never hurries, at least never gives you the impression of haste. It's the snatches and jerkers who bump into their chairs and tip over the water glasses. And it's the heel-clicking trit-trotters who stumble up curbstones and down unexpected steps. If you are inclined to be jerky, practice moving to a slow and rhythmic phonograph record, preferably in waltz time. Or simply pace yourself off to a slow count.—Ruth Chandler Moore in Collier's.

Echoes of the Leadership Training Workshop

Of the General Conference

Each week day of the General Conference there was a Workshop of some important phase of Religious Education. The last day the Workshop was for Leadership Training. A number of workers and students representing a cross-section of our membership, was on the stand with Brother F. M. McDowell, Director of Religious Education, and Thelona D. Stevens, Director of Leadership Training, presiding. There were short talks by Sister Lois Shipley, Miami, Oklahoma; Sister Esther Heller, Pittsburg, Kansas; Sister Hattie K. Bell, Chicago, Sister Roberta Gregory, Aurora, Illinois; Brother Luther Troyer, Chicago; Brother Eldon B. Hart, Coffeyville, Kansas, and Brother Paul Duvic, Bremerton, Washington. Each of these individuals told of personal experiences with Leadership Training, some having to do with classwork, others having to do with individual study, as was the case with Brother Hart and Brother Troyer while in the Navy. All agreed that their studies had been decidedly worth-while, and recommended such study to others.

We shall attempt to share with our Herald readers from time to time, as space may permit, some of the thoughts expressed by these speakers. Here is the talk given by Sister Lois Shipley:

We grow tomatoes in our garden. Of course, there's nothing unusual about that, for most people do grow tomatoes if they have a garden. The unusual part of the fact is that our tomatoes are just a little bigger and better. The plants grow several feet tall and large bunches of firm, smooth tomatoes hang all about the plant to make a beautiful sight. To accomplish this, we begin when the plants are rather young and tie them to a stake that is bigger than we ever expect the tomato to grow. As the plant grows it has a tendency to grow away from the stake, so we tie it again and again, as long as the plant is growing. The success of our superior tomatoes lies in the fact that they are trained, and I believe the same logic can be applied to superior church school workers.

We might say our growth is guided by the gospel in its fullness, but as tomatoes will not follow the stake unless tied, neither will our growth follow closely to the gospel unless tied to it, and the best way I know to do this is to enroll in a Leadership Training Course for credit.

When I feel the urge to apply myself and learn more of the gospel and how to help others know of it, I enroll in a course listed in Bulletin 102. After completing it, I am apt to find myself growing away from the stake again, so I come back and tie myself to it with another course—there is just nothing like these courses for credit for guiding our growth. Like the tomato, the only time we don't need to be tied to the stake is when we quit growing.

Everyone is familiar with Lincoln's famous saying, "All I am and ever hope to be, I owe to my angel mother." My version of that is, "All I am and ever hope to be as a church school worker, I owe to the Leadership Training Curriculum." I have a "before" and "after" story that will prove what it has done for me.

Most of you can remember the advertisement seen in all the papers a few years ago of the forlorn, very thin girl in a bathing suit just above the caption, "Who's your skinny friend, Ethel?" Well, when the present Leadership Training Program was announced in the fall of 1942, I knew by that time I was Ethel's skinny friend and needed all the vitamins contained in the courses.

I had taught one year in a public school and was a complete failure, not because I lacked ability necessarily, but because I was not properly prepared for it. After that I moved to Pittsburg, Kansas, and was placed in charge of the children's division in the church school. I failed at this for two years because there wasn't anyone else to do it. I dreaded Sunday mornings, and I know the children disliked them too. All the help I received was in the form of two or three books of stories. No one suggested that I take a course on the methods of teaching, or even read a book about it. By this time I was well aware that I didn't have the "know how" of it.

That was "before"; now for the "after" part of the story. I haven't achieved any degree of perfection of which I can boast, but since enjoyment of one's work is usually one indication of some success, I can tell you this much.

This is my second year as supervisor of the children's division at Miami, Oklahoma, and we do have fun. I am always eager for Sunday morning to roll around, and I know most of the children feel the same way, for they are bringing their little friends to enjoy our good times until we now have quite a number as church school members whose parents have never been inside the church. Working with the Miami children is so much more pleasant than my former experiences that I began to think perhaps they just aren't like the "mean little kids" I had tried to teach before.

When I was asked to supervise the children's work at the Spring River District reunion last summer, I thought that would give me an opportunity to see if our children were naturally better, or whether all children respond better when subjected to better methods. At the reunion I had many more children under my direction than ever before, and they were co-operative, eager to learn, and attentive. Of course, all the teachers had completed training courses for credit (I wouldn't recommend any other kind), but I did conclude that maybe I had changed more than the children had.

Last fall, I helped organize a class in our branch in which seventeen completed New Trails for the Christian Teacher for credit, although before it was over most of the class insisted the title should be, "New Trials for the Christian Teacher." Just two weeks after the course ended, we began to study The Church School and twenty-five enrolled for credit. This increase of almost fifty per cent in enrollment speaks for itself regarding interest, and where there is interest in preparation for better service improvements will follow.

Now just a word to the people who set up this training program and keep it going. I know you get discouraged many times because more leaders don't take advantage of the work outlined in Bulletin 102, but the saying, "All good growth is slow" is true here. You can grow mushrooms overnight and a good crop of weeds in four months, but an oak tree barely gets started in that length of time. Just give us a little time, and you will see some big growth that is good in the way of leaders.

To the workers, let me say that the courses offered under the Leadership Training plan are just like penicillin or any other good medicine, they won't do you one bit of good unless you take them.

Monuments! what are they? the very pyramids have forgotten their builders, or to whom they were dedicated. Deeds, not stones, are the true monuments of the great.

Men are apt to mistake the strength of their feeling for the strength of their argument. The heated mind re-sents the chill touch and relentless scrutiny of logic.—Gladstone.

Rotterdam Afflicted by the War

By Anton Compier

When we sit down to write a report of our war experiences, our thoughts first wander to the thousands of young men who gave their lives to win the war. Our thoughts especially go out to the members of our church in America, England, and other countries which shared in the sacrifice. As members of the Rotterdam branch, we think of the daughter of Sister De Heer, who lost her life during a German bombardment in May, 1940, and of Brother A. V. Goch, who was killed on the French coast near Dunkirk, where he was forced to slave-labor on German fortifications. May the Lord grant that their sacrifices have not been in vain.

Speaking more explicitly of Rotterdam, we first point out that, as all other large towns which were situated in the battle territory of the great belligerent nations, we suffered much from air raids. The main raids were the German bombardment in May, 1940, in which the city was destroyed, and the Anglo-American bombardment in March, 1943, during which a large area of western Rotterdam was lost. The latter raid must undoubtedly have been intended to hit the near-by factories, but unfortunately the bombs came down on the dwelling houses in the neighborhood of those factories. About six hundred men, women, and children were killed. Many others were killed in smaller bombardments.

Shortly after the Germans overpowered our country, they began to take those measures in the occupied territories which are known, no doubt, all over the world. One of the severest measures was the removal of the ghetos. This removal was often accompanied by heart-rending scenes. For example, the cases in which engaged young men had to see their fiances off, or the young ladies had to part with their beloved young men. Only Jews married to non-Jews were spared. Immediately after the arrival of the Germans, Dutch foodstuffs were exported to Germany. This led to a complete food shortage in Holland—a country which had never suffered for want of food in prewar times. A total famine was the ultimate result.

Another measure was the continual claiming of laborers, who were forced to go to Germany and help in the production of German war materials. At the beginning of the war, our members were spared this last measure, but in 1942 and '43, they too fell prey to the oppression. During this period Elder H. V. Eskel, Priest J. H. de Wild, Y. de Hik, and A. V. Goch disappeared. As already mentioned, Brother Goch never returned. They were sent to Danzig, Stuttgart, and France. Fortunately they were not stationed in the cities proper, but in little villages in the neighborhood of them. Their departure was accepted regretfully. We knew, however, that there was a God to accompany them, and that he would never leave them alone with their sorrows, afflictions, and hardships. In some ways these men were luckier than the ones who had to go to Germany during the latter part of the war. They were generally placed in jobs which corresponded to the ones they held in Holland; two of the four were privileged to come home on furlough. With the beginning of 1944, when circumstances in Germany grew worse and worse, all leaves were canceled. The number of laborers deported from Holland to Germany grew, and after D-Day in France, this deportation assumed dreadful proportions. Rassia ("round-up") was the order of the day. September came—the month which we had so long expected to bring peace and liberty. The great offensive in France had begun. All radios were ordered seized by the Germans, and only a few people, who risked losing their lives, kept sets. They listened to the news and passed it on. It was surprising how soon the report of victories spread; Paris and Antwerp were liberated—rumors were rife that the Herdyk bridge had been reached. Members of the Dutch underground forces raided the wired transmission office and broadcast that within a few hours we would be free. Flags were put out, and people gathered in the streets to await the arrival of the Allied Armies. Dutch quislings left the town, and there was great confusion among the Germans. The Tuesday on which these events took place is still called de dolle Dinsdag—the mad Tuesday. At that time no one could imagine that the liberation of Rotterdam was so far off, or that many should die and never see liberation. On September 17 the Allied Airborne Troops landed near Arnhem; however, this landing did nothing toward setting free the western part of Holland. Extremely bad weather and resistance of German troops prevented the Allies from crossing the Rhine River. The events taking place at Arnhem introduced a period of still greater exploitation of the Netherlands. Western Holland was declared a hunger territory, and soon we suffered German retaliatory measures to provide persons, who had to hide, with the necessary coupons. The underground forces raided many distribution offices; to get money to take care of their families and to pay wages to the strikers of the Dutch railways (on strike from September, 1944, until the end of the war) they attacked banks and post offices. Police offices were raided to set free political prisoners. The uprisals of the Germans were always terrible after a raid. Perhaps the readers of this article will hesitate to believe it, but one of the most popular measures of revenge used by the Germans was to shoot a score of local young men and lay the dead bodies out in the street where the populace must look at them.

On November 10, 1944, the greatest Rassia in Rotterdam took place. All men, fifteen to forty, were made civil prisoners and transported to Germany. Early in the morning, we were awakened by rifle shots, and soon discovered that the entire city had been surrounded by German troops, especially the S. S. The bridges had been opened and no one could cross them. All men were ordered to remain in their homes while the Germans visited street after street, house after house. They delivered pamphlets on which it was announced that all male citizens were to come out of doors, equipped with warm clothing, blankets, plates, spoons, and forks. We were then civil prisoners.

On the pamphlets it was stated that the houses would be searched, and if any man were found hiding, the house would be burned. Good wages were promised us for our labor, and some few did earn a little; most of us were paid nothing. We were directed to a stadium, where we waited in the rain for transportation. Some were taken within an hour, others in the evening, and the remainder left the following day. We were transported by ship, cattle truck, and train. It took us four nights and four days to reach Germany; other groups took ten days. During this time we were given one loaf of bread to eat, but it made little difference as we were too depressed to eat anyway. Some were bombed on the way, and many were killed in a train accident.

Upon reaching Germany we were separated and sent to various towns and villages—only three of us belonging to the church were placed in the same group. Most of the laborers were quartered in barracks; they slept on straw scattered on dirt floors. Thirty of us were assigned to a henhouse. We were crowded, cold, hungry, and miserable. We succeeded, however, in learning to adapt ourselves to our fate. We obtained additional rations by begging from the farmers.

We labored at various jobs; some worked in factories, some dug trenches (tank traps); one of our boys served as fireman on a locomotive—a very dangerous job in view of the numerous attacks made by bombers on the trains. Most of us belonging to the church had been office clerks in Holland, so the tasks were not easy for us. We managed, with God's help, to survive. In spite of the fact we missed our families and friends, we did not lose sight of the Lord, and from him we received much help. The following is a personal experience:

We had been in Germany only a few weeks, and although we were very hungry, we did not find begging an easy task. One evening a friend and I agreed that we would not ask for food, but see if we could arrange to buy some. Before leaving the barrack, I prayed silently for guidance and help. My friend, who was not a member of the church, later told me he had done the same. We tried to buy something at several houses without any success, so began to walk back. After a little while we saw some women on the road—we asked them if they had a piece of bread they would sell us. We were greatly astonished when one of the women said she had been waiting for us; she had seen us walking by and anticipated our intentions. She gave us coupons for fifteen pounds of bread, some sausage, and a piece of white bread for my brother who lay ill in the barracks. There are good people in Germany; a German mother is the same as a Dutch mother or the mothers of any country. Many of our boys can relate similar experiences. One of our young people was ill with diphtheria—a patient in a hospital which was bombed in an air raid. When taken to another shelter, he prayed there would be no prejudicial consequences; his prayer was answered. We were especially blessed as the day of liberation drew near. The front came closer and closer; most of us were under artillery fire and bombing, yet no one was hurt or killed. I was liberated on April 1, Easter Sunday, and was soon on my way back to Holland.

At Ensdeve, near the German-Dutch border, we were relieved of our unwelcome guests (the lice). After a short time we reached Zwaagwesteinde in the northern part of Holland, where we have a church. It was not possible at that time to go on to Rotterdam, as the city had not yet been liberated. Two other members of the Rotterdam branch arrived the same day; they came from a camp in the province of Groningen.

As soon as Rotterdam had been freed, I started home—a walk of about 175 miles. After three days I arrived in Zwolle, where I was stopped from entering western Holland because of the food shortage and epidemics there. While in Zwolle a truckload of boys from Germany arrived, two of whom belonged to the church. They were overjoyed when I told them that I had seen their mother in Zwaagwesteinde, and that eve had held meetings in which we experienced the presence of the Spirit of God. During the days I was there, the branch reclaimed the meeting hall which had been commandeered by the Germans. As I have already mentioned, the Saints were very kind to us, but our thoughts were still in Rotterdam. We had received no mail in six months, and we had heard through radio broadcasts that the situation at home was very bad; we waited with fear for the first information after the liberation. We thought our loved ones may have died of starvation or been killed in the air raids, but they too had been greatly blessed. Although some were ill, not one was dead.

Life had been hard for the people of Rotterdam since that fateful November 10, 1944. There was already a severe food shortage, due partially to the many inundations caused by the bombing of the docks. Immediately after our departure, the rations were cut to about two pounds of bread, and two pounds of potatoes per week. Most families had a little stock of foodstuff laid away, but those supplies were soon exhausted. Many became ill; there was no gas, no electricity, no fuel, no soap, no . . . no . . . no . . . ! When the rations were cut to one pound of bread per person each week, many died of hunger; even these small allotments were frequently not available in the shops. The hospitals were overcrowded and could not contain the sick and dying. The funeral parlors could not take care of all the funerals. There were no coffins, and the bodies were buried without. In one of the church buildings at Amsterdam the dead were stored, and men were assigned to drive away the rats with rattles.

People walked for hours and hours in search of food; they exchanged watches, clothes, anything for food. Sugar beets were the main fare; they were boiled, baked, and eaten raw. Certainly it was not a wholesome diet, but it filled the empty stomachs. Mothers sent their children to bed without food; hunger-crazed fathers ate the food of the children. Men, women, and children collapsed and died in the streets. There was practically no fuel for cooking; none for heating. There were no lights, and everyone went to bed at sundown. When a family died or left town, neighbors tore down the house for kindling. In spite of these hardships, regular services were held by members of the Rotterdam branch. The friends of Brother Hosterwyk, branch president, feared he could not survive, but he is alive today. He was never ill during that period, although in normal times he has been confined to his bed. All prayed for the deliverance of their relatives in Germany.

The children did not go to school, as the school buildings were used as hospitals. Many of them left the city for other parts of Holland. Some of the Saints walked to Zwaagwesteinde, with starved bodies, festering feet, and thin-soled shoes. One sister, who suffered from thrombosis and was not supposed to walk, also made the trip. Once there, they were heartily welcomed by members of the Zwaagwesteinde branch, and given the best that was available.

Others stuck to their posts in Rotterdam and carried on the work of the church. Four girls continued the activities of the young people's group. On Easter and Whitsentide Sunday they presented a program of poems, hymns, and tableaux. They adorned the meeting hall with flowers, and then took the bouquets to the utility hospitals; they were rewarded by the grateful smiles of the patients.

There was much gladness in western Holland when, the last of April, Allied bombers flew over and released loads of food to the starved populace. Some stood on the housetops and waved flags; others hurried to the fields and formed the words "Thank You," despite the fact it was forbidden. Their afflictions had been great, but their joy was even greater. When the boys returned from Germany a few weeks later, they held a special Thanksgiving Day.

God helped us to bear the hardships of war—let us hope that man will have learned something by it.

Anton Compier.

From the Saints in Caraway, Arkansas

The Saints of Caraway have enjoyed a series of meetings conducted by T. B. Sharp of Winthrop, Arkansas. His visit was very beneficial to our group, both collectively and individually.

Our records show quite an increase in attendance, and we hope that it will be even better.

On the Sunday following Brother Sharp's series, we were privileged to have with us Giles Turner of Jonesboro. He will be with us on the second Sunday of each month.

Although we are few in number and often become discouraged, we know the gospel is true, and we ask an interest in the prayers of other Saints that we may move forward and have a part in establishing God's kingdom according to his great plan. Joyce Pickett.

And Another Thing, by Howard Spring. Harper, 1946. 265 pages. $2.50. . . . A thoroughly English book of essays by a literary critic of the London Evening Standard, who was with Army Intelligence in the late war. It is about a little bit of everything; the domestic life of men and beasts, religion, popular philosophy, morality and the war, the fecundity of cats, the rapacity of pigeons, with many random excursions into high literature and interesting oddments. Americans ought to read a book like this for its charm, and as an antidote for American books. An American author starts a book, and from that moment neither he nor the reader escapes from the factory production line until it is finished. A British author begins a book, wanders all over the place, has a delightful time, and arrives at the destination, by some miraculous means, just a little ahead of us, refreshed by his excursion, instead of fatigued as we are. Try it and see!

"And another thing," American religious books are often so secular in their outlook, while British secular books are so often religious in their outlook. Can you understand it?

The Keeper of the Door, by George E. Sweazey. Bethany Press, St. Louis, 1946. 190 pages. $2. . . . This book by the Secretary of the Department of Evangelism, Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church, is both inspirational and practical in its material and organization. The author keeps in touch with people, their problems, and worries, offering much that is suitable for help. Those who must address small groups will find it a convenient source of material and illustrations.

One World or None, Edited by Dexter Masters and Katharine Way. McGraw-Hill. 79 folio pages, paper bound. $1. . . . What is the political and military meaning of the atomic bomb? Is there any defense against it? What would happen to an American city if a bomb like the one that destroyed Hiroshima dropped on it? What can we do to escape our apparent doom? These and other questions are answered by fifteen of the scientists and leaders who worked on the development, use, and observation of the effects of the atomic bomb, including Arthur H. Compton, Niels Bohr, Albert Einstein, Walter Lippman, J. R. Oppenheimer, Harlow Shapley, and others. Read how your city would look if an atom bomb hit it, how they hope to design an engine for the peaceful use of atomic power, how we may organize to prevent a war that might destroy civilization. This book is the season's biggest literary sensation.

Trials of Great Men of the Bible, by Clarence E. Macartney. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 189 pages. $1.50. . . . A currently popular way to make a series of sermons (and therefore a book) is to select some one quality or type of experience and go through the Bible to find all examples of it, and make a sermon of each one. It is a type of mining that has been frequently and successfully done. This popular writer has undertaken such a task for the leading men of the Bible, and has made a very effective book of his sermons.

A Guide for Bible Readers, Edited by Harris Franklin Rall. Abingdon-Cokesbury. About 160 pages, each volume. Paper bound. Price each, only 60c. . . . An objection to the use of "commentaries" for Bible study has been the bulk and cost of these ponderous volumes. The publisher has met this objection by providing a fine new series of inexpensive paper-bound books, each dealing with a part of the Bible, and selling for a uniform price. Following are the names of the volumes, with indications of their subject matter:

The Books of the Law (Genesis to Deuteronomy).

Poetry and Wisdom (Psalms, Song of Songs, Lamentations, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes).

The Prophets (Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joel, Jonah, Obadiah, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi).

The Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke).

The Fourth Gospel and the Later Epistles (Gospel of John, Hebrews, Peter, James, Epistles of John, Timothy, Titus, Jude).

Applejack for Breakfast, by Helen and Alfred Campbell. Illustrated by Alice Harvey. Scribner's, 1946. 191 pages. $2.50. . . . This book takes in reverse the common story of country folk moving to the city, which is always hard and a little heartbreaking. It tells how a couple of young city people—a writer, his wife, and small son—went to the country, and what adventures they met there. Husband and wife wrote this book, each selecting his own favorite experiences. It's full of good humor, fun, surprise, adventure, and what—to employ a sedate euphemism—we shall call "The Realities of Life." Wholesome and clean all the way through, except for the ultra-squeamish. If you have capacity for fun, you will enjoy this, especially if you grew up in the country.

A Wordsworth Anthology, Collected by Laurence Housman, with an Introduction by the editor. Scribner's, 1946. 151 pages. $2. . . . There are some people who can take Wordsworth entire, no matter how tedious, dull, and interminable the pages may be, but they are few. The others lose the good and beautiful things he wrote, simply because they are too far apart in the total collection. Laurence Housman wrote a brilliant essay on Wordsworth which was printed in the Atlantic Monthly, which immediately suggested to readers that he should make a selection based upon his ideas. Here is the result, and it is very good. Wordsworth was a son of the Romantic Era, which might have been saved a lot of drivel if Rousseau had been decently edited and kept under rational control. But the Romantic Era was what it was, for better and for worse, and all we can do is select from it.

The Practical Cogitator (The Thinker's Anthology), selected and arranged by Charles P. Curtis, Jr., and Ferris Greenslet. Houghton Mifflin. 577 pages. $3. . . . A classified collection of some of the best serious and playful thoughts of writers from earliest times to the present day, to be appreciated, enjoyed, and remembered. Some of them, it is suspected, have been selected more for their pungency than for their truth, some for cleverness and wit as well as for wisdom. This book may or may not make a thinker out of you (depending of course on whether God intended you to be one, and gave you the equipment for it), but at least it brings you a rich cafeteria offering of what men have thought, and from which you may easily overload your mental trays if you are susceptible to that kind of temptation. It will not, of course, make a systematic philosopher out of you, but it will help you to see through the profundities of some of those plodding folk.

The Doctor to the Dead, by John Bennett. Rinehart & Co. 260 pages. $2.50. . . . These are "Grotesque legends and folk tales of old Charleston," one of the distinctive cities of the South. The author visited the people who can remember and tell the old tales so well, but cannot write them; he performed this service for them and for posterity. Serious readers may think a book like this performs no useful service, but maybe it does. For one thing, the most incredible ghost tale has some grain of truth back of it, some inkling of that world of truth which lies beyond the ken of science, some contact with the effort of the Hereafter to correct the injustices of this earth. As always, the tales that come from the common people, and are not invented over some author's desk, but remembered over washtubs and hot stoves, or on a galerie some moonlit evening, contain tragedy and humor, pathos and tenderness such as is found in life and not in imagination.

The Fallow Land, by Constancio C. Vigil. Harper, N. Y. 207 pages. $2.50. Translated from the Spanish by Lawrence Smith. Illustrated by the Chilean artist, Alfredo Adduard. . . . This collection of parables, proverbs, epigrams, and short meditations is by an author who is a native of Uruguay, who went to Argentina, gained fame as a writer, poet, and liberal leader, and established the publishing house, Editorial Atlantida. This book was first published in 1915 under the title El Erial, has been printed in Mexico and elsewhere in many editions, and translated into Italian, German, French, Portuguese, and now into English. It is like nothing the reader may have read before. Although it is in prose, there is the beauty of Scripture about it—the brevity of the Proverbs, the singing lines of the Psalms, and sometimes the insight and power of the prophets; the pungency and freshness of the earth, love and pity for human suffering, the calm of ancient wisdom. A book you can read again, many times.

Christ and Man's Dilemma, by George A. Buttrick. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1946. 224 pages. $2. . . . The author, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York City, is famed as a speaker across America, and for such books as: The Parables of Jesus, Jesus Came Preaching, the fine work on Prayer. In this book he takes up the current situation of the world. We are ignorant, and unable to do anything about it; so we need a revelation. We are wicked, but powerless to save ourselves; so need redemption. We are mortal, and need deliverance. He tells us what Christ has to say about these things, about our business, our education, our machine age, and our opportunity to respond.

Together, by twelve men. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1946. 125 pages. $1. . . . A fellowship of twelve religious men, reaching for the inspiration of a new Pentecost during their meetings in Washington, present their united views in a dozen chapters touching the great religious perplexities of the postwar era. The men are: a great Quaker mystic, an Episcopalian rector, a criminal who experienced a reform like Paul's on the road to Damascus, the founder of the Goodwill Industries, a youth leader, a spokesman for the colored people, a man who makes new easy alphabets for underprivileged nations, a world famous missionary, a congressman, etc. A stimulating book of outlook and opinion.

Man-Eaters of Kumaon, by Jim Corbett. Oxford, 1946, American edition. 233 pages. $2. Illustrations: plates of photographs, table, and map end-papers. . . . Major Corbett of the British Army presents vivid accounts of the hunting and destruction of a number of man-eating tigers, some of them with formidable records in the destruction of human life, in the United Provinces of northern India above the Ganges River. He tells something of the life and habits of tigers and leopards, how they become man-eaters, what their normal place is in the balance of nature, and of the reactions of thousands of poor, unarmed, and emotionally defenseless natives. This is not the usual "pith-helmet opera" but it does show how one Occidental, with courage and skill, takes up the burden and risk of protecting vast numbers of Orientals.

Religion in Russia, by Robert Pierce Casey. Harper, 1946. 198 pages. $2. . . . These Lowell Institute Lectures, delivered at Harvard University, give a condensed but balanced and scholarly account of the development of the Christian religion in Russia from the advent of the earliest missionaries there until the present day, including dependable evidence concerning the struggle between Communism and the Orthodox Church, the attitude and action of the Soviet State, the intrusions of the Roman Catholic Church, the development of a Protestant movement in Russia, and the abiding religious character of the Russian people. There is nothing here for those who want sensational stories or propaganda; but for those of impartial historical attitude the book is good reading.

The Peace That Is Left, by Emile Cammaerts. Harper, 1945. 150 pages. $2.

. . . The author of the beautiful and excellent book, Upon This Rock, has written several slender volumes of philosophy since which have not matched its popular appeal. In this new book he returns to a high point, presenting material that will be more widely understood. This is the best study of the subject of "Peace," based upon the Bible, that has come to us. Although the author, Professor of Belgian Studies at the University of London since the beginning of the late war, accepted Christianity late in life, he writes with great sympathy and understanding, both of life and of his Scriptural sources. Under his guidance, peace becomes something that individuals and groups can understand and enjoy.

Faith and Reason, by Nels F. S. Ferre'. Harper, 1946. 251 pages. $2.50. . . . For some time this intellectual leader, teacher, and writer, has exercised a growing influence in the field of American liberal religion, seeking to define the character of a mature and intelligent religion, and to indicate its place in relation to man's other fields of inquiry. This book seeks to reconcile the trinity of science, philosophy, and religion, without giving to science the dominance that has been demanded for it, nor accepting for religion a smaller place than it deserves. It is not a book for beginners, and will call for the best resources the reader can bring to it. His conclusion is indicated in the statement, "Reason must become religious." How that is to be done is carefully presented in the book.

Now to Live! by Ralph W. Sockman. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 214 pages. $2. . . . The preacher for the National Radio Pulpit, Minister of Christ Church, New York City, a contributor to leading religious periodicals of America, the author occupies an eminent place in religious thinking. These radio addresses, selected on the basis of audience response and permanent value, have a valid and popular appeal. Their purpose is to help the individual in his problems with his life, understanding himself, adjusting himself to conditions he cannot control.

The Book of Mormon and the Restoration Movement

By Roy Weldon

DURING THE 1944 General Conference, the Society for Archaeological Research sponsored a number of illustrated lectures on archaeology and the Book of Mormon. Among the interested group who came forward to ask questions following one of these lectures was a miner from Alaska. He told us that during the early days when the miners were panning gold out of the Yukon River, a new man came to seek his fortune. Some of the old miners thought they would have some fun with the stranger. They advised him to go up on top of the mountain and stake his claim. The stranger did so, and to the amazement of the old timers, he struck it rich. Some of the greatest discoveries of our time have been made by amateurs who have unwittingly stumbled onto hidden and unknown treasures in invention and scientific discovery. Like the miners of the Yukon, for many years we have been seeking and finding here and there nuggets of Book of Mormon proof in the sand and gravel of the great river of scientific progress. Like the story of the Yukon, future developments in the field of the Book of Mormon contain rich possibilities.

PURPOSE OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

For many years the armies of Christianity have sung, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The marching armies of Protestantism, however, have reached a seemingly impassable barrier. This barrier is the great gulf that separates the world of the ideal from the world of the real; the chasm that stands between the realm of moral blueprints and the realm of living actualities; the abyss that yawns between the spiritual world and the world of the five senses. We have a bridge over this barrier that the Christian world does not possess. We refer to the Book of Mormon.

Several years ago, in a western city, another elder and the writer were invited to visit the home of a nonmember. We had not visited very long when the man of the house said, "If you can prove the Book of Mormon to be true, I will join your church." We immediately proceeded to lay before him the cold, hard, scientific facts as they relate to the Book of Mormon. He and his family joined the church and are still faithful members. Since the inception of the Latter Day Saint movement, the Book of Mormon has been the means by which untold thousands have traversed the gulf that separates the cold, hard, workaday world from the world of spiritual realities. The Book of Mormon is that point in our religion where faith sets foot on solid ground, where concrete meets abstract and heaven touches earth.

From revelations given to Joseph Smith and from its own pages, we learn that the purpose of the Book of Mormon is to "convince Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ."—2 Nephi 11: 78-86; Doctrine and Covenants 18: 3; 17: 2; 87: 3.

The facts of American archaeology as they pertain to the Book of Mormon are so "convincing" and have grown to such proportions that in the opinion of the writer, the time is ripe for the presentation of these facts to leading scientist of our day. We need people who possess the academic qualifications to meet these men on their own ground and interpret the Book of Mormon to them. In Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8 we find these words: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them."

The Lord knew we would have a propensity to forget the Book of Mormon. We have forgotten it to such an extent that 115 years of time plus over 130 thousand current membership have failed to produce one solitary individual who has majored in American archaeology in to the scientific world.

SURFACE UNSCRATCHED

American Archaeologists such as Morley, Thompson, and Mason tell us that the surface of ancient America has scarcely been scratched. If a scratching of the surface has revealed evidences that have "convinced" untold thousands, what may future excavations reveal?

Future developments in this field contain possibilities which may revolutionize our entire work. Regardless of how much we may be marking time, the Book of Mormon itself is moving towards the great Restoration objective of the convincing of Jew and Gentile (the entire world) that Jesus is the Christ.

As an illustration, we offer an editorial comment of the 19th century as compared with one of the 20th century.

The editor of Harper's New Monthly Magazine (1851) said:

Whatever may be the truth in respect to the real origin and authorship of the Book of Mormon, there can be no doubt of its wonderful adaptedness to the purposes to which it has been applied. We cannot agree with those who would deny to the work either genius or talent. The Koran bears with it that prestige of antiquity which always insures some degree of respect. It is written in a dead, and what is now regarded a learned language. It has its Oriental imagery, together with frequent allusions to what most interests us in Oriental romance. Above all, it has had its centuries of scholiasts and commentators, extracting the aroma as well as the dust of its assumed divinity. In short, there is about it a show of learning and "venerable antiquity," and yet, we do not hesitate to say it, Joe Smith, or whoever was its author, has made a book superior to that of the Arabian prophet, deeper in its philosophy, purer in its morality, and far more original. There are, doubtless, many faults both of style and language; but centuries hence may convert these into precious archaisms, and give to the bad Anglo-Saxon of the Mormon book all the interest which ages of scholiasts have imparted to what was once the irregular Arabic of the rude tribes of the desert.

It may startle some to be told that Mormonism has actually pressed itself more upon the attention of the world than Christianity had done at the same age. We carry back into the early days of the gospel's progress the clear light and outline of its later history. We can hardly realize that even for a century, or more, after its first promulgation, it was an object of little interest to the world, and that when it first began to demand a passing paragraph from the historian, it was only as an "excecrabilis superstitio," creating a disturbance barely visible on the surface of society. Of course there is no intention, by any such remark, to make any comparison between the intrinsic merits of the two systems . . .¹

Before Mr. Wallace was elected to the office of Vice President he visited Lamoni, Iowa. He manifested considerable interest in the ideals and program of the church and was presented with a copy of the Book of Mormon.

Mr. Wallace said:

Of all the religious books of the nineteenth century, it seems probable that the Book of Mormon was the most powerful. It reached probably only 1 per cent of the United States, but it affected this 1 per cent so powerfully and lastingly that all the people of the United States have been affected.²

During our archaeological society meetings at that conference one man said he had been told that during a question and answer program on the radio, someone asked if a history of America's prehistoric inhabitants had ever been found. According to our informant the answer given was that the Book of Mormon is a history of prehistoric America and that it has been accepted as such by the Smithsonian Institute of Washington, D. C. Someone, of course, had made a mistake. The Smithsonian Institute has not as yet accepted the Book of Mormon as a genuine history of prehistoric America.

TWO SECRETS

Joseph Smith possessed two secrets: the secret of ancient America (the Book of Mormon), and the secret of future America (the zionic plan). Thus far in the history of the Restoration Movement, neither one of these secrets has been sufficiently demonstrated to cause world acceptance.

Inexorably, we are moving towards the day when the entire world will be brought to recognize that Joseph Smith possessed these two secrets. We can well pray to God that we may be able to demonstrate the secret of future America before scientific discovery demonstrates the secret of ancient America. What kind of a spot will we be in if the Smithsonian, Carnegie, and Peabody Institutes produce overwhelming evidence that Joseph Smith possessed the secret of ancient America before we produce the evidence that he possessed the secret of future America? The impact of the dual demonstration of these two secrets would have world-shaking effects. This would be the "grand finale" towards which the centuries have been rolling. In the simultaneous demonstration of these twin purposes of the Restoration Movement lies the fulfillment of the greatest prophecies of all times. Nations will be joined to the Lord in a day (Zechariah 2: 11).

"And now, behold, if Zion do these things, [keep the commandments] she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God, and surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

We are approaching the most critical era in the history of the Restoration Movement. We can no longer delay our progress towards Zion without jeopardizing the great divine plan of the ages as well as the future welfare of the entire human race.

Without further elaboration may we say that in the field of American Archaeology and in the field of our zionic plan there are possibilities that stagger the imagination; possibilities that in some future day may cause the Restoration Movement to take a turn which few of us may fully anticipate.

Get ye up, then, to your mountain!
Zion of this closing day!
For the glory of my coming
Waits to break upon your way!
Forth from thence your testimony
Shall to trembling nations go,
And the world confess that with you
God has residence below.

Pedestrian's Paradise

There is no better example of the law of compensation than that provided by the roads of New England, from the pedestrian's point of view. The paved highway cannot be everywhere. It sucks into its channel nearly all the traffic that once flowed along a dozen others. For every foot by which its shoulders are widened, the boughs of ash and elm lean a foot farther over the roads of yesterday. The highway draws all the billboards to itself and so leaves the little road undesecrated; it keeps to itself the scream of brakes and so it is possible to hear in New England the song of the wood thrush. The automobile has made New England a pedestrian's paradise.—Odell Shepard, The Harvest of a Quiet Eye. (Houghton Mifflin).

The Restoration

11. The Mormon War

By Evan A. Fry

IN THE PRECEDING chapter we left the Latter Day Saints in comparative peace, settled in northern Missouri in two new counties—one of which was their own to do with as they pleased. Caldwell and Daviess were the two new counties. Caldwell County, with the new town of Far West as its county seat, was practically 100 per cent Latter Day Saint; Daviess County was predominantly so, but contained some people of other faiths. There was also a steady expansion of the Saints, through legitimate purchase of property, into Livingston, Clinton, and Carroll Counties. Their enemies claimed that they came in by fraud and stealth. The Saints, on the other hand, claimed (not without some justification) that the original settlers gladly sold out for cash at the high prices the Saints were willing to pay, and then plotted to drive out the purchasers by persecution, so that they could get back their property for nothing.

At any rate, the Saints now regarded themselves as permanent citizens. While refugee guests in Clay County, they had not claimed the privilege of voting at the polls, but they felt that now the situation was different—that they were entitled to the privileges of citizenship. On August 6, 1838, an election was scheduled for Daviess County. Colonel William P. Penniston, a strong anti-Mormon, was a candidate for sheriff. Naturally, he expected all the Saints to vote against him, and since they were by far in the majority, he stood a good chance of losing. A Judge Morin, who was friendly to the Saints, sent them word that there was a plot under way to prevent them from voting in this election, and advised them to stand their ground and have their rights.

Still trusting in the good will of their neighbors, a number of the men of Daviess County went in a body—peacefully and unarmed—to cast their votes at Gallatin, the county seat. As usual, on election day, the whisky was already flowing freely—too freely—when they arrived at eleven o'clock. Colonel Penniston was exhorting a crowd not to let the Mormons vote, or all the others in the county would lose their franchise. It would be equally logical today, to argue that no Democrats should be allowed to vote, lest all the Republicans' votes be canceled. But such was the spirit of the times—when election riots were no uncommon thing even in sections which had never heard of the Latter Day Saints. Another speaker exhorted the crowd, saying that Mormons were no more entitled to vote than Negroes—and remember that Missouri Negroes were still slaves in a southern slave state in the year 1838. Samuel Brown, of the Saints, countered with the statement that men who could not read and write had no business to vote. Blows were exchanged, and a general riot followed, though without casualties. Fearing reprisals on their families, the Saints returned home without getting to cast their votes.

Then the history of Jackson County was repeated in the northern part of the state. Life for the Saints became one series of depredations, harrassments, assaults, and destruction of their homes, their property, their crops. Rumors, most of them utterly without foundation—flew thick and fast on both sides. Each side feared and mistrusted the other. The Saints appealed to General Atchison, one of their legal representatives who was also in command of a division of state militia. The other citizens appealed to Governor Boggs for protection. Atchison came to Far West, and reported to Boggs that there was no danger to be expected from that quarter. At a nearby town of Millport, a mob had gathered for the purpose of laying siege to DeWitt, the principal river port of the Mormon settlements. Joseph Smith and a small body of men went to the aid of the besieged town, and when General Parks arrived under orders to investigate and report back to Atchison, he found two or three hundred of the Saints besieged by a much larger and an increasing crowd, who were bringing up a field piece to shell the town. Governor Boggs saw no reason for him to take any action. The Saints were dangerously situated and outnumbered; so they yielded to the demands of the mob, and agreed to quit the town of DeWitt, and sell out at the appraised value of their property—which was of course considerably less than its actual value. It made little difference, however, for nothing was ever paid them at all. The Mormon residents of DeWitt removed again as homeless refugees into the town of Far West.

Encouraged by their success and the governor's lack of interest, the mob now undertook to attack another town — Adam-ondi-Ahman. Here Colonel Lyman Wight was stationed with a company of militia composed of the men of the Saints. Bear in mind throughout our discussion that it was often difficult or impossible to tell the actual status of a body of men, in a time when none wore uniforms, and every able-bodied male citizen was required by law to belong to some military unit. The men of Atchison, Doniphan, and Parks were strongly anti-Mormon, and thoroughly unreliable, although their commanding officers were on the whole able and impartial military men bent on upholding the law. Before we condemn Lyman Wight for making war against the state militia, we should remember that Wight was a member of the militia too, and a commanding officer; that his superior officer, General Parks, had advised him to fight if necessary to protect the homes and property of the Saints.

Typical of the activities of this period is the story of one Captain Samuel Bogart, who on some pretext or other obtained permission to "police" northern Ray County with a group of militiamen. His method of policing was to drive off the families of the Saints, appropriate their grain, stock, and property of all kinds, and leave them hungry and homeless with another winter coming on. (It seemed that the mob always waited until the crops were safely harvested before chasing off the owners.) Word was received at Far West, where hundreds of refugees from Bogart's "police squad" had fled, that Bogart was to attack the city of Far West. The men of the city, acting under their legally qualified military officers, met the Bogart group outside of town and engaged them in pitched battle. Bogart and his men were utterly routed, but three of the Saints, including David W. Patten, one of the Twelve Apostles, were killed.

Now the storm was increasing in fury. Rumors flew thick and fast. Judge King, whose brother-in-law, Hugh Brazeale, had been killed in the skirmish at the Whitmer place on the Blue River back in Jackson County in 1833, wrote to Governor Boggs that the Mormons had now taken up arms; that they were the aggressors, and that something had to be done to make the state safe for decent people. Acting on this highly biased report of unfounded rumor, Boggs did two things. First, he appointed General Clark as supreme in command over Atchison and Doniphan, both of whom had refused to take such a post. Second, he issued his famous (or infamous) "extermination order," which is without parallel in the history of a free United States for its callous disregard of law. Addressed to the commanders of the state militia, this order reads as follows: "I have received information of the most appalling character, which entirely changes the face of things, and places the 'Mormons' in the attitude of an open and avowed defiance of this State. Your orders, are therefore, to hasten your operations with all possible speed. The Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State if necessary for the public peace." General Atchison indignantly resigned his command and returned home to Liberty on receipt of these orders; and Doniphan, though he remained a few days longer, replied to the governor that he was disregarding his orders as the age of extermination was over.

While General Clark was on his way to take over the command from Atchison and Doniphan, there occurred the most heinous atrocity of the whole "war." At the little settlement on Shoal Creek, where Jacob Haun had established a mill and blacksmith shop, six or seven families had built cabins, and several emigrant wagons had camped temporarily while the owners waited for more peaceful days before selecting a permanent home. On October 30, 1838, in the midst of a truce arranged with the leaders of the mob in that county, a band of men from the adjoining county burst suddenly upon the little settlement. The two hundred or so men in this screaming mob were militiamen from Livingston County, acting without orders. They attacked the twenty men who had rushed to use the blacksmith shop with its heavy log walls as a fort or blockhouse. But the battle was hopeless. The Saints had little ammunition. They were plainly visible to their attackers through large unchinked spaces between the logs, and the mob outside simply picked them off one by one. A white flag of surrender was ignored. Finally, the men decided to make a dash for the timber, but most were shot down as soon as they reached the door. A few wounded survivors were shot without mercy, and screaming like demons, the mob decapitated and mutilated the bodies of their fallen victims with huge corn knives. The women and children who had fled to the timber along the creek bank escaped, but one little boy who tried to hide under the bellows of the blacksmith shop was shot in cold blood by a member of the mob who often bragged about his exploit in later years, and justified his deed with the saying, "Nits will make lice."

At evening the women crept out of their hiding places and tended the few remaining wounded as best they could. There were no men left to dig graves, so on the following morning, the bodies were unceremoniously dumped into a dry and unfinished well, covered with a little straw, and the hole filled with a layer of dirt. The attackers, after fleeing unceremoniously from what they thought was the sound of cannon, returned two days later, and laid waste the little settlement, stripping it clean of grain and livestock and provisions of all kinds, so that the widows and orphans were forced to leave for Far West in the hopes of finding some means of sustenance.

On October 31, General Clark's troops surrounded the city of Far West, and on November 1 took Joseph Smith and other church leaders prisoner. A hasty court martial was held—a completely illegal proceeding in most cases, since Joseph Smith and many others of the prisoners were not members of the militia, and not subject to martial law at the time. But as a result of the court martial, General Doniphan received the following order from Samuel D. Lucas, Major-General commanding: "Brigadier-General Doniphan, Sir: You will take Joseph Smith and the other prisoners into the public square of Far West and shoot them at nine o'clock tomorrow morning." To which order Doniphan promptly wrote in reply: "It is cold blooded murder. I will not obey your order. My brigade shall march for Liberty tomorrow morning at eight o'clock, and if you execute these men I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God." Lucas seemingly thought better of his decision, countermanded the order, and never saw fit to court-martial Doniphan for his outright refusal to obey a military order from his superior officer.

General Clark pressed his work of extermination and driving out, and forced from the Saints an agreement to leave the state by May, 1839. The Saints' memorialized the legislature, which wrangled a while about the matter, and dropped it without doing anything. The Saints' appealed to Washington, and were told again that it was a state affair, in which the Federal government could not interfere. Newspapers all over the country began to denounce and ridicule the high-handed methods used by the state in dealing with so large a body of its citizens, and the thin-skinned legislature passed a resolution forbidding the publication of any documents, orders, or correspondence relating to the Mormon War. This un-American and cowardly censorship was continued two years, before the order was rescinded. The legislature magnanimously appropriated two thousand dollars for the relief of suffering in Daviess and Caldwell Counties, but by the time it got there most of the Saints had already been driven out.

Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Lyman Wight, and other prisoners taken at Far West were moved to Liberty and placed in jail to await trial. All winter they lay in a basement dungeon, many suffering from fever, chills, and various aches induced by the damp cold of their prison room. While they suffered through the winter, the Saints straggled a few at a time eastward towards the Mississippi River and the state of Illinois, where they were to begin a new chapter in the history of the church for which they had endured so much.

The following April, the prisoners were removed to Gallatin, Missouri, for trial. Their counsel, after two or three days of attempting to get them a fair trial, demanded a change of venue to Boone County. On the trip to Boone County the prisoners were invited to escape, since by now their persecutors saw that they had no case which would stand up in court. One group of prisoners which had been held at Richmond all winter, was also taken to Boone County and lodged in jail; but they too were invited to escape. Only one man of all these prisoners was ever brought to trial, and he was promptly acquitted.

And thus closed one of the most shameful chapters in the history of Missouri. As we continue the story of the church, we shall tell you next week of some of the developments in the eastern part of the country during this period of unrest and strife in Missouri; and then on the following Sunday we shall begin the romantic and appealing story of the settlement at Nauvoo, on the banks of the beautiful Mississippi River.

All people need insurance against broken homes. They need a daily and weekly program of good ideas and feelings. They need to read the Scriptures, attend prayer meetings, go to church. They need to meet with other good people and strengthen themselves in righteousness. They need to listen to the minister who brings them good thoughts, helpful ideas, and who works with them to preserve their homes, live good lives, and do right. This is the best home insurance in the world. It would be a happier world if more people would take it.

Twelve Steps to Freedom

The now famous "Twelve Steps to Freedom" outlined by Alcoholics Anonymous have freed many thousands of men and women from the curse of the liquor habit, and restored them to lives of usefulness and happiness. Let any drinker follow these steps, and he can indeed be free, if he really wishes to.

It seems that Alcoholics Anonymous have struck something deeper and more universal than the liquor problem. Take any fault you have that is making your life miserable. What would you not give to be free of it? Take these same "Twelve Steps to Freedom" and for the word alcohol and related words, substitute the name of your fault or trouble. Try it! Give God a chance!

1. We admitted we were powerless over alcohol—that our lives had become unmanageable.

2. Came to believe that a Power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity.

3. Made a decision to turn our will and our lives over to the care of God, as we understand him.

4. Made a searching and fearless inventory of ourselves.

5. Admitted to God, to ourselves, and to another human being the exact nature of our wrongs.

6. Were entirely ready to have God remove all these defects of character.

7. Humbly asked him to remove our shortcomings.

8. Made a list of all persons we had harmed, and became willing to make amends to them all.

9. Made direct amends to such people wherever possible, except when to do so would injure them or others.

10. Continued to take personal inventory, and when we were wrong promptly admitted it.

11. Sought through prayer and meditation to improve our conscious contact with God, as we understand him, praying only for knowledge of his will for us and the power to carry that out.

12. Having had a spiritual experience as the result of these steps, we tried to carry this message to alcoholics, and to practice these principles in all our affairs.

There is an hour in each man's life appointed
To make his happiness, if then he seize it.

Whatever God May Do Shall Stand Unchanged

AS WE attempt to arrive at a clear understanding of God's mind, purposes, and will respecting mankind—his creatures—we must be governed by a knowledge of the immutable, unchanging aspects of his doctrine and laws as he has granted dispensations of the gospel to various generations of men. In order to establish a true relation among men, and between man and God, the church was instituted in the early dawn of earth's history through Jesus Christ. Various ordinances and commandments were given by him for faithful observance. He provided a perfect form of worship, which has been entrusted to a greater and lesser priesthood. In these unchangeable ordinances, the power of godliness is manifest: and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, especially the greater, the power of godliness is not manifest to men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live. Furthermore, the Lord has decreed that without this preparation no one enters into his rest.

We are therefore assured repeatedly in holy writing that with God and his acts there is neither shadow of turning nor variation. (See James 1: 17.) Man only changes things as he in his blindness improperly exercises his free moral agency. For that reason the Prophet Isaiah was caused by the Holy Spirit to warn that if men's beliefs were not governed by God's holy law and testimony it was because there is no light in them. (Isaiah 8: 20.) In strict accordance with this unvarying manner, God has dealt with men in all ages. Matthew in his gospel records Jesus explaining the parable of the hiring of laborers or ministers into God's vineyard, the world. Beginning with the "early in the morning" group of laborers and proceeding even to the "eleventh hour," they, every man, received a penny. All students of theology agree that these laborers represent the divinely authorized priesthood of the gospel of Jesus Christ in its various dispensations to generations of man. All these laborers sent by God into the world had to deal with the same priestly authority, principles, ordinances, and commandments. This is proved by the recorded utterance of Jesus, respecting his ministry who would labor in the last hour of the dispensation of time. He states in Matthew 20: 14, addressing his assembled laborers at end of day, "I will give unto this last, even as unto thee." The "unto thee" meant the laborers of the first hour gospel dispensation or age of Adam and his posterity. This agrees with Malachi's statement (Malachi 3: 6), "Lo, I am God. I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." (See also Ecclesiastes 3: 14.)

Therefore we must all be warned that though we may believe a thing, this does not necessarily render that belief true. We are told in the Scriptures that frequently "there is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs 14: 12. Therefore, the Lord admonished us "to search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye shall find the way to eternal life." In another quoted statement he warns that "straight is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matthew 7: 23, Inspired Version. Jesus, our Lord, set a wonderful example to us when he four times quoted holy writ to his arch-enemy, Lucifer, beginning with, "It is written," after which Satan fled. The Apostle Paul admonished the Saints of his day to have their "senses exercised to discern both good and evil."—Hebrews 5: 14, Inspired Version.

With the foregoing statements fresh in our minds, let us now analyze in the ensuing paragraphs some aspects of the Lamb's church and gospel such as the high priesthood after the holy order of the Son of God. In discussing priesthood and its authority, be reminded that there are in the Church of Jesus Christ two priesthoods or divisions, namely: the Melchisedec and the Aaronic, including the Levitical. The Melchisedec priesthood was known as the holy or holiest priesthood until Melchisedec's time at which period its name was changed to that of Melchisedec. Why the first was called the Melchisedec priesthood is because Melchisedec was such a great high priest. Before his day it was called the holy priesthood after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days called that priesthood after Melchisedec or the Melchisedec priesthood. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1.) Therefore, because of authority conferred upon this holy order "all other authorities or offices in the church are appendages to this priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 2.

This order is of greatest antiquity and was instituted by God in the days of Adam or "early in the morning" of creation as the parable relates, and came down by lineal descent to Moses. The high priesthood existed continuously without a break down to days of Moses, a period of 2,553 years. The line of descent from Adam is Abel, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, Noah, Melchisedec, Abraham, Esaias, Gad, Jeremy, Elihu, Caleb, Jethro, and

Highways to Abundant Living

We Examine Our Leisure Time Activities

By Amy G. Axelson

THE NAME "Zion's League" signifies the "youth of the church, united in action for Christ." This objective is, or should be recognized in every phase of the League's program, whether it be educational, devotional, or recreational.

As we examine our leisure-time activities, let us keep as our theme the oft repeated admonition of Jesus Christ to, "seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," and test our various activities by this standard.

All our activities should prove an experiment in zionic living where the lives of the young people will be developed along Christlike standards, and their abilities and talents be used in the realization of the objectives of the church.

LET US NOT FORGET that we are stewards of our time and talents as well as our possessions and are therefore accountable to God for the way we use them. Certainly time spent in our leisure activities is no exception. In the choice of our activities, let God be the guide. Let us never fail to recognize him in all our activities at all times, giving thanks and seeking his blessing and approval in all that we do, and his Spirit to guide and inspire us. It is good to ask ourselves the question, "Does the activity inspire, stimulate, and edify us in the direction of right-living and right-thinking? Will it lead to kingdom-of-God living?"

Here, as in all our church activities, the importance and necessity of good leadership must be emphasized. So much depends on the leader, his consecration to God, the vision he has of the work and place of the church, his love for and devotion to the young of the church, his understanding of their problems, and his skill and preparation for the task of leader in Zion's League.

Our leisure-time activities divide themselves naturally into cultural and recreational groups. Included in the cultural are music, art, literature, and drama. Closely related to all four is handcraft of various kinds.

THE SUBJECT OF music opens to us a vast field of activities, depending a great deal on the training, talent, and resources of the leader and the individuals in the group. Whatever our musical activities, let us seek to raise our efforts above the commonplace and the ordinary to a higher plane of endeavor. Most anyone can join in singing the popular songs of today and yesterday and enjoy them; they have their place. However, in our League let us organize a chorus, a quartet or sextet to sing a cappella or otherwise with the purpose of learning to sing well and beautifully the better music; then use this group to enhance the worship service.

There may be an outstanding concert course scheduled for your city, or you may be fortunate enough to live where there is a local symphony orchestra. Encourage your group to attend these regularly. In preparation to better appreciate and understand the music performed, plan to study and become acquainted with some of the selections by studying the life of the composer, and the characteristics of his compositions. Listen to recordings, or if possible performances by members of the group. You may want to plan a musical program for the year. Why not study the history of music? This can be made very interesting by using the various members of the group to develop different stages of it. They can dramatize it or in other attractive ways illustrate each stage. A visit to a large pipe organ, where its technique can be demonstrated, would be interesting; or a visit to a rehearsal of a symphony orchestra could be arranged, where the different instruments could be identified and their distinctive characteristics demonstrated and different forms and types of music illustrated. You may want to invite soloists to your League to give a program, or you may be fortunate enough to have some artists in your League.

I would recommend listening to the outstanding musical programs on the radio: symphony concerts, leading soloists, vocal and instrumental. A social evening in the home could be planned around one of these programs. I do not suggest or encourage too much listening to radio or records just at random. Valuable time is wasted in that way. Seek to improve your taste, use discrimination in the choice and type of music. Listen with a purpose—better still, try to make and create your own music. Develop the talents God has given you, seeking his inspiration and guidance. He can direct through his representative here on earth—the Holy Spirit. It can instruct you. Desire it above all things.

Whenever possible, let us strive to enjoy and appreciate the best music. Through the medium of this art, our Heavenly Father has given us just a hint of the sheer beauties that await our ears in his eternal kingdom. It is possible Paul had something like this in mind when he said in I Corinthians 2: 9, "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, . . . the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Let us prepare to enjoy and appreciate this heavenly gift.

IN THE FIELD OF ART, great good can be accomplished. The success of the venture depends on the interests and talents of the leader and the group. An excursion to an art gallery, special exhibits, museums, or other works of art can prove very worth-while if planned and organized with a purpose. Always remember to ask God's direction and guidance in your endeavors and expect his co-operation. Pioneer in this field with faith and courage.

You may be able to arrange with a local company to exhibit well-known masterpieces, religious or otherwise, and have individual members prepared to give some information as to the historical background and the artists. There is a need for education and enlightenment on this subject, and time spent this way will help to increase our appreciation of the beautiful and inspire us to higher nobler living. This contact with the Divine, in whatever avenue you choose to experience it, exists in this world for our pleasure and edification. How sad that we do not recognize it and utilize it.

If you are fortunate enough to have an artist in your group, or several artists, why not use them to instruct the group in the drawing of sketches; illustrating our church history and background. These could be used in the local church school's visual education program. Time spent in this way, I am sure, would be most acceptable to our Heavenly Father and appreciated by your local church school director and teachers. You might enjoy making lantern slides depicting events in the early church history, or in portraying other religious subjects that could be used in the church school. Lantern slide materials may be secured from Keystone View Company, Meadville, Pennsylvania. It is possible that someone in the group has made a hobby of this and can instruct the others.

MAP-MAKING is a hobby or pastime of great possible interest. There are different kinds to be made; object maps, picture maps, and topographical maps. Very helpful would be a map of Jerusalem and surrounding territories, with the important cities and places marked in connection with the study of the migration of Lehi and his family from Jerusalem; then a map showing the course of his journey and the land to which he came. The use of such material in teaching the story of the Book of Mormon would prove of great value to a teacher and make a lasting impression on the children. A map of the several States designating the important places and cities where outstanding events occurred in early church history would be of great help in teaching the history of the church, or a map of the countries where the church is established at present, such as Australia and Hawaii, could be used to good advantage, utilizing either the picture, object, or topographical type. Directions for making these can be found in the book The Bible in the Building of Life, by Mildred Magnuson. Whenever possible let us use our leisure time as an opportunity to develop and train our young people in the history and philosophy of our church and its great objectives, never forgetting our theme—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God."

IN THE FIELD of literature your choice of material is limitless. We are admonished in latter-day revelation to "study all good books," and we give precedence to the three standard books of the church. The study of these books during our leisure time should be considered along with the many other church publications. This matter being left to the judgment of the leader who should seek God's direction and inspiration that the material used might be instrumental in developing the lives of young people in harmony with the ideals of the church. If this gospel is to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, it will be necessary for our future missionaries and workers of all kinds to be prepared, not only to preach the gospel, but to have a knowledge and understanding of other countries—their history, literature, language, laws, government, and many more essential characteristics. We hope our young people keep this thought in mind as they enroll in the colleges and select their courses. I think it would be profitable to undertake some studies or review books as a group, using a plan similar to the Chautauqua Reading Course plan. In this plan each one in the group participates in the preparation and discussion of the subject. Plan to study one country such as South America, Russia, China, over a period of a year. Use or include illustrations of the music, art, and costumes to add to the interest of the program. If we are conscious at all of this age in which we are living, we can't help but realize that the hastening time is here, and as is so often stated, "the youth of today are the church of tomorrow." Are they being equipped to meet the crucial problems and conditions that will come in the tomorrow? In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, we are told by divine revelation just what is expected of us if we are to be prepared to fulfill our destiny as the Church of Christ here upon this earth. There is no time to be wasted.

OUR RECREATIONAL activities divide naturally into two groups, indoor and outdoor. Everyone enjoys a party, banquet, or social, and all three should be included in the yearly program of every league. It can take any form, provided it is properly supervised and all activities are above reproach. We must always be careful to exclude all activities that tend to lower our standards or affect the spiritual development of the individual. Social gatherings in the homes should be encouraged. Plan to do something constructive and uplifting in connection with games and other activities. Here is a place for a songfest. Be sure to include our church hymns. Looking at homemade movies can prove very entertaining especially those taken of the group on their hikes or jaunts last summer. A good radio program should serve as the high point of the evening. There should be socials and programs where the families are invited and activities planned that can be entered into by young and old—not forgetting to use material appropriate for church gatherings. Always keep your standards high.

There are the familiar sports such as basketball, bowling, and skating, that have their place in the recreational activities of the League. If these are entered into with the right spirit and the proper setting, they can be very enjoyable and acceptable. Let us be careful in the selection of the place, consider the neighborhood and the environment. I believe we should discourage activities carried on in a public place unless it has a good reputation such as the Y. M. C. A., and then an effort should be made to secure it solely for our own group. Of course if there is a tournament or city church league as in basketball, etc., this would not apply.

I do not encourage the attendance of movie theaters as a group. True, the main feature may be reputable and highly recommended, but there are so many aspects of an evening spent this way that are not particularly edifying or inspiring to a group of Latter Day Saint young people. We can do nothing about individual attendance, but we can guide the choice of the activities of the League and certainly we do not want to be known because we sponsor movie-going. The statistics each year indicate the trend of this nation in this habit of movie attendance. An occasional movie is all right, but it is the habit of regular weekly, daily, and even Sunday attendance that we should discourage in our young people. Such a pastime is a far cry from our theme, "Seek ye first." If you have the facilities or the equipment, why not rent some of the well known good films that are available at your local Board of Education and show them in your church.

HAVE YOU ever considered taking a tour of the important and outstanding industries, institutions, and buildings that are in and about your city? Here is an excellent way to gain knowledge of one kind and another, and such jaunts are very enjoyable and instructive. If there is a large steel, rubber, or ceramic industry near you, plan to visit it. Get acquainted with your city. Visit the courthouse or city hall. Learn how your city is managed and governed. Let them know there is a group interested in the welfare of the city. Let us seek knowledge wherever we can find it.

The out-of-doors offers a variety of opportunities for leisure-time activities, but here, as elsewhere we should plan them with a purpose in mind, an objective that will make the time spent worthwhile. When we plan picnics, hikes, or campfires, include the study of bird life, plant life, rock and soil formation, the stars, and other interesting subjects found in nature. You may visit an outstanding beauty spot, or a place of historical importance. Let us make our trip one to be remembered, an opportunity to experience the miracle of God at work in nature and the universe.

In the past few years the week-end camping trip has been carried out successfully some places. Proper preparation must be made beforehand, care being taken in the selection of the place and provision made for the necessary comforts and safety of the young people and the program worked out very prayerfully, the time being devoted to worship, study, and recreation. Whenever possible secure the services of some of the men in the leading quorums of the church. The apostle in your territory or a seventy or some of the church officials might be happy to accompany the group, if they are available. This camping together will be a valuable experience. Emphasis should be placed on the spiritual value of such a gathering and every

Moses. After Moses the holy or greater priesthood was absent from Palestine 1,481 years until restored by Christ personally in his earthly ministry. Moses' death occurred 1451 B. C., according to many chronologists, and since our Lord began his authoritative ministry at the age of 30, there were about 1,481 years' lapse before the greater priesthood was restored. Though the Holy Scriptures state that the Lord "took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4 and Hebrews 7:11-12) it does not mean that the Lord took every degree of the Melchisedec priesthood from the earth until it was restored in the personal ministry of Christ in Palestine. There were those like Joshua, Elijah, Elisha, and others up to the days of Malachi effort made on the part of those in charge through fasting, prayer, and consecration to the end that the presence of the Holy Spirit might be felt, and all present may have a foretaste of the gifts and blessings that are in store for those who diligently seek him and serve him.

Why not plan to attend a near-by reunion as a group—or as many go as possible. The experiences you will have there and the friends you will make, the things you will hear and enjoy will play an important part in the growth and development of your spiritual life. I will never forget some of the rich experiences I have had, and each one has helped to enrich my life and increased my understanding and emphasized the presence and power and mission of the Holy Spirit in this life.

Let us strive to raise the standards and purpose of our leisure-time activities to such a high level that every project or program we undertake will receive an overwhelming manifestation of divine approval, every effort pointing to the kingdom of God. Let us accept the advice of Paul to the Philippian saints when he said "Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

who did the work and displayed the miracles that belong to the office of the high priesthood. In Genesis 14: 26, Inspired Version, it is stated that those ordained after this order and calling should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to turn the waters out of their course, to be translated, etc. After Moses had conferred part of his honor upon Joshua (Numbers 27: 18-20) he, Joshua, did the things spoken of in Genesis 14: 30-32, Inspired Version. Elijah was also given this power, by which he raised the dead, shut up the heavens, matched the power of the 450 priests of Baal, divided the waters, etc., and was translated. Elisha also worked miracles, divided the waters, etc.

The high priesthood after the holy order of the Son of God was restored among the Nephites on this continent 1,330 years after Moses, or 150 years B. C. The great Alma I was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood at this date. We will discuss this more in detail in subsequent paragraphs. This high priesthood has come down from the beginning of time while the lesser priesthood was apparently 26 centuries later conferred upon Aaron and his seed who are of the tribe of Levi. Upon referring to Genesis 6: 7, Inspired Version, we find this promise given to us by the Lord: "Now this same priesthood which was in the beginning shall be in the end of the world also." And again it is reiterated in Genesis 5: 45 where we find this statement: "And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance" and a "decree sent forth that it should be in the world unto the end thereof." This promise can be quickly reconciled to God's unchangeable nature and plans when we remind ourselves, for instance, of the statement in Ecclesiastes 3: 14 that "whatever God may do shall stand unchanged." We must concede, therefore, that if God ordained Adam a high priest after the holy order of the Son of God, he would call men in every generation to that order if there would be found sufficient faith and freedom from darkness of mind and hardness of heart.

With further reference to great faith and miracles, Jesus promised to his holy priesthood who would continue on earth after his departure that "greater works than he performed they would also do." (See John 14: 12, Inspired Version.) This promise has undoubtedly reference to high priesthood and promises of miracles made to Enoch. What else could Jesus mean when he assured Peter who held this Melchisedec priesthood that I will give "unto thee—the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven."—Matthew 16: 20, Inspired Version. That this great miracle-working high priesthood would remain after Jesus' departure is amply proved by the statement recorded by Luke in his testimony which reads thus: "And I [Jesus] appoint unto you a kingdom as my father hath appointed unto me."—Luke 22: 29.

That this holy priesthood did remain is clearly evidenced by assurance we find in the Epistle to the Hebrews. It is generally agreed that this epistle was written shortly before A. D. 70 which is 36 years after our Lord's ascension into heaven. In this book there is written a careful explanation of the Melchisedec or high priesthood, and we find several positive statements that it was in operation in the church at the time of its writing. In Hebrews 5: 1 we find this statement in the continuing present tense: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." Again in Hebrews 7: 3 we find assurances of continuity of this order of the holy priesthood where it is stated: "Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually." Further, in verses 11 and 12 we find stated this very important fact: "If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, . . . what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, [the high priesthood] and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." Therefore in this epistle written over 36 years after Christ's ascension into heaven, we find the author referring to our holy calling or profession. We quote: "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High priest of our profession, Jesus Christ."—Hebrews 3:1, Inspired Version. From this statement we infer that the author of the letter to the Hebrews was a high priest of the order of Melchisedec. The writer goes on to explain that "every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God."—Hebrews 5:1, Inspired Version. Christ was ordained a high priest of the order of Melchisedec, and the writer comments in 5:5: "So also Christ glorified not himself to be an high priest." In this connection, Jesus, in one of his prayer conversations with his father in heaven, states that "as thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them [his fellow high priests] into the world."—John 17:18. And the beloved John further records that Jesus prayed that "the glory which thou gavest me I have given them."—John 17:22. That the fullness of the gospel authority has always been bestowed upon each generation if there was real faith to be found is proved by this statement of our Lord. In John 14:12, Jesus speaking to his apostles, said: "I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." Here we find a solemn assurance of God the Father and Christ the Son's unchanging, unvarying manner of dealing with mankind. The great high priest, Alma II, explains exactly how God has and will deal with each succeeding generation of mankind. We quote him: "they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this, they might have had as great privilege as their brethren." Alma explains further this unchangeable attitude of God, our faithful creator, when he declares: "they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts."—Book of Mormon 348:68. He also makes crystal clear and undeniably positive that this high priesthood being after the order of the Son of God was "without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from all eternity to all eternity," for such as would not be afflicted by "blindness of mind or hardness of heart."

The Book of Mormon describes how the high priesthood come into being about 150 years B. C. The Nephites not only had elders, but they had high priests of the holy order of the Son of God, but they did not have the presidency of the high priesthood of the chief line of the birthright family, which was and is in the Ephraimite division. The Nephites were a mixture of the tribes of Manasseh and of Judah through the lineal descent of the two colonies, coming directly from Jerusalem, who peopled this continent again after 590 B. C.

While it is true the Nephites kept the Law of Moses, they also had the gospel law. (See Book of Mormon 143:44-50; 161:16-26; 163:2, 3; 164:7; 259:41.) We earnestly urge our readers to turn to these references and study them. The great Alma I plainly tells the people of his day that only because of stiff-neckedness, hardness of heart, and blindness of mind is the gospel law of Christ withheld from any generation. Alma I, who was a descendant of Nephi, was called of God to baptize and to organize the church, and he was the high priest of the holy order of God over the same. This church he was authorized of God to organize was called the Church of God or the Church of Jesus Christ from that time forward. See Book of Mormon 260:49-51. Now if there is any doubt that Alma was granted authority from God to dispense the everlasting, unchangeable gospel in its fullness to his generation in 145 B. C., refer to Book of Mormon 313:28. We read from the record that Alma "confined himself wholly to the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to the testimony of the word, according to the spirit of revelation and prophecy." For the source of authority of both Alma I and Alma II, father and son, see Book of Mormon 313:3. In Doctrine and Covenants 104:3, the Lord has revealed that "the office of an elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec" (high priest). Therefore God being consistent and unvarying always we find the Book of Mormon testifies that Alma II, a high priest, had consecrated or ordained teachers, priests, and elders over the church. (Book of Mormon 311:11.) He declares his authority and priesthood very undeniably in Book of Mormon 318:73 where he says: "I am called to speak after this manner, according to the holy order of God which is in Christ Jesus." In the gospel according to Mark, we find him recording "certain signs will follow those that believe in Jesus Christ."—Mark 16:16; and so it was in the church of Christ in Alma II's day. He clearly testifies and rejoices in the various spiritual gifts attending the truly faithful of his day. (See Book of Mormon 332:29-31.) They had the fullness of the gospel according to their desires, faith, and prayers, and

Worship Suggestions for July

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "PEACE"

PEACE IN THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE

Prelude:

"Jesus Calls Us," Saints' Hymnal, 337.

Call to Worship:

"Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways. For thou shalt eat the labor of thy hands; happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee. . . . The Lord shall bless thee out of Zion; and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel."

Poem:

LET THERE BE IN AMERICA

Let there be in America a beauty from the soil,
A truth from meadows and fields of grain.
In city populous and cramped,
Man lives with man,
And works and plays with man-made things,
And thinks by man-made creeds.
Man—at every turn—finds only man
And puny works of man.
In field and grove and stream,
On farmland, wasteland, prairie,
Man meets not man so much as God,
And learns to know and reverence Wholeheartedly God's law, not only sustenance,
But peace and faith come from the field.
Let there come of America a beauty born of the soil,
A truth upspring from meadows and green fields.

Quartette:

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul," Saints' Hymnal, 250.

Suggestions which may be incorporated in
Theme Talk:

Nothing means so much toward individual happiness as peace of mind. It is above health, or love, or talents, or power, or riches, or fame. In ancient days a wise man prayed, "God, Lord of the universe, heap worldly gifts at the feet of foolish men. Give me the gift of the Untroubled Mind."

This precious gift comes only to those who have a feeling of rightness with their Heavenly Father. Men who are obedient to the laws of God and seek his presence daily through prayer have an inner tranquility that cannot be shaken. They are able to take the affirmative viewpoint in the following examples:

"Two men, being convalescent, were asked how they were. One said, 'I am better today;' the other said, 'I was worse yesterday.' When it rains, one man says, 'This will make mud;' another, 'This will lay the dust.' 'I am glad that I live,' says one man. 'I am sorry I must die,' says another. 'I am glad,' says one,

'that it is no worse;' 'I am sorry,' says another, 'that it is no better.'"

PEACE IN THE HOME

Prelude:

"Barcarolle," (Tales from Hoffman).

Call to Worship:

Better than gold is a peaceful home,
The shrine of love, a haven of life
Hallowed by mother, sister, or wife.
However humble the home may be
Or bowed with sorrow by heaven's decree,
The blessings that never were bought or sold
The center there—are better than gold.
—Abraham Joseph Ryan.

Solo:

"All Things Come Home at Eventide," any music store.

Suggestions for Talk:

Relate story of how Joseph Smith one time asked to be excused from the room where he was attempting to translate the Book of Mormon. He had had a little difference with his wife, and he found that he could not work until he had made peace with her. This being done, he returned and could then proceed with his work of translation.—See Church History.

THE NEED FOR THE FAMILY ALTAR

The home is the key to society. It is there we receive the influences that make us the type of people we are. Today when our world is being shaken and all life is so insecure, we need as never before the strength good homes are able to give us. These homes do not just happen. They are planned for and worked for. The members of the family become bound by a common allegiance that is considered of supreme worth to all. The home that cultivates this type of spirituality becomes a refuge for the family, a place to return to with eagerness and happiness, a place where each one is inspired to do better the work he has to do. A place of peace. The family altar is the place where this peace is invoked—the peace which Jesus promised, without which there is no peace.

Suggested Hymns:

"Lord, Let Thy Blessing Rest in Peace," Saints' Hymnal, 83.

"Brethren, Breathe One Fervent Prayer," Saints' Hymnal, 97.

"The Old, Old Path," Saints' Hymnal, 260.

Scripture:

"The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them."—Isaiah 11: 6.

"Honor thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Exodus 20: 12.

"And ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Ephesians 6: 4.

Poem:

Lord, Christ, beneath thy starry dome,
We light our flickering lamp of home,
And where bewildering shadows throng,
Uplift our prayer and even song;
Dost thou, with heaven in thy ken,
Still seek a dwelling place with men?
Wandering the world in secret quest,
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

Lord, Christ, the bird his nest has found,
The fox is sheltered in his ground,
But dost thou still this dark earth tread,
And have no place to lay thy head?
Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold,
That wait thy presence to be blest;
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!
—Daniel Henson.

(It is suggested that this poem be read by a father, and then, assisted by his family, sing "The Old, Old Path.")

PEACE IN THE CHURCH AND COMMUNITY

Prelude:

"To a Wild Rose," any bookstore.

Call to Worship:

Beyond the war-clouds and the reddened ways,
I see the Promises of the Coming Days!
I see His Sun arise, new charged with grace
Earth's tears to dry and all the woes efface!
Christ lives! Christ loves! Christ rules!
—John Oxenham.

Suggestions which may be incorporated in
Theme Talk:

There is a story of an old man who carried a little can of oil with him everywhere he went, and if he passed through a door that squeaked, he poured a little oil on the hinges. If a gate was hard to open, he oiled the latch. And thus he passed through life, lubricating all rough places and making it easier for others.

There are many occasions in our human relationships in our church and in our communities when a little care, a little patience, and the application of a little of the oil of kindness and understanding would do much to establish peace and harmony. Latter Day Saints, more than any other people, should have an inner peace and tranquillity because of our belief in prayer. Dr. Alexis Carroll, famous physician, has this to say: "Only in prayer do we achieve that complete and harmonious assembly of body, mind, and spirit which gives the frail human reed its unshakable strength."

We should pray over our relationships with each other in our church and in our communities. Latter Day Saints should be a distinctive people. We should be known as peacemakers in our communities.

Inspirational Reading:

"Two painters were asked to paint a picture illustrating peace. The first painted a beautiful evening scene and in the foreground there was a lake. Its surface absolutely calm and unruffled, meadows stretched away to the distant browsing cattle, a little cottage, the setting sun all spoke of peace and rest.

The second painter drew a wild storm. Heavy black clouds hung overhead. In the center of the picture an immense waterfall poured over huge volumes of water covered with foam. One could almost hear its unceasing roar. Yet, almost the first thing to strike the eye was a small bird, perched in the cleft of the great rock, absolutely sheltered from all around, pouring forth its sweet notes of joy."—Saints' Herald, August 5, 1939.

Scripture:

"And again, I say unto you, Sue for peace, not only the people that have smitten you, but also to all people; and lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth; and make proposals for peace, unto those who have smitten you, according to the voice of the Spirit which is in you, and all things shall work together for your good; therefore, be faithful, and behold, and lo, I am with you even unto the end."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 11.

"Learn that he who doeth the works of righteousness, shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 5.

"Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit, in comforting and strengthening you for my work."—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 13.

Suggested Hymns:

"Have a Blessing Ready," Zion's Praises, 126.

"'Tis the Blessed Hour of Prayer," Saints' Hymnal, 106.

PEACE IN THE WORLD

Prelude:

Handel's "Largo."

Call to Worship:

O brother, lift a cry, a long world-cry
Sounding from sky to sky—
The cry of one great word,
Peace, peace, the world-will clamoring to be heard—

A cry to break the ancient battle-ban,
To end it in the sacred name of Man!
—Edwin Markham.

Hymn:

"Thy Kingdom Come, O Lord," (Tune: 423, Saints' Hymnal.)

Thy kingdom come, O Lord,
Fulfill of old thy word,
'Neath thy great sun.
In service glad and free,
In love and equity,
In one fraternity,
Make nations one.

Thy kingdom come, O God.
Break with thy righteous rod,
Bondage of sin.
Then war shall be no more,
Hate flee thy face before,
Peace reign from shore to shore,
Thy rule begin.

Thy kingdom come, we pray,
Hasten the golden day
When war shall cease.
Speed, Lord, the longed-for time,
The prophecy sublime,
When war and lust and crime
Give way to peace.
—Roy A. Cheville.

Prayer:

The Lord's Prayer.

Responsive Reading:

Leader: Come, behold the works of the Lord.

Group: He maketh war to cease unto the end of this earth.

Leader: He breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear asunder;

Group: He burneth the chariots in the fire.
Leader: Violence and destruction shall no more be heard in the land.

Group: Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Leader: My people shall be righteous. They shall inherit the world forever.

Group: For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the earth.

Leader: I, the Lord, will bring it to pass in my own time.

Sermonet or talk on world peace.

Hymn:

"O God of Love," (Tune: Saints' Hymnal, 204.)

O God of love, O king of peace,
Make war throughout the world to cease;
The wrath of sinful men restrain,
Give peace, O God, give peace again!

Remember Lord, thy works of old,
The wonders that our fathers told;
Remember not our sin's dark stain,
Give peace, O God, give peace again!

Whom shall we trust but thee, O Lord,
Where rest but on thy faithful word,
None ever called on thee in vain,
Give peace, O God, give peace again!

Thankful for Gospel

The gospel message has been very dear to me throughout the thirty-one years I have been in the church. Most of this time I have been where I could attend church services and enjoy the association of God's people. At times when my husband was in ill health and we were very poor, the Saints were interested in us and helped take care of us. I hope the Saints in Lexington, Missouri, where I was baptized, will read this and know how much I appreciate the help they gave me in guiding the lives of my children to Christ. Two of our boys are elders, and all nine children belong to the church. Our daughter, who was recently married, was responsible for presenting the gospel to her husband, who is now a member of the church.

Five of our sons were in the service during the war; all are alive and safe. It has been a great comfort to me to know that wherever God's people were gathered, prayers were offered for those in the armed forces. Each boy took a copy of My Country and the Church with him when he left for service, and attended our meetings when possible.

I think one of our greatest privileges is meditation and prayer. Problems can always be discussed with God, and light received on the matter. Let us pray for one another.

Grateful for Divine Healing

My testimony is of an incident which occurred over thirty-five years ago. At that time we were living in the city of Calgary in northwestern Canada; there was no Reorganized Church there, so we attended other denominations and became more or less interested in worldly activities. During this time of apparent enjoyment and prosperity I suffered an attack of endocarditis, involving a rheumatic condition of the heart. For several months I continued to grow worse, and finally was given little hope of recovery. My head and feet were drawn together and my body became quite distorted. One morning about 4 A. M. a man came to our door; he said he was a homesteader and lived about 200 miles east of the city. His name was Oakes—W. E. Oakes, I believe; should he read this letter, I would be glad to hear from him. He said he was directed to our home because there was sickness there. After having breakfast, he went to town to attend to some business, returning several days later. About 2 A. M. in the morning, when I was in particularly great pain, he administered to me and I immediately fell asleep—something which I had not been able to do at that hour for several months. The following day I was awakened by the twitching of my muscles; I discovered that I had straightened out while asleep, and every portion of my body was quivering. We were alarmed and called the doctor, who said to keep a record of my temperature and notify him if my pulse weakened. I recovered soon after, however. It was a blessing so unexpected and undeserved that I must thank God each time it comes to my mind.

Surely God lives and his Son, Jesus Christ, is our redeemer. To him we owe all praise and honor.

Tribute to Paul M. Hanson

After waiting for some time, I at last received my copy of Apostle Paul M. Hanson's Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans. My first reading of the book leaves me with the desire to reread it. I am sure other Latter Day Saints will agree with me that it is a clear-cut representation of that phase of the latter-day work which lies nearest our hearts.

More than forty years ago I learned that Apostle Hanson was a man who believed that if a thing was worth doing at all, it was worth doing well, and that nothing was done well if done in a hurry.

While it is true that other works have preceded this one, such as The Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archaeology and The Book of Mormon Vindicated, and I might here express an opinion that they should never have gone out of print for they have proved to be of inestimable value to students of the Book of Mormon as well as to those who have inquired concerning it. I believe that, without in any way lessening the value of the works referred to, I can truthfully say Apostle Hanson's book will make a very valuable additional appeal to the people of this age who are looking above and beyond that which satisfied religionists a century ago.

It was but a short time after I joined the church that I became acquainted with Brother Hanson, and even though I was his senior in years, I soon learned that he was one whom I could look up to—he was a little taller than I. His dignified appearance and manner made a marked impression on me. His careful and guarded conversation was a lesson and example to many. His fair and impartial manner in presiding over business meetings left no regrets. If, perchance, he crossed swords with any, he lost no time in manifesting a friendly attitude.

As a young man his ambitions ran high. They were not personal ambitions, but centered around the church and its objectives. When planning his return trip home by way of Palestine, he said, "I hope, by my visit, to gain experience and obtain information that will be of great value to the church."

En route he visited the Perth, Western Australia, branch. While a meeting was in progress, a sister arose and said that he would return to Australia and when he did he would be in charge. That prophecy came true, and once again the Saints in Australia were pleased to welcome Apostle Hanson back. The pleasure of his company was enhanced by the presence of his congenial wife, who won her way into the hearts of the people.

It was under the leadership of Brother

Hanson that the Australasian mission conference was brought into being, and although his stay in the mission was not long enough to see it in full operation, he was later privileged to do so when he visited again with Apostle John Rushton.

I do sincerely hope Brother Hanson will find his reward in that many will learn to appreciate the Book of Mormon as never before. It is my belief that the Book of Mormon has not fully performed its mission in the world, largely because many have not sensed its real spiritual value.

When I joined the church in 1902, I had been convinced of the need of divine revelation, so I purchased a Book of Mormon which I read each day with growing interest. When I reached the second Book of Nephi I read, "And because my words shall hiss forth, many of the Gentiles shall say, 'A Bible, A Bible, we have got a Bible, and there can not be any more Bible.'" I thought, where have I heard those words before. Then I suddenly remembered that they fell from the lips of one of the popular ministers who had been seeking to controvert the teachings I had been receiving from my neighbor, the late Bishop G. Lewis. I was amused to think that this man had fulfilled the prophecy unwittingly. Burning within me was the feeling that the book was true and divinely inspired. Then I read in the first chapter of Ether, "He that believeth these things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestation of the Spirit and he shall know and bear record, for because of my Spirit he shall know that these things are true."

It was then that my cup of joy was full to overflowing, and today, after forty-three years of service in the church, I still find joy in the remembrance of those days when I first saw the light, for it was then that the roots of my spiritual tree became well grounded, enabling me to stand when the tempests of life beat severely upon me.

Needs Prayers of Saints

This letter is to inform my friends of the death of my beloved husband, J. A. Welch, who died February 28. He was nearly eighty-three years of age, and often said he was living on borrowed time. He spent many of his last days reading the Bible and Saints' Herald, trying to prepare himself for the great beyond. He had a vision several nights before his death, in which the room became light and he saw the gates of heaven. I am thankful that he could see into the future as he did.

I have been ill since my husband passed away, and I am all alone. The nearest church is in St. Louis, which is nearly sixty miles from here, so I'm asking the prayers of the Saints that I might be healed, comforted, and prepared for the time when I too shall be called from the earth.

A Human Interest Story Out of This War

Orville A. Elkins grew up in Warrensburg, Missouri. Later his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Elkins, moved to Lexington, Missouri. When the first world war was declared, Orville volunteered his services to his country. After a few months of training, he was shipped overseas to join in the fighting. Battle after battle he fought in, until at 5 A. M. the morning of the 26 of September, 1918, they went over the top in the Argonne forest drive. Orville told his buddy he would fight as hard as he knew how, but this time he would not come back alive.

His premonition was correct. On a hill near Exermont, France, on September 29 the Germans made a counter-attack and Orville was shot in the head by a machine gun bullet. He was buried on the battle field with other heroes, but after the war he was placed in a cemetery in France.

Needless to say how heartbroken his parents and brothers and sisters were at the telegram when it came on November 4, 1918. The writer, Mrs. George (Letha) Shoemaker of Roswell, New Mexico, was one of his baby sisters. We idolized big brother. He was our cornerstone, our foundation.

When the peaceful interlude was over and nations decided to fight again, Orville's parents were living in California, Missouri. His youngest brother, Howard Lee, was called to arms. He, too, was sent over to fight. While fighting on the same ground Orville fought and died on, he became determined to find his brother's grave.

When peace was declared, Howard set out to find the lonely cemetery that meant so much to him. Upon finding it, he walked between row after row of little white crosses marking the resting place of heroes of that other war. Finally he came to the little cross marked, "Orville Arthur Elkins." Can anyone imagine Howard's feeling at seeing for the first time the resting place of his long-cherished brother?

As his weary body knelt, he placed a sprig of evergreen on the grave; as he stroked his five battle stars he said, "Brother, dear, I think I have evened the score." Then as he wiped tears of fatigue and homesickness from his eyes, he said a little prayer that "peace between all nations shall be everlasting peace."

Howard rose to his feet and walked silently away, wishing Orville could be there with him to enjoy this second hard-won peace. We wonder if Orville wasn't there.

Yes, we think he was.

Goals of a Mother

Writing for the Herald is like speaking before General Conference. Many times I have had a desire to contribute an experience for the letter column, but have always felt so inadequate as a writer that I did not do it.

I am indebted to the church for the happiest and most lasting memories of my life. I am also indebted to God, the church, and its members for the strength and comfort I have received during the sad moments of my life. I have gained much through study, and by reading the Herald. The fellowship of the Saints has helped me through many dull, routine, "everyday" days.

I have received much, but feel that I have given very little in return. I should be a better member than I am. I should live in closer communion with God. I should manage the affairs of my home, and be able to discipline my children without losing my temper. I should pray and study with my children so that they will grow to be determined Zion builders.

These goals I should strive to realize. I know I could reach them sooner if I were able to attend church regularly. My husband is a public school band director, and because of his work we are now living too far from a branch to attend often.

In looking back over our lives, I can see that God has blessed us many times, and helped us to make the right decisions. I know that he does direct his people if they are trying to live righteously, and I am praying that a way will be opened for us so that we may again attend church each Sunday.

A Helpful Suggestion

During the past few weeks I have been impressed to write to the Herald and relate an interesting conversation that I had with our two year old daughter shortly after my father died on March 4.

Sharon Kay was very fond of her grandfather, and spent many happy moments playing with him, their last game being "Peek-a-boo" on the evening before his death.

In the following days when Grandpa was not around anywhere, and when relatives were coming in and out, one could easily discern that she was puzzled about the affair. Oftentimes she cried and pointed toward his house. When she was outside, she wandered around and looked for him.

At last, when the funeral was over and everyone was gone, and she cried for him again, I knew that she must have some sort of explanation. Because of her age, I had hesitated to try to explain to her, thinking it would only add to her confusion. However, a surprise awaited me.

To her, the word heaven meant nothing, but the word Jesus always brought a splendid response. For months we had shown her pictures of Jesus and had read and told stories to her of Jesus' work on earth, and his great love for us. She enjoys her Sunday school papers, looks at them almost daily, then carefully puts them away.

Consequently, when she asked for grandpa, I said, "Grandpa went to live with Jesus. Jesus will make him well."

Immediately she smiled happily, clapped her hands, and said, "Oh-h, Bampa, Jesus, well!"

There was not another sob for grandpa. Only once has she asked for him since, and then, with a disgusted shrug as though she were provoked at herself for forgetting, she exclaimed, "Jesus!"

To her, the situation was well handled. If grandpa was living with Jesus, she had nothing to worry over.

Perhaps this experience will help other mothers solve similar problems. Many people think that tiny children cannot grasp religious truths, and make the mistake of waiting too many years to begin such training.

Our little girl is often noisy at church, a matter that is of great concern to us, but we have faith to believe that our daily teaching and prayer will solve that problem soon. When she actually begs us to sing to her about Jesus, joining in with all the gusto of her healthy little lungs, we are amply repaid for those bad moments. Mrs. Kelton Shipley.

A New Mission Is Organized

Sister Walker, a frail little lady, but a devoted church worker, moved from Everett, Washington, to Oregon City, Oregon, with her husband last fall. She was very lonely without a church of her faith to attend, so she wrote to an elder in Portland to see what could be done about it. In a few days, several members of the priesthood and their wives drove the fifteen miles from Portland to Oregon City to visit the Walkers; they saw possibilities in developing a mission, and began contacting the scattered members in that area. After much telephoning, writing, and many personal calls, the group was assembled, and the first meeting was held at the Walker home in November.

Since then a hall has been rented, and although it is in a noisy part of the city, the meetings are well-attended. Three church school classes have been organized, and regular preaching services are held. Elder Harry Fry, largely responsible for the mission, drives from Portland each Sunday and frequently through the week to help with the meetings; his wife, Ardith, is in charge of the music. On Easter Sunday afternoon, seven new members were baptized; since there is no font in the hall, the baptismal service was held in the Christian Church. The women meet every other Tuesday at the homes of various members for a luncheon and study period. Since May 1 cottage prayer services have been held at the Walker home.

The hall will have to be given up in a few weeks, but the Saints of Oregon City mission feel sure a place will be provided for them in the future.

thus it has always been and always will be. (Book of Mormon 349: 2.) Alma had many associates in the church who held the high priesthood (Book of Mormon 349: 1) after the order of Melchisedec, which order he declares is "without beginning of days or end of years being prepared from all eternity to all eternity."—Book of Mormon 349: 71.

The Nephites under the ministrations of this priesthood entered into the "rest of God." (See Book of Mormon 349: 69 and 350: 4, 5.) This "rest" is spoken of as the fullness of God's glory. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.) The children of Israel under the "Lesser Priesthood" did not enter into this "rest." See Hebrews 4: 5, 6, 9 and Exodus 34: 1, 2.

Church Schools Face the Summer

By John R. Darling

THREE PROBLEMS

It is said that confession is good for the soul. Let us first frankly admit that the following conditions in church schools during the "vacation" season are now all too prevalent:

1. Attendance on the part of pupils and teachers tends to be irregular because many are away from home.

2. Very little effort is expended to adjust the program, particularly of Sunday school classes, to unpleasant conditions occasioned by hot weather.

3. Curriculum material, even though inherently excellent, is in the fourth quarter of the year—the setting stage, so to speak.

For a moment let us detour around points one and two, and center our thinking on point three. Good methods of presentation with activities related to the interests and needs of pupils will do much to boost attendance and counteract physical conditions that are not too pleasant. Since this is true, we can readily accept point number three as our major concern. However, even though we have sidestepped a head-on attack on points one and two, let us not be blind to our obligation to encourage regular attendance; also with no less perseverance we should wisely encourage the improvement of our physical church plants—their beauty, convenience, and comfort.

THIS WE MUST DO

In the foregoing paragraphs we have named three problems and have spoken of them in very general terms. We are concerned that some concrete suggestion be made at this time—specific light on means by which we can be helped out of the dilemma occasioned by poor attendance, unpleasant heat, and materials that need special stimulation.

It is simple enough to emphasize the importance of clearly defined objectives for any season of the year—goals earmarked as hoped for understandings, appreciations, and skills. Furthermore, it takes no ingenuity to conclude that specific summer goals can probably be more easily attained by activity units. And still, if we confine our thinking to what summer activities might as well be the Sunday school hour, for example, we are stumped after but a few suggestions which include: moving the class from the stuffy basement to the church lawn; perhaps a school journey; or getting together an exhibit—but what else?

Suddenly it dawns upon us and we are jarred into serious thinking by the realization that after all a full class in attendance in an air-conditioned building with excellent equipment and college trained teachers is not, after all, the matter of prime importance in summer or in winter! The realization of this truth is a shock, but is one that more of us must experience and react to with positive conviction. What, then, is the reaction that must be made? What after all, is the heart of the whole situation?

CONSECRATION WILL DO IT

Without equivocation or reservation, let us place first in our thinking consideration of the word consecration—consecration in its relationship to God. A growing appreciation for and understanding of the foregoing combination of words results in answers to all questions, for it involves a divine promise when accepted in its fullest sense. Full consecration revolves around a God-centered pattern of faith which may be outlined in five words: worship, thanksgiving, humility, service, and love which both spring from and contribute to obedience. In Doctrine and Covenants 81:3 we read: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." In the Book of Mosiah 1:56, 58 are emphasized two truths that are the natural result of full consecration. We note: "And he never doth vary from that which he hath said: therefore, if ye do keep his commandments, he doth bless you, and prosper you. And secondly, he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you, for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you; and therefore, he hath paid you."

Among the many attributes of consecration is a recognition of prayer as the avenue to strength. It is of fundamental importance to those who consider seriously the great work of saving youth. When contact with the divine presence is obtained, we are prepared for whatever the emergencies of life may require of us—irregular attendance, a classroom that is unpleasantly warm, or even quarterly material that is dull. The handmaiden to prayer is fasting! For, fasting, prayer, and scripture study are an unsurpassable combination to fortify life. Considered and practiced as a unit, they mark a path that leads to righteous action, which in turn can and will defy indifference to matters of first importance.

When we decide to make it the common practice of our lives to continue steadfastly in the doctrine of Christ, in fellowship one with another, in prayer, in activities for good—then and only then shall we be true followers of the Master Teacher and real workers in kingdom-building. The church school, its ideals, purposes, and responsibilities will then be fully accepted and practiced; for they will be truly God centered in thought and word and deed. Consecration is the all-

Leaders and teachers, what can we do to keep our church schools "up to par" during the summer months?

Perhaps our fears of the past and the present relative to summer "slumps" are the product of our own anticipations in which we have been and are the instigators of our own troubles. Then, too, instead of actually getting down to the root of our problem, maybe we have been guilty of the weakness of constantly turning to the world for solutions that the world cannot give.

By some chance I wonder if an investigation approached realistically might not prove conclusively that the trouble, after all, is not localized in the summer months. Could it be that we have just taken for granted that it was? At any rate I, for one, believe we have been too quick to judge and, as a result, have been blind to the real issue. If, however, the problem which we face from year to year is merely a chronic case of spring fever, then we had better examine our indifference and remove this mental quirk that results in taking for granted that a summer letdown cannot be avoided in the church program.

But, if the answer to our problem lies in the area of a much more subtle consideration, then we have an obligation to our God, our brothers, and ourselves to recognize truth and accept the verdict to the point of action. Let us take a realistic viewpoint.

We certainly do not wish to imply, much less encourage, a negative viewpoint. There are already too many people who say too easily that nothing can be done. Perhaps this is merely a defense mechanism and is more to be pitied than condemned. I, for one, have come to no uncertain conclusion that workers, if they "know how," will cope successfully with church school problems both in winter and in summer. However, I am convinced that getting our job done is not so much a mechanical problem, important as that may be; basically it is a problem of attitude. When attitude is right, both planning and adjusting to even difficult situations will usually take care of themselves. This I shall attempt to emphasize in this brief article.

Obviously, a knowledge and practice of the "know how" is always needed to successfully consummate an objective or overcome an obstacle. Our major concern at this moment is to discover whether, after all, there is a procedure that will counter-act any general letdown including, knockout blows from a beastly hot summer.

inclusive key to successfully solving church school problems in all seasons—the setting up of objectives, evaluating methods, righting unsatisfactory conditions, adjusting ourselves, and helping others to gracefully adjust to existing circumstances, deciding upon points for emphasis, and speaking with authority. By this means our Heavenly Father becomes our partner, and we no longer attempt to walk in our own strength.

Perhaps the Children

There are some things the people of America need more than they do nylons, white shirts, new suits, butter, steaks, or any other material thing. They are principles—moral and spiritual principles. Under the influence of movies, bad novels, war, and Repeal, we have been shedding them. This is a loss that leaves our souls naked before the universe, reduces us to the level of predatory beasts in the jungle. Not all have gone this way, but too many have, and it's about to destroy civilization, unless—

Unless, of course, somebody does something about it.

Appeals have been made to adults in vain. Some heed and turn aside from the downward, destructive way. But too many millions never hear the voice—never intend to hear it.

In the May Christian Herald Margaret Lee Runbeck makes the novel and rather startling suggestion that the young people may be able to do something about it. It is a suggestion that comes from the young people themselves. And why not? In a few years the old sinners will all be dead, which is God's way of clearing his world of wrong. And then the young—those that we now smile at and pass by, as not very important—will be in charge of the world. Perhaps they can make something better of it than we have. Perhaps the young see more clearly than adults do the need of principles in life.

Here's an example: They say, "If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything." The world is full of older people who are falling for anything—to spiritual death.

Yes, we need principles.

He that blows the coals in quarrels he has nothing to do with has no right to complain if the sparks fly in his face.—Franklin.

Luxury possibly may contribute to give bread to the poor; but if there were no luxury there would be no poor.—Henry Home.

Confirmation of Children

(Reprint from "Guide-Lines to Leadership", April, 1943.)

By F. M. McDowell

Confirmation is no afterthought, no second-rate service. Too often we have made the baptismal service dramatic and central in attention. Sometimes children have looked upon the laying on of hands as something to be "gone through." One mother unhesitatingly said at the close of a morning service in which her eight-year-old was baptized that the family could not stay for the afternoon service since they had a social engagement and that she considered "it could be tended to some other time."

ARE WE LEADERS AT FAULT?

It is high time for us to take a look at our training for and planning for our confirmation services. It is not unlikely that both parents and children would profit by any interpretation of what this service is intended to accomplish. Perhaps we need to build it up with more appealing setting and organization. Maybe we need to clarify our own thinking. It is well to remember that it is a pretty important thing to present children to God for the reception of his Spirit. We would profit by studying how this Spirit can come to a child's life.

AND THE MINISTERS

Most ministers recognize that some are more at home with children than are others. This is not a matter of "talking down" but of living imaginatively in the child's world. The man who can do this will sense how the boy or girl feels as he sits in such a service, what he or she needs, what phrases carry meaning, etc. It will be wise for the pastor to meet with the men officiating to confer about the plan of the service, the number of children to be confirmed, the approximate length of prayers, the adjustment of junior needs, etc. Most men will welcome this. It is to be done in the spirit of servicing and guiding them not in the faultfinding mood. Certainly, if eight children are to be received, there is no place for ten-minute prayers that review the gospel from Adam-ondi-Ahman to a future Zion. And through all, let the ministers be sensitive to the spiritual guidings that will give counsel for each specific life. Many a testimony could be given; telling of experiences in which inspiration came in terms that children and parents could understand.

IF THERE ARE SEVERAL CHILDREN

How many children may be confirmed at a single service? In some groups this is no problem, for there will be only two or three. If so, let the small branch look upon this as an opportunity to work out a suitable service without weight of numbers. We need to remember that the child's span of concentration is limited. Hence, if a confirmation service draws on without relaxation, it may leave anything but a happy memory. It has been found helpful, when several children are to be confirmed, to break the number into units and have not more than four on the platform at a sitting. A series of ten confirmation prayers without interruption is a strain on the child. Eight-year-olds need to stand, sing, or give some other expression. In one service, twenty-one children were confirmed without hurrying or forcing the service, in a meeting lasting about an hour and a half, and the children appeared at ease at the close of the meeting. Breaking into units, singing, standing, personal greetings, and conversation provided relaxation.

THERE IS A CONFIRMATION SERVICE

As a general rule, confirmation should be cared for in a meeting planned for that purpose. Only on extraordinary conditions should children come from the dressing room after baptism and receive the laying on of hands. The child has received an emotional climax in immersion. There should be a lapse of time for adjustment and new expectancy. It should not be sandwiched into a service as a foreign element. Even if only two children are being received, a service can be built that will appeal to all ages. The meaning of church membership, the nature of inspiration, the role of the child in the church, and a score of other vital interests furnish possible themes.

Make the most of the day, by determining to spend it on two sorts of acquaintances only—those by whom something may be got, and those from whom something may be learned.—Colton.

Nothing in this low and ruined world bears the meek impress of the Son of God so surely as forgiveness.—Alice Cary.

Among the attributes of God, although they are all equal, mercy shines with even more brilliancy than justice.—Cervantes.

News Briefs

Australia

PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN AUSTRALIA.—Adelaide branch has introduced a monthly paper, The Adelaide Branch Commentary. This sixteen-page publication, printed in several colors, contains articles for children and isolated Saints, and information on objectives and activities of the branch. High Priest J. C. Cornish, pastor of the Adelaide church, is editor; Minnie Whitehorn is managing editor. The cover of the first edition carried an air-photo of Adelaide.

Door to door canvassing in the vicinity of the church to increase church school attendance resulted in contacting some interested adults. The members are raising funds to paint the building. Missionary Floyd Potter has won a Douglas Parnell scholarship in singing, which provides free tuition for advanced training.

UNATTACHED MEMBERS.—The 3,275 members of the Reorganized Church in Australia includes 826 (twenty-five per cent) unattached Saints, and 215 (seven per cent) unknown. Latest figures reveal that two per cent of all baptisms in the past five years were unattached members. From this group also came seven per cent of the tithing paid in Australia. High Priest A. J. Corbett, pastor of this large section, corresponds with 250 families. A survey of members in the branches shows that forty-four per cent attend church school, forty-one per cent attend preaching, thirty-six per cent attend Communion services, and eight per cent attend prayer meetings.

FLORA, ILLINOIS.—The women's department sponsored two bake sales, a rummage sale, and bazaar, clearing $145.17 for the building fund. A special "membership meeting" was held March 3 for all charter members of the Flora branch. On April 7, five new members were baptized by Elder D. H. Milner. The Popular Creek, Fairfield, and Brush Creek congregations met on May 2 with the Flora Saints for a farewell social in honor of Missionary Eugene A. Theys. Brother Theys' successor, Seventy Z. Z. Renfro, was introduced the following week. Special Easter and Mother's Day services were held. Guest speakers in the past three months have been Patriarch Richard Baldwin, Elder Cleo Hoover, and Missionary J. Charles May.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—The fifth annual convention of the British Columbia district was held in Vancouver on May 24, 25, and 26. May 24 being Victoria Day, the members gathered at Memorial Park for a picnic. Apostle D. T. Williams arrived on the evening boat and conducted classes both Saturday morning and afternoon. One hundred thirty-two members attended the banquet served at David Spencer's. Sunday's activities began with a 9 o'clock prayer service; Apostle Williams spoke at 11 and 3. Apostle Charles Hield was unable to arrive until Tuesday, May 28. He addressed the Saints in New Westminster that evening and spoke in Vancouver the following night.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.—(First Church)—Servicemen and women stationed in San Francisco during the war years were welcome additions to the congregation. Many assisted in the work by giving sermons, singing in the choir, and teaching classes. There are now twenty-four in the choir. Elder Ralston is sponsoring a revival; priesthood visiting has again become a part of the branch program.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—Local members were hosts to ten Hawaiian delegates to General Conference and Elder Howard Miller on April 16. Two programs were given at church and one at the high school by the visitors. Elder and Mrs. Thomas Worth and their son, James, of London, England, have been assigned to Nauvoo for the summer. Patriarch John Worth was the speaker on Mother's Day; a program was presented during the church school hour. Groups of young people and their leaders from Lamoni, Central Missouri Stake, and the Tri-Cities have made historic tours of Nauvoo. A union service was held at the church on Good Friday with members of the Methodist and Presbyterian congregation attending. Elder Arnold Ourth was the speaker on Easter Sunday. Elder J. C. Page gave an illustrated lecture on the ancient ruins of Central America on the evening of May 19. A committee composed of Bishops DeLapp, Johnson, Skinner, Carmichael, and Updyke, Dr. Floyd McDowell, President John Garver, and E. J. Gleazer, Jr., met recently to make arrangements for the coming reunion to be held in Nauvoo.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—A young people's retreat was held May 10, 11, and 12 at Idlewild Lodge on the James River. Classwork, worship services, and recreation were featured activities; a basket dinner, to which the entire church was invited, followed the Sunday morning services. A Doctrine and Covenants class, taught by Elder Norman Cox, is proving a stimulus to the Wednesday evening prayer services. Cottage missionary meetings are held one night each week in the homes of various members. A farewell party was given May 13 for James and Helen Kemp, recent general church appointees. During May the women's department sponsored a spring cleanup at the church; an air-conditioning unit is soon to be installed.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—A district conference was held in London on May 19; Seventies P. E. Farrow, George Njeim, H. A. Engle, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer were present. District officers for 1946-47 were elected at the annual business meeting. London branch is proud of Dr. E. V. Shute and medical student Floyd Skelton; on May 18 the Associated, Canadian, and London Free Press featured a story about the work of these two men. Both have brought untold blessings to mankind.

PUEBLO, COLORADO.—A special service, honoring President Frederick M. Smith, was held Wednesday evening, March 20. The resurrection of Christ was presented in pantomime on Easter Sunday, with the choir providing the musical background. Patriarch A. C. Martin of Seattle was the speaker. The eighth anniversary of the organization of the branch was celebrated on May 17. Members of the Zion's League were in charge of the program.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—The young adult groups of the two churches in Flint have organized to plan joint activities. Members of the Zion's League joined with the Clio group for a skating party, box social, and scavenger hunt. A junior League was recently organized for ages 11 to 14. Memorial services for President Frederick Smith were held in both churches on March 24. The activities of Easter Sunday began with a baptismal service at 9 a. m.; church school at 9:45, and special Easter sermons at 11. A cantata, "Hail Redeemer," was presented by the Flint branch choir in the evening. Twenty local members attended General Conference; reports on the classes and priesthood work were given on the Sunday evening following. A mother-daughter banquet was held in the dining room of the Newell Street Church on May 10. Elder and Mrs. Theo Bush and family have left for a two-months' visit in the British West Indies.

McDERMOTT, OHIO.—Because of increased attendance, an extra room must be added to accommodate classes held during the church school hour. The entire building has been redecorated on the inside, and is being painted on the outside. The young people held a memorial service for President Frederick M. Smith on March 31. Easter Sunday was a day of activity, beginning with a sunrise prayer service at 6 o'clock, church school at 9:30, and an Easter program by the children at 11. An egg hunt was held in the afternoon; the play, "Bearer of the Cross," was presented at the evening service. The Zion's League sponsored a mother's banquet on May 11. Nearly 100% of the McDermott Saints are tithepayers.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.—Seventy Glen Johnson was guest speaker on April 4, officiating at a baptismal service in the evening. On Sunday, March 24, a biographical sketch of President Frederick M. Smith was read by Joseph Faulk; other tributes were paid him at the evening service. Attendance now averages 100; 150 were present on Easter Sunday. A sunrise breakfast was sponsored by the young people, and an Easter program was given in the evening. A building committee has been appointed by Pastor W. P. Rumsey; general improvements and an addition to the church will be outlined by this group.

FORT MADISON, IOWA.—Easter programs were presented by the children's department and Marietta Circle. Apostle Paul M. Hanson was the speaker on May 12; a Mother's Day service was given in the evening by the Zion's League. The young people have reorganized since the return of the servicemen; plans are being made for group activities for the summer. A farewell party was held at the church for John Nutgrass, now serving under general church appointment as a missionary in the Des Moines-Nauvoo district. The program high light was a portrayal of John's life by Zion's Leaguers. Printed songs, representing different phases of his life, were given the audience to sing during the sketch.

BURBANK, CALIFORNIA.—A resumé of General Conference activities was given by Bessy Christy at the May meeting of the women's department. The young people present a worship service every third Sunday of the month. Man feels himself an infinity above those creatures who stand, zoologically, only one step below him, but every human being looks up to the birds. They suit the fancy of us all. What they feel they can voice, as we try to; they court and nest, they battle with the elements, they are torn by two opposing impulses, a love of home and a passion for far places. Only with birds do we share so much emotion.—Donald Culross Peattie, Singing in the Wilderness.

* HONESTY IN THE WORLD

Don't be discouraged with the human race. You read many accounts of dishonesty and crime, and they make you sad. But they do not tell the whole story. There are many unknown examples of goodness and honesty. Bad things get most of the attention in the news.

Moments of carelessness strike all of us, when we leave valuable things and lose them, and would suffer loss if it were not for the kindness and honesty of other people. A leather case containing important credentials and papers was left in the Post Office. A dishonest finder could have profited by taking it. But the clerk said, "A lady turned it in." Surely "lady" is a good description of that person. And the clerk said, "I was going to phone you about it." Such incidents, and they are many, restore faith in humanity.

Most people are good and honest. There is only a small proportion of thieves and criminals in the world, but they do a tremendous amount of harm. You will meet fine people everywhere.

And this fact is important: Every time you help someone, you give one more person an incentive to help others. The good example is contagious. If a tired clerk gives you too much change, be sure to return it, or she and her family will suffer. Never take advantage of mistakes that would benefit you, because they hurt others. Every bit of honesty and kindness helps a little bit to make this a better world.

* DID YOU EVER NOTICE that if you break a dollar to get a nickel, the rest of it fritters away, and you don't have much to show for it? . . . Take any small amount of money; save and add to it, and you soon have a respectable sum. But if you take the same amount and begin to spend, it is soon gone.

* CRUISE OF THE INK POT

Now that there are a few tires again and plenty of gas, it is a pleasure for the editor to clean the windshield of the "S.S. Inkpot" on a Saturday in preparation for a Sunday visit. Not all the interesting places are far away; some of them are very near. One of these is the Van Brunt congregation in Kansas City. It is located in a quiet part of our growing metropolis. The grain elevators have gone north to the Missouri River, the stockyards west to the Kaw, factories over the line into Kansas, and the mansions of the new-rich extend southward into the hills. Here in the northeastern part of the city are long streets with many homes, tall shade trees, neatly clipped lawns, attractive shrubs. The Van Brunt congregation meets in a Masonic hall on the boulevard, under the leadership of Pastor J. E. Cleveland. It has made a long struggle for existence, and had a particularly hard time when the young men were at war and older people away in the war industries. Now many have returned, and the attendance is large again. Brother Cleveland says, "This congregation will soon need a church of its own," which seems obvious to the visitor. There is a faithful group of older members who have supported the work there for years, and now the second generation is growing up to assume positions of responsibility. Someday, we hope, they will meet in a pretty church such as they deserve.

* IF YOU SPEAK one harsh, angry word, you are soon involved in a long series of troubles and difficulties, from which it is very hard to extricate yourself. And you know that it was all so unnecessary. If we could only keep from speaking that first harsh, angry word!

* VACATIONS. Each year, people look forward to vacation to provide a break in the routine of work, eating, sleeping, and more work. No matter how pleasant one's home and community may be, the narrow round that one follows each day from home to office to store and home again becomes monotonous. Relief comes on Sunday when one goes to church and varies the program, but that is not enough. . . . When there are so many wonderful and beautiful sights in the United States, we cannot understand those who are content to spend a whole vacation sitting around a camp, fishing and letting whiskers grow, learning nothing, seeing nothing new. Great sights are to be seen here, and by visiting our neighbors, Canada and Mexico. . . . Vacation for church people should also include reunion. Meeting with people, studying and playing together, one can refresh body, mind and spirit. Many of our reunions are held in very beautiful places, and would make ideal vacation spots independent of the religious meetings.

In Appreciation of Apostle Hanson

It was the privilege of the writer, representing the First Presidency, to be in attendance at the services of Crescent, Iowa, branch, May 26, commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Apostle Paul M. Hanson to the priesthood, which event occurred at this place, May 24, 1896.

Crescent was the home branch of the Hanson family in those days, and it was with understandable pride these good people laid claim to Brother Hanson as one of their sons, and sponsored the occasion that brought together here in one spirit, branch, district, and general church officers, with Saints and friends of this and surrounding areas, to do him honor who had for so long and faithfully served as a minister of the church; first as a priest, then as an elder, and as a seventy, an apostle, and as President of the Council of the Twelve.

It was recalled also that coming under appointment of the church in April, 1900, Elder Hanson has represented the church in many lands and missions, in constancy and with competence and dignity; and appreciation was expressed for his diligence in well-doing through all the years and vicissitudes of his labors in his homeland and in missions abroad.

Due appreciation, as should have been, was expressed, too, for the contribution Sister Hanson has made in support of the ministry of her husband; and we who have been blessed with like companions know how very much is due her for having both freed him for and sustained him in the work he has been called to do. Such an one, as has been said, is "a crown to her husband," a "gift of God."

The occasion furthermore afforded opportunity to stress the significance of ordination to the ministry of the church: Its ministers, as observed by the Apostle Paul, being taken from among the membership of the church, and compassed by like infirmity as are others of the church, at once sense the need both for compassion towards the people, and for intelligent and sacrificial labors in their behalf, that they may be brought to Christ, the Savior of us all. And we are confident that Brother Hanson, had he been counseled with, would have had it this way; for he would have asked that spread be given the efforts of the day, in stimulation of all Saints towards realization of the divine purpose in their life.

Favored were we who were present and participating in the services of this day. And fortunate are those of us who rise to its challenge.

J. F. G.

Gomer T. Griffiths

The Columbus, Ohio, branch paid tribute to Elder Gomer T. Griffiths on the occasion of his ninetieth birthday, Sunday, June 2. Many of the Saints from near-by branches were in attendance, and the Presidency and General Church were represented by Elder F. Henry Edwards. Letters of congratulation and good wishes were read from Elders Elbert A. Smith, the Presiding Patriarch, Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, and D. Blair Jensen, representing the Apostles in the Great Lakes field.

Brother Griffiths was born in Pennsylvania before "Young Joseph" took his place as leader of the Reorganization, and he has been a member of the priesthood since the day of his baptism, soon after the General Conference of 1877. He has no clear memory of William Marks, who was counselor to Joseph Smith from 1863 to 1872, but, with this exception, Brother Griffiths has been personally acquainted with every other member of the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric of the Reorganization and with all but a few of the earlier members of the Quorum of Twelve. One of his early missionary associates was William B. Smith, brother of the Martyr, and a charter member of the Quorum of Twelve in this dispensation. He has ministered in ordinations to every office in the priesthood and has filled appointments to every field in the United States and Canada, as well as in Europe, Australia, Palestine, and the Society Islands. It is hardly surprising that when one talks to Brother Griffiths the history of the Reorganization lives before one's eyes.

In the eventide of life, Brother Griffiths is still strong in testimony. Despite the fact that his ministry has won hundreds of good men to the cause of Zion, he is still anxious to win a few more. He knows only one topic of conversation but that is the best topic any man can discuss, and on this topic he is extremely well posted.

May "Uncle Gomer" long remain with us, and may his testimony be carried forward thereafter, even as he has carried forward the testimonies of many good and valiant men who preceded him.

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

Centennial of Mt. Pisgah

Iowa papers are carrying an account of an offer from the President of the Mormon Church to co-operate with citizens of Iowa in celebrating the centennial anniversary of the settlement at Mt. Pisgah in Union County. President Smith is quoted as saying ten per centum of the pioneers who went West were buried at Mt. Pisgah. This probably is a mistake, since many of the pioneers died at Winter Quarters (Florence, Nebraska). June 17, 1846, was the date the first caravan arrived at Mt. Pisgah.

I. A. SMITH.

May 18, 1946

From the Presidency's Office

WE ARE IN receipt of a letter from Brother W. W. Anderson, president of the L. D. S. Men's Club of Greater Sydney, Australia. We believe his tribute to our late President is worthy of use in the Herald. From it we quote:

At its first meeting, the newly organized Latter Day Saint Men's Club of the Greater Sydney area learned with deep regret the news of the passing of the late President, Frederick Madison Smith. As a mark of respect, the brethren stood together to carry a motion that our sympathy and appreciation be extended to the surviving relatives and to the First Presidency.

In a unique and vital way, the ministry of our late beloved president reached out across the Pacific Ocean to influence the lives of the people of the Church of Jesus Christ in Australasia. His leadership in the movements for a broader culture and a deeper educational preparation for service has encouraged us to become better equipped for service. His broad vision for the cause of Zion, and his constant urge that her cause be made a present-day reality have inspired us towards a greater zionic living and endeavor. His unimpeachable character has challenged us to nobler living.

Frederick Madison Smith's deep interest in humanitarian movements and the human touch with which he mellowed the exacting schedule of his official life revealed to us the warm heart of the man himself. Against the yearnings of his heart for Peace, the war years of two world conflicts took a toll. They stood as a greater challenge to him to guide the church towards the setting up of those conditions that should make possible the reign of the Prince of Peace.

To the Smith family then we express our sincere sympathy in the grief that is with them. May the spirit of comfort be theirs to enjoy.

To the First Presidency in succession, we bring the assurance of our sustaining prayers for divine direction and the incentives of our co-operative loyalty and our willingness to share in the great redemptive tasks that lie before them and the church.

ELDER V. D. RUCH of Council Bluffs, Iowa, reports on his ministry during May in a way which is both interesting and helpful. He says:

At the close of another month we find the branch in a very good condition spiritually and with fine interest and attendance. We observed the week of the fifth to the twelfth as Christian family week with special sermons on the Home and Family. We had Family Night at our midweek prayer service. Several complete families were in attendance. On Friday of that week, the women sponsored a mothers' reception which was well attended.

Brother Ruch then goes on:

It was 25 years ago along about now that I received my first general church appointment. My year at Graceland College was drawing to a close the latter part of May, 1921, when I received a letter from headquarters, notifying me of my appointment as missionary to the Northeast Missouri District. I have been under appointment continuously since that time. Twelve of those years were spent in Scandinavia, three in Missouri, seven in Tulsa, and now about three years here in Council Bluffs. I hope to be able to give 25 more years to the service of God and the church.

THE FIRST NEW BRANCH in New Jersey in the past fifty years was organized at Newark, Sunday, June 2, 1946, under the direction of Apostle George G. Lewis. This branch will succeed the Sunday school group organization which has been functioning since September 29, 1940, under the approval of the Brooklyn branch.

Among leaders who have been helpful in bringing the group to its present organization have been Stephen A. Black, now of Independence, Missouri, Harvey Grice, now of Port Huron, Michigan, M. W. Keairnes, originally of Omaha, and Howard Mousley of the local group.

Brother Keairnes will preside over the new branch, which has excellent prospects of early growth. For the present the Saints will meet at the Hotel Sheraton, Hill Street, Newark, New Jersey, and visiting members of the church will be especially welcome.

Dr. E. V. Shute and Dr. Wilfred Shute Participate in Medical Discovery

The London Free Press (Ontario, Canada), of May 25, makes a front-page feature story of the participation of one of our contributors, Dr. E. V. Shute of that city, in an important discovery of the use of Vitamin E in the treatment of certain heart disorders. The other doctors associated in the discovery were Dr. Wilfred Shute of Guelph, Dr. A. Vogelsang of London, and Floyd Skelton, a medical student. The story continues on page 8 with details of the discovery and pictures of the principals. We are glad to present this news to our readers, and extend our congratulations to Brother Shute.

Comfort Ye My People

Dr. Alexis Carrell says that nervous fragility, moral corruption, and insanity are more dangerous to the future of humanity than yellow fever or cancer. As many patients are victims of insanity as of all other diseases put together.

The world needs moral security. It needs to feel that wrongs will be righted, but that all that is worthwhile in the social heritage will not be lost in the righting of them. Some people seem to think that we cannot erect a better world without destroying everything good in the old world, which has been built by the painstaking effort of hundreds of generations of striving men and women. We need to make the old world better rather than to destroy it. Death and waste are the fruits of revolution; progress and beauty are the fruits of social evolution.—The Clipsheet.

A Veteran's Protest

The Famine - Some Observations

By Richard Irwin

The author, a son of the late Bishop Charles E. Irwin, was in the military service during the war, and had ample opportunity to observe conditions here and in Europe. His indictment is severe, but who that knows could deny it?

THESE PAST FEW MONTHS upwards of twenty million fellow inhabitants of our "One World" have died horribly for want of a decent meal, or even an indecent one. As early as last October, the American public—that means the individual citizen—knew they would die. He knew they would die if he failed to help them. He neither assisted them materially or insisted that his government take the necessary, relatively painless, measures which would have permitted them to live. We could have saved these people, but we let them die. Morally we are guilty of an immense homicide.

Originally, to quote the Saturday Review of Literature, "We helped set up the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation, supplying it with grains of flour when sacks were needed, and ignoring the reports of its director, who implored us to avert an immediate catastrophe."

Then, early this spring, the Secretary of Agriculture and the President launched a voluntary program of wheat conservation, appealing to individual Americans to reduce their weekly consumption of wheat products by two pounds. This voluntary program was given a further boost when Herbert Hoover returned from his fact-finding tour in the famine areas. Yet statistics show that the American citizen ignored these appeals. He even failed to substitute money for sacrifice, traditionally the easy way out for Americans. He was willing to spend and to countenance the spending of more money for a day's horse-racing than for a month's shipment of famine food. Thus, we, the people, rejected the voluntary sharing program and neglected to pressure our legislators for the limitation of food consumption by law.

Many Americans eat more in a day than most Europeans and Asiatics are able to scrounge in a week. That is a little caloric fact, not a figurative phrase.

Can it be, by some titanic distortion of values, that we have in a few months moved from a time in which men tossed away their lives like a used match for a few yards of bloody sand, to a time in which two pounds of wheat products are too onerous a sacrifice for the lives of decent, innocent people?

This insensitivity to the unimaginable sufferings of other human beings, this cold-hearted imperturbability in a time of human catastrophe has, I think, a significance in the spheres of political idealology and religion. It points up our betrayal of American moral and liberal philosophy and casts doubt upon the sincerity of our Christian belief.

AMERICAN SCHOOL CHILDREN are cultivated in the democratic philosophy, the philosophy of Jefferson, Franklin, Lincoln. It is a fundamentally humanist philosophy. It is a philosophy full of concern for and faith in people, little people, of the elevation of individuals. The founders of our republic, and the people themselves in the past, demonstrated their capacity for sympathy and support for others on several occasions, sometimes at considerable cost and risk. But now our famine relief quota has been weighed and found wanting. Consequently our citizenry has been weighed and found wanting . . . wanting in the liberal humanitarianism, the warm sympathy and regard for human dignity bequeathed to us by the architects of our national structure and idealology.

I question whether the desperate situation has been inadequately publicized and dramatized, although there are newspapers—forthright, crusading ones—which harness their entire format to a school levy campaign and treat the jeopardy of several millions as run-of-the-mill news. But the lineaments of disaster have been drawn and redrawn; if the public whistles in ignorance, it is through no lack of repetitive publicity; the facts are ours and have been ours since last autumn. It is only honest concern and will which we lack.

Nor is the fact that we are an oasis of wasteful plenty in a desert of deprivation a domestic secret; it is for export even if our food is not. Its circulation in starving countries at a time when our official mouths extol the glories of "Democracy," One-Worldism, and the sanctity of the Common Man can accrue to us only scorn, bitterness, contempt, for hypocrisy, and eventual rejection of our moral code (or lack of it), which is, after all, the heart and sinew of our political creed. Visitors from France and England have taken a quick, disgusted look and returned to their own soil, comforted in the conviction that there, at least, abides a sense of reality, a sober moderation and willingness to sacrifice consistent with the grim plight of our time. Britain recently released from her austere ration 200,000 bushels of wheat beyond her agreed quota. This evoked a trenchant cartoon from one of London's prominent newspapers. The artist depicted our national emblem with the stripes formed of the outstretched arms of hungry children; it bore the caption, "Old Glory or New Shame?"

Thoroughly understand and ponder the awful significance of Mr. Typical American at his table-side orgies—eggs, milk, butter, meat, bread, potatoes, vegetables, pie, cake, etc.—casually perusing a newspaper despatch from some wretched European city and asking the waitress for a couple extra slices of bread. His is the arctic detachedness of a scientist clinically observing an insect's death throes. Or the nonchalant depravity of Marie Antoinette, Marie the Flippant ("Let them eat cake"), who shrugged her way down from the palace balcony to the discredited immortality of the guillotine steps, shaping a portent and moral for shrugging nations, perhaps, as well as individuals with the somber justice of her fate. Thinking on Marie, one is impelled to wonder how long and to what extent the greatness of a people can be nourished on smallness of heart and contempt for the human race, of which they are part and parcel.

IN THE BEGINNING I expressed the opinion that we have accomplished a twofold betrayal. We are not only subverting our political traditions of liberalism and democratic morality; we are amassing further evidence that Christian "conviction" is a matter of the lip and not the heart, as if such evidence were not already poignantly ample. I hazard the opinion that there is no tenet nearer the core of Christian belief than that which bids us feed and support our fellow man in his moment of need. The ageless tale of the Good Samaritan, the Golden Rule, the picture of the judgment as sketched by Jesus on the Mount of Olives in Matthew 25: ("I was an hungry, and ye gave me meat") all support this view.

To be sure, the churches are impressively patronized of a Sunday, the litanies are told faithfully as they have been for ages, the prayers ascend, the pulpits quiver under the fist of righteous exhortation, and the children starve on while our tables are heavy laden. One is needed mentally by the remembered tale of the Hindu, who, on being asked his opinion of the Christian faith, replied with courteous intention and ingenious accuracy, "It is a very fine religion; I should like to see it tried." And, unfortunately, that seems to sum it up.

We stand revealed in this hour as the inheritors of 1900 years of Christian tradition, and products of a civilization which has projected into the blue the towering spires of Notre Dame and St. Stephens so that the weak and emaciated may crawl into their shadow to die. We might well include the Stone Church on Lexington Avenue in Independence, Missouri, for, while we are not afflicted with the physical presence of the dying, our responsibility is far greater than either St. Stephens in Vienna or Notre Dame in Paris.

Prayer meetings, regular church attendance, promotion of minor social and hygienic rules, denominational doctrine, etc.—all these, admirable and important as they may be, are not the real meat of functional genuine Christianity. They are "salad," a side dish. Functional Christianity is the unceasing, unselfish devotion of man to the improvement of relationships between himself and other men and between all men plus purposeful, realistic sacrifice on the part of "Haves" to eliminate all types of suffering and need wherever it menaces any segment of humanity. Few of us, including myself, would be "practicing" Christians, measured by that yardstick. Especially now. We live in a time in which a few ounces of food pared, daily, from our diet would testify to our faith more eloquently than a thousand Wednesday night testimonies or a year's unbroken church attendance. And where are the Christians?

THIS is a Reorganized Latter Day Saint organ. Comes the inevitable query, "What has this specifically to do with me, a Latter Day Saint?" The answer to that one should be, at least partially, apparent. Any observations about Christians in general are as applicable to Latter Day Saints as any other group. Perhaps more so. One recalls the label, "Chosen People." At one time it was the verbal expression of a militant clannishness which played its part in the vernal sorrows of our church. In recent time many of our church leaders, including the late President F. M. Smith, attempted to de-emphasize the complex in favor of a wider participation in the life of our encompassing society.

But, in a certain light, we are a "Chosen People." Chosen for what? Chosen, among other things, for our unique social consciousness, our recognition of man's responsibility—no, obligation to his brother. It should be evident that such an obligation goes far beyond the narrow confines of intra-denominational relationships. We are more than a church; we are hearts and hands in the brotherhood of man, a less exclusive affiliation, but one which transcends any church tie, however indigenously worthy it may appear.

Considering our professed social enlightenment and devotion to pristine Christian principles, it would not be at all remarkable were we to be in the forefront of the Famine Relief Campaign. The remarkable thing is that our efforts to assist the emergency program have been negligible, or at least no more noteworthy than those of any other like-sized group, in some cases even less noteworthy. There is a church in Louisville, Kentucky, Episcopalian, which assumed responsibility for the feeding of an entire Catholic parish in the Moselle district of France. A church in Orlando, Florida, not Latter Day Saint, has adopted a similar course. Are we laggards when we should be in the van?

I am not aware of any Sunday sermon in the past few weeks in my congregation which dealt exclusively with the suffering and death only a few hours away or inciting our membership to align themselves in some sort of collective effort for the alleviation of this dire condition. Under church auspices every Latter Day Saint housewife could be induced to sign a card, pledging herself to reduce the family's consumption of wheat products by two pounds. We possess a variety of auxiliary church organizations; i. e., young adult and juvenile groups, women's and men's clubs, whose demonstrated ardor and selflessness needs only to be coalesced and channeled into a food conservation and collection drive. What are we waiting for? It is half-past eleven. Our brother grows weak looking for his keeper.

More Echoes of the Leadership Training Workshop

Held During General Conference

We brought to the readers of the Saints' Herald last week some thoughts expressed by one of the speakers at the Leadership Training Workshop during the recent General Conference, and promised that we would share talks made by other speakers as well. We are bringing you this time the high lights of a talk made by Brother Eldon B. Hart, who represents a number of young members of the church who faithfully studied during the period of their service to the country during the war. Brother Hart's experiences while in the Navy were such that he desired to learn more about his church, and he kindly told us about it in the Workshop. We pass his story on to you as he told it to us:

For some individuals, as myself, it took such a drastic thing as a war to take us a long way from home and away from the fellowship of Saints to realize what a great and wonderful church this is.

After almost two years under such circumstances, and after making many decisions that were of great importance, I received the desire to study. At that time I had no knowledge of study materials available through our church. I learned about a Protestant Bible class, so I began to study with them. However, there were too many things conflicting with our beliefs, so I was still dissatisfied, in spite of the fact that I did profit by studying with that class. In the meantime, I asked my parents to send me the Saints' Herald, and fortunately just then the book, Bible Studies, by Thelona D. Stevens, was being advertised. This was exactly what I was looking for. After receiving my copy of the book, I examined it from cover to cover and discovered in the back of the book that the course might be taken by correspondence for credit.

My appreciation of this course will be eternal. With the references to the three standard books, including the Inspired Version, and the Story of the Church, I have come to deeply appreciate this gospel. I fully intend to take additional courses that will enable me to build on the foundation I have gained by my studies so far. If the purpose of this course is for Leadership Training, I can say it has done just that for me, for through the study of it I have come to sense the responsibilities that are resting upon me as a member of this church, and I do feel I know and appreciate my church much more as a result of the study of this course.

I would like to congratulate those of the Religious Education Department for the many avenues open to educate the people of this church to the ways of God.

And we of the Department of Religious Education wish to thank you, Brother Hart, for the good study work you have done, and for the contribution you made to the Leadership Training Workshop.

To all who are wishing to study, whether as individuals by correspondence, or as members of classes, we solicit your inquiries, and shall gladly send complete instructions for procedure. Write for Bulletin No. 102, addressing your request to The Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The Nature of Revelation

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

This higher level can best be expressed when the mind of Christ dwells in us. As we grow up unto him in all things, we shall be able to meet life and the course of history with the same power and insight which was manifested by Christ. We shall know as we are known. This does not mean that prophecy and vision will have no place, but rather that these are blended into a total life attitude which is the essence of the kingdom of God. What the church means by revelation, then, is almost beyond our present understanding. We can see it only dimly as we strive to live always on higher planes.

Thus having laid down these basic considerations, how can we approximate these rich gifts? Our individual differences are so marked that it is well-nigh impossible to lay down hard and fast rules as to what one shall do and shall not do, and how and when he shall do or shall not do it. But there are certain practices which are vital to the acquisition of spiritual power. And how better can they be delineated than in the Book of Alma? In speaking of the sons of Mosiah who had entered into a fiendish and hostile community at great personal risk, and had come out therefrom bringing with them a redeemed people, he says:

They were men of sound understanding,
And they had searched the Scriptures diligently
That they might know the word of God.
But this is not all:
They have given themselves to much prayer,
And fasting,
Therefore they had the spirit of prophecy,
And the spirit of revelation,
And when they taught,
They taught with power and authority,
Even as with the power and authority of God.

Many were brought before the altar of God,
To call upon his name,
And confess their sins.

Who is there in the church today who would be bold enough to venture the assertion that such a procedure adopted by a thousand men would not transform this church and change beyond all recognition the seal of its significance in the world of men and affairs?

The world needs divine revelation after the manner given by Christ. That revelation must be lived for. It will not come simply by asking for it. As it is lived for, it will be given, and as it is given, it must be responded to. Thus will the expanding life of God in the soul of the church bless all humanity, and the towers of Zion for which so many of us have longed be seen in the righteousness which is the fruitage of the word of God.

VI. REVELATION—SUPERNATURAL BUT NOT UNNATURAL

Revelation, then, is given in history for the purpose of molding the life of mankind. It is fashionable in our day, now that men of scientific accomplishment have told us about the universal reign of law, to discount miracles. It has come to pass even as said by the prophet of old "If they say there is a miracle believe it not, for God is not a God of miracles." But the objections urged against miracles rest upon certain assumptions which themselves are prejudices. Science cannot claim infallibility on the ground of its consistency, because what was thought to be scientific truth a generation ago has been placed in discard today. For instance, the atom was regarded about fifty years ago as the key to the structure of the universe; a universe which was then supposed to be composed of atoms and force. Along with this conception arose a materialistic philosophy of life and a mechanistic view of the universe, and athiests galore who had a smattering of science told those of us who believed that personality lay in the heart of creation, that we were children, that we were intellectual cowards, and that we were afraid to face a reality of which they conceived themselves to be the high priests. But lo! fifty years after, we discovered the key which was so confidently proclaimed would unlock the mysteries of the universe, proved not to be the key so much as the lock itself. Ptolemy built a universe which lasted some 750 years. Then came along Sir Isaac Newton and constructed another universe which lasted about 400 years. Today Einstein has built a universe for us and nobody knows just how long that will last. But despite these changing scenes in the philosophic and intellectual landscape, one fact remains rooted in history: that fact is that God is, that he is a person, and that he is love. And that fact is attested to by long, long successions of great souls who tell us that God has made himself manifest to us. Those who are prejudiced thus against the miraculous, accuse believers of being dominated by religious authority enshrined in institutions. But surely it is just as bad to be dominated by the authority of the intellectuals whose fashions of thought are so manifestly unstable, as it is to be persuaded by the voluminous and consistent testimony of those who believe in God, and that he speaks. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God speaks to man?

Revelation is supernatural, it is true, but it is not unnatural. He would be bold indeed nowadays, who dared to insist that all the natural laws of the universe were apprehended by mankind, and that such apprehension made impossible divine utterance. So years ago the freedom of the will was steadily denied by those who believed in cause and effect. But, today the element of indeterminism is ascribed even to the physical world, and it seems to me that belief in human agency and belief in miracles must both stem from the same world view. Thus science itself now admits, more or less, room for happenings which cannot be accounted for alone by what it now knows of the physical world.

VII. CONCLUSION

Anyone who has experienced the operation of the spirit of truth when he has been conscious of a blending of the life of God with his own, has come to know that revelation is much more than the transfer of intellectual propositions which can be phrased in words. And he knows, too, that it is much more than the transfer of deep feeling which is also present in the experience. Again the strengthening of the will which comes as one is inspired by the spirit of truth is not all that is involved in the process of revelation. Mind and heart and will are caught up and fused; the entire personality at its highest level is blessed and blended with the presence of Christ, and in such experience there is transmitted a divine gift which makes the recipient of such experience a new creature. Truly, the Lord Jesus said the word of God is like a seed. A seed which has within it a prophecy of the nature of God. A seed which is given by God and received by man. It is not the result of philosophy, it is not the result of scientific attitude of mind. It is not the result of sentimental attitude which makes one sorry for past sins. It doesn't rise from the subconscious.

Much more, it is not the result of a man holding an audience with himself and setting his own goals and standards and resolving to live up to them. There is nothing within the ken of man which can imagine what the gift of God is. God who is able to do far more abundantly than we can ask or think. It is love and light and life, as it is in Christ Jesus; and when we say this, we are extremely conscious of the paucity of human language to express the reality.

In conclusion then, brethren, we may say revelation is a historical fact. In ancient Israel, certain men claimed the vocation of prophet. The mind of God was transmitted to them. Their prophecies and perceptions, their dreams and visions were objectified in the life of Jesus Christ our Lord who made explicit what was, in them, implicit. In modern times the historical process was furthered and extended, and the message of God, his relation to man, the relation of man to man, and the certainty of the coming kingdom with its exaltation of righteousness and the condemnation of wickedness was further extended and interpreted in modern times. Revelation, considered historically, is of a piece with itself and is progressive, in that as man approximates its provision so it moves to greater understanding. It appeals to the conscience of man, which as Wordsworth said is the "stern daughter of the voice of God." It is in consonance with reason, for our minds are but an offspring of the mind and reason which is in all things.

In this connection, brethren, notice the language used by John in his testimony of our Lord.

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God . . .

For in the beginning was the WORD, even the Son.

This word word has an interesting and suggestive Greek background. It means "logos," and to a Greek, Logos was synonymous with the "reason, or the energy" in all things. Moses put it this way, "God said, Let there be light . . . and there was light." Joseph Smith, in our day: "Christ is in all things, and is the life of all things, and is the law by which all things are governed."

Sir James Jeans has pointed out that all matter is resolvable into force, or radiation, or energy; and that the whole universe, both in its material and mental aspects is by a series of waves or radiations; imprisoned waves we call matter, and the unfettered waves we call light; and that strictly speaking the whole nature of the created order, both visible and invisible is covered in the Old Testament statement, "God said, Let there be light." Moses was told, when upon the mount of clear vision observing the creation in its immensity, "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." It is indeed a sobering and uplifting thought that the whole order of things exists to bear record of God, and that whatever glory we achieve comes about by our complete dependence upon God. Further as one considers that this creative power as Bergson said, which is struggling for articulation and does not find release until man is brought into being, was incarnated, "made flesh," and that Christ came down and for our sakes was made in our form and nature that he might bring us to God, he is humbled at the unspeakable condescension of the Creator.

Let us then, as ministers, and as brethren one of another, keep our souls open to the truth from whence-soever source it may come, remembering that the soul has many windows through which the light of God may stream in upon us. As we do this, and as we are made partakers of the heavenly gift and the powers of the world to come, let us answer to the demands made upon us; and we shall find the elements of our common life, as those in the soil are transmuted by the action of the seed, caught up into his life and made in his likeness.

THE SEVENTIES SUGGEST

Organizing the Local Forces for Missionary Work

By Joseph E. Baldwin

THE DEGREE of success of any missionary endeavor will depend largely upon how well the branch is organized for it. Missionary work must become a part of a long-time, well-planned program. It must not be something injected in the program on the spur of the moment. It is not the job of the missionary to do all of the work. The members of the branch must become missionary-minded. They should learn how they can best assist in this phase of our work. Local priesthood members must become specialists in many phases of the work, and some need to become missionary specialists.

There should be at least three objectives in this over-all missionary endeavor. They are:

- (1) To win
- (2) To retain
- (3) To rewin

A successful program will be broad enough to cover all three of these points.

1. The Yearly Program:

The branch council should formulate the yearly program. A very important part of it is missionary work. It must be a year around endeavor, instead of a two-weeks' series only. All departments must assist in this plan. Each must build into its program this missionary phase. It will be the pastor's job to see that these departments are tied into the yearly outline of activities. As a part of the year's missionary endeavor, there should be an intensified series of missionary meetings. These meetings should be held at the most opportune time. They will be the high point of the annual missionary endeavor. Various committees need to be appointed well in advance of the series to give them ample time to work out special features. The series must not be an end in itself; it must be a part of the total program. The program should be evangelistic so as to win new members; it should minister to the needs of the present members so as to retain them; it should reach out to those who are inactive, and rewin them. Each person in the branch can assist in each phase of this work.

2. The Prospect:

The prospect is a very important factor in missionary work. We must learn to know who the prospects are (many of our local men do not know who they are, or where to look for them, it seems).

We first seek prospects among our members and regular attenders. We find here those waiting for the opportunity to join the church—some unbaptized children, a nonmember husband or wife. These persons usually make good prospects, because they are acquainted with the church. Nonmembers in the neighborhood are prospects. Friends and relatives of our members are prospects. You may want to divide these into two groups: prospects and suspects.

A careful survey should be made for the prospect that would be helpful to the church first, then go out after others. A list should be made up which contains the names, addresses, telephone numbers, and any other information about the prospect that would be helpful to the missionary. A card for each prospect with all this information should be on file in the pastor's office, available to the missionary for his information.

3. The Visiting and Attendance Campaign:

About two months before the intensified series, the pastor and his associates should get together and organize the visiting campaign. The general objective of this campaign is that every worthy, dependable member, who will respond, be enlisted as a personal evangelist. They should be given the specific responsibility of visiting definite prospects or inactive members and bringing them to the meetings.

Much prayer and thought should be devoted to this work by the pastor. He should have his plan organized, and then call his key workers together. The details and purpose of visiting are explained to the workers, and their support solicited. They are given visiting cards for several prospects and inactive members. The assigning of these should be made with utmost care. It is well to make special assignment cards with space for reporting. Emphasis needs to be laid on the idea of the visitor's persuading the inactive members or nonmembers to come with them to the meetings.

The visitors should take an interest in, and develop a close friendship with those assigned to them. This will do much toward winning or rewinning them to the church.

4. The Advertising:

It pays to advertise, big business tells us. If that is true for industry, it is also true for us. We should make use of the latest advertising methods and technique in order to reach as many people as possible. The advertising mediums which have been used most effectively are:

1. Local newspaper
 - a. The news story and cut of the speaker
 - b. A well-planned paid add
 - c. Sermon extracts
2. Handbills
3. Printed invitations—letters and bulletins
4. Radio
 - a. Sermons
 - b. Announcements
5. Personal Contact
 - a. Personal invitations
 - b. Telephone calls

We must use the best medium for our needs. Advertising is expensive in some of its forms. Therefore, we must know what will best serve the purpose and bring the greatest results.

5. The Music for the Series:

The service of song has often influenced people to join the church. The music department should co-operate with the pastor in planning and preparing special music for the series. The best talent available should be used and months spent in preparation. Music can do much combined with the spoken word in telling the "Old, Old Story." Truly it has an important part in the missionary series.

6. Financing the Series:

This problem should be considered by the finance committee. The cost of the series will vary with the community. It will depend on whether we rent a hall, or have our own building. A supply of tracts should be purchased, and flowers provided. The expense of the missionary should be met by the branch. The best way to do this is to provide for these expenses in the budget, so that the money is available when needed.

7. Introduction of the Missionary:

If possible, it is well for the speaker to come a week early to visit the prospects and Saints. He can, in this way, get acquainted before the series begins. This is essential, because a nonmember doesn't ask questions until he feels he knows one.

The speaker should visit as many of the departments as possible, giving a pep talk about the series, and emphasizing the responsibility of each to support the effort.

8. The Rally Day:

It has been found that a rally day on the first Sunday is helpful. This gives the visiting teams something specific to work on. An effort should be made to get all the inactive members and prospects out to the services. A basket dinner is usually served in order that everyone can come and spend the day. A well-planned prayer service will help the series get off to a good start.

9. The Series:

The series proper is primarily up to the speaker. It is his job to put over the restoration message and sell the gospel to the prospects. The length of the series should be determined by the local officers and the speaker. The music, the scripture, and the sermon should all blend together to give an outstanding worship experience. The power of God must be felt in these meetings. Therefore, all the necessary preparation should be made so that God can bless the total effort with success.

10. The Follow-up:

At the close of the series it is well for the speaker to remain several days in follow-up work—again visiting the prospects who were not baptized. He should confront them with the question of baptism, try to answer their questions, and clear up their misunderstandings.

When he leaves, he should turn the list over to the pastor who should follow up the prospects and keep in touch with them. This effort should be supplemented by regular missionary sermons, cottage meetings, visiting, and laying plans for the intensified missionary endeavor of the next year.

Conclusion:

The importance of organized missionary work cannot be over-emphasized. It paves the way for the missionary to come for the intensified series. It is almost impossible for the missionary to start with a new prospect and in three or four weeks bring him to the point of joining the church. Missionary help is sent primarily to assist the local people in the conversion of their prospects.

THE HOME COLUMN

The L.D.S. Home of Tomorrow Is

Conditioned for Creative Living by Beauty

By Florence W. Simmons

BEAUTY IN THE HOME is far more than handsome furnishings arranged against a suitable background. Beauty in the home is not fully expressed by the aesthetics and dynamics of color and form and the right relationships of these so that a perfection of beauty seems attained.

Beauty, to relate to and emphasize and glorify that condition and place conveniently termed home, has that indescribable element in its composition that we can allude to but fall short of in analysis. This element is the common denominator in all choices made for the home. It is the factor which helps in a satisfactory decision on hues for wallpaper and carpeting. It is seen in groupings of furniture for comfort, in pictures chosen out of sympathy for a memory, a hobby, as pictures of birds for one fond of them.

This element is manifest in countless tangible and unmeasured ways. The casual observer of such a home would sum it up in that amazing term: grace. But grace is, itself, an exponent of the source of this beauty.

ONE STEPS INTO THIS HOUSE for the first time and is met and surrounded by the atmosphere this factor has created in the entire composition that is home. He reacts with a definite surge of appreciation to the beauty in this composite of shape, color, harmony of relations, and that additional something which has been interwoven and underlaid and overlaid in this composition. He is pervaded with a sense of comfort and consideration, of inviting warmth. Peace is imperaled throughout the atmosphere radiated from this indescribable constituent. His spirit lifts unconsciously in exalta-

Baptisms are obtained from the efforts of an evangelistic series, in direct proportion as the local Saints have developed a number of prospects who are from 50 to 95 per cent converted before the series starts.

If the local forces are not organized, the missionary has two strikes against him before he begins.

We must have an organized force of local workers, a well-informed missionary, and the power of God for a successful long-time missionary endeavor.

tion to something very right and lofty and grand.

Every choice made for this home, its charm of line and color, its integration of ideas, issued from the hearts and minds of persons who possessed that community of spirit which to begin with had created in the other that haven for which the true home is but a symbol, an outward expression of an inner home of the heart and spirit.

This love, this understanding is that first-last-and-throughout element which, if left out, negates material beauty in the home and leaves it cold, lifeless, sometimes hateful to those who refuse to impart kindness and friendly understanding.

Do you see that aesthetic beauty can be crested on the impetus of a spiritual exaltation deriving from that larger beauty, love? that it releases one's abilities, and its urge is a convoy for them in achieving beauty in the home?

Beauty in the home then, is more than a nicely executed room plan and the sounding of a cultural keynote in pictures and other accessories. Beauty in the home does not consist of an array of luxurious furnishings, which indeed detract from that essential quality of beauty that always leaves room for the idea of home.

Beauty in the zionic home is measured by more than good taste, but that "more" does not consist of material abundance.

This home may be furnished simply, indeed. But if there is cleanliness and color and understanding, if love has high lighted the imprint of the makers' personalities as they created, this home has achieved beauty.

THE ZIONIC HOME of tomorrow, however, sets a special standard for beauty, a norm of excellence. It will not be the place where everything used has been cast aside and replaced with pieces having store-shine. Some of the furniture will be refinished or painted or even made entirely at home. The creative hand of the homemakers will lend that special touch and flavor that sets this home apart from "mill-row." In the language of personalized beauty, it will sing with radiant tones: "This is ours, our home!"

Zionic homes will not be copies. They will not be chair for chair, and lamp for lamp, and table for table, ad infinitum, like the famous Joneses. And they will be deepened and broadened by enough global culture to avoid the fads of acquisitive merchandisers seeking to keep up a lucrative income.

But, this splendid home of tomorrow's Zion will be an example of knowledge and skill in the art of creating a beauty which rises above mere livability in the home. A place to cook and eat and sleep, a casual stamping ground has never been able to substitute for the home.

The divine pattern for beauty throughout the earth does not permit of a narrowed, pitiable concept of it for the zionic home. The home where love is an abiding grace can put up with many material and cultural limitations. And, if one were to choose between this home and one filled with simple loveliness, yet devoid of the warmth of fellow consideration, he would leave his child in the home with the shabby furnishings and faded walls, and love!

Yet, even in the home where love is the one beauty, that alone has proved inadequate for the joy and normal unfoldment of that precious gift, personality. Young people go out from these homes dun in spirit. A film lies over the richness that should glow from their personalities. If only the parents had realized what a bit of color and light walls, bright flowers in the house would have meant to those expectant children hopeful for life's best.

THE ARTIST who designed and colored the earth's flowers and plant life, whose master artistry created the flora on the ocean's floor, furnished a ministry of beauty to man, the value of which even today he little grasps. But this ministry of beauty included in its mission the provision of example in line and form and hue for guides in creating this ministry in the home. We are indeed at home in beauty. After all, for those who have sought its larger meaning here, it is the ultimate habitat of the reunited soul and body.

Right color, alone, is of far-reaching emotional and spiritual value in the home environment. Colorists, through case reports, tell us that dunness and colors unsuited to the location work disaster in the minds and emotions of plant and factory workers to say nothing of slowing production and dulling the blade of efficiency. In the words of an authority on color: "We no longer live in a gray world."

We very nearly reflect our home's enormous influence for good or bad living. And since the true home reflects likewise the innate desires and aspirations, the personalities of the entire family, it is these families who plan and work out the decorative changes in it together. Too many of our homes evidence the dominant personality—the one person who makes all decisions. Term it custom if you wish, but the thoughtful person knows that it is selfishness on the part of the wife and mother, or the husband who is indifferent, when she alone chooses wallpapers, rugs, bedroom sets, keying the entire decoration to herself.

We are interested in the things we, ourselves, create, and when all the family members have voice in decisions for home decorating, home bonds are forged with them which impart not only a sense of togetherness but personality security as well. It is these experiences which help families to acquaintance on the aesthetic level. So, with family discussion of plans and guidance, the children should work out their own room schemes. Aside from their privilege, it should be part of their job in the home-work plan.

AN ILLUSTRATION of worth is the experience of my little friend Virginia. From earliest childhood she frequently visited the well-known Nelson Art Gallery with her parents. And at four she put in her plea for a canopy bed like the one she had admired there. When she was nine the family moved, and in this new house with the exciting task of settling her own room she prevailed in her request for the canopied bed. The family had decided that the old furniture must be kept and the new decorating schemes adapted to it. Consequently, it was to the tops of an old four-poster bed that Virginia's father scrowled on the canopy he had made out of lengths of 2 x 4s. After discussing the matter together, Virginia was granted the former dining room rug, and as its dominant hue was green, she chose this for the main color of her room harmony. Her first visits to grandmother's had held the imagery and color of a collection of Godey Lady Books, and now she searched for wallpaper designed with these charming ladies for her room motif. Father wondered if this pattern might be too sophisticated for a nine year old, but there was something in his daughter's logic which convinced him that there were overtones already in her personality that would cause her and the lovely ladies to be at home together.

Virginia shopped with mother for rosebud designed material and eyelet embroidery for the canopy ruffle. And, as the Godey Ladies' green skirts were swagged and edged with white, there should be matching draperies that swagged also. She finally found strips of green percale quilt topping released by the government which she trimmed with the eyelet embroidery left from the canopy material. With room unity in mind, they looked for wide ruffled curtains with eyelet embroidery edging, but at last compromised on plain white dotted swiss panels to conserve on the room budget.

This south room, delightful throughout, with its splendid cultural tone, reflects this daughter who, with guidance as needed of both her parents, was permitted to reveal some of the beauty inherent in her nature. A cultural accent in the room is a collection of Madonnas begun when Virginia was five, inspired by the Art Gallery. It may be added that brother was given equal consideration in the plan for his room. The mother terms it Democracy!

What does this tell us of values for the family norm? The home expresses the entire family since this was the procedure for the remainder of the house. It is the successful adaptation of old furniture to a new setting. It illustrates how richness may be acquired with simple and inexpensive materials. It is an example of initiative in creating useful beauty. It evidences rich cultural appreciation out of early and continuing experiences.

THE NORM for the home of tomorrow will emphasize creativity. Homemakers will originate rather than copy. To avail themselves of distant air travel and the scientific abundance forecast for the home, they will be expense-conscious and learn to see in ugly handicap furniture something to create into useful beauty rather than discard.

Three young married women, sisters, with homes grouped together on a hilltop, have achieved all of these points and to tell their story would mean to write a book about converting old cedar boxes into exotic, antiqued Chinese chests, tabletops of discarded picture frames and glass, exciting laquer designed picnic sets of dime-store tins, bookracks of grain troughs and literally hundreds of attractive home pieces from discards and handicaps. Thus they have enhanced the meaning of beauty in these three homes where this essential beauty is paramount.

A case illustration of the foregoing norm is found throughout another home, and I shall describe one room of it, a bedroom. The planning centered in late Victorian walnut furnishings and a fireplace. Since walnut furnished a dominant hue, cocoa brown and cream were used for the color scheme with emphasis of turquoise blue. On a fortunate shopping trip Mrs. X found a small remnant of the Tolle pattern, beige and turquoise figurines on a cocoa brown background. Just enough for the backs of the two Victorian chairs. Another remnant of heavy rayon, brown, served for covering the seats. Mr. X repaired the chair, and Mrs. X upholstered both of them.

To give more pleasing lines to the fireplace, the mantel was cut down and a molding added all around, one foot from the opening. The red bricks, with the exception of one line next to the opening, were painted cream color, then touched with the same hue and quickly wiped to antique them in keeping with the period pieces of the room. Mrs. X then painted a design on the cream-colored bricks beside the molding, adapting it from the remnant pattern of figurines and scrolls, in many hues of rust and brown.

Quite by chance Mrs. X found wallpaper, a replica of the remnant pattern. Fortunate day, but we are helped when we try to create useful beauty. She papered the back of the large book niche with this and high lighted one of the shelves with Chinese figures in blue. This cultural accent was particularly appropriate, since Chinese though suited to any scheme is especially a part of this period.

A tabaret was removed from an old dresser, painted cream color and used for a low flower stand. Some of the figured wallpaper was pasted to the sides which were edged with fine molding. A Bennington teapot, cream luster with brown pattern, planted with ivy graced the completed stand. Late Victorian glass and china in cream and brown with ivy plants lent unity on the manteltop.

From an old gold picture frame, Mr. X made a shadow box. Mrs. X lined the back of it with finely striped silk in cream and brown. Against this background she tacked early pictures of her parents, the frames of which she had trimmed with ruffles of dark brown and turquoise blue grograin ribbon. The wallpaper throughout the room was light beige, cream, and off-white. The charm of the completed room, its cultural atmosphere, represent that norm of creativity expected for the zionic home of tomorrow. Too, this room was achieved with a minimum of expense.

THE NORM for the home is that it shall be conditioned by beauty for creative living that the larger ends of love and achievement may be realized in a family which has itself created the conditioning. This means that the setting for this home, its locality and neighborhood must likewise be prepared with a parallel conditioning. A family which has achieved such a home as has been described could not keep its poise at a parallel level in the dreary setting of a poorly kept community. Outdoor-living must be visualized and the home yard landscaped and prepared for its function of beauty about the house and for health-giving hours spent in the air and sun among flowers and trees. A little exampling goes a far journeying in this quest for beauty.

TEST YOUR HOME ON THESE POINTS

1. Does the decoration of your home express you, your family?
2. Have you made all decisions or worked out the designing with your family so that the home represents all of you rather than a dominant personality?
3. Have you tried to fit your family into a misfit period, or have you planned for today?
4. Have you capitalized on the fact that many of the most interesting homes are cosmopolitan, combining with taste the furnishings of various periods?
5. Are you a copyist or an originator?
6. Are you creative, refinishing and redecorating furnishings on hand?
7. Have you turned handicaps into assets on the table-top-out-of-a-picture-frame and glass idea?
8. Is the mood conditioning of your home on a depressing or lift plane?
9. Does the color in your home give you a spiritual and emotional lift?
10. Is your home disturbing with too much intense color, or is it interesting with color emphasis?
11. Is your house over-decorated, or does it reflect intelligent simplicity converted to richness?
12. Are your walls littered with pictures, or are they grouped to relate to furniture groupings?

LETTERS

A Prayer Is Answered

This is the first time I have ever written a letter for the Herald although I have been a member for ten years.

My husband and I were Mennonites until we moved to Harrison, Michigan; there we attended meetings held in the schoolhouse by an organization known as the Christian Brotherhood. We were baptized and enjoyed the meetings very much until they decided to build a combined church and dance hall. We said we would help on the church, but we didn't believe in dancing. Several of the other members were discouraged too, so we started meeting together in the evening to read the Bible and pray for direction in finding the right church. Finally a Reorganized minister came to our house and asked if he might hold meetings there, so we had services for a week. The following Monday morning another minister joined him, and at the end of the series my husband and I and two of our children were baptized. Several months later others in the community joined the church. We know that our prayers were answered and that this is the true gospel.

A Member for Seventy-two Years

I am growing old and my eyesight is failing, but I wish to write one more letter, testifying of the goodness of our Heavenly Father to his children in these latter days. I shall be eighty years old on June 21, and have had the privilege of being a member of the Reorganized Church for seventy-two of those years. God is good—he is merciful to those who love him and keep his commandments; he is merciful even to those who do not.

I am not able to attend church, so I am writing this letter as perhaps my final testimony. I love this gospel, and believe with all my heart that it is the true church of God restored to the earth in the last days for "whosoever will accept it." The happiest people are those who keep the law.

I would be glad to receive letters from any who care to write. If I cannot read them all, they will be read for me. I ask God to comfort the hearts of all those who were bereaved through the loss of loved ones in the war, and pray he will bless the Saints now and forever.

The Restoration

12. The Growth of the Church Outside of Missouri

By Evan A. Fry

IN RECENT numbers of this series about the origin and early history of the church, we have been considering the troubled days of the church in Missouri. But we do not want to lose sight of the fact that the main body of the church was still in the east—with headquarters at Kirtland, near Cleveland, Ohio. From this place the many activities of the new sect were largely directed during the years from 1831 to 1838, and here centered the more quiet and un-spectacular events of church growth and expansion. Before we go on to follow the Saints who were either exterminated or driven from the state of Missouri by Governor Boggs' "extermination order" in the fall of 1838, and tell you the story of the founding of still another town—beautiful Nauvoo—we wish to turn your attention eastward to bring our history up to date with that group of Saints left behind in Kirtland.

When the printing office had been destroyed in Independence, putting a sudden end to publication of The Evening and Morning Star, the church in Kirtland decided to purchase another printing press, and continue publication from that place. The new press was bought, publication resumed, and other good uses found for it as well. On September 24, 1834, a committee was selected to compile and prepare again the various revelations and articles on church doctrine for publication in book form. You may remember that these revelations had been sent to Missouri once for publication, and were partially printed, waiting for the bindery, when the printing office was destroyed by the mob. Not quite a year after their selection, the committee completed its work, and on August 17, 1835, the finished manuscript was presented to a general assembly for ratification. The various officers and quorums of the church in turn expressed their willingness to ratify the book. A vote was taken, and unanimously it was ordered that the book as compiled by the committee be printed and accepted as binding in church belief, doctrine, and discipline. This is the book which is still in use in the church, with other additions since, called The Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

FEBRUARY 17, 1834, the Standing High Council of the church was organized—a body of twelve high priests whose duties were to advise the First Presidency of the church, and to act as a sort of "supreme court" to which cases could be taken on appeal from lower church courts. On February 14, 1835, the quorum of twelve apostles, who were to have oversight and direct responsibility for the missionary work of the church, were chosen and ordained, except for some who were away from home at the time. On April 28, 1835, 45 men were chosen to begin the first quorum of seventy—a group of men who were to function as traveling evangelists or missionaries, under the immediate supervision of the twelve apostles. The church was growing numerically. Its missionaries were constantly busy, and literally hundreds of people were being baptized every month. Some idea of the rapidity of growth may be had from the information that in 14 years, from April, 1830, to June, 1844, somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred thousand people were baptized into the new faith.

Closely connected with this sweeping missionary effort was the building known as the Kirtland Temple, which still stands today in the quiet little village of Kirtland, some three miles from Willoughby, Ohio, and twenty-odd miles east of Cleveland, near the main highway between Cleveland and Buffalo. In June, 1833, a committee was appointed to draft plans for the building, and by June 25, the building was under way. The size was specified by revelation to Joseph Smith—55 by 65 feet "in the inner court" and when the plans were drawn for seating the various quorums of priesthood in their appointed places, that size was found to be exactly what was needed. On July 23, 1833—the day the mob was destroying the printing press in Missouri—the cornerstone was laid. The building was a work of sacrifice, love, and devotion. All other work was secondary to the great work of building the temple. Church leaders from Joseph Smith on down donned "tow frocks and pantaloons" and did manual labor in the quarries, that the stone masons might have a plentiful supply of stone. The missionaries, as they came in, did their bit between missions. The women spun yarn, wove cloth, and made warm clothing to protect the men as they worked during the following winter. Tradition tells us that the women not only sold their jewelry and heirlooms and applied the money to the building fund, but gave their china and glassware to be ground up in the mortar or stucco with which the outside of the building was plastered, that the walls might sparkle in the sunlight. Oftimes it was necessary to work on the walls by day, and mount guard at night to keep mischievous enemies and hoodlums from destroying the day's work.

On November 19, 1835, the building was far enough advanced for the plasterers to begin work inside. On January 8, the outside plastering was finished, although the inside plastering was still unfinished. On Sunday, March 27, 1836, the completed building was dedicated in an eight-hour dedication service, with only a short intermission at noon while mothers fed their children. This service was not marred by the passing of any collection plates, but men who stood at each door to receive contributions received $963 for the building fund.

THIS KIRTLAND Temple is still unique among all the religious buildings of the world. It is a simple building, three stories high, with only an unfinished basement. The floors and roof are supported by huge hand-hewn beams of oak, which are as sound today as when they were first put in place over a hundred and ten years ago. The walls are of native stone, two feet thick, and plastered both inside and out. The exterior plaster is of a hardness which seemingly cannot be matched by any cement worker today, since all the patch work which has been applied to the original is far more absorptive of water than the old original stucco or plaster. The inner size, as we have already said, is 55 by 65 feet. Adding a ten foot vestibule and stair well to the front of the building, and allowing for the thickness of the walls, the exterior measurements are 59 by 79 feet. Many of the original windowpanes of hand-poured glass are still in the frames, and some of the old colonial windows are regarded as priceless antiques, irrespective of their religious significance.

The architecture of this unique building was mainly colonial, its exterior lines showing the simple yet stately dignity which is characteristic of many a New England church. But inside, there is a skillful and harmonious blending of architectural elements from the Corinthian, the Ionic, the Egyptian, and the Gothic. Although the building was used as a place of congregational assembly, this was its secondary purpose. Primarily it was intended as the home of what was called the "School of the Prophets"—a school of training and preparation for the missionaries who went out to preach the restored gospel. On the first floor, this training was spiritual, consisting of prayer meetings, instruction in church doctrine, and what we would today call open forum discussions in which the men who had been so recently converted from other churches might unify their doctrinal beliefs and go out to preach a unified message. Since this was a day when few men had had educational privileges, the second floor auditorium was devoted to secular instruction in the common and collegiate courses of study. Still other classes were held in the six smaller rooms that comprised the third floor. The dual preparation received here—the preparation "by study and also by faith"—is considered to be the greatest single factor in explanation of the remarkable missionary success of the church during its first fourteen years of existence.

And so, the Kirtland Temple is held in great respect and veneration by this modern generation of Latter Day Saints, as the place where their fathers received an endowment of spiritual power, such as was received by the early apostles on the day of Pentecost. But there is still another reason why this building is so highly regarded and so carefully preserved. We are getting a little ahead of our story; but when the church broke up into factions after the death of Joseph Smith in 1844, a cloud was cast upon the legal title to this building. In 1880, the courts of Lake County, Ohio, found that the doctrines of polygamy, plurality of gods, Adam-God worship, and blood atonement, which had been introduced in Utah by Brigham Young, were departures from the original faith and doctrines taught by Joseph Smith, and awarded the title to the Reorganized Church, as lawful successor to the church which built this building. The church in Utah therefore has no claim whatsoever on the Kirtland Temple.

BUT NOW, back to our story. And we must introduce another discordant note, as we mention the panic of 1837. Perhaps in this postwar period we would do well to study the panic of 1837 as an object lesson in the dangers of inflation. Business was good, prices were high, everybody was obsessed with the spirit of speculation, and determined to get rich quick. All over the country little private banks were established, which under the banking laws of those days could issue their own paper currency. Such paper money was plentiful all over the nation. The men in Kirtland, most of them church men, of course, decided that if everybody else could have a bank, they could too. Accordingly a man was dispatched to Philadelphia to buy plates from which to print their money, and another man dispatched to Columbus to secure a state charter. The man from Philadelphia returned with the plates, but the legislature in Columbus for no good reason refused a charter. But the men of Kirtland were not to be stopped. If everybody else had a bank, they surmised that they had a right to have one, too. They had some perfectly good plates on hand from which to print bank notes, and they had cost too much to replace or discard. The plates had been ordered and bought in good faith. So to satisfy the letter of the law, they simply added the word Anti, making their notes read, "Kirtland Safety Society ANTI-Banking Company."

They issued the first notes of their anti-banking society in November, 1836. They were accepted, and circulated quite freely for a time, until the financial structure of the whole nation collapsed the following spring. Bank after bank suspended specie payment. Hundreds of thousands of men and firms took bankruptcy. By May 10, 1837, not a bank in New York City remained open. Bankers fled for their lives, and were frequently the victims of riots, mobs, and even lynchings. The Kirtland Bank failed, too, and to make the feeling all the more venomous, the religious issue was projected upon the ill-will growing out of the general financial unrest. Even within the church there was suspicion and division, in spite of Joseph Smith's frequent warnings against the spirit of speculation and inflated currency.

Only a great project could unite the church, and take its mind off its troubles. Accordingly a mission was proposed to England, and Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde were sent to this new territory. Other missionaries were sent to New York City, to Canada, to the New England States. Missionaries found ways miraculously opened up for them, and money provided when they most needed it. They preached the restored gospel of repentance; they told the story of the Book of Mormon; they healed the sick; they debated with representatives of other faiths. They baptized hundreds and thousands of people. So in spite of the dark days in Missouri, the church continued to grow and to spread, and to look towards the future with hope and faith.

News Briefs

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Seventy George Njeim conducted a missionary series from April 28 to May 12; two new members were baptized at the close of the meetings. On May 11 a dinner was given at the church, so that all might get better acquainted with Brother Njeim; a "good neighbor" and "outstanding church worker" were chosen and honored on this occasion also. The choir presented the Easter message in song on April 21. A father-son banquet was held on May 4, and a mother-daughter banquet on May 24. Pastor C. V. Graham gave a report on General Conference, Sunday, May 24; he talked on the procedure of the gathering and missionary program of the church. To supplement his message, Pastor Graham had the "Standards for a Steward" printed on the back page of the weekly bulletins.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—On February 20 a "friendly evening" was held in the chapel. Following the dinner hour everyone marched to the upper auditorium while the "Old, Old Path" was being played; at this time each nonmember was presented a carnation. Music was provided by the choir. District President Reed Holmes and Missionary Albert Scherer gave sermons. Despite one of the year's worst blizzards, seventy-nine people attended. All but one serviceman from the Providence congregation has been discharged; there are no gold stars on the flag, and only one member received the purple heart award for wounds.

INFORMATION WANTED.—In 1945 members of the Providence, Rhode Island, congregation celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of their branch. Now they have been informed that the celebration should not have taken place until this year. Pastor E. M. Brown would appreciate a confirmation on this statement from any of the older members.

SABETHA, KANSAS.—Elder E. W. Lloyd, affectionately known as "Daddy" Lloyd, was the guest speaker on May 19. His sermon and house-to-house visiting were greatly appreciated. Three young men of Sabetha congregation are still in service; Howard Brunner is stationed in Germany; Merlin and Marvin White are in the Navy.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILLINOIS, Lansdowne Branch.—Evangelist John R. Grice recently held a series of meetings; six new members were baptized. An Easter play, written by Mrs. George Barraclough, was presented on April 21. On the following Sunday a special service was held for the returned servicemen; Fred Lambkin was the speaker. The women's department, under the supervision of Mrs. Fred Enywiler, is making quilts and rugs. The redecorating of the lower auditorium of the church is nearing completion. A junior choir has been organized under the leadership of Pastor Prosper Carl and is making splendid progress. A Boy Scout troop is being sponsored by the branch; Ernie Arnett is serving as scoutmaster, with Harold Harpley as his assistant.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.—The Easter sunrise service was in charge of visiting Evangelist John R. Grice. A flannelgraph talk was given by Mrs. Vivian Frizzell at junior church, and a service of special Easter music was presented in the evening. On May 2 the Port Huron women entertained the Sarnia, Ontario, group; Melvin Loeding provided a miniature international "Blue Water Bridge," which spans the St. Clair River, uniting the two cities which centered the long table; tiny Canadian and American flags were used as place cards. On May 23 the Young Matrons sponsored a recital, after which the Blue Birds served refreshments; the proceeds will be used to take the Blue Bird circle to reunion. A mother-daughter tea was held on May 14 at the church. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the guest speaker at a combined veteran-father-son banquet on May 16; 102 were present. Port Huron Saints grieve the passing of Priest Eugene Wyman and Deacon Everett Gersten, a returned serviceman.

RIO GRANDE VALLEY, TEXAS.—The Saints' Herald is in the home of every member of the Reorganized Church in the Rio Grande Valley.

BREMERTON, WASHINGTON.—An impressive candlelight service was presented by the Zion's League on Easter Sunday night. This type of devotional is rapidly growing in favor with the congregation. Seventy Ernest A. Ledworth arrived in Bremerton on May 3 and remained several weeks to visit with the Saints. This was Brother Ledworth's first mission since his ordination to the office of seventy. The shingling of the church has been completed, the walls have been kempted, and the floor and benches varnished. A group gathered at the Silver Lake reunion grounds on Thursday, May 30, and made preliminary preparations for the coming reunion. These grounds have been owned by the district for more than twenty years.

GUELPH, ONTARIO.—An Oriole group has been organized under the leadership of Emma Phillips and Ruby Sharpe. A beautiful Easter pageant was presented at the evening service on April 21 under the direction of Arthur Dunn and Winnie Morden. A gift of appreciation for their long service and friendship was given Mr. and Mrs. King Cooper by members of Guelph congregation; the Coopers are moving to Niagara Falls. The Elora and Fergus young people were entertained by the Guelph young people at a pancake social recently; proceeds were applied to the church furnace fund. On May 18 the women's department held a successful rummage sale. Out of town speakers for the month were E. J. Gleazer, Howard Schlotzhauer, and George Njeim.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Enoch Hill.—The Mother's Day program was in charge of Henrietta Allen. The juniors, young people's chorus, and adult choir participated in the service. The Blue Birds, under the direction of their leader, Mildred Thompson, presented the evening program. There are two Blue Bird circles in the Enoch Hill group; one for the older, and one for the younger girls. President F. Henry Edwards was the speaker at 11 o'clock on May 19. Sympathy is extended to the families of Merwyn Beem, Mrs. Maggie Merchant, and Mrs. Hettie Johnson, who have recently passed away.

Grateful for Prayers

I would like to thank all the Saints for the prayers they have offered in my behalf. I am now at Rochester, waiting the result of examinations made by my home doctor. I am staying at a private home four blocks from Mayo clinic. Since there is no church here, I would be glad to have anyone living in this locality call on me.

 CRUISE OF THE S.S. INKPOT

A hot wind blowing from the south had made the Middlewest as parched as a piece of toast forgotten in the oven. On Sunday, June 16, the sun was glaring like an electric furnace in "skies of brass" by midmorning. It was the task of the editorial cruiser, the S.S. Inkpot, to make the voyage to Lamoni.

In spite of the heat (since dispelled by abundant cooling rain), the countryside along U. S. 69 was green and beautiful, not yet seriously damaged by the drought.

The church at Cameron displays a cordial invitation to worship, which is easily read from the highway. Considerably too late for the service, one was pleased to note the large number of cars parked by it to indicate the worshippers within.

Thirteen miles north of Cameron, at a point where U. S. 69 turns sharply west, it is joined from the north by Missouri 6. Follow this for nine miles, and the tourist comes to Gallatin, a place famous in church history for the sufferings of the early church people. Today, it is a quiet, old-fashioned town, and is famous for a popular dining place, which is considered one of the ten best in the nation, according to Duncan Hines. Cars from many states park there while people taste its fare. It is good, but you must make reservations or allow time, at least two hours, because the best food must be prepared to order, just as needed.

Iowa was cooler than Missouri, and it was pleasant to relax in the shade on the beautiful Graceland College campus. A few of the summer crew were about, but did not interfere with the task of finishing the sermon outline.

Brother Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., newly-appointed President of the College, was out patrolling his domain and found us. He took us home where Sister Gleazer provided lunch and grape juice, and we were entertained by the two children and their pets.

That evening Lamoni began its summer series of open-air services in Central Park, and it was a great pleasure to find old friends and faculty members in the congregation. Though there are changes in the city, some of the finest qualities of Lamoni people will never change.

The family of Aaron Engle of Philadelphia has moved to Lamoni, where the daughter, Clara, is a secretary in the Stake Office. Very kind and friendly people they are, and took care of the travelers before the long trip homeward. A collection of beautiful cut glass, and some lovely old pieces of furniture and other precious things, reflect a long history of good taste in the family. Brother Harry Engle, their son, was just recently married and is in the mission field for the church.

A full moon shone on the Inkpot all the way home late that night, and one was reminded of Joshua, who transfixed the moon with the command, "And thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon."

 BRAVE WOMAN

If anything would make you wish to pray, this true story will. The sister who writes to us has contributed some fine articles. She has overcome hard afflictions, and she is going bravely forward to meet another one. This is from her letter:

"I have learned that my partial blindness is permanent and I can never read again. With the help of my twelve-year-old son I have written an article which I hope you can use. A friend is making the last copy and will mail it to you. I plan to learn Braille and go on with my study and writing as much as possible. Is any of our church literature printed in Braille?"

Doctors have done what they could, and were unable to save her sight. This may be the final answer to her need; but again, it may not. There is a Great Physician to whom we can appeal in her behalf. . . . And if the Divine Will should not grant her recovery, there is always the inspiring example of Helen Keller.

 ISAAC'S SONS

Several times people have said to us, "The name 'Saxon' is derived from 'Isaac's sons.'" Undoubtedly these people make the statement in good faith, having read it, and believe it.

This statement does not agree with the dictionary, which asserts that the name "Saxon" comes from the Anglo-Saxon term, "Seaxe" or "Seaxan," which is from the stem word "seax," meaning a knife or a dagger. A "sax" was also a short, broad, one-edged knife or sword used by both Celts and Germans in early times. Further history of the word can be found in Webster's New International Dictionary, and a longer history in the Oxford English Dictionary.

This error is a common one, and is called "false etymology," because it attempts to trace origins of words upon mere similarities of sounds or forms.

It was natural that the Germanic tribe that invaded Britain about 800 A. D. should have been named by the Britons for the weapon its hordes carried and used in battle. The Angles, who came about the same time, were named for the fish hook they used.

* A good way to humble yourself is to read over what you wrote ten years ago, when you thought you were much smarter than you do now.

Wanted: Faith

Our Present Need

It seems to us that what the world needs more than anything else at the present moment is a return of faith. We need faith in God and in man, faith in the order of the universe, faith that somehow, in spite of all difficulties, things will come out right. It would be a mistake to hope that we shall have no troubles, that all problems will be solved for us, that capital and labor will end their fighting in a love-feast, or that the Russians will quit making trouble for the rest of the world, and that the rest of the world will quit making trouble for the Russians. Not even Santa Claus or a fairy godmother out of an old folk-tale could give us such blessings. But we do need faith in the survival of the human race, and faith that God has a purpose for us that cannot be defeated.

This postwar period is providing a field day for the prophets of doom, the apostles of despair, and the predictors of catastrophe. The quarrels of the victorious United Nations, and particularly of the "Big Three" gave them a good start. The atomic bomb gave them a strong argument, and they are making the most of it.

False Prophets

Lately, younger members of the church have been disturbed by unguarded talk of older members in which the apocalyptic literature of the Bible has figured strongly, along with current predictions of disaster for the world. This is very discouraging to the young who must prepare for careers, build homes, and plan for the future. People who predict disaster mean well; such people always arise in times of danger and uncertainty, and their influence is detrimental.

All this has happened before, many times. It would be hard to find any period since the times of Christ when somebody was not predicting the end of the world by fire, collision with other planets, war, tidal wave, or something. These prophets have always been wrong, and the world has always gone on its course. Such prophets are not generally students of history, and they do not know how many times before their kind has failed. Even when proved wrong, their memories are short, and they are not embarrassed.

We should say to people: Do not let them frighten you; God is in charge of His world; His purposes will not fail; His work will be done.

In all ages there have been people who lost property and sometimes their lives, who have neglected personal development and opportunity because they thought the end of the world was coming. The world has been here a long time. Words cannot destroy it. It will be here a long time yet.

Faith and Courage

As one reads the pages of history, and the lives of the men and women who made it, he is moved with a great admiration, even reverence, for the courage and fortitude with which they lived out their days in doing the good work that was given to them. Always they built homes, raised families, did their best to educate the children and prepare them for life. In their own way, as best they could, they lived according to the gift of an inner light, adhered to principles that often made them defy death, held hearts and minds up to God asking for his mercy and guidance.

We need their faith and courage

now. We can have it if we do not listen to the voices of disaster, but proceed with sound judgment, common sense, and the practical conviction that we shall have a chance, no matter what comes.

There are more reasons to be happy than sad. There are more reasons to be hopeful than discouraged. We who have the gift of the gospel, and some understanding of God's purpose for us, should trust him. He will help us through.

Picture of Independence

You who have visited Independence have carried away many a memory, many a mental picture of the city and of the life that goes on in it. Even those who have not been here still have their ideas. Correspondence and personal report (and even gossip, too!) carry a steady stream of description of the life here at headquarters out to all parts of the church.

To all these pictures we would like to add one.

The occasion was the annual social gathering of the Stone Church hostesses, on the evening of June 18, at the home of their chairman, Mrs. James Gault. Husbands were included, and Brother Gault gave more than his share of valiant service for the occasion. Guests of honor included President Israel A. Smith, Pastor Garland E. Tickemyer and his wife, Drs. Charles F. Grabske and Vance E. Link (a splendid team who have helped nearly everybody in the crowd at some time or other), Bishop Walter Johnson; and many others who have served well.

The dinner was co-operative. Into this spacious home each couple brought food, dishes, silverware, and a number brought folding tables. The space was crowded, but every one was seated, well supplied, and happy. Throughout the dinner and afterward, there was good conversation and friendly fellowship.

If this were merely another social occasion it would not merit special attention. But it was something more than that; it was significant of the life and work of our church people here, and, in a way, symbolic of what we may expect to come. First and foremost, it was a service group. Every family there had given incalculable amounts of time in service to the church—in hostess work, in all the branches of ministry, in music, and many other activities.

At that moment it was easy to wish that television might have carried a picture of that gathering to all the members of the church.

In such a gathering, with such good and friendly people, the hope of Zion seems to draw near. Its ideals do not appear impractical or impossible. With more people like this, any good piece of work could be done.

The hope of Zion lies in the assurance that there will be more such people—many more of them. They will be citizens who build and preserve homes and home life, competent in their businesses and professions, informed and intelligent, liberal and kindly, able and willing to accept the responsibilities of leadership, and the wisdom of being led.

This is but one more of many descriptions and pictures of the life of our church here. We would be glad if you should add this one to your collection. L. J. L.

“There is a large population of inebriates, who do not come to their excessive habit from psychological conditions but largely from their own conduct or through the social mores of their group. Although they do not have a need of escape, they expose themselves to becoming chronic alcoholics because of the compulsions of their environment.” —Dr. E. M. Jellinek, Director, School of Alcoholic Studies, Yale University.

1947 Conference Music

The anthem list below includes the anthems which the conference choir will use next April. Each of these numbers is appropriate for general use in the local choirs throughout the church and this department urges that local choristers secure them and use them during the year. Any one who attends conference and who sings in any local choir will be prepared to sing with us during the conference period, and also the members of the congregation will have become familiar with the anthems and will appreciate them more during the time they hear them at conference.

If your local music dealer cannot supply you, you may write Neil Kjos, 223 West Lake Street, Chicago 6, Illinois, and he will give you a special rate on them.

If there are singers in the church who are isolated from regular choir membership who would like to sing in the conference choir, we urge them to secure this music and learn it at home and join us next conference.

The Gospel of the Atonement

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

Complete in this issue. The third of a series of lectures delivered before a group of church appointees in Chicago, during December, 1945.

I. Principle of Vicarious Sacrifice.

The Divine Nature is attested to and expressed in part through nature. "All things are made to bear record of me, things which are above . . ." We often refer to the "stars in their courses" as confirming or as opposed to some particular course of action as it agrees with or as it violates the moral law. So permanent do the stars appear to be, that such reference seems justified. Kant said that one of the things which filled him with "ever increasing wonder, admiration and awe," was the "starry heavens above." Of them Joseph Smith also said, "Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in majesty and power." "The Universe," says Jeans, "appears more and more to be the work of a great Thinker." So the Psalmist rightfully declares, "The Heavens declare the glory (intelligence) of God . . ."

Already (cf. Lecture II) we have mentioned the fact that the Restoration movement has emphasized the centrality of Christ in the created order. His Cosmic functions are outlined in the following:

This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, His Son; he that ascended on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things that he might be in all things and through all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and is the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

If we look for a moment at our own solar system, and consider the sun, its center, we find two facts in its behavior which correspond to aspects of Christ's character, confirming the declaration above referred to. First, its movements are constant—they can be depended upon; and, secondly, its nature is sacrificial—it gives itself as it shines forth.

Not only does our sun move with precision, but it holds in the same precision relation, all the other planets in the system. This fact makes possible new discoveries. One of the most brilliant achievements of the human mind since the days of Newton was the discovery of the planet Neptune. Intricate mathematical calculations were required in the prognosis, and two young astronomers, J. C. Adams of Cambridge, and a Frenchman, U. J. Leverrier, shared in the honor of discovery.

Both attributed certain vagaries in the observed motion of the planet Uranus to the gravitational pull of an exterior planet, and both set to work to calculate the orbit in which this supposed outer planet must move to explain these vagaries.

Adams finished his calculations first, and informed observers at Cambridge as to the part of the sky in which the new planet ought to lie. As a result Neptune was observed twice, although without being immediately identified as the wanted planet. Before this identification had been established at Cambridge, Leverrier had finished his computations and communicated his results to Galle, an assistant at Berlin, who was able to identify the planet at once, Berlin possessing better star-charts of the region of the sky in question than were accessible at Cambridge.

In such brilliant achievements we see God "moving in majesty"—that is—"according to Law."

But while moving with inerrant accuracy, the sun "giveth" his light. Consider, brethren, what that means. Every twenty-four hours in our time, three hundred thousand million tons of the sun's substance is being transformed into radiation, energy and heat, and is sent streaming through space to quicken life elsewhere. Two hundred and fifty million tons per second—six hundred and fifty times the amount of water which goes over Niagara is a stupendous transformation of substance into light or into radiation, but that is what our sun is doing all the time. In giving its light, it is giving itself. Some day our sun will burn out . . . "the heavens wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture . . ." "As one earth passeth away and the heavens thereof . . ." The basic life principle of the existence of the orb which rules the day is sacrifice. We name our highest glory after this principle—Celestial Glory.

Consider the seed. It is buried in the earth. The heat and energy of the sun pour downward. The promise of life stirs, breaks forth, fructifies. The seed dies, and new life is born. The tree grown, the forest matures. Ages pass, and the forest is buried, and—transformed. Then men go down into the bowels of the earth for the coal, which is burned to give light and heat and energy. The sunshine of so many aeons ago has blessed us today. Jesus used this idea to explain his own life principle to some Greeks who were inquiring about him.

And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast. The same came therefore to Philip . . . and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus. Philip cometh and telleth Andrew; and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus. And Jesus answereth them saying, The hour has come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall to the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

The supremely intelligent life, and that most glorious, is the life lived according to the principle set forth above. God was glorified by the sacrificial endeavor of Christ. Christ was and is the prophecy of the Kingdom of God—he is the first citizen—the archetype of all citizens. The kingdom of God will not come until men behave in consonance with the nature of Christ, by yielding up the whole lives, lawfully and intelligently to the demands of the Christ Spirit. The Christ Spirit runs all through Nature. Surely God moves in majesty (according to law) and in power (according to love) in all creation.

Every creative aspect of life reflects suffering—vicarious suffering. For the sole satisfaction of an inward grace, the mother yields herself to the valley and shadow of death for the sake of an unseen, unborn offspring. The philosophy of Plato cost the life of Socrates. The great Eroica Symphony came out of Beethoven's agony when he realized he was to lose his hearing. Consider the following from a frail girl who lay dying:

LAST LINES

No coward soul is mine
No trembler in the world's storm-troubled sphere,
I see Heaven's glories shine,
And faith shines equal, arming me from fear.

Though earth and man were gone
And suns and universes ceased to be,
And Thou wert left alone,
Every existence would exist in Thee.

There is not room for death
Nor atom that his might would render void.
Thou! Thou art being and breath
And what Thou art may never be destroyed.

—Emily Brontë.

Brethren, you do not get that kind of faith out of an easy life. That kind of faith represents the triumphant resurgence of the human spirit against cruelty and injustice oftentimes set in life itself; and is born of worship conditioned in agony of soul and humility of spirit.

Many attempts have been made to justify the problem of suffering. The Book of Job is one of these—and the significant element in that book is shown forth when the hard core of Job's integrity is laid bare for all to see, and when he utters the immortal words:

I know that my redeemer liveth,
And shall stand at the latter day upon the earth,

And though skin-worms destroy this body,
Yet in my flesh shall I see God.

We come back, then, to the testimony of Jesus. What scientists perceive, and what artists discern, what the reason and conscience of good men everywhere appreciate, has, in ampler measure been presented in the long course of history through the Divine Ordinances. When our race was young, the sacrifice of Christ was foreshadowed.

And Adam called upon the name of the Lord, and Eve also, his wife; and they heard the voice of the Lord, from the way towards the garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not, for they were shut out from his presence.

And he gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God; and should offer the firstlings of their flocks for an offering unto the Lord. . . . And the angel spake saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father. . . .

And thus were all things confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance. . . .

When it was thought wise in the Divine Providence, to establish anew a nation through which the Divine riches could be manifest, Abraham and his son Isaac were chosen as the principals in a moving drama of sacrifice, father and son, in concert, under Divine inspiration gave their posterity a preview upon Mount Moriah of the Sacrifice of Christ.

Later, it became necessary to deliver Israel from bondage. Then it was the Passover was inaugurated and the Paschal Lamb slain and eaten. Precise and explicit were the instructions concerning this ceremony. Why? To enable the chosen people to recognize Christ, the One Anointed, when he should appear, and, in some measure, to lay them under obligation to serve God, by showing in the sacrificial endeavor of Christ, what it cost God to deliver them, and set them free to reveal His purposes through them. Indeed the whole Hebrew cultus, with its rites and ceremonies, its sacred implement, tabernacle and temple pointed them to the Ruler of nature, who was also to be the Redeemer of nature's crowning achievement—man.

Since the advent of Our Lord, we engage in Eucharist, eating and drinking in remembrance of Him. Thus has testimony of His sacrifice been given in all ages, having as its purpose the securing of unity between God and man.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." Vicarious suffering, the by-product of divine endeavor, holds all creation in its grasp. Heaven above, earth beneath, the world within and the regions below declare the glory of Jesus.

II. Christ—A Quickening Spirit.

Love is creative. Of that much we may be sure. But so very often has life been cruel that we ask "Is love triumphant?" Is the order and fitness of things good? God is; that, in some reasonable fashion, we conclude from our analysis of knowledge—our epistemology. But what is He? Is H. G. Wells right in affirming a vast area of the universe which is impervious and inscrutable and against which men rebel? The church has always dogmatized and said, "God is love!" There is no area into which man may drift "beyond His love and care." But that dogma is the most difficult of all.

Talk with a man who is sheltered and comfortable, and surrounded by gracious friends and congenial acquaintances, one who has never been shaken by some personal grief or injustice and has been cradled in some respectable religious faith. He may tell you, possibly, that he believes beneficence to lie behind all things. But then let life tackle him. Let him lose his material security through no fault of his own. Set the forces of evil against him with all their bitter malevolence. Take his only son and condemn him to die, heroically of course, in some slimy swamp thousands of miles from home, for his country. Finally, afflict him with an incurable disease, and see, then, brethren, if he will maintain his integrity. No mortal could so maintain his belief in Divine beneficence unless, as Job of old, he had the testimony of Jesus!

Vicarious suffering, and the principle of sacrifice undoubtedly does lie behind the created order. Admitted! But the most difficult of all tasks, or so it seems to me, is the one set up by the superimposition upon the created order of human sin, willfulness and pride. How can God break through the barriers thus erected and assure men that He loves them? Man's sorrow has been greatly multiplied by his rebellion. Add to the normal suffering incidental to create the intolerable misery consequenced by sin and it seems to be that an awful weight descends upon our hearts and threatens to crush us. "We are," most emphatically, "made partakers of misery and woe!" To assure men of love undying and unobliterable was the task which Love undertook in Christ, and the glory of the Atonement is shown forth by the way Jesus met, absorbed and utterly defeated sin in his own person. But we are here anticipating too readily our line of argument, if one can legitimately construct a line of argument about such as love and sin.

We have used the word sin before. In the last lecture we mentioned the fact of sin, tried to justify the Scriptural estimate of man and say that he needed not so much education and enlightenment, as rebirth and reconstruction. We called sin—"rebellion." Now we must try to evaluate a little more fully the nature of sin; for such understanding is necessary if we are to appreciate the Atonement.

YOUNG JONSEY

When a boy his family was poor. At times there was hardly enough to feed the four of them. No Social Security then. You had to work to eat, or if you could not find work, beg, and if you were too proud to beg, as very often you were, you had to go hungry. One day, when funds were almost exhausted, Jonsey went to Mother's purse and took the two remaining pennies to buy funny papers. After he read them he turned toward home—hiding them on the way—and saw his mother waiting for him at the front door. She knew what had happened. He decided to bluff it out!

"Jonsey, did you take money from my purse?" she asked with anxiety. "Why, no, I didn't," stonily rejoined the boy.

"Look me in the face, Jonsey!" Defiantly now he looked his mother in the eye. "Do you mean to say that you never took any money out of my purse?" "Certainly I did not," he spat, "of course not."

Steadily she looked at him, looked into him, and slowly her fine gray eyes brimmed.

"I never thought I should live to raise a liar as well as a thief!"

Jonsey averted his impudent stare but something gripped his heart! A big lump came in his throat. He sensed that his mother was hurt—and he sensed, too, it was not the money that counted so much as that something had happened between them. A barrier had been erected. A sense of shame passed to him, shame measured out to him because he loved her and had caused her heartbreak. Of course he was not able to grasp all the factors or the forces brought to bear in those moments. He sensed them but dimly after he grew to manhood and had a boy of his own. Then it was he came to see that surely his mother had "borne his grief and caused his iniquity," and in the measure of his love for her, her stripes were to him healing penances. Always afterwards he stayed honest and true.

AN ANALYSIS OF SIN

Jonsey's mother lived for Jonsey. She loved him. What Jonsey did, therefore, he did to her, and she could no more be unconcerned about the lie and the theft than she could cease to exist. She did not stop loving Jonsey—that was impossible. She simply identified herself with what he had done and bore a sense of shame which the boy did not feel until he caught it from her.

Jonsey might have walked into a store and stolen from a stranger. Such an act would have transgressed the ethical code. Or, he could have gone to the home of a friend and taken from his friend's mother. The same act would thus become a greater betrayal of trust. But Jonsey took the money from his own mother! What would have been a transgression of the ethical code, or a betrayal of friendship, thus became heinous sin. A discourtesy to a stranger becomes an insult when offered to a friend. But an insult to a friend is transformed into a fearsome act of disloyalty and sin when offered to a loved one. And the degree of difference is not in the act itself but in the degree of love which the act affronts.

What makes sin so serious is that, like young Jonsey, we are constant recipients of the gifts of God, given by Him out of His free love for us; and we use these gifts as we please, to satisfy our wishes, regardless of the fact that we are thereby denying to others what is rightfully theirs. You see, young Jonsey had a little sister, and she had to go hungry the day Jonsey sinned. Innocent people always are denied their legitimate needs and just wants in the measure of our sin. God bears the shame and others the consequences. It could be in no different case. Love is at the heart of creation.

We may say, then, that sin always and without exception is disloyalty. It is an abrogation of the family spirit. It is a violation of the code of ethics set up in a relationship of love. It always causes pain to God who loves to the uttermost and who is constitutionally incapable of doing anything else but love us. Nothing that we can ever do can make Him to cease to love us.

But sin is more than this. Sin is the sinner sinning. It is the yielding over of manhood to alien powers which have within them authority to deceive, to blind, to lead men captive and destroy them.

Like every adult sinner young Jonsey decided to bluff it out—to get by with it—to lie in justification. And the stony stare came into his eye because the tender sprigs of love in his young heart were slowly being quenched. Sin hardens the heart—it robs men of their love for each other. Here is a secret of the Divine Grief. Here is what broke the great Heart of Jesus in Gethsemane—namely that the eleven, after three years of his gracious ministry were still striving against one another as to who should be greatest! So with great drops of blood he cried, "I pray, Father, that they might be one—that the world may know that thou hast sent me!"

We cannot but remember the vision of Enoch who, high and lifted up, yet understood not the reason for grief in Heaven.

"How is it that you can weep?"—The answer—"Behold these thy brethren!" Contemplation of the majesty of God in the outer world with all its marvelous intricacies and its urge to praise God is not enough. The heart of God was laid bare to Enoch when he beheld (that is—understood) his fellow man.

There was a crucifixion in the heart of God ere ever the first man sinned, because love lends wings to spiritual vision. Jonsey's mother saw in that one act of theft the prophecy of a criminal and the certainty of coming judgment and misery on the boy, and she wept for him on this account. So, when the prodigal son decided, "Father, give me that portion which is mine,"—even before he went away, as soon as the resolve was borne in his heart, the father suffered.

The great problem set by sin is to get the sinner to see himself as he is. And this is extremely difficult and hazardous. Jonsey could not be forgiven and readmitted into the family circle until his parents had some reasonable guarantee that he would sin no more. Corporal punishment would not alter what had happened inside him. There is no physical punishment adequate to purge the soul from sin. We are not led to righteousness by fear. Fear simply keeps us from the more noticeable manifestation of a corrupt spirit. The problem set is to make the sinner see his sin as God sees it, and so have the chance to hate it in like manner. And only love can do that, and it does so by standing for the sinner, and being for the sinner what the sinner cannot possibly stand and be for himself.

Blinded by selfishness, in bondage to self, neither feeling the need of, nor knowing the way to God, humanity, concerned about its trivialities is bent on a course which will bring its destruction. But the love of God will not be satisfied with the death of the sinner. As David mourned over his son, "O Absalom, would to God I had died for thee!" so God bears the agony of wanting to take our place and, in our stead, and for us, interpose himself between us and our destruction.

Some years ago Brother Elbert Smith preached the funeral of a good man. On the same day he transmitted a letter of silence to one who had been guilty of a persistent and flagrant violation of the moral law of the church. At the end of the day he said with sorrowful heart, "We have buried two men today. Would to God we had buried the latter as we did the former."

So Moses, "Lord, let me die with them!" And Jesus, "Here am I, send me, Father. I will go, and the glory be thine!" And of Him it was said, "Sacrifices and burnt offerings Thou wouldst not, but a body hast Thou prepared for me," and "Lo, I came to do Thy will, O God."

It was, and it still is, the will of God that men be won from sin. That could only be done as they were persuaded by love, to see the results of sin.

"As Moses lifted up the serpent," said Jesus, "even so must the Son of man be lifted up!"

Because God loved us he permitted Christ to be made sin for us, so that seeing in him, what was possible alone in Him, the true nature of sin, we might hate the thing that crucifies God, that kills His image in us, and, hating it, turn from it. That is why Christ dies, and that is what sets us free. The tragedy of Calvary was that there was crucified the image of God in the lives of those who did it, just as now, each time we sin, we are separated from the life of God.

Redemption from sin requires that we see the consequences of sin. But sin is negation of the power to do just that. Redemption from sin requires that men be changed and the direction of their lives arrested and turned back again. But sin rebels against a turning. Redemption from sin requires that men be restored to family relations with God and their fellows, but sin hardens their hearts and they have no desire to participate in Kingdom of God endeavors. But God follows after them, goes where they are, puts in his own body their suffering and death, waiting for them to see, and to turn from their sin and decide to serve him. He is doing this knowing all the time that he has no final guarantee that they will ever give their consent, or having once given it, will not again turn to their sinning. That God should do that, brethren, is unspeakable condescension and transcendent glory. No wonder that Paul gloried "In the Cross" and counted all things dross for the knowledge of Christ!

We talked about Almightyness. Nowhere is it revealed to more glorious advantage than on Calvary. The cross was a shameful thing. To be crucified meant you had sunk to the lowest depths of degradation. Yet Jesus takes this most shameful of human devices and makes it radiant with the supreme intelligence of His Father. That which was, before him, the symbol of death and shame has become, since He came, a sign of life and holiness.

All the way through the Gospels we are sure that Jesus had supreme reserves of power. He healed a man in the Garden of Gethsemane. We feel sure that he could have saved Himself! But no! These powers he laid by and surrendered. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, and even at the last He refused opiates so that His last expiring breath might be empowered to yield His Spirit to God!

There is no sorrow, we feel, like His sorrow. There is no suffering like His. There is no injustice, nor can such be conceived, greater than he bore! And yet, Jesus takes all that wicked men can do to him and rises supreme! Nothing conceivable can separate men from God or rob one of His sons of life. We need this assurance to set us free to do that which we ought to do. For we can find peace in the knowledge that God, after all, is love.

The atonement then accomplished these things:

1. It assured us of the never-ceasing love of God.
2. It revealed once for all the true nature of sin.
3. It assured men that all power was given to Christ both in Heaven and in Earth.

So then, correspondingly, we have:

1. Christ in front of us. He dramatized the love of God and moves our hearts by his life and spirit.
2. Christ in our stead. He bears our sins, carries our iniquities and shows them to us for what they are. This is something tremendous that we could never have done for ourselves, and we have
3. Christ in us. By His Resurrection, He liberates within us our better selves.

We participate in the ordinances in memory of His death. That sets us free from sin, because we are conscious of what our sinning does to Him and to His image in others, and being conscious of this, we come to hate it, and as we do, Christ is born in us and we grow up with Him in all things.

PROCESS OF SALVATION

The appreciation of the doctrine of the Atonement will, I think, be recognized as a great and living impetus to moral achievement. There is no substitute for a righteous will, and no compensation, except repentance, for a bad one. Yet there have been theories of Atonement which do not give this moral impetus. About three of these I wish briefly to speak.

1. There are some who think that there is a difference in disposition manward, between the Father and the Son. The Father is presented as the embodiment of the demands of justice while, over against him, is the Son pleading with justice to stay punishment, because the Son represents mercy. The son is an innocent victim according to this view, and because of His exceptional accomplishments has exceptional claims on God.

There is nothing in the Scripture to suggest that Christ's love is anything different from God's love. Those who know love at all know that the suffering of a loved one may be more spiritual, more intense in the one loving than in the one affected. Whatever happened at Calvary, we know that God stood by "with averted face" as Brother Garver says, and did nothing to prevent it. It seems to me that it takes even more courage to see someone you love suffer than it does to suffer yourself. It was not just to permit men to be consigned to never-ending death because that by one man sin enticed the world. The law, however, said, "The sinner shall die." It is just to punish sin. But it is not just to leave a sinner to His fate without opportunity to redeem himself. On the other hand, mercy which has no regard to law and refuses to exact penalty for infringement is not mercy, but sentiment; and sentiment merely confirms the sinner in his transgression.

Wherever we find the necessity for the sacrificial death to lie we must utterly refuse to find it in anything in the Father's mind making Him unwilling to forgive, or distinguishing in any way His mind in the matter for Christ's. The essential wrath of God over sin is Christ's as much as the Father's, and pardoning mercy the Father's as much as Christ's.

As Jesus said to Philip, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."

2. We must distinguish between vicarious suffering or sacrifice, and vicarious punishment; and if we appeal to the facts, we can accept the former and reject the latter. Whatever suffering Jesus had to endure, he endured because of obedience to His father and his sympathy toward men. His was a supremely fine nature. What we have in the Garden of Gethsemane, for instance, is an extremely sensitive soul conscious of being in His Father's world, and highly conscious of His Father's purpose for that world; and bearing the agony of comparison between what ought to be, and what was. As the world was, it brought him to his death, the manner of which was quite incidental. The Father did not "punish" the son. He simply let sin take its course and did not intervene.

In the Divine Providence which governs the world, the Father made our sins—and the sins which crucified Christ were the normal sins of men—light on him, in exactly the same sense as all the world over the sins of men are vicariously borne by their victims—the sins of parent by the children, of children by their parents, of rulers by their people, and of people by their pastors. The Father simply sent His son into the world, and under the normal action of its moral laws did not interfere.

The story is told that the young English King, Edward VI, had a boy who was whipped, no doubt very unwillingly, every time the young king did wrong.

Misguided ministers used to quote this substituted punishment as an illustration of the Atonement. The whipping boy was doubtless very unwilling to be whipped, and the illustration fails because Christ's sacrifice was voluntary—it was self-sacrifice, and was made in no sense unwillingly. Suffering of Christ was necessary, and incidental to His great purpose.

But there is a punishment for sinners, and it is of two kinds. First, alienation from God which has eternal consequences; and I cannot imagine Christ suffering this (punishment) since He was sinless (although we shall have a word to say later about that). There is no trace of his being conscious of sin in himself. That Christ should have cried, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" and received no answer seems to me a cause of great thankfulness, for those who feel the like trial in any degree whatever. But there could be no ground for believing that Jesus was alienated from God because of his own sin.

But there is another punishment for sin. It is temporal punishment. We are all subject to physical death. And I cannot see how sins repented of necessarily wards off or circumvents the natural consequences of our transgression.

What repentance does is to turn these punishments into healing penances. When young Jonsey came to himself he asked his father to thrash him, and said he felt better afterwards. To be absolved from sin is not to be let off. It is that the eternal and everlasting penalty for sin, separation from God, is lifted immediately when sin has gone out of the soul, but Our Father lets nature take its course and we have to bear, many times, the consequences of our own sins in the temporal sphere. I like the utterance of the Book of Mormon on this:

For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been, from the fall of Adam, and will be, for ever and ever;

But if he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man, and becometh a saint, through the atonement of Christ, the Lord, and becometh as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him, even as a child doth submit to his father.—Mosiah 1: 119-120.

3. Then again there was the "ransom theory." According to this theory the Devil took more than his "rights" when He killed Christ, and thence had no more claim on man. This idea grew up in the middle ages when bandits or tyrants would hold hostages for ransom. But this theory merely endeavored to point out the great price paid for our redemption, and it should not have been pushed beyond its legitimate usage. A similar misinterpretation for the word "propitiation" was responsible for the idea that God's mind had to be changed toward men.

WAS THE ATONEMENT NECESSARY TO GOD?

But there is one sense in which Christ did bear the penalty, or the experience if you like, of spiritual death. And in this sense we must reverently suppose that the Atonement was necessary to God, as well as to us, although, please note, we only reverently suppose. Men were separated from Him by sin. This meant a separation from His presence, which eventuated in physical death. The soul that sins dies. It dies when it sins. It is separated when transgression takes place. If therefore men are to be turned and won back to God, God has to go where they are and persuade them. This means He has to subject Himself to the same limitations as rest upon them; not only in the physical state, but also in the state beyond—in the disembodied state. Christ's death was absolutely necessary to the program of salvation, and even had He not been crucified, He would have still had to be under the necessity of reaching those who had, to use Browning's phrase, "passed through the body and gone." If God were to see in the dimness, he had to separate himself from

Polio Will Strike This Summer!

Department of Information, The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc.
120 Broadway, New York 5, New York

THAT much is certain about infantile paralysis. That during the three or four months beginning in June it will strike with varying intensity in some sections of the United States; that hundreds, possibly thousands, of children now well and happy will be stricken with the disease before schools reopen in the fall.

But only chronologically is poliomyelitis consistent, and its known affinity for the summer and fall, shown by records extending back to the last century, tells us only when it will strike in force—not whom or where. These can be matters for conjecture only, for it may concentrate its attack in rural sections and small cities, as last year, or follow the 1944 outbreak and strike in densely populated areas. Even medical experts of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, men who have spent much of their professional lives studying this baffling disease, are unwilling to venture an exact forecast.

This far they will go and no farther: "Areas free of epidemics for several years are the most vulnerable."

But just as this reassurance should not beget undue confidence in areas recently afflicted, the possibility of an epidemic should not give rise to panic elsewhere. Medical science still does not know the carrying agent of the polio virus nor has it, despite millions spent in research by the National Foundation, found an effective serum or vaccine. It does know that 50 per cent of all victims recover completely with no trace of paralysis, 30 per cent are left with slight disability, and only 20 per cent suffer crippling or death.

Comforting as these figures may be, the fact remains that infantile paralysis in epidemic strength is a staggering blow to any community. Statistics do not heal the crippled nor comfort the bereaved, and even in cases of complete recovery, the disease is frightening, painful, and costly. Nurses and physical therapists trained in the most modern treatment the bright light and stay in the darkened place until his vision was adjusted.

Perhaps there is some sense, then, in which the atonement is necessary to God. We do know, that in Christ, God underwent human experience, and we do know, that forever in the Divine Nature, there is a complete and final record of our earthly experience to which we can appeal, and can, upon conditions of repentance, find absolution and renewal.

must be enlisted and provided with elaborate and expensive equipment.

With the exception of the war years, however, when transportation and priorities presented difficulties in procurement and delivery, the problem of skilled professional personnel and proper equipment has constantly become less acute since the founding of the National Foundation in 1938 by President Roosevelt. Training programs have been instituted ($1,267,600 was appropriated in 1945 to finance physical therapy scholarships alone) and the Foundation and its chapters, covering the nation's 3,070 counties, have gradually built up a vast stockpile of equipment (nearly a thousand respirators, for example, are registered in the Foundation's locator file) that can be shipped instantly to threatened areas.

The National Foundation has taken six other major steps to fight future epidemics and help minimize effects of the disease. It has:

1. Organized four emergency aid units for epidemic use.
2. Expanded its Polio Emergency Volunteer training program.
3. Developed a fully-equipped mobile unit to supplement inadequate hospital facilities in epidemic areas.
4. Initiated polio preparedness conferences with health officials in 15 States.
5. Made provision for seven new training and treatment centers similar to the Knickerbocker Hospital Polio Unit in New York.
6. Financed specialized training for physicians and nurses.

Last year 13,514 new infantile paralysis cases were tentatively reported by the United States Public Health Service, fourth highest annual total in the country's history. During 1945 epidemics, local chapters spent more than $5,000,000 caring for victims of the disease. This was supplemented by an additional $1,602,345 in emergency aid from the National Foundation.

Remaining as danger spots in the continuing fight against poliomyelitis are its unpredictability, lack of complete knowledge of its method of transmission, and the difficulty of diagnosis. Symptoms present in many minor ills—fever, headache, vomiting, nausea—may also be symptoms of infantile paralysis, and a physician should be consulted at the SHOLEM ASCH: One Destiny, An Epistle to the Christians. Translated by Milton Hindus. Putnam, 1945. 88 pages. $1.50 . . . The author of two great and famous religious novels, The Nazarene and The Apostle, now writes a book of nonfiction, an appeal to Christians to understand the Judaic background and contribution to Christianity. Eloquent he pleads the cause of his stricken people. His story of how Poland was turned into a slaughter-house for the Jews of Europe is a moving and terrible account. He treats anti-Semitism as a disease which has been kept alive through the centuries by various groups, for various purposes. He calls the survival of Jews through ages of persecution a miracle unique in the world's history, a miracle explained only in terms of God's will. This higher purpose is found in the common destiny and mission to the world of Judaism and Christianity; it is his belief that they belong together and that they will survive together.

R. E. GOULD: Yankee Storekeeper. Whittlesey House, 1946. 195 pages. $2.50. A few nice old-fashioned illustrations by Stephen Voorhies. Author's map and store featured as end-papers. . . . A lively, amusing and informative account of the life and times of a practical Yankee trader, and of his principles of management for a country town "General Merchandise" store. City slickers could learn something from this volume, and every independent merchant should have a copy, apart from the fun in it. Considerable attention is given to the standards of veracity and honor among those who make their entertainment as well as their living by shrewd deals and horse-trading. There is only a small taint of impiety (Maine woods variety) which should not spoil it for parlor reading. The book contains much delightful native Americana, especially good for those who suffer from too much high-collar stuff in their portion of civilization.

H. H. ROWLEY: The Relevance of the Bible. Macmillan, 1944. 192 pages. $1.75. . . . A scholarly effort to set out what material in the Bible is of practical value for the world today, to set up some standards of judgment for the intelligent reader. The viewpoint is rational and liberal in the best sense; and the author suggests, in Chapter VI, that the Bible is a record only of that portion of divine revelation which was given to Israel, and that this is not to deny that there has been other revelations to other races. This is a book for mature readers, not for fundamentalists.

G. CAMPBELL MORGAN: The Corinthian Letters of Paul. An Exposition of I and II Corinthians. Fleming H. Revell Co., 1946. 275 pages. $3. . . . There is an increasing interest among our developing younger and progressive church leaders in the "Commentary" books on the Bible. Sets of commentaries are likely to be disappointing because they often represent viewpoints that are not sustained by modern biblical scholarship. The good one-volume commentaries are excellent, especially as a beginning. But when the student wishes to make a thorough examination, he needs such volumes as this. Dr. Morgan's other books have given fine satisfaction. This book is for the hard-working reader, not for the lazy. It contains rich resources for those who wish to master them.

R. B. Y. SCOTT: The Relevance of the Prophets. Macmillan, 1944. 238 pages. $2.50. . . . A fine scholarly work by a professor of United Theological Seminary of Montreal, Canada. It should prove an effective antidote for some of the false millenarian speculation that is sweeping the irregular and erratic Christian sects, and that is even invading the humbler ranks of some evangelical churches. The first chapter, "What Is Prophecy?" is of special value. Those who are involved in the misuse of prophecy should especially read the historical list of erroneous interpretations of prophecy on page three, in order to avoid that mistake. The book will find acceptance and appreciation among the abler readers, but may be criticized by those who prefer the enthusiasm of current errors.

A. CAMPBELL GARNETT: God In Us, A Liberal Christian Philosophy of Religion for the General Reader. Willett, Clark, 1945. 162 pages. $1.50. . . . A serious and valuable book for thoughtful Christians, young and old, who are always alert to the need of re-examining their faith in order to cull out dead timber and keep faith growing. "Where Do We Find God?" brings an unusual and interesting thesis. Since all matter is finally analyzed as force, nothing is left to us on which we can depend except space, says the author; and space is the realm in which God and the soul operate. "Has Man a Soul?" will bring great interest to all who seriously contemplate the question of immortality. An excellent work for your permanent library.

EZRA L. MARLER, compiler: Golden Nuggets of Thought, Zion's Press, 1945, 192 pages, $1.00. . . . This pocket-size booklet contains a collection of favorite poems, quotations, and literary gems. As the compiler suggests, they are "mental vitamins." The book is divided into alphabetically arranged sections, according to content. Ministers and teachers will find it a valuable aid in their work.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK, compiler: 300 Favorite Poems, Willett, Clark, and Company, 1945. 124 pages. $1.00. . . . This is an "all purpose" collection of verse in which the works of old masters and young humorists are given equal recognition. Mr. Clark, who has written poetry for forty years, has also contributed to the anthology. A section is devoted to the most popular poems appearing in the "Line-O'-Type" column of the Chicago Tribune. The selections have been chosen for their appeal, rather than for their academic superlativeness. 300 Favorite Poems is a book any American family will enjoy reading.

SAMUEL M. SHOEMAKER, How You Can Help Other People, E. P. Dutton and Company, 1946. 189 pages. $1.75. . . . Samuel Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church and well-known radio adviser, believes it is human to like to help other people, and that by helping others, we cannot fail to help ourselves. In this, his latest publication, he discusses the need to help people, what it takes to understand and help them, the importance of fellowship, how to help the physically and mentally sick, the fearful, the defeated, and the self-deceived. Numerous illustrations of actual problems are presented, making the book interesting and easy to read.

ERNIE PYLE: Last Chapter. Holt, 1946. 150 pages. $2.50. . . . Those who learned to like the writings of Ernie Pyle in the daily paper, who appreciated his accounts of what the average fighting man was going through in the late war, will be interested in this book. It is like Here Is Your War and Brave Men, which covered the action in Africa and Europe. Last Chapter is what Ernie wrote of his observations in the Pacific, a story which ended tragically for him when he was killed by a machine gun bullet on

Publicity in Evangelism

By Eugene A. Theys

(Note: A part of this series also is another excellent article by this author, "The Art of Getting Decisions," which was published in our issue of January 19, 1946, page 73.)

WE MUST ORGANIZE our missionary efforts to meet the growing demands confronting us. No program or product will long be desired unless some good hard thinking and planning goes into keeping its appeal constantly before the public. Neither can we expect a continual increase in membership unless we, as a missionary quorum of the church, plan and publicize our work so that it will attract the nonbelievers to our teachings and program. All this calls for good up-to-date publicity in whatever we undertake as a missionary program.

Members of the Quorum of Seventy and the missionary elders must revamp outmoded methods, which once produced desired results, and adopt new ideas that meet the demand today. We can no longer expect to use old slogans and antiquated sermon topics; we must recast the gospel message in line with present day thinking. People no longer think in terms of horses and buggies, nor are they likely to be long contented with streamlined cars, radios, and television. Tomorrow we will be traveling by rockets shooting across the heavens and landing in other countries within a matter of minutes. We must be always keeping pace in our methods of attracting world attention toward the gospel of Jesus Christ. Let the words of the Lord be a challenge to us as we face the dawn of this new day . . . "Search diligently and spare not."

Publicity For the Series

We cannot depend solely upon our preaching ministry to attract an audience. Good preaching alone will not accomplish the desired results. We must look to other methods in attracting people to hear our message. The buying counters today are crowded with all kinds of hand soaps, lotions, and perfumes, but surveys show that any new product will sell if it is backed by two things: quality merchandise and plenty of good publicity.

There are over nine hundred Christian denominations in the United States today; each one is trying to convert the world to its message. We know that the church which we represent is the restored Church of Jesus Christ of these latter days. The quality of our message is its authority. It will bring to man all the happiness and spiritual comfort that any religion dares to offer, plus many gifts too numerous to mention. What must we do to attract the millions of unconverted people to our banner? We must win these people with persistent preaching and abundant publicity.

Our problem of publicity in evangelism is in finding the best methods of advertising and using them in the best possible way. New methods must be found to interest people in reading and hearing our message.

Any series of meetings, to be successful, demands good planning and cooperation on the part of the missionary and the membership. This job can not be left to one or two persons, but must be shared by every member of the congregation. The missionary is expected to make any suggestions that he thinks worth-while for the series. These suggestions should certainly include advice concerning the kind of publicity best adapted to presenting the message from night to night. We shall consider the varieties of printed materials later in this discussion, but first let us take up the discussion of sermon topics and their place in evangelism.

Sermon Topics in Evangelism

One of the most attractive features to a man's ministry is the type of subjects he discusses. Just as attractive slogans and "catch words" cause people to buy well-publicized goods, so also will well-phrased sermon topics attract listeners and stimulate an interest in hearing the message. Following is a list of sermon topics which are being used to emphasize our message today:

- "The Postwar Church."
- "The High Cost of Low Living."
- "The Atomic Power of God."
- "God's Heavenly Rewards."
- "The Christ of the Gospel."
- "What Good Thing Shall I Do?"
- "Choose You This Day!"
- "Our Stewardship of Prayer."
- "Man's Debt to God."

We must make sure that our sermon topics are up to date, and yet are definitely related to the principles of the gospel.

Publicity Standards

It is impossible to reach all people who might be interested in the church through one type of publicity. The complex activities of such a modern society as ours require diversified advertising, nor will any one method, or set of methods, work in all communities. The nature of our publicity campaign should be determined by some of the following standards:

1. The dominant religious group in the community.
2. The attitude toward our church.
3. The educational advantages of the group.
4. Social customs.
5. Industrial or rural?
6. Population of the community.

This information can usually be given to the missionary by either the pastor or apostle assigned to that territory. The publicity for our work in any community must be so organized that the Kingdom of God becomes the focal point around which the community can build its life.

Principal Types of Publicity

Handbills, post cards, street car advertisements, letters, announcement cards for mailing purposes, newspapers, radio, introductory folders, and outdoor publicity (such as bulletin and sign boards), are a few of the many types that we can use in promoting evangelism.

Handbills are still a very effective method of publicizing our work. A great deal depends upon the attractiveness of the bill, the kind of paper, the color, the type of print, and especially the wording of the announcement. A good clear picture of the speaker—and not one taken fifteen or twenty years ago—has a good effect upon the public. The picture should be placed in an appropriate place on the handbill. A large number of bills should be printed. Cover most of the town, especially if it has less than five thousand population. Some may argue that this town has been handbilled to death; but let us again say that if the bills are expertly done and given to each home with a courteous welcome, your message will reach the hearts of many honest people. New people are always coming to town, and old citizens are always changing their point of view.

No handbill or any other form of publicity will have its effect if passed out haphazardly in a community. Indeed handbills will not be effective in every community. This is due to a number of reasons. In some cities handbills are prohibited unless given to each resident personally. Then again in the more aristocratic districts they are frowned upon as being a poor substitute for an invitation. Nevertheless, when handbills are used and a personal welcome accompanies them, they will be of great assistance to you in your work. Buff color paper with brown ink on a bill about 6 x 9 inches is very attractive. White or other conservative colors may also be used.

Post cards are another excellent means of announcing a series of meetings. Do not crowd them with too much printing. Here are a few important items to be included on post cards: name of the church, date of the meeting, speaker's name, church address, and perhaps a few of the outstanding subjects to be discussed. No publicity should be mailed more than a few days in advance of any meeting. People have a tendency to forget your invitation.

Street car advertisements are beginning to take their place in evangelism. Not too much has been done with this project as yet in the church, but it deserves mentioning. When advance notice has been given, this form of publicity should help in getting the attitude of the people of any large city, and especially the working class of people, thinking in terms of your coming series. The word "lecture" carries more weight on this type of publicity than the word "sermon."

Friendly letters are good publicity. These letters should contain something interesting and something that the reader does not already know, as well as a personal appeal. If you can do this, you have laid the foundation for a very favorable reaction. Your letter should never sermonize nor carry a negative attitude toward the recipient, or toward any other church; if it does, your time and money have been wasted. A brief and illustrative letter is worth the time of any pastor, member, or missionary who writes it.
